The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:06 a.m., in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Risch, Rubio, Johnson, Young, Barrasso, Menendez, Cardin, Shaheen, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, and Merkley.

Also Present: Senator Thune.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

And we appreciate our distinguished nominees for being here and, very importantly, Senator Thune. I do want you to know we normally start on time. Today is unusual. I know that Senator Menendez had a previous engagement that ran over.

Today’s committee will hold a nomination hearing for three very important positions. Our nominees today are Andrea Thompson to be Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security Affairs; Susan Thornton to be the Assistant Secretary for East Asian and Pacific Affairs; and Francis Fannon to be the Assistant Secretary for Energy Resources.

First, however, we have some distinguished guests. I know that Senator Gardner is here also to talk about one of the nominees, who wished to introduce these nominees. And so, we are going to allow them to proceed with their introductions so they can leave and do other duties. I know you have got a lot going on, both of you.

Therefore, I am going to postpone my opening comment—and I know that Senator Menendez has agreed to do the same—and let you go ahead and do your introductions, and then we will begin the process in the normal manner.

So, with that, I would like to introduce the well-known, distinguished Senator John Thune of South Dakota.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN THUNE, U.S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH DAKOTA

Senator Thune. Chairman Corker, thank you, Senator Menendez, members of the committee. It is an honor and a privilege to have the opportunity to introduce to the committee a distinguished South Dakota native, Colonel Andrea Thompson.

I often say that South Dakota punches above its weight in service to the country. And Andrea is a stellar example of that. She is a fifth-generation South Dakotan whose family I have known for decades, and she is extremely qualified to serve as the Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security.

She is currently a senior advisor at the State Department, and previously was Deputy Assistant to the President and National Security Advisor to the Vice President at the White House. Prior to that, she served as the National Security Advisor for the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Homeland Security, the Executive Officer to the Under Secretary of the Army, and as the Senior Military Advisor to the House of Representatives Foreign Affairs committee.

She is undoubtedly familiar with the numerous challenges that Congress and the administration face today, but she is no stranger to the frank discussions that must take place to ensure that America responds to such threats with clear eyes.

Andrea gave over 25 years of service to the United States Army, including combat deployments to Afghanistan as Intelligence Director at Chief of Staff Iraq, as Senior Intelligence Officer for Multinational Division North, as well as tours in Bosnia, Honduras, Belize, and Germany.

As the Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security, she will be tasked with leading the State Department’s efforts on nonproliferation and verification of international agreements. There will be no shortage of trials.

The members of the committee are well aware of the challenges the United States faces today, and I have full faith that Andrea will continue her exemplary service, if confirmed. She will bring with her not only her depth of experience, but a humble sense of service that stems from her South Dakota roots.

Andrea graduated from my graduate school alma mater, the University of South Dakota, with honors, and received their Alumni Achievement Award in 2011. She went on to earn her master of science with honors at Long Island University, and master of arts in national security and strategic studies at National Defense University.

But, before she left South Dakota to begin her career of service, she was a standout high school and college athlete, and even delivered the Argus Leader newspaper for 6 years. She is supported by her family back home, as well as her husband, David Gillian. And, Mr. Chairman, Andrea Thompson has my vote of confidence, as well.

Thank you for the opportunity to introduce Andrea this morning. I urge my colleagues on this committee to see that she is quickly confirmed following the hearing today.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, thank you very much for being here. And you are welcome to go about your duties. You did not mention whether you graduated with honors from the same university. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. I assume you did. But, I am——
Senator THUNE. Yeah, thank you for pointing that out, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN [continuing]. Yes, sir.

Senator Gardner.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY GARDNER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM COLORADO

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you, to the witnesses, for your time and testimony today and, more importantly, your service and commitment to our country. It is truly appreciated.

It is my great honor to introduce Frank Fannon for this position. I am excited about the work that you will be doing. I have known Mr. Fannon—Frank—for a very long time. My time started in the office of Senator Wayne Allard, back over 15 years ago now, and that is where I had the opportunity to meet somebody who worked in the office of Senator Ben Nighthorse Campbell from Colorado by the name of Frank Fannon. We never knew him by “Francis.” We did know him by “Frank.” And the opportunity to work with Frank on a number of issues important to Colorado and the West of—every issue from our incredible exploration opportunities in Colorado on oil and gas, to Good Samaritan legislation that Mr. Fannon worked on, not only in Senator Campbell’s office, but prior to that, in Pete Domenici’s office, as well.

After Senator Campbell’s office, had the opportunity to go work for the EPW committee, served as counsel at the Environment and Public Works committee under our colleague Senator Inhofe, was instrumental in the writing and passage of the Energy Policy Act of 2005. Then he spent the past several years in the private sector, working for a number of organizations, from VHP to Murphy to others, where he has gained valuable experience on how the policies that he helped craft through Senator Domenici’s office, Senator Campbell’s office, and the EPW committee, how that works in the real world. And I think that is the kind of experience that we need at the State Department when we focus on the energy opportunities around the globe and the diplomacy that our energy gives us the ability to utilize around the globe, that opportunity to flex our American energy independence as it relates to our allies from Europe to Asia, and what that can do for this country and our diplomatic efforts and our economic growth.

So, it is a great honor, again, to be with Mr. Fannon and the nominees here today. I strongly support the nomination of Frank Fannon. I hope the rest of you will, as well. And it is just good to see him grow up and do good things.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it is good to see you grow up and do good things, too. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Today, we will consider the nominations of three distinguished individuals, as we have said, to serve our Nation at the State Department, each in an essential role.

Andrea L. Thompson, the nominee for Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security Affairs, joined the Army after graduating from the University of South Dakota in 1988, and attained the rank of colonel before retiring in 2016. She served in military intelligence with deployments to Iraq, Afghanistan, and Bosnia, and most recently served as National Security Advisor to the Vice President. The Under Secretary for State—of State for Arms Control supervises the bureaus tasked with guaranteeing compliance with international arms treaties, licensing arms sales to other countries, and monitoring nuclear nonproliferation around the globe. At a time when the Syrian regime uses chemical weapons against its own people, and the Russian President, Vladimir Putin, fails to comply with the INF Treaty, we need an Under Secretary at the helm to ensure verification of nonproliferation agreements, lead civilian nuclear cooperation efforts, and monitor rogue actors.

One such rogue actor is North Korea. Addressing this threat is one of the Trump administration’s top priorities, and the East Asian and Pacific Affairs Bureau is at the forefront of implementing this administration’s maximum pressure and engagement strategy.

Ms. Susan Thornton, a career Foreign Service Officer, is the nominee to be Assistant Secretary for the EAP Bureau. Having served recently as the Acting Secretary, I know that Ms. Thornton is very well aware of a vast range of political and economic and security issues affecting U.S. national interests in the Asia Pacific.

In addition, given her experience serving in Beijing, I know that Ms. Thornton recognizes that no country looms larger in the region, nor stands to have a bigger impact on U.S. national interests in the coming years, than China. While engagement with Beijing poses significant challenges, Ms. Thornton also will be tasked with efforts to strengthen U.S. relations with critical allies and partners in the region, including Japan and Vietnam.

Our third nominee today is Frank Fannon, who has been nominated to be Assistant Secretary for Energy Resources. This bureau is responsible for policy development and implementation with respect to U.S. international security, energy security. Energy plays such an important role in our economy, and our national security depends on ensuring access to abundant, reliable, and affordable energy. With his extensive background working with the Senate Energy committee and working for various private-sector firms in the energy sector, Mr. Fannon is well qualified for this position.

Today’s nominees seek to take on responsibilities that are crucial to our national security on so many fronts around the world. We thank all of you for your willingness to be here, to serve our Nation in this regard. And look forward to your testimony.

With that, I would like to turn to our distinguished Ranking Member, Bob Menendez.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for holding this hearing today.

Before I comment on our witnesses, I need to comment on the administration’s proposed foreign affairs budget for fiscal year ’19, because, honestly, I find it to be stunningly irresponsible. A budget is a reflection of our priorities and our values, and an opportunity to commit resources to fulfilling a mission. It is often said, “If you show me your budget, I will tell you our strategy.” Well, if that is true, then the administration has a very bad strategy. Far from putting America first, the Trump administration’s budget would put America last. This request would slash almost 30 percent of the FY17 enacted levels, undermining our leadership on a global stage and our ability to effectively serve the American people and promote our national security interests.

Furthermore, the request runs counter to the very goals and ideals the administration seeks to champion, and those defined in its own National Security Strategy, which calls for robust diplomatic engagement and maintaining our position of global leadership.

So, as you said, Mr. Chairman, last year we largely rejected that last budget. I think this one needs to be rejected, as well. And I will look forward to working with you and colleagues on the Appropriations committee to provide adequate funding for our diplomats, development officers, and front-line civilians working to promote American national security.

Let me thank our nominees for their willingness to serve. And, in particular, I want to recognize the many years that Colonel Thompson and Ms. Thornton have spent in public service. For decades, one of the core objectives of U.S. foreign policy has been to limit, as much as possible, the spread of nuclear, biological, and chemical weapons. The success of our nonproliferation efforts has always depended upon gaining the cooperation of other states to legally binding treaties and agreements, U.N. Security Council resolutions, and bilateral cooperative efforts. We need effective United States leadership that inspires and encourages others to join us to meet these threats with a united coalition.

Additionally, Colonel Thompson, if you are confirmed, your role as Under Secretary will put you in a unique position to strengthen State’s ability to provide our allies and partners robust and effective security assistance while also ensuring that human rights and the protection of civilians are taken into account when providing such assistance.

Ms. Thornton, in nominating you to serve as the Assistant Secretary for East Asia and the Pacific, it is my hope this means the President intends to listen to knowledgeable and sound advice on our policy towards the Asia-Pacific region. As a Pacific nation ourselves, our national security policy must recognize that much of America’s 21st-century political and economic future lies in the Asia-Pacific region, and it is imperative that we engage with the region, not pull away from it.

Yet, the administration talks about the importance of a free and open Indo-Pacific region. His actions speak differently. While the administration talks about the importance of our alliances and partnerships, his actions call our commitments into question. The administration talks about how our principles are embedded in our policy, but it—actions undermines our values. And, while the administration talks about the challenge of a revisionist China, its actions seek to risk ceding the region to a strategic rival.

The United States needs to have a strategic and values-driven presence in the region that includes our military and the full range of American diplomatic tools and resources. Such an approach is necessary to deal with the wide range of challenges, including the crisis of a nuclear-armed North Korea, making clear our commitments to our allies and managing our relationship with China.

Finally, any policy for a free and open Indo-Pacific region must have human rights and democracy at its core. For too long in the region, the United States has treated human rights as desirable, but dispensable. Instead, we should be using our values as a source of strength and comparative advantage over illiberal forces in the region.

Mr. Fannon, I want to thank you for your—meeting with me in my office yesterday. I appreciate your willingness to serve. But, given the focus of your career, I want to explore some of the concerns that I expressed to you yesterday. You have been a forceful advocate for the fossil fuel and extractive industries, so I want to know how you will execute ENR’s core objectives, which includes, quote, “advising on energy issues as they related to, among others, pursuit of alternative energy and energy efficiency and greater transparency and accountability in the energy sector.” I look forward to continuing to explore that conversation with you.

Mr. Chairman, I have to—we are having a major debate and vote on the floor on DREAMers, and I am going to have to go for a few minutes to that. I have read all of the testimony, and I have read all the witnesses. I intend to be back for the questions, but I am going to have to excuse myself for a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Absolutely.

So, with that, if you would, if you could take about 5 minutes to give an—some opening statements, there will be questions. And if you would do so in the order introduced, we would appreciate it. Again, thank you for being here.

STATEMENT OF COLONEL ANDREA L. THOMPSON, USA, RETIRED, OF SOUTH DAKOTA, NOMINEE TO BE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR ARMS CONTROL AND INTERNATIONAL SECURITY

Colonel Thompson. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of this committee. It is an honor to be with you here today as President Trump’s nominee for Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security. I am humbled by this opportunity, with your approval, to serve in the administration and work with you, the White House, Secretary Tillerson, and the dedicated professionals of the State Department.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank some very important people in my life. I am joined today by my incredible husband, David Gillian, and many dear friends. Thank you for your love and support.

I would also like to thank my parents, Phil and Georgia Hanson, who are watching at home in South Dakota, and a special hello to my mother-in-law, Meg Gillian, and my grandfather, Dean Nelson, who is 92 years young.

Finally, I would like to send recognition to my family and friends who could not be here today but have served as role models and mentors throughout my life. I am a proud South Dakotan, and it is the values and work ethic of those that I grew up with that always showed me what right looks like.
I would also like to thank Senator Thune for his kind words and appreciation for representation of our great State.

I had the privilege of serving this administration before as Vice President Pence's National Security Advisor. During my tenure, I worked with the NSC, members and staff of Congress, leaders across the Departments of State, Defense, Treasury, Commerce, and Energy, to name just a few. However, my background in international security and the importance of those relationships began years before, during my 28-year career as a military officer. From leading troops in Iraq, Afghanistan, Bosnia, Germany, Central America, and other locations across the globe, I saw firsthand the importance of relationships with our allies and partners, and the critical need for a strong and steadfast security structure. I have seen both the successes and failures of our arms-control policy. I have been on the receiving end when diplomacy fails. If confirmed, I commit to you that I will always place the safety and security of the American people first.

I am also fully cognizant of the profound responsibilities of senior leadership. During my military service and in the private sector, leadership was my legacy. Bringing people together with different strengths and viewpoints to work towards a common goal is an exciting challenge. The State Department's arms control and international security team of over 600 talented men and women are committed to advancing our U.S. policies and protecting its people. They are the backbone of our Nation's most important policy decisions, negotiations, and treaties. These professionals cover arms control and international security issues, nonproliferation matters, including missile, nuclear, chemical, biological, and conventional weapons proliferation, export control policies, and foreign assistance programs, all of which are of vital national security interest to the United States.

I am excited about the opportunity to lead this team, if confirmed. I also look forward to working with my colleagues at the State Department, other U.S. Government agencies, Congress, and our international community.

This administration has clearly set a high priority for our nuclear posture, arms control, nonproliferation, and political/military policies. The President and Vice President's commitment in these areas has been, and will remain, steadfast.

The recent review of our nuclear and missile defense postures offer critical opportunities to outline the vision of how this administration will work to ensure our security in the face of the world's most destructive weapons. If confirmed, I look forward to regularly consulting and engaging our allies and partners both at home and abroad on these important deterrence, strategic stability, and defense issues.

The threat of WMD proliferation continues, and the role of the United States and its leadership to counter that threat remain as great as ever. By continuing to work with our allies and the international community, we send a clear message to those who violate U.N. Security Council resolutions, established treaties and agreements. We must continue to put maximum pressure on those regimes through diplomatic and economic sanctions, including robust implementation of U.S. sanctions legislation. Along with our partners and allies, we must continue to improve upon our capabilities, strengthen our resolve, and force these regimes to change their behavior. Much has been done, but there is much more to do. As our enemies adapt and technologies evolve, so must we. I appreciate the work that has been done by this committee. And, if confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to collaborate with all of you in that endeavor.

As one of its first legislative decisions over two centuries ago, our Congress prescribed an oath establishing a bond between the people of this great Nation and those who have committed themselves to service to the American people. I first took this oath 30 years ago. This is the same oath that you have taken. It would be my honor to continue to serve the American people and support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of this committee, I am honored to be considered for this critical appointment. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you. I welcome your comments and your questions.

Thank you.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ANDREA L. THOMPSON

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to be with you today as President Trump’s nominee for Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security. I am humbled by this opportunity—with your approval—to serve in the administration and work with you, the White House, Secretary Tillerson and the dedicated professionals at the State Department.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank some very important people in my life. I’m joined today by my incredible husband, David Gillian, and many dear friends. Thank you for your love and support. I’d also like to thank my parents who are watching at home in South Dakota, and a special hello to my mother-in-law, Meg Gillian, and my grandfather, Dean Nelson, who’s 92 years young. Finally, I’d like to send recognition to my family and friends who couldn’t be here today but have served as role models and mentors throughout my life. I’m a proud South Dakotan and it’s the values and work ethic of those I grew up with that always showed me what right looks like. Thank you Senator Thune for your kind words and your representation for our great state.

I had the privilege of serving this administration before, as Vice President Pence’s National Security Advisor. During my tenure, I worked with the NSC, members and staff of Congress, leaders across the Departments of State, Defense, Treasury, Commerce and Energy to name just a few. However my background in international security and the importance of those relationships began years before during my 28 year career as a military officer. From leading troops in Iraq, Afghanistan, Bosnia, Germany, Central America, and other locations across the globe, I saw firsthand the importance of relationships with our allies and partners and the critical need for a strong and steadfast security structure. I’ve seen both the successes and failures of our arms control policies. I’ve been on the receiving end when diplomacy fails. If confirmed, I commit to you that I will always place the safety and security of the American people first.

I am also fully cognizant of the profound responsibilities of senior leadership. During my military service and in the private sector, leadership was my legacy. Bringing people together, with different strengths and viewpoints, to work towards a common goal is an exciting challenge. The State Department’s Arms Control and International Security team of over 600 talented men and women are committed to advancing our U.S. policies and protecting its people. They are the backbone of our Nation’s most important policy decisions, negotiations and treaties. These professionals cover arms control and international security issues, nonproliferation matters, including missile, nuclear, chemical, biological and conventional weapons proliferation, export control policies, and foreign assistance programs. All of which are of vital national security interest to the United States. I am excited about the opportunity to lead this team, if confirmed. I also look forward to working with my colleagues at the State Department, other U.S. Government agencies, Congress and our international community.

The administration has clearly set a high priority for our nuclear posture, arms control, nonproliferation and political-military policies. The President and Vice President’s commitment in these areas has been and will remain steadfast. The recent review of our nuclear and missile defense postures offer critical opportunities to outline the vision of how this administration will work to ensure our security in the face of the world’s most destructive weapons. I first took this oath 30 years ago. The same oath all of you have taken. It would be my highest honor to again serve the American people, and support and defend the Constitution of the United States. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member and members of the committee, I am honored to be considered for this critical appointment. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome your comments and questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much.

Ms. Thornton.

STATEMENT OF SUSAN A. THORNTON, OF MAINE, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, NOMINEE TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EAST ASIAN AND PACIFIC AFFAIRS

Ms. Thornton. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the committee, it is my great honor to appear here today as the President’s nominee to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for East Asia and Pacific Affairs.

I have been privileged to serve this great country of ours and to have worked with so many dedicated and talented public servants over the course of my Foreign Service career. I would like to thank the President and Secretary Tillerson for placing their trust and confidence in me. If confirmed, I pledge to this committee that I will devote my full energies to advancing America’s interests in the East Asia-Pacific region.

I would like to take the opportunity here to thank my family: my husband, Joe, and daughter, Kate, who are here with me today; my two older children, Ben and Anne, who both went to three different high schools as we moved around from place to place; and my mom and dad. They have been an incredible support network for me, and have all sacrificed a lot to get me here. I want to express my profound gratitude to all of them.

I joined the United States Foreign Service more than 25 years ago now, and have served five different administrations in postings from Beijing to Moscow, Ashgabat to Chengdu, and, of course, in Washington. I have worked on issues from nonproliferation to trade agreements to human rights and many other important issues. I have never ceased to appreciate how lucky I am to have this wonderful career.

Several of my former colleagues in this position have reached out to me in recent weeks to make sure that I knew that this was the best job in the world. And I am certainly honored and humbled to have the prospect of joining their company, if confirmed.

There is no part of the world that will be more consequential for our children’s future than the Asia-Pacific region. With one-third of the world’s population, one-third of the global GDP, and some of the largest and most dynamic economies in the world, it is clear that the Asia-Pacific will be key to America’s future well-being and our prosperity. We exported over $400 billion in goods to EAP countries in 2017, which is up 160 percent from a decade ago.

This region is also home to five U.S. treaty allies with over 80,000 U.S. troops living, training, and operating alongside their partner host-country forces to undertake a range of missions, from counterterrorism to search-and-rescue to disaster relief, and others. It is crucial for U.S. interests that this area remains stable and prosperous.

But, there are very real security and economic challenges in the Asia-Pacific region, including the menacing threat of North Korea, of course, the rise of an authoritarian China, and the spread of terrorism and extremism. Backsliding on democracy, governance, corruption, and human rights is also undermining prospects for stability and growth in some countries.

Dealing effectively with these challenges in this crucial part of the world requires the strength and resolve of U.S. diplomatic leadership. And this administration’s approach to the Asia-Pacific puts our strong and active leadership at the forefront of international efforts to meet these challenges.

On North Korea, the Trump administration has mobilized the entire international community through our campaign of global maximum pressure to come together to face down Kim Jong Un’s attempts to develop his nuclear and ballistic missile capabilities. The U.N. Security Council unanimously passed four sanctions resolutions last year, and additional worldwide efforts to further isolate North Korea diplomatically and economically make clear that we will not accept a nuclear North Korea. Our preference is to achieve denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula through a diplomatic settlement, but we will reach this goal, one way or another.

With regards to China, as this administration has made clear, the United States wants a productive relationship with China, and we must work to manage and resolve differences. We have been equally clear, however, that we will not abide Chinese attempts to displace the United States in Asia, to coerce countries in the region, and that we will not be taken advantage of. If the international system that has enabled China’s rise is to continue, then rules and standards must be observed, and countries must not be bullied or threatened, but treated as equal players.

The administration, under President Trump’s leadership, is working to also expand and deepen partnerships throughout the region via our Indo-Pacific strategy. We also continue to prioritize work in APEC to promote high standards, fair trade, and to support ASEAN-centered regional architecture, which underpins East Asian peace and security. The United States is a Pacific power, and will remain committed to this region's success.

In short, I am humbled to be considered for this important position, and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you to further the prospects of the United States in this part of the world.

Thank you very much.

But there are very real security and economic challenges in the Asia-Pacific region, including the menacing threat of North Korea, the rise of an authoritarian China, and the spread of terrorism and extremism. Although the region has enjoyed peace and growing prosperity for years, the threat from North Korea continues to increase, tensions and extremism are on the rise, and the export-led model that underpinned East Asia’s stunning growth is no longer viable. We must insist on fair and reciprocal market access, if we are to sustain the global trading system. Backsliding on democracy, governance and corruption, and human rights is also undermining prospects for stability and growth in some countries.

Dealing effectively with these challenges in this crucial part of the world requires the strength and resolve of U.S. diplomatic leadership, and this administration’s approach to the Asia-Pacific puts our strong and active leadership at the forefront of international efforts to meet these challenges.

The administration, under President Trump’s leadership, is working to expand and deepen partnerships throughout the region via our Indo-Pacific strategy, to ensure that countries have support to make their own decisions and don’t feel pressured to take on obligations that undermine good governance or long-term growth. We also continue to prioritize work in APEC to promote high-standards and fair trade and to support ASEAN-centered regional architecture, which underpins East Asian peace and security. The United States is a Pacific power and will remain committed to this region’s success.

In short, I am humbled to be considered for this important position and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you to further the prospects of the United States in this part of the world. Thank you very much.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. Fannon.

STATEMENT OF FRANCIS R. FANNON, OF VIRGINIA, NOMINEE TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR ENERGY RESOURCES

Mr. FANNON. Thank you, Senator Gardner, for your gracious introduction.

Chairman Corker and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as the President’s nominee to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for Energy Resources. I am thankful to President Trump and Secretary Tillerson for the confidence they have placed in me to undertake this critical role.

I am proud that members of my family join me today. I would like to introduce my wife, Mercer, whose partnership and support are foundational to any success in career and life I have—may have been fortunate enough to achieve. I am also delighted that my two eldest daughters, Madeline and Charlotte, are here today, and suspect that our 23-month-old, Phoebe, is watching from home with my mother-in-law, Marsha Planting.

I would like to acknowledge my parents, Frank and Susana Fannon, who are watching the live stream. Through their sacrifices, they taught me that the American Dream is very much alive, that, with dedication and effort, anyone can achieve great things, and that success is not determined from where you are from, but where you choose to go.

My grandparents’ mother and her sisters immigrated to the United States from Argentina in 1969. They left everything behind, in hopes to realize a better life, an aspirational life that only America could offer. My personal family history and experience have shaped me in many ways, and gave me a personal appreciation for other cultures and nations.

I came to Washington without contacts or a job, but with the unwaivering desire to serve. After working for the late Senator Domenici and home State Senator Ben Nighthorse Campbell, I realized my greatest professional privilege, until this day, to serve as Energy Counsel to the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works. While at EPW, I helped the committee with energy issues and drafted provisions of the bipartisan Energy Policy Act of 2005. That legislation helped to unleash American innovation, and set the conditions for today's energy abundance.

Thanks to our resource wealth, American energy plays an ever more vital role in American diplomacy. The U.S. can more freely confront oppressive and illegitimate regimes now that American production buffers global markets against supply shocks. And American energy and technology strengthens the economies of partners who share our values.

In the private sector, I sought to leverage that abundance to advance American values in sustainable operations across five continents. I worked with and led cross-functional, globally located, and culturally diverse teams. I saw firsthand how energy and resource projects can catalyze development, and the benefits of constructive government engagement.

In this capacity, I worked with the Department on multiple energy projects, and can attest that its dedicated foreign and civil service experts serve the country with great distinction. Given the rapidly changing energy landscape, the dynamic foreign policy environment, and the way in which energy overlaps with foreign policy, it is critical to have a strong, informed, and enabled energy bureau, or ENR.

If confirmed, I hope to work with the committee by focusing on three objectives: energy security through diplomacy, governance, and electricity for all.

Secretary Tillerson has stated that enhancing energy security by ensuring access to affordable, reliable, diverse, and secure supplies of energy is fundamental to national security. ENR is uniquely positioned to lead American diplomatic energy security interests, in coordination with other agencies. If confirmed, I pledge to promote energy diplomacy as a means to foster collaboration among nations and oppose the weaponization of energy for geopolitical ends.

Developing countries may have considerable resource endowments, but lack institutional frameworks and transparent rule of law. U.S. companies often view these aboveground conditions as prohibitive risk profiles. Yet, they also make them prime targets for state-owned enterprises hostile to liberal democratic values. ENR's governance programs and—support transparency reforms, reduce potential for exploitation, and advance U.S. energy security objectives.

According to the International Energy Agency, 1.2 billion people lack access to electricity, and 2.7 billion lack clean cooking facilities. Energy poverty are development and geopolitical security challenges. A country's inability to provide reliable electricity is indicative of broader capacity limitations and a precursor to domestic unrest. If confirmed, I look forward to identifying ways that the Bureau can build and broaden its work in this area.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to be here today. I look forward to your questions.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to be here today. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I typically defer. I may ask one question of Susan Thornton. I know we had a nice meeting last night, and I appreciate you coming by so late.

I had a debrief, I guess, with Senator Menendez a couple of days ago, from Vice President Pence relative to some of the discussions that took place in South Korea. It is my sense that the South Koreans, the Japanese, and others are joined at the hip with us as it relates to North Korea. It is my sense that we are certainly open to having meetings with North Korea, as long as the subject matter is one thing, and that is the denuclearization of the Peninsula, period. And it is my understanding that, while discussions like that may take place at some point in the future, it will take place on the basis that we are going to continue to clamp down, working with others, to isolate them even further, put tougher sanctions in place, that there will be no reprieve to have a discussion.

I am wondering if you would verify that to be your thinking, and what to do add to that in any regard.

Ms. T HORNTON. Thank you very much, Senator. And thank you very much for the meeting that we had yesterday.

I think that the policy that we have in place, that was put in place at the very beginning of the administration, the maximum global pressure campaign that envisions increasing pressure through an international coalition in order to change the calculus of the North Korean regime, is still very much in place. We have built a very solid international coalition, in lockstep with our allies and partners. We have brought onboard many countries in the world that would not normally be at the center of this effort. And we are continuing to do that. We envision the pressure continuing to ramp up. There will not be any letup on pressure. We are leaving the door open to engagement, as you have rightly stated, and we want that engagement to consist of one issue, which is denuclearization, our overarching goal for this policy.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell me what it is—why is it that you think we have been able to put together this coalition of people to put the most pressure ever on North Korea right now?

Ms. T HORNTON. Well, I think there are two aspects to that. One is that the threat from North Korea through the testing that the Kim Jong Un regime has done has become much more urgent and much more serious. And I think the other issue is the administration's resolve, frankly, and determination to increase the pressure, tap every possible outlet for putting that pressure on, and for putting a lot of diplomatic shoe leather into gathering this coalition. We are sending people to all corners of the globe to talk to governments about what they can do to further squeeze the North Korean regime, diplomatically and economically, and isolate them.

The CHAIRMAN. And I want to reserve the rest of my time, but who is it that is leading the coordination of this effort? Who is the, sort of, center driving force of this coordinated effort?

Ms. T HORNTON. Well, we have a very clearly coordinated inter-agency policy committee working on the overall North Korea policy, which generated the March 2017 review and policy that we are following. The State Department is leading the diplomatic effort to undertake maximum global pressure campaign, but it is complemented by efforts from our DOD colleagues, from our intelligence colleagues, and a lot of other people around the U.S. Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Cardin.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I thank all three of our nominees for their willingness to serve their country.

Ms. Thornton, I think the Assistant Secretary for East Asian and Pacific is a dream job, so I am glad that you had that enthusiasm. And your service to our country—career service—is very much noted. It gives you, though, the responsibility to coordinate our policies in that region. And I want to just focus, for one moment, on your commitment on human rights.

East Asia and Pacific has significant challenges in good governance, human rights, corruption, trafficking, you name it. And, on the bilateral relationships at the missions, a lot of times these issues get sort of pushed to the side because of the urgency of a particular security issue at the time. And it is the responsibility of the position you have been nominated to to make sure they never forget the values that this Nation stands for.

So, in North Korea, yes, the nuclear confrontation is our challenge, but you have a country that is at the bottom on human rights. In China, you have a country that made some progress, is now moving in the wrong direction on protecting the human rights of its citizens. In Burma, it has exploded into a full-out crisis with the Rohingya Muslims. Lives are in—at risk. And then, our traditional allies, the Philippines has—you have seen where the extrajudicial killings have taken place.

So, will you just reaffirm to this committee your commitment that human rights will be the priority, and that you will, in your contact with each of our missions in—under your supervision, remind them that you expect progress to be made on the human rights front, and share that information with this committee?

Ms. Thornton. Yes. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

But, yes, I think that, certainly, standing up for democracy, human rights, clean governance is part of who we are. It is part of our foreign policy, an integral part. And I think it needs to be part of every conversation that we have with governments around the world, whether it is on nonproliferation, energy issues, or trade issues. Human rights come into everything that the United States does with partner governments overseas. And I think—I will certainly commit to you that that will be a standard that I will bear, and that I will continue to communicate with the committee on this.

Senator Cardin. And one area you could specifically help us with is that—I have been in communication with our Ambassadors or Chief of Missions of all the countries, asking them to reply to a commitment they made during their nomination process, to keep this committee informed on their human rights agenda. My understanding is that sometimes those letters have a long way of getting to me, because they are in the bureaucracy of the State Department. Will you make sure that we get timely responses to those inquiries?

Ms. Thornton. Yes.

Senator Cardin. Thank you.

Ms. Thompson, there are a lot of questions I am going to—I would like to ask you about. Let me just go to the basics. Let us start with civil nuclear—123 agreements, gold standards. Are you committed to maintaining the gold standard, wherever we can, in any future 123 agreements?

Colonel Thompson. Thank you, Senator. And thank you for making the time last week for our office call.

I commit to you that I will always represent, in negotiations for the United States, the highest standard possible for the safety and security, first and foremost, for the American people, but to get the highest standard possible. I think the community recognizes that the agreement with the UAE is set as a gold standard, and would look to achieve that standard. Again, I—there are ongoing dialogues that I have not been privy to, but once—if confirmed, once fully briefed, I will look forward to continue that dialogue with you, with this committee, to ensure we get the highest standard possible.

Senator Cardin. In our conversation, I appreciated that we covered a lot of issues, including INF and the New START. And just to put on the record, assuming Russia is in compliance with the New START agreements, it is—are we committed to making sure the United States also complies and stays in the New START agreement?

Colonel Thompson. We are, sir. It was a very positive sign last week, with both parties making the central limits to the New START Agreement. We have a few years to assess for the extent with that, but a very promising sign, based on last week. It still needs final verification, but I look forward to continuing to see the progress of that treaty, and, if confirmed, will continue to uphold those standards.

Senator Cardin. Mr. Fannon, I want to, first, thank you for your support of 1504 and the communication with the SEC in regards to transparency within the extractive industries. We very much appreciated your leadership on that issue.

As I understand it, you recognize the threat of foreign interest on energy. We just issued a report on Russia using energy as a weapon of war. The Nord Stream 2—I do not know if we have official position opposing it, but we would expect that that is a major area where we could minimize Russia’s impact by opposing a Nord Stream 2. Do you agree?

Mr. Fannon. Yes, Senator. In fact, my understanding is, Secretary Tillerson has publicly raised his—voiced his strong opposition to Nord Stream 2. And, if confirmed, I would continue to advance alternate ways to lessen the vulnerabilities that Europe has from the Russian gas dependence.

Senator Cardin. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Gardner.

Senator Gardner. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
And again, thanks to all of you for your service.

Ms. Thornton, thank you very much for the time yesterday to have a conversation about goals and objectives in Asia. We have been, as we talked about—Senator Markey and I are working on the North Korea issues, developing a comprehensive Asia strategy, something that would focus on three things: economic strategy in Asia, a national security strategy in Asia, and a rule-of-law strategy in Asia. More than just a 4-year or 8-year outlook of any presidency, it is important that we have a long-term strategy in the United States that gives us a generational view in Asia.

As you mentioned, a third, a third, a third—GDP, population—but soon to have one-half of global GDP, one-half of global population, five of the seven defense treaties, so—and largest armies—and some of the largest standing armies in the world all concentrated in Asia. So, we have got to get this right.

Do you believe it is important that we have a long-term Asia strategy?

Ms. Thornton. Thank you, Senator. And thank you, again, for the time yesterday.

Yeah, I think it is—it is important that we keep in mind our long-term interests. They are certainly enduring. And I think we need to have a strategy that matches that. I think that the President’s Indo-Pacific strategy that was announced in November in Da Nang, Vietnam, is looking at all of the issues, the pillars that you just mentioned on diplomatic and political, on security, and on economic, and also on the rule of law and governance issues. So, I think it is very critical that we keep in mind what our long-term goals are, and adjust our strategy—— Senator Gardner. Thanks. And will you commit me—with—commit to work with us on this strategy and this legislation?

Ms. Thornton. Yes.

Senator Gardner. Thank you.

Turning to North Korea, the goal of complete verifiable, irrevers-ible denuclearization remains the absolute commitment of this administration. Is that correct?

Ms. Thornton. Yes.

Senator Gardner. There is no other strategy or device, other than, right now, our application of maximum pressure, both economically and diplomatically, correct?

Ms. Thornton. Correct.

Senator Gardner. Would you continue to work with me, this committee, and Senator Markey on sanctions legislation to make sure that we apply that maximum pressure?

Ms. Thornton. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to work with you on all of that.

Senator Gardner. And I hope that you will continue to support appropriate sanctions on, not only North Korean entities, but also third-party entities that are enabling and empowering the North Korean regime, including those out of China?

Ms. Thornton. Yes.

Senator Gardner. Thank you.

And, when it comes to China, the National Security Strategy states—just released—“China and Russia challenge American power, influence, and interests, attempting to erode American security and prosperity. China seeks to displace the United States in the Indo-Pacific region, expand the reaches of its state-driven economic model, and reorder the region in its favor. China is using economic inducements and penalties, influence, operations, and implied military threats to persuade other states to heed its political and security agenda.” Do you agree with those statements?

Ms. THORNTON. Yes.

Senator GARDNER. What policy should the United States pursue to counter China’s role in the Indo-Pacific region?

Ms. THORNTON. Well, I think we have to, first and foremost, deepen and expand our partnerships and our alliances in the region, and do, in some form or other, similar to what we are doing in the case of North Korea, which is, bring together like-minded countries to promote the rules-based order, to push back on bad behavior, and to insist that countries in the region avoid and refrain from coercive tactics, bullying, and that they abide by a regime where all countries have an equal say in their decisionmaking.

Senator GARDNER. Do you believe China will continue its efforts to militarize the South China Sea?

Ms. THORNTON. I think they will try.

Senator GARDNER. And what is our response appropriately to be?

Ms. THORNTON. Well, I think we need to use all tools that we have at our disposal. We have diplomatic tools at our disposal. We are using our freedom-of-navigation operations to push back on excessive maritime claims in the region. And we are also, you know, using our coalitions and support of partners in the region to push back against Chinese behavior.

Senator GARDNER. And, during your time in the Foreign Service, which developments in the U.S.-China relationship have you seen that have most disappointed you?

Ms. THORNTON. I think that, in the U.S.-China relationship, there has been, you know, a lot of hope placed in the reform process in China. So, I think it is quite disappointing to see the backsliding on reforms, both economic and also the—certainly the political atmosphere in China tightening, and repression for individual freedoms increasing in recent years.

Senator GARDNER. And you do—do you believe, right now, that the United States is doing enough to pressure China on behavior ranging from continued cyberintrusions of U.S. corporations to violations of human rights to militarization through its expansion—expansive activities, the One Belt, One Road?

Ms. THORNTON. Well, I think we are doing a lot to push back on all of that, but I think we are looking at doing more. And I think that is appropriate.

Senator GARDNER. What does a “free and open Indo-Pacific” mean to you?

Ms. THORNTON. To me, that means open access for—to global commons for all countries, open, sort of, trade and trade lanes, and a continuation of rules-based systems that allow all countries to participate on an equal footing in that region.

Senator GARDNER. Thanks.

Mr. Chairman, thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much.

Senator Merkley.
Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

And let me begin with Mr. Fannon. Welcome. And Germany is considering a massive LNG project, called Nord Stream, that would essentially make Germany’s economy dependent on Russia for its—sizable share of its energy for the generation to come. Do we have strategic concerns about that type of dependence?

Mr. FANNON. Thank you for the question, Senator. And thank you for taking the time to visit with me yesterday.

Absolutely. My understanding, the U.S. has publicly opposed it. Secretary Tillerson has opposed it repeatedly. It highlights the dependency on—of Europe on—further vulnerability on Russian gas. And the United States position is—my understanding, is strongly to oppose that pipeline.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. Thank you very much.

And, Ms. Thompson, in August of last year, President Moon Jae-in said the U.S. has agreed not to take any military action against North Korea without first getting South Korea’s approval. And General Dunford responded that South Korea is an ally, and everything we do in the region is in the context of our alliance. Will we pay significant attention to South Korea’s position in regards to potential military strikes on North Korea?

Colonel THOMPSON. Thank you for that question, Senator. And thank you for making the time yesterday.

I think, particularly in the region, we have strengthened our relationships with—this administration—with visits from the Secretary of Defense Tillerson, the President, the Vice President. But, the short answer is yes. It is critical that we have our allies and partners, whether it is Japan, South Korea, strengthening the relationships with China, to——

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. I will just take yes. You had me at yes.

Colonel THOMPSON. Okay, sir. Thank——

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

So, our administration is considering a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia that would not have the gold standard on non-proliferation, which is prohibiting uranium enrichment and plutonium reprocessing. Of course, the goal is not to create the foundation for the potential for a nuclear weapons program. We have, in the course—the largest Shi’ite power, Iran, and the largest Sunni power, of Saudi Arabia. We have been doing everything we can to have Iran not pursue a nuclear weapons program. Should we allow Saudi Arabia to proceed with American technology in nuclear power plants that do not have the gold standard, given the risk of creating that competition between the two and undermining our own efforts to prevent Iran from getting a nuclear bomb?

Colonel THOMPSON. Thank you for the question, Senator.

And I know the talks are ongoing. I have not been privy to those talks. And I know the talks predated this particular administration. But, it is my goal that—to have the nonproliferation standards possible, briefly addressed earlier, with the earlier UAE, with the gold standard. And, if confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and with the interagency to ensure that we get the strongest standards possible for that agreement.
Senator MERKLEY. Does it give you any concern, though, that, if we have standards for Saudi Arabia, that Iran, as the competing Shi'ite power, will say, “Well, you are not treating the two of us equally,” and make it harder for us to pursue a no-nuclear-weapon policy? We did ask Iran and—as part of the agreement, to dismantle their Iraq reactor, pour concrete in the core, and so on, so forth.

Colonel THOMPSON. Senator, I can commit to you that I will work to achieve the highest standard achievable. Again, I have—do not know what agreements have been—occurred in the past, but I can tell you and commit to you that I will work for our country to get the strongest standards achievable.

Senator MERKLEY. Back in 2003, we negotiated an agreement with Libya to surrender, discontinue all elements of its nuclear weapon development program. What confidence would North Korea's Kim regime have that a similar decision to denuclearize would not result in the same fate as befell Gaddafi?

Colonel THOMPSON. Well, I have not, you know, met the leader, but I would not wager to get what is in his mind. What I can say is that the maximum pressure campaign from this administration has taken steps to put pressure on the regime. We have seen some movement. And, obviously, as the Assistant Secretary mentioned, with the relationship with China, been cutting down the financial footholds. I do not know the relationships—if we can—with the North Korean regime, I do not know if he parallels any other regime. sir, quite candidly.

Senator MERKLEY. All the experts in the region, when we visited there, noted that North Korea paid a lot of attention to what happened with Gaddafi. So, I am just asking you if that is—with your background in national security, if that was a real concern in the message that was sent through that action, in terms of our efforts to denuclearize the Korean Peninsula.

Colonel THOMPSON. Yes, sir; it is absolutely a data point.

Senator MERKLEY. Yeah.

In our—did I run out of time already?

The CHAIRMAN. You did.

Senator MERKLEY. How did that—

The CHAIRMAN. It is just been—

Senator MERKLEY. How did that happen?

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you so much.

Senator Young.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you, Chairman.

Congratulations to each of you for your nominations. Thank you for visiting with me in my office. And I appreciate your previous history of service.

President Trump, Mr. Fannon, said, in November of last year, that economic security is national security. Do you agree with this?

Mr. FANNON. Yes, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. Do you believe energy security is an integral component of economic security?

Mr. FANNON. Yes, Senator.
Senator YOUNG. And so, my inference would be that you also agree that energy security is a necessary and important part of our national security.

Mr. FANNON. I do.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. When it comes to the economic and energy security of this country, do you agree that the actions and priorities of the Bureau of Energy and Natural Resources can be optimized if they are carried out in support of a written strategic plan for the Bureau?

Mr. FANNON. Senator, thank you for the question.

Senator YOUNG. This question should not come as a surprise, because we discussed it in my office.

Mr. FANNON. Absolutely. I think that—I would just point out that the foundation would be the National Security Strategy, which speaks to this very issue. I think, from our conversation, you raised the point, "How can we delineate that with a little bit more granularity and have more measurable outcomes? And I think that there is—if confirmed, I would like to work with you on how just to do that.

Senator YOUNG. So, based on your preparation for this hearing, does—do you know whether ENR periodically produces some sort of written strategy?

Mr. FANNON. I do not, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. Well, you were not aware of one when we previously discussed it. So, if confirmed, will you provide my office a copy of a written strategy?

Mr. FANNON. Yes, Senator. It would be my intention to help—if confirmed, to work with the Bureau and other partners to come up with something that would achieve that goal.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. A written strategy. It is important to me.

Mr. FANNON. I understand, Senator, yes.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. Thank you.

Ms. Thompson, if confirmed, I understand you will lead the interagency policy related to arms transfers and security assistance. Do you agree that the U.S. Government should fully comply with all laws related to security assistance?

Colonel THOMPSON. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. Okay. And, during our meeting yesterday, we discussed the potential need to update and refine some of those laws. So, if confirmed, do you and your team commit to working closely with me and members of my team to determine whether we can improve U.S. laws related to security assistance?

Colonel THOMPSON. I do, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. All right, thank you.

In the Senate Intel committee's hearing this week on worldwide threats, our Director of National Intelligence, Dan Coates, a Hoosier, reiterated that Iran has the largest ballistic missile program in the Middle East. He warned that Iran may develop an ICBM that could strike the United States. He noted Iran's space program could shorten Tehran's path to an ICBM. The intel community has consistently warned that Tehran would choose ballistic missiles as its preferred method of delivering nuclear weapons if it acquired them.
Ms. Thompson, do you agree with these DNI Coates and intel community assessments?

Colonel Thompson. Yes, sir, I do.

Senator Young. I would also note a January 25 report by the Foundation for Defense of Democracies that documented as many as 23 ballistic missile launches by Iran just since the conclusion of the July 2015 Iran deal. Based on these concerns, on February 6, Senator Rubio joined me in leading a letter to our President regarding Iran’s ballistic missile program. Our letter was signed by 14 United States Senators.

Mr. Chairman, with unanimous consent, I would like to enter that letter into the record.

The Chairman. Without objection.

Senator Young. Ms. Thompson, have you had a chance to review our letter?

Colonel Thompson. I did, Senator, thank you.

Senator Young. Well, then you will know our letter calls for tough additional sanctions against Iran, and expresses a desire to work with the administration. So, if confirmed, will you work with my office and this committee to determine what additional sanctions we might impose on Iran to counter its ballistic missile program?

Colonel Thompson. If confirmed, I commit that I will work with you and this committee, absolutely, Senator.

Senator Young. Absolutely. Thank you.

I yield back, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Absolutely. Thank you, sir.

Senator Shaheen.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And congratulations, to each of you, on your nominations. I look forward to working with you, if confirmed.

Can I ask, Ms. Thornton—I had a briefing, with some other Senators yesterday, with someone from the White House who made it very clear that there is no "bloody-nose strategy" for a strike against North Korea. And I—and we asked him if we could go out and quote him on that, and said yes. Is it your understanding, as well, that there is no "bloody-nose strategy" against North Korea?

Ms. Thornton. That is my understanding, Senator, yes.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

How concerned are you that we do not yet have an Ambassador in South Korea, given the challenges we are facing on the Korean Peninsula? And what—can you describe what that means, in terms of our diplomacy in that area?

Ms. Thornton. Thank you.

Well, of course, as a career diplomat, I am very well aware of the importance of having a representative of the President that is confirmed on the ground to represent us in all countries, but especially in South Korea. And I know that our team is working very hard with the White House on a nomination for our Ambassador in South Korea.
I do want to point out, though, that we do have a tremendous team at the Embassy in South Korea, and a very, very capable charge d'affaires out there, Mark Knapper, who has been doing an incredible job over the last almost year.

Senator Shaheen. I certainly would second that. I think we have very impressive diplomats in our embassies. But, it does send a message to the country where—to South Korea and to other countries in the region about how we view the importance, I think. I heard from a German official, recently, who was expressing concern that we do not yet have an Ambassador to Germany, either, and that that sends a message. So, I do hope that you will do everything you can to expedite and move this process along, because we should not be a full year into a new administration and not have an Ambassador in a country that is so critical to foreign policy in that region.

Can I ask, Mr. Fannon—you spoke to, I believe it was Senator Cardin's questions about Nord Stream 2 and sanctions. As I am sure you are aware, the sanctions act, CAATSA, that we passed last year would authorize sanctions against energy projects that Russia is engaged in that involve a certain level of their participation. So far, no sanctions have been imposed to date. What we have heard from the State Department spokesperson is that we do not need to impose sanctions under CAATSA—I am paraphrasing, here—that just the threat is a deterrence. Do you believe that to be the case with energy projects? And are there any examples that you can provide?

Mr. Fannon. Apologies, Senator, but in—with respect to the question, is it directed to the CAATSA, in particular?

Senator Shaheen. It is. Are there any sanctions that you think should be applied under CAATSA relative to Russia's energy projects?

Mr. Fannon. Thank you for the clarification, Senator.

I—I have not been briefed on these issues substantively, being outside of the Department and given the security issues at play. I am aware of——

Senator Shaheen. But, you were able to comment on Nord Stream 2. Is that—would you put that in a different category than other projects?

Mr. Fannon. Well, with respect to that, Nord Stream 2, I was referring to the Secretary's public comments on that matter. With respect to CAATSA, I am aware of the legislation that passed with overwhelming support. I am aware that the Department intends to apply pressure to change Russia's behavior. And, if confirmed, I will pledge to work with the committee and throughout the interagency to do just that.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Colonel Thompson, in response to Russia's violations of the INF Treaty, the administration has decided to initiate U.S. research and development on ground-based cruise missiles that would not be treaty-compliant. As I understand, this step would not violate the INF Treaty, but would set us on a different course. Do you believe that beginning R&D on this type of missile will have any impact on Russia? Will they be willing to come back into compliance if we begin to do this kind of research? And are there any risks that you see in this approach?

Colonel THOMPSON. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I think it is important that the U.S. maintain our compliance with the treaty. As—have not been fully briefed, but look forward to receiving, if confirmed, those briefings. My understanding is that the R—as you mentioned, that the R&D does not violate that treaty. I think it is important, as an old soldier and as, hopefully, a, if confirmed, future Under Secretary, that we continue to conduct those R&D efforts. Those are—some of those are very long—long-term projects, and we would not want to get flatfooted.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much.

Senator Risch.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, I want to thank Senator Shaheen for bringing up the, quote, "bloody-nose strategy." I was in the same meeting she was in yesterday, and all of us have been shaking our heads. The national media did what it always does, and they have reported that the President has been advised on this, and this is one of the options that we have. And we were told clearly by administration people—it is about as high up as it gets—that there is no such thing as a "bloody-nose strategy," that they have never talked about it, they have never considered it, they have never used that term, and it is not something that people ought to be talking about. So, thank you, Senator Shaheen, for bringing that up. And this is a good hearing, actually, to do that in. And, obviously, I mean, that thing has repercussions that one cannot even imagine. So, it is a good thing that that has never been talked about.

However, talking about the North Korea strategy, Ms. Thornton, I—the Chairman asked you a question; I did not quite get an answer to that. And he asked about, Who is the responsible person? Obviously, it is the President of the United States. But, you mentioned—I think his specific question was, Who is the person steering the boat on this right now? Who is the person steering the boat on this right now? And you mentioned the March 17th committee that came up with a strategy. And I guess I—can you give us a little more direct—do we need to talk to Secretary Tillerson if—if we are looking for the nuance sentence that has to be put on the table, is it Secretary Tillerson that we talk to?

I thought the Vice President did a fabulous job, when he went to South Korea, of laying out exactly what is on America's mind when it comes to North Korea. And words matter. And things have got to be nuanced right, particularly in this situation.

Who is the person that the Chairman was seeking to identify? Is that you? Is it the Secretary of State?

Ms. THORNTON. Well——

Senator RISCH. Obviously, the President, but——

Ms. THORNTON. Yeah. I mean, obviously, this is a whole-of-government effort. It comes from the President, but certainly the Secretary of State has been in the lead on all of the diplomatic efforts to build this global coalition of maximum pressure. We held a meeting of a number of foreign ministers in Vancouver recently, where we expanded that coalition very meaningfully, I think. And so, we are following the Secretary’s direction; and our Bureau, I think, for the State Department, is in the lead on this effort, but we make use of colleagues across the Department and across the interagency of the U.S. Government to help us with that.

Senator Risch. Okay, thank you.

Ms. Thompson, the 123 agreements, there are a lot of us here that are big fans of the 123 agreements, for lots and lots of different reasons. I hope you will commit to continue to pursue them, whenever possible. If a country does not come to us, they are going to go somewhere else to—probably an adversary—well, not necessarily an adversary, but—well, you know, it could be an adversary. And that is not in our best interest. You onboard with the 123s? Are you—you feel good about those?

Colonel THOMPSON. I echo those sentiments, Senator.

Senator Risch. Okay, thank you very much.

Japan’s agreement is up in 2018. Are you—has that—where is that right now? Are you engaged in that yet, or not?

Colonel THOMPSON. No, Senator, I have not been engaged with that. If confirmed, that would be part of my portfolio.

Senator Risch. Have you been briefed on it as——

Colonel THOMPSON. No, sir.

Senator Risch. Okay. Thank you very much.

The treaties we have, the arms control treaties that we have, all of us have been sometimes preoccupied with cheating on those treaties. I led the fight against other New START Agreement, which I lost on the floor. And I would like to have that vote again. I think maybe the vote would be a little different today than it was then. And cheating was a huge issue at that point. The other treaties that we have—obviously, in this setting—nonclassified setting, we cannot talk about exactly what that—what constitutes—or what has been going on, as far as the cheating is concerned.

We have had Secretary of State sitting in the chair you are sitting in, and went over this with him. And he wrung his hands and talked about how bad it was and how terrible it was, and we cannot put up with it. But, it kept happening. And we really did not do anything much about that. What are your thoughts on that? Where do you come from when we catch somebody cheating? And obviously, we cannot deal with everyone, because it would release methods and sources that we cannot disclose. What are your thoughts on what you are going to do when you find out that these people are cheating?

Colonel THOMPSON. Well, thank you for that question, Senator. I think success will lie in a number of areas. One, I have confidence on our intelligence community as we continue to build that out——

Senator Risch. As do I.

Colonel Thompson:—the eyes and ears on our adversaries and when they are not abiding by the rules. I also have great confidence in our allies and partners. I think it is important that we have—we strengthen those existing relationships and reach out to those that are looking towards the West, and build upon that. I think that is going to be our success as a—to use a military term, a "combat multiplier" if we get additional countries assisting with that and putting pressure on their end so it is not a unilateral United States action.

Senator Risch. My time is up. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chairman. Thank you.

I had about a minute and a half of time, before I turn to Senator Menendez, from my first questioning period.

To New START, just—Ms. Thompson, I mean, it seems to me that the START Treaty has actually achieved the desired goals that were laid out. Would you agree or disagree with that?

Colonel Thompson. I would agree with that, Senator.

The Chairman. So, we have basically caused both of our countries to reduce the amount of warheads and delivery systems, which, in our case, has allowed us to save monies to invest in modernization to make sure that the nuclear warheads and delivery systems that we have actually work, versus having a huge inventory of them, not knowing whether they can be delivered or not, at huge expense. It has allowed us to focus ourselves in a much better way. Is that correct?

Colonel Thompson. That is correct. Thank you.

The Chairman. And, so far, has the other party adhered, generally, to this agreement? Not INF, but to the START Treaty itself?

Colonel Thompson. As I understand—I have not received classified updates, and I know, just from open source, that reported that they have.

The Chairman. Senator Menendez.

Senator Menendez. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Thornton, our National Security Strategy defines China as a rival and a revisionist power. It lays out that China and Russia challenge American power, influence, and interests, attempting to erode American security and prosperity. And I am reading directly from the strategy. Given this assessment, how should U.S. diplomacy towards China be revised compared to prior administrations who looked to build on the cooperative elements of our relationship with China as a partner, and to encourage China to be a responsible stakeholder, and also as a way of addressing the competitive aspects of our relationship?

Ms. Thornton. Thank you very much, Senator, for that question, which is a big question.

I think, you know, what we have seen in recent years is a—is that we have moved to an inflection point in our relationship with China. And the National Security Strategy reflects, I think, that realization, where we need to preserve space to cooperate with China. It is the biggest country in the world, second-largest economy in the world, and we have a whole range of issues that we need to deal with them on—permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, et cetera. But, the—this National Security Strategy reflects the realization that we are also going to have to compete in a lot of areas with a China that is growing in power, both economic, military, and diplomatic. And——

Senator Menendez. So, what do we—I appreciate that—what do we specifically—what would be—if you are confirmed, what would be your advocacy of how we change our policy?

Ms. Thornton. So, I think—well, we need to, first of all, make sure that we are working with other partners in the region who are also coming to the same realization, which they are, continue to push back on bad behavior, call out, use the tools that are at our disposal, whether they be trade remedies, sanctions, other tools, and also just diplomatic engagement, I think is quite effective with China. China wants to have a good relationship with the United States, which is something that, you know, gives us entree to deal with them on a diplomatic level on many of these issues, and we—they also care a lot about their standing in the world. And so, working together with other countries and—

Senator Menendez. Well—

Ms. Thornton.—partners to push back on bad behavior—

Senator Menendez. Let me ask you some—

Ms. Thornton.—call out—

Senator Menendez. Let me ask you some specifics. So, do you believe that China is doing all that it should be doing to help us meet the challenge of North Korea?

Ms. Thornton. Well, I think China is doing a lot to help us meet the challenge of North Korea.

Senator Menendez. Is it doing—

Ms. Thornton. I do not think they are doing—

Senator Menendez.—all that it should be doing?

Ms. Thornton.—everything that they could be doing. And we are continuing to work with them to push—

Senator Menendez. So, if we want to get China to do more, and we wanted to change its calibration as to how it is thinking about North Korea, should we consider naming China a currency manipulator? Should we consider sanctioning Chinese banks that are facilitating North Korean transactions? Should we be reviewing our One China policy? How do we get China’s focus and calibration to change?

Ms. Thornton. Well, I think what we have to do is prioritize and go after the issues that we are focused on with regard to China, which, in the administration’s current approach, is North Korea, trade and economic relations, and also some law enforcement cooperation on things like opioids, et cetera. And I think, you know, we can work with China on North Korean issues. We certainly need to continue to press for sanctions on entities that are end-running the U.N. sanctions regime—and we will do that, as I mentioned to Senator Gardner earlier—but also continue to work with them, because they are the most important player in implementing those sanctions and making the difference in ratcheting up the pressure in North Korea.

On other issues, trade and economic issues, we need to use the trade tools that we have at our disposal. We are preparing a host of measures, and we are continuing to engage with the Chinese to let them know the areas where we see backsliding, where we feel agreements have not been observed, and go after those, either—hopefully, through diplomatic engagement; if not, through—

Senator Menendez. All right, thank you.

Ms. Thompson, let me ask you. The START Treaty, in 2021, can be extended for 5 years. If circumstances surrounding the treaty remain the same, which right now we have compliance, and even in the midst of malign activities, like Ukraine’s cyberattacks during our elections, noncompliance with the INF, the one positive area is
New START—would you be a proponent of extending the treaty for 5 years?

Colonel THOMPSON. Thank you for the question, Senator.

I honestly think it is too soon to tell. Much changes in our world over the course of days and weeks, much less years. I can commit to you that I will always stand up for——

Senator MENENDEZ. What would have to change? If everything—if Russia is obeying, and we are obeying, and we are living under the treaty, what would change, in your mind, that would want us to break away from that?

Colonel THOMPSON. There may be other situations in the globe that—associated with Russia—I would say, you know, Syria is an example, maybe others—where it would be a tool in our diplomatic toolkit that we might want to use to get an agreement in another area associated with Russia.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I have several other questions, but, in deference to our colleagues, I will wait until the——

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Rubio.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Ms. Thornton, there was an article, I have here, on October 22nd in the Wall Street Journal of last year, and it says that FBI agents, in May of last year, were prepared to arrest or detain four officials from China’s Ministry of State Security, which is the equivalent of our CIA, for conducting illegal official business while traveling through the U.S. on transit visas. These officials had traveled to New York City to pressure Guo Wengui, a health—a wealthy Chinese businessman who applied for asylum in the United States, to return to China and stop using social media to accuse Chinese officials and tycoons of corruption. The article goes on to say that, while FBI agents were at the airport and prepared to arrest or detain these officials before they departed to China, they could not secure final signoff from Washington. According to this article, some senior administrative officials described you and some of your colleagues as not supporting this FBI operation and, quote, "improperly hindering law enforcement efforts to address China’s repeated violations of U.S. sovereignty and law," end quote. Is it true that you opposed that arrest?

Ms. THORNTON. I am not sure that I was involved in that decisionmaking process, but I do know that it was an interagency decision and that there were interagency meetings on this issue that came to the conclusion.

Senator RUBIO. Do you recall being involved in the interagency decisions?

Ms. THORNTON. I do not.

Senator RUBIO. So, you—your testimony today is that this article, and the claim about you, in particular, being involved in this decisionmaking, is false, that you did not, as the article says, hinder law enforcement efforts to arrest them. The FBI had a recommendation to arrest them, and your testimony is that you did not hinder that.
Ms. Thornton. I was not involved in those meetings. I know that there were interagency meetings, and that it was the decision of the interagency to not arrest them.

Senator Rubio. So, you were not involved in any of the—just to—I want to be clear—you were not involved in any of the discussions, interagency meetings. You had nothing to do with the decision by this—by anyone in Washington to ask the FBI not to arrest them. You had nothing to do with that decision.

Ms. Thornton. I mean, I was aware of the conversations that were going on at the time and after the fact.

Senator Rubio. But, you did not weigh in.

Ms. Thornton. I did not weigh in.

Senator Rubio. Okay.

I want to ask you another question. There is this—and just, again, because you are acting in this capacity already, and you have been involved in these efforts for a long time—this is the Web site of the State Department. I had a chart, but I did not put it up. With your permission, I just want to hold up this paper. It used to have the flag of Taiwan in the Web site, and no longer has the Taiwanese flag. Do you know how that happened? Are you aware of how that decision was made to take it down?

Ms. Thornton. Yes, I am aware. The Consular Affairs Bureau rolled out a new Web site for travel advisories that was done through a contract and was not seen by our office. And following the publication—we do not recognize, of course, Taiwan as an independent country, and we do not recognize the flag of the ROC as a country where we have official relations. And our policy is to not display the flag of the ROC on U.S. official government Web sites.

Senator Rubio. That is a new policy, because it was on there before.

Ms. Thornton. No, this is a new—I believe it is a new Web site. But, we—our—it is not a new—

Senator Rubio. I am sorry. It is a new contractor, not—

Ms. Thornton.—it is not a new policy.

Senator Rubio.—a new Web site. This is—

Ms. Thornton. Sorry.

Senator Rubio. The old Web site has the flag. The new one does not. So, it is not an old Web site, it is an—might be a new contractor that designed the Web site, is what you are saying.

Ms. Thornton. I am not sure what specific site that is, but—

Senator Rubio. www.state.gov. That cannot—

Ms. Thornton. But—I mean, I am just saying that it is not a new policy not to display the flag.

Senator Rubio. Well, the flag is here, so was that just a blip or something? I guess it was—somebody inadvertently put it in, and you guys took it out. The bottom line is, this is the way it is going to stay; we are not going to—we used to have the flag; it is not going to be on there anymore. There was a change. There is no doubt there was a change. The Web sites—the graphics are identical. Someone took down the flag.

Well, on a policy note with regards to that, let me ask you this. Would—you—would you commit to encouraging high-level visits between senior U.S. Government officials to meet with Taiwanese counterparts in Taipei?
Ms. Thornton. Well, Senator, we have a very robust unofficial relationship with Taiwan that is grounded in our longtime policy based on those three joint communiques and, of course, our commitments under the Taiwan Relations Act, which are very important. And we have frequent exchange with people on Taiwan. And I think that—I certainly support continuing that robust unofficial relationship.

Senator Rubio. But, what about having high-level visits between U.S. Government officials to meet with their counterparts in Taipei?

Ms. Thornton. We have ongoing, as I say, visits by all realm of people from the U.S. visiting Taiwan, and we certainly continue to support that interaction.

Senator Rubio. Okay.

The Chairman. Senator Kaine.

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And thanks, to the witnesses, for your service, and congratulations on your nominations.

A question, first, for Ms. Thornton and Ms. Thompson. Two days ago, the DNI, Dan Coates, appeared before the Senate Intelligence committee, and he testified, quote, "North Korea will be the most volatile and confrontational WMD threat in the coming year. In addition to its ballistic missile tests and growing number of nuclear warheads for these missiles, North Korea will continue its longstanding chemical and biological warfare programs also." Do you both agree with that assessment of DNI Coates?

Colonel Thompson. I do agree with the Director, sir.

Ms. Thornton. Yes, sir.

Senator Kaine. Do you also agree with the stated position of Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, and others, that, while the U.S. needs to maintain all its options to do with this threat, we are a diplomacy-first nation and are going to look for a diplomatic resolution that would stop the North Korean ambitions to get nuclear weapons or have them be able to be deployed against the United States or allies?

Colonel Thompson. I do agree with the Secretary, yes, sir.

Senator Kaine. So, whatever the percentage chance that we would assess to finding a diplomatic resolution with North Korea, that is something that we need to try.

If I can move now just directly to Ms. Thompson. In the same hearing—because this is now not in Ms. Thornton's area of the world—in the same hearing, the DNI went on to say, "Iran’s implementation of the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, the JCPOA, has extended the time it would take to develop a nuclear weapon from several months to about a year, provided Iran continues to adhere to the deals of major provisions." Do you agree with that assessment?

Colonel Thompson. I do, sir.

Senator Kaine. Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis have stated before this committee and the Armed Services committee that Iran is complying with the JCPOA and that the deal is in America's national security interest. Do you share those opinions?

Colonel Thompson. Senator, I have not received the classified briefings during my time at State. I did, as National Security Advisor. During that time, the intelligence community briefed that they were not in violation.

Senator Kaine. Will you take it from me that both Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis have publicly testified before these committees that they think Iran is complying with the JCPOA, and that the deal is in America’s national security interest?

Colonel Thompson. Sir, if they are complying, they are adhering to the JCPOA, and I have trust and confidence in both those Secretaries.

Senator Kaine. Okay. Thank you.

Given that, given that the North Korean threat is the most significant threat—and according to DNI Coates—and you guys agree with that—given that you agree that we need to focus whatever energy we have on finding a diplomatic resolution with North Korea, if that is possible, given that the DNI has stated that the JCPOA has stretched the time for Iranian efforts to get a nuclear weapon, and that Secretaries Tillerson and Mattis say that they are complying and that the deal is in our national interest, what effect would stepping back from the Iran deal, or moving away from it—what message would that send to North Korea about the wisdom of doing a diplomatic deal with the United States?

Colonel Thompson. Thank you for the question, Senator.

The importance of the Iranian regime to—very familiar with this committee—extending their footprint across the Middle East and the globe, we have seen, separate from the JCPOA——

Senator Kaine. Well, and I am going to ask about that separately. But, I am now talking about a nuclear deal. Why would any nation enter into a nuclear deal with the United States if the United States backed away from other nuclear deals that U.S. officials said were in our national interest, U.S. officials said were being complied with?

Colonel Thompson. Sir, great question. I would wager that North Korea will look for Iran to see how they react. But, in the end, I have—again, with the North Korean regime, that he will make his own decisions.

Senator Kaine. He will make his own decisions. Do you think the U.S. should demonstrate good faith and live up to agreements that we enter into?

Colonel Thompson. I do, sir.

Senator Kaine. Yeah. Well, you see where I am going with this. I am extremely worried about the administration—about the President, frankly—stepping back from an Iran deal, when his own key security officials are saying that Iran is complying with it.

On the non-nuclear issues that you were starting to raise, I think the committee is in general agreement on those, and we have acted strongly—Iran sanctions legislation we have put on the President’s desk, sanctioning human rights behavior, aggression in the region, violations of U.N. missile protocols. I think we are very focused on Iranian misbehavior in those areas. But, when we have the IAEA, our European partners, and chief security professionals saying Iran is complying with the JCPOA, and the administration suggests we may step back from it at the same time as we want North Korea to potentially entertain doing a diplomatic deal with the United States, I think we send a message—we risk sending the message that, if you enter into a nuclear deal with the United States, the United States will not comply with it. And I think that would take whatever that percentage is of North Korea doing a deal—say it is 20 percent—and drive it down to virtually zero.

I will just conclude and say, you know, I am a member of the Armed Services and Foreign Relations committee, and I feel like the joint responsibility of these committees means we need to minimize the risk of necessary war, and we need to maximize the chance that we will overwhelmingly win any necessary war. I do not think we should raise the risk of unnecessary war by stepping back from international agreements that are being complied with.

And I will hand that back to you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. I think I still have a few seconds, before turning to Markey, left on my time.

I—we are working with the administration, as you know, to try to make the agreement with Iran something that is better. I think you know that. A big part of that depends on our European allies and how they view the efforts that we may have inside, domestically. And then there is an effort underway, I think you know, to have some type of follow-on framework with our European allies. I know that you were instrumental, as was Senator Menendez and others, to give us an opportunity to weigh in on this. I would say that, in agreements like this, when we talk about the good faith of the United States, this was, in essence, entered into by one person. It was not entered into by Congress. I know there were a lot of people advising. And I think what that speaks to is that, when we have agreements like this that we want our Nation to honor, we should do it in a fashion where Congress also weighs in. And that is what led to the legislation that we all worked on.

But, I, too, hope that we are able to resolve and strengthen this in a way that is good for the United States, good for the world. And I guess we have until May 12th to hope that, again, our European allies are—will work with us in that regard.

Senator Markey.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

Ms. Thornton, I would like to turn to Asia. According to the recent National Security Strategy, the Trump administration pledged to redouble its commitments to established alliances and partnerships while expanding and deepening relationships with new partners in a region it describes as the most populous and economically dynamic part of the world.

We have a serious threat from North Korea to the United States. China presents a significant strategic challenge to U.S. economic and security interests. But, judging by the State Department’s fiscal year 2019 budget request, it is hard to believe that the administration agrees with that assessment that it made. The President’s budget request released this week recommends cutting the State Department and USAID budgets by approximately 30 percent over the actual 2017 budget.

Within the State Department budget, how would funding for Asia-related issues change as a result of those cuts from 2017 to 2019 budget year?

Ms. Thornton. Well, thank you, Senator.
I think, you know, we, in the East Asia-Pacific Bureau of the State Department, are fairly used to dealing with lean resource issues. We are a very small bureau. We have a very small proportion, overall, of assistance funding. I think, if I am not mistaken, the budget numbers that were released this week are actually an increase for our part of the world over what was requested in last year’s budget. And so, I am certainly hoping that we would see, along with the emphasis in the National Security Strategy, you know, the share the pie going to EAP. I think it is getting larger.

Senator Markey. Well, that is not my understanding, but I will follow up with you on that issue, because, obviously, especially when we are talking about North Korea, it is very difficult to see a successfully implemented North Korea policy for both diplomacy and sanctions enforcement if there is no U.S. Ambassador to South Korea, if the Coordinator for Sanctions Policy position is eliminated. It is an almost shocking set of decisions that have been made, in terms of ensuring that these positions are filled and that they are fully funded in order to make sure that we avoid a catastrophic situation in Korea. And many of the other offices seem to be understaffed, as well.

I have sent a letter to Secretary Tillerson expressing my concerns about the impact on Asia. And so, I would appreciate answers to the questions I am—I will be submitting to you in the very near future.

On the question of South Korea—I mean, of Saudi Arabia, Ms. Thompson, we were told that there is a process that is now in place to determine what the offer will be to Saudi Arabia, in terms of a 123 agreement. Once this process is concluded, and before any formal discussions with Saudi Arabia, the Atomic Energy Act requires the President to keep this committee fully and currently informed of any initiative or negotiations relating to a new or amended agreement for peaceful nuclear cooperation. And I do not think that means just filling us in after the fact, after the deal has been negotiated. Will you commit to providing us with the information with regard to what the offer to the Saudi Arabians are going—is going to be, after you complete your process?

Colonel Thompson. Thank you, Senator. And thank you for making the time yesterday for our discussion yesterday. Very fruitful.

I commit to you that I will work with you and this committee to keep you informed, if confirmed.

Senator Markey. But, again, before the offer is made to the Saudi Arabians, will this committee know what that offer is going to be?

Colonel Thompson. Sir, I can commit to you, if confirmed, I will work with the committee. I am not privy to where it is in the process, and I would work with the experts in the interagency and with the Secretary to make sure we keep the committee informed.

Senator Markey. Well, again, under the law, you have a responsibility to keep this committee——

Colonel Thompson. Absolutely.

Senator Markey.—quote, "fully and currently informed of any initiative or negotiations."

And finally, on the issue of Japan, Japan continues to give us—raise concerns about reprocessing of spent fuel into separated plu-tonium, when, one, it already has 48 tons of separated plutonium; two, Japan does not have an operating facility to turn its plutonium into fuel for nuclear reactors; and, three, the vast majority of Japan's nuclear reactors are not currently operating anyway. Do you think the United States should consider renegotiating the 123 agreement with Japan over its continued plutonium production to no purpose which seems to be related to the generation of electricity and could cause a real proliferation risk in that entire region?

Colonel THOMPSON. Thank you for the question, Senator.
I—and I assure you that I will dig into this issue, if confirmed.
I have great confidence in our diplomatic relationship with the Japanese, both from the President on down and the recency of—with the Secretary, a very strong relationship, both here and over in Japan, with our strong Ambassador, as well. And so, we will definitely work with the committee, and I will dig into that when—if confirmed.

Senator MARKEY. Yeah. I think what is happening in Japan is potentially contributing to an increased risk for nuclear proliferation in that region. And the same thing would be true for a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia that did not absolutely maintain the gold standard. And I think that we are going to need a very close cooperation between the committee and your Department in order to make sure that that is the case.

Thank you so much.

Colonel THOMPSON. Thank you, Senator.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Did you have some followup questions? Go ahead. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

So, very quickly, Ms. Thornton, would you commit to us that, if confirmed, any recommendations you give regarding the trafficking-in-persons report will be based solely on a country's efforts to combat trafficking and not other unrelated factors?

Ms. THORNTON. Yes. If confirmed, I can certainly say that.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you very much.

Ms. Thompson, should—there is some suggestion that we are going to have the possibility of a new 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia. Do you believe the gold standard should be implemented in any such agreement?

Colonel THOMPSON. Thank you, Senator. I think we should always set our standards to meet the highest standards for the United States.

Senator MENENDEZ. So, in this case, the gold standard would be the higher standard. Is that a fair statement?

Colonel THOMPSON. That is the standard of the community.
Again, not privy to the conversations, but always want to work to the highest standards we can get.

Senator MENENDEZ. All right. What we do not need is a rush to nuclear power and a tinderbox of the world. And so, that is why the gold standard is so important.

Mr. Fannon, I did not want you to feel left out of my affection, so let me ask you this. We talked yesterday about some of your past work and regarding your recusal from certain issues. And you noted, in our meeting yesterday, that you believe there would be a way for the ethics team to carve out some of your involvement. Have you been able to get any further clarity on that? Because I am trying to figure out what is it that you are carving out.

Mr. FANNON. Yes. Thank you for the time yesterday, Senator. And thank you for your attention to the question.

If confirmed, I can pledge to work diligently with the ethics attorneys and follow their instruction to the letter with respect to recusals.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. Well, we are—I appreciate that, and that is a good answer to start off with, but I am going to want to know exactly what Ethics is talking about in terms of carve-outs. Is it company-specific? Is it policy sectors? Because obviously there is a big difference. There is a big difference between carving yourself out from a specific company’s involvement in which State, in your particular position of ENR, would involve, or whether there is a policy issue that would be involved. So, I hope we can get that answer so we can move your nomination along.

Let me ask you this. As a lobbyist for Murphy Oil, you lobbied against my bills in the 111th and 112th Congress to hold oil companies accountable for disasters that they cause. So, as you are promoting energy across the globe, what degree of responsibility do you believe oil companies should bear for disaster mitigation when they cause a spill or disaster?

Mr. FANNON. Yes. Thank you for the question, Senator.

We had the opportunity to discuss that bill, that legislation, and I—during our discussion, I commented that I laud the spirit in which it was offered to make sure that—to hold leaders to account, the situation with that bill. And we discussed it, in particular. But, more broadly to your question, I believe, as I spoke to in my opening, that transparency is critical. And a part of that is to have clearly delineated accountability measures.

Senator MENENDEZ. So, is it fair to say that, if you mess up, you clean up?

Mr. FANNON. Yes, Senator.

Now, there is a lot of emphasis about fossil fuels with the administration, but your Department’s stated objective under the State Department also talks about renewable energy sources as part of that. Are you committed to the Department’s statement of its own purposes as it relates to ENR’s mission, globally?

Mr. FANNON. Yes, Senator. Thank you for the question.

The—my understanding of the Bureau, and as you read it to me during our meeting, was—is that they are agnostic as to fuel source, and they are there to support delivery of energy, and to support U.S. firms, et cetera. But, in terms of the type of source, it is agnostic.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, my understanding from reading the statement is that it is not necessarily agnostic. It is not agnostic if you say, “the pursuit of alternative energy and energy efficiency and greater transparency and accountability in the energy sector.” The pursuit of something is not agnostic. It is actually a proactive word.
Mr. FANNON. Yes, Senator. I was speaking in terms of—it is truly an all-of-the-above approach, is my understanding of the Bureau’s work. And so, it—there would not be a weighted measure of one fuel source over another.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay.

I have a series of other questions. I will submit it for the record. I will look forward to your answers.

Mr. FANNON. Thank you.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you all.

The CHAIRMAN. We thank you all for your testimony and your willingness to serve in these capacities, as was mentioned on the front end.

There will be other questions, as Senator Menendez just alluded to. And so, we are going to keep the record open until the close of business on Monday. I know, in this particular case, you will want to answer those very rapidly. We would hope that you would do so.

Again, thank you for the great testimony today. I look forward to your service to our Nation. Thank you so much.

The meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:43 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ANDREA THOMPSON BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Israel

Question 1. A central hallmark of the U.S.-Israel relationship has been the close working relationship between the countries. It has long been U.S. policy to maintain and enhance Israel’s qualitative military edge (QME)—effectively, Israel’s ability to defend itself, by itself, against any threat or potential combination of threats. Given the threats along Israel’s borders and the instability in the region overall, this U.S. commitment is of upmost importance. If confirmed, will you make ensuring Israel’s QME is maintained a constant priority?

Answer. Yes. Israel’s security is paramount to U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East. If confirmed, I would ensure the commitment of the United States, by statutory requirement and longstanding policy, to ensuring Israel maintains its qualitative military edge (QME) by reviewing arms sales to the Middle East in the context of Israel’s QME. As you are aware, the law requires that for any arms sale to the Middle East requiring Congressional Notification under the Arms Export Control Act, the notification must also include a determination that the sale does not adversely affect Israel’s QME.

Question 2. Do you support the provision of security assistance to Israel in accordance with the 2016 U.S.-Israel memorandum of understanding?

Answer. Yes. U.S. support of Israel’s security is steadfast, and Israel continues to be the leading recipient of U.S. Foreign Military Financing (FMF). In Fiscal Year (FY) 2016 and FY 2017, the administration requested $3.1 billion in FMF funding for Israel. As you reference, the United States and Israel recently signed a new Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) that lays out grant assistance funding levels from FY 2019 to FY 2028. The new MOU commits the United States to requesting $3.3 billion each year to Israel in FMF funds, plus an additional $500 million each year in DoD missile defense funds, for a total of $38 billion over this 10-year period. If confirmed, I will support this commitment.

Lebanon

Question 3. The United States continues to provide extensive armament to the Lebanese Armed Forces. At the same time there are growing questions about the independence of the LAF and its connections to Hezbollah. What are your views of the Lebanese Armed Forces and whether the U.S. should continue to support them?
Secretary Tillerson just returned from Beirut, where he had productive discussions with Lebanese leaders. U.S. assistance for Lebanon’s security services, especially the Lebanese Armed Forces (LAF), is the backbone of U.S. policy to reinforce Lebanon’s sovereignty, assert the Lebanese Government’s authority throughout all of its territory, and ensure Lebanon remains a bulwark against violent extremism in a volatile region. Since 2006, the United States has made a $1.7 billion investment in the LAF that has paid outsized dividends for U.S. interests in the Middle East. Just in the last year, the LAF soundly defeated ISIS and al-Qaeda, regained control of several positions along the Syria border, and increased joint border patrols with the U.N. Interim Force in southern Lebanon—enforcing the Lebanese Government’s sovereignty in Hizballah’s historic heartland.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the Lebanese army is an increasingly effective fighting force and one of our strongest counter-terrorism partners in the region. Strengthening Lebanese state institutions like the LAF undermines Hizballah and its attempts to exploit a weak Lebanese Central Government. Without a strong military, Lebanon’s existence as an independent and democratic ally in the region would be jeopardized. This would enable Hizballah to expand its influence and increase the risk of instability inside Lebanon and beyond.

Question 4. Do you believe the United States should enter into a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia? Should the United States require Saudi Arabia to agree to the same no-enrichment standard that was set with the UAE?

Answer. As I said during my hearing, I am committed to ensuring the United States maintains the highest nonproliferation standards in negotiation of our 123 Agreements and will support the longstanding U.S. policy of limiting the spread of enrichment and reprocessing capabilities. Saudi Arabia has decided to move forward with a civil nuclear power program, and concluding a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia is in the United States’ commercial and nonproliferation interests. If the United States and Saudi Arabia bring a 123 agreement into force and a U.S. company is chosen as Saudi Arabia’s supplier, then its nuclear power program will be subject to the strongest nonproliferation, safety, and security standards required by any nuclear supplier in the world. Conversely, in the absence of a 123 agreement, U.S. firms will lose the opportunity to compete for a place in a potentially sizeable market and will almost certainly be replaced by state-supported enterprises from other countries that demand far less stringent safety, security, and nonproliferation protection than we do.

Question 5. The Nuclear Posture Review calls for the development of several new nuclear systems including a new nuclear warhead for our submarine forces and a sea-launched cruise missile. This is in addition to a new ground launched cruise missile that was announced during the view of the United States response to Russia’s INF violation. How are our allies reacting to the United States call for the development of new nuclear system meant to counter Russia’s GLCM? Would you consider the input of our allies valuable when dealing with INF?

Answer. While public responses of allied and partner government officials have varied since the February 2 release of the Nuclear Posture Review (NPR), I understand that allies expressed gratitude for the opportunity to hold confidential consultations with the United States and provide their views during the drafting process of the NPR and stated that they were unsurprised by the final report. My understanding is that nearly all allies expressed concern about the deteriorating security environment and appreciation for the continued U.S. commitment to extended deterrence and to limiting the spread of nuclear proliferation and disarmament goals. Allied input on the INF Treaty is valuable. I understand that the administration continues to keep European and East Asian allies apprised of U.S. efforts through the integrated strategy to seek Russia’s return to compliance with the Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty. This includes all three lines of effort in the administration’s INF integrated strategy: diplomatic, economic, and military. The North Atlantic Council made a strong, unified statement in December 2017. The statement noted that full compliance with the INF Treaty is essential to strategic stability and collective allied security, affirmed the United States is in compliance with the Treaty while declaring Russia’s conduct raises serious concerns regarding its own compliance, and highlighted the Alliance’s shared goal of returning Russia to full and verifiable compliance with the Treaty.
DRL

Question 6. It is crucial for DRL to be involved in review both DCS and FMS proposed arms sales to ensure that this crucial form of U.S. Security Assistance is not undermining U.S. policies and objectives to promote human rights abroad.

- Will you commit that DRL will be involved in reviewing all FMS and DCS cases in which they have human rights concerns regarding the recipient country?
- Do you commit to giving DRL equal weight to the recommendations of the regional bureaus and PM regarding all such cases?
- If necessary, will you grant DRL direct access to you to make a case for denial or modification of a sale for which they have concerns?

Answer. DRL is a vital part of the Department’s arms sales reviews, and human rights is a key criteria in considering arms transfers as codified in the U.S. Conventional Arms Transfer Policy (CAT Policy), Presidential guidance that outlines the criteria for case by case review of all arms sales. I can assure you that if I am confirmed I will continue to respect the vital role that DRL plays in arms sales reviews and will ensure that human rights concerns that DRL or other offices raise are taken seriously. It is my understanding that a process exists by which DRL or other offices can make a case to me for denial or modification of a sale about which they have concerns. I will maintain this practice, if confirmed.

Elliot Broidy

Question 7. Recent reporting revealed that in or about October 2014-2017, Elliot Broidy presented President Trump with a proposal to recruit a “thousands-strong international Muslim army—to be advised by retired Army Gen. Stanley McChrystal” and that “the team behind the Muslim army plan was led by McChrystal.”

- Were you ever aware of this plan during your time as a Director at the McChrystal group, Deputy Assistant to the President in the White House, or Senior Advisor at the Department of State?

Answer. No.

Question 8. If so, please describe what you knew about the plan and when you knew it. Please also describe your assessment of the feasibility and policy implications of this plan.

Answer. N/A

DRL

Question 9. You answered only one of the three questions I submitted to you in writing on the role of DRL in reviewing DCS and FMS proposed arms sales. Please answer the following:

- Do you commit to giving DRL equal weight to the recommendations of the regional bureaus and PM regarding all such cases?

Answer. Yes.

Question 10. If necessary, will you grant DRL direct access to you to make a case for denial or modification of a sale for which they have concerns?

Answer. Yes.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Andrea Thompson by Senator Edward J. Markey

Question 1. Do you believe achieving the gold standard—securing a commitment by other nations not to enrich or reprocess—should be a prerequisite for concluding a 123 agreement with the United States? Why is the Trump administration still conducting an internal process to decide what concessions we might be willing to offer to Saudi Arabia to try and conclude a 123 agreement? Will you commit to getting answers and briefing me once this “process” is concluded and before any formal discussions with Saudi Arabia?
Answer. As I testified, I have not been privy to the talks to date with Saudi Arabia, but, if confirmed, it will be my goal to have the strongest nonproliferation standards possible. The United States has a longstanding policy of limiting the spread of enrichment and reprocessing capabilities around the world. If confirmed, I commit to keeping the committee fully abreast of the status of all 123 agreement negotiations.

Question 2. Has the U.S. Government raised its concerns with Japan over its continued reprocessing of spent fuel into separated plutonium when: 1) it already has 48 tons of separated plutonium, 2) Japan does not have an operating facility to turn its plutonium into fuel for nuclear reactors, and 3) the vast majority of Japan’s nuclear reactors are not currently operating anyway? Do you think the United States should consider re-negotiating its 123 agreement with Japan over its continued plutonium production?

Answer. As I testified during my confirmation hearing, I assure you that I will dig into this issue, if confirmed. As I told the committee, I have great confidence in our diplomatic relationship with the Japanese. As stalwart partners on both non-proliferation and civil nuclear energy, the United States and Japan regularly discuss a wide range of related issues, including Japan’s nuclear fuel management policies.

Question 3. If you agree that the New START Treaty is beneficial to the United States, then why hasn’t the Trump administration announced its intent to pursue a 5 year extension of the Treaty until 2026? Does the Trump administration not support pursuing such an extension?

Answer. The stated policy of the Trump administration is that the United States will continue to fully implement New START, which contributes to preserving strategic stability between the United States and Russia and is a critical component of global nuclear nonproliferation efforts. If confirmed, I look forward to participating in discussions on the next steps on New START Treaty.

Question 4. If New START is beneficial to the U.S., why wouldn’t we announce our intent to pursue extending the central limits? Wouldn’t that send a positive signal about our leadership on arms control and reduction efforts around the world without prematurely committing us into anything?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting U.S. actions to continue to fully implement New START, which contributes to preserving strategic stability between the United States and Russia and is a critical component of global nuclear nonproliferation efforts. I understand the administration’s immediate focus is on the next data exchange, which will provide the numbers of U.S. and Russian strategic offensive arms as of February 5, 2018. The United States hopes to exchange this data with Russia in late February or early March. As I testified, we have a few years to assess before making any decisions on the extension of New START, but it was a very promising sign that both parties complied with the central limits to the New START agreement by February 5.

Question 5. Do you believe the Iran nuclear agreement is in the U.S. national security interest?

Answer. The President and the administration have been clear about concerns regarding the JCPOA. As I testified during my nomination hearing, I have broader concerns about Iran’s activities as they extend their footprint across the Middle East and the globe. Iran’s continued malign activities in the region, including ballistic missile activities and support for terrorism and regional proxies, undermine expectations that the JCPOA would positively contribute to regional and international peace and security. The President has requested that Congress work with the administration to address the JCPOA’s flaws, including through amending and strengthening the Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act (INARA). In parallel, I understand discussions are underway in Europe. If confirmed, I look forward to being part of these discussions to ensure the JCPOA contributes to regional and international peace and security.

Question 6. If the United States believes that Iran is not in compliance with its commitments under the nuclear deal, why has the United States not engaged in the formal dispute resolution process outlined in the Iran deal that is supposed to be used by any party that believes other parties to the agreement are not meeting their commitments?

Answer. Although I am not yet engaged in these discussions, I understand the United States has engaged Iran directly and in cooperation with our P5+1 partners to ensure strict technical implementation of the deal. While to date the United States has not deemed it necessary to invoke the dispute resolution mechanism contained in the JCPOA, you are correct that it is a tool available to the United States. The United States continues to uphold its JCPOA commitments and continues to hold Iran strictly accountable to its nuclear-related commitments under the deal—including its obligation to comply with all IAEA requests for access to sites the Agency feels it needs to visit in order to carry out its verification responsibilities in Iran.

Question 7. How would the other parties to the agreement react to the United States unilaterally pulling out of the deal? Is the Trump administration ready to impose secondary sanctions on European companies and banks like Airbus and DeutscheBank?

Answer. While President Trump has made clear that we must fix the flaws in the JCPOA or the United States will withdraw, the administration has not announced any intention to end participation in the JCPOA at this time, and the United States continues to uphold its JCPOA commitments. As I understand the current approach, with the United States is engaging European partners to achieve a commitment to address the deficiencies identified in the deal and develop a shared understanding of how to counter Iran’s broader destabilizing activities. Part of this will be to negotiate in some form a supplemental agreement that would impose new multilateral sanctions if Iran thwarts inspections or gets too close to the capability to produce fissile material for a nuclear weapon. Additionally, the United States is seeking an agreement that provides strong consequences, including new sanctions, if Iran develops or tests long-range missiles.

Question 8. If the United States leaves the Iran nuclear deal, what do you think the implications are for international nuclear nonproliferation efforts? Do you think reneging on commitments we made and trying to change them either be re-imposing sanctions or taking legislative action will make it easier or more difficult to negotiate nonproliferation agreements with other countries (like North Korea)?

Answer. While President Trump has made clear his direction to negotiators to fix the flaws in the JCPOA or the United States will withdraw, the administration has not announced any intention to end participation in the JCPOA at this time. The United States continues to uphold its JCPOA commitments, and to hold Iran strictly accountable to its nuclear-related commitments under the deal—including those related to IAEA inspector access. European partners have signaled a willingness to cooperate with the United States to address Iran’s malign actions outside the JCPOA and other long term proliferation challenges where international support remains crucial, including North Korea.

Regardless of the future of the JCPOA, Iran’s nuclear activities must remain exclusively peaceful and Iran must cooperate fully with its continuing NPT and related IAEA safeguards obligations. The global nonproliferation regime, and the NPT in particular, must be able to address cases of noncompliance. The strength and durability of the NPT depends on common efforts of nations around the world to reinforce the nuclear nonproliferation regime and to combat threats to international security.

Question 9. Why do you believe tax dollars are better spent investing in new nuclear capabilities rather than investing more heavily in diplomacy or even conventional systems? Won’t they just provide the justification countries like Russia are looking for not to comply with their commitments?

Answer. The 2018 Nuclear Posture Review seeks to deter potential adversaries from thinking they can gain any advantage through the use of nuclear weapons and seeks to encourage Russia to engage seriously on reducing its large disparity of non-strategic nuclear weapons. The deterrence effects that nuclear weapons provide are unique and essential to preventing nuclear attack—the only existential threat to the United States and its allies and partners. The administration’s nuclear modernization program remains the most effective and least costly approach to sustaining the U.S. nuclear arsenal and an effective nuclear deterrent.

Question 10. Do you believe we need the “supplements” called for in the recently-released Nuclear Posture Review? If so, why? Please explain for both the low-yield SLBM and then the Sea-Launched Cruise Missile.

Answer. As outlined in the 2018 NPR, these supplements create incentives for Russia to return to diplomacy on reducing the disparity in non-strategic nuclear weapons. As the 2018 NPR states, these supplements will “provide a more diverse set of characteristics greatly enhancing our ability to tailor deterrence and assurance; expand the range of credible U.S. options for responding to nuclear or non-nuclear strategic attack; and, enhance deterrence by signaling to potential adversaries that their concepts of coercive, limited nuclear escalation offer no exploitable advantage.” They enhance crisis and strategic stability by raising a potential adver-sary's risks and making clear the United States has both the means and the willingness to respond at all levels of conflict. This raises the stakes for adversaries, induces their restraint, and thereby reinforces stability.

A low-yield ballistic missile (LYBM) is not a new warhead as only nuclear components already present in the stockpile will be used. The LYBM is necessary to achieve our tailored deterrence objectives and to meet the roles of nuclear weapons described in the 2018 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR). The LYBM will use the existing W76-1 warhead, but will be configured to provide the President with an additional response option to deliver a low-yield nuclear weapon able to overcome advanced adversary air defenses. The NPR calls for the pursuit of a sea-launched cruise missile (SLCM) capability that can be fielded in about 7–10 years, pending additional study. The NPR further notes that the United States may reconsider the pursuit of a SLCM “if Russia returns to compliance with its arms control obligations, reduces its non-strategic nuclear arsenal, and corrects its other destabilizing behaviors.” The pursuit of a nuclear SLCM capability will enhance deterrence in a strategic environment that has significantly worsened since the 2010 NPR. Both supplements would be compliant with all treaties and agreements, including obligations under the New START Treaty.

Question 11. Please describe how America’s allies and partner nations have responded to the Nuclear Posture Review. Have any expressed concerns with the policies it outlines? If so, please describe the specific concerns shared.

Answer. While public responses of allied and partner government officials have varied since the February 2 release of the Nuclear Posture Review (NPR), allies expressed gratitude for the opportunity to hold confidential consultations with the United States and provide their views during the drafting process of the NPR, and stated that they were unsurprised by the final report. While our consultations produced a variety of views nearly all U.S. allies expressed concern about the deteriorating security environment and appreciation for our continued commitment to extended deterrence and to our long-term nonproliferation and disarmament goals.

Question 12. On what basis does the administration believe that developing and possibly deploying a new, road mobile ground-launched cruise missile will convince Russia to return to compliance with the INF Treaty? How does this enhance our diplomatic leverage? Isn’t it just throwing good money after a weapons system we don’t really need or want while backing us into a corner if Russia doesn’t “back down?”

Answer. The administration remains committed to the INF Treaty, and its integrated strategy of diplomatic, economic, and military measures seeks to return Russia to full and verifiable compliance. Since the United States publicly announced Russia’s violation in 2014, Russia has taken no step to return to compliance. The U.S. integrated strategy includes a review of options for a conventional, ground launched intermediate range missile system, which would enable the United States to better defend the United States and allies should Russia not return to compliance. The purpose is to make clear to Russia that it will be less secure—not more—if it persists in its violation, and to deny Russia the military advantage it has sought with the development of a prohibited system. This step does not violate U.S. obligations under the Treaty, and will be reversed if Russia returns to compliance.

Question 13. Doesn’t the development of a new GLCM provide Putin a propaganda victory and a “legitimate” reason to blame the U.S. for the collapse of the INF Treaty and begin deploying large numbers of illegal missiles without any constraints?

Answer. No. The United States is in compliance with the Treaty. Russia is developing an illegal missile system in spite of the constraints of the Treaty. The administration’s review of military concepts and options to induce Russia to return to compliance, including options for a conventional, ground launched intermediate range missile systems, does not violate U.S. obligations under the Treaty. As the administration has described publicly, this step will be reversed if Russia returns to compliance.

Question 14. How did our NATO allies react to the news that the United States plans to develop a new road mobile GLCM that if deployed would necessarily be placed in Europe? To your knowledge, are there any NATO or East Asian allies that would allow the United States to base a new road mobile ground launched cruise missile on their territory? If the development of a new GLCM becomes a controversial issue within the alliance, wouldn’t that play into Moscow’s efforts to divide the alliance and take the spotlight off its violation?

Answer. I understand that the administration continues to keep European and East Asian allies apprised of its efforts to seek Russia’s return to full and verifiable compliance with the Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty. If confirmed, maintaining allied cohesion and responding in concert will be a critical element of U.S. diplomatic pressure to bring Russia back into compliance. The North Atlantic Council made a strong, unified statement in December 2017. It noted that full compliance with the INF Treaty is essential to strategic stability and collective allied security, affirmed the United States is in compliance with the Treaty while declaring Russia's conduct raises serious concerns regarding its own compliance, and highlighted the Alliance's shared goal of returning Russia to full and verifiable compliance with the Treaty.

Question 15. To help resolve the noncompliance issues, will the new administration consider offering transparency measures to address the Russian charge that U.S. SM-3 launchers in Europe can contain ground launched cruise missiles?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to engage Russian officials in multiple venues, including the Special Verification Commission (SVC), to explain in a transparent, substantive, and constructive manner why U.S. actions in these areas are compliant with the INF Treaty. In December 2017, the United States publicly detailed these positions in a fact sheet on the Department of State website.

Question 16. In testimony to the House Armed Services committee in March, Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Paul Selva stated that "There are no military requirements we cannot currently satisfy due to our compliance with the INF Treaty." Do you agree with this statement?

Answer. General Selva's comments appear to reinforce the administration's approach to finding a diplomatic solution to Russia's violation, and preserving the INF Treaty. If confirmed, I commit to supporting such a diplomatic approach to bring Russia back into compliance with its INF obligations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ANDREA THOMPSON BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. The 2018 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) appears to be a major departure from the previous administration which reduced the role and number of nuclear weapons. Is it your understanding that the Trump administration will not seek a numerical increase in the number of deployed or non-deployed nuclear weapons?

Answer. The 2018 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) represents broad continuity with decades of U.S. deterrence thinking. It fully endorses the planned nuclear modernization program, which is a one-for-one replacement of current weapons with similar systems, and adds two supplements to provide flexible capabilities that enable a tailored strategy without calling for an increase in the numbers of U.S. strategic nuclear forces. The NPR further affirms the U.S. commitment to continue abiding by all of its obligations under the New START Treaty, the Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces (INF) Treaty, and all other arms control treaties and agreements to which the United States is a party.

The near-term low-yield ballistic missile remains accountable under the New START Treaty and will use existing warheads and missile bodies. The longer-term sea-launched cruise missile (SLCM) returns a capability that the United States deployed for decades, and will use a warhead based on a previous design, although the specific design has not yet been selected. Neither represents a new capability nor does the administration expect the supplements will lead to a growth in the U.S. stockpile. Moreover, the NPR states that the United States may reconsider pursuit of the SLCM “if Russia returns to compliance with its arms control obligations, reduces its non-strategic nuclear arsenal, and corrects its other destabilizing behaviors.”

Question 2. The 2018 NPR calls—for this first time since the 1980’s—to potentially develop new nuclear weapons, including those that are lower yield, and thus, arguably more usable. Do you believe these low-yield weapons would serve as a deterrent in a conventional war?

Answer. One of the roles articulated in the 2018 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) is to deter nuclear and non-nuclear attack. In his preface to the report, Secretary of Defense Mattis states: “This review rests on a bedrock truth: nuclear weapons have and will continue to play a critical role in deterring nuclear attack and in preventing large-scale conventional warfare between nuclear-armed states for the foreseeable future.” If confirmed, I would support this approach, which is consistent with more than 70 years of U.S. nuclear weapons policy and all previous NPRs.
Question 3. Does the development of a new low-yield and more usable weapon imply the United States is open to first use of nuclear weapons?

Answer. In its more than 70 years of possessing nuclear weapons, the United States has never had a no-first-use or “sole purpose” policy of nuclear weapons use. As the 2010 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) stated, the security conditions for a “sole purpose” policy did not exist. Since 2010, those security conditions have worsened. The 2018 NPR seeks to provide greater clarity on the conditions that could lead the United States to consider employing nuclear weapons. I understand the drafters sought to better clarify the “extreme circumstances” that could lead the United States to consider a nuclear response in order to increase stability by mitigating miscalculations and risk-taking by potential adversaries.

Question 4. What impact would U.S. first use, or the threat there of, do to international stability?

Answer. Consistent with U.S. policy over the past 70 years and all previous Nuclear Posture Reviews (NPRs), the United States has not adopted a no first-use nor “sole purpose” doctrine. The 2010 NPR concluded that the conditions in the security environment at that time were not conducive to such policies, and the security environment has since deteriorated further. As declared in the 2018 NPR, the United States would only consider the employment of nuclear weapons in extreme circumstances to defend the vital interests of the United States or its allies and partners. The United States will not use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear-weapon States that are Party to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) and that are in compliance with their nuclear non-proliferation obligations.

Question 5. Do you believe nuclear weapons can or should have a war fighting role?

Answer. The fundamental nature of deterrence is to decisively influence an adversary’s decisions in order to deter attack. Thus, nuclear weapons are not a warfighting capability but a deterrent capability.

Question 6. Do the development of these weapons mean that the Trump administration disagrees with President Reagan’s often repeated adage that: “a nuclear war cannot be won, and must never be fought?”

Answer. The 2018 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR) reflects continuity between this administration’s strategy-driven approach and President Reagan’s adage. The report states: “As Secretary of Defense Mattis has observed, ‘a safe, secure, and effective nuclear deterrent is there to ensure a war that can never be won, is never fought.’” In his preface to the NPR, Secretary Mattis also wrote “nuclear forces, along with our conventional forces and other instruments of national power, are therefore first and foremost directed towards deterring aggression and preserving peace.”

Question 7. You testified to the fact that the continued implementation of the New START Treaty remains in the U.S. national security interest. You also confirmed that Russia has complied by meeting the Treaty’s central limits as required by February 5, 2018. What are your plans to negotiate an extension of the Treaty for an additional five years until 2026?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting U.S. actions to continue to fully implement New START, which contributes to preserving strategic stability between the United States and Russia and is a critical component of global nuclear non-proliferation efforts. I understand the administration’s immediate focus is on the next data exchange, which will provide the numbers of U.S. and Russian strategic offensive arms as of February 5, 2018. The United States hopes to exchange this data with Russia in late February or early March. As I testified, we have a few years to assess before making any decisions on the extension of New START, but it was a very promising sign that both parties complied with the central limits to the New START agreement by February 5.

Question 8. If confirmed, your position will be responsible for leading negotiations with other nations on civilian nuclear cooperation agreements (123 agreements). The Trump administration is reportedly considering negotiating a 123 agreement with Saudi Arabia. You testified to the fact that you would seek “the highest (non-proliferation) standard achievable.” Can you commit that the administration would accept no less than the “Gold Standard” of prohibiting uranium enrichment or plutonium reprocessing) achieved with the United Arab Emirates (UAE)?

Answer. As I testified, I have not been privy to the talks to date with Saudi Arabia, but, if confirmed, it will be my goal to have the strongest nonproliferation standards possible. The United States has a longstanding policy of limiting the spread of enrichment and reprocessing capabilities around the world.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ANDREA THOMPSON BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. One of the most dangerous developments of recent years has been the proliferation of nuclear weapons in South Asia. Since the 1998 tests, India and Pakistan have both deployed increasingly sophisticated nuclear weapons on a range of platforms. A nuclear war in South Asia could easily lead to millions of casualties and the United States needs to do everything in its power to prevent such a conflict. I am very alarmed that our confrontational approach to Pakistan may endanger our ability to work with them on these vital issues. That being said:

• What are the plans to improve strategic stability in South Asia to move India and Pakistan away from the precipice of nuclear war? Will you personally lead talks on this subject?

Answer. Pakistan and India both continue to produce fissile material for nuclear weapons and to expand their nuclear weapons and missile stockpiles. I share your concern regarding the increased security challenges that accompany growing stockpiles, the effects of certain actual or potential weapons programs upon stability, and the risk that a conventional conflict between India and Pakistan could escalate to include nuclear use. If confirmed, one of my first priorities will be to resume the Security, Strategic Stability, and Nonproliferation talks with Pakistan, which provide a dedicated venue to exchange views on Pakistan’s intentions and defense needs, as well as strategic stability. I will also seek to discuss these important issues with India as we strengthen our bilateral relationship.

Question 2. One of the most dangerous developments of recent years has been the proliferation of nuclear weapons in South Asia. Since the 1998 tests, India and Pakistan have both deployed increasingly sophisticated nuclear weapons on a range of platforms. A nuclear war in South Asia could easily lead to millions of casualties and the United States needs to do everything in its power to prevent such a conflict. I am very alarmed that our confrontational approach to Pakistan may endanger our ability to work with them on these vital issues. That being said:

• What recent talks have been held with Pakistan and India regarding these issues, and what were the outcomes?

Answer. I understand that the last formal Strategic Security Dialogue that focused on these issues with India both took place in May 2016. If confirmed, I look forward to being fully briefed on these talks, their outcomes, and implementation efforts to date.

Question 3. One of the most dangerous developments of recent years has been the proliferation of nuclear weapons in South Asia. Since the 1998 tests, India and Pakistan have both deployed increasingly sophisticated nuclear weapons on a range of platforms. A nuclear war in South Asia could easily lead to millions of casualties and the United States needs to do everything in its power to prevent such a conflict. I am very alarmed that our confrontational approach to Pakistan may endanger our ability to work with them on these vital issues. That being said:

• What is the administration view of India’s development of what is, essentially, an ICBM in the form of the AGNI V? Can this missile range all of the United States?

Answer. The administration continues to urge all states with nuclear weapons to exercise restraint regarding missile capability testing. The administration encourages efforts to promote confidence building and stability and to discourage actions that might destabilize the region. India advertises the AGNI V as a deterrent and having a range of approximately 5000 km.

Question 4. One of the most dangerous developments of recent years has been the proliferation of nuclear weapons in South Asia. Since the 1998 tests, India and Pakistan have both deployed increasingly sophisticated nuclear weapons on a range of platforms. A nuclear war in South Asia could easily lead to millions of casualties and the United States needs to do everything in its power to prevent such a conflict. I am very alarmed that our confrontational approach to Pakistan may endanger our ability to work with them on these vital issues. That being said:

• What are your ideas for slowing or ending the arms race in South Asia?
Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage India and Pakistan to resume dialogue with each other on this important issue, and I would encourage countries in possession of nuclear weapons to meet to discuss common concerns, confidence building, and risk reduction mechanisms.

Question 5. One of the great challenges we face today is the spread of dual use technology that enables nuclear or other WMD proliferation. In some cases countries lack the capacity to enforce their United Nations Security Council Resolution 1540 obligations to prevent such proliferation. In other cases, countries ignore the proliferation activities of their national companies. We need to do everything possible to prevent proliferation. I was very concerned to see the FY 2019 request for NADR funds cut by nearly one-third from the levels appropriated in FY 18:

- Given the role that NADR funding plays in support of the Export and Related Border Security Program in improving countries capacities to meet their UNSCR 1540 obligations and prevent proliferation, why has this funding request come in so much below the FY 2018 levels?

Answer. The FY 2019 funding request for the Export Control and Related Border Security Program (EXBS) was straight-lined from the FY 2018 level at $59.6 million. While the overall NADR request was reduced, I understand that funding was protected for key WMD nonproliferation programs in order to prevent them from being adversely affected.

Question 6. One of the great challenges we face today is the spread of dual use technology that enables nuclear or other WMD proliferation. In some cases countries lack the capacity to enforce their United Nations Security Council Resolution 1540 obligations to prevent such proliferation. In other cases, countries ignore the proliferation activities of their national companies. We need to do everything possible to prevent proliferation. I was very concerned to see the FY 2019 request for NADR funds cut by nearly one-third from the levels appropriated in FY 18:

- Given that North Korea has built its nuclear program by using illicit procurement and financial networks, many of which involve China, what additional measures will the administration consider pursuing with China to inhibit the North Korean program?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize U.S. diplomacy to bring maximum pressure on North Korea and cut off its capacity to violate the U.N. Security Council resolutions. I look forward, if confirmed, to being fully briefed on our current range of actions to press Chinese officials to do more to fully implement the requirements set out in the U.N. Security Council Resolutions.

If confirmed, I also look forward to reviewing and enhancing our broader efforts to bolster the ability of high-risk countries to meet UNSCR requirements and prevent the diversion of WMD-related materials to rogue states and terrorists. For example, EXBS programs are active in critical transshipment hubs like Malaysia, Singapore, Vietnam, South Africa, Tanzania, and Panama, and in countries that pose proliferation financing risks in the Asia Pacific, Middle East and North Africa, and South and Central Asia.

Question 7. The Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty is a cornerstone of both the efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and to verify the activities of countries that have nuclear weapons through the use of international monitoring. The United States has signed but not ratified the treaty.

- Does the Trump administration support United States ratification of the CTBT?
- Does the administration support continued American funding for the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty Organization and the international monitoring stations?

Answer. I understand that the administration will not seek ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, but the United States intends to abide by its unilateral nuclear explosive testing moratorium and calls on all states possessing nuclear weapons to declare or maintain a moratorium on nuclear explosive testing.

Further I understand that the United States will continue to support the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty Organization Preparatory Commission’s development and operation of the International Monitoring System and supporting systems, which serve to monitor for nuclear tests and also provide collateral benefits.

Question 8. I am concerned by calls in the Nuclear Posture Review for the development of new low yield warheads to be deployed on sea based platforms alongside higher yield systems. My view is that this can lead to a dangerous situation in which Russia (or another adversary) would not know what sort of warhead was on an incoming system.
What is the rationale behind the development of the low yield nuclear warheads?

How do you see this warhead impacting strategic stability or crisis stability in a conflict situation?

Answer. While I was not part of the deliberations on the 2018 Nuclear Posture Review (NPR), that document recommends pursuing supplemental low-yield capabilities that provide flexibility and bolster the credibility of our deterrent force. These capabilities are meant to strengthen deterrence by denying potential adversaries any mistaken confidence that their limited nuclear employment can provide a useful advantage over the United States or its allies.

This capability is intended to reinforce strategic stability and crisis stability. Russia has made clear in its statements and actions that it perceives some advantage by maintaining the existing disparity in non-strategic nuclear weapons. The low-yield sea-based capability demonstrates to Russia, in a measured way, that the United States has the ability to respond proportionately to Russia’s use of non-strategic nuclear weapons. Expanding survivable U.S. response options beyond only high-yield weapons raises the nuclear threshold in crisis by introducing an additional risk to Russia and thereby enhances strategic stability.

Indo-Pacific Strategy

Question 1. Our National Security Strategy defines China as a rival and a revisionist power. It lays out that “China and Russia challenge American power, influence, and interests, attempting to erode American security and prosperity.”

If we view our relationship as zero-sum what incentive does China have to working with us on issues such as North Korea, climate change, or maritime disputes?

Answer. As Secretary Tillerson stated during the Diplomatic and Security Dialogue with China in June 2017, the United States seeks a constructive and results-oriented relationship with China. If confirmed, I will pursue the bilateral relationship with China consistent with this vision, but remain clear-eyed on the need to stand up for our interests and those of our allies and partners whenever necessary. This includes pushing China to do more on collective security challenges, the most pressing of which is the North Korea’s illegal ballistic missile and nuclear weapons program, our top national security priority. This also includes making sure that this remains a top agenda item in our discussions with senior Chinese officials. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our economic relationship with China is fair and reciprocal and not marred by the unfair practices China has pursued in recent years. However, I will not shrink from responding to Beijing’s challenges to the rules-based system, or from China’s efforts to subvert the sovereignty of its neighbors and other Indo-Pacific nations, if confirmed. I will also remain committed to standing up for freedom and human dignity, and continue to push China to respect universal human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 2. What is our affirmative agenda with China? I know what we’re doing to China but what (global and regional) issues are we actively trying to work with them on?

Answer. When appropriate, we should seek to broaden practical cooperation and achieve results on issues of shared concern. If confirmed, I will seek to make progress and achieve results on issues like the U.S. opioid crisis, preventing global pandemics, and strengthening international peacekeeping efforts. We should also continue working with China to address regional challenges such as achieving lasting peace in Afghanistan. Previous successes the United States has had working with China on issues like wildlife trafficking and global health security show that it is possible to cooperate with China on issues of mutual interest.

Question 3. Senior administration officials, including Secretary Tillerson, have said that human rights are “embedded” in U.S. policy. However, President Trump has called President Xi “a very special man” who is “highly respected” and a “powerful representative of his people” and left human rights off the agenda when he visited Beijing this past November. President Trump has boasted about having a “great relationship” with President Duterte who has killed his own people without due process—which President Trump appears to have a situational affection for—in his misguided drug war.
• Mrs. Thornton, do you agree with President Trump that President Xi is a “powerful representative of his people” or that President Duterte should be lauded and admired?

Answer. I am troubled by the deterioration of the human rights environment in China. During my time as Acting Assistant Secretary, I have regularly condemned human rights violations and abuses in China, and raised and advocated for individual cases of concern with Chinese counterparts. With regard to the Philippines, the U.S. and the Philippines have a deep and broad relationship that has been a cornerstone of peace and stability in the region for over 70 years. It is built on shared values, and shared sacrifice for democracy. We should encourage greater respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law, and believe that these obligations promote long-term security. I remain deeply concerned by reports of extrajudicial killings associated with the drug war. The United States has expressed concerns with the prosecution of the drug war on multiple occasions with the Philippine Government, and we should continue to do so. We should also continue pressing the Philippines to ensure its law enforcement efforts are carried out consistent with its human rights obligations.

Question 4. Can you please explain in concrete terms what that means with respect to human rights in China, and two or three examples that you have acted on it?

Answer. During my time as Acting Assistant Secretary, I regularly condemned human rights violations and abuses in China, and raised and advocated for individual cases of concerns with Chinese counterparts. At consecutive sessions of the United Nations Human Rights Council since February 2017, I ensured the United States raised our concerns publicly about reports of China’s arbitrary detention and torture of lawyers and activists, constraints on civil society and religious practices, discrimination against/human rights abuses with respect to the denial of rights to Tibetans and Uighurs, the crackdown on peaceful political expression, and reprisals against human rights activists. In March 2017, I reviewed and approved how the Department’s annual Human Rights Report detailed the continued widespread abuses of human rights and fundamental freedoms in China. Later that month, Secretary Tillerson made his first visit to China, during which he and I made clear that the United States would continue to advocate for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religion and belief, universal values such as human rights and religious freedom. The following month, on the sidelines of the U.S.-China summit at Mar-a-Lago, I raised specific human rights cases of concern with Chinese counterparts. In April 2017, we secured the release of an American businesswoman from Houston who had been in prolonged pretrial detention in China for over two years, one of several American citizens I have personally helped to overcome exit bans.

Over the past year, I have also supported Department of State officials’ attendance at the Chinese trials and sentencings of numerous human rights lawyers and activists who have reportedly faced serious mistreatment and torture while in detention, and private meetings privately with the wives and family members of those who have been detained. I have directed the drafting of Department of State statements marking the passing of Chinese Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Liu Xiaobo, the two-year anniversary of the launch of the Chinese Government’s nationwide campaign of intimidation against defense lawyers and rights defenders, and the detention of Swedish citizen and Hong Kong bookseller Gui Minhai. I also approved the publication by our Embassy of a statement on International Human Rights Day, and a joint statement with the German Embassy on the sentencing of Chinese human rights defenders Wu Gan and Xie Yang.

Among our most intensive efforts this year to advance our human rights agenda in China was our effort to secure Liu Xiaobo’s freedom. In June 2017, the Department of State called on China to allow Liu Xiaobo access to international medical specialists and to be allowed to seek medical treatment abroad. In July, under my leadership, the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs arranged for a leading American cancer specialist to travel to Shenyang to visit and treat Liu, and reiterate calls for his ability to seek medical treatment abroad. Following Liu’s passing, the Secretary released a statement calling for the release from house arrest of Liu’s widow, Liu Xia, and her ability to depart China. If confirmed, I will continue to lead persistent public and private efforts to press for Liu Xia’s ability to communicate freely and travel, including abroad.

In December, the United States took action to promote accountability for serious human rights abuses in China by designating a former Chinese prison official under the December 2017 Executive Order implementing the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. Moreover, we have used our high-level meetings with the Chinese to raise U.S. concerns around issues such as China’s foreign NGO management law, exit bans placed on U.S. citizens, and specific detentions of Chinese activists. I, and my colleagues in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, have met regularly with Chinese human rights lawyers and activists such as Chen Guangcheng, leaders of non-government and non-profit organizations promoting greater respect for human rights in China such as Dui Hua Foundation founder John Kamm, and members of ethnic and religious minority groups such as World Uighur Congress president Dolkun Isa and Tibetan filmmaker Dhondup Wangchen. If confirmed, I will continue to raise our concerns about China’s human rights issues, both in our private conversations and publicly, and encourage greater respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law in China.

Question 5. What points of leverage do you think the U.S. has, and what points would you be willing to use, to obtain freedom for Liu Xia, the widow of 2010 Nobel Peace Prize winner Liu Xiaobo?

Answer. The United States remains deeply concerned about Liu Xia’s well-being and freedom. I have helped lead persistent public and private high-level efforts to press for Liu Xia’s ability to communicate freely and travel, including abroad. If confirmed, I will continue to review and make use of all tools at my disposal to press for Liu Xia’s well-being and freedom of movement, including her freedom of expression and freedom to travel abroad as she chooses.

Question 6. The administration’s National Security Strategy focuses largely on China, but only references human rights once. Do you think this sends a message to China and the region that the administration is not concerned about the issue?

Answer. Promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religion, remains a key component of American foreign policy. The President’s National Security Strategy identifies as one of its four pillars the need to continue to advance America’s influence abroad to protect our security and ensure our prosperity. Our advancement of democracy, human rights, and the rule of law have contributed to the success story of the Indo-Pacific region over the last half century, and if confirmed, I will continue to uphold and work to move forward these fundamental U.S. values in the region.

Taiwan

Question 7. As you know, I am the co-chair of the Senate Taiwan Caucus and last week, the Senate Foreign Relations committee reported out of committee the Taiwan Travel Act which would encourage high-level engagement for U.S. officials to meet their Taiwan counter-parts.

- Do you agree that supporting high-level U.S. engagement with Taiwan is in our national security interest?

Answer. Taiwan has long been a vital U.S. partner, a democratic success story, and a force for good in the world. Taiwan shares U.S. values, has earned our respect, and continues to merit strong U.S. support.

Consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act, United States officials regularly visit Taiwan to advance our unofficial relationship through the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) and the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office (TECRO), and vice versa. If confirmed, I would seek and consider opportunities for visits to Washington and Taipei by senior-level authorities that advance our unofficial relationship and enable substantive exchanges on issues of mutual interest and concern.

Question 8. Should U.S. restrictions on visits between officials from the U.S. and Taiwan be removed or revised? If not, why should they remain in place?

Answer. Under the umbrella of our unofficial relationship, the United States and Taiwan conduct, through the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) and the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office in the United States (TECRO), a broad range of normal interactions, including arms sales, visits, trade negotiations, and education and cultural exchanges.

Consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act, U.S. officials regularly visit Taiwan to advance our unofficial relationship through AIT and TECRO, and vice versa.

Question 9. Around the world, we have seen Taiwan’s diplomatic channels close due to undue Chinese pressure in multiple capitols. We have witnessed Chinese warplanes fly over Taiwan and the use of commercial jets to violate airspace agreements.

- If confirmed, how do you plan to support our democratic partner in countering undue Chinese influence?
Answer. The United States has long maintained that cross-Strait differences are matters to be resolved peacefully, without the threat or use of force or coercion, and in a manner acceptable to the people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait. There is no change in our position. My commitments and assurances to Taiwan, including faithful implementation of the Taiwan Relations Act, are firm and long-standing. The United States has an enduring interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. I would encourage authorities in Beijing and Taipei to engage in constructive dialogue that seeks a peaceful resolution of differences acceptable to the people of both sides of the Taiwan Strait on the basis of dignity and respect. If confirmed, I would oppose to unilateral actions by either side to alter the status quo across the Strait.

South China Sea

Question 10. I remain very concerned about China’s long-term strategic intent and by China’s aggressive program of land reclamation in the South China Sea over the past several years, including the placement of additional military assets on Woody Island in the Paracels, and the building of infrastructure in the Spratlys that could easily be turned to military use. China’s continued efforts to coerce other claimants and change the status quo in waters claimed by the Philippines, Indonesia, Vietnam, Brunei and Malaysia—demands a powerful U.S. response.

- Beyond the conduct of freedom of navigation operations, which is the purview of the Department of Defense, what should U.S. strategy be in the South China Sea? Past diplomatic efforts that called for self-restraint, no dredging and no militarization have obviously failed.

Answer. The United States should work with partners and allies to uphold the rules-based order throughout the region, including in the South China Sea. We should continue to insist that China and others respect international law in their approach to South China Sea disputes. We should to press China and all the South China Sea claimants to refrain from new construction on, and militarization of, disputed features, and to commit to managing and resolving disputes peacefully, without the threat or use of force or coercion. With respect to their maritime claims and activities, we should continue to engage both publicly and privately with all South China Sea claimants, including China, to eliminate restrictions to freedoms of navigation and overflight and other lawful uses of the sea that do not conform to international law as reflected in the Law of the Sea Convention. We also need to urge both China and other claimants to conclude a meaningful Code of Conduct for the South China Sea.

We should keep engaging our allies and partners bilaterally and through plurilateral and in multilateral fora, including ASEAN, to advocate for respect for international law. As the primary multilateral institution in Southeast Asia, ASEAN has political weight greater than the sum of its parts, especially on contentious issues like those concerning the South China Sea. We should continue to encourage a unified ASEAN position that affirms and promotes the international rules and standards that underpin East Asian stability and prosperity. Additionally, ASEAN-centered institutions such as the East Asia Summit—in which the United States, China, and many regional allies and partners also participate—are additional venues in which we can play an active role to enhance respect for the rules-based order, including at the leaders level.

Question 11. After the Olympics, the Vice President appeared to attempt to clarify our North Korea policy saying if the North Koreans want to talk, we’ll talk. In Vancouver, Secretary Tillerson said that the North Koreans must demonstrate a commitment to denuclearization before talks can begin. President Trump has said the U.S. would be willing to talk “under the right circumstances.”

Under what specific conditions should the U.S. enter into negotiations with North Korea?

- An extended moratorium on North Korea missile and nuclear tests?
- An explicit declaration by Pyongyang that it will return to its commitments under 9 September 2005 Six Party Talks agreement?

Answer. The administration has stated an openness to talks with a credible partner. There has not been a credible indication from the North Korean regime that it wants to engage in meaningful dialogue. An announced and intentional moratorium from North Korea on missile and nuclear tests could be one way to demonstrate its readiness to talk. I don’t believe the administration has any intention of retuning to the mistakes of the past, and is mindful that North Korea has demonstrated its penchant for violating previous agreements.
Hong Kong

Question 12. The U.S. has prided itself across different administrations in its support for democratic movements around the world. Yet it has been painfully quiet on Hong Kong, where the Chinese Government is methodically eroding Hong Kong’s autonomy and the rights guaranteed to Hong Kong under the Basic Law.

- What steps has the administration taken the past year to counter these developments, and what steps will it take to uphold Hong Kong’s autonomy?

Answer. I share your concerns regarding the growing threats to One Country Two Systems, and pledge to support the defense of Hong Kong’s high degree of autonomy.

I firmly support, and will continue to advocate for, Hong Kong’s highly developed rule of law, and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. I believe that societies are best served when diverse political views are protected and can be freely expressed.

I believe that an open society, with the highest possible degree of autonomy and democratic participation, and governed by the rule of law, is essential for Hong Kong’s stability and prosperity.

The State Department has consistently called on the Central Government to honor its commitments to uphold the rule of law in Hong Kong, as well as to ensure lawful and procedural respect for the Basic Law. Hong Kong’s highly respected rule of law system, the integrity of Hong Kong’s legislature, and the independence of Hong Kong’s judiciary, have been critical to the continued success of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region.

The June 2017 release of the State Department’s “Review of Key Developments in Hong Kong” described several concerns related to the autonomy of Hong Kong and called on the Central Government to honor its commitments. State Department officials at all levels, including at Consulate General Hong Kong, regularly meet with government officials, activists, representatives from civil society, and private citizens to discuss a wide range of topics bearing on the interests of the United States and its friends and allies—foremost among them are Hong Kong’s autonomy and human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 13. If confirmed, would you support additional governance programming that supports the democratic movement in Hong Kong?

Answer. Hong Kong’s highly respected rule of law system, the integrity of Hong Kong’s legislature, and the independence of Hong Kong’s judiciary, have been critical to the continued success of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region. If confirmed, I would support governance programming that strengthens the Hong Kong institutions that play critically important roles in protecting Hong Kong’s high degree of autonomy and fundamental freedoms.

Question 14. Do you believe the consensus view among more than 95 percent of climate scientists that climate change is real and that combustion of fossil fuels, in combination with other anthropogenic activities that release greenhouse gases into the atmosphere, is causing climate change?

Answer. President Trump made clear when the United States joined other G-20 countries in last year’s G-20 Leaders’ Declaration in stating that the administration remains committed to mitigating greenhouse gas emissions through, among other ways, increased innovation on sustainable and clean energy and energy efficiency, and working towards low greenhouse gas emissions energy systems. The United States will continue to support a balanced approach to climate mitigation, economic development, and energy security that takes into consideration the realities of the global energy mix. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s commitment to continue helping our partner countries reduce emissions from forests and other lands, to adapt to the impacts of climate change, and to respond to natural disasters.

Question 15. Given the significance of climate diplomacy to the U.S.-China relationship, and the significant investment that China is making at home and abroad in renewable energy development, will you work to restore the climate cooperation dialogue between the U.S. and China—a former cornerstone of the U.S.-China relationship?

Answer. The United States seeks a constructive and results-oriented relationship with China, and as a leader in global energy, the United States is a critical force in advancing energy efficiency and clean energy efforts around the world as demand for energy increases. If confirmed, I will work to continue strengthening U.S. energy security and respond to energy challenges from around the region that affect U.S. economic policy and national security. I will also seek to broaden practical cooperation and achieve results on issues of shared concern in line with administration policy.

If confirmed, I will have my bureau help promote an “all of the above” energy strategy focusing on secure, stable, diversified, and modern global energy systems that uses a broad range of market-based energy solutions, including renewable energy, advanced energy technologies, energy efficiency, oil and liquefied natural gas, and governance solutions, to advance U.S. interests, global energy security, and economic development.

Question 16. Given how seriously every nation in the world take the threat of climate change, wherein every nation has committed to some degree to cut its carbon emissions, how will you aim to engage and convince China’s neighbors to partner with the U.S. to meet their clean energy and energy self-reliance goals?

Answer. The United States will continue to be a leader in clean energy and innovation, and we understand the need for transforming energy systems given the dynamic change in our own market in recent years. American businesses are at the forefront of innovation in the clean energy and energy efficiency technologies, and American workers are the best trained in the world. Our guiding principles should include universal access to affordable and reliable energy and open, competitive markets that promote efficiency and energy security. Over the past 10 years, the United States has shown that it can reduce emissions while growing the economy and promoting energy security. Since 2005, the United States’ net greenhouse gas emissions have decreased 11.5 percent while the U.S. economy has grown 15 percent, adjusted for inflation. If confirmed, I will seek to engage with partners based on our track record of innovation and results.

Question 17. If the President is serious about seeking a better deal for America under the Paris Agreement, how will conceding leadership to China result in outcomes that could objectively be seen as better for the U.S.?

Answer. I believe the United States remains a leader in clean energy and innovation, and we are committed to lowering our greenhouse gas emissions through innovation to protect the environment while increasing economic growth. Over the past 10 years, the United States has shown that it can reduce emissions while growing the economy and promoting energy security. Since 2005, the United States’ net greenhouse gas emissions have decreased 11.5 percent while the U.S. economy has grown 15 percent, adjusted for inflation.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 18. If confirmed, you will be handling diplomatic relationships with countries that are significant U.S. trading partners. I am very concerned about possible conflicts of interest between our diplomacy and our President’s overseas business arrangements. We know that the President owns assets in several countries. We also suspect that he has taken loans from foreign entities. But we still don’t know the full extent of his holdings and the details of any foreign loans because he has not been fully transparent with the American people. The fact that China approved new trademarks for the Trump Organization and Ivanka Trump’s company over the past year only underscores this point. One could imagine a situation where you, if confirmed, are negotiating an agreement with a country in which the President’s business is trying to obtain trademarks, potentially presenting a conflict between what is in the financial interest of the President versus the economic interests of the American people at large.

- So my question to you is, without a public disclosure of the President’s business relationships how can you and the American people know that your negotiations with other countries will not benefit the President at the expense of ordinary Americans?
- And without a full public disclosure, how can you be sure that the person you’re negotiating with doesn’t know more about the President’s business dealings than you do?

Answer. I have consistently acted in the best interest of the United States Government and the American people throughout my government service and will continue to do so as Assistant Secretary if I am confirmed. I will never place the interests of any individual or company ahead of those of the American people.

I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 19. During the U.S.-China Summit held last April in Florida and last November in Beijing, President Trump did not raise the question of respect for human rights and the rule of law in China and in Tibet. Since 1997, all U.S. Presidents have publicly challenged the sitting Chinese President to negotiate with the Dalai Lama or his representative to find a lasting solution to the Tibetan issue.

- Would you personally commit to pressing the Chinese leadership for a resolution of the Tibetan issue through a speedy resumption of dialogue with the Tibetan side, without preconditions?
- If appointed, would you recommend and make sure that President Trump calls publicly on the Chinese President to address the grievances of the Tibetan people through dialogue with the Dalai Lama?

Answer. I share your concerns about the lack of respect for human rights and rule of law in Tibet. If confirmed, I will urge Chinese authorities to engage in meaningful and direct dialogue with the Dalai Lama or his representatives, without preconditions, to lower tensions and resolve differences. I will also call on China to provide meaningful autonomy for Tibetans and cease restrictions on Tibetan religious, linguistic, and cultural practices, and speak out against Chinese Government interference in Tibetan religious matters, particularly the selection, education, and veneration of the reincarnate lamas who lead the faith. I will also recommend that the United States expresses publicly, and at the highest levels of government, U.S. concerns about restrictions on the rights of Tibetans and other ethnic and religious minorities in China and urge Chinese authorities to engage in meaningful and direct dialogue with the Dalai Lama or his representatives, without preconditions.

Chinese Political Prisoners

Question 20. On behalf of Senator Schumer, from the great state of New York we wanted to ask you about Americans who have been detained in China. As of today, there are approximately 100 Americans detained or imprisoned in China. There are nearly 40 other Americans who are subject to “exit bans” and are therefore unable to leave China. Amongst those imprisoned is Li Kai, a New Yorker who was arrested by the Chinese authorities in September 2016 and has remained imprisoned in China.

- If confirmed, what are specific actions will you take as Assistant Secretary to advocate for the prompt release Li Kai and all other Americans imprisoned in China?

Answer. The safety and security of U.S. citizens, including those who are detained in China, will be one of my top priorities. I will do everything I can to protect the rights of U.S. citizens in China and elsewhere in the Asia-Pacific. When they are not, I will do everything I can to continually raise their cases with the Chinese. While we have managed in recent months to secure the return to the U.S. of several American citizens previously detained to subject to “exit bans,” I will certainly continue to advocate for progress on remaining cases. We have also recently added a new warning to our travel advisory for China regarding potential for arbitrary application of laws.

I have been closely following the case of Li Kai, and I know the State Department, including our consulate in Shanghai, has been in regular contact with his family. This situation is extremely troubling, and we regularly raise Mr. Li’s case with the Chinese. I have personally raised Mr. Li’s case with high level Chinese officials, and if confirmed, I will continue to do so, advocating for Mr. Li’s rights and urging China to return him home.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SUSAN A. THORNTON BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. Our understanding from Wall Street Journal news reports and other sources is that the National Security Council convened a Policy Coordination committee conference call on Friday, May 26, 2017 (hereinafter “PCC conference call”), to discuss with NSC staff and other administration officials whether FBI agents should arrest or detain several officials from China’s Ministry of State Security who had allegedly conducted official business while in the United States in violation of their transit visas, and whose plane was about to depart a New York airport. Did Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Laura Stone (hereinafter “Acting DAS Stone”) participate in this PCC conference call on May 26, 2017?

Answer. I was out of the country on official travel on the date of the call. My understanding is that officials from USG agencies, including Acting DAS Stone, participated in an interagency secure call on May 26.
While I did not participate in the meeting as I was on official travel, I was briefed in a secure environment on the details of this meeting when I returned. The State Department would be happy to provide a classified briefing as follow up to your question.

I remain committed to protecting U.S. sovereignty, and to working closely with the law enforcement community to ensure the safety and security of the American people and that China does not engage in law enforcement activity in the United States without U.S. consent. If confirmed, I will continue to cooperate with interagency colleagues to ensure China abides by President Xi’s commitment to President Trump in Beijing in November to coordinate all law enforcement activities in the United States with U.S. authorities. I have pressed China to adhere to this commitment during my interactions with Chinese officials.

Question 2. Did any other officials from the State Department, including the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs (hereinafter “EAP Bureau”), participate in this PCC conference call on May 26, 2017? If yes, who?

Answer. My understanding is that officials from several other bureaus from the State Department participated as well as many other interagency representatives.

Question 3. During the PCC conference call on May 26, 2017, did Acting DAS Stone or any other EAP Bureau officials oppose, object to, or otherwise not support proposals for FBI agents to arrest or detain several officials from China’s Ministry of State Security at a New York airport who had allegedly conducted official business while in the United States in violation of their transit visas?

Answer. I believe we should be extremely concerned about actions by foreign officials in the United States that would be inconsistent with U.S. sovereignty, and we should take action to address this issue. My understanding is that in this, and in similar cases, the State Department advocated for a strong and appropriate response, consistent with Vienna Conventions and in a manner that supports and upholds U.S. interests.

Question 4. Did you convey, in any way and at any time, any guidance or direction to Acting DAS Stone or any other EAP Bureau officials as to what position, posture, and/or actions the State Department in general or the EAP Bureau in specific should take in the PCC conference call on May 26, 2017, with regard to whether FBI agents should arrest or detain several officials from China’s Ministry of State Security at a New York airport who had allegedly conducted official business while in the United States in violation of their transit visas? If yes, please describe your guidance or direction?

Answer. No, as I was out of the country on official travel at that time.

Question 5. If your answer to the previous question is no, please explain why not, especially given your position as Acting Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs and your responsibility for the EAP Bureau’s official actions? And did you deputize any other State Department employee to act in your absence?

Answer. I did not participate in this impromptu working-level interagency call as I was on official travel out of the country.

Question 6. Will you provide us with the Statement of Conclusions for the PCC conference call on May 26, 2017?

Answer. My understanding is that as this was an impromptu interagency secure call, and therefore there was no formal Statement of Conclusions issued.

On Subsequent PCC Meeting to Discuss the May 26th Outcome

Question 7. As we understand from Wall Street Journal news reports and other sources, the National Security Council convened in the following week a Policy Coordination committee meeting (hereinafter “PCC meeting”) to discuss, among other things related to U.S.-China relations, the outcome of the May 26th PCC conference call. Did you attend this subsequent PCC meeting?

Answer. No. I also did not participate in the meeting, due to subsequent official travel.

Question 8. During this subsequent PCC meeting, did you oppose, object to, or otherwise not support efforts to lay out a specific policy, plan of action, or other interagency understanding if the FBI should once again find itself either in the position to arrest or detain Chinese officials conducting official business in violation of their transit visas, or in another comparable situation?

Answer. I did not participate in the meeting as I was on official travel. I was briefed in a secure environment on the details of this meeting when I returned. I remain committed to protecting U.S. sovereignty, and to working closely with the law enforcement community to ensure the safety and security of the American people and that China does not engage in law enforcement activity in the United States without U.S. consent. If confirmed, I will continue to cooperate with interagency colleagues to ensure that China abides by President Xi's commitment to President Trump in Beijing in November to coordinate all law enforcement activities in the United States with U.S. authorities. I have pressed China to adhere to this commitment during my interactions with Chinese officials.

Question 9. During this PCC meeting, did you express or otherwise convey the view that the United States should not be confrontational towards China?

Answer. I did not personally participate in the meeting as I was on official travel. I am committed to a clear-eyed and forthright approach to China. If confirmed, my approach will be to ensure that where we have differences, the U.S. Government confronts China directly.

Question 10. Will you provide us with the Statement of Conclusions for the PCC meeting to discuss the outcome of May 26th PCC conference call?

Answer. I am not aware of a Statement of Conclusions issued by the National Security Council for this meeting.

Question 11. In February 2017, a group of 11 democratic governments—with whom the United States has historically partnered to advance human rights issues in China—sent a letter to the Chinese Minister of Public Security on the issue of torture and the secret detention of dozens of human rights lawyers (hereinafter “February 2017 letter”). The United States declined to sign the February 2017 letter, which prompted an onslaught of negative media attention and unfortunately furthered the narrative that, in the words of the Washington Post editorial board, “the Trump administration will play down human rights in its foreign policy.” Please describe the State Department’s decision-making process in making a recommendation on whether or not the United States should sign the February 2017 letter?

- Did you unilaterally make the decision on whether or not the State Department should support the United States signing the February 2017 letter? If yes, why?
- If your answer to the previous question is no, then did you make any recommendation to Secretary of State Rex Tillerson or to any other senior State Department official on whether or not the United States should sign the February 2017 letter? If yes, then what recommendation did you make and to whom did you convey the recommendation? And did you consult with the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (hereinafter “DRL”) on any such recommendation?

Answer. The United States has repeatedly raised concerns over China’s deteriorating human rights situation with Chinese officials through many different mechanisms and, if I am confirmed, I will work hard to ensure that we continue to do so. At the 34th session of the United Nations Human Rights Council in February 2017, the United States raised our concerns publicly about reports of China’s arbitrary detention and torture of lawyers and activists. We also raised concerns about reports of torture in China in detail in the State Department’s annual Human Rights Report. In January 2017, China released the following month. On the sidelines of the U.S.-China summit at Mar-a-Lago in April 2017, senior U.S. Department of State officials raised human rights prisoner cases of concern with Chinese counterparts. Over the past year, Department of State officials have attended the trials and sentences of numerous human rights lawyers and activists who have reportedly faced serious mistreatment and torture while in detention, and met privately with their wives and family members. In July 2017, the Department of State marked the two-year anniversary of the launch of the Chinese Government’s nationwide campaign of intimidation against defense lawyers and rights defenders and raised concerns about reports of their alleged torture and denial of access to independent legal counsel. In December, we took action to promote accountability for serious human rights abuses in China, in particular the detention and torture of human rights activist Cao Shunli, by designating a former Chinese prison official under the December 2017 Executive Order implementing the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. The following month, we released a joint statement with the German Embassy in Beijing on the sentencing of human rights defenders Wu Gan and Xie Yang, in which we publicly condemned the allegations of their serious mistreatment. We should welcome other countries speaking out on this issue as well, and, if confirmed, I will continue to look for opportunities to work with like-minded countries to address China’s human rights abuses. I am firmly committed to opposing torture and other human rights violations and abuses in China and elsewhere in the world.

As with all policy matters under consideration at the Department of State, arriving at consensus positions is a primary goal, and I have certainly not made any policies unilaterally. The decision by the U.S. Government not to join the February 2017 letter was related to timing and the recent arrival of a new administration, rather than any lack of commitment or disagreement about substance.

Question 12. During your time in the State Department’s Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs (hereinafter “EAP Bureau”), has Joshua Wong ever requested to meet with you?

Answer. It is my understanding that Joshua Wong has not requested a meeting with me in the past. Officers from the EAP Bureau and other parts of the State Department, both in Washington, D.C. and in Hong Kong, however, have met with Joshua Wong on multiple occasions, just as they have with many other Hong Kong citizens of influence across the political spectrum. If confirmed, I would stand ready to meet with Hong Kong citizens from across the political spectrum, including democracy activists like Joshua Wong. I would also instruct Consulate General Hong Kong to do the same.

Question 13. During your time in the EAP Bureau, have you ever met with Joshua Wong? If not, why not?

Answer. I have not personally met with Joshua Wong, but officers from the EAP Bureau and other parts of the State Department, both in Washington, D.C. and in Hong Kong, however, have met with Joshua Wong on multiple occasions, just as they have with many other Hong Kong citizens of influence across the political spectrum. If confirmed, I would stand ready to meet with Hong Kong citizens from across the political spectrum, including democracy activists like Joshua Wong. I would also instruct Consulate General Hong Kong to do the same.

Question 14. During your time in the EAP Bureau, have you met with Hong Kong-based pro-democracy advocates? How many and with whom in particular?

Answer. I, and/or members of my teams, have met with Anson Chan, Martin Lee, Dennis Kwok, Joshua Wong, Jeffrey Ngo, and others. State Department officials at all levels, including at Consulate General Hong Kong, regularly meet with Hong Kong Government officials, activists, representatives from civil society, and private citizens to discuss a wide range of topics bearing on the interests of the United States including human rights, fundamental freedoms, and democracy. If confirmed, I would stand ready to meet with Hong Kong citizens from across the political spectrum, including democracy activists, and would instruct Consulate General Hong Kong to do the same.

The United States firmly supports Hong Kong’s high degree of autonomy, rule of law, and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. We recognize the Sino-British Joint Declaration and the Basic Law as the bedrock of Hong Kong’s autonomy under “one country, two systems.” We support freedom of expression and believe that societies are best served when diverse political views are respected and can be freely expressed. If confirmed, I will continue to promote these priorities through our engagement with the Government and people of Hong Kong, as well as the Chinese Central Government.

Question 15. If confirmed, do you commit to meeting with Joshua Wong, Agnes Chow, and other young pro-democracy activists in Hong Kong?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I would stand ready to meet with Hong Kong citizens from across the political spectrum, including democracy activists, and I would instruct Consulate General Hong Kong to do the same.

Question 16. If confirmed, do you commit to instructing U.S. Consul General to Hong Kong Kurt Tong to meet with Joshua Wong, Agnes Chow, and other young pro-democracy activists in Hong Kong?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will instruct Consulate General Hong Kong to meet with Hong Kong citizens from across the political spectrum, including young pro-democracy activists.

Question 17. If confirmed, do you commit to instructing U.S. Consul General to Hong Kong Kurt Tong to send a clear message that the United States will not tolerate China’s erosion of the “one country, two systems” model?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue to have the United States voice our concerns, including through Consulate General Hong Kong, over any actions by the Chinese Central Government that appear inconsistent with China’s commitment in the Basic Law to allow Hong Kong to exercise a high degree of autonomy under the “one country, two systems” framework. If confirmed, I will also continue to urge China to respect these principles as enshrined in the Sino-British Joint Declaration and the Basic Law.

Question 18. Anson Chan recently said that Hong Kong is the “canary in the coal mine” for rule of law, political rights and freedom of expression in China, all of which are essential also to protecting U.S. economic interests as well as the interest of American businesses operating in China. What actions can the U.S. Consulate General in Hong Kong take to demonstrate American support for Hong Kong's autonomy and for fundamental freedoms—including academic freedom, freedom of expression, freedom of assembly—in Hong Kong?

Answer. The United States has firmly supported Hong Kong's high degree of autonomy, rule of law, and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. The State Department supports freedom of expression and believes that societies are best served when diverse political views are protected and can be freely expressed. The State Department believes that an open society, with the highest possible degree of autonomy and democratic participation, and governed by the rule of law, is essential for Hong Kong's stability and prosperity.

If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Chinese Central Government to honor its commitments to uphold the rule of law in Hong Kong, as well as to ensure respect for the Basic Law. Hong Kong's highly respected rule of law system, the integrity of the legislature, and the independence of Hong Kong's judiciary, have been critical to the continued success of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region.

The State Department and our Consulate General Hong Kong have been very active in demonstrating American support for these ideals both in private and public—such as through the June 2017 release of the "Review of Key Developments in Hong Kong" that described several concerns related to the autonomy of Hong Kong and called on the Central Government to honor its commitments. If confirmed, I would instruct Consulate General Hong Kong and State Department officials at all levels to continue to engage privately and publicly with Hong Kong and Central Government officials and institutions in support of Hong Kong's autonomy and fundamental freedoms. I would also support governance programming that strengthens the Hong Kong institutions that play critically important roles in protecting Hong Kong's high degree of autonomy and fundamental freedoms.

Question 19. The Trump administration has emphasized the concept of reciprocity in our dealings with China. What are your views on the principle of reciprocity in the context of U.S.-China relations?

Answer. In order to realign and rebalance our relationship with China, there needs to be significant changes in China's behavior bilaterally, regionally, and globally in important security, diplomatic, and economic areas. In particular, China must enact a more fair and reciprocal trade and investment relationship with the United States. China should play by the same rules and standards the United States and other countries are expected to follow, whether that be human rights for people in their territory, trade and investment, or international law.

In our efforts to promote reciprocity, I believe that the United States must remain consistent with our own values such as respect for the rule of law, respect for U.S. sovereignty, and transparency.

Question 20. During your time in the State Department's Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs (hereinafter "EAP Bureau"), what specific policy proposals have you supported at the Department to actualize the idea of bringing greater reciprocity to America's relationship with China?

Answer. In order to realign and rebalance our relationship with China, there must be significant changes in China's behavior bilaterally, regionally, and globally in important security, diplomatic, and economic areas. To ensure reciprocity for the open access China and many other countries enjoy in the United States, I have strongly supported efforts to gain better access in China for U.S. businesses and products, foreign journalists, non-governmental organizations, and religious organizations. As an example, I have advocated in the past for journalists visas and duration of stay in China, reciprocal treatment for restrictions on movements of diplomatic personnel to the Tibetan Autonomous Region, and in many other fields, including requests for legal assistance, market access, etc. I am not aware of having blocked any such proposals. In our efforts to promote reciprocity,
I believe that the United States must remain consistent with our own values. I would not support any efforts that violate our laws, sovereignty, or the Constitution.

Question 22. The Chinese Government wields its ability to grant or deny visas to international scholars, journalists, civil society representatives, diplomats and others as a weapon. Academics who try to tackle politically sensitive topics find themselves banned from entering China for years at a time—a virtual death blow to the careers of young scholars while Chinese scholars experience no such similar restrictions in attempts to enter the United States. In a similar vein Members of Congress who are outspoken critics of the Chinese Government find their visas denied or delayed to the point of making a trip ineffectual, while at the same time that Chinese Government officials and Chinese Communist Party officials are routinely granted visas and granted access to all parts of the United States. Diaspora communities, such as Tibetan-Americans, find their requests to travel to Tibet repeatedly denied while Ministry officials who implement repressive policies against these same ethnic minority regions travel freely in the United States. Chinese-funded think tanks in the United States abound while American non-governmental organizations ("NGOs") and think tanks find their activities further restricted under the recently-passed foreign NGO management law. Do you agree with this assessment?

Answer. I am committed to working towards ensuring that U.S. civil society, media, legislators, and scholars have full access to China.

Executive Order 13780, which was signed by the President last March, requires the Department of State to undertake a worldwide review of nonimmigrant visa reciprocity agreements and arrangements. The Department noted discrepancies between the U.S. visa regime and China's and signaled to the Chinese that our visa agreements must be reciprocal. The Department is preparing now to take the steps necessary to make our visa regimes reciprocal including for validity and fees, consistent with INA Sections 221(c) and 281.

Regarding Chinese officials' ability to travel to the United States, U.S. consular officers adjudicate visas on a case-by-case basis in accordance with U.S. law and regulations, including for those applicants who are government officials of a foreign country. The State Department regularly denies travel if it is not in the interests of the United States.

Question 23. Do you agree that this assessment reflects a lack of reciprocity in the U.S.-China relationship, especially as it relates to visas?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to continue working towards ensuring that U.S. civil society, media, legislators, and scholars have full access to China, and that reciprocity is observed. The Department has pursued a policy of reciprocity with regard to visas with China and has held annual consular dialogues towards this end. President Trump signed Executive Order 13780, requiring the Department of State to undertake a worldwide review of nonimmigrant visa reciprocity agreements and arrangements. EAP's posts are currently reviewing all visa agreements with foreign countries, including Mission China. During an initial review of the information provided by China, we noted discrepancies between its visa regime and ours. We have signaled to the Chinese that our visa agreements must be reciprocal and are preparing now to take the steps necessary to make our visa regimes reciprocal, including for validity and fees, consistent with INA Sections 221(c) and 281.

Regarding Chinese officials' ability to travel to the United States, U.S. consular officers adjudicate visas on a case-by-case basis in accordance to U.S. law and regulation, including for those applicants who are government officials of a foreign country. The State Department regularly denies travel if it is not in the interests of the United States.

Question 24. What steps could the State Department take to signal to the Chinese Government that the U.S. is prepared to act in its own best interest and that reciprocity will underpin future visa considerations? Are you prepared to lead such an effort if confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Bureau of Consular Affairs to ensure that the United States' visa regime is reciprocal, consistent with the requirements in Immigration and Nationality Act Sections 281 and 221(c), respectively. Under Executive Order 13780, the State Department is reviewing China's visa policies as part of a worldwide review of nonimmigrant visa reciprocity. China is aware that, should visas offered to U.S. citizens not be considered reciprocal with what we offer to Chinese travelers, the United States will insist that changes be made to make them reciprocal. If confirmed, I will fully support such efforts and measures.
Question 25. If confirmed, are you prepared to recommend the denial of visas to Chinese officials who oversee policies in places like the Tibet Autonomous Region and/or the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region until American diplomats, journalists and NGOs are granted reciprocal access to these areas?

Answer. I am committed to working towards ensuring that U.S. civil society, media, legislators, and scholars have full access to China.

Regarding Chinese officials ability to travel to the United States, U.S. consular officers adjudicate visas on a case-by-case basis in strict accordance to U.S. law and regulation, including for those applicants who are government officials of a foreign country. The State Department regularly denies travel if we feel it is not in the interests of the United States.

Question 26. During your confirmation hearing on , I raised concerns about the removal of the Taiwanese flag from various webpages on the State Department's website— including the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs' webpage on Taiwan at https://www.state.gov/p/eap/ci/taiwan/ as well as the Bureau of Consular Affairs' webpage on Taiwan at https://travel.state.gov/content/travel/csi—repository/csi—landing/csi—catalog/twn.html—beginning sometime in 2017. When specifically were Taiwanese flags removed from these webpages of the State Department's website?

Answer. The two websites cited were updated to remove Taiwan's flag, in accordance with long-standing policy on the unofficial nature of U.S.-Taiwan relations, on August 2017 and January 2018 respectively.

Question 27. Did you order, offer guidance on, or personally take any actions to implement, the removal of Taiwanese flags from these webpages on the State Department's website?

Answer. I believe Taiwan is a vital partner, a democratic success story, and a force for good in the world. Taiwan shares our values, has earned our respect, and merits our strong support.

As the acting senior official in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, all decisions made by the bureau are my responsibility. The two websites cited were updated to remove Taiwan's flag, in accordance with long-standing policy on the unofficial nature of U.S.-Taiwan relations.

The United States' one China policy is based on the three joint communiqués and the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA). If confirmed, I commit to continuing to uphold that policy.

Question 28. What specific role did you, in your capacity as Acting Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, play in the State Department's removal of the Taiwanese flag from the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs' webpage on Taiwan at https://www.state.gov/p/eap/ci/taiwan/?

Answer. As the acting senior official in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, all decisions made by this bureau are my responsibility. The website cited was updated to remove Taiwan's flag, in accordance with long-standing policy on the unofficial nature of U.S.-Taiwan relations.

During an annual update of this website in August 2017, the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs removed the Taiwan flag, as including it was inconsistent with guidelines on relations with Taiwan prohibiting the display of symbols of sovereignty of the “Republic of China” (ROC).

The “U.S. Bilateral Relations Fact Sheet” on this website contains extensive information about the United States' robust relationship with Taiwan and Taiwan's positive role in the international community.

The United States' one China policy is based on the three joint communiqués and the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA). If confirmed, I commit to continuing to uphold that policy.

Taiwan is a vital partner, a democratic success story, and a force for good in the world. Taiwan shares our values, has earned our respect, and continues to merit our strong support.

Question 29. In your testimony before the committee, you said “our policy is to not display the flag of the R.O.C. on U.S. official government websites.” The March 4, 2011 memorandum from the State Department on “Guidelines on Relations with Taiwan” (hereinafter the “March 2011 Guidelines Memo”) contains no provisions regarding Taiwan's flag, however. When was this new policy (in your words) “to not display the flag of the R.O.C. on U.S. official government websites” established?

Answer. The March 2011 Guidelines memo was revised in October 2015 to better reflect long-standing U.S. policy regarding the display of the Taiwan flag. The United States' one China policy is based on the three joint communiqués and the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA). If confirmed, I commit to continuing to uphold that policy.
Taiwan is a vital partner, a democratic success story, and a force for good in the world. Taiwan shares our values, has earned our respect, and continues to merit our strong support.

Question 30. Did you author, approve, support, or otherwise play a role in formulating, the new policy to effectuate the removal of Taiwan’s flag from the State Department’s website and other U.S. Government websites?

Answer. Not displaying the Taiwan flag, including on U.S. Government websites, is consistent with the United States’ long-standing policy given the unofficial nature of U.S.-Taiwan relations.

Question 31. Was the removal of Taiwan’s flag from the State Department’s website pursuant to a new State Department memo circulated in 2015 (hereinafter “the 2015 Guidelines memo) that supersedes the March 2011 Guidelines Memo?

Answer. Yes. The removal of the Taiwan flag from U.S. Government websites is consistent with the United States’ long-standing policy on the unofficial nature of U.S.-Taiwan relations.

Question 32. Did you author, co-author, approve, or otherwise play a role in formulating, the 2015 Guidelines Memo that supersedes the March 2011 Guidelines Memo on U.S. relations with Taiwan?

Answer. As the then Deputy Assistant Secretary responsible for China and Taiwan, I was part of the U.S. Government interagency process that formulated the 2015 guidelines memo that better reflects longstanding U.S. policy.

The United States’ one China policy is based on the three joint communiqués and the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA). If confirmed, I commit to continuing to uphold that policy.

Question 33. Will you provide us with a copy of the 2015 Guidelines Memo and any other memo that supersedes the March 2011 Guidelines Memo on U.S. relations with Taiwan?

Answer. Per the Department’s standard practice, I would be happy to have my team share the memo referenced above with your staff in camera and answer any questions they may have.

Question 34. Last year, I, along with Senators Menendez, Gardner and others, reintroduced the Taiwan Travel Act to encourage visits between American and Taiwanese officials at all levels of government, including officials from the State Department and the Defense Department. Do you believe the current restrictions on meetings with high-level Taiwanese officials are obstacles to addressing many of the challenges that we face in the region and would you support reviewing and updating the State Department’s guidance to allow more official visits between the U.S. and Taiwan?

Answer. Consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA), U.S. officials regularly visit Taiwan to advance our unofficial relationship through the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) and the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office (TECRO), and vice versa. If confirmed, I will seek and consider opportunities for visits to Washington and Taipei by senior-level officials and authorities that advance our unofficial relationship and enable substantive exchanges on issues of mutual concern.

There has been high-level engagement, facilitated, as deemed appropriate, by AIT and TECRO. For example, in September 2017, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt met with Ying-yuan Lee of the Taiwan authorities to exchange views on our collaboration under the International Environmental Partnership (IEP). In July 2017, Veterans Affairs Secretary Shulkin received Taiwan’s Veterans Affairs Council minister. In April 2014, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Administrator Gina McCarthy traveled to Taipei to highlight 20 years of environmental cooperation between the United States and the Taiwan authorities. There have also been numerous exchanges between sub-cabinet level U.S. officials and the Taiwan authorities.

Question 35. During your confirmation hearing, I asked whether you would commit to encouraging high-level visits between senior U.S. Government officials to meet with their Taiwanese counterparts in Taipei. Your answer was non-committal, however, so I would request greater clarity on your position with an answer that begins with “yes” or “no” to my question.

Answer. Yes. In accordance with the Taiwan Relations Act, U.S. officials regularly visit Taiwan to advance our unofficial relationship through the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) and the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office (TECRO), and vice versa. If confirmed, I will seek and consider opportunities for vis-Question 36. If confirmed, will you push for high-level Taiwanese officials to enter the United States under conditions that are appropriately respectful for the dignity of such high-level officials?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will seek and consider opportunities for visits to Washington and Taipei by senior-level authorities that advance our unofficial relationship and enable substantive exchanges on issues of mutual concern, consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act and our one China policy.

The United States facilitates, from time to time, representatives of the Taiwan authorities to transit the United States. Such transits are undertaken out of consideration for the safety, comfort, convenience, and dignity of the passenger and are in keeping with our one China policy.

Question 37. If there was an opportunity for the United States to deepen our relationship with senior members of Taiwan’s Government, would you support such an opportunity?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will seek and consider opportunities to deepen our relationships with senior-level Taiwan counterparts that enable substantive exchanges on issues of mutual concern, consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act and our one China policy.

Question 38. If President Tsai or Taiwan’s Foreign Minister were visiting Hawaii, would you support them meeting with the Commander of U.S. Pacific Command to exchange views on important security matters in East Asia?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will seek and consider opportunities for visits by senior-level authorities that advance our unofficial relationship and enable substantive exchanges on issues of mutual concern, consistent with the TRA and our one China policy.

Question 39. Have you ever opposed, objected to, or otherwise not supported a proposal for Taiwan’s president, foreign minister, or other senior official to meet with the Commander of U.S. Pacific Command in Hawaii?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will seek and consider opportunities to deepen our relationships with senior-level Taiwan counterparts that enable substantive exchanges on issues of mutual concern, consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act and our one China policy.

Question 40. Do you believe the “Six Assurances” provide the cornerstone for America’s relationship with Taiwan?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will seek and consider opportunities for visits by senior-level authorities that advance our unofficial relationship and enable substantive exchanges on issues of mutual concern, consistent with the TRA and our one China policy.

Question 41. If confirmed, how do you plan to strengthen our security and economic partnership with Taiwan?

Answer. The United States has been firmly committed to the U.S. one China policy, the three joint communiqués, and the Taiwan Relations Act. I believe the “Six Assurances” are also an integral part of the U.S. approach to Taiwan.

Secretary Tillerson, in his January 2017 Senate confirmation process, reaffirmed the U.S. commitment to our one China policy and the December 2017 National Security Strategy further reiterated that commitment.

If confirmed, and under the umbrella of our unofficial relationship, I will encourage the conduct, through the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) and the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office in the United States (TECRO), of a broad range of interactions, including arms sales, visits, trade discussions, and educational and cultural exchanges.
The security of Taiwan is central to the security of the broader Indo-Pacific region and stable cross-Strait relations as essential to maintaining regional stability.

If confirmed, I will remain fully committed to carrying out the TRA.

We should also strengthen the two-way trade and investment relationship, including through dialogue in our Trade and Investment Framework Agreement (TIFA) process, so we can work together to bring resolution to long-standing areas of concern. The United States and Taiwan authorities are working closely through TIFA discussions, convened under the auspices of AIT and TECRO. The TIFA is the key forum for trade dialogue between the United States and Taiwan, as it provides an opportunity for both sides to find ways to further expand our trade and investment relationship.

Question 42. What does the One-China Policy mean to you and do you believe that the United States has the right to define our own One-China Policy?

Answer. The United States’ one China policy is based on the three joint communiques and the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA).

Our one China policy has helped ensure peace and stability across the Taiwan Strait and in the region for decades. This policy has enabled us to be a leader in maintaining robust unofficial relations with Taiwan while pursuing a constructive relationship with China.

The TRA provides the framework for the United States and Taiwan to cooperate in a wide range of mutually beneficial areas including energy, the environment, and scientific research.

Under the umbrella of our unofficial relationship, the United States and Taiwan conduct, through the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) and the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office in the United States (TECRO), a broad range of interactions, including arms sales, visits, trade discussions, and educational and cultural exchanges.

The long-standing friendship with the people on Taiwan remains a key element of U.S. Asia policy. The enduring relationship under the TRA represents a unique asset for the United States and is an important multiplier of our influence in the region. This friendship is grounded in history, shared values, and the common commitment to democracy, free markets, rule of law, and human rights.

The United States has a deep and abiding interest in cross-Strait peace and stability. It is important that both sides of the Taiwan Strait understand the importance of these benefits and work to establish a basis for continued peace and stability. The benefits that stable cross-Strait ties have brought to both sides of the Taiwan Strait, the United States, and the region have been enormous.

If confirmed, I would continue to support our robust relations with Taiwan and encourage authorities in Beijing and Taipei to engage in constructive dialogue that seeks a peaceful resolution of differences acceptable to the people of both sides of the Taiwan Strait.

Question 43. Would port visits of U.S. Naval ships to Taiwan be consistent with the one China Policy?

Answer. The United States should remain fully committed to carrying out the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA). Consistent with the TRA and our one China policy, unofficial relations between the United States and Taiwan should continue to feature a robust security cooperation program that includes maintenance, training, and exchanges. Over the last few years, the United States has nearly doubled the number of annual security cooperation events, further enabling Taiwan to strengthen its self-defense capability. If confirmed, I will remain fully committed to carrying out the TRA.

Question 44. Do you support returning to an annualized arms sale process with Taiwan, such as what occurred before 2001?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support arms sales to Taiwan. In June 2017, the administration notified Congress of a $1.42 billion defense arms package. Consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA), the United States has regularly made available to Taiwan defense articles and services necessary to enable Taiwan to maintain a sufficient self-defense capability and maintain the capacity of the United States to resist any resort to force or other forms of coercion that would jeopardize the security, or the social or economic system, of the people on Taiwan. This supports improved relations across the Taiwan Strait by providing Taipei with the confidence to pursue constructive interactions with Beijing.

The long-standing policy on defense sales to Taiwan has contributed to the security of Taiwan and also supported the maintenance of peace and stability across the Taiwan Strait. Arms sales are a visible demonstration of U.S. support for Taiwan. U.S. security assistance to Taiwan is greater than just the provision of arms. The United States also supports Taiwan with training, doctrine development, and expertise on asymmetric approaches to warfare, helping Taiwan to strengthen its self-defense capability.

Question 45. Why do you believe U.S. arms sales to Taiwan have been so inconsistent?
Answer. U.S. long-standing policy on defense sales to Taiwan has been consistent across seven different U.S. administrations. U.S. sales of defense articles and services are guided by the Taiwan Relations Act and based on an assessment of Taiwan’s defense needs, and in accordance with procedures established by law. This consistent policy has contributed to the security of Taiwan and also supported the maintenance of peace and stability across the Taiwan Strait.

Question 46. During your time in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, have you personally played a role in delaying any pending U.S. arms sales to Taiwan?
Answer. No. During my time in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, I have consistently worked to expeditiously process all requests, for arms sales to Taiwan, including the June 2017 sale, in accordance by the Taiwan Relations Act. If confirmed, I will continue to do so.

Question 47. It has long been the policy of the U.S. Government, provided by the Tibetan Policy Act, to promote dialogue between the envoys of the Dalai Lama and the Chinese Government toward a solution on the Tibet issue that guarantees the respect of the “distinct identity” of the Tibetan people. The dialogue is now at a standoff and the lack of substantive progress toward a genuine resolution continues to be a thorny issue in U.S.-China relations. The United States has played a key role in encouraging past dialogues. Would you, if confirmed, personally commit to pressing Chinese leadership for a resolution of the Tibetan issue through a speedy resumption of dialogue with the Tibetan side, without preconditions?
Answer. I am deeply concerned by the lack of meaningful autonomy for the people of Tibet. If confirmed, I will urge Chinese authorities to engage in a meaningful and direct dialogue with the Dalai Lama or his representatives, without preconditions, to lower tensions and resolve differences. I also will continue to urge China to cease restrictions on the religious, linguistic, and cultural traditions and practices of the Tibetan people.

Question 48. Will you, if confirmed, commit to pressing the Chinese authorities to allow for the opening of a U.S. consulate in Lhasa?
Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to press the Chinese Government to allow the opening of a U.S. Consulate in Lhasa.

Question 49. Will you, if confirmed, commit to explaining to the Chinese that the U.S. will recognize and interact with the person chosen independently, to succeed the current Dalai Lama through Tibetan Buddhism’s spiritual tradition, and consistent with the processes described by the current Dalai Lama?
Answer. If confirmed, I will reaffirm to Chinese authorities that the United States will continue to respect the religious practices and traditions of Tibetans and to meet with those persons we deem it in our interest to meet. This includes those reincarnate lamas who lead the faith, such as the Dalai Lama.

Question 50. Will you, if confirmed, also make it clear that the United States will not accept a Chinese Government-controlled process to select the Dalai Lama’s successor?
Answer. If confirmed, I will speak out against Chinese Government interference in Tibetan religious practices, particularly the selection, education, and veneration of the reincarnate lamas who lead the faith, such as the Dalai Lama. I will continue to raise directly with the Chinese Government our concerns about restrictions placed on the religious freedom of Tibetans.

Question 51. What points of leverage do you think the United States has to obtain freedom outside China for Liu Xia, the widow of 2010 Nobel Peace Prize winner Liu Xiaobo? If confirmed, what points would you be willing to use?
Answer. I remain deeply concerned about Liu Xia’s well-being and have frequently pressed Chinese officials on her right to travel freely, and have worked with like-minded partners to press her case. If confirmed, I will continue to review and make use of all tools at my disposal to press for Liu Xia’s well-being and freedom of communication and movement including travel abroad.

Answer. I remain deeply concerned about Liu Xia's well-being. If confirmed, I am committed to exploring all avenues, including whatever requests for access and visits will make Liu Xia's situation better.

Question 53. Senior administration officials, including Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, have said that human rights are “embedded” in U.S. foreign policy. Can you please explain in concrete terms what you believe that means with respect to human rights in China, and also provide two or three examples of your having acted on it?

Answer. Promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religion or belief, remains a key component of American foreign policy. Our values regarding human rights, fundamental freedoms, and human dignity should guide our foreign policy and how we work with other countries. U.S. advancement of democracy, human rights, and the rule of law have contributed to the success story of the Indo-Pacific region over the last half century and, if confirmed, I will work to advance these fundamental U.S. values in the region.

During my time as Acting Assistant Secretary, I regularly condemned human rights violations and abuses in China, and raised and advocated for individual cases of concerns with Chinese counterparts. At consecutive sessions of the United Nations Human Rights Council since February 2017, I ensured the United States raised our concerns publicly about reports of China’s arbitrary detention and torture of lawyers and activists, constraints on civil society and religious practices, discrimination against/human rights abuses with respect to the denial of rights to Tibetans and Uighurs, the crackdown on peaceful political expression, and reprisals against human rights activists. In March 2017, I reviewed and approved the Department of State’s annual Human Rights Report detailing the continued widespread abuses of human rights and fundamental freedoms in China. Later that month, Secretary Tillerson made his first visit to China, during which he and I made clear that the United States would continue to advocate for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religion and belief, universal values such as human rights, and democracy.

The following month, on the sidelines of the U.S.-China summit at Mar-a-Lago I raised specific human rights cases of concerns with Chinese counterparts. In April 2017, we secured the release of an American businesswoman from Houston who had been in prolonged pretrial detention in China for over two years, one of several American citizens I have personally helped to overcome exit bans.

Over the past year, I have also supported Department of State officials' attendance at the Chinese trials and sentences of numerous human rights lawyers and activists who have reportedly faced serious mistreatment and torture while in detention, and private meetings privately with the wives and family members of those who have been detained. Publicly, I have drafted and approved the Department of State’s statement marking the passing of Chinese Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Liu Xiaobo, the two-year anniversary of the launch of the Chinese Government’s nationwide campaign of intimidation against defense lawyers and rights defenders, and the detention of Swedish citizen and Hong Kong bookseller Gui Minhai. I also approved the publication by our Embassy of a statement on International Human Rights Day, and a joint statement with the Germany Embassy on the sentencing of Chinese human rights defenders Wu Gan and Xie Yang.

Among our most intensive efforts this year to advance our human rights agenda in China was our effort to secure Liu Xiaobo’s freedom. In June 2017, the Department of State called on China to allow Liu Xiaobo access to international medical specialists and to be allowed to seek medical treatment abroad. In July, under my leadership, the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs arranged for a leading American cancer specialist to travel to Shenyang to visit and treat Liu, and reiterate calls for his ability to seek medical treatment abroad. Following Liu’s passing, the Secretary released a statement calling for the release from house arrest of Liu’s widow, Liu Xia, and her ability to depart China. If confirmed, I will continue to lead persistent public and private efforts to press for Liu Xia’s ability to communicate freely and travel, including abroad.

In December, the United States took action to promote accountability for serious human rights abuses in China by designating a former Chinese prison official under the December 2017 Executive Order implementing the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. Moreover, we have used our high-level meetings with the Chinese to raise U.S. concerns around issues such as China’s foreign NGO management law, exit bans placed on U.S. citizens, and specific detentions of Chinese activists. I, and my colleagues in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, have met regularly with Chinese human rights lawyers and activists such as Chen Guangcheng, leaders of non-government and non-profit organizations promoting greater respect for human rights in China such as Dui Hua Foundation founder John Kamm, and members of ethnic and religious minority groups such as World Uighur Congress president Dolkun Isa and Tibetan filmmaker Dhondup Wangchen. If confirmed, I will continue to raise our concerns about China’s human rights issues, both in our private conversations and publicly, and encourage greater respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law in China.

Question 54. During your time at the State Department’s Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs, how many Chinese human rights advocates or Chinese dissidents have you met with? Please provide us with notable examples in recent years.

Answer. I am troubled by the well-documented deterioration of the human rights situation in China. During my time in the EAP Bureau, I have met with countless human rights advocates and Chinese dissidents, including the Dalai Lama, Rebiya Kadeer, Liu Xiaobo (prior to his detention), and many others. If confirmed, I will continue to meet with such individuals and raise specific human rights cases of concern with Chinese authorities, as appropriate.

Question 55. Will you commit to trying to visit all of the people wrongfully detained in China who are relatives of U.S. citizens?

Answer. The safety and security of U.S. citizens is one of the Department’s top priorities. Consular officers help U.S. citizens at all hours of the day, in all types of situations, be it criminal matter, a health crisis, or simply needing passports or birth certificates.

I have regularly raised cases of detained American Citizens with my Chinese counterparts, and U.S. consular officials regularly visit U.S. detainees as permitted under our bilateral agreements with China.

For others persons wrongfully detained in China, the State Department remains committed to helping shine a light on their cases. If confirmed, I will continue to raise and advocate for individual human rights cases of concern with Chinese authorities and encourage greater respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law in China. If the families desire it, I am always happy to meet with them.

Question 56. Are you aware of cases where the Chinese Government has detained a U.S. citizen or otherwise prevented a U.S. citizen from exiting as leverage to coerce a Chinese citizen into returning to China? If yes, what policies will you advocate, if confirmed, to counter and reverse this practice by the Chinese Government?

Answer. Yes, I and other senior U.S. Government officials have regularly raised exit bans with the Chinese, particularly when these seem to involve parties not under investigation. The Department recently had success on lifting an exit ban on a young woman after significant, high-level intervention.

The State Department should continue to push China to lift exit bans for all U.S. citizens, and to have a more transparent process on how they are applied and can be lifted. If confirmed, I as Assistant Secretary will continue to raise these cases at the highest level necessary to ensure the release of U.S. citizens detained or the ability of U.S. citizens to depart China.

Question 57. Chinese President Xi Jinping has cracked down harshly on dissent, targeting ethnic and religious minorities, human rights lawyers, journalists, civil society activists, and even average internet users for arrest and imprisonment. The Chinese Government has also ramped up its hostility toward foreigners and foreign entities through restrictive new legislation and official propaganda. How will you persuade Chinese officials to end practices and policies that harm both the people of China and U.S. interests, including those of American businesses?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to review and make use of all tools at my disposal to promote greater respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law in China, including in coordination with likeminded countries and partners. I am committed to continuing to raise our concerns over respect for human rights, including freedom of religion and belief, in all my conversations with Chinese officials, and to advocate for specific cases of concern.

The State Department regularly presses China in support of U.S. business interests. As part of the overall effort to ensure a fair and reciprocal economic relationship between the United States and China, the State Department protests instances in which American companies operating in China are subject to opaque rules, arbitrary imposition of regulations, and political interference in their business operations. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for U.S. companies operating in China and strongly urge Chinese authorities to work constructively with company representatives to resolve business disputes in the spirit of openness, transparency, and without resort to coercion or threat.
Question 58. How can State improve its coordination with American business and academic institutions to advance practices and policies that enhance freedom in China?

Answer. The United States has repeatedly raised concerns about freedom of expression, including as it relates to academic and media freedom, including at the U.S.-China Social & Cultural Dialogue and other engagements with Chinese leadership. The State Department should continue to call on Chinese authorities to unblock websites of U.S. business and media, eliminate restrictions that impede the ability of journalists to practice their profession, and allow all individuals to express their views without fear of retribution. The State Department should continue supporting the efforts of American chambers of commerce and business associations in their efforts to highlight their business practices, including transparency, respect for the individual and diversity, and corporate social responsibility.

The State Department’s Bureaus of Educational and Cultural Affairs and East Asian and Pacific affairs are engaged in detailed discussions with higher education associations to discuss best practices for academic engagement with China. The goal is to help universities encourage Chinese students to experience the full range of American values during their time in the United States, including freedom of expression. U.S. Mission China also supports exchange programs that engage important segments of Chinese society, and fosters relationships with influential emerging leaders and other stakeholders in both countries.

Question 59. Do you agree with President Trump and his National Security Strategy document that the People’s Republic of China is a strategic competitor of the United States?

Answer. Yes, I believe that the National Security Strategy reflects our increasing concerns about Chinese actions that are undermining the international rules-based order.

The United States should not shy away from speaking forthrightly about, and contesting, Chinese policies and actions that undermine the international order that has fostered peace and prosperity for the Indo-Pacific region for decades.

We should also remain committed to seeking a constructive and results-oriented relationship with China. We should continue to cooperate with China where we can to broaden and address issues of common interests, including the threat posed by North Korea and the flow of illegal opioids from China, while addressing our differences constructively.

Question 60. Was President Obama and his administration correct or incorrect not to describe China as a strategic competitor? Why so?

Answer. China is now the world’s second largest economy with increasingly far flung business interests, one of the most capable and growing militaries in the Asia-Pacific, and an active player on the global stage. Our policies should continue to evolve and adapt to present-day China and to other changes to the international environment.

Question 61. If confirmed, will you make “the long-term strategic competition with China” also a principal priority for the State Department’s Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs? What changes or sustained efforts do you plan to make to the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs to better prepare it for dealing with China as a strategic competitor to the United States?

Answer. The rise of China poses a major challenge to U.S. interests in East Asia and the Pacific. If confirmed, I will ensure the Bureau of East Asia and Pacific Affairs’ approach to dealing with the challenges is consistent with the National Security Strategy. We should not shy away from speaking forthrightly about and contesting Chinese policies and actions that undermine the international order that has fostered peace and prosperity for the Indo-Pacific region for decades. It should be in every country’s interest to uphold this order, and if confirmed, I will make working with our Indo-Pacific allies and partners to defend and strengthen the rules-based system a priority. I will also work with colleagues across the Department of State and throughout the interagency to ensure that we apply the same, consistent approach outside the region to pushing back against Chinese behavior when it threatens to undercut the global rules-based order.

Question 62. If confirmed, what role would you make defending fundamental human rights and universal values in China play in efforts by the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs to make “the long-term strategic competition with China a priority”?

Answer. The State Department should not shy away from speaking forthrightly about and contesting Chinese policies and actions that undermine the international order that has fostered peace and prosperity in the Indo-Pacific region for decades.
We should continue to work with China on important issues, from North Korea to countering the flow of illegal opioids. At the same time, we should draw a clear distinction where we disagree. We must remain committed to defending our values and championing human rights and fundamental freedoms around the world.

In pursuit of our vision of a free and open Indo-Pacific region, the United States should continue to work cooperatively with allies and like-minded partners to uphold the rules-based order, and to advance fundamental U.S. values around democracy, human rights, and the rule of law in the region. Our strategy should be to continue to promote democratic values and work closely with other democracies to strengthen respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and freedom of religion and belief. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing to make use of all tools at our disposal to press for progress on human rights in China as a key component of U.S. foreign policy in the region.

Question 63. During a State Department press briefing prior to the inaugural U.S.-China Diplomatic and Security Dialogue, you were asked a question about the administration’s approach to the South China Sea. During your response, you noted, “We think it’s important that tensions are lowered over these issues.” Do you view lowering tensions with China as policy goal in and of itself?

Answer. No. U.S. policy advocates that maritime disputes in the South China Sea should be resolved peacefully. Maintaining peace, security, and the freedoms of navigation and overflight and other lawful uses of the sea have been and should continue to be a priority for the United States. During the past year, the State Department has approved numerous operations, including freedom of navigation operations, to defend these principles. I continue to have serious concerns over ongoing developments in the South China Sea, and we should continue to condemn coercion and call on all parties, including China, to set the conditions for constructive diplomatic engagement.

Question 64. Do you place a higher priority on lowering tensions with regard to the Chinese Government’s provocative actions to change the status quo in the South China Sea or on preventing the South China Sea’s domination by the Chinese Government?

Answer. The United States should prioritize maintaining peace, security, stability, and the freedoms of navigation and overflight and other lawful uses of the sea. I have serious concerns over ongoing developments in the South China Sea.

I fully support the administration’s policy to oppose intimidation, coercion, and the threat or use of force by any claimant to assert South China Sea claims, and note that China’s activities, in particular, continue to overshadow those of other claimants in scope and provocativeness.

If confirmed, I will continue to support operations to defend freedom of navigation and overflight, and to engage bilaterally with countries across the region and through multilateral fora to reinforce support for the rules-based international system that has been indispensable for the peace, security, and prosperity of the Indo-Pacific region, including in the South China Sea.

Question 65. Do you believe that the Obama administration gave too much priority to concluding the Paris Accord and, as a result, was too soft on China’s expansionist behavior in 2015?

Answer. Concluding the Paris Accord was a stated priority of the Obama administration. If confirmed, I believe the United States should not shy away from speaking forthrightly about and contesting Chinese policies and actions that undermine the rules-based system that has fostered peace and prosperity for the Indo-Pacific region for decades. It is important for the United States to have a strong posture in the Indo-Pacific, which will enable the United States to better safeguard our interests in the region, including ensuring that our allies and partners are secure from military threats or coercion. The United States should continue to encourage cooperation to maintain free and open seaways, promote good governance and transparent infrastructure financing practices, and advance unimpeded commerce under free market principles.

If confirmed, I will work with our allies and partners to advance the region’s security and prosperity, develop its institutions, and prevent the erosion of the rules-based international order.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SUSAN A. THORNTON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The promotion of human rights and democracy has been a longstanding priority for me throughout my career. As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary responsible for Chinese and Mongolian Affairs and then acting Assistant Secretary of the East Asian and Pacific Affairs Bureau, I have worked to ensure that human rights issues are consistently raised in our engagements with countries across the region at all levels. In our bilateral and multilateral engagements, I have worked to ensure that the advancement of human rights and the promotion of democratic values are enshrined in high-level statements.

During my time as Acting Assistant Secretary, I regularly condemned human rights violations and abuses in China, and raised and advocated for individual cases of concerns with Chinese counterparts. For example, in April 2017 we secured the release of an American businesswoman from Houston who had been in prolonged pretrial detention in China for over 2 years. In December we took action to promote accountability for serious human rights abuses in China by designating a former Chinese prison official under the December 2017 Executive Order implementing the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. Moreover, we have used our high-level meetings with the Chinese to raise U.S. concerns around issues such as China’s foreign NGO management law, exit bans placed on U.S. citizens, and specific detentions of Chinese activists.

I also accompanied Secretary Tillerson to Burma last November to press the Government of Burma to address the ongoing crisis in northern Rakhine State and have supported efforts to hold those responsible for ethnic cleansing to account. I supported the application of Global Magnitsky sanctions to hold accountable individuals involved in significant corruption or gross violation of human rights in Burma as well.

If confirmed, I will continue to ensure that the promotion of human rights and democratic values remain a high priority in our diplomatic engagement in the Asia-Pacific region.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the East Asian and Pacific region today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in East Asia and the Pacific? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. I am concerned by an increase in government efforts across the Asia-Pacific region to shrink the space for civil society, including through the passage of overly restrictive NGO registration and management laws in places like China and Cambodia, and restrictions on fundamental freedoms, including expression and assembly. Burma’s democratic transition has encountered serious obstacles, and I am very concerned by the ethnic cleansing in northern Rakhine State and the continued arrest and detention of political prisoners.

In China, I remain troubled by reports that lawyers and activists, including foreign nationals, are being arbitrarily detained, tortured, and forced to confess to political charges on state media, and that in many cases, authorities have retaliated against their families. Additionally, I am concerned about conditions akin to martial law that have been imposed in Xinjiang and some Tibetan areas. China’s restrictions on religious expression and indigenous language education in Tibet and Xinjiang limit U.S.-China cooperation on counterterrorism issues. These repressive practices not only violate human rights but also exacerbate social unrest and ethnic tension, and can actually foment violence. If confirmed, I will continue to focus attention on China’s human rights abuses, both in our private conversations and publicly, and encourage greater respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law in China.

The human rights situation in the DPRK remains one of the worst in the world. I recently had the honor of meeting with a group of North Korean refugees and heard their concerns about the deplorable human rights abuses committed by the North Korean regime. They described horrific conditions inside the country and the terrifying journey through China to freedom. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize North Korean human rights. I will seek additional ways to amplify refugee voices, promote accountability for those responsible for human rights violations and abuses, increase the flow of independent, uncensored information into, out of, and within the DPRK. In addition, I will continue to press for China to stop its practice of detaining and refouling North Korean asylum seekers.
In engagement across the region, including at the highest levels, we should continue to constantly message the importance of an active civil society, protection of human rights, and respect for the rule of law. We should also continue working with likeminded governments and NGO partners to sustain and expand programs to support embattled civil society organizations and provide them with the resources they need to continue their vital work. We should keep vetting all security force units prior to their receipt of U.S. funded assistance in accordance with the Leahy Law, and not provide assistance to any security force unit where we have credible information of commission of a gross violation of human rights. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that we continue to apply the Leahy Law, and will continue to examine closely cases that may merit the application of sanctions under the Executive Order 13818, which implements the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. If confirmed, I will continue to uphold and work to advance the fundamental U.S. values of democracy and human rights in the region.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Backsliding on democracy, governance, corruption and human rights is undermining prospects for stability and growth in some countries. The shifting tactics of authoritarian regimes to constrain civil society represent difficult obstacles and challenges to advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general in the region.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the East Asia and Pacific region?

Answer. Yes. I have met frequently with representatives from human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations throughout my career. If confirmed, I will continue to be committed to meeting with these organizations in the United States and in the East Asia and Pacific region.

Question 5. Will you and your team actively engage with countries in the East Asia and Pacific region to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, my team and I will actively engage with countries in the East Asia and Pacific region to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted.

Question 6. If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that we continue to faithfully uphold and apply the Leahy Law and ensure we do not provide assistance to any security force unit where we have credible information of commission of a gross violation of human rights. If confirmed, I will ensure that our staff at our posts and in the EAP Bureau dedicated to Leahy vetting continue to receive accurate, current guidance on the Leahy Law and continue to vet all security force units prior to their receipt of U.S. funded assistance.

Question 7. Will you engage with the people of the East Asia and Pacific region on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will continue to engage with the people of the East Asia and Pacific region on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of my mission.

Question 8. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Civil and Foreign Service?

Answer. I believe strongly in the value of diversity. I will continue to be committed to fostering a diverse and inclusive team, as I have throughout my career, including as Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs where I have stressed the importance of inclusion, leadership, and professional development in our recruitment of personnel. If confirmed, I will ensure that the EAP Bureau continues to promote equal opportunities for all of our personnel, particularly those from diverse backgrounds or historically underrepresented groups. I will also ensure EAP managers prioritize mentoring and ensure that we are developing a new generation of diplomats to represent our country effectively. I will encourage my Deputy Assistant Secretaries, Office Directors, and Deputy Directors to play an active role in outreach to the Department’s 13 Employee Affinity...
Groups and 19 Employee Organizations so we can recruit and retain a workforce that reflects the diversity of American society. By collaborating closely with these and other groups, we can foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I will foster a work environment which recognizes the contributions of all employees, and will make sure they have information available about the Department’s Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan. In the past year as Acting Assistant Secretary, diversity has been a core value in our recruitment at all levels, and especially for leadership positions as I believe we need to model diversity at the highest levels of government.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure your supervisors are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will continue to emphasize the importance of diversity, leadership, and professional development for all of our employees and reward supervisors who proactively bring in new and diverse voices and ideas to their teams and their work products. I am very supportive of Department of State programs to promote diversity, including through mechanisms such as the Pickering and Rangel Fellowships. I am proud that EAP is slated to host over two dozen Pickering and Rangel Fellows in domestic and overseas positions this summer where we can share unique opportunities in the EAP region. I hope their positive early career experiences serving in the EAP region will encourage their subsequent return to more senior Civil or Foreign Service assignments in our region.

I encourage supervisors to value the contributions of all members of their team: Civil Service, Foreign Service, Locally Engaged Staff, expanded professional associates (EPAP), and employed family members (EFMs), Fellows, and interns, etc. I have emphasized to supervisors the importance of giving constructive feedback, not just in the annual performance evaluations but throughout the year. As the Bureau leverages opportunities for training, public-speaking, travel, and formal or informal leadership, selecting EAP candidates that represent the geographic and cultural diversity of American society will be an important factor. We are working to increase the mobility and opportunities for advancement for our Civil Service team members by identifying developmental roles and establishing career ladders for many of our positions. This will empower and motivate Civil Service colleagues to remain connected with our missions overseas and enable us to retain expertise in the Department.

In addition to creating opportunities for employees to continue their professional development, I support formal and informal networking across the bureau to encourage mentoring and exchange of diverse views at all levels. I have encouraged hiring managers to consider the profile of their current teams and find ways to recruit to add new skill sets and diversity of views and experiences to their mix. The recruitment of personnel from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups into the Civil and Foreign Service is something I have strongly supported, and if confirmed, I will continue to prioritize this in the professional development of EAP’s managers and leaders.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to fully comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns, if any arise, through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns, should they arise, through appropriate channels.

Question 12. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the East Asia and Pacific region?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes diversified funds that may have investments in companies in the East Asia and Pacific region; however, the funds are exempt from the conflicts of interest rules and have been reviewed by the State Department Ethics Office. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to conflicts of interest. I will divest my interests in any investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary in the future to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 13. Does the State Department agree with the determination of the U.N., Human Rights Watch, and several senators in this Congress, that the atroc-Question 14. Do you, speaking for yourself, believe the atrocities amount to crimes against humanity? If you cannot answer, will you pledge now to conduct an immediate review, with consultation with civil society, and with this committee, and reach a determination about the legal status of the atrocities committed in Rakhine?

Answer. I share your grave concern regarding the atrocities committed by Burmese security forces and vigilantes against Rohingya, and believe that those responsible for human rights abuses and violations should be held accountable. Historically, the Secretary of State has decided whether to characterize particular atrocities as genocide, crimes against humanity, or ethnic cleansing after reviewing factual assessments and legal assessments.

Question 15. If the U.S. Government determined that crimes against humanity had been committed, what would be the response?

Answer. If the Secretary of State determines that crimes against humanity occurred, if confirmed, I would have the EAP bureau work with others in the Department, Congress, and the interagency, as well as relevant international bodies and partners, to shape an appropriate response, consistent with applicable law.

Question 16. Would you agree that the U.S. Government should seek debate in the U.N. Security Council on whether to refer the situation in Burma to the International Criminal Court? If not, why not?

Answer. Whether to seek debate in the U.N. Security Council on a particular issue, as well as whether to support particular action by the U.N. Security Council, is a decision that would be made in consultation with other bureaus in the Department, relevant agencies, and the National Security Council.

Question 17. Has the State Department determined whether the atrocities in Rakhine amounted to genocide? Has the State Department determined that the atrocities in Rakhine did not amount to genocide?

Answer. The Secretary of State reviewed the facts available to him as part of a careful and deliberative process, and concluded that abuses in Burma’s northern Rakhine State, by some among the Burmese military, security forces, and local vigilantes, constitute ethnic cleansing against Rohingya. This determination in no way prejudices any further analysis on whether other mass atrocities have taken place, including crimes against humanity.

Question 18. Do you agree that the U.S. Government would be obligated to determine that the crime of genocide was committed, if credible information is obtained that shows a “genocidal intent” on the part of perpetrators? Do you agree that genocidal intent is shown when credible information is obtained that perpetrators committed the atrocities in Rakhine with the intent to destroy the Rohingya population in Burma in whole or in part, whether by outright violence, destruction of property, or full-scale deprivation of basic rights? If credible information showing such intent was obtained, do you not agree that the U.S. Government would be obligated to determine that genocide had been committed?

Answer. “Genocide” is defined in the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (the “Genocide Convention”), which the United States ratified in 1988. Historically, the Secretary of State has decided whether to characterize particular atrocities as genocide after reviewing factual and legal assessments.

Question 19. If the U.S. Government determined that genocide had been committed, what would be the response?

Answer. If the Secretary of State determines that genocide occurred, if confirmed, I would have the EAP bureau work with others in the Department and the interagency, as well as relevant international bodies and partners, to shape an appropriate response, consistent with applicable domestic and international law.

Question 20. Responses to Burma: The Government of Burma has not responded to any of the main pleas by the U.S. Government and international actors to address the atrocities in Burma.
They have refused to cooperation with a U.N. mandated fact finding mission, have now declared the special rapporteur persona non grata, and largely refuse to provide access to Rakhine by U.N. and humanitarian actors, human rights groups, and journalists. All of this stubbornness and obstruction occurs as Burma’s nascent democratic transition shows signs of weakening. The military has completely blocked efforts to end its constitutionally protected role in the Government, and it is still committing serious abuses during operations in other ethnic minority areas, blocking access to humanitarian agencies, and causing mass displacement.

Given the context of the terrible abuses in Rakhine, and breakdown in the democratic transition, it is now clear that ordinary diplomatic approaches of engagement and dialogue are no longer meaningfully effective, and clearing the administration agrees, because it has now begun, at the U.N. Security Council in New York and the U.N. Human Rights Council in Geneva, to press for stronger measures against Burma, and has bilaterally imposed travel restrictions on military commanders, and recently added a senior Burmese military official, Gen. Maung Maung Soe, to the Treasury Department Specially Designated Nationals (SDN) list.

Do you agree with this approach? Do you agree that the time has come for stronger measures, aimed at imposing real world costs on Burmese military commanders implicated in abuses and who are imperiling the democratic transition?

Answer. I share your grave concern regarding the atrocities committed by Burmese security forces and vigilantes against Rohingya. We should target sanctions of Burmese military officials responsible for human rights abuses and violations, both to promote accountability and to apply further pressure on the military to cooperate with the international community. At the same time, while the elected civilian government has short comings, it is more open to continued progress on human rights and democratic reform than the military. Given the complex role the military has in the country, and the ongoing struggle between the military and the elected civilian government, we should carefully calibrate our actions such that they do not have unintended spillover effects that could strengthen the military vis-à-vis the civilian government, for example by damaging the larger economy or engendering greater public support for the military.

Question 21. Do you agree that, if handled correctly, increased sanctions on senior military commanders could help pressure them to begin cooperating with the international community?

Answer. Targeted sanctions on Burmese military officials represent one of the key policy tools to apply pressure on the military to cooperate with the international community, and we should consider additional targeted sanctions as appropriate.

Question 22. Will you pledge to accelerate efforts to add more names of senior military commanders to the SDN list?

Answer. We should consider options to promote accountability for Burmese military officials involved in atrocities, including with additional targeted sanctions. All sanctioned persons are added to Treasury’s Specially Designated Nationals and Blocked Persons (SDN) list.

Question 23. Do you support the passage of S. 2060, Burma Human Rights and Freedom Act, in this Congress? If not, why not?

Answer. I believe we should continue to help the democratically-elected government improve governance, human rights, and economic reforms. The civilian leadership, for example, has undertaken nascent reform efforts, and it’s important we are careful not to inadvertently undermine those efforts. I believe targeted actions, rather than broad sanctions, can be the most effective means for holding Burma’s military to account for abuses.

Question 24. What other increased costs can the U.S. Government impose on the senior Burma military command, to change their thinking and behavior?

Answer. In response to the Burmese military’s role in the crisis in Rakhine State, the United States has ceased consideration of JADE Act travel waivers for current and former senior leaders of the Burmese military, and has withdrawn invitations for Burmese officials to participate in events with the U.S. military. We should continue options to promote accountability, including targeted sanctions. In addition, pursuant to the Leahy Law, the United States has assessed that there is credible information implicating all military units and officers involved in operations in northern Rakhine State in the commission of gross violations of human rights, as such making them ineligible to receive U.S. assistance.

Question 25. Do you pledge to work with your colleagues at the State Department to urge other states and regional entities, including the European Union, to impose sanctions and travel restrictions?
Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage likeminded countries and entities to use available legal measures to promote accountability for members of the Burmese security forces responsible for human rights violations and abuses. To this end, we should provide likeminded countries with information, as appropriate.

Question 26. Will you pledge to oppose Burmese military involvement or participation in all regional and military exercises, until and unless they begin to take steps to address their human rights abuses?

Answer. In response to the Burmese military’s role in the crisis in Rakhine State, I agree with opposing Burmese flag officer-level participation in regional military exercises in which the United States is a co-host. We should continue to do so until we assess that the Burmese military has taken appropriate steps to address human rights abuses.

TPP

Question 27. Last week, the eleven countries that continued to negotiate the Trans-Pacific Partnership Agreement, including Canada and Mexico, announced that they will sign a new version of the TPP in March.

- In your view[s], how would a renegotiated TPP affect the trading and economic relationship among the U.S., Japan, Australia, and ASEAN nations involved?
- I had some concerns about TPP. But I’m also concerned that unilaterally removing the U.S. from those discussions may not only have undermined our ability to engage constructively in the Asia-Pacific region, but may also have an indirect effect on economic opportunities with our closest neighbors.

Answer. The President has consistently expressed an interest in pursuing trade agreements that serve the interests of U.S. businesses, workers, and long-term U.S. economic security. This includes strengthening our economic relationships across the Indo-Pacific region, including with the TPP-11 countries, in any way that achieves these goals. As the President has made clear, we should only consider TPP if we are able to make a substantially better deal for the United States.

We should work with our partners to advance high-standard, free, fair, and reciprocal trade and investment relationships.

If confirmed, I will focus on expanding opportunities for U.S. firms across the Indo-Pacific and rebalancing our economic relationships to ensure fairness. We should also continue to work bilaterally and through multilateral fora such as APEC to encourage economic growth and open and fair business opportunities.

Question 28. Human Rights Watch has estimated that the number of victims killed by President Duterte’s drug war campaign is more than 12,000. We need to send a much stronger message to the Philippines and President Duterte—and also assure that our hands are not covered in blood as well if U.S. weapons or other support for the Philippines National Police are used in some of these murders. If confirmed, how do you plan to send a stronger message that the United States will not stand idly by as President Duterte continues to violate international law and kill his own people without due process?

Answer. The United States has expressed its serious concerns regarding extrajudicial killings associated with the drug war on multiple occasions with Philippine Government officials, and we should continue to do so. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Philippine Government to ensure that its law enforcement efforts are consistent with its human rights obligations and conducted in accordance with the rule of law. I will also encourage the Philippine Government to conduct thorough and transparent investigations into all credible reports of extrajudicial killings.

The best way for the Philippines to deal with the issue of combating illicit drugs is by adherence to the rule of law and strengthening community resources and support systems. Therefore, we are working with the Philippines to improve drug prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation programs; strengthen respect for human rights; and build capacity of the justice sector to handle criminal cases effectively, efficiently, and in line with the rule of law. We also vet all security force units prior to their receipt of U.S. funding in accordance with the Leahy Law which prohibits assistance to any security force unit where we have credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SUSAN A. THORNTON BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. Ms. Thornton, thank you for meeting with me this week. I enjoyed our discussion and look forward to working together in the future. Based on my concerns and the counsel of my constituents, I have been active in attempting to help address the horrible crisis in Burma and Bangladesh impacting the Rohingya. It is important to be clear—what we have seen in Burma constitutes a clear and deplorable case of crimes against humanity and ethnic cleansing. I believe it is imperative to protect ethnic and religious minorities in Burma and hold the Government accountable. Ms. Thornton, if confirmed, do you commit to working with me and this committee to craft the best possible U.S. policy toward Burma?

Answer. I share your serious concern regarding the atrocities committed in northern Rakhine State, which Secretary Tillerson has concluded constituted ethnic cleansing against Rohingya. I am also deeply concerned by the humanitarian situation of the over 688,000 Rohingya refugees who have fled to neighboring Bangladesh as a result of the violence, as well as the internal displacement of thousands remaining in Rakhine State. In addressing these challenges, I believe the Department should engage closely with Congress on Burma and if confirmed, I will do so.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SUSAN A. THORNTON BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Within the State Department budget, how would funding for Asia-related issues change from the enacted FY2017 budget?

Answer. The FY 2019 foreign assistance request of $431 million for the Asia-Pacific region is 10 percent above the FY 2018 request and 47 percent below the FY 2017 Actual.

The FY 2019 Diplomatic Engagement request of $315 million for the Asia-Pacific region is 3 percent below the FY 2018 Request and a 14 percent below the FY 2017 Actual.

This budget request would support the administration’s Indo-Pacific strategy that is based on respect for sovereignty, democratic values, the rule of law, open markets, fair and reciprocal trading frameworks, freedom of navigation, and private sector-led economic growth. The request supports programs that help counter violent extremism, strengthen maritime capacities, defend against cyberattacks, tackle transnational crime, and promote trade and investment that will foster economic opportunities for the American people.

The request also funds the strategic priorities in the Indo-Pacific by supporting U.S. treaty allies and emerging strategic partners to promote shared national security interests, trade, and investment that fosters economic opportunities for the American people.

Question 2. There is no U.S. Ambassador to South Korea. The Coordinator for Sanctions Policy position was eliminated. Please describe how the State Department will be staffed to successfully execute the administration’s North Korea policy—both the “engagement” component, as well as the “pressure” component.

Answer. I believe the Department is fully capable and appropriately staffed to conduct both pressure and engagement regarding North Korea. The Office of Korean Affairs works closely with multiple other bureaus and offices in the State Department, and with interagency partners, to effectively implement the U.S. Government’s North Korean policy. We have a highly capable and well-respected senior diplomat, Charge d’Affaires Marc Knapper, leading our tremendous U.S. Embassy team in Seoul.

Question 3. Which countries still provide the greatest revenue streams to North Korea? When executing the so-called pressure campaign, how would you prioritize which countries would receive the greatest pressure?

Answer. Entities in China and Russia still provide the greatest revenue streams to North Korea. Both governments have said they are committed to implementing U.N. Security Council resolutions to their fullest extent, though there is still illicit trade with North Korea. North Korean workers in China and Russia also provide a revenue stream to the regime. Stopping illicit transactions from these entities in China and Russia continue to be an administration priority to reduce the revenue streams that support the DPRK regime’s illegal nuclear and missile programs.

Question 4. Can the United States deter a North Korea armed with a nuclear-armed intercontinental ballistic missile, and how would that shape policy formulation? If North Korea can be deterred, why should the United States consider a preventive military strike, especially given the potential consequences? If North Korea cannot be deterred, how would a limited strike teach Kim Jong Un not to strike the United States or our allies?

Answer. The administration has stated that its goal is the complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula and that the administration seeks to achieve that goal through a peaceful, diplomatic solution. This is being done through putting maximum pressure on the North Korean regime to change Kim Jong Un’s calculus, so that he will engage in meaningful dialogue towards denuclearization. The United States should continue to lead the international community in diplomatically and economically isolating the North Korean regime. However, as the President and the Secretary of State have also made clear, all options are on the table.

Question 5. Getting U.S. China policy right is critical for U.S. prosperity and security. China is the biggest strategic competitor to the United States and seeks to gain advantages where it senses weakness. How can the United States better protect a free and open liberal international order, intellectual property rights, and a democracy free from Chinese Government influence without overly risking a trade war, or worse, military conflict?

Answer. The United States should continue to work cooperatively with allies and like-minded partners to uphold the rules-based order, and to advance fundamental U.S. values around democracy, human rights, and the rule of law in the Indo-Pacific region. We should continue to promote democratic values and work closely with other democracies to strengthen respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and freedom of religion or belief. If confirmed, I am committed to continuing to make use of all tools at our disposal to press China to live up to its responsibilities as a member of the rules-based international order.

The United States should have a constructive, results-oriented relationship with China. We should not shy away from speaking forthrightly about and contesting Chinese policies and actions that undermine the international order that has fostered peace and prosperity in the Indo-Pacific region for decades. We should continue to work with China on important issues, from North Korea to countering the flow of illegal opioids to encouraging greater protection of intellectual property rights. At the same time, we should draw a clear distinction where we disagree, and I will, if confirmed, remain committed to defending our values and championing human rights and fundamental freedoms around the world.

Question 6. In his State of the Union speech, President Trump asked Congress to pass legislation to help ensure U.S. foreign assistance dollars “always serve American interests, and only go to America’s friends.” How would a more transactional approach to U.S. foreign aid benefit U.S. interests? How would such a policy change shape U.S. foreign assistance in the Asia-Pacific?

Answer. The FY 2019 budget request provides the necessary resources to advance peace and security, expand American influence, and address global crises, while making efficient use of taxpayer resources. It will modernize State Department and USAID diplomacy and development to advance a more secure and prosperous world by helping to support the development of more stable.

I believe it is important to assess our foreign assistance carefully to make sure that it serves American interests. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Congress to ensure U.S. foreign assistance continues to serve American interests.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO FRANCIS R. FANNON BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

U.S. Energy Diplomacy (specific countries)

Question 1. Recent gas finds in the eastern Mediterranean have the potential to make Israel a net energy exporter for the first time in its history and have created opportunities for energy cooperation as well as potential conflict between Israel and its neighbors.

• What do you believe is the United States role in Middle East energy diplomacy?

Answer. The United States role in Middle East energy diplomacy is to engage nations throughout the region in support of our own energy security goals and the energy security of our partners. Our diplomacy should ensure that energy flowing from, into, and within the region is affordable, reliable, and from diversified sources. U.S. energy diplomacy should support increasing exports of U.S. energy resources and technologies to the region as appropriate. Further, the United States should ensure energy markets in the region are free and transparent so that U.S. businesses can compete fairly for new opportunities abroad. The United States is now a global leader on all energy fronts—particularly production and innovation—and we can work with our partners in the region to diversify their energy sectors, reduce vulnerabilities, and promote our mutual energy security interests.

Question 2. Recent gas finds in the eastern Mediterranean have the potential to make Israel a net energy exporter for the first time in its history and have created opportunities for energy cooperation as well as potential conflict between Israel and its neighbors.

• If confirmed, what will your priorities be with respect to your Bureau's engagement in the region?

Answer. If confirmed, my priority for the Bureau of Energy Resources' engagement in the Middle East will be to support U.S. foreign policy goals, including the energy security of the United States and of our partners by ensuring the region contributes to stable and efficient global energy markets. In working with our partners in the Middle East to diversify their energy sectors, we can also encourage greater energy integration among them. We can strive for this by promoting a shared economic prosperity that can serve as the foundation for peace and better relations. Our engagement will seek to create new commercial opportunities in the Middle East for U.S. businesses and develop new export markets for U.S. energy resources, technologies, and services.

Question 3. Lebanon's recent offshore gas tender includes part of Israel and Lebanon's disputed maritime border. Israeli Energy Minister Yuval Steinitz has said that a diplomatic resolution to the dispute "is preferable to threats" but has also warned Lebanon not to explore in the disputed line of contact.

• If confirmed, how will you engage with both sides to resolve this issue?

Answer. I understand that both sides appreciate the strong prospect for the private sector to develop offshore resources in the vicinity of the disputed area should an arrangement between them be reached. If confirmed, and if there was interest in a U.S. role facilitating negotiations on the area of overlapping maritime claims by Israel and Lebanon, I would work with State Department colleagues to help the parties proceed in reaching a resolution quickly and in a manner acceptable to both Lebanon and Israel.

Question 4. Lebanon's recent offshore gas tender includes part of Israel and Lebanon's disputed maritime border. Israeli Energy Minister Yuval Steinitz has said that a diplomatic resolution to the dispute "is preferable to threats" but has also warned Lebanon not to explore in the disputed line of contact.

• Do you see any potential for cooperation between the two countries (Lebanon and Israel)?

Answer. I understand that both countries' officials are interested in drawing upon the best practices and lessons learned from developing and marketing offshore hydrocarbons elsewhere in the Eastern Mediterranean to develop their offshore resources for the benefit of their peoples. If confirmed, I would work with State Department colleagues to help the parties reach a resolution quickly and in a manner acceptable to both Lebanon and Israel.

Question 5. Iraq, despite its hydrocarbon resources, is Iran's second largest export market for natural gas.

• How can improvements to Iraq's energy infrastructure improve its domestic gas production capacity?

Answer. Despite having the world's twelfth-largest gas reserves—nearly 3.8 trillion cubic meters (tcm)—Iraq's natural gas production in 2016 was just 1,000 million cubic meters (mcm), lagging far behind the other hydrocarbon-producing countries in the region. Further, Iraq has the world's second-largest natural gas flaring rate and burns off about 48 mcm per day (mcmd) (representing about $2.5 billion in annual value lost). This gas flaring takes place because Iraq does not have the necessary gas processing and transport infrastructure.

Iraq could alleviate the need for expensive imports, improve the reliability of its electricity delivery, and eventually become a major exporter of gas and petrochemicals if it addresses the flaring of associated gas at major oil production sites and develops its considerable domestic gas resources.

I understand that American companies are already seeing success participating in Iraq's gas industry. GE is installing gas turbines in electrical plants and Orion Gas Processors recently announced a framework agreement to build facilities to capture the gas from a field in southern Iraq and to transform it into usable fuels. Other U.S. companies are engaging the Iraqi Ministry of Oil to help reduce gas flaring and to utilize this wasted resource.
Question 6. Iraq, despite its hydrocarbon resources, is Iran’s second largest export market for natural gas.

- If confirmed, how would you work with Iraq to lessen its dependence on Iranian gas?

Answer. Iraq began importing gas from Iran in June 2017—starting at 7 million cubic meters per day (mcmd), with the potential to increase significantly—resulting in an estimated $3.7 billion in annual revenue for Iran. By developing its own substantial natural gas resources, Iraq could significantly reduce its dependence on Iranian gas while building up its own energy infrastructure and economy.

Assisting Iraq in reducing its dependence on Iranian gas must be an important part of the effort to improve Iraq’s energy security. Increasing Iraq’s resilience in the face of attempts to use energy as a source of foreign influence over Iraqi foreign and national security policies is an important policy priority. If confirmed, I would continue these efforts as a critical part of an overall strategy not only to support Iraq but also to mitigate Iran’s ability to project malign influence throughout the region.

Question 7. Do you believe clean energy cooperation with China and India is in the U.S. interest? Will you commit to continuing the separate bilateral efforts on clean energy development with China and India?

Answer. I believe clean energy cooperation with China and India advances U.S. energy security and opportunities for U.S. business by advancing the broader objectives of supporting sustainable, transparent, and predictable international energy markets, and promoting universal access to affordable and reliable energy.

If confirmed, I will seek to advance secure, stable, diversified, and modern global energy systems that uses a broad range of market-based energy solutions, including advanced energy technologies, renewable energy, energy efficiency, and energy governance with China and India.

Question 8. If confirmed, under your leadership, will ENR engage in countries when asked for assistance and advice on pursuing energy development according to their self-determined interests?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I would support the Bureau of Energy Resources (ENR) promoting energy security for the United States and our partners and allies by promoting diverse global energy supplies from all energy sources. The United States is not in the business of picking winners and losers. ENR engagement, including assistance, promotes global political stability and prosperity through a multitude of avenues, including energy development and diversification. It is my understanding that ENR supports countries in accordance with their self-determined preferences. If confirmed I would intend to continue this practice.

Question 9. Will you commit to upholding the principles of self-determination within the Power Africa program?

Answer. Increasing electricity access in Sub-Saharan Africa is in the strategic interest of both the United States and African nations. Power Africa is a partnership. Its members—12 U.S. Government agencies, 16 like-minded bilateral and multilateral development partners, and more than 140 private sector companies—partner with African nations to help African leaders and citizens determine their own future. Power Africa works best when African Governments are committed to making the necessary reforms to attract investment in their power sectors. This also benefits the United States, opening opportunities for American investment in African economies.

I understand that the Department of State utilizes ENR and our embassies to work with governments to strengthen enabling environments and implement the critical reforms that attract private investment in power generation, transmission, and distribution projects. When engaging on Power Africa, my understanding is that ENR supports countries in accordance with their self-determined preferences. If confirmed I would intend to continue this practice.

Question 10. What host-country factors, beyond ENR’s own resource and capacity constraints, would result in the U.S. limiting or restraining engagement on energy diplomacy?

Answer. ENR, working with our energy officers in our embassies and with inter-agency colleagues, uses energy diplomacy and engagement to help resource-rich countries overcome investment climate issues that stifle economic growth and limit the ability of U.S. firms to compete fairly in those markets. If these countries can attract energy investments, especially cutting-edge energy technology from all energy sources, this will improve their own energy security and provide the foundation for economic growth, political stability, and democratic values.
My understanding is that ENR focuses its efforts on countries seeking reform, U.S. allies and partners, and those with significant energy potential.

Question 11. Do you believe that U.S. foreign energy policy and diplomacy encouraging foreign countries, particularly developing countries, to pursue the development of energy generation from imported fuels, comports with the broader U.S. foreign policy objective of ensuring that developing countries achieve self-reliance?

Answer. U.S. national security benefits when other countries improve their energy security through domestic energy production and avoid overdependence on single suppliers. Access to affordable, reliable, diverse, and secure energy strengthens developing countries and their economic and political development. Diversification of fuel types, supply sources (countries of origin), and delivery routes also strengthens the energy security of those countries.

The United States plays an important role in supporting the energy security of other countries through U.S. investments and U.S. exports of energy resources and technologies. In Eastern Europe, for example, U.S. liquefied natural gas (LNG) provides another option to countries which are overly dependent on Russian gas imports. U.S. companies, with their advanced technologies, are often vital to the development of the natural resources in other countries. Jamaica has increased its own energy security, and thereby reduced its dependence on Venezuelan oil imports, through the development of renewables and natural gas imports with the help of ENR’s technical assistance.

In addition to work regarding energy generation, I understand that ENR and U.S. embassies practice diplomacy and, in some cases, provide technical assistance to encourage transparency, the rule of law, and the establishment of proper institutional frameworks to attract long-term energy investment. Proper institutional frameworks can underpin economic development, political stability and promote shared democratic values.

Question 12. What are your views on the need to balance domestic energy security with the energy interests of other nations?

Answer. Countries can strengthen their own energy security through increasing domestic energy production, decreasing their dependence on a single foreign supplier, and seeking access to energy supplies through a variety of fuel types, sources of energy, and delivery routes. The United States has taken this approach. The boom in U.S. energy production has benefited U.S. consumers, boosted our exports, and increased our own national security. U.S. energy exports increases the energy security of other countries not only because the United States is a reliable, transparent supplier of all types of energy but also because U.S. exports increase the liquidity, price efficiency, and competitiveness of global hydrocarbon markets.

Question 13. Would you oppose ENR engagement in facilitating energy resource development in countries that want U.S. technical expertise but may not want to import “U.S. energy export?”

Answer. If confirmed, I would support ENR promoting energy security for the United States and our partners and allies by promoting diverse global energy supplies from all energy sources. Facilitating the market-driven development of energy resources abroad provides opportunities for U.S. companies to invest and opportunities to export U.S. energy resources, technologies, and services including U.S. technical expertise. Doing so helps our allies and partners diversify their energy sources and bring economic gains back home. We believe in free and open markets. U.S. businesses are competitive across the energy sector in the development and provision of resources, technologies, and services. They can compete more effectively on a level playing field.

Question 14. What assurances can you give me that the President, the NSC, or Sec. Tillerson share your perspective?

Answer. President Trump and Secretary Tillerson have publicly supported increasing the energy security of the United States and our partners and allies through increased energy production, greater access to energy markets, fewer barriers to energy trade and development, and U.S. energy and energy technology exports. The President and Secretary recognize the importance of energy security in our economic system and to our national security.

Question 15. Would you pushback against any such political pressure that is contrary to your understanding on what and with whom ENR should engage based on the administration’s foreign economic principles?

Answer. As I mentioned in my opening statement, if confirmed, I will focus on three objectives—energy security through diplomacy, governance, and electricity for... all. These energy goals support the administration’s own energy and foreign policy objectives.

Pipeline/Offshore Drilling

Question 16. How do you account for the negative externalities to the American people of something like a cross-border pipeline, or offshore drilling, if the energy resources those efforts are supporting are being sent abroad?

Answer. All energy infrastructure projects bring both positive and negative externalities. These projects, even where they support energy exports, support U.S. jobs and utilize U.S. expertise and technologies. We should identify and take into consideration all factors surrounding energy projects to help policy makers assess the overall national interest. If confirmed, I will work with the State Department and in the interagency so that policy makers take into account all externalities and points of view expressed about energy projects.

Question 17. What degree of responsibility do you believe oil companies (versus taxpayers) should bear for disaster mitigation when oil industry operations cause a spill or disaster?

Answer. The Department of State does not regulate oil industry operations. If confirmed, I will work with the appropriate government officials to assure that disaster mitigation strategies and response plans are as robust as possible, consistent with the scope of my responsibilities and applicable U.S. laws.

Question 18. Do you believe bankruptcy protection should shield oil companies from liability and financial responsibilities to pay for cleanup and recovery efforts?

Answer. The State Department does not have jurisdiction over bankruptcy issues. However, if confirmed, I will work to encourage the use of best practices by energy companies to help ensure they meet all applicable obligations for cleanup and recovery, consistent with the scope of my responsibilities and applicable U.S. laws.

Question 19. If confirmed, how would you approach advising foreign governments, including developing countries and countries with concentrations of vulnerable populations living near energy resources or industrial areas, about public health, safety, and liability regulation of energy developers?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue with ENR’s efforts to strengthen energy sector governance, access, and reliability in emerging economies and build the capacity of governments to develop the energy resources of their countries for long-term national benefit. I understand that ENR foreign assistance programs are integral to the Bureau’s diplomatic engagements overseas, provide critical support for the Department’s objectives and the administration’s global diplomacy priorities. ENR’s programs leverage expertise from across the U.S. Government and leading U.S. universities and laboratories. Further, I understand that ENR’s programs also provide access to qualified independent subject-matter experts and technical specialists to support the objectives to: 1) build institutional and human resource capacity needed to ensure strong energy sector governance and transparency in the resource sectors in emerging economies; 2) provide governments and civil society with the tools needed to help support responsible development of their domestic resources; and 3) support power market reforms and efforts to leverage regional electrical interconnections, strengthen energy security, and advance regional cooperation. If confirmed, I will seek to continue this important work.

Question 20. Will you commit to engaging with civil society and local community representatives, including marginalized populations and women leaders, in your diplomatic engagements on energy development abroad?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to engage in discussions with all relevant stakeholders in the extractive industries including affected communities where these resources are located. ENR has for many years engaged actively with civil society representatives individually and within multilateral energy fora. ENR also has engaged on the important issue of gender and energy in multilateral engagements and through bilateral efforts.

If confirmed, I will ensure the bureau continue its efforts to work with civil society in our diplomatic engagements on energy development abroad. I also will coordinate our efforts with our U.S. Agency for International Development colleagues to help ensure a unified message of engagement with civil society is implemented.

Question 21. Will you describe your commitment to protecting human rights and preventing the exploitation of vulnerable populations and the approaches you will take to prioritize these imperatives in U.S. energy diplomacy?

Answer. The protection of internationally recognized human rights is of paramount importance to the Department of State and to me. If confirmed, I will promote U.S. policies to advance these interests and share U.S. best practices regarding the responsible development of a country's domestic resources.

ENR works with countries around the world to improve hydrocarbon and mineral sector governance and oversight and encourages universal access to affordable and reliable energy supply through power sector reform and development. I would continue our close collaboration with the U.S. Agency for International Development and work to connect the Governments of resource rich countries with international best practices for the sound and transparent governance of extractive resources.

Question 22. How do you define or interpret "U.S. energy exports," as described in Objective Goal 2.3.1 of the State Dept., and USAID's Joint Strategic Plan, and do you see it including facilitation of U.S. energy developers, not just fuels, gain access to foreign markets?

Answer. I consider U.S. energy exports to include exports of our energy resources, technologies, equipment, and services. This approach is consistent with the National Security Strategy and the intent of the Department's Joint Strategic Plan Objective 2.3.1. U.S. exports, whether commodities, goods, or services, help our allies and partners diversify their energy sources and improve their energy security, and importantly, they also promote economic growth and job creation here in the United States. U.S. energy companies (including energy developers) are part of that strategic and economic value chain.

It is important to ensure a level playing field though reduction of barriers that hinder U.S. companies from competing in foreign markets and advocacy on behalf of U.S. companies. If confirmed, I would work to ensure the Bureau will advance fair and reciprocal economic relationships in the energy sector.

Question 23. Is "energy exports" code for fossil fuels? If not, what else are we talking about and do others like President Trump, Secretaries Perry and Tillerson, and Ambassador Craft agree that we are talking about something other than coal, oil or gas?

Answer. The Trump administration has repeatedly and publicly called for an 'all-of-the-above' approach to energy. The President's National Security Strategy (December 2017) states that the United States will promote exports of its energy resources, technologies, and services. It makes no distinction between fossil and non-fossil energy and does not seek to pick winners and losers. The United States is fortunate to be a leader in energy development, production, and innovation across the entire range of energy sources. As such, I understand that ENR promotes U.S. exports of energy resources, technologies, and services—including highly efficient fossil fuels and renewables—through engagement with foreign governments to ensure fair and reciprocal treatment for U.S. companies operating in overseas markets. The Bureau also works in partner nations to build institutional capacity; provides the tools to support responsible resource development; and, supports power market reforms, all of which advance administration priorities and allow our partners to make fully informed, market-based decisions.

Question 24. How would ENR "promote" U.S. oil or coal exports in foreign policy when these commodities are traded globally based on global market prices per unit, and that the basic economic principles of supply and demand determine production and sales?

Answer. ENR promotes U.S. oil and coal exports by promoting open, transparent, and market-based energy sectors and removing barriers to trade, which increases opportunities for U.S. energy exporters regardless of fluctuations in commodities prices. ENR promotes energy security for U.S. allies and partners, which includes the diversification of energy sources, supplies, and routes. As the United States is a reliable supplier and a recent exporter of multiple energy resources, ENR has been able to promote U.S. energy exports, including oil, coal, and liquefied natural gas, to strengthen global energy security. ENR furthers U.S. energy technology exports, including advanced clean coal power generation equipment, through commercial advocacy. ENR also supports the transformation of electricity markets in key countries, helping to develop the transparent and competitive market mechanisms that often make low-cost fuels the most efficient choice of power supply.

Question 25. What is your experience in facilitating "alternative energy" development and how does it compare with your experience (in terms of time and scope) with fossil fuel energy development?

Answer. I have considerable experience working with both fossil-based and non-fossil based energy. As such, it is difficult to assess time and scope with precision in light of this overlap.

For example, while serving as senior Legislative Assistant to Senator Ben Nighthorse Campbell, I drafted Good Samaritan legislation which sought to promote the clean-up of abandoned hard rock mines that were leaching into and harming watersheds. As counsel to the Senate Committee on Environment & Public Works committee, I drafted and negotiated a variety of provisions to the Energy Policy Act of 2005, including the motor fuels title, which established the Renewable Fuels Program.

As head of Murphy Oil Corporation’s government affairs function, I worked on a variety of oil and natural gas projects in the U.S. and elsewhere. Yet, I also supported Murphy Oil’s acquisition of Hankinson Renewable Energy, a significant ethanol plant based in Hankinson, North Dakota.

BHP Billiton is the world’s largest diversified resources company. As head of their Washington office, I supported the company’s oil and gas operations. I also supported BHP’s sale of U.S. coal mines, in particular of its Navajo coal mine to the Navajo Nation. That transaction represented a meaningful act of the Navajo Nation’s right to self-determination, as it turned the prior owner, BHP, into their employee.

In addition, as a “diversified resources company,” BHP invested in other commodities that were foundational to “alternative energy.” For example, solar and electric vehicles require significantly more copper than coal-based generation or internal combustion engines. BHP owns and operates the world’s largest copper mine. I supported BHP’s public rollout of its Climate Change: Portfolio Scenario Analysis. That document and others illustrated that irrespective of potential policy scenarios, the company projected significant growth. The company’s diversity of commodities meant that it could reallocate investment to whatever commodity would flourish.

Question 26. If the contrast is great, will you commit to recruiting experts to manage this important part of ENR’s portfolio?

Answer. I believe in the importance of diversity in terms of cultures, genders and points of view. If confirmed, I commit to recruit the best experts to advance ENR’s portfolio.

Question 27. Do you believe it is appropriate for ENR to endorse or promote particular energy technologies or products?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support an all of the above international energy policy that strengthens the energy security of the United States and our allies. Maintaining market access for U.S. energy products, technologies and services, and ensuring sustainable, transparent, and predictable international energy markets for our partners and ourselves is crucial to our security. ENR is not in the business of picking winners and losers. However, ENR does leverage its technical expertise to provide solutions that are appropriate for different contexts. I recognize that market-informed laws and regulations are essential to balancing emissions reduction and economic growth goals. Laws and regulations should be performance-based and technology neutral.

Question 28. What do you believe the President meant when he said in the State of The Union on January 20, 2018: “I am asking the Congress to pass legislation to help ensure American foreign Assistance dollars always serve American interests, and only go to our friends.”

Answer. The President is committed to ensuring that American foreign assistance serves American interests. The 2019 Budget prioritizes assistance that protects the American people, promotes U.S. prosperity, and advances American interests and values.

Question 29. How do you believe a policy that “ensure[s] American foreign Assistance dollars always serve American interests, and only go to our friends” would, or should, be carried by the ENR bureau?

Answer. It is important to assess our foreign assistance based on a number of factors, with the top reason being that our assistance should serve American interests. Countries’ support for U.S. priorities in international fora is one indicator to consider, but there are other important factors to consider as well.

Question 30. Do you believe the U.S. should limit diplomatic and development engagements to our “friends?” Who are our “friends?” Would you agree that disengaging with nations who may not necessarily be our “friends” could create opportunities for our global competitors like Russia and China, or extremist elements like Boko Haram and ISIS, to fill the void we create?

Answer. The U.S. Government has a longstanding policy of using diplomacy and development not only to strengthen existing friendships but to build new ones, and to pursue pragmatic and constructive relationships even with those governments with which there are many areas of deep disagreement. For this reason, the United States maintains broad and continuing dialogues not only with our closest partners and allies but with strategic competitors. The Trump administration has stated its commitment to use America’s influence to promote peace, prosperity, and the development of successful societies. If confirmed, I would uphold this commitment and ensure the Department of State uses energy diplomacy to establish a stable, secure, and resilient global energy supply, to strengthen the transparency and efficiency of global energy markets, and to promote universal access to affordable and reliable energy. Achieving these goals will require the United States to broaden the consensus behind these core principles by reaching beyond its traditional partners and allies. There is also a clear need to prevent foreign powers, criminal groups, or terrorist organizations from using political and economic influence or overt acts of violence to undermine these goals. If confirmed, I would continue State Department efforts to ensure energy resources are not used for malign political ends or to finance criminal or terrorist activities.

Question 31. If a country determines its best interests are to mobilize its own domestic energy resources, i.e. not import of U.S. fossil fuels, would that count against considering them “an economic partner of the U.S.” or not a “friend?”

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the State Department’s work to lower barriers to investment, improve commercial climates, and ensure U.S. energy companies are able to compete on a level playing field across the globe, and I am confident that U.S. energy exports will continue not only to compete but to thrive in the years ahead.

Yet, it is unrealistic to think that U.S. exports alone will solve the world’s energy security challenges. As such, the United States is a strong supporter of the right of every country to develop its own sovereign national resources in pursuit of national security and prosperity. The strong and vocal support of the United States for projects such as the Southern Gas Corridor—a project that will not transport a single molecule of U.S.-origin natural gas, but will help our partners and allies in Europe improve the diversity and stability of their energy supply—demonstrates a commitment to energy security that is distinct from efforts to promote the export of U.S. energy resources, services, and technologies. If confirmed, I will promote energy security even where U.S. energy exports are not directly implicated.

Question 32. Was your departure from BHP at all related to the company’s portfolio shift towards less carbon intensive activities and changes in political and federal strategy with respect to climate change have anything to do with your departure?

Answer. No. BHP did not and would not shift its business strategy according to political changes in the U.S. or anywhere else in the world. BHP views its investments and operational decisions according to 50 plus year time horizons. Further, BHP’s commodity diversity provides a high degree of resilience under any potential global policy scenario. In fact, my work with BHP on scenario analysis and disclosure issues, among others, was foundational to my decision to form a bipartisan energy and environment consultancy, The Coefficient Group.

Question 33. Will you commit to staffing the ENR bureau with professional staff at all levels with diverse experience, expertise and background to ensure ENR remains effective in delivering in all areas of the Bureau’s “all of the above” approach to energy diplomacy.

Answer. I take issues of diversity and inclusion very seriously, which have been shaped by my personal and professional experience. As I indicated in my opening statement, my mother and her family immigrated to the United States in 1969 with little more than an aspiration for a better life. I saw firsthand the importance of inclusion of diverse nationalities and ethnicities. Professionally, I have worked with diverse and multi-cultural teams to advance commercial ventures. I have a keen appreciation for the benefits that diversity in culture and perspective can bring to any endeavor.

I believe in the importance of diversity in terms of cultures, genders and points of view. If confirmed, I commit to recruit the best experts to advance ENR’s “all of the above” approach to energy diplomacy, and will seek to build and retain a diverse team and ensure that all are meaningfully included at all levels of the organization.

Question 34. Executive Order 13770, “Ethics Commitments by Executive Branch Appointees,” requires every appointee so sign a pledge which states that they “will not for a period of 2 years after the date of my appointment participate in any particular matter on which I lobbied within the 2 years before the date of my appointment or participate in the specific issue area in which that particular matter falls.”

As a lobbyist for BHP Billiton, you submitted disclosures that state the specific issue areas you lobbied on over the past two years. Many of these specific issue areas appear to fall within the scope of work for the position to which you have been nominated. At our meeting in my office and at your nomination hearing, you said that State Department ethics lawyers were going to “carve out” these issue areas.

Listed below are some of the relevant specific issue areas that you lobbied on over the past two years. For each one, please explain how the specific issue area does not apply to the work of the ENR Bureau or, if it does, how the State Department will create “carve outs” that would allow you to fulfill the full scope of responsibilities for this position without having to recuse yourself from any matter or seek a waiver for EO 13770.

34a. Issues related to methane emissions (no bill)

Answer. This matter related to BHP’s participation in “One Future,” an industry group comprised of companies throughout the natural gas value chain committed to reduce their methane emissions to a collective “one percent.” BHP supported One Future’s mission and sought to promote voluntary methane emissions reductions with U.S. EPA.

One Future is a domestic U.S. organization and EPA’s proposed methane emissions programs were wholly domestic. As such, this is not a particular matter or specific issue area that I would anticipate working on as Assistant Secretary for the Energy Resources Bureau if I am confirmed.

34b. Issues related to climate change (no bill)

Answer. BHP has agreed with the United Nations’ views on climate change and IPCC reports since the early 2000s. The company has shared its views consistently since that time.

If confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from particular matters in which BHP is a party. Further, the roll-out of BHP’s Climate Change reports did not involve the Energy Resources Bureau, and I would not expect any promotion of those reports before the Energy Resources Bureau in the future.

34c. Issues related to climate change, including carbon capture sequestration, conservation, and general climate change policies (no bill)

Answer. BHP has agreed with the United Nations’ views on climate change and IPCC reports since the early 2000s. The company has shared its views consistently since that time.

I supported BHP’s public roll-out of its report, “Climate Change: Portfolio Analysis” and subsequent, “Climate Change: Portfolio Analysis Views After Paris.” This included sharing the report with officials during the former administration.

BHP signed a partnership agreement with Beijing-based, Peking University to research potential application for carbon capture utilization and storage in the steelmaking process. I supported the company’s public roll-out of this initiative. This included sharing notification of this initiative with officials during the former administration.

If confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from matters in which BHP is a party. Further, neither the roll-out of BHP’s Climate Change reports nor the partnership with Peking University involved the Energy Resources Bureau, and I would not expect those matters to come before the Energy Resources Bureau in the future.

34d. Financial transparency issues (no bill)

Answer. BHP supported U.S. adoption of mandatory disclosure of extractive industry payments to governments. This included BHP’s support of section 1504 of the Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act. As noted, this matter concerned SEC regulations, and BHP’s work on this issue does not relate to the Bureau of Energy Resources.

If confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from matters in which BHP is a party.

34e. Extractives Industry Transparency Initiative (no bill)

Answer. I was listed along with BHP’s other registered lobbyist on all filings as a routine matter, rather than removing me and putting me back on LDA filings. BHP supported U.S. adoption of EITI. However, BHP’s other lobbyist worked on the U.S. EITI issues.

The Department of Interior noticed its withdrawal from U.S. participation of EITI in light of legal privacy restrictions and low participation rates. In light of this withdrawal and that I did not work on the issue, there is no prospect of triggering Executive Order 13770’s restrictions related to past lobbying if I am confirmed.
34f. Issues related to climate change policy, including carbon capture and sequestration and voluntary methane reductions (no bill)

Answer. BHP has agreed with the United Nations’ views on climate change and IPCC reports since the early 2000s. The company has shared its views consistently since that time.

I supported BHP’s public roll-out of its report, “Climate Change: Portfolio Analysis” and subsequent, “Climate Change: Portfolio Analysis Views After Paris.” This included sharing the report with officials during the former administration.

BHP signed a partnership agreement with Beijing-based, Peking University to research potential application for carbon capture utilization and storage in the steelmaking process. I supported the company’s public roll-out of this initiative. This included sharing notification of this initiative with officials during the former administration.

Additionally, BHP participated in “One Future,” an industry group comprised of companies throughout the natural gas value chain committed to reduce their methane emissions to a collective “one percent.” BHP supported One Future’s mission and sought to promote voluntary methane emissions reductions with U.S. EPA.

One Future is a domestic U.S. organization and EPA’s proposed methane emissions programs were wholly domestic.

If confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from matters in which BHP is a party. Further, neither the roll-out of BHP’s Climate Change reports, the partnership with Peking University, nor One Future initiative involved the Energy Resources Bureau, and I would not expect those matters to come before the Energy Resources Bureau in the future.

34g. Issues related to NAFTA renegotiation

Answer. BHP won the right to develop the Trion field with partner PEMEX in Mexico’s offshore leasing. BHP was interested in understanding how NAFTA renegotiations could affect the development of that discovered resource.

BHP’s inquiries did not involve the Bureau of Energy Resources. Further, if confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from BHP.

34h. Issues related to energy policy priorities

Answer. BHP has shale resources across four regions in three U.S. states. “Energy policy priorities” relates to BHP’s interest in better understanding the direction of the U.S. Government policy priorities that could affect its production profile.

BHP’s inquiries, which focused on domestic policy, did not involve the Bureau of Energy Resources. Further, if confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from BHP.

34i. Issues related to energy security (no bill)

Answer. Two BHP executives visited Washington from Australia. I was listed, along with my other former BHP registered lobbyist colleague because we supported them in preparation for their trip. Neither of us participated in the meeting that this filing references.

Neither my own work nor the White House meeting that I did not attend involved matters before the Bureau of Energy Resources. Further, if confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from BHP.

34j. Issues related to climate change policy, including the Paris accords and carbon capture and sequestration technology and funding (no bill)

Answer. BHP has agreed with the United Nations’ views on climate change and IPCC reports since the early 2000s. The company has shared its views consistently since that time.

I supported BHP’s public roll-out of its report, “Climate Change: Portfolio Analysis” and subsequent, “Climate Change: Portfolio Analysis Views After Paris.” This included sharing the report with officials during the former administration.

BHP signed a partnership agreement with Beijing-based, Peking University to research potential application for carbon capture utilization and storage in the steelmaking process. If confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from matters in which BHP is a party. Further, neither the roll-out of BHP’s Climate Change reports nor the partnership with Peking University involved the Energy Resources Bureau, and I would not expect those matters to come before the Energy Resources Bureau in the future.
34h. Issues related to global commodities trade policy (no legislation or trade agreement discussed)

Answer. As the world’s largest diversified resources company, BHP closely monitors and conducts various scenario analyses on the demand for various commodities.

I supported BHP in sharing their views with officials serving during the former administration. This effort to share views with administration officials did not involve the Bureau of Energy Resources.

If confirmed, I will follow the directions of Ethics counsel and will adhere to my ethics pledge, which requires a recusal from BHP.

Question 35. While working for Murphy Oil, what specifically did you lobby on regarding “all provisions relating to the regulation of retail tobacco sales” in the Family Prevention and Tobacco Control Act? Did you lobby to weaken the bill in any way, including with regard to warning labels on tobacco products?

Answer. At the time in 2008, Murphy Oil Corporation owned and operated a network of retail fueling stations. Murphy’s retail business was a member of the National Association of Convenience Stores (NACS). As a NACS member, Murphy’s retail business participated in NACS-related advocacy programs. NACS sought what it contended were practical and fair changes to the proposed legislation. The House Energy & Commerce agreed to modify their bill and President Obama signed the legislation into law.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO FRANCIS R. FANNON BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question 1. Have you read the Inspector General’s report?
Answer. Yes.

Question 2. What specific steps would you take to deal with the duplication, redundancies, and confusing lines of authorities on international energy policy that are outlined in that report?
Answer. The U.S. Constitution empowers the President with authority to “make treaties” with advice and consent of the Senate. In establishing the Department of State in 1789, Congress provided that “[t]he Secretary of State shall perform such duties . respecting foreign affairs as the President of the United States shall assign to the Department, and he shall conduct the business of the Department in such manner as the President shall direct.”

In establishing the Department of Energy in 1977, Congress provided that “the Secretary of State shall continue to exercise primary authority for the conduct of foreign policy relating to energy and nuclear nonproliferation.” Although the Department of State has primary authority on foreign policy, it has coordinated and collaborated with respective experts across the cabinet in the interest of the American people.

For example, the Department broadly, and the Bureau of Energy Resources more specifically has a strong history of meaningful and effective collaboration. For example, ENR worked closely with the Department of Defense (DoD) and the intelligence community to identify key energy infrastructure in Syria, allowing DoD to target and degrade ISIS’ ability to produce and sell oil, thereby eliminating a key revenue source for the terrorist organization. ENR also collaborates with the Department of Treasury in the design and implementation of energy-related sanctions on Russia and North Korea.

The Office of Inspector General report raised legitimate concerns over “Interagency Coordination” between DoE and State. However, the report did not provide specific recommendations for improvement on this matter as the OIG did in multiple other instances. This fact, coupled with the report itself as well as my own understanding, suggests that concerns raised reflected management failures.

If confirmed, I intend to meet regularly with respective peers across the interagency and Departments of Defense and Treasury, in particular to better understand their processes for collaboration. I will also meet with DoE leaders, many of whom I have known and worked with beginning in 2001, and seek to build on the established best practice working across the interagency. There is absolutely no reason that the Department of State cannot work collaboratively to advance American foreign policy objectives as it does elsewhere across the interagency. I take seriously the responsibilities before me, and if confirmed, pledge to advance “foreign policy relating to energy” “in such manner as the President shall direct.” This necessarily requires working with all parties to advance American interests.

Question 3. What efforts has the administration taken to effectively demonstrate that the United States opposes Nord Stream II?

Answer. I understand that the administration has taken a very active approach to convey its clear opposition to the proposed Nord Stream II pipeline through public statements and private diplomatic engagement. Secretary Tillerson publicly affirmed in Warsaw on January 29 that, “the United States opposes the Nord Stream 2 pipeline. We see it as undermining Europe’s overall energy security and stability, and it provides Russia yet another tool to politicize energy.” The Secretary went on to state, “Nord Stream II would continue to keep Europe more dependent on Russia for natural gas. It also allows Russia to now use the natural gas supply system as a political tool to create more pressure on countries like Ukraine and elsewhere.” Secretary Tillerson stated earlier, at the Wilson Center in Washington in November 2017, “we continue to view the development of pipelines like the Nord Stream II and the multilane TurkStream as unwise, as they only increase market dominance from a single supplier to Europe.”

Other Senior State Department officials as well as other federal agencies have affirmed this position publicly at home and abroad. I understand that the Department has also engaged in vigorous private multilateral and bilateral diplomatic engagement with a wide range of European counterparts and private sector officials.

Question 4. Do you support imposing sanctions on Russian energy export pipelines, like Nord Stream II?

Answer. Sanctions on Russian energy export pipelines, in accordance with CAATSA Section 232, can be a powerful tool to change the behavior of the Russian Federation. Proponents of the Nord Stream II pipeline have stated publicly that the existence of these sanctions has increased project financing costs for Nord Stream II. I cannot speculate on potential future sanctions actions; however, I would consider supporting the imposition of sanctions on Russian energy export pipelines, consistent with the public guidance issued by Secretary Tillerson on CAATSA Section 232. Any decision to implement such sanctions should be coordinated with our European allies, as envisioned by the law, in order to preserve trans-Atlantic unity on Russia sanctions.

Question 5. If confirmed, how will you assist U.S. businesses and industries in gaining greater access to global markets?

Answer. In support of the National Security Strategy, I will ensure the Bureau of Energy Resources (ENR) advocates for an open, transparent, and market-based global energy sector that advances U.S. economic interests. I will also lead Bureau efforts to promote exports of U.S. energy resources, including coal, to strengthen global energy security and to help our allies and partners become more resilient against those that use energy to coerce.

ENR has a meaningful role to play to help level the playing field and open markets. Currently several geologically abundant countries may present prohibitive above ground risk profiles. As I noted in my opening statement, if confirmed, I will seek to focus ENR’s work on governance and transparency to open markets for U.S. interests.

If confirmed, I will also advocate for U.S. energy firms to gain greater access to global markets to sustain U.S. economic growth and job creation.

Question 6. If confirmed, would you ensure that the State Department is promoting all forms of energy projects across the globe, including oil, gas, and coal?

Answer. I believe that maintaining market access for U.S. energy resources, technologies, and services, and ensuring sustainable, transparent, and open international energy markets for our partners and ourselves is crucial to our economic and energy security. I fully support an “all of the above” approach and recognize that advocating for the full range of energy sources allows the United States to advance a diversified energy supply across multiple global contexts. It is not our job to pick winners and losers.

During my confirmation hearing, Foreign Relations committee Ranking Member Menendez asked my views on a related topic. I offered that it was my understanding that ENR is fuel source “agnostic,” and that “it’s truly an all-of-the-above approach... And so it wouldn’t be a weighted measure of one fuel source over another.”

If confirmed, I will seek to promote a secure, stable, diversified, and modern global energy system that uses a broad range of market-based energy solutions including advanced energy technologies, coal, oil, natural gas, renewable energy, energy efficiency, and energy governance solutions to advance U.S. interests, promote global energy security, and drive economic development.
Question 7. With billions of people without power, do you believe we should be promoting fossil fuels that are affordable and reliable, such as coal and natural gas, while supporting new technologies that reduce their carbon output?

Answer. Promoting universal access to affordable and reliable energy using an “all of the above” approach promotes energy security and economic growth for the United States and our partners and allies. In response to Foreign Relations committee Ranking Member Menendez during my confirmation hearing I stated that it was my understanding that ENR is fuel source “agnostic,” and that “it’s truly an all-of-the-above approach ... And so it wouldn’t be a weighted measure of one fuel source over another.”

If confirmed, I will work closely with the interagency, industry representatives, international organizations, and partner countries to help communities around the world access and use fossil fuels more cleanly and efficiently and also to deploy renewable and other clean energy sources in line with a market-based approach. Related laws and regulations should be performance-based and technology neutral. If confirmed, I would also seek to support the transformation of electricity markets around the globe, helping to develop transparent and competitive market mechanisms to facilitate the most efficient choice of power supply.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO FRANCIS R. FANNON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Civil and Foreign Service?

• What steps will you take to ensure your supervisors are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I take issues of diversity and inclusion very seriously, which have been shaped by my personal and professional experience. As I indicated in my opening statement, my mother and her family immigrated to the United States in 1969 with little more than an aspiration for a better life. I saw firsthand the importance of inclusion of diverse nationalities and ethnicities. Professionally, I have worked with diverse and multi-cultural teams to advance commercial ventures. I have a keen appreciation for the benefits that diversity in culture and perspective can bring to any endeavor.

If confirmed, I will seek to build and retain a diverse team and ensure that all are meaningfully included at all levels of the organization. In my view, the State Department would be a natural leader in demonstrating diversity and inclusion given its global mandate.

Question 2. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 3. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 4. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the energy sector?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deemed necessary to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 5. Does Russia represent a serious threat to European stability and prosperity?

Answer. Yes, Russia represents a serious threat to European stability and prosperity. Its occupation and attempted annexation of Crimea in 2014, as well as its aggression in eastern Ukraine, demonstrate a lack of respect for the rules-based order that has ensured Europe’s peace and prosperity since the end of World War II.

Russia uses its energy resources to advance its geopolitical goals in Europe. Over-dependence on a sole supplier of energy creates leverage for politicizing these vital resources. Russia demonstrated its willingness to use this leverage to achieve its geopolitical objectives when it disrupted gas supply to and through Ukraine in 2006, 2009, and 2014, harming Ukraine and other Eastern European countries. Europe’s diversification of fuel energy sources, types, and routes is critical to reducing Russia’s leverage and ensuring Europe’s continued stability and prosperity.

Question 6. Do you agree that Russia/Gazprom manipulates European gas markets because Russia prioritizes the strategic and geopolitical value of its gas resources over revenue generation?

Answer. Russia has demonstrated its willingness to leverage its role as Europe’s single largest supplier of natural gas for strategic and geopolitical ends, notwithstanding its dependence on hydrocarbon exports for a significant portion of its state budget.

Russia/Gazprom’s decision to invest billions in the Nord Stream II and Turkish Stream projects in order to bypass Ukraine as a gas transit state, deprive Ukraine of gas transit revenue, and sever a vital link to the European Union is a clear example of prioritizing strategic ends over market rationale. Its willingness to prioritize geopolitical leverage over revenue generation by disrupting gas supply to and through Ukraine in 2006, 2009, and 2014, which harmed Ukraine and other Eastern European countries, serves as another example.

Answer. Russia uses a number of overt and covert approaches to influence public opinion and the policies of other governments. Russian disinformation campaigns aim to discredit energy infrastructure projects in Eastern and Central Europe and preserve Russia’s dominant market position. Russia then uses its dominant market position to advance its own projects and further Russia’s geopolitical goals in Europe.

As with other energy diversification projects in the region, Russia has attempted to use economic tools such as contract terms and unrealistic promises of investments and ancillary projects to undermine commitments both in Croatia and in Hungary, the two markets key to determining the Krk project’s viability. Russia offers tantalizing projects to maintain its dominant position in vulnerable markets such as a multilane TurkStream, to undercut other proposals that would promote real diversification.

Question 8. What specific steps will you take to counter Russian efforts to oppose to Krk?

Answer. If confirmed, I will focus Bureau of Energy Resources (ENR)’s diplomatic efforts on encouraging Croatia and regional partners such as Hungary to move forward with the deployment of an offshore Floating Storage and Regasification Unit (FSRU) at Croatia’s Krk Island. We will continue to highlight the importance and benefits of diversification and emphasize the need for countries to invest in their own energy security. The United States also plans to provide technical assistance to support this project consistent with U.S. support of projects that advance energy security through energy diversification.

I understand and support the administration’s ongoing, comprehensive approach to countering Russian malign influence in the region. This work focuses on responding to Russian disinformation and propaganda, exposing Russian influence operations as such, building resilience in partner governments and populations, countering corruption, building the capacity of an independent news media, developing information-sharing mechanisms with partner nations, and increasing the cost of these destabilizing activities on those that carry them out.

Question 9. Because of Russia’s strategic imperative behind its gas supplies and deliveries, do you believe promoting U.S. gas exports to Europe will solve this problem?

Answer. U.S. gas exports can be one element of a multi-faceted response to reduce the leverage Russia holds over Europe through energy supplies. U.S. gas exports will increase the supply of gas available for purchase worldwide, contributing to a global, liquid market for natural gas, all of which supports Europe’s efforts to diversify its sources, supplies, and routes for gas. However, Europe itself must play the central role in reducing Russia’s energy leverage over the continent. Through infrastructure investments, including LNG terminals and gas interconnectors, and the creation and implementation of robust legal and regulatory regimes, like the Third Energy Package, Europe can ensure that Russian firms are compelled to adhere to market principles.

Question 10. Do you think U.S. gas suppliers are willing to supply gas, at a potential loss, if Russia effectively drives down the price of gas in Europe’s regional markets?

Answer. ENR and our interagency colleagues advocate for European energy security, including access to U.S. liquefied natural gas (LNG). However, the U.S. Government does not direct our private companies regarding where to sell their products and, likewise, does not set prices. U.S. private sector companies operate according to their own commercial terms in the best interest of their shareholders. As such, it is unlikely that they would supply gas to Europe at a loss in the long-term. The United States and U.S. firms contribute to global energy security through their demonstrated respect for and advancement of market principles and increased natural gas supplies and build a global, liquid and transparent market.

European Union efforts to increase its own energy security by diversifying its energy mix have served to reduce Russia’s market dominance and ability to set prices. Gazprom/Russia flourishes in opaque systems where it can exploit prospective importing countries through unfair and manipulative practices. By contrast, increased access to LNG and new energy distribution channels and sources introduces market competition that will force Gazprom to compete in a more open, rules-based marketplace. For example, Lithuania substantially reduced its dependence on Russian gas after it opened an LNG import facility in 2014. As a result of Lithuania’s newfound market leverage, Gazprom reduced the price of Lithuania’s 2005–2015 supply contract by 20 percent.

Question 11. What would your strategy be to “promote an increase in U.S. energy exports,” as described in Performance Goal 2.3.1 in the State and USAID Joint Strategic Plan, where regional prices for certain energy products is especially challenging for certain U.S. energy product suppliers, or when the price of energy commodities depresses demand for those commodities produced in the U.S.?

Answer. A strategy to promote an increase in U.S. energy exports includes identifying infrastructure and energy sector opportunities overseas for U.S. companies, facilitating rigorous and efficient permitting of safe and efficient cross-border infrastructure, and advocating for U.S. companies entering new markets. The strategy presumes working with multilateral, foreign and domestic energy stakeholders to strengthen good governance, increase transparency, and remove barriers to energy development and trade for U.S. companies. Finally, it would include providing technical assistance, sharing of U.S. best practices, and communicating opportunities and risks to governments and industry to advance U.S. energy priorities and businesses.

The Department of State can further grow export opportunities for U.S. energy technology and commodity exporters irrespective of commodity market fluctuations by opening new markets through the promotion of U.S. financial and business models to support the transformation of electricity markets. The flexibility and responsiveness of U.S. exporters, the cost efficiencies gained through technological advances in U.S. production, and the reliability of U.S. supply make the United States a preferred exporter. Technology and reliability also make the United States an attractive partner and supplier. If confirmed, I will work to maximize all of these levers to grow U.S. energy and energy technology exports.

Question 12. Would you agree that a balanced, and multi-faceted, strategy to combat Russian energy influence in the region, that includes technical assistance on regulatory reforms and power generation and transmission capacity, financial assistance and facilitation of U.S. private sector investments in domestic energy resources mobilization, is necessary for success?

Answer. A balanced approach is important to counter Russian energy influence in Europe. Russia uses its position as the largest natural gas supplier to Europe to apply pressure throughout the continent. Russian-backed gas pipelines such as Nord Stream II and a multi-line Turkish Stream seek to extend Russian market power in Europe and bypass Ukraine as an important transit country of Russian gas to Europe. If confirmed, I would continue to utilize diplomatic engagement and foreign assistance to support European goals to enhance security through diversification of energy type, source, and transit routes.

Question 13. What position do you believe the U.S. should take on the Turkstream pipeline?

Answer. Secretary Rex Tillerson stated in November 2017 that a multi-line Turkstream is “unwise” because it does not advance Europe’s need for greater en-energy diversification. This is especially pronounced in the Balkans, where countries rely entirely or almost entirely on Russian gas imports.

I understand that Russia supports a multiline Turkstream because it would enable Gazprom to reduce the volume of gas it would otherwise export to Europe through Ukraine. The first Turkish Stream pipeline, which I understand Turkey views as a national security priority, will have an annual capacity of 15.75 billion cubic meters (bcm) and will supply Istanbul. The second Turkish Stream pipeline would enable Gazprom to send a further 15.75 bcm to Europe without transiting Ukraine. Neither line would advance Turkey or Europe's energy diversification efforts but instead would lock-in their reliance on Russian gas volumes for years to come. Turkey and many of the Balkan countries are in challenging situations because Russia either is their chief or exclusive source of natural gas.

I understand that the United States long has supported Europe and Turkey's energy diversification efforts as a key to strengthening their energy security and their broader national security. Russia has used Europe's dependence on its gas as a political weapon to undermine its security. The United States also recognizes that a country's reliance on a single source of energy supplies can make it vulnerable to disruptions and higher energy prices. The United States has a national security interest in seeing the Balkan countries and Turkey further develop their economies and pursue their European aspirations. If confirmed, I would support continued efforts in the Balkans and Turkey to advance energy diversification through projects like the Southern Gas Corridor, the Interconnector Greece-Bulgaria, the Interconnector Bulgaria-Serbia, and the Krk Island LNG import terminal in Croatia.

Question 14. What will you do to support Europe's Third Energy Package, particularly in Eastern Europe?

Answer. Implementation of the Third Energy Package is particularly important in Eastern Europe where many countries are dependent on Russian gas. Eastern European countries must play a central role in efforts to reduce Russia's energy leverage over the region by ensuring that all firms, including Russian firms, are compelled to adhere to market principles.

If confirmed, I will continue to use diplomatic outreach to highlight the importance of an open and competitive energy market that allows for efficient production, transmission, and pricing while encouraging investment. This engagement should take place with the Energy Community, which includes the countries of the Western Balkans, Georgia, Moldova, and Ukraine, as well as with the 28 member states of the EU, all of which have committed to implementing the Third Energy Package. Further, if confirmed, I will work closely with our European partners and allies to encourage and support implementation of market liberalization rules and laws designed to ensure the proper functioning of Europe's energy market and to guarantee that all companies play by free market rules. We will encourage the EU to quickly pass and implement a pending amendment to the gas directive of the Third Energy Package in order to fully apply EU law to both offshore and onshore pipelines entering the EU.

Question 15. What technical assistance and energy development assistance would you recommend the U.S. provide our allies and strategic partners in Europe to improve Domestic Energy Resource Mobilization as a means of achieving greater energy security?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support assistance that helps to improve European allies' and partners' domestic energy security and diversifies their energy sources, supplies, and routes to advance regional energy security. Domestic resource mobilization is country-specific and depends in part on the presence of energy resources, governments' policy priorities, technical and human resource capacity, and other domestic factors. If confirmed, I would also encourage my team to view foreign assistance for the development of domestic resources in Europe in a regional context that acknowledges existing market linkages. Dependence on a single supplier for energy imports leaves countries vulnerable to external pressure from countries that use energy as a geopolitical weapon.

Question 16. Do you feel that climate change represents a threat to life on Earth?

Answer. I believe that climate change is real and is a threat to the planet. To address this global challenge requires concerted action on a global scale to advance sound science, accelerate technological and commercial innovation, and establish legal and regulatory systems that promote sustainable economic and environmental outcomes.

Question 17. Do you believe it is appropriate and necessary for the U.S. Government to take some form of action to reduce U.S. carbon pollution?
Answer. I fully support the administration’s policy of a balanced approach to climate change mitigation, economic development, and energy security that takes into consideration the realities of the global energy mix. It is important to note that the U.S. has successfully delinked GHG emissions from economic growth. From 2005 to 2015, the U.S. economy grew by 15 percent while net GHGs decreased by more than 11 percent. This is an American success story that, if confirmed, I will promote around the world.

The National Security Strategy also recognized climate change and the importance of maintaining U.S. involvement and leadership. Page 22 provides, “Climate policies will continue to shape the global energy systems. The U.S. will continue to advance an approach that balances energy security, economic development, and environmental protection. The U.S. will remain a global leader in reducing traditional pollution, as well as greenhouse gases while expanding our economy.”

Although climate change as an issue falls outside the Energy Bureau’s remit, if confirmed, I will work to promote energy innovation, including in sustainable and clean energy and energy efficiency, and support for low greenhouse gas emissions energy systems.

Question 18. Do you share the opinions of Sec. Mattis, Sec. Powell, and Sec. Hagel that climate change represents a serious national security threat to the U.S.?

Answer. I defer to the National Security Council and leadership teams at the Departments State and Defense to comment on specific threats to the national security of the United States. However, I would also note that Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats, in his Statement for the Record on the Annual Threat Assessment stated that: “The impacts of the long-term trends towards a warming climate, more air pollution, biodiversity loss, and water scarcity are likely to fuel economic and social discontent—and possibly upheaval—through 2018.”

Question 19. In response to Sen. Young’s question to you at your hearing where he stated: “my inference would be that you’d also agree that energy security is a necessary and important part of our national security. do you agree that the actions and priorities of the Bureau of Energy and Natural [sic] Resources can be optimized if they’re carried out in support of a written strategic plan for the bureau?” you answered: “I think that I would just point out that the foundation would be the National Security Strategy which speaks to this very issue.”

- Are you aware that the National Security Strategy no longer includes any references to climate change?

Answer. Innovation and technological progress are the key to reducing the production of greenhouse gases and its impact on climate. It is important to note that the on page 22 the NSS provides, “Climate policies will continue to shape the global energy systems. The U.S. will continue to advance an approach that balances energy security, economic development, and environmental protection. The U.S. will remain a global leader in reducing traditional pollution, as well as greenhouse gases while expanding our economy.” Although, climate change falls outside the remit of the Energy Bureau, if confirmed, I will work to open markets and remove barriers to energy development and trade, providing access and a level-playing field for American companies so that they can pursue innovation and technological advances in the global energy market.

Question 20. Given your commitment to provide Sen. Young with a written strategic plan for the Bureau, can you commit to me that the Bureau’s strategic plan will account for the nexus climate change world energy production, the global security risks’ associated with the effects of climate change?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the ENR strategy remains consistent with the administration’s climate policy and the commitment in the National Security Strategy “to advance an approach that balances energy security, economic development, and environmental protection” and supports U.S. global leadership in “reducing traditional pollution, as well as greenhouse gases, while expanding our economy.” The Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs (OES) leads the State Department on developing international climate policy and manages strategic bilateral and multilateral partnerships on climate change. I commit that, if confirmed, I will work closely with OES and partners across the interagency to ensure the work of the Energy Bureau supports the administration’s climate policy and advances the U.S. position at the center of the global energy system as a leading producer, consumer, and innovator.

Question 21. The President’s FY19 Budget proposal’s very deliberate elimination or reduction of funds for nearly all programs to address climate change is a clear demonstration of political hostility to U.S. action to address climate change and clean energy programs.
• Are you prepared to and willing to pushback against any political agenda that is antithetical towards addressing climate change or supporting the advancement of clean energy within the ENR bureau’s programs?

Answer. Over the past 10 years, the United States has shown that it can reduce emissions while expanding the economy and promoting energy security. Since 2005, the United States’ net greenhouse gas emissions have decreased 11.5 percent while the U.S. economy has grown 15 percent, adjusted for inflation. A large portion of these reductions have come as a result of the adoption by the private sector of innovative energy technologies, especially in the energy sector.

Collaborative U.S. public and private efforts over the past 10 years have resulted in dramatic decreases in the cost of low-emissions technologies and fuels, including natural gas, solar, wind, energy storage, and energy efficiency. Natural gas prices have dropped to about a third of what they were in 2007 and the cost of utility-scale solar PV has dropped by more than 64 percent. These are all American success stories that, if confirmed, I would seek to promote around the world.

If confirmed, I will work with other countries to continue advancing innovation in the development and deployment of a broad array of technologies that will ultimately enable the United States to achieve our climate and energy security goals.

Question 22. Can you commit that you will work to maintain, or defend, the ENR bureau’s core objectives as it relates to advancing an “all of the above” approach to energy diplomacy?

Answer. I believe that maintaining market access for U.S. energy products, technologies, and services, and ensuring sustainable, transparent, and predictable international energy markets for our partners and ourselves is crucial to our security. I fully support the “all of the above” approach and recognize that advocating for the full range of energy sources allows the United States to advance a diversified energy supply across multiple global contexts. If confirmed, I will seek to advance secure, stable, diversified, and modern global energy systems that uses a broad range of market-based energy solutions, irrespective of fuel type, and will pursue a range of governance solutions to advance U.S. interests, promote global energy security, and drive economic development.

Question 23. Given the significance of climate diplomacy to the U.S.-China relationship, and the significant investment that China is making at home and abroad in renewable energy development, will you work to restore the climate cooperation dialogue between the U.S. and China—a former cornerstone of the U.S.-China relationship?

Answer. My understanding is that the Bureau of Energy Resources (ENR) leads the Department’s efforts to forge international energy policy, strengthen U.S. and global energy security, and respond to energy challenges from around the world that affect U.S. economic and national security. The Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs (OES) leads the Department on developing international climate policy and manages strategic bilateral and multilateral climate change partnerships. Therefore, if confirmed, I would look to OES and the China team within the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs to consider the appropriate evolution of the U.S.-China Climate Change Working Group, consistent with the administration’s climate policy.

With that said, given the U.S. position as a leader in the global energy system, I recognize the importance of maintaining a constructive and results-oriented relationship with China, as the U.S. will remain a critical force in advancing energy efficiency and clean energy efforts around the world as demand for energy increases.

Question 24. How will you work to promote transparency and accountability in global energy development?

Answer. If confirmed, I would pursue several avenues to promote transparency and accountability in global energy development. I would raise these issues in bilateral and multilateral energy security dialogues that ENR collaborates on with many of our global partners. I would also continue ENR’s efforts to strengthen energy sector governance, access, and reliability in emerging economies to build the capacity of governments to develop and utilize their energy resources for long-term national benefit. I understand that ENR’s programs support transparency and accountability objectives by: 1) building institutional and human resource capacity in emerging economies needed to ensure strong energy sector governance and transparency in the resource sectors; 2) providing governments and civil society with the tools needed to help support responsible development of domestic resources; and 3) supporting power market reforms and efforts to leverage regional electrical interconnections, to strengthen energy security, and advance regional cooperation.
Moreover, I would work with USAID colleagues to ensure transparency and accountability are key pillars in our assistance, while also working together to seek new opportunities to underscore the need for transparency and accountability in our energy assistance work.

Question 25. Are you committed to working with foreign governments to develop adequate accountability policies, and to fight corruption between foreign governments and U.S. and international energy developers operating around the world?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work bilaterally with foreign governments and engage in multilateral fora to promote transparency abroad, improve energy resource governance, and reduce corruption. Further, I will continue ENR’s efforts to work with countries around the world to improve hydrocarbon and mineral sector governance and oversight and pursue universal access to affordable and reliable energy supply through power sector reform and development.

If confirmed I would also continue the Department of State and USAID’s work with partner countries to prevent corruption before it starts and to strengthen detection and enforcement efforts, including encouraging countries to meet multilateral standards and political commitments.

Question 26. As an adviser to the Secretary of State, will you advocate for the development of robust replacement rule governing the implement of Sec. 1504 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (PL 111–203)?

Answer. Section 1504 remains United States law. Writing, promulgating, and implementing regulation is the purview of the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC). I understand that the Securities and Exchange Commission is in the process of promulgating a replacement rule to implement Section 1504. If confirmed, I will strongly advocate for robust transparency and governance programs globally, as it is a critical means to advance U.S. liberal democratic values, is foundational to free markets, and provides prerequisite conditions for U.S. private sector investment.

Question 27. What role do democratic institutions and citizen-responsive governments play in the development of foreign countries’ energy resources?

Answer. Strong democratic institutions, citizen engagement, and a free press are vitally important to the successful development of extractive resources. Revenue transparency of a country’s energy and natural resources fosters government accountability by providing citizens a window into government budgets, helps citizens hold their leadership accountable, and facilitates public debate.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO FRANCIS R. FANNON BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. China intends to spend more than 360 billion dollars through 2020 on renewable power sources like solar and wind. In 2017 alone, China invested twice as much as the United States in clean energy, 86.5 billion dollars of which went to solar—more than half of the global market.

Unfortunately, President Trumps’ recent budget proposal will reduce our nation’s ability to compete in global renewable energy markets. We know that government investment in renewable energy development and deployment is essential to the success of these industries.

- The Bureau of Energy and Natural Resources has long promoted an “all-of-the-above” approach to energy diplomacy. What do you think of that vision?

Answer. I believe that maintaining market access for U.S. energy products, technologies and services, and ensuring sustainable, transparent, and predictable international energy markets for our partners and ourselves is crucial to our security. I fully support the “all of the above” approach and recognize that advocating for the full range of energy sources allows the United States to advance a diversified energy supply across multiple global contexts. If confirmed, I will seek to advance secure, stable, diversified, and modern global energy systems that use a broad range of market-based energy solutions including advanced energy technologies, renewable energy, energy efficiency, and governance solutions to advance U.S. interests, global energy security, and economic development.

Question 2. Do you think that renewable energy has an important role to play in energy diplomacy?

Answer. I believe that it is important to promote energy supply diversity in terms of source and location. This necessarily includes renewable energy sources as means to support the energy security of the United States and our partners and allies while also advancing universal access to affordable and reliable energy. The Department of State’s Bureau of Energy Resources (ENR) leads the Department’s engagement with the International Renewable Energy Agency (IRENA) and actively participates in the organization’s work program and development as a Council member. If confirmed, I will continue to advance ENR’s work in coordination with USAID and other interagency partners to promote energy diversification, increased access to affordable and reliable energy, and to develop efficient and sustainable energy policies abroad through technical assistance and public-private partnerships.

Question 3. Can you commit to energy diplomacy that promotes renewable energy and energy efficiency? Can you pledge to applying time, budget, staffing, travel, and other resources at a level equal to those of other energy issues addressed at ENR?

Answer. Advancing renewable energy and energy efficiency are key elements of an overall approach to promote diversified energy supply for the United States and our partners and allies. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that access to energy is diversified, in accordance with the National Security Strategy. I intend to devote appropriate staff resources, travel, and budget to support renewable energy and energy efficiency as elements of the overarching mission of advancing energy security and exports of U.S. energy resources, technologies and services.

Improved energy efficiency represents an important component of energy security as it stabilizes grids, lessens dependence on unstable or nefarious foreign sources, increases energy access, and supports industrial growth. U.S. industry leads in energy efficiency. According to the 2017 U.S. Energy and Jobs Report, the U.S. energy efficiency market employs approximately 2.2 million people, including 290,000 manufacturing jobs. If confirmed, I will advocate strongly for the adoption of U.S. business and finance models across the globe and open, transparent global energy markets in which U.S. companies can successfully compete.

Question 4. Do you think Saudi Arabia has the solar resources to become a major producer of solar energy if it wanted to?

Answer. Saudi Arabia has announced ambitious renewable energy targets as part of Saudi Vision 2030. The first test for Saudi Arabia’s ability to reach these ambitious goals will come this year, as they have announced plans for $7 billion in renewable energy projects in 2018, which will include 3.3 gigawatts of solar photovoltaic power as well as 800 megawatts of wind power.

Saudi Arabia will have to balance the priorities laid out in their 2030 vision between attracting private investment for renewable asset development against local content rules aimed at boosting their domestic economy. In this context, Saudi Arabia has potential to reach its domestic solar production goals with a balanced investment strategy and targeted technical exchange. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that U.S. energy-related engagement with Saudi Arabia reflects the administration’s goals including the promotion of U.S. technological and financial solutions to reduce barriers for investment and ensuring energy security for the United States and our partners and allies.
The Honorable Donald J. Trump
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

As many serious and urgent threats compete for attention, we believe it is important to remain focused on the growing threat that Iran’s ballistic missile program represents. We applaud your administration’s recent actions with respect to Iran’s ballistic missile program. We are eager to work with the administration to take additional steps to better protect the United States and our allies against this threat.

As you know, Tehran oppresses the Iranian people and denies them their human rights. Abroad, Tehran uses their resources to fund terrorism and foment instability. As the world’s worst state sponsor of terrorism, Iran actively supports terrorist groups like Hezbollah and props up the murderous Assad regime that uses gas to slaughter the Syrian people.

To make matters worse, Iran has actively pursued a ballistic missile program that threatens our forward deployed troops, our allies, and our interests. In fact, Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats testified in May that “Iran has the largest ballistic missile force in the Middle East and can strike targets up to 2,000 kilometers from Iran’s borders.” This capability puts forward deployed U.S. troops and key allies like Israel in direct danger today.

Unfortunately, Tehran’s ballistic missile threat may soon extend well beyond the region—even to our homeland. As DNI Coats testified in May, “Tehran’s desire to deter the United States might drive it to field an intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM). Progress on Iran’s space program could shorten a pathway to an ICBM because space launch vehicles use similar technologies.” This fact is especially disturbing because Iran’s ballistic missiles would be capable of carrying nuclear weapons. Our intelligence community assesses that “Tehran would choose ballistic missiles as its preferred method of delivering nuclear weapons…”

Given these facts, we applauded the administration’s decision on January 4, 2018, to impose sanctions against five Iranian entities that support its ballistic missile program. We believe that these actions represent an important step in undermining Iran’s ballistic missile program.

However, we call upon the administration to immediately designate—using authorities under Executive Order 13382—all remaining agents, affiliates, and subsidiaries associated with the designated entities and their parent companies. We also believe that more robust sanctions are necessary. Therefore, we call on the administration to work with Congress to impose sanctions on any sector of the Iranian economy that is directly or indirectly associated with the development or transfer of ballistic missile parts, components, or technology. This includes designating or otherwise sanctioning the foreign and domestic supply chains associated with Iran's ballistic missile programs. We encourage the administration to work with allies and partners to make these sanctions multilateral where possible.

Furthermore, we understand that the revolutionary regime in Tehran has given control of its ballistic missile inventory to the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC), and that the IRGC's Aerospace Force (IRGC-AF) is chiefly responsible for the upkeep, transfer, maintenance and testing of these weapons. We call on the administration to conduct a review and impose sanctions against any persons or entities within the Islamic Republic that offer material support to the IRGC-AF. This material support can be as high-tech as those engaged in warhead engineering for Iran's missiles, or as low-tech as fixing the transporter-erector launchers (TELs) that provide Iran's missile force with mobility.

As you know, North Korea and Iran have a robust ballistic missile relationship. Given this relationship, we are also concerned that collaboration between these two countries could enable Iran to rapidly and surreptitiously build an ICBM-deliverable nuclear weapon. This development—combined with the radical and revisionist nature of the regime in Tehran—would represent an unacceptable risk to the security and interests of Americans. We stand ready to work with the administration to provide any resources or authorities needed to better address this proliferation threat.

Thank you again for your administration's focus on this issue. We stand ready to work together to better protect our troops, our allies, and ultimately our homeland against Iran's ballistic missile program.

Sincerely,

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 2018

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:30 p.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Todd Young, presiding.

Present: Senators Young, Risch, Gardner, Barrasso, Merkley, Cardin, Shaheen, Murphy, Kaine, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. TODD YOUNG,
U.S. SENATOR FROM INDIANA

Senator YOUNG. Good afternoon. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

I want to thank Senator Merkley for joining me to convene this hearing. I am grateful for our partnership on this and so many other issues.

I also want to thank our distinguished nominees for being here. And I also want to thank Senator Cornyn, a good colleague from Texas, for being here.

This afternoon, we will consider four nominees for positions that are important to this committee and to our country. We will divide today’s hearings into two panels. The first panel will include two nominees.

First is the Honorable Kevin Moley, who is nominated to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs. Ambassador Moley served as the representative of the United States to the Office of the United Nations and other international organizations in Geneva from 2001 to 2006. Ambassador Moley I would also like to note and thank you for your service in the United States Marine Corps to Iraq.

The second nominee on the first panel is the Honorable Josephine Olsen, who is nominated to serve as the Director of the Peace Corps. Dr. Olsen has deep experience in the Peace Corps beginning in 1966 as a Peace Corps volunteer in Tunisia. She later served as Country Director, Regional Director, Chief of Staff, Deputy Director, and then Acting Director.

I welcome both of you.

Our second panel will also include two nominees.

First will be Mr. Erik Bethel, who is nominated to be the United States Alternate Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Mr. Bethel has spent more than 2 decades in work related to finance and emerging markets. I would also note that Mr. Bethel is a proud fellow graduate of the United States Naval Academy.

The second panel will also include Mr. Sean Cairncross, who is nominated to be the Chief Executive Officer of the Millennium Challenge Corporation, or MCC. Mr. Cairncross currently serves as a Deputy Assistant to the President and Senior Advisor to the Chief of Staff.

With that, I would now like to call on Ranking Member Merkley for his opening remarks. Senator Merkley?

STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF MERKLEY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM OREGON

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I am pleased that we have these nominees here today for these four important international roles, and I hope that each of the individuals believes in the work of the bureau or agency that they have been nominated to lead.

I have been disturbed by the Trump administration’s proposed budgets which for 2 consecutive years have cut U.S. funding for diplomacy and development by over 30 percent. These organizations have a tremendous amount to offer.

As leaders, you must know that stewardship and command responsibility are critically important. The professional men and women who serve in the bureaus and agencies are working very hard, advocating every day for Americans’ interests and deserve excellent leadership that supports them, defends them, protects their work from political attacks.

The roles that each of you have been nominated to serve represent some of the most important work our country undertakes in addressing pressing global challenges. Your leadership comes at a time when many have been disappointed in the de-emphasis of diplomacy and development under the current administration. When people around the world look at what truly makes America great, it is our belief that we can do well when others do well, where prosperity is complementary not a zero sum.

As the United States emerged as a global leader in the 20th century, one of our proudest legacies was in helping to create the multilateral institutions that would provide a platform for nations to resolve conflict without resorting to bloodshed. The result has not always been perfect. It is sometimes hard to recognize what conflicts have been prevented. But much excellent work has been done and many conflicts have been prevented and much development has been promoted.

The bureaus and agencies that our nominees are proposed to lead represent some of the many complementary ways that U.S. leadership engagement have evolved to meet the challenges we face in the 21st century.

The Bureau of International Organization Affairs, or IO, is the nerve center for supporting U.S. engagement through all our United Nations missions and through other important multilateral forum.

For more than 56 years, the Peace Corps has provided American citizens of all ages from all walks of life the opportunity serve abroad by providing their expertise to developing communities and sharing their experiences and passion with others when they return home.

The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is also critical. As a nation, we are justly proud that after World War II, the Marshall Plan helped rebuild Europe into a community of nations that have been among our most stalwart allies in meeting the challenges we face today. But even before the war was won, we worked with our allies to develop international financial agreements that would complement our political and military efforts to achieve and maintain peace, including the IBRD, which was set up to encourage international trade necessary to rebuild and re-integrate global markets.

And finally, the Millennium Challenge Corporation, or MCC, a relatively new initiative started under George W. Bush. It has had a distinct track record of success complementing our broader aid and development policies and programs, operating as a new model for providing foreign aid for economic development based on partnerships with recipient countries, designed to use American aid as a catalyst rather than a substitute for local based economic development.

I look forward to hearing from each of the witnesses about how they will ensure that America continues to lead on diplomacy and development.

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you, Senator Merkley.

In order to be respectful of my colleague’s time, I would now invite Senator Cornyn to say any comments you would like, sir.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. I appreciate your allowing me to be here today to recommend an extremely well qualified candidate, Sean Cairncross, to be the Chief Executive Officer of the Millennium Challenge Corporation. Sean, as you pointed out, Mr. Chairman, currently serves as the Deputy Assistant to the President of the United States, as well as a senior advisor to the President’s Chief of Staff.

Sean was my lawyer for an important period of time, and in that capacity I trusted him with my professional life, my reputation, and my future. And I do not know how much more I could say than that in terms of my confidence in him and I hope the confidence you will learn to have in him and his judgment.

He was the Deputy Executive Director and General Counsel at the National Republican Senatorial committee for two cycles and represented me individually to make sure I complied with all applicable laws after he left that particular position.

As I have hinted at, he is a man of great character and on numerous occasions has proven his ability to deftly respond to adversity and conflict.

He is a man of many talents and wide-ranging interests. He is a lawyer by training, as I said, holding a J.D. from New York University, but he also has a master’s Cambridge in international relations. And perhaps his most important qualification, he is a devoted husband and father of two wonderful children.
I am sure his experience, his character, his training will prepare him well to serve in this new challenge. Obviously, the Millennium Challenge Corporation, as Senator Merkley said, has been an important part of our diplomatic efforts and support for developing countries. And I know this is a challenge that Sean looks forward to enthusiastically, and I have every confidence he will perform in a way that will make all of us proud and that will serve our country well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Young. Well, thank you, Senator Cornyn, for your presence here today. You are welcome to stay if you like, but if you need to depart, I certainly understand that.

With that, Ambassador Moley, I would welcome your opening statement, 5 minutes or less, please.

STATEMENT OF HON. KEVIN EDWARD MOLEY, OF ARIZONA, TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION AFFAIRS

Ambassador Moley. Chairman Young, Ranking Member, I am honored to be here today as the President’s nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Organizations.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank my wife of 48 years Dorothy. Unfortunately, she cannot be here, but I would not be here without her support, advice, patience, and above all, love.

I would also like to thank two senior former career members of our Foreign Service who are here today in support of my nomination: Assistant Secretary of State Linda Thomas Greenfield, former Ambassador Greenfield to Liberia, and also former Director General of the Foreign Service; as well as Ambassador Jim Foley, who was our Ambassador to Haiti and later our Ambassador to Croatia and later still Deputy Commandant of the War College.

I have been privileged and honored to have served my country in the administrations of three Presidents: during President Reagan’s administration, in positions of increasing responsibility at HCFA, now CMS; in President Bush 41’s administration, as Assistant Secretary of Management and Budget and later as the Deputy Secretary at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. In President Bush 43’s administration, following 9/11, I was nominated to be U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. and other international organizations in Geneva. I was confirmed and served for 4 and a half years as Ambassador.

Following my tenure as Ambassador, I served as Chairman of the Board of Project Concern International, a San Diego-based NGO doing development work in Latin America, Asia, and Africa. In that capacity, I traveled to Mexico, Guatemala, Tanzania, Zambia, and Ethiopia to observe and assist in PCI’s mission. In Tanzania, Zambia, and Ethiopia, I met with our U.S. Ambassadors to solicit their views and advice.

If confirmed, I would lead the Bureau of International Organization Affairs, which is the U.S. Government’s primary interlocutory with the United Nations and other international agencies and organizations. The Bureau is charged with advancing the President’s vision of robust multilateral engagement as a crucial tool in advancing U.S. national interests. U.S. multilateral engagement spans a wide range of global issues, including peace and security, nuclear proliferation, human rights, economic development, global health, and many more.

Within the Department of State, the Bureau of International Organization Affairs is known as the “bureau without borders,” neither constrained by geography nor subject matter. The range of issues within its purview is extremely broad and to meet its challenges requires the expertise of not only our very able career foreign service officers and civil servants, but also the expertise from other bureaus of the State Department, other agencies of government, as well as outside experts. If confirmed, I would look forward to working collegially with all those in and out of government to further America’s interests.

My guiding principle, if confirmed to lead IO, will be America first but not alone. This means, for example, that at USUN New York, under the extraordinarily able leadership of Ambassador Haley and her team, we will, when necessary to protect our interests and those of allies, not hesitate to use the veto, as we have done recently when Israel was most unfairly attacked.

In Geneva and elsewhere, where we have U.S. missions to the U.N., and do not have the benefit of the veto, we must be extremely vigilant to protect America’s interests. For example, in Geneva, we must protect America’s most important product, intellectual property, in the deliberations of the World Intellectual Property Organization. Likewise, we must protect the integrity and fair use of the Internet at the International Telecommunications Union. There are over 20 international organizations in Geneva, in all of which we have important issues at stake.

In Vienna, at our mission to UNVIE, we have vital interests before the IAEA and other agencies.

In Rome, at our mission to the United Nations, we must increase our efforts to promote sustainable development.

In Montreal, at our mission to ICAU, we will protect America’s civil aviation interests.

In Nairobi, we have interests in protecting the environment and reducing poverty.

I have touched on only a few of the plethora of important issues which will confront the bureau without borders. I am sure you have interests which I have not mentioned. I look forward to your questions.

In summary, Senators, I am proud to have served our nation as an Assistant Secretary, Deputy Secretary, and United States Ambassador. However, the title of which I am most proud I earned over 50 years ago on the Parade Deck at Parris Island, South Carolina, United States Marine. Semper Fi.

Thank you.

[Ambassador Moley’s prepared statement follows:]

Prepared Statement of Hon. Kevin Edward Moley

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley: I am honored to be here today as the President’s nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for International Organizations. I would like to take this opportunity to thank my wife of 48 years, Dorothy. I wouldn’t be here without her support, advice, patience, and above all, love.

I’ve been privileged and honored to have served my country in the administrations of three Presidents, during President Reagan’s administration, in positions of increasing responsibility at HCFA, now CMS, in President Bush 41’s administration as Assistant Secretary of Management and Budget and later as the Deputy Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Thank you.

Senator Young. Nice close, Mr. Ambassador.

Dr. Olsen?

STATEMENT OF HON. JOSEPHINE OLSEN, OF MARYLAND, NOMINATED TO BE DIRECTOR OF THE PEACE CORPS

Dr. Olsen. Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, and other distinguished members of the committee, including Senator Cardin from my home State of Maryland, it is an honor to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to lead the Peace Corps. I am grateful to President Trump for his trust and confidence. I am also grateful to all those who helped me prepare for today.

I also want to recognize my family members who are here today and watching live in Portland, Oregon and in Salt Lake City, Utah. I vividly remember standing in a small classroom before 40 students on my first day as a Peace Corps volunteer in Tunisia. I was 22 years old, nervous, and had no idea what my first words would be. In Arabic, French, or English. I stepped forward, said my name, and asked for theirs. Together, with that day’s lesson, my 2 years as a Peace Corps volunteer began.

I discovered who I was in the face of challenges and circumstances that I had never known. I learned to listen to, respond, and honor people who were different than me. I learned about a way of life in North Africa that was unlike mine in Salt Lake City, Utah. I learned that regardless of differences, there was so much that connected us. I also learned what it meant to serve my country, to be part of something far, far greater than myself.

From that day in Tunisia, service and the Peace Corps have remained central themes of my life. Since taking my oath as a volunteer, I have been passionately dedicated to lifting up the mission and goals of the agency.

My Peace Corps journey continued when I became a country director, then regional director, later chief of staff, deputy director, and subsequently acting director. Each of these vantage points have reaffirmed my deep belief in the power of the Peace Corps to change lives across borders and here at home.

Time and again, I have had the honor of seeing Americans engaging with communities in countless countries throughout the world. I have also seen the remarkable way that returned Peace Corps volunteers teach, inspire, and strengthen communities here at home.

Becoming a Peace Corps volunteer ignites a passion for service that illuminates incredible possibility around the world and throughout the United States. This passion for service glows in Memphs, Tennessee where return Peace Corps volunteer Jay Sieleman brought back to life the Blues Foundation, which is now the largest blues organization in the world. Jay, who after serving as a legal advisor in the Peace Corps in the Solomon Islands, understood the importance of helping preserve American history and the role that communities play. This is why he both raised funds globally to build the Blues Hall of Fame in Memphis and simultaneously developed initiatives to extend community outreach.

This passion also glows in the more than 7,000 volunteers who are currently serving in more than 60 countries. This passion also glows in the more than 230,000 returned Peace Corps volunteers, the majority of whom live here in the United States.

Returned Peace Corps volunteers bring home unique language, cultural, and diplomatic skills. They return with deep knowledge about the countries where they served and new perspectives about the ways in which our country engages with the world. Today, they are running Fortune 500 companies, leading NASA missions on the International Space Station, helping Alaska Native villages with food security, and teaching our nation’s next generation of leaders at schools and universities across this country.
In addition to my Peace Corps service, my work at the University of Maryland these past 8 years has further prepared me to lead the Peace Corps, if confirmed. As a professor, I guided the university’s global health education programs and saw the importance of cross-community collaboration and capacity building for sustainable impact.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, many of you have asked about my vision for Peace Corps within its mission and three goals.

First, if confirmed, I will ensure that the Peace Corps remains the world’s preeminent volunteer agency that offers all Americans the opportunity to serve their country regardless of age, where they live, or walk of life.

Second, I will conduct a full country portfolio review to both make certain that Peace Corps is sending volunteers to interested countries where they are most needed, where they stand poised to achieve the greatest impact, and where they deliver the best return on investment for American taxpayers.

Third, I will ensure that the Peace Corps recruit the most resilient volunteers and that while serving, the agency’s top priorities will always remain keeping them safe, healthy, and productive in doing their jobs. This includes, Senators, continuing to reduce risks for volunteers and respond effectively and compassionately to those who become victims of crime, including sexual assault. Volunteers can count on the Peace Corps being there for them every step of the way as the agency continues to advance its mission, which has changed countless lives in its 57 years and I have no doubt countless more in the years to come.

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, and other distinguished members of the committee, again thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. Thank you for your support for the Peace Corps and its incredible volunteers. I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. JOSEPHINE (JODY) K. OLSEN

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, and other distinguished members of the committee; it is an honor and a privilege to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to lead the Peace Corps.

I am grateful to President Trump for his trust and confidence. I am also grateful to all those who helped me prepare for today. I also want to recognize my daughter, son-in-law, and brother, who are here, and family who are watching live.

I vividly remember standing in a classroom before 40 students at the Lycée de Garçon de Sousse on my first day as a Peace Corps Volunteer in Tunisia. I was 22 years old, nervous, and had no idea what my first words would be. In Arabic, French or English.

I stepped forward, said my name, and asked for theirs. Together, with that day’s lesson, my two years as a Peace Corps Volunteer had begun. I discovered who I was in the face of challenges and circumstances that I had never known. I learned to listen to, respect, and honor people who were different than me. I learned about a way of life in North Africa that was unlike mine in Salt Lake City, Utah.

I learned that regardless of differences, there was so much that connected us. I also learned what it meant to serve my country—to be part of something far, far greater than myself. From that day in Tunisia, service has remained a central theme in my life. So too has the Peace Corps.

Since taking my oath as a Volunteer, I have been passionately dedicated to lifting up the mission and goals of the agency. My Peace Corps journey continued when I became a country director; then regional director; and later, Chief of Staff; Deputy Director; and subsequently, Acting Director. Each of these vantage points has re-affirmed my deep belief in the power of the Peace Corps to change lives across borders and here at home.

Time and again, I have had the honor of seeing Americans engaging with communities in Togo, Peru, Armenia, and countless other countries. And I have seen the remarkable ways that Returned Peace Corps Volunteers teach, inspire, and strengthen communities back home in the United States.

Becoming a Peace Corps Volunteer ignites a passion for service that illuminates incredible possibility around the world and throughout the United States.

This passion for service glows in Memphis, Tennessee, where Returned Peace Corps Volunteer Jay Sieleman brought back to life the Blues Foundation, which is now the largest and most renowned blues organization in the world. Jay, who after serving as a legal advisor in the Peace Corps in the Solomon Islands, understood the importance of helping preserve American history and the role communities play. This is why he both raised funds globally to build the Blues Hall of Fame in Memphis, and simultaneously developed initiatives to extend community outreach, provide medical and health support to musicians, and grant educational and scholarship opportunities for the next generation of blues players.

As I speak, this passion glows in the more than 7,000 Volunteers who are currently serving in more than 60 countries. This passion also glows in the more than 230,000 Returned Peace Corps Volunteers all across the United States. Returned Peace Corps Volunteers bring home unique language, cultural and diplomatic skills. They return with deep knowledge about the countries where they served, and new perspectives about the ways in which our country engages with the world. They are true global citizens contributing to our global economy, our country, and the urban and rural communities where they live and work all across the United States.

Today, they are running Fortune 500 companies, leading NASA missions on the International Space Station, helping Alaska Native villages with food security, and teaching our nation’s next generation of leaders at schools and universities across our country.

In addition to my Peace Corps service, my work at the University of Maryland, has further prepared me to lead the Peace Corps if confirmed. I have guided the University’s global health education programs. In the process of working with students and health care professionals across the globe, I have seen the importance of cross-community collaboration and capacity building for sustainable impact.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, many of you have asked about my vision for the Peace Corps within its mission and three goals:

• First, if confirmed, I will ensure that the Peace Corps remains the world’s pre-eminent volunteer agency that offers ALL Americans the opportunity to serve their country. Regardless of their age, where they live, or their walk of life.

• Second, I will conduct a full country portfolio review to both make certain that Peace Corps is sending volunteers to interested countries where they are most needed, where they stand poised to achieve greatest impact, and where they deliver the best return on investment for American taxpayers.

• Third, I will ensure that the Peace Corps recruit the most resilient Volunteers and that while serving, the agency’s top priorities will always remain keeping them safe, healthy, and productive in doing their jobs. This includes, Senators, continuing to reduce risks for Volunteers and respond effectively and compassionately to those who become victims of crime, including sexual assault.

In those tragic instances, Volunteers can count on the Peace Corps being there for them every step of the way. I see no higher priority for the Peace Corps than the safety and security of our Volunteers as the agency continues to advance its mission, which has changed countless lives in its 57 years—and, I have no doubt, countless more in the years to come.

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, and other distinguished members of the committee; again, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

Thank you for your support of the Peace Corps and its incredible Volunteers.

I look forward to your questions.

Senator Young. Thank you, Doctor.

Ambassador Moley, as you know, fentanyl is a synthetic opioid that is significantly more potent than heroin. Fentanyl and related substances are linked to the horrible and ongoing opioid epidemic in this country and have become increasingly available. This is a terrible problem around the country I know but most especially, I would say, in certain States like my home State of Indiana.
According to the Congressional Research Service, quote, clandestine-produced fentanyl, as well as most illicit fentanyl precursor chemicals and fentanyl analogs, are primarily sourced from China and smuggled into the United States through Mexico, Canada, or other direct mail. Unquote. In addition, the DEA suspects Mexican labs may use precursor chemicals smuggled over the southwestern border to produce fentanyl.

Mr. Moley, as the Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, you would develop and implement U.S. policy as it relates to international organizations. If confirmed, do you commit to working closely with me and my office to ensure our nation has the optimal strategy for using our voice, our vote, and our influence in international organizations to address the illicit international production and trafficking of fentanyl and related substances?

Ambassador Moley. Senator, thank you for your question. And yes, I certainly will make that commitment to work with you and your staff to combat fentanyl trafficking.

Specifically, the Universal Postal Union based in Bern, Switzerland, which is in the purview of our U.N. mission to Geneva and, quite frankly, when I served there was something of an afterthought—it is now front and center in terms of our ability to combat the opioid crisis, exploiting vulnerabilities in U.S. and international mail. In fact, Senators Portman and Carper released a report on January 24th on this very subject, and there is much that we can do in increasing our ability to intercept that traffic using AEDs, advanced electronic data, i.e., bar codes with more information about the sender, which is often not in place when mail comes into the United States carrying, trafficking fentanyl.

So I absolutely make that commitment to work with you and your staff and others. I know others on this committee are in States that also have extreme opioid crises.

Senator Young. Thank you, Mr. Ambassador. I know the people of Indiana appreciate that commitment as well.

Mr. Moley, as you know, Ambassador Haley has prioritized U.N. peacekeeping reform. What do you see as the top priority when it comes to U.N. peacekeeping reform?

Ambassador Moley. U.N. peacekeeping reform, Senator, is a very important priority for Ambassador Haley and all of us who, if confirmed, would be working in IO. There are over 100,000 U.N. peacekeepers, at an expense of $8 billion, in 15 missions currently. There have been issues in respect to sexual exploitation and abuse. On the other hand, there is a recent GAO report that suggests that it is much less expensive for U.N. peacekeepers to be used in some of these areas than obviously would be to use U.S. armed forces.

So it is very important that we make sure that Secretary-General Guterres, who is making reform efforts in this area, has the tools necessary to ensure that the units that are deployed are appropriate for the cause they are serving and are well trained and do not subject the indigenous population to sexual abuse and exploitation.

Senator Young. Well, I appreciate your interest in and knowledge of this issue, as I know the ranking member does.
On September 7th, Senator Merkley and I sent a letter to the General Accountability Office requesting a formal review of all ongoing United Nations peacekeeping operations, and that review is underway and is about one-third complete. When that review is complete, if confirmed, do you commit to reviewing it and working with my office and other members of this committee to implement any prudent recommendations for U.N. peacekeeping?

Ambassador Moley. Absolutely, Senator. If confirmed, I would look forward to working with you and your staff on this issue because U.N. peacekeepers are at the heart of the U.N.’s credibility, and if we lose credibility for those peacekeepers, then we have little further to go on. And it is absolutely essential. And I believe Secretary-General Guterres shares that view as well.

Senator Young. Dr. Olsen, many who are observing these hearings may not be familiar with the Peace Corps. Based on your deep experience in the Peace Corps, as well as your preparation for this hearing, perhaps in your own words you can share for those who are watching what you see as the fundamental mission or purpose of the Peace Corps.

Dr. Olsen. Thank you very much, Senator, for that question. Peace Corps’ mission is world peace and friendship and three goals: to assist in technical assistance with counterparts in countries that invite volunteers to serve; second, to share who they are as Americans; and third, to bring that experience back home sharing with Americans as returned volunteers continue to serve. Thus, the core purpose of Peace Corps or the core mission and activities of Peace Corps is to recruit from all Americans, to ensure they have good situations in which to serve, and to keep them safe, secure, and healthy while serving.

Senator Young. So how are we doing? How is the Peace Corps doing in fulfilling that important mission? And what are some areas you believe may require increased attention? And if you could highlight how you envision addressing any of these areas that may require increased attention, that would be most helpful.

Dr. Olsen. Thank you, Senator.

Peace Corps is doing very well. I obviously have biases. Peace Corps’ recruitment is at—about 22,000 people apply a year, the highest ever, with 7,300 volunteers in the field in over 60 countries, as I said before. The welcome to Peace Corps around the world is very strong and the collaboration with countries is very strong. And the work that returned Peace Corps volunteers do here in the United States affects communities, education institutions throughout the United States.

Peace Corps needs to continue to focus on strong programming, strong health support, and risk reduction for crime and sexual assault. Peace Corps has come a long way in the last few years, particularly the last 2 or 3 years, in setting up systems that can greatly reduce the risk of crime and sexual assault. If confirmed, I will focus strongly on strong programming, strong health support, strong risk reduction, safety and security, and honoring those volunteers who have returned back to this country to serve here.

Senator Young. Thank you.

With that, I will turn to the ranking member, Senator Merkley.
Senator MERKLEY. Thank you both for your testimony and for your willingness to consider leading these organizations.

Ms. Olsen, I am delighted to know that you have a son and his family in Oregon and that you visit it regularly. So continue to visit often. [Laughter.]

Senator MERKLEY. And you bring an extensive background in the Peace Corps to consideration of this mission of leadership.

You mentioned in your testimony that there is no higher priority for the Peace Corps than the safety and security of our volunteers as the agency continues to advance its mission. It is in fact a setting that Peace Corps volunteers put themselves into that is not inherently safe. It does not have many of the layers of protection that we might have in our lives here in the United States, friends nearby, all forms of communication, transportation, and so forth. And so there is inherent risk. But obviously you hope to minimize that.

And so I thought I would just ask, as one looks back on some of the cases of the past that received some considerable attention, the Kate Puzey case, which I think happened when you were an Acting Director, and Nick Castle. We passed the Nick Castle Act. Well, it recently passed the Senate Foreign Relations committee. He had died in China as a Peace Corps volunteer without adequate medical care. As you look back on some of these things, how does it shape the sense of where you want to go in trying to enhance, under difficult conditions, the health and welfare of the volunteers?

Dr. OLSEN. Thank you, Senator.

And my grandchildren are waving at you right now from their classroom in Portland, Oregon.

I still grieve the murder of Kate Puzey, and I remain heartbroken. And in honor of her life and her light as a Peace Corps volunteer in Benin, I commit to continue to strengthen safety and security, privacy support through training, through safety and security officers, through regional officers to ensure that risk reduction can continue to be as strong as absolutely possible.

I also note with the passing of Mr. Castle, who was a volunteer in China and the legislation that is I know now before you, any legislation that strengthens the commitment of Peace Corps in safety and security and in health is critical for the agency. And the agency is grateful that the Senate staff worked with the Peace Corps in shaping and building that very important piece of legislation.

I personally, if confirmed, will continue to directly work with the Office of Victim Advocacy and the Office of Sexual Assault Risk Reduction and Response, the two offices at Peace Corps that are involved in training all Peace Corps staff and all Peace Corps volunteers in sexual assault, risk reduction, and response and that that continued in-service training and support stay strong, that Peace Corps continue to be a best practices agency that works strongly with other agencies and organizations.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much. I appreciate that.

And, Ambassador Moley, I wanted to give you a chance just to state a few things on the record. You are an investor with a broad portfolio that touches on many market sectors that could be influenced by U.S. policy at the U.N.. My understanding is that you have agreed to, if confirmed, sell those holdings that raise conflict of interest concerns. Is that correct?
Ambassador MOLEY. Yes, I have, Senator. I have signed an ethics agreement that would require me to divest those interests.

Senator MERKLEY. Great. Thank you.

In 2004, you wrote a letter to the editor of the International Herald Tribune" that defended the Bush administration’s practices in the detention of enemy combatants in Guantanamo. There has been a lot of debate in the many years, 14 years, since and we learned a lot. Is there any ways in which your thoughts in regard to detention have evolved?

Ambassador MOLEY. Well, they have evolved to the extent, Senator, that I still believe that Lord Steyn was repudiated by the very fact that he mentioned that we were conducting the detentions at Guantanamo illegally against both U.S. law, international law, and the Geneva Conventions. As we now know, of course, in the case of Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, decided June 29th, 2006, of course, we subjected our detention principles in Guantanamo to our courts, and we are under now a new legal framework than we were at the time. Obviously, my letter was not written without the assistance and clearance of legal counsel from the State Department, from the Justice Department, from the Defense Department, and from the State Department. But as I said, Hamdan v. Rumsfeld I think clearly repudiates Lord Steyn’s principal contention that we were operating outside the law.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you. I will note that in contesting his arguments you argued that his concern that use of force was presented against the prisoners—you contested that and said we are operating completely on humane treatment of detainees. We did have significant additional information. Any changes in your thoughts in that regard?

Ambassador MOLEY. To the extent that I was wrong at the time, it was by virtue with the assurances I had received from the Department of the Navy.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you very much.

The Trump administration has cut funding to the United Nations Population Fund which provides critical maternal and family planning support to women and children in vulnerable situations. I saw them at work in the refugee camps in Bangladesh providing essential aid as hundreds of thousands of refugees were pouring in.

If confirmed, would you consider advocating to restore this critical funding?

Ambassador MOLEY. Senator, I was not present, of course, when those deliberations and decisions were being made, and I certainly look into that issue. I know that there are differences of opinion in regard to that issue. In fact, my predecessor, Sheba Crocker, Assistant Secretary of State at the time, has said that the rationale for cutting those funds is incorrect. And I will be taking into consideration both her comments, quite frankly, and also those of those people who made the decision at the time. So it is an issue of importance to many of you on the committee, and I will in fact look into it.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Ambassador MOLEY. If confirmed.
Senator Young. I would note that we are likely to go to multiple rounds here by members’ requests, so at least two rounds, again 7 minutes for questions.

Senator Gardner?

Senator Gardner. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Does that mean I get both rounds now or do I have to wait?

Senator Young. You have got to wait. We want to see how you do on this first round. [Laughter.]

Senator Gardner. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thanks to both of the nominees for your service. Thanks for being here today. I am grateful for your support.

Dr. Olsen, I will start with you. Thank you very much for the book that you presented in my office, Pauline Berkey I believe. For the information of members of the committee, could you explain how Colorado State is really responsible for the Peace Corps?

[Laughter.]

Dr. Olsen. I would be delighted to.

Senator Gardner. Thank you, which is a true statement. And I also want to brag up Colorado, because if you look at per capita, Boulder, Colorado, I think is the number three biggest contributor to the Peace Corps.

Dr. Olsen. It is.

Senator Gardner. Fort Collins, Colorado is number five to the Peace Corps. We are very proud of that fact. So thank you for your service.

Ambassador Moley, in the 114th Congress, this body passed legislation that would require the State Department to develop a U.S. strategy to endorse and obtain observer status for Taiwan in appropriate international organizations, including Interpol, the World Health Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, and others.

Could you explain to me efforts that you would pursue to ensure full U.S. support for Taiwan’s meaningful participation in international organizations?

Ambassador Moley. Senator, we will pursue Taiwan’s participation in any and all international fora, which does not have a requirement for participation of statehood, and we will make a very strong effort to get them involved. They are an important participant in many ways and would add to the international debate in many, many of the fora before the United Nations. If statehood is not required for membership, there is no reason why Taiwan should not be admitted.

Senator Gardner. I think Taiwan can play a critical role in global leadership, whether it is issues relating to disease control, eradication, crime organizations and eradication, and participation in a number of organizations involved in relief efforts, criminal efforts that we have got to make sure that they have their full participation. Thank you for that.

And I hope that you will give me this commitment—I think you just did—that you will raise at the highest levels with international counterparts, including with representatives from the People’s Republic of China, that commitment.

Ambassador Moley. You have my full commitment, Senator.

Senator Gardner. Thank you very much, Ambassador.
In September 2017, I authored letters to 21 nations asking them to close their diplomatic facilities in Pyongyang and to support expelling North Korea from the United Nations as part of the administration’s maximum pressure campaign.

Would you support efforts to expel North Korea from the United Nations and other international organizations?

Ambassador Moley. I will support the administration’s position in respect to increasing leverage at every level on DPRK.

Senator Gardner. I believe the administration has done a pressure campaign as well on many of these embassies and countries in Pyongyang. Is that correct?

Ambassador Moley. You will have my support.

Senator Gardner. You will continue that. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, I yield my time.

Senator Young. Thank you.

Senator Gardner. Actually, Mr. Chairman, do you mind? I got really excited about yielding, but I do have a couple more questions I want to get to, if you do not mind. Reclaiming my time.

Senator Young. You mean——

Senator Gardner. In round two. Thank you.

Senator Young. Go ahead.

Senator Gardner. Thank you.

Ambassador Moley, continuing with you along this line of questioning, could you share with me your strategy to combat the anti-Israel bias at the United Nations and other international organizations?

Ambassador Moley. Well, it is particularly pervasive, Senator, as you know, at the Human Rights Council, which is meeting as we speak in Geneva. Our Acting Assistant Secretary, Ambassador Molly Phee, is there as we speak, and I know she will make every effort—and I certainly would, if confirmed—to push back against anti-Israel bias as reflected in item 7 of the Human Rights Council’s deliberations.

Senator Gardner. Would you support withdrawal of the United States’ participation in the Human Rights Council if they continue this anti-Israel bias?

Ambassador Moley. As you may know, we come up for our term limit in 2019, and I will, if confirmed, be participating in those deliberations to make a determination as to what is in our best interest to seek another term or not. Sometimes it is more appropriate to be inside the tent than outside the tent, but there are certainly arguments to be made on both sides of that.

Senator Gardner. And thank you.

And last question. Could you outline a strategy that will help ensure and prevent the Palestinian Authority from obtaining international recognition at the United Nations and other international organizations?

Ambassador Moley. At this time, Senator, we are not aware of any effort for them to gain that recognition, but we will fight it at every turn, should it arise. As you know, we left UNESCO as a consequence of them being admitted to statehood in that organization.

Senator Gardner. Thank you, Ambassador.
And I have 2 minutes remaining on my time. Before I yield it back, Dr. Olsen, if you would like to pontificate on Colorado State University, that is fine with me. If not, I will yield back my time.

Dr. Olsen. I will just say two faculty in 1960 wrote what became the outline of Peace Corps, and in fact, they were invited back to Washington, DC by Sargent Shriver in March of 1961 to help guide the initial formation of Peace Corps.

Senator Gardner. Thank you.

Senator Young. Thank you, Senator Gardner.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Thank you both for your willingness to be nominated for these very important posts.

Ambassador Moley, as you may be aware, last month U.S.-supported forces in Syria captured two ISIS fighters who were believed to be members of the group known as the Beatles. These two captured men are alleged to have been intimately involved in the imprisonment, torture, and murder of one of my former constituents, James Foley. Mr. Foley’s family has publicly requested that President Trump take steps to ensure that these two men are held responsible for their crimes, meaning that they be tried either in the United States or in some sort of an international arena.

If confirmed, do you commit to pursuing options to bring them to justice, including through international justice mechanisms?

Ambassador Moley. If confirmed, Senator, I do so commit. Every effort should be made to bring these people to justice.

Senator Shaheen. And do you have any thoughts about where the most appropriate place would be to do that?

Ambassador Moley. Quite frankly, Senator, I do not. I know what I have read in the public media, but I am not, as yet, confirmed and have not been read in on that issue. But I will commit to making every effort to bring them to justice and will work with you in that regard.

Senator Shaheen. Well, thank you very much. I appreciate that and I know that the Foley family will as well.

I want to follow up a little bit on Senator Merkley’s question about UNFPA because in March of 2017, the Trump administration invoked the Kemp-Kasten amendment to withhold U.S. funding for the United Nations Population Fund. Now, that amendment states that no U.S. funds may be made available to any organization or program which, as determined by the President of the United States, supports or participates in the management of a program of coercive abortion or involuntary sterilization.

Ambassador Moley, are you aware or have you heard from anybody in the administration any information that would suggest that UNFPA has been engaged in this prohibited behavior?

Ambassador Moley. Senator, only to the extent that in briefing materials I have seen the allegation that funding has gone to a Chinese health agency which has, in fact, implicitly or explicitly coerced abortion.

Having said that, I recognize there are conflicting opinions, and as I mentioned, my predecessor as recently as April wrote an article—Sheba Crocker—to the extent that she does not believe that there is proof of that allegation. I am intending to reach out to former Assistant Secretary of State Crocker to hear her rationale for why she does not believe that is the case. Having said that, if confirmed, of course, I will then have information about the deliberation and the determination that was made by the President in this regard.

Senator Shaheen. Well, I very much appreciate your following up on that. I am not aware nor have I heard from anyone in the administration that UNFPA is engaged in any behavior that would mean that it would be prohibited from gaining funds. So I think your willingness to follow up is very important, and I hope you will share with this committee what you learn with that regard and that we will take action if your finding is that they should not be prohibited from receiving funds because, as Senator Merkley pointed out, they do tremendous and very important work for women and children in so many parts of this world. And for us to dramatically reduce funding there has had serious consequences for women and families.

I also want to follow up on your comments about when it is appropriate to withdraw from international organizations. I appreciate that international organizations do not always do what we would like them to do, and that sometimes presents foreign policy challenges. But the fact is it seems to me that often when we withdraw, we reduce our ability to influence what those organizations do rather than increase it.

So under what circumstances would you advise us withdrawing from an international organization?

Ambassador Moley. Senator, it would be determined by the circumstances at the time. If confirmed, I can assure you that I would make sure that all sides of the issue were heard because, as I indicated earlier, oftentimes as repugnant as some of these organizations' decisions may be, better to be inside the tent, as you have indicated, than outside the tent. Having been inside the tent and outside the tent, for example, as the head of the delegation at the U.N. Human Rights Commission when I was Ambassador, the predecessor to the Human Rights Council, and later as the deputy head of delegation on four occasions when we were inside the tent as members of the Human Rights Commission, there are arguments to be made on both sides of that as to points of leverage that can be used from both the outside and from the inside. But I would make sure that we made a mature, thoughtful decision before we would ever decide to leave an organization.

Senator Shaheen. Well, thank you. I appreciate that. I am of the view that it is generally more important to be inside the tent looking out than outside the tent looking in.

Ambassador Moley. As do I, Senator.

Senator Shaheen. I will paraphrase that.

Ms. Olsen, I very much appreciate your past experience at the Peace Corps and your willingness to take on the role as Director there. I am not going to ask you about the safety issue because I believe that is still a serious concern for Peace Corps volunteers and you have addressed that in your comments. And I appreciate your talking about what you would do as Director to address that, and I would encourage you to follow through on that and anything that I or this committee can do to help you with that I know we would be very willing to do so.

Dr. Olsen. I really appreciate your comments, Senator. And the agency, and if I am confirmed, I look forward to working with you on continuing to strengthen the safety and security.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Young. Well, thank you, Senator Shaheen.

Senator Kaine?

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the witnesses.

I will start, Dr. Olsen, with you. I was at a breakfast this morning, and I was chatting with a young man who told me that he had just gotten back from being a Peace Corps volunteer in Latin America. And I said, well, in my committee this afternoon, we are going to have the nominee to be head of the Peace Corps before us. And he said, well, tell me about the nominee. I said, well, she was in the Peace Corps, and I was going to say other things about you, but he just stopped me and said, oh, I am sure she will be fine. [Laughter.]

Senator Kaine. The 230,000, as you described, Peace Corps alums—they get a lot of confidence—even if they do not know you, they get a lot of confidence when there is a nominee who has lived what they have lived. And you have done that not only in your service in Tunisia but as a country director, regional director, acting chief, other capacities with the Peace Corps.

Dr. Olsen. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Kaine. Do we make enough use of our 230,000 Peace Corps veterans?

Dr. Olsen. Senator, that is a great question. And I would say probably not. The return volunteers are eager to serve to continue in their work.

Senator Kaine. Absolutely.

Dr. Olsen. And I think the ways that collectively we can reach out and encourage their cross-cultural skills, language skills so that they can do even more to make communities stronger.

Senator Kaine. I think the Peace Corps volunteers that I know, including in my own family, have so much to offer, and they are offering. You shared the example of the individual in Memphis I guess in your opening comments, which I read. They are doing so much on their own. They have had the experience that has equipped them for a life of public service. But it seems that there are just strategic ways we can use them to explain to our public the value of the kind of diplomacy and soft power that Peace Corps represents. And I would hope that one of your initiatives, obviously, the current members, recruiting, growing if possible, taking care of the health and safety needs of the current Peace Corps volunteers is the key responsibility. But I hope you will contemplate ways that you can continue to ask these wonderful returning Peace Corps veterans to consider doing even more because I think their skill set is a remarkable one.

But congratulations to you for your nomination.

I want to ask you, Mr. Moley, really quickly on global organizations. I was interested in your exchange with Jeanne Shaheen, Senator Shaheen. And you are right. Sometimes these organizations are reprehensible.

But I will admit I was troubled by a recent move of the administration on an organization that was not reprehensible because it was only getting started. In September of 2016, the U.S. worked, together with other organizations at the U.N., to put together a global compact on migration. And the idea behind this global compact was that migrants and refugees are getting to be more and more of a constant in the world, and whether they are driven by natural disasters, weather emergencies, climate change, civil wars, corruption, we see millions and millions of people transiting the globe often from one continent to another as refugees and migrants. And that is not likely to change.

And so the idea behind the global compact was maybe we, nations of the world, need to share our best practices again and really think about policies. The U.S. was sort of the originator of the idea of the compact, and it was nothing more than an effort to convene a dialogue among all nations of the world to determine what future best practices might be.

In December of 2017, on the eve of the first meeting of the global compact on migration in Mexico, the Trump administration announced it would not send the U.S. representative. I think we were the only nation that did not have representation there.

And I have asked State Department folks at the table why that is, and they have indicated that we are concerned about our sovereignty. They did not say that the organization was reprehensible. They did not evidence anti-Israel bias. They said we were concerned about our sovereignty.

Obviously, that argument would suggest we would never be involved in any international organization, which is an untenable position. And there is nothing about participating in a global dialogue to share best practices about how to deal with migrants and refugees that involves an incursion into the sovereignty of the United States at all.

So I guess I would first ask, do you know anything about the reason for the decision of the United States to withdraw itself uniquely from the global compact on migration?

Ambassador Moley. No, Senator, I do not. Having said that, I will commit to you that I will, if confirmed, look into it, and hopefully give you a more studied response.

Senator Kaine. I would appreciate that.

Would you agree with me that the issue of migrant and refugee flows in the world is a significant issue, both humanitarian but also a national security issue that affects many nations, including the United States?

Ambassador Moley. It is clearly a significant issue. As to why we made that determination in December 2017, quite frankly I have not been read in. I do not know the deliberations that took place. But I will confirm to you that I will find out.

Senator Kaine. I am proud enough—maybe sometimes too proud—of our country to think that we are not going to come up with the best solutions or policies on this issue if the United States is absent from the table. I do not think we have all the answers, but I think we have an awful lot of answers and an awful lot of expertise. I assume that you would share that opinion as well.

Ambassador MOLEY. I do.

Senator Kaine. All right. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do not have other questions.

Senator Young. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

Mr. Moley, have you been following the situation in Eastern Ghouta, Syria, including the attacks by the Russians and the Assad regime on civilians and medical facilities?

Ambassador MOLEY. Yes, Senator, and of course, I am aware of the sanctions—excuse me—the ceasefire that Ambassador Haley has managed to finally get past the Security Council despite delay from Russia itself, and I think she should deserve great credit for having achieved that this past Saturday.

Senator Young. So I would echo your commendation of her efforts and her team’s efforts. Russia has killed hundreds of innocent men, women, and children using its position on the Security Council to delay that resolution calling for a ceasefire.

When Russia acts this way at the Security Council, how do you believe the U.S. and the international community more broadly should respond?

Ambassador MOLEY. And, Senator, to add to that, Russia continues to obstruct in the way of issuing a veto just yesterday I believe in respect to its transmission of arms to Yemen. And they vetoed the sanctions against Iran that would have been imposed at Ambassador Haley’s recommendation. So I think working with Ambassador Haley and her team and others of our ambassadors, I think we need to push back at Russia at every turn in regard to their vetoing peaceful resolutions that otherwise would be passed.

Senator Young. Clearly they are trying to test us on many fronts. So I am happy with that response.

According to its website, the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian refugees, or UNRWA, operates 677 elementary and preparatory schools in its five areas of operation, as well as eight secondary schools in Lebanon, for approximately 515,000 Palestinian children. Helping to educate children who would not otherwise receive such education is unambiguously good. I would note that the United States has been the largest single donor to this U.N. relief agency.

Mr. Moley, are you aware of the educational activities supported by this entity?

Ambassador MOLEY. Yes, I am. And I agree with you, Senator, of their importance. There are certain other issues related to that of concern to us, but I do agree with the importance of educating children everywhere, most especially in Palestine.

Senator Young. So you reference so many other issues. I will dive in. Some of the textbooks being used in these schools reportedly include maps that omit the state of Israel and include images and examples that promote violence and support martyrdom. If we are trying to encourage a durable peace—and that is what we all want, a durable peace—between the Israelis and Palestinians, textbooks with this sort of content are completely counterproductive. It is difficult for me to justify to my constituents using their tax dollars to support schools that utilize such textbooks.
Mr. Moley, you seem to be aware of these reports. You are nodding affirmatively. And so if confirmed, do you commit to looking into this issue and reporting back to my office within 90 days on a plan to ensure U.S. tax dollars are not supporting the use of textbooks that foster hate towards Israel, support terrorism, or degrade women?

Ambassador Moley. Senator, I do commit to supporting and working with you and your team on this issue. I do have a relationship from my time in Geneva with the head of UNRWA, Pierre Krahenbuhl, who at that time in Geneva was a deputy at the International committee of the Red Cross. And I would like to think that we could use your leverage, the Senate’s leverage, and that of the State Department to make sure that these textbooks are not proliferated.

Senator Young. Thank you, Mr. Ambassador.

I am going to move on to the U.N. Human Rights Council. It was brought up earlier. What is your assessment of the council overall, and what do you see as the most important reforms that the United States should pursue with respect to the council?

Ambassador Moley. Well, as you know, the council, previously the commission, was reformed in 2006 to some benefit but also to some not so benefit geographically in terms of representation. Having said that, I think it will be a continuing effort to assure that countries do not join or not voted onto the Human Rights Council principally for the purpose of defending themselves and using it as a forum to accuse us, as well as Israel, unfairly.

Senator Young. So you have spoken to the council’s membership on treatment of Israel, which I appreciate. I share that concern.

So would membership reform be both appropriate and an important objective, including open ballots and competitive elections, were you to be confirmed?

Ambassador Moley. Agreed, Senator, absolutely.

Senator Young. Well, as the chairman and sitting next to the ranking member of the subcommittee that oversees multilateral institutions, would you commit to, if confirmed, working with my subcommittee and my office, where possible, related to U.N. Human Rights Council reform?

Ambassador Moley. Absolutely and unequivocally.

Senator Young. Dr. Olsen, I am sure you would agree that when Americans volunteer to join the Peace Corps, as roughly 65 Hoosiers have over the last year, we want them to be able to serve safely, free from violence and sexual assault. You have spoken I think unambiguously about that, and I am grateful for that. In preparation for this hearing, have you reviewed the Nick Castle Peace Corps Reform Act of 2018? I think the name was invoked earlier. I am not sure the legislation was.

Dr. Olsen. Yes.

Senator Young. Could you speak to any general impressions you have regarding the bill?

Dr. Olsen. Thank you, Senator.

It is an excellent bill, and it provides the opportunity for Peace Corps to continue to take very strong steps towards health and safety of the volunteer, particularly the health of the volunteer. And I look forward, if confirmed, to carry out the elements of the bill and to continue to enhance the health care of every single Peace Corps volunteer.

Senator YOUNG. I think you indicated earlier—you must have been referencing this legislation——

Dr. OLSEN. Yes.

Senator YOUNG.—where Senate committee staff worked with Peace Corps staff. And my supposition is that, if confirmed, you would commit your staff to engaging this committee on all future reform efforts like that.

Dr. OLSEN. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator YOUNG. Senator Merkley?

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

This month, Senator Young and I sent the Senate and House Appropriations committees a letter detailing severe food shortages worldwide and requested increased funding for the World Food Program. I am directing this to Ambassador Moley. If confirmed, will you advocate for additional funding for the WFP? And what steps will you take to rally the international community to address a number of famines that we have currently ongoing around the world?

Ambassador Moley. Senator, as you know, we are the largest contributor to the World Food Program, currently at 39 percent. I was obviously not part of the deliberations or determinations that prepared the current 2019 budget or the 2018 budget. Having said that, I would urge additional funding, whether it comes from the United States or other participants, to the World Food Program. We face four major famines currently, Yemen, Nigeria, Sudan, and Somalia, and potentially elsewhere. And obviously, the World Food Program—although you and I had a conversation last evening about better to teach a person to fish than to give them the fish, nonetheless, if there are no fishes available, one has to send fishes to the people that need it most.

Senator MERKLEY. I was just speaking earlier today with some experts on Sudan who were noting the fact that so much of the challenge there is coming from the chaos and disruption of war that has made normal activities that one might support their family with incredibly difficult to the point of producing a famine.

My colleague, Senator Young, has noted that in Yemen just the enormous difficulty of even getting relief into the country. And he continues to champion cranes, and I have not heard you talk about loading cranes today. I am kind of surprised about that. He has continued to say we have got to make sure that we address these famines.

I want to turn back to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency. My colleague pointed out the enormous critique we have of some of the material in the textbooks. What UNRWA has done is follow U.N. policy which is to use the textbooks provided by the host nation. But they have then instructed their teachers not to teach that material that is offensive and to provide supplemental materials. What else should be done to address this situation?

Ambassador Moley. Senator, I suspect much needs to be done. Having said that, I have not been read into the situation as it currently exists. Having said that, I pledge to you that I will, A. And B, I do believe that my relationship with Pierre Krahenbuhl, the current head of UNRWA, will serve me well in that function. And I look forward to working with both you and the chairman and working cooperatively and making sure we are all on the same page in respect to the exact circumstances on the ground, if confirmed.

Senator MERKLEY. Great. I will look forward to your insights on that.

And it is my understanding that the Government of Israel supports this aid. They recognize that it is very hard to have an economy in the West Bank because it is isolated. It is surrounded and does not have easy access for inputs to an economy or an ability to get goods out to sell to the world, and that having these 500,000 children in school learning and being able to, hopefully, contribute in some way is better than having 500,000 children out of school. And they also do a tremendous amount on health care as well.

Do you share the view that it is helpful in this challenging situation to have this investment in health care and education?

Ambassador MOLEY. Absolutely and unequivocally.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Then I just wanted to toss an open question your way. You can answer it as quickly or as at length as you would like, but you served as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations missions in Geneva. What did you learn from that experience in terms of the value of multilateral engagement?

Ambassador MOLEY. Multilateral engagement is a keystone to American diplomacy as reflected in pillar four of the National Security Strategy that was outlined by the President and released in December of 2017.

I think one of the most disappointing things I did learn, however, Senator, was that oftentimes our friends mistook compromise with concession. Much of that I believe comes from their own past experiences, colonial powers in Africa and elsewhere. And I found that quite regrettable at times.

Having said that, we as a nation stand on principle and lead by example, and I would like to think that we could continue to do so.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

And I guess I do have one last question for you, which is you mentioned it is sometimes better to be inside the tent than outside. The Paris Accord or Paris Agreement is based on the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Change, and at this point, we would officially come out about November 2020 I believe is the date. Are there reasons to stay deeply engaged between now and then and perhaps to stay longer in terms of taking on the challenge of climate?

Ambassador MOLEY. In respect to remaining engaged, absolutely, Senator. The fact is that the President made clear in the G-20’s leaders declaration that we remain committed to mitigating greenhouse gas emissions. And I take that charge very seriously whether it is inside or outside.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

Senator YOUNG. Well, that concludes panel number one, and I would like to thank both of you for your time and your interest in serving. We will briefly adjourn in order to allow the nominees for panel number two to take their places at the table. [Recess.]

Senator YOUNG. I would like to call this hearing back to order for panel number two.

Once again, I would like to welcome Mr. Erik Bethel and Mr. Sean Cairncross. Mr. Bethel is nominated to be the United States Alternate Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Mr. Cairncross is nominated to be the Chief Executive Officer of the Millennium Challenge Corporate, or MCC.

With that, I welcome you, Mr. Bethel, to provide your opening comments in 5 minutes or less, please.

STATEMENT OF ERIK BETHEL, OF FLORIDA, TO BE UNITED STATES ALTERNATE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT FOR A TERM OF TWO YEARS

Mr. BETHEL. Thank you, Senator. Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, and distinguished members of the Foreign Relations committee, it is a great privilege to appear before you today.

I am honored that President Trump nominated me to serve as the U.S. Alternate Executive Director for the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. I am grateful for the support of the President and also for the support of Secretary Mnuchin.

Before I begin, I would like to introduce the members of my family sitting in the audience today: my wife Michelle; my children, Ana Cristina, Niko, and Panchi; and my mother Diana who is an emigre from Cuba. I would also like to acknowledge my late father, Paul Bethel, who spent a career in public service with the U.S. Department of State. His legacy is critical to my being with you here today. Most importantly, I am especially grateful to have my wife Michelle in my life and for her continued support of my desire to serve our nation.

I have long aspired to work in the public sector, especially—

Senator YOUNG. Mr. Bethel, if I could just interrupt. My apologies. I understand we have votes around 4 o’clock, and I have consulted with the ranking member. If there is any way to condense any comments—the same with you, Mr. Cairncross—I think we can probably get our questions done before the vote and will not have to return.

Mr. BETHEL. Certainly.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, sir.

Mr. BETHEL. I have long aspired to work in the public sector, especially in the capacity of finance and emerging markets and poverty reduction. Furthermore, I strongly believe in the mission of the World Bank, and I look forward to sharing my objectives with you as a candidate and to answering any questions you might have.

For more than 2 decades, I have worked at the intersection of finance and emerging markets. I have also lived and have worked in Latin America. I speak Spanish and I speak Mandarin and I speak Portuguese. If confirmed, I will utilize by professional experiences to promote the mission of the World Bank and to further U.S. interests.
Cycles of corruption, poverty and crime pose an enduring threat to the immense potential of the developing world, and I believe it is important to address these issues. We would be wise to heed the words of Edmund Burke, who said that the only thing necessary for evil to triumph is for good men to do nothing. If the developing world is to realize the future it deserves, it must overcome these longstanding obstacles with the support of the organization like the World Bank.

And if confirmed, I would seek to leverage the U.S. contributions to the bank to ensure that its finance efforts are used productively and that they remain consistent with our nation's foreign policy interests. And I will also advocate for additional efforts to curb corruption, human trafficking, and abuses of power in order to promote opportunities for those in the developing world to live longer, healthier, and better lives.

Finally, if confirmed as Alternate Executive Director of the IBRD, I will work closely with members of this committee and its staff and with other Members of Congress to perform my responsibilities as effectively as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity to appear before you and other members of the committee, and I look forward to your questions. Thank you.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ERIK BETHEL

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Cardin, and distinguished members of the Foreign Relations Committee, it is a great privilege to appear before you today. I am honored that President Trump nominated me to serve as the United States Alternate Executive Director of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and I am grateful for the support of the President and Secretary Mnuchin.

Before I begin, I’d like to introduce members of my family sitting in the audience today: my wife Michelle, my children Ana Cristina, Nicolas, and Panchi, and my mother Diana, an émigré from Cuba. I would also like to acknowledge my late father Paul Bethel who spent a career in public service with the U.S. Department of State. His legacy is critical to my being here with you today. Most importantly, I’m especially grateful to have my wife Michelle in my life, and for her continued support of my desire to serve our nation.

I’ve long aspired to work in the public sector, especially in the capacity of finance, emerging markets, and poverty reduction. Furthermore, I strongly believe in the mission of the World Bank. I look forward to sharing my objectives as a candidate and to answering any questions involving my qualifications and experiences.

For more than two decades, I have worked at the intersection of finance and emerging markets. I have also lived and worked in Latin America and Asia. If confirmed, I will utilize my professional experiences to promoting the mission of the World Bank and furthering U.S. interests.

Cycles of corruption, poverty, and crime pose an enduring threat to the immense potential of the developing world. I believe that it is important to address these issues. We would be wise to heed the words of Edmund Burke who said, “The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing.” If the developing world is to realize the future it deserves, it must overcome these longstanding obstacles with the support of organizations like the World Bank.

If confirmed, I would seek to leverage the U.S. contributions to the bank in order to ensure that its finance efforts are used productively and that they remain consistent with our nation’s foreign policy interests. I will also advocate for additional efforts to curb corruption, human trafficking, and abuses of power in order to promote opportunities for those in the developing world to live longer, healthier, and better lives. Finally, if confirmed as Alternate Executive Director of the IBRD, I will work closely with the members of this committee and its staff, and with other Members of Congress, to perform my responsibilities as effectively as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for this opportunity to appear before you and the other members of the committee, and I look forward to your questions.
Senator YOUNG. Thank you.
Mr. Cairncross?

STATEMENT OF SEAN CAIRNCROSS, OF MINNESOTA, TO BE CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER, MILLENNIUM CHALLENGE CORPORATION

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
I would like to start by thanking Senator Cornyn for his thoughtful introduction, and I appreciate his confidence in my nomination. I have always been proud to have worked for him, and I am hopeful that I will be able to continue working with him going forward.

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, members of the committee, it is a privilege to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the next Chief Executive Officer of the Millennium Challenge Corporation.

And if I could just beg the committee's indulgence for a quick second, I would like to introduce the members of my family here today. No one does anything alone. Or at least, I have not. And I have been blessed with a great support network. This is dad and mom, Andy and Donna; my sister-in-law Margaret; my wife Emily whom I met when I was 6. And these are my kids, India and Dominic. I met them when I was older. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. I have been interested in foreign affairs and America's role in the world since I was a boy growing up in Minnesota. As a student, I studied international relations both in Washington, D.C. and overseas in England and as a graduate student living in England. Living abroad gave me an appreciation for the importance of how our country is perceived overseas and the power our country has to inspire and to be a force for good in the world.

I became involved in national politics as a means to becoming engaged in the American democratic process and in government. I served in senior management positions in two national party committees, overseeing hundreds of employees and budgets that aggregated in the hundreds of millions of dollars. When I served as chief operating officer and general counsel to these organizations, I was responsible for the reporting and the compliance of these highly regulated, highly scrutinized, very visible organizations. And I feel very fortunate to have gained this management experience while also actively participating in the democratic process.

I entered government when I joined the White House in January 2017. During my time in the administration, I have had the opportunity to participate in the national security policymaking process, and I have gained a practical respect to complement my formerly academic appreciation for the role of American soft power and U.S. foreign engagement.

Emily and I do our best to teach our children what it means to be an American and to appreciate it. Indeed, my daughter India just returned last week from New York in a model United Nations program. And it is our sincere hope that they leave today's hearing remaining interested in U.S. engagement and assured that America is a constant force for good in the world. That good governance, economic freedom, and ruling justly are not just words but concrete values that America supports throughout the world to improve lives and support her interests.

I am honored and humbled to be nominated to lead the Millennium Challenge Corporation, which embodies this. It provides a framework that mobilizes these ideals while also requiring partner country commitment and holding partner countries accountable.

If confirmed, I have three overarching priorities that I would pursue.

First, I would maintain the MCC’s model, its strong track record of data-driven, accountable results. And I would seek to deepen the bipartisan support the agency has enjoyed. And to do this, I would rely on MCC’s deeply knowledgeable, talented, and diverse staff.

Second, I would seek to increase collaboration with other U.S. Government agencies and third party partners, in particular U.S. businesses, and maximize the crowding in of these resources, as well as the crowding in of domestic partner country resources.

Finally, I would like to help realize the potential of regional compacts. Legislation pending here before the Senate would open the door to MCC’s being able to build regional markets, and I believe that if carefully done and done in a focused manner, there is great potential there.

Mr. Chairman, the MCC is a tremendous asset in America’s foreign policy toolkit. If confirmed, I would commit to work hand in hand with this committee, with Congress, with the administration, and other MCC stakeholders to maintain its record of bipartisan support and measured accountability.

I am honored to be here. I look forward to answering any of your questions. Thank you.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SEAN CAIRNCROSS

Before I begin, I’d like to thank Senator Cornyn for his thoughtful introduction; I am grateful for his trust and confidence in my nomination, and I am proud to have worked for him.

Chairman Young, Ranking Member Merkley, members of the committee, it is a privilege to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the next Chief Executive Officer of the Millennium Challenge Corporation.

If I could beg the committee’s indulgence, I would like to thank the members of my family who are here today. Nobody accomplishes anything alone—or at least I haven’t—and I’ve been very fortunate to be surrounded by strong support. This is mom and dad, Donna and Andy. This is my sister-in-law, Margaret. And this is my wife, Emily—whom I met when I was six—and these are my children, India and Dominic.

I have been interested in foreign affairs and America’s role in the world since I was a boy, growing up in Minnesota. As a student, I studied international relations, both as an undergraduate, in Washington D.C. and England, and as a graduate student in England. Living abroad gave me an appreciation for the importance of how our country is perceived overseas—and the power that the United States has to inspire and be a force for good in the world. I became involved in national politics as a means to become involved in the American democratic process and government.

I served in senior management in two national party committees, overseeing hundreds of employees and budgets that aggregated in the hundreds of millions of dollars. When I served as chief operating officer and general counsel to these organizations, I was responsible for the compliance and reporting of these highly visible, scrutinized, and regulated entities. I feel fortunate to have gained this management experience while actively participating in our nation’s electoral process.

I entered government when I joined the White House in January 2017. During my time in the Trump administration I’ve had the opportunity to participate in the national security policy making process, and I have gained a practical respect—to compliment my formerly academic appreciation—of the importance of American soft power and U.S. global engagement.

Emily and I do our best to teach our children to appreciate what it means to be an American. Indeed, India just participated in a model United Nations program in New York last weekend. It is our wish that they remain interested in U.S. engagement, and it is our hope that they leave this hearing today with a deeper understanding, and assurance, that the United States is a constant force for good in the world. That good governance, economic freedom, and ruling justly are not just words, but concrete values that America supports throughout the world to improve lives and support her interests.

The Millennium Challenge Corporation embodies this, providing a framework that mobilizes these ideals while also requiring partner country commitment and holding partner countries accountable for results. I am honored and humbled to be nominated to lead such a unique and effective agency.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will take the lead at MCC during an exciting, yet challenging time for the agency and the development community at large. With this in mind, I have three overarching priorities that I’d plan to pursue.

First, I would maintain MCC’s model, and its track-record of transparent, data-driven results—and its strong history of bi-partisan support—and I will rely on MCC’s deeply knowledgeable, diverse, and talented professional staff in doing so.

Second, I would seek to increase collaboration with U.S. Government agencies and third party partners, particularly U.S. businesses—and maximize the “crowding in” of domestic partner country resources.

Finally, I’d like to help realize the potential of regional compacts. Legislation pending with the Senate would open the door for the MCC to engage in regional market building. I believe that, done correctly, there is tremendous potential to increase MCC’s impact. Mr. Chairman, MCC is a great asset in America’s foreign policy toolbox. Should I be confirmed to lead it, I commit that I will work hard in hand with this committee, Congress, and the administration to maintain MCC’s bi-partisan support and its standard of measurable accountability in reducing poverty through economic growth.

I look forward to discussing these, and other matters concerning MCC today—and, hopefully, in the future.

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Mr. Cairncross. You quickly summarized your professional background. What professional qualities have prepared you to assume this position? Give me a concise answer, one of two things, please.

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. Yes, sir. My management experience overseeing two organizations national in scope, subject to an enormous amount of scrutiny, in particular on their budgets, how the money is raised and spent, and as counsel, being responsible for the compliance of the organization and that transparency is something that—and building that culture of compliance, which I was responsible for, is something that I believe is transferable to the MCC. In fact, the MCC’s record of transparency is vital to the agency, and I intend to continue that.

Senator YOUNG. Mr. Cairncross, I am glad you emphasized the importance of the term is in the development community “crowding in” private sector resources in compact countries served by MCC. What more can we do in this particular area to get more money crowded in?

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. Sure. Thank you for the question, Senator.

There are several different avenues to this. The study that you co-chaired with Senator Shaheen noted that where U.S. foreign assistance is engaged in a country, it is a relatively small portion. In fact, 50 percent of that or so is private capital flowing in. And so I would seek to increase that engagement. I think the efforts being made, for example, in Ghana and the compact that we are engaged in there and the stamp of approval that the MCC creates in working with these governments to create institutional reform targeted at corruption, for example, really helps engage that private sector capital. I think there is also, on the other end of it, maximizing the leverage that other entities bring, such as OPIC, and working to de-risk these environments and draw more capital in.

Senator Young. Our office will continue to look closely at this matter. We want to be supportive however possible. So, if confirmed, if you discover that additional authorities or resources are needed in order to optimize the involvement of the private sector, will you let myself and our office know so that we can work with MCC to get you those resources and/or authorities?

Mr. Cairncross. Absolutely. I appreciate it.

Senator Young. Thank you.

Mr. Cairncross, with regard to the choice of MCC compact recipients, what weight would you place on a country’s scorecard performance versus its strategic importance to the United States?

Mr. Cairncross. Sure. Senator, I think the MCC has a great track record of success because it has adhered to a very objective model in country selection. And so those eligibility criteria and good governance, economic freedom, and investment in the people are key to the agency’s success.

I think that with respect to the larger strategic interests of the United States, the way I view it is MCC is not deployed necessarily strategically, but where it is active, it serves to buttress and support U.S. strategic interests.

And then finally, the board of directors that works with the MCC and overseas it is really there to provide that last overarching spectrum of policy input over the MCC’s objective criteria. So before a country is selected, eligible for a compact, even if it hits those criteria, it still needs to be approved by the board of directors in order to engage in a compact.

Senator Young. So your point is there is already a measure of discretion built into the system because the board of directors is able to exercise its oversight.

Mr. Cairncross. There is, sir. There is a measure of discretion that is built in on that level. And then there is also the threshold programs of the MCC which address countries that do not quite meet that eligibility criteria but are on the verge and through institutional reforms may be able to get there.

Senator Young. Thank you.

Senator Merkley?

Senator Merkley. Thank you much, both of you.

And the question I wanted to ask you, Mr. Bethel, is related to the loans that the World Bank has made to Burma. The Government of Burma and the military of Burma have been engaged in a massive ethnic cleansing operation resulting in more than 300 villages burned, children killed, women and daughters raped, fathers slaughtered, and have driven more than—well, now—almost 700,000 people across the border.

In that type of situation, how should the World Bank respond to use its leverage? Should it cut off loans? Should it make them contingent upon dramatic changes in the governance? Should it say we will lend you money, but it has to go to very specific projects and monitor it carefully? Should it insist that international organizations be admitted to Rakhine State before any additional assistance is provided? How can the IBRD use its leverage or how should it use its leverage?

Mr. Bethel. Thank you, Senator. I think that is a very important consideration. Having been to Burma in the last couple of years, I am very familiar with the issue, the Rohingya issue, that you are referring to, and it is a very challenging and complicated issue.

It is too early to say, at least in my estimation, what should be done until and if I am fortunate enough to be confirmed. I do not know that it would be appropriate for me to comment on the specific World Bank policy or loans that are being administered or not in this case. But the general sentiment is one where the World Bank should not be lending to countries that either are state sponsors of terror or that are committing atrocious acts on their own population generally speaking.

I appreciate the question, and should I be confirmed, I would be delighted to work with your committee on addressing the issue.

Senator Merkley. Thank you. I appreciate that.

And, Mr. Cairncross, when you studied international relations at American University I believe——

Mr. Cairncross. Yes, sir.

Senator Merkley.—did you specialize in any particular area of international relations, Middle East policy, Asian policy, national security, any particular aspect?

Mr. Cairncross. Sure. Both my college undergraduate thesis and my graduate dissertation were done in intelligence.

Senator Merkley. In intelligence. And so in the course of that, did you take a lot of courses that were basically related to the third world economic development?

Mr. Cairncross. I did take an international economics course at Cambridge, sir.

Senator Merkley. Focused on developing nations?

Mr. Cairncross. Developing nations were a portion of the course, yes.

Senator Merkley. And can you share with us if you have had the opportunity to live in or—we had the Peace Corps up here earlier—any projects you have had in developing nations?

Mr. Cairncross. No, sir. I have not lived in a developing nation. And if confirmed, one of the first things I would plan to do is to travel and put my feet on the ground and deal with the host government and put my eyes on MCC’s work.

Senator Merkley. Have you currently traveled to any of the compact nations?

Mr. Cairncross. I have not, Senator, but that would be an immediate priority of mine.

Senator Merkley. Do you speak any foreign languages?

Mr. Cairncross. I do not, sir.

Senator Merkley. I wanted to ask you a couple questions related to Reince Priebus, your work with him as top advisor to the chief of staff. And you have already answered these. I know the answers, but I think it is valuable to have them on the record unless I got the answers wrong.

Did you have any involvement in the development or execution of the President’s Muslim ban?
Mr. CAIRNCROSS. I did not, sir.

Senator MERKLEY. Did you have any discussions involved in the firing of Jim Comey?

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. No, sir.

Senator MERKLEY. Have you been interviewed or do you expect to be interviewed as part of Robert Mueller’s Russia investigation?

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. I have not been, and I do not expect to be.

Senator MERKLEY. So the MCC is a partner to more conventional U.S. aid and development. What do you see as kind of the valuable—what do you see as most significant about its unique strategy?

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. I think the MCC is so unique because it occupies a very singular niche along the development arc of a country that it is working with. And so it is really transitioning from that USAID portion to a place where a country is attempting to build a sustainable economy. And it is a need and merit system. So the agency is looking to consolidate gains in poor countries who are pursuing good policies, pursuing open government, economic freedom for their people, and investing into their people. And that singular mission, with the staff that I have met and dealt with at the MCC who are so impressive—they are very mission-driven. It is a very professional organization, and I think that makes it very unique.

I also, Senator, think it is unique in the respect that all of its projects are tracked and measured, and that is not just some internal MCC white paper. It is measured by independent third party agencies and organizations. And then that is put online and put out into the public. And that builds, I believe, great confidence in the MCC’s expenditure of taxpayer dollars and helps make the case for U.S. assistance.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

One of the issues that has come up has been reports that the eight political positions that are at MCC—that there are plans by the White House to expand that to more than two dozen. Are you familiar with those plans, and do you have an opinion on that?

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. I am not familiar with those plans, Senator. I should say I appreciate the time that you and I have spent discussing the matter and with your staff. And what I can commit to you is that, if confirmed, I would strive to keep the MCC a performance-based professional development organization. I think both its bipartisan support that it has enjoyed and the confidence of its talented staff and maintaining that staff is key to the agency’s success.

Senator MERKLEY. So you would not support expanding the political positions beyond the eight positions that there are currently on the staff.

Mr. CAIRNCROSS. Correct, Senator. I am not looking to politicize the MCC.

Senator MERKLEY. Thank you.

And I thought I should give you a chance to just comment on the racial bias lawsuit that was at RNC. It was settled, and I assume those were not government funds that it was settled with. Those were campaign side funds?
Mr. Cairncross. That is correct. They were campaign private donations to the committee.

Senator Merkley. And do you support diversity and nondiscrimination within the organization?

Mr. Cairncross. Absolutely, Senator. I believe it is a very important—I believe diversity should be a celebrated thing. I believe it enriches the work environment. I believe particularly in an agency like the MCC it leads to better decision-making and, if confirmed, I would seek to grow the agency’s diversity.

Senator Merkley. Thank you.

Senator Young. Well, I want to thank our nominees for appearing here today. That concludes our hearing.

For the information of members, the record will remain open until the close of business on Thursday, including for members to submit questions for the record.

Thank you again to each of you.

This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 4:00 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. KEVIN EDWARD MOLEY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy?

Additionally, I served as Chair of an NGO named PCI Global and in that capacity have traveled to Africa and Latin America. This has reinforced my strong belief that the United States must lead in advocating for human rights around the world, including at home.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Throughout my career, I believe I have demonstrated my commitment to promoting the careers of those from backgrounds not traditionally represented in the State Department. Ambassador Linda Thomas Greenfield, who served with me in Geneva went on to become Ambassador to Liberia, Director General of the Foreign Service and, most recently, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, Linda was kind enough to attend my hearing in support of my nomination. Ambassador Joel Danies, recently confirmed to be our Ambassador to Gabon, is our first Haitian born American to be confirmed as a United States Ambassador; he was my deputy in Geneva and an important advisor to me.

I will continue, as I have throughout my government and private sector career, to seek out talented individual from all backgrounds to serve with me, and ensure they have the tools to succeed in their careers.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors within the Bureau of International Organizations are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that all supervisors in the Bureau of International Organizations are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive, and will tolerate nothing less. This will be a priority of my leadership, if confirmed.
Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, to exercise leadership within the Department to promote compliance with those laws and rules and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, to exercise leadership within the Department to promote compliance with those laws and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence abroad. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deemed necessary to avoid a conflict of interest and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. KEVIN EDWARD MOLEY BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER A. COONS

Question 1. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, are you committed to working with the Senate and House of Representatives on a bill to review the United States’ contributions to multilateral organizations, the Multilateral Aid Review Act of 2017 (S.1928)?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to rigorous and effective oversight of international organizations. I agree that assessing the use of U.S. taxpayer funding to international organizations is essential to ensure funding is being used as effectively and efficiently as possible. The Bureau of International Organization Affairs coordinates the oversight of international organizations that receive U.S. funding directly through their governance bodies and indirectly through independent review entities. If confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to engage closely with the experts at the State Department on how best to reinforce this critical oversight, and commit to working with both the Senate and the House of Representatives on the bill and its objectives.

HON. KEVIN EDWARD MOLEY BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. Last month, the administration announced that it is withholding the bulk—approximately 83 percent—of the United States’s annual contribution to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA). Established by the U.N. General Assembly in 1949, UNRWA provides an array of critical services to Palestinian refugees in the West Bank, Gaza, Jordan, Lebanon, and Syria. Jordan hosts the largest Palestinian refugee population in the Middle East; more than two million people in total. I have personally visited UNRWA sites in Jordan. The services provided by UNRWA are an important safety valve for the Jordanian Government, which is also currently hosting more than 600,000 Syrian refugees and whose resources are spread increasingly thin.

- How do these proposed budget cuts risk harming our Jordanian allies, whose cooperation we need on a host of critical security issues, including counterterrorism?
- How does undermining the Jordanian Government serve our strategic interests?

Answer. If confirmed, I would support the U.S. commitment to Jordan and to addressing the needs of the most vulnerable, as demonstrated by the voluntary contribution by the United States of $60 million to UNRWA in January to keep schools and health systems operating in Jordan, the West Bank, and Gaza. Jordan remains one of the United States’ closest allies. Secretary Tillerson underscored the enduring value of that partnership during his February 2018 visit to Jordan when he signed a new five-year, $6.375 billion Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with Foreign Minister Safadi. The MOU, along with the U.S.-Jordanian partnership on a range of issues, demonstrates the depth and breadth of this important bilateral relationship. In addition, since the start of the Syrian crisis, the United States, through the Bureau for Population, Refugees, and Migration as well as USAID/Food for Peace, provided nearly $1.1 billion in humanitarian aid for programs to the Syrian response in Jordan to meet the life-saving needs of refugees, including food, shelter, and water, in addition to humanitarian assistance at the regional level to support Iraqi, Palestinian, and other refugees in Jordan.

Question 2. With regards to the U.N. Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO), can you commit to me that if confirmed, you will not seek or advance any proposals to further diminish MONUSCO’s size, capacity, or budget in the absence of real progress toward greater civilian security on the ground?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that the United States carefully reviews and analyzes each U.N. peacekeeping mission as its mandate comes up for renewal to evaluate whether it is appropriate to the current situation in the country and to determine how it is advancing U.S. objectives and interests. I understand that the mandate of MONUSCO will be renewed by the U.N. Security Council on March 27, and that the U.N. made the decision to reduce MONUSCO’s troop strength in March 2017 by drawing down underperforming troops in order to increase overall effectiveness while sending an important signal to other poor performers that they must improve.

If confirmed, I commit to a rigorous and objective examination of each mission, which is vital to ensuring that U.N. peacekeeping missions have realistic and achievable mandates which advance political solutions, have the support of host governments, and maintain clear exit strategies. I look forward to working with you and members of the committee, if confirmed, and with other U.N. Security Council members to reach consensus on supporting a MONUSCO mission that is responsive, flexible, able to actively and effectively fulfill its mandated tasks, especially protecting civilians and supporting the electoral process.

Question 3. In your view, has the U.N. Security Council over-burdened MONUSCO—or any other U.N. peacekeeping operations—with too unrealistic or cumbersome of a mandate? If so, how will you seek to address this problem if confirmed?

Answer. The Secretary-General and MONUSCO leadership have consistently called for greater streamlining of the Mission’s tasks. If confirmed, I will work with the Security Council, other U.N. member states, and the U.N. to address critical structural, bureaucratic, operational, and political challenges to maximize the effectiveness of MONUSCO and of all U.N. peacekeeping missions. This effort would include seeking opportunities for U.N. humanitarian and development agencies to assume tasks better suited to their expertise, seeking to eliminate extraneous capabilities or programming, and working to institutionalize a culture of performance at the U.N. in which only the highest performing troops and police are deployed to U.N. missions.

To date, with an authorized troop ceiling of 16,215 military personnel, 660 military observers and staff officers, and 1,441 police, and an annual budget of $1.1 billion, MONUSCO remains one of the largest and most expensive U.N. peacekeeping missions. There has been a peacekeeping presence in the DRC since 1999, and over the years the U.N. Security Council has added numerous tasks, which have diverted resources from the core mission of civilian protection and stabilization. MONUSCO is stretched to capacity to fully execute its mandate, and the DRC Government at times actively undermines the Mission. MONUSCO also faces operational challenges stemming from the size of the country, the lack of infrastructure, the lack of capacity of the national security forces, the number of armed groups, and the unwillingness of some troop contributors to conduct offensive operations. If confirmed, I look forward to further reviewing these and other issues to ensure the MONUSCO mandate is appropriate and effective.

Question 4. What will you do to ensure that MONUSCO is best positioned to confront the numerous serious challenges facing the country ahead of the planned elections in December 2018?

Answer. In the U.N. Security Council, the United States has called for MONUSCO to be more responsive to the needs of the Congolese people, and to adapt the Mission when necessary as the political landscape changes. If confirmed, I will continue to urge MONUSCO to prioritize the protection of civilians and electoral support tasks, to direct budgetary resources so they are aligned with these priorities, and to continue reporting to the U.N. Security Council on the progress of electoral timelines and on implementation of the December 31, 2016 Agreement.

I commit to work with you to ensure that the United States engages its international partners, the U.N., and the DRC Government to support the conduct of peaceful, inclusive, timely, and credible elections in 2018. Due to the lack of basic infrastructure in the DRC and its sheer size, elections will not be possible without the technical, logistical, political, and security support of MONUSCO. The U.N. Security Council prioritized MONUSCO’s electoral support task, including supporting implementation of the December 31, 2016 Agreement, during the 2017 mandate renewal. I understand that MONUSCO meets regularly with the DRC Government, opposition, and the Independent National Electoral Commission (CENI) to advance the Agreement, with a key focus on promoting implementation of its confidence-building measures.

Question 5. What can be done to ensure that peacekeeping troop contributors can adequately protect themselves from attacks like the one that occurred in December?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to reviewing how we can do more to ensure peacekeeping forces can adequately protect themselves. As your question highlights, the past several years have seen a dramatic increase in fatal attacks on U.N. peacekeepers. The December 7, 2017 attack on MONUSCO in North Kivu was the worst attack on U.N. peacekeepers in recent history, resulting in the death of 15 U.N. peacekeepers while wounding more than 50 others. Today, as U.N. peacekeepers are asked to do more in increasingly complex and volatile environments, the U.N. Security Council owes it to these men and women to work hard to reform the U.N. system as urgently as possible.

The Secretary-General’s recently published “Review of Peacekeeping Fatalities Due to Acts of Violence” highlighted the link between the safety and security of peacekeepers and accountability for performance, demonstrating that underperformance can be fatal. If confirmed, I will work to institutionalize a culture of performance and accountability at the U.N. in which only the highest performing troops and police are deployed to U.N. missions. The lives of peacekeepers and those they are mandated to protect depend on it.

Increasing the availability of objective information to support performance-based decision-making is an important part of making missions more effective on the ground and enhancing the safety and security of peacekeepers. This performance-based data will also help the United States allocate training and equipment to troop- and police-contributing countries to better support each country’s needs and better address the effectiveness of U.N. peacekeeping.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JOSEPHINE OLSEN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

The Legacy of Kate Puzey’s Murder

I understand that Kate Puzey’s death weighs heavily on you and I appreciate the concern that you have expressed, throughout your confirmation, for this tragedy. I would still like a better understanding of the following:

Question 1. At the time, what was your understanding and involvement in the Peace Corps’ handling of the information and events surrounding Kate Puzey’s attempts to report on the sexual abuse she witnessed during her assignment in Benin?

Answer. I had no knowledge or involvement in Peace Corps’ handling of the information surrounding Kate Puzey’s attempts to report on the fraternization and sexual abuse she heard about during her assignment in Benin.

Question 2. At what point did you become aware of Kate Puzey’s situation?

Answer. I became aware of Kate’s murder on/about March 12, 2009. After receiving preliminary information of the events that took place in Benin, on March 24, 2009 I asked Peace Corps’ Inspector General to conduct a thorough investigation into the circumstances surrounding the matter. The Inspector General issued his report on May 7, 2009. I developed an understanding of the events in Benin upon receipt of the Inspector General’s report.
Question 3. As Acting Director, did you administer any disciplinary action to anyone along the chain of command who mishandled Kate Puzey’s attempts to report abuse?

Answer. In 2009, Peace Corps ended employment and contractual relations with individuals in Benin who were involved in the management of or mishandling of Kate’s communications and individuals in Benin arrested in connection with her murder.

Question 4. How should the Peace Corps have handled the entire case surrounding Kate Puzey differently?

Answer. In retrospect, I believe Peace Corp Benin staff should have paid more immediate attention to the concerns raised by Kate; should have taken immediate measures to ensure Kate’s safety pending inquiries and corrective actions; and, most importantly, should have taken steps to handle Kate’s communications with more discretion and care.

Question 5. Are you confident that the necessary reforms have been made to prevent such an incident (i.e. Peace Corps volunteers or employees who want or need to help, or who want to report abuse, and protections for whistleblowers) from happening again?

Answer. Yes. The reforms and policy changes established and implemented in response to the Kate Puzey Peace Corps Protection Act of 2011, including those expressly addressing Volunteer confidentiality and whistleblowing, provide safeguards against similar incidents.

Question 6. As the Acting Director of the Peace Corps at the time of these incidents, what responsibility do you take for how the Peace Corps handled the incidents surrounding Kate Puzey?

Answer. As Acting Director at the time of Kate’s murder, I was responsible for all matters at the Peace Corps. However, as I explained above, I was not aware or involved in the events leading up to Kate’s tragic death. While I continue to mourn the loss of Kate, I know that I ordered a timely investigation into the matter and took corrective actions where warranted. If I am confirmed, I assure you I will vigorously advance and, where appropriate, improve upon all measures to ensure the safety and health of Peace Corps volunteers.

Maximizing Volunteer Skillsets

The Peace Corps attracts highly talented and motivated individuals who want to put their skills to work to demonstrate the U.S.’s goodwill and generosity. It is important for the Peace Corps to address development needs by utilizing volunteers with most useful skillsets.

Question 7. How are volunteers’ expertise tailored to their Peace Corps assignments?

Answer. A considerable amount of work goes into matching Peace Corps Volunteer’s skills, among other attributes, with where they will have the most impact while serving. A combination of Peace Corps’ deep understanding of the development needs of host countries, targeted recruiting, knowledge of priorities at the community level, programming and training play critical roles in the agency’s unique ability to precisely match volunteers with work assignments.

Question 8. What efforts does the Peace Corps make to recruit volunteers with specific skills sets based on specific country needs?

Answer. Peace Corps’ Office of Volunteer Recruitment and Selection works to recruit potential applicants who possess the skills that host countries have identified as necessary to complete specific projects. Peace Corps incorporates this information into its annual recruitment strategy and implementation plan. Peace Corps also has the ability to modify its recruitment outreach to adapt to new requests.

Question 9. Understanding that the Peace Corps provides volunteers based on proposed needs as determined by host countries, what influence or advice does the Peace Corps provide to host countries on accepting volunteers with specific expertise that could help address specialized needs in certain communities?

Answer. Peace Corps Country Directors and program staff maintain close working relationships with host country governments and partner agencies and are deeply versed in with the development needs in countries where the agency operates. Peace Corps works within the parameters of six program sectors: education; health; community and economic development; agriculture; youth; and environment, and places volunteers in sites according to community need and technical skillsets.

Question 10. Do you believe it to be appropriate for the Peace Corps to advise host countries on their development needs?
Answer. Peace Corps does not advise host countries on their development or other needs. Rather, the agency works closely with stakeholders in the above mentioned six programming sectors to determine where Peace Corps volunteers can best help countries meet their development needs.

Opening and Terminating Peace Corps Missions

During your tenure as Acting Director the Peace Corps you opened several new missions.

Question 11. What is the operational status of the missions you opened during your time as Acting Director of the Peace Corps?

Answer. During my time as Acting Director, Peace Corps did not open any new posts.

Question 12. Do you intend, or want, to open new Peace Corps missions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will conduct a full country portfolio review to both make certain that Peace Corps is sending volunteers to interested countries where they are most needed and where they stand poised to achieve greatest impact.

Question 13. If so, how would you allocate resources, based on the President's FY 19 Budget request for Peace Corps that represents a 3.4 percent reduction from FY 17 enacted amounts, to make this possible?

Answer. The country portfolio review will ensure that Peace Corp volunteers are working in countries where they are delivering the best return on investment for American taxpayers.

Question 14. In any instance where the Peace Corps finds it needs to terminate missions, will you commit to informing Congress about these decisions and to the development and execution of a strategic and gradual process to ending missions?

Answer. Yes, I will most certainly inform Congress.

Diversity

Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity.

Question 15. What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors and managers within the Peace Corps are fostering workplaces that are diverse and inclusive?

Answer. The Peace Corps actively supports a culture of inclusion that builds on the strengths of the diversity of America and of the countries where volunteers serve. I will work to ensure that the agency continues to reflect the population of the United States.

Question 16. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Peace Corps?

Answer. Increasing the number of minority Volunteer applicants was an objective of the agency's 2014–2018 strategic plan. Since then, the agency has achieved its goal of increasing the number to 35 percent. If confirmed, I will continue to work to strengthen diversity and inclusion across the agency.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Hon. Josephine Olsen by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Since taking my oath as a Volunteer, I have been committed to upholding Peace Corps' mission and three goals. As the director of the University of Maryland, Baltimore Center for Global Education Initiatives, I taught international social work, global social policy, and issues in global women’s and children’s health. As I stated in my confirmation hearing, my passion is supporting the Peace Corps mission to work directly with disadvantaged populations overseas and better the lives of individuals in the communities and countries where its volunteers serve.

Sexual Assault

Question 2. What additional work is necessary to advance Peace Corps' Sexual Assault, Risk Reduction, and Response Program?

Answer. Peace Corps can continue to be more proactive in providing information about sexual assault prevention and awareness to volunteers, staff, and counterparts. The agency can continue to advance the impressive work of its Sexual Assault Risk Reduction and Response Program (SARRR) and Office of Victim Advocacy (OVA) by continually evaluating the impact of its efforts and making necessary improvements accordingly.

Question 3. How will you approach redefining the Peace Corps culture to be a trauma-informed organization, specifically as it relates to sexual assault?

Answer. I believe the Peace Corps is committed to continuing its evolution as a trauma-informed agency. It is my understanding that SARRR and OVA staff have the expertise to and are delivering trauma-informed care at both individual and systems levels. If confirmed, I will support the agency’s endeavors to use this lens in all aspects of the program, from policy development to training to individual victim response.

Question 4. Understanding that you are committed to establishing a culture of safety within the Peace Corps, how should the Peace Corps pond to Peace Corps Volunteer reports of living or working in hostile environments where they are experiencing physical, mental, or sexual abuse or harassment?

Answer. There is no higher priority for the Peace Corps than the safety and security of its volunteers. I am fully committed to working to ensure that the agency further upgrades and implements comprehensive, Volunteer-centered policies for safety and security, including thorough procedures to train and guide staff who respond to harassment or abuse reports. I will work to ensure that volunteers have the training and information they need to report all types of safety and security violations, and staff have the resources they need to respond.

Diversity

Question 5. While the Peace Corps has done an admirable job to improve the diversity of its recruits, including increasing recruitment at Historically Black Colleges and Universities, what steps do you think the Peace Corps must take to reduce attrition among get accepted recruits who ultimately decide not to take their Peace Corps assignment?

Answer. The agency can continue to advance efforts to strengthen its culture of inclusion and openness in fielding and supporting a Volunteer corps that reflects the rich diversity of our country. This includes the integration of comprehensive intercultural competence, diversity, and inclusion, as noted in the agency’s 2018–2022 Strategic Plan. In addition, the agency can take proactive steps to reduce minority attrition rates by providing personal attention to and comprehensive information to interested candidates about the long-term benefits of Volunteer service, including the competitive career skills they can develop while serving as a Volunteer. Peace Corps can also provide more support and services to returned Peace Corps volunteers to help them prepare for jobs in multiple fields and sectors, tapping into the network of more than a quarter million returned volunteers.

Question 6. What do you believe are the barriers most accepted volunteers who opt out of accepting an volunteer assignment, or drop out somewhere along the application and acceptance process, and what should the Peace Corps do to alleviate these barriers of entry into the Peace Corps?

Answer. More research and analysis remains to be done. However, often accepted candidates withdraw because of personal reasons, alternative job opportunities, presumed costs associated with service, and health and safety concerns. Peace Corps can always take more action to help ensure Americans from all backgrounds are able to serve. If confirmed, I commit to working with you, your staff, and other Members of Congress to find solutions to the barriers that impact accepted applicants’ decision to withdraw.

Question 7. If confirmed, will you condemn and oppose policies and practices that are derogatory and discriminatory on the basis of race, religion, nationality, gender, sexual orientation, or gender identity?

Answer. Yes. I will comply with anti-discrimination laws and regulations to promote a professional work environment.

Care for Returned Volunteers

Question 8. Will you commit to working with the Department of Labor to improve the handling and dispensation of healthcare benefits to return volunteers, especially to those return volunteers who become disabled as a result of their service?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the Department of Labor and other stakeholders to ensure returned Peace Corps volunteers who suffered a disability while serving have the appropriate information to file a claim with the Department of Labor. Additionally, I will support Peace Corps’ efforts to streamline the filing and adjudication process. Promoting health services for Peace Corps volunteers and returned volunteers will be one of my priorities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ERIK BETHEL BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. The U.S. Alternate Executive Director represents the United States Government as the largest shareholder of the World Bank. This individual is charged with conveying U.S. positions and priorities to World Bank management and other board members. In your view, from a U.S. perspective, should the World Bank continue to lend money to China? If so, what is the rationale for supporting World Bank lending to one of the world’s largest economies and a leading strategic competitor of the United States? Over the last several decades, the geopolitical and economic landscape has changed considerably. One of the most visible transformations has occurred in China—a country that currently has the world’s second-largest GDP. Given the marked changes in China’s income and financial capacity, including ready access to international capital markets and domestic resources, it would be wise to adjust World Bank lending policies accordingly. In particular, China’s role needs to shift from borrower to donor.

Answer. Currently, the United States only supports lending to China that addresses the country’s poorest regions, and if confirmed, I will continue to ensure that U.S. legislation concerning World Bank lending to China is followed. While the World Bank’s high standards and knowledge can provide important benefits to people in the poorest regions of China, I will work to encourage the World Bank to do more to provide these benefits through non-lending activities, such as reimbursable technical assistance.

Question 2. What is your view on the “graduation” of countries from International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD)-lending status? How should the World Bank consider ending its formal lending relationship with upper middle-income countries? How does the current graduation criteria apply to China?

Answer. The World Bank should focus its resources on poorer countries with less access to other sources of finance, and where its work can have the greatest impact on growth and poverty reduction. Furthermore, “graduation” should be viewed as a status symbol that countries embrace, as it would indicate a successful implementation of sound economic policies.

If confirmed, I will press the World Bank to more rigorously apply its Graduation Policy. This entails: (1) that the World Bank conduct in-depth and credible assessments of a given country’s key institutions in order to understand any gaps to graduation; and (2) focus any activities within the countries that have crossed the income threshold on those remaining gaps to graduation. I will also push the World Bank to set a limit on the amount of overall IBRD finance that can be allocated to countries above the graduation income threshold, thereby reserving scarce development resources for the countries that need the most support.

In 2016, China crossed the graduation-eligible income threshold (currently set at $6,895 GNI per capita for FY 2018). Once a country crosses this income threshold, the World Bank is expected to begin graduation discussions to assess a country’s ability to access external capital markets on reasonable terms and its progress in establishing key institutions for economic and social development.

Question 3. What in your view are the strategic consequences of the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB) for the World Bank?

Answer. The AIIB presents both a risk and an opportunity to the World Bank. There are substantial infrastructure needs in Asia, and the AIIB can play a role in addressing this financing gap. However, these investments must be conducted using high standards for environmental and social protections as well as procurement. Furthermore AIIB-financed projects should not place an unsustainable debt burden on the recipient country.

World Bank projects follow the high standards that we view are essential. One method of increasing financing available for infrastructure while at the same time addressing the social environmental and governance issues mentioned above, is by allowing the AIIB to provide co-financing to World Bank designed and managed projects. This can be a means of effectively channeling the AIIB’s financial resources in a responsible manner, while ensuring that the World Bank’s high standards are applied.
Question 4. The World Bank has initiated and supported a number of programs in Yemen. If confirmed, will you ensure the World Bank keeps me and my office up to date on programs in Yemen and how we can be helpful?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed I will ensure that the WB keeps you and your office up to date on progress.

Question 5. Based on your preparation for this hearing and your experience in investment banking, would you please describe how the World Bank uses bonds and insurance to finance development? With respect to the use of bonds and insurance mechanisms to finance development, what lessons do you believe we can draw from the World Bank's experience with U.S. foreign assistance? If confirmed, will you ensure the World Bank keeps me and my office up to date on these and other innovations for financing development?

Answer. The principal means by which the World Bank uses bonds to finance development is by using its triple-A credit rating to leverage shareholder equity by up to five times in international capital markets and using the proceeds for lending to developing countries. The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA) is the World Bank's chief provider of investment guarantees and political risk insurance for non-commercial risk.

As you note, however, the World Bank has also increasingly been using innovative financial products to spur growth and support public and private sector development. Several examples include: (1) the use of catastrophe bonds to help Mexico and several Latin American countries to protect against fiscal and macroeconomic impacts of natural disasters; and (2) the Pandemic Emergency Facility managed by the World Bank that uses financing from Germany and Japan to provide insurance for low-income countries in the event of an outbreak of a virus. These examples indicate the potential for using foreign assistance to catalyze private and donor finance, though many of these innovations are relatively new and the models are untested.

If confirmed, I will work to keep you up to date on the World Bank's use of innovative financing for development purposes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SEAN CAIRNCROSS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Anti-Muslim Policies

Indonesia is the recipient of the largest MCC compact, and has the largest Muslim population in the world.

Question 1. How do you feel then-candidate Trump's call for "a total and complete shutdown of Muslims entering the United States" in December of 2015 and Executive Orders 13769 and 13780 effects the U.S. Government and MCC's work in Indonesia and other countries with large Muslim populations?

Answer. The MCC compact in Indonesia closes out in April of this year, and my understanding is that it has been largely very successful. In particular, I understand that the nutritional anti-stunting components and the procurement modernization components of the compact have and will continue to yield positive results. I am unaware of any affects that the above-referenced comments or executive order have had concerning the Indonesian compact or compacts in any other MCC countries.

I believe that MCC is an excellent representative of the U.S. Government’s foreign engagement efforts—providing hundreds of millions of U.S. taxpayer dollars on concrete projects in partner countries to reduce poverty through economic growth. If confirmed, I intend to continue MCC’s track-record of helping foreign nations build their capacity for sustainable economic growth.

Question 2. What is your personal opinion of then-candidate Trump’s statement and of EO 13769?

Answer. With respect to the above referenced comments, I do not support such a shutdown. With respect to the above referenced EO, I defer to experts in homeland security with respect to travel security matters.

White House Role

You have worked closely with the chiefs of staff of the White House going back to the presidential transition immediately following the November 2016 presidential elections.

Question 3. What was the scope of your responsibilities as the senior advisor to White House Chief of Staff Reince Priebus beginning in January 2017?
Answer. I assisted Mr. Priebus in attempting to coordinate activities of various White House components, and served as Mr. Priebus’s proxy on the Deputies and Principals committees of the National Security Council.

Question 4. Did your responsibilities change when General John Kelly assumed the position of White House Chief of Staff?

Answer. Yes; I no longer attended National Security Council meetings, including those meetings referenced in response to (a) above.

Question 5. What was, or is currently, your role in hiring White House staff, or in setting or implementing the White House’s security clearance policy?

Answer. At no time have I had a role in hiring White House staff or in setting or implementing the White House security clearance policy.

Question 6. As senior advisor to the White House chief of staff, were you aware that senior White House staff, including Rob Porter and Jared Kushner, had not been granted permanent security clearances as of the end of 2017?

Answer. No.

Question 7. Through your work within the White House, were you aware of the spousal abuse allegations against former staff secretary Rob Porter?

Answer. I have not discussed this matter with either Mr. Priebus or General Kelly.

Question 8. What was the nature of your discussions or advice on these matters?

Answer. I have not discussed this matter with either Mr. Priebus or General Kelly.

Question 9. As senior advisor to the White House chief of staff, were you aware that senior White House staff, including Rob Porter and Jared Kushner, had not been granted permanent security clearances as of the end of 2017?

Answer. No.

Question 10. If aware, were you concerned about these allegations?

Answer. [not applicable].

Question 11. Do you believe the White House has handled the manner properly?

Answer. I believe it appropriate that Mr. Porter no longer works at the White House, and that steps have been taken to improve the security clearance process.

Public Statements on Acorn as a Political Spokesperson

You have spent most of your career as political operative within the RNC, including serving as a spokesperson for the RNC and for Republican candidates. In 2008, in a report produced by NPR, you stated that ACORN, an organization that worked to register voters in minority neighborhoods, was “a quasi-criminal, Democrat-affiliated organization that willfully and openly breaks the law, is a clear and present danger to the integrity of the election process, and constitutes a threat to public safety.” Furthermore, you once stated that ACORN’s filing of lawsuits alleging voter suppression was “an abomination that attempts to subvert the very foundation on which America stand.”

Question 13. Do you still hold the opinion that ACORN is “a quasi-criminal, Democrat-affiliated organization that willfully and openly breaks the law, is a clear and present danger to the integrity of the election process, and constitutes a threat to public safety”?

Answer. I no longer believe that ACORN is any of the above.

Question 14. If so, would you please qualify these beliefs?

Answer. [not applicable].

Question 15. Why do you believe that appealing to the U.S. court system about perceived election irregularities constitutes “an abomination”?

Answer. I do not recall the specifics of this particular matter; however, I do not believe that a legitimate lawsuit to fight voter suppression is a negative.

Public Statements on Voter Fraud as a Political Spokesperson: You once defended a Republican campaign direct mailing that went out to elderly voters in Florida with a “voter registration tracking form” which listed their affiliation as “unconfirmed.” You said that the mailer was “a fundraising gimmick” that was sent to an internal mailing list. Yet, according to the St. Petersburg Times, the mailer went to numerous life-long Democrats, and Florida’s Republican Secretary of State “called the mailing ‘unfortunate’ because of its potential to make some voters question the validity of their registration.”

Question 16. Do you agree with Florida’s then-Secretary of State that telling elderly voters that their voter registration is “unconfirmed” could lead to confusion regarding their voter registration status?

Answer. I do not recall the specifics of this particular matter; however, if the St. Petersburg Times note referenced above is correct, then I do agree with Florida’s then-Secretary of State.

Public Statements on Voter Suppression as a Political Spokesperson

You once stated that a Democratic campaign flyer alleging vote suppression by Republican entities “creates uncertainty and fear among the voting public, which itself amounts to nothing less than vote suppression.”

Question 17. In your opinion, how is providing information warning about potential vote suppression equivalent to vote suppression?

Answer. I do not recall the specifics of this particular matter; however, I do not believe that a legitimate notice concerning voter suppression is a negative

Defendant in a Racial Discrimination Case

You were a defendant in a civil action in 2010 against the National Republican Senatorial committee (NSRC) that alleged discrimination based on race and a hostile work environment based on race. According to the plaintiff’s complaint, you berated the plaintiff after being told by your assistant that he had not “hopped to” when instructed to clean up trash after an event, which was not in his scope of duties, telling him that “if he did not straighten up, he would lose his home.” In your meeting with committee staff, you said that you terminated the defendant because of complaints from female employees and problems with the defendant’s honesty. The defendant had worked at the NSRC for 15 years before you terminated him.

Question 18. Do you maintain the plaintiff’s allegation to be false?

Answer. Yes.

Question 19. Were similar complaints submitted during those 15 years or did they only surface after your arrival at the NSRC?

Answer. There had been at least one incident before 2009 of which we became aware.

Question 20. If the latter, do you have an explanation for why the employee’s behavior only attracted complaints after you began working at the NSRC?

Answer. [No Response.]

Question 21. Have there ever been any other workplace-related complaints against you or any employees under your supervision? If so, how were these complaints resolved?

Answer. No.

Question 22. Do you commit to ensuring an open and fair workplace, free from hostility and discrimination?

Answer. Yes.

Question 23. Can you provide examples from your past management experience when you have created and helped maintain such an open workplace?

Answer. I have required personnel to take anti-harassment and anti-discrimination training in past organizations. I have regularly encouraged employees to raise any workplace issues with their supervisors, designated point people, and other agency leaders, and, during my time as counsel to organizations, I would regularly meet with personnel at all levels to ensure that the workplace environment was healthy.

I have also written, reviewed, and updated organizational policies and the procedural methods for dealing with potential workplace issues.

Robert Blau

On February 26, I sent a letter to the Acting MCC CEO which raised my concerns about MCC’s Vice President, Department of Compact Operations, Robert Blau. As you know, Mr. Blau made several troubling comments during an all-hands meeting last June, comments which reportedly left MCC’s dedicated and professional staff shaken and disturbed. During the meeting, Mr. Blau made comments that raise questions about his approach to and treatment of employees based on their political leanings, sexual orientation, and national origin. Furthermore, in the over eight months since the meeting, Mr. Blau has reportedly made repeated inappropriate remarks to staff, including inquiries about employees' ethnic backgrounds, with an apparent focus on minorities, and expressed his discomfort with promoting diversity.

Question 24. Do you agree that Mr. Blau's comments were inappropriate and offensive to MCC employees?

Answer. Yes.

Question 25. If reports that MCC staff have filed several complaints against Mr. Blau because of his comments with regards to race, gender, and diversity are confirmed, do you commit to review all complaints made against Mr. Blau?

Answer. Yes.

Question 26. If so, and you find upon review of the complaints that Mr. Blau's behavior has reflected poorly on the MCC's reputation for professionalism and has been detrimental to the morale of MCC employees, will you take appropriate action including, if necessary, terminating Mr. Blau's employment at the MCC?

Answer. If so, yes.

Public Comments made About Sen. McCaskill

In 2012 you said of Senator Claire McCaskill that her "sense of entitlement is troubling" and that "it seems Senator McCaskill doesn't believe the rules apply to her." In 2011 you said that a revision to her FEC report "calls into question the fact whether you can believe what she says."

Question 27. Do you still hold these opinions of Senator McCaskill?

Answer. I do not. I believe that during the 2012 cycle Senator McCaskill made a public and good faith effort to appropriately address any such 2012 cycle issues.

Diversity and Combating Hostile Work Environments

Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity.

Question 28. What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors and managers within MCC are fostering an environment that's diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will set a tone from the top of the agency that diversity is critical to effective work and highly valued, enriches the work environment, and leads to better decision making. Among other things, I will participate in diversity and inclusion refresher training sessions and will require that all senior leadership participate along with me.

Question 29. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups at the MCC?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support such staff—and promote their inclusion throughout the various MCC decision making processes.

Question 30. As a possible official of the Trump administration, will you condemn and oppose policies and practices that are derogatory and discriminatory on the basis of race, religion, nationality, gender, sexual orientation, or gender identity?

Answer. Yes.

Mr. Robert Blau

It is my understanding that many of the complaints about Mr. Blau's comments have not been reported through the MCC ethics office or other formal channels, but were relayed verbally to senior staff, who then discussed them with Mr. Blau in person. These complaints were also not included in Mr. Blau's performance evaluation. As such, there is apparently no written record cataloguing the number and nature of the alleged inappropriate and offensive comments that Mr. Blau has made to MCC staff over the past nine months.

Question 33. Given the lack of an official record of staff complaints, please explain any proactive steps you plan to take to collect, review, and evaluate concerns about Mr. Blau's comments and behavior. If confirmed, I have committed to further review of any and all complaints made against Robert Blau, verbal or written, and that I will take all appropriate steps to address this matter. This includes conversations with management and staff to fully understand the context and concerns; as well as a conversation with Robert Blau. If confirmed, I commit to working with the team at MCC in this review process.

Elliot Broidy

Question 34. During your recent tenure at the Republican National committee (RNC), did you work in any capacity with Elliot Broidy, who then served as vice chairman of the Trump Victory Fund, a joint fundraising committee between the Trump campaign and the RNC? If so, please describe the nature and extent of your interactions and communications with Mr. Broidy.

Answer. I did not work with Mr. Broidy during the 2016 election cycle.

Question 35. During your time in the White House, did you ever attend any meetings with Mr. Broidy or arrange any meetings between Mr. Broidy and other White House personnel? If so, please describe the nature of these meetings, including the date, who attended, and what was discussed.

Answer. No.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SEAN CAIRNCROSS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While protection of human rights and democracy are very important to me personally, they have not been a particular emphasis of my professional career to date. If confirmed, I look forward to promotion of these core beliefs as CEO of MCC.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in MCC compact and threshold countries? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in those countries? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to maintain and further strengthen MCC’s commitment to partnering only with countries committed to just and democratic governance and to controlling corruption. The scorecard remains a clear hurdle for countries to meet in order to be considered for compact selection. The Democratic Rights and Control of Corruption ‘hard hurdles’ provide a strong screening mechanism as well.

That said, there is room for growth in many, if not all, of MCC compact and threshold countries which is why MCC countries are held to a clear standard throughout the life-cycle of a compact and must maintain their eligibility at all times. MCC can and has suspended or terminated assistance to countries that have failed to maintain their commitment to good governance and, if confirmed, I will ensure that MCC continues to do so.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in MCC compact and threshold countries advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. As mentioned above, there is room for improvement on human rights, civil society, and democracy in many, if not all, of MCC compact and threshold countries. Often policy and institutional reforms can take time to come to fruition, particularly in developing countries and nascent democracies. I believe MCC maintains tremendous leverage in partner countries to incentivize advancements in these key areas and to hold partners to a high standard throughout the development and implementation of compact or threshold program. MCC’s leverage stems not only from the specific program, but MCC’s ability to serve as a bridge to the private sector, further mobilizing capital and bringing resources to bear. Finally, as previously mentioned, MCC can and has suspended or terminated assistance to countries that have failed to maintain their commitment to good governance which increases the agency’s leverage.

Answer. Yes.

Leadership Vision

Question 5. What is your vision for advancing MCC as a leading economic development agency?

Answer. I intend to maintain MCC’s record of data-driven, transparent, and mission focused model and seek to broaden MCC’s engagement with (1) other U.S. Government agencies; and (2) private-sector parties to maximize MCC impact in partner countries.

I also intend to leverage the incentive power that MCC has in attempting to achieve concrete policy results both before eligibility selection and also during the compact development and implementation phases.

Question 6. Aside from authorization of concurrent and subnational compacts, what do you see as the top policy reforms necessary to enhance MCC’s reach? With the rise of more middle income countries in the developing world, the world’s poor will be increasingly located in countries outside MCC’s current focus. How might the MCC respond to this changing face of global poverty?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to look for new ways to leverage MCC’s presence in various MCC decision-making partnerships and engagement with the private sector. I also see room for further collaboration with OPIC and potentially a new International Development Finance Corporation, if enacted.

Finally, I understand MCC has done considerable analysis about the agency’s country candidate pool and I look forward to reviewing in depth and consult further with stakeholders, if confirmed, before determining the best course of action and specific policy proposals.

Question 7. What is your vision for the Threshold program?

Answer. While I look forward, if confirmed, to delving into the details of the threshold program and possible next steps, I believe that the threshold program currently is an important tool to incentivize and achieve concrete policy and institutional reforms that improve the investment climate and fight corruption. Threshold programs can help a country become eligible for a compact and is an important tool for MCC to gain a sense of a potential compact country’s true commitment to achieving sustainable economic growth.

Evaluation and Accountability

Question 8. What are your priorities as they relate to furthering the agency’s leadership on transparency and evidence-based decision-making?

Answer. I intend to keep MCC at the leading edge of transparent assistance organizations. Transparency builds capacity within partner countries and builds confidence domestically that U.S. tax dollars are being used as efficiently and effectively as possible, and ultimately helps make the case for U.S. foreign engagement.

Question 9. In the State of Union, President Trump called on “Congress to pass legislation to help ensure American foreign Assistance dollars always serve American interests, and only go to our friends”. What will you do to ensure that MCC realizes this statement and ensures that foreign assistance provided by MCC “only go to our friends”? What guidance has MCC received from the White House on executing the President’s call to “ensure American foreign Assistance dollars always serve American interests, and only go to our friends”?

Answer. I intend to maintain MCC’s objective selection criteria and model. I believe that U.S. strategic interests do not dictate where MCC engages, but where MCC does engage its actions buttress and support U.S. strategic interests. Moreover, MCC’s work in the world’s best governed poorest nations will hopefully lead to more allies and strategic partnerships.

Diversity

Question 10. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

Answer. First, I will support such staff—and promote their inclusion throughout the various MCC decision making processes. I will make clear to staff and stakeholders that I value diversity—as I did during my recent testimony to this committee.

Second, I will seek to hire from as broad a pool of potential applicants as possible—internal and external MCC candidates—in order to increase both female and minority staff members at MCC. I will ensure that this goal is communicated to department and division leadership with hiring authority.
Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the MCC are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will set a tone from the top of the agency that diversity is critical to effective work and highly valued, enriches the work environment, and leads to better decision making. Among other things, I will participate in diversity and inclusion refresher training sessions and will require that all senior leadership participate along with me.

Question 12. If confirmed, will you condemn and oppose policies and practices at MCC that are derogatory and discriminatory on the basis of race, religion, nationality, gender, sexual orientation, or gender identity?

Answer. Yes.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 13. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. Yes.

Question 14. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. Yes.

Question 15. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in MCC compact and threshold countries?

Answer. No.

Host Country Ownership

MCC’s model puts country constraints, priorities, and systems at the center of its work—leading to greater sustainability of development gains over time.

Question 16. How would you deepen the MCC’s approach to country ownership and sustainability of impact at the agency?

Answer. I believe that partner country financial commitment, such as Nepal contributing $130 million to their compact program, is an important demonstration of country ownership. I would seek to grow partner country resource mobilization. Also important is making sure that there is a strong process to gain civil society buy-in during the development phase which I intend to maintain and look for ways to improve.

Question 17. How might you better ensure that countries are able to build on MCC’s legacy and continue the oversight, management, funding, monitoring, and evaluation of programs after MCC leaves?

Answer. One of MCC’s lasting legacies is the transfer of knowledge and the processes through which a successful project is run: open procurement; appropriate taxation; maintenance funds, etc. Much of this is instituted through the country “Accountable Entities”—referred to as MCAs. I believe that working with host governments to gain a commitment to preserving the MCA best practices beyond the life of the compact is important to continuing the oversight, management, funding, monitoring, and evaluation of MCC projects post close-out date.

Question 18. What role do you believe host countries and local partners, that MCC works with, should play determining development projects and goals that involve MCC?

Answer. Host country leadership in identifying economic constraints and targeting constraints has been a vital component of MCC’s success to date. While this must continue, MCC should fully engage to ensure that the process moves forward expeditiously, and that delay is not created by an overreliance on process. Ultimately, the partner country must support the project to achieve sustainability.

USAID

Question 19. Have you discussed USAID’s “Strategic Transitions” initiative with Administrator Green?

Answer. I have not discussed Strategic Transitions with Ambassador Green.

Question 20. What role do you see MCC playing in realizing the aims of the “Strategic Transitions initiative”?
Answer. I will be happy to respond to the Senator, or the Senator’s staff once I have discussed the matter with Ambassador Green.

Question 21. What is your vision for how MCC and USAID should engage to best leverage their individual strengths, in support of U.S. national interests?

Answer. MCC’s singular mission of reducing poverty through economic growth occupies a critical stage on a partner country’s development arc. USAID’s work at poverty alleviation and disaster relief occupy the front end of that arc, and MCC’s engagement with a country is an indicator that a country has moved along that arc to the point of (1) attempting to embrace policies that reflect good governance, economic freedom, and investment in its people; and (2) targeting key constraints on economic growth and developing an MCC-funded investment that addresses those constraints with a goal of alleviating poverty. Conditions in countries at this critical stage still vary widely—with MCC engaged everywhere from Niger—one of the poorest countries in the world—to Georgia and Morocco.

This also does not mean that MCC and USAID do not work in many of the same countries or otherwise closely coordinate programming where possible. Good examples of this include MCC’s complementary work with Power Africa and PEPFAR in countries where MCC is engaged. This reflects an efficient model of U.S. Government assistance agencies working closely to avoid redundancy, stay on mission, and maximize impact.

Ultimately, MCC’s work should help build capacity for sustainable economic growth, and consolidate policy gains in a partner country. This supports broader U.S. strategic interests by building strategic partnerships and countering competing global development models that are being pursued, in particular from China. This dovetails with the administration’s goals as expressed in Pillar IV—in particular encouraging aspiring partner countries—of the National Security Strategy and in the focus on global development finance that includes the Development Finance Initiative. While U.S. strategic interests do not dictate where MCC works, where MCC does work the agency supports and bolsters U.S. strategic interests.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SEAN CAIRNCROSS BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

The Honduran electoral commission in December 2017 declared President Juan Orlando Hernández winner of Honduras’ presidential election despite widespread reports of voter irregularities. The Los Angeles Times January 27 reported that policy brutality and post-election protest crackdowns by the police had not been investigated and on February 16, the leader of an international anti-corruption panel in Honduras resigned citing rising hostility from the Honduran Government. These reports indicate that the Honduran Government has failed to fight corruption or support human rights, important indicators for Honduras to receive U.S. assistance through the Millennium Challenge Corporation. Control of corruption is an especially critical indicator for MCC funding.

Question 1. How will you ensure that government’s that fail to respect human rights and appear hostile to tackling corruption remain ineligible for MCC Compact funding?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to maintain and further strengthen MCC’s commitment to partnering only with countries committed to just and democratic governance and to controlling corruption. The scorecard remains a clear hurdle for countries to meet in order to be considered for compact selection. The Democratic Rights and Control of Corruption ‘hard hurdles’ provide a strong screening mechanism to help ensure that the types of countries you describe in your question do not receive MCC compact funding. In addition, countries are held to a clear standard throughout the life-cycle of a compact and must maintain their eligibility at all times. MCC can and has suspended or terminated assistance to countries that have failed to maintain their commitment to good governance and, if confirmed, I will ensure that MCC continues to do so.

Question 2. Are there mechanisms to evaluate Threshold funding to ensure that U.S. assistance is not being used by governments to oppress their people? What internal controls are in place to ensure that U.S. funding, given the MCC model, is not diverted through corrupt means?

Answer. Threshold programs incorporate numerous accountability mechanisms to ensure that U.S. assistance is tied to results and is only used only for its intended purposes. These mechanisms include establishing a special implementation unit, known as an accountable entity, through which technical assistance and other goods and services are competitively procured and paid for only when strict policies and procedures are met. Accountable entities prepare anti-fraud and corruption plans to adhere to and their financial statements are audited by third-party firms. MCC also provides its own regular oversight of program results and in certain cases can withhold funding if conditions related to reform objectives are not met.

In addition to both financial controls within the Threshold program and an evaluation of a country’s Control of Corruption score on MCC’s scorecard, MCC maintains a strong eligibility monitoring program whereby country actions with respect to political rights, civil liberties, and control of corruption are closely tracked. Should a country engage in a pattern of actions inconsistent with MCC’s eligibility criteria, I would not hesitate to recommend a suspension or termination of assistance to that country.

Question 3. Is the scorecard an adequate predictor of a country’s ability to successfully implement development projects?

Answer. I believe the scorecard is a strong tool for assisting MCC in identifying countries with policy environments that will allow MCC’s funding to be effective in reducing poverty and promoting economic growth. MCC evaluates performance in three areas—Ruling Justly, Investing in People, and Encouraging Economic Freedom—using independent, third-party policy indicators.

In particular, the ‘hard hurdles’ on Democratic Rights and Control of Corruption help monitor whether the countries MCC partners with are ensuring freedom of expression, the rule of law, and open political participation for all, as well as whether public officials are using public office for private gain. This wealth of information is invaluable to MCC as it evaluates countries during the annual selection process.

It is important to note that while the scorecard is an important component of MCC’s selection process, it is not the only component. My understanding is that the Board relies on a full suite of ‘supplemental information’ that provides further context and information on the suitability of potential compact partners.

No single tool will ever be a perfect predictor of future success, and the scorecard is no exception to that. However, it remains a powerful tool and one that has played an important role in helping MCC achieve its impressive track record.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD

SUBMITTED TO SEAN CAIRNCROSS BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. What do you see as the development goals of this administration? Where does MCC fit in with USAID and the broader development goals of this administration?

Answer. MCC’s singular mission of reducing poverty through economic growth occupies a critical stage on a partner country’s development arc. USAID’s work at poverty alleviation and disaster relief occupy the front end of that arc, and MCC’s engagement with a country is an indicator that a country has moved along that arc to the point of (1) attempting to embrace policies that reflect good governance, economic freedom, and investment in its people; and (2) targeting key constraints on economic growth and developing an MCC-funded investment that addresses those constraints with a goal of alleviating poverty. Conditions in countries at this critical stage still vary widely—with MCC engaged everywhere from Niger—one of the poorest countries in the world—to Georgia and Morocco.

This also does not mean that MCC and USAID do not work in many of the same countries or otherwise closely coordinate programming where possible. Good examples of this include MCC’s complementary work with Power Africa and PEPFAR in countries where MCC is engaged. This reflects an efficient model of U.S. Government assistance agencies working closely to avoid redundancy, stay on mission, and maximize impact.

Ultimately, MCC’s work should help build capacity for sustainable economic growth and consolidate policy gains in a partner country. This supports broader U.S. strategic interests by building strategic partnerships and countering competing global development models that are being pursued, in particular from China. This dovetails with the administration’s goals as expressed in Pillar IV—in particular encouraging aspiring partner countries—of the National Security Strategy and in the focus on global development finance that includes the Development Finance Initiative. While U.S. strategic interests do not dictate where MCC works, MCC supports and bolsters U.S. strategic interests where it does work.
Question 2. This administration has been reluctant to criticize foreign leaders for human rights and democracy issues. Will this impact the range of countries the MCC is willing to do business with?

Answer. In order for a country to be eligible for MCC engagement, they must first pass the MCC scorecard and then be selected by the MCC board of directors as eligible to develop a program. The MCC’s scorecard indicators are objective third-party indicators that include a “hard hurdle” democratic rights indicator. This indicator consists of a civil liberties and political rights indicators, and is designed to take into account human rights and democracy issues.

Question 3. As Senator Menendez raised in his letter of February 23 to Jonathan Nash, Acting MCC CEO, there are reports that a senior Trump administration MCC appointee (Mr. Blau) has made employees uncomfortable by taking hostile stances towards diversity—including using language diminishing efforts to ensure fair workplace representation and treatment of ethnic minorities, LGBTQ, and women. If confirmed how, specifically, would you address this issue?

Answer. I will conduct an appropriate review to make certain I know the facts. I will make clear to both the individual in question and to all MCC staff that I find such language unacceptable. I will take all appropriate steps to address the matter.

Question 4. You said during the hearing that you value diversity and believe that it makes for a stronger workplace. As the leader of the MCC what specific steps would you take to ensure that diversity is highly valued within the organization? What oversight and metrics would you seek to consult to ensure that conscious and unconscious bias is being adequately addressed?

Answer. First, I will make clear to staff and stakeholders that I value diversity—as I did during my recent testimony to this committee. Second, I will seek to hire from as broad a pool of potential applicants as possible—including internal and external MCC candidates—in order to increase both female and minority staff members at MCC. I will ensure that this goal is communicated to department and division leadership with hiring authority. Finally, I will review MCC’s overall hiring process to ensure it is focused on and equipped to realize this goal.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO SEAN CAIRNCROSS BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

MCC in Africa

As Ranking Member of the Africa subcommittee of the SFRC, I am pleased to see that the MCC has developed compacts with 17 sub-Saharan African countries in the last 14 years.

Question 1. Can you discuss the potential MCC Threshold Programs in Africa and how you see them as a gateway to a full compact?

Answer. Threshold programs provide countries with a potential gateway to a compact by advancing policy reforms and strengthening institutions to address the most binding constraints to economic growth. Threshold programs complement the “MCC Effect” created by the scorecard and allow MCC to assess the opportunity for an impactful and cost-effective partnership before committing to a larger compact.

My understanding is that MCC is currently working with three African countries through its Threshold Program—Sierra Leone, Togo, and The Gambia. The $44 million threshold program with Sierra Leone is creating the foundation for more effective and financially sustainable provision of critical water and electricity services. A program with Togo to address critical constraints in ICT and land tenure is pending board approval. In December 2017, MCC selected The Gambia for a threshold program, recognizing the watershed moment for democracy in that country.

I am particularly interested in the MCC Compact with Niger, especially because I believe we are overly relying on our DoD presence to bring stability in Niger without an overarching political strategy to stabilize the Sahel, provide for sustainable livelihoods, and empower civilian leaders.
Question 2. Can you tell me more about MCC compact in Niger and how you hope it contributes to a more stable Sahel?

Answer. In July 2016, MCC signed a $437 million compact with Niger focused on strengthening the agricultural sector. My understanding is that MCC is working with the Government of Niger to rehabilitate and develop irrigation systems to increase crop yields, promote sustainable livestock and improve market access for farmers. In addition, the compact will help establish a national water resource management plan and natural resource and land use management plans, and build local capacity. In Niger, the agricultural sector employs more than 80 percent of the population so MCC’s compact is aimed at increasing revenues for mainly small-scale farmers and creating jobs. These economic opportunities are expected to support stability through sustainable livelihoods and build capacity for local communities.

Question 3. Is Niger’s 2017 downgrading on Freedom House’s “political rights” index expected to affect Niger’s MCC eligibility or compact implementation?

Answer. While Niger’s performance on the FY 18 scorecard has not changed Niger’s current eligibility status, I understand that MCC communicated clearly to the Government of Niger that it was concerned about the three-point decline in Niger’s Political Rights score, even though Niger continues to pass the scorecard. Passing the scorecard is a necessary, but not sufficient, condition of MCC eligibility. If confirmed, I will ensure that MCC continues to closely monitor political rights in Niger.

Question 4. How, if confirmed, will you advise U.S. diplomatic messaging to leverage MCC investments in order to prevent more democratic backsliding in Niger?

Answer. During compact development and during the current implementation stage, I understand that MCC has closely coordinated with the U.S. Embassy in Niamey and with other USG agencies active in Niger. They remain in sync on messaging, as MCC does in all partner countries. During compact implementation in any country, MCC continues to monitor a partner country’s performance in various areas, including democratic governance and consistently messages that progress on implementation must be accompanied by strong policy performance.

MCC’s investments are always subject to countries maintaining their commitment to MCC’s values of democratic governance, which includes guarantees of freedom of expression, the rule of law, and open political participation for all. One thing I admire about MCC is its willingness to suspend or terminate assistance to countries that fail to adhere to this commitment. If confirmed, I will advise continued messaging to the Government of Niger that MCC is closely monitoring events on the ground with a focus on the fair treatment of the political opposition and civil society, and on the rule of law. Significant further deterioration of political rights could adversely affect MCC’s partnership with Niger.

THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 2018

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:05 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Ron Johnson, presiding.

Present: Senators Johnson [presiding], Gardner, and Murphy.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. Good morning. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

We gather today to consider three nominations. Mr. Robert Pence is the President’s nominee to be Ambassador to Finland. Dr. Judy Shelton is the nominee to be U.S. Executive Director of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. And Mr. Trevor Traina is the President’s nominee to be the Ambassador to Austria.

I want to welcome all the nominees and their families and friends. I want to thank all of you for your willingness to serve this nation. I certainly congratulate you for your nomination by President Trump, and I will let you introduce your family and friends in your opening statements.

Before moving to those opening statements, I would also like to welcome our distinguished colleague from Texas, Senator John Cornyn, who will introduce our nominee to be Ambassador to Finland. Senator Cornyn?

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Well, thank you, Chairman Johnson and Senator Murphy. And to members of the committee, I am honored to be here.

Let me just start by congratulating all three of the nominees for their nomination and their willingness to serve. But I am especially proud to introduce Robert Pence to serve as the United States Ambassador to Finland.

Bob is the founder and chairman of the board of the Pence Group, a development company, but he is much more than just a successful businessman. He is a leader whose civic engagement is extensive and rooted in a deeply held sense of public obligation. For example, Bob serves on the board of directors for a foundation run by the actor, Gary Sinise, that supports our veterans and our first responders.

He cares deeply about education and the arts too, having serving on the boards at George Mason University, American University, and the Kennedy Center here in Washington. He has taught at Georgetown and Yale, and quite incredibly, he has got not only a law degree but multiple master's degrees in subjects like Italian and Renaissance literature. You might literally say Bob is a Renaissance man. But I do believe he is still working, he said, on last chapter on his Ph.D. dissertation on Dante.

In short, Bob exhibits all the finest attributes of a diplomatic leader. He is an entrepreneur and a lawyer. He is an advocate, an educator, and a lifelong student of the world and history. He knows how to collaborate with all different types of people and has plenty of relevant experience that will aid him in this new capacity.

Finland, as the committee knows, is an increasingly important country geopolitically because it shares an 800-mile border with Russia. It is on the front lines of Russia's attempts at hybrid warfare, its attempts to influence the news, as well as diplomacy and elections. And there is a lot we can learn from Finland's experience combating those sorts of activities.

Further, the Helsinki Accords show that Finland has long been near the center of global politics both as a host of and participant in them, and more recently Finland assumed the 2-year rotating chairmanship of the Arctic Council. Finland is a valuable partner and a close friend of the United States. We work together on issues like trade. In the defense context, we recently signed a bilateral defense cooperation agreement.

Our relations with Finland are underpinned by our shared democratic values and close ties between our people. About 700,000 Americans trace their ancestry to Finland, and 200,000 Fins visit the United States each year. Bob, I am convinced, understands these connections acutely.

In short, I am grateful to Bob and Suzy for responding to the call to public service and the President's offer of a nomination of this important position. And I am here to offer my unequivocal endorsement of Bob Pence as the next Ambassador to Finland. And I appreciate your consideration of this nomination.

Senator Johnson. Well, thanks, Senator Cornyn. You are certainly welcome to stay, but we know you have a busy schedule, so you are also free to go on to your schedule.

Finland and Austria are important benchmarks for the strength of transatlantic relations. Since the end of the Cold War, Austria and Finland have followed clear Western trajectories. Both are pluralistic democracies and have robust market economies. Both joined the European Union in 1995 where Austria has the sixth and Finland has the seventh highest GDP per capita. And both joined NATO's Partnership for Peace program in the mid-1990s, allowing them to develop working relationships with the alliance. Last year, the U.S., Finland, and other NATO and EU members established a center in Helsinki dedicated to countering cyber attacks, disinformation, and propaganda, which we all realize is a huge problem particularly in Eastern Europe.
Austria has been a strong U.S. partner in promoting stability in Southeast Europe and has advocated forcefully for incorporating the rest of the Western Balkans into the EU.

Austria and Finland have also supported EU sanctions on Russia for its actions in Ukraine despite considerable cost to their economies.

Austria and Finland’s clear embrace of the West is a testament to the strength of Western institutions and transatlantic solidarity.

If confirmed as the highest representatives of the United States to these countries, you will both be tasked with maintaining and strengthening these important relationships.

The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development was founded to aid the transition of former communist countries from planned to free market economies. Unlike other multinational development banks, it is tasked with promoting private sector development in countries that are committed to democratic governance and market economies. As the largest single shareholder, the United States must use its influence to promote sound investments and honor that bank’s unique mandate.

Before introducing the nominees, I would like to recognize our distinguished ranking member for his comments. Senator Murphy?

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER MURPHY,
U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Welcome to all of you. I want to thank our nominees and their families for being here today. You are all going to serve in different roles, but the common thread binding this panel all together is your responsibility for furthering our transatlantic relationship with Europe. These relationships remain close. They are irreplaceable, but they are strained right now, as you will find when you get on the ground.

This is the first hearing that we have had since the President submitted his budget for the coming year, and it is just unbelievable that this attack on diplomacy and on the State Department continues with another proposed 30 percent cut to the State Department and USAID. At a time of rising instability with refugee flows at their highest since World War II, now is the time to be investing in the tools that help manage these challenges not proposing dramatic, drastic, and draconian cuts. There is no other agency in the Federal Government today that has been targeted by this administration like the State Department, and you are going to feel that when you are on the ground. If the United States is not leading, then countries like Russia and China, Saudi Arabia and Iran fill the void, bringing with them values that look nothing like the ones that we bring to the table when we are present.

If confirmed, Mr. Pence and Mr. Traina, you are going to be representing the United States in Finland and Austria. While neither of these countries are members of NATO, both Finland and Austria are important partners to the alliance, and Finland in particular is seeking a much closer relationship with us.

Equally critical is our representation on the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. This is a bank that has been focused historically on Eastern Europe, the post-Soviet republics, but more recently on North Africa and the Middle East. And in these places, a strong private sector is so vital to political stability that often, as we know, accrues to our national security.

Thank you all for being here today, and I really look forward to your testimony.

Senator JOHNSTON, Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Again, I want to thank the nominees and their families and encourage you in your opening statements to introduce your families and friends. I do not think I can add really to Senator Cornyn's introduction of Mr. Pence, but Mr. Pence, if you would like to present your opening statement.

STATEMENT OF ROBERT PENCE, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE THE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF FINLAND

Mr. Pence, Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Donald Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Finland. I am also grateful to Senator Cornyn for his gracious introduction of me to this committee.

I am humbled by the President's selection of me for this position and for the support of Vice President Mike Pence, who I might add is no relation of mine. I relish the opportunity of working with Secretary Rex Tillerson and the competent and dedicated women and men of the State Department at Mission Finland and in the various federal agencies whose portfolios touch and concern Finland. If confirmed, I will direct all of my energies in meeting the trust and responsibility placed upon me.

I am here today with the love of my life Suzy; our three sons, Steve, Geoff, and Brian; and their children. Our parents Hank and Stella and Bud and Dolly have passed on. The memory of them and the love, guidance, and support that they and the rest of our family have given me makes my being here today possible.

I am a lifelong Washingtonian. I built a career over the past 47 years in commercial real estate. My work has led me to develop many of the management and diplomatic skills I expect to call upon, if confirmed. My projects have involved substantial interactions with political, administrative, civic, and business interests. If confirmed, I look forward to working with President Sauli Niinisto, Prime Minister Juha Sipila, Foreign Minister Timo Soini, and the Finnish people and their civic, cultural, educational, military, and religious institutions.

I am most proud of my part in establishing the Gary Sinise Foundation, which supports veterans, first responders, and their families. I have also supported our troops through my work with the American University Law school, and I am proud to have participated in launching a program that allows those who have served honorably in the military of the United States of America to attend our law school tuition free.

It has been an incredible honor to have served on various boards of the Kennedy Center and with my wife Suzy as members of the Kennedy Center International committee, which travels abroad to advance and create the Kennedy Center Gold Medal in the Arts program. That program is at the root of our relations with other nations, their citizens, and their cultures. The nexus of my professional and private interests is most evident in my role as chair of the construction committee of the new building at the Kennedy Center. You see it rising on the Potomac today.

If confirmed, I will bring similar dedication and leadership to America’s relationship with the Government and people of Finland. In December, Finland celebrated the 100th anniversary as a sovereign nation. Finland has transformed itself from a farm and forest economy to a diversified modern industrial economy. To do so, it needed a highly educated and technically trained workforce. It has succeeded.

If confirmed, I will employ all of my professional and philanthropic and other experiences to advance our nation’s interest and build upon our alliance with Finland.

America has welcomed Finland’s integration into western economic and political structures. Finland provided the venue for the Helsinki Accords of 1975, the terms and conditions of which Russia has not yet fully complied. Finland joined the European Union in 1995 and, while not a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, it joined NATO’s Partnership for Peace program and was designated a NATO Enhanced Opportunity Partner at the 2014 Wales Summit. Finland is a member of both the Arctic Council and the Northern Group, two alliances formed to deal with the complex military, commercial, and ecological issues confronting the area.

The important strategic relationship the United States has today with Finland is reflected in the numerous high-level engagements over the past year to include reciprocal visits to Finland by Defense Secretary Mattis and a visit to Washington to meet President Trump by President Niinistö. Finland’s security concerns match our own: North Korea’s escalating armaments development, the deteriorating situation in the Ukraine and Crimea, and the threat of Russian and Chinese naval exercises in the Baltic and the Arctic.

For a country of about 5.5 million people with an expanding economy and a GDP of $240 billion, Finland punches far above its weight.

If confirmed by the Senate, I assure you of my commitment to enforce Secretary Tillerson’s clear mandate. My paramount obligation is to ensure the safety and security of the embassy and its personnel and their families. The events of last week in Montenegro reinforce this priority. I will also lead Mission Finland in accord with three values clearly enunciated by Secretary Tillerson: accountability, honesty, and respect.

President John Fitzgerald Kennedy famously challenged all Americans to ask, “Ask not what your country can do for you. Ask what you can do for your country.” My answer is this: I wish to take this step to pay back, in some small way, the country that has offered me so much.

Thank you for your time, and I look forward to your questions.

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the committee. It is an honor to appear before you today as President Donald Trump’s nominee to be the United States Ambassador to The Republic of Finland. I am also grateful to Senator Cornyn for his gracious introduction of me to this committee.

I am humbled by the President’s selection of me for this position, and the support of Vice President Pence—who, I might add, is not related to me. I relish the opportunity of working with Secretary Rex Tillerson and the competent and dedicated women and men of the State Department, at Mission Finland, and in the various federal agencies whose portfolios touch and concern Finland. If confirmed, I will direct all of my energies in meeting the trust and responsibly placed upon me.

I am here today with the love of my life, Suzy; our three sons Steve, Geoff and Brian; and their children. Even though my parents, Hank and Stella, and Suzy’s parents, Bud and Dolly Sarbacher, have passed on, the memory of them and the love, guidance, and support that they and the rest of our family have given me make my being here today possible.

By way of introduction, I am a life-long Washingtonian. I built a career over the past 47 years in commercial real estate. I have, either individually or with others, developed over 35 projects—all of them successful. My work has led me to develop many of the management and diplomatic skills I expect to call upon if confirmed. Each project has involved substantial interactions with local political, administrative, civic, and business interests. If confirmed, I look forward to working with President Sauli Niinisto, Prime Minister Juha Sipila, Foreign Minister Timo Soini, and the people and civic, cultural, educational, military and religious institutions of Finland.

In addition to my professional interests, I have spent much of my adult life involved in actions that enrich our society and give back to those who have sacrificed so much for our country. My philosophy has been: I follow when others lead, I lead when others cannot or will not. And I lead when no one else is around or yet involved. I am perhaps most proud of my part in establishing the Gary Sinise Foundation which supports veterans, first responders, and their families by creating unique programs that entertain, educate, inspire, strengthen, and build communities. It has been an honor to sponsor USO dinners and concerts for our troops both domestically and overseas at the Ramstein Air Force Base in Germany featuring The Beach Boys and Gary Sinise’s Lt. Dan Band. I have supported our troops as well through my work with the AU law school and am especially proud of having participated in launching a program that allows any new student who served honorably in the American military to go to the AU law school tuition free.

It has been an incredible honor to have been associated with the Kennedy Center for the past decade plus. For about twelve years I served on various boards at the Kennedy Center and with my wife Suzy have represented the Kennedy Center abroad as a part of the Kennedy Center Gold Medal in the Arts program. These week-long, intensive, high level programs get to the root of our relations with other nations, their citizens, and their cultures. The nexus of my professional and private interests is most evident in my role on the new building you see rising on the Potomac. For four years I chaired the expansion committee at the Kennedy Center, and could not be prouder of the expansion of the arts in our Nation’s capital.

If confirmed, I look forward to bringing a similar dedication and leadership to our country’s relationship with the Government and people of Finland. In December Finland celebrated its 100th anniversary as a sovereign nation. About 700,000 Americans of Finnish descent joined in the festivities. If confirmed, I look forward to further cementing the ties between our great countries. During the past years Finland has transformed itself from a farm and forest economy to a diversified modern industrial economy. To do so it needed a highly educated and technically trained workforce. It succeeded by demonstrating the unique trait that the Finns call sisu (which I take to mean an inner sense of mental and physical strength). I hope to build on my professional and philanthropic experiences to advance our Nation’s interest and build our alliance with Finland.

The United States has welcomed Finland’s integration into Western economic and political structures over the past decades. Finland provided the venue for the Helsinki Accords of 1975, the terms and conditions of which Russia has not yet fully complied. Finland joined the European Union in 1995 and, while not a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, it joined NATO’s Partnership for Peace program and was designated a NATO Enhanced Opportunity Partner at the 2014 Wales Summit. Finland shares an 833 mile border with an increasingly militant Russia, a southern border on the Baltic Sea over which Russia is attempting to extend its hegemony, and a northern border which almost reaches the Arctic Sea.
which Russia is rapidly militarizing. Finland is a member of both the Arctic Council and the Northern Group, two alliances formed to deal with the complex military, commercial, freedom of navigation, and ecological issues confronting the area.

The important strategic relationship the United States has today with Finland is reflected in the numerous high level engagements over the past year to include reciprocal visits to Finland by Defense Secretary Mattis and a visit to Washington to meet President Trump by Finland’s President Niinisto. Finland’s security concerns are consistent with our own: North Korea’s escalating armaments development, the deteriorating situation in the Ukraine, Russia’s attempted annexation of Crimea, the threat of combined Russian and Chinese naval exercises in the Baltic, and the possible adverse effects of the Nord Stream II pipeline. For a country of about 5.5 million people with an expanding economy and a GDP of about $240 billion dollars, Finland punches far above its weight.

If I am fortunate enough to be confirmed by the Senate, I can assure you of my commitment to the women and men serving our country in Finland. As Secretary Tillerson has clearly mandated, my paramount obligation is to ensure the safety and security of the embassy and its personnel and their family members. The events of last week in Montenegro reinforce this priority. I am also committed to leading Mission Finland in accord with three values enunciated by Secretary Tillerson: accountability, honesty, and respect.

In his Inaugural Address President John Fitzgerald Kennedy famously challenged all Americans to “...ask not what your country can do for you—ask what you can do for your country.” My answer is this: “I wish to take this step to pay back, in some small way, the country that has offered me so much.”

Thank you for your time and I look forward to your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Pence.

Our next nominee is Dr. Judy Shelton. Dr. Shelton is the nominee to be the Executive Director of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Dr. Shelton currently serves as chairman of the National Endowment for Democracy as a senior fellow at the Atlas Network. She was a former senior research fellow at the Hoover Institution and the author of two books on global economic developments. Dr. Shelton has testified before Congress on numerous occasions as an expert witness on international finance, banking, and monetary issues.

Dr. Shelton?

STATEMENT OF DR. JUDY SHELTON, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE UNITED STATES EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE EUROPEAN BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

Dr. SHELTON. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the committee, I am grateful for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am honored that President Trump has nominated me to serve as the U.S. Executive Director for the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Please let me take this opportunity to acknowledge the support of my husband of 40 years, Gilbert Shelton. I am thankful that our son Gibb is also here today. And I would like to recognize my mother in California, Janette Potter, who is watching along with my sisters and brothers.

More than 3 decades ago, in the mid-1980s, I was doing postdoctoral research at Stanford University after having been appointed a National Fellow by the Hoover Institution. I found myself examining Soviet economic and financial statistics that purportedly reflected the robust condition of our nation’s formidable nuclear adversary. I found it odd that the Soviet Government would go to such pains to present itself as economically self-sufficient even as its new leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, was aggressively seeking loans from the West.
What started out as a scholarly treatise evaluating the impact of Western capital on the Soviet economy turned into a hard-hitting policy book published in January 1989 with the rather startling title “The Coming Soviet Crash.” It had become apparent during the course of my research that the USSR was going bankrupt. That development had significant implications for the national security of the United States and the overarching defense strategy of the West. Urgent plans for what would become the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development were converted into reality by April 1991 to meet the challenge of an extraordinary moment, the collapse of communism in Central and Eastern Europe and the dawning of a new post-Cold War era.

From the start, the charter of the EBRD has embraced the unique mandate that only countries that are committed to democratic development are eligible to receive financing assistance. The emphasis has been on empowering the private sector to move recipient countries toward market-oriented economies and to promote entrepreneurial initiative.

And while those guiding principles have proven to be key success factors for transitioning nations, they are still met with grim resistance where authoritarian tendencies are entrenched. The expansion of bank operations into Mongolia, Turkey, Egypt, Lebanon, and other countries beyond its original region poses additional opportunities as well as potential tests.

The United States has always been and remains the bank’s largest shareholder. My objective, if confirmed, would be to ensure that the EBRD focuses on high-quality infrastructure projects that promote economic growth. At the same time, I would work with our allies to maintain high standards in the cause of freedom by demanding that countries achieve genuine progress toward democratic ideals because a nation can go bankrupt in ways other than just in the financial sense.

As a member of the board of directors of the National Endowment for Democracy, I served as the designated board expert on Russia, Ukraine, and Belarus for 9 years, from 2005 to 2014. From that perspective, I witnessed the dangers of backsliding on fundamental civil liberties and human rights. I came to deeply appreciate the importance of democratic institutions to guarantee fundamental freedoms and uphold rule of law. When the bipartisan NED board elected me chairman last year, I was honored and humbled.

Recognizing that political and economic freedom should advance hand in hand would seem to be a powerful prerequisite for vigorously representing America’s viewpoint at multilateral development and financial institutions. Democracy and free enterprise share the same moral underpinning.

In short, given my background in analyzing the strategic implications of global financial developments and my strong commitment to democracy, I cannot imagine a more stimulating challenge or more meaningful responsibility than to take on the role of safeguarding our nation’s vital interests and deeply rooted values at the EBRD, should you deem me worthy of serving as U.S. Executive Director.
Chairman Johnson, Senator Murphy, and members of the committee, thank you for considering my nomination. I would be most pleased to respond to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DR. JUDY SHELTON

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, distinguished members of the committee, I am grateful for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am honored that President Trump has nominated me to serve as the U.S. Executive Director for the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Dr. Shelton.

Our final nominee is Mr. Trevor Traina. Mr. Traina is the President’s nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Austria. Mr. Traina is founder and CEO of If Only, a company that allows buyers to purchase unique life experiences and donate a portion of the proceeds to charity. He has held nonprofit advisory positions at the Fine Arts Museum of San Francisco, the Haas School of Business, and the Princeton University Art Museum. Mr. Traina is an alumnus of Princeton University and St. Catherine’s College at Oxford.

Mr. Traina?

STATEMENT OF TREVOR TRAINA, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF AUSTRIA

Mr. TRAINA. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, distinguished members of the committee, I am humbled to be here today as President Trump’s nominee to be the United States Ambassador to Austria. I am excited that the President has presented me with this opportunity to work with the White House, Secretary Tillerson, and the highly capable team at the State Department and the U.S. mission in Vienna.

I am delighted to be joined by my amazing wife, best friend, and partner in all things, Alexis. With her are our two wonderful children, Johnny and Delphina. They sustain me and they have been very brave at the idea, if I am confirmed, of leaving their friends and moving halfway around the world.

A diplomatic post is both an honor and an obligation. I learned this from my grandfather, Wiley Buchanan, who was the United States Chief of Protocol and Ambassador to Luxembourg, as well as Ambassador to Austria, the very same post for which I am being considered.

My grandfather is no longer with us, but he would be absolutely delighted by my nomination. This is not a guess but the sworn testimony of my grandmother who just celebrated her 100th birthday. If I am confirmed, she would have the confusing honor of being the wife and the grandmother of the Ambassador to Austria. She too is delighted by the idea.

Thanks to my grandparents, the very first country I ever visited was Austria. I stayed at the Ambassador’s residence in Vienna, and I saw firsthand what it means to serve one’s country as Ambassador. Chief of Mission responsibilities are real and they are not to be taken lightly. I saw how hard my grandfather worked, and I also observed how hard our diplomats worked to make the world safer and more secure. I heard from my grandfather about Russia and the Cold War and the threat of nuclear weapons and how the entire Foreign Service labored night and day to keep us all safe, advancing our interests as we slept soundly back at home. Some day, I thought, I want that responsibility too.

I have returned to Austria many times since to visit friends and family and even to introduce my children on their first trip to Europe. But I never dreamed I might have the opportunity, if confirmed, to return again in the same job that my grandfather had.
Austria has a new Chancellor and governing coalition, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with its government in pursuit of our shared goals of peace, security, and prosperity in Europe and beyond. Although neutral, Austria is an active and vital participant in many peacekeeping operations, firmly planted in the transatlantic community, and an important partner in the fight against crime and terrorism.

While it is hard to be fully prepared to be a chief of mission, I have been fortunate to have educational and cultural experiences that have helped me. I have lived in Europe, and motivated by my grandfather and my early interest in foreign service, I studied international relations at both Princeton as an undergrad and at Oxford as a graduate student.

My business career has also prepared me for the management responsibilities of an ambassador. In my career, I have run companies, evaluated employees, hired division heads, and managed people. I have also set goals and priorities and met those goals. I would bring this experience into my new role, if confirmed. As a tech entrepreneur, I believe that America’s lead in new technologies powering the digital revolution are a matter of pride and a natural touch point for outreach and for advocacy. I would look forward to the opportunity to promote U.S. business, especially technology, in Austria.

Vienna is one of the cultural capitals of Europe and the celebration of cultural excellence is at the core of Austrian identity. My service on the boards of two of America’s top museums and my own passions for art and culture have already brought me to Austria. I would look forward to the opportunity to promote art and cultural exchange, further deepening this already strong connection between our societies.

And finally, I would look forward to outreach to the Austrian people. In many places, the memories of World War II and the American role in the rebuilding of Europe are fading. As we mark the 70th anniversary of the Marshall Plan and its positive impact in Europe and Austria, I would hope to refresh the bond between Austrians and Americans on the basis of our common values and shared post-war history.

It is an honor to appear before this committee today. If confirmed, I commit to give everything I have to represent all Americans and to serve our country and its interests successfully.

I thank you for your time, and I look forward to answering any questions that you might have.

[Mr. Traina’s prepared statement follows:]

A diplomatic post is both an honor and an obligation. I learned this from my grandfather Wiley Buchanan who was the United States Chief of Protocol and Ambassador to Luxembourg as well as Ambassador to Austria, the very same post for which I am being considered.

My grandfather is no longer with us, but he would be absolutely delighted by my nomination. This is not a guess, but the sworn testimony of my grandmother, who just celebrated her 100th birthday. If I am confirmed she would have the confusing honor of being the wife and the grandmother of the Ambassador to Austria. She too is delighted by the idea.

Thanks to my grandparents, the very first country I ever visited was Austria. I stayed at the Ambassador’s Residence in Vienna and saw first-hand what it means to serve one’s country as Ambassador. Chief of Mission responsibilities are real and they are not to be taken lightly. I saw how hard my grandfather worked, and I also observed how hard our diplomats worked to make the world safer and more secure. I heard from my grandfather about Russia and the Cold War and the threat of nuclear weapons and how the entire Foreign Service labored night and day to keep us all safe, advancing our interests as we slept soundly back at home. Someday, I thought, I want that responsibility too.

I have returned to Austria many times since to visit friends and family and even to introduce my children on their first trip to Europe. But I never dreamed I might have the opportunity, if confirmed, to return again in the same job that my grandfather had!

Austria is not just a country I know. It is a country I love. It is a country with a rich history that sits at the crossroads of Europe and enjoys strategic connections to the Balkan states. As a neutral nation, Austria plays a significant role in multilateral conversations and in diplomatic efforts well beyond the borders of Europe.

Austria has a new Chancellor and governing coalition and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with its government in pursuit of our shared goals of peace, security and prosperity in Europe and beyond. Although neutral, Austria is an active and vital participant in many peacekeeping operations, firmly planted in the Transatlantic community, and an important partner in the fight against crime and terrorism.

While it is hard to be fully prepared to be a Chief of Mission, I have been fortunate to have educational and cultural experiences that have helped me. I have lived in Europe and, motivated by my grandfather and my early interest in the Foreign Service, studied International Relations at both Princeton as an undergraduate and at Oxford University as a graduate student.

My business career has also prepared me for the management responsibilities of an ambassador. In my career, I have run companies, evaluated employees, hired division heads, and managed people. I have also set goals and priorities and met those goals. I would bring this experience into my new role, if confirmed. I have founded or co-founded five companies in the technology field and have invested in dozens more. I sold my first company to Microsoft, staying on for two years, and have seen the best of what large companies and small companies have to offer organizationally. I might add I know a bit about bureaucracy from the experience! As the CEO of my current company I manage a team and budget not unlike that of the Mission in Austria. I believe I would be able to lead the Embassy staff with a clear vision and a commitment to the highest ethical standards.

The President has stated his desire for diplomacy that leads to economic opportunity. Austria is an increasingly important destination for American goods and services and its companies have made significant investments in our dynamic economy. As a technology entrepreneur, I believe that America’s lead in new technologies powering the digital revolution are a matter of pride and a natural touchpoint for outreach and advocacy in foreign countries. I would look forward to the opportunity to promote U.S. business, especially technology, in Austria. While technology startups in Austria number only a few thousand, 500–1000 new ones are launched every year and existing exchange programs with Silicon Valley and Austin, Texas, represent a great start to what could be an even bigger connection.

I have sat on the boards of companies and of organizations like the Haas School of Business at UC Berkeley and I have honed my ability to seek consensus and to identify opportunities for improvement.

Vienna is one of the cultural capitals of Europe and the celebration of cultural excellence is at the core of Austrian identity. My service on the boards of two of America’s top museums and my own passions for art have already brought me to Austria. I would look forward to the opportunity to promote art and cultural exchange between the United States and Austria, furthering deepening this already strong connection between our societies.

Finally, I would look forward to outreach to the Austrian people on behalf of the people of the United States. In many places the memories of World War II and the American role in the rebuilding of Europe are fading. As we mark the 70th anniversary of the Marshall Plan and its positive impact in Europe and Austria, I would hope to refresh the bond between Austrians and Americans on the basis of our common values and shared post-war history that continues to demonstrate the full value and potential of American friendship.

It is an honor to appear before the committee today. If confirmed, I commit to give everything I have and using all my energy, experience, passion, and resolve to represent all Americans and to serve our country and its interests successfully.

I thank you for your time and look forward to answering any questions you might have.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Traina.

Let me just say I think it is very pleasing to see three very well qualified nominees for these important posts.

Let me start with Dr. Shelton because I think you do bring a very unique level of expertise to this area and to this position.

On Tuesday, we commemorated the murder of Boris Nemtsov by dedicating a plaza in front of the Russian embassy in his name, Boris Nemtsov Plaza. I had an opportunity to speak at that event, and one of the points I made because we gave up a section of Wisconsin Avenue, by the way—and we were happy to do so. One of the points that I made is it is a tragedy of historic and global proportions that Russia did not continue down the path begun by Boris Yeltsin and Boris Nemtsov.

I would just like you—and this is a little bit apart from your position, but I just want to utilize your expertise. What went wrong? What happened? Can you just kind of give us some sort of historical perspective? Because Russia just continues to behave worse, become more menacing, whether it is interfering in our elections, Montenegro, basically an act of war, and now an act against our embassy by not necessarily Russia. But just describe what from your perspective has gone wrong with Russia.

Dr. SHELTON. Well, thank you very much for the question and for the comment, Senator Johnson. I might say I was very aware of your involvement in that event on Tuesday, and I think when an important U.S. Government official stands up shoulder to shoulder with the brave and bold activists that was to honor Boris Nemtsov who was fighting to maintain the democratic dream for Russia—and he was inspired by the American model and our founding values. And he, along with other Russian activists, have wanted to secure those institutions of democracy for their own country. I think that the most powerful countermeasure we have against Russian disinformation and propaganda efforts is exactly what you were doing and what I think the National Endowment for Democracy has done from its beginning, inspired by Ronald Reagan’s vision in standing with these people who want to shape a better future for their fellow citizens and who would follow the democratic model.

What happened with Russia—and this is why this post is particularly interesting to me—is they did have a chance under Yeltsin. I was working with a team from the Hoover Institution from Stanford in Russia in April 1991 with Yeltsin’s team. And they were ready to embrace an open market economy. They wanted accountability, transparency. They wanted rule of law. They wanted the basic civil liberties that Americans enjoy.

I think perhaps it was that fateful decision to select President Putin versus Boris Nemtsov. They were both being considered at the time. And what we have seen is in some ways a continuation of the cynical tactics of trying to undermine what you have been unable to achieve for yourself. We have seen a continuation of the disinformation and propaganda techniques. They have been updated, but they use trolls and bots and false websites and unreal personas, whereas we are standing up and countering that with flesh and blood individuals who are working in their own countries.

So I think Russia is still preoccupied with military prowess and is willing to sacrifice far too much to subsidize energy exports to use as a tool of intimidation, and they just have the mindset, unfor-nately, that still is closer to the Soviet model than what we would have aspired for them to become.

Senator Johnson. So as Senator Murphy—and I do not want to speak for the Senator, but as we have traveled around Europe, it is the same story: the propaganda, the disinformation, the destabilizing efforts, the invasion of Georgia, Crimea, eastern Ukraine, the attack on Montenegro’s parliament.

I want to ask all three of you. How do you utilize your new position to push back on that, to resist it, try and attempt to get Russia to behave in a civilized manner that is more stabilizing, that actually promotes peace versus promoting instability? I will start with you, Mr. Traina.

Mr. Traina. Thank you, Senator, for that important question.

I agree with you 100 percent. I think it is a serious issue, and it is a 24-hour-a-day, 7-day-a-week issue. Really, it is an issue for diplomacy. Right? That is why you are sending people like us to these posts who, if confirmed, work every single angle. And I think it is just constant vigilance.

Senator Johnson. Dr. Shelton?

Dr. Shelton. Well, I might note that with regard to Russia’s military aggression toward Ukraine, with guidance from U.S.
Treasury and in cooperation with our G–7 allies and the European Union, the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development stopped providing any financing for Russia as of July 2014. They have maintained that position. That is one way to make it clear that they do not accept this kind of behavior and these blunt-force tactics.

Senator Johnson. Mr. Pence?

Mr. Pence. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

The United States and our allies—we must stand together. One thing that Russia is trying to do is drive wedges between the United States and NATO, between NATO and the European Union, between Finland and each of those institutions. We will enhance and protect the individual security of countries by the exercise of collective strength. We must not only by words but in deeds show that we are up to the task.

Having said that, when President Niinisto was here last year, he stressed the necessity of undertaking both dialogue and deterrence.
They go hand in hand, and that is the function of diplomacy.

Thank you.

Senator Johnson. Thank you.

Senator Murphy?

Senator Murphy. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Again, let me thank you all for your willingness to serve as representatives of the United States abroad.
Mr. Traina, I wanted to just ask you a question about the state of politics in Austria today. The most recent election resulted in the Freedom Party, the far right party, gaining 26 percent of the vote. This is a party that has signed a cooperation agreement with Russia’s ruling party, and they have been included in the current government.

So what is the role of—this is obviously a trend line that we have been watching all over Europe, these far right parties doing much better. 26 percent is a big share of the vote in a place like that, and the idea that a party representing 26 percent of the country would sign an agreement with a Russian political party is very concerning.

In your preparation for this job, what is your understanding as to the position of the United States Government with respect to the Freedom Party, their inclusion in the Government, and what will you have to say about that when you are on the ground?

Mr. Traina. Thank you, Senator. As you point out, this is a really important question.

Obviously, Austria is a democracy, an advanced democracy, and they have a freely elected government. By all accounts, we are already working well with that new government. But like any ally or friend, we will ultimately judge that government by their deeds and actions.

Senator Murphy. And do you see it as appropriate to raise concerns regarding the increased political power of these relatively far right groups?

Mr. Traina. Thank you, Senator.

I think there are a number of issues at play, whether it is immigration, religious freedom, et cetera, not unique, frankly, to Austria but in many places that are all areas that require vigilance on our part and require, to your point, dialogue. And I also look forward to dialogue with your staff as well on these important matters.

Senator Murphy. Another potential point of friction is over the new gas pipeline coming into Europe from Russia, Nordstream 2. The Trump administration and many people we have talked to have expressed their desire to continue the opposition to that pipeline that the Obama administration began, but Austria is in favor of it. What can you do as Ambassador to try to make Austria understand the risk of making the continent of Europe more dependent on Russian energy?

Mr. Traina. Thank you, Senator.

I agree 100 percent. It is a very complicated issue. Austria was the first non-Eastern Bloc country to hook up to Russian gas. It was in 1968. So it is 50 years of history there. There is a lot of interconnection between the countries on this. And half of all the gas used in Austria comes from Russia.

I think this is a time to acknowledge that we have a great team in place already. The country team is there. If confirmed, I would definitely work very closely with them to understand what has already been done on this and, as a team, certainly work very hard to advocate because I agree with you. I think it is in Austria’s best interest and in all of Europe’s best interest to have multiple sources of energy for a hundred different reasons.
Senator MURPHY. Let me just come back to my first question and just finish off the thought for you. I think it is very important for U.S. Ambassadors to speak up against the growth of far right parties, in particular, far right parties that are anti-immigrant in nature. The perception of the United States today abroad is deeply clouded by the President’s perceived antipathy towards immigrants to the United States, and I would argue it is not perceived. It is real. So I think it is very important for the United States, a country that is built on immigration, to explain to other countries the value of being inclusive of people who come from other places. Right now, there is a perception that we are backsliding on our commitment to immigration. And so I hope that you will raise concern when elements of the ruling party act in ways that violate the best traditions of the United States.

Dr. Shelton, the bank pulled its new investment projects in Russia after 2014 or stopped new investment projects in Russia following a declaration by the European Council after the invasion of eastern Ukraine. What is your sense of whether that decision has been impactful at all on the Russian calculus, and what are the things Russia would need to do in order to restart investment? And there is a sizeable portfolio that is already there that exists of over $3 billion that the bank is still managing. Does Russia care that the bank has turned off new investment?

Dr. SHELTON. I think they care very much. Russia was the largest recipient of EBRD financing, and prior to stopping the program in July of 2014, financing for Russia was 22 percent of their portfolio. It was roughly 8.2 billion euros, and it was whittled down very, very quickly over the next 3 years. It is down to 2.8 billion euros, so roughly $10 billion down to $3.4 billion. That is a reduction down to less than 8 percent of the portfolio. So I think for a country like Russia that is desperately seeking infrastructure financing, it was a very strong message. And the sentiment of the majority of the shareholders has been made very clear to EBRD management and staff that there is no point in bringing new projects involving Russia to the attention of the board of directors because they will not be inclined to consider any such thing until Russia conforms to what is required under the Minsk Agreement. And they would have to go back from their military aggression, and it would have to be demonstrated in a very convincing way.

Senator MURPHY. And so you do not perceive backsliding on that question, internal weakness regarding reinvestment in Russia unless, at the very least, Minsk is complied with. You are not there.

Dr. SHELTON. Well, not having been confirmed, but my sense is that the EBRD directors—and while we have 10 percent, it takes a majority. In combination with the G–7, we have about 57 percent of the vote. And the European Union is well represented at that bank and has been in alignment with regard to financing for Russia. So my expectation is it would have to be a clear reversal.

Senator MURPHY. I would just ask one question of Mr. Pence and then we can move on.

Either you or Senator Johnson noted that they are taking over the Arctic Council from the United States—the chairmanship. One of their priorities is the full implementation of the Paris Climate Agreement. Can you share with us your personal feelings on whether the United States should reenter the Paris Climate Agreement and how you will deal with the deep disappointment there that the United States is pulling out? This is a friction point in general with European countries, but for the country you are going to particularly important given their belief that the Paris Climate Agreement is integral for the future preservation of the Arctic.

Mr. Pence. Thank you, Senator.

Obviously, Finland and its neighboring countries are fully in favor of the Paris Agreement. I acknowledge that President Trump has been clear in his desire to leave the agreement behind. I also believe the President has been clear that United States policy will continue with respect to a number of many provisions of the Paris deal.

Having said that, I believe that the administration will signal, has signaled its intention to participate in further negotiations on the subject, and we will see what comes of it.

Senator Murphy. He has got diplomatic skills already. [Laughter.]

Senator Murphy. Well said. I actually said that as an actual compliment. So I did not mean that facetiously.

Senator Johnson. Senator Kaine?

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And thanks and congratulations to the nominees.

Mr. Traina, you will forgive me. I am going to focus my attention on the Virginians. But actually I will probably have a question for you too. I want to especially congratulate Dr. Shelton and Mr. Pence from Virginia for being nominated. I actually will have a question for you, Mr. Traina, too.

But first thing to Mr. Traina and Mr. Pence, just a piece of advice because you will be the head of country missions. When I travel as a member of the Foreign Relations committee, one thing I try to do is meet in countries with the first and second tour FSOs when I go to embassies, and I have fascinating discussions with them. I usually do not want the Ambassador in the room, and I meet with the first and second tour FSOs. And I tell them you have achieved an amazing job that is really hard to get. Tell me, after a little bit of experience, what may make you stay and make this a career and what is frustrating and may make you depart.

And they never complain about their ambassador. I have never had that happen. But they do complain about red tape and challenges. Some of them say we have to get so intensely security vetted to get the job, and then once I get the job, if I want to order five pencils, I have to go through an amazing process because they think I am going to steal the five pencils or something. So those discussions are interesting.

You will be in charge of some fantastic public servants, and I would encourage you to do all you can do to make them feel like they can make an entire career out of it because I think we really need them.

Mr. Pence, I wanted to ask a question a little bit about Senator Murphy on the Arctic Council. Finland has taken a 2-year position as the chair of the council following the United States. In preparation for this, how much do you know about what the priorities are either of the United States or Finland or the entire council right now? What are the areas you think the council will be devoting its attention to over the next couple years? We talk a lot about this on the Armed Services committee where I also serve. But I am curious as to your understanding about what the priorities of the council or the U.S. or Finland might be.

Mr. Pence. Thank you, Senator, for the question.

The Arctic Council itself has enunciated what its priorities are: the security of the Arctic, the preservation of the ecological situation, the climate of the Arctic, the free and open ability of nations to transit the area in a time of clearing seas. And they expect overall to ensure the safety of bordering nations and those who employ it. They are also acutely aware that with the change in the climate and the melting of the ice that the Arctic is going to become an increasingly direct and profitable route for international trade that is engaged. It is going to be more important and a cheaper avenue than the Suez Canal. The geopolitical consequences of that are going to be extraordinary.

They are also—Finland, as we are—we are acutely concerned about the militarization of the Arctic. I believe the Russians have 16 bases they have either opened or are reopening. They are building a number of airfields up there. They have 40-some heavy nuclear powered—excuse me. They are not all nuclear powered—40 heavy icebreakers in the area. They have a big head start of us up there, to which we, Finland, and the free world needs to respond.

Senator Kaine. Thank you for that.

Let me ask you each, Mr. Traina and Mr. Pence, a question dealing with another aspect of our military, which is NATO. Both Finland and Austria—neither are NATO members, but both are participating with NATO in some critical ways. Why do you not talk about the current state of the relationship between, first, Austria and then Finland in NATO and whether you see any dramatic change in their relationship in the coming years?

Mr. Traina. Thank you, Senator. Thank you for that question.

As you note, Austria is a nonaligned nation, but they are part of the Partnership for Peace initiative associated with NATO, and they also are really very actively participating in numerous peacekeeping initiatives. So currently they are in 14 different peacekeeping initiatives in places like Bosnia-Herzegovina and Kosovo. Kosovo, obviously, is a NATO initiative, the peacekeeping there. So while they are by policy nonaligned, they are really a great partner in a lot of these areas, as well as sort of general crime fighting and trafficking and other areas like that.

Senator Kaine. Thank you.

Mr. Pence?

Mr. Pence. Thank you, Senator.

First, indeed, Finland is not a member of NATO. It is involved in various NATO operations, including the operation Resolute Support in Afghanistan. Finland has participated in actions in Iraq. They are in a unique position to join or not to join. At present, a majority, a slight majority but a majority nevertheless, of the Finnish people are opposed to Finland joining NATO. That may change, but until it does, they are not a member. But they work closely with NATO and permit certain actions within their country in furtherance of NATO policies.
Senator Kaine. Thank you very much.

Dr. Shelton, if I could ask you one question. On the Foreign Relations committee, we are a little bit creatures of our region. So almost all my work for 5 years has been the Middle East and the Americas, and I have done little work on the EBRD.

But I was noting something that I was curious about. One country has graduated from the EBRD and that is the Czech Republic in 2008. What are criteria used to gauge whether a country kind of is sufficiently developed to graduate out? Are there other countries close to graduating? Does the EBRD—as we expand the number of countries we operate in, is there any danger of the EBRD spreading itself too thin with the resources that it has?

Dr. Shelton. Thank you for the question, Senator Kaine.

Graduation is a priority through the international affairs part of the Treasury Department, and we encourage that. There is a graduation process at the EBRD, and you are correct that only that single country, the Czech Republic, has graduated.

The slowness in having countries qualify to proceed I think to some extent reflects a very long economic recovery in Europe since the financial crisis of 2008 and 2009. Also, I believe that countries have been affected by Russia’s aggression, and they are reluctant to give up sources of financing. They feel pressure with regard to energy security. And so they have wanted to stay engaged with the EBRD.

It would be my focus, if confirmed, to have a more transparent, rules-based process for evaluating when a country is successfully moving toward graduation. They do at the EBRD a country analysis for each new recipient and that also includes a political assessment because they not only have to embrace democratic principles as an ideal, but they have to demonstrate in a genuine way that they are applying them.

Senator Kaine. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator Johnson. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

You have been asked some specific questions. Let me just throw it open, a little more general question. I will ask each one of you the same one. I just want your opinion, your evaluation, if you are confirmed, what is going to be the top issue—if you have issues, you can expand it, but I mean really the top issue you think you will be dealing with. And what will be the top opportunity in terms of the relationship between the U.S. and either your country or organization? I will start with you, Mr. Pence.

Mr. Pence. Thank you, Senator.

I am a student of Cicero who lived about 2,000 years ago. If I may paraphrase part of his works. Civil liberties are meaningless if the state is not secure. That is the first and foremost and last sine qua non on the international stage. We need to assure ourselves and the Finnish people and each other and the rest of the free world really that there will be peace.

Thank you.

Senator Johnson. Dr. Shelton?

Dr. Shelton. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I do think energy security for Europe is a top priority. And EBRD financing has provided resources for energy infrastructure.
We need to make sure that the projects provide alternative routes, alternative suppliers, and an array of different types of energy available to countries so they are not subject to intimidation. I would seek to advance the national security interests of the United States, as well as the economic interests. American companies should have a chance not only to bid on projects. So we need to have a transparent procurement process. But also, the projects should be oriented to increase growth so that American products can find export markets in those recipient countries. I see this, if confirmed, to be an opportunity for the United States to leverage its capital investment through strong leadership working with our allies very closely to advance our strategic interests and to try to shape events across Europe and the other regions of operation which now include the Middle East and northern Africa and Central Asia. We want to have the most advantageous economic and political outcomes for our own nation.

Senator Johnson. Thank you, Dr. Shelton.

Mr. Traina?

Mr. Traina. Thank you so much, Senator.

So, first, priority. Priority will always be security, the security and safety of my mission, of the 15,000 or so Americans who reside in Austria and the 700,000 or so Americans who visit Austria every year.

Issue. I think currently the energy issue is a significant one that merits a lot of thought and attention.

And opportunities. I think leveraging our strong relationship with Austria vis-a-vis their neighboring nations and shoring those nations up, as well as business. I think Austria is an advanced economy, and there is a lot of opportunity for us to do more together in that arena.

Thank you.

Senator Johnson. Thank you, Mr. Traina.

Senator Murphy?

Senator Murphy. Just two final questions.

Mr. Traina, let me build upon the opportunity you acknowledged, which is to work with neighboring countries. One of the points of tension between Austria and neighboring countries is this issue of immigration that I had mentioned. The new government has advocated for an array of measures including border closures to reduce immigration not only into Austria but also through Austria into Europe. And that often runs counter particularly with the generally more liberal refugee policies of Italy and Germany.

So what is the role of the United States to try to make sure that Austria's restrictive immigration policy does not end up, A, pulling apart Europe and, B, simply transferring the burden of refugee flows which continue on to other countries?

Mr. Traina. Thank you, Senator, for that question.

I acknowledge it is absolutely an issue, a highly topical issue right now. I think there is an opportunity for us to work directly with them to continue to communicate our thoughts and opinions on this. There is also an opportunity via the EU. There is discontinuity right now between the EU's position and Austria's position on this same issue. And so I think we triangulate and we have continual dialogue on this.
Senator Murphy. And, Dr. Shelton, I want to pick up on one of the things you mentioned in your last answer, which was energy security. How do we compete with a Russian energy export model that is based on outright subsidy to drive down pricing? Whereas we are using more traditional financing vehicles to try to counter that influence. I have failed to understand how we compete with the Russians on energy security without a direct subsidy of our own coming either from the United States or from the Europeans. So how does a bank try to deal with the issue of energy security when the Russians are just throwing cash into these projects? Nordstream 2, for instance, cannot work as a pure financial play. It only works with just a heavy Russian subsidy on the front and back end.

Dr. Shelton. Thank you so much for that question, and I think you make an excellent point.

We have seen that Russia is willing to subsidize activities that are not in their economic interests, and we can only assume for purposes of political power using energy as a weapon.

What the EBRD has done, which I think is quite wise, is they have provided significant financing for the southern gas corridor. The financing projects have aimed both at the gas fields—these are deepwater wells in the Caspian Sea—and also the pipelines to guarantee alternative delivery routes. And the EBRD does work based on market principles, but they have been able to put together very attractive and sometimes creative financing for special projects. They have the confidence of Western providers of foreign direct investment. They work well with banks. So they can provide financing with highly desirable attributes and in that way be competitive.

Senator Murphy. Again, let me thank you all. I think you will all be confirmed hopefully soon. And we really look forward to—those of us who work on transatlantic issues, are heavily involved in them look forward to working with all three of you. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Johnson. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Again, I want to thank the nominees for your willingness to serve. I want to thank their families for your willingness to support your family members. To the Traina children, I certainly understand the concern about leaving their friends, but it is a pretty exciting opportunity. Your dad is doing a pretty important thing. So I am sure you will enjoy your time in Austria.

With that, again, thank you for providing your testimony, your responses.

The hearing record will remain open for statements or questions until the close of business on Monday, March 5th.

This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:05 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]
Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ROBERT FRANK PENCE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Do you commit to report regularly to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on efforts by the Russian Government to interfere in the democratic processes of Finland?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Mission to Finland stands firmly with Finland in countering Russia’s malign influence and will report on the Russian Government’s attempts to interfere with Finland’s democratic processes.

Question 2. What specific measures will you take to cooperate with the European Center of Excellence for Countering Hybrid Threats?

Answer. At Finland’s initiative, nine countries, including the United States, signed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) establishing the European Center of Excellence for Countering Hybrid Threats in April 2017. Since then, four additional countries have accepted invitations to participate in cooperation under the MOU, and another three have expressed serious interest in participating. NATO and the EU will join in the activities of the Center. The Center will serve as a hub of expertise to complement and bolster national and institutional efforts to strengthen our capabilities to counter hybrid threats. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our Finnish counterparts, the other states, NATO, and the European Union, who participate in the Center’s work to develop more effective cooperation against the diverse array of hybrid threats and to expand U.S. participation by all relevant sectors. Further, if confirmed, I would employ every lawful means available under U.S. law in completing this task.

Diversity

Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors and managers within the embassy are fostering an environment that’s diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I appreciate the importance of fostering diverse and inclusive teams. Throughout my professional career and experience in business, I have seen the value of diversity in leadership positions. In keeping with Secretary Tillerson’s strong emphasis on diversity, if confirmed I will develop an inclusive work environment at Embassy Helsinki that encourages all perspectives. I will ensure that all supervisors receive regular formal training and guidance on EEO principles, diversity, and inclusion. In addition to leading by example, I will monitor the supervisors at the Embassy to ensure they are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive.

Answer. If confirmed, first and foremost, by my actions I intend to create an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I recognize that, to a large extent, the composition of the Mission Team has already been established by others. Nevertheless, all employees will quickly come to understand that, whatever their backgrounds may be, we will form one united, cohesive team that will operate without discrimination and without any tolerance for behavior that lacks respect for others or that evinces any hint of dishonesty or other improper behavior. Similarly, through both my actions and the actions of supervisors, all members of the staff will understand what they need not tolerate and what actions of theirs will not be tolerated. I will, simultaneously, encourage all employees to report any breaches of policy with respect to conduct. I will assure my team that retribution will not be condoned and that U.S. law, including policies and regulations of the State Department, will be promptly and scrupulously followed.

Question 5. As a possible official of the Trump administration, will you condemn and oppose policies and practices that are derogatory and discriminatory on the basis of race, religion, nationality, gender, sexual orientation, or gender identity?

Answer. Yes.

Question 6. Will you uphold the rights of all persons to equality and freedom from discrimination, and call on Americans to refrain from discrimination of any sort?

Answer. Yes.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD
SUBMITTED TO ROBERT FRANK PENCE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Answer. From 1992 to the present I have been intimately involved, as a student, teacher, businessman, and as a civic and political advocate for positions that fortify the preservation of our rights and liberty. I have given countless lectures, and participated in myriad conferences, domestically and abroad, to advocate for democracy, the rule of law, and the preservation of human rights. I have been an outspoken advocate of democracy, particularly of American values, and, additionally, of causes related to Israel, schools for women in Afghanistan, and other causes that my wife Suzy and I have deemed worthy of our support, time, and money.

The arts and cultural enrichment are integral to a democracy and have been at the center of my life. Associated with the Kennedy Center for the past decade plus. For about twelve years I served on various boards at the Kennedy Center and with my wife Suzy have represented the Kennedy Center abroad as a part of the Kennedy Center Gold Medal in the Arts program. These week-long, intensive, high level programs get to the root of our relations with other nations, their citizens, and their cultures.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in Finland today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Finland? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Finland has a strong record on human rights and is a close partner for the United States in promoting human rights around the world. Finland is one of the world’s most generous providers of development aid. NGOs have reported incidents of anti-Muslim and anti-immigrant speech and sentiment in Finland. Authorities generally investigate, and where appropriate, prosecute such cases. If confirmed, I will encourage Finland to continue protecting human rights at home and abroad. I will also regularly engage with representatives from government, political parties, and nongovernmental organizations to stress the importance of tolerance and diversity and to share best practices and new ideas for promoting human rights.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Finland in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Human rights are widely respected in Finland and its legal framework for protecting human rights meets international standards, so any obstacles to addressing human rights issues must be viewed in this context. Civil society and democratic institutions are both strong and inclusive in Finland. To the extent that Finland exhibits human rights problems, they are largely societal and are adequately addressed by the country’s judicial system, government institutions, and non-governmental organizations. If confirmed, I will work with those institutions and organizations to exchange experiences and best practices to further our shared values.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Finland? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Finland. If confirmed, I will ensure that Embassy Helsinki staff have access to appropriate training on Leahy Law requirements. I will also ensure Embassy Helsinki thoroughly vets individuals and units it nominates to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Finland to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Finland?

Answer. Finland has a strong human rights record and a generally independent and impartial judiciary. There are no reports of political prisoners or detainees, or politically motivated prosecutions, in the country. If confirmed, I will call out any future cases of this kind if they occur, and work with the Finnish Government to encourage their resolution in accordance with Finnish and international law and commitments.

Question 6. Will you engage with Finland on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance part of Embassy Helsinki’s regular public outreach. I believe these are excellent areas for people-to-people engagements where our citizens can exchange views, experiences and best practices. Given Finland’s excellent record on these issues, I will also look for opportunities where we can jointly cooperate to provide expertise to third countries.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any steps in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Finland?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in Finland. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in those companies the State Department Ethics Office deemed necessary to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. First, I will attempt to create a work environment in which individual talents and skills will flourish and be recognized. Second, it will be my policy that no employee will interfere with the efforts of any other employee to pursue my first objective and the enjoyment thereof by other employees. My experience in business, over a period of 47 years, has lead me to conclude, as did the ancient philosophers and all of the great artists and thinkers of history, that there is no one person, or school of thought, or culture, or religion, that contains all of the best attributes of mankind. In my businesses, which have employed, on average, about 150 people at one time, I have come to appreciate, enjoy, and profit by the amalgamation and enhancement of human knowledge which is not culturally dependent. At any one time (and for most of the time), my companies have employed individuals from, among others, Jordan, Afghanistan, El Salvador, Mexico, Guatemala, Brazil, Egypt, Korea, the Dominican Republic, UAE, and many countries in Africa. Similarly, at our Dulles Expo Center in Chantilly, VA, we regularly stage major business and cultural events for organizations from Japan, India, and Pakistan, to name but the largest groups of attendees. Each of our employees knows, because this is our policy, that upward movement in our organizations is our goal and that it is realizable. By the nature of our businesses, we are in service to others. To be clear, we do not discriminate on any basis and we do not allow our employees to do so either. These views have been well received, I am sure, by the Finns whose president, Sauli Niinistö, said in his 2017 New Year’s Address that “we must proceed together.”

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy is fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. First and foremost, by my actions I intend to create an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I recognize that, to a large extent, the composition of the Mission Team has already been established by others. Nevertheless, all employees will quickly come to understand that, whatever their backgrounds may be, we will form one united, cohesive team that will operate without discrimination and without any tolerance for behavior that lacks respect for others or that evinces any hint of dishonesty or other improper behavior. I will schedule frequent meetings with supervisory personnel to insure that official policy is both understood and implemented. Similarly, through both my actions and the actions of supervisors, all members of the staff will understand what they need not tolerate and what actions of theirs will not be tolerated. I will, simultaneously, encourage all employees to report any breaches of policy with respect to personal conduct. I will assure my team that retribution will not be condoned and that U.S. law, including policies of the State Department, will be promptly and scrupulously followed.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBERT FRANK PENCE BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. How would you approach the question of Finland’s possible membership in NATO if Finland decides to seek it? Of course, the accession of a new member of the alliance is a question for all NATO allies, but what factors would you consider in making a recommendation for or against such request from the perspective of the U.S. Ambassador to Finland, if you are confirmed?

Answer. The United States would welcome such a strong and capable partner’s decision to apply for membership in the Alliance, but the decision on whether to do so is up to Finland’s political leadership and the Finnish people. Opinion polls indicate a significant number of Finnish people support joining NATO, but a slight majority continues to oppose membership. While not a NATO Ally, Finland maintains a high level of cooperation and interoperability with the Alliance and has been an active member of NATO’s Partnership for Peace since its launch in 1994. At the 2014 Wales NATO Summit, Finland became one of a handful of Enhanced Opportunities Partners (EOP) with increased access to NATO political consultations and training/exercises. Finland has been a member of the NATO Response Force since 2012 and the NATO Strategic Airlift Capability program since its inception in 2008. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Finland to deepen our bilateral security cooperation, acknowledging the importance of maintaining NATO’s Open Door policy for Finland.

Question 2. Finland has been seeking to diversify its energy supply sources and enhance its energy independence, in part by deepening its integration in the wider European, Nordic, and Baltic energy markets. What would you do, if confirmed, to encourage this? How would you help position American companies to participate?

Answer. Finland has a vital role to play in Europe’s energy security and diversification, in particular as a leader in energy efficiency and biofuels research and development. Its energy policies align with the EU, and its energy targets generally meet or exceed EU requirements. Finland is investing in liquefied natural gas terminals and, in October 2015, the Finnish Government decided to move forward with the Balticconnector gas pipeline to Estonia, which would provide an opportunity to diversify Finland’s supply via the European gas network. The European Commission will provide 187.5 million euros of Balticconnector’s estimated 250 million euro cost. U.S. companies, such as General Electric, are already major players in Finland’s energy sector. The greatest opportunity is for small U.S. energy innovators to partner with Finnish firms to develop and apply new energy technologies not only in Finland but in the EU. I understand that the U.S. Embassy in Helsinki has and will continue to prioritize promoting these U.S. business opportunities through events such as Vaasa Energy Week and in sectors such as forestry that hold great promise as a new source of renewable energy. If confirmed, I will work to support continued energy diversification across Europe, encouraging Finland to support projects that will diversify Europe’s energy supply and oppose those that threaten it, such as Nord Stream II.

Question 3. Despite its long-standing economic ties with Russia, Finland has continued to support existing EU sanctions on Russia. If confirmed, what will you do to encourage the Finnish Government to maintain its support for the sanctions regime until the Minsk agreements for Ukraine are fully implemented?

Answer. Finland has been a strong defender—along with the United States and other European partners—of Ukraine’s sovereignty and territorial integrity. Finnish officials have consistently reiterated their firm opposition to Russia’s occupation and attempted annexation of Crimea, and have called on Russia to fulfill its commitments under the Minsk agreements to resolve the conflict in eastern Ukraine. Finland has voted to maintain EU sanctions against Russia and has made clear sanctions should remain until Russia fulfills its Minsk commitments, including reducing the violence in eastern Ukraine, removing heavy equipment and weapons, allowing full and unfettered access to OSCE monitors, and returning control of the international border to Ukraine. If confirmed, I will work to ensure U.S. and Finnish policies toward Russia remain closely coordinated.

Question 4. Finland has a highly industrialized, competitive market economy. If confirmed, what would you do to expand bilateral trade between our countries, particularly in the technology sector, which is an area where the United States and Finland both excel?

Answer. The United States and Finland work together with the European Union to promote job creation and prosperity on both sides of the Atlantic. The United States' trade relationship with Finland is driven in large part by innovative information and communications technology enterprises. Finland shares a commitment to open commercial data flows that support trade and investment in these sectors. If I am confirmed as Ambassador, one of my top priorities will be promoting fair and reciprocal trade and investment, building upon the considerable work the U.S. Embassy in Helsinki has already done. I will encourage the sharing of best practices while helping American companies recognize business opportunities in Finland and showcase for Finnish companies the many opportunities to invest in the United States. United States exports to Finland were valued at $1.5 billion in goods in 2017 and $2.1 billion in services in 2016. United States imports from Finland were $5.9 billion in goods in 2017 and $2.5 billion in services in 2016. There is potential to increase both U.S. exports to Finland and Finnish foreign direct investment in the United States. If confirmed, I will make this a priority for all agencies working in the U.S. Mission to Finland.

Question 5. I have been outspoken in drawing attention to Russian malign influence activities in the United States and elsewhere. I was pleased to see that in April 2017, the United States joined Finland and several other NATO and EU countries in establishing a new, Helsinki-based multinational Center of Excellence for Countering Hybrid Threats aimed at helping to counter cyber attacks, disinformation, and propaganda. If confirmed, will you support this effort? How can the United States and Finland deepen our cooperation in this area?

Answer. The Transatlantic Community faces continued security threats from Russia. Finland has leveraged its geography and historical experience to develop a nuanced and knowledgeable approach to Russia. Finland is pragmatic and practical when it comes to Russia—but also recognizes Russia’s challenge to the European security order. At Finland’s initiative, nine countries, including the United States, signed a memorandum of understanding establishing the European Center of Excellence for Countering Hybrid Threats in April 2017. Since then, four additional countries have joined, and another three have expressed serious interest in joining. NATO and the EU will participate in the activities of the Center. The Center will serve as a hub of expertise to complement and bolster national and institutional efforts to strengthen our capabilities and counter hybrid threats. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our Finnish counterparts and the other member states of the Center to develop more effective cooperation against the diverse array of hybrid threats, and to expand U.S. participation by all relevant sectors.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Dr. Judy Shelton by Senator Robert Menendez

Russia

Question 1. What is the policy of the United States regarding new EBRD projects in Russia?

Answer. The United States does not support any new EBRD projects in Russia. In response to guidance from the United States and our G-7 partners, and the European Union, EBRD management has not brought forward any new projects for Russia since July 2014, following Russia’s military aggression in Crimea.

Diversity and Combating Hostile Work Environments

Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity.

Question 2. What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors and managers within the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) are fostering an environment that’s diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my oversight role on the EBRD’s Board of Executive Directors to try to ensure that EBRD management fosters an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I will also advocate for these issues to be considered, as appropriate, in the development and review of human resources policies in the EBRD’s Budget and Administrative Affairs committee.

Question 3. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups at the EBRD?

Answer. If confirmed, I will promote, mentor and support my staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups, consistent with fair management practices and relevant EBRD policies. The EBRD has increased its emphasis on inclusion in its operations, adding inclusion as a key quality of successful transition to a sustainable market economy.

Question 4. As a possible official of the Trump administration, will you condemn and oppose policies and practices that are derogatory and discriminatory on the basis of race, religion, nationality, gender, sexual orientation, or gender identity?

Answer. If confirmed, I will condemn and oppose policies and practices that are derogatory and discriminatory on the basis of race, religion, nationality, gender, sexual orientation, or gender identity.

Question 5. Will you uphold the rights of all persons to equality and freedom from discrimination, and call on Americans to refrain from discrimination of any sort?

Answer. If confirmed, I will uphold the rights of all persons to equality and freedom from discrimination, and call on Americans to refrain from discrimination of any sort.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DR. JUDY SHELTON BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. The EBRD charter states that countries must be committed to applying the principles of multiparty democracy, pluralism, and market economics in order to qualify for EBRD loans. I believe it is important for the international community to assist the countries of the Western Balkans to successfully complete their transitions to democratic, market-oriented members of the transatlantic community. What is the EBRD doing in this region? If confirmed, what will you do to intensify this effort?

Answer. It is true that countries in the Western Balkans are still transitioning to well-functioning, sustainable market economies. The state remains a major player in key industries in several countries of the region, significant progress on privatizations remains elusive, and private sector businesses operate in a challenging business environment plagued by weak rule of law, a sizable informal sector, corruption and cumbersome tax administration, and difficulties in getting reliable electricity supply.

The EBRD has been and continues to be an important partner in the region, delivering close to $800 million in new investments in both 2016 and 2017, coupled with policy dialogue and technical assistance. The EBRD has focused in particular on enhancing private sector competitiveness, strengthening the investment climate, and improving regional connectivity and integration through both hard infrastructure, like roads and energy links, and softer elements like harmonizing regulations and tariffs. Last month the EBRD launched a new one-stop regional investment platform for interested investors.

A key priority going forward should be increased privatization advocacy. If confirmed, I would like to help encourage the EBRD to maintain an intensified focus on reforms, commercialization efforts, and corporate governance improvements in the region’s state-owned enterprises in an effort to unlock pre-privatization investments and eventual privatization progress. In addition, I would call on the EBRD to enhance its work to advance government and corporate reforms to improve economic and market institutions, transparency, competition, and the overall investment climate across the Western Balkan economies. I will also encourage the EBRD to continue to provide candid political assessments for its countries of operation, since political developments affect aspects of the transition to a market economy.

Question 2. Environmentally sound and sustainable development is central to the EBRD’s mandate. In light of the administration’s decision to withdraw from the Paris Climate Agreement, I’m curious to hear your views on climate change. How would you consider this issue as it relates to the EBRD’s work?

Answer. I believe that it is important for countries to have affordable and reliable access to energy. If confirmed, I will evaluate each EBRD energy project on an individual basis, weighing various factors including the project’s potential benefits for transition to a sustainable market-based economy. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Treasury Department to review energy projects against the new, broader, objectives recently set forth by Treasury. This includes supporting energy projects that go to the core of supporting a country’s development. This can and should include helping countries access and use fossil fuels more cleanly and efficiently. By pursuing projects that employ a mix of energy sources, the EBRD can support the development of robust, efficient, competitive, and integrated global markets for energy.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TREVOR TRAINA BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Do you commit to report regularly to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on efforts by the Russian Government to interfere in the democratic processes of Austria?
Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the United States Mission to Austria stands firmly with Austria in countering Russia’s malign influence and will report on the Russian Government’s attempts to interfere with Austria’s democratic processes.

Question 2. What will your priorities be with respect to coordinating with the Austrian Government on policies on the Western Balkans?
Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage the Austrian Government to support regional peacekeeping efforts by maintaining its substantial troop numbers in NATO’s Kosovo Force (KFOR). Austria’s KFOR participation is essential to mission success and the creation of a stable, secure environment that allows Kosovo and Serbia to advance their political dialogue. I will also urge the Austrians to push the Western Balkan countries to accelerate political and economic reforms that are necessary for EU accession. These reforms will build resilience against Russian attempts to create instability in the Balkans through bribery, abuse of energy and trade ties, and use propaganda to advance its agenda. Austrian Chancellor Kurz has pledged to focus on the Western Balkans during Austria’s EU presidency beginning July 1.

Question 3. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and productivity. What steps will you take to ensure that supervisors and managers within the embassy are fostering an environment that’s diverse and inclusive?
Answer. Good management starts at the top, and, if confirmed, I would model to supervisors the kinds of behaviors I would want them to extend to their teams.
Good management also requires an open door, clear communication of goals, and shared objectives, and I would work with my team to ensure that our shared environment is respectful and inclusive. If confirmed, I will ensure that projects with a scope for leadership and opportunities to excel are distributed equally among sections, people of different ranks, cones, experiences, and backgrounds, giving everyone an equal opportunity to make a difference in the Mission’s impact on our foreign policy goals. I would also be respectful of work-life balance for all employees, recognizing that time at home with families is good for both employees’ health and the health and productivity of an organization.

Question 4. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups at the embassy?
Answer. I currently run an extremely diverse company, with over 50 percent female employees and a wide variety of ethnicities and sexual orientations. I am proud of this and have worked hard to both mentor and nurture my team members.
Good management takes time, listening skills, patience, and empathy. When people of various viewpoints and backgrounds feel empowered to work together, great results ensue. I would bring this experience to the Mission.

Question 5. As a possible official of the Trump administration, will you condemn and oppose policies and practices that are derogatory and discriminatory on the basis of race, religion, nationality, gender, sexual orientation, or gender identity?
Answer. Yes.

Question 6. Will you uphold the rights of all persons to equality and freedom from discrimination, and call on Americans to refrain from discrimination of any sort?
Answer. Yes.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TREVOR TRAINA BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I believe all humans have the right to freedom from tyranny and the opportunity to live their lives with freedom and respect. I recall being a child in California in the 70s and witnessing whole families at the airport waiting for loved ones to arrive from repressive countries to start new lives of freedom in the United States. It left a mark and taught me that not everyone enjoys the freedoms that we do. At Princeton I wrote my thesis on the treatment of the indigenous peoples of Alaska and the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, which was intended to correct for past wrongs. I serve as a trustee of San Francisco’s Grace Cathedral which, along with Bishop William Swing, is a pioneer in religious freedom and in dialogue amongst the world’s religions. My current company was designed to benefit people in need around the world with every single transaction we facilitate. We support over 200 different causes from the ACLU at home to educational groups in Nepal and everything in between. Beyond raising millions to help people globally, I feel our model of for-profit commerce harnessed to support people in need is one that has wide-reaching application and represents a promising future.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Austria? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Austria? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Austria has a strong record on human rights—we are important partners in addressing universal human rights challenges around the world based on the common values we share. The State Department’s annual Human Rights and International Religious Freedom Reports list challenges Austria faces, including instances of discrimination against minority groups. There was a 97 percent increase in anti-Semitic incidents between 2014 and 2016, and a 62 percent increase in anti-Muslim incidents in 2016 over those reported in 2015. Jewish and Muslim groups have raised concerns about what they considered to be anti-Semitic and anti-Islamic sentiment within the Freedom Party (FPOe). If confirmed, I will continue our work advocating for increased tolerance for all.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in [country] in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Human rights issues around the world often seem intractable, but Austria is a friend we can work with to address them. Austria and the United States share common values, including the importance of protecting human rights, though sometimes we have different areas of emphasis or different approaches to problems such as rising intolerance toward Jews, Muslims, and other religious or ethnic groups. If confirmed, I will continue our work with Austria to ensure the coordination of our efforts on promoting tolerance through civil society empowerment and coalition building. For example, we can work together on combating hate crime and hate speech on line while preserving freedom of expression and religious freedom. Ensuring that we keep lines of communication open will maximize our joint impact on this and other challenges.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Austria? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Austria, including human rights activists and religious groups, and the organizations that represent them. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training.
Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Austria to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Austria?

Answer. The State Department’s 2016 Human Rights Report states that there were no reports of political prisoners in Austria.

Question 6. Will you engage with Austria on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Austria, including human rights activists and religious groups, and the organizations that represent them. I also look forward to working closely and collaboratively with the USOSCE delegation on the ground in Vienna to address these issues.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Austria?

Answer. None of my immediate family has economic interests in Austria. My cousin owns a home in Austria.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I currently run an extremely diverse company with more than 50 percent women employees and a wide variety of ethnicities and orientations. I am proud of this and have worked hard to both mentor and nurture my team members. Good management takes time, listening skills, patience, and empathy. When people of various viewpoints and backgrounds feel empowered to work together, magical results ensue. If confirmed, I would bring this experience to the Mission.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Good management starts at the top, and if confirmed I would model to supervisors the kinds of behaviors I would want them to extend to their teams if confirmed. Good management also requires an open door, clear communication of goals and shared objectives, and I would work with my team to ensure that our shared environment is respectful and inclusive. If confirmed, I will ensure that projects with a scope for leadership and opportunities to excel are distributed equally among sections, people of different ranks, cones, experiences, and backgrounds, giving everyone an equal opportunity to make a difference in the Mission’s impact on our foreign policy goals. I would also be respectful of work-life balance for all employees, recognizing that time at home with families is good for both employees’ health and the health and productivity of an organization.
U.S.-EU unity on Russia sanctions until Russia fully implements its Minsk commitments and returns Crimea to Ukraine is a top U.S. foreign policy priority in Austria. If confirmed, I will encourage the Austrian Government to maintain its support for EU-Russia sanctions as it has pledged to do, particularly once it assumes the EU presidency this July.

Question 2. In December 2016, the Freedom Party, which is a member of the governing coalition, signed a cooperation agreement with Russia’s Putin-backed United Russia Party. The agreement reportedly outlines plans for regular meetings and collaboration on economic, business, and political projects. What do you make of this agreement? In light of Russia’s dismal record of behavior, which includes meddling in elections in the United States and elsewhere, how will you approach the broader issue of Austrian-Russian relations, if you are confirmed?

Answer. Countering Russian malign influence is a top U.S. foreign policy priority. I am aware of the Freedom Party’s cooperation agreement with United Russia from 2016. I understand that our embassy has expressed concern directly with Freedom Party leadership regarding this agreement and the party’s history of supporting pro-Russian, anti-American, anti-NATO policies. If confirmed, I will encourage the Austrian Government to continue its support for Western unity with respect to relations with Russia. Maintaining transatlantic unity until Russia changes its behavior is critical.

Question 3. Austria is a highly-advanced industrialized country. If confirmed, what would you do to expand bilateral trade between our countries?

Answer. Bilateral trade is an important part of our relationship with Austria. The United States is Austria’s fourth-largest trading partner overall and its second-largest export market with total two-way goods and services trade at approximately $19.1 billion in 2017 and U.S. exports to Austria in 2017 at $6.7 billion—up 16.0 percent from 2016. If confirmed, I would continue to promote U.S. exports to Austria and encourage Austrian investment in the United States, particularly through the Embassy-supported SelectUSA program. I would use my entrepreneurial skills to help American companies realize export opportunities in Austria and showcase for Austrian companies the many opportunities to invest in the United States.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 2018

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:40 p.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Marco Rubio, presiding.

Present: Senators Rubio [presiding], Gardner, Young, Cardin, Udall, Murphy, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO,
U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. The Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

Good afternoon. This is a nomination hearing for the Honorable Joseph Macmanus of New York, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of minister-counselor, to be U.S. Ambassador to Colombia; Ms. Marie Royce of California to be an Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs; Ms. Robin Bernstein of Florida to be U.S. Ambassador to the Dominican Republic; and the Honorable Edward Charles Prado of Texas to be the U.S. Ambassador to Argentina.

Before the ranking member and I make our remarks, we want to recognize our colleagues that are here and have other business as well to attend to but wanted to be here today. And so I would first recognize Senator John Cornyn of Texas who is here to introduce Judge Edward Prado.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. It is an honor to be back before you and particularly to introduce my friend, Judge Ed Prado, who has been nominated by the President to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Argentine Republic.

Judge Prado and I go back a long way when both of us served as judges in San Antonio, Texas. He was a little bit ahead of me as a State district court judge, but he went on to serve with distinction in the federal judiciary now for almost 35 years. He has had an incredible career. The first 19 years, he served as a federal district judge and then on the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals for 14 more. But he has been a public defender, U.S. attorney, a State dis-district court judge, assistant district attorney. He has done a lot of different things.

But for some in the audience who may not know the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas, for those States and the people who live there, Judge Prado and his colleagues on the Fifth Circuit have essentially been the supreme court since, as you know, only roughly 80 or so cases make their way to the United States Supreme Court.

In his role for the Fifth Circuit, the judge was confirmed by the Senate unanimously, 97 to 0. It is no surprise that he was appointed by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to chair the Criminal Justice Active Review committee and serve on the board of the Federal Judicial Center, as well as other committees. Judge Prado is just a popular, sharp, and actually, once you get to know him, pretty funny guy. But I hope he does not show that part of his personality here today. [Laughter.]

Senator CORNYN. He was first in his family to go to college. Judge Prado received his undergraduate law degrees from the University of Texas and grew up in a predominantly Latino neighborhood in west San Antonio, and he speaks fluent Spanish, which will come in handy, of course, in Argentina.

I was surprised to learn that his family’s history extends back to a Spanish soldier married at the Alamo in the 1700s.

So one of the jokes about federal judges is that although they get lifetime tenure, sometimes it feels like a life sentence. And Ed and Maria are embarking on a new chapter in their lives, which I know must be exhilarating for them, and it is to our great benefit to have somebody of their distinction and their character representing the U.S. Government in Argentina.

Although down in Argentina, he is going to have to remember that cowboys are gauchos, but Argentineans may be strangers to Bevo but they are no stranger to beef.

So as the committee knows, Argentina has become an increasingly important country in South America. President Macri recently implemented a series of positive economic reforms that has literally turned that country around and eliminated some of the currency controls and reducing taxes on agricultural exports. And his broad election victory last fall indicates he will continue to enjoy broad support.

So just as our relationship with Argentina has improved, it is really important that we have somebody of the character and talents and experience of Judge Prado representing the United States Government in that country as we work together to combat narcotics trafficking, money laundering, terrorist financing, corruption, and other illicit financial activities. We all share the concern, which I know the chairman particularly feels poignantly, the political concern over Venezuela. And recently our two Presidents agreed to launch a bilateral working group on cybersecurity issues.

So the Argentine Republic is fortunate to have such a strong believer in democratic principles and the rule of law serve as the U.S. Ambassador.

I thank you for your courtesies and letting me make this introduction and thank the President for making such an outstanding nomination. And I hope the committee will favorably report out his nomination.

Senator Rubio. Thank you, Senator Cornyn.
The senior Senator from Florida, Bill Nelson, to introduce Ms. Robin Bernstein.

STATEMENT OF HON. BILL NELSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator Nelson. And I might say also about Mrs. Royce—we well know her husband Ed. They have been frequent visitors to our State of Florida and have always been such gracious, gracious folks to Grace and to me.

I want to particularly thank the two of you for your leadership. You are both very skilled, the chairman and the ranking member, in foreign affairs. I had the privilege of serving on this committee for a number of years.

And I thought it important that since I have known Robin for a long time, the nominee for the DR, I wanted to come and tell you about her that her interest in public service started at a very early age. She even campaigned for Scoop Jackson and Hubert Humphrey. Now, please, Mr. Chairman, do not hold that against her.

Senator Rubio. That is not in the file. I did not see that. [Laughter.]

Senator Nelson. She even campaigned for me, Mr. Chairman. Please, do not hold that against her.

And she worked for the Joint Economic committee and the Department of Commerce. And she has always had that spirit of public service.

And let me tell you what she did in the aftermath of Puerto Rico. In a bipartisan way, she put together the Palm Beach County Cares organization that within just a few weeks of the hurricane in Puerto Rico, they delivered over 100 tons of supplies and they also helped to get clean water. And you know how desperate those folks are as they continue, many of them still without electricity this late in the day and potable water. That spirit of service and that proven ability to work in a bipartisan manner is going to make her a great ambassador.

And so I have already congratulated her on the nomination, and I would like to see her confirmation fly through the Senate. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Rubio. Thank you, Senator Nelson. And I think I speak for the ranking member. We thank you for your compliments. You are free to come to all of our hearings and say that as well. [Laughter.]

Senator Nelson. I just did that in a press conference with you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Rubio. Thank you for coming today.

A member of our committee, Senator Udall of New Mexico, will be introducing Ms. Royce.
STATEMENT OF HON. TOM UDALL, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW MEXICO

Senator Udall. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. And I also just want to say what a pleasure it is working with you, Chairman Rubio and Ranking Member Senator Ben Cardin.

My wife Jill and I have known Marie Royce for close to 20 years when I began my service in the House of Representatives. Marie is a California native. Growing up in the West, she is active in conservation organizations and initiatives, and I believe she understands the important connection of those programs to international security and the rule of law.

I also think her experience in educational and cultural affairs makes her a good fit for this important leadership role. Ms. Royce, a business woman and former professor, has been the CEO and principal of Marie Royce LLC in Fullerton, California since 2016. She has more than 30 years of experience in the private sector with Fortune 500 companies and as a small business owner creating and launching startups and new initiatives and serving as a key business liaison to 80 countries. As a former educator and full-time university professor, Ms. Royce led an international grant program between two universities. She is a private sector appointee on the Advisory Committee on International Communications and Information Policy at the Department of State and has served on two U.S. cultural exchange boards. Marie served as an American Council of Young Political Leaders delegate to Hungary and Poland.

Ms. Royce earned a bachelor's in science and business administration from California State Polytechnic University and a master's in business administration from Georgetown University.

Her nomination has significant support within the diplomatic community. Patricia de Stacy Harrison served as Assistant Secretary for educational and cultural Affairs under President George H.W. Bush and Secretary of State Collin Powell and currently serves as CEO and President of Public Broadcasting. Ms. Harrison says—and I quote here—Marie Royce's experience, leadership, knowledge, and commitment to service will be of high benefit to our country and the Department of State and the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs. End quote.

Likewise, former Assistant Secretary for Educational and Cultural Affairs under President Clinton, Ann Stock, says—and I quote here—we are thrilled to see Marie Royce nominated for a key leadership role at State. She continues to share our vision for a more secure and prosperous world through the power of international exchange. End quote.

Ms. Royce's experience, judgment, and temperament qualifies her for this important position within our diplomatic corps, and I wholeheartedly support her nomination and urge my colleagues to do so also.

Thank you both and really great to be here with you.

Senator Rubio. Thank you.

The three ambassadorial nominees, if confirmed, will be the face of America to the countries in which you will be serving, and your primary job, of course, is to communicate and execute the policies of the United States explaining to local populations what we are doing and why.
The western hemisphere is a region vital to our national security and to our economy and one increasingly contested by foreign powers who have little to no interest in democracy or human rights or the rule of law. If we want the United States to remain free, prosperous, and secure, it starts in the western hemisphere. This is a contest that we cannot afford to lose and you will be on the front lines.

As for the nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs, if confirmed, you will be charged with one of America's most important foreign policy tools, the finest educational system in the world and a culture that is prevalent in nearly every corner of the planet.

All four of these positions play an important role in U.S. foreign policy and I am pleased that all four of these nominations are here with us today.

Let us begin with Colombia where we have a relationship that, in my view, is a poster child for what good U.S. foreign assistance can do. We have worked for decades now with the Colombian Government on a problem of mutual concern, the production and trafficking of drugs. The U.S.-Colombia initiative, Plan Colombia, is one of the most effective bilateral efforts that we have ever undertaken and is a model in this western hemisphere. The initiative's main goal was to reduce the supply of illegal drugs produced and exported by Colombia, but in addition, it helped the security of Colombia itself, the stability of its government and its governance. And as a result economic relations with Colombia have deepened throughout the years, and the U.S. remains Colombia's top trading partner. In short, this partnership has allowed the Colombian Government to intake billions of dollars in foreign assistance and in return has allowed them to invest it in ways which have been good for both countries.

Today Colombia is a free and democratic nation. The rule of law is legitimate. It has one of the strongest and largest economies in the region, and it is among our strongest allies in the hemisphere, no longer just a recipient of support, but providing it themselves in places like Honduras.

Still, it faces challenges, and given the internal and regional issues its government is facing, especially with narco-trafficking and the FARC, anyone under consideration for this position should demonstrate a deep understanding of the political, security, and economic climate, as well as the opportunities for the United States in partnership with Colombia and with the region at large.

The Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs oversees some of the U.S. Government's most popular and prominent programs like Fulbright Scholars named after the longest serving chairman of this committee, William Fulbright, and exchange programs that expose people from all over the globe to America. These are soft power tools that could very well help decide whether this century is also an American one.

The Dominican Republic and the United States have deep cultural ties, especially in my home State of Florida. According to Pew, Dominicans are the fifth largest Hispanic group in the United States with nearly 2 million in the year 2015. It also happens to be a popular tourist destination for Americans, hosting upwards of 2 million Americans as tourists last year. Beyond personal and economic ties, the Dominican Republic finds itself at an important flashpoint for freedom in the region. The Dominican Republic is part of Petrocaribe, a group of countries that receive subsidized oil from a dictatorship in Venezuela. And if we want Venezuela to return to the prosperous constitutional democracy that its people deserve and that it was just a few decades ago, it is important for other democracies in the region, such as the Dominican Republic, to support the democratic aspirations and the human rights of their brothers and sisters in Venezuela in forums like the OAS and the United Nations.

Argentina is the leader in South America that is recovering from years of poor economic leadership. President Macri's election has shown a commitment to stronger bilateral relations with the United States and a return to good governance, the rule of law, and free markets. The news yesterday of charges being brought against the former president Kirchner demonstrate just how precarious democracy can be and why we need to be on guard for cracks in our own democratic institutions and the democratic institutions in the region and throughout the world.

So all of these positions will hold key roles in American foreign policy. And I begin at the outset by thanking you and your families for your commitment to your country and your willingness to serve it abroad.

The ranking member.

STATEMENT OF HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN, U.S. SENATOR FROM MARYLAND

Senator CARDIN. Well, Chairman Rubio, first of all, thank you for convening this hearing. I appreciate it very much, and it is a pleasure to work with you in regards to the nomination for these four individuals.

I also want to welcome you, thank you for your willingness to step forward in public service or continue in public service. It is not easy today. These are challenging times, and it is a great sacrifice to your privacy and for your families. So we thank you and we thank your families for being willing to serve our country. And we are pleased that so many of your family members could be present with us today as we go through this hearing.

Marie Royce for Assistant Secretary for Educational and Cultural Affairs. Marie, you seem to have connections in a lot of States. You got a Florida endorsement. You got a New Mexico endorsement. You are from California, but you tell me you have ties to Maryland. So obviously, you know the country. So congratulations on so many different contacts, and you have an extremely impressive background, well known for your experience in business and your global engagements. So we thank you for being willing to take on this extremely important position to promote U.S. standing in the world and our democratic principles, our cultural ambassador cultivating global relationships.

Let me just underscore the importance of this. When you look at the alumni clubs from these programs, you find many current and former heads of state. So this truly is America’s gift to the international community and promoting our values, more important now than ever before when you see, for example, what is happening in the Philippines with President Duterte’s use of extrajudicial killings in order to deal with the drug problem there and some kind comments sent by our President in regards to those methods. Believe me, we have challenges today and we need your help.

I do want just to acknowledge that the administration’s budget would cut your program by 75 percent. Now, we are not going to go along with that, but we need a friend to advocate with us so that you have the resources you need to carry out this very important assignment.

And, Mr. Chairman, I might point out I am pleased that we have four nominees with us today, but I have to acknowledge that there are so many vacancies in the State Department, such a drain of the top seasoned diplomats that have not been filled that I am extremely concerned about the pace of the Trump administration’s bringing to us nominees. I can assure you that we will work with the chairman and expedite all the nominees that are brought forward because we desperately need your presence in these areas.

To Ambassador Macmanus, thank you for your career service. You have had an extremely impressive career, including being our representative in Vienna to the international organizations, including IAEA. That gives you a wealth of experience that you can take to Colombia.

The implementation of the peace accords—Senator Blunt and I have worked with the Atlantic Council in regards to the implementation of the peace accords. There is a lot of interest in Congress, bipartisan interest.

But one of the real challenges that we need to follow up and this committee is very interested in is accountability, to make sure there are no impunities as to the violations of human rights with the FARC and others that occurred during the longest civil war in our hemisphere. So we do want to make sure that the peace accords are entered into in the right way and that there is accountability for the human rights violations. We have to address the illicit coca cultivation. We know that. It is a major source of concern to us.

And as the chairman pointed out with both Colombia and with Argentina, the impact of Venezuela is so noticeable, the impact on Colombia particularly on people trying to find life that cannot exist in Venezuela and the inability to deliver effectively humanitarian assistance to the people of Venezuela. All that will become part of the charge of our missions in Colombia and in Argentina.

To Judge Prado, we had a chance to talk yesterday. You have had a very distinguished career and we thank you for your willingness. We do not normally get circuit court judges that are on their way to become ambassadors. But your experience is incredible and your commitment to public service is one that we all admire. So I just really wanted to thank you for being willing to take your talent to Argentina. It is our only major non-NATO ally in Latin America. This year they will host the G–20, as we had a chance to talk about.

And as I explained to you, we need to bring closure to the 1994 bombing of the Jewish community center in Argentina. The cover-up here by the former government is one that cannot go unchallenged, and the United States needs to play a role to make sure that Argentina brings closure to that issue, holding those responsible accountable for that bombing.

And I am concerned about the increased presence of China in Argentina. And it is one which we need to understand as we go forward, and our ambassador will play a very, very important role there.

Mrs. Bernstein, you bring very impressive credentials in the business community, the philanthropic community. We thank you for your willingness to serve in a very important position.

I will just make one observation, which is not your calling. I think President Trump makes it more difficult, and I am going to explain why. Many of us are concerned about the fact that President Trump never made full disclosures of his business interests, et cetera. We know that there are Trump organization activities within the Dominican Republic. And we just urge you to understand the sensitivity of maintaining the objectivity of the mission in the Dominican Republic, and we will be depending upon you to maintain that objectivity for the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to our witnesses’ testimony and to engaging them in some questions.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

We are going to begin our witness testimony. Your entire statement will be entered into the record. So if there is an abbreviated version, we are happy to hear anything you have to say, but in the interest of time—we have members coming in and out, and I know they want to ask questions. And so I would encourage you, if you can, to shorten the statements, if possible, so we can get right to the questions.

Ms. Bernstein?

Statement of Robin S. Bernstein, of Florida, to Be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Dominican Republic

Ms. Bernstein. Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Cardin, distinguished members of the committee, I would first like to thank my longtime friend and esteemed Senator from Florida, Senator Bill Nelson, for his kind introduction.

It is an honor to be with you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to the Dominican Republic. If confirmed, it will be an honor to be the second woman to serve as U.S.
Ambassador to this country. I am humbled that the President has entrusted me with this opportunity, with your approval, to represent the United States. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the White House, Secretary Tillerson, and our talented and dedicated staff to lead our engagement with such an important regeonial ally and partner.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank my family who are with me today: my wonderful husband Richard; our children, Arthur, his wife Karla, Ariel, Alexandra, and Julia; and my mom Karolyn. I would also like to acknowledge my late father Archie whose lifelong passion was to host young exchange student ambassadors in our home and whose vision enabled me to go to high school in France as an exchange student and later to the School of International Service in Washington, D.C. My family has sustained me throughout the many challenges and opportunities in my life and without their support, I would not be able to undertake this next and exciting stage of my career.

I began one of my first professional positions here on the Hill at the Joint Economic committee in this very building. After obtaining my MBA, I moved to Florida where I met my husband and where we raised our family.

For over 3 decades, I have worked alongside my husband at our family insurance business in a number of leadership roles. During this time, I continuously worked in the nonprofit community in a wide variety of leadership positions, particularly in the areas of empowering and supporting women, health care issues, and supporting the underserved community. I am especially proud that as the cofounder of the bipartisan organization, Palm Beach County Cares, I helped facilitate the delivery of medicine and critically needed supplies to our fellow Americans in Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands in the aftermath of devastating hurricanes.

I am confident that my education and my experience in the public sector, private sector, and nonprofit worlds have prepared me for this important diplomatic mission. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador, I will work closely with the personnel from across the Government to lead our embassy's efforts in forging stronger bonds with the Government and the people of the Dominican Republic.

If confirmed, this appointment would be especially meaningful to me as a Jewish American. My grandfather, Morris Stein, fled Russia as a child with his family to escape religious discrimination. They came to the United States to pursue the American dream of religious freedom, human rights, democracy, and economic opportunity. That is why I am humbled to stand before you today and, if confirmed, pledge to continue the fight to preserve these American values.

In the Jewish faith, we have a saying, “When you save a life, you save the world.” During World War II, the Dominican Government and its people opened their arms to thousands of Jews who were seeking refuge from the atrocities in Europe. Serving as Ambassador would be a personally significant way for me to show gratitude for how the people of the Dominican Republic cared for the Jewish people in their time of need.

The Dominican Republic and the United States share a long history. As close neighbors, we also share a mutually beneficial economic, cultural, sports, and people-to-people ties enhanced by a very sizable Dominican American diaspora. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that trade opportunities continue to grow and deliver prosperity for both our nations and to ensure that our economic engagement will continue to benefit the United States.

Over the years, the Dominican Republic has endured challenges to the health of its civil society. If confirmed, I pledge to continue to promote policies that advocate for the rule of law, strengthen democratic institutions, and tackle corruption.

Fighting illicit trafficking and transnational crime is one of President Trump's highest priorities. The Dominican Republic is one of our strongest law enforcement partners in this hemisphere. Continued strong bilateral security cooperation will help attack the drug-related addiction and crime-related problems that affect both our countries.

Finally, if confirmed, I will work tirelessly to facilitate humanitarian, cultural, and educational exchanges that reaffirm to the people of the Dominican Republic America’s enduring foreign policy values of democracy, freedom, and human rights.

Thank you very much for considering my nomination. I look forward to answering your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ROBIN BERNSTEIN

Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Cardin, distinguished members of the committee, I would first like to thank my long-time friend and esteemed Senator from Florida, Senator Bill Nelson for his kind introduction.

Senator Rubio. Thank you.

Ms. Royce?

STATEMENT OF MARIE ROYCE, OF CALIFORNIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EDUCATIONAL AND CULTURAL AFFAIRS

Ms. Royce. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Cardin, distinguished members of the committee, thank you for inviting me here today.

I would like to thank Senator Udall for his kind introduction.

I want to thank President Trump and Secretary of State Rex Tillerson for their confidence in me, and if confirmed, it will be a privilege to represent you and the American people globally.

I would like to thank Ed, my husband of 33 years, for his love and inspiration. And I would like to recognize my mother, Mary Barbara; my father-in-law, Ed Sr.; and my late father, Ronald Porter; and Aunt Peg. To my family and friends in California and my friends that are here today, I could not ask for better support.

I am a passionate champion of people-to-people exchanges. Time and trust in ECA programs like Fulbright and the International Visitor Leadership Program have built important relationships. One in three current world leaders are alumni of U.S. Government exchange programs, so are over 500 former heads of state and 84 Nobel laureates.

As a professor at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, I participated in international exchange efforts through educating teachers and students from abroad. I saw the impact of our ideals, values, and policies on their world view and on their perception of U.S. foreign policy. Because of the prevalence of disinformation in many parts of the world, these ECA exchanges bring real world experiences in the United States that foster credibility and trust. These people-to-people ties are an important way to show that U.S. disagreement with a given regime overseas are with the Government of the country and not with the people. Thus, academic, cultural, and athletic exchanges cultivate mutual understanding as well as friendly and peaceful relations between the people of the United States and the people of other countries.

In my time as a business executive in the telecommunications industry working in emerging markets in Africa, Europe, South America, and Asia, I obtained a deep appreciation of the role played by our educational programs. So often those I met in key decision-making roles had been the beneficiaries of ECA’s bilateral agreements with foreign partners, governments, businesses, and NGOs. They had experienced the richness of America’s political, economic, and cultural life. And as a result, they were very receptive to what America had to offer.

As a delegate to Hungary and Poland in the American Council of Young Political Leaders, ACYPL, program, I experienced the effectiveness of these bipartisan programs. ACYPL promotes mutual understanding and cultivates long-lasting relationships among next generation leaders. It was an honor for me to later serve as secretary of the board.

I served as a trustee of Meridian International, which works closely with the State Department and other U.S. Government agencies to provide exchange and policy programs that strengthen U.S. engagement with the world and prepares leaders to address complex global problems.

My professional career began with the Procter & Gamble Company in sales management and research and development worldwide. At P&G, I helped create and launch a mentoring program for women and minorities to help close gender and racial gaps in the workplace and attract diverse talent.

I raise this point because American diversity and the advances in opportunity for women and minorities in our society serve as an example for those struggling for full rights abroad. Prospects for empowerment, democracy, and the rule of law worldwide are advanced when young people can participate in our public diplomacy programs. Involvement of American and international participants from traditionally underrepresented groups create opportunities that are open to all. This inclusion is an American value and advances American interests. From creating programs at Cal Poly Pomona, P&G, and Marriott International to creating a program for Muslim women in Afghanistan and later Iraq, I have volunteered my time to those who have faced discrimination and lacked opportunities.

As a private sector appointee on the Advisory Committee on International Communications and Information Policy at the Department of State, I developed long-distance mentoring programs.

As noted by Senator Udall, I have more than 30 years of experience in the private sector and small business and as a full-time university professor.

If confirmed, I would aim to strengthen our people-to-people ties even further. I am very honored to be appointed to this important position, and I will focus all my efforts on improving the vital missions of these programs.

Thank you very much.

As a delegate to Hungary and Poland in the American Council of Young Political Leaders (ACYPL) program, I experienced the effectiveness of these bi-partisan programs. ACYPL promotes mutual understanding and cultivates long lasting relationships among next generation leaders. It was an honor for me to later serve as Secretary of the Board.

I served as a Trustee of Meridian International, which works closely with the State Department and other U.S. Government agencies to provide exchange and policy programs that strengthen U.S. engagement with the world, and prepares leaders to address complex global problems.

My professional career began with Procter & Gamble in sales management, and research and development world-wide. At P&G, I helped create and launch a mentoring program for women and minorities to help close gender and racial gaps in the workplace, and attract diverse talent.

I raise this point because American diversity, and the advances in opportunity for women and minorities in our society serve as an example for those struggling for full rights abroad. Prospects for empowerment, democracy and the rule of law worldwide are advanced when young people can participate in our public diplomacy programs. Involvement of American and international participants from traditionally underrepresented groups create opportunities that are open to all.

This inclusion is an American value, and advances American interests. From creating mentoring programs at Cal Poly Pomona, P&G, and Marriott International, to creating a program for Muslim women in Afghanistan and later Iraq, I have volunteered my time to those who have faced discrimination and lacked opportunities.

As a private sector appointee on the Advisory Committee on International Communications and Information Policy (ACICIP) at the Department of State, I developed long-distance mentoring programs through video-conferencing and SKYPE for women in the developing world to match them up with women professionals.

I have more than 30 years of experience in the private sector with Fortune 500 Companies, and as a small business owner, creating and launching start-ups and new initiatives and serving as a key business liaison to 80 countries. As a former full-time university professor I led an international grant program between two universities.

If confirmed, I would aim to strengthen our people-to-people ties even further. I am honored to be appointed to this important position, and I will focus all my efforts on improving the vital mission of these programs. Thank you very much, and I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Ambassador Macmanus?
STATEMENT OF HON. JOSEPH E. MACMANUS, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF COLOMBIA

Ambassador Macmanus.. Thank you, Senator. Mr. Chairman and Mr. Ranking Member, members of the committee, it is an honor to appear here today as the President’s nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Colombia. If confirmed, I am committed to representing the President, the American people, and their national interests in a country so key to our security and prosperity in the western hemisphere.

I would like to thank first my wife Carol and our son Chris for their support during my 32-year career in the Foreign Service. Without that support, I would not be here today.

Mr. Chairman, Colombia has transformed itself.

Mr. Chairman, I find myself particularly challenged by the fact that your introduction and the ranking member’s introduction on Colombia were a perfect articulation of our policy. It is a representation of the bipartisan nature of that support over the past 20 years. And I would be happy to read my abbreviated statement, but I would prefer, in fact, to, in the Senate tradition, associate myself with those remarks and leave myself available for a full set of questions. It is a well known account. It is one that we all understand, and I look forward to talking to you about it.

If confirmed, I plan on representing our country fully and in a fashion that would continue the progress that we have made under Plan Colombia.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOSEPH E. MACMANUS

Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee, I come before you today, both honored and humbled, to be considered to represent the United States as the President’s nominee for U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Colombia. I feel honored by the prospect of serving our country in this role and, if confirmed, I am committed to representing the President, the American people, and their national interests in a country so key to our security and prosperity in the Western Hemisphere.

I would like to thank my wife and son, for supporting my 32-year career in the Foreign Service. Without your continued support I would not be here today.

Mr. Chairman, as the Members of this body know, our relationship with Colombia represents for both of our countries the full scope of opportunities and challenges that face our hemisphere and the world.

In spite of a well-known history of violence and instability, Colombia has transformed itself over the last two decades into a sturdy democracy of growing and maturing institutions with a dynamic market economy and a society brimming with optimism and hope for the future. Violent capital crime has decreased dramatically and the peace accord offers a way forward after one of the world’s longest running civil wars. Colombia has chosen a new path.

In these respects, the United States has no more capable and disposed partner in the region than Colombia, and Colombia has no more reliable and steady partner than the United States. This partnership has flourished under Plan Colombia, which has provided a platform for our support and cooperation to evolve as Colombia has matured. The support of the U.S. Congress remains vital to the health and momentum of this relationship.

At the heart of this cooperation is an urgent bilateral challenge, but this should not detract from the many positive aspects and values of our relationship. Colombia remains the single largest cultivator of coca in the world, the single largest producer of cocaine in the world, and the single largest trafficker of cocaine into the United...
States. By U.S. estimates, over 90 percent of cocaine brought to the United States originates in Colombia.

In my brief remarks this afternoon, I want to address the strategic purpose of U.S. continued support for Colombia, the means by which we can advocate our interests, and address the question of how to cap the growth of coca cultivation and return to the progress of previous years when there was diminishing production and trafficking of cocaine.

The United States, including both the administration and the Congress, has stated plainly its deep concern about the surge in coca cultivation and cocaine production. It is a topic of continuing discussion with and within the Colombian Government.

Our commitment over the past two decades to work side-by-side with Colombia to address the issue has produced encouraging results. Over this period, with a combination of training, tools, and technical skills provided through U.S. assistance, the Colombian security forces have made serious and increasingly effective efforts to address narcotics trafficking and transnational organized criminals and their networks.

In the past 12 months in bilateral meetings here in Washington and in high-level visits to Colombia, President Trump, Vice President Pence, Secretary of State Tillerson, and numerous other government officials have impressed on the Colombian Government the urgency with which they must do more to combat the tremendous growth in coca cultivation. The Colombians in turn have developed a wide range of new policies and programs to address the issue, and they continue to take losses in their security forces on a weekly basis fighting drug traffickers and their networks. Colombia is fully engaged in this fight.

Coca cultivation presents challenges to Colombia across every aspect of its governance and society. It damages families and communities through dangerous arrangements with traffickers, transnational criminal organizations, and guerrillas, resulting in killings, displacements, and corruption of individuals and government officials. It threatens public health and the environment, especially in the production phases of cocaine. It subverts licit economic development through the illusion of illicit cultivation as a realistic plan for subsistence or profit. It creates illegal money flows throughout the region, further leading to corruption and stunting the ability of the criminal justice system to function untainted with devastating effects throughout the illicit supply chain to the United States.

Such a pervasive set of threats requires an integrated, whole-of-government approach to counternarcotics and rural development in the strategic areas of concern. This approach characterizes the implementation of the peace accord related to illicit drugs, rural reform, and justice for victims.

The United States is supporting the Colombian Government’s efforts across Colombia, in Tumaco, in Antioquia, and elsewhere. Working with national, state and municipal governments, the private sector, civil society, and public forces, the Colombian Government is beginning to bring security and economic opportunities to areas of the country previously under-served and unsafe. Ending the scourge of narcotics trafficking that has destroyed so many Colombian and American families is an imperative for our relationship, for Colombia’s future, and for the success of the peace accord’s implementation. In the recently concluded U.S.-Colombia High Level Dialogue, Colombia committed to reducing Colombia’s cocaine production and cultivation to 50 percent of current levels by 2023.

If confirmed, I will be a strong and active supporter of this goal. Over the past five years, U.S. efforts in four of the top coca producing regions of the country have supported more than 35,000 families while leveraging more than $265 million in public and private resources. In FY 16, USAID programs directly supported over 1,800 small businesses and 14,000 small-scale farmers of coffee, cacao, milk, and honey through 45 producer associations and groups creating licit economies and jobs in the rural sector.

U.S. efforts to boost licit economic opportunities, develop and improve key infrastructure, and confront criminal activities, including narcotics production and related criminal activities, marks the next chapter in this fight. The United States and Colombia, working side by side, can assist communities affected by decades of conflict and narcotics trafficking through the implementation of the peace accord. But our relationship with Colombia is not just about drugs. Colombia is also an important trade partner for the United States, underscored by the U.S.-Colombia Trade Promotion Agreement (CTPA) that has supported economic growth and employment opportunities in both countries. Colombia is America’s 25th largest trading partner, with two-way trade in 2017 amounting to $26.82 billion. It is notably one of the most balanced trading relationships in the world, with only a $282 million trade deficit for the United States, something I will work on if confirmed.
We support Colombia’s accession to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) once it completes all the technical requirements for entry. In support of this we are providing Colombia with $2 million in assistance to improve labor practices and encouraging Colombia to meet its U.S.-Colombia Trade Promotion Agreement obligation to protect intellectual property rights, which will also deter transnational criminal organizations.

The United States also wants to see full implementation of new regulations to ensure market access for U.S. companies and full compliance with the U.S.-Colombia Free Trade Agreement and Labor Action Plan.

The educational ties between our countries also continue to grow. With substantial government investment from the United States and Colombia, together with private sector collaboration, our joint innovation fund has awarded nearly 30 grants in the last three years to teams of Colombian and U.S. academic institutions to build institutional capacity and create new exchange and training programs.

We encourage collaboration to support language and teacher training that strengthen educational and economic opportunities. Access to quality education is key to promoting racial and ethnic equality. Empowering persons of African and indigenous descent, women, and other underrepresented communities through education strengthens society as a whole and promotes economic opportunities for all. We have had excellent cooperation with the Government of Colombia through the U.S.-Colombia Action Plan on Racial and Ethnic Equality to improve access to education, entrepreneurship, and employment opportunities for Afro-Colombians and indigenous communities and explore ways to promote inclusive policies and programs for both countries.

Exchange programs between the United States and Colombia are uniquely able to reach young people and create new economic opportunities in both countries and these will continue.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I will say a few words about myself. I am a senior member of the U.S. Foreign Service, having served over 30 years at home and abroad. My experience includes work in Latin America and Europe. I served as our ambassador to the International Atomic Energy Agency and for many years worked closely as a senior aide to four Secretaries of State. I have a detailed knowledge of the importance of the Department of State’s relationship with Congress and I respect and value the views of its Members and the nature of their oversight. I am committed to and, if confirmed, will maintain strong ties with the Members of this committee, many of whom have deep experience on these issues, productive relationships with Colombians in government and civil society, visit the country often, and offer measured and wise views on the problems Colombia faces.

Mr. Chairman, we share a common purpose. Colombia continues its struggle to create the future it has worked so diligently to achieve for nearly two decades. Many of its most serious challenges, especially the twin challenges of consolidating peace and controlling drug trafficking, are deep seated and frankly the work of a generation. But Colombians are committed to picking up the pace. And if confirmed, I am committed to continuing the fine work of my predecessors and honoring the tremendous sacrifice of Colombians in this shared struggle. If confirmed, I will support and defend our policies, our interests, and represent the President and the American people as their voice and advocate.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to responding to your questions.

Senator Rubio. Yes. Senator Cardin makes the point that anytime your statement—basically as you agree with what we have to say, it is always a good sign. But that is just our opinion. [Laughter.]

Ambassador Macmanus. I got lucky, Senator.

Senator Rubio. All right. Judge Prado, do you agree with us too? [Laughter.]

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD CHARLES PRADO, OF TEXAS, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND pleni-Potentiary of the United States of America to the Argentine Republic

Mr. Prado. 101 percent. I think that Mr. Macmanus should have checked with the rest of us on the panel as to whether he should have cut his statement short because I think the rest of us would have preferred that it be longer. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRADO. Mr. Chairman Rubio, Ranking Member Cardin, and other members of the committee, including Senator Kaine who is here—and I will acknowledge him—thank you for the opportunity to appear before you this afternoon.

And I also wish to thank my good friend, Senator Cornyn. We go back a very, very long way when we were both young lawyers. We have an informal agreement that if I do not tell stories on him, he will not tell stories on me. So I will leave it at that and thank him for being here today and introducing me to the committee.

It is an honor to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Argentine Republic. I must say it is a rather awkward position for me because as an appellate judge, I am used to being the one behind the bench and asking the questions and controlling the little red lights and light traffic. So it is a little different situation for me today, but be that as it may, I hope to assure you that my career as a judge, my work ethic, my resolve make me well qualified to be America’s voice in Argentina.

I thank President Trump for his confidence in me and for this opportunity. And I thank Secretary Rex Tillerson for supporting my nomination.

I am here today with my wife of 44 years Maria. She has been my strongest supporter throughout my life and our marriage and in this new endeavor. She understands that there is an important role for the spouse of an ambassador and she is eager to take on that responsibility. We are a team, and she is coming with me as part of my team.

Our son Edward could not join us today, but he is very enthusiastic about this opportunity for his father. And I think he would rather save his money for possible trips further south than to come up here to D.C. today.

I would also like to acknowledge some of my former law clerks that are in the audience. As a judge for many years, I have had the opportunity to hire young, bright lawyers from various law schools throughout the country, and they have been part of what they call Team Prado. And I wish to thank them for appearing here today with me.

My career has prepared me well for this new responsibility. As a federal judge, I listened, I gathered information, I analyzed it carefully, and ultimately had the responsibility to make difficult decisions. I understood that with the title of judge came power and respect. But with that power and with that respect also came a responsibility to do what the law demanded regardless of the consequences. Likewise, the title of ambassador carries with it a great deal of prestige, but with that prestige also comes great responsibility to represent the United States of America. My goal will be to earn the respect that comes with the title of ambassador and to represent our country to be best of my ability.

I also realize that while I might serve as the face of the court, there are dozens of persons behind the scenes that make the courts function properly. The same is true of an embassy. While I might be the face of the embassy, I understand that there is a team and many dedicated employees behind the scenes making sure that America is properly represented. An embassy is only as strong as those who make it function from the Ambassador to the consular section to the people working in the cafeteria. We are a team working together with the same goals, the same mission.

I have had the opportunity to travel to Argentina on numerous occasions. I have made presentations and participated in workshops across Argentina and have made friends among the Argentine legal community. I know how important the rule of law is and how important a strong independent judicial branch can be to a country if it is to be a solid democracy. My intent is to continue working with the lawyers and the judges of Argentina in improving the judicial system and strengthening the confidence the people have in the judicial system.

As a former prosecutor, I appreciate the efforts of our law enforcement agencies to make our country and the world a safer place for all citizens. It is my intent to fully support United States law enforcement agency efforts in supporting Argentine law enforcement and their fight against crime. I am committed to help build capacity within the Argentine police to promote security in a vital regional ally.

As a son of a World War II veteran and myself a retired Army reservist, I appreciate the importance of a strong military commitment to a democratic world free from the threat of terrorism. Our support of the Argentine military must continue.

I also hope to work closely on commercial and economic issues to increase opportunities for United States business in Argentina. I will work to further enhance our bilateral trade relationship. Argentina is the eighth largest country in the world by land area and has a powerful and diverse economy. While the country has no doubt dealt with its share of economic challenges, the current Macri administration has established wide-reaching reforms seeking to strengthen Argentina’s markets and its position in the global economic community. I intend to work closely with the Argentine administration to not only assist them in these efforts but to strengthen mutuality between beneficial trade and commerce of our two countries.

I look forward to enhancing our continuing friendship and partnership with a close ally. Through our efforts, we can strengthen peace and prosperity in both countries, and I look forward to representing the United States on the global stage.

I welcome your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JUDGE EDWARD C. PRADO

Members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, It is an honor to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Argentine Republic. I must say it is a rather awkward position for me because as an appellate judge I am used to being the one behind the bench asking the questions rather answering them. Be that as it may, I hope to assure you that my career as a judge, my work ethic, and my resolve make me well qualified to be America’s voice in Argentina. I welcome your questions.

Senator Rubio. Thank you all for being here.

I am going to just question one of the nominees and then turn it over to our members. And then I will be able to remain and continue on our work.

But I wanted to start with Ambassador Macmanus, who served as executive assistant to Secretary Rice and then Secretary Clinton in particular during 2012 when we experienced the terrible terrorist attack at our diplomatic compound in Benghazi. And a number of members not just on the committee but off it have raised questions about this period of time, and so I wanted to give you an opportunity to address it in this committee.

Let me begin by just asking you, when did you know that the attacks were terrorism and not related to anti-American protests, and when did you first inform the Secretary of State of that fact?
Ambassador Macmanus. Senator, thank you. I am going to try and answer that in the correct order.

I first learned of the attack when it was reported from the diplomatic security command center to our operations center, and they in turn contacted me to let me know that there had been an attack or that there was an attack underway.

To identify when I had knowledge that it was a terrorist attack is a different arc. My response initially—and all of my communications were internal and intended only to inform people as required to understand what the Secretary’s whereabouts were and what the Secretary was addressing at that particular moment. And this was over the course of several hours in the afternoon and into the evening. I used the term “terrorist attack” because that is what I judged it to be. It was not a legal determination. It was not based on an a mass of evidence or analysis. It was the term that I used to describe what I saw taking place.

Senator Rubio. When did you first inform the Secretary of State?

Ambassador Macmanus. Well, I would say within minutes. It was approximately 3:30, 3:20, if I am not mistaken, in the afternoon when I informed the Secretary that this was underway and that we were monitoring what exactly was taking place.

Senator Rubio. One more question and again to give you the opportunity to answer. Did you ever purposely mislead or advocate for misleading the American public about the nature of the attack?

Senator Rubio. Thank you.

Senator Cardin?

Senator Cardin. Judge Prado, you and I had a chance to talk about the use of your talents in the legal system to deal with the problem in Argentina from the 1994 bombing of the Jewish community center. I just really want to get on the record here our concern that that matter be of high priority to our mission, that there be justice in regards to what happened and any cover-up that was engaged by the Government.

Mr. Prado. Yes, sir, Senator. I am encouraged that the present administration has refocused its investigation on those horrible terrorist attacks. We share, unfortunately, that with Argentina that our country too has been attacked by terrorist, and many people were killed and injured. The administration is going forward with investigations not only about the bombings that took place but also the killing, murdering, death of Alberto Nisman, who was a special prosecutor that was investigating the case, and that mysterious death. And I hope to get down there and help the process in any way I can with regard to any assistance that we might provide whether it be as prosecutors or assistance to the judicial process.

Senator Cardin. Thank you for that. There is at least some indication that there were foreign interests involved in that attack and that there may have been governmental cover-up as to the investigation. So that, obviously, is a matter of grave concern.

Mr. Prado. Yes. I would like to encourage the Iranian Government to cooperate in the investigation and assist in the investigation.

Senator Cardin. Thank you.
Ms. Bernstein, I am sure you are aware of the 2013 decision of the Dominican Constitutional Court that stripped hundreds of thousands of Dominicans of Haitian descent of their nationality rending them stateless. These are people who for a long time have lived in the DR, and the Constitutional Court has now declared that they have no citizenship, that they are literally stateless.

What would be your approach to ensuring that these individuals have their nationality restored?

Ms. Bernstein. Thank you, Senator, for that very important question.

Humanitarian rights are very, very important to me, especially as someone whose family fled Russia because of the lack of respect for human rights. So this is something that is deeply engrained in my soul. And this is a question that is very, very important to me.

First of all, I agree with you that human rights should be respected. Even Pope John Paul said that everyone—if I may quote—everyone should have the opportunity to eat enough, to be cared for when ill, to find housing, to study to overcome illiteracy, to find worthwhile and properly paid work, all that provides a truly human life for men and women young and old.

And I would take a very active role in working with our embassy staff. I understand that this is something that we do, if confirmed, that we work to help them gain passports. And I would, hopefully, work with my esteemed colleague, Ambassador Michele Sison, in Haiti and try and work with her should there be any issues where we could partner together and try to make sure that the restoration of the people that are, quote, stateless——

Senator Cardin. And I would ask that you keep this committee informed on that process. These individuals basically have been there for long periods of time. There is no other country that they belong, but because their language is slightly different, they have been discriminated against by DR. And we would just ask that you make this a priority to keep us engaged on this subject.

Ms. Bernstein. Absolutely, and if confirmed, I can assure you that I look forward to working with you to assure that this will happen. And I look forward to staying engaged with you on this issue.

Senator Cardin. Ms. Royce, I really appreciated your testimony. It was almost as good as Ambassador Macmanus’ testimony. [Laughter.]

Senator Cardin. I really appreciated the way you talked about the exchanges and American values and the impact it has had because I agree with everything you just said. And human rights is a priority of this committee. It is one of my top priorities. American values to me are our strength. And we have got to be pretty clear about it. It is being challenged today. It is not easy. There are a lot of concerns about whether America still maintains that global position as it relates to our traditional values. And I just want you to know that there is a lot of support by both Democrats and Republicans in Congress to make sure that your role is clear that America’s strength are our values and that we want you to have the tools you need to continue these exchanges to promote I would say universal values, American values, as you move forward where there are going to be challenges because of the current issues that are before America and before the global community.

So will you be open and frank with us as to how we can help?

Ms. Royce. Thank you, Senator. First of all, I want to say thank you for your thoughtful comment and your willingness to help.

What I would like to share that you stated was how important exchange programs are as far as that valued aspect of America's international leadership. As you know and you mentioned in your statement about resources, and I want to assure you that, if confirmed, that any level of resources—I am going to utilize my skills coming from the private sector where I managed with challenging budgets oftentimes. And I am going to leverage the assets of the ECA, and that includes the experts at the State Department, our resources, and you mentioned the alumni. That is really important.

In addition to that, I am going to marshal the resources against our highest public policy priorities for foreign policy.

So I will just say that I am going to welcome your feedback and be open to it. Anyway that we can make any improvements to enhance and improve our public policy—I would welcome that.

Senator Cardin. Thank you.

With your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask Ambassador Macmanus in regards to the peace process in Colombia and the reconciliation that is critically important, that the terms of the peace agreements as it relates to those that have violated human rights, that they are held accountable are consistent with the peace agreements. There are responsibilities on both sides. And what I find, that when peace agreements are entered into, the human rights component sometimes gets left on the table as far as enforcement is concerned because it is not considered to be of equal priority to the other provisions in the peace accord. I would ask that that needs to be of highest priority, and the U.S. mission can play a major role to make sure that in fact is carried out.

Ambassador Macmanus. Senator, I would comment briefly on that.

First, I think that the peace accords themselves have woven into them an understanding that the repair that needs to be done to the social fabric in that country is part and parcel of both the scourge of illegal narcotics and the response to that scourge in the peace accord and following, which is the introduction of state presence, of state institutions in areas that have traditionally not seen investment and participation by the state, one, for security reasons initially but, secondly, because they are areas that are in need of growth and many of them, in fact, line up with areas of the country where indigenous populations or Afro-Colombian populations are prevalent.

So the key word, as you said, is “accountability,” accountability for crimes and then an accountability to resolve part of the underlying causes for the state being in the woeful condition it was in when we first went forward with Plan Colombia. Human rights must be a part of that. And we have seen reactions from the Colombian Government in terms of providing greater protection to labor leaders and human rights defenders. It is still a problem, and it is going to be over the course of the generation that makes changes in Colombia that will build out, I think, the institutions of Colombian governance that will provide the most important protections.

Senator Rubio. Senator Kaine?

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And congratulations to each of you. This is a very well qualified panel for the positions that you have been nominated for. I appreciate your willingness to serve.

If I could ask you, Mr. Macmanus, quickly. We were talking in the back room and I was saying similar things. A lot of times we wonder whether the effect of American foreign policy is positive. We try hard. We have good motivations. We invest a lot. Often, despite all of those things, we get involved in other countries and we are not happy with the outcomes, and then that makes people question whether we should make the effort at all.

But Colombia is a perfect example of a careful and adroit and sustained investment between administrations and Congresses of both parties that has really been transformative. We have seen Colombia go from kind of a near failed state to a wonderful economic and security partner for the United States, a leader in its region. I remember going to visit the multinational force of observers that patrols and provides peace in the Sinai on the border between Egypt and Israel. And Colombia is a major participant in that peacekeeping operation, as they are in others. And so there is a lot at stake at this point in making sure that progress continues.

One of the issues I know that Colombia is very interested in—and I wanted to get your take on it—is Colombia’s desire to become part of OECD, to join in a community of nations that believe in normative standards and are willing to prove that they are capable of it is a great sign that they are prepared to move forward.

Our trade relationship with them now has as its framework a trade cooperation agreement, which has resulted in a fairly good trade balance. It is one of the best in the world, a trade in goods of about $23 billion a year. It varies depending upon a number of factors. But also both the trade agreement and the desire to join OECD has provided an impetus for a continuation in progress on standards, on labor standards, on resolving conflicts that exist that have to do with protection of intellectual property, the access to the market of U.S. companies.

U.S. companies have expressed—continue to—a great desire to invest in Colombia. Colombia is a country of 48 million people. It has a prominent role in the region and has ready access to other markets. It is really at a point where it should be developing in a very expansive way in terms of a larger global footprint.

There are issues that have yet to be resolved. There is every hope that they can be resolved in short order. But it is under a concentrated review by the U.S. Trade Representative, by the Labor Department, and by the Department of Commerce. I have spoken with both Commerce and Labor about these issues. This is a serious and ongoing conversation. It will continue to be so because there are elements of the Colombian economy that continue to involve directly issues such as child labor, and I do not mean child labor as in cutting the lawn on the weekend, really the misuse of children in a labor market.

So those are, again, longer-term shifts that have to take place. I think we are very positive in terms of the movement and hopeful that that can reach a good conclusion.

Senator Kaine. I would encourage you in that way. I think this has a lot of benefit for Colombia if it is done, but I also think it has benefit for the OECD. An organization like the OECD can easily kind of be viewed as a northern hemisphere thing, and I think it is really important that southern countries around the world also find their own places in organizations like this. So I would encourage you in that way.

Ambassador MacManus. Thank you.

Senator Kaine. Ms. Royce, let me just put a pet issue of mine on the table for your new job, and that is in the area of education exchange. Of course, we have a crown jewel education system, Fulbright scholarships and other things. I so often worry, though, when we talk about education, we always dis career and technical education. And I think there is an excellent opportunity for exchanges in this space. If you qualify for a Pell Grant in this country, you can use it on a college campus but you cannot use it at an apprenticeship program or a career and technical program not on a college campus. If you are in the military like my son, you get a tuition assistance benefit. You can use it at a college campus. You cannot use it to take a welding certification exam if you are an ordnance officer. We have a presidential scholars program for 50 years that recognizes high school students who are superstars. Only recently Senator Portman and I convinced President Obama to start recognizing career and technical education superstars too. You can pretty much look across the spectrum of U.S. education policy, and we say college is great and we have kind of underestimated career and technical education and apprenticeships.

There are some superb apprenticeship programs around the world, Switzerland, Germany. The United States has some wonderful examples, Newport News shipbuilding apprenticeship program in Virginia.

But I would just hope as you are thinking about educational exchanges how to both share our best practices and learn from the best practices of others, that it would not just be about college or elementary and secondary, but we would make sure that we include career, technical, and apprenticeship programs as part of what we both want to learn about and spotlight that we do well.

Ms. Royce. Thank you, Senator Kaine, for that input.

I would also add that I would be very open to looking at those types of programs. And as you are very well aware, many programs have been conducted working back and forth with Congress. A couple of those include the Kennedy-Lugar program for high school students. Another one you probably are aware of is the Ben Gilman program, and under Ben Gilman it provided an opportunity for people that were first generation students and their families to go to college. It helps with financial need. Of course, again, that was in direct consultation with Congress.

So I would just add that I think these types of ideas are great to think about and include. So I appreciate your input and would look forward to, if I am confirmed, working with you on this.

Senator Kaine. That is very good. Thank you so much.

And I have another question or two that I will just submit for the written record.

Senator Rubio. Thank you.

Ambassador Macmanus, I wanted to ask you about cocaine because from 2006 to 2010, according to the RAND study, there was a 50 percent drop-off in consumption of cocaine in the United States, and then it began to climb to the point where we have seen record supplies of cocaine over the last couple years, obviously, much if not most of it from Colombia. And the increase, of course, has led to a drop in prices and an increase in the rate of consumption in both the United States and in parts of Europe.

The timing of that climb, of course, coincided with the peace deal. They stopped aerial eradication, but the other thing that happened is they created this sort of program where they were paying growers to stop growing coca but to be in a position to qualify for it, for those payments, the farmers had to be growing coca. So people started growing it so they would qualify for the payments when they became available.

The point is we now have seen historic numbers of cocaine, and we know it is destined to come here. Already cocaine kills more people than heroin does among African Americans in the United States. So it is a burgeoning problem.

It is my belief that, if confirmed, you will be the Ambassador to Colombia at a time in which cocaine is going to begin to compete with heroin and opiates as a headline issue in the United States and immediately people are going to realize where it is coming from and there is going to be real tension created as a result of it.

Give us some ideas about how you plan to get ahead of that both in your interactions with the Colombian Government and the United States Government because I see that coming, and I see it potentially becoming a major irritant in the relationship between our countries. And, quite frankly, I could foresee people begin to question—not me, but others begin to question the wisdom of a plan that is supposed to be dealing with this, and yet they will be saying we are spending all this money and it is not working. So how do you plan to get out ahead of it both working with our counterparts in Colombia and, of course, the folks at the State Department and here in the U.S. Government?

Ambassador Macmanus. Thank you, Senator.

I think that irritation is already there. It is beyond an irritation. The President in last year’s declaration on a list of major drug producing and drug trafficking nations expressed a deep concern about the increase in coca cultivation and cocaine production in Colombia. The Colombians have felt the same way. Members of this committee have expressed themselves of this view. And the Colombian Government itself has also expressed the concern that they need to have on this issue.
The most recent experience on interdiction has been a positive one. In 2017, 500 metric tons of cocaine hydrochloride were interdicted—and cocaine paste. As well, the highest number of hectares of coca cultivation were eradicated, most of that with forced eradication, some of it, a much smaller number, with voluntary eradication.

The Colombian approach, which is a new strategy—and while it is tied to and is part of addressing cocaine that was built into the peace accords, both rural reform and addressing illicit drugs were elements of the peace accord. They place responsibilities well within the grasp of the Colombian Government to begin to address these in a coordinated way. So they have been using and beginning to use a whole-of-government approach.

Now, the growth is due to a number of factors. You mentioned the payments that would be made to farmers who were cultivating. We saw that growth beginning earlier, in fact before the end of aerial spraying. Some of that we take to be encouragement by the FARC. Some of it was in anticipation of negotiation, we think, for the peace accords, and some of it was clearly related to the opportunity to turn in hectares of coca cultivation for a cash payment. All of those have a predictable quality to them.

What is absolutely necessary is the commitment of the Colombian Government to reduce these numbers. Most recently we had a high-level dialogue with Colombia earlier this month, and the Colombians have committed themselves to an eradication within 5 years to a level of 50 percent current numbers. Now, we believe that there is both the focus, the appropriate tools, the professionalized military that was one of the outcomes of Plan Colombia that lead to the ability of Colombia to do that.

I recognize that there is a chain of suffering that starts in Colombia and gets to the United States, and every country that is affected along the way and certainly Americans who are affected by the introduction of illicit narcotics in the United States are part of that and feel that suffering. We know we have a responsibility at this end, and we have spoken about it in terms of demand reduction. Unfortunately, demand also appears to be rising. Some of those indicators like the number of first-time users continues to push up. These are all issues that are going to have to be dealt with in a coordinated fashion at our end, and we understand what the coordination needs to be at that end.

Senator RUBIO. And it is impossible to talk about cocaine and its distribution without mentioning—let me begin by saying that even as some elements of the FARC may have disbanded and disarmed and decommissioned, the space they once occupied in many parts of Colombia have been taken up by cartel and/or ELN elements. And you are someone that is very familiar with the region and obviously, as a career service at the highest levels of the State Department, are aware of this. It is indisputable—right—that the distribution of cocaine is assisted actively by elements in the Venezuelan Government that participate both in its distribution and, as we have seen with kingpin designations and sanctions and indictments in the United States against some of these elements, and our own counterparts in Colombia point to this that the Venezuelan Government is supportive of the ELN, has often hosted its officials on that side of the territory. But without doubt, as you see the aerial routes that are distributing through the Caribbean, they almost all proceed from Venezuelan territory of Colombian cocaine. And therefore, as we look at the surge, it is fair to say that elements within the Venezuelan Government and/or military are active participants in the distribution of these cocaine routes.

Ambassador MacManus. Senator, it would test credulity to believe that the ELN, which has traditionally operated along the Venezuelan border and has also acquired greater license in areas that had previously been controlled by the FARC, that that border somehow becomes an impossible barrier for them. The border between Colombia and Venezuela is ripe for mischief and for illegality. The ELN has an interest in creating opportunities for generating illegal funds. So I would have to say that only somebody who was waiting for the final analysis to make that conclusion would disagree with your statement. I do not.

Senator Rubio. It is also fair to say that if you look at the challenges facing Colombia, whether it is assistance to the ELN, whether it is a massive migratory issue now with refugees fleeing Venezuela, whether it is the distribution of cocaine, including by elements within the Government, the nephews of the dictator in Venezuela—they have been convicted—Venezuela poses a very significant national security threat to our strongest ally in South America in Colombia.

Ambassador MacManus. That is correct, Senator.

The Summit of the Americas this year in April has as its main theme democratic governance against corruption. You put a colon after that and then say the problem of Venezuela. Clearly, Venezuela as a regional threat, as a threat to Colombia is the principal problem of today of right now. There are solutions and steps that can be taken and that we have called for, that the United States Government has called for that are simple steps of return to democracy, return to a respect for human rights, allow free and fair and transparent elections to go forward with international observers, open a humanitarian corridor for food and medicine. Many of the Venezuelans who are crossing the border are seeking medical attention, are seeking simple vaccinations. Children are dying, babies are dying as a result of that inability to secure basic care.

Senator Rubio. One last question in that regard, and that is, as you see more and more people coming across the border—by the way, some are citizens of both Venezuela and Colombia.

Ambassador MacManus. Yes.

Senator Rubio. But as they come across the border and more strain is placed upon our allies, do you anticipate at some point, if not already, that the United States will need to step up and potentially provide Colombia with assistance, along with the international community, to deal with the pressures being created by these large number of refugees flowing into Colombia from Venezuela?

Ambassador MacManus. I do, Senator. I have had conversations with USAID and with other elements in the State Department that would be directly involved in that kind of assistance. I think Colombia understands deeply the depth of this particular problem and this crisis and are prepared to seek support when it is needed.
in order to help alleviate the enormous stress that it is going to place both on the individuals, the Venezuelans themselves who have been displaced, but also on the systems in Colombia that are going to need to be able to respond to it.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Ms. Bernstein, I wanted to ask you, I guess it is, one question with two parts about the Dominican Republic. One of the things that is concerning to us is while we are allies of the Dominican Republic and work with them and have strong cultural and economic ties, in settings like the United Nations, their votes are very often not aligned with our priorities. As an example, it is my view and I think the view of most of the Members of the Senate—in fact, I know it is because 100 Members of the Senate addressed the letter that I led with Senator Coons to the United Nations Secretary-General to express our deep concern about the unfair treatment of Israel at the United Nations. It is an entity and a body that frequently is home to anti-Israel resolutions that in many cases attempts to de-legitimize Israel.

For example, in 2016 at its 71st session, the U.N. General Assembly adopted 18 resolutions directed at Israel, resolutions on which the United States voted no. The Dominican Republic voted for each of these 18 resolutions.

We have also seen them at the OAS be less than cooperative on efforts to pressure the Venezuelan Government, in essence, efforts to allow the OAS to function the way it is supposed to, and that is to be an organization of democracies in the region that protect democracy and that condemn nations that are violating it. And obviously, one of the reasons potentially why this is happening is their membership in Petrocaribe, which is a group of countries that receive subsidized oil from Venezuela in exchange for Venezuelan influence in their government.

I would just ask, do you commit to this committee that this is an issue that you are going to begin a dialogue with the highest levels of the Government of the Dominican Republic, both on their anti-Israel votes at the United Nations and also at their consistently not wanting to vote in favor of supporting democracy in the region? Will you commit to this committee that that will be among the issues that you will raise, if so directed by the Department of State, at the highest levels of the Dominican Republic Government?

Ms. BERNSTEIN. Yes, absolutely, Senator. I look forward to working with you in concert on this, if confirmed.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Judge Prado, this has already been asked, and I just want to reiterate. I think that Argentina has a lot of positive things happening. They are a member of the Lima Group, as an example, a group of nations that have taken it upon themselves to combine and coordinate efforts to pressure Venezuela’s dictatorship and to push forward. And I would just ask, do you commit to doing all you can in your role to coordinate with your U.S. counterparts and the other member countries and to continuing support of the Argentine Government’s commitment to this process?

Mr. PRADO. Yes, Senator, I do. President Macri has been a long-time critique of Venezuela’s Government and the treatment of the citizens of Venezuela by the Maduro administration. He took efforts to have Venezuela taken out of the MERCOSUR, which is a common market group of South American countries. So I think there are some positive moves being made by the Argentine Government in its criticism of how the Venezuelan administration is treating its citizens and the lack of democracy. And I intend to do all I can to support their efforts to remedy the situation.

Senator Rubio. And as I have mentioned in the opening statement just yesterday, the Argentine judiciary referred for public trial former President Cristina Kirchner and other senior officials in connection with the cover-up of the 1994 bombing of a Jewish community center in Buenos Aires by the Iranian Government. They are accused of abuse of power and obstruction of justice in trying to avoid holding Iran responsible for the terror attack which, by the way, killed 85 people.

And I would just ask if you could commit to the committee, if confirmed, that you will not only do all you can to support their government in the search for justice for those who died in that attack but also that you will support and do all you can on behalf of the U.S. Government to support them in any ongoing investigations into what I believe was the murder and the assassination of a prosecutor, Alberto Nisman, who was on to the truth when his life was taken.

Mr. Prado. Yes, Senator. I appreciate that question and I will do all I can to support the Macri administration in its investigation of this very serious, tragic situation that has occurred in their country.

Senator Rubio. And finally, Ms. Royce, Florida, my home State, has benefited from educational and cultural exchanges in numerous ways, including a large impact on our economy. There was an article in the “Washington Post” in November of last year that basically outlined that there has been a sharp change in foreign student enrollment in the U.S. with numbers declining in both 2016 and 2017 of international students coming to the United States. I guess my question is, if confirmed, what ideas do you have about increasing participation of educational and cultural exchanges both here and abroad?

Ms. Royce. Thank you, Senator, for your question.

The information that I have received is that we have had 1 million international visitors this past year and the year before. So, of course, I would like to continue that. I would like to also add that in that number, we even have 14,000—you are talking about international students?

Senator Rubio. I think it is a combination of students and cultural exchange.

Ms. Royce. Okay. I am sorry. Maybe you can repeat the question.

Senator Rubio. The question is what can we do to continue to ensure—part of what is happening is in some countries around the world, they now have options available that they could only have gotten in the United States in years past. That is a part of development. But there might be some other factors at play that might be discouraging the growth in study abroad in the United States and/or in participating in exchanges between students who are coming here, whether it is rhetoric and our politics or perhaps the unavailability of some of these programs.

But one of the things that we notice in our work—and I think the ranking member would agree—is oftentimes when you meet with important foreign leaders, one of the things you will notice in their biography is that they graduated from an American university, and it actually has a real impact in our ability to engage with them because they are familiar with our system of government, they are familiar with the United States. It is a real advantage to this country.

What ideas do you have to ensure that we continue on that trend as we may face new global competitors for that and/or perhaps options domestically that may no longer make our universities or our cultural exchanges as attractive as they may have been?

Ms. ROYCE. Thank you very much for the question, Senator.

You mentioned about the interlocutors of top world leaders, and I mentioned that in my opening statement, that one in three world leaders today are actually people that have experienced the United States firsthand through the international ECA programs that we have had.

I would also add that we have been doing some exciting things by trying to promote English, and we have English centers around the world where we offer young people the opportunity to learn English and they can do that online. And so consequently, that also gives them an exposure.

Another thing that is exciting about ECA right now is we have got some digital diplomacy initiatives. Even our Facebook page—we have seven different Facebook pages, and we have got the third largest hits on one of the Facebook pages. And we have got a Twitter feed. We have got digital initiatives where people can actually go online and have a mentor.

I will just add one type of program. It is the Christopher Stevens initiative, which is actually all virtual. Excuse me. After our former Ambassador. And so consequently, we are engaging with people that normally would never have the opportunity to interface with an American. And so I think that is another example where we are able to create some hybrid programs to expose people to also increase our numbers.

But what I have understood from the information I have received is that we have had a number of people that are still continuing to come to the United States from the international visitor program, and there is a strong economic impact. I am sure you know the numbers. Those students have created 450,000 jobs here in the United States, $39 billion worth of impact financially.

Again, I will continue to try to do everything I can, if confirmed, to try to continue to promote ways for people to be interested in coming to the United States, again because these leaders are so important.

And also I would just add on a short-term basis, having these leaders here gives us an opportunity to talk about things that are very important, countering terrorism and managing the refugee crisis, for example, or even responding to disaster relief because these people are already here. So if that is a leader or an exchange student—and if it is a student, of course, they are getting exposed to American values. We mentioned human rights, democracy, rule of law. Free speech is another one. We are talking about countering aggressive regimes, getting the opportunity to be able to speak and gather freely, and I know, Senator, also on technology, even open and free data flows and cross-border communications. I think that is really important.

Thank you.

Senator CARDIN. If I could ask Ms. Royce on the summer work-travel programs, J–1 visas. 17 Senators sent a letter to Secretary Tillerson last summer in regards to the importance of the continuation of that program. It has been under concern.

I could just give you one example. I had talked with the Jewish camp organizers and the use of the J–1 visa for counselors at the camp for cultural opportunities for the campers there. It is an incredible program.

We are concerned in this immigration debate that this program remain as a high priority. What is your view on this program?

Ms. ROYCE. Thank you, Senator Cardin, for your question.

I wanted to share with you that I am familiar with the letter, and I also was impressed with the fact that each of you that signed on really talked about the importance of the summer work-travel program to the local community. In addition, you recognized something that is very important in that letter, which was the fact that Americans should also have the opportunity to be able to go for these jobs. And in fact, it was recognized then that these jobs should also be promoted broadly to Americans. But, of course, there is always the need for talent in high demand season.

One of the things about this area is that they are closely monitored and site visits are conducted, and they are always updating the regulations. And I want to let you know that I would continue with those practices in a transparent way and would want to work with you on those. And I understand the summer work-travel program has really strong bipartisan support. And obviously, just even speaking on the Hill here on my visits, I just know how important that is, and I would be interested in continuing this dialogue.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

All right. Well, thank you for your service, your willingness to serve. We look forward to the chairman moving this on to the confirmation vote.

The record on this hearing is going to remain open until the close of business this Friday.

And seeing no objection, the hearing is adjourned.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBIN BERNSTEIN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Trump Organization Conflicts

The Trump Organization, which the President continues to own and benefit financially from, has a real estate venture in the Dominican Republic. After being dormant for many years, the Trump Organization appeared to revive its interest in the project last year, saying that the development could include many phases. Among other things, it will require permit approvals from the local government. According to reports, local government officials refer to it as “the Trump project,” and believe that a proposal to roll back environmental regulations for the project could “help Trump.”

I know that you have stressed the importance of maintaining high ethical standards, and I hope you would agree with me that it is important to avoid any action that would create or appear to create a situation where U.S. Government resources are used to benefit the personal financial interests of U.S. Government officials, including the President.

Question 1. If confirmed, do you commit that under your leadership, the U.S. Embassy will not participate in any matters related to the Trump Organization’s interests in the Dominican Republic, including meeting with any members of the Trump Organization and Trump family members?

Answer. As a Chief of Mission, commercial advocacy is one of the most important parts of the job. While remaining vigilant about avoiding any appearance of impropriety, it is important for embassy teams to engage in U.S. export promotion, assist U.S. companies in understanding the Dominican investment climate, and engage in economic and commercial diplomacy to promote fair and transparent business and trade policies that ensure a level playing field for U.S. businesses in the Dominican Republic.

If confirmed to be Ambassador to the Dominican Republic, I will always act in the best interest of the United States Government and the American people. I will never place the interests of any individual or company ahead of those of the American people. I will make clear that this is my expectation for all Embassy staff.

Question 2. Do you commit to refrain from weighing in with any Dominican Republic Government officials or any members of the private sector regarding any Trump Organization interests in the Dominican Republic?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador to the Dominican Republic, I will engage with the Department’s ethics lawyers on any matters relating to the Trump Organization and engagements with Trump family members engaged in the Organization’s business activities in the Dominican Republic. I will always act in the best interest of the United States Government and the American people. I will never place the interests of any individual or company ahead of those of the American people, at the same time by law the U.S. embassy must not disadvantage the Trump Organization vis-à-vis other U.S. businesses. If confirmed, I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations and ensure that all of my actions as Ambassador are consistent with ethics laws. Should any questions arise, I will direct my staff to seek guidance from the Department’s ethics officials.

Question 3. How do you plan to avoid any meetings or discussions that could create the appearance of a conflict of interest, given that a wide range of businesses and government officials in the Dominican Republic could be involved with the Trump Organization’s ongoing project?

Answer. If confirmed, as with all meetings, I will remain vigilant with regard to those matters that come before me and ensure that my actions are consistent with ethics laws. In any matters relating to the Trump Organization, I will seek guidance from the Department’s ethics officials with the goal of avoiding even the appearance of a conflict of interest.

Question 4. How do you plan to ensure that Embassy staff does not inadvertently participate in any matters that could be perceived as improperly benefiting the Trump Organization or the President?

Answer. If confirmed, I will always act in the best interest of the United States Government and the American people. I will never place the interests of any individual or company ahead of those of the American people. I will make clear my expectation for all Embassy staff to act consistent with ethics laws and to consult directly with the Department’s ethics lawyers should they have any questions or concerns.
Tax Audit

I understand your tax history indicates that there may be some confusion about what resources can be allocated for business use, as opposed to personal use.

Question 5. Why were your tax returns the subject of an audit by the IRS?
Answer. The personal taxes paid were the determination by the IRS that a portion of our disallowed client related business expenses became personal expenses and as such were subject to personal tax as opposed to business tax consistent with IRS regulations. We amended our tax filings with the IRS and paid the additional tax.

Question 6. What was the nature of the issues that the IRS raised?
Answer. The issue raised by the IRS was the disallowance of business expense deductions.

Question 7. Do you believe that the IRS's decision that over $222,000 in back taxes was owed was correct? Why or why not?
Answer. The payment to the IRS was the result of a compromise recommended by our CPAs and tax lawyer after consultation. We decided resolve the matter as it amounted to 2.7 percent of our sales over this three year period as opposed to a costly litigation process with an uncertain outcome.

Our company and its financial representatives insisted that due to the nature of our business of representing high net worth clients, entertainment such as dinners and professional sporting events were valid business expenses. This allowed our company to form, strengthen and gain the trust of our prospects and existing clients. We submitted a list of business professionals who were our guests at the events over the 3 years of the audit and the income from these clients far exceeded the expenses incurred that ultimately became disallowed by the IRS. The agent summarily dismissed this information and insisted the attendance at these events was personal. In fact, one response was “if your product was good enough, then the sales would occur without the personal relationships.”

Hillary Clinton “Treasonous” Comment

I have said before in nomination hearings that in our public discourse, words matter. And they matter, in particular, for diplomats. On October 26, 2016, you stated, “This corruption that Hillary Clinton has committed, I think it’s treasonous.”

Question 8. What precisely was your comment about treasonous corruption referring to?
Answer. I had first thought the comment was made during a discussion of the use of an unsecured server for emails. Since then, I realized the comment was made during a discussion of hacked emails and contributions to the Clintons’ charitable foundation.

Question 9. Do you stand by that statement?
Answer. The comment was made during the passion of the last weeks of a very intense campaign. If confirmed, I understand and acknowledge that as a representative of the United States that my comments must be guarded and non-political.

Question 10. What is your definition of treason?
Answer. My view is that treason includes the furnishing of our enemies with classified information as well as any act that weakens the power of our country to resist its enemies.

Question 11. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?
Answer. Since 1975, I have regularly participated actively in free and democratic bipartisan election campaigns to help promote and elect candidates who believe in democracy, human rights and American prosperity. I believe the impact of my actions has served to help elect candidates who believe and actively support these ideals.

Additionally, I have routinely engaged in civic and community organizations in an effort to make a difference in my community, including serving on boards and task forces, fundraising, and leading efforts to assist underserved communities, support equal rights, business and mentoring opportunities for women, prevent human trafficking, and assist those who have been adversely impacted by natural disasters in our region.

Question 12. What are the most pressing human rights issues in the Dominican Republic? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in the Dominican Republic? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. U.S. human rights promotion in the Dominican Republic over the last several decades has been instrumental in improving the country's human rights record and bolstering the stability of its democratic institutions. Forty years ago, the Dominican Republic was just emerging from a tumultuous period of instability and authoritarian rule that followed the 1961 assassination of Dictator Rafael Leonidas Trujillo, whose 30-year rule was marked by mass killings and persecution. Since the late 1970s, however, U.S. assistance has helped the Dominican Republic restore democratic rule—including the peaceful transition of power between parties—and dramatically improve government authorities' respect for human rights. While we still have ongoing concerns such as discrimination, gender-based violence and human trafficking for example, these advances demonstrate that U.S. engagement on human rights yields significant benefits over the long term.

If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Government’s longstanding efforts to strengthen protections for human rights as well as mechanisms to hold government officials accountable for human rights violations and acts of official corruption. I will also use my platform as Ambassador to work with the Dominican people and the country's leadership to foster greater protections for human rights.

Question 13. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Dominican Republic in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The U.S. Government has long invested in strengthening Dominican institutions. That work continues, but institutional capacity remains a persistent challenge. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring U.S. taxpayer resources devoted to assistance programs—through our efforts under the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative, development projects funded by USAID, and other initiatives—continue to strengthen democratic institutions and provide training to Dominican authorities to address the concerns I have highlighted.

Question 14. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Dominican Republic? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, the promotion of human rights will be one of my top priorities as Ambassador. Meeting with civil society groups is an essential part of that engagement, and I intend to meet regularly with groups in the Dominican Republic that work on the human rights issues I have outlined. If confirmed, I plan to meet with U.S. human rights groups before I depart for Santo Domingo and to maintain an ongoing dialogue with them.

If confirmed, the professional law enforcement, military, and diplomatic staff at the Embassy and I will deliver messaging to the Dominican Government to make clear our expectations regarding respect for human rights by security forces. We will urge that Dominican authorities respect human rights principles in their conduct of security operations and adherence to the Leahy standards.

Question 15. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Dominican Republic to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Dominican Republic?

Answer. Yes. Presently, the United States does not recognize any cases of individuals detained for purely political purposes in the Dominican Republic. Should I become aware of a case of politically-motivated arrest or imprisonment, if confirmed, my Embassy staff and I will engage vigorously with the Government to see that such detainees are released without delay.

Question 16. Will you engage with the Dominican Republic on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. As I have outlined, if confirmed, promoting human rights, civil rights and democratic governance will be among my top priorities as Ambassador to the Dominican Republic. While the Dominican Republic has made noteworthy advances with regard to human rights in recent years, there is work still to do. If confirmed, I will make use of every tool available to champion the cause of human rights. I believe that by standing by our principles we demonstrate credibility and earn the respect of the Dominican Government and people, even when the messages we deliver are not easy. In doing so, we will build on our already-positive reputation in the Dominican Republic, where we enjoy high favorability ratings in public opinion polling.
Question 17. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 18. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 19. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Dominican Republic?

Answer. No.

Diversity

Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will immediately let it be known that diversity and inclusion practices will be one of my priorities in the embassy. First and foremost, I will lead by example by treating staff and requiring staff to treat everyone with respect. Additionally, I would be interested in reviewing the existing embassy hiring practices and hiring strategies to ensure they resemble the environment we operate in. Additionally, for positions in which I am able to have a hand in hiring, I would seek to make progress in areas where there are gaps to achieve diversity by asking employees for their input and referrals and reaching out to community organizations to find qualified candidates to fill the gaps. Finally, if confirmed, I will work to ensure that mentoring and training programs for staff are top of mind at all working levels of the Mission. I would also strive to ensure that all supervisors both have the tools they need to promote diversity, mentoring and inclusion and pledge that it is something that will remain extremely important to me throughout my tenure.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBIN BERNSTEIN BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. The Medina Government has hosted preliminary talks between Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro and the Venezuelan opposition. Although the opposition has recently announced that it will not participate in talks at this time, do you see any circumstances under which the Dominican Republic could help broker an agreement between the two sides? To what extent, if at all, should the U.S. Government encourage such a dialogue?

Answer. The United States has rightly applauded President Medina and his government for their leadership in hosting negotiations between the Venezuelan Government and opposition. Unfortunately, over the course of the last several months, the Maduro regime did not take the opportunity to negotiate in good faith. I believe we should continue to encourage meaningful dialogue provided it leads to an outcome that guarantees free and fair elections in Venezuela.

If confirmed, I will place a high priority on engaging the Dominican Government to take steps to help bring the Venezuelan crisis closer to a peaceful resolution. Right now, the Maduro regime does not appear willing to engage in meaningful negotiations, so channels like the Organization of American States may well be the best avenues through which the Dominican Republic can help bring about the free and fair election process the Venezuelan people deserve.
J-1 Cultural Exchange Visa Programs

If confirmed, you will lead the bureau responsible for administering the J-1 Cultural Exchange Visa Programs, including the Summer Work Travel Program. It has been reported that the administration is planning to make changes to these programs, and I want to make sure that any changes do not have unintended consequences that undermine their success in the future. I am also concerned that these programs are not fully understood by other stakeholders within the Executive Branch.

Question 1. Will you commit that you and your staff will advocate for these exchange programs within the State Department and in the interagency?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to review any suggested changes to J-Visa or Private Sector Exchange Visitor programs regulations and policy guidance. As you know, the J-Visa program is an educational and cultural exchange, not a work program. It is funded primarily by fees paid by participants. The J-Visa provides public diplomacy engagement with more than 300,000 participants from 200 countries and territories annually. The program is implemented by the private sector at virtually no charge to the Department. I understand that participants in J-Visa programs with a work component are already not permitted under current regulation to displace American workers. I would welcome meaningful input from the stakeholder community on what works and what could be improved in the Private Sector Exchange Visitor programs and will make any decisions on the changes in those programs in a fully transparent way.

Question 2. Will you work with me and my staff to ensure that any changes to the Summer Work Travel program or other exchanges have the effect of strengthening, rather than limiting, the programs and enhancing their future returns for our country?

Answer. The Educational and Cultural Affairs Bureau’s Office of Private Sector Exchange (ECA/EC) oversees the J Visa Exchange Visitor Program (EVP), which enables more than 1,500 U.S. sponsors to bring more than 308,000 privately funded international exchange visitors to the United States each year for educational and cultural exchange experiences in 13 different program categories, including Summer Work Travel (SWT).

When international young people participate in SWT jobs, they get first-hand experience with American society and culture. SWT student participants are engaged primarily by small and family-operated U.S. businesses in tourist destinations to meet short-term, high-volume worker needs during peak tourist seasons. SWT students supplement and sustain the existing U.S. workforce in these seasonal endeavors and serve as cultural ambassadors from their home countries to American communities.

Private Sector Exchange programs come at virtually no cost to U.S. taxpayers, funded as they are through fees paid by the sponsors and participants, but they have many public diplomacy benefits that serve foreign policy goals, advance national security, bolster U.S. leadership and influence in the world, and promote mutual understanding between Americans and the people of other countries. If confirmed, I welcome the opportunity to hear from all of the stakeholders in these programs on their effectiveness and value for our country.

Exchanges Budget

International exchange programs are often considered one of the most effective U.S. public diplomacy efforts, building long-term relationships and mutual understanding between U.S. and foreign participants. Funding for State Department educational and cultural exchanges has mostly remained level or increased slightly in recent years. In the President’s FY 2018 budget for State Department programs, however, exchanges funding received a proposed cut of over 50 percent from FY 2017 levels, based on the argument that such funding is no longer necessary given the expansion of non-U.S. Government funded exchange opportunities in the United States and globally over the last five decades.

Question 1. Do you agree that exchanges funding should be cut?
Answer. Exchanges are a valued aspect of America’s international leadership. At any level of resources, if confirmed, I would be committed to ensuring that ECA assets are marshaled to support the administration’s highest foreign policy priorities.

Question 2. What is the importance of State Department funding for international exchanges?

Answer. My understanding is that State Department exchanges are designed to respond to the foreign policy challenges faced by our country—that they are created and conducted in consultation with colleagues throughout the Department, with Missions around the world, and with Congress.

Exchanges move people in order to move values, policies and ideas. They create networks of men and women around the globe who have shared interests and who are prepared to make common cause with us.

I see exchanges as American values in action and I know from my own experience that the relationships that grow out of this engagement endure through elections, crises and regime changes.

I understand that one in three world leaders today is an alumnus or alumna of ECA exchanges. I see this as a remarkable fact and one that provides our President and Secretary with interlocutors who have firsthand experience of the United States.

Question 3. What effect do you think a significant cut to exchanges funding would have on U.S. and foreign participation in international exchanges and the promotion of U.S. foreign policy through such exchanges?

Answer. If confirmed, I would be committed to focusing the Bureau’s programs on our nation’s highest strategic priorities. Significant reductions in programs and personnel would, of course, reduce the number and variety of exchanges the Department would have available to implement.

American missions around the world rely heavily on exchanges to reach key audiences and advance policies. If confirmed I would consult closely throughout the Department to ensure ECA programs were targeted on the most important objectives.

Question 4. Can ECA rely on private sector organizations and individual institutions of higher learning to maintain, expand, and effectively administer international exchange programs that ECA would no longer be able to support? Is increasing ECA’s exchange partnerships with private corporations an option in filling the funding gap for exchanges? Why or why not?

Answer. As I have come to understand, cooperation and partnership with the private sector are the way ECA does business. All ECA grants go to American organizations and more than 90 percent of its budget is spent in America and directly invested in the skills and abilities of American citizens.

Increasing such partnerships would be a priority of mine and, if confirmed, I believe that my experience as a businesswoman has given me the background and insights necessary to forge such partnerships.

The American private sector is one of our Nation’s crown jewels—a tremendous repository of knowledge and talent as well as a constant source of innovation—but it does not exist to serve the daily demands of foreign policy and there will always be a need for government exchanges that America’s leadership can call upon and direct when and where needed.

Question 5. ECA has proposed reducing or terminating funding for a number of exchange programs in recent years, but Congress has maintained ongoing funding for these programs in many cases. What programs should receive priority funding, and which might be curtailed or ended, in your opinion? Can programs be combined or otherwise streamlined to increase budget efficiencies? How will continuing certain programs slated by ECA for cuts or termination affect your strategic planning, if at all?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be reviewing all ECA programs, considering those that have global reach versus programs that are regional or just for one country, looking at the programs that have the strongest support from our Missions around the world, and keeping in mind as well the programs that engage American citizens and provide them with the skills needed for our national security and economic prosperity.

The recent release of the Department of State-USAID Joint Strategic Plan and pending Functional Bureau Strategy exercise will give me and the Bureau an opportunity to strategize our priorities for exchange programs going forward.

If confirmed, I will look at any and all efficiencies possible for ECA operations and activities.
I understand that ECA programs were developed in response to requests from the Department’s regional bureaus, from American embassies, from the White House and Congress and I will want to hear the input and views of all key stakeholders. If confirmed, I would want to quickly consult with Department leadership to ensure that any changes in exchanges—whether increases or reductions—were consistent with administration foreign policy goals. And I would want to review their history of funding and their priority for key stakeholders.

Question 6. Proponents of continued and/or increased funding for ECA-sponsored international exchanges often assert that such exchanges provide substantial economic benefits to the United States. The U.S. Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy reported that in FY 2017 foreign students contributed $35.8 billion to the U.S. economy, support over 400,000 U.S. jobs, and that 97 percent of ECE funding goes to U.S. organizations, businesses, and individuals. In your estimation, will a significant reduction in ECE funding have any negative effect on any overall economic benefit that many ECA-administered exchange programs provide?

Answer. If confirmed, assessing the benefits of ECA programs for the United States and for American citizens would be a priority. I have seen the same statistics that you have cited and I would want to be sure that I understood the full range of consequences of any changes in ECA programs.

Question 7. In the past, a number of problems have been cited with EVP private-sector sponsor organizations placing participants in unsatisfactory conditions, including youth participants. Changes to federal regulations tightening sponsor requirements and oversight have resulted in better results for participants, but abuses still occur at times. What additional steps, if any, are needed?

Answer. I know that the Department takes seriously any allegations of abuse. Our first and foremost priority is to ensure each exchange visitor participates in a successful program. A large part of defining a successful program is minimizing risks to the health, safety, and welfare of all of our exchange visitors.

CA has developed regulatory guidelines for its private sector sponsor organizations to ensure the health, safety, and welfare of participants. It regularly conducts monitoring and evaluation of their compliance with these regulations. In addition, Bureau analysts work to provide assistance to any private-sector sponsored exchange visitors who contact the Department seeking help through a hotline.

If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that safety is the number one priority.

Question 8. In general, what changes would you recommend to improve the system of private partner administration of exchanges? What additional resources does ECA need to increase its monitoring capabilities or to create a more hands-on role in administering exchanges?

Answer. If confirmed, I would be committed to ensuring that private sector programs are educational and cultural exchange programs that benefit American foreign policy. I am committed to ensuring they continue to serve as useful catalysts for positive change, creating generations of leaders who understand the significance of widespread global engagement and mutual understanding.

Question 9. The U.S. Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy recently released in FY 2017 a comprehensive review of public diplomacy programs including the work of ECA. In its recommendations, the Commission found that there are “over 75 active ECA programs” with widely varied budgets, participant numbers, scope, and purposes, administered under disparate “knowledge management systems” by ECA offices and public diplomacy officers in U.S. embassies abroad. In your opinion, does ECA need to reform its administrative structure and knowledge management? Will possibly reduced budgets in the future demand such reform?

Answer. I too read this report and have found it to be enormously useful as I have prepared. If confirmed, I will be reviewing all ECA programs, understanding that their flexibility and diversity is one of their strengths in serving U.S. foreign policy goals. I would bring to this important effort the knowledge and abilities I have gained in the private sector and my commitment to rigorous evaluation to ensure maximum benefit for our country of every dollar.

Exchanges Broadly

International exchange programs are often considered one of the most effective U.S. public diplomacy efforts, building long-term relationships and mutual understanding between U.S. and foreign participants.

Question 10. What do you believe are the benefits that exchange programs provide to the United States? What role do exchanges play in advancing U.S. foreign policy and meeting the objectives of that policy?
Answer. Exchanges create networks of men and women around the globe who have shared interests and who are prepared to make common cause with us. I see exchanges as American values in action and I know from my own experience, that the relationships that grow out of this engagement endure through elections and crises and regime changes.

I understand that one in three world leaders today are alumni of ECA exchanges. I see this as a remarkable fact and one that provides our President and Secretary with interlocutors that have firsthand experience of the United States.

Question 11. Many current calls for improving U.S. public diplomacy and international broadcasting advocate pushing a sharper promotion of U.S. interests, stronger persuasive tactics, countering of harmful propaganda, and increasing social media, broadcasting, and other information dissemination technologies and programs. Exchanges do not usually promote a pointed, controlled policy message, but instead allow for participant voices and experiences to be shared in an organic fashion. What is the importance of exchanges in this seemingly more fraught and urgent persuasive messaging environment?

Answer. It is my experience from the private sector that exchanges can and do serve multiple objectives and help us reach a variety of foreign policy goals. I am not sure that there needs to be a dichotomy between tightly-focused foreign policy goals on the one hand and programs that define the field of engagement on the other. In these complicated and dangerous times, Department programs need to do both.

I have reviewed the new National Security Strategy of the United States and was impressed with its focus on the power of values, on the importance of networks and alliances, and on not ceding the public engagement space to our competitors in the world.

Question 12. Do exchanges need to become more disciplined in the way participants experience their exchanges, to ensure U.S. foreign policy interests are at the forefront?

Answer. I believe that exchanges should always serve foreign policy and strengthen America’s international leadership. ECA exchanges are part of the Department of State and are funded by the American taxpayer and, if confirmed, I would consider myself accountable to the American public to demonstrate their benefits.

Question 13. What new vehicles for U.S. international exchange programs are being implemented or are on the horizon, and what, in your view, are the most important innovations that need to be made to improve exchange program effectiveness?

Answer. In preparing for this hearing, I have been impressed to see the strides that ECA has made in pioneering virtual exchanges in a wide variety of ways. They are using the latest technology to connect high school classrooms, to professionalize the teaching of English, and to engage audiences that are difficult to reach through traditional means.

If confirmed, I would be excited to explore the possibilities of technology and to increasing the virtual components of ECA’s in-person exchanges.

Question 14. How do you plan to improve ECA’s leveraging of online tools and fora to expand exchanges and enhance their effectiveness?

Answer. If confirmed, to give just one example, I would make it a priority to review the various ways in which ECA engages alumni around the world. There are hundreds of thousands of ECA alumni all across the planet—including those of the American Council of Young Political Leaders—who are leaders in their own professions and communities. Close and fruitful cooperation with this distinguished and far-flung network of men and women demands innovative use of online tools.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARIE ROYCE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my career, I have had a number of opportunities to engage in work that promotes human rights and democracy. Three specific examples include work related to Afghanistan, Russia, and as a Board Director for the American Council of Young Political Leaders.
I have had the good fortune to be engaged with Afghanistan professionally and personally for several years. I was recognized by the Nooristan Foundation with the Afghan Women “Commitment” award for my ongoing support. I championed programs which promoted human rights and democracy. As one example, Afghan women were given advice outlining their legal rights. And given support for executing those rights.

Additionally, while serving as a Professor, at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, in 2003, I was invited to teach at Petrozavodsk University, Russia. While the curriculum dealt largely with international business, I was able to address issues of human rights and democracy with the Russian faculty and students. I interviewed six Professors in Russia, and we subsequently mentored them at Cal Poly University. We in the Faculty helped them create several courses. During their stay they were exposed to several examples of transparency, free speech, rule of law, democratic governance and human rights. I arranged for them to cast their vote in their President election, at the Russian Consulate in Los Angeles.

Finally, as a former delegate to Hungary & Poland, I served as a Board Director for the American Council of Young Political Leaders (ACYPL). We focused on sending delegations into emerging democracies in Africa, South Asia, Eastern Europe, and South America. I personally focused on increasing the number of women and minority delegates. One of my nominees helped the country of Nepal create its first Constitution. Our delegations promoted democratic governance, conflict resolution and human rights. I was able to support an in-bound delegation of young leaders from India and Pakistan, and hosted meetings for mutual understanding.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If I am confirmed, I will promote the State Department’s formal mentoring program for members of the Foreign Service. I will ensure that ECA staff is aware of this opportunity, and how to participate. I will encourage the staff to be active participants in this important program. I will also invest in diversity based mentorship initiatives.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Education and Cultural Affairs are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Throughout my career, I have come to believe that people support what they create. As a result, if confirmed, I would strive to promote a workplace culture that is diverse and inclusive through enlisting the support and input from each of ECA’s supervisors, creating a joint plan around this goal, and working together to track our progress.

I believe that successful engagement and retention of diverse talent includes things like orientation, employee engagement and retention, performance management, flexible work arrangements, interpersonal communication, learning and development, as well as mentoring and diversity training to support these efforts. If confirmed, I hope to work tirelessly with the talented team in ECA to further these efforts.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No, my immediately family and I do not have any financial interests in any country abroad.

Question 7. What are the most pressing human rights concerns in the field of Educational and Cultural Affairs today? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?
Answer. The Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs promotes mutual understanding through the work that ECA does in communities around the globe and in all 50 states to introduce American values to opinion-makers, professionals, current and future leaders, and youth. These global networks of men and women are often willing to make common cause with the United States. If confirmed, I would use these networks to advance longstanding U.S. values on issues of mutual concern, such as human rights, rule of law, civil society, and democracy.

Question 8. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the field of Educational and Cultural Affairs in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Authoritarian, non-democratic regimes that seek to keep their citizens from enjoying universal rights and freedoms and prevent their citizens from engaging with their American counterparts through ECA programs are some of the main obstacles to ECA programming. These regimes take measures to prevent their citizens from engaging with their American counterparts through exchange programs, travel, and English-language study. If confirmed, I would closely examine how ECA’s programs, resources, and networks might best continue to address human rights concerns in light of U.S. policy priorities.

Question 9. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the field of Educational and Cultural Affairs?

Answer. Yes. My background in women’s leadership and outreach to disadvantaged communities, as well as my experience with the range of civil society groups and NGOs that advocate for human rights, has impressed upon me the importance of such connections. If confirmed, I will use my experience in conjunction with ECA’s own extensive civil-society networks and public-private partnerships to further deepen our cooperation with this sector.

Proposed State Department Budget

For FY 2019, the White House proposed a draconian 75 percent cut to the budget for the State Department’s Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs. Last year, there was talk that the administration would eliminate the budget entirely. As you know, ECA’s work has historically received strong bipartisan support given that its programs are a strategic, long-term investment in promoting democratic values and strengthening U.S. standing in the world.

Question 10. If confirmed, how will you make the case to Secretary Tillerson and the White House about the need for robust ECA funding and the strategic nature of ECA programs?

Answer. My understanding is that ECA continuously aligns its programs with State Department policy goals and ensures that its academic, professional, cultural, and sports exchanges are clearly linked to those goals as a part of broader U.S. public diplomacy initiatives. If confirmed, I would prioritize maintaining the relevance and effectiveness of ECA’s initiatives in all aspects of U.S. diplomacy, and will not be afraid to advocate for ECA’s programming with State Department leadership.

Question 11. If confirmed, will you commit to being a forceful advocate for robust funding for Colombia?

Answer. I am pleased to note that the ECA Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary, Ambassador Jennifer Zimdahl Galt, was just in Bogota to participate in the U.S.-Colombia High-Level Dialogue. She chaired the Education, Sports, and Culture Working Group and was joined by colleagues who engaged on topics ranging from joint efforts to counter illegal narcotics trafficking to advancing regional security to expanding our economic partnership. If confirmed, I will continue ECA’s efforts on behalf of the strong bilateral relationship between the United States and Colombia and in support of U.S. foreign policy goals in this key region.

Global Public Opinion of the United States

In the past 18 months, global public opinion of the U.S. has plummeted dramatically. This not only has implications for our foreign policy, but for institutions in our country. Media reports have shown that many U.S. universities are having trouble recruiting foreign students, which has financial implications for the schools.

Question 12. How can we be effective in the pursuit of our foreign policy interests and values—how you can be effective at ECA—given President Trump’s race to the bottom on ethics, values and morality?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to promoting the U.S. higher education system, which is one of our nation’s greatest assets and essential to our national security and economic interests at home and abroad. ECA promotes U.S. higher education, in conjunction with our missions overseas, through its network of more than 400 EducationUSA advising centers worldwide, which act as the official source on U.S. higher education abroad and counter-balance messages from competitor nations, such as China and Russia, looking to attract international students to their own shores. Due in part to the work of EducationUSA, and the relationships fostered through ECA exchanges, more than one million international students now come to the United States to study at over 4,000 U.S. colleges and universities every year. In 2016–17, they contributed over $39 billion to the U.S. economy, up from $22.7 billion only five years ago, making international education the nation’s seventh-largest service sector export and supporting more than 450,000 domestic American jobs in communities across the country. International students are attracted to the United States by the excellence, dynamism and diversity of U.S. higher education institutions. These students enrich their understanding of U.S. society and develop lasting ties in fields that benefit the United States and its interests in the world long after they return home.

J-1 Visas

In August of last year, a bi-partisan group of 17 senators sent Secretary Tillerson a letter in support on the J-1 Visa Summer Work Travel Program. Participants in the program have the opportunity to work and learn from their experience in the U.S. Additionally, many small businesses across the United States are dependent on participants in the J-1 visa program to meet their seasonal labor needs. Ending or reducing this program would have a real impact on communities around the country.

Question 13. What is your assessment of the J-1 visa program?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to facilitating the J Visa Exchange Visitor Program (EVP), which enables more than 1,500 U.S. sponsors to bring more than 308,000 privately funded international exchange visitors to the United States each year for educational and cultural exchange experiences in 13 different program categories. Private Sector Exchange programs come at virtually no cost to U.S. taxpayers, funded as they are through fees paid by the sponsors and participants, but they have many public diplomacy benefits that serve foreign policy goals, advance national security, bolster U.S. leadership and influence in the world, and promote mutual understanding between Americans and the people of other countries.

Question 14. If confirmed, do you commit to working with members of the Senate to ensure that the U.S. Government remains committed to the J-1 visa program?

Answer. Yes. As you know, private sector exchange programs are educational and cultural exchange programs, not work programs. They are funded primarily by fees paid by participants. These programs provide public diplomacy engagement with more than 300,000 participants from 200 countries and territories annually, many of whom would never otherwise experience American values firsthand. These programs are implemented by the private sector at virtually no cost to the Department. I understand that in some categories of exchange, employers are required to pay participants a salary commensurate with the salary they would pay U.S. workers, so employers cannot use the program to obtain low cost labor. I would welcome meaningful input from the stakeholder community on what works and what could be improved in private sector exchange visitor programs, and I will make any decisions on the changes in those programs in a fully transparent way.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARIE ROYCE BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER A. COONS

Question 1. Recently, the administration proposed a regulatory agenda that identifies all five J-1 visa Exchange Visitor programs with a work component for future regulations (summer work travel, au pair, camp counselor, intern, and trainee). What role will you play in reviewing draft regulations or policy guidance that could alter J-1 programs? Will you commit to undertaking any regulatory review of these programs in a fully transparent way and in a manner that continues their significant public diplomacy benefits?

Answer. I intend to review any suggested changes to J-Visa or Private Sector Exchange Visitor programs regulations and policy guidance. As you know, the J-Visa program is an educational and cultural exchange, not a work program. It is funded primarily by fees paid by participants. The J-Visa provides public diplomacy engagement with more than 300,000 participants from 200 countries and territories annually. The program is implemented by the private sector at virtually no charge to the Department. I understand that participants in J-Visa programs with a work component are already not permitted under current regulation to displace American workers. I would welcome meaningful input from the stakeholder community on what works and what could be improved in the Private Sector Exchange Visitor programs and will make any decisions on the changes in those programs in a fully transparent way.

Question 2. The Summer Work Travel program alone contributed more than $500 million to the U.S. economy in 2016. Can you comment on the value of these programs to both the exchange participants and the U.S. economy?

Answer. The Educational and Cultural Affairs Bureau’s Office of Private Sector Exchange (ECA/EC) oversees the J Visa Exchange Visitor Program (EVP), which enables more than 1,500 U.S. sponsors to bring more than 308,000 privately funded international exchange visitors to the United States each year for educational and cultural exchange experiences in 19 different program categories, including Summer Work Travel (SWT).

When international young people participate in SWT jobs, they get first-hand experience with American society and culture. SWT student participants are engaged primarily by small and family-operated U.S. businesses in tourist destinations to meet short-term, high-volume worker needs during peak tourist seasons. SWT students supplement and sustain the existing U.S. workforce in these seasonal endeavors and serve as cultural ambassadors from their home countries to American communities.

Private Sector Exchange programs come at virtually no cost to U.S. taxpayers, funded as they are through fees paid by the sponsors and participants, but they have many public diplomacy benefits that serve foreign policy goals, advance national security, bolster U.S. leadership and influence in the world, and promote mutual understanding between Americans and the people of other countries.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOSEPH E. MACMANUS BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. I would like to clarify the timeline. When, to the best of your recollection, did you first learn of an attack on the diplomatic compound in Benghazi on September 11, 2012?

Answer. According to many published accounts, the attack began at approximately 3:42 p.m. Eastern Time in Washington on September 11, 2012. The State Department Operations Center official Log Book notes that initial contact with the office of the Secretary and other senior officials occurred at 4:06 p.m. in the form of a written alert. I would have learned of the attack when this written alert was circulated.

Question 2. Did other senior officials initially believe (as you did) that the attack was a terrorist act?

Answer. My first impression was not a belief but an instinctive reaction. Others may have shared a similar reaction. I cannot speak for them or from any particular knowledge about their views.

In our profession, in the aftermath of events like this, we advise restraint when one is tempted to draw uninformed conclusions, respectfulness of the obvious emotions, and care in separating opinions from facts. The difficult work is to use hard information and analysis to build an understanding of what took place takes time. We caution officers to “stay in their lane,” knowing that limited access to intelligence and other compartmented information results in certain officials gaining a more structured and informed analysis than others. Forming a three-dimensional picture of what took place takes time.

Question 3. Did senior officials in the State Department believe by September 16, 2012, that the attack was likely terrorism, rather than being related to anti-American protests?

Answer. My own view had not altered appreciably from September 11 to September 16, 2012. The views of others were not obvious, but as I said, professional discipline would guide officers to keep their personal views largely personal since, at that point, it was early to draw final conclusions. I have never researched the record on this question and cannot speak for other senior officials.
Question 4. Did you or other senior State Department officials have any input into National Security Advisor Susan Rice’s talking points in public remarks she made on Sunday, September 16, 2012?

Answer. I did not have input or contribute to talking points as you describe. As to others, I have no specific knowledge as to other senior officers’ input into the preparation of these points or remarks. I have seen references to these talking points in public reports and the press and was generally aware of them but not involved in any input.

Question 5. Do you believe that any senior administration officials misled the public on the nature of the attack in the two weeks that followed the attack?

Answer. I would answer this from the perspective of a professional diplomat who has led crisis communications activities my entire career.

In crises, no matter how much you get right, you get a lot wrong. The law of inverse proportion of speed and accuracy immediately overwhelms you. The comments made in the opening moments rarely prove accurate in the end. The spokesperson slips up, and the misimpression sinks in. Analysis is lacking that might help bring clarity and answers, and complex environments always need careful after-action review to produce reliable conclusions. In addition, even after review, questions and uncertainties persist.

The frustration that publics and audiences feel in this regard, of never knowing “absolutely” what occurred, has cropped up in every crisis I have been involved in or witnessed. Communicating with the American people obviously requires authenticity and transparency to be effective, but more importantly, to remain true to the serious nature of the responsibility. Otherwise, the audience feels misled.

In previous administrations, officials have needed to acknowledge their communications failures and to state that officials in the administration ‘never intended to mislead the American people.’ Those statements, albeit sincere, rarely erase the uncertainty that lingers in people’s minds.

Question 6. On February 13, 2003, four Americans who were Department of Defense contractors on a U.S. Government counter-narcotics flight mission in Colombia were shot down by the FARC. The pilot, a retired member of the U.S. Army’s Delta Force, was executed on the spot and three Floridians were captured. They were held captive and severely tortured for over five and a half years, until they were rescued by the Colombian Army. While implementing the peace accord is the Colombian Government’s primary focus, we still have a group of Americans, all former U.S. military, and their families, who were subjected to atrocities at the hands of the FARC and have yet to receive any closure. Would you work with me to find a solution to make these brave Americans whole again?

Answer. The four U.S. Department of Defense contractors shot down by the FARC in 2003 were victims of a heinous crime, and they and their families deserve justice. My highest priority is to protect the lives and interests of U.S. citizens. If confirmed, I will work closely with you on this issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOSEPH E. MACMANUS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

FARC

Although there is little doubt that the FARC has a significant amount of financial assets following decades of criminal activity, there has always been an undeniable lack of clarity surrounding the group’s wealth. Guerrilla commanders consistently deny that these riches exist.

Question 1. What is your assessment on the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia’s (FARC) commitment, as established in Colombia’s peace agreement, to provide information on their finances? If confirmed, do you commit to keeping the U.S. Congress informed about your work with the Government of Colombia to address the FARC’s illicit finances and any efforts to combat illicit financial networks?

Answer. As part of the 2016 peace agreement, the FARC agreed to hand over all property and assets in its possession for use as reparations for victims of the conflict. In August 2017, the Colombian Government announced it received a 135-page inventory of FARC assets, valued at $330 million. In February 2018, the Colombian attorney general seized an additional $230 million in undisclosed assets allegedly laundered through a series of front companies. After the seizure, the office of the attorney general indicated that it is pursuing additional investigations into undeclared FARC property and assets.
The U.S. Government believes the FARC is not fully complying with its peace accord commitments to provide critical information about the cocaine trade and the illicit assets the FARC illicitly obtained during the conflict. The U.S. Government continues to reiterate to the Government of Colombia that the FARC must do more to comply with such commitments.

I commend the Government of Colombia for diligently investigating additional assets not disclosed by the FARC. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Government continues to support efforts to find and seize undeclared FARC assets. I will also work closely with the U.S. Congress on this issue.

Labor Rights

In July 2016, the AFL-CIO and five Colombian workers’ organizations filed a petition alleging numerous shortcomings in the implementation of the U.S.-Colombia Trade Promotion Agreement (TPA) and argued that they constituted a violation of the agreement. Those concerns included alleged failures by Colombia to: 1) effectively enforce its labor laws in a manner that affects trade and investment; 2) adopt and maintain freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right of collective bargaining, as called for in the International Labor Organization Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work; and 3) ensure prompt and transparent proceedings in cases of alleged labor rights violations.

In response, the Department of Labor (DOL) made 19 recommendations to Colombia that, if fully implemented, would constitute progress in leveling the playing field between American workers and their Colombian counterparts. DOL’s January 2018 review found that while Colombia had made progress in some areas, it must take additional steps to address the significant concerns raised in DOL’s original report.

Question 2. What is your assessment of the Colombian Government’s progress thus far in addressing these labor violations, and will you commit to pressing the Colombian Government to fully implement the 19 DOL recommendations?

Answer. Since the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL) issued its January 2017 report, the Government of Colombia has made efforts to implement the 19 recommendations. For example, Colombia installed an electronic case management system in all regional ministry of labor offices and in two special administrative offices. In addition, the Colombian Government issued a resolution making it mandatory for labor inspectors and managers to use and update the system. Colombia also published statistics about the total amount of fines collected and the number of inspections conducted.

The Colombian Government has committed to convert the remaining 804 of its 904 inspector positions to career civil service positions and recruit candidates through a public competition by the end of 2018. Furthermore, Colombia has agreed to improve and provide relevant training to all labor inspectors through a program being implemented by the International Labor Organization and funded by DOL.

If confirmed, I will work with the Colombian Government on matters of labor, human rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission. Colombia is a close friend of the United States, and our countries have long enjoyed outstanding cooperation on these issues. My efforts will include a variety of approaches, including programming, diplomatic engagement, and high-level dialogues with the Colombian Government.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Joseph E. MacManus by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a Public Diplomacy officer, a career diplomat, an Ambassador, the advocacy of American values was at the center of my work in nearly every assignment.

In El Salvador in the late 1980s, the fundamental underpinnings of our assistance programs were an ongoing discussion of and training in the institutions of democratic governance that arise from the rights of citizens in a democracy. I oversaw programs for journalists including professional ethics, accuracy in reporting, and the role of a free press in a democracy. We engaged in training in-country and through exchange programs to the United States for journalists, civil society leaders, academics, and government officials on civic education and civil society. In coordination with INL and USAID, we promoted professionalization in law enforcement, the courts, and the military. I led a training program for Salvadoran military... manders to SouthCom, then based in Panama, to discuss civil-military relations and training in relations with the media.

In Poland, immediately following the end of the Cold War, I led outreach efforts in southern Poland to engage with publics, civil society, and local governments on the role of each in a free and democratic society. Education in the rights of individuals in a free society and the role of a free press were part of our ongoing outreach to the media in major Polish media markets. I also ran a large exchange program to introduce Polish students and young political leaders to the United States to prepare them for leadership roles in a pluralistic and democratic Poland. I worked closely with the Jewish community in Krakow on the preservation of Jewish antiquities and to advocate for the rightful place for Jewish culture in the historical record.

The promotion of our basic values remains at the center of my work and my career. All programs, all advocacy, all policies, come from our basic understanding and respect for the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. In an international context, this becomes the framework for our work and its goal: to advance respect for human rights and the rights of citizens in democracies.

As I noted in my testimony, rebuilding the social fabric in Colombia will be the precondition for any durable progress in the peace process. If confirmed, I will keep it at the center of my focus.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Colombia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Colombia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Colombia continues to make progress on human rights issues, including through its efforts to implement the historic 2016 peace accord with the FARC. It is hard to overstate the human rights benefits of ending the hemisphere’s longest-running armed conflict, which cost the lives of more than 250,000 and displaced millions. Ending this conflict has permitted the Colombian Government to take steps to bring justice to victims and their families, fight narco-trafficking and organized crime by extending the reach of state institutions to former conflict zones, reduce violence, and protect human rights in Colombia.

If confirmed, I will engage with the Colombian Government, civil society, the private sector, and the international community to support and encourage Colombia’s efforts to secure continued progress on human rights. Addressing human rights challenges is essential to build the just and lasting peace the Colombian people deserve. Colombia is recognizing past human rights violations, and is affirming the right of victims to truth, justice, and reparation. Implementation of these positive steps will be necessary for sustainable peace and reconciliation.

The United States has a clear interest in supporting a stronger, stable Colombia that protects human rights. Peace will better enable Colombia to increase its efforts in counternarcotics, counter-transnational crime, and migration, and to expand our bilateral economic relationship.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Colombia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Colombia is a consolidated democracy undertaking laudable efforts to improve the transparency and accountability of its governance and to defend democracy abroad. The Colombian Government has prioritized human rights and made advances on some important cases, but some challenges remain. I consider human rights and social inclusion to be issues central to Colombia’s ability to secure a just and lasting peace, ending decades of conflict.

If confirmed, I would stress to the Colombian Government the need to fill power vacuums in areas formerly controlled by the FARC. The Colombian Government’s challenge is to establish a comprehensive state presence to provide not only security services but also education, infrastructure, local governance, and victims’ assistance to deny criminal groups a foothold and to reverse recent encroachments by illegal armed groups. The implementation of a comprehensive plan to provide government services in remote areas will be important to sustain peace, ensure citizen security, and prevent violence against defenders of human rights and social activists. These activists play a vital role in ensuring victims and marginalized groups have voice and presence in helping shape Colombia’s peace accord implementation. I would also continue to support the Colombian Government’s efforts to dismantle the illegal armed groups that are responsible for crimes against human rights defenders and civil society activists, and to urge thorough investigations and prosecutions into these crimes.
Colombia’s marginalized populations, including Afro-Colombians, indigenous people, internally displaced persons, women, and children, continue to suffer disproportionately from forced displacement, landmines, sexual violence, forced recruitment, and social exclusion. The U.S. and Colombian Governments seek to ensure inclusive prosperity and equality of opportunities to advance the livelihoods of African descendant and indigenous communities in both countries. The inclusion of historically marginalized groups in peace accord implementation is essential. We are strong proponents of the accord’s Ethnic Chapter and encourage the Colombian Government to implement all aspects of the accords, including measures to guarantee the rights of those most affected by conflict.

Colombia has indicated its commitment to hold accountable those responsible for atrocity crimes and crimes involving human rights violations and abuses on all sides of the conflict. The U.S. Government recognizes and supports the Colombian Government’s ongoing efforts at investigations and prosecutions. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government of Colombia to implement the Special Jurisdiction for Peace, intended to hold accountable those responsible for conflict-related crimes, promote truth-telling, ensure non-repetition, and provide reparations for victims.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Colombia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes. The protection of human rights has long been a core component of U.S.-Colombian relations and a central value of our foreign policy. The NGO community plays a vital role in shining a light on human rights issues and challenges, and has valuable contributions and perspectives to share. There is a vibrant community of NGOs and civil society organizations focused on human rights issues in Colombia. If confirmed, I will continue the United States’ longstanding tradition of engaging regularly with U.S.-based and Colombian NGOs and civil society organizations on these issues to understand their concerns and seek their input and proposals.

The Leahy laws not only advance our human rights agenda, but they also promote the professionalization of the security forces with which we partner, making them better security partners in the long run. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Country Team, the U.S. interagency, Colombian Government, and civil society to ensure we direct all U.S. assistance to rights-respecting security forces in an efficient and effective manner in accordance with U.S. law. In accordance with the Leahy law, I will ensure no assistance or equipment is provided to Colombia security forces that commit gross violations of human rights. Leahy vetting plays an important role in furthering U.S. Government programs and objectives on human rights and encourages security force professionalization. I will continue to support Embassy Bogotá’s leadership in continuously supporting human rights initiatives and sharing best practices.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Colombia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Colombia?

Answer. It is my understanding that the United States is not aware of any political prisoners in Colombia, or unjust targeting of individuals. If confirmed, I would certainly engage the Government in the event this becomes an issue.

Question 6. Will you engage with Colombia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with Colombia on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission. Colombia is a close friend of the United States, and our countries have long enjoyed outstanding cooperation on a range of issues. As a close partner, I will work with the Colombian Government to continue to encourage improvements on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance through a variety of approaches, including programming, regular diplomatic engagement, and high-level dialogues with the Colombian Government. I look forward to continuing and expanding upon our close collaboration on these issues in multiple fora.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.
Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Colombia?

Answer. No. We have no financial interests in Colombia.

Answer. Mentoring and preparing the succeeding generations for leadership in the Department must be one of the primary responsibilities of the Chief of Mission. No one has greater influence in helping shape the purposes, values, and attitudes of the Department and the Foreign Service than the leadership in our missions. Mentoring should be an interactive engagement with rising employees, understanding them as individuals. I have taken this responsibility, for a primary purpose of my senior years in the Foreign Service, seeking out officers to mentor, advise, and for whom I advocate in their careers. Senior officers must dedicate a stated percentage of their work year in such activities, publicize this to their missions, and actively engage staff. Moreover, the work requirements of senior officers and supervisors at Post similarly have to include specific reference to performance requirements in mentoring and advocacy for employees representing diverse and underrepresented groups in the Service.

It is important to impart to senior officers and supervisors the values that underlie the role of mentor and adviser for employees, especially those representing the diversity of our country. Furthermore, establishing an example of such leadership is key to encouraging this trait in senior staff. Finally, the Chief of Mission has to establish standards of conduct and performance, both in formal requirements and by example, which lead the mission to undertake diversity mentoring and to foster an environment of openness, equality, and diversity.

Support for Peace in Colombia

Unwavering bipartisan support, across successive administrations, has been the cornerstone of U.S. policy to Colombia, first for Plan Colombia and today, for the Peace Colombia Initiative. While Plan Colombia helped Colombia achieve its peace accord, building a lasting peace requires enduring commitments. For this reason, I am deeply concerned about the 30 percent cut of $120 million proposed by the Trump administration for FY 2019.

Question 11. If confirmed, will you continue to publicly express unwavering U.S. support for peace in Colombia, and will you commit to being a forceful advocate for robust funding for Colombia?

Answer. U.S. assistance is vital to U.S. and Colombian bilateral efforts to combat narcotics trafficking and establish lasting peace in Colombia. U.S. assistance constitutes only a fraction of Colombia’s own investment in its peace. Between FY 2000 and FY 2017, U.S. assistance totaled roughly $10 billion to support Plan Colombia and its follow-on programs. At the same time, Colombia invested billions more, achieving notable progress in combating drug trafficking and terrorist activities and reestablishing government control over much of its territory.

Today, Colombia remains one of our strongest partners in the region, and we continue to support sustainable peace in Colombia. The FY 2019 request provides important and necessary funds to advance U.S. interests in Colombia, particularly on peace accord implementation and counternarcotics. If confirmed, I will maximize the embassy’s use of available resources, advocate for continued funding, and express unwavering U.S. support for peace in Colombia.

Human Rights Abuses and War Crimes

In all of my meetings with President Santos, I have repeatedly raised the need for Colombian Government to ensure accountability for human rights abuses and war crimes committed by the FARC and by state actors. The Colombian Government has made important steps in setting up its transitional justice mechanism, but 15 months after the accord was ratified, no one has been held accountable. Additionally, I am concerned that the Colombian Government is not using the internationally recognized definition of “command responsibility” to hold accountable FARC commanders and Colombian generals.
Question 12. What is your assessment of this issue, and if confirmed, will you commit to raise U.S. concerns about human rights accountability with the Colombian Government?

Answer. Ensuring justice and accountability for those responsible for conflict-related human rights violations and abuses, including both state and non-state actors, is essential to secure a just and lasting peace in Colombia. Colombia has made important advances to stand up its transitional justice system, including; passing legislation to create and implement the Special Jurisdiction for Peace (SJP), designed to recognize truth and responsibility and administer justice for conflict-related crimes constituting serious violations of human rights or international humanitarian law; appointing more than 80 magistrates and other officials to oversee the SJP and other transitional justice bodies; and passing decrees to establish and appoint directors for the truth commission and special unit to search for the disappeared.

While Colombia works to implement its ambitious transitional justice framework, the Attorney General’s Office has continued to investigate and prosecute those responsible for human rights violations and abuses committed during the armed conflict. The U.S. Government continues to reiterate the importance of prompt and full implementation of the SJP and is actively monitoring its implementation, including with respect to command responsibility. The Colombian Government has publicly stated the SJP will abide by “international standards.” I commit, if confirmed, to raise U.S. concerns about human rights and accountability with the Colombian Government, and reiterate the importance of bringing to justice perpetrators of human rights violations on all sides.

The Illegal Drug Trade

The illegal drug trade is a shared problem. While the U.S. always needs to do more to address demand for illicit drugs in our country, I am very concerned about the sharp increase in illicit coca cultivation in recent years. I know the Colombian Government is taking unprecedented steps to address this issue and has made important progress, but this issue remains a concern. It is even more concerning that in the face of these challenges, the Trump administration is proposing a 30 percent cut of $120 million for U.S. foreign assistance to Colombia, which includes counternarcotics funding.

Question 13. What steps will you take to prioritize this issue in the bilateral relationship, and what additional steps can the U.S. and Colombia take to more effectively address the illegal drug trade, including related challenges of illicit finance?

Answer. The Trump administration remains deeply concerned about the explosion in Colombian coca cultivation and cocaine production. At the U.S.-Colombia High-Level Dialogue (HLD) on March 1, the United States and Colombia agreed to expand counternarcotics cooperation over the next five years, with the shared goal of reducing Colombia’s estimated cocaine production and coca cultivation to 50 percent of current levels by 2023. If confirmed, I will prioritize work with our Colombian counterparts to ensure continued progress in reducing coca cultivation and the production of cocaine as agreed to at the HLD.

Colombia’s implementation of the peace accord and current counternarcotics strategy can have a lasting impact in addressing the illegal drug trade. This is possible if the Government of Colombia provides adequate resources for counternarcotics operations and alternative development, implements enhanced eradication efforts in areas of high coca growth, and increases the effectiveness of interdiction operations, including expanding riverine and regional maritime operations as well as operations to investigate and dismantle narcotrafficicking organizations. If confirmed, I would also encourage the Colombian Government to continue to use extradition as an essential tool against narcotrafficickers. It is imperative the Colombian Government also hold the FARC accountable for its commitments to provide critical information about the cocaine trade and the illicit assets the FARC obtained during its years of terrorist activities as agreed to under point four of the peace accord.

Response to an Additional Question for the Record Submitted to Joseph Macmanus by Senator Jeanne Shaheen

Question 1. The state of New Hampshire is experiencing an epidemic of opioid-related deaths. The State Department’s 2017 International Narcotics Control Strategy report assessed that Colombia remains the second-largest supplier of heroin to the United States. What is your assessment of U.S.—Colombia counterdrug cooperation, and how can it be improved?
Answer. While United States Government estimates indicate Colombia is the number two supplier of heroin to the United States, over 90 percent of heroin consumed in the United States originates in Mexico. Addressing the opioid crisis is the Department of State’s highest drug-control priority. Irrespective of the amount, illicit heroin trafficking from Colombia in the United States damages lives and supports criminal activities and organizations throughout the region. The Department will continue to rely on our interagency partners to monitor Colombian heroin production and work to reduce its role in the ongoing opioid crisis in the United States.

On cooperation, U.S. counternarcotics foreign assistance to Colombia is dedicated to reversing the dramatic increase in coca cultivation and cocaine production in Colombia since 2013.

The Governments of Colombia and the United States have collaborated effectively to confront narcotics trafficking and other transnational crimes for nearly two decades. As a result, violent crime indices such as homicides and kidnappings have dropped markedly in recent years. Our shared success in security and counternarcotics helped bring the FARC, which is extensively involved in the drug trade, to the negotiating table and helped make the conclusion of a final peace accord possible.

On March 1, 2018, senior officials from the United States and Colombian Governments met for a High Level Strategic Dialogue to discuss our extensive bilateral interests, including counternarcotics cooperation. During that meeting, the United States and Colombia came to agreement to reduce Colombia’s cocaine production and coca cultivation to 50 percent of current levels by 2023. If confirmed, I would continue to coordinate closely with Colombian authorities to support their efforts to reach these goals and address the manufacture of all illicit drugs.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOSEPH MACMANUS BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. As discussed at your nominations hearing, I am extremely supportive of Colombia’s bid to join the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD). Could you please provide specifics on what Colombia has to do to meet its accession benchmarks and how the State Department, Embassy in Bogota, and Congress could help to support their membership?

Answer. Colombia’s bid to join the market-based democracies of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) is indicative of how far the country has come. Colombia has progressed through the accession process, having passed 20 of 23 committees. The remaining committees to pass are the Employment, Labour and Social Affairs (ELSAC) committee, the Trade committee, and the Economic and Development Review committee (EDRC). The EDRC is a “capstone” review committee that will consider Colombia once it has passed all other committees.

I understand that the entire U.S. interagency continues to guide Colombia as it completes and implements the technical requirements to qualify for membership in the OECD. Embassy Bogota has been working closely with Colombian officials to best utilize the $2 million in Department of Labor funds pledged for additional technical assistance to meet requirements for accession (these funds were contingent on Colombia providing equivalent matching funds).

The four major areas identified for improvement in the ELSAC review include labor informality and subcontracting, labor law enforcement, collective bargaining, and violence against unionists. Regarding the Trade committee, the State Department continues to work with USTR and Colombian officials to ensure there is clarity and coordination among the parties regarding the outstanding issues Colombia is working to address, including truck scrappage, pharmaceutical, and copyright laws and policies. If confirmed, I would continue to work closely with Colombia to meet its accession benchmarks.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JUDGE EDWARD PRADO BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. The United States Government has been concerned about illicit activities taking place in the Tri-Border Area (TBA), where borders of Argentina, Brazil, and Paraguay meet. If confirmed, how would you tackle the criminality challenges presented in this area, including money laundering, arms trafficking, and trade in counterfeit and contraband goods?
Answer. If confirmed, I would make cooperation on the fights against terrorism and drug trafficking, and the security of our people, including cybersecurity, my priorities. The United States and Argentina have a mutual interest in combatting the trafficking of illegal drugs and weapons and safeguarding the security of our citizens. It is my understanding that the U.S. Government provides training and technical assistance for interagency personnel at Argentine-established Intelligence Fusion Centers nationwide and for a recently launched Northwest Border Task Force focused on Transnational Organized Crime and Counternarcotics. The U.S. and Argentina share concerns regarding cybersecurity, including critical infrastructure protection, international security in cyberspace, and cybercrime. U.S. Government cyber experts established the Argentina-U.S. Cyber Policy Working Group to address these concerns. The U.S. Embassy has a Resident Legal Advisor to assist Argentine law enforcement with investigations, case building and advocacy, and prosecutions of complex crimes such as drug trafficking, money laundering, and other forms of illicit finance.

Question 2. The National Endowment for Democracy recently released a report titled, “Sharp Power: Rising Authoritarian Influence,” which detailed Chinese and Russian influence in four young democracies in Latin America and Central Europe, one of which was Argentina. The report examines Chinese influence over local media and academia. Is this an issue you are focused on? What specifically, if confirmed, would you do to counter Chinese Government influence in Argentina and throughout the region?

Answer. As the Secretary noted during his recent trip to the region, China is now the largest trading partner of Chile, Brazil, and Peru. While this trade has brought benefits, some unfair trading practices have also harmed these countries’ manufacturing sectors, generating unemployment and lowering wages for workers. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to demonstrate that the U.S. model for investment and trade—based on mutually beneficial goals that help both sides grow, develop, and become more prosperous—is the preferred trading and investment model.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JUDGE EDWARD PRADO BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

AMIA

For almost 25 years, the suspects in the AMIA massacre in Buenos Aires have lived openly in Iran, where some of held senior government positions.

Question 1. How will you support Argentina’s efforts to pressure Tehran to turn over the bombing suspects, and to enforce the Interpol Red Notices seeking their arrests?

Answer. If confirmed, I would make clear that the United States will always stand with the victims of the Asociación Mutual Israelita Argentina (AMIA) bombing, with their families, and with the Argentine people and their government as they work with the international community to see justice done in the case of the July 18, 1994 attack. The AMIA bombing was a brutal attack on Argentina’s Jewish community, on Buenos Aires, and on all Argentines, killing 85 people and injuring hundreds more. We must always remember that it came 28 months after the March 17, 1992 bombing of the Israeli embassy in Buenos Aires, which killed 29 people and injured hundreds more. If confirmed, I would also make clear that the Iranian Government continues to bear a solemn responsibility to cooperate fully with Argentine authorities as they work to bring the perpetrators to justice. Iran’s involvement in the Western Hemisphere remains a matter of concern, and the administration continues to counter its malign activities in the region.

Question 2. The unsolved murder of prosecutor Nisman poses a challenge to public confidence in the rule of law in Argentina. President Mauricio Macri’s election raised expectations for a resolution to the case. Why is this murder so hard to solve, and is there any role for the United States, either in applying diplomatic pressure to demonstrate our interest in the case, or offering investigative, including forensic, support?

Answer. The 2015 death of Special Prosecutor Alberto Nisman, who dedicated the last decade of his life to the pursuit of those responsible for an appalling act of terrorism in our hemisphere, was deeply troubling. If confirmed, I would continue the U.S. call for a complete, transparent, and impartial investigation into Mr. Nisman’s death and offer U.S. assistance on the investigation to Argentine authorities. Under President Mauricio Macri, Argentina’s Government and its courts have renewed... focus on the investigations into the bombing and the death of Mr. Nisman and they have since made progress in the investigation. A Gendarmerie report issued September 20, 2017 concluded Mr. Nisman was murdered, and a federal judge in December 2017 reached the same conclusion. If confirmed, I would continue to offer U.S. support to Argentina and stress our interest in assisting its efforts to find justice.

Question 3. Under the Macri administration, U.S. human rights groups, including Human Rights Watch, have criticized Argentina on several occasions on issues such as the pre-trial detention of indigenous rights activist Milagro Sala; the pre-trial detention of former senior government officials; and alleged heavy-handed policing. What will you do to evaluate Argentina’s human rights climate, and persuade the Government to respect the rights of criminal defendants, protestors and individuals pursued by law enforcement personnel?

Answer. The United States and Argentina share a commitment to democratic governance, transparency, and human rights that make us natural allies in addressing regional and global challenges. We collaborate closely in multilateral organizations and initiatives, including the United Nations Human Rights Council, the Inter-American Human Rights System, the Open Government Partnership, the Global Anti-Corruption Coalition, and the Global Equality Fund. As the Chair of the Prado committee in 1993 and just recently as Chair Emeritus of a new committee appointed by the Chief Justice, I had the responsibility of overseeing recommendations on how to improve the quality of representation guaranteed by our Constitution. I have always been concerned with the rights of individuals in a free society. If confirmed, I will continue my support of these human rights and seek to strengthen our bilateral cooperation and encourage continued Argentine leadership on democracy and human rights in the region, particularly in Venezuela and Cuba.

Argentine President Mauricio Macri has made human rights a priority, and in December 2017 he unveiled a new national human rights strategy focused on five thematic areas that include non-discrimination; universal access to human rights; public security; dictatorship-era memory, truth, and justice initiatives; and cultural commitment to human rights. If confirmed, I will work with the Argentine Government to encourage robust implementation of the national human rights strategy to ensure Argentine authorities address the country’s principal human rights issues.

Question 4. In Latin America, the United States has continued to defend human rights and democratic norms, including in Cuba and Venezuela, and called upon our Latin American partners to do the same. Outside the region, however, the U.S. commitment to these principles is less clear. How will you press Argentina to hold Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro accountable for abusing civil liberties and democratic institutions when the United States is largely silent regarding similar misconduct by leaders such as Recep Tayyip Erdogan, Rodrigo Duterte, Abdel Fattah el-Sisi and Vladimir Putin?

Answer. The Argentine Government has spoken out forcefully about the need for the Venezuelan regime to permit the citizens of Venezuela to recover their liberties through free and fair elections. Argentine authorities have worked within the Organization of American States; the Common Market of the South (MERCOSUR) trading bloc; and through the Lima Group, a group of like-minded South American countries, to support the efforts of the Venezuelan people to restore democracy in their country. President Mauricio Macri has long been a sharp critic of the Venezuelan Government and has taken concrete steps to increase diplomatic and financial pressure on the Venezuelan regime. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Argentine Government as Argentina, the United States, and the vast majority of governments in the hemisphere work together to help the Venezuelans restore the democratic rights currently being denied them by their government.

Question 5. In February, Secretary Tillerson said the Monroe Doctrine had “clearly been a success” that is “as relevant today as it was the day it was written.” What is your view of the Monroe Doctrine?

Answer. As the Secretary said, the Monroe Doctrine allowed for the development of the shared values of democracy and human rights for the people of the hemisphere. We work together as partners with our neighbors in this hemisphere to advance shared priorities including security, economic and energy prosperity, and democratic governance.

Question 6. How should the United States address its previous interventions in Latin America, including support for dictatorships in South America, including in Argentina during the “Dirty War”?

Answer. As a matter of policy, the United States supports accountability for gross human rights violations, and to this end Argentina’s continuing efforts with memory, truth, and justice commissions. Since 2016, the United States has embarked on a comprehensive effort to identify additional records related to human rights abuses committed under Argentina's dictatorship. The declassification project represents an historic effort by U.S. Government agencies and departments to search, identify, review for public access, and provide records that shed light on human rights abuses in Argentina between 1975 and 1984. Moreover, the United States provided help to many of those who defended and sought to advance greater respect for human rights in Argentina during those years. The United States continues to defend and advance democracy and human rights throughout the world. As a federal judge, I have always been sensitive that the rights of individuals guaranteed by a democratic government are recognized and enforced. If confirmed, I will commit to speak out whenever universal human rights are denied or threatened.

Question 7. You would arrive in Argentina arguably at the zenith of its regional and global influence, as it presides over the G-20. How would you assure that Argentina is a productive steward of the global agenda on critical issues such as climate change and free trade promotion?

Answer. Argentina’s G-20 presidency is an extraordinary opportunity for the country to show global leadership and promote the Government’s ongoing economic reforms globally. If confirmed, I will continue our Embassy’s efforts to work closely with Argentina to coordinate on our shared objectives in the G-20.

Question 8. What advice should the United States offer to help Argentina strengthen its investment climate, attract U.S. firms and replicate the U.S. shale revolution?

Answer. Argentina is estimated to have the world’s second largest shale gas resources and fourth largest shale oil resources. Most of this unconventional resource potential is located in the Vaca Muerta formation in Patagonia (mostly in Neuquen Province), which many have compared to the prolific Eagle Ford and Bakken plays in the United States. U.S. companies, including ExxonMobil and Chevron, have begun to explore small, pilot contracts in Vaca Muerta. The Department of State’s Bureau of Energy Resources continues to provide technical and regulatory expertise to Argentine counterparts at both the provincial and federal level. If confirmed, I would continue to foster this collaborative partnership, which can generate opportunities for U.S. oil and gas firms and help improve hemispheric energy security.

Question 9. Is there any contradiction between Argentina’s ambitious Paris agreement commitments and its investments in the Vaca Muerta shale play?

Answer. Argentina’s long-term development plans involve balancing development of its Vaca Muerta shale oil and gas resources with new Paris Agreement-compatible infrastructure projects, such as renewable energy generation. Climate change mitigation and adaptation remain priorities for the Argentine Government, which has taken a whole-of-government approach to the issue via President Macri’s 13-ministry “Climate Change Cabinet.”

Question 10. Since the beginning of 2017, support for the United States in Argentina has diminished markedly. Polls by Gallup show only a 13 percent approval rating for the U.S. Government. So far, shifting public opinion has not appeared to erode the diplomatic relationship, but it is not clear that is sustainable. How would you address rising public disapproval of the United States?

Answer. Educational exchange programs represent one area of robust cooperation, with more than 2,000 Argentine students studying in the United States and more than 4,500 U.S. students in Argentina during the 2013–2014 academic year. This is one of the most fundamental areas for U.S. direct engagement with Argentines: common understanding based on personal contacts; people-to-people connections based on common academic, professional, and cultural interests. If confirmed, I will ensure the Embassy works with the Argentine Government and private sector to strengthen these education exchange programs and align them with Argentina’s workforce development needs. I will continue to expand and strengthen these partnerships, which ultimately improve not only understanding between the United States and Argentina, but also help strengthen the economies of both nations. Additionally, I have personally worked closely with the judicial branch of Argentina and have participated in numerous workshops and seminars throughout the years. If confirmed, it is my intent to continue working closely with the lawyers and judges of Argentina to help improve the judicial system.

Question 11. President Macri came into office promising to rebalance Argentina’s international relationships, by distancing Argentina from China and Russia and strengthening ties with its traditional allies, including the United States. Instead, Argentina’s relationship with China has remained tightknit. Given President Macri’s preference for doing business with the United States, what can we do to compete with Chinese influence in Argentina? Is the U.S. Government providing competitive financing to meet Argentina’s infrastructure needs and generate opportunities for U.S. companies?

Answer. The United States remains, by a large margin, the number one source of foreign direct investment in Argentina and significant investment opportunities exist for U.S. companies in Argentina’s infrastructure, energy, health, agriculture, information technology, and mining sectors. Historically, challenges to greater investment for U.S. companies in Argentina have included regulatory coherence, high financing costs, and weak intellectual property rights protections. President Macri has declared Argentina to be open for business and has welcomed foreign trade and investment. The United States continues to work closely with the Argentine Government to improve the business climate, and, if confirmed, I would continue to advocate for reforms that will maintain a level playing field for U.S. companies doing business in Argentina.

Question 12. Are we providing adequate support for Argentina’s law enforcement institutions and armed forces as the country increasingly grapples with drug transhipment?

Answer. The Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL) conducts a $2.2 million Argentina program inclusive of all activities through Fiscal Year 2019. INL funds capacity building to the Argentine Government’s Fusion Centers and funds the Drug Enforcement Administration to train and mentor Argentine law enforcement and justice officials to support the counter-narcotics focused Northwest Border Task Force, which has already demonstrated successes combatting transnational organized crime and interdicting narcotics. Treasury’s Office of Technical Assistance is helping Argentina’s Financial Information Unit improve its capacity to supervise financial institutions and detect money laundering. If confirmed, I would continue to encourage this relationship of strong partnership and collaboration to achieve our mutual security and law enforcement goals. As a former United States Attorney with drug-trafficking prosecution experience, I intend to work closely with the Regional Resident Legal Advisor to assist in helping Argentine law enforcement and prosecutors investigate and pursue their cases.

Question 13. As in many parts of the world, the U.S. Embassy in Buenos Aires is sometimes perceived as part of Argentine elite culture, disengaged from the urban poor and rural populations, and disinterested in the lives of the one-in-three Argentines who live in poverty. This stereotype is unfair, but not entirely so. How would you ensure that the United States is engaging diverse communities in Argentina, and that the embassy’s political and economic analysis reflects many viewpoints, including those critical of the Macri Government and of the United States?

Answer. As a Latino from a disadvantaged community, I overcame many challenges in becoming the first in my family to attend college. I believe my diverse life experiences will help me relate to and engage with the urban poor and rural populations of Argentina. For many years, the United States Embassy in Buenos Aires has made outreach to Argentina’s 23 provinces a priority. Officers from across the Mission, including from the economic, political, public diplomacy, and consular sections, engage with counterparts throughout the country to listen to Argentina voices, and to promote U.S. policies and tell America’s story. If confirmed, I would plan to participate personally in these efforts. They are among the best ways we have to engage diverse populations and to hear from Argentines with many different points of view. In addition, a network of 13 U.S.-Argentina Bi-national Centers (BNCs) located in 13 of Argentina’s 23 provinces provide English language training and cultural programs to approximately 15,000 students. Ten BNCs administer an English scholarship program to provide English teaching and learning to underserved student populations, creating a pipeline of students for future exchange programs and enhanced workforce readiness. If confirmed, I will ensure the United States continues these and other efforts to build closer people-to-people ties and deepen our partnerships with the diverse people of the Western Hemisphere, including Argentina, to address common challenges.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JUDGE EDWARD PRADO BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a former public defender and prosecutor, I appreciated first-hand the importance of people’s rights and the importance of the rule of law in a democratic society. In these roles, I both enforced our nation’s laws and protected human rights with the inherent dignity and respect of every person in mind.

That appreciation has continued in my position as a United States Judge where I have dealt with issues involving human rights. From police brutality, to discrimination cases, to voter I.D. laws, I have always made it a policy to abide by the rule of law and see to it that all citizens’ rights are protected. These rulings over the past 35 years have had a positive effect on thousands of people’s lives.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Argentina? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Argentina? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The United States and Argentina share a commitment to democratic governance, transparency, and human rights that make us natural allies in addressing regional and global challenges. We collaborate closely in multilateral organizations and initiatives, including the United Nations Human Rights Council, the Inter-American Human Rights System, the Open Government Partnership, the Global Anti-Corruption Coalition, and the Global Equality Fund. If confirmed, I will seek to strengthen our bilateral cooperation and encourage continued Argentine leadership on democracy and human rights in the region, particularly in Venezuela and Cuba.

The most significant human rights problems in Argentina as outlined in the most recent State Department Human Rights Report include reports of official corruption and of torture by federal and provincial police; harsh and life-threatening prison conditions; interference in judicial independence; child labor and forced labor, despite concerted Argentine Government efforts to combat it; and gender-based violence. Argentine President Mauricio Macri has made human rights a priority for his administration, and in December 2017, he unveiled a new national human rights strategy focused on five thematic areas that include non-discrimination; universal access to human rights; public security; dictatorship-era memory, truth, and justice initiatives; and cultural commitment to human rights. If confirmed, I will work with the Argentine Government to encourage robust implementation of the national human rights strategy to ensure Argentine authorities address the country’s principal human rights issues.

Recognizing its own challenges, Argentina has been a leader in working to address child labor, and hosted the successful IV Global Conference on the Sustained Eradication of Child Labor in November 2017, where Department of Labor Under Secretary for International Affairs Martha Newton advanced U.S. multilateral and bilateral labor objectives. She underscored the U.S. commitment to combating child labor, forced labor, and human trafficking, announcing a conference pledge of $253 million, including FY 2017 funding from the Department of Labor and Department of State for global programs. If confirmed, I intend to maintain cooperation with Argentina during its G20 presidency in 2018 and support President Macri’s initiatives aimed at workplace-based training for Argentine youth.

Answer. The administration of President Mauricio Macri has made confronting corruption a top priority, and Argentine law provides for criminal penalties for corruption by public officials. Nonetheless, multiple reports allege that executive, legislative, and judicial officials have engaged in corrupt practices with impunity, suggesting a failure to implement the law effectively. Weak institutions and an ineffective and politicized judicial system have undermined systematic attempts to curb corruption. If confirmed, I would work to encourage transparency and strong and stable government institutions in Argentina.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Argentina?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to sustained engagement with a broad spectrum of society in Argentina, including human rights activists, civil society, religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Argentina to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Argentina?
Answer. There are no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Argentina. If I am confirmed, my Embassy team and I would actively engage with the Government of Argentina should such issues arise.

Question 6. Will you engage with Argentina on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with the Argentine Government on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Argentina?

Answer. Neither I nor any member of my family have financial interests in Argentina or any other foreign country.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As a minority myself, I am very sensitive to the fact that minorities are underrepresented in the State Department and will do all I can to increase representation and involvement from people of all backgrounds. Coming from a poor Latino neighborhood where most students did not go on to college and being the first in my family to attend college, I have worked with student groups that aim to help encourage minority students to attend and stay in college. I believe I serve as a role model for many Latino students and as an example of what can be accomplished if you work hard.

Furthermore, I have actively demonstrated my commitment to promoting diversity in the hiring and mentorship of my almost 80 law clerks during my 35 years on the bench. My clerks come from all different backgrounds and experiences. I have mentored them in my chambers and throughout their legal careers. I hope to continue my mentorship role in supporting the development of my staff, particularly those from underrepresented groups.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I intend to work closely with staff to insure that we are helping new and young State Department employees gain the experience necessary to have a successful career within the State Department. I intend to play a direct role in mentoring these individuals and helping them in any way I can to go on to become leaders in the Foreign Service. I also plan on being visible and accessible to all my staff in the embassy. I believe that by playing this active role and by leading by example, the supervisors under my direction will do the same in our pursuit of a common mission.

Question 12. China in Argentina/Latin America: In the past 18 months, U.S. public standing in Argentina has plummeted and in a recent poll, only 13 percent of Argentines had a favorable view of the United States. This dramatic development comes at a time when China is increasing its role in Latin America. China’s trade with Argentina surpasses that of the U.S.; China provided $20 billion in infrastructure financing in 2014; China is providing security funding to facilitate the purchase of Chinese equipment; and China’s Confucius Institute are seeking to manipulate curricula and public opinion in Argentine universities. What is your assessment of China’s role in Argentina?

Answer. China has a longstanding trade relationship with Argentina and historically has alternated with the United States as being Argentina’s second largest goods trading partner after Brazil. The United States, however, engages in a larger services trade with Argentina, and is by far the number one source of foreign direct investment in Argentina. Trade between Argentina and China has historically centered on exports of agricultural and mineral commodity products to China in exchange for Argentine imports of higher value chain products. President Macri has declared Argentina open for business and has welcomed foreign trade and investment from the United States, Europe, China, and others.

Question 13. If confirmed, will you make this issue a priority?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work to demonstrate that the U.S. model for investment and trade is the preferred trading and investment model, as it is based on mutually beneficial goals that help both partners grow, develop, and become more prosperous.

Question 14. What steps will you take to address Chinese influence in Argentina?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to advocate for reforms that would maintain a level playing field for U.S. companies doing business in Argentina. I will advocate for foreign trade and investment that meet high standards in terms of transparency, adherence to anti-corruption standards, debt sustainability, labor rights, environmental best practices, and the needs and concerns of local communities.

Question 15. Security Assistance Budget Cuts/U.S. Influence: The U.S. provides very little foreign assistance to Argentina, but the little we do goes a long way and offers us significant influence. One key budget is our international counternarcotics and law enforcement budget, which President Trump has proposed to cut—again. These funds facilitate strategic cooperation on a range of issues, including combating illicit finance and money laundering. In the current budget climate, what will you do to ensure continued funding for Argentina?

Answer. The United States and Argentina have a mutual interest in combatting the trafficking of illegal drugs and safeguarding the security of our citizens. If confirmed, I would place among my top priorities cooperation in the fight against terrorism and drug trafficking, and the promotion of the security of the American people, including their cybersecurity. I would also advocate for the necessary resources to ensure our cooperation with Argentina continues.

Question 16. At a time when the Chinese are offering security assistance to Argentina, what will you do to maintain our influence?

*Answer. Fundamentally, our influence derives from our values. Argentina and the United States share democratic traditions and values, and how we apply them in providing services to our citizens extends to how we police our streets and defend our national interests. When the Argentine Navy lost a submarine, the ARA San Juan, in the South Atlantic, last November, the United States Government, and the United States Navy, arrived first on the scene to lend support. When the Argentine Ministry of Security made combatting transnational organized crime and interdicting narcotics in northwestern Argentina a priority, our embassy in Buenos Aires worked together with the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) and other U.S. law enforcement agencies to help the Argentines develop a counter-narcotics focused Northwest Border Task Force that is becoming a model for similar centers elsewhere in Argentina.

The Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs (INL) now conducts a $2.2 million program, inclusive of all activities through Fiscal Year 2019, that funds capacity building and DEA efforts to train and mentor Argentine law enforcement and justice officials working to improve Argentine public security, and Northwest Border Task Force has already demonstrated successes combatting transnational organized crime and interdicting narcotics.

The benefits Argentina derives from a close security and public safety relationship with the United States far exceed those available to it elsewhere; that is why the Macri administration prefers cooperation with the United States over other foreign partners, such as Russia and China, and that is why our security cooperation has flourished in the two years since Macri came into office.

Our INL Argentina program is a unique model of low cost, high impact foreign assistance in which the Argentine Government shares in the cost of all INL trainings, thus maximizing our very modest investment in shared security priorities of combatting corruption and transnational crime including counter-narcotics. Programs such as this one show that the U.S. model for security cooperation—based on shared values and mutually beneficial goals that help both sides—makes sense for both countries. Treasury’s Office of Technical Assistance is helping Argentina’s Financial Information Unit improve its capacity to supervise financial institutions and detect money laundering. If confirmed, I would encourage this relationship of strong partnership and collaboration to achieve our mutual security and law enforcement goals.
Question 17. Israeli Embassy and AMIA Terrorist Attacks: In my last meeting with President Macri, I raised the need for Argentina and the international community to make more progress in holding accountable the perpetrators of the 1994 bombing of AMIA Jewish community center. This certainly includes the 6 Iranian officials that were previously subject to Interpol Red Notices. There has certainly been progress into the murder of Alberto Nisman, the prosecutor who was handling the AMIA case. But, there has been limited progress on the actual attacks. What support will you provide for the investigations?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make clear that the United States stands with the victims of the Asociación Mutual Israelita Argentina (AMIA) bombing, with their families, and with the Argentine people and their government as they work with the international community to see justice done in the case of the July 18, 1994 attack. The AMIA bombing was a brutal attack on Argentina’s Jewish community, on Buenos Aires, and on all Argentines, killing 85 people and injuring hundreds more. This attack came 28 months after the March 17, 1992 bombing of the Israeli embassy in Buenos Aires that killed 29 people and injured hundreds more. If confirmed, I would also make clear that the Iranian Government continues to bear a solemn responsibility to cooperate fully with Argentine authorities as they work to bring the perpetrators to justice.

Question 18. Will you continue to ensure that it is a priority in the U.S.-Argentina relationship?

Answer. If confirmed, I would ensure that this is a priority and would offer U.S. support to Argentina and stress our interest in assisting their efforts to find justice. Given my experience as a judge, a participant in State Department rule of law programming, and my relationship with the legal community of Argentina, I look forward to working with the Government of Argentina to bring the perpetrators to justice.

RESPONSE TO AN ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JUDGE EDWARD PRADO BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. For several years, a New Hampshire-based company, TIG Insurance, has sought unsuccessfully to resolve an outstanding dispute with Argentina over reinsurance contracts purchased by the Government from TIG in the 1980's. Although U.S. courts have sided with TIG in several cases, the Argentinian Government has yet to meaningfully engage with TIG on this issue, and thus this is the oldest unpaid claim against the Government of Argentina owed to a U.S. company. If confirmed, would you work with my office to see that this matter settled?

Answer. I am aware of the ongoing legal dispute between TIG and the Government of Argentina. If confirmed, I can assure you that I will work tirelessly to support U.S. companies doing business in Argentina. Also, if confirmed, I look forward to working with your office on this matter.
NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 2018

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:05 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Jeff Flake, presiding.

Present: Senators Flake [presiding], Gardner, Young, Shaheen, Kaine, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator Flake. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

After some scheduling snafus and snow days that forced Senator Booker and me out with snowball fights on the lawn and everything else, but it was not very conducive to hearings and people being here on time. So we appreciate your indulgence in having this hearing postponed until now.

But we are considering nominees to serve as the Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs and Ambassador to South Sudan, Mr. Hushek, who some time has passed since we have met, but I am grateful to you and Ms. Madison for taking the time to meet with me prior to this hearing.

The Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement, or INL, is tasked with the responsibility for a number of important issues that lie at the heart of some of Congress’ and the administration’s priorities. These include helping foreign countries combat transnational crime, the illicit drug trade, human trafficking, and wildlife trafficking. I look forward to hearing how Ms. Madison will work to prioritize the many issues that, if confirmed, will fall under her purview and how Congress can work with INL to achieve its mission.

We are also considering the nomination of a new Ambassador to South Sudan when the Government is, by all accounts, abdicating its responsibility to represent its people. There has never been a greater need for skilled diplomacy in the world’s newest country. The committee stands eager to hear about the impact that the deteriorating manmade humanitarian crisis—what impact this has on U.S. interests in the region and what we might do to be able to turn the tide there. We are so grateful that we are going to have an Ambassador to South Sudan. It has been needed.
I thank each of you for your time and sharing your expertise with us.

With that, we will recognize Senator Booker for opening comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY A. BOOKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator Booker. Thank you very much, Chairman Flake.

And I just want to reiterate I really appreciate your flexibility. I was just told that one of you were overseas and rearranged your schedule. It is a lot to go through, a lot of logistics. I just appreciate your patience with us and the many extraneous circumstances.

I am grateful as always to Chairman Flake for his leadership and focus and what he brings to the table.

The two before me—your years of service speak for themselves, your commitment to country, as well as to the larger cause of humanity. Should you be confirmed, you will both arrive at these positions in challenging and very difficult times.

Ms. Madison, the bureau you will lead, if confirmed, will experience savage budget cuts, about 40 percent, if the President’s budget is adopted. It is something that I think is a cause for concern. The budget comes at a time when heroin and cocaine use is increasing, along with a number of heroin-related deaths in recent years. This is a real crisis being felt in communities all across our country, including in New Jersey. There are global supply chains and markets for these illicit substances that demand robust multilateral cooperation as well as enforcement that I believe will be forfeited for more punitive measures against individuals as opposed to making recovery difficult for consumers and investing in the kind of things that really make a difference. Your strategies, your wisdom, and your insight is really essential to help us to advance success at a time that frankly I am just frustrated that we are not making more progress.

Mr. Hushek, if confirmed, you are literally going into a war zone, and I am concerned about your safety, the safety of our personnel in such hardship posts. My concern is compounded actually by not only the deteriorating effects in South Sudan but I just feel that we have no articulated strategy to deal with this crisis. And more than that, I have to say I am very concerned about this administration’s concern about this crisis. There is a moral outrage going on on planet earth at a scale and level of gravity that should anguish the souls of every American. But there is a lack of attention in this administration coming from the top. There are demeaning and degrading comments spewing from the White House that undermine the larger diplomatic efforts.

South Sudan is at a point where all of us, regardless of country—this is a test of the moral will of humanity. And I just feel that you are going into a challenge that I believe you can make a profound difference.

And so I just want to say as an American, as a Senator, but even more so as a human being that I pray for your success under these circumstances, and I am looking forward to hearing you maybe being able to articulate with more clarity what the administration’s strategy is. Your job is one of the more singularly important ones for alleviating suffering on this planet and ending a nightmare that is unimaginable frankly for those who have not witnessed a broad scale famine and suffering like we are seeing in South Sudan. I am angry that my country who has led with light and generosity and love is not showing that in this case.

So I want to thank you both again for being here. I am very much looking forward to having a conversation, and I will pass it back to our chairman.

Senator Flake. Thank you, Senator Booker.

We will now turn to our nominees, the first nominee, Kirsten Madison, Deputy Director of Foreign and Defense Policy Studies with the American Enterprise Institute. She is well known to this committee having served as Deputy Staff Director just a few years ago and as a professional staff member under the leadership of former Chairman Jesse Helms. She also has previous experience at State, the NSC, and the Coast Guard.

Our second nominee is Thomas Hushek, career diplomat, who is serving as the Acting Assistant Secretary of State in the State Department’s Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations. He has served in eight countries overseas, including as Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. embassies of Tajikistan and Micronesia. Additionally, he has completed two tours in Afghanistan.

With that, we will recognize Ms. Madison.

STATEMENT OF KIRSTEN DAWN MADISON, OF FLORIDA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS AND LAW ENFORCEMENT AFFAIRS

Ms. Madison. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee. Thank you, first of all, for the opportunity to testify as the nominee to be the Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs. I am deeply honored by the President’s nomination and at the prospect of serving my country again if I am confirmed.

Since we started dating in high school, my husband Matthew, who is here today, has been my biggest supporter, my most honest critic, my most avid cheerleader. It means a lot to know that he is here.

To my family, my brothers, Jay and Erik—— Senator Flake. Raise your hand, Matthew. Okay, right behind you.

Ms. Madison [continuing]. The long-suffering husband.

Two of my brothers, Jay and Erik, and my parents, Lynn and Kathryn Madison. My mother happened to have flown in from Portugal with me last night, so she is here. I know that I would not be sitting here without their support and encouragement.

The INL team, led by the Assistant Secretary, is a critical player in tackling some of the most challenging issues confronting our nation, including the ongoing opioid crisis and the efforts of criminal networks around the world to optimize their business models at the expense of democratic governance. INL programs help to secure our borders and cities by strengthening the ability of our partners to address threats before they reach our shores. INL also builds the capabilities and capacity of our international partners to defend their own citizens and systems of governance against transnational organized crime, corruption, terrorism, and in fact the points where those things link. Importantly, INL is helping governments to build and strengthen the rule of law that is so essential to economic opportunity, the kind of thing that the U.S. works for at home and abroad.

Through the work of INL, the U.S. has proven over the decades that its influence is profound, that it is capable of driving progress in the global effort to confront crime and corruption. And through this work, the U.S. has embraced the idea that safeguarding our nation and its interests requires us to be engaged and creative and to actively cultivate the trust and confidence it takes to work effectively and secure the buy-in of our international partners. This will continue to be an essential goal of INL, if I am confirmed.

Through a career of more than 20 years, I have worked on governance, counternarcotics, and counterterrorism matters for the U.S. Senate, the House, the Departments of Homeland Security and State, at the Organization of American States, and on the National Security Council staff. Although focused heavily on the western hemisphere, I have also run programs in Asia, Europe, Africa, and the Middle East to build law enforcement and operational capacity of our partners and worked to gather partners to tackle global issues from piracy to illegal fishing to port security.

INL has a significant budget, even in these times of financial pressures. As a former senior executive at State and the Department of Homeland Security, I understand the value of engaged management, effective interagency partnering, and securing buy-in from international partners who share our interests. While my Coast Guard program was on a much smaller scale, thinking critically about strategy, setting priorities, and making tough choices about how to best advance U.S. interests are no less essential to being the Assistant Secretary of State for INL.

If confirmed, my top priorities have been set by the President: battling the opioid epidemic and redoubling efforts to counter the multi-headed hydra that is transnational organized crime. These are global efforts requiring our ongoing attention from Beijing to the Balkans to Liberia to the United Nations system and beyond. There will be important diplomacy and engagement to be done in the western hemisphere where the region-wide consensus we once had for counter-drug and crime efforts has ebbed. For our own security and prosperity, we need to help the rule of law recapture the momentum in this region and to help countries recover stolen or illicit assets and put them to good purpose. Likewise, the uptick in the production of illicit drugs in Afghanistan, Colombia, and Mexico all point to the need to redouble efforts to cement cooperation with them even as we work on the rest of the narcotic and crime continuum internationally and at home.

In recent history, the INL Bureau has benefited from the extraordinary leadership of Ambassador Brownfield and the exceptional dedication and capabilities of the Foreign and Civil Service professionals who make up its ranks. If confirmed, it will be my honor to work alongside them. For the moment, for now, I am just grateful for their wisdom as I prepared for this hearing.

In my experience, we are most successful when Congress and the executive branch share clarity of purpose and the long-term commitment to building institutions, forging partnerships, and constructing frameworks for international cooperation. If confirmed, I hope to work closely with this committee as we address the great challenges of our time.

Again, thank you very much for this opportunity and I look forward to your questions.

[Ms. Madison’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KIRSTEN MADISON

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify as the nominee to be the Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs. I am deeply honored by the President’s nomination and at the prospect of serving my country again if confirmed.

Since we started dating in high school, my husband Matthew—who is here today—has been my biggest supporter, and most honest critic and avid cheerleader. It means everything to know that he is with me every day. To my family, my brothers Jay and Erik and my parents, Lynn and Kathryn Madison: I know that I would not be sitting here without your support and encouragement.

The INL team, led by the Assistant Secretary, is a critical player in tackling some of the most challenging issues confronting our nation, including the ongoing opioid crisis and the efforts of criminal networks around the world to optimize their business models at the expense of democratic governance. INL programs help to secure our borders and cities by strengthening the ability of our partners to address threats before they reach our shores. INL also builds the capabilities and capacity of international partners to defend their own citizens and systems of governance from the transnational crime (of all kinds), corruption, and terrorism that are inexorably linked. Importantly, INL is helping governments to build and strengthen the rule of law so essential to the economic opportunity the U.S. works to create at home and abroad.

Through the work of INL, the U.S. has proven over the decades that its influence is profound, capable of driving progress in the global effort to confront crime and corruption. And, through this work, the U.S. has embraced the idea that safeguarding our nation and its interests requires us to be engaged and creative, and to actively cultivate the trust and confidence it takes to work effectively with and secure the buy-in of our international partners. This will be an essential goal of the INL team if I am confirmed.

Through a career of more than 20 years, I have worked on governance, counternarcotics, and counterterrorism matters for the U.S. Senate and House, the Departments of Homeland Security and State, the Organization of American States, and the National Security Council. Although focused heavily on the Western Hemisphere, I have also run programs in Asia, Europe, Africa, and the Middle East to build law enforcement and operational capacity of our partners and worked to gather partners to tackle global issues from piracy, to illegal fishing, and port security.

INL has a significant budget, even in these times of financial pressures. As a former senior executive at State and Homeland Security, I understand the value of engaged management, effective inter-agency partnering, and securing buy-in from international partners who share our interests. While my Coast Guard program was on a smaller scale, thinking critically about strategy, setting priorities, and making tough choices about how best to advance U.S. interests are no less essential to being the Assistant Secretary for INL.

If confirmed, my top priorities have been set by the President: battling the opioid epidemic and redoubling efforts to counter the multi-headed hydra that is transnational organized crime. These are global efforts, requiring our ongoing attention from Beijing, to the Balkans, to Liberia, to the United Nations system, and beyond. There will be important diplomacy and engagement to be done in the Western Hemisphere, where the region-wide consensus we once had for counterdrug and countercrime efforts has ebbed. For our own security and prosperity, we need to help the “rule of law” recapture the momentum in this region and to help countries recover stolen or illicit assets and put them to good purpose. Likewise, the uptick in production of illicit drugs in Afghanistan, Colombia, and Mexico all point to the need to redouble efforts to cement cooperation with them even as we work on the rest of the narcotic and crime continuum internationally and at home.

In recent history, the INL bureau has benefited from the extraordinary leadership of Ambassador Brownfield and the exceptional dedication and capabilities of the Foreign and Civil Service professionals that make up its ranks. If confirmed, it will be an honor to work alongside them. For now, I am grateful for their wisdom as I prepared for the nomination process.

In my experience, we are most successful when Congress and the Executive Branch share clarity of purpose and long-term commitment to building institutions, forging partnerships, and constructing frameworks for international cooperation.

If confirmed, I hope to work closely with this committee as we address the challenges of our time. Again, thank you for this opportunity and I look forward to your questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you, Ms. Madison.

Mr. Hushek?

STATEMENT OF THOMAS J. HUSHEK, OF WISCONSIN, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF SOUTH SUDAN

Mr. HUSHEK. Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored and humbled to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of South Sudan.

I would like to thank my family, friends, and colleagues whose encouragement and support have helped shape my career and made this moment possible.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and other Members of Congress to advance our nation’s priorities in South Sudan, leading our mission in Juba, and engage South Sudanese people and press the Government and other actors to find a meaningful and durable solution to the ongoing conflict and Africa’s largest humanitarian crisis.

Mr. Chairman, you and the members of this committee are well aware of the tragedy that is playing out in South Sudan. The independence of this nation in 2011 captured the world’s attention and became a symbol for freedom, resilience, and the unbridled potential of Africa. The global community and the United States in particular offered unequivocal support to the South Sudanese people who for decades had known nothing but oppression, deprivation, and war. The American people provided vast amounts of technical advice, development assistance, and goodwill to support the new country’s aspirations. But tragically, 2 years after independence, South Sudan’s leaders in government and opposition plunged their country into an ever-worsening conflict and humanitarian crisis, betraying the dreams of the South Sudanese people for peace and development.

Since the outbreak of hostilities in December 2013, South Sudanese civilians have experienced unspeakable cruelty at the hands of government forces and other armed actors, including widespread sexual violence used as a weapon of war. More than 4 million South Sudanese have been displaced from their homes. 70 percent of children are out of school, with roughly 19,000 of them forced to serve in armed groups. Without sustained humanitarian assistance and improved access, more than 7 million people will face life-threatening hunger because of conflict this year. Even with this extreme level of need, parties to the conflict continue to impede delivery of humanitarian aid, and South Sudan is considered one of the most dangerous country in the world for humanitarians. The economy is in shambles, and South Sudan's modest oil wealth is being siphoned away through widespread corruption, fueling the conflict rather than the young nation's development.

Despite the failure of South Sudan's leaders to act responsibly, the United States has not abandoned the South Sudanese people. As the single largest contributor of aid, we have provided more than $3 billion in emergency humanitarian assistance since fighting began in 2013. The American people should be proud of our leading role in the international effort to stave off famine and provide critical services such as water, nutrition, sanitation, and health care.

The United States is also supporting regional efforts to negotiate a peaceful resolution of the conflict. Last December, the warring parties agreed to a cessation of hostilities as a first step in this process. Unfortunately, that agreement has been repeatedly violated by the signatories. We are working with African and international allies to press for its implementation and to apply consequences for violators. The United States will continue to take action against those who have fomented violence, obstructed the peace process, and enriched themselves through corruption while so many of South Sudan's people have been driven from their homes or are on the verge of famine.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will press the leaders of all parties to the conflict in South Sudan and especially the Government to disavow violence and make the hard compromises necessary to achieve a peaceful resolution of their political differences. I will work tirelessly to urge respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms so that the people of South Sudan might once again aspire to a peaceful and prosperous future. I will work to ensure that America's humanitarian traditions are upheld and our generosity is not squandered. And finally, Mr. Chairman, I assure you that, if confirmed, I will keep as my top priority working to ensure the safety and security of U.S. citizens in South Sudan.

Thank you again for this opportunity to appear before you today, and I look forward to answering questions you might have.

[Mr. Hushek's prepared statement follows:]

Thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to answering any questions that you might have.

Senator Flake. Thank you both for your testimony.

Let me start with Ms. Madison. When we were in my office a while ago, we talked about wildlife trafficking. Senator Booker and I just returned from a trip to Africa. It is an extremely important source of revenue for the countries in southern Africa and certainly a form of enjoyment for a lot of American tourists and others who go to see obviously large herds of elephants and the remaining rhinos.

What is our administration’s policy with regard to wildlife trafficking, and what will your office do with regard to implementation of that policy?

Ms. Madison. Senator, thank you for the question. In fact, I noticed this week there was an article about sales of endangered species parts on, I think it was, Facebook. It is a constantly evolving issue.

Wildlife trafficking is another form of transnational organized crime. It, unfortunately, is a very lucrative one for criminals. There is high demand. There is high return on investment, and there is still, unfortunately, a relatively low risk of being caught.

From an INL perspective, again this is transnational organized crime. So the bureau works in a variety of different ways. It works at the international multilateral level to make the U.N. Convention on Transnational Organized Crime real and to help countries make use of the tools in that to go to work on transnational organized crime.

In addition, it works to build investigator capacity, law enforcement capacity, prosecutorial capacity in countries where this is an issue. And it very specifically has programs on wildlife trafficking. There are 20 different programs, for example, in Africa that are designed to help countries take this on.

It is a big source of income. INTERPOL did a report not too long ago that said environmental crimes was between $100 billion and $250 billion a year. So some segment of that is wildlife trafficking. Even if it is at the low end of that, that is an enormous boon to criminal organizations.

So I think INL has a focus on this particularly in Africa because it is a particular challenge, but there is also work in Latin America and in Asia. So that is kind of the basic laydown, sir.

Senator Flake. Thanks.

When we met, you told me there is an endless desire for U.S. engagement in training in law enforcement issues, that the toughest decisions are deciding what our limits and priorities will be. Can you talk a little bit about that? How do we prioritize what I am sure is a lot of demand for our involvement there?

Ms. Madison. Senator, yes, there is always an endless demand for our engagement, for our constructive engagement, for our support, for our tools—you know, law enforcement capacity, whichever piece of it you want to talk about. And I think that what you really have to do when you are confronted with global demand and also global challenges is figure out where you can most closely align with U.S. national security interests. Obviously, transnational organized crime and the opioid crisis have been prioritized by the President. But also, I think you have to look at the question of where you can have impact. In some circumstances, you cannot have impact because you do not have a willing partner or because the security circumstances on the ground do not allow you to.

So I think it is about alignment with national security objectives. It is about being realistic about where you can have an impact, and also I think in thinking about these things, you have to also look at the question because most of the issues that INL deals with are transnational in some way. You have to look for where there are opportunities to work regionally. I think wildlife trafficking is a good example of where you have sort of a sweep of crime and where regional efforts can be powerful.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Mr. Hushek, we have been without an Ambassador to South Sudan for almost a year now. It was the summer of 2017. How do we put an ambassador there now without lending legitimacy to the Government and their actions of late? What is the State Department prepared to do to tell Juba that what has been going on is certainly not acceptable?

Mr. Hushek. Thank you.

Yes, it has been since last summer since an ambassador was there. Of course, our embassy is remaining active. But as an Ambassador, if confirmed, one of the main things I will be committed Another very important part of what I and the embassy will be working on is communicating and relating to the people of South Sudan, and that goes beyond just government officials. Right now, in order to put pressure on the Government of South Sudan and the other parties to the conflict, the State Department and the U.S. Government are putting on a series of escalating mechanisms to force the parties to take seriously the political talks that are going on to end the conflict.

So last fall, shortly after the Ambassador left, we put in some sanctions against three high-level individuals and then another one in December, a business associate of the president.

And in February, we instituted a national arms embargo preventing arms and ammunitions going from the U.S. there to verify an effective policy that we had in place already.

And also this spring, we have worked through multilateral organizations to renew the mandates of the U.N. mission in South Sudan, as well as the U.N. Human Rights Commission for South Sudan, so those kind of multilateral mechanisms as well.

All during that period, we have also been supporting these ongoing peace talks called the High Level Revitalisation Forum, coordinating among the donor nations and, most importantly, with the neighboring countries to South Sudan to put pressure on the Government and the other parties.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator BOOKER?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much, Chairman Booker.

I am going to begin with you, Ms. Madison, because you talked about the role of the INL in the whole drug trafficking issue. And as you may be aware, New Hampshire is one of those States in the U.S. that is at the epicenter of the opioid and heroin epidemic that we are experiencing. We have the highest rate of fentanyl overdose deaths in the country.

So I wonder if you can talk about what more INL can do to counter the flow of fentanyl in particular but other drugs, of course, and what more you think the Congress can do to help support your efforts.

Ms. MADISON. Senator, thank you very much for the question.

I think if there is any one issue that was raised, as I did my consultative meetings on the Hill, whether at the staff level or the Senator level, it was this one because of the impact on so many communities and cities and families in this country.

I think INL is working in a very concerted way on this already in the sense that it is engaged at the multilateral level, at the international narcotics control level, in the U.N. Office on Drugs and Crime to build the frameworks, to strengthen the frameworks that we have to control drugs, and also to make use of the tools that are in those agreements and in those organizations to actually get more drugs, opioids specifically, under international control. We control many things domestically and we need other countries to do it domestically, but that international control piece is really essential.

I think INL has done some very effective work already to get more drugs under control and also to try to accelerate the pace of control because what the drug organizations do is they change the formula and then they have another drug. And you get in this endless cycle of trying to get ahead of what they are up to.

So I think the international piece of it is important. I think it is going to remain important, and I think in addition to being a framework and way of working together, there are tools built into those international agreements that we can actually put to work to allow for real-time operational cooperation. You know, you have to kind of tackle every piece of the chain.

I think the bilateral work that has been done with China so far by INL has actually been impressive. They do not have a domestic use problem in China, but they have moved to control more than 140 synthetic opioids, including carfentanil, which of course is an enormous problem. And they have also moved to provide a lot more advanced electronic data that allows us to sort of get a sense of what is moving in the mail because it is a principal delivery system.

I think that one of the things that is left to be done is to encourage the Chinese to actually do more control of synthetic opioids as a class, again to get out ahead of what is going on with the changes in formulas. I think there is more work to be done on the mail front, not just for the Chinese, but not every country has the capability to share information. And I think as I understand it as an outsider looking in, INL is also looking at the question of what else can be done with the International Postal Union to tackle that piece of it.

There is another piece that I think requires attention that is continuing to evolve, which is the criminal use of the Internet for the sales on the dark web and their convergence with cryptocurrencies which are, unfortunately, very agile and anonymous tools to move money. And that is a piece that, if I were confirmed, I want to really understand where we are on that and what else we can do to kind of get in front of it. I know there is plenty of work going on. INL is doing a lot of work on cyber crime and financial crimes. But again, this is an evolving area of this, and I think it should be of great concern to us.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Ms. MADISON. Sorry. I used a lot of your time, Senator.

Senator SHAHEEN. INL operates the International Law Enforcement Academies. As we look at the challenges that are facing so many countries, whether it is South Sudan or countries in Eastern Europe, we are seeing in South America corruption is one of the biggest challenges. And obviously, having a law enforcement system and a judicial system that is able to address that corruption and helping to change what has been a culture in some of those countries is really important. I had a chance to visit the Law Enforcement Academy in Budapest last year and was very impressed with what I heard from the people who were students at the academy who were law enforcement in various countries, most of them in Eastern Europe. But can you just talk about the commitment of INL to continue the work there and how important it is?

Ms. Madison. Thank you for the question, Senator. I will try to be very quick this time.

Yes, the ILEAs are actually really important. I have only ever visited the one in El Salvador because I worked on the western hemisphere. First of all, it is considered to be very prestigious to go, which I think is good. It has some appeal.

But I think part of what INL is doing with the ILEAs is helping to build into the police forces and into the academies the idea that you have to have professional ethics and respect for human rights. And they are also helping to build internal affairs organizations and other preventative structures into the police forces that they work with. So the ILEAs can be very powerful I think in helping to sort of build that in from the bottom up.

Senator Shaheen. And the networks that the students who attend there develop is also very important, as we heard.

I am out of time, but I do want to ask for your commitment to—one of the great things that INL does is to encourage the women being part of police forces and law enforcement around the world, and that has had some real success. I hope that you will remain committed to ensuring that that program not only continues but that it grows.

Ms. Madison. Senator, thank you very much for the question.

I do think INL does a good job of trying to build this sensibility and effort in from the ground up, and I will absolutely remain committed to the effort.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Mr. Hushek, I leave you to Senator Young. [Laughter.]

Senator Flake. And with that, Senator Young.

Senator Young. Thank you, Chairman.

Ms. Madison, you are nominated to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs. You wrote in your prepared remarks that, if confirmed, you would be a critical player in tackling some of the most challenging issues confronting our nation, including the ongoing opioid crisis.

Now, many people in my State of Indiana like so many other Americans have been afflicted by this opioid crisis. In fact, in the year 2016, which is the year for which we have most recent data, there were 785 drug overdose deaths involving opioids. If you lose a father, a mother, a sibling, a son, it can really impact the home, and that ripples throughout a community.

If confirmed, I just want to make sure, in light of the increasing severity of this crisis, do you commit to me and to this committee as well that you will make battling the opioid epidemic one of your top priorities?

Ms. Madison. Senator, the answer to your question is absolutely yes.

Senator Young. Excellent. Thank you.

As you know, fentanyl is a synthetic opioid. It is much more potent than heroin. We know that secretly produced fentanyl, as well as most of the associated illegal precursors and analogs, are primarily sourced through China, and they are smuggled into the U.S. through Mexico, Canada, and also through direct mail.
Now, it is my understanding Mexico serves as a transshipment point, and there are labs in Mexico or there may be labs in Mexico that use precursor chemicals that are then smuggled over our southwestern border to produce fentanyl.

Based on your experience and your preparation for this hearing, Ms. Madison, can you provide just a quick update on the transnational elements of the opioid crisis?

Ms. MADISON. Senator, thank you for your question.

This is really at the heart of INL's piece of this. Of course, there is a domestic piece in prevention and law enforcement and other elements of this, but INL's piece is this transnational effort to secure cooperation and work across borders.

I think that the opioid trade, the illicit opioid trade, whether it is heroin from Mexico or synthetics from China, relies on various means to get here, as you noted, the mail. But I do think we are seeing this process of fentanyl being cut into other drugs and then delivered to the U.S. So there is very definitely a piece of this process that is about securing the cooperation with Mexico in particular because that is a pathway. And I do think there is a pretty good basis—there is actually an incredible basis of cooperation with Mexico on these issues.

But, yes, the problem is even if you tackle the mail piece of it, what will happen is the traffickers will shift over and use whatever means that they can. And so that avenue through Mexico or any other country that they can get their product through will remain an important thing for us to work on. And if I am confirmed, of course that would be a priority.

Senator Y OUNG. Are there specific things either now or in the near term that you think need to be done that are not being done that can help address the illicit flow of these precursors or of opioids into our country and therefore adversely impact the younger population?

Ms. MADISON. Senator, as I mentioned, I think that there is some undone work on the mail front. I think there is some undone work on the control front. I think we need to kind of have the broader framework in place. We need to use the control regimes. And then I think the ongoing effort of working with Mexico to improve their capabilities to control what moves in and out of their country, the intelligence sharing, and finding ways to expand that will continue to be important. It is a question of constant vigilance and those relationships and those working partnerships.

Senator Y OUNG. Well, thank you. I am going to have my team follow up with you, with your indulgence, after this hearing just to gather your insights based on your professional experience to see if there are other countries or international organizations from whom we might learn best practices, whether it is on the law enforcement end of things or treatment or prevention, because we tend to think of the opioid crisis as a national crisis, and indeed it is that. But in preparation for this hearing, it was quite clear to me that this is also an international crisis, and there may be countries doing things more effectively than we are. So do you commit to working with my team on that?
Ms. Madison. Senator, I would be delighted to have the conversation, if confirmed or before I am confirmed as part of this process. Absolutely.

And it is in fact a global crisis. I think you can read in a newspaper in the UK or many other places in the world about the impact of illicit opioids on families and cities. We are not alone, and we have not necessarily cornered the market on good ideas.

Senator Young. Lastly with the chairman's indulgence, I would just like to communicate to you I will be submitting a question for the record pertaining to your work on the issue of illegal fishing. This is something I have been learning more about recently. It has some really serious consequences and I think highly under-reported. And so I appreciate your assistance in answering those questions.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Senator Booker?

Senator Booker. Thank you very much.

Mr. Hushek, how do you evaluate the role of the IGAD who has been trying for years to negotiate some kind of peace deals, which seem to be broken time and time again?

Mr. Hushek. Well, the IGAD continues to be very important in the peace process. This is composed of the countries that are immediate neighbors to South Sudan. So a peace process to be enforced would require these countries to be intimately involved.

The current ongoing high-level Revitalisation Forum——

Senator Booker. They just were meeting in March. Right?

Mr. Hushek. They met twice in December and then again in February and are going to be meeting again later this month for a third round.

They still have yet to tackle the very serious security and governance issues that are on the table, and this has to do, in part, as I mentioned before, with the incentives of the parties to negotiate in good faith. For our part, we are putting extra pressure on—using pressure mechanisms to make sure that they sit at the table and negotiate. These are the sanctions and the other measures that we have taken.

We have also continued to support some of the mechanisms that will ultimately be used for providing accountability for the serious human rights and other crimes that have taken place. And the IGAD will play a role in this as well.

If you look at it as concentric circles, outside the IGAD countries, there are also the broader African Union and the United Nations, and we are working in all these fora to press these issues. But in fact, these immediate surrounding countries play the most important role in getting this peace process moving forward.

Senator Booker. It seems like we have been doing a lot of the same things over and over again and not getting anywhere. Could you articulate to me a strategy born from the wisdom of not our failures but the failure to bring about peace here?

Mr. Hushek. Yes. One of the newer ingredients in the process is putting on a campaign of increasing pressure on the parties. So it started out long ago with some UN-sponsored sanctions for field level commanders. Last fall, we took it up to the next level and we put on sanctions on some people that were at cabinet level positions in the Government or equivalents. And the idea is to continue to increase this pressure.

We have also moved up in the area of arms embargo. We still are pursuing that, exploring the possibility——

Senator BOOKER. Can you just hold on for a second? I am sorry to interrupt you.

So according to my notes, we have got sanctions on about 10 individuals in South Sudan, four of whom were just sanctioned last year. But how do you evaluate the impact of that tool and those sanctions?

Mr. HUSHEK. Those sanctions with the other related items like the recent addition of petroleum entities on the Department of Commerce’s entities list and the arms embargo that I mentioned—those things have gotten some attention in Juba and in the region I have to say. The intermediate step, though, is to get the neighboring countries to also put on the same kind of pressure on the parties that they are in most close touch with. So the Governments in Ethiopia, Uganda, Kenya, Sudan are very important to get into the process.

Senator BOOKER. In the Bush administration, Deputy Secretary Bob Zoellick played an important role as a point person, you know, after Special Envoy John Danforth left the post vacant. And I am just wondering. We have seen from the Bush administration and Obama administration high-level diplomatic efforts. And I am just wondering do you think that higher-level diplomatic efforts or a deputy secretary or special envoy positions—do you think that that is something that we could be ramping up now in your evaluation?

Mr. HUSHEK. Yes. I think we definitely need high-level attention. I as the Ambassador, if confirmed, will of course be able to deliver messages at the highest levels in Juba, but since this is really a problem that will require regional participation, it is important to have high-level attention from the administration.

So far, in the past year, we have had Ambassador Haley, our Ambassador to the U.N., and Administrator Mark Green from USAID visit and deliver very tough messages to President Salva Kiir and others. And also there have been some members of this body that have also visited and helped us deliver strong messages. So we need to keep that high-level engagement very much active. Secretary Tillerson, when he was out there last month, also raised South Sudan in some of the regional stops that he made during his visit. But we definitely need to continue to pursue high-level attention to the problem.

Senator BOOKER. Two of my esteemed colleagues have come, so I do not want to go over my time any more, but I do want to come back to this again.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Senator Gardner?

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Thanks to both of you for your willingness to serve, and congratulations on the nominations.

Just last week, a couple of weeks during the congressional work period, I had an opportunity to visit places across Colorado holding a number of roundtables on drug abuse, opioid addiction, and law enforcement roundtables where we talked about what is happening in Colorado and beyond.

One of the most alarming and shocking discussions we had was a roundtable in Alamosa, Colorado, which is in the San Luis Valley in the southern part of Colorado where 90 percent of the inmates in the local jail are addicted to drugs, where we had a discussion with the local hospital about how they are trying to get nasal injections of Narcan to kids because it is easier for the kids to administer that to their parents when they overdose. This is pretty heavy stuff.

You know, we talk about things like a New York Times report. Afghanistan continues to produce about 85 percent of the world’s opium despite more than $8 billion the U.S. has spent fighting the problem. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime reports another 17. China is playing a key role in the surge of opium production in Afghanistan by generating new strains of genetically modified seed allowing poppies to be grown year-round. The seeds began appearing in 2015 and led to a massive 43 percent surge in production in 2016.

Ms. Madison, do you agree with that report? What should we be doing to address China’s influence in Afghanistan’s drug trafficking? I mean, what is appearing in the San Luis Valley in Colorado obviously is not coming from something grown there, but it is coming from the outside. What should we be doing? Do you agree with it?

Ms. Madison. Senator, thank you for the question.

Yes, the opioid crisis is a global problem, and even though the opioids that come out of Afghanistan do not tend to make it to the U.S., they make it as far as Canada. So I do not think we should be sanguine about the future path of those drugs, should the traffickers decide the market conditions are right for them to come here.

I think that what we need to be doing is continuing to work on all of the elements of this problem. It is transnational organized crime. There are international frameworks that we can encourage countries to sign up to, use the frameworks and the organizations like the U.N. Office on Drugs and Crime to hold them accountable to that, to make use of those tools, to improve operational cooperation and frameworks in these individual governments.

I think that the surge that we are seeing in production in a variety of places is of concern, of course. It is of concern in Mexico. It is a concern on the cocaine front in Colombia. But I think those international frameworks are the starting point because they allow us to advance the process of controlling these substances, which begins to help to sort of limit the range of motion that the traffickers have.

And I think INL’s work also—they work at a bilateral level. They are working in individual countries to build law enforcement capabilities, to build investigative capabilities, to help countries’ financial intelligence units and other financially focused organizations tackle the money piece of it because the drugs do not move without the money and that is a really critical piece of this puzzle and the anti-money laundering efforts that INL works on. So I think there is a bilateral piece of it, and I think that all of those pieces have to be brought to bear if we want to tackle this.

One of the things that I referred to in my opening statement that I think bears emphasis is when we show up in these countries and we do not just say cooperate with us, but we say, look, we need your help. It is in your interest to work on this. It is in our interest to work on this. And we show up and we bring tools, and we say, look, this is assistance that can help you investigate. It can help you prosecute. That is when we actually can be successful. It is actually the sort of secret power of INL. It has resources to come and bring tools to the table to actually help countries be our partners and help them cooperate with us. I think there is power in that.

You know, there is no silver bullet and there is nothing quick.
It is about building those enduring partnerships and building enduring capability and beginning to limit the range of motion for the narcotraffickers over time.

Senator GARDNER. Human Rights Watch estimates that the war on drugs in the Philippines led by President Duterte has cost 12,000 lives. Obviously, they have a drug problem in the Philippines. Some of it is related to China as well. How do we work both to end and help the Philippines address this war on drugs but also make sure that we are addressing the human rights issues that accompany this war on drugs?

Ms. MADISON. Senator, thank you for this question.
The Philippines is a particularly challenging place. Really I think the U.S. Government has great cooperation with the Philippines on the maritime issues and some other things, but we have an obvious and completely justified concern with their approach to their war on drugs. It is essentially extrajudicial killings masquerading as justice. It means that the system is failing.

I think INL has, as I understand it, reviewed their entire program in 2016, shifted away from working with the police, and is focused on working with the criminal justice institutions and development, domestic prevention programs because, as you noted, the source of the problem here is they have a domestic use problem.
And built into those programs is a large human rights component because there needs to be. I think over time you can begin to create the infrastructure of the rule of law and criminal justice systems that are actually respectful of human rights and institutions that can appropriately do their job in a democratic context.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you both for your time and testimony.
Mr. Chairman, thanks.
Senator Flake. Thank you.
Senator Kaine?
Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And congratulations to each of you for your nomination to these positions.

Mr. Hushek, I want to ask you a question about protection of aid workers. South Sudan is reportedly the deadliest country in the world for aid workers. 95 have been killed since 2013. Most of them are local staff. And aid agencies report hundreds of what they call access incidents in the country in 2016, 70 percent of them violent, and the number of incidents increased to 1,159 in 2017, which was the highest number of incidents yet.
Some suggest that these international aid workers are increasingly alleged to be agents of regime change and that is why they get targeted.

What pressure can the U.S. put on the Government of South Sudan to ensure that aid workers, especially local staff, are better protected?

Mr. HUSHEK. Thank you.

Yes, South Sudan is considered the most dangerous place in the world for humanitarian workers. Just this last several days, there were the first two deaths of humanitarian workers in 2018. So the numbers do keep going up.

If confirmed, I will ensure that one of the main priorities of the embassy will continue to be coordination and advocacy on these issues of access for humanitarian workers and security for humanitarian workers. Our programs, mostly run by USAID, do build in a lot of good monitoring to look for diversions, obstructions to the process so we can tackle them early. We participate actively in all the coordinating mechanisms with the broader aid community in South Sudan and play strong leadership roles in a lot of these as well in Juba. And that coordinating mechanism is something that I think the U.S. embassy there is very uniquely positioned to do. It is one of the largest missions there, and we have the expertise in all these areas and, of course, the strong record as humanitarian donors.

On the security front also, USAID and others imitate this process well, but we build into the programs with our implementing partners a good flow of information about security conditions and also an expectation that all the implementing partners have strong security plans as well. So these steps are important to try to address these problems, but it is one that will remain high on my agenda, if confirmed.

Senator KAINE. Excellent. Thank you.

Ms. Madison, I want to ask you about Colombia and cocaine. The U.S.-Colombian relationship has been very powerful. The Plan Colombia, now Peace Colombia—you know, we have shown that partnership across different administrations of different parties have enabled significant progress to occur. But there is a dramatic expansion of coca production in Colombia, and we are seeing in the U.S. cocaine kind of back on the uptick. I just came from a HELP hearing on opioids. We talked about opioids and fentanyl here. But we are seeing cocaine use in the United States start to increase again.

What do you see that you might be able to do, if confirmed, to work with what has been a good U.S. partner, Colombia, to try to figure out a way to do more on the supply eradication side?

Ms. MADISON. Senator, thank you for the question.

Ms. Madison, I want to ask you about Colombia and cocaine. The U.S.-Colombian relationship has been very powerful. The Plan Colombia, now Peace Colombia—you know, we have shown that partnership across different administrations of different parties have enabled significant progress to occur. But there is a dramatic expansion of coca production in Colombia, and we are seeing in the U.S. cocaine kind of back on the uptick. I just came from a HELP hearing on opioids. We talked about opioids and fentanyl here. But we are seeing cocaine use in the United States start to increase again.

What do you see that you might be able to do, if confirmed, to work with what has been a good U.S. partner, Colombia, to try to figure out a way to do more on the supply eradication side?

Ms. MADISON. Senator, thank you for the question.

I am, I guess, unfortunately, old enough to have been here when we were doing Plan Colombia on Capitol Hill, and I remember that in those days, we were talking about the potential of a failed state in Colombia. And now I think we have a very strong partner in that country in many ways and both deep and wide cooperation. Obviously, the surge in coca production, cocaine production in Colombia is of concern. And I think that it requires us to remain engaged on a variety of things whether it is their eradication targeting or the other sort of elements of their program.

I think that there is a new administration coming in Colombia this summer. One of the things I actually think that we need to be doing is positioning ourselves so that we are engaged early and often with them on their larger strategy because I think what they are planning to do, in terms of eradication, and while they are having a great year in terms of interdiction and they have done a lot of manual eradication—what they are planning to do now will not keep them ahead of the curve. So I think that we need to remain engaged with the Colombians. We need to continue to encourage them to sort of increase their eradication targets. And I think when you have a new administration inbound, it is a great opportunity to renew the conversation and seek their cooperation.

The Colombians understand how important this issue is to them. I think they are balancing a lot of issues internally, of course, with the peace process and other things, but I think that it is a great partnership and we can build on it to tackle this piece of the challenge.

Senator Kaine. Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Senator Flake. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

And I thank all of you for participating. You had a good showing here and a lot of interest in the work that you are going to do.

Senator Booker. Can I ask one other?

Senator Flake. Go ahead. Yes, go ahead. Senator Booker will have a few more questions.

Senator Booker. I just have a few more questions. I apologize.

Senator Flake. No problem.

Senator Booker. Because I am really concerned about the role of the neighbors you were talking about and some of their behavior, whether it is Kenya seeming to undermine our sanctions by allowing South Sudanese to get involved or in Uganda who we are funding in significant ways and supporting militarily, in fact, perhaps one of the most significant recipients of a lot of our resources in sub-Saharan Africa. But they seem to be supplying arms that are making this conflict worse.

So I am wondering. As you say trying to pull our allies in, should we be taking a much stronger role, a much stronger stance against allies undermining our efforts?

Mr. Hushek. Yes. So far the efforts that I spoke of on sanctions and the national-level arms embargo, these are national U.S. mechanisms. But a very important key would be to the extent that we can multilateralize these to do that.

So on the arms embargo, of course we have been supporting a full arms embargo in the United Nations since 2016. We brought it to a vote but it did not pass in December 2016. And we are keeping our eye on whether the balance, the calculus has changed enough to take that back to the Security Council that would really make a stronger efforts on the arms flow.

On the sanctions, also you are right that these are, again, sanctions that we have put in place—the recent ones at least—to convince the countries in the region to take it as seriously as we do.
A lot of the leaders in South Sudan, Government and opposition, have family members living, banking in neighboring countries.

Senator BOOKER. Just real quick because according to my notes, the U.N. panel has already reported that Uganda supplied Kiir’s regime with weapons. And we are giving weapons to—the DOD spent $130 million to train and equip in Uganda. And according to my notes, we have given a pattern of a lot of heavy equipment, including helicopters and ammunition. And there is concern that they have been transferred from Uganda to South Sudan. Is this not a serious undermining of our efforts in that area?

Mr. Hushek. I do not know that U.S.-supplied weapons have been transferred from Uganda to South Sudan, but the flow, at least through Uganda into South Sudan, of ammunition even is something that has been reported. The idea of the arms embargo or stopping the ammunition and arms flows into the country is in order to reduce the suffering of the victims of the civil war. So wherever we can find places to put pressure on, we should be doing that.

That is why one of the ideas of multilateralizing an arms embargo would be good, but right now, we do not have the votes in the Security Council to do that. We have gotten positive statements in the recent months on the margins of these peace talks where the neighboring countries and the AU are starting to recognize that there need to be consequences put in place for people that are undermining the peace process. But so far strong actions have not been taken based on those statements.

Senator BOOKER. Just really quick, Ms. Madison.

Thank you very much, Mr. Hushek.

Just really quick. So obviously, we have three branches of government. We have the administration and Congress. We are in charge of the power of the purse. The President proposes a budget. Can your work withstand a 40 percent cut in resources, the critical work that you are doing if you are advising the people that actually have the power of the purse?

Ms. Madison. Senator, thank you for your question.

I think INL still has a substantial budget. I think any big cut requires you to just sort the priorities more aggressively. And since I am not on the inside, I suspect that what went on inside of INL was that they looked at programs, looked at anything that was less effective or less impactful, looked at how things aligned to the top priorities, and set about the business——

Senator BOOKER. No. I appreciate that. Clearly there is a crisis in this country that is growing worse. Clearly those programs that are effective might demand more resources not less. I was a mayor of a city. I cut my government 25 percent. So I am a cutter and was able to raise efficiency. So I know how government can often do things backwards, to put it politely. But when you find things that are making a difference at a time that thousands and thousands of Americans are dying, should we not be doubling down our efforts and not constraining them?

Ms. Madison. Senator, if confirmed, I would, of course, support the President’s budget. But what I will say is that your job, when you are an Assistant Secretary, when you are in a senior leadership position—your job is to understand your programs and be the best possible advocate for them in the internal budget process. I have been inside of government agencies when the budgets were down, and that really is what it is about. It is about making the best case for the things that you can put on the table to serve the national security interests of the country. So by the time a budget is put out, that has all happened.

So what I can say is if I am in this job, one of the first things that I will do is get to know these programs in the best possible way, get to understand their impact and effectiveness, and position myself to be the best advocate I can be for the work of this bureau and for the contribution it makes to the security of our country.

Senator BOOKER. That was a nimble, dexterous, and good answer. Your husband behind you is beaming with pride as he saw how you successfully navigated my onslaught. [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER [continuing]. You will be a very good diplomat. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. Agreed.

Thanks to both the witnesses today.

The hearing record will remain open till the close of business, including for members to submit questions for the record. We ask the witnesses to respond promptly. So any responses will be made a part of the record.

I appreciate your willingness to serve and the sacrifices made by your families and friends to have you serve. Thank you for being here.

And we conclude this hearing.

[Whereupon, at 11:05 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIRSTEN DAWN MADISON BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. The United States is suffering an opioid epidemic that has taken the lives of tens of thousands of American citizens and is increasingly fueled heroin and fentanyl that is trafficked into our country. If confirmed, how will you prioritize combating illicit heroin and fentanyl trafficking?

Answer. If confirmed, combating illicit heroin and fentanyl trafficking will be one of my top priorities as INL Assistant Secretary. I will prioritize State Department efforts to employ a coordinated approach to disrupt the sources and trafficking of heroin and illicit fentanyl coming to the United States. This would include regional and bilateral efforts to engage key partners like Mexico and China. With Mexico, I would seek to deepen the U.S. partnership with their government and improve their capacity to attack transnational criminal organizations. With China, I would support greater cooperation with them on efforts to prevent the illicit production and shipments of synthetic drugs like fentanyl. I would also deepen cooperation with key multilateral organizations to control the production and sale of deadly synthetic opioids, expand efforts to interdict these drugs in the international mail and express consignment courier systems, and take down illicit drug sales sites on the internet and Dark Web.

Question 2. What is your assessment of the importance of U.S.-Mexico cooperation to address illicit heroin and fentanyl trafficking and transnational organized crime?

Answer. Mexico is an essential partner on counternarcotics and disrupting transnational organized crime. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work closely with Mexico to reduce the availability and trafficking of heroin, fentanyl, and other illicit drugs to the United States. With presidential elections in Mexico on the horizon, INL will have an important role to play in setting the tone for future cooperation on these issues as the new Mexican administration assumes office.

To protect American lives, we must curb U.S. demand that fuels the illicit drug trade; disrupt networks that smuggle drugs, cash, and weapons across our shared border with Mexico; partner with Mexico to achieve meaningful criminal justice outcomes that deny transnational criminal organizations the ability to act with impunity and profit from their crimes; and fight the corruption that undermines our efforts.

Question 3. What is your assessment of the importance of U.S.-China cooperation to address illicit fentanyl trafficking?

Answer. China is a major source of illicit fentanyl and its precursor chemicals and therefore a critical partner in the global effort to address these threats. The rise in fentanyl-related deaths in the United States has created greater urgency for close cooperation. China domestically controlled 143 synthetic substances, including carfentanil and nine other fentanyl analogues, at our request. Five of those substances have been controlled since the President’s November 2017 meeting with President Xi.

I understand it will likely take at least a calendar year for China to take the necessary steps to control fentanyl analogues as a class. One of my priorities, if confirmed, will be to work with Ambassador Branstad to press the Chinese to do more on this issue, including through chairing the U.S.-China Joint Liaison Group on Law Enforcement and Cybersecurity Cooperation.

Question 4. At a time when the political relationship between the U.S. and Mexico is under increasing duress, how will you work to sustain and build the cooperation necessary to combat illicit trafficking and transnational organized crime?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work with Mexico to sustain and advance our security cooperation. We will work to disrupt networks that smuggle drugs, cash, and weapons across our shared border; partner with Mexico to achieve meaningful criminal justice outcomes that deny traffickers the ability to act with impunity and profit from their crimes; and fight the corruption that undermines our efforts. Importantly, the work done under the Merida Initiative since 2007 has built a deep and substantive cooperative relationship with Mexico founded on what I believe is a mutual recognition that these issues must be tackled for the well-being of both countries and their citizens.

Question 5. What additional steps will you take to expand U.S. efforts to combat heroin and fentanyl trafficking?

Answer. If confirmed, I will direct INL to support critical efforts to increase information sharing on the trafficking and use of opioids and real-time cooperation among law enforcement officials. This includes exploring the links among cryptocurrencies, the Dark Web, and traffickers, as well as interventions to address them. I will also work with my colleagues in the Bureau of International Organizations to seek enhanced collaboration with the Universal Postal Union to expand international capacities to detect and interdict fentanyl and other dangerous drugs trafficked by international mail.

Question 6. How will your efforts be affected by the President’s proposed 30 percent cut to the INL budget, including a 38 percent cut to INL funding for Mexico?

Answer. While the overall budget has been reduced, I understand the Department’s fiscal year 2019 budget request focuses resources for INL on core U.S. national security priorities, including efforts to combat the opioid epidemic. The request includes funding for programs to combat the flow of heroin and fentanyl to the United States. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work closely with Mexico, China, and other international partners to reduce the production and availability of heroin, fentanyl, and other illicit drugs and to dismantle transnational criminal organizations.

Question 7. What do you see as the role of INL in countering malign Russian Government influence in Europe, including in Ukraine but also in the Western Balkans and Central Europe?
Answer. INL programs play an important role in directly countering Russian interference in Ukraine, the Western Balkans, and in Central Europe. Crime and corruption create conditions, such as lack of confidence in government institutions, which Russia can exploit. INL’s programs help strengthen the ability of law enforcement agencies and justice sector institutions to hold corrupt leaders accountable and to combat corruption and organized crime. INL programming also develop civil society organizations that are more capable of holding governments accountable, thus helping these countries to develop a robust culture of democratic values.

Question 8. What specific programs/activities will you seek to support to this end?

Answer. I believe the United States can and should play a role in enhancing our partners’ resilience against Russia’s efforts to undermine their democratic processes. If confirmed, I will support the continuation of INL programs in Europe and Eurasia, which build the capacity of partner nations’ law enforcement and judicial sectors to fight against transnational organized crime, including through the development of core and advanced law enforcement competencies such as anti-money laundering and asset forfeiture. I will also support the continuation of INL’s work to strengthen border security in countries such as Ukraine to protect their sovereign territorial integrity against direct Russian aggression. Globally, I will support cybercrime programs to help countries better defend themselves against Russian-sponsored cyber criminals.

Question 9. How will you support the objectives of these programs with diplomacy and engagement in the interagency policy process to develop effective strategies to counter Kremlin aggression?

Answer. Russia has shown through its actions that it rejects the post-Cold War order. Its aggression in Ukraine, and earlier in Georgia, is the most obvious demonstration that Moscow is willing to undermine norms within the existing international system. Russia’s efforts have extended beyond traditional military campaigns to encompass a suite of “hybrid” tools that are used to gain influence. Russia’s campaign is aggressive, coordinated, and involves a whole-of-government approach. Among other tactics, Moscow exploits countries’ weak judicial sectors, fueling instability through corruption and organized crime, and supports domestic, often extremist, political parties.

Russian efforts to undermine stability and democratic institutions are unacceptable and require a whole-of-government response. If confirmed, I will ensure INL works collaboratively with U.S. interagency partners and with our allies to deter and defend against these activities at home and abroad. I will support our combined diplomatic, foreign assistance, intelligence, and law enforcement lines of effort to roll back Russian influence.

Question 10. The U.S. financial system faces challenges globally from financial crimes, money laundering and transnational organized crimes. What is your assessment of the importance of INL’s work to combat international financial crimes and money laundering?

Answer. INL has a key role in combating financial crimes and money laundering globally by strengthening our foreign partners’ ability to enforce laws consistent with international standards and good practices. This work involves ensuring that partner nations have institutions and personnel in place with the skills and tools to prevent, investigate, and prosecute financial crimes and money laundering. I have long believed that preventing and combating international financial crime and money laundering is vital to protecting U.S. markets and interests. If confirmed, I will support INL’s continued efforts to exert diplomatic pressure and support partner nations to follow the money trail left by criminal actors, including their increasing use of cryptocurrencies for illicit means.

Question 11. How will you work with inter-agency stakeholders to strengthen INL’s cooperation programs with our international partners in order to expand efforts to combat financial crimes and money laundering?

Answer. Preventing and combating international financial crime and money laundering is vital to protecting U.S. markets and security. If confirmed, I will work with my interagency counterparts on this critical whole-of-government effort. I understand that INL already partners with interagency stakeholders in the Department of Treasury, Department of Homeland Security, and Department of Justice to provide technical assistance to our international partners. In fact, while with the U.S. Coast Guard I saw firsthand how effectively INL taps into inter-agency capabilities to strengthen partnerships around the world. These bilateral programs provide regulators, financial intelligence units, law enforcement, prosecutors, and judges with the skills and tools necessary to counter financial crimes and bring the perpetrators of financial crimes, including transnational criminal organizations, justice. INL also supports regional anti-money laundering efforts at its International Law Enforcement Academies, which rely on interagency expertise for leadership and instruction on these topics. If confirmed, I will support this assistance and its reliance on the deep expertise of INL’s interagency partners.

Question 12. If confirmed, how will you make anti-corruption programs a priority?

Answer. Corruption facilitates transnational crime and undermines economic growth. If confirmed, I will prioritize anti-corruption programming in three areas: improving a country’s ability to impose consequences for corruption by strengthening laws and building law enforcement capacity; strengthening prevention of corruption through advice and training on measures that build cultures of integrity and mitigates risk; and supporting civil society to build external pressure for reform and to provide oversight and accountability.

Question 13. How will you work to strengthen INL anti-corruption programs?

Answer. I understand that INL’s anti-corruption efforts fall into three main areas: capacity building programs, visa sanctions, and multilateral policy. If confirmed, I will support continued engagement in all of these areas and strengthen INL’s regional efforts to build foreign law enforcement capacity to manage complex, transnational issues like asset recovery and foreign bribery to facilitate international legal cooperation. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Department’s anti-corruption visa tools are actively used to further our anti-corruption foreign assistance objectives. Finally, I will encourage INL to leverage international treaties, such as the U.N. Convention against Corruption (UNCAC), to build political will for reform in the region, and help target our work within each country.

Question 14. INL has increasingly been willing to privately use visa denials and revocations as a tool to deter corruption; will you continue and expand these efforts?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will support continuing and expanding efforts to implement corruption-related visa denial and revocation authorities, including Presidential Proclamation 7750 and Section 7031c of the Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2018, as well as the corruption prong of Global Magnitsky. I view these authorities as valuable measures in preventing and combating public corruption, and as complementary to the range of other State Department tools. Continued enforcement of sanctions and visa denial tools helps impose consequences on corrupt foreign officials and deters others from committing corrupt acts.

Question 15. Despite having a strong partnership with the Colombian Government in combatting drug trafficking, we have seen a worrisome growth of coca cultivation in Colombia since 2013. It is clear that developing a permanent counternarcotics strategy is complicated and requires a comprehensive approach that equally prioritizes eradication, destruction of cocaine laboratories, interdiction of drug trafficking shipments, the arrest of traffickers, efforts to combat financial crimes and money laundering, and robust programs to consolidate the rule of law and democratic governance, as well as a sustained strategy to advance economic development and provide licit economic opportunities. Do you commit to working with our Colombian partners to advance a comprehensive strategy that combats all elements of the illicit narcotics trade?

Answer. Colombia has been one of our most important partners in the fight against transnational organized crime, narco-trafficking and terrorism in the Americas, but I share your alarm regarding the steady and significant growth in Colombian coca cultivation and cocaine production. I understand that at the U.S.-Colombia High-Level Dialogue (HLD) on March 1, the United States and Colombia agreed to expand counternarcotics cooperation over the next five years, with the shared goal of reducing Colombia’s estimated cocaine production and coca cultivation to 50 percent of current levels by 2023. If confirmed, I will prioritize work with Colombia to ensure continued progress in reducing coca cultivation and the production of cocaine as agreed to at the HLD, including through enhanced eradication, interdiction, alternative development, and operations to dismantle narco-trafficking organizations. Given the near-term presidential elections in Colombia, if confirmed, my goal will be to have robust and early engagement on these issues with the new administration there.

Question 16. What do you plan to do to address some of the broader problems that are complicating our counternarcotic efforts in Colombia like a lack of state presence in vulnerable regions of Colombia and a dearth of viable economic opportunities?

Answer. Making significant progress on expanding the presence of security and civilian agencies to vulnerable regions of Colombia is essential to Colombia’s ability to reverse growth in coca cultivation and cocaine production and to continuing to improve security and governance more broadly. U.S. assistance plays a key role in supporting this effort. The United States, through INL and others, currently works in Colombia with all levels of government, the armed forces, and the private sector to extend government presence, confront illegality, and encourage licit, sustainable development. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Colombian Government to support the expansion of capable government services, security, and economic opportunities throughout the country.

Question 17. Do you commit to working in partnership with USAID to expanding and strengthening alternative development programs in Colombia?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to working in close partnership with USAID to ensure alternative development efforts are closely linked with supply reduction efforts to sustainably reduce illicit cultivation and production in rural areas. Developing licit livelihoods is a critical part of a whole-of-government approach to combating coca cultivation and cocaine production in Colombia.

Question 18. Do you commit to work with the U.S. Departments of the Treasury and Justice to prioritize combating financial crimes as part of our engagement with Colombia, including increasing money laundering prosecutions and asset forfeiture cases?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the U.S. Departments of the Treasury and Justice to prioritize efforts to combat financial crimes. I commit to sustaining and advancing the State Department’s ongoing efforts to train and mentor Colombian judicial officials and money laundering investigators to expand their institutional capacity to combat money laundering, increase asset forfeiture proceedings, build networks with international counterparts, and successfully prosecute illicit finance cases.

Question 19. How do you plan to work with our partners in Colombia to more aggressively target financial crimes?

Answer. Colombia is an essential partner in the fight against financial crimes, which fuel narco-trafficking and other forms of illicit activity in the Americas. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s efforts to build Colombia’s capacity to combat money laundering and other financial crimes, pursue forfeiture, and effectively manage seized assets in order to target criminal networks and crucial business facilitators, with the goal of disrupting and dismantling their organizations. I will also encourage continued collaboration between the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, and the U.S. interagency to target the financial crimes of Colombia-based criminal organizations.

Question 20. The Department of State’s 2017 International Narcotics Control Strategy Report on Money Laundering and Financial Crimes identifies 19 Caribbean countries on the “Major Money Laundering” list. As highlighted by the report, these countries act as transit hubs for illicit drugs, arms, and money. It is clear that these countries lack the institutional capacity to combat drug trafficking and associated crimes like money laundering. How will you help build law enforcement capacity throughout the Caribbean to reduce drug trafficking and money laundering?

Answer. I understand that reducing drug trafficking and money laundering throughout the Caribbean are key goals of INL programs under the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative (CBSI), which builds law enforcement and counternarcotics capacity and promotes criminal justice sector reform throughout the Caribbean. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing the work of CBSI counternarcotics programs to build partner countries’ ability to detect and disrupt transnational organized crime, including money laundering and arms and narcotics trafficking. If confirmed, I will also continue to support INL’s CBSI financial crimes and money laundering programs, which build partner countries’ capacity to prevent and disrupt financial crimes through training and advising on the implementation of regulations to address money laundering, and through the provision of equipment and training for financial crimes investigators.

Question 21. Haiti is one of the largest single-country INL programs in the Western Hemisphere, and it also struggles with extremely high-level of corruption. How do you ensure our foreign assistance is appropriately spent to advance U.S. interests?

Answer. I support all efforts to ensure U.S. foreign assistance is appropriately spent in any country in which INL works, and if confirmed, I look forward to learning more about INL’s assistance in Haiti to build the capacity of the Haitian National Police (HNP).

I understand that INL’s programming in Haiti is implemented and overseen directly by INL personnel at Embassy Port-au-Prince and that no INL funds are provided directly to the Government of Haiti. INL ensures proper monitoring and oversight of these programs through field-based contracting personnel, regular reporting from its implementers, and ongoing monitoring by INL. If confirmed, I will ensure INL continues to maintain strong oversight of this and all its other programs.

Question 22. Haiti is one of the largest single-country INL programs in the Western Hemisphere, and it also struggles with extremely high-level of corruption. How do our programs address the systemic corruption problem in Haiti?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to being fully briefed on INL's efforts to address corruption and accountability in Haiti, which is a core focus of INL's work with the Haitian National Police (HNP). INL helped stand up the HNP Office of the Inspector General (IG), which vetted hundreds of officer files, recommended the dismissal of hundreds of personnel for misconduct, established a public complaint hotline, and instituted a one-year probationary period for new HNP officers. INL-funded subject matter experts work in the office of the HNP Director General and IG office to support accountability and transparency within the HNP administration. INL also supports the U.N.'s Mission for Justice Support in Haiti (MINUJUSTH) with six U.S. advisors working in the U.N. Police mission (UNPOLs), focusing on rule of law, human rights, and capacity building for the HNP.

Question 23. The Obama administration designated more than 10 senior Venezuelan officials under Kingpin sanctions and the Trump administration designated the current Vice President of Venezuela under Kingpin sanctions. Given INL's role in international narcotics issues, will you work through the inter-agency process to ensure that the U.S. Government utilizes Kingpin sanctions thoroughly and effectively in Venezuela?

Answer. The Kingpin Act is an effective sanctions tool against foreign narcotics traffickers and their organizations operating worldwide. If confirmed, I will prioritize the State Department's participation in the interagency process, led by the Department of the Treasury, to implement the Kingpin Act, including, as appropriate, in Venezuela.

Question 24. Independent analysts have contended that successive administrations' funding for democracy and governance programs for Africa has not been sufficiently robust. INL plays an important role in strengthening anti-corruption, transparency, and rule of law; and yet, the administration's FY 2019 request for funds to support INL activities represent a 37 percent decrease from FY 2017. How effective can we be with such limited funding?

Answer. The administration's FY 2019 budget request supports the President's commitments to make the U.S. Government more efficient by streamlining efforts to ensure the effectiveness of U.S. taxpayer dollars. I support the administration's budget request for INL, which includes programming for anti-corruption, transparency, and rule of law work in Africa.

If confirmed, I will direct INL to continue to prioritize programming in countries where U.S. national security interests are highest, where political will is high and assistance can be absorbed, and where assistance can have a demonstrable impact.

Question 25. What steps will you take to prioritize this works amidst competing global priorities?

Answer. To prioritize programming in Africa amidst competing global priorities, I believe that INL must continue to ensure the country or issue aligns with U.S. national security interests and considers factors such as the willingness of partners to commit to criminal justice and security reform, the expertise that INL can bring, the logistical and security environment, and contributions from other donors. If confirmed, as I noted in my hearing, I intend to make the strongest possible case for INL programs and their contribution to the security of our country in the internal budget processes, including those INL programs in Africa. INL will make efficient use of resources in Africa by targeting assistance to where the highest impact can be made, partnerships with donors can be strengthened, and existing platforms can be used.

Question 26. A peaceful future for Afghanistan can only be achieved if police forces there are able to effectively and professionally ensure civilian security. This will require tackling pervasive corruption and reports of human rights abuses by police forces, including the sexual abuse and exploitation of boys. What do you see as the appropriate role for INL in this regard, and how will you work, if confirmed, to promote accountable, effective civilian security forces and the rule of law in Afghanistan to undercut the appeal of the Taliban's own version of justice delivery?

Answer. Promoting the rule of law is a core component of INL's mission in Afghanistan.
To my understanding, INL no longer manages a policing program in Afghanistan, but does provide small-scale capacity-building support to the Ministry of Interior to better investigate criminal cases, particularly in the areas of narcotics, corruption, and national security. In line with the President’s South Asia strategy, INL also supports targeted governance reforms in justice sector ministries to address corruption and improve service delivery to the Afghan people.

As a component of its justice sector assistance, I understand that INL contributed to the passage of Afghan legislation to criminalize the sexual abuse and exploitation of boys. If confirmed, I will press the Afghan Government to implement the legislation fully, while ensuring that INL continues to work with the Afghan Government to advance the rule of law through effective justice sector institutions. This will be a long-term effort, but I believe the Afghan Government can make strides forward with continued U.S. assistance and engagement.

Question 27. What role do you see for INL in promoting transitional justice and accountability for wartime atrocities in Sri Lanka, to the extent that such crimes are to be addressed in the context of the country’s own judicial system?

Answer. I understand that INL’s efforts in Sri Lanka are focused on enhancing the ability of anti-corruption authorities to investigate and prosecute public corruption, supporting the implementation of the country’s Assistance to and Protection of Victims of Crime and Witnesses Act, and providing assistance for victims of sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV). This work supports accountability for wartime crimes because victims of the conflict are among the assistance recipients. It also builds institutional capacity to protect victims and witnesses of crime from coercion. INL is one of several entities working to improve capacities in the Sri Lanka justice sector, including addressing wartime atrocities. If confirmed, I will consult with them on what more INL specifically can do to address gaps in this important area.

Question 28. What role do you see for INL in supporting civilian security, rule of law, and respect for human rights in Pakistan, particularly areas such as the FATA, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, southern Punjab, and Karachi where societal tensions, criminality, and violent extremism are particularly acute?

Answer. It is my understanding that INL assistance supports Pakistan’s efforts to combat violent extremism, criminality, and sectarian violence in all of its provinces. If confirmed, I will continue INL’s work to develop and professionalize its police, prosecutors, and judges as Pakistan expands civilian policing and criminal justice into previously ungoverned areas. I understand that INL has already worked with Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province to establish a police academy that has graduated over 4,000 police to support civilian control and stabilization of a region that has historically harbored violent extremists. In Sindh and Punjab provinces, INL has worked with officials to incorporate a human rights curriculum into its law enforcement training, support women police and gender justice programs, and upgrade investigative capabilities and forensics that have been credited with reducing Karachi’s crime rate.

Question 29. What scope do you see to work with provincial level authorities and with Pakistani civil society groups to these ends?

Answer. I believe INL is uniquely positioned to have an impact in Pakistan because of its long-standing, excellent, and direct working relationships with provincial-level partners in Pakistan’s four provinces. For example, I understand that INL’s project to build model police stations across Khyber Pakhtunwala Province also builds ties between the provincial police and civil society groups that provide legal aid services to women and children. If confirmed, I will continue INL’s close consultations with provincial authorities and civil society groups to ensure our assistance is effective and welcome in Pakistan.

Question 30. What do you see as the appropriate relationship between INL and other bureaus/offices at State with equities in the rule of law and accountability space, such as DRL and GCJ?

Answer. I know from my previous service in the Bureau for Western Hemisphere Affairs that, if you want to maximize your effectiveness and impact, it is important to draw upon all available expertise and best practices to contribute to the Department of State’s goal of delivering effective assistance focused on the rule of law and accountability. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with DRL and GCJ, particularly on how State should approach human rights, transitional justice, and accountability in the context of criminal justice assistance.

Question 31. What will you do to foster constructive relationships with these bureaus/offices, if confirmed?
Response to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Kirsten Dawn Madison by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, human rights and democracy issues have been part of my work. I believe that both are essential components of American international leadership. If I had to choose some specific moments in my career, I would highlight: 1) A letter to the Guatemalan Government insisting that they take action in the investigation of the murder of a clergyman that Senator Leahy's staff and I drafted for Senators Helms and Leahy. The Guatemalans understood the bipartisan message: the U.S. Senate expected their attention to the investigation. To my knowledge, these two Senators never did a human rights initiative together before or after that one. 2) The work I did at the NSC, along with a host of talented people from across the inter-agency, to keep Haiti from teetering over the precipice in 2004. Together, we ensured that the United States was able to effectively exercise its leadership in the U.N. and with other international partners to forestall a civil war in Haiti, to secure international support for an initial stabilization force and a follow-on Peacekeeping Mission, to help establish an interim government, and to support a process in which the Haitians were able to pivot back to Constitutional order and begin to rebuild. 3) Not once, but twice, the challenging diplomacy my then State Department colleague Caleb McCarry (then the Cuba Transition Coordinator) and I did to help persuade the EU to maintain its common human rights policy on Cuba. With all of the rancor among our European counterparts about the tools of American foreign policy, we were still able to make the case that there was no distance between us on the question of the Cuban people and their democratic aspirations. It came at a critical moment, when the Cuban people truly needed international solidarity.

Answer. At the USCG, I had an opportunity to contribute to a larger institutional effort to improve diversity and saw, first hand, that it took engaged leadership at all levels to make progress. I understand that the State Department has a strategic plan for diversity and inclusion that contains tools and resources for managers including a formal mentoring program on both the foreign and civil service sides, career counseling, and specific efforts to help create career paths in both the foreign and civil service segments of the Department's workforce. In addition to tapping into these formal programs, if confirmed, I will look for appropriate opportunities to support recruitment efforts, as this is where the general trends for the agency's personnel pool are established. There is fierce competition for talented officers and civil servants during bidding season or when there is a civil service position available, so I believe that for the bureau to be successful, it is critical for INL to be seen as a welcoming and career enhancing place to work for any and all talented officers and civil servants. Diversity and inclusion can play an important role in achieving this objective. In addition, if confirmed, it will be essential that I set an expectation that my senior leaders think about how to enhance the work of the bureau by bringing in team members who bring different backgrounds, talents, and experiences to the table and then drawing them into the policy and program development that is the daily work of INL. The requirement that supervisors and managers have annual EEO/Diversity Awareness Training is an important part of this process.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. As noted above, if confirmed, it will be my goal to set clear expectations that managers and leaders take responsibility for ensuring that the bureau is welcoming to foreign service officers and civil servants of all backgrounds who wish to serve and that all team members are treated appropriately. As part of this, I think it is essential to underscore the value of thinking about how the diversity of the team, their backgrounds and experiences, can bring different strengths to bureau's work and that the onus is on every supervisor to ensure that the organization benefits from these strengths. Again, the tools available under the Department's strategic plan, including the annual training requirement for supervisors and managers, are important opportunities to educate the management team and improve their leadership capabilities.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. Other than investments in the international mutual funds and exchange traded funds disclosed on the SF-278, my husband and I have no financial interests to include business, real estate, or financial instruments in any country abroad. To the best of my knowledge, no immediate family member does either.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIRSTEN DAWBN MADISON BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. In your prepared remarks, you note that in previous positions you have worked to address the issue of illegal fishing. The Center for Strategic and International Studies published a report last November entitled, "Illegal, Unreported, and Unregulated Fishing as a National Security Threat." Have you reviewed this report? If you have, can you speak to the issue of illegal fishing, and what the U.S. can and should do about it? If you haven't, will you review it? If confirmed, will you work with me on this issue?

Answer. I look forward to working with you on illegal and unregulated fishing issues. I have read the report and some of the other good work that CSIS has done on maritime issues. The United States is a leader on global maritime issues, recognizing that international cooperation on issues like fisheries enforcement, non-proliferation initiatives, and counter-piracy operations is essential to protecting our nation, the sea itself, and those who operate in the maritime domain. As the Director of International Affairs and the Foreign Policy Advisor to the Commandant (U.S. Coast Guard), I came to appreciate how illegal fishing and other maritime crimes connect to our national security. Not only can illegal fishing undermine the prospects for long-term prosperity in many countries, it also represents a threat to maritime rule of law and is part of the stream of transnational criminal use of the maritime domain for nefarious purposes.

As with most transnational issues, the United States is engaged multilaterally to build frameworks for cooperation. One of the key U.S. objectives to combat IUU fishing is to support the adoption and implementation of the Port State Measures Agreement to Prevent, Deter and Eliminate Illegal, Unreported and Unregulated Fishing (PSMA). INL supports this effort with technical assistance to five PSMA signatory countries in the Caribbean and Central America. More broadly, INL programs strengthen legislative frameworks, build investigative and enforcement functions, enhance prosecutorial and judicial capacity, and develop regional cooperation to increase their effectiveness. INL offers a course on effectively monitoring, enforcing, and prosecuting fisheries violations through its International Law Enforcement Academies (ILEA) and has also funded a global network analysis and mapping of IUU fishing.

At the USCG, my team worked with the State Department to strengthen the network of maritime enforcement cooperation agreements on illegal fishing and other threats. For example, under ship-rider agreements, the USCG is able to cross deck enforcement officials from other countries, extending their law enforcement authority to cover U.S. operations. The U.S. currently has such agreements with 16 countries (including China) in the Pacific and off the coast of Western Africa. INL is supporting the effort to bring this program to other nations through an interagency agreement with the USCG.

If confirmed, I look forward to being part of a larger conversation with you on this issue that draws in the Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs (OES) and other critical players including the USCG, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA), and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS).

Question 2. In October 2017, the Justice Department announced indictments of two Chinese nationals for separate alleged conspiracies to manufacture and distribute large quantities of fentanyl and other opiates in the United States. During President Trump’s November 2017 visit, China further committed to regulate two fentanyl precursor chemicals and to discuss regulating fentanyl and all its analogues as a broad class of drugs. Is China fully honoring that commitment?

Answer. It is my understanding that since 2015, we have had good counter-narcotics cooperation with China, but there is more work to be done. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you on this element of the opioids epidemic. China has domestically controlled 143 synthetic substances, including carfentanil and nine other fentanyl analogues at our request. Five of those substances have been controlled since the President’s November 2017 meeting with President Xi. I am told that it will likely take at least a calendar year for China to take the necessary steps on domestic legislation to control fentanyl analogues as a class. One of my priorities, if confirmed, will be to work with Ambassador Branstad to press the Chinese to do more on this issue, including through chairing the the U.S.-China Joint Liaison Group on Law Enforcement and Cybersecurity Cooperation.

Question 3. Hizballah possesses a formidable arsenal of missiles and represents a grave threat to our ally Israel. Hizballah also is helping to prop up Assad in Syria. I understand that the State Department, through the bureau you are nominated to lead (INL), trains Lebanese law enforcement on issues related to counter-terrorism, anti-extremism, and anti-narcotics trafficking. Are you aware of this program? What is your assessment of the program? What results has this program yielded with respect to Lebanese law enforcement agencies going after Hizballah?

Answer. Yes, I am aware of the INL program, which provides basic and specialized training for more than two-thirds of Lebanon’s Internal Security Force (ISF). If confirmed, I look forward to being fully briefed on the program and its results. Generally, I understand that INL’s programming since 2006 targets an increase in the capabilities and professionalism of the ISF, Lebanon’s national police force, and expanding the ISF’s abilities to deter criminal and terrorist activity, as well as respond to citizens’ concerns. Last year, the ISF raided several terrorist cells and arrested suspected operatives or facilitators, including in August 2017 when they assisted in foiling a large ISIS operation aiming to blow up a civilian airliner in Australia.

With regard to your question about Hizballah, I understand that part of the administration’s strategy to push back on Hizballah inside Lebanon is to build up legitimate state institutions such as the ISF. A strong, capable and credible state will be better able to undercut Hizballah’s influence and false narrative for maintaining its arms. INL’s support for improving the professionalism of the ISF is vital to strengthening the credibility and legitimacy of Lebanese state institutions, combating internal threats and terrorists, undermining Hizballah’s influence in internal security, and bolstering Lebanon’s stability.

Question 4. What international best practices related to the opioid crisis do you believe could improve U.S. policy if adopted?

Answer. Drug trafficking networks are agile and if governments are to be successful in combatting them, we need to work together to develop innovative, nimble approaches and share our lessons learned and best practices. I understand this work is already underway. For example, after the Canadians shared that they had developed canines capable of detecting fentanyl, the United States was able to utilize this new tool and ultimately export it to Mexico as well.

If confirmed, I am committed to identifying international best practices and working with interagency partners to identify opportunities for implementation. The use of the Darknet and cryptocurrencies in opioid trafficking are areas that would seem ripe for further cooperative learning. I also understand that the European Union recently published legislation to accelerate assessment and control of new psychoactive substances (NPS), including synthetic opioids, which enables a more nimble response—this might be an approach we could draw upon domestically.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIRSTEN DAWN MADISON BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Ms. Madison, as I mentioned during our meeting, I remain very concerned about the administration’s steep proposed budget cuts to FY 2019 programs that the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs administers to combat the production and trafficking of fentanyl and other drugs. Fentanyl was present in more than 80 percent of the almost 2,000 opioid overdose deaths in my state of Massachusetts last year. This deadly synthetic opioid is being trafficked into the United States principally from China and Mexico through the mail and consignment carriers. Given its potency, small amounts go a long way, so we’re talking about easily concealable shipments, not bulk quantities, making it difficult to identify and interdict. How will the administration’s budget cuts to the State Department and INL, in particular, affect INL’s ability to combat the production of fentanyl abroad and its trafficking into the United States? What is your strategy for stopping the flow of fentanyl into the United States and how do you intend to implement it? Will you commit to raising the fentanyl issue with China and Mexico, press them to crack down, and pledge our cooperation?

Answer. If confirmed, one of my top priorities for the bureau will be reducing the flow of heroin, fentanyl, and other synthetic opioids from abroad. I understand INL formulated its fiscal year (FY) 2019 budget request to focus resources on priorities articulated by the administration, prioritizing combating the opioid epidemic. Despite a reduced topline in the FY 2019 request for International Narcotics Control and Law Enforcement (INCLE) funding, INL has increased funding for countering opioids by focusing on programming that can directly help reduce the flow of heroin and fentanyl to the United States. If confirmed, I promise to prioritize funding for this critical need and work within the Department budget process to advocate for the resources needed to combat the flow of synthetic opioids.

INL programs aim to reduce the supply of illicit opioids and strengthen global controls on synthetic drugs and their precursor chemicals. If confirmed, I will ensure that INL continues to work with key source countries like Mexico and China to crack down on the production and trafficking of heroin and illicit fentanyl. I will also engage these countries vigorously through existing platforms such as the Joint Liaison Group with China and the North American Drug Dialogue as well as pursue opportunities to work through multilateral fora to increase international cooperation.

If confirmed, I will ensure that INL also continues to support critical efforts to increase information sharing on the trafficking and use of opioids, as well as real-time cooperation among law enforcement officials. This includes exploring the links among cryptocurrencies, the Dark Web, and traffickers, as well as interventions to address them. I will also seek enhanced collaboration with the Universal Postal Union to expand international capacities to detect and interdict fentanyl and other dangerous drugs trafficked by international mail.

Question 2. Ms. Madison, the President has refused to criticize the Duterte Government’s use of extrajudicial killings that have resulted in the deaths of at least 8,000 Filipino drug users and low-level drug dealers. Will you commit to ensuring that U.S. Government assistance, programmed through INL, will not be used by murderous regimes as a tool of repression?

Answer. Yes. I understand that INL re-evaluated its programs in the Philippines in 2016 due to concerns over reports of extrajudicial killings (EJKs) associated with the drug war and, as a result, refocused assistance efforts to drug demand reduction, rule of law, maritime law enforcement, and limited police training with an emphasis on human rights. If confirmed, I will continue a cautious approach and closely monitor developments related to the drug war and EJKs of suspected drug offenders. I will also ensure that INL continues to abide by Leahy vetting rules, which prevent security force personnel and units credibly alleged to have been involved in a gross human rights violation, including an EJK, from receiving U.S. assistance.

Question 3. In the 2017 International Narcotics Control Strategy Report, the State Department wrote, "The United States recognizes the [Philippine Government's] commitment to fighting drugs, but is concerned that the Philippine Government's approach raises significant concerns relating to human rights and due process." But INL's 2018 report, in contrast to the 2017 report, glosses over these concerns and the brutality of Duterte's War on Drugs by merely mentioning that "There has been controversy over the conduct of the campaign, with accusations of vigilante killings and 'extra-judicial killings' allegedly conducted by law enforcement, coupled with denials from the Philippine Government officials." Do you believe that this description of "controversy over the conduct" of Duterte's brutal campaign accurately reflects U.S. values?

Answer. I share your serious concerns regarding the large number of extrajudicial killings associated with the drug war in the Philippines. If confirmed, I will continue ongoing efforts to urge our Philippines partners to conduct thorough and transparent investigations into reports of extrajudicial killings, hold perpetrators accountable, and ensure that all investigative and enforcement efforts uphold the rule of law. I will also support INL programs that improve drug prevention, treatment, and rehabilitation services; strengthen respect for human rights; and build capacity of the justice sector to handle criminal cases transparently, effectively, and efficiently. If confirmed, I also promise to take a close look at the language in next year's International Narcotics Control Strategy Report in consideration of your question.

Question 4. Ms. Madison, the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs has worked to encourage its partners abroad to combat bias-motivated violence on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity in its work with police agencies and law enforcement officials. These have been particularly important in countries where the police perpetrate violence absent accountability. Law enforcement fails to document or prosecute human rights violations. In El Salvador, for example, the concept of hate crimes was introduced into the penal code in 2015, but the law enforcement system—including police and the judiciary—have yet to document these crimes. Furthermore, in many countries, carrying HIV prevention commodities or anti-retroviral is used as a pretext to arrest people who are LGBTI on citations of prostitution. How do you intend on working within the Bureau to add a human rights lens to policing and law enforcement in your role?

Answer. A focus on human rights is an integral part of modern community policing and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will continue INL’s global work in this area. I understand INL has agreements with U.S. municipal police agencies to work directly with our partner countries to develop outreach measures, such as specially trained liaison offices within police departments to build trust with diverse communities and promote information sharing to help police protect human and civil rights of citizens. In addition, I understand INL’s International Law Enforcement Academy (ILEA) instructors incorporate human rights into their curricula globally, including at the ILEA in San Salvador.

Question 5. The Bureau of International Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, through its guide to gender in the Criminal Justice System, has produced a blue-print for law enforcement officer training that promotes gender integration in the criminal justice system, and integrating gender into INL project design and implementation. Will you commit to continuing to integrate gender into INL’s law enforcement training and project design? Will you commit to ensuring that the recipients of INL’s programming, both police and prosecutors, have additional and sensitivity training so that they can successfully investigate and prosecute sexual and gender-based violence?

Answer. Yes. Women play a key role in fighting crime and they contribute to a more effective criminal justice system. If confirmed, increasing the participation of women in policing and other criminal justice professions and implementing programming that supports accountability for sexual and gender-based violence will remain a priority. For example, I commit to continuing incorporating women’s perspectives into INL’s assessments of partner nation criminal justice systems to inform project design, the inclusion of promoting women in criminal justice professions as part of pre-deployment training for INL advisors deploying overseas, and activities aimed at increasing the participation of women police in peacekeeping.

I also commit to continuing training through INL’s International Law Enforcement Academies (ILEAs), which already offer nearly 30 specialized courses around the world each year in women’s leadership, combating sexual and gender-based violence, and trafficking in persons. INL’s interagency and partner law enforcement agencies train participants in modern approaches to investigating and prosecuting sexual and gender-based crimes, such as good practices in interviewing victims and collecting forensic evidence.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO THOMAS J. HUSHEK BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What tangible progress has the High Level Revitalization Forum made in ending the conflict in South Sudan? What do we expect to be achieved during the next round of meetings scheduled for later this month? Hostilities are ongoing. If there is no significant progress towards achieving a cessation of hostilities, and no firm agreement on implementation of the peace agreement as a result of the next meeting, will the administration continue to support the Forum?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting U.S. diplomatic efforts to seek a peaceful South Sudan governed by an inclusive and legitimate government that respects the rights of its people. The United States is working with its Troika partners (Norway and the United Kingdom), the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), the African Union (AU), the EU, and the United Nations to press the Government of South Sudan and other parties to the conflict to reach a negotiated political settlement through the IGAD-led High-Level Revitalization Forum (HLRF). HLRF convened in December 2017 and February 2018. In December, the parties to the conflict in South Sudan signed the Agreement on Cessation of Hostilities, Protection of Civilians, and Humanitarian Access. Although there have already been violations of that agreement, the United States continues to press the parties to fully implement their commitment to stop fighting and work in good faith for peace. The United States is making clear to the warring parties that the U.S. Government—both unilaterally and in coordination with international partners—will hold accountable those who threaten the peace, security, or stability of South Sudan. The United States is urging IGAD and AU action to impose consequences on those working against peace. While useful dialogue has taken place, there is much more for the parties to do if the HLRF is to make meaningful and sustainable progress towards peace. The United States is encouraging the Government of South Sudan and the opposition at the next meeting of the Forum to update governance and security arrangements, in order to remedy the failures of the 2015 peace agreement (The Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan, or ARCSS). If the Forum fails to achieve its objectives, the United States and others will have to re-assess the most promising mechanisms to pursue a negotiated peace for South Sudan.

Question 2. What next steps will the administration take to try to foster a diplomatic solution to the conflict, and what is your role in such efforts? How will the absence of a confirmed Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs impact U.S. efforts to achieve a sustainable peace?

Answer. The United States is fully engaged on South Sudan. The U.S. Government remains dedicated to working with regional and international partners to press South Sudan’s leaders to end the current conflict that is driving the humanitarian crisis and build the foundation for a peaceful future. The United States is working with its Troika partners (Norway and the United Kingdom), the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), the African Union (AU), the EU, and the United Nations to press the parties the conflict, including the Government of South Sudan, to reach a negotiated political settlement through the IGAD-led High-Level Revitalization Forum (HLRF). The State Department, other agencies in Washington, the U.S. embassy in Juba, and other U.S. embassies in east Africa carefully coordinate on a daily basis our engagement with regional and international partners to advance the peace process in South Sudan.

The leadership of the State Department’s Bureau of African Affairs is fully engaged in working to find a diplomatic solution to the crisis in South Sudan. The United States has the largest diplomatic mission in South Sudan. The U.S. embassy plays an important role in sharing information and coordinating responses to developments. If confirmed, I will engage the Government of South Sudan to end the conflict, advocate for unhindered humanitarian access and aid-worker safety, and promote human rights, democratic governance, and accountability. I will also focus directly engaging with the people of South Sudan to reinforce that the United States is a friend and partner to the South Sudanese people, and will be in the future. This local engagement in South Sudan will also foster key civil society actors and organizations who might play an active peace-building role in the current talks or in future discussions.

Question 3. The Government of South Sudan has indicated that it plans to hold elections by the end of the year with or without a peace agreement. What is the U.S. position on the advisability of holding elections? Would any elections be seen as legitimate?

Answer. The United States has made clear that only a negotiated agreement will be acceptable as a means to extend the term of the Government of South Sudan. We are encouraging our regional and international partners to condemn any unilateral effort by the Government of South Sudan to extend its mandate through a premature election, legislative action, or other means.

Widespread violence, displacement, and severe food insecurity in South Sudan renders any discussion of elections in the foreseeable future an unnecessary diversion from the primary goals of achieving peace and reconciliation. If confirmed, I will press South Sudan’s leaders to first focus on achieving peace in order to create the conditions needed to hold credible elections.

A key goal for the High-Level Revitalization Forum (HLRF) should be monitored, effective security arrangements durable enough to stop the conflict, improve the human rights and humanitarian situation, and support a political process that produces an agreed path to credible elections.

Question 4. What progress has been made towards establishing the Hybrid Court for South Sudan as called for in the 2015 Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in The Republic of South Sudan? What is the United States doing to support accountability until the Court is established? How is the United States supporting reconciliation efforts?

Answer. I understand that the African Union (AU) continues to work with the Government of South Sudan to establish the Hybrid Court for South Sudan (HCSS), but progress has been limited. In August 2017, the AU and technical representatives of the South Sudanese Government drafted legal instruments to facilitate creation of the Court, including a draft South Sudan-AU memorandum of understanding (MOU) and draft statute to domesticate the Court under South Sudanese law. Unfortunately, despite an announcement in February 2018 by First Vice President Taban Deng Gai that the Government of South Sudan was ready to sign the MOU, the Government has not signed it.

The United States calls on the Government of South Sudan to sign the MOU to establish the Hybrid Court immediately. If confirmed, I will support U.S. efforts to press the South Sudanese Government to sign the MOU with the AU, live up to the commitment it made in the 2015 peace agreement, and make the Hybrid Court a reality. The United States also supports efforts to collect and preserve internationally credible evidence and documentation in support of the Court and other transitional justice mechanisms. Atrocity victims in South Sudan have waited too long for justice.

To promote reconciliation, the U.S. Government through USAID is supporting a variety of local- and national-level, people-to-people dialogue and peacebuilding initiatives. These include capacity-building and programmatic support to the South Sudan Council of Churches to implement its Action Plan for Peace, an effort to facilitate dialogues aimed at building trust and resolving disagreements and advocating for peace via radio, the most important medium in South Sudan, and other fora. USAID also supports a wide array of grassroots peace and trauma awareness initiatives at the local level aimed at reducing tensions between and within communities, and building resilience to mitigate further division and foster conditions for future reconciliation.

Question 5. The administration has proposed to eliminate P.L. 480 funds in the Fiscal Year 2019 budget request, and to cut the International Disaster Assistance Account by 14 percent. If enacted, what impact would such cuts have on our humanitarian assistance efforts in South Sudan?

Answer. The United States has traditionally been the largest donor to humanitarian relief efforts in South Sudan and remains committed to the people of South Sudan. If confirmed, I would support continued United States’ leadership in these efforts. All emergency food assistance is requested in FY 2019 through the International Disaster Assistance (IDA) account in favor of a more streamlined and efficient approach that allows the United States to respond to food crises appropriately depending upon the situation on the ground. However, it is imperative that the international community share this burden, and do more to ensure humanitarian crises are appropriately supported.
Question 6. What steps will you take to bring an end to onerous registration fees and other obstacles the Government is putting in place to obstruct the work of those delivering assistance to vulnerable South Sudanese?

Answer. Despite commitments from the Government of South Sudan to improve access, humanitarians continue to face challenges reaching people in need throughout South Sudan. The United States leads the diplomatic community in engaging the Government of South Sudan to remove bureaucratic impediments and obstacles to delivery of humanitarian assistance, pressing for an end to exorbitant taxes and fees, intimidation and attacks on aid workers, and humanitarian access denials. The USAID Disaster Assistance Response Team (DART) regularly tracks the long list of bureaucratic impediments imposed by the Government of South Sudan and their impact on U.S. humanitarian partners.

If confirmed, I will ensure that we closely monitor these fees, taxes, and other obstacles that impede the efficient and effective delivery of humanitarian assistance to the people of South Sudan. I will closely collaborate with other donor governments to exert bilateral and multilateral pressure on the Government and other actors who obstruct humanitarian assistance. The United States will not tolerate efforts by officials from the Government of South Sudan to profit from the presence of humanitarian agencies and their programs in support of conflict-affected populations throughout the country.

Question 7. Have conditions around the Protection of Civilian (POC) site in Juba improved? Are there still instances of sexual and gender-based violence in the environs of the POC site? What metrics are being used to ascertain whether UNMISS has improved its performance in the area of protection of civilians?

Answer. I understand that conditions around the Protection of Civilians (POC) site in Juba have improved since 2016, and look forward to assessing this further if confirmed. UNMISS engages in patrols, including foot patrols, to implement its mandate to protect civilians. UNMISS has also cleared a weapons-free zone around the Juba POC site, which has helped maintain security both inside and outside the site. While there are reports of sexual and gender-based violence in the vicinity of the POC sites, the number of reports has decreased. Sexual-based violence is being perpetrated by all parties to the conflict but especially by the Government-as a weapon of war, according to the U.N. Human Rights Council on South Sudan. The U.N.'s overall data collection effort on sexual and gender-based violence is impeded by under-reporting by the victims themselves, who are often afraid to come forward due to fear of retaliation or stigma. In addition, since arrival of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General in 2017, UNMISS has expanded its presence to areas south of Juba in order to fulfill its protection of civilians mandate. In general, the U.S. seeks implementation of additional U.N.-wide metrics to measure and assess, to agreed-upon standards, the performance of peacekeepers tasked with protection of civilians.

Question 8. In your view, how can the United States better support and enable UNMISS's ability to carry out its mandate to protect civilians?

Answer. As penholder of the U.N. Security Council resolution governing UNMISS, the United States will continue to shape and support a mandate that includes a strong emphasis on protection of civilians, both inside the five Protection of Civilian (PoC) sites and through robust mobile patrols. The most recent mandate renewal, in March 2018, specified that protection of civilians remains the highest priority of the UNMISS peacekeeping forces as it has in the past. It also underscored the need to hold UNMISS peacekeepers to high standards of performance, and established accountability requirements in this regard. If confirmed, I would support U.S. actions to advocate for UNMISS security enhancements to PoC sites, such as: increased patrolling inside each PoC site and more foot patrols around the perimeter and surrounding area, including hot spots identified by the community and night patrols; more frequent and rigorous weapons searches at each PoC site; strategic lighting; improved perimeter barriers at each PoC site; and regularly scheduled patrols accompanying IDPs collecting firewood near each PoC site, which will provide additional protection against sexual and gender-based violence. If confirmed, I will work closely with UNMISS leadership in South Sudan to achieve its important mandate to protect civilians.

Question 9. The Embassy ordered the departure of non-emergency staff after violence erupted in Juba in 2016. Is the Embassy now fully staffed to pre-July 2016 levels with both the Department of State and USAID personnel? If not, what are the remaining obstacles?

Answer. In the aftermath of the July 2016 civil unrest in Juba, Post reduced its then 69-person footprint to a 34-person figure under Ordered Departure status. As the security situation in Juba stabilized, Post gradually returned personnel and currently has a 61-person footprint. The Department regularly assesses security conditions and staffing levels.

Question 10. If confirmed, what steps will you take to advocate that the Government respect media freedoms?

Answer. A free press is indispensable for the healthy functioning of a democracy. Journalists shine a light on abuses and corruption; they counter disinformation and propaganda that spread false narratives. If confirmed, I will promote a free, professional, and independent press in South Sudan. I will speak out against those who would undermine a free press with threats, intimidation, and violence. I will advocate for accountability for those who attack journalists or independent media institutions.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO THOMAS J. HUSHEK BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

U.S. Commitment to Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting and protecting human rights has been a common theme throughout my Foreign Service career. After an academic focus on human rights during my graduate studies at Columbia University, I sought out a posting with the Bureau of Human Rights, Democracy and Labor (DRL) for my initial assignment at the State Department. Likewise, human rights—in particular, civilian security and atrocities prevention—was the focus during my most recent assignment heading the Bureau of Conflict and Stabilization Operations.

Perhaps the most significant impact I made came during my five consecutive years working on Afghanistan during the Taliban period, on the Afghanistan desk in Washington, and as the refugee coordinator based in Islamabad. The Taliban’s oppression of women and girls in Afghanistan had become the major challenge to the international community’s resolve to advance women’s rights. Many advocacy and aid organizations initially took a hard stance opposing any and all assistance to Afghanistan, believing that all aid efforts would help prop up the Taliban regime. From the Afghanistan Desk, I helped make the case for a continuation of a well-coordinated and well-targeted program of humanitarian assistance in order to aid the very Afghan people whose rights were being trampled by the Taliban. We conducted an active program to bring together U.S.-based women’s rights advocates together with humanitarian workers who had spent time on the ground in Afghan communities. Once we set this extended dialogue in motion, we started to see that this cross-fertilization of ideas led human rights advocates to add nuance to their initial all-or-nothing approach, and challenged the humanitarian community to find more effective ways to ensure Afghan women and children directly benefitted from the programming. Eventually a new consensus emerged, which was reflected in unanimous resolutions on the Hill in support of continued efforts to aid Afghanistan’s women, both in terms of human rights advocacy as well as humanitarian programming.

Later, when I transferred to our embassy in Islamabad as the Afghan Refugee Coordinator, I continued to facilitate this active dialogue between the human rights and humanitarian communities, and played a key role as the U.S. representative in the local U.N. and NGO coordinating bodies, designing the most effective interventions possible despite the increasingly oppressive Taliban regime. My visit into parts of Taliban-ruled Afghanistan with two USAID colleagues in early 2001 helped focus U.S. Government attention on a growing food security crisis there. The increased attention to the humanitarian situation—and the knowledge that our assistance could be effectively delivered without propping up the Taliban—helped justify the arrival of USAID staff (on the Pakistani side of the border) and a commitment by the U.S. military following the tragic events of 9/11 that our military response should be planned to facilitate rather than hinder the humanitarian efforts in Afghanistan.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in South Sudan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in South Sudan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?
Answer. The human rights situation in South Sudan is deeply alarming. The most recent report of the Commission on Human Rights in South Sudan detailed serious human rights violations and abuses and concluded they may amount to war crimes and crimes against humanity. It contains chilling accounts of looting and destruction of homes and villages; rape and other forms of sexual and gender-based violence; violence against children; and extrajudicial killings on the basis of ethnicity. The report also underscores that the situation continues to be characterized by impunity.

If confirmed, I will condemn in the strongest possible terms human rights violations and abuses in South Sudan. I will support efforts to help end the crisis, establish a just and enduring peace, and foster national reconciliation. I will work to ensure accountability, including by pressing the Government of South Sudan to sign the Memorandum of Understanding with the African Union to establish the Hybrid Court immediately.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in South Sudan in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. If confirmed, I will face a number of challenges in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in South Sudan. The people of South Sudan have experienced decades of violence, and the continuing conflict will perpetuate the risk of further violence and atrocities. Parties to the conflict, particularly the Government, have committed, and continue to commit, human rights violations and abuses with impunity. The Government of South Sudan has harassed, arbitrarily arrested or detained, and, in some cases, tortured, journalists, human rights defenders, civil society activists, and opposition supporters. Government restriction on freedoms of expression, including for members of the press, and association constrain democratic debate, civic activism, and local voices supporting accountability and justice for violations and abuses of human rights.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in South Sudan? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in South Sudan.

If confirmed, I will monitor post’s practices to pro-actively support the implementation of the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights, in accordance with U.S. law.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with South Sudan to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by South Sudan?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with the Government of South Sudan to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Government.

Question 6. Will you engage with the Government of South Sudan on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will actively engage with South Sudan on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.
Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the South Sudan?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes companies that have a presence in South Sudan. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations. I have consulted with the State Department Ethics Office and will continue to do so, and I will divest my interests in any companies they deem necessary to avoid a conflict of interest.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. In leadership positions, overseas and domestic, I have actively managed training and assignment opportunities for my staff and contributed to recruitment and promotion efforts with an eye toward strengthening and increasing the diversity of the State Department. If confirmed, I will take the same approach at Embassy Juba, ensuring substantive work opportunities are available for the professional growth of all embassy personnel, incorporating training opportunities, and recruiting a diverse array of personnel for embassy positions.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my leadership position at Embassy Juba to foster a diverse and inclusive work environment. I will work with front-line supervisors at post (and, where appropriate, at headquarters or regional offices outside South Sudan) to ensure that diversity, fairness, and respect for EEO principles are central considerations in efforts to recruit for Embassy positions and to assign work responsibilities and provide training opportunities for staff. Recognizing the difficult security conditions at post, which require officers be unaccompanied by family members and which have led to reduction in staffing without a reduction in the workload, I will pay special attention to creating a supportive working and living environment which fosters the health and well-being of all staff. The locally employed staff at the Embassy face particular hardships, including security threats to them and their families, and I will ensure their needs also receive sufficient attention and resources.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO THOMAS J. HURSEK BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. On March 15, the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 2406. This resolution expressed the Security Council's intention to "consider all appropriate measures...against those who take actions that undermine the peace, stability, and security of South Sudan." More specifically, the Resolution expressed the Security Council's "intention to consider all measures, including an arms embargo, as appropriate, to deprive the parties of the means to continue fighting...." On February 2, the United States announced it is restricting the export of arms into South Sudan. Do you support the administration's decision to impose this arms embargo?

Answer. I support the U.S. decision in February 2018 to formally restrict the export of defense articles and defense services into South Sudan in response to the ongoing violence and humanitarian crisis in that country.

Question 3. On March 15, the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 2406. This resolution expressed the Security Council's intention to "consider all appropriate measures...against those who take actions that undermine the peace, stability, and security of South Sudan." More specifically, the Resolution expressed the Security Council's "intention to consider all measures, including an arms embargo, as appropriate, to deprive the parties of the means to continue fighting...." On February 2, the United States announced it is restricting the export of arms into South Sudan. What problems are we seeing with implementation?

Answer. The U.S. decision in February 2018 to formally restrict the export of defense articles and defense services into South Sudan formalized the long-standing U.S. practice of reviewing license applications on a case-by-case basis for all countries, and denying license requests for the export of defense articles and services to South Sudan. I am not aware of any problems in the implementation of this action.
Question 3. On March 15, the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 2406. This resolution expressed the Security Council’s intention to “consider all appropriate measures... against those who take actions that undermine the peace, stability, and security of South Sudan.” More specifically, the Resolution expressed the Security Council’s “intention to consider all measures, including an arms embargo, as appropriate, to deprive the parties of the means to continue fighting....” On February 2, the United States announced it is restricting the export of arms into South Sudan. Do you believe the arms embargo would be more effective if it were multilateral?

Answer. Stopping the flow of arms and ammunition into South Sudan from all countries would slow the violence, protect innocent lives, and encourage the warring parties to compromise rather than continue to use military force to seek political advantage.

Question 4. On March 15, the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 2406. This resolution expressed the Security Council’s intention to “consider all appropriate measures... against those who take actions that undermine the peace, stability, and security of South Sudan.” More specifically, the Resolution expressed the Security Council’s “intention to consider all measures, including an arms embargo, as appropriate, to deprive the parties of the means to continue fighting....” On February 2, the United States announced it is restricting the export of arms into South Sudan. How can we encourage our key partners to also implement and enforce an arms embargo?

Answer. The United States has stressed the need for a U.N. arms embargo in the Security Council and other fora, and pressed members of the Security Council, African Governments, and the African Union to support a U.N. Security Council Resolution to impose a multilateral embargo on arms and related materiel of all types into South Sudan.
NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 2018

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:04 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.
Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Gardner, Young, Isakson, Menendez, Cardin, Shaheen, Murphy, Kaine, and Markey.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations committee will come to order.
We welcome all of you, and I imagine there will be extended families that we will have the opportunity to meet. We thank all of you for coming in support of the nominees.
We will consider the nominations of five individuals to serve our nation in very different and important roles: Ambassador to the International Atomic Energy Agency and other U.N. bodies in Vienna; Deputy Representative at the U.N.; Ambassador to several Pacific islands; Ambassador to Hungary; and Alternative Executive Director on the Inter-American Development Bank.
We welcome all of you and thank you for your willingness to serve.
First, we have the Honorable Jackie Wolcott, who has already served our country in a number of positions, including as Representative to the U.N. for Political Affairs, as well as positions in the State Department under three different Presidents. As U.S. Representative to the Conference on Disarmament and Special Envoy for President George W. Bush, she led the U.S. delegation to four IAEA Board of Governors meetings. We thank you for being here.
At this crucial time when a historic meeting with North Korea is on the horizon and the threat of Iran’s nuclear program is of utmost importance, it is essential that we have someone like Ms. Wolcott with her deep background in diplomacy and nuclear issues promoting America’s national security interests at the IAEA.
Next we have Jonathan Cohen. Mr. Cohen has served his country as a career Foreign Service officer in numerous posts all over the world since 1986, including serving as Deputy Chief of Mission at Embassy Baghdad. The Deputy Representative to the U.N. is the number two position at the U.N., and in this capacity, the Deputy Representative represents the United States at meetings of U.N. bodies, including the U.N. Security Council when the Ambassador to the U.N. is not able to attend. Having someone with his knowledge and experience will enhance the ability of the U.S. mission to defend our interests at the U.N.. I was up there last week, and Ambassador Haley is certainly waiting to have you cover for her when she cannot attend. I know she is anxious to have you.

Next we have Joseph Cella as Ambassador to Pacific island nations. Strong U.S. engagement in the Pacific islands region is important for U.S. economic, diplomatic, and strategic interests, particularly as Chinese influence continues to grow in the Indo-Pacific. The United States maintains support for economic development and good governance in the Pacific islands to assist these three democracies. With Mr. Cella’s background in strategic communications, it is my hope that he will bring those skills to bear promoting U.S. interests in the Pacific islands.

Mr. David Cornstein has been nominated to serve as America’s Ambassador to Hungary at a time when Hungary has put policies in place that many find troubling. Mr. Cornstein will have the important task of reminding the Government of Hungary that its future lies not in return to the dark days of the past but in remaining an active member of the community of liberal democracies.

Finally, we have Eliot Pedrosa. Mr. Pedrosa is currently a shareholder at the international law firm of Greenberg Traurig where he chairs the firm’s 40-member Miami litigation department and has represented clients around the world. With a strong background in international law and commercial litigation, he is well qualified to represent the United States at the Inter-American Development Bank.

With that, I will turn it over to our distinguished ranking member and my friend, Bob Menendez, for any comments he wishes to make.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations to all of you for your nominations. I look forward to our questions of many of you.

Ms. Wolcott, I have no doubt that your many years at the State Department will serve you well when, if confirmed, you travel to Vienna to represent the United States at the International Atomic Energy Agency. There are a number of issues confronting that body, including resource constraints, as well as the review of the Iran nuclear agreement, that I look forward to having a conversation with you about.

I am glad we will have a chance to hear from Mr. Cornstein today about his views on Hungary—I appreciate that you came by and we had a good visit—where a sustained rollback of the rule of law and increasing xenophobia pose serious threats to the democratic values that undergird our NATO alliance. And it bears noting that these threats, if left unaddressed, only play into the hands of Vladimir Putin, who seeks to fuel anti-democratic forces and undermines stability across Europe. I hope our exchange today can help illuminate some of the specific steps we talked about to engage Prime Minister Orban and his government on these issues, if confirmed.

Mr. Cella, I have a series of questions to discuss with you today. I look forward to that.

Mr. Pedrosa, I recently met with the President of the Inter-American Development Bank, Luis Alberto Moreno, for a very interesting conversation of what the bank is doing in the region. It has a lot on its plate. I look forward to our conversation of what you intend to do there.

Finally, Mr. Cohen, welcome to you. I am a strong supporter of the United Nations. It does a lot of good around the world. Our national security is strengthened when we are at the table at the U.N., and the U.N. is more effective when America leads with its values. But the U.N. must do better. It must be more effective. It must be more transparent. It must be more accountable. And in particular, its anti-Israel bias must end once and for all. I look forward to how you would pursue some of those things as the number two in charge.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

With that, if you would make your opening comments in the order introduced and keep them to about 5 minutes, that would be great. Any written materials you have, without objection, will be entered into the record. Please feel free to introduce any family members or friends who may be here in support of your nomination. And with that, if you would begin, we would appreciate it.

STATEMENT OF HON. JACKIE WOLCOTT, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE VIENNA OFFICE OF THE UNITED NATIONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR AND TO BE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY

Ms. WOLCOTT. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the committee, for the opportunity to appear before you today.

And I am grateful to President Trump for giving me the opportunity to again serve our country. If confirmed, it would be my honor to lead the men and women of the U.S. mission to the U.N. in Vienna and to represent the United States in two important bodies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Vienna Office of the United Nations.

I would like to acknowledge my wonderful family, friends, and colleagues, many of whom are watching these proceedings online today and so are here in spirit with me. And I am especially grateful to my friend and former colleague, Assistant Secretary of State Kevin Moley, who is here today. Ambassador Moley and I have worked collaboratively over many years in the U.N. context, and his IO Bureau will be my home base, if confirmed for these positions.

My first true job as a young adult began here in the Senate, just next door in the Russell Building, working for my home State Senator Robert Taft, Jr. That position and my 32-year Federal Government career has instilled in me a deep appreciation for the role of Congress, the value of diplomacy, and the critical leadership role that the United States must play in multilateral diplomacy. I have served in numerous positions in Washington, New York, and Geneva leading U.S. efforts in the United Nations, its specialized agencies, and our policymaking bureaus in Washington.

I directed numerous campaigns to get votes from and build coalitions with governments around the world in support of our national security interests and represented the United States in the U.N. Security Council dealing with the full range of security challenges. For more than 5 years, I served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, with responsibilities covering a broad span of U.N. issues.

For much of my career, I have engaged in multilateral work at various agencies focused on nonproliferation and arms control. I have acquired directly relevant professional experience dealing with nuclear nonproliferation, peaceful uses of nuclear technology, arms control, and challenging security issues on behalf of the United States. I was Ambassador to the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva and Special Representative of the President for Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons with lead responsibility for the 2005 NPT Review Conference. During that time frame, I also led our team in Vienna at several IAEA Board of Governors meetings, giving me firsthand experience with the issues, dynamics, and procedural rules of that body.

My most recent executive branch experience was as Special Envoy for Nuclear Nonproliferation at the State Department. In that role, I led implementation of a presidential initiative to stop the spread of sensitive nuclear fuel cycle technologies, an issue I know is important to this committee, and promoted tangible commitments to the highest standards of safety, security, and nonproliferation by emerging nuclear energy countries.

Most recently as Executive Director and now Commissioner of the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, I have had the opportunity to visit many countries of concern and to analyze and report on the horrible persecution of people by their own governments. I do not think it mere coincidence that several countries that deny citizens basic freedoms are also those that challenge international nonproliferation norms and commitments.

If I am confirmed to lead the U.S. Mission in Vienna, I look forward to working with the talented State Department and interagency team. UNVIE is well positioned and, indeed, tasked to advance important U.S. policy in the areas of nuclear nonproliferation, safety and security, and strengthening international cooperation against many facets of transnational organized crime, including drug trafficking, cybercrime, terrorism, human trafficking, and wildlife crime.

Iran, North Korea, and other countries which may be undermining the vital goal of nonproliferation remain some of the biggest challenges for the international community, including at the IAEA. With currently more than 150 missions represented at Vienna-based international organizations, if confirmed, I am committed to finding new partners and expanding coalitions to advance American interests and values. Today's threats demand such partnerships.
In my various roles relating to the U.N., I have always pushed for reforms, transparency, and budget accountability. The United States contributes more than $300 million annually to Vienna-based international organizations. If confirmed, a key objective of my job will be to make sure that the U.S. tax dollars are being used wisely and effectively to meet today’s threats, including urgently addressing the opioid crisis plaguing our own country, through the work of the U.N. Office of Drugs and Crime. My experience has convinced me that the U.N. and other international bodies are only as good as their member states, and I would plan to be very hands-on in their governance. American taxpayers deserve to be well served through the work of these agencies, including having more Americans appointed to positions within the agencies we support so generously.

Mr. Chairman, I am excited by the prospect of again leading our team of experts in Vienna. There clearly are profound challenges ahead and there is much critical work to be done. If confirmed, I promise to provide my best analysis and advice to our executive branch interagency team and to work with this committee and Congress to advance and implement policies that enhance the safety and security of our country and around the world.

Thank you.

[Ms. Wolcott’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JACKIE WOLCOTT

Thank you Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the committee for the opportunity to appear before you today. And I am grateful to President Trump for giving me the opportunity to again serve our country. If confirmed, it would be my honor to lead the men and women of U.S. Mission to the U.N. in Vienna and to represent the United States in two important bodies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Vienna Office of the United Nations.

Security Council, dealing with the full range of security challenges. For more than five years in two different administrations, I served as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, with responsibilities covering a broad span of U.N. issues.

For a major segment of my career I have engaged in multilateral work at various agencies focused on nonproliferation and arms control. I have acquired directly relevant professional experience dealing with nuclear nonproliferation, peaceful uses of nuclear technology, arms control, and challenging security issues on behalf of the United States. I was the Ambassador to the Conference on Disarmament in Geneva and Special Representative of the President for the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons with lead responsibility for the 2005 NPT Review Conference. UNVIE is well-positioned and indeed tasked to advance important U.S. policy in the areas of nuclear nonproliferation, safety and security, and strengthening international cooperation against many facets of transnational organized crime, including drug trafficking, cybercrime, terrorism, human trafficking and wildlife crime. The peaceful use of nuclear technology is extremely important to countries around the world in the areas of energy, health, nuclear medicine, food safety and agriculture with the IAEA playing a key role in that regard.

Iran, North Korea and other countries which may be undermining the vital goal of nonproliferation remain some of the biggest challenges for the international community, including at the IAEA. With currently more than 150 missions represented at Vienna-based international organizations, if confirmed, I am committed to finding new partners and expanding coalitions to advance American interests and values.

Today's threats demand such new partnerships.

American taxpayers deserve to be well served through the work of these agencies, including having more Americans appointed to positions within the agencies we support so generously, as advanced in part by the International Gender Champions initiative launched last year in Vienna.

Mr. Chairman, I am excited by the prospect of again leading our team of experts in Vienna—from the State Department, Energy Department, Nuclear Regulatory Commission as well as our locally engaged staff.

There clearly are profound challenges ahead and there is much critical work to be done. If confirmed, I promise to provide my best analysis and advice to our executive branch interagency team and to work with this committee and Congress, to advance and implement policies that enhance the safety and security of our country and around the world.

Thank you.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Mr. Cohen. Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, Senator Young, Senator Gardner. I am honored to ap-appear before you today as the President’s nominee to serve as Deputy Representative of the United States of America at the United Nations. I am grateful to the President and to Ambassador Haley for this opportunity.

Serving our nation as a Foreign Service officer for the past 32 years has been a great privilege and never more so than now with this opportunity to represent the United States at the U.N.

I want to thank my wonderful wife Lidija and our remarkable daughters, Alexandra and Gabriella, for their love and support over the years and the many moves. They are watching today’s hearings from overseas. Their tenacious adaptability and patience with me and my calling are in no small part responsible for me being here today.

I also want to thank my Foreign Service mentors and, in particular, the Ambassadors, Deputy Chiefs of Mission, and Assistant Secretaries with whom I have served.

Over my 3 decades in the Foreign Service, I have seen many ways the U.N. contributes to international peace and security, from the deployment of peacekeepers who courageously serve in some of the world’s most dangerous places from Lebanon to South Sudan to Mali, to the operations of organizations such as the World Food Program which, with significant U.S. support, is providing life-saving food assistance to millions of people affected by famine and food insecurity. The U.N.’s value also lies in actions such as the extensive sanctions regime imposed on North Korea by the Security Council, in effect banning all known North Korean exports and shutting down its lawful capacity to earn hard currency abroad. These examples demonstrate the critical role the U.N. plays in advancing U.S. national interests. The United States has been and must continue to be a leader at the United Nations. If confirmed, I will energetically contribute to our important leadership in all these areas, as well as our work at the U.N. on Iran, Syria, Middle East peace, and other issues before the Security Council and the General Assembly.

That being said, I wholeheartedly agree with Senator Menendez. The United Nations must reform if it is to be more effective. And we need to bring that organization up to 21st century standards. Secretary-General Guterres’ U.N. reform plan is an encouraging, important step in that process. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to ensure that his efforts align with U.S. priorities.

Ambassador Haley has been a strong leader on U.N. reform and has been working closely with likeminded countries to push for greater accountability and transparency, to reduce duplicative structures and mandates, to streamline planning and budgetary processes, and to better assess peacekeeping operations. If confirmed, I look forward to joining her in these efforts to ensure America gets what it pays for at the U.N.

Additionally, the United States is a champion for accountability when peacekeepers are accused of sexual exploitation and abuse. If confirmed, I will strongly support a zero tolerance policy.

Another area of my focus, if confirmed, will be the fight to end the disproportionate and unjust attacks at the U.N. on our ally Israel. Throughout the U.N. system, there is a persistent anti-Israel bias. This is particularly egregious in the Human Rights Council with its standing agenda item dedicated to criticizing Israel. If confirmed, I will fight this bias at every opportunity and will continue to reinforce Israel's efforts to normalize its role in the U.N. and the broader international community.

The United Nations can strengthen America's security, prosperity, and international effectiveness and has great potential to be an even more effective vehicle for international peace and security. If confirmed, I will do my utmost to help it realize that potential.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you again for the opportunity to address you today. I appreciate and value this committee's oversight of our efforts at the United Nations and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you and your respective staff members on the range of issues on the U.N. agenda. Your continued engagement is and will remain an important element in our ability to successfully advance America's interests at the United Nations.

I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Cohen's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JONATHAN R. COHEN

Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee. I am honored to appear before you today as the President's nominee to serve as the Deputy Representative of the United States of America to the United Nations and am grateful to the President and Ambassador Haley for this opportunity.

Serving our nation as a Foreign Service Officer for the past 32 years has been a great privilege, and never more so than now with this opportunity to represent the United States of America at the United Nations. I want to thank my wonderful wife Lidija and our remarkable daughters Alexandra and Gabriella for their love and support over the years and the many moves. Their tenacious adaptability and patience with me and my calling are in no small part responsible for me being here today. I also want to thank my Foreign Service mentors, and in particular, the Ambassadors, Deputy Chiefs of Mission and Assistant Secretaries with whom I have served.

Being nominated for this position is the realization of a dream I held from an early age. Growing up in a California family that was not internationally oriented, I was launched on my path to the Foreign Service through involvement in high school Model United Nations and a university career devoted to international relations. I owe a special debt of gratitude to two inspirational high school teachers who helped equip me with the tools for this path: debate coach and English teacher extraordinaire Barbara Carson and Model U.N. advisor and history teacher Rome Friesen. The prospect of helping resolve vexing international challenges to peace and security inspired me as a teen and fueled my academic interests as a university student. Having the opportunity to do so in America's service has motivated my professional life ever since.

Throughout my career, I've worked with United Nations representatives, agencies and issues at just about every posting. From my first assignment in Thailand as a refugee protection officer visiting refugee camps and detention facilities along the Lao and Cambodian borders and interacting daily with UNHCR, to coordinating on aid programs in the West Bank during the first Intifada, to service in multiple UNSC capitals advocating U.S. priorities under discussion in the Security Council, to work with UNFICYP and the SRSG in Cyprus seeking to reunify the divided island into a bi-zonal bi-communal federation. Nowhere were the stakes higher or the challenges greater than in my most recent overseas tour as DCM in Baghdad where I regularly met with the leadership of the U.N. Mission in Iraq, where my briefings at the SRSG's monthly meetings for the diplomatic corps guaranteed that American views on the political and military situation of the country had primacy, and where I helped craft with the U.N. Humanitarian Coordinator a high-impact, low-cost stabilization program that got over a million IDPs safely home. I have seen the U.N. rise to challenges and exceed expectations, delivering impressively on its mission to provide peace, security and relief while operating with fiscal discipline. In each such case, in my experience, there was an essential common element—strong U.S. leadership and involvement. If confirmed, I pledge to provide that kind of leadership in all I do at USUN.

Over my three decades in the Foreign Service, I have seen many ways the U.N. contributes to international peace and security, from the deployment of peacekeepers who courageously serve in some of the world’s most dangerous places, from Lebanon to South Sudan to Mali, to the operations of organizations such as the World Food Program which, with significant U.S. support, is providing life-saving food assistance to millions of people affected by famine and food insecurity. The U.N.’s value also lies in actions such as the extensive sanctions regime imposed on North Korea by the Security Council, in effect banning all known North Korean exports, and shutting down its lawful capacity to earn hard currency abroad. These examples demonstrate the critical role the U.N. plays in advancing U.S. national interests. The United States has been and must continue to be a leader in the United Nations. If confirmed, I will energetically contribute to our important leadership in all these areas as well as our work at the U.N. on Iran, Syria and Middle East peace, and other issues before the Security Council.

That being said, the United Nations must reform if it is to be more effective. We need to bring the organization up to 21st century standards. Secretary General Guterres’ U.N. reform plan is an encouraging, important step in the process. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to ensure that his efforts align with U.S. priorities. Ambassador Haley has been a strong leader on U.N. reforms, and has been working closely with like-minded countries to push for greater accountability and transparency, to reduce duplicative structures and mandates, to streamline planning and budgetary processes and to better assess peacekeeping operations. If confirmed, I look forward to joining her in these efforts to ensure America gets what it pays for at the United Nations. Additionally, the United States has been a champion for accountability when peacekeepers are accused of sexual exploitation and abuse. If confirmed I will strongly support a zero tolerance standard.

Another area of my focus, if confirmed, will be the fight to end disproportionate and unjust attacks on our ally, Israel. Throughout the U.N. system, there is persistent anti-Israel bias. This is particularly egregious in the Human Rights Council, with its standing agenda item dedicated to criticizing Israel. If confirmed, I will fight this bias at every opportunity, and will continue to reinforce Israel’s efforts to normalize its role in the U.N. and the broader international community.

The United Nations can strengthen U.S. security prosperity and international effectiveness and be an even more effective vehicle for international peace and security. If confirmed, it will be my great honor to devote myself to furthering America’s efforts at the United Nations by contributing to the focused U.S. leadership there with the goal of promoting and protecting America’s interests and values.

I appreciate and value this committee’s oversight of our efforts at the United Nations and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you and your respective staff members on the range of issues on the U.N. agenda. Your continued engagement is, and will remain, an important element in our ability to successfully advance America’s interests at the United Nations. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman. Good morning. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, Senator Gardner, Senator Shaheen. It is a privilege to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of the Fiji Islands, the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru, the Kingdom of Tonga, and the independent island nation of Tuvalu.

I want to express my gratitude to President Trump for his confidence in me and for the opportunity, with your consent, to serve and represent the United States of America in what is a crucial point in our history with our longstanding Indo-Pacific and South Pacific partners.

I also want to express my gratitude to Vice President Pence for his support of my nomination.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with Secretary of State Pompeo and his seasoned team of State Department professionals.

I would like to acknowledge my wife Kristen and my children, Francesca, John Paul, Dominic, Rita Rose, Mariana, and Anthony. I am grateful for their beautiful, selfless love and support. I am also pleased to acknowledge my mother, Janice Cella, and my brother, Robert Cella, who are here with us today for their love and indefatigable support. I would also like to acknowledge my late grandfather, Joseph Cella, and my late father, Robert Cella, who are with us in spirit. And just as they proudly and honorably served our nation in wearing the military uniform during World War I and the Korean War, if confirmed, I look forward to serving our nation in the diplomatic corps.

The name of my small company is The Pontifex Group with Pontifex” taken from the Latin “pons” and “fec,” which means bridge builder. Serving as a bridge builder has been a calling of mine since my boyhood and is a skill that I have had to employ working in the United States Senate and House of Representatives and as a businessman and certainly, as you can imagine, sometimes as a father to a team of three girls and three boys. Should I be confirmed, I will serve as our nation’s bridge builder to the five island nations, to the team at post, and all whom I encounter.

The island nations are an increasingly important component for the strength of our commitment and presence and relations in the Indo-Pacific, South Pacific for its free and open nature, sustaining democratic principles, the rule of law, and market-based economies. It is imperative we lead side by side with our allies committed to the region and partners, including Australia, Japan, and others in order that a void not be filled by others who may not share our commitment to the preservation of human freedom and respect for democratic principles.

If confirmed, there will be four key pillars that will guide my service.

First, directing and maintaining active and regular contact with top officials in each island nation and engaging closely with the Pacific Islands Forum, the region’s premier intergovernmental organization based in Suva. My key goals will be to further the cultivation and showcasing of democratic free market principles rooted in each country’s right to choose its own sovereign course; fostering vibrant economies through free, fair, and reciprocal trade and expansion of tourism; promoting and maintaining close partnerships for security and stability on issues ranging from free and open passage of all vessels, to climate change, and the scourge of human trafficking.

Second, building and expanding on the successes of the past by working with the interagency that advocates the interests of American businesses, scholars, tourists, and using people-to-people diplomacy through a variety of cultural and educational exchanges and reminding our allies and partners of our fidelity to time-honored principles.
Third, engaging citizens from all walks of life in each of the island nations demonstrating our common principles and appreciation for their rich history and diverse culture. As a bridge builder, I look forward to interacting with leaders from civic societies and the faith communities.

Lastly, yet of great importance, my prospective colleagues at the United States embassy in Fiji who work very hard in service to our nation and will be our family. And as with my own immediate family, I will work to ensure their safety and security at all times.

It will be a great pleasure to work with an open door and side-by-side with the mission team to carry on the tremendously effective work in the U.S. diplomatic and consular missions.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, Senator Gardner, Senator Shaheen, thank you for your thoughtful consideration and the opportunity to appear before you today, and I look forward to your comments and questions.

[Mr. Cella’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOSEPH CELLA

Good morning, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee.

It is a joy and a high honor to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Fiji, the Republic of Kiribati, the Republic of Nauru, the Kingdom of Tonga, and the independent island nation of Tuvalu.

I want to express my gratitude to President Trump for his confidence in me and for the opportunity, with your consent, to serve and represent the United States of America in what is a crucial point in history with our long-standing Indo-Pacific partners.

I also want to express my gratitude to Vice President Pence for his support of my nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Secretary of State Pompeo and his seasoned team of State Department professionals, particularly those at Mission Fiji, and those at various other federal agencies whose missions engage the island nations. If confirmed, I will uphold the trust of the American people, and faithfully discharge the responsibilities that are vested in this Constitutional office.

Should I be confirmed, I anticipate working in conjunction with Prime Minister Bainimarama of Fiji; President Mamau of Kiribati; President Waqa of Nauru; His Majesty King Tupou VI and Prime Minister Pohiva of Tonga; and President Sopoaga of Tuvalu; and with the members of their respective governments.

My family is integral to who I am, and all that I do, and I would like to take a moment to thank them—especially my wife, Kristen, and my children, Francesca, John Paul, Dominic, Rita Rose, Mariana, and Anthony. Their beautiful, selfless love and support has sustained me in all that I have done. And they are ALL ready to serve as public diplomats in their own unique ways. They are learning, early on, the vital connection of service and citizenship in our great republic.

I would like to acknowledge my mother, Janice Cella, who is with us today, for her love, prayers and indefatigable support. I would also like to acknowledge my late grandfather, Joseph Z. Cella, and my late father, Robert F. Cella, who are with us in spirit. And just as they proudly and honorably served our nation in wearing the military uniform during World War I and the Korean War, if confirmed, I look forward to serving our nation in the diplomatic corps.

One of our Founding Fathers, and United States Ambassador, Benjamin Franklin, described the characteristics of a diplomat as follows: “The qualities of a diplomat are sleepless tact, unmovable calmness, and a patience that no folly, no provocation, no blunders, may shake.”

My faith, family life, education, and nearly 25 years of professional experience in both the private and public sectors, world travels, and as a founder and leader of multiple organizations, in varied environments, have shaped these characteristics and skills, and are critical factors, preparing me to ably serve.

The name of my small company is The Pontifex Group, with Pontifex taken from the Latin pons and fec, which means bridge-builder. The nature of a diplomat is one of a bridge-builder. The diplomat either builds new bridges, maintains existing bridges, or fortifies those bridges in need of greater support. Serving as a bridge-builder has been my nature since boyhood and has been a gift that I have employed as a husband, father, working in the United States Senate and House of Representatives, as a businessman, confidant, and friend. Should I be confirmed, I will serve as our nation's bridge-builder to the five island nations, to the team at post, and all with whom I encounter.

The island nations are an increasingly important component for the strength of our commitment, presence and relations in the Indo-Pacific; for its free and open nature, sustaining democratic principles, the rule of law, and market-based economies. It is imperative we lead, side by side with our allies committed to the region, including Australia, Japan, and others, in order that a void not develop and be filled by others who may not share our shared commitment to the preservation of human freedom and respect for democratic principles.

If confirmed, there will be four key pillars that will guide my service.

First, directing and maintaining active and regular contact with top officials in each island nation and engaging closely with the Pacific Islands Forum, the region's premier intergovernmental organization based in Suva, Fiji. My key goals will be the further cultivation and showcasing of democratic, free market principles rooted in each country's right to choose its own sovereign course; fostering vibrant economies through free, fair, and reciprocal trade and expansion of tourism; promoting and maintaining close partnerships for security and stability on issues ranging from free and open passage for all vessels, to climate change and the scourge of human trafficking.

Second, building and expanding on the successes of the past, by working with the interagency that advocates the interests of American businesses, scholars, tourists, and using people-to-people diplomacy through a variety of cultural and educational exchanges, and reminding our allies of our fidelity to time-honored principles.

Third, engaging citizens from all walks of life in each island nation, demonstrating a common principles and appreciation for their rich history and diverse culture. As a bridgebuilder, I look forward to interacting with leaders from civic societies and the faith communities.

Lastly, yet of great importance: my prospective colleagues at the United States Embassy in Fiji who work very hard in service to our nation will be our family. And as with my own immediate family, I will work to ensure their safety and security at all times.

It will be a great pleasure to work with an open door and side-by-side with the mission team to carry on the tremendously effective work in the U.S. diplomatic and consular missions.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, thank you for your thoughtful consideration and the opportunity to appear before you today, and I look forward to your comments and questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF DAVID B. CORNSTEIN, OF NEW YORK, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO HUNGARY

Mr. CORNSTEIN. Good morning, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee. It is a tremendous honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the United States Ambassador to Hungary. For me, it is humbling that the President has confidence in me, hopefully with your approval, to represent the American people in engaging with an important ally in a challenging and changing part of the world.

I would like to thank my loving family who sit behind me today. They represent quality over quantity. There are only four living relatives in my entire family. The girl I married 49 years ago, my wonderful wife Sheila. And we have two children, one by birth, our son Marc, and one by marriage, our loving daughter Natasha. Last but sure not for least, the best part of my big family, my grandson Danny, who is 12 years old and whom I love beyond belief.
I would also like to remember my wonderful parents, Fanny and Irving, and Sheila’s parents, Rose and Morris, and the only grandparent I had the privilege of knowing, my Hungarian grandmother Sarah. My family’s love and support has been a constant in every phase of my life.

During my career, I have had experience in both government service and the private sector. In the private sector, I started with one leased fine jewelry department in a JC Penney store and 40 years later had 1,200 fine jewelry departments in practically all of the department stores in the United States. Our company also had departments which we operated in England, Germany, and France. When I retired from the company, it was doing well over a billion dollars in revenue and was listed on the NASDAQ exchange.

In public service during the Giuliani administration, I served as the Vice Chair of the Economic Development Corporation of the City of New York where we negotiated many of the deals that came into the city. During the Pataki administration, I served on the boards of Battery Park City and The Javitz Convention Center. I also chaired the New York State Olympic Commission, which was an 8-year labor of love where we tried to bring the 2012 Olympics to New York City. During the Bloomberg and Spitzer administrations, I completed my 16-year tenure as Chairman of the New York City and State Off-Track Betting Corporations. Through these experiences, I learned how to accomplish goals by working with city and State governments and to find common ground between Republicans and Democrats.

In addition, I have been an active member of several philanthropic boards, including the Marine Corps Law Enforcement Foundation, The Federal Law Enforcement Officers Foundation, New York Law School, Park East Synagogue, and many others.

If confirmed, I would focus on the following key areas.

First and foremost, I will encourage Hungarian officials at all levels of government to promote American and democratic values. The freedom of speech, the freedom of press, the freedom of religions are values that should not and cannot be comprised.

If confirmed, I hope to advance our economic interests in Hungary. Under Prime Minister Orban, the country’s economy is doing well. In 2017, GDP grew by over 4 percent and unemployment was under 4 percent. Hungary lowered its corporate tax rate to 9 percent, and since then has received more than $2.5 billion in foreign investment. Although the United States is Hungary’s largest non-European Union investor, by working with the Commerce Department, there certainly is room for existing American companies doing business in Hungary to do more.

An extremely important goal I have, if confirmed, is to halt the rise of anti-Semitism in Hungary and the region. I am a very proud American Jew, and it hurts and disturbs me deeply that this cancer continues to grow. I will work diligently with Jewish organizations, other religious groups, and the Hungarian Government to make sure the Jewish community feels safe and secure. I will engage with Hungarian people from all walks of life to share this American value of religious freedom, protection, and tolerance for all people.
Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I thank you for the honor of appearing before you today, and I look forward to answering your questions.

[Mr. Cornstein’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DAVID B. CORNSTEIN

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, it is a tremendous honor to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the United States Ambassador to Hungary. For me, it is humbling that the President has confidence in me, hopefully with your approval, to represent the American people in engaging with an important ally in a challenging and changing part of the world.

I would like to thank my loving family who sit behind me today. They represent quality over quantity. There are only four living relatives in my entire family. The girl I married forty-nine years ago, my wonderful wife Sheila. We have two children, one by birth—our son Marc, and one by marriage—our daughter Natasha. They have been married for seventeen years. Last but for sure not least, the best part of this big family, my grandson Danny, who is twelve years old and whose love beyond belief, I would also like to remember my wonderful parents, Fanny and Irving, and Sheila’s parents, Rose and Morris, and the only grandparent I had the privilege of knowing, my Hungarian grandmother Sarah. My family’s love and support has been a constant in every phase of my life.

During my career, I have had experience in both government service and the private sector. In the private sector, I started with one leased fine jewelry department in a JC Penney store and forty years later had twelve hundred fine jewelry departments in practically all of the department stores in the United States. Our company also had departments that we operated in England, Germany, and France. When I retired from the company, it was doing well over a billion dollars in revenue and was listed on the NASDAQ exchange. I had accomplished what I had set out to do and was ready to give back some of what I had learned in business to public service.

During the Giuliani administration, I served as Vice Chair of the Economic Development Corporation of New York City, where we negotiated many of the deals that came into the city. During the Pataki administration, I served on the boards of Battery Park City and The Javits Convention Center. I also chaired the New York State Olympic Commission, an eight year labor of love to bring the 2012 Olympics to New York City. During the Bloomberg and Spitzer administrations, I completed my sixteen-year tenure as Chairman of the New York City and New York State Off-Track Betting Corporations. I have been an active member of several philanthropic boards including The Marine Corps Law Enforcement Foundation, The Federal Law Enforcement Officers Foundation, New York Law School and Park East Synagogue, among others. Through these experiences, I learned how to accomplish goals by working with City and State governments and finding common ground between Republicans and Democrats.

I feel confident my past experience in government, business, and philanthropy has prepared me for this important opportunity to lead the U.S. mission in Hungary. If confirmed to serve as U.S. Ambassador, I will work closely with the teams from across the Government to strengthen our relationship and focus on the following key areas of our alliance.

First and foremost, I will encourage Hungarian officials at all levels of government to advance American interests and to promote American and democratic values; the freedom of speech, the freedom of press and the freedom of religion are values that cannot and should not be compromised.

I will work closely with the Hungarian Government to address collective security concerns. Working together, we can further strengthen communication between our law enforcement and counterterrorism communities and further global security.

I hope to advance our economic interests in Hungary. Under Prime Minister Orban, the country’s economy is doing extremely well. In 2017, GDP grew by over four percent and unemployment was under four percent, Hungary lowered its corporate tax rate to nine percent, and since then has received more than 2.5 billion dollars in foreign investment. Although the United States is Hungary’s largest non-European Union investor, there certainly is room for existing American companies doing business in Hungary to do more. We also can have new United States companies sell their services and products to Hungary. There are many Hungarian companies that should have offices in the United States to manufacture and sell their products and services, thereby creating more American jobs. I would work with our Commerce department to achieve these goals.
An extremely important goal I have, if confirmed, is to halt the rise of anti-Semitism in Hungary and Central and Eastern Europe. I am a very proud American Jew and it hurts and disturbs me deeply that this cancer continues to grow. I will work diligently with Jewish organizations, other religious communities, and the Hungarian Government to make sure the Jewish community feels safe and secure. I will reach out to the Hungarian people from all walks of life to share this American value of religious freedom, protection, and tolerance for all people.

Finally, if confirmed, I will work diligently to lead our mission team and to work closely with all agencies to deepen our strong alliance with the Hungarian Government.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I thank you for the honor of appearing before you today and I look forward to answering your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much.

STATEMENT OF ELIOT PEDROSA, OF FLORIDA, TO BE THE ALTERNATE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE INTER-AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. PEDROSA. Good morning, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee.

I am profoundly humbled to appear before this august body as President Trump’s nominee to represent the United States as Alternate Executive Director of the Inter-American Development Bank. I want to thank the President and Secretary Mnuchin and Under Secretary Malpass for supporting my nomination, and I would like to thank each of the members of this committee for giving me the opportunity to present my qualifications for your consideration as you discharge your important constitutional role in providing advice and I hope consent to my nomination.

Before I continue, I want to thank my family for their love and support. My wife Nilda is here, seated one row back, standing by my side in this, as in all of my endeavors. She is my inspiration, my motivation, and the love of my life.

Seated next to her is my goddaughter, Addie Foslid, who is here with her dad Adam.

My parents are here as well. My mom and dad, Ines and Elier Pedrosa, had the courage to leave behind communist oppression in Cuba and risk everything to start literally over in the United States. Everything I am and everything I do is because of them.

Lastly, my in-laws could not be here today, but they are at home live-streaming this hearing. So I want to thank them as well for their support: my mother-in-law, Nilda Rosa; my father-in-law Ricardo Rodriguez; and my brother-in-law, Rick Rodriguez.

Mr. Chairman, as you were very kind enough to point out in your warm introduction, over my 18 years of legal practice, I have represented clients in matters around the world but primarily in disputes and other matters within the Americas from Mexico to the Caribbean down to the southern cone. This is a region that is blessed with incredible promise and opportunity. It is a region rich in natural resources and with warm, dynamic, diverse people.

But I have seen firsthand some of the challenges that they face. I have seen how weak institutions, unchecked corruption, political instability, and economic uncertainty can throttle private enterprise and economic development. I am aware that too many of our fellow citizens of the Americas are still deprived of their basic rights to life, liberty, property, and a fair opportunity for prosperity by certain corrupt and oppressive governments in the region, by violent criminal gangs, and by the crushing weight of hopelessness.

As Americans, it is in our vital national interest to face these challenges and work with our neighbors to create, nourish, and sustain prosperous democracies in every corner of our shared hemisphere.

If I am fortunate enough to be confirmed, I will devote myself to working in partnership with my colleagues in the executive branch and the Congress, especially this committee, to ensure that the IDB continues to be an important part of the solution to the problems that we face together. I firmly believe that American leadership and investment, both public and private, can change outcomes in the region for the better, and I hope to have the opportunity to work with you and your staffs to help achieve that goal.

Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Menendez, I thank you again for this opportunity to appear before you and the other distinguished members of this committee. I look forward to your questions.

And I will finish simply by wishing all of the moms both in the room and at home live-streaming an early Happy Mothers Day.

[Mr. Pedrosa’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ELIOT PEDROSA

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, I am profoundly humbled to appear before this august body as President Trump’s nominee to represent the United States as Alternate Executive Director of the Inter-American Development Bank. I want to thank the President, Secretary Mnuchin and Under Secretary David Malpass for supporting my nomination, and I would like to thank each of the distinguished members of this committee for giving me the opportunity to present my qualifications for your consideration as you discharge your important constitutional role to advise and, hopefully, consent to this nomination.

Before I continue, I want to thank my family for their love and support. My wife, Nilda is here, by my side in this as in all endeavors. She is my inspiration, my motivation, and the love of my life. Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Menendez, I thank you again for this opportunity to appear before you and the other members of the committee, and I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you so much.

Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I have a letter from the Democratic Leader, Senator Schumer, on behalf and recommending and supporting David Cornstein’s nomination to the Ambassadorship for Hungary. I would ask that it be included in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection.

[The information referred to can be found on page 55 of this transcript.]

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

Mr. Cella, let me ask you. How do you view WikiLeaks?

Mr. CELLA. I am sorry.

Senator MENENDEZ. How do you view WikiLeaks?

Mr. CELLA. Thank you for the question.

I do view it as a hostile, non-state actor.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay.

Now, as someone who views it as a hostile, non-state actor, on October 12th of 2016, in the middle of a controversy over Mr. Trump’s comments on the Access Hollywood tape, you released a statement citing WikiLeaks and claiming that Hillary Clinton, her advisors—and I can only assume her Roman Catholic running mate—are turning, “the clock back to the days of the 20th century, no Catholics need apply type of discrimination.”

So as someone who just told me that it is a hostile, non-state actor—and that actually mirrors to some degree what the former Director of the CIA, now the Secretary of State, Mike Pompeo, has labeled WikiLeaks as a non-state, hostile intelligence service that, “will take down America any way they can and find any willing partner to achieve that end”—why did you find it as an acceptable source to cite?

Mr. CELLA. Thank you, Senator. In no way, shape, or form was it meant as an endorsement of WikiLeaks or its practices.

Senator MENENDEZ. But it is used as an endorsement.

Mr. CELLA. It was rather just a remark on the content—the material that was in the public domain at the time.

Senator MENENDEZ. There are a lot of things in the public domain, including actions by Russia and others to try to subvert our democracy. You would not want to be quoting that. Would you?

Mr. CELLA. I understand, Senator, your concern and the reference to Wikileaks and given how they have targeted us with intentionality, it was done so in the middle of a very hard-fought, pitched campaign. But based on additional things that have emerged—I have read the minority report—I certainly have a better understanding of what is involved of Wikileaks——

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you. Do you know Austin Ruse?

Mr. CELLA. I do know, Austin. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. How do you know him?

Mr. CELLA. He has previously served on the board of the National Catholic Prayer Breakfast.
Senator MENENDEZ. And you were the founder of that organization.

Mr. CELLA. I am founder of the National Catholic Prayer Breakfast. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. So he was the vice president for a time—Mr. Ruse. And he said some pretty vile things. He has claimed that a priest from the Holy See’s U.N. delegation guaranteed him, “absolution if I just took her [meaning Hillary Clinton] out, and not on a date.” He claimed that vicious Russian anti-LGBTQ laws are part of a noble quest for, “human rights,” and that, “the hard left human-hating people that run modern universities” should “be taken out and shot.” And that is just the tip of the iceberg. I could read a lot more.

So explain to me how you justify having Mr. Ruse be part of the organization that you created, an organization that in and of itself, as was described, is certainly worthy. When you founded the National Catholic Prayer Breakfast, you described it as, “an annual beacon of hope and an encouragement to witness our faith and our love for this country.” Those are very admirable goals.

Mr. CELLA. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. How does that justify having Mr. Ruse serve as the vice president of your organization with those type of comments?

Mr. CELLA. Thank you for the question, Senator Menendez. The National Catholic Prayer Breakfast was founded in 2004. It has been a great success in every successive year. Those remarks by Mr. Ruse I was unaware of until recently and occurred in 2016. And it is not anything that would pour forth from my mouth.

Senator MENENDEZ. You never heard him say these things?

Mr. CELLA. No.

Senator MENENDEZ. Really?

Mr. CELLA. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. He has not been shy about advertising his opinions. He has claimed that homosexuals, “want to win our children over for their nefarious causes that come from the very pits of hell.” He has said that LGBTQ activists are, “almost pure evil.” He has said that the federal workplace protections for LGBTQ people, “they don’t even have to know how to type as long as they have lopped off”—and I am not going to go through the rest of it—“or to at least wear dresses.” You never heard any of that.

Mr. CELLA. I never have, Senator Menendez.

Senator MENENDEZ. That is pretty remarkable for the person who is the vice president of your organization. You never heard any of that.

Mr. CELLA. He is no longer the vice president of the organization. He has been off the board for many years. And those are his words and not mine, nor do I support them.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you this to finish this line of questioning. Do we have your commitment—this committee—that those who may be LGBTQ employees in your embassy or United States citizens who request assistance from your embassy will be treated with the dignity and respect that any citizen of the United States deserves?
Mr. Celli. 100 percent, Senator. And the first pillar of the National Security Strategy, as you well know, involves upholding the dignity of the individual. And by my nature since I can remember, I have treated every individual with great worth, dignity, and respect that they deserve, and that would continue in my post, if I am confirmed with your consent.

Senator Menendez. I have plenty of other questions, Mr. Chairman, for the rest of the panel. I will wait for the second round.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Young?

Senator Young. Welcome all.

Ms. Wolcott, in President Trump’s speech yesterday regarding the Iran nuclear agreement, he emphasized, quote, the deal’s inspection provisions lack adequate mechanisms to prevent, detect, and punish cheating and do not even have the unqualified right to inspect many important locations, including military facilities. Ms. Wolcott, has the IAEA inspected in person any military bases in Iran?

Ms. Wolcott. Senator Young, thank you for that question. I am not sure. They do not really make public sometimes where they go. I think there are questions about the military sites a lot of people still have, for sure.

Senator Young. Do you know whether the IAEA has formally asked to inspect military sites within Iran?

Ms. Wolcott. I do not know.

Senator Young. Well, if they have not, then it seems to me we cannot be confident that Iran has fully complied with the agreement. Would you draw the same conclusion?

Ms. Wolcott. Director General Amano has said on more than one occasion that there were no sites that should be off limits. Whether or not that means they intend to go to those sites, I do not know. I would think it would be important to do so given the past history of Iran’s nuclear program.

Senator Young. You would agree with my observation that if military sites—if we do not know whether or not the military sites have, in fact, been inspected for nuclear activity, then that creates a distinct possibility that there is nuclear activity occurring there that has been undetected and that, in turn, creates a threat to American citizens and our allies and partners.

Ms. Wolcott. Senator, I agree with that observation.

Senator Young. Well, I think I would agree with the President, that there is a fundamental flaw in the agreement. It is my hope that collectively on this committee and beyond we will now work prospectively to try and put the genie back into the box, as it were.

Ms. Wolcott, if you are confirmed as representative of the U.S. to the Vienna Office of the U.N., it is my understanding your office, though it has a broad portfolio, would work with the U.N. Office of Drugs and Crime. Is that correct?

Ms. Wolcott. That is correct, Senator.

Senator Young. And the UNODC, as it is called, describes itself as the global leader in the fight against illicit drugs and international crime. Among other things, UNODC specializes in research and analytical work to increase knowledge and understanding of drugs and crime issues and expand the evidence base for policy and operational decisions.

Now, my home State, like your home State, of Ohio is being decimated in some communities by this opioid crisis. The Indiana State Department of Health indicates, according to our recent numbers, in 2016 there were 785 drug overdoses involving opioids and deaths associated with those overdoses.

In your prepared statement, you identify urgently addressing the opioid crisis as a top priority, and I am really encouraged by that.

Based on your preparation for this nomination and this hearing, do you know whether UNODC has identified some best practices that could potentially inform our domestic policy here in the United States so that we can better confront the opioid crisis in States like Indiana?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Thank you, Senator.

The UNODC does a lot of technical work and goes into countries and helps them with improving their laws and working with investigations and forensic officials and those sorts of things. Also an important thing that it does on this opioid crisis is to list fentanyl and other drugs on control lists, and I think that is a place where we can do more work. I am really anxious, if confirmed, to get there to see what more can be done because I know our INL Bureau at the State Department has been working with UNODC and so has IO for some time. But there are a lot of ways I think we can do better at detecting and stopping these illicit drugs coming into the country, and that is something that UNODC can work with us on and also the UPU on the drugs coming through the mail to Mexico and Canada.

Senator YOUNG. There may be some unrealized opportunities with respect to implementing identified best practices by UNODC, implementing those best practices here in the United States or perhaps working with UNODC to tease out those best practices so that all countries can benefit.

Do I have your commitment to work with my office and others on this committee on that front?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Absolutely, Senator. I am very anxious to do that.

Senator YOUNG. Thanks so much.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator SHAHEEN? Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations to all of the nominees today and to your families for being willing to consider taking on these responsibilities.

Mr. Cohen, we are facing the largest refugee crisis in decades, and we know that pregnancy-related deaths and instances of sexual violence increase significantly during these crises, especially when people are pushed into huge refugee camps. In 2015, the U.N. estimated that 61 percent of maternal deaths took place in humanitarian crises and fragile settings where health services were not available to women.

The United Nations Population Fund is the leading provider of maternal and reproductive health services and supplies in humanitarian emergencies. They often operate in areas where no one else is able to or willing to, and they are the leading global coordinator around gender-based violence prevention and response. Unfortunately, the State Department made a determination back in March to withhold funding for UNFPA, and the proposal for the fiscal year 2019 budget reflects this decision.

So if we are not going to support UNFPA as they try and help women and children in these crises, what should we be doing to address the challenges that we are facing with refugees around the world?

Mr. COHEN. Senator, thank you for the question.

We remain committed to women's empowerment and women's issues, including maternal and child health issues, and doing work on them through multiple U.N. agencies, including UNICEF, WHO, WFP, to name a few.

Senator SHAHEEN. And can you tell me how many women that those organizations might be able to support compared to UNFPA?

Mr. COHEN. I would have to look into that for you, Senator.

As I understand it—and the Kemp-Kasten determination was made, as you mentioned, earlier this year—we are legislatively required, if such a determination is made, to withhold funding from an organization. And the specific reason, as I understand it, is that UNFPA was determined to be supporting the Chinese Government agency responsible for implementing China's coercive family planning practices, including forced sterilization and, of course, of abortion.

Senator SHAHEEN. And I understand that that has been alleged, but in fact in the memorandum of justification for the determination regarding the Kemp-Kasten amendment that the State Department sent to the Foreign Relations committee, the State Department concluded that no such evidence exists.

I would hope, Mr. Cohen, that you would, in your new position, commit to working to reverse the determination that UNFPA be denied U.S. funding if you find that that decision was wrongful.

Mr. COHEN. Thank you, Senator. If confirmed, I will look into this matter deeply, and I will get back to you with what I am able to find out.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much.

Mr. Cella, if you are confirmed as Ambassador, you would be the Ambassador to a number of small islands in the Pacific who will be drastically affected by global climate change and rising sea levels. On September 22nd, 2017, the President of Kiribati addressed the United Nations General Assembly and called for swift global action on climate change.

In light of the President's decision to withdraw from the Paris Climate Agreement, how would you respond to the concerns of those islands that you would be Ambassador to about the need for collective action to limit global warming and to address rising sea levels? And what kind of action should we be thinking about if we are not going to be part of the international community's effort to address this crisis?

Mr. CELLA. Thank you for your question, Senator Shaheen.

I am from Michigan. We in Michigan are surrounded by five bodies of water containing 84 percent of the fresh water in the United States, 21 percent of it in the world. I have worked to protect the environment in my professional capacities there as a steward and... in my capacity as a steward and a bridge builder to the Island of Kiribati and other nations that are impacted work with them to achieve that, specifically be temporarily withdrawn and hope for perhaps some reengagement in the accord if the conditions were more favorable to the United States that this could mitigate. I think there is a deliberate and thoughtful approach presently underway. And I am hoping in the meantime to advocate for whatever relief through USAID to shore up whatever they may need in terms of water and other fallout that they have through flooding as a result of the cyclones. But you have my commitment, Senator, to do that very thing and work so aggressively.

Senator Shaheen. So do you believe that global warming is happening and that human activity is contributing to it?

Mr. Cella. Yes, Senator, it is happening. I do believe that. Pope Francis, as you know in his encyclical, Laudato Si, speaks to this. It delves into it quite extensively, and I think it is both human and I think there is some natural involvement as well. But I do and in my capacity would work with you and the administration to mitigate whatever we might however we might do so.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you. I applaud the Pope for taking that action with this encyclical.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Isakson?

Senator Isakson. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms. Wolcott, you made a statement about the $300 million being invested in Vienna-based international organizations, and that is where the IAEA is based. Is that correct?

Ms. Wolcott. Yes, Senator, that is correct.

Senator Isakson. I think in your testimony you talked about making sure that money is spent wisely and invested wisely. And you specifically mentioned the opioid crisis in the United States. What do you think through your appointment to the IAEA we could do with some of that money to help the stop the flow of opioids or the use of opioids or the abuse of opioids in the United States or in the world?

Ms. Wolcott. Senator, that is a good question.

Senator Isakson. I was glad you mentioned it in your statement and I appreciate you doing so because that is something I promise I will be happy to look into and get back to you about.

Senator Isakson. I was glad you mentioned it in your statement and I appreciate you doing so because that is something all of us—it is a problem for everybody in the world, and it is going to get worse. It is not going to get better, maybe more serious. And everybody needs to accept responsibility to be a part of the solution. So anytime somebody’s appointment does not directly address that subject but they include it in their remarks, it is something I want to concentrate on. I think it is setting a good tone for the future because it is a common interest for all of us.

Mr. Cornstein, do you know who Raoul Wallenberg is?

Mr. Cornstein. No, Senator, I do not.

Senator Isakson. Well, I want to help you because it will make you very popular in Hungary.
Mr. CORNSTEIN. All right.
Senator ISAKSON. And a lot of other places.
Raoul Wallenberg was a Hungarian Jew who saved 100,000 lives——
Mr. CORNSTEIN. Yes. I am sorry. I do know.
Senator ISAKSON. That was not a trick question. Nobody ever knows. I am a Swede. Only Swedes really know what Raoul did. And unfortunately, he disappeared and it was never really proven how he died or where he died although we think it was in the Soviet Union.
But during World War II, he saved 100,000 Hungarian Jews from the gas chambers in Nazi Germany. And we have a special relationship with the Hungarian people but also the Jewish people of the world as the United States of America, and it is a great partner of ours. We are soon getting ready to open our embassy in Jerusalem, which is a huge issue for the Jewish people.
I really appreciate your statement in your opening remarks about being committed to anti-Semitism and seeing to it we do everything we can to address it. It is a growing problem in Europe. It is not the same problem it was in World War II with the Nazis, but some of the organizations that embrace anti-Semitism are not the kind of people you want to make members of the U.N. or any other organization for that matter.
So as the Ambassador there and as one committed to ending anti-Semitism, I hope you will lend America's weight and the influence that you have in that position any way you can to help the Hungarian people see to it that anti-Semitism is ruled out of Hungary and any other Eastern European country.
Mr. CORNSTEIN. Well, I appreciate your comments, Senator. And as I said in my statement, I really want to engage not just with the Government but with the Hungarian people. I have found in my lifetime, unfortunately, when I have experienced some anti-Semitism, the best way to correct that is to be amongst the people, get out as much as you can, and show that you are the type of individual that they would like to meet and to have as a friend.
Senator ISAKSON. Well, I can identify with that. I am not Jewish, but my last name is Isakson. But I love when people come to me later and apologize to me for saying something they thought might have offended me. And I wondered why they thought that and finally realized one day why they did. So I appreciate your awareness of that.
Mr. CORNSTEIN. With Cornstein, it has never been a problem, Senator. [Laughter.]
Senator ISAKSON. And it is not with Isakson either.
That is the rest of my questions. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you so much.
Senator Cardin?
Senator CARDIN. Well, I want Senator Isakson to know that we consider you in our minion. So we will include you.
Mr. Cornstein, first of all, I appreciate our opportunity to visit and your commitment in regards to the human rights issues as it relates to Hungary and its current trend. And I very much appreciate your statement today very clearly pointing out your mission to promote American values that are really being challenged today by the current government in Hungary.

So I just want you to understand that this committee wants to work with you. I usually ask every nominee how they are going to advance human rights and American values and that we will be following up with you.

I also am on the Helsinki Commission, which is very much interested in the issue that Senator Isakson mentioned and the rise of anti-Semitism, but also the human rights issues and the concern about Hungary, which is a member state of the OSCE and their failure to live up to commitments that they made under the Helsinki agreement.

So I look forward to working with you in regards to that.

Ms. Wolcott, I want to try to understand how we are going to proceed. I disagree with the President's decision as it relates to pulling out of the Iran nuclear agreement. I think it is a mistake for American national security interests. But he has done it.

Now what is the game plan moving forward? And I am trying to understand how the United States will participate in the IAEA. We are members of the IAEA, but we are not members of the Iran nuclear agreement family any longer. We, as I understand it, give a great deal of information to the IAEA as it relates to Iran's compliance with the nuclear agreement. Now that we are no longer a member of that agreement, how do we work with the IAEA to make sure that Iran is complying with an agreement that we pulled out of? Could you explain that to me?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Senator, thank you.

First, I might just start by saying being outside of the Government right now, I have not been in the discussions about the strategies developed.

Senator CARDIN. But you understand how the IAEA works.

Ms. WOLCOTT. Of course, thank you.

There are a lot of issues we will be working on with the IAEA regardless of—I mean, separate and apart from the Iran issue. I do not know what the plan is beyond the sanctions right now. I heard publicly today that discussions are going on with the Europeans. And I assume we will continue to work closely with the IAEA, as we always have. We have a long history of not only day-by-day work, but of course, we are the largest financial contributor of technical expertise giver, intelligence provider to the IAEA. I assume that will continue, but I do not have any inside information.

Senator CARDIN. So if I understand correctly, the enforcing agency for the Iran nuclear agreement is the IAEA working through the United Nations in regards to the enforcement information. And they are the entity that requests inspections. They are the entity that gives information as to whether Iran is in compliance or out of compliance with the agreement. They report, as I understand it, to the United Nations. And we are a member of the United Nations. We are a member of the IAEA, but we are not a member now of the nuclear agreement parties.

How do you envision your role in Vienna working in the IAEA? How do we go forward? The United States is perhaps the most important element, particularly in the intelligence field, as to what is happening in Iran. Now that we do not have the protection of the agreement with our partners and we do not have the access in the IAEA to demand enforcement of the agreement, how do we proceed?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Thank you, Senator.

The IAEA does the monitoring and verifying but they do not really establish compliance. The member states do that. And as a member of the board of governors, I assume we would still have a say in what is going on with Iran. They have safeguards agreements in place. Right now, they are provisionally instituting the additional protocol. So there are a lot of things still going on outside of the JCPOA with Iran through the IAEA. Again, this has been less than 24 hours and I was not part of this decision. So I do not know a lot about any specific plans, but I assume we would go and still participate as we always have. For instance, before there was a JCPOA, we were still concerned about Iran. I was back there doing it a dozen years ago.

Senator CARDIN. But as I understand, there is particular attention—I understand that they report to the board of the governors and I also understand they report to the United Nations because it is under the United Nations. I fully get that. But this is a different protocol than any other country—Iran with the IAEA. It is different than any other country. And additional resources have been made available in order to deal with this.

Without the United States’ participation in the agreement, do you have a view as to how that will impact our ability to have confidence about Iran’s nuclear program?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Senator, honestly, I think it is too soon for me to be able to give a very informed answer on that. This is a brand new decision and one I was not involved in. So the only thing I would hope for, if confirmed, is that I will have the chance to get the guidance as it is going forward. I think these things are evolving and developing right now. So I do not really have much more I could say about it right now.

Senator CARDIN. Would you commit, if confirmed, to come back to this committee either in an open or closed session and be able to answer these questions for us?

Ms. WOLCOTT. I certainly will, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator KAINE. Thank you.

And congratulations to all the nominees.

Ms. Wolcott, I will pick up there. And I recognize you have not been immediately in government. You have made that very clear. But we have had outreach from our European allies. We have had outreach from the IAEA Director. We have had testimony in Armed Services committee hearings by Secretary Mattis, public hearings, that have indicated that Iran is in compliance with the JCPOA.

Do you personally have any knowledge to suggest that that is not true?

Ms. WOLCOTT. I have no specific knowledge that that is not true, Senator.

Senator KAINE. Thank you.
We have also had testimony both by the Director General of the IAEA as he has met with us periodically and similar testimony from Secretary Mattis before the Armed Services committee recently where they described the inspection regime of the JCPOA as very robust, as one of the most robust in the world. Do you have any knowledge to suggest that those statements are untrue?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Senator, I do not have any knowledge of it. I know there have been concerns expressed about the military sites by various people.

Senator KAINE. Is it your understanding—it is my understanding. I just want to make sure I am right about this—that the JCPOA has inspection requirements of Iran for approximately 25 years that exceed the additional protocol of the NPT and then after the 25th year under the agreement, if it were still active, Iran would make a permanent commitment to follow the NPT? Is that your understanding of the agreement?

Ms. WOLCOTT. I believe that is the case, Senator. But it is an Iranian commitment.

Senator KAINE. If the U.S. has walked away from the deal, do you think it makes it more likely that Iran might not comply with some aspects of the deal?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Well, again, I think the concern was not just the deal. The deal is one part of it, but they do not give us a lot of confidence—Iran does not—by what they are doing otherwise. And I think that was why the President wanted to look at the intent and made his decision.

Senator KAINE. And I will just state I understand that that is what the President said. And that is why this committee and the Congress gave the President significant tools to sanction Iran many months ago on these unrelated activities that the White House has as yet not used. We have been very puzzled about why we have given these additional sanctions tools that the White House has chosen not to use and instead blown up a deal that our allies and the IAEA says that they are complying with.

But you would agree with me, would you not, that if Iran decides to allow fewer inspections, the inspections over and above the NPT and the additional protocol, if they take the U.S.’s unilateral action as an encouragement to reduce transparency in their program, that is not going to be a good thing for the U.S. or anybody? Would you not agree with me on that?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Well, I think it says more about Iran than it says about anything, Senator.

Senator KAINE. How about if I make it real simple? Fewer inspections are bad. Would you agree with me on that?

Ms. WOLCOTT. I agree, Senator.

Senator KAINE. Okay.

Mr. Cohen, good to see you again. We visited in Baghdad when I was with you once before. You had had a position in the State Department dealing, as I understand, in recent years, with Greece, Turkey, and Cyprus. And in that position, you must have dealt significantly with the crisis that refugee flows impose upon those nations. Am I correct in making that assumption?

Mr. COHEN. Yes, sir.
Senator Kaine. And you would also agree with me, would you not, that the flow of refugees around the world, whether it is driven by climate, civil war, disease, terrorism, that tens of millions of people, refugees and migrants, is not only a humanitarian challenge for the refugees but also imposes significant security concerns on nations, including the United States? You would agree with me on that.

Mr. Cohen. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator Kaine. I am trying to understand why the administration in September pulled the United States out of the U.N. Global Compact on Migration. It was something that was devised as a best practice forum under the leadership of the United States in 2016. It was not an incursion on anybody's sovereignty. It was an effort to get together and grapple with this problem we are discussing and try to find best practices and share them.

Do you understand why the United States, alone among the world's nations, decided to pull out of the U.N. Global Compact on Migration in December 2016?

Mr. Cohen. I do not know the answer to that, Senator. But I can tell you throughout my career I have worked with refugees and with U.N. refugee agencies from my first tour in Thailand where I worked with UNHCR to my time in Baghdad to this current assignment as the Deputy Assistant Secretary grappling with Turkey, which hosts over 3 million refugees, Greece, which is bearing a very heavy burden in the aftermath of a financial crisis, hosting something like 75,000 refugees.

Senator Kaine. Your nomination gives me some hope that though we may have alone pulled out of this global compact, we will have somebody at the U.N. who understands the dimensions of this issue. And I am glad you are nominated for the position.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair. Thank you.

Senator Menendez?

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cohen, let ask you. Members of the U.N. Human Rights Council include human rights violators such as Cuba, Venezuela, China, Saudi Arabia. These undemocratic countries outrageously focus on Israel and America while ignoring atrocities committed in states like Syria and Iran. The council has passed more resolutions condemning Israel than the rest of the countries in the world combined. Additionally, it maintains a permanent agenda item, item 7, that requires that Israel's behavior is raised at every Human Rights Council meeting.

Will you commit to working to eliminate agenda item 7? And how do we best work to rid the United Nations of its institutional anti-Israel bias?

Mr. Cohen. I absolutely commit to that, Senator. It will be one of my high priorities, if confirmed.

We have been working and making some progress in the Human Rights Council in reducing the number of anti-Israel resolutions. They used to be something like 60 percent of all the resolutions that came out of there. It is much lower now. We still have a long way to go.
Part of the challenge is agenda reform, particularly agenda item 7, but also consolidating agenda items so that we are not being wasteful in that council.

Another challenge is making sure that the membership is more representative of countries that have strong human rights records rather than ones that have atrocious ones. And if confirmed, I will work hard on that together with Ambassador Haley. We are trying hard to get especially small countries that have outstanding human rights records to stand for seats in the council, and the council will be a better body if we can achieve that.

Senator Menendez. On a different subject matter, are you familiar with UNFICYP, the U.N. mission in Cyprus?

Mr. Cohen. Yes, sir, I am. I was the Deputy Chief of Mission in Cyprus from 2008 to—— Senator Menendez. How do you view that mission?

Mr. Cohen. It is a critical mission. It has been separating forces that were at war since 1964. The mission is as old as I am. It is a challenging mission but it is a special mission, and it is a mission the Greek Cypriots and the Greeks find it extremely important; the Turkish Cypriots and the Turks somewhat less so. From my perspective, it has been a vital element of keeping the peace of the island.

Senator Menendez. So in the past, the U.S. Permanent Representative at the U.N. has given a hard time to Cyprus during the deliberations to continue that mission, often connecting the presence of the force to the progress in the negotiations. But in my view, this penalizes Cyprus because Turkey is the military occupier, and it wants peacekeepers out. At a time that Turkey is becoming, from my perspective more belligerent in the region, going into the exclusive economic zone shared by Israel and Cyprus, and taking a series of other actions, including bombing the Kurds that are our allies in our fight in Syria, would you commit to being an advocate with Ambassador Haley to preserving that mission in the days ahead?

Mr. Cohen. Yes, Senator. I will commit to working to preserve the mission. We are also, though, looking at every mandate renewal as it comes up against five principles for peacekeeping, one of which is that it support a political solution. And I am hopeful, after seeing what has happened on the island in the last few weeks, that we may be seeing the sparks of a new opening to work toward a political solution.

Senator Menendez. Yes, I am hopeful too. But our big problem here is Turkey. At the end of the day, if Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots were left to their own devices, we would probably have peace. But Turkey, with its most militarized per capita in the world in northern Cyprus, with its hostilities in the exclusive economic zone seeking to interfere with the international rights of Cyprus and other countries, I just do not think we can look away from that reality.

Mr. Cornstein, Hungary is a really important assignment because I wish that Prime Minister Orban would remember his roots where he came from originally, what he viewed originally.

Of course, the European Union works by unanimity, and to the extent that we have had European Union support to pursue our sanctions against Russia for their annexation of Crimea, their invasion and continuing occupation of eastern Ukraine, of the realities of their attempts to affect elections throughout the globe, including ours, when one country breaks away, you break away that solidarity.

So can we receive from you a commitment that you will be advocating strongly to the prime minister that he should be staying within the international order of the European Union on these sanctions until Russia reverts and returns to the international order?

Mr. CORNSTEIN. Thank you for the question, Senator.
Yes, you have my commitment entirely on that. And I would hope that working with the prime minister and also engaging the Hungarian people, that they would understand that this is an important role.

Senator MENENDEZ. I have a couple other questions, Mr. Chairman. I do not know if other members do.

The CHAIRMAN. You can keep going.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Pedrosa, you come way ahead of the curve here because of your wife is such an exceptional person, as I am sure all of the wives and spouses are here. But I happen to know her. And so before you testified, you were ahead of the curve already. But that does not mean you get off scot-free.

So I want to get a sense of what you consider the challenges of the agency that you are going to be nominated to, particularly vis-a-vis what is happening in the hemisphere economically, such as Venezuela, and the challenges of China’s participation. I know you are not there yet, but you have been practicing in the region. Give me a sense of the overview that you have in that regard as it relates to the work that the Inter-American Development Bank will do in the context of those realities.

Mr. PEDROSA. Thank you, Senator, for the question, and thank you, Senator, for your leadership in this area both in the region and generally. And thank you, of course, for the kind words about my wife. I could not agree with you more.

Senator MENENDEZ. You are a smart man. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEDROSA. Thank you, Senator.

Senator, I think the obvious major challenge in the region is Venezuela. And today that challenge is finding a way to restore democracy, finding a way to improve and help with the humanitarian crisis, notwithstanding the fact that Maduro regime is refusing international humanitarian aid. The short-term problems of tomorrow will breed the destabilization in its neighbors caused by the massive humanitarian crisis in Venezuela and the mid-term to long-term problem or issue will be once democracy is restored, the reconstruction and rebuilding of that country.

As you correctly point out, I am not on the ground at the IDB yet, but it is my strong hope that if I am fortunate enough to be confirmed, I can be part particularly of that solution to that final problem, the reconstruction and rebuilding of that country. I think that is critical not only for Venezuelans but for the entire hemisphere to have a stable, free Venezuela and one that can return to the economic prosperity that that country once had.
Senator Menendez. I would urge you, when you get there, which signifies my support of your nomination, that in fact looking at China and its engagement in the region is incredibly important. They are eating our lunch. And so your institution would be very important in trying to counteract American interests compared to what is happening with the Chinese in the region.

Finally, Ms. Wolcott, let me ask you. Do you affirm the U.S. moratorium on nuclear testing?

Ms. Wolcott. The administration has said so in its National Security Strategy.

Senator Menendez. And you echo that view.

Ms. Wolcott. I do. I think the way it was worded is that we support the moratorium. We would encourage other countries to do so, and the only reason that there would be a test on our part would be to verify the safety and effectiveness of the arsenal.

Senator Menendez. Now, at the IAEA, I would assume—and correct me if I am wrong—that one of the strongest advocacy will be making sure that we have the highest standards, particularly as it relates to safeguards agreements. Is that a fair statement?

Ms. Wolcott. Yes, sir.

Senator Menendez. So is it the United States’ policy to encourage all states, particularly those with civilian nuclear programs, to sign an additional protocol to their safeguards agreements with the International Atomic Energy Agency?

Ms. Wolcott. Senator, in my past experience—I believe it is the same now—we have always encouraged all the countries around the world to have an additional protocol in force.

Senator Menendez. And the reason for that is because that creates a greater safeguard for the world, as well as for us. Is that not true?

Ms. Wolcott. It gives more access to the IAEA.

Senator Menendez. And therefore greater security.

Ms. Wolcott. That is the idea. Yes, sir.

Senator Menendez. So is it your opinion that the United States should insist that Saudi Arabia implement the IAEA additional protocol before it enters into a nuclear cooperation agreement with them?

Ms. Wolcott. Sir, my personal view is we should always have the highest standards of safeguards and safety, and I would always support that.

Senator Menendez. Which would mean the additional protocols.

Ms. Wolcott. Well, that is my personal opinion.

Senator Menendez. Well, we will start with that.

You know, one of the things with appointments of nominees is that while obviously you will do whatever the administration wants you to do—I understand that, but you can be advocates internally for what that should be. And it is my hope, whether we are trying to pursue democracy and oppose the xenophobia and anti-Semitism in Hungary, whether that is about ending the anti-Semitism at the United Nations and finding more human rights entities that are not violating the very essence of what they are supposed to be pursuing or whether it is the highest safety standards, that you are going to be advocates for that. So I hope hearing that is your personal opinion is also your advocacy. If you do not win, you do not win. But at least I hope that that is what you are doing when you get the job.

Ms. WOLCOTT. Thank you, Senator. That is certainly what I have done in the past.

Senator MENENDEZ. All right. Thank you all.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Shaheen?

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cornstein, I had the opportunity to visit Hungary last fall and to meet directly with a number of officials from the Hungarian Government with a bipartisan delegation. And one of the examples we heard of the anti-Semitism that you so accurately addressed in your opening remarks is the law that they have passed with respect to Central European University, which the concern is that because of the supporters of that university, that Hungary has introduced specific new requirements that try to put this institution out of business.

Will you commit that as Ambassador, you will urge the Hungarian officials to reassess their position on this university and any other universities that may be in violation of their law, which is, as I said, deliberately targeting this university because of its support from outside the Government and the country?

Mr. CORNSTEIN. Thank you for that important question.

I definitely shall and not just for the interests of the United States, but more so for the interest of the people in Hungary and the administration and economically as well. I mean, having all of those students there, their families, their friends coming over, it would be in my view a crime to see that. And it is not going away. It will move to Vienna most likely if it is out of Hungary. So I would encourage the Government that this is something that they should maybe take a step back, let that university prevail and all learning institutions prevail.

Senator SHAHEEN. Absolutely. Thank you, and thank you for your opening remarks that reference the importance of democratic institutions. The backsliding in Hungary is very troubling.

Mr. Cohen, I want to pick up a little bit on Senator Menendez's comments about the peacekeeping forces because there have been a number of questions raised in various sectors in the United States about our support for those peacekeeping forces and whether they are really doing the job that we want them to do. And while I certainly agree there are issues that need to be addressed, one place where I have heard firsthand and had a chance to see the impact of U.N. peacekeeping forces is in Lebanon where their work with the Lebanese army and military has really made a huge difference.

So can you speak to how important you think it is for us to continue to support that peacekeeping force in Lebanon?

Mr. COHEN. Absolutely. First, let me say something about peacekeeping forces in general.

The tool of U.N. peacekeeping is extremely valuable, extremely important. According to a recent GAO study, it is about eight times less expensive for us than deploying American forces to take care of problems like this. Great global problems call for collective action, and international peacekeeping through the U.N. gives us a tool, an effective tool, to do that. It also gives us a way to share the burden and share the costs. And one of the things that we need to do at the U.N. is find a more equitable burden-sharing mechanism because it is not right that one country bears more than a quarter of the costs for international peacekeeping.

In terms of Lebanon in particular, I know there have been concerns about the mission not being able to fulfill its full mandate, and that is an ongoing challenge. It is a difficult operating environment. But having served in Israel and seen the value that the mission there brings to people on both sides of the border, I agree with you. It is an important mission and one that needs to be supported.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Ms. Wolcott, I would like to discuss your work as a commissioner on the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom. New Hampshire is home to an Indonesian community that has come to the United States fleeing religious persecution. The 2017 International Religious Freedom Report details continued violations of freedom of religion throughout Indonesia and lists the country as tier 2 in its designations.

Can you detail some of the instances that led the commission to rank Indonesia in the way that you did as not a welcoming country for Christians and other religious minorities?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

Yes. The trend is not good in Indonesia, and that is really a big part of it, is they are discriminatory against minority religions and Christians. They have blasphemy laws on the books that are extremely unfair and frankly like every country that has them, they should get rid of them.

Senator SHAHEEN. And can you explain for everybody what those blasphemy laws are?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Thank you.

Blasphemy laws basically are laws in many countries that say somebody can accuse another person of blaspheming the Prophet, for instance, and they are arrested and often in jail and sometimes even on death row for that. So they are extremely egregious laws really.

Senator SHAHEEN. And for Christians or religious minorities that might have to go to Indonesia, did the commission find that there is some reason to believe that they might be in danger because of what is happening in the country there?

Ms. WOLCOTT. Senator, I am not sure that we determined that precisely. I know that we are very concerned about the situation there for minorities and Christians. I do not recall discussing specifically if Christians went back, if that was considered a specific threat. But I would have sympathy for folks that were concerned about that.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I want to thank all of you for being here. I have to say I think each of you have acquitted yourselves very, very well. I am always inspired by people who end up being nominated for these positions and the humility that you show and the desire to serve our country and the way you prepare for these hearings. So thank you, many of you, for your past public service. I look forward to all of you being confirmed.

I know that our office has questioned and met with you extensively. And so I have no questions.

The record will remain open until the close of business on Friday. And my sense is you will desire to answer those questions promptly, and hopefully you will be to your nominated posts very, very soon.

But thank each of you for your desire to serve our country in this way.

And with that, the meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:25 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Jackie Wolcott by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. Does the IAEA have enough funds to verify the mission in North Korea?

Answer. If the IAEA is called upon to play this role in North Korea, the United States would work with other member states to ensure that the IAEA has the appropriate resources to provide the necessary monitoring and verification called for in any agreement.

Question 2. What do you see as the main challenges facing the IAEA in the coming years?

Answer. As IAEA membership grows and the number of nuclear facilities increases, the demands on the IAEA’s safeguards resources will increase as the amount of material under safeguards continues to grow. Another challenge is to maintain political support for the Agency’s diverse missions, particularly nuclear security, in the face of competing priorities and interests of its Member States.

Question 3. Is it in the national security interest of the U.S. to fully fund the Preparatory Commission of the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty (CTBTO)?

Answer. Yes. The President’s FY 18 budget fully funds the U.S. contribution to the CTBTO Preparatory Commission (PrepCom), of whose budget, approximately 85 percent is devoted to developing, operating, and maintaining the International Monitoring System and the systems which support it, such as the International Data Center. I pledge that, if confirmed, I will work with Congress to ensure our support for the PrepCom is consistent with U.S. law and supports U.S. leadership on non-proliferation issues, including international efforts to ensure our ability to detect nuclear tests by North Korea and potentially others in the future.

Question 4. As the nominee to represent the United States at the IAEA, what impact do you expect that a U.S. withdrawal from an international non-proliferation agreement approved by the United Nations Security Council will have on our global non-proliferation efforts?

Answer. U.S. withdrawal from the JCPOA should make clear to all the United States commitment to ensuring an effective global nuclear nonproliferation regime, rather than continuing to signal that the U.S. would compromise on a flawed deal that does not meet the requirements of that regime in the long term.

Question 5. Do you expect it to have a devastating impact on your ability to advocate for strong non-proliferation objectives at the IAEA?

Answer. The IAEA recognizes that the United States has long been the leading supporter of a strong IAEA. If confirmed, I will work to maintain the close, supportive relationship we have long had with the IAEA.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JACKIE WOLCOTT BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for International Organization Affairs, I had lead responsibility for U.S. participation in the U.N. Human Rights Commission from 1990–1993, and again in 2003. The United States worked to spotlight countries with egregious human rights records, including Iran, China, North Korea and others, and to support creation of Special Rapporteurs to investigate and report on specific countries or situations. I led the campaign in 2003 against Libya being elected to Chair the UNHRC. While Libya ultimately was elected, the U.S. called for the first ever vote on the chairmanship, which precluded Libya's election by acclamation. At the time, this effort was applauded by Members of Congress, NGOs, and press worldwide.

Most recently I was Executive Director of the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom (USCIRF) for six years, and am just completing a two-year term as USCIRF Commissioner. In these positions I have advocated for religious minorities and others around the world that face persecution because of their beliefs. I personally encouraged and was part of the creation of the International Panel of Parliamentarians for Freedom of Religion or Belief (IPPFORB), a network of legislators who are committed to Article 18 of the U.N. Universal Declaration of Human Rights and to advocate for religious freedom around the world. At its onset, a handful of parliamentarians met with USCIRF and together we developed and launched this effort at the Nobel Peace Center in 2014. The network has grown to more than 100 parliamentarians, representing many religions, political parties, and regions around the world.

As Commissioner, I adopted and advocated for religious prisoner of conscience Pastor Nguyen Cong Chinh of Vietnam and his wife, Tran Thi Hong, as did some members of Congress and human rights organizations. After serving six years of his 11-year sentence, Pastor Chinh was released from prison to exile in July 2017, and he and his family are now safely living in North Carolina. Pastor Chinh personally presented me with a plaque in April 2018 that reads: "Ambassador Jackie Wolcott has made great efforts to mobilize human rights and religious freedom in Vietnam. Particularly, the intervention successfully rescued Pastor Nguyen Cong Chinh from the prison. VPEF [Vietnamese People's Evangelical Fellowship], Pastor Nguyen Cong Chinh & Family are always grateful to Ms. Jackie Wolcott and the United States Government."

I have written or co-authored op eds and spoken publicly on behalf of human rights and religious freedom.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues at the United Nations? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy at the U.N.? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights concerns in the United Nations today include addressing the situations in Iran, Syria, the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK), Burma, South Sudan, and the situation in Russian-occupied areas like Crimea. Of course, the protection of human rights is deeply intertwined with international peace and security, and situations in many countries, including for example Syria, are addressed across a wide variety of U.N. entities, primarily in New York and Geneva, but less so in Vienna.

If confirmed, I will work closely with my colleagues at our various U.N. missions to vigorously advocate for human rights and to ensure that the largely technical work done in Vienna complements our human rights efforts at various U.N. venues. I will always push back on any anti-Israel bias and incremental attempts to promote Palestinian “statehood” in Vienna-based organizations.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face at the U.N. in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. There are several potential obstacles to addressing human rights concerns in the aforementioned crises. A critical step in addressing the human rights issues will be encouraging our partners and other nations to play constructive roles. As the National Security Strategy stated, “Repressive leaders often collaborate to subvert free societies and corrupt multilateral organizations.” I will remain alert to and ready to address any such efforts in Vienna.
Although human rights resolutions are not run in the Vienna-based U.N. bodies, if confirmed, I will coordinate with our missions in New York and Geneva to ensure that our work in Vienna complements our human rights efforts in the appropriate U.N. venues. And as mentioned in the previous response, I will always push back against any anti-Israel bias and increased attempts to promote Palestinian “statehood” in Vienna IOs.

Question 4. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed one of the first issues I will communicate to the Mission staff is my 100 percent commitment to promoting EEO principles, diversity and best practices at the Mission, and my expectation that each and every supervisor will do the same. I plan to foster a work environment that respects and recognizes the role and contribution of each employee, and will look consistently for development and promotion opportunities for all. I will meet individually with each employee, listen actively, ask for input and remain accessible to all.

Question 5. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the U.S. Mission to the U.N. Vienna offices are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, working with my DCM, I will ensure that Mission employees have the training they need to carry out their responsibilities, including those relating to mentoring, diversity and equal employment opportunities for all. This includes mandatory Diversity Awareness Training for Managers and Supervisors, and I would also be sure that employees are made aware of all opportunities available through the State Department, including additional training on these issues. I personally will be an active mentor and will lead by example.

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Now that the President has withdrawn the United States from the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action, is your expectation that the U.S. relationship with the International Atomic Energy Agency will change in any way?

Answer. The IAEA recognizes that the United States has long been the leading supporter of a strong IAEA. If confirmed, I will work to maintain the close, supportive relationship we have long had with the IAEA.

Question 9. Now that the U.S. is no longer a party to the JCPOA, will it be harder for the U.S. to be apprised of Iranian nuclear activities?

Answer. In addition to the IAEA’s general responsibility to report to the IAEA Board of Governors on compliance of states with their safeguards obligations, the IAEA reports issues related to verification of Iran’s nuclear-related commitments in the JCPOA to the IAEA Board of Governors and, as appropriate, the United Nations Security Council. As the United States is a member of both bodies, I expect the United States to be able to remain apprised of Iranian nuclear activities.
severe religious freedom violations, meaning those that are systematic, ongoing, and egregious." The Commission concluded that, "religious freedom in Iran continued to deteriorate"—specifically citing the persecution of Christians and other religious groups. The Commission said, "Christian converts and house church leaders faced increasingly harsh sentencing; many were sentenced to at least 10 years in prison for their religious activities. Religious reformers and dissenters faced prolonged detention and possible execution." What is your assessment of religious freedom in Iran?

Answer. The Iranian Government continues to create a hostile atmosphere for members of religious minority groups. Since 1999, Iran has been designated a "Country of Particular Concern" (CPC) under the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998 for engaging in or tolerating "systematic, ongoing, and egregious" violations of religious freedom. The Secretary of State most recently re-designated Iran as a CPC in December.

I condemn Iran’s ongoing violations of human rights, including religious freedom, and call on the Iranian Government to respect its own laws and the international laws and treaties it has signed under international human rights law; to cease persecution of members of religious minorities and those whose beliefs differ from state doctrine; and to release those who have been unjustly imprisoned or held for political or religious beliefs.

Many religious groups, including Christians, Jews, Bahá’ís, Zoroastrians, Sunni and Sufi Muslims, as well as Shia Muslims holding beliefs at variance with state-approved doctrine, continue to face discrimination—including a lack of educational and economic opportunities—on the basis of their religious beliefs. They face harassment, unjust imprisonment, and varying restrictions on their exercise of religious freedom.

Question 2. As you know, the administration is engaged in high-level negotiations with the North Korean regime about its nuclear program. If a total, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization agreement were reached, the IAEA would likely play a key role in verifying North Korea’s compliance with any commitments related to its nuclear program. Based on your experience and preparation for this hearing, what would be the key elements or characteristics of an IAEA mission in North Korea that would be sufficiently robust to ensure complete North Korean compliance with any nuclear commitments? Do you believe that the IAEA is capable of implementing an effective inspection regime in North Korea? What reforms or changes are needed to ensure that the IAEA would be up to the task in North Korea?

Answer. The IAEA's strong reputation as an independent nuclear verifier would bolster international confidence in the verification of any denuclearization agreement with North Korea. Robust IAEA verification would require access to all nuclear material, information, and locations necessary to implement any IAEA mandate in the DPRK. If the IAEA is called upon to play this role in North Korea, and if confirmed, I will work with other Member States to ensure that the IAEA has the appropriate resources to provide the necessary robust monitoring and verification.

Question 3. The U.S. Mission to International Organizations in Vienna (UNVIE) works with several major organizations, including the U.N. Commission on International Trade Law. Among the Commission's mandates is, "promoting the codification and wider acceptance of international trade terms, provisions, customs and practices." Do you believe it is in America's interests to implement a strategic and multilateral effort to persuade countries who engage in international predatory economic and trade practices to comply with "international trade terms, provisions, customs, and practices"? Does that include China? If confirmed, as our nation's representative to the Vienna Office of the U.N. do you commit to pressing the U.N. Commission on International Trade Law to fully fulfill this portion of its mandate—particularly with respect to China?

Answer. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) was established to promote the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade. Harmonization and unification of the law of international trade provides significant benefits to U.S. commercial actors by making consistent various legal frameworks governing cross-border transactions. These frameworks promote the rule of law and economic growth. Moreover, they make it easier for U.S. actors to engage in business abroad.

Negotiations at UNCITRAL include UNCITRAL members, other countries, international organizations and nongovernmental organizations. Resulting instruments address matters including mediation, insolvency, secured transactions and electronic commerce.

As UNCITRAL members, the United States and the People’s Republic of China participate in the development of UNCITRAL instruments. Included in these instruments are four treaties that are awaiting Senate approval: the Convention on Independent Guarantees and Standby Letters of Credit; the Convention on the Use of Electronic Communications in International Contracts; the Convention on the Assignment of Receivables in International Trade; and the Convention on Transparency in Treaty-Based Investor-State Arbitration. Each of these treaties are consistent with U.S. law and practice.

The United States, as well as the UNCITRAL Secretariat, encourages countries to become party to UNCITRAL conventions, enact UNCITRAL model laws and adopt principles recommended by UNCITRAL. If confirmed as the U.S. Representative to the Vienna Office of the United Nations, I will work along with my colleagues in Washington and capitals throughout the world to encourage countries, such as the People's Republic of China, to adhere to UNCITRAL instruments. As our message will be stronger where we are adhering to these instruments, we will be greatly assisted in this task should the Senate provide advice and consent to the four aforementioned treaties.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JONATHAN COHEN BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Voting Records

Question 1. For President Trump and Ambassador Haley have suggested tying U.S. foreign assistance to countries’ voting records in U.N. fora such as the Security Council and General Assembly. Do you agree with this approach?

Answer. The Security Council and the General Assembly are arguably the most important international bodies in the world, dealing with vital issues such as threats to peace and security, disarmament, development, humanitarian relief, human rights, the environment, and narcotics—all of which directly affect major U.S. interests. The American people pay 22 percent of the U.N. regular budget and the assessed budgets of major U.N. agencies—more than twice as much as the next highest donor country. It is crucial that our investment serve American interests. Bilateral and regional economic, strategic and political issues are important to U.S. interests. So is a country’s voting record at the United Nations. Therefore, I understand the voting records of states at the U.N. are one element, but not the sole factor, considered as decisions are made about foreign assistance, and for the reasons stated above, I support this approach.

U.N. Security Council

The Security Council has become increasingly gridlocked—with disagreements between the U.S. and western Europeans on one side, and Russia and China frequently aligned in opposition. This has crippled the Council’s ability to address the nightmarish situations in Syria and Yemen, and has led to inaction in numerous other hot spots.

Question 2. In your view, should the U.S. advocate for Security Council reform?

Answer. The United States advocates for U.N. Security Council reform within the Intergovernmental Negotiations (IGN) for U.N. Security Council Reform process, the framework created at the U.N. for member states to negotiate such reforms. The United States has participated actively in the IGN since its establishment. The IGN works on the basis of consensus and has sought to find common ground among member states with different visions of U.N. Security Council reform. I believe the United States should continue working with like-minded partners within the IGN to find ways to make the U.N. Security Council more efficient and effective.

Question 3. The Security Council has become increasingly gridlocked—with disagreements between the U.S. and western Europeans on one side, and Russia and China frequently aligned in opposition. This has crippled the Council’s ability to address the nightmarish situations in Syria and Yemen, and has led to inaction in numerous other hot spots. If so, what specific reforms do you think merit serious consideration?

Answer. The United States should continue to support a modest expansion of permanent and non-permanent membership of the U.N. Security Council. For any expansion to improve the effectiveness of the U.N. Security Council, we should consider the ability and willingness of any potential Council member to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security. The United States should remain opposed to any alteration or expansion of the veto.
The United States has expressed support for several member states that have expressed interest in becoming permanent members, should the U.N. Security Council expand, including Japan and India.

Participation of American Women

Question 4. While the U.S. gives significant funding for U.N. Peacekeeping, it contributes very few personnel to U.N. Peacekeeping operations. Currently, there are 57 U.S. personnel, of which only 7 are women, out of a total force of 91,000.

I know our diplomats work to increase the participation of women in the troop force contributions of other countries—which begs the question, why are there only 7 American women participating in U.N. peacekeeping activities?

Answer. The United States has been long been one of the strongest advocates for the Women, Peace and Security (WPS) agenda. We support U.N. Security Council Resolution 2242 (2015), which acknowledges the substantial link between women’s meaningful involvement in peace operations and the achievement of long-term, sustainable peace. Resolution 2242 sets targets to double the current rate of women’s participation as military and police peacekeepers (staff officers and military observers), which are currently about 4 and 7 percent respectively, by the end of 2018.

While still low, the number of women in peacekeeping has increased due in large part to U.S. efforts. In FY 2017, more than 32,100 military and police peacekeepers, including 1,475 females, participated in U.S.-funded peacekeeping training activities, including through the Global Peace Operations Initiative.

Countries receiving support through the Global Peace Operations Initiative increased their deployment of female military peacekeepers by 79 percent from 2010 to 2017, while during the same timeframe, non-GPOI partner countries’ deployment of female military peacekeepers decreased by 17 percent.

The Department of Defense manages United States deployments to United Nations peacekeeping operations. If confirmed, I pledge to maintain a dialogue with DoD to ensure the best, most qualified personnel are assigned to peacekeeping operations while striving to meet the requirements of the Women, Peace and Security Act of 2017.

Value of the U.N. to the U.S.

Question 5. As tempting as it may be to turn the U.N. into a scapegoat for the world’s problems, the U.N. system performs duties that are of immense value to the United States. What U.N. functions would you describe as being of the greatest value to the United States?

Answer. The Security Council and the General Assembly are arguably the most important international bodies in the world, dealing with such vital issues as threats to peace and security, disarmament, development, humanitarian relief, human rights, the environment, and narcotics—all of which can and do directly affect major U.S. interests. The American people pay 22 percent of the U.N. regular budget and the assessed budgets of major U.N. agencies—more than twice as much as the next highest donor country. Additionally, U.S. voluntary contributions amount to $5.3 billion, 58.7 percent of U.S. contributions to the U.N. System. It is crucial that our investment serve American interests.

The President has said that he believes the United Nations can be a much more accountable and effective advocate for human dignity and freedom around the world, and that the United Nations must reform if it is to be a more effective partner in confronting threats to peace and security. I share this view.

Arrears

Question 6. The U.S. has sometimes found itself in significant arrears to the U.N. Currently, the State Department estimates that the United States was likely to accumulate $274.6 million in peacekeeping arrears in FY 2017. Do you think failing to pay our bills in full and on time undermines our ability to work constructively with other members and with the U.N. management to pursue U.S. interests?

Answer. A critical function of the United Nations is maintaining international peace and security and assisting in conflict resolution. Supporting these efforts, as President Trump noted in his remarks at last year’s UNGA, is worth every dollar if the U.N. achieves its goals.

The United States is accumulating peacekeeping arrears as the result of not exceeding 25 percent of total peacekeeping assessments. This rate reflects both U.S. and the principle that no one country should pay more than one quarter of U.S. peacekeeping assessments. The 25 percent rate for peacekeeping assessments mandated under U.S. law is not new, having been first enacted into law in 1994.

As long as the actual U.S. peacekeeping assessment rate exceeds 25 percent, as it currently does, there will be arrears. There is an effort underway to obtain General Assembly agreement to reduce the actual U.S. peacekeeping assessment rate to 25 percent. I believe that is the best way to avoid the potential problems that arrears can cause. If confirmed, I will work energetically to persuade other member states to reduce the U.S. assessment rate and to ensure that the arrears do not negatively affect the ability of the U.S. to advance our interests at the United Nations.

Cyprus/UNFICYP

Question 7. What role do you think the Security Council should play in addressing Turkey’s belligerent actions in the Eastern Mediterranean and Aegean Sea, including Turkish naval efforts to obstruct hydrocarbons exploration in Cyprus’ Exclusive Economic Zone?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support longstanding U.S. policy recognizing the Republic of Cyprus’s right to develop its resources in its EEZ. The island’s oil and gas resources, like all of its resources, should be equitably shared between both communities on the island in the context of an overall settlement. I will discourage any actions or rhetoric that increase tensions. It is important that the countries in the region continue to create the conditions that will facilitate peaceful economic development and enable companies to operate in a stable and predictable environment. If confirmed, I will urge the Security Council to send the same message.

On UNFICYP, I will urge the Security Council to continue to review all peacekeeping missions through the prism of the U.S. peacekeeping principles.

Question 8. What are the administration’s priorities with respect to the Eastern Mediterranean and its bilateral relationship with Cyprus, and are you willing, if confirmed, to take further steps to enhance this relationship via your role at USUN?

Answer. Stability in the Eastern Mediterranean is a top priority for the administration. If confirmed, I would be willing to take steps to enhance the relationship between the United States and the Republic of Cyprus. I will continue to support the high-level U.S. engagement with the Republic of Cyprus on the settlement process and on the wide range of other issues of common concern to both countries.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JONATHAN COHEN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Through 32 years in the Foreign Service, I have promoted human rights and democracy in virtually every assignment, including by contributing to country human rights, trafficking in persons and religious freedom reports, and: as a refugee protection officer in Thailand; as the Desk Officer responsible for the OSCE's Human Dimension at the State Department; developing Holocaust education programming for the International Task Force for Holocaust Education, Remembrance and to counter the growth of neo-Nazism Research in Sweden and beyond; helping to establish the first post-Saddam Government in Iraq as part of the Coalition Provisional Authority; supporting the committee on Missing Persons and preserving cultural heritage in Cyprus; and hosting programs to support women’s rights, speaking out in support of minorities and religious freedoms, and developing a stabilization program to get Internally Displaced People home to areas liberated from ISIS as DCM in Baghdad. In my current position I led U.S. delegations seeking the liberation from wrongful imprisonment of U.S. citizens and U.S. Government employees in Turkey, pressed the Turks to end their extended State of Emergency, argued for the restoration of press freedoms in Turkey and testified before the Helsinki Commission on the weakening of democracy in Turkey under the State of Emergency.

I believe my contributions in this field have underscored the commitment of the U.S. Government and the American people to advancing human rights and democracy, improved conditions for thousands of Vietnamese, Cambodian and Lao refugees in Thai camps, put neo-Nazism in context for school children throughout Europe, placed Iraq on a path toward democratic governance, and helped over a million Iraqi IDPs get home quickly and safely after ISIS had deprived them of their most basic human rights and caused them to flee their homes. If confirmed, I will continue to champion human rights and democracy in the context of the United Nations.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues at the United Nations? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy at the UN? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights concerns in the United Nations today include addressing the situations in Iran, Syria, the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (DPRK), Burma, South Sudan, and the situation in Russian-occupied areas like Crimea. Of course, the protection of human rights is deeply intertwined with international peace and security, and situations in many countries, including for example Syria, are addressed across a wide variety of U.N. entities in Vienna, New York, and Geneva.

The U.N. must also remain a tool for the promotion of democracy and human rights norms. I believe the U.S. resolution, advanced at the 2017 United Nations General Assembly, on strengthening the role of the United Nations in enhancing periodic and genuine elections and the promotion of democratization must remain a key priority. Other important resolutions facing the United Nations include those on the protection of journalists, protection of human rights defenders, and the resolutions on freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly and association, and freedom of religion and belief. If confirmed, I will work closely with my colleagues at our various U.N. missions to vigorously advocate for resolutions that advance these priorities.

If confirmed, I will lobby like-minded states to improve the vote count on country-specific human rights resolutions and to pursue priorities that align with our own; a large number of votes in favor sends a strong message about the global community’s commitment to these issues. It is essential that the international community address human rights violations and abuses in these countries.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face at the U.N. in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. There are several potential obstacles to addressing human rights concerns in the aforementioned crises. Russia is unlikely to be cooperative with U.N. Security Council resolutions regarding Crimea and Syria, and we must continue to urge China to play a constructive role with regard to the human rights and humanitarian problems in the DPRK. A critical step in addressing these human rights issues will be encouraging other nations to play constructive roles. At the same time, we have been able to maintain cross-regional support for a number of resolutions on the human rights situations in those countries despite Russian and Chinese opposition.

I am also concerned about the efforts undertaken by a number of governments to suppress the legitimate activities of civil society and faith based organizations, including by human rights defenders, NGOs and journalists within the U.N. If confirmed, I will work to address reprisals against civil society representatives and faith based organizations for their engagement with U.N. or other international human rights mechanisms. I will also work with my colleagues to address the lack of NGO accreditation by the U.N. ECOSOC NGO committee which is mandated with accrediting civil society and faith based organizations to the United Nations system.

Question 4. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. This past year I was selected and served actively as a mentor in a pilot program connecting underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service with senior officers to help them chart a course to the senior ranks. I have played similar mentoring roles for subordinates of diverse backgrounds throughout my career and will continue to do so in the future. I am a strong supporter of EEO and will ensure that EEO principles are applied enthusiastically without exception in any workplace I supervise.

In 2011 I was nominated for the Arnold Raphel Award given to the State Department’s most outstanding mentor. The nomination cited me for “sustained and exemplary leadership and mentoring of Foreign Service employees in all phases of career development.” I was also commended for mentoring by the Office of Inspector General, whose lead for the 2010 Embassy Nicosia inspection wrote: “I have not seen a more conscientious or effective mentor of First and Second Tour employees in the many embassies I have inspected over the last five years.”
Question 5. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the U.S. Mission to the U.N. are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. The commitment to diversity, inclusiveness and EEO will be embedded in the work requirements of each supervisor under my charge, will be raised by me often, from introductory meetings to counseling sessions to routine work reviews, and will be underscored by my own comportment and my insistence that all employees under my supervision take required courses relevant to these principles.

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOSEPH CELLA BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. How do you intend to advance climate diplomacy with the Fijian Government?

Answer. The United States demonstrates leadership on climate issues, particularly through the application of innovation and market-friendly solutions to build more resilient and sustainable communities. This is critical in the context of Pacific Island countries, which rely heavily on natural resources such as coastal fisheries and limited aquifers which are under increasing pressure due to climate change. I would work with the Governments of all the countries to which I would be accredited, including Fiji, to advance our efforts across a broad range of environmental initiatives including universal access to affordable and reliable energy, and open, competitive markets that promote energy efficiency; supporting healthy reef systems and sound management of coastal fisheries; improved access to clean potable water; and the encouragement of sustainable agriculture which will enhance food security.

Question 2. Do you believe or accept the dire situation Fiji and other Pacific Island nations are facing from the effects of climate change?

Answer. Yes. I recognize that climate change and disaster risk resilience are priority issues for the Pacific Islands and intend to work with our partners to raise the capacity of Pacific Island communities, civil society, governments, and regional institutions to withstand frequent and crippling natural disasters and to enhance their resilience. If confirmed, I would seek to promote food and water security, health resilience, disaster risk reduction, and sustainable land practices.

Question 3. Do you believe it is in the interest of the U.S. Government to help our partners and allies in the Pacific region, like Fiji, become more resilient to the effects of climate change?

Answer. Yes. The National Security Strategy makes clear a free and prosperous world is in the interest of the United States, and I agree. I recognize that climate change and disaster risk resilience are priority issues for the Pacific Islands and intend to work with our partners to raise the capacity of Pacific Island communities, civil society, governments, and regional institutions to respond to the effects of climate change. If confirmed, I would seek to promote food and water security, health resilience, disaster risk reduction, and sustainable land practices.

Question 4. How will you explain the U.S. decision to leave the Paris Agreement to the current Presidency of the Convention overseeing the Agreement that we are turning away from?

Answer. I commend the Government of Fiji for its leadership as the President of the United Nations Climate Change Conference. Irrespective of our views on the Paris Agreement, the United States will continue to be a leader in clean energy and innovation. The United States has a strong record of reducing our own greenhouse gas emissions while growing our economy, through investments in technology, innovation, and entrepreneurship, and we will continue to lead in these areas.
Question 5. What is your view of China’s policy and actions?

Answer. China is playing a greater role in the international system and it clearly seeks to expand its influence. China, like the United States, has a positive role to play in the region in creating jobs, expanding educational opportunities, and promoting economic development. There is a need to improve economic connectivity through sustainable development and open access to high-quality infrastructure. But development financing should not result in unsustainable debt or compromise a country’s sovereignty. If confirmed, I would encourage the Governments to which I would be accredited to closely scrutinize all offers of assistance and ensure development projects adhere to high international standards in both quality and transparency.

Question 6. What do you think the U.S. and our partners ought to be doing in response?

Answer. Partnerships should be based on free and open principles and a shared interest in a peaceful, prosperous and resilient Pacific region. By “free” I mean free from coercion, that Pacific Island countries can pursue in a sovereign manner the paths they choose, and that they become more free in terms of good governance, fundamental rights, transparency, and anti-corruption. By “open” I mean open sea lines of communication and open airways, but also more open infrastructure in a way that drives integration and raises the standard of living throughout the region. I also mean open for free, fair and reciprocal trade. If confirmed, I would seek a results-oriented constructive relationship with China and work closely with our partners to build greater stability, security and economic opportunity throughout the region in line with international best practices.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Joseph Cella by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. With respect to human rights internationally, during my time working in the United States House of Representatives, I worked closely with the Chaldean Community in Michigan whose community suffered mightily at the hands of violent militias and terrorists. In so doing, I helped to ensure sufficient funding was provided to those in Iraq whose human rights as a minority population were being oppressed. This provided key financial support to provide relief for that community in their time of great need. I also worked closely with the organization In Defense of Christians, helping launch their initiative to protect the suffering Christians and other religious and ethnic minorities in Iraq, who were particularly brutalized with the rise of ISIS.

With respect to promoting democracy in the United States, since I first visited Washington, D.C. in 1987 on the Close Up High School Program, and soon thereafter becoming a precinct delegate, I was inspired to serve as a mentor to engage fellow citizens of all ages, on both sides of the aisle, or those who had yet to identify with a particular party, to engage in our democratic process, and the vital connection of service and citizenship in our great republic. And to this day, I carry on with this calling, mentoring those to engage heartily in our democracy in the arena of ideas involving public policy, public service and politics. This not only enriches citizen engagement but has also inspired various career callings to public service.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Fiji’s parliamentary democracy has been marred by four coup d’etats from 1987 to 2006. Over the past several years, Fiji has taken significant and positive steps, and the United States welcomed and supported Fiji’s reestablishment of democracy with national elections in 2014, which the United States supported and which international observers found to be free and fair. The 2018 national elections offer a further opportunity to cement Fiji’s position as a functional democracy. If confirmed, I plan to support elections, including a multilateral observer group, and will continue to encourage Fiji to allow its citizens, media, political parties, and organizations to fully participate in the political process.
In response to unfavorable press coverage of the Australian-run refugee detention center, Nauru instituted and still requires foreign journalists to pay a $6,000 non-refundable visa application fee. Of the few journalists to pay the fee and apply, the Government has denied several of these applications.

Tonga is undergoing a democratic transition in which powers have shifted from the nobility to a democratically elected cabinet. Since the 2006 riots, the monarchy has made significant concessions to democratically elected officials, though pro-democracy proponents continue to push for more. The November 2017 elections were another positive step; election monitors, including those from the U.S. Government, found the election to be free, fair, and credible.

Kiribati and Tuvalu are democracies; if confirmed, I will continue to support the development of responsive governance and a vibrant civil society. All five countries see high rates of gender-based violence and discrimination against marginalized populations. If confirmed, I pledge to work with the Governments of Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu to reduce violence and discrimination, and move towards a more equal society in each respective country. Additionally, women and some minority groups are prevented from owning land in these countries, which severely restricts both their economic independence and opportunities for success. If confirmed, I will encourage states to reform land ownership laws, make choices that improve governance and rule of law, and work with civil society activists and government officials to promote capacity building and good governance. I will continue to work with Pacific regional organizations and like-minded partners to make development more inclusive and protect human rights.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue working with the accredited governments to bolster their respective democratic institutions; eliminate discriminatory and restrictive laws; and fully respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including for a free and open media environment. Limited government capacity and resources remain obstacles to reform.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and non-governmental organization in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu. If confirmed, I will ensure the mission continues to scrupulously adhere to the Leahy Law in vetting candidates for U.S.-sponsored training, exchanges, and other relevant activities.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by those nations?

Answer. I am not aware of any reports of current political prisoners or prisoners of conscience in any of the five countries of accreditation. However, I am monitoring the ongoing Fiji Times sedition trial closely. I strongly believe that freedom of expression, including for speech and the media, strengthens democracy and needs to be protected. If confirmed and any additional cases arise, or if there are persons unjustly targeted, I will work with authorities in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu to raise our concerns.

Question 6. Will you engage with Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with authorities in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. I will also seek to exchange best practices between our governments.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Should I be confirmed, in my first 100 days it is my goal to meet with each and every individual at Post, being attentive to their needs and receiving their input. With my personal and professional experience, I will mentor and support them, and their families, as I am able; and working with their supervisors, I will engage them to do the same.

Leadership in public service is an honor and a responsibility. Leaders set the tone to help others advance. I will hold myself to the highest standards and expect the highest standards of performance from supervisors and other colleagues. I will provide the necessary resources, ensuring the safety and security of all of my colleagues, recognize them for their achievements, and ensuring they receive mentoring and support as the need may arise. And I will work to ensure that all have equal access to promotional opportunities.

And what will undergird and guide this is my adherence to the principle that there is inherent dignity and worth in every human being, the dignity of work, and that all human beings are created equal under the law, and they ought to be treated with dignity, worth, and respect.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. In my first 100 days, I will be meeting with the supervisors at post individually, ascertaining what they may be presently doing to foster such an environment that also recognizes there is inherent dignity and worth in every human being, the dignity of work, and that all human beings are created equal under the law, and accordingly, being treated with dignity, worth and respect. And based on what I learn, act accordingly.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Fiji, Kiribati, Nauru, Tonga, and Tuvalu?

Answer. No.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to David Cornstein by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. Prime Minister Orban cemented his constitutional majority in last month’s election and his rhetoric of “revenge” after the poll and the demonizing of human rights activists in pro-government media is simply unacceptable. This behavior fuels an ultra-nationalist, xenophobic climate that ultimately serves Vladimir Putin’s agenda to undermine democracy in Europe.

- Do you consider Orban’s Government aligned with NATO values and goals, particularly on democratic governance and the rule of law? Do you commit to personally confront the Hungarian Government’s anti-democratic and xenophobic behavior? How?
- What strategy will you have to respond to anti-democratic trends in Hungary? Do you believe that the administration’s current strategy is sufficient to address rollbacks in rule of law and the rise in anti-Semitism and xenophobia under Orban’s leadership? How will you seek to influence policy discussions in Washington on Hungary?
- How will you engage with embassies of our partners and allies in Budapest, to promote a clear, unified stand in support of transatlantic democratic values?

Answer. Hungary is a treaty ally of the United States. We share common values, which we have pledged to uphold as part of our OSCE and NATO commitments. The United States, through its Embassy in Hungary, seeks to build relationships both with the Government and the full range of Hungarian society, including the Jewish community and civil society. If confirmed, I will sustain this engagement, speak out against anti-Semitism, and urge like-minded partners to join me in denouncing hate speech, attacks, and discrimination and xenophobia in all forms.
As in other international relationships, the U.S. Government balances strategic engagement and principled defense of values in its relationship with Hungary. Criticism alone is not the basis for a successful approach, either to interests or values.
We are working to strengthen the bilateral relationship with Hungary by engaging on shared interests across the range of foreign policy priorities while continuing to speak up when needed on areas of concern. If confirmed, I will raise concerns with the Government whenever they might arise and will consider, based on the issue at hand, the best strategy for engagement, whether unilaterally or in conjunction with other Allies and partners.

Question 2. The Hungarian Government has sought since 2011 to issue passports and voting rights to Hungarians living outside the country’s borders. But a fraud scheme reportedly allowed dozens of foreign nationals to enter the United States through the Visa Waiver Program with Hungarian passports obtained under false identities. Press reports have indicated that 65 such individuals successfully entered the United States, and 30 remained in the country as of October.
- What is the administration’s understanding of the real identities of these 30 individuals, and the extent to which these individuals present national security risks to the United States?
- Do you commit to briefing the Senate Foreign Relations committee, along with appropriate counterparts from DHS and State, on this issue as soon as possible?
- What will you do, if confirmed, to address risks emerging from Hungary’s participation in the Visa Waiver Program?

Answer. The integrity of foreign passports is a condition of inclusion in the Visa Waiver Program, as a matter of national security, and I understand the U.S. Government has been discussing concerns with Hungary to bolster screening of individuals and the integrity of its procedures. If confirmed, I stand ready to continue to engle the Hungarian Government to ensure our concerns about homeland security are satisfactorily addressed.

If confirmed, I will prioritize working with the Department of State, the Department of Homeland Security, members of Congress, and the Hungarian Government to address this serious issue and to ensure that information is appropriately provided to Congress.

Question 3. Prime Minister Orban has maintained a close relationship with Russian President Vladimir Putin and other leaders who seek to undermine NATO.
- How do you believe that Orban’s closeness to Putin undermines NATO’s ability to counter Russia’s growing cyberattacks, disinformation, and other forms of hybrid warfare against the U.S. and other NATO member states?
- How would you raise concerns about Hungarian Government actions that run counter to our security cooperation?

Answer. Hungary is a NATO ally and we expect it, and all allies, to maintain the security and integrity of the Alliance. It is my understanding that this administration, including the State Department, continues to examine ways to work with Centhral European governmental and non-governmental partners to counter disinformation, enhance energy security, and strengthen governance, including initiatives bolstering regional partnerships to counter Russian malign influence efforts.
If confirmed, I will support—and bolster, where appropriate—these efforts.

Allies should be able mutually to address the full range of their concerns, particularly in the security field. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will not hesitate to express any concerns the United States has with regard to our security cooperation directly to the Hungarian Government as appropriate.

Question 4. Since the April election, Prime Minister Orban’s Government has pledged to adopt a so-called “Stop Soros” package of legislation that will further restrict operating space for civil society in Hungary. Orban reportedly also endorsed an “enemies list” that was circulated in pro-government media (and which included some names of American citizens) and has vowed revenge against those who opposed him.
- Do you support an increase in U.S. diplomatic support and foreign assistance to Hungarian civil society activists and journalists? In particular, do you com-mitt to supporting independent media, and to visible engagement with vulnerable activists in the country?
- What is your opinion of the “Stop Soros” legislation and campaign? How will you engage the Orban Government to cease cracking down on operating space for civil society and humanitarian groups?
• What specific steps will you take to protect the interests of those Americans who appear on this reported “enemies list?”

Answer. Although Central European and Baltic partners, including Hungary, have “graduated” from U.S. development assistance, the U.S. Government remains committed to helping these partners as appropriate through regional programming. Free expression is vital for the functioning of a pluralistic democracy; civil society actors and members of advocacy groups also have an important role to play in the democratic process. The U.S. Embassy has regular discussions with Hungarian officials about these issues. If confirmed, I will maintain—and increase, where appropriate—the Embassy’s efforts.

The Department of State has no greater responsibility than the safety and security of U.S. citizens overseas. My overarching duty if confirmed will be the safety and well-being of Americans—both private and official—within my area of responsibility.

Question 5. Recent reports have noted that the Hungarian Government has allowed corruption to proliferate, including a reported scheme in which offshore intermediaries essentially sold Hungarian residency permits that allowed purchasers to obtain EU residency, and another story about the former mayor of Orban’s hometown who increased his family’s wealth from $400,000 in 2010 to $1 billion this year.

• What is the administration’s position on the threat posed by corruption in Hungary? Are you prepared to support visa bans and asset freezes on corruption individuals in Hungary?

Answer. According to Transparency International’s Corruption Perceptions Index, Hungary ranked 27th out of 28 EU member states in 2017 for perceived corruption. U.S. businesses have expressed concern that corruption in the public sector negatively affected Hungary’s regional economic competitiveness.

If confirmed, I will continue work with Embassy Budapest to engage with the business community, supporting its efforts to increase transparency and reduce the risks of corruption. I would also engage civil society on issues of transparency and corruption by assisting those working on this issue.

Question 6. Academic freedoms are being undermined in Hungary, with the U.S.-accredited Central European University (CEU) at risk of having to leave the country next year due to legislation targeting certain foreign institutions. An agreement with the state of New York that would allow CEU’s continued functioning is awaiting the signature of the Hungarian Government since last fall.

• As Ambassador, will you work towards concluding a fair agreement between the two parties to permit CEU to remain in Budapest?

Answer. The United States has followed the Central European University issue closely, and continues to call for an expedient and transparent resolution that does not disadvantage U.S. institutions. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to David Cornstein by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While I have participated in a number of charitable and philanthropic endeavors over the course of my career, one item in particular that I am proud of includes my service as a member of the Board of the Jewish Community Relations Council. A key part of our efforts was working to assist in feeding and sheltering poorer residents of New York City. Another major effort we undertook was to help the Jewish people of France. As part of this work we advised the Jewish community in France regarding how to combat anti-Semitic feelings and how to work with the French Government to further their ability to remain safe and secure as they live, work, and practice their faith in France.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Hungary? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Hungary? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?
Answer. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report noted concerns about respect for certain human rights including evidence of growing anti-Semitism, allegations of mistreatment of migrants and challenges to freedom of speech.

The United States, through its Embassy in Hungary, seeks to build relationships both with the Government and across the full range of Hungarian society. Engagement with Hungarian officials, religious groups, civil society, media, and academic communities are important tools to promote democratic values. If confirmed, I will encourage my Hungarian counterparts to uphold our shared values and I will do everything in my power to combat intolerance and to promote religious freedom for all people. Additionally, as a proud American Jew, I take seriously concerns related to anti-Semitism, and, if confirmed, would make it a key priority to focus on ensuring that people of all faiths, including those of the Jewish faith, feel secure and comfortable living, working, and practicing their faiths in Hungary.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Hungary in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. Hungary and the United States share common values, including the importance of protecting and promoting human rights. Hungary’s civil society is diverse and active, with independent groups that report and advocate on the issues they care about around the country. However, some organizations report that they face pressure from a variety of sources. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Embassy’s regular engagement with civil society groups in Hungary.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Hungary? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Civil society is an important part of the democratic process and has a role to play in public awareness and public discourse. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society groups in Hungary. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy Law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Hungary to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Hungary?

Answer. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report states that there were no reports of political prisoners in Hungary. In the unlikely event that the situation changes, I will, if confirmed, actively engage with Hungary.

Question 6. Will you engage with Hungary on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will sustain the United States engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Hungary, including human rights activists and religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 7. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Throughout my career in both the public and private sectors I have worked with a diverse team from all walks of life. If confirmed, I will continue to set a tone of inclusivity, mutual respect and team work from day one.

Question 8. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed I will work closely with our team to create an environment that is respectful and inclusive for all. I will bring a hands on management style to the post and I will hold our team accountable through clear and open communication about our shared values and expectations.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Hungary?

Answer. No.

Question 12. Hungary's posture regarding Russia is unusual in the region to say the least. As the Senate Foreign Relations committee Report we issued in January suggested, Russian disinformation isn't just creeping in over the transom, the Hungarian Government has opened the door and put out a welcome mat. What is your plan for addressing malign Russian influence in Hungary?

Answer. Although Central European and Baltic partners, including Hungary, have "graduated" from U.S. development assistance, the U.S. Government remains committed to helping these partners in areas such as building resilience to Russian pressure. I understand the administration is looking for additional ways to work with Central European Governmental and non-governmental partners to counter disinformation, enhance energy security, and strengthen governance, including initiatives bolstering regional partnerships to counter Russian malign influence efforts.

Question 13. The Government of Hungary has advanced the protection of Christians as an element of its foreign policy, holding, for example, an exceptional ministerial-level side event on this subject with Russian Foreign Minister Lavrov at the most recent OSCE Ministerial. In Hungary itself, however, problems stemming from the 2011 law on religion (which stripped more than 300 registered religions of their status overnight) continue. Hungary has refused to implement decisions of the European Court on Human Rights, which concluded that Hungary is engaged in impermissible discrimination against some faiths. Within Hungary, there are emerging voices criticizing the Government's selective approach to funding, which is a combination of advancing traditional churches and political influence buys. Will you meet with Pastor Gabor Ivanyi, whose Methodist church, the Hungarian Evangelical Fellowship, was banned during the communist time, recognized after 1990, and then stripped of its status under the 2011 law?

Answer. With our own experience rooted in the long struggles for equality in America, the United States can and does play a positive role in helping foster tolerance in Hungary. If confirmed, I commit to working with government officials, civil society, and religious community stakeholders to ensure that all voices are heard, and to urge Hungary to protect religious minorities and promote religious freedom for all. Regarding Pastor Gabor Ivanyi specifically, while I am not deeply familiar with his case, if confirmed I am committed to learning more about the matter and seeing if there is anything I can do to assist.

Question 14. I understand that numerous Americans, possibly dozens, were among those included in an "enemies list" that Prime Minister Orban subsequently endorsed. This comes after the Prime Minister made a campaign pledge to deliver "moral, legal and political revenge" to his enemies after the election. Do you think this is something that should concern the United States? What is your reaction to the inclusion of Americans on this list?

Answer. Civil society actors and members of advocacy groups have an important role to play in the democratic process, including promoting public awareness and public discourse. Efforts to stigmatize or intimidate these individuals for exercising their rights to freedom of expression and association are not consistent with OSCE and NATO commitments.

The Department of State has no greater responsibility than the safety and security of U.S. citizens overseas. My overarching duty if confirmed will be the safety and well-being of Americans—both private and official—within my area of responsibility.

Question 15. If confirmed, there will be other State Department actors available to help advance the U.S.-Hungary bilateral relationship, including USOSCE in Vienna, Special Envoys on Holocaust Issues and—when filled—on Combating Anti-Semitism, and the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor. How will you take advantage of those resources and integrate them as assets into your work? If confirmed, how will you use the Department’s reporting tools, including the Annual Country Reports on Human Rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will amplify the work of the USOSCE in Vienna, the Special Envoy on Holocaust Issues and Monitoring and Combating Anti-Semitism, and the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor to broaden and deepen our cooperation with Hungary. I recognize the importance of the OSCE as a multilateral platform to defend and advance democratic values in OSCE participating States, and I would, if confirmed, work with the Chairman and the Members and Staff of the U.S. Helsinki Commission to this end.

If confirmed, I would also utilize the Department’s reporting tools—including the Annual Country Reports on Human Rights and on Religious Freedom, as foundations for conversations with Hungarian Government officials and members of civil society on protecting and promoting human rights and religious freedom.

Question 16. In 2001, the Hungarian Government—which was also led by the Fidesz party at that time—gave assurances that “the Hungarian Government... set aside all aspirations for any kind of dual citizenship for persons belonging to Hungarian national minorities and living in the neighboring countries...” Nevertheless shortly after the 2010 elections, Hungary significantly extended opportunities to obtain citizenship and then voting rights, theoretically on the basis of blood identity, and officials said before the elections that one million people have applied for Hungarian passports under this system. Under Hungary’s simplified naturalization process, more than 60 people who fraudulently obtained genuine Hungarian passports have entered the United States under the Visa Waiver Program. As a result, the Department of Homeland Security has placed Hungary on a provisional status. Putting aside other Visa Waiver issues, such as reports of increasing Hungarian overstays, will you work with the Department of Homeland Security and members of Congress to address the very serious security implications of the simplified naturalization process?

Answer. The United States must rely on the integrity of foreign passports as a condition of inclusion in the Visa Waiver Program, as a matter of national security, and I understand the U.S. Government has been discussing concerns with Hungary to bolster screening of individuals and the integrity of its procedures.

If confirmed, I will prioritize working with the Department of Homeland Security, members of Congress, and the Hungarian Government to address this serious issue.

Question 17. Some Hungarian officials have suggested that the U.S.-Hungary security relationship is fine, there are just some bumps in the political relationship. How do you view the security and political relationships with the U.S. and the relationship between the two? To what do you ascribe differences or tensions that may exist between the United States and Hungary? What do you see as the challenges in improving the relationship?

Answer. Hungary is a NATO and EU member and a longstanding friend and ally of the United States. It makes significant contributions to common security objectives such as combating terrorism, transnational crime, and weapons proliferation. As a NATO Ally, Hungary participates in regional and global missions, including in Iraq and Afghanistan. NATO is an alliance of shared values as well as common interests, and the United States is committed to working with its Allies to ensure the Alliance is built on strong democratic principles.

I understand the U.S. Government is working to strengthen the bilateral relationship with Hungary by cooperating on shared interests across the range of foreign policy priorities while continuing to speak up on areas of concern whenever they arise. If confirmed I will be committed to that approach.

Question 18. Under Viktor Orban, Hungary has cultivated its relationship with China. This includes gestures like banning pro-Tibet demonstrations in 2011 during Chinese Premier’s visit to Budapest and laying a wreath at the Communist Heroes monument at Tiananmen Square in 2016, to more substantive engagement like the of hosting China’s “16+1” summit with Central European and Balkan leaders last November. In April, Hungary was the only EU country that declined to co-sign a report criticizing the “One Belt, One Road” initiative as “pushing the balance of power in favor or subsidized Chinese companies.” How do you see the role of China in Hungary and the region? What interests of the United States are engaged with respect to Hungary’s relationship with China?

Answer. China’s economic footprint in Europe is growing, and I understand the State Department is actively examining the troubling rise of Chinese influence in Central Europe. If confirmed, I will work with State Department and other U.S. Government stakeholders in devising and implementing a regional approach to these concerns. I will urge the Hungarian Government to work more closely with other members of the Three Seas Initiative to promote Western investment in Central Europe and foster greater European integration, as well as with the European Union to develop more effective tools to screen foreign investment.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ELIOT PEDROSA BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Latin America Economic Overview

Latin America’s economic recovery is gaining momentum, as recessions in a few countries are coming to an end (Brazil, Argentina, and Ecuador). The IMF estimates regional growth at 1.3 percent in 2017, and projects activity to accelerate further to 1.9 percent in 2018 and 2.6 percent in 2019. The recovery is broad based across the region. While Mexico, Central America, and parts of the Caribbean are benefiting from stronger growth in the United States, growth in South America is mainly driven by the end of recessions in Brazil, Argentina, and Ecuador, as well as higher commodity prices.

Question 1. How is the region doing economically? The fundamentals appear promising: where are your concerns?

Answer. The region is consolidating its recovery this year, with a private sector consensus forecast of two percent growth in 2018, despite the ongoing collapse in Venezuela. Stronger growth in the United States and other advanced economies, along with more supportive commodity prices, will provide a tailwind for the major economies and commodity producers in the region.

Lower inflation in most countries across the region and falling real interest rates should remain supportive for domestic demand and household consumption. Business confidence has recovered from prior year lows, and investment is beginning to recover. While economic growth is strengthening, some countries’ fiscal and external positions remain vulnerable to shocks. As such, it is critical that the regional governments pursue policies and structural reforms that reduce economic vulnerabilities and increase potential growth-including diversifying away from dependence on commodity exports.

Several countries in the region will hold elections in the coming months, important opportunities for these countries to renew their commitments to the shared values that have defined the hemisphere—the pursuit of greater economic opportunity and prosperity, in peace, security, and dignity. Voters will have the opportunity to choose leaders and policies that will strengthen democratic institutions, and work hard to address slow growth, corruption and crime.

China in Latin America

Although no Latin American country is among China’s top 10 investment destinations, the over $100 billion that China has already invested in Latin America and the Caribbean is significant and the stock is certain to continue to grow. China has made headlines in Latin America through some large investments in countries that have poor governance, notably Venezuela and Equador. The largest share of China’s ODI has gone to Brazil, a country with relatively good governance in Latin America.

Question 2. How does the Bank view China’s interest in Latin America?

Answer. I look forward to learning more about the IDB’s engagements with China if confirmed. The IDB can play an important role by providing an example of high-standards investment that is consistent with international best practices.

Question 3. Does their increasing investment there raise any concerns?

Answer. The economic importance of China to the region has been growing quickly, and the region’s trade and investment with China can be beneficial if the terms are fair and market-oriented, allowing market forces to allocate resources efficiently. However, some Chinese investment is non-market based and poses risks towards weakening governance standards in the region. In China, the State’s role in the economy and its relationship with markets has resulted in fundamental distortions across different segments of China’s economy and has fueled trade imbalances. These trade imbalances need to be reduced, and China’s trading relationships need to be more fair and reciprocal.

Question 4. Are the relationships mutually beneficial, or mostly in China’s interest?

Answer. China’s demand for commodities positively contributed to Latin America’s growth over the past decade, but the region must have a clear vision for what it hopes the relationship with China will be and ensure that Chinese trade and investment do not undercut the incentives to improve business environments, governance structures, and macroeconomic policies.

Venezuela—IADB Role and Resources

Sixty billion dollars in foreign debt is hanging over the Venezuela economy. It will take more resources than any institution such as the IMF to match those needs. I know you and others in the regional are looking at the ways we can respond.

Question 5. Are the Bank’s resources adequate for it to play its needed role?

Answer. I look forward to learning more about the IDB’s capacity if confirmed. My understanding is that the IDB currently has the capacity to play a role in supporting Venezuela if there is a positive change in Venezuela’s political and economic governance.

Question 6. What are your views on the dynamics of the international participation in the coming crisis? The regional response? The role of China and Russia as major creditors?

Answer. Recovery of the Venezuelan economy will require fundamental economic policy change, but also immediate humanitarian assistance and external financing to reactivate severely eroded productive capacity. I look forward to the day that this can be discussed more concretely, but I expect the costs may be quite large, and the process will not be short. International participation will be important, including from the IDB and other IFIs. I expect that coordination with the region will be a critical component to any assistance effort. I hope that China and Russia would also play a constructive role.

Corruption

Major political news out of Latin America has included significant corruption scandals that have brought down governments in Brazil and Peru. I don’t have to tell you that corruption is not just the root of much political turmoil in the region, it is a major threat to economic growth and stability.

Question 7. What is your view on the extent of the problem of corruption facing the Bank’s mission, and what plans and tools do you have to combat it?

Answer. As noted, corruption is a major constraint to private sector-led economic growth and poverty reduction in Latin America, which therefore impacts the IDB’s ability to help the region’s countries achieve its mission to promote growth and reduce poverty in the region. Promoting transparency and good governance and helping countries build capacity in areas like public financial management and basic service delivery are important areas of focus for IDB assistance. If confirmed, I look forward to advocating for the IDB to enhance its efforts to support the region in these areas even further. I understand that the IDB has robust accountability mechanisms and institutional policies in place. If confirmed, I will support the independence and strong functioning of the IDB’s accountability units and advocate for continued implementation of high standards in areas like procurement and disclosure.

Commitment to Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Rule of law is the sine qua non for the promotion and protection of human rights and democracy. Throughout my career as an attorney, I have worked towards promoting respect for the rule of law in my private sector engagements as well as my pro bono, community, and government service. I have been involved in projects for the promotion of democracy and human rights throughout my career. As a law student, I had the opportunity to serve as a research assistant for the Harvard Institute for International Development’s Central America Project, contributing to the publication of a book on legal reform in Central America. More recently, I have spoken as a panelist at Harvard Law School on the continued failure of the Cuban Government to respect democracy and human rights. Finally, through my service as Chairman of the Dean’s Advisory Council of the Green School of International and Public Affairs at Florida International University, I provide support for the education and scholarship generated under the Green School's umbrella, such as the Václav Havel Program for Human Rights & Diplomacy.

Domestically, my most lasting impact on human rights and democracy is through my service as a member and Vice Chairman of the Florida Third District Court of Appeal Judicial Nominating Commission, which recommends judicial candidates for appointment to Florida’s intermediate appellate court for the region encompassing Miami-Dade County. A strong, independent judiciary is essential to the protection of individual liberties and a functioning democracy. My role in assisting in the selection of judges to serve in that role will have a lasting impact on the continued functioning of Florida’s judiciary, and through it, our local democracy.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues at the Inter-American Development Bank? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy at the IDB? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues for the IDB are lack of respect for human rights and democratic freedoms in several countries in the Western Hemisphere, which hinder the IDB’s ability to maximize its impact on promoting economic growth and reducing poverty throughout the region. If confirmed, I will work to limit IDB assistance to countries that violate human rights and advocate for projects that bolster transparency, rule of law, and good economic and social governance. I will also advocate for robust implementation of IDB’s social and environmental safeguards and a strong Independent Consultation and Investigation Mechanism that responds to complaints from communities in the region if they feel they have been harmed by a project as the result of the IDB Group’s non-compliance with its policies. My hope is that these actions will lead to IDB’s assistance having positive impact on people’s livelihoods while maintaining appropriate redress for anyone harmed by IDB’s projects.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face at the IDB in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The largest potential obstacle is that the countries in the region will not continue the tremendous gains in democratic governance, human rights, and economic reform of the past few decades and that freedoms will continue to erode in several countries. The IDB’s mandate prevents it from engaging directly on political issues, including democracy promotion, so the key challenge will be to articulate how IDB assistance can only be effective in promoting growth and reducing poverty where there is respect for human rights and rule of law. If confirmed, I look forward to tackling this challenge.

Diversity

Question 4. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups?

Answer. If confirmed, I will promote, mentor, and support staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups, consistent with fair management practices and relevant U.S. Government and IDB policies.

Question 5. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors under your management at the IDB are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my oversight role on the IDB’s Board of Directors to try to ensure that IDB management fosters an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I will also advocate for these issues to be considered, as appropriate, in the development and review of IDB’s human resources policies.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 6. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to carrying out my duties consistent with applicable conflict of interest laws and policies, and to reporting any potential misconduct of which I become aware to the appropriate authorities.

Question 7. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to carrying out my duties consistent with applicable conflict of interest laws and policies, and to reporting any potential misconduct of which I become aware to the appropriate authorities.

LETTER URGING THE CONFIRMATION OF DAVID CORNSTEIN AS UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO HUNGARY

May 9, 2018

Senator Bob Corker
Chairman
Senate Committee on Foreign Relations
423 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Senator Robert Menendez
Ranking Member
Senate Committee on Foreign Relations Committee
423 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Chairman Corker and Ranking Member Menendez,

Distinguished members of the Foreign Relations Committee, it is my pleasure to support David B. Cornstein’s nomination to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to Hungary.

I am confident that David Cornstein’s wide range of experience has prepared him for this role. After earning his degree from Lafayette College and an MBA from New York University, Mr. Cornstein spent over a decade at the helm of a major company, building it into a successful business on the NASDAQ Stock Exchange. Alongside his business career, David Cornstein took on several civic-minded ventures that contributed to the City and State of New York. He served as the Chairman of the Commission to bring the 2012 Summer Olympic Games to New York and now serves as a board member on the New York City’s Economic Development Corporation, the Battery Park City Authority, and the Jacob Javits Development Corporation, which is working to renovate and expand the Jacob Javits Convention Center on Manhattan’s West Side.

David has also been a committed philanthropist for charitable foundations and religious organizations, including the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, Chemotherapy Foundation, Friars Club Foundation, and the Park East Day School.

His nomination comes at a crucial time for the nation of Hungary. The past decade has seen Hungary precipitously backwards from an emerging democracy into increasing authoritarianism. Since his party’s election victory in 2010, Prime Minister Viktor Orbán has steadily consolidated power and trampled democratic norms, turning the state broadcaster into a propaganda arm of the government, degrading the independence of the judiciary, and manipulating the election law. The Prime Minister’s party demonizes immigrants and foreigners with impunity.
The next U.S. Ambassador to Hungary has a difficult job to represent the American values of democracy, freedom, the rule of law, minority rights, an independent media, and judiciary, to a regime that has little respect for them. I expect Mr. David Corstein will bring his considerable drive and experience to the task. I hope the committee will report out his nomination favorably.

Sincerely,

[Signature]

NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, JUNE 5, 2018

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:55 p.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Johnny Isakson, presiding.

Present: Senators Isakson [presiding], Gardner, Young, Cardin, Shaheen and Murphy.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JOHNNY ISAKSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Senator ISAKSON. I call this hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee to order.

I welcome all of you here, and I welcome our ranking member, Senator Shaheen. And Senator Young, glad that you are here, Senator Blunt as well.

Today we will hear the testimony from three nominees to serve the United States of America in various positions.

Georgette Mosbacher has been nominated to be the U.S. Ambassador to the great country of Poland.

I have to interject a personal note. I know Senator Blunt is going to introduce her in a minute. But she and I had the pleasure of sharing a mutual friend for many years in life, Ms. Jeanne Ferst of Atlanta, who was a great Republican leader in our State and a great lady who passed on a few years ago. But she loved Georgette Mosbacher to death.

Stephen Akard, who has been nominated to be the Director of the Office of Foreign Missions with the rank of Ambassador.

And finally, Mark Rosen to serve as U.S. Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund for a term of 2 years.

I want to thank you for your willingness to serve our nation. I want to welcome you and any family members that you have with you, and I hope, when your time comes to speak, that you will introduce any special guests or family members that you have with you.

I know you may have colleagues who would like to introduce Ms. Mosbacher and Mr. Akard, and I am going to introduce both of them at this time. First will be Roy Blunt to introduce Ms. Mosbacher, then Senator Young to introduce Mr. Akard, and I will introduce Mr. Rosen.

So with that said, Senator Roy Blunt from Missouri.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROY BLUNT,
U.S. SENATOR FROM MISSOURI

Senator BLUNT. Well, thank you, Chairman Isakson and Senator Shaheen and Senator Young and others who will join this hearing perhaps later.

It is really a great privilege for me to come and officially introduce Georgette Mosbacher to the committee. She is a valued friend of our family. She and my wife have been friends for a long time, and she and I have been friends for a long time.

She has done so many things to be helpful to so many people and also had a great business career. She founded her own international business and marketing firm. From 2001 to 2015, she was the CEO of Borghese, which is a global cosmetics manufacturing company. She was appointed by President Obama to the United States Advisory Commission on Public Diplomacy. Georgette currently serves on the boards of the Atlantic Council, the Intrepid Fallen Heroes Fund, and the Business Executives for National Security.

You mentioned, Mr. Chairman, whenever you talked about the great country of Poland, clearly Poland is an important country to us. To have a friend of the President, to have someone who understands our government and our public and private diplomacy and the way that Georgette does would be a tremendous benefit for our country and one of the most dependable friends in the world. It is an important country. We are in a position here with the help of your committee and the Senate to send just the right individual I think at this time. And I am glad to be here with you but particularly glad to be here with Georgette Mosbacher.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much, Senator Blunt.

Senator Young?

STATEMENT OF HON. TODD YOUNG,
U.S. SENATOR FROM INDIANA

Senator YOUNG. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Shaheen.

It is my honor to introduce Stephen Akard.

Steve is the nominee to serve as Director of the Office of Foreign Missions with the rank of Ambassador. The Office of Foreign Missions has many important responsibilities related to U.S. diplomatic and consular missions abroad, as well as foreign missions here in the United States.

Mr. Akard is a fellow Hoosier and a fellow graduate of the Indiana University McKinney School of Law. He has an outstanding combination of diplomatic experience as a Foreign Service officer with the Department of State and subsequent leadership experience in economic development on behalf of the State of Indiana.

Three successive Indiana governors have relied on his advice on matters of economic development and international relations. For example, he spearheaded gubernatorial missions to China, Germany, Israel, Japan, and the UK with meetings at the highest levels of business and government.

During his tenure in Indiana, the State strengthened its international relationships considerably, and the result has been significant new foreign direct investment and significant new job creation in Indiana associated with companies such as Toyota, Honda, Rolls Royce, BP, just to name a few. Indiana’s international economic development efforts are widely admired, and Steve has played an important role in that effort.

I would note Steve received two meritorious honor awards while serving in the Department of State, and he was awarded the distinguished alumni award from Indiana University, Purdue University of Indianapolis.

I am confident he will bring those same leadership and management skills and critical thinking skills to the Department of State as the Director of the Office of Foreign Missions. I am pleased our committee is considering his nomination. I look forward to supporting your nomination.

I would also like to acknowledge the presence of our other two nominees, Ms. Mosbacher and Mr. Rosen. Ms. Mosbacher, I would note parochially, you are also a proud graduate of Indiana University. So congratulations to all of you on your nominations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Senator Young.

In just a minute, we will turn to our nominees to make their opening statements, and you will have up to 5 minutes. And there is a big trap that opens under your desk if you talk longer than 5 minutes, and we will never hear from you again. So be sure to hold it within that, if you can. [Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. But for your sanity, your whole statement will be entered in the record as soon as it is completed and will be there in perpetuity. So you will never be forgotten, I promise you, as long as you live.

Mr. Rosen, it is a pleasure for me to introduce you. We had the chance to meet and talk a little bit outside before we came in today. And I was very interested in your nomination for a lot of reasons, but one of the big things I believe in is business, capitalism, and the fact that you do not tend to bomb people you trade with, you finance with, and you enjoy mutual benefits with. And certainly the International Monetary Fund is a key to American principles and ideals being spread around the world and materializing in terms of good friendships with our foreign countries, but also good businesses for our companies.

American companies are never going to expand their market share unless they go overseas. Most of them have mature market shares in the United States. So it is important to have relationships like the IMF to be able to open those doors everywhere we can.

I was particularly interested in your leadership of the Latin American investment banking at Bank of America Merrill Lynch, which is a great company with a great reputation, and also the fact that you worked with Credit Suisse, UBS, and Barclay’s. I am not going to hold it against you that you went to Oxford. I am not going to hold it against you that you went to Harvard. But we are just awful glad that you got the degree from the school of hard knocks in Wall Street. You have a great reputation and come to us highly recommended, and we are proud to have you today.

To all three of you, I hope you will submit your remarks for the record to be held and they will be held permanently. Any comments or additional questions you want for the record, we will hold the record open for 5 days after this hearing for you to amend your answer or amend the record any way that you want to, and you will have the opportunity to do so.

Ms. Mosbacher, the country of Poland is a great friend of the United States and has been for years. I am a Swede and I remember what Raoul Wallenberg did in Hungary by saving over 100,000 Jews from the Nazi Holocaust. I know Poland suffered during that time tremendously and has been a great friend of the United States for those years as have we been a great friend for them. So you are going to a very important post for our country at a very important time.

Mr. Akard, you are in an interesting position because I do not know of any time the United States has ever had more balls in the air in international affairs than we have got right now. Whether it is North Korea, whether it is the South China Sea, wherever it might be, we are engaged heavily and will be even more so in the future. What you will do has such an important role to play with our ambassadors and our missions overseas, and the services that our ambassadors get, as well as what services we grant to foreign dignitaries to come to this country is going to be critically important. And I am sure you will do a great job with it.

As you know from my introduction of you, Mr. Rosen, I know how important financial affairs are and the financing of financial transactions are and how the development of infrastructure depends on mutual sharing of information, knowledge, equity, and investment. So I know you will be a great representative of our country on the IMF. We appreciate you accepting that nomination, and I am proud to introduce you today.

I will now turn it to our ranking member for any opening statement she would like to make.

STATEMENT OF HON. JEANNE SHAHEEN,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE

Senator Shaheen. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

I would also like to welcome each of our nominees this afternoon. You are being nominated for every important posts. I would also like to welcome your families who are here today. I understand that you serve along with the sacrifice of your families. So thank you for that.

If confirmed, each of you will assume leadership roles dealing with foreign or economic policies. But in addition to the policy issues that you will be dealing with, you will also be responsible for leading dedicated career employees. I urge you to take full advantage of their expertise and to remain mindful of their non-political status. Our foreign affairs professionals, both Foreign Service and Civil Service, are a national asset. And I know you join me in thanking them for their service to our country.

Now, many members of this committee have expressed concern at the current administration's disregard, as reflected in its budget requests, for the value of American soft power to advance our interests. Retreat from our historical leadership role is simply not a realistic alternative in the 21st century. People around the world look to the United States for leadership, and I believe we must remain ready to take up this challenge as we have since World War II.

Now, today we will consider Mark Rosen to be U.S. Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund, which is one of the multilateral institutions that make up this post-war world order. I have a particular connection to the IMF because it was conceived at a U.N. conference in Bretton Woods in New Hampshire in 1944, and the countries at that conference sought to build a framework for economic cooperation to avoid a repetition of the Great Depression of the 1930s, which contributed directly to the outbreak of World War II.

Mr. Akard, you are our nominee for the State Department’s Office of Foreign Missions, and this office carries out vital work to ensure that the principle of reciprocity is upheld in the treatment of U.S. diplomatic and consular missions abroad. This has taken on greater meaning with the shuddering of Russia’s diplomatic facilities in response to the Kremlin’s aggression toward the United States.

And of course, we are also considering Georgette Mosbacher to be Ambassador to Poland. Poland has been by America’s side in Iraq and Afghanistan, and we enjoy close cultural ties and shared values. Poland’s free market economy is a post-Cold War success story. And while relations between Poland and the United States are positive, Poland’s domestic governance in the areas of judicial independence and the rule of law are cause for concern.

So in closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind all of our nominees that the foundation of our leadership around the world is based on America’s core values: freedom, human rights, justice, and rule of law. These are the values that continue to make the United States a compelling example for the world. They represent something that our authoritarian adversaries fear and cannot emulate. So, if confirmed, I urge each of you to keep these values at the forefront of everything you do as you represent the United States.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much, Senator Shaheen.

And, Ms. Mosbacher, we will recognize you for 5 minutes.

STATEMENT OF HON. GEORGETTE MOSBACHER, OF FLORIDA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLeni-POTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF POLAND

Ms. MOSBACHER. Thank you. Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, Senator Cardin, I would like to thank President Trump for nominating me as Ambassador to Poland. With the Senate’s confirmation, serving as Ambassador to Poland will be the most solemn responsibility of my life.

Joining me is my family: my sisters, Lyn and Melody, and my brother George, the redheads behind me. [Laughter.]

Ms. MOSBACHER. I regret that our 93-year-old mother, Dorothy Paulsin, could not be here. Mother passed away 10 weeks ago.

We grew up in the Midwestern steel town of Highland, Indiana. My father was killed by a drunk driver when I was only 7 years old. As the oldest child of four, I did my best to help Mom raise my siblings. I spent a lot of time with my maternal grandmother, Mary Bell, in East Chicago, Indiana. Grandma worked the midnight shift as a switcher for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Her mother, my great grandmother, taught me to count and how to do my first budget. From all three women, I learned the value of a dollar and the meaning of grit.

In East Chicago, Indiana, I was surrounded by Polish culture. The Chicago region had the greatest concentration of Poles outside Poland. Everywhere I turned, I saw these hardworking immigrants, deeply faithful, industrious people.

I am an example of the American dream. I was the first in my family to attend college, working three jobs to pay tuition. Later, I built two branded global companies. While expanding sales worldwide, I learned about export-import law, regulations, and international supply chains and gained an appreciation for predictability, transparency, security, and the rule of law. All of my products were manufactured in New Jersey, made in the USA, and then exported all over the world.

For over a decade, I have been a member and served on the board of Business Executives for National Security. I have traveled on behalf of BENS’s missions for the State and Defense Departments to Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Guantanamo Bay, Djibouti, the Baltic Peninsula, the Balkan mountains, to name just a few and experienced firsthand the logistical complexity and strategic planning that our military is dealing with every day to keep us free and safe.

While serving on the board of the Atlantic Council, I had the good fortune to engage regularly with the foreign policy community across administrations, the private sector, and public policy organizations. This experience further shaped my appreciation for the commitment and engagement required to make the transatlantic relationship central to our national security.

In 2016, I was honored to be unanimously confirmed by this Senate to serve on the U.S. Commission for Public Diplomacy. That service has shown me that the tools of public diplomacy can be leveraged to enhance economic opportunities, trade, and security.

When President Trump traveled to Warsaw last year, he emphasized that the United States benefits from a strong Poland. This means a Poland that is sovereign and independent with strong constitutional freedoms, a Poland that is militarily secure, and a Poland that is economically robust and resilient. I would like to address these three areas.

First, we recognize the sacrifices the Poles have made for our freedom and theirs as they have fought in solidarity with us and have died in support of our shared values and our shared history. I am aware of recent concerns about respect for democratic institutions in Poland, freedom of speech, the independence of the judiciary, and the rule of law, and I am ready to voice our concerns, if I am confirmed as Ambassador.

Second, Poland is now an important military leader in both the EU and NATO. We appreciate that it is one of the few NATO countries which has consistently met its obligation of 2.5 percent of its GDP on defense spending and is well into a $40 billion modernization of their armed forces.
A more secure Poland means a more energy-independent Poland. Helping the Polish people diversify their energy choices provides an opportunity for innovative American energy companies. Poland and its neighbors should not be held hostage to a single supplier of energy.

Third and finally, Poland is a great economic success story. It has tripled its GDP per capita since 1990, enjoying the strongest economic growth of any nation in Central and Eastern Europe. My top priority, if confirmed, will be to encourage American businesses to expand trade between our nations. We must increase our exports to Poland’s 40 million consumers to create American jobs back at home and to ensure American companies are treated fairly on a level playing field.

If confirmed, I will work to preserve and strengthen our bilateral political, economic, security collaboration, including on matters of NATO, Ukraine, Russia, the Community of Democracies, the Three Seas Initiative, and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

A Poland that guarantees the freedom of its people, protects its military security and that of its allies, and creates economic growth and opportunity for all will be the most effective ally the United States has in the region. A strong Poland means a stronger America.

Mr. Chairman, Madam Ranking Member, members of the committee, thank you for this opportunity to appear here today.

[Ms. Mosbacher's prepared statement follows:]

In 2016 I was honored to be unanimously confirmed by this Senate to serve on the U.S. Commission for Public Diplomacy. Second, Poland is an important military leader in NATO. We appreciate that it is one of the few NATO countries that meets, and plans to exceed, its obligation of spending 2.0 percent of GDP on defense, and is well into a $40 billion modernization of its armed forces.

A more secure Poland means a more energy-independent Poland. Helping the Polish people diversify their energy choices provides an opportunity for innovative American energy companies. Poland and its neighbors should not be held hostage to a single supplier of energy.

We must increase our exports to Poland’s 38 million consumers—to create American jobs back home, and to ensure American companies are treated fairly on a level playing field.

If confirmed, I will work to preserve and strengthen our bilateral political, economic, and security collaboration, including on matters of NATO, Ukraine, Russia, the Community of Democracies, the Three Seas Initiative and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Shaheen and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Ms. Mosbacher.

Mr. Akard?

STATEMENT OF STEPHEN AKARD, OF INDIANA, TO BE DIRECTOR OF THE OFFICE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS, WITH THE RANK OF AMBASSADOR

Mr. AKARD. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Shaheen, distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to be with you here today as President Trump’s nominee to be the Director of the Office of Foreign Missions at the Department of State. I am grateful for the confidence he has placed in me and, should I be confirmed, for the opportunity to work with Secretary Pompeo and the many talented and dedicated people at the State Department.

I would like to thank my family, my wife Kay and our three daughters, Julianne, Claire, and Hope, who are here with me today and have been a source of boundless love and support.

As a fellow Hoosier, I would also like to thank Senator Young for his generous and kind introduction and recognize the important contributions to the functioning of this committee.
I appreciate the role of the Office of Foreign Missions in advancing our foreign policy and our national security interests. If confirmed, I will be dedicated to furthering the important objectives established in Foreign Missions Act.

I entered the Foreign Service 20 years ago. I served overseas at the U.S. Consulate General in Mumbai, India, and during 9/11 at the embassy in Brussels, Belgium. Following that tour, I served in Washington, D.C. in the Executive Secretariat on the “Line” where I advanced trips around the world for then-Secretary Colin Powell.

I returned home to Indiana for a new chapter of my professional career where I was fortunate to work with the Indiana Economic Development Corporation, or IEDC. At the IEDC, I pursued international economic development projects for the State of Indiana, served as general counsel, and later as chief of staff, and had the honor of advising three successive governors and working with them to bring jobs and investment back home.

I brought the skills I honed as a Foreign Service officer to the State level. Our successes were remarkable. In the last 4 years of my tenure alone, the State of Indiana attracted more than 20,000 new job commitments through foreign direct investment and more than $6 billion in capital investments. If confirmed, I will bring these managerial and global experiences to the position of the Director of Foreign Missions.

The Office of Foreign Missions plays a critical role in four distinct areas: first, employing reciprocity to ensure equitable treatment for U.S. diplomatic and consular missions and personnel; second, regulating the activities of foreign missions in the U.S. in a manner that will protect our foreign policy and national security interests; third, protecting the U.S. from abuses of privileges and immunities by members of foreign missions; and fourth, providing services and assistance to foreign missions in the U.S. in order to assure appropriate privileges, benefits, and services on a reciprocal basis.

The Foreign Missions Act has positively impacted the environment in which U.S. diplomatic and consular missions function overseas and created a secure basis to manage the activities of foreign missions operating here at home.

Mr. Chairman, the Department of State faces enormous challenges strengthening our security and prosperity. If confirmed, I pledge my utmost to implement the objectives of the Foreign Missions Act on behalf of our personnel overseas and to defend our national security interests with respect to foreign missions operating here in the U.S.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to any questions the committee may have.

Mr. Rosen?

STATEMENT OF MARK ROSEN, OF CONNECTICUT, TO BE UNITED STATES EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND FOR A TERM OF TWO YEARS

Mr. Rosen. Thank you, Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, and members of the committee, for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am honored that President Trump has nominated me to serve as the United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund, and I am grateful to Secretary Mnuchin and Under Secretary Malpass for their confidence and support.

I am delighted to have my wife Ines, my daughter Katerina, and my son Ben here today. Katerina is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and works on the production of documentaries in New York. And Ben is a graduate of Williams College and works as a health care policy consultant in Boston. I am very grateful to my wife for all she has done in raising these two children of whom I am very proud and also for her encouragement and support to me in pursuing my career focused on Latin America over the last 25 years.

It would be an honor to serve as the United States Executive Director of the International Monetary Fund, and my willingness to serve in this role is because for some time, I have been interested in public service, as I believe I owe a sincere debt of gratitude to this country for the great opportunities it has given me and my family.

I was born in the United Kingdom and came to the USA first in 1980 as an 18-year-old traveling from east to west, and I immediately realized what a great and beautiful country this is. I vowed to come back here to study when I had the resources to do so. And in 1986, I returned for an MBA at the Harvard Business School, which was a tremendous opportunity I will always treasure.

Finally, I accepted an opportunity to work in U.S. investment Banking in 1993, and my wife, who was born and raised in Peru, and I moved to Miami, Florida where later our children were born.

In 2006, we became proud U.S. citizens. I believe now, after more than 27 years of living in the United States, this is the time to give something back to our country, and if confirmed by the Senate, I will do all I can to serve in this role to the best of my ability.

I have spent most of my 33-year professional career in the financial markets of emerging market countries as an investment banker working with financial institutions and companies, raising capital to support economic development, particularly in Latin America. From 1998 to 2010, I was head of Latin America Financial Institutions at Credit Suisse in New York. In 2010, I joined Bank of America Merrill Lynch where for 5 years I was head of Latin American Investment Banking, managing an approximately 100-person team and co-managing a large loan book, helping companies and governments across the region access capital. I am now Chairman of that group.

In addition to my practical experience, I have an academic background in and lifelong interest in political and economic policy. As a result of my extensive involvement in emerging markets, I have had the opportunity to see firsthand the potential and the challenges emerging countries face, as well as the positive impact governments can have when they pursue sensible macroeconomic policies that bring stability and growth.

If confirmed, I will work vigorously to improve the functioning of the IMF and to further this administration's principal objectives for this important institution. As I understand them, these are for the IMF to promote more balanced and sustainable global growth, reduce the likelihood of financial crises, and strengthen economic governance and capacity of its member states. These objectives are all critical to advancing U.S. growth and prosperity. In addition, if confirmed, as Secretary Mnuchin has recently requested of the IMF, I will do all I can to encourage the IMF to streamline its program conditions to make them more effective, more effectively tackle corruption, and boost debt transparency and sustainability, particularly in its low-income member countries.

Thank you again, Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, for this opportunity to appear before you, and I would be pleased to answer any questions you or the committee may have.

[Mr. Rosen’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MARK ROSEN

Thank you again for this opportunity to appear before you and I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much, Mr. Rosen.

I am going to take the liberty of being the designated chairman here to act like a chairman and make the rules. Senator Murphy showed up here and I appreciated him coming. Although I would normally lead off questions as chairman, I am going to give him a little early warning so you are going to have a chance. You have got a constituent here. We have talked about your service to the people of Connecticut in your absence earlier and it was a good conversation. I know Mr. Rosen would love to talk to you again and love to receive your questions. So on to Senator Murphy for any questions he might have.

Senator MURPHY. Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.
Not only did Mr. Rosen make a wise choice in his place of residence, but his son made a wise choice in his choice of college. So as a Nutmegger and as a Williams College Eph—I will explain to you, Mr. Chairman, what that means later. [Laughter.]

Senator Murphy. I appreciate your willingness to serve.

Senator Isakson. I cannot wait. [Laughter.]

Senator Murphy. Just one question for you, Mr. Rosen.

The IMF is traditionally a pro-free trade organization. In the past, it has clashed with the Trump administration and officials over some basic economic assumptions. In your mind, how does the U.S. imposition of aluminum and steel tariffs and any other retaliatory actions by other countries—how does that affect the IMF’s loan-making process? What do you sort of foresee as the interaction between this increasing war of actions and words on trade between the United States and other countries and the IMF’s ability to do their job and your ability to do the job at the IMF?

Mr. Rosen. I think that is a very good question, Senator.

I think the IMF—its core mission is to try to minimize global trade imbalances. That was one of the statements and objectives that was in the core founding mission of the IMF when it was founded back in the mid-1940s. So the IMF plays a very, very important role in trying to encourage countries to manage their trade positions in a way that promotes global growth. And I think the IMF has done a reasonable job of doing that, but I think it could be a louder advocate for trying to restore more balance in trading relations between countries.

So clearly what you mentioned earlier is a background to that, but I think this I hope will allow the IMF to raise this back to the top of its agenda to try and make as much progress as we can to create free, fair, and reciprocal trade which is I think what we all want.

Senator Murphy. Ms. Mosbacher, thank you very much for spending time with me. As one of the heads of the Poland Caucus here in the Senate, I am excited to work with you when you take up post.

I think we had the chance to talk about this, and I wanted to ask you on the record about how you think that the embassy and you are going to interact with Poland on the issue of immigration. Poland is one of a small handful of countries that has not accepted the number of refugees that was set out in EU policy. Obviously, we have effectively closed our doors to refugees here in the United States. Traditionally we have tried to work with European countries to be part of the solution, not part of the problem with respect to the continued flow of refugees into the continent.

What do you foresee as the message you will be bringing to Poland on the question of their immigration and refugee policy?

Ms. Mosbacher. Thank you, Senator, for the question. Poland has been very clear with respect to refugees. They have not been willing to take any refugees.

If confirmed, I will certainly work with the Polish Government to see how we can work that situation where they do their fair share. That may be harder than it sounds, but I do think that we have shared values and those values are to be mindful of those people who are unfortunately under very difficult circumstances.
Senator MURPHY. Unfortunately, I think you are probably right that these days, the administration there and the administration here have shared values. I do not know that those values are values related to allowing refugees to come into the country.

Just a quick other question. This is prompted by some remarks that our Ambassador to Germany made this weekend that got quite a bit of news weighing in on his expressed desire to empower political conservatives throughout Europe, which seems to many of us to be an unwarranted interference in political matters abroad, something that our diplomats try to stay out of.

Just for the record, do you think it is appropriate for Ambassadors to be weighing in on one side or the other of a political debate or a partisan debate overseas?

Ms. MOSBACHER. Senator, I do not. I think it is our policy, if I am confirmed as Ambassador, to be bipartisan not only in the country but at home as well in order to achieve the mission that I am given. I do not think it is appropriate.

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you. If you want to stay and would like a follow-up question, we will probably have some time. So let me know.

Mr. Rosen, we had a good conversation outside, and I have to tell you that I think every time I heard you speak, I think of Rex Harrison. You have got the best accent possible. You ought to be a great negotiator with that. It is melodic. You will put people to sleep while you are picking their pockets. [Laughter.]

Senator ISAKSON. A great talent to have and we are glad that you have got it.

I should know this, but I do not. What constitutes the governing board of the IMF?

Mr. ROSEN. Well, there are three levels, Senator. The first one is the body where the Treasury Secretary Mnuchin and other finance ministers sit, and that is a body that meets I think once a year. And then under that is the body of all the major central bank governors. They have a committee as well. And then the third level, which is what I would be part of, is—I believe it is a 19-member executive board. As you know, a number of the countries have their own representatives on that executive board and some countries are grouped together because, obviously, there are 189 members of the IMF, so not everybody can have a member of the executive board.

Senator ISAKSON. The reason I asked the question is the United Nations, of course, from time to time is controversial in this country because of its makeup or some of the positions that it takes. But it has a unique makeup being the body of the General Assembly of the United Nations, but the Security Council, 13 nations over it, which can veto just about anything—any member of that can veto about anything.

Is the 19-member advisory committee—or that last group—do they have a similar role with the IMF that the Security Council has with the United Nations?

Mr. ROSEN. I would say similar. I mean, certainly as you know, the United States is the largest shareholder of the IMF, and it does have essentially veto power over important matters that occur at the IMF because they require an 85 percent vote, and the United States has, I think, about a 16.7 percent shareholding or so of the IMF. So we do have an important veto power I suppose as we do at the United Nations. And only the larger countries are individually represented at the IMF. So it is somewhat similar. I think that is a good analogy.

Senator Isakson. Mr. Akard, you have a really important role.
I referred to earlier who would have thought we would be engaging with North Korea, with China, with Syria, with all the games that we have right now in the world. Our soft power that Senator Shaheen referred to to me is also very important in these various negotitiations that we have got going on around the world. In fact, I have always hoped that our strength would always be in our soft power because we had a strong military power, if we had to call on it.

Your role is going to be seeing to it that soft power is as powerful as it can possibly be. I said this in a hearing with Secretary Pompeo and the CIA a while back. There have been some that have questioned the motivation and the excitement and the enthusiasm in the State Department right now because they have been through some rough times. In part, you will have a role in what the attidude of the members of the State Department are.

What role do you see you would have in helping with a strong enthusiasm for them to do the job and a strong pride in the job that they have?

Mr. Akard. Senator, thank you for the opportunity to explore the relationship with the OFM and the broader State Department. If confirmed, I would hope to bring some of the enthusiasm that Secretary Pompeo has brought into the Department over the last few weeks to encourage and show that there is swagger back at the State Department and there is an important role. I hope that by leading the Office of Foreign Missions, I can show that at least to the staff there that their voices are important and they have an important role to play in our national security. So if I am confirmed, I would hope to encourage that, spread that message among Foreign Service officers and Civil Service officers who do admirable work on behalf of our country. It should be appreciated and recognized, and I will do my part to see that that is the case.

Senator Isakson. Well, that is the answer I was hoping I would get because I think that you are exactly right in what you have just expressed. I think your role can be essential because the State Department and the soft power of our country is still the biggest strength we have got if we have a strong military backing. And we are coming back in the funding of our military now to have both those one-two punches in place.

But diplomacy is going to be tested, and our willingness to be good diplomats and support our diplomatic programs around the world and have the very best we can have in those agencies is important. And I am sure you will fill that role.

Senator Shaheen will be back in just a second.

Ms. Mosbacher, this is personal privilege. When is the last time you were in Atlanta and saw Jeanne Ferst? Do you remember?
Ms. Mosbacher. At this stage, my memory——

Senator Isakson. Mine is bad too.
Ms. Mosbacher. I am trying to think. It was a while. It has been several years.

Senator Isakson. She was a great lady. She really loved your contributions.

Ms. Mosbacher. A special person.

Senator Isakson. And your husband’s contribution too.

Ms. Mosbacher. Yes. Thank you.

Senator Isakson. Mr. Rosen, the IMF finance of developing countries around the world and infrastructure in developing countries, things like Electrify Africa, some of the programs that have been talked about in terms of infrastructure—how much infrastructure investment in developing nations of the world does the IMF sponsor or take on or in some way guarantee?

Mr. Rosen. Senator, the IMF plays an important role mainly more in terms of a sort of if a country has financing issues, external financing and trade issues, and it works very closely with its partner on those issues, which is the World Bank. And the World Bank and the IMF obviously sit next to each other, and they work on projects together frequently. If a country has financing problems relating mainly to its balance of payments issues or external debt issues, then infrastructure projects and other financing projects become very difficult to continue with. And so the IMF has to work very closely with the World Bank on those kinds of issues.

Senator Isakson. If I recall correctly—and please correct me if I am wrong—but the nation of Israel ran into some trouble with its own internal budget here a few years ago on financing. And they fixed it by a recommended program by the World Bank, and I think the IMF was a part of the body that made the recommendation. That was to go to a biennial budgeting process in terms of the way they did their spending of their discretionary spending in Israel. Is that correct?

Mr. Rosen. I am not familiar with that, so I have to get back to you and check that. But it sounds right. It sounds right.

Senator Isakson. Ms. Mosbacher, what was your last business? You had a 15-year business your last one was a part of.
Ms. MOSBACHER. Yes. I manufactured and exported toiletries, hair care, cosmetics, body care around the world.

Senator ISAKSON. You know, I was very proud of the reference you made to Poland reaching the 2.5 percent goal in terms of its share of funding for defense and NATO.

Ms. MOSBACHER. Yes. They are one of the few countries.

Senator ISAKSON. One of the few?

And we have got to do more of that as a country. We can always be critical of people for not doing enough, but we sometimes do not brag about the ones who do everything or do as much as they should. And I think one of the ways you make better partners with those who are not so good is to brag about the ones who are so good. Chambers of Commerce are always trying to get new members. I tell them you ought to go first save your old members before you bring in some new ones because you are going to lose them if you do not. And I think that is very important to do from a membership standpoint in terms of the United States of America and the various places we will be.

Are you familiar with what is going on in Eastern Europe on anti-Semitism?

Ms. MOSBACHER. Yes, Senator. Unfortunately, it has been sparked by a Holocaust law that Poland passed recently. And if confirmed, I would certainly work with Poland to make sure that any legislation they passed clearly does not—we cannot tolerate any kind of bigotry. And this is fundamental to our values. And I would work with Poland to make sure that they did not include that kind of thing in their legislation.

Senator ISAKSON. I am sorry. Would you repeat that last sentence?

Ms. MOSBACHER. I said I would work with Poland to make sure that before they put out any kind of legislation, that it did not incite bigotry. That is unacceptable—intolerance in any form.

Senator ISAKSON. And it is unacceptable of any country in the world not——

Ms. MOSBACHER. Any country in the world.

Senator ISAKSON. What has happened in Eastern Europe is there has been a little bit of an uprising of anti-Semitism. I know as a Swede I am familiar with what goes on in Stockholm and in Sweden and really in that part of the world, and there have been some outcroppings of that around that part of the world as well. And it is something we want it to get legs or get strength or get a body to it because if it does, it is bad for the whole world. The Polish people have been so great and such a great partner of the United States of America. And I know you are going to be a great representative of us to them to see to it that we all work towards making the kind of decisions that are fair and equitable to everyone and not critical of just one.

I am going to ask one more question and then if Ms. Shaheen does not get here, we are going to be finished.

I ask all that I interview for these jobs what is the one reason that you could give me more than any other that you accepted the appointment and put yourself up for this confirmation. Mr. Rosen?

Mr. ROSEN. Senator, a great question. I think the main reason is because I wanted to serve this country and pay something back to it for what it has done for me since I have lived here over many years. And I hope that the experience that I can bring to the job will be valuable to the United States in the role as U.S. Executive Director of the IMF. But I am hoping to give something back to this great country.

Senator ISAKSON. I can assure you it will be important, and that is exactly the right answer.

Mr. Akard?

Mr. AKARD. Senator, I entered the Foreign Service a little over 20 years ago because of a drive to do something for my country and be of service and utilize an interest in global affairs. In the meantime, I have had a number of experiences both overseas on behalf of the U.S. Government but also in my home State of Indiana working on business matters and working for the Government there. I believe I have developed over that time some other skills that would be of value, and it is an opportunity and great honor for me, if I am confirmed, to again have a chance to give back and serve my country. That has been the driving force for my interest.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much.

Ms. Mosbacher?

Ms. MOSBACHER. Senator, in this last chapter in my life, I have the opportunity to take all the experiences that I have had in business and in working with our military and our veterans and be able to serve my country is the greatest honor and something that I always wanted to do. Had I known enough early on in my life, I probably would have signed up for the military. But instead I have worked with our military and our great veterans. And to take this experience and now be able to serve my country—there is no greater honor.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, I think this is not going to be your last chapter, but it is going to be your best chapter.

Ms. MOSBACHER. Thank you, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much for your willingness to serve.

We stand adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:42 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO GEORGETTE MOSBACHER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. How would you assess Poland's bilateral relationship with Ukraine and Poland's posture regarding Russian aggression against Ukraine? Are there aspects of Poland's relationship with Ukraine that are susceptible to Russian malign influence?

Answer. Poland consistently advocates for Ukraine's integration into transatlantic and European institutions. It has also insisted that sanctions against Russia must remain in place until Ukraine's territorial integrity is restored.

Historical conflicts between Poland and Ukraine provide opportunities for Russian exploitation, but should not obscure both countries' strong common interests. If confirmed, I would be ready to lend my good offices to strengthening relations between both countries.

Question 2. The European Commission concluded earlier this year that Poland's "executive and legislative branches have been systematically enabled to politically interfere in the composition, powers, administration and functioning of the judicial branch.” Given the importance that the United States attaches to NATO members upholding our shared commitment to democracy, human rights, and the rule of law as the bedrock of our common security and prosperity, how would you engage with Poland to foster “sliding forward”?

Answer. A strong and healthy democracy in Poland is a vital component of U.S.-Polish relations. The United States relies on allies to maintain strong democratic institutions, open economies, and defense capabilities. If confirmed, I will pay close attention to developments in areas such as democracy, human rights, and rule of law and will be prepared to speak privately—and publicly if necessary—on the importance of maintaining shared commitments to Western values.

Question 3. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. In my businesses, I assembled workforces that looked like America, with backgrounds tracing to most if not all regions of the world and without regard to race, gender, sexual orientation or any other inappropriate criteria. Similarly, our manufacturing partners were known for impeccable integrity and adherence to national and international standards of corporate responsibility. I believe that our practices directly improved the lives of all involved and contributed to setting standards for the American and global corporate communities.

Through my work on the board of the Atlantic Council, I supported an organization that actively advances the global dialogue on human rights and democracy. Similarly, through the boards of Business Executives for National Security and the Intrepid Fallen Heroes Fund and as a member of the United States Commission on Public Diplomacy, I have contributed to the ability of the United States to remain a major global force for human rights and democracy.

Question 4. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Poland? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Poland? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report notes that issues remain around private property restitution. It also highlighted concerns about recent potential legislative amendments that could infringe judicial independence. As with all allies, the United States routinely discusses human rights and democracy in our bilateral relations. If confirmed, I would continue to do so.

The United States stands by the principles of separation of powers and judicial independence. If confirmed, I will urge the Polish Government to respect these principles. If confirmed, I also will work with the Polish Government, relevant stakeholders, and others to ensure private property restitution legislation respects the rights and interests of U.S. citizens—especially Holocaust survivors.

Question 5. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Poland in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Poland and the United States share common values, including the importance of protecting and promoting human rights. Poland’s civil society is diverse and active, with independent groups that report and advocate on the issues they care about around the country. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Embassy’s regular engagement with these groups on pressing issues, and I will encourage development of legislation to address World War II and Communist-era nationalization of property. Due to the scope of devastation in Poland during and after the war, this challenge will be daunting. However, I am prepared—if confirmed—to use my good offices to help solve this problem.

Question 6. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Poland? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Civil society is an important part of the democratic process and has a role to play in public awareness and public discourse. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society groups in Poland. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy Amendment to the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (FAA), as amended. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy, including working to ensure the responsible parties do not participate in U.S.-funded training.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Poland to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Poland?

Answer. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report states that there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Poland. In the unlikely event that this situation changes, I will, if confirmed, actively engage with Poland.

Question 8. Will you engage with Poland on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will sustain the United States’ engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Poland, including human rights activists and religious groups, and the organizations that represent them.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Poland?

Answer. No.

Question 12. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As the CEO of two companies with global sales and the first woman to be appointed to serve as U.S. Ambassador to Poland, I am extremely sensitive to the issue of staff diversity. Likewise, as the first person in my family to have graduated from college, I am keenly aware of the importance both to the organization and the individual of offering opportunity to those who come from different backgrounds. From my business career, I am familiar with the management research—and, more significantly, know from personal experience—the contribution that a diverse workforce and management team can make to the success of any organization.

As you know, ambassadors have only a limited role in directly selecting the staff of the Embassy’s various sections—and even less in selecting the officers of other Agencies and Departments represented on the Country Team. For those positions over which I will have direct hiring authority, diversity will certainly be among the major considerations that I will weigh in making my selections. If confirmed, I also will emphasize my interest and strong conviction in favor of a diverse workforce for the Embassy and the Country Team and do what I can to promote a diverse and inclusive workforce and Country Team for Embassy Warsaw and Consulate General Krakow.

Question 13. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will expressly encourage both the State Department’s personnel managers and the other Agencies represented in Embassy Warsaw and our Consulate in Krakow to send personnel with a diversity of backgrounds, ethnicities and orientations to our posts in Poland—particularly with respect to the Embassy’s section heads, the senior-most officers reporting to me. I will expect a diverse team of my direct reports to, in turn, work with the State Department’s personnel system, through its assignments process, in order to ensure comparable diversity in the designation of more junior officers to our Polish posts. I will also reinforce, whenever possible, the diversity-in-staffing message both in Warsaw and in Washington.
My Country Team members’ success in recruiting and managing a diverse workforce in their respective Embassy sections will not only be a consistent focus of my management attention; it will be a specific point of my assessment of their performance at post.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO GEORGETTE MOSBACHER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. What are your views on the reforms of Poland’s judicial system undertaken by the current government?

Answer. The United States stands by the principles of separation of powers and judicial independence. Poland is an important ally of the United States, and we respect the decisions of its democratically elected government. If confirmed, I will urge the Polish Government to respect these principles in any legislation it adopts and to address any issues that arise through dialogue and compromise, to ensure that Poland’s democratic institutions and system of checks and balances are fully functioning and respected.

Question 2. What are your views on the current state of freedom of the press in Poland?

Answer. Poland is a democratic ally whose leaders and people share our Western values. Poland has a vibrant media environment, which includes U.S. investment. If confirmed, I will pay close attention to developments in this sector and am prepared to speak privately—and publicly if necessary—about the importance of a free and independent media as a fundamental pillar of democracy.

Question 3. If confirmed, what would you do to promote American values and address concerns about Poland’s domestic governance, particularly in the areas of rule of law, judicial independence and freedom of the press?

Answer. The U.S.-Poland relationship is rooted in shared Western values—these values form the foundations of our Alliance and the close ties between our governments and our peoples. If confirmed, I am prepared to speak privately—and publicly if necessary—about the importance of upholding these shared values. In addition, I will employ the full range of public diplomacy tools to highlight these shared values.

Question 4. Will you meet with Polish civil society groups, including judges’ and lawyers’ associations, working on judicial independence and rule-of-law issues?

Answer. If confirmed, I will sustain the United States’ engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Poland, including judges’ and lawyers’ associations.

Question 5. Do you agree with the U.S. intelligence community’s January 6, 2017 assessment, which concluded: “Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered an influence campaign in 2016 aimed at the U.S. presidential election. Russia’s goals were to undermine public faith in the U.S. democratic process, denigrate Secretary Clinton, and harm her electability and potential presidency. We further assess Putin and the Russian Government developed a clear preference for President-elect Trump.”

Answer. Russia undoubtedly attempted to interfere in the 2016 elections. Its objective was to erode faith in U.S. democratic institutions, sow doubt about the integrity of our electoral process, and undermine confidence in the institutions of the U.S. Government.

Question 6. Russia’s continuous cyber and disinformation attacks against NATO allies require a concrete, unified approach from the Alliance. How will you work to improve Poland’s resilience in the face of Russian interference in the form of disinformation and funding of far-right and disruptive groups?

Answer. Although many Central European and Baltic partners, including Poland, have “graduated” from U.S. development assistance, the U.S. Government remains committed to helping these partners in areas such as building resilience to Russian pressure. I understand the administration is looking for additional ways to work with Central European governmental and non-governmental partners to counter disinformation, enhance energy security, and strengthen governance, including initiatives bolstering regional partnerships to counter Russian malign influence efforts.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO GEORGETTE MORSCHER BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. Poland has been a focus of U.S. and NATO efforts to deter potential Russian aggression in the region. In the wake of Russia’s Crimea annexation in March 2014, Polish officials revived a long-standing wish to permanently base U.S. forces on their territory. Under the EDI, the U.S. has bolstered security in the region with an increased military presence, additional exercises and training with allies and partners, improved infrastructure to allow greater responsiveness, enhanced prepositioning of U.S. equipment, and intensified efforts to build partner capacity for newer NATO members and other partners. In May of this year, Poland proposed establishing joint military installations for a U.S. armor division and outlined a commitment of up to $2 billion in support. On June 5th, 2018 the Prime Ministers of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia publicly supported the permanent stationing of U.S. troops in Poland. Would a permanently based U.S. unit in Poland increase or decrease our effectiveness in deterring Russia?

Answer. The rotational U.S. deployments in Poland, including an Armored Brigade Combat Team and a U.S. battalion, as part of the U.S.-led multinational battle group under NATO’s enhanced Forward Presence in Poland, are very successful. They provide deterrence and significant opportunities for exercises and training to strengthen U.S., Polish and NATO interoperability and capabilities.

On the possibility of permanently stationing of U.S. troops in Poland, my understanding is that this issue is being discussed within the United States interagency at senior levels. I would defer to military analysts and foreign policy experts on Russia as to whether a permanently based U.S. unit in Poland would increase or decrease our effectiveness in deterring Russia.

Question 2. Do you support the permanent basing of U.S. troops in Poland?

Answer. My understanding is that this question is currently under discussion within the U.S. Government, and I would defer to further study and counsel from military and foreign policy experts.

Question 3. If not, please explain the strategic value in having relatively small units forward deployed to deter Russia versus a permanent U.S. division.

Answer. I am not a military analyst and would not venture to opine on the strategic value of troop postures or configurations, especially not without further study by and counsel from relevant military and policy experts.

Question 4. Infantry and aviation units have been deployed through EDI, but no cyber units have been a part of the U.S. enhanced forward presence. Given the cyber threat Russia poses to the stability and infrastructure of Poland do you support a cyber component to EDI?

Answer. Disinformation and cyber threats pose problems throughout the world; their origins are often hard to trace, affording a degree of deniability. Such threats make allies vulnerable and represent a new set of challenges, against which the United States and its allies must act. Steps to enable NATO allies to deter and respond better to cyber and the full range of hybrid threats are rightly among the issues being addressed at NATO in preparation for the July Summit. Without preempting the counsel of experts, I believe these issues need to be a priority in our cooperation with allies.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO STEPHEN AKARD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a Foreign Service Officer, I contributed to the drafts of the annual U.S. Department of State Country Report on Human Rights Practices, Report on International Religious Freedom, and Trafficking in Persons Report. In the field overseas, I met with and interviewed numerous individuals for background information relevant to these reports. I believe this work has enhanced appreciation for the U.S. commitment to human rights and democracy and encouraged the expansion of both. As an attorney, I have been committed to the cause of justice throughout my career—in the U.S. Courts, in private practice, and in state government service.
Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. The Foreign Service Act directs the Foreign Service to be representative of the American people. To be effective, the Foreign Service must encourage varied viewpoints and thinking from diverse frames of reference. If confirmed, I would advocate strongly for and seek out such diverse input. I would also prioritize recruitment, training, and acquisition of appropriate tools and resources for the success of all employees.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Office of Foreign Missions are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe it is essential for the Director to model inclusive behavior as outlined above for supervisors and, if confirmed, I pledge to do so. I would emphasize the utilization of recruitment and development programs such as the Pickering Fellowship, Rangel Fellowship, and others. I would expect that supervisors account for the training and professional development of staff and I would encourage mentoring, New Inclusion Quotient workshops, and the use of career advancement and leadership development programming for promising employees.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO STEPHEN AKARD BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. What is your understanding of the level of cooperation provided by the Cuban and Chinese Governments in connection with official U.S. investigations into sonic attacks targeting U.S. diplomats in Cuba and China?

Answer. The safety and security of our personnel overseas is of paramount importance and the developments in Cuba and China are deeply concerning. If confirmed, this issue will be one of my top priorities. I understand that we are pressing both countries for full cooperation with our investigations into these incidents. If confirmed, I would monitor progress on these investigations closely and work with our regional bureaus to hold both governments to their commitments under the Vienna Convention to provide for the safety and security of our personnel.

Question 2. If it is determined that these governments have been anything less than fully cooperative with U.S. officials investigating these attacks, what options are available to the United States through the Office of Foreign Missions to sanction them?

Answer. I understand the Department is taking this matter very seriously and is working to determine the cause and impact of these incidents. The Foreign Missions Act provides the Department with broad authority to develop and implement actions or restrictions on the operations of foreign missions and their members in the United States. Thus, there are a wide range of responsive options available for consideration, including but not limited to mandated staff reductions, domestic travel restrictions, or other operational restrictions.

Question 3. Do you agree with the U.S. intelligence community’s January 6, 2017 assessment, which concluded: “Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered an influence campaign in 2016 aimed at the U.S. presidential election. Russia’s goals were to undermine public faith in the U.S. democratic process, denigrate Secretary Clinton, and harm her electability and potential presidency. We further assess Putin and the Russian Government developed a clear preference for President-elect Trump.”

Answer. Yes.

MARK ROSEN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Human rights and democracy are of critical importance to me and though I have not had the opportunity to promote them actively in my career to date, I intend to make them an important factor in my actions at the IMF, if I am confirmed by the Senate. Moreover, if confirmed, I intend to utilize the IMF platform to make positive changes on both fronts.

Diversity

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will promote, mentor, and support staff who come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups. These staff add tremendous value to any organization. I look forward to learning from their experiences, if confirmed.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors you oversee at the International Monetary Fund are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my oversight role on the IMF’s Board of Directors to press the IMF management to foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive. I will also advocate for these issues to be considered, as appropriate, in the development and review of IMF’s human resources policies.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to carrying out my duties consistent with applicable conflict of interest laws and policies, and to report any potential misconduct of which I become aware to the appropriate authorities.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to carrying out my duties consistent with applicable conflict of interest laws and policies, and to report any potential misconduct of which I become aware to the appropriate authorities.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. I have limited financial interests in the United Kingdom, where I was born, that I disclosed on my form 278. After that form was filed, I, together with my brother and sister, inherited our family house when my parents passed away. We are in the process of selling the house.

Answer. My wife, who is a U.S. citizen, was born in Peru and owns interests with her brother and sisters in their family companies in Peru. These interests were also disclosed in my form 278.

If confirmed, I commit to carrying out my duties consistent with applicable conflict of interest laws and policies.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARK ROSEN BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. The IMF's goals include fostering global monetary cooperation, securing financial stability, facilitating international trade, promoting high employment levels and sustainable economic growth, and reducing poverty around the world. Some other institutions, particularly those backed by China, are more narrowly focused and transactional in nature. What is your assessment of China's financial and investment activities in Latin America?

Answer. As Treasury Under Secretary David Malpass noted in February 2 remarks to the Center for Strategic and International Studies, the administration is concerned that China is resurrecting the regional growth model of the past through engagements that may not benefit China's partners in the long run.

While China has contributed to global and regional growth, its state-directed lending and investment has tended to increase the region's dependence on resource extraction and primary commodities, while its financing has all too often enabled countries to delay making needed reforms to governance and economic policy.

My understanding is that the administration is working to support sustainable, private sector-led growth in the region by advocating for sound macroeconomic policies, supporting the rule of law and anticorruption efforts, and exploring means of mobilizing additional financing to address the region's energy and infrastructure needs.

Question 2. What steps do you believe the United States and institutions such as the IMF should take in response to Chinese financial and investment activities in Latin America?

Answer. The IMF, in fulfilling its surveillance mandate, should monitor Chinese activities where relevant and should not hesitate to call out risks posed by China's loans when appropriate.

The IMF can also play a crucial role in fostering best practices around Chinese lending, including engaging with China on principles around transparency, lending consistent with debt sustainability, and responsible burden-sharing in debt resolution.

Question 3. Will you oppose IMF lending to countries that unjustly detain U.S. citizens for extended periods of time?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to make sure IMF lending fulfills its primary purpose: addressing balance of payments of needs, preventing crises, and boosting growth. To be effective, IMF lending needs to take into account many aspects of a country's policies, including economic policies, political developments, and security and social issues. I look forward to coordinating with you on IMF lending in my capacity as Executive Director.

Question 4. Do you agree with the U.S. intelligence community's January 6, 2017 assessment, which concluded: “Russian President Vladimir Putin ordered an influence campaign in 2016 aimed at the U.S. presidential election. Russia's goals were to undermine public faith in the U.S. democratic process, denigrate Secretary Clinton, and harm her electability and potential presidency. We further assess Putin and the Russian Government developed a clear preference for President-elect Trump.”

Answer. If confirmed, I would not have any involvement in this matter, as it is outside the IMF's fundamental mission to help ensure stability in the international monetary system. I have seen press coverage of Russia's attempted interference in the 2016 U.S. election, as well as the administration's efforts to confront and counter Russia's continuing destabilizing activities.
OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. MARCO RUBIO, U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator RUBIO. All right, the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

This is a hearing on the nominations of Ms. Kimberly Breier, of Virginia, to be the Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs; Mr. Kenneth George, of Texas, to be U.S. Ambassador to the Oriental Republic of Uruguay; and Mr. Joseph Mondello, of New York, to be the Ambassador to the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago.

We thank you for being here. We thank you for your willingness to serve our country.

Before the Ranking Member and I begin our opening remarks, we have distinguished guests with us who will be introducing one of our nominees. Senator Cornyn, of Texas, will be introducing Mr. George, along with—yeah, Congressman Sessions, as well, will be introducing him. And then we are also joined by Congressman Peter King, who is here today. Thank you, sir, for coming and for being with us here today. Obviously, I think you are interested in our nominee from New York. So, we thank you for coming.

And so, I will—I guess I will begin by recognizing Senator Cornyn. I know you have got a busy day ahead.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CORNYN, U.S. SENATOR FROM TEXAS

Senator CORNYN. Thank you, Chairman Rubio and Ranking Member Menendez.

It is my pleasure to introduce Ken George, who has been nominated by the President to serve as a U.S. Ambassador for the Oriental Republic of Uruguay. Ken has served in the Federal Government before, under President Ronald Reagan, as Assistant Secretary and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service in the Department of Commerce. On top of holding these prestigious positions, he has served on numerous city, State, and professional boards and commissions back in Texas, as well as chairman and CEO of several public and private corporations. Since 2009, for example, he has been the owner and manager of Blue Harbor Plantation and Blue Harbor Tropical Arboretum in Honduras. This role has exposed him to social, political, and business contacts and contexts within Latin America. And I am sure his experiences will serve him well in Uruguay.

Ken and his wife, Tricia, and I first met when I was serving as a district judge in San Antonio, Texas, so we go way back. But, Ken—our paths crossed again when Ken served in the Texas legislature in 1998.

Over the last 30 years, I am glad our careers have overlapped so often. I have gotten the chance to know Ken, and I can say from firsthand experience he is more than qualified and generally—a genuinely great fit for this position.

Uruguay is a country of roughly 3 and a half million people, and it stands out among its Latin American neighbors for its strong democratic institutions as well as its high per-capita income and comparatively lower levels of corruption, poverty, and inequality. Over the last decade, the U.S. and Uruguay have forged closer trade and investment ties, and have worked together to promote international peace and security. In 2005, this committee knows, the country signed a bilateral investment treaty. And in 2007, we signed an important trade and investment framework agreement.

We are Uruguay’s fourth-largest trading partner. And, in 2017, our exports to Uruguay totaled $1.6 billion, resulting in a sizable U.S. trade surplus. U.S.-Uruguay merchandise trade has increased by 90 percent since 2007, and its U.S. foreign direct investment—and U.S. foreign direct investment in Uruguay has increased dramatically, as well. These are good signs that our effective diplomacy is paying dividends.

Strategically located between South America’s largest economies, Argentina and Brazil, Uruguay maintains a favorable investment climate that does not discriminate against foreign investors. As America’s diplomat there, Ken will be crucial to ensuring the atmosphere is maintained and nurtured.

Of particular interest will be keeping a close eye on China’s influence in Uruguay as they extend their influence throughout South America and around the world. There have been reports about the Chinese interests in harbor projects there. And, given the country’s economic and military aggression—aggressiveness in other parts of the globe, we have to monitor these developments closely.

In the international sphere, Uruguay promotes democracy and human rights, and is one of the largest per-capita contributors to U.N. peacekeeping missions in places like the Congo. Again, Ken will be pivotal in ensuring this and other international partnerships flourish. I know a group of U.S. Air Force colonels recently visited the Uruguayan Ministry of Defense to discuss peacekeeping, and I am sure Ken will be key in facilitating future similar meetings.

Finally, let me say that Ken George’s civil service is extensive and is rooted in his passion to serve his country. In his new role, he will collaborate with stakeholders, including the White House, Congress, and the State Department, to advance our Nation's interests as well as strengthen our relationship with the people and Government of Uruguay, and support continued development of democratic institutions there. Uruguay is fortunate, indeed, to have such a strong proponent of democratic principles and the rule of law serve as our U.S. Ambassador.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, Senator Menendez, for your consideration of this excellent nominee. I know he is eager and excited to serve his country once again in this new role.

Thank you——

Senator Rubio. Thank you.

Senator Cornyn.——very much.

Senator Rubio. Thank you, Senator.

And it is Texas. They always do everything big, so we have two people from Texas here today.

Congressman Sessions.

STATEMENT OF HON. PETE SESSIONS,
U.S. REPRESENTATIVE FROM TEXAS

Mr. Sessions. Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. And, Ranking Member Menendez, it was so good to visit with you earlier about not only the success of this subcommittee and the committee, but also the kind of people who are brought forth to be before you today.

Mr. Chairman, I stand in support of the gentleman from Texas—Dallas, Texas—Ken George. Mr. George, I have known for 30 years. I have known him in business. I have known him in his professional attributes, as he has a great name across Dallas, Texas, including his academic credentialing. Ken, a few years ago, went back and got his master's degree, when he did not have to, simply to tighten himself up on the attributes of doing business in academia today.

Mr. George has an opportunity today to be with his beautiful young wife, Tricia, and two of his sons, Kenneth and Clement. He also has two other children. All three of his young boys are Eagle Scouts, and two of them serve our country—have served our country honorably in the United States Navy and the United States Marine Corps.

Mr. George, in particular today, brings what I believe is a strong understanding of not only the free enterprise system, but America. Doing business internationally, Mr. George is no stranger to not only doing business internationally from his days of service to—from the Commerce Department, but also in his wide range of activities from Dallas, Texas. He is sought after, not only from a perspective of understanding business, but also the relationships that there go to also.

I spoke with Mr. Menendez earlier about me growing up in—several years in Bethesda, Maryland. When I grew up in Bethesda, Maryland, I had an opportunity to have a Scoutmaster whose father was the Ambassador to the United States from Uruguay, Hector Luisi. Mr. Luisi served his great nation, Uruguay, for a number of years. And so, I grew up knowing about the great nation, the sovereign nation of Uruguay, its people, its history, its heritage, the pride of authorship of their relationship with the United States. And so, it came as a particular delight for me when my dear friend, Ken George, was nominated by the President of the United States, Donald J. Trump, to become the United States Ambassador to a country that I not only had learned about as a young man, but that I know the people who were there also. And so, I had an opportunity to link up the gentleman, Mr. George, with Hector Luisi, who is the son who still stands in pride of authorship of his great nation. And I will tell you that Mr. George will be a strong attribute of not only the credentialing of America, but, perhaps more importantly, the honest, open atmosphere by which the American people approach the southern hemisphere for them to know that we value them, not only as sovereign nations, but want to be friends with them and to have them—and have them see a better life as we exist with the United States of America.

And I thank both of you not only for your attention to this detail, but the knowledge that you have allowed some of Ken’s friends, Senator Cornyn and myself, to stand up as a strong attribute of Kenneth George, Ambassador to Uruguay from the United States of America.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Rubio. Thank you, Congressman. Thank you for coming over here today.

And thank you, Senator Cornyn.

And thank you, Congressman King, for being here, as well, in support of your nominee. I guess you are here to be supportive. Okay, good. You have got to ask. You never—it is like those weddings, you know, you have got to make sure. You still have to ask the question.

But, we appreciate all of you being here.

And today’s hearing is opportune—and I know you need to run, but—thank you. Today’s hearing is opportune as we focus on the western hemisphere. And I thank the Ranking Member and the Chairman for making it a full-committee hearing and not just a subcommittee hearing. As everyone knows, the Ranking Member has a deep interest in the western hemisphere, and many years of experience in defending democracy. And so, I am grateful to be able to chair this alongside him today.

Ms. Breier, if confirmed as the Assistant Secretary of State for the Western Hemisphere, you, of course, would be shepherding U.S. policies in the western hemisphere at a time that I think is as interesting as any in recent memory. As part of the trend globally, there is a real challenge to democracy. We see the world increasingly being divided into a battle between autocracy and democracy. And our hemisphere is no exception to that. Obviously, Cuba has not had democracy for a very long time. Venezuela has seen its democracy blatantly stolen. And we are all well familiar with the tragedy that has—on—developed there. And lately, Nicaragua is a place that is not necessarily a model of democracy, but, in the last couple of months, the people of Nicaragua have begun to express how strongly they feel about the erosion of democracy there. All of those three continue to bear watching in the months to come, and you will be shepherding administration policy.
In addition to that, we have geopolitical competitors and adversaries of the United States continuing to try to engage in the western hemisphere. We know that China is bribing and unfairly investing—and I say “unfairly,” because their investments are one— their investments are one-way streets throughout the hemisphere, aggressively stepping into the vacuum that they argue the United States has left behind. The result has been, in the short term, that at least two countries in this hemisphere have already de-recognized Taiwan and Panama and the Dominican Republic, and open relations with China instead. The long-term implications, of course, are that, as part of these investments, quote/unquote, that they make in these countries, they demand and push these countries to vote with them in international forums like the United Nations.

Russia is in our hemisphere, and it is largely looking for opportunities to create intelligence agreements and basing agreements. And they do this for a number of reasons, to collect on U.S. interests, but also to potentially have influence over governments in the region. And I think that we should be prepared to see and to help our allies counteract any sort of influence campaigns that they might be trying to undertake to undermine democracy in the upcoming elections in numerous countries, including Mexico and Brazil and Colombia this weekend.

It is also a region that faces the threat of transnational crime. We have known about that for a long time, in the challenges that Colombia has faced. But, these record cocaine hauls and the record cocaine production in Colombia which we have seen over the last few years has put tremendous strain on our allies in Guatemala and in Honduras. People would be shocked to learn that Costa Rica is now facing a very serious threat. We do not traditionally think of Costa Rica as a place that faces any sort of threat from transnational crime and violence, but they are deeply concerned about the trends there, and need our help to get ahead of it.

The Dominican Republic and Haiti, a place—Haiti was a place where drug dealers did not go through for a while, because it was too dangerous even for them. But, now it is a place where they have somehow and some way found opportunity to traffic through there, through the Caribbean Basin. And, of course, the Dominican Republic, as well.

But, in addition to these challenges, it is also a region that presents us with opportunities. There will be an election this weekend in Colombia. It will be free, it will be democratic, and it will elect a new President. And we do not weigh in on who we prefer on—in sovereign democracies. Suffice it to say that, no matter who is elected, they will have some differences of opinion, but, by and large, Colombia this weekend will not just elect a democratically elected leader, they will also elect someone who will continue to work with the United States. And Colombia, for all of its challenges, remains a success story as to how U.S. engagement can create allies in the region and around the world who will become force multipliers. They are contributing greatly, for example, in Honduras, in helping their own forces. From what we have trained them to do, they are now capable enough for going abroad and doing it themselves.
There is opportunity, believe it or not, and it has been under-reported, in Ecuador. It is still not idea, terms of what we want to see, but its new President over the last year and a half has taken measures to restore more openness, more democracy, and careful outreach towards the United States. But, that is a—an important opening, and we are happy to see that. We hope those trends will continue.

Brazil will have elections next year. And there has obviously been a lot of tumult. But, the one thing I always point people to is that, in Brazil, the rule of law worked. To the extent that leaders are being removed, they are being removed through their courts, not through their armies. And that is a huge development. And hopefully, they will be able to conduct a very successful election early next year.

Chile continues to prosper. Argentina’s economy faces some challenges, but it is also a country that has moved into a more pro-American direction, but also one which is trying to engage more openly in economic growth. And I recently had the opportunity to be in Peru, which—a nation that does not get a lot of attention, but it, too, has successes. Even though it also removed a President for corruption, it did so through the rule of law. Again, not through a military coup or an assassination, but through its system of laws. And Peru, by the way, takes great pride in the role they play in the world, and it has been a productive one in diplomacy. It is a nation—it is not a large nation, but it has a deep diplomatic heritage. And it is why the organization—the informal organization that has come together to confront the challenges of Venezuela is called the Lima Group, because they hosted that first meeting that brought that group together.

But, I will tell you—and everybody here who cares about the western hemisphere, including Ms. Breier and, of course, the Ranking Member, myself, know the one thing we hear often from our allies in the region is, they feel neglected and ignored. They feel like we do not pay enough attention to them. This is not a partisan issue. Multiple administrations have been guilty of that. And, understandably, there are incredible threats and challenges in other parts of the world—in Asia, in the Middle East. But, the western hemisphere is important. Something that would be a one in another part of the world would be a five or a ten, because it is so close to us and so deeply impacts us.

So, there is a lot to do, and I hope we will continue to pay more attention to this region, because it is incredibly important.

In the context of all that, Mr. George, Uruguay is a strong democracy. It has a growing middle class. They have challenges. While they have condemned the Maduro regime, for example, they have resisted isolating it in the international forums. And I hope, if confirmed, that you will be a voice in continuing to nudge them in the right direction. Democracy should be defending democracies. They have enjoyed strong economic growth over the last 10 years, been—dramatically decreased the widespread poverty that are seen in some of the other countries in the region. As I said already, they have a large middle class, their democracy is stable. But, they have also drawn the attention of China. While the United States is still the largest trading partner with Latin America, China is closing that gap, and, I would say, unfairly. They bribe their way into many of these countries in the region. And this opens a door for them to continue to further exert its influence over the region.

Mr. Mondello, Trinidad and Tobago is a relatively prosperous democracy, but it also produced more ISIS fighters per capita than any country in the western hemisphere. And, as ISIS leadership looks to rebuild and reorganize as an insurgency rather than an organization that holds large swaths of territory, it is imperative that Trinidad and Tobago continue to focus on countering violent extremists, and that we help them. As we were talking about earlier in our meeting, there are numerous daily nonstop flights between Trinidad and Tobago and Miami and Kennedy Airport. And so, we should care a lot about what is happening there. It is very close to home.

Unfortunately, Trinidad also continues to side with the Maduro regime at the OAS. And again, that is making it difficult for concerned democracies throughout the hemisphere to pressure Venezuela to return to constitutional order. And I hope, if confirmed, that you can help us continue to nudge them in the right direction, because, once again, democracies should support democracy.

Just last month, by the way, Trinidad signed on to China’s Belt and Road Initiative, which it just—it is a Chinese mega-project that seeks entangle developing countries in one-sided trade relationships that ultimately lead to Beijing to call the shots. And their participation in this initiative allows China to continue to extend its financial and political influence deep into the western hemisphere in yet another country. We have to develop ways to counter that and to point out to our allies in the region how one-sided these Belt and Road Initiatives are in other parts of the world, and how deeply indebted some countries are left after agreeing to these so-called Chinese gifts that turn out to be not so much of a gift after all.

So, in closing, I would say all these positions are going to play an important role in advancing our foreign policy. I want to thank all of you and your families for your commitment to our country and your willingness to serve.

The Ranking Member.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator Menendez. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. And thank you for agreeing to chair this full-committee hearing on nominations for the western hemisphere. As I said to Chairman Corker, I believe these nominees and this Assistant Secretary nominee is as important as the nominees we will be considering tomorrow for other Assistant Secretary positions.

It has been more than 16 months into the administration, and it is good to finally have a nominee for Assistant Secretary to the Western Hemisphere. I am also pleased to have the Ambassadorial nominees for Uruguay and Trinidad and Tobago before us.

Congratulations to all of you on your nominations. And we look forward to hearing from you shortly.

As Senator Rubio just did, he did a pretty good hemispheric tour of some of our opportunities and challenges in the western hemisphere, something that, for 26 years, I have been focused on in the House and Senate. We have both long argued that the western hemisphere does not receive enough attention, given its critical importance to the United States as—in our own hemisphere, in our own neighbors, in our own front yard. As we look across the region, there is a wide range of positive trends at play, a growing middle class, a widely shared belief in democratic values, human rights, and the rule of law, 350 million voters casting ballots across the region in 2018, and the authoritarian governments in Cuba and Venezuela increasingly outliers shunned by their neighbors.

However, much of the press attention that the western hemisphere has received of late seems to be for all the wrong reasons. I think virtually every member, I would think, on this dais was appalled by the President’s comments towards Prime Minister Trudeau over the weekend, especially giving that Canada is one of our closest allies on issues spanning the globe, whose sons and daughters in the Armed Forces of Canada have served alongside our sons and daughters in Afghanistan and elsewhere, and who have died in the cause. Pretty amazing to me the comments that we reserve for one of our closest allies.

I am also outraged by the President using language that we generally reserve for the most ardent adversaries and enemies to criticize Mexico and its people, the second-largest export market for United States goods and services in the world—not in the hemisphere, in the world—the second-largest market for United States goods and services in the world, and demand that its government pay for a multibillion-dollar border wall that would be ineffective and a complete waste of taxpayers’ dollars.

Additionally, I fail to see how the overtly political termination of DACA and the Temporary Protected Status for El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti is anything more than reckless decisions that threaten to undermine our national security interests in the name of advancing the President’s xenophobic anti-immigration agenda.

And I am unable to understand how U.S. leadership is strengthened by the President skipping the Summit of the Americas or when the administration’s fiscal year 2019 budget request proposes a staggering 42-percent cut—for Latin America. That would decimate the diplomatic and development tools we desperately need to promote stability, prosperity, and security in a region that we live in. I hope we will hear from the nominee today about how these developments affect our national interests and our national security.

Now, beyond these divisive issues, I should know that there is broad bipartisan support for addressing many of the opportunities and challenges in the region. In recent years, members on both sides of the aisle have worked together to address the weak rule of law, sky-high homicide rates, and poverty that fuel instability and migration in El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras. The United States cannot waiver in our engagement, must be sharply focused on monitoring our progress.

There is also growing bipartisan concern about China’s transactional process and approach to diplomacy in the western hemisphere, which offers short-term economic benefits to countries, including Panama and the Dominican Republic, in order extract poitical gains that often are not consistent with the United States national interests. If we do not actively promote our values and interests, other forces within the region and from outside will happily fill the void.

And then there is the near-universal consensus in the Senate that Venezuela is a failed state run by a criminal government that has stolen elections and used access to food as a political weapon, collapsed its economy and plundered public finances through widespread corruption, created a humanitarian catastrophe that is fueling a refugee and migration crisis in the region, and committed a series of abuses that increasingly look like crimes against humanity and which deserve scrutiny by the International Criminal Court. For these reasons, I intend to introduce bipartisan legislation that will provide the administration with additional tools to address these challenges. And I would like to hear from our two nominees to the countries that they have been designated for how they will work to get these countries to join us at the OAS, in voting with us in common cause as it relates to Venezuela.

Against this backdrop and in closing, I certainly want to thank our nominees for their willingness to serve our country, as well as their families. This is a joint enterprise in every respect of the word, so we appreciate their willingness to sacrifice, as well. We look forward to your testimony, the opportunity to ask questions about these policy priorities in our hemisphere.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Mr. Mondello, we will begin with you with your opening statement.

STATEMENT OF JOSEPH N. MONDELLO, OF NEW YORK, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLeni-POTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Mr. MONDELLO. Senator Rubio, Senator Menendez, distinguished members of the committee, good morning. I am honored to appear before you today, and I would like to begin by expressing my gratitude to President Donald Trump for the faith and confidence he has placed in me. If confirmed, it will be an honor to represent our Nation as Ambassador to the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago.

Before beginning my statement, I would like to introduce to you my wife of 54 years, Linda Crabtree Mondello. Linda’s support and love, particularly at the beginning of our marriage, when her hard work and efforts helped finance my legal education, she has been the firm foundation upon which any success that I have achieved in life, both personally and professionally, rests. I certainly could not be more appreciative of all of her extraordinary sacrifices on my behalf, and it is important to me that she shares this moment with me.

I also would like you to meet my daughters, Elizabeth, a school teacher, and Lisa, an attorney, who have taken the time from their family and professional responsibilities in order to join their mother and me today. I am very proud of both of them, and very grateful for all of their love and support.
Finally, I want to express my thanks to all my friends that traveled from New York to be by my side at this hearing, especially Robert Zimmerman and Joseph Carro, and Congressman Peter T. King. Their encouragement and guidance throughout this process means more than words can express.

Being considered for the most—for the post of Ambassador of the United States of the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago is an extraordinary high point in my life. I could never have envisioned, while growing up in very modest circumstances in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, New York, that I would one day appear before the distinguished members of this committee seeking confirmation to this position of great distinction and responsibility. The neighborhood where I spent my childhood was a veritable United Nations of hard-working men and women from virtually every ethnic background, race, and creed. While these wonderful people differed in many ways, they were all united in their desire to achieve their own piece of the American Dream for their—for themselves and for their families. I know that if my parents were here to witness this moment, they would be proud that their fine example has enabled their son to pursue a career that, in many respects, evokes the dreams and aspirations of generations of Americans who came to these shores in search of a better way of life.

My mother was a very religious woman, whose family came to America from San German, Puerto Rico. She passed on to me a pride in her Spanish heritage that I have tried to instill in my own children and grandchildren. My father pursued a craft that has long since been extinct. He was a linotype operator for the Brooklyn Eagle, the Herald Tribune, and the New York Times. A proud union member, my father never missed an opportunity to instill in me the value of hard work. Together, they raised my sister and me in an environment where faith, family, and love of country governed our daily lives.

Being determined to live by the example that they set for me, I embarked upon a career that offered me a wide range of experiences, including service as a schoolteacher, probation officer, government agent, assistant district attorney, local elected official, political leader, and private-practicing attorney. I am also very proud that I served my Nation as a member of the United States Army, the Air National Guard, and the New York Guard.

I am truly excited by the prospect of serving our Nation again, if I am confirmed, as the Ambassador to one of our most important Caribbean partners. I am firmly committed to advancing the long-established goals of the U.S. Mission to Trinidad and Tobago. Paramount among these is assisting the efforts of the national security to stem the surge in violent crime and fight illicit human and drug trafficking. Clearly, sex trafficking and forced labor are critical national and regional issues that impact Trinidad and Tobago's standing in the international community and its government's efforts to diversify and grow the national economy through increased trade.

In addition, Trinidad and Tobago's location astride vital shipping lanes has made it a transshipment point for South American drugs destined for the United States and Europe. The U.S. mission must, in my view, play a leadership role in the host-government's efforts to reverse Trinidad and Tobago's growing involvement as a destination, transit point, and source for adults and children ensnared into these illicit activities. The increasing involvement of international crime organizations in human and drug trafficking, coupled with systematic corruption, are significant impediments to achievement of these important goals. I will, if confirmed, work to facilitate stronger economic ties with a nation that thinks—that, thanks to its large reserves of oil and natural gas, is one of our Nation's most important trading partners, with a per-capita GDP that, in this hemisphere, is only exceeded by Canada and the United States. If confirmed, I will work diligently to support the Trinidadian Government in its efforts to diversify the local economy beyond the energy sector into agricultural exports and the expansion of Trinidad and Tobago's role as a regional finance center.

Needless to say, the opportunities for U.S. companies to participate in this economic diversification are myriad. If confirmed, I will work closely with government officials to identify key products and services that are well-suited for expansion into U.S. markets. Central to this effort will be identifying nascent synergies within our two economies and then forging relationships between American businesses and their appropriate counterparts in Trinidad and Tobago.

Overshadowing all these concerns are the joint efforts of our two nations to reverse the influence of Islamic extremist groups among the island nation's small Muslim minority. Of particular concern are the conditions that led to the extraordinary high recruitment rate from Trinidad and Tobago that ISIS enjoyed at the peak of its power and influence. Given my background in law enforcement, public service, and the law, I believe I possess the skills and experience necessary to build relationships and force the cooperative initiatives between our two nations in both the public and private sector. If confirmed, the members of this committee can rest assured that I will work closely with Congress as we pursue our Nation's longstanding goals in the Caribbean.

Thank you for your time and attention.

[Mr. Mondello’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOSEPH N. MONDELLO

Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee, good morning. I am honored to appear before you today.

I would like to begin by expressing my gratitude to President Donald Trump for the faith and confidence he has placed in me. If confirmed, it will be an honor to represent our nation as Ambassador to the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago.

Before beginning my statement I would like to introduce to you my wife of 54 years, Linda Crabtree Mondello. Linda's support and love, particularly at the beginning of our marriage—when her hard work as a TWA flight attendant helped finance my legal education—has been the firm foundation upon which all that I have achieved in life—both personally and professionally—rests. I simply could not be more appreciative of all of her extraordinary sacrifices on my behalf. It is important to me that she shares this moment.

Being considered for the post of Ambassador of the United States to the Republic of Trinidad and Tobago is an extraordinary high point in my public service career. I could never have envisioned, growing up in very modest circumstances in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, New York, that I would one day appear before the distinguished members of this committee seeking confirmation to one of the most important posts that our government can convey upon one of its citizens.

The neighborhood where I spent my childhood was a veritable United Nations of hard working men and women from virtually every ethnic background, race and creed, including from Trinidad and Tobago—there are about a quarter million Trinidadian-Americans in the United States—mostly in New York and New Jersey. While these wonderful people differed in many ways, they were all united in their desire to achieve their own piece of the American dream for themselves and their families. I know that if they were here to witness this moment, my parents would be justifiably proud that their fine example has enabled their son to pursue a career that, in many respects, evokes the dreams and aspirations of generations of Americans who came to these shores in search of a better way of life.

My mother was a very religious woman whose family came to America from San German, Puerto Rico. She passed on to me a pride in her Spanish heritage that I have tried to instill in my own children and grandchildren. My father pursued a craft that has long since become extinct. He was a line-o-type operator for the Brooklyn Eagle, the Herald Tribune, and the New York Times. A proud union member, my father never missed an opportunity to instill in me the value of hard work. Together they raised my sister and me in an environment where faith, family, and love of country governed our daily lives.

Determined to live by the example that they set for me, I embarked upon a career that offered me a wide range of experiences, including service as a school teacher, probation officer, government agent, assistant district attorney, local elected official, political leader, and private practicing attorney. I am very proud that I served my nation as a member of the U.S. Army and the Air National Guard; and my state as a Major General in the New York Guard.

I am truly excited by the prospect of serving our Nation again if I am confirmed as Ambassador to one of our most important Caribbean partners. I am firmly committed to advancing the long established goals of the U.S. Mission to Trinidad and Tobago and building on our partnership with the Trinbagonian Government in the areas of security, prosperity, and energy.

Trinidad and Tobago is a vibrant and multi-cultural democracy that stands out in the Caribbean for its oil and gas fueled economic development. I will, if confirmed, work to facilitate stronger economic ties with a nation that, thanks to its large reserves of oil and natural gas, is already one of our nation’s most important trading partners with a per capita GDP that, in this hemisphere, is only exceeded by Canada and the United States.

If confirmed, I will work diligently to promote U.S. exports, advocate for U.S. companies, and support the Trinidadian Government in its effort to diversify the local economy beyond the energy sector into agricultural exports and the expansion of Trinidad and Tobago’s role as a regional finance center. Another priority of mine will be to continue our strong security partnership, including through the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative, and to support the Government of Trinidad and Tobago’s efforts in the fight against crime and illicit trafficking, as well as in counterterrorism cooperation.

Given my extensive background in law enforcement, public service and the law, I believe I possess the skills and experience necessary to build relationships and foster cooperative initiatives between our two nations in both the public and private sector.

If confirmed, the members of this committee can rest assured that I will work closely with Congress as we pursue our nation’s long-standing goals in the Caribbean.

Thank you for your time and attention. Now I would be happy to answer any questions.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Ms. Breier.

Mr. MONDELL. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF KIMBERLY BREIER, OF VIRGINIA, NOMINEE TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WESTERN HEMISPHERE AFFAIRS

Ms. Breier. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee. It is an honor to be here with you today as President Trump’s nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs. I am humble and thankful to the President and to Secretary Pompeo, who have entrusted me with this important opportunity.
I also want to thank former Secretary Tillerson. Working with him was one of the great highlights of my career. I want to thank my parents, who could not be with us today from Massachusetts. I am here because their sacrifices allowed me to have opportunities that they did not.

I could not be here without the love and support of my husband, Peter, and my daughter, Emma, who are an inspiration to me in their unflagging support.

I am also grateful for having the opportunity to learn from so many colleagues, mentors, and teachers too numerous to name here.

I have had the privilege of knowing six recent Assistant Secretaries of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs, and many have taken the time already to offer me wise counsel. I recently had the pleasure of meeting a seventh, who described to me how the job is akin to playing tennis with five ball machines on the other side of the court.

Indeed, the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs is as described, it covers the hemisphere and is home to 29 embassies, 23 consulates, and 30 countries. It is a leading bureau on many issues at the forefront of the administration's agenda, including ensuring free and fair trade, combating transnational criminal organizations, deterring irregular migration, and working through alliances to enhance U.S. prosperity, security, and to promote democratic governance.

This region is often underappreciated in its strategic importance to the United States, as we are often consumed with other priorities. I firmly believe, and fully commit, that we must get it right in the western hemisphere if we are to have success in other parts of the world. I am, and will be, if confirmed, a tireless advocate for the importance of this region.

The National Security Strategy lays out that our economic prosperity is central to U.S. national security. Our prosperity is deeply linked to the western hemisphere, home to half of the nations with whom we have free trade agreements. Overall trade with the western hemisphere is nearly three times as much as it is with China. The administration’s western hemisphere policy is, rightfully, dynamic and robust. Interaction with Mexico is intense, daily, and institutional. I am committed to ensuring that the administration’s focus on Mexico will bear fruit in a positive way.

The administration has been, and remains, steadfast on Venezuela. As Vice President Pence said recently, Venezuela shows us the tragedy of tyranny. This unprecedented challenge requires robust diplomacy, creativity, and, more than anything, fierce resolve.

Last year, the administration announced its Cuba policy, which seeks to support the Cuban people, human rights, and not to allow U.S. economic interaction to aid the repressive security services.

The administration has continued support for the U.S. strategy in Central America; in fact, expanding it by aligning more closely with Mexico.

The administration supports sustainable peace in Colombia, at the same time reaching new agreements to address the alarming growth in coca cultivation and production.
Plan, sent to Congress last year, looks to foster security and prosperity in a region important to our interests.

I have had the privilege of working on something I am passionate about for nearly two decades. This includes government service over four presidencies. I have seen the western hemisphere from three executive-branch departments, from the private sector, from think tanks, and from extensive travel and study abroad.

I began my career as an intelligence analyst, serving for more than a decade, rising to manage a team with leadership responsibilities across a large office. On the National Security Council staff at the White House, I was Director for Brazil and Southern Cone, Director for Mexico and Canada, and did an interim period as Director on the Andean region.

Working in the private sector for 5 years was a lesson in how the private sector can be a U.S. force multiplier. I also had the good fortune to work twice at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, first as an intern, and, two decades later, as an—and as a senior leader in western hem.

Last June, I have—since last June, I have had the privilege to work closely with the Western Hemisphere Bureau while serving on the Secretary’s policy planning staff. I have reunited with former colleagues and have been reminded how committed public servants work long hours to get the job done to advance U.S. policy interests. I can assure you that working with WHA is both humbling and deeply reassuring, because, if confirmed, we will all be in this together. I could not ask for a better team. If confirmed, my job will be to ensure that they all succeed and that the United States succeeds, as well.

I would like to close by thanking you for your continued commitment to getting it right in the western hemisphere. So many of you care deeply about this region, and I thank you for that.

I am happy to take your questions.

[Ms. Breier’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KIMBERLY BREIER

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, it is an honor to be with you today as President Trump’s nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs. I am humbled and thankful that the President and Secretary Pompeo have entrusted me with this important opportunity. I also want to thank former Secretary Tillerson. Working with him was one of the great highlights of my career.

I want to thank my parents who could not be with us today from Massachusetts. I am here because their sacrifices allowed me to have opportunities they themselves did not. I could not be here without the love and support of my husband Peter and my daughter Emma, who are an inspiration to me in their unflagging support and willingness to allow me the privilege of serving my country.

One does not get to this point absent the mentoring of many people. I am grateful for having the opportunity to learn from talented foreign policy experts, intelligence analysts, foreign and civil service officers, and many other colleagues, mentors, and teachers too numerous to name. I have had the privilege of knowing six recent Assistant Secretaries of Western Hemisphere Affairs, and many have taken the time to offer me wise counsel. I recently had the pleasure of meeting a seventh, who described to me how the job is akin to playing tennis with five ball machines on the other side of the court.

Indeed, the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs is as described—it covers a hemisphere and is home to 29 embassies and 23 consulates in 30 countries and handles the intersection of bilateral, regional, and global issues. It is a leading Bureau on many issues at the forefront of the Trump administration’s agenda, including ensuring free and fair trade, stepping up our efforts to combat transnational criminal organizations of all types, deterring irregular migration, and working through alliances to enhance U.S. prosperity, security and to promote democratic governance.

The region is often under-appreciated in its strategic importance to the United States, as we are often consumed with other global priorities. I firmly believe, and fully commit, that we must get it right in the Western Hemisphere if we are to have success in other parts of the world. I am and will be, if confirmed, a tireless advocate for the importance of this region. Diplomacy in the Western Hemisphere has a demonstrable and direct impact on the lives of Americans unlike that of any other region.

The National Security Strategy lays out that our economic prosperity is central to U.S. national security. Our prosperity is deeply intertwined with the Western Hemisphere, home to more than half of the nations with whom we have free trade agreements. Overall trade with the Western Hemisphere is nearly three times as much as we trade with China and we have an overall trade surplus with this region.

The administration’s policy toward the Western Hemisphere is rightfully dynamic and robust—both in seizing opportunities and in addressing challenges. For example, interaction with Mexico is intense, daily, and institutional. I am personally committed to ensuring that the administration’s focus on Mexico will bear fruit in a positive way that people can see.

The administration has been and remains steadfast on Venezuela, implementing a strategy to help return the country to a democratic path. As Vice President Pence said recently, Venezuela shows us the tragedy of tyranny. This unprecedented challenge requires robust diplomacy, creativity, and more than anything, fierce resolve.

Last year, the administration announced its Cuba policy, which seeks to support the Cuban people, their human rights, and not to allow U.S. economic interaction to aid the repressive security services. The administration has continued support for the U.S. Strategy for Central America, in fact expanding it by aligning more closely with Mexico.

The administration has continued to support sustainable peace in Colombia, at the same time reaching new agreements with Colombia to address the alarming growth of coca cultivation and production. The Caribbean 2020 plan sent to Congress last year looks to foster security and prosperity in a region important to our interests and vulnerable to transnational crime, poverty, and natural disasters.

I have had the privilege of working on something I am passionate about for nearly two decades. This includes government service over four presidencies for administrations on both sides of the aisle. I have seen the Western Hemisphere from three executive branch departments, from the private sector, from think tanks, and from extensive travel and study abroad. I began my career as an intelligence analyst and served for more than a decade, rising to manage a team with leadership responsibilities across a large office focused on the Middle East. On the National Security Council Staff at the White House, I was Director for Brazil and the Southern Cone, Director for Mexico and Canada, and did an interim period on the Andean region.

Working in the private sector for five years was a lesson in how the private sector can be a U.S. policy force multiplier. I also had the good fortune to work, twice—first as an intern and two decades later in a leadership role—at the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS).

Since last June, I have had the great privilege to work closely with the Western Hemisphere Bureau while serving on the Secretary’s Policy Planning Staff. I re-united with former colleagues and have been reminded how committed public servants work long hours to get the job done, to advance U.S. policy interests, and to serve their nation. I have seen how much talent and good humor there is. I can assure you that working with WHA is both humbling and deeply reassuring because, if confirmed, we will all be in this together. I could not ask for a better team. If confirmed, my job will be to ensure they all succeed and the United States succeeds as well.

I’d like to close by thanking you all for your continued commitment to getting it right in the Western Hemisphere. So many of you care deeply about this region and for that I thank you. I am happy to answer your questions.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Mr. George.
STATEMENT OF HON. KENNETH S. GEORGE, OF TEXAS, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE ORIENTAL REPUBLIC OF URUGUAY

Mr. George. Chairman Rubio, Senator Menendez, distinguished members of the committee, and friends, thank you for the opportunity to be with you today. It is, indeed, an honor to appear as President Trump's nominee to the United States Ambassador to the Oriental Republic of Uruguay. I am humbled by the opportunity to serve our country again. If confirmed, I look forward to working with all stakeholders, here and in Uruguay, to further our interests and foster closer and mutually beneficial relations with the Government and people of Uruguay.

Although all could not be here, I am supported today by the most important people in my life, my wife of 43 years, Tricia, and our children, Kenneth, Patrick, Clement, Elizabeth, and their spouses. I will spare you—I will not list all the grandchildren, but we have them, including one on the way, and they are brilliant and beautiful, and I am blessed to enjoy their support.

Our family has a long history in the service of our country. Without detailing our ancestors’ endeavors in General Washington’s Army, I will say my grandparents met on the battlefields of France in World War I. She is an Army nurse from Pennsylvania, and he, an Army captain. Tricia’s and my father both served in the Army Air Corps in World War II. I served as an officer in the 82nd Airborne Army Reserve. Tricia serves as—on the Texas committee of the National Museum of Women in the Arts, here in D.C., and is an active cattle rancher. Kenneth, our eldest, worked as a congressional intern in the Treasury Department in the Office of Economic Policy. Patrick is a major in the Marine Corps Reserves after serving two tours in Iraq. Clement spent 4 years in the Navy as a surface warfare officer with multiple deployments to the Persian Gulf, and supported our humanitarian relief efforts in Haiti after the 2010 earthquake. Elizabeth interned in the Office of the Attorney General of Texas, has in—been active in numerous political campaigns. She graduated from the University of Chicago Booth School, where she was president of the Graduate School of Business. Obviously, I am a proud papa.

I believe my career, both in government service and in private sector, has prepared me for this opportunity. This nominating process is not new to me. As Senator Cornyn mentioned, I served as Assistant Secretary and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service during President Reagan's first term. I was responsible for our trade promotional staff and programs in 65 countries and 124 in cities. As you will also remember, during President Reagan's first term, the Caribbean Basin Initiative was passed. I was given additional implementation responsibilities under the leadership of USTR William Brock. And lastly, you will remember that there was a little fracas in Granada, and we were tasked to lead the economic rebuilding of the island. It was our responsibility to restore work opportunities and sources of self-pride in the local population, and restore economic stability.

In the private sector, I could best be described as an entrepreneur. In the '70s, it was real estate development and building a publicly-held conglomerate with furniture manufacturing, real estate development, and oil and gas exploration. In the ’80s and ’90s, it was the Government and hospital management. With the help of outstanding staff, I put together, and was chairman and CEO of, the second-largest ESOP in the United States at the time. EPIC Healthcare Group had 15,000 employees in 25 States. After selling EPIC to Healthtrust-HCA, I was fortunate enough to build one of the largest private ambulance companies in the State of Texas.

I can honestly say that, with—in every case, building up a high-functioning team was the key to our success. Leadership, clarity of vision, and allowing people to do their best is the fertile soil that enables an organization to flourish and accomplish the mission. If confirmed, this is what I hope you will find I bring to the office.

Uruguay is an exciting country. It is one of, if not the most, progressive in Latin America, with the largest middle class, a strong history of democratic values, has a record of respecting religious freedoms. The Economist magazine says that Uruguay has the only complete democracy in Latin America, and it equals Canada’s. And, I might add, it has the largest commitment of soldiers to the U.N. peacekeeping operations of any country in Latin America, almost 1,000 soldiers. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would work to strengthen cooperation with the Government of Uruguay and international organizations to combat all forms of human trafficking.

In closing, if confirmed, I look forward to working with all stakeholders to maintain a strong relationship with Uruguay, to advance our national interests, to support continued development of democratic institutions in the Oriental Republic of Uruguay, a relatively small country with an outsized influence in the region.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. George’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF KENNETH S. GEORGE

Chairman Rubio and distinguished members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to be with you today. It is indeed an honor to appear as President Trump’s nominee to be the United States Ambassador to the Oriental Republic of Uruguay.

I am humbled by the opportunity to serve our country again. If confirmed, I look forward to working with all stakeholders here and in Uruguay to further our interests and foster closer and mutually beneficial relations with the Government and people of Uruguay.

Although all could not be here, I am supported today by the most important people in my life, my wife of 43 years, Tricia, and our children, Kenneth, Patrick, Clement, and Elizabeth and their spouses. I won’t list the grandchildren but we have them, including one on the way, and they are brilliant and beautiful. I am blessed to enjoy their support and encouragement.

Our family has a long history of service to our country. Without detailing our ancestors’ endeavors in General Washington’s army, I will say my grandparents met on the battlefields of France in WWI, she as an army nurse from Pennsylvania and he an army captain. Tricia’s and my father both served in the Army Air Corps in WWII. I served as an officer in the 82nd Airborne Army Reserve. Tricia serves on the Texas committee of the National Museum of Women in the Arts here in D.C. and is an active cattle rancher.

Kenneth, our eldest, worked as a Congressional intern and in the Treasury Department in the Office of Economic Policy. Patrick is a Major in the Marine Corps Reserve after serving two tours in Iraq. Clement spent four years in the Navy as a Surface Warfare Officer with multiple deployments to the Persian Gulf and supported our humanitarian relief effort in Haiti after the 2010 earthquake. Elizabeth interned in the office of the Attorney General of Texas and has been active in numerous political campaigns. She graduated from the University of Chicago's Booth School, where she was president of the graduate school of business.

I believe my career, both in prior government service and in the private sector, has prepared me for this responsibility. This nominating process is not new to me. I served as Assistant Secretary and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service in President Reagan's first term of office. I was responsible for our trade promotional staff and programs in 65 countries, 120 foreign cities. During President Reagan's first term, the Caribbean Basin Initiative was passed. I was given additional implementation responsibilities under the leadership of USTR William Brock. Lastly, you will remember there was a little fracas in Granada and we were tasked to lead the economic rebuilding of the Island. High unemployment in the male population was presenting an excellent recruiting opportunity for Cuba's extraterritorial political ambitions. It was our responsibility to restore work opportunities and sources of self-pride in the local population and restore economic stability.

In the private sector, I could best be described as an entrepreneur. In the 70's, it was real estate development and building a publicly held conglomerate with furniture manufacturing, real estate development, and oil and gas exploration, headquartered in Midland, Texas. In the 80's and 90's, it was the Government and hospital management. With the help of outstanding staff, I put together and was Chairman and CEO of the second largest ESOP in the country at the time, EPIC Healthcare Group, with 15,000 employee-owners in 25 states. After selling EPIC to Healthtrust-HCA, I was fortunate enough to build one of the largest private ambulance companies in Texas.

I can honestly say, in every case, building up a high functioning team was the key to our successes. Leadership, clarity of vision, and allowing people to do their best is the fertile soil that enables an organization to flourish and accomplish its mission. If confirmed, this is what I hope you will find that I bring to the job.

Uruguay is an exciting country. It is one of, if not the most, progressive in Latin America with the largest middle class, has a history of strong democratic values, and has a record of respecting religious freedoms. The Economist magazine says that Uruguay has the only “complete democracy” in Latin America and that it equals Canada’s. I might add, the largest commitment of soldiers to U.N. Peacekeeping operations around the world of any country in Latin America, bigger than Mexico, Brazil, Argentina, all others. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would work to strengthen cooperation with the Government of Uruguay and international organizations to combat all forms of human trafficking.

The United States is both Uruguay’s fourth largest trading partner, with a trade surplus, and an important investor—but still only fourth. China is their largest trading partner. I am committed to helping develop business opportunities in Uruguay on behalf of U.S. companies.

In closing, if confirmed, I look forward to working with all stakeholders to maintain a strong relationship with Uruguay, to advance our national interests, and support continued development of democratic institutions in the Oriental Republic of Uruguay, a relatively small country, with an outsized influence in the region.

Thank you.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you very much.

Let me start with Ms. Breier. The—you referenced, in your opening statement, the administration change of policy towards to Cuba. It is always a good point to remind people that our goal in Cuba, ultimately, is the restoration of a democracy. We have an economic model that we would suggest. Uruguay is a good example of what works. But, that is for the people of a free Cuba to determine. Our goal is democracy. And the threat to democracy in Cuba has been exacerbated by a government that is trying to transition its way into becoming a long-term, permanent, and accepted fixture as a legitimate government. And one of the ways they are doing that is, they have this military-owned holding company named GAESA, G–A–E–S–A, which is—basically owns every profitable venture in Cuba. And so, they are trying to create an economic dictatorship on top of the political one. And when the President made his change in policy towards Cuba, that is what he really focused on, was hitting that economic activity. So that today an American traveler to Cuba can frequent this—these so-called small businesses that are independently owned and the like. In fact, they are in a privileged position. But, theoretically, anyway, under the changes, you are not supposed to be going and spending money at these GAESA-owned entities. As part of that agreement and the executive order, it was left to the State Department to define the companies and the entities that fell under the criteria of being sanctioned. And, while I think the list is certainly better than what existed before the executive order, as you and I discussed when we met, the list is incomplete. There are a series of companies and ventures that remain untouched and, as a result, have created the ability to circumvent much of the intent of what the President did. And it is unfortunate. We see this pattern repeat, where Presidents determine a direction, and then the people who write the regs—the regulations and the law figure out ways to potentially undermine it. And that needs to be fixed.

And so, my question is, Will you commit to working with us and the administration, including the National Security Council, to amend that list? Obviously, the decision would ultimately be up to the Secretary, but to add to that list additional entities who, as of now, should be on the list, but are escaping sanction?

Ms. Breier. Thank you, Senator. Thank you for the question. I agree with you wholeheartedly on the direction and on the direction of the President’s policy under the NSPM of June of last year. And with regard to the specific, the restricted list, that is a collaborative effort between the Department and the Department of Commerce and the Department of Treasury. And I certainly will commit to reviewing it. My understanding is that it is a living document. The initial tranche that was announced last year listed some 180 entities, I believe, and some 83 hotels. And we certainly can continue to review that as new information comes to light.

Senator Rubio. Thank you. Obviously, the other point, in terms of defending democracy in the region, is Venezuela. And I do want to say—you know, people can say what they want about other parts of the world—I do think the administration’s approach to Venezuela has, quite frankly, been textbook. Interesting that the region is leading. It is the Lima Group, that we are not even members of, we are supportive of, that are leading the efforts and use the OAS—and I give a—it is a good opportunity to give a shout-out to a friend and someone who I think did a phenomenal job at the latest OAS meeting, Ambassador Carlos Trujillo. We saw additional countries come onboard and support us.

So, my question, first, to Mr. Mondello and Mr. George, is, Would you both commit to helping, as one of your top priorities, if confirmed, to talk to our allied governments in Trinidad and in Uruguay, and urge them to join the rest of the democracies in the region in these efforts at the OAS to call out Venezuela and expel them from an organization of democracies, which is the official administration policy?

Mr. Mondello. Well, this is a very important point, Senator, and I agree, I think it is incumbent upon the Ambassador to Trinidad and Tobago, which is only 6.7 miles away from Venezuela, to do all in his power, or her power, to get—to be into Venezuela to discuss the various problems that exist and see if the—we can bring some stability to what is going on over there. Because right now it is a very unstable situation, and it really needs a lot of attention. And, frankly, I think that—I think that it is something that has to be done, and should be done.

Senator RUBIO. Mr. George?

Mr. GEORGE. Senator, it is an excellent point, and clearly one of the most sensitive issues, politically, between the United States and the Oriental Republic of Uruguay. They—the Uruguayan Government has been very helpful in the OAS on a number of occasions, and—but, on the issue of Venezuela, it has been a very tough call. I know how sensitive it is within the Government of Uruguay, but I can assure you that it will be one of my principal focuses, in regards to my discussions with the Government, because it is an important objective of our country and for the peace and security of the region.

Senator RUBIO. Ms. Breier, we talked about this when we met a few weeks ago, but we are now at a point where we are heavily sanctioning the regime and the individuals responsible for the suffering, but the migratory crisis of Venezuelans leaving, in addition to the humanitarian aspect of it, which is among the worst in the world now—I mean, we are seeing things coming out of Venezuela that we are used to seeing in other parts of the world; we have never seen anything like it in the western hemisphere, absent, you know, a natural disaster or something of that nature—is not just problematic for the people of Venezuela, it poses a real and growing challenge, and even threat, to their neighbors in Colombia, Brazil, other countries in the region that are taking in these flows. And one of the things we have done is, we have provided humanitarian assistance and help to Colombia in these camps, which is important. The problem is, the flip side of it is, the more aid is announced to these camps, the more people flow to these camps.

Is it—is the administration, in your view, prepared to begin to develop plans to try to figure out how we can deliver humanitarian aid within Venezuela, distributed by nongovernmental organizations and perhaps despite the objection of the Venezuelan Government? We cannot allow people to continue to suffer and die. Because what we are about to see there, in addition to the starvation and the death from diseases, is the spread of communicable diseases that have been wiped out, and suddenly now we could have measles outbreaks in these countries, in the region, which ultimately poses a threat to us, as well. So, what is—beyond the sanctions, what is, in your view, 2.0? What more can we do to help the people of Venezuela? Because that is an important aspect in all of this.

Ms. BREIER. I agree with you, Senator, and share your concern.
I think, broadly speaking, the administration’s strategy is a broad and deep one. And I appreciate your calling it a textbook, because I do think the administration has gotten it right on Venezuela in what is a tragic situation.

I could not agree more, this is a manmade crisis. This is not a natural disaster. This is the result of one man and a small group of people governing in a way that has taken a once prosperous nation and destroyed it. In terms of the administration’s strategy, we are looking at all aspects of it. I believe our aid to neighboring regions and international institutions is now in the area of 40 million. We are looking at other ways to approach the problem. We certainly need to continue to call on the Government of Venezuela to accept humanitarian aid. To this point, the Government has refused to do so. And if they fail to do so, there are other avenues that we can pursue. And I do not want to get ahead of decision-making, but there is certainly a lot of thought being given to what we can do to try to get aid into Venezuela as well as helping our regional allies in Colombia, Brazil, Guyana, and throughout the Caribbean and other places, who are absorbing the impact of this.

Senator RUBIO. Ranking Member.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Over the weekend, the President took to Twitter to criticize Canadian Prime Minister Trudeau. His closest advisors refer to Prime Minister Trudeau as, quote, “a backstabber,” said, quote, “There is a special place in hell for him.” This comes months after the President openly boasted about lying to Prime Minister Trudeau. Such language is not only outrageous, but it runs completely contrary to the close partnership that has existed between the United States and Canada for decades on issues that span the globe, from Ukraine to Syria to Afghanistan.

So, Ms. Breier, do you share these views?

Ms. BREIER. Thank you, Senator. I think it is an important question.

The relationship with Mexico and Canada have been the focus of the bulk of my 20-year career in western hemisphere affairs. I am acutely aware of the importance of these relationships, and how deep and institutional they are, across the board. I think what we are witnessing right now is a disagreement over trade. And in the 20-plus years I have been doing this, I cannot think of a time where we have not had a disagreement on trade, either with Canada or with Mexico. So, I think these are the types of things that we have been able to overcome in the past, in that there is a deep institutionality in these relationships that will allow us to surmount the areas where we do not agree and continue working on the——

Senator MENENDEZ. But, we can——

Ms. BREIER.—many areas where——

Senator MENENDEZ.—disagree without being disagreeable. Am I going to have you—you want me to vote on you as the Assistant Secretary of State for the Western Hemisphere, and you cannot tell me that this language is not acceptable? Do I—would I ever expect you to use that language? Because if not, you are never going to get through this committee.

Ms. BREIER. Senator, if confirmed for this position, my job would be to be a top diplomat on this file. I understand very well the need to adhere to proper diplomatic forum, and will choose my words carefully.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe such comments help advance the U.S. national interests in this hemisphere?

Ms. BREIER. I think, Senator, what the administration is pointing out is that there are some things in trade that have not been fair and reciprocal, and that the administration is focused on trying to right—— Senator MENENDEZ. Is Mexico the second-largest export market for goods and services in the world? Second-largest?

Ms. BREIER. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. It is. Let me ask you something. Do you believe Canadian steel and aluminum constitute a threat to U.S. national security?

Ms. BREIER. I believe the finding of the 232 Panel suggests that the overcapacity globally is the threat to national security, not necessarily Canadian steel and aluminum specifically.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you this. With—you have extensive experience, which I admire, working on issues related to Mexico. And I know you fully understand how important this relationship is. But, we cannot expect to secure our border, address undocumented immigration, address challenges related to narcotics trafficking which are contributing to the heroin and fentanyl epidemic that is plaguing our country. Now, the problem is, is that the administration’s comments continue to raise the political cost for any Mexican authority that wants to cooperate with us. And we need their cooperation. But, everybody has a domestic constituency. And if you make it impossible for a government official, including the highest elements of the Mexican Government, to work with the American Government—I mean, because, at the end of the day, there is a huge domestic cost—it is not going to happen.

So, as our person who would be our principal diplomat for the Americas, do you intend to formulate a strategy to make Mexico pay for a border wall between our countries?

Ms. BREIER. Senator, I could not agree with you more. This is one of the most fundamentally important relationships to the United States. And, despite the ongoing disagreements at the political level, as I mentioned, I think that the relationships are making progress behind the scenes in an institutional way. And I think that that is very important. We live next door to each other, we are in this together, and I think everyone realizes that.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you intend to formulate a strategy, was my question.

Ms. BREIER. I intend to work very closely, if confirmed, with the Government of Mexico on securing the border and doing all of the things we can do cooperatively with Mexico to address threats before they get there.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe Mexican steel and aluminum constitute a threat to the national security of the United States?

Ms. BREIER. I believe the 232 report concluded that global over-supply is the threat, Senator, not specifically Mexican——

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you believe the United States can address a border security, migration, and drug trafficking without a productive partnership with Mexican authorities?

Ms. BREIER. I do not. I think a productive relationship is necessary.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you another important, different set of questions. Over the last 7 months, the Department of Homeland Security, acting in consultation with the Department of State, has terminated temporary protective status for Haitians, Salvadorans, and Honduran nationals. This status, as you know, was designed to protect individuals who are unable to return to the dire conditions in their homeland. To this point, I am extremely concerned that, when then-Secretary Tillerson decided to recommend the termination of TPS for Haitians, Salvadorans, and Hondurans, he deliberately disregarded the advice of our embassies on the ground, of the foreign policy officials who were tasked with ascertaining the conditions on the ground.

So, I would like to ask you. At the time the State Department made its decisions not to recommend an extension of TPS for Honduras, El Salvador, and Haiti, you were working as a senior advisor covering western hemisphere affairs for the Office of Policy Planning for the Secretary of State. What role did you play in this decisionmaking process?

Ms. BREIER. Thank you for the question, Senator.

The Office of Policy Planning is part of the Secretary’s staff and it tends to be a strategy office. What we do, principally, is oversee documents that are going to the Secretary, and also try to assist on developing strategies, for example, on that country—countries and challenges like Venezuela. So, in this particular case, I was involved, in the sense that I was aware the debate was going on and that the discussions were happening, but I was not directly involved in the day-to-day.

Senator MENENDEZ. So, as the senior advisor covering the western hemisphere on policy planning in an office of 20 individuals, at most, you were unaware and had no impact on the decision?

Ms. BREIER. Senator, I did not say I was unaware. I said I was involved in overseeing and, broadly, was aware that—— Senator MENENDEZ. So, when you say you were involved in overseeing, give me a sense of what you were doing as it relates to this issue.

Ms. BREIER. I would—when documents would come forward, I would review them and sign off on them, or not, as they went to the Secretary——

Senator MENENDEZ. I am sorry, come——

Ms. BREIER.—for his——

Senator MENENDEZ.—come forward from where?

Ms. BREIER. From the bureaus. There are multiple bureaus in the Department——

Senator MENENDEZ. And those documents, we now know, basically all said that TPS should be continued, in the national interests of the United States. Is that not a fair statement?

Ms. BREIER. I did not see—I did not see it evolve the way you are describing. I think the embassy——

Senator MENENDEZ. We have——

Ms. BREIER.—suggested that——

Senator MENENDEZ. We have copies of the documents. Are you telling me those documents did not say that it is not in the national interests of the United States to extend, to—not extend, to end TPS?

Ms. BREIER. Senator, I think that—what I saw was a vigorous debate that went on in the building.

Another point I would like to make is that I think there is a tendency to separate between political and career, in the sense that the views of career folks were not heard. And I do not—I did not see it that way at all. And, if confirmed, I think—I would like to foster an environment where all views are heard, regardless of whether you are career or political.

I witnessed a vigorous debate on this, and I do not think that it is entirely accurate to characterize it as overriding of——

Senator Menendez. Well, I guess——

Ms. Breier.—career——

Senator Menendez.—you and I are going to have go over the documents, because a plain reading of the documents make it very clear that those who are on the ground in our embassies—and this concerns me certainly for these three countries, but what is going to happen, moving forward. If you put people, who you want to run our embassies abroad, and they—whether they be political appointees or career individuals, and those who work with them—and they give you the advice that this is not in the national interests of the United States, and you reject their advice because of other political considerations, I think that is a bad process. So, we are going to have to go over the documents, because the documents are pretty clear.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

I have questions for the other nominees, but, in deference to my colleagues, I will wait.

Senator Rubio. I just want to clarify, because that is an interest of mine, as well, the whole TPS issue. And if I hear you correctly, what you are describing is an internal process in which the State Department opined on the national security elements for purposes of the diplomatic corps: What is the impact it is going to have in Honduras, in Haiti, and the like? But, then there were other parts of this debate, outside of the State Department, that were viewing it through the migratory or DHS. And, ultimately, the policy was made because of all these interconnected silos, so to speak.

Ms. Breier. That is correct.

Senator Rubio. Is that how you are describing the——

Ms. Breier. Yeah.

The Chairman:—process?

Ms. Breier. That is correct, Senator. Ultimately, the decision-making authority on this issue rests with the Department of Homeland Security.

Senator Rubio. Okay. And so, the State Department just informed them on that, and that is the—so, that is the process under——

Ms. Breier. Right. The State Department informed as to whether the underlying conditions that justified the original designation continued to exist.

Senator Rubio. Right. And that issue, by the way, probably deserves a broader—just the State Department portion of it deserves a broader flushing out, in terms of the rationale, because I, too, believe that it would have a very significant impact on Honduras and Haiti and these countries that we have invested in. So.

Senator Cardin.

Senator Cardin. Ms. Breier, I want to follow up on this, because I am confused now. Senator Menendez has accurately portrayed the information that we have reviewed that showed that the missions in country recommended the continuation of TPS. The vigrous debate you are referring to, did that happen within the State Department or did that happen within Homeland Security?

Ms. BREIER. It—to my knowledge, it happened within the State Department, sir.

Senator CARDIN. So, you are saying that the State Department itself recommended the termination of TPS?

Ms. BREIER. I am saying, Senator, there was not a unified view within the Department on this, and then the Secretary made a decision.

Senator CARDIN. The Secretary of State. And the Secretary of State supported the termination of the TPS status.

Ms. BREIER. Yes, sir.

Senator CARDIN. I am not sure we were aware of that. I think that is different than—at least, I thought the decision was made by Homeland Security, and that with—and that the recommendation from State Department was different. So, you are saying——

Ms. BREIER. So, the recommendation from the State Department assesses whether the original conditions exist and that these recommendations——

Senator CARDIN. State Department overruled the views of the mission. That—the last time we saw something like this happen was on the TIP report. And this committee, rightly so, got outraged, the politics was overruling something that we feel pretty strongly about. State Department's assessment deals with the circumstances in the countries of Central America or Haiti that would allow these individuals to return. Is it—are they prepared to take them back? Are the circumstances better? Is it in our interests, et cetera? And what you are telling me now, that there was a rigorous debate in State Department that overruled those on the ground that had talked to the host countries, that strongly supported the continuation of TPS. That is different than I thought, but it is what you are telling me happened.

Ms. BREIER. Senator, what I am trying to suggest is that the inputs on the ground are an input into a broader process, where they come into the Department, into multiple bureaus, who deliberate and then make a recommendation to the Secretary of State, who then makes a recommendation to the Secretary of Homeland Security based on whether the original conditions that justified the TPS designation continue to exist.

Senator CARDIN. And the ultimate recommendation from the State Department was to terminate the TPS.

Ms. BREIER. That is my understanding, sir, yes.

Senator CARDIN. Let me go move on to other subjects. First, let me thank you all for your willingness to serve, and thank your families.

I want to ask a general question first. I hope that you can recognize that we are going to follow up on this. And that is your commitment to advance American values and human rights in the hemisphere, or the two countries in which you have been nominated to represent the United States. We expect that you will inform us as to the progress that you are making on human rights, something I asked of all of our nominees, and that it will be a top priority of yours in the countries. There is no country in our hemisphere that could not improve on human rights, and particularly with the Assistant Secretary. To me, it is critically important that this be spotlighted in your work.

Do we have your commitment that you will be working with us and will share information and respond to requests that we have in regards to human rights issues?

Mr. GEORGE. I guess I will go first. Yes, sir. And I will say that—if I may, that Uruguay is like pushing on an open door in this regard, as you are probably well aware. They were the president of the Human Rights Council in the U.N. They cofounded the Equal Rights Coalition. They are a very progressive country in regards to LGBTI rights. So, it will be an issue that will be taken up and supported vigorously in my country, if confirmed to the Oriental Republic of Uruguay.

Mr. MONDELLO. Yes, I would agree with George. I believe that it is a—very, very important issue, if not the most important issue. Human rights, when it comes to Trinidad and Tobago, could possibly be some very—with—some very difficult situations going on there regarding human trafficking, regarding drugs, regarding so much of this. And I think that it is going to be the responsibility of the Ambassador that goes there, if I am confirmed, to delve into these problems, use the agencies in which I, if confirmed, would have the ability to speak with, to aid the local Trinidadian Government, in terms of handling these problems.

Senator CARDIN. And speaking to the two countries that are—that we have specific nominees for, it is important that our mission be an open door for those that want to hear an advocate for human rights. Sometimes the host country is not particularly pleased that we put a spotlight on problems in their own country. I take it you are both prepared to carry on the tradition of our missions to be there on behalf human rights advocates.

Mr. MONDELLO. Without question, Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir, without question.

Senator CARDIN. Ms. Breier, I—you and I have had a chance to talk about this before, so I want to—and we talked about the concern in Paraguay of a Marylander, who, in 2015, Alex Villamayor, who was brutally raped, murdered in Paraguay, that it was a long time before they acknowledged the circumstances. And there was—there still has been a delay in dealing with this. We have asked the FBI to help. We have had some cooperation, but not enough. Will you make this a personal priority of yours to resolve this particular open case against an American?

Ms. BREIER. Yes, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. Appreciate that.

And then, lastly, as it relates to OAS, we had a conversation also on OAS as to how we can strengthen that. There is interest, in this committee, to strengthen the parliamentary dimension within OAS. It is located kind of conveniently for us to participate, being located here in Washington. Will you agree to work with our committee as to how we can strengthen the OAS to be more effective in dealing with the challenges we have in our own hemisphere?

Ms. BREIER. Yes, Senator. I continue to believe the OAS is the premier institution in our hemisphere, and we should do everything possible to strengthen it.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.
Senator Rubio, Senator Kaine.

Senator Kaine. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

And I want to thank Senator Risch also for letting me jump the line. I appreciate that.

To—yeah, you—I owe you one—to all of you, I applaud you for your nominations and for your willingness to serve.

Ms. Breier, I am going to start with you, and I may only ask you questions, just because of my passion about the billet that you are inheriting. Senator Menendez’s questions to you about the statements about Canada put you in a hard position. And so, I am not really even going to ask you a question about it. You are a diplomat with a great deal of experience, and you understand this region very well. And I think you know what diplomatic protocols are and what they are not. And so, has there been trade issues with Canada in the past? Absolutely. And there always will be. But, they are one of our biggest trade partners. And when the right hand of a President says that the Prime Minister of Canada, you know, deserves a place in hell, that is just completely outside the range of reason. It is something that should be on a South Park episode. It is not something that is presidential behavior. And so, when we asked you to comment on it, I mean, the President has nominated you, so that puts you in a really hard position. But, I guess the reason we ask a question like that is—I met with you in the office. You know this area very well. I am glad to have somebody of your experience in it. But, just do not trade a lifetime reputation of service to the country and understanding of the region to—you know, I want good people to take these jobs, even under a difficult circumstance, but you are going to face a lot of opportunities, should you be confirmed, on a lot of moments where I think there is going to be a very difficult choice, and it is going to be the integrity that you have built up over decades doing this work, and moments where you can just kind of squander it.

I mean, Canada and Mexico are two of our biggest trading partners nationally, and Virginia certainly. And, as the Senator said, that—I have visited Canadian troops in Afghanistan and Iraq. I have seen Canadians at Landstuhl Hospital in Germany who have been injured side by side with U.S. And while trade disputes with Canada are nothing new, language like that is unprecedented. I am understanding the Canadian Parliament today is doing a resolution condemning the President of the United States. That is not the norm. And with as many equities as we have on the table with these nations, so many issues, from border to trade to hemispheric—other hemisphere activities, to what we do in the security space, I mean, anybody who is voting for you is voting for you based on their judgment, not about your past, but about your future. And just please make the right choice when those moments come.

I want to ask you—the last thing that Senator Cardin asked you was about the OAS. And I want you to tell me—you said pre-eminent institution there, but talk to me a little bit about what you think of the OAS right now. I think it has had some ups and downs. I think it is—there has been times that have been less effective, more effective. But, give me your sense of it right now.
Ms. BREIER. Thank you, Senator. And thank you for the comments.

I do think the OAS is, and should be, the central institution. It is a very unique hemisphere, as you well know. We are the only hemisphere bounded by democracy and by choice to commit to democratic governance through the Inter-American Democratic Charter. So, I think that we need to continue to focus on building out the capacity institutionality of the OAS, and also reinforcing its ability to enforce its existing charters and conventions. Those include the conventions on corruption, which were highlighted in Lima recently, as well as the Inter-American Democratic Charter.

So, I think we should absolutely focus on everything we can do. We have an excellent Ambassador there. And I think, moving forward, it will be a high priority to reinforce the institutionality, and including its role in Honduras on anticorruption, where I think it is playing a very important role, and we need to ensure we can strengthen it in that, as well.

Senator KAINE. I want to use the Honduras example as just kind of an example of your thinking about the OAS as an institution, or the Department or administration’s thinking. So, part of wanting the OAS to be stronger is if they take a position of strength trying to support that position. When the Honduran elections were held in November, the OAS concluded, in mid-December, based on their review, that the elections were fundamentally unfair and that there should be a re-election, that there should be another election. And they rendered that opinion. And this was not a matter of casual interest to me, having lived in Honduras. And I would certainly never suggest that another nation needed to do new elections lightly, especially a country like this, where I know the President. But, when the OAS, who I do believe is doing better and I do believe we are trying to elevate their influence in the region, reach this conclusion, I do not think they reached it lightly. Talk about why the U.S.—what the thinking process was, why this administration, despite the OAS’s decision, decided to say, “No, the election should not be rerun, and we should just move forward.” What was the process behind that?

Ms. BREIER. Thank you, Senator.

I think the situation was, we ended up with a very close election in Honduras. The OAS report, I think, was very critical of some of the underpinnings of how the election was carried out. But, the report, itself, did not call for a new election. The report simply pointed out that there were some irregularities and issues of concern. We also had input from the European Union, which had a delegation there, as well, observing the election.

When taking all of that into consideration, it is my understanding that the policy was that there was not anything that convinced the policymakers at the time that the outcome of the election had been changed. Even though the United States made a strong statement acknowledging the irregularities in the work of the both the OAS and the EU missions, that there was not sufficient information suggest that the outcome would have been changed.

So, the administration did, in fact, support Honduran institutions that had concluded, after much review and reconsideration and recount of a number of the actas, that the election should stand.

Senator Kaine. I may want to follow up with you on this, because I am just looking at a Reuters report from December with the title “OAS Says Honduran Presidential Election Should Be Redone.” I agree with you, they called out irregularities in the election, but I thought they reached some conclusion or suggested that the elections be redone.

Last thing I will just say is, I share the concerns my colleagues have raised about the TPS situation. And again, I will use Honduras as an example, but we could talk about others. I had a visit, which is an annual visit in my office, from the Association of General Contractor. Now, they usually come to me, and they talk to me about construction issues, tax, regulation. This year, they came in and they brought El Salvadoran and Honduran workers with their construction firms, and they talked about how devastating it would be to their businesses in the—in this country, if these Salvadoran and Hondurans were be—were to be pushed back to Honduras and El Salvador. I spoke with the President of Honduras about this last week, and he had the same reaction, that it would be very, very difficult. And he predicted, which I think what we know to be true, some will come back, and the reintegration will be very difficult, and some will choose not to come back. And instead of living legally, paying taxes, doing the things that we want them to do, they will move into the shadows of the U.S. economy. I just cannot fathom why the administration concluded—especially when I have business interests in my office saying, “Please maintain TPS”—I cannot fathom why the administration concluded that these programs should be terminated. But, I look forward to—and as Senator Menendez and Cardin were talking about—going through the dialogue itself, because I also was of the impression that the U.S. Embassy in Honduras, in Tegucigalpa, strongly recommended that TPS be extended. I may have followup questions about that in writing.

Thank you.

Senator Rubio. I think, Ms. Breier, just—before I turn to Senator Risch, just to touch a point that I thought you raised earlier, when I first questioned about the—sort of, the statements about Canada and so forth, which we get are, you know, unprecedented. We have not—we are not accustomed to seeing that sort of thing, but yet you have testified—and I believe all of us are aware of—there are deep institutional ties between the U.S., Canada, and Mexico, particularly Canada. This morning, everybody showed up at work at NORAD, on the defense side, everybody—you view your role, and those like you in the State Department, as keeping those institutional ties strong, irrespective of what might be happening on a day-to-day level in the political realm. And I thought that is what you had said earlier. I just wanted to be—

Ms. Breier. That is correct, Senator.

Senator Rubio. Okay.

Senator Risch.

Senator Risch. Thank you.

Thank—to all three of you, thanks for—willing to undertake these difficult jobs in the world we live in today.
Mr. Mondello, I have a specific question for you. Senator Rubio and I sit on the Intelligence committee. And high on our radar screen over a number of years has been ISIS, and ISIS fighters, and where they come from, and how they are trained, and that sort of thing. The—it is—and this President has been very successful in tamping ISIS down, which is a good thing. And they are not on—in the headlines as much as they were, but they are still there. We are all convinced that they are going to rear their ugly head again somewhere under a different banner, or what have you. But, the thing that was surprising, I think, to a lot of us is that Trinidad and Tobago produce more ISIS fighters per capita than any other country in the western hemisphere. And I would like to get your thoughts on that, and what thoughts you might have about working with the Governments of those two countries to fight extremism.

Mr. Mondello. Well, Senator, this is a very important problem that exists in Trinidad and Tobago. You are right, there was 135, I believe, individuals that went to join ISIS, which is the highest per-capita amount in any country—that have come from any country. It is a problem that needs to be worked on. We have to—if confirmed, I would help the Trinidadian Government as much as I could, together with the members of the agencies that are in my—would be in my embassy, to see if the—certain things could be alleviated. That is—there is poverty there. There is socioeconomic problems in spite of the fact that they have a very high GDP in the—in Trinidad and Tobago. Yet, we have to have some messaging going on there to let people understand, you know, what we believe in, what we are, and try to help these people to succeed and become employed and not let the—not let these people be so susceptible to joining ISIS and getting involved in that nefarious behavior.

Senator Risch. Well, I appreciate that. And I hope you will carry the message to those governments that this is a matter that is on our radar screen, and we are very concerned about it, particularly coming from our own hemisphere and putting people on the ground in other parts of the world to fight American interests there. So, thank you very much. And thank you, again, for your willingness to serve.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Mondello. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Shaheen.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations, to each of you, on being nominated. And thank you for your willingness to take on these difficult positions at this time.

Ms. Breier, on May 7th, Attorney General Sessions announced that all adults who arrive at our border—southern border—will be prosecuted for illegal entry, even if they attempt to seek asylum. This has resulted in an unprecedented policy of parents being separated from their children. We heard, over the weekend, news reports that, in the month of May alone, 415 children were taken away at the McAllen, Texas, border crossing, alone. Can you tell me what the view is, in the Latin American countries, of this policy, and whether it is having any impact on either those people trying to come to this country to seek asylum or on our border security?

Ms. BREIER. Thank you, Senator. Thank you for the question.

I think, as you point out, the State Department’s piece of this question is the foreign policy one, and it relates to our ongoing program started under the past administration, the Strategy for Central America, which has benefited from the bipartisan support of many members of this committee. And, if confirmed, it would be my responsibility to ensure that we are continuing to carry out that policy, which is to continue to try change the underlying circumstances in the countries, themselves, so that families would never make the decision that we are seeing them make now to traverse Mexico and to arrive at the U.S. border. I have not yet had the opportunity to speak directly with the Governments about their reaction to the Attorney General’s announcement. I would have to get back to you on that from my colleagues in the Department.

Senator SHAHEEN. I would ask you to get back to this committee with a response on that. [The information referred to follows:] [Ms. Breier’s response can be found at the end of this transcript in the Responses to Additional Questions section.]

Senator SHAHEEN. I have to say that I think the policy is wrong, it is wrongheaded, and the idea that we are going to separate children from their families is just un-American, to be frank, and something that we should not allow. And I would hope that we, as a committee, would speak up against that and let the administration know very clearly where we stand. So, Mr. Chairman and Senator Menendez, I hope that you will take that under advisement.

If you are confirmed as Assistant Secretary, Ms. Breier, how will you work with SOUTHCOM to combat the drug trade that is coming through the region, and support drug interdiction efforts? This is a huge issue for us in New Hampshire, and certainly for many States across the country.

Ms. BREIER. Thank you, Senator. It is an important question.

I think—one of the things I have witnessed in my career, particularly in my experience at the White House in 2005–2006, is the importance of the coordination among the interagency and making sure that we are all synced up on our priorities, in terms of addressing the challenges that we have. I am proud to say that this administration, I think, has taken very seriously the opioid issue, both on the demand side and on the supply side. And clearly, SOUTHCOM is the leading tip of the spear on the supply side, working with regional governments and trying to develop strategies on maritime interdiction, eradication, and all of the various aspects of combating the supply side of this problem. So, I think it is a very important priority, and I certainly will commit to doing that, if confirmed.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much.

Can you describe what the administration’s policy is on addressing the empowerment of women and the challenges that women, particularly in Latin America, face?

Ms. BREIER. Sure. Thank you, Senator.
I think one of the things that, unfortunately, I did not think got very much coverage during the Lima Summit was that we announced a major initiative through OPIC on women’s empowerment in the western hemisphere. And I certainly think it is a priority for this administration. The President’s National Security Strategy references empowering women as part of its—as part of the key strategic goals of the administration. So, I certainly think that that will be a priority and will commit also to working on that.

The OPIC announcement was about empowering micro-enterprise and providing seed capital for women entrepreneurs, and I think it is a really interesting initiative, and one that we can do a lot with in the western hemisphere.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, I am pleased to hear that, because the fact is, the administration tried to abolish the Office of Global Women’s Issues. It is not yet filled. And we have eliminated our funding for UNFPA, which is so important for women in Latin America and around the world, in terms of access to family planning. So, I would hope that we would recognize the importance of women, both in their contributions to their families and their communities and their countries, because what we have seen is that, when women have a more equal voice, or an equal voice, that that makes a huge difference in how their countries and their communities do.

Mr. Mondello and Mr. George, would you both commit that, if confirmed, that you will work to ensure that women in Trinidad and Tobago and in Uruguay are a focus of what your work is as Ambassador?

Mr. Mondello?

Mr. MONDELLO. Absolutely, Senator. That is something that really would be a top priority.

Senator SHAHEEN. Mr. George?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, Ms.—yes, ma’am. I can assure you of that. And we will have a strong outreach in all our activities regarding LBGTI and women’s issues, et cetera, in the community.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you very much.

And let me just say, I want to associate my remarks with those that have already been presented by members of this committee with respect to Canada. Canada is New Hampshire’s—in particular, but also Mexico—they are both New Hampshire’s—among our largest trading partners, Canada is our largest trading partner. About a third of people in the Granite State are direct descendants from Canadians who came down from Quebec, and they still—many of them still have relatives in Canada. And the fact that we would have this kind of discussion about the head of—the Prime Minister of Canada, where such disparaging remarks are used, I think is not in America’s interests. And I think it is important, as Senator Kaine said, that we call out those kinds of comments. You know, one of the things that is wrong with our politics today is the fact that people treat that as being normal. We need to restore civil discourse and respect for different opinions. And we do not do it by calling out names. As somebody who has been part of the State Department and the diplomatic service for many years, Ms. Breier, you understand that. And I certainly hope that both of you, as candidates to be Ambassadors, understand that, as well. It is not acceptable behavior, and it is incumbent on all of us, Democrat and Republican, to call it out when we see it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

We are here for the finish line. I wanted to raise a couple of topics.

Ms. Breier, going back to you for a moment. And let us talk about Nicaragua for a moment. You followed closely events as they have unfolded there. It is my view, and I think the view of many, that that government has lost legitimacy and, frankly, its ability to continue to govern under the conditions. And there has been talks with the Catholic Church now. I hear they might—government might want to invite in the U.N. to figure out a way to moderate a way forward. They obviously are not big fans of the OAS. But—so, that is why they would want to do that. It is my view that they have lost legitimacy, and they are going to struggle to ever be able to govern again, and that probably the only path forward for them is some sort of earlier election than is currently called for. Obviously, internationally supervised and the like.

What they do not have, in my view, is the benefit of time to run the clock on this. They—number one, I do think that, at some point, the administration—in fact, I know—is going to look very closely at using the Global Magnitsky Act and other options to go after individuals who have been violating human rights and are guilty of corruption. Here in Congress, there is a law called the NICA Act, which, unfortunately, has run into some procedural hurdles, but which, I believe, when voted on, would pass overwhelmingly. And then there is an additional factor, which I have strong reason to believe that, within the next 60 days or so, Nicaragua is going to face a real currency challenge. Their currency reserves are dwindling rapidly, so they are going to have a banking and/or currency crisis, here, probably in the next month and a half to two.

So, all these things are a confluence of events. Could you—and I think it—we also—it is important for us to explain to the American people why we should care. Obviously, we have already talked about defending democracy in the hemisphere, and our—that is why it is in our national interest to do so. Nicaragua also happens to be, perhaps after Cuba, the nation where Russia has the most influence, in terms of talking about potential visit rights or even basing rights in the hemisphere and the like. But, the third, which is not often talked about, is the role that Nicaragua plays in terms of the routes that bring drugs, this increased production of cocaine, through Central America. And, for a lot of different reasons, primarily because they kill drug dealers, they have avoided Nicaragua. If there is instability there of any sort, if it compromises, because of an economic crisis, the ability to continue to enforce those mechanisms, that is an additional transit point that would now open up, thereby making it even easier to bring drugs into the United States.

How do you view, first of all, where we are today in our policies? And could you describe, sort of, what you think the appropriate role for the U.S. is in regards to Nicaragua in the months to come?

Ms. BREIER. Thank you, Senator.
This is a really important issue that, you know, is evolving and breaking, you know, as we sit here. I want to go back to something that both you and the Ranking Member mentioned in your opening statements, which is, by and large, you know, we have a tremendous opportunity in the western hemisphere, and we have seen an incredible amount of positive change over recent years. There are glaring exceptions to that, and the glaring exceptions are the countries that follow this old model, the Cuba, Venezuela, and Nicaragua, principally, where I think the populations in those countries have said, “Enough,” that this model does not work, and it is time for a change. And certainly we have seen that recently with Nicaraguans of all stripes in the streets. We have seen students, we have seen business organizations, we have seen the church. And I think people have been struck by the diversity of the number of people protesting, and their backgrounds, who have told the Ortega Government that, “Enough,” and, “It is time to make a change.”

In terms of the U.S. role, clearly we are following it very closely. It is a priority. We announced, very recently, that we are withdrawing visas from some top regime officials for their participation in the suppression of the protests. Globe-Mag, as you mentioned, is something that has already been used in Nicaragua, and we could use again. And we will be looking at, I think, all of the possible tools for addressing this crisis at the same time as pressing the Government of Nicaragua to come to the table and resume dialogue, under the auspices of the Church and the other players, to move this toward quick resolution. I agree with your characterization that there is not a tremendous amount of time and that we are looking at a situation where the Government needs to probably move very quickly to schedule elections and move the process forward.

Senator RUBIO. And again, what I am about to say is my opinion. I am not representing that to the opinion of anybody else or the official opinion of the administration. And I am not asking you to opine on it. You are still not confirmed. But, I still think that, contrary to Venezuela, there is still time for Ortega and for his wife, the Vice President, to figure out a way to sort of call a new—real election and kind of transition to some form of retirement. I had opportunity, the last week, to meet with a—numerous students from Nicaragua. None of them are yet calling for them to be put in jail or them to be even forcibly exiled. I do think there comes a point where you cross a line and then that sort of opportunity is no longer available. And so, I hope it is an opportunity they will take, because I think the reverse, if something like that does not happen, is—there is the real potential for significant bloodshed. We have seen both former Sandinistas and Contras who—Sandinistas, who oppose Ortega, and Contras, who always did—who have been threatening to take up arms to rebel against the Government. And so, I do believe that there is the potential, sadly, for a much more violent open confrontation that—reminiscent of what we may have seen, some portions of the ’80s. And there is a chance to still avoid it, and I hope they are hearing that and that there is a chance to do that.

I wanted to ask one more question, and I actually wanted to ask you, Mr. George, for your input, although it takes you outside of Uruguay. It takes you into, sort of, some of your business experience. There is reports yesterday—let me just say that there are no U.S. oil sanctions on Venezuela. It has been widely speculated. The only people sanctioning the Venezuelan oil industry is the Maduro regime, because their production has declined—I mean, just collapsed. And a consequence of that—and they use the oil, by the way, to buy their influence. When people ask themselves, Why are some of these countries out there still voting with them at the OAS?—not really Uruguay, for these purposes, but others—it is because of oil, through the agreements that they had made in Petrocaribe and the like. But, they announced—in the last couple of days, it has been brought to light that about half the Caribbean countries are being cut off because—they are being cut off of access to oil because Venezuela can no longer produce it. And one of them is not Cuba, by the way. They continue to find ways to deliver—Venezuela can—still finds ways to deliver humanitarian aid to Cuba after recent events there, but cannot deliver humanitarian aid to its own people and cannot produce oil for its other customers, but sure makes—goes a—really reaches to make sure they can continue to provide oil to Cuba. So, that is an interesting dynamic.

Suffice it to say, Antigua and Barbados, Belize, Dominica, El Salvador, Haiti, Nicaragua—so, add to the currency crisis, they are going to lose access to oil—Saint Vincent, Saint Kitts, all are going to lose access to Petrocaribe oil, here, very soon, because Venezuela cannot produce it.

My question to you, Ms. Breier, is, Is there an opportunity there for the United States now to engage with our private sector, not just to make up, sort of, the loss of energy, which these countries need, but ensure that no other potential geopolitical competitor could step in the void and try to fill it at our expense? Because we—there is—it seems that there would be an opportunity for us to leverage our U.S. capacity to meet that need, and also has geopolitical benefits.

And to you, Mr. George, where—what is the—just going off your background in investment in oil and gas and the like, what are the opportunities there for American Gulf refineries to play a role in stepping up and potentially helping to fill that void? It is an unfair question. It is outside the realm of Uruguay, but you are here, I read your bio, and so it sounds like something you might be able to give us some opinions on.

But, certainly to you, Ms. Breier, it is a—I think it is a key opportunity.

Ms. Breier. Thank you, Senator. I agree with your characterization that the Venezuelan oil sector is collapsing all on its own, absent sanctions from the United States.

I think, to get to the—where we can go in the future, in terms of helping Caribbean nations that may be coming off Venezuelan subsidized oil, this is something that the administration has been looking at, in cooperation with Canada and Mexico and our partners in the Caribbean, to see exactly what you suggest, what opportunities there may be to backfill on supplies. We also have vigorous programs in the Caribbean focused on energy security, looking at alternative forms of energy and ways that the United States, through our development, finance, and other tools, can assist the Caribbean in getting off of oil entirely and looking at other forms of energy supply. As you well know, the electricity costs in the Caribbean remain very high, so I think we have a challenge there, even absent the Petrocaribe situation.

Mr. George. Senator, it is—obviously, you are right, it is not in my wheelhouse for the—today’s discussion, but the oil industry is obviously something I have been involved in all my life. My dad was a geologist back—starting in 1945, in West Texas.

Senator Rubio. It was a good time to get into that business. [Laughter.]

Mr. George. It—he was one of those, you know, returnees from World War II, and the—had a scholarship, due to the—you know, the soldiers and everything. So, it is—we wound up in Midland.

The issue right now is, yes, we have revolutionized exploration in the world, starting in Texas, in the Barnett Shale, with the hydraulic fracking. I am not wanting—I do not—you do not want me to get into a detailed discussion about what is going on, but I can say the opportunity clearly exists.

Now, the Gulf Coast, as you all are obviously very familiar with, those refineries positioned themselves to take heavy crude from the Orinoco Basin in Venezuela. A number of them. Not all of them, by any stretch of the imagination, but a significant number. As the crude falls off, as the implosion of the Venezuelan capacity to export, to produce, et cetera, we are having to—to get into a detailed discussion about what is going on, but I can say the opportunity clearly exists.

Now, the other problem in regards to responding to your question, because it seems very obvious that you are exactly right, the—but there are some logistics problems. And not to get into the real details, but we have a significant pipeline constraint. There is going to be no basin in the United States any bigger than the Permian Basin, out in West Texas. The Delaware, all those basins that are—make part of what we call, generically, the Permian Basin of West Texas. It is multi-stacked, it is going to be prolific, it is going to be one of the largest fields in the entire world. The problem is, you have got to get it to the market, you have got to get it to the refinery. We have, now, a major constraint. The pipelines are full. So, when you have the current market for the product sales, and you have the supply, and the pipelines that connect the two, and you cannot just put it on a truck—I mean, you can physically put oil on a truck, you cannot do that with natural gas—and you cannot put it, necessarily, on a rail. You can put it on there, but there is a capacity issue. So, the ability to supply that need quickly is an issue that is different from, Is it strategically important to the United States that we do it eventually? And, as you well remember, we had a major impediment to exporting U.S. energy for a long time in this country. So, the ability to sell into the Caribbean has been constrained by other measures.

So, your point is well taken. I know the oil industry looks forward to being able to create export markets for their product. Nothing is easier than doing it close to home, in the Caribbean. I think it is a tremendous opportunity. I have been talking about that concept in other arenas—natural gas into Europe, et cetera—for a long time as a strategic advantage that the United States needs to take advantage of. And we are currently not positioned well to do it.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

Ranking Member?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Let me start this second round on a positive note. I am thrilled to announce to the committee that the united bid from the United States, Canada, and Mexico to host the 2026 World Cup has achieved success. So, we are doing something together, hemispherically. Maybe that will be the beginning of something new.

And, Mr. Chairman, we will invite you. The final will be at MetLife Stadium in New Jersey. So, you know, it will be a great moment. [Laughter.]

Senator RUBIO. I heard it was in Montreal, but that is——

[Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. It is MetLife Stadium in New Jersey. So.

Anyhow, Mr. Mondello, having Congressman King here is an asset. It would even be a bigger asset if you were being nominated to Ireland, but——[Laughter.]

Senator MENENDEZ. —but it is still——

Mr. MONDELLO [continuing]. Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ [continuing]. It is still an asset. Congressman King and I have a long history together from our days in the House. And bringing Mr. Zimmerman with you is a bipartisan effort, so I really—that means you can bring people together in common cause. That is a good thing.

So, have you ever visited Trinidad and Tobago?

Mr. MONDELLO. Never, Senator. I have never——

Senator MENENDEZ. That is not disqualifying, but my colleagues, when Democrats were in the majority, would ask that question of every nominee. So, I do not find that disqualifying, but it is always interesting to know.

Let me ask you—let me just say this. I want to echo, to save time, the comments of questions that have been raised by others as it is—as it relates to getting Trinidad and Tobago to help us at the OAS on Venezuela. Really important. And I hope you will focus a significant part of your time there trying to get them on the right page in that regard.

Mr. MONDELLO. Yes, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. They are having hundreds of people come from Venezuela that are now—actually, 40,000 Venezuelans are now living in Trinidad and Tobago, so it is an issue.

Secondly, I want to echo what Senator Risch raised. There has been 100 Trinidadian citizens who have left their country to join the Islamic State over the last few years. And the possibility that trained citizens could come back to Trinidad and Tobago, within the western hemisphere, is a real concern. So, I look forward to you actively being engaged in that issue, as well, with the Government of Trinidad and Tobago.

Mr. MONDELLO. Absolutely, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. And then, lastly, there is a report that the SCL Group, which is a parent company of Cambridge Analytica, the data company that worked on the President’s campaign, plan to illegally acquire the Internet browsing histories of the citizens of Trinidad and Tobago and use it to create psychological profiles to target voters on behalf of a political party there. This is something this entity has been doing across the world, which we are concerned about, because they do it in such a way that is pervasive and undermines democracies. Supposedly, the Government of Trinidad and Tobago is now reportedly investigating the activities there. If you are called upon—if our Embassy is called upon, I would hope that you would commit to assisting them in any information that they would need.

Mr. Mondello. I absolutely would be, Senator.

Senator Menendez. All right. Thank you very much.

Now, Mr. George, have you ever visited Uruguay?

Mr. George. Yes, sir, numerous times, starting as long ago as '82.

Senator Menendez. Okay.

Mr. George.—1982.

Senator Menendez. Okay. And what is the most recent time that you visited?

Mr. George. About 3 years ago.

Senator Menendez. Okay. So, I want to echo, again, OAS participation of Uruguay as it relates to Venezuela, very important to us, and I hope you will focus a good amount of your time on that, in getting them to be there. And in the past decade, as part of its Belt and Road Initiative, China has significantly increased its presence in Latin America. But, even in smaller countries, like Uruguay, China is now Uruguay's largest trading partner, and it has indicated its willingness to sign a free trade agreement. Do you see China's growing economic engagement in Uruguay as a threat to the United States? How would you plan to curb China's influence in that country?

Mr. George. I do find that the—thank you, sir—I think that is a very important question. It is something that I have spoken about recently to your staff and others about my concern of what is going on in the country, vis-a-vis China. I think it is important to note that the President of Uruguay visited Beijing in 2016. Their Foreign Minister came—Chinese Foreign Minister came to Montevideo in 2017. There has been reports that the Government has invited President Xi to visit Uruguay during the G20 Summit, which, as you know, is going to be in Buenos Aires in November. And I would make it—I would—be a betting man, I would suggest that the President does not—of China—does not visit Uruguay without some kind of a trade deal or something going to happen, not just to be a tourist.

So, I am very concerned about it. It is, as you pointed out, a—much to the surprise of many, that they are the largest trading partner with Uruguay, by a substantial margin, and even bigger than Brazil and Argentina, who—which you would think would be their natural, like ours is with Mexico and Canada. We are a distant fourth. I have made an observation that the country has wanted to be involved—expand on infrastructure projects. That is a—very important, but it is also important in many Latin American countries. They have announced the desire to build a railroad from the northern border of—with Brazil all the way to the port of Uruguay, in Montevideo. Unfortunately, I find, to my knowledge, from my reports that I have been given, there is no American company bidding on the project. There is several Chinese companies, one from Spain and one in a consortium from Uruguay itself. We are not even involved. And yet, they are getting ready to build—open up the entire central part of the country to the easy transport of their bountiful agricultural products, which they will then want to increase their sales across the world and redo their port.

Now, if—that is a billion-dollar project, 800 million to a billion dollars. I imagine the person who gets the contract is also going to have to have tied financing to it. When you go look around the various competitors, you would think that China was being in a very aggressive position to take that responsibility.

I understand that the focus in the western hemisphere today is dominated by Venezuela north. And that is reality. But, if you look out 25 to 35 years from now, the strategic issues involved in the Southern Cone will come to haunt us if we leave them behind today. And these are issues that, once you make substantial investment, and once you get the contract to manage the port, a port that is 125 miles further out in the Atlantic than Buenos Aires, strategically it can be important in the future. I understand, you know, even when South Command—it is not on their radar screen. It is on mine. And I am concerned about it. And I promise you that, as—if confirmed as your Ambassador, I am going to be in your ear about it whenever I can.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I am glad to hear that. And I am glad to hear your views on the Southern Cone. I share them.

Let me ask you one other question. Do you speak Spanish?
Mr. GEORGE. Is. [Replied in Spanish.]
Senator MENENDEZ. [Replied in Spanish.] [Laughter.]
Senator RUBIO. Very impressive Portugese. [Laughter.]
Senator MENENDEZ. Let me suggest to both of our nominees for Ambassadors, when you go the country you are in, have your staffs help you phonetically pronounce people’s names. My name is Menendez, not Mendez. And so, when you go there, I think it is incredibly important, in terms of people’s respect, that you are able to phonetically pronounce their names. So.

Let me close with Ms. Breier. Ms. Breier, let me go back to the—I am going to only ask two—I have a whole bunch of others, but I will submit them for the record—let me go back to the question of the TPS. This committee, in its oversight role, reviewed documents regarding the State Department’s recommendations to the then-Secretary, which noted, one, these countries lack the capacity to repatriate tens of thousands of individuals, and could not guarantee their safe return; two, in some cases, ending TPS designations could undermine efforts to address transnational crime and criminal gangs, such as MS-13; three, repatriating TPS beneficiaries and their accompanying U.S. citizen children vulnerable to—become vulnerable to recruitment by violent gangs.

So, given the severe challenges that Honduras and El Salvador, for example, face, do you believe that individuals whose statuses were terminated would be able to return to safe conditions?
Ms. BREIER. Thank you for the question, Senator.
The—if I am confirmed, the piece of this that I would work on is the programs that we have in Central America, which, as I mentioned earlier, I believe have the bipartisan support of this committee. This year, I believe we are spending roughly $700 million in two of the countries in question to help address some of these underlying conditions. We have begun to see the homicide rates come down, and I think we are beginning to see some improvements in these countries. The countries, themselves, in the northern triangle in particular, have committed funds and level of effort and political commitment much more than we have to this, and I think, if confirmed, my job will be to work with them to ensure that the conditions are present during these drawdown periods.

Senator Menendez. But, surely you could not believe, as the nominee for the Assistant Secretary of State for the Western Hemisphere at this time, that, for example, the more than 215,000 United States-born children would—who would be forced to accompany their TPS-beneficiary parents would be able to live in safe conditions right now, as we speak.

Ms. Breier. I think, Senator, that we are prepared—the Department and, if I am confirmed in the role, will be prepared to work with these countries to ensure that we do everything possible, working with USAID and the countries in question, to ensure the conditions are safe, that the children, if they do return, are documented with their U.S.-

Senator Menendez. Let us say—

Ms. Breier.—documents—

Senator Menendez. Let us say that we were extending TPS and this was not an issue. Would you tell me, under testimony before the committee, that those countries are safe today?

Ms. Breier. Senator, what I would say is that, in this particular context, the discussion is about whether the conditions that justify the Temporary Protected Status continue to exist. And—

Senator Menendez. Let me change my question. Listen to me closely. Under testimony here before this committee, do you believe that Honduras, El Salvador, are countries in which we would say that the security situation there, the safety situations there, are safe?

Ms. Breier. I think, Senator, that the Department and the administration will do everything they can to try and improve the circumstances. I believe there are fundamentally—fundamental conditions in these countries, and they are, indeed, fundamentally unsafe, but that we have programs in place to try and remedy that over the next 18 months.

Senator Menendez. This is where nominees get in trouble. The reality is, is that this—these countries have some of the highest murder rates, not in the hemisphere, but in the world. That is just the reality. There is nothing wrong with stating that reality. It is not a trick question.

Let me ask you one other question. On Cuba, under the Obama administration, the State Department raised Cuba from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List on its annual Trafficking in Persons Report, something I think was totally wrong. However, there is widespread consensus that many Cuban doctors are forced to travel and work abroad in conditions that resemble indentured servitude. Now, I appreciate that the President has spoken strongly about human rights abuses in Cuba, but the country remains on the Tier 2 Watch List, and the most recent report makes little mention of this issue. Are you aware of the forced-labor conditions that many Cuban doctors face when they are conscripted to work abroad? And, if confirmed, would you commit to ensure robust attention to this issue in the TIP Report?

Ms. BREIER. Yes, on both counts, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay, thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator RUBIO. Thank you.

I want to thank all of you for your—being here today. And we look forward to continued dialogue on your nominations and confirmations.

And so, the record of this hearing will remain open till the close of business on Friday.

And, with that, and without objection, the hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 12:05 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOSEPH N. MONDELLO BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a local elected official and political leader I have consistently worked to expand opportunities for all individuals—regardless of race, religion, gender or sexual orientation—to fully participate in the political process.

While by no means an exhaustive list, I am proud that I facilitated the election of the first women to serve as Hempstead Town (America's largest township) supervisor, councilwoman, town clerk and receiver of taxes. Additionally, my efforts led to the election of the first African-American member of this town board as well as the first African-American woman to serve as my party's commissioner of the county board of elections.

Furthermore, in an effort to eradicate an obstacle that traditionally barred, or limited, women from assuming leadership roles in local government, I successfully established one of the first governmentally supported day care centers specifically for municipal employees.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Trinidad and Tobago? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The most pressing challenge to democratic development in Trinidad and Tobago is rampant crime that diverts scarce public funds away from development and undermines trust in the rule of law.

If confirmed, I would champion the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative that addresses these problems by substantially reducing illicit trafficking, increasing citizen security, and strengthening judicial systems, and by engaging in crime and violence prevention programs designed to help at-risk youth.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to promote democracy in Trinidad and Tobago? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Trinidad and Tobago's democracy is alive and well, but we can and should work to preserve it. If confirmed, I will call for transparency in campaign finance to prevent corruption from rolling back gains already made by the people of Trinidad and Tobago.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. The surest way to support democracy and good governance in Trinidad and Tobago is to fight the crime that saps the nation’s strength. I understand Embassy Port of Spain already uses resources from the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative to administer programs designed to prevent crime and violence by creating economic opportunities for at-risk youth. I also understand that the International Visitor Leadership Program is an ideal tool for developing future Trinbagonian leadership. If confirmed, I will champion these programs to preserve democracy in Trinidad and Tobago.

Question 5. If confirmed, will you meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Trinidad and Tobago? What steps will you take to proactively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. I am eager to engage with civil society members and human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States as well as Trinidad and Tobago. If confirmed, I will use the U.S. Embassy as a platform to amplify the important messages on human rights and civil society contained in our annual human rights report.

Question 6. Will you, your staff, and embassy teams actively engage within Trinidad and Tobago on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Trinidad and Tobago?

Answer. If confirmed, we will absolutely do this, and I understand that Trinbagonians will welcome such outreach. I’m told that Trinidad and Tobago hosts dynamic and diverse media with more than a dozen radio stations, three major daily newspapers, and five major TV stations. The constitution guarantees freedom of the press and the Government respects that.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead the embassy team in efforts to counter disinformation in close coordination with the State Department in Washington. I understand that Embassy Port of Spain already has excellent contacts in government and society to ensure the U.S. perspective is heard. I intend to use the U.S. Embassy’s popular Facebook page and Twitter accounts to further counter any disinformation disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors.

Question 8. Will you, your staff and your embassy teams actively engage within Trinidad and Tobago on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions? Will you and your embassy team engage political parties, and advocate for access and inclusivity for women and minorities?

Answer. If confirmed, I will call for the equal inclusion of women and minorities.

Question 9. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Trinidad and Tobago, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Trinidad and Tobago? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Trinidad and Tobago?

Answer. If confirmed, I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Trinidad and Tobago, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. I understand that Trinidad and Tobago is a tolerant society and I commit to use the U.S. Embassy as a platform to exhibit tolerance for all.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
JOSEPH N. MONDELL BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. In February 2010, Stan Hunkovic's children, Gabriel and Anastasia, were unlawfully taken from their habitual residence in the United States to Trinidad and Tobago by their mother, Leah Raymond. Mr. Hunkovic is a resident of Baltimore County, Maryland. Despite his best efforts, Mr. Hunkovic's children are still living in Trinidad and Tobago. I am disappointed to hear Trinidad and Tobago has denied the Department of Justice's extradition request for Ms. Raymond. As the U.S. Ambassador to Trinidad and Tobago, will you work to request the safe return of Gabriel and Anastasia as well as continue to press the extradition of Ms. Raymond so she may face charges in court?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will do all that I can to press for the resolution of this case.

Question 2. In February 2010, Stan Hunkovic's children, Gabriel and Anastasia, were unlawfully taken from their habitual residence in the United States to Trinidad and Tobago by their mother, Leah Raymond. Mr. Hunkovic is a resident of Baltimore County, Maryland. Despite his best efforts, Mr. Hunkovic's children are still living in Trinidad and Tobago. I am disappointed to hear Trinidad and Tobago has denied the Department of Justice's extradition request for Ms. Raymond. What, specifically, will you do to press for Ms. Raymond's extradition?

Answer. It is my understanding that the U.S. Embassy in Port of Spain has excellent relationships with individuals and entities within the Government of Trinidad and Tobago, including with the attorney general, and, if confirmed, I will work to maintain and enhance those relationships in order to continue to support Mr. Hunkovic's case. Mr. Hunkovic and his U.S. attorney may consider whether to consult with local counsel in Trinidad and Tobago and/or participate in local proceedings. It is also my understanding that the Government of Trinidad and Tobago has already denied the United States' request for the extradition of Ms. Raymond. Further, I am informed that the United States request for reconsideration of the extradition request was also denied earlier this year, and that denial of the request for reconsideration of the extradition is final.

Question 3. According to UNHCR, over 40,000 Venezuelan refugees were in Trinidad and Tobago in 2017, and that number is expected to grow as Venezuela falls deeper into its economic and political crises. Do you believe Trinidad has the adequate infrastructure and resources to provide for these refugees?

Answer. I understand the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) reports more than 40,000 Venezuelans have fled to Trinidad and Tobago, straining local government capacity. The Trinidadian Government has registered 200 asylum applications and found that 92 percent qualified as refugees under the 1951 Convention. UNHCR assesses that none of the southern Caribbean nations are prepared to receive more Venezuelans, and the U.N. agency is working with the Caribbean Community (CARICOM) on capacity building for a potential mass migration event in the Caribbean.

I understand the United States contributed $12 million to UNHCR's Supplementary Appeal for Venezuela, of which $2 million will assist with access to adequate reception conditions, registration and documentation for asylum-seekers, and services such as shelter, health, and education in Trinidad and Tobago.

Question 4. According to UNHCR, over 40,000 Venezuelan refugees were in Trinidad and Tobago in 2017, and that number is expected to grow as Venezuela falls deeper into its economic and political crises. Should the United States better assist Trinidad in bearing this refugee burden?

Answer. I understand that the United States, and the State Department in particular, has been responsive to the burgeoning crisis since the beginning. This includes substantial humanitarian funding specifically to assist Venezuelans who have fled their country. Most recently, I understand the United States contributed $12 million to UNHCR's supplementary appeal for Venezuela, of which $2 million will assist with access to adequate reception conditions, registration and documentation for asylum-seekers, and services such as shelter, health, and education in Trinidad and Tobago. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with colleagues at the Department of State and other agencies to help Trinidad and Tobago cope with a possible humanitarian crisis.

Question 5. According to Admiral Kurt Tidd, Commander of SOUTHCOM, ISIS has increased its recruitment of fighters from Trinidad and Tobago in recent years. The United States provides extensive security assistance to Trinidad and Tobago through International Military Education and Training (IMET) training programs and DOD’s Train and Equip programs. Do you believe these programs have been effective in strengthening Trinidad and Tobago’s security apparatus?

Answer. I believe the effectiveness of U.S. IMET programs and the Department of Defense (DoD) train and equip program was evident through the performance of Trinbagonian security forces during the Fused Response exercise. Trinidad and Tobago hosted defense, interagency, and law enforcement partners from the United States for Fused Response April 16–26. That was the first time Trinidad and Tobago hosted this annual crisis response exercise. Fused Response had multilateral components that provided the opportunity for participating countries to work collaboratively with security partners in the region, strengthened longstanding ties, and enhanced interoperability between nations. My understanding is that the Department’s ongoing IMET, Foreign Military Finance program, and Department of Defense programs prepared Trinbagonian security forces well for that exercise. If confirmed, I will continue to help Trinidad and Tobago develop as effective security partners.

Question 6. According to Admiral Kurt Tidd, Commander of SOUTHCOM, ISIS has increased its recruitment of fighters from Trinidad and Tobago in recent years. The United States provides extensive security assistance to Trinidad and Tobago through International Military Education and Training (IMET) training programs and DOD’s Train and Equip programs. What more should Trinidad and the United States be doing to prevent the rise of violent extremism in the region?

Answer. I understand that there are existing programs designed to address the full spectrum of challenges in order to counter violent extremism, including countering extremist messaging, developing Trinbagonian capacity to apprehend and prosecute extremists. Additionally, in 2017 Trinidad and Tobago agreed to participate in the U.S. Government’s Personal Identification Secure Comparison and Evaluation System (PISCES) to screen traveler biometric and biographic data to detect terrorists. I understand implementation is ongoing. If confirmed, I would seek to work with my team at Post as well as the State Department and other agencies to continue to further these important efforts.

Question 7. According to the State Department Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report ranking, Trinidad and Tobago is a Tier 2 country, serving as a destination, transit, and source country for adults and children into sex trafficking and forced labor. Many of the trafficked women in Trinidad are from Venezuela, the Dominican Republic, and Colombia. While Trinidad works to eliminate trafficking, what should the United States be doing to support anti-trafficking efforts in Trinidad and Tobago?

Answer. From the annual Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report, I understand that Trinidad and Tobago demonstrated increasing efforts compared to the previous reporting period but has yet to secure a conviction under its anti-trafficking law. I believe the U.S. needs to work very closely with appropriate authorities in Trinidad and Tobago to ensure they have the legal infrastructure necessary to prosecute TIP cases. I am also concerned about the lack of specialized services, including during legal proceedings, for victims of trafficking, as reported in the TIP report. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with colleagues at the State Department and other agencies to determine which resources can be brought to bear to develop these missing capacities in Trinidad and Tobago.

Question 8. According to the State Department Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report ranking, Trinidad and Tobago is a Tier 2 country, serving as a destination, transit, and source country for adults and children into sex trafficking and forced labor. Many of the trafficked women in Trinidad are from Venezuela, the Dominican Republic, and Colombia. Will you use your position as Ambassador to prioritize trafficking with Trinidadian officials?

Answer. Absolutely. The scourge of modern day slavery appalls me. If confirmed, I commit to working with Trinidadian officials to fight trafficking in persons in Trinidad and Tobago.

Question 9. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a local elected official and political leader I have consistently worked to expand opportunities for all individuals—regardless of race, religion, gender or sexual orientation—to fully participate in the political process. While by no means an exhaustive list, I am proud that I facilitated the election of the first women to serve as Hempstead Town (America’s largest township) supervisor, councilwoman, town clerk and receiver of taxes. Additionally, my efforts led to the election of the first African-American member of this town board as well as the first African-American woman to serve as my party’s commissioner of the county board of elections.

Furthermore, in an effort to eradicate an obstacle that traditionally barred, or limited, women from assuming leadership roles in local government, I successfully established one of the first governmentally supported day care centers specifically for municipal employees.

Question 10. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Trinidad and Tobago? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Trinidad and Tobago? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most significant human rights issues in Trinidad and Tobago include mistreatment of detainees by police and prison officials, refoulement of refugees due to poor training of officials, official corruption, and gender based violence.

If confirmed, I would champion existing embassy programs designed to address these and other human rights issues. In particular, I would use my convening authority, as U.S. Ambassador, to speak directly to local leaders at all levels of society to affect positive change on these pressing human rights concerns.

Question 11. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What chalenges will you face in Trinidad and Tobago in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Domestic crime and an overburdened judicial system are the biggest obstacles to progress on human rights in Trinidad and Tobago. If confirmed, I would press the Trinidad and Tobago Governments to implement the rule of law while respecting human rights in a high crime environment with limited resources.

If confirmed, I will work with my embassy staff to accelerate existing programs through which we train criminal justice officials and call for wider application of alternative dispute resolution to help reduce the backlog within the court system.

Question 12. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Trinidad and Tobago? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I am absolutely committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Trinidad and Tobago, and will eagerly do so if confirmed.

Additionally, if confirmed, I will support the Leahy Law through strict compliance with required vetting procedures that I understand are already in place in Embassy Port of Spain. The Leahy Law is a powerful tool for ensuring that human rights violators do not abuse security assistance from the United States.

Question 13. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Trinidad and Tobago to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Trinidad and Tobago?

Answer. While there are no known cases of current political prisoners in Trinidad and Tobago, the human rights report does describe at least one instance in which an individual may have been targeted unjustly by a law enforcement official.

If confirmed, I will continue the proud tradition of U.S. diplomats speaking out on behalf of those who are denied a voice.

Question 14. Will you engage with Trinidad and Tobago on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will insist that the embassy keep human rights, civil rights, and governance on the top of the bilateral agenda.

Question 15. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 16. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.
Question 17. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Trinidad and Tobago?
Answer. No.

Question 18. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?
Answer. Our country’s greatest strength is the extraordinary diversity of its citizenry. In order to best serve our nation’s interests abroad each member of our Foreign Service, particularly those from previously underrepresented groups, must be provided with the support and encouragement necessary to excel. If confirmed as head of mission, it would be my responsibility to ensure that all staff members are energized and motivated to achieve their fullest potential. This is best achieved by creating a cohesive team of staff members that functions in an atmosphere of mutual respect and understanding.

Question 19. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?
Answer. Active, hands-on oversight of Embassy supervisors is the best approach to ensuring that all staff members are provided with a working environment that is diverse and inclusive. If confirmed as head of mission, I would meet regularly with supervisory staff to set clear goals and requirements in this regard. I would establish procedures designed to ensure that all staff members understand what is individually required of them in order to secure a diverse and inclusive workplace. I would also be readily accessible to any staff member who has comments or concerns relative to these issues.

RE S P O N S E T O A N ADDITIONAL QUESTION FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIMBERLY BREIER BY SENATOR BOB CORKER

Question 1. There is concern that the Government of Peru has thus far been unable to resolve the claims of many of our constituents who have invested in Peruvian Agrarian Reform bonds, commonly known as “land bonds.” These constituents are hard working men and women, often in blue collar jobs, who have invested via their pension funds, which are already facing considerable financial strain. Though the former President of Peru Pedro Pablo Kuczynski assured several Members of Congress last year that he would meet with the U.S. bondholders, to date the Government has refused to do so. If confirmed as the next Assistant Secretary of State for the Western Hemisphere, will you commit to working with the Peruvian Government to achieve a final resolution to this issue? What steps can the Department of State take to encourage Peru to fulfill its obligations to U.S. citizens on these notes?
Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will work with the bondholders and the Peruvian Government to facilitate an amicable and expeditious resolution on this issue. Officials at the Department of State and at our Embassy in Lima have met with representatives of current holders of the bonds (which were first issued by Peruvian military governments between 1969 and 1979) on multiple occasions, and, if confirmed, I will ensure that our door will continue to be open to them. If confirmed, I will also continue our dialogue with the Peruvian Government on this issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIMBERLY BREIER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. In the past week, the President and his senior aides have publicly criticized Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. These comments come months after the President openly boasted about lying to Prime Minister Trudeau. Do you believe that the President’s comments help advance U.S. national interests?
Answer. The United States’ relationship with Canada is one of the most important bilateral relationships we have in the world. It is vibrant and enduring; from our deep cultural connections to significant economic interactions and defense cooperation. Historically, we have gone through contentious periods in our bilateral relationship before and our partnership emerged stronger. If confirmed, I will focus my and the Bureau’s efforts on ensuring we maintain the deep and collaborative bilateral relationship with Canada.

Question 2. In the past week, the President and his senior aides have publicly criticized Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. These comments come months after the President openly boasted about lying to Prime Minister Trudeau. What is the impact of the President’s comments on efforts to renegotiate NAFTA?

Answer. The United States and Canada remain close partners and share a wide variety of common interests. Our relationship with our neighbor has withstood tests before and it will withstand them now. NAFTA discussions continue to take place between all three parties. If confirmed, I will support our efforts in the NAFTA renegotiation process that seeks to rebalance and upgrade our agreement.

Question 3. Recent testing by North Korea has revealed its ability to strike parts of North America with a missile, possibly one equipped with a nuclear warhead. While the United States and Canada closely cooperate through North American Aerospace Defense Command (NORAD) against threats in the air domain including from cruise missiles, Canada has declined to participate in the United States’ ballistic missile defense program. Would Canadian participation in our Ground-Based Midcourse Defense (GMD) system assist our efforts to defend the U.S. homeland from missile threats from North Korea and Iran?

Answer. Respectfully, I must refer you to the Department of Defense for questions on specific military capabilities.

Question 4. Could the current missile defense system defend major Canadian population centers from the ballistic missile threat from North Korea?

Answer. Respectfully, I must refer you to the Department of Defense for questions on specific military capabilities.

Question 5. If confirmed, in your discussions with the Government of Canada, how would you prioritize securing Canadian participation in the defense of North America from the fully spectrum of aerospace threats we jointly face?

Answer. U.S. bilateral cooperation in the North American Radar Defense (NORAD) program is a cornerstone of the defense of the homeland and emblematic of our deep cooperation with Canada. Like the United States, Canada has prioritized modernizing NORAD to meet all threats to our two counties. If confirmed, I will prioritize coordination with the Department of Defense, Global Affairs Canada, and the Canadian Department of National Defence to ensure all of North America remains safe.

Question 6. As our principal diplomat for the Americas, do you intend to formulate a strategy to make Mexico pay for a border wall between our countries?

Answer. No, but I am committed to helping secure our borders. The United States and Mexico work together to stop the flow of drugs and other contraband that travel in both directions across our shared border. We also work together to improve efficiencies at ports of entry to ensure the legitimate flow of commerce and travelers. Border infrastructure is an integral part of border security. Mexico has consistently stated it will not pay for a border wall.

Question 7. The President’s repeated and public criticism of Mexico and the Mexican people continue to raise the political cost for Mexican authorities that cooperate with the United States on issues including securing our border, addressing unauthorized migration, or addressing challenges related to narcotics trafficking, which are contributing to the heroin and fentanyl epidemic plaguing our country.

What is the impact of the President’s comments on efforts to renegotiate NAFTA?

Answer. The United States and Mexico remain close partners and share a wide variety of common interests. The relationship with our neighbor has withstood tests before and it will withstand them now. NAFTA discussions continue to take place between all three parties. If confirmed, I will support our efforts in the NAFTA renegotiation process to rebalance and upgrade our agreement.

Question 8. Do you believe that the United States can address border security, migration, and drug trafficking without a productive partnership with Mexican authorities?

Answer. Mexican cooperation is vital to U.S. national security and, if confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work with Mexico through the Merida Initiative on issues of border security, migration, and counternarcotics. The administration works with Mexico to disrupt transnational criminal organizations, combat the heroin and fentanyl epidemics, enhance border security to address irregular migration and trafficking in illicit goods, and build Mexico’s capacity to investigate and prosecute crime. Our cooperation strengthens Mexican institutions and the rule of law and promotes strong partners who can work with U.S. law enforcement agencies.

Question 9. What, in your view, would be the impact on our national security should Mexico choose to withdraw from cooperating with the United States?

Answer. U.S.-Mexico cooperation is important for U.S. national security and benefits both our nations. If confirmed, I will work with Mexico to maintain positive bilateral engagement. This would include collaborating with Mexico to disrupt transnational criminal organizations, combat the heroin-fentanyl epidemic, enhance border security to address irregular migration and trafficking in illicit goods, and build Mexico’s capacity to investigate and prosecute crime. Our cooperation strengthens Mexican institutions and the rule of law, and promotes strong communities to deter recruitment by transnational criminal organizations. These ongoing efforts also directly enhance U.S. security.

Question 10. Do you believe the President’s comments make it easier or more difficult to build a collaborative relationship (with Mexico)?

Answer. The United States enjoys excellent cooperation with Mexico on a broad range of political, security, migration, and economic issues. Strong institutional relationships help to ensure cooperation continues even when our leaders disagree. Mexico is an important partner in combatting irregular migration, narcotics trafficking, and transnational criminal organizations. If confirmed, preserving and enhancing bilateral cooperation with Mexico will be a top priority for me.

Question 11. In your new role, how can you possibly try to recover so much lost ground with such an important partner?

Answer. Bilateral cooperation with Mexico is essential and, if confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work closely with Mexico on issues of security, counternarcotics, and prosperity. The United States' collaboration with Mexico to jointly disrupt transnational criminal organizations, combat the heroin and fentanyl epidemics, enhance border security, address irregular migration, and build Mexico’s capacity to investigate and prosecute crime are critical to both our nations.

Question 12. If confirmed, how will you prioritize the United States international efforts to combat illicit heroin and fentanyl trafficking?

Answer. I believe that effectively responding to the opioid crisis by driving down the number of overdose deaths in the United States requires a global response. It is my understanding that the vast majority of illicit opioids, like heroin and fentanyl, come from overseas. I also understand that Mexican transnational criminal organizations produce over 90 percent of heroin found in the U.S. market, while synthetic opioids often purchased online from China, are shipped in small quantities through the mail and express consignment services, to the United States, Mexico, and Canada.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with the U.S. counterdrug community and focus capacity building in partner countries and diplomatic engagement on efforts to prevent the flow of illicit heroin and fentanyl to the United States. If confirmed, I will continue to support efforts to attack these supplies and trafficking methods by working bilaterally with Mexico and China, trilaterally through the North American Drug Dialogue, and multilaterally, through the Organization of American States, United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and other fora, to control illicit production and distribution.

I understand that our security cooperation with Mexico is excellent and the Department is working through the Strategic Dialogue on Disrupting Transnational Criminal Organizations, to combat the organizations that produce and traffic heroin to the United States. I believe this process must continue and that we should assist Mexico’s efforts to build its capacity to eradicate poppy, dismantle clandestine labs, enhance border security, and bring criminals to justice.

Question 13. What is your assessment of the importance of the U.S.—Mexico cooperation to address illicit heroin and fentanyl trafficking and transnational organized crime?

Answer. Mexican cooperation is vital to U.S. national security and the Department of State is committed to our deep bilateral security partnership with Mexico. Neither country can successfully confront transnational organized crime or the scourge of illicit drugs alone. If confirmed, I will continue our work with Mexico and U.S. assistance through the Merida Initiative to disrupt transnational criminal organizations, combat the heroin-fentanyl epidemic, enhance border security against illegal migration and trafficking in illicit goods, and build Mexico’s capacity to investigate and prosecute crime.
Question 14. Do you think the U.S. can address heroin and fentanyl trafficking without Mexico’s cooperation?

Answer. Mexican cooperation is vital to U.S. national security and the Department of State is committed to our deep bilateral security partnership with Mexico. Neither country can successfully confront transnational organized crime or the scourge of illicit drugs alone. Our governments remain dedicated to implementing projects through the Merida Initiative that target the entire business model of transnational criminal organizations, including the illicit drug trade. These projects will expand Mexico’s capacity to more effectively target and eradicate opium poppy fields; identify, safely dismantle, and investigate clandestine drug laboratories; interdict and destroy drugs; and track chemical precursors to prevent diversion to illicit drug production. If confirmed, I will continue this important work.

Question 15. At a time when the political relationship between the U.S. and Mexico is under increasing duress due to the President’s antagonistic statements, how will you work to sustain and build the cooperation necessary to combat illicit trafficking and transnational organized crime?

Answer. Mexican cooperation is vital to U.S. national security and, if confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to work with Mexico on issues of security, counternarcotics, and prosperity. The administration works with Mexico to disrupt transnational criminal organizations; combat the heroin-fentanyl epidemic; enhance border security to address irregular migration and trafficking in illicit goods; and build Mexico’s capacity to investigate and prosecute crime. Our assistance strengthens Mexican institutions and the rule of law, and promotes strong partners for U.S. law enforcement agencies.

Question 16. What is your assessment of corruption in the federal government of Mexico?

Answer. Corruption is a universal challenge and Mexico is no exception to the rule. The Department of State supports Mexico’s efforts to fight corruption and build good governance at the federal level. Mexico has undertaken an historic transition to an open, accusatorial justice system that will provide greater transparency, accountability and efficiency in the administration of justice. I believe these are essential elements for the success of every nation. If confirmed, I will support U.S. anti-corruption efforts in Mexico.

Question 17. What is your assessment of corruption in state governments in Mexico?

Answer. State governments in Mexico formally transitioned to an open, accusatorial justice system in June 2016. Consolidation of the new system to hold those who commit crimes accountable—including for corruption—will not be easy. It will take a long-term effort, as well as sustained political will, at both the state and federal levels. Mexico is taking steps to investigate and prosecute former state government officials. If confirmed, I will support these efforts to help Mexico fight corruption.

Question 18. What is your assessment of corruption in the main political parties in Mexico?

Answer. Mexican voters have repeatedly cited corruption as a major concern, according to recent polls in the run up to July 1 national elections. All of the candidates of the major parties have addressed this as a campaign issue and have pledged to combat corruption. U.S. assistance to Mexico helps promote transparency and the rule of law. If confirmed, I will support these anti-corruption efforts.

Question 19. What is your assessment of reports that Mexico’s Procuraduría General de la República (PGR) suppressed a legal investigation into corruption between the Government of Mexico and Brazilian oil company Odebrecht, as reported by the New York Times on June 11, 2018?

Answer. I am aware of the press report. My understanding is that Mexico’s Attorney General is conducting an active investigation into the matter. I am committed to advancing our comprehensive efforts to combat corruption in Mexico and throughout the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our partners in Mexico to strengthen the rule of law and independent judiciary sectors.

Question 20. Please describe your role in accompanying White House Senior Advisor Jared Kushner to a meeting with Mexican Foreign Secretary Luis Videgaray in Mexico City on March 8, 2018?

Answer. I attended meetings with the U.S. Ambassador, Embassy staff, NSC staff, the Senior Advisor, and Mexican officials.
Question 21. Why was U.S. Ambassador to Mexico, Roberta Jacobson, not invited to attend your meeting with Foreign Secretary Videgaray on March 8, 2018?

Answer. The agenda and meetings were arranged by the National Security Council and the Government of Mexico. The National Security Council and the White House invited me to join in the trip of the Senior Advisor but did not consult me on the composition of the meetings. I have known Ambassador Jacobson for more than fifteen years and hold her in the highest regard and have regularly sought her counsel in my work. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that U.S. Ambassadors are included in future such meetings.

Question 22. In your role as Senior Adviser for the Western Hemisphere in the State Department’s Office of Policy Planning, how many times and on what dates did travel to Mexico prior to your trip on March 8, 2018?

Answer. The bilateral relationship with Mexico is one of the most important and unique relationships that the United States has in the world. It is also an area of my expertise, developed over many years in public service and the private sector. As such, I travelled to Mexico on two occasions prior to March 2018 as a Member of the Policy Planning Staff. In January 2018, I travelled with an inter-agency delegation to discuss various areas of the bilateral relationship and how we might advance efforts to address shared opportunities and challenges. In November 2017 I travelled to Mexico for meetings and briefings with the U.S. Ambassador, DCM, Embassy section heads, and Mexican officials.

Question 23. What is your understanding of the status of the Section 232 investigation into the national security implications of imports of automobiles and automotive parts?

Answer. I understand the Secretary of Commerce initiated an investigation to consider the national security effects of imported automobiles, trucks, and automotive parts on May 22. If confirmed, I will ensure the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs contributes to State Department and interagency discussions involving this investigation.

Question 24. Are you aware of any evidence that suggests imports of automobiles or automobile parts from Canada or Mexico present national security risks for the United States?

Answer. It is important to note that U.S. national security includes elements of economic security. I am aware that automobile manufacturing has long been a significant source of American technological innovation. I also understand U.S. imports of passenger vehicles have grown significantly in recent years while U.S. employment in motor vehicle production and the U.S. share of global research and development in the automobile sector have declined.

Question 25. Do you believe our treaty relationships should be considered when determining which countries should be subject to import restrictions as a result of a Section 232 investigations?

Answer. My understanding is that according to U.S. law, our treaty and free trade agreement partners are not exempt from any Section 232 investigations or actions. If confirmed, I will support any trade-related investigations in accordance with U.S. law.

Question 26. Do you believe Congress should have a greater role in the oversight and review of Section 232 investigations and any resulting import adjustments?

Answer. Checks and balances on all branches of government are fundamental to any actions taken by the U.S. Government. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s trade-related investigations in accordance with U.S. law.

Question 27. Do you believe Canadian steel and aluminum constitute a threat to U.S. national security?

Answer. It is important to note that U.S. national security includes elements of economic security and global overproduction has impaired the U.S. steel and aluminum industries. The application of the steel and aluminum tariffs does not foreclose the possibility of arriving at an alternative agreement with Canada to exempt it in the future. If confirmed, I will work with our trade partners to address global excess production of steel and aluminum.

Question 28. Do you believe Mexican steel and aluminum constitute a threat to U.S. national security?

Answer. It is important to note that U.S. national security includes elements of economic security and global overproduction has impaired the U.S. steel and aluminum industries. The application of the steel and aluminum tariffs does not foreclose the possibility of arriving at an alternative agreement with Mexico to exempt it in the future. If confirmed, I will work with our trade partners to address global excess production of steel and aluminum.

Question 29. Will you commit to us that, if confirmed, any recommendations you give regarding the TIP Report will be based solely on a country’s efforts to combat trafficking, and not trade or other unrelated factors?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that any tier recommendations for the TIP Report, as well as any waiver considerations that may be applicable, are in compliance with the law.

Question 30. If confirmed, do you commit to supporting U.S. efforts to address the security, stability, and prosperity of the Northern Triangle in Central America?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to supporting U.S. Government assistance in the region and furthering our diplomatic engagement with our Central American partners. U.S. programs and engagement aim to secure U.S. borders and protect U.S. citizens by addressing the security, governance, and economic drivers of illegal immigration and illicit trafficking through the U.S. Strategy for Central America by enhancing regional economic opportunity, reducing insecurity and violence, and fighting impunity and corruption. Our assistance complements the more than $2.5 billion that Northern Triangle countries themselves are investing to address these goals.

Question 31. How do you plan to work with the countries of the Northern Triangle to address the problems of violence, poverty and weak security and justice institutions driving children and families from their countries?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to advance our partnership with the Northern Triangle governments of El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras and continue to advance U.S. programs and assistance that complement the Northern Triangle’s Plan for the Alliance for Prosperity (A4P). I understand the A4P is a Northern Triangle government initiative designed to stimulate the productive sector, develop opportunities for their people, improve public safety, enhance access to the legal system, and strengthen institutions. U.S. assistance supports these goals.

If confirmed, I will also continue to implement U.S. efforts that support the Northern Triangle governments’ progress and reforms needed to advance the goals outlined in the A4P to improve the business climate, increase tax revenues, facilitate trade, expand energy integration, strengthen public-private sector dialogue, combat organized crime, promote citizen security, improve information sharing, cooperate on migration flows, continue the security dialogue, strengthen border security, and reduce violence.

Question 32. Will you engage with the Governments of Honduras and El Salvador to support fair and impartial attorney general selection processes to emphasize the need to select of honest and qualified candidates with a clear commitment to the rule of law?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with the Governments of Honduras and El Salvador to support fair and impartial attorney general selection processes. I will underscore the importance of selecting honest and highly-qualified candidates with a strong commitment to the rule of law and the fight against corruption and impunity.

Question 33. Will you commit to maintaining continued U.S. political and financial support for United Nations International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) and the Organization of American States Support Mission against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH)?

Answer. Anti-corruption efforts in Guatemala and Honduras will be a priority for me, if confirmed. The United States provides funding to International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) for its important mission to combat corruption and impunity and strengthen Guatemala’s justice sector. The Department, USAID, and the U.S. Mission to the United Nations (USUN) have met to discuss options for ensuring oversight and reform of CICIG that can strengthen the commission and preserve its important, independent mandate, and I understand these will be presented to Secretary Pompeo. Similarly, the United States supports the Organization of American States (OAS) Mission Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH) which also plays a vital role in supporting the work of the attorney general in Honduras to strengthen the rule of law, fight impunity, and combat corruption, including the corrupt networks linked to transnational criminal organizations in the region.

Question 34. How would you support and strengthen the efforts of CICIG and MACCIH, and how would you help ensure the full cooperation of the Guatemalan and Honduran Governments?
Answer. The United States provides funding to International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) and the Organization of American States (OAS) Mission Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH) to support their important missions to combat corruption and impunity and strengthen the justice sector in both countries. The Department, USAID, and the U.S. Mission to the United Nations (USUN) have met to discuss options for ensuring oversight and reform of CICIG that can strengthen the commission and preserve its important, independent mandate, and I understand these will be presented to Secretary Pompeo. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging Guatemala’s new attorney general Marta Consuelo Porras Arqueta to continue her government’s efforts against corruption and support for CICIG’s mission. A strong attorney general is an integral part of the fight against corruption, impunity, and transnational criminal organizations. Corruption and impunity enable illicit networks and affect the ability of U.S. companies to do business in Guatemala. Measurable progress on combatting transnational criminal organizations requires significant progress in combating corruption.

I would continue to urge the Government of Honduras to approve a new head of MACCIH as soon as possible to ensure its important work continues and that it has sufficient access to information to support Public Ministry investigations into corrupt networks. I would also encourage the Honduran Government to select a highly-qualified attorney general willing to support and collaborate with MACCIH to fight corruption and impunity.

If confirmed, I also would engage the Governments of Guatemala and Honduras to underscore the importance of achieving results on Congressionally-mandated criteria regarding combatting corruption and cooperation with commissions against impunity and regional human rights entities.

Honduras

Question 35. Many members of Congress were deeply troubled by the Honduran elections at the end of last year. The disturbing evidence presented by the OAS suggests varying degrees of tampering took place in the election results tabulation process. Numerous public reports indicate that two dozen protesters were killed after the elections, mostly by the Honduran Military Police.

- Was the Honduran election free, fair, and democratic?

Answer. I understand international observers generally recognized the elections to be free, but noted serious procedural irregularities in the electoral process. If confirmed, I will continue to support the United States’ policy goals of strengthening democratic institutions in Honduras as the long-term solution to ensuring elections represent the will of the Honduran people. It is up to the Honduran people to determine their political future through their democratic institutions and processes. If confirmed, I will advocate for supporting and strengthening democratic institutions throughout the Western Hemisphere.

Question 36. Many members of Congress were deeply troubled by the Honduran elections at the end of last year. The disturbing evidence presented by the OAS suggests varying degrees of tampering took place in the election results tabulation process. Numerous public reports indicate that two dozen protesters were killed after the elections, mostly by the Honduran Military Police.

- Why did the administration recognize the results of a flawed process?

Answer. The Department of State recognized the election of President Hernandez on December 22, 2017, as declared by the Honduran Supreme Electoral Tribunal (TSE). I share your concerns regarding the electoral irregularities identified by the Organization of American States (OAS). Those irregularities and the close election results highlighted the need for a significant long-term effort to heal Honduras’s political divide. I understand Honduras invited the United Nations to provide support to a national dialogue for reconciliation, and the United Nations is leading a series of meetings with the three leading political parties to identify parameters for a potential national dialogue. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue and the enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions.

I also share your concerns related to the deaths of civilians following the election. If confirmed, I will emphasize to the Honduran Government the need to ensure security forces respect the rights of protestors and to investigate credible allegations of human rights abuses by security forces and hold accountable those responsible.

Question 37. Many members of Congress were deeply troubled by the Honduran elections at the end of last year. The disturbing evidence presented by the OAS suggests varying degrees of tampering took place in the election results tabulation process. Numerous public reports indicate that two dozen protesters were killed after the elections, mostly by the Honduran Military Police. The OAS Secretary General called for new elections.

- Do you think Honduras should have held new elections?

Answer. I value the OAS role in the observation of this and other elections in the hemisphere and share your concerns regarding the electoral irregularities identified by the Organization of American States (OAS). However, I understand that there was not enough evidence of specific fraud that would have changed the outcome of the election or necessitated a new one. Those irregularities and the close election results highlighted the need for a significant long-term effort to heal Honduras’s political divide and to enact significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue and the enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions.

Question 38. Many members of Congress were deeply troubled by the Honduran elections at the end of last year. The disturbing evidence presented by the OAS suggests varying degrees of tampering took place in the election results tabulation process. Numerous public reports indicate that two dozen protesters were killed after the elections, mostly by the Honduran Military Police.

- What is your assessment of how other countries in the hemisphere view U.S. willingness to recognize the result of a deeply flawed process carried out by a government the professes to be a close friend of the United States?

Answer. The Department of State recognized the election of President Hernandez on December 22, 2017, as declared by the Honduran Supreme Electoral Tribunal (TSE). Mexico, Colombia, and Spain had previously issued similar statements when the United States statement was released. It is up to the Honduran people to determine their political future through their democratic institutions and processes.

Temporary Protected Status (TPS)

Question 39. What was your role in the decision making process related to the State Department’s recommendation to the Department of Homeland Security regarding the Temporary Protected Status designations for El Salvador, Honduras and Haiti?

Answer. Although I did not offer an opinion, I was aware that deliberations were ongoing inside the Department between relevant Bureaus on the issue of Temporary Protected Status.

Question 40. During the decision making process, did you express any affirmative or negative opinions regarding the recommendations made in the diplomatic cables from the U.S. Embassies in El Salvador, Honduras and Haiti?

Answer. No.

Question 41. In the event that you did not express any opinions, why not?

Answer. I didn’t see a need as the Western Hemisphere Bureau fully presented its views on Temporary Protected Status.

Question 42. During the decision making process, did you express any affirmative or negative opinions regarding then-Secretary Tillerson’s recommendation to DHS?

Answer. I agreed with the Secretary’s assessment there could be risks to U.S. bilateral relationships and programs in El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti if the process is not well managed. If confirmed, I will work with the Governments of El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti to maintain strong U.S. bilateral relationships and ongoing programs to ensure that any possible risks that may emerge are mitigated.

Question 43. In the event that you did not express any opinions, why not?

Answer. As I stated in Question 42, I agreed with the Secretary’s assessment there could be risks to U.S. bilateral relationships and programs in El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti if the process is not well managed.

Question 44. Even if you were not explicitly asked for nor did you offer your opinion on the matter of terminating TPS for these countries, as a long-term specialist on the region, do you assess that ending TPS for El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti poses a risk to U.S. national security interests?

Answer. I assess there could be risks to U.S. bilateral relationships and programs in El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti if the process is not well managed. If confirmed, I will work with the Governments of El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti to maintain strong U.S. bilateral relationships and ongoing programs to ensure that any possible risks that may emerge are mitigated.

Question 45. Do you believe that the Governments of El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti have the capacity to effectively repatriate more than 400,000 people, in total?
Answer. As a part of its review, DHS decided on a delayed effective date of 18 months for El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti to permit an orderly transition, both for those returning home and for the country receiving them. The phase-out period will provide time for TPS beneficiaries to arrange for their departure and for the countries to prepare for the reception and reintegration of their citizens. Our embassies in Honduras and El Salvador have met with host government counterparts to encourage the development of programs to re integrate their citizens. With respect to Haiti, we have urged the Haitian Government to make changes to facilitate investment in order to grow its economy and increase economic opportunity in order to prepare for the reception and reintegration of its citizens. If confirmed, I will redouble these efforts.

Question 46. Is it your assessment that the repatriation of more than 400,000 people to El Salvador, Honduras and Haiti—if not handled effectively—would threaten the stability and security of these countries?

Answer. The effective repatriation of temporary migrants to their home countries is critical to the stability and security of those countries. Our embassies in Haiti, Honduras, and El Salvador have met with host government counterparts to encourage the further development of programs to reintegrate their citizens and to expand economic activity and opportunity. If confirmed, I will work to redouble the efforts of our overseas missions to strengthen the region’s ability to reintegrate all returning nationals, including TPS returnees. As a longstanding partner of these countries, the U.S. Government remains committed to all three countries’ long-term security and stability.

Question 47. In the event that the more than 400,000 TPS beneficiaries are accompanied by their more than 270,000 U.S. citizen children, do you believe that the Governments of El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti can guarantee the safety and well-being of these American children?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make sure the Department continues to provide all available consular services to U.S. citizens, including U.S. citizen children of beneficiaries of Temporary Protected Status. I am committed to continuing the Department’s work to help the countries of Central America and Haiti to address economic opportunity, reduce insecurity and violence, and fight impunity and corruption. I will also make sure the U.S. Government continues to implement programs that empower youth by supporting educational, social, and employment opportunities for youth and violence prevention activities.

Question 48. In his October 31, 2017 letter to Acting DHS Secretary Duke, Secretary Tillerson cautioned that ending TPS for El Salvador and Honduras could jeopardize U.S. foreign policy objectives in those two countries. Do you agree with that assessment?

Answer. I agree that if the process is not properly handled risks to U.S. bilateral relationships may emerge. A secure and stable Central America contributes to a safer and more prosperous United States by helping to secure our borders, protect U.S. citizens, and increase opportunities for U.S. and other businesses. I understand U.S. programs address the underlying economic development, security, and governance challenges that contribute to illegal immigration and illicit trafficking. If confirmed, I will continue to advance the Department’s work with Central American governments to advance these objectives.

As a part of its review, DHS decided on a delayed effective date of 18 months for El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti to permit an orderly transition, both for those returning home and for the country receiving them. The phase-out period will provide time for the countries to prepare for the reception and reintegration of their citizens. Our embassies in Honduras and El Salvador have met with host government counterparts to encourage the development of programs to re integrate their citizens. If confirmed, I will redouble these efforts.

Question 49. In his October 31, 2017 letter to Acting DHS Secretary Duke, Secretary Tillerson cautioned that ending TPS for El Salvador and Honduras could jeopardize U.S. cooperation with both governments to combat transnational organized crime. Do you agree with that assessment?

Answer. A secure and stable Central America contributes to a safer and more prosperous United States by helping to secure our borders, protect U.S. citizens, and increase opportunities for U.S. and other businesses. I understand the U.S. Government partners with law enforcement agencies in El Salvador and Honduras to facilitate real-time information sharing and inform law enforcement operations to combat transnational organized crime. If confirmed, I will continue to advance programs in partnership with these governments that dismantle transnational gangs, such as MS-13 and 18th Street, and other transnational criminal organizations.
Question 50. In diplomatic cable San Salvador 860, dated July 7, 2017, the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador warned that U.S. citizen children accompanying TPS beneficiaries returning to the country could be vulnerable to gang recruitment or other forms of illicit employment. Do you agree with that assessment?

Answer. I am concerned with the security situation posed by gangs in El Salvador and the region, including gang recruitment of minors. The multi-year U.S. Strategy for Central America addresses the underlying economic development, security, and governance challenges that contribute to illegal immigration. I understand the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador has met with host government counterparts to encourage the further development of programs and services that will facilitate the effective reintegration of their citizens into their respective societies. I also understand USAID has hosted migration workshops in El Salvador to explore challenges and best practices in reintegration. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Government of El Salvador to strengthen its ability to safely and successfully reintegrate their returning nationals, including TPS returnees, as well as ensure that our Embassy is able to assist U.S. citizens, including minor children.

Question 51. In diplomatic cable San Salvador 860, dated July 7, 2017, the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador warned that repatriating more than 260,000 TPS beneficiaries to El Salvador could accelerate "illegal immigration" to the United States. Do you agree with this assessment?

Answer. I understand that the multi-year U.S. Strategy for Central America is working to address the underlying economic development, security, and governance challenges that contribute to illegal immigration. I understand the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador has met with host government counterparts to encourage the further development of programs and services that will facilitate the effective reintegration of their citizens into their respective societies and USAID has hosted migration workshops in El Salvador to explore challenges and best practices in reintegration. If confirmed, I will redouble our efforts to work with our Embassy and the Government of El Salvador to strengthen its ability to reintegrate their returning nationals, including TPS returnees, and stem the flow of illegal migration.

Question 52. In diplomatic cable Tegucigalpa 618, dated June 29, 2017, the U.S. Embassy in Honduras warned that U.S. citizen children accompanying TPS beneficiaries returning to the country could be vulnerable to gang recruitment or other forms of illicit employment. Do you agree with that assessment?

Answer. I remain concerned with the security situation posed by gangs in Honduras and the region, including gang recruitment of minors. Through the U.S. Strategy for Central America, the Department of State implements programs to empower youth by supporting educational, social, and employment opportunities for at-risk and disadvantaged youth and violence prevention activities. One example of these programs aimed at preventing youth from joining gangs is the Gang Resistance Education and Training (GREAT) program. The GREAT program supports nationwide prevention of violence and youth gang involvement through the development of a positive relationship between Honduran law enforcement, families, and young people. Since the Department launched the GREAT program in 2013, over 375 Honduran National Police officers have been trained as GREAT instructors and more than 240,000 students have participated in the program. I will continue to work with our in-country partners to continue GREAT and other similar programs to address gang recruitment of youth.

The United States will continue to provide all available consular services to U.S. citizens, including U.S. citizen children of Temporary Protected Status beneficiaries. In coordination with the Honduran Government, the United States also will work to ensure that U.S. citizen children returning to Honduras with their parents are able to access education, local health services, and other social services.

Question 53. What steps will you take to guarantee that U.S. foreign policy objectives are not undermined by the decision to end TPS for El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to promote U.S. foreign assistance programs in Central America and Haiti that disrupt transnational criminal organizations, promote citizen security, halt illegal immigration, and promote sustainable economic growth by addressing the underlying causes of insecurity, impunity, and lack of economic opportunity.

As a part of its review, DHS decided on a delayed effective date of 18 months for El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti to permit an orderly transition, both for those returning home and for the country receiving them. Our embassies in Honduras and El Salvador have met with host government counterparts to encourage the development of programs to reintegrate their citizens. With respect to Haiti, we have urged... the Haitian Government to make changes to facilitate investment in order to grow its economy and increase economic opportunity in order to prepare for the reception and reintegration of its citizens. If confirmed, I will redouble these efforts.

Question 54. What amount of financial resources from the FY 2019 budget request and the FY 2018 and FY 2017 budgets would you recommend that the State Department dedicate to ensuring the effective repatriation of more than 400,000 TPS beneficiaries to El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the relevant bureaus and offices to ensure U.S. foreign assistance promotes our foreign policy objectives in the region. Such programs include programming to combat transnational criminal organizations and drug trafficking, halt illegal immigration, and promote sustainable economic growth by addressing the underlying causes of insecurity, impunity, and lack of economic opportunity. Support for programs under the U.S. Strategy for Central America that have been identified as critical to achieve our policy objectives and that have been identified for additional support. These programs contribute to improved living conditions and economic opportunity for those residing in and returning to these countries.

Question 55. How would you work with the Governments of El Salvador, Hon-donas, and Haiti to mitigate the massive upheaval if 400,000 people are returned to their country of origin, as well as guarantee the safety of these individuals and that of their U.S. citizen children that will be accompanying them?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our embassies and USAID to strengthen the region’s ability to reintegrate all migrants, including TPS returnees.
I understand that USAID has hosted migration workshops in El Salvador and Hon-donas to explore challenges and best practices in reintegration. Our embassies in El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti have met with host government counterparts to encourage the further development of programs to reintegrate their citizens. Our embassies and consulates overseas stand ready to provide appropriate consular serv-

Question 56. If confirmed, will you advocate that Secretary Pompeo reconsider the recommendations of his predecessor to DHS in order to better draw on the expertise of State Department officials?

Answer. There is tremendous expertise residing in the Department of State and, if confirmed, I will ensure that expertise is leveraged toward achieving the best possible policy outcomes for the United States. If confirmed, I would work closely with and draw upon Department experts on TPS beneficiary countries to manage the bilateral relationships.

Question 57. What contact did the State Department’s Office of Policy Planning have with the White House Domestic Policy Council prior to Secretary Tillerson issuing his October 31, 2017 recommendations?

Answer. I did not discuss TPS with the White House Domestic Policy Council.

Question 58. Did the State Department’s Office of Policy Planning lend more credence to the recommendations and guidance of the White House Domestic Policy Council than the recommendations and warnings of U.S. diplomatic personnel?

Answer. I did not discuss TPS with the White House Domestic Policy Council.

Question 59. Did the State Department’s Office of Policy Planning provide direct policy guidance to the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs as to how it should formulate its recommendation to Secretary Tillerson? If so, what was the nature of that guidance?

Answer. The Department’s internal Temporary Protected Status (TPS) review process is comprehensive and well established. It involves input from the relevant regional bureau and U.S. embassy in the TPS country under review, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM), and the Office of the Legal Adviser. Additional offices that review and contribute to the process include the Secretary’s Policy Planning Staff, the Office of the Deputy Secretary, and the Office of the Undersecretary for Political Affairs. All sources of information are considered in developing the Department’s recommendation. Regional bureaus take into account posts’ on-the-ground insights into country conditions as applied to the legal requirements outlined in the TPS statute.

Question 60. Did the State Department’s Office of Policy Planning provide direct policy guidance to the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration as to how it should formulate its recommendation to Secretary Tillerson? If so, what was the nature of that guidance?

Answer. My portfolio covers the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs. I never discussed TPS with the PRM Bureau.
Question 61. What was the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs’s recommendation to the Secretary’s Office of Policy Planning?

Answer. While I cannot speak to WHA’s internal deliberations, the Department’s internal Temporary Protected Status (TPS) review process is comprehensive and well established. The Secretary’s recommendation to DHS is based on input from the relevant regional bureau and U.S. embassy in the TPS country under review, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM), and the Office of the Legal Adviser. Additional offices that review and contribute to the process include the Secretary’s Policy Planning Staff, the Office of the Deputy Secretary, and the Office of the Under Secretary for Political Affairs.

Question 62. Do you commit to making decisions based on the input of career foreign service professionals when it comes to Temporary Protected Status?

Answer. Yes.

Question 63. Thirty-two percent of Salvadoran and Honduran TPS holders surveyed in 2016 owned their own home and are making mortgage payments. What will happen to the homes when TPS is terminated?

Answer. The Department of Homeland Security, as a part of its review of Temporary Protected Status (TPS), decided on a delayed effective date of 18 months for El Salvador and Honduras to permit an orderly transition for individuals returning home and for the countries receiving them. The phase-out period will provide time for individuals to arrange for their departure and for the countries to prepare for the reception and reintegration of its citizens. Consular services for U.S. citizens.

Question 64. Will you advocate that former TPS holders be eligible to apply for non-immigrant tourist and business visas to travel to the United States after the end of the TPS designation for their respective countries?

Answer. The Department is committed to facilitating legitimate tourist and business travel to the United States, without compromising our border security. Any citizen of a foreign country seeking to enter the United States may apply for a non-immigrant visa. The purpose of intended travel and other facts determine what type of visa is required under U.S. immigration law. The applicant must meet all requirements to receive the category of visa for which they are applying.

Question 65. If confirmed, what strategy would you recommend to address the Venezuelan crisis?

Answer. The political and economic crises in Venezuela continue to deteriorate precipitously, causing a humanitarian crisis and outflow of Venezuelans at levels that threaten regional stability and U.S. interests. As a result, responding to this crisis will take a whole of government approach, including close coordination with like-minded countries in the Western Hemisphere and beyond.

The administration has developed a strategy that coordinates the U.S. approach and addresses key issues related to the crisis through five lines of effort: diplomatic engagement; strategic communications; economic measures; support to democratic actors, and contingency planning and humanitarian assistance.

Question 66. If confirmed, do you commit to working with Congress on legislation to advance a comprehensive U.S. strategy to address the humanitarian, political, and economic crisis in Venezuela?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with Congress on legislation to advance a comprehensive U.S. strategy to address the humanitarian, political, and economic crisis in Venezuela.

Question 67. What do you believe is the most effective way to facilitate about the restoration of democracy in Venezuela?

Answer. The international community has a role to play in facilitating Venezuela’s return to a prosperous, democratic country. The Maduro regime has shown how far it is willing to go to maintain power. It seeks international legitimacy and support for its actions. If confirmed, I will ensure the United States continues to coordinate with the international community to hold regime officials accountable for their actions. I will also seek to redouble our efforts at the Organization of American States, through the United Nations, and in support of the efforts of the Lima Group. International pressure, alongside support to democratic actors in Venezuela, is paramount in facilitating a restoration of democracy in Venezuela.

Question 68. Will you personally engage in diplomatic efforts and ensure that senior State Department officials have the tools they need to pursue a coordinated international response to the situation in Venezuela?
Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will personally engage in diplomatic efforts and ensure that senior State Department officials have the tools they need to pursue a coordinated international response to the situation in Venezuela.

Question 69. In August 2017, President Trump stated that the U.S. has a ‘military option’ for Venezuela; do you support the use of the U.S. military to address Venezuela’s political, economic and humanitarian crisis?

Answer. If confirmed, my role would be to pursue a diplomatic solution to the Venezuelan crisis. To date the administration has undertaken robust diplomatic engagement in the region and globally in support of the Venezuelan people. I would, if confirmed, continue and build upon these efforts to seek a peaceful resolution.

Question 70. Numerous press articles have cited that the administration is considering sanctions on the Venezuelan oil sector; how would oil sanctions affect Venezuela’s economic and humanitarian crisis, and how might it facilitate a diplomatic solution the country’s political crisis?

Answer. The administration uses sanctions as one of several tools to address the deteriorating situation in Venezuela. The United States has designated more than 50 Venezuelan nationals since January 2017, including President Nicolás Maduro and former Vice President Tareck El Aissami, for their actions against the Venezuelan people. If confirmed, I will support additional strong and swift action to prevent the theft of Venezuela’s wealth by corrupt individuals in the Maduro regime.

With regard to potential energy sector sanctions, if confirmed I will consider additional diplomatic and economic measures to support the restoration of democracy in Venezuela and also take into consideration potential impacts on the humanitarian crisis, U.S. interests, and our partners in the region and global community.

Question 71. During a speech at the University of Texas, then-Secretary Tillerson suggested that the Venezuelan military should “handle that,” referring to the restoration of the constitutional order in Venezuela; what is your assessment of this statement?

Answer. President Maduro has undermined democracy in Venezuela by destroying democratic institutions, processes, and norms. The administration has repeatedly called on Maduro, the opposition, and all actors including the military to press for a return to the democratic path in Venezuela.

Question 72. Did you advise Secretary Tillerson to make such a statement?

Answer. No.

Question 73. What aspects of the Venezuelan military’s involvement in drug trafficking, human rights abuses, and widespread corruption would suggest that it would facilitate a return to democracy?

Answer. All Venezuelans should support Venezuela’s return to a prosperous democracy. Members of the Venezuelan armed forces can be a part of the future of Venezuela if they respect the rule of law; however, those who choose to put their own interests above those of their fellow citizens should expect to be held accountable.

Question 74. How should the Department of State address the humanitarian crisis in Venezuela?

Answer. If confirmed, I will redouble the Department’s efforts to support a U.S. Government humanitarian assistance response to the Venezuelan crisis and its impact on the region, including by working with the international community and interagency to coordinate assistance efforts both inside and outside of Venezuela. While the U.S. Government’s ability to provide direct assistance to the Venezuelan people in their own country is limited by the Maduro regime’s refusal to permit large-scale international humanitarian aid into the country, the U.S. Government is providing assistance throughout the region. The Department is working with the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), and other international organizations—including UNHCR and the International Organization for Migration—to ensure there is a comprehensive international response. This support will provide assistance to Venezuelans in Colombia, Brazil, Ecuador, Peru, and other countries in the region receiving large numbers of Venezuelans. The Department has also called on the Maduro regime to accept international humanitarian assistance, and if confirmed I will continue to urge the international community to express concern and support humanitarian assistance to relieve the suffering of the Venezuelan people. I will specifically continue to encourage additional contributions from regional governments and other donor countries to meet growing needs.

Question 75. Will you prioritize humanitarian and refugee issues alongside sanctions and the tools needed to address growing criminality in Venezuela?
Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to employ all of the policy tools at the disposal of the U.S. Government to address the worsening humanitarian crisis in Venezuela and in the region. This crisis has led to more than 1.8 million Venezuelans deciding to flee their country in search of better conditions. It will be important to provide assistance quickly to prevent further regional instability. The United States has already made significant financial commitments to respond to the outflow of Venezuelans, and I will continue to encourage additional financial contributions from regional organizations and other donor governments.

Question 76. What should the United States do to ensure an adequate humanitarian response to the flow of Venezuelan migrants and refugees fleeing from the crisis in Venezuela?

Answer. The humanitarian crisis is worsening by the day. Venezuelans fleeing their country need shelter, food, medical services, documentation, legal protection, and pathways to integration in their host countries. The United States has committed nearly $40 million in humanitarian and development assistance to support Venezuelans fleeing the manmade crisis in Venezuela and the countries that are hosting them. If confirmed, I will continue the Department's work with U.S. partners in the region, including multilateral organizations, host countries, and the inter-agency, to determine how best to assist the Venezuelan people and continue to encourage other donors to also contribute to these efforts. U.S. assistance is critical as the conditions worsen and more Venezuelans decide to flee, and both the Department and USAID intend to increase our assistance in the coming months.

Question 77. Do you support robust funding for UNHCR and other agencies charged with responding to the crisis?

Answer. Yes. The Department's Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs is working with the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration to support UNHCR's regional appeal for assistance related to the Venezuela crisis. The Department of State provided more than $3.3 million to UNHCR to provide immediate assistance to Venezuelans in Colombia, Brazil, Costa Rica, and the Caribbean. The Department is providing another $12 million to UNHCR for programs to assist Venezuelans throughout the region. In addition, USAID has also provided $5.6 million for assistance to Venezuelans in Colombia and an additional $500,000 to assist Venezuelans in Brazil. If confirmed, I would support the continued provision of humanitarian assistance to address this man-made crisis and support the victims of the Maduro regime's policies.

TIP Report

Question 78. Under the Obama administration, the State Department raised Cuba from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List on its annual Trafficking in Persons report. However, there is widespread consensus that many Cuban doctors are forced to travel and work abroad in conditions that resemble indentured servitude. Under the Trump administration, Cuba remains on the Tier 2 Watch list.

• What is your assessment of the forced labor conditions that many Cuban doctors faced when they are conscripted to work abroad?

Answer. Combatting trafficking in persons and forced labor remains a key priority for this administration, and I understand the Department is actively engaged with the Cuban Government on these issues. I share the Department's concerns, outlined in its 2017 Trafficking in Persons report, that the Cuban Government does not prohibit forced labor, report efforts to prevent forced labor domestically, or recognize forced labor as a possible issue affecting its nationals in medical missions abroad. I understand the Department has expressed these concerns directly with the Cuban Government.

I am aware of reports that participants in foreign medical missions are coerced by Cuban officials into these programs, for example by withholding participants' passports, restricting their movement, or threatening to revoke their medical licenses or retaliate against their family members in Cuba if participants leave the program. If confirmed, I will review closely all reports on these matters to advance our administration's priorities in combatting trafficking in persons and forced labor in Cuba.

Question 79. Under the Obama administration, the State Department raised Cuba from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List on its annual Trafficking in Persons report. However, there is widespread consensus that many Cuban doctors are forced to travel and work abroad in conditions that resemble indentured servitude. Under the Trump administration, Cuba remains on the Tier 2 Watch list.

• If confirmed, what information would you advocate be included do you commit to ensure robust attention to this issue in the TIP report?
Answer. The Department prepares its annual Trafficking in Persons report and determines the Tier rankings using information from a wide range of sources including U.S. embassies, nongovernmental and international organizations, media sources, and published reports. I share the Department’s concerns that the Cuban Government does not prohibit forced labor, report efforts to prevent forced labor domestically, or recognize forced labor as a possible issue affecting its nationals in medical missions abroad. If confirmed, I will ensure that a broad range of sources are reviewed and analyzed when preparing the Trafficking in Persons report on Cuba to make certain issues such as forced labor continue to be addressed.

Question 80. Under the Obama administration, the State Department raised Cuba from Tier 3 to Tier 2 Watch List on its annual Trafficking in Persons report. However, there is widespread consensus that many Cuban doctors are forced to travel and work abroad in conditions that resemble indentured servitude. Under the Trump administration, Cuba remains on the Tier 2 Watch list.

• If confirmed, would you recommend downgrading Cuba to Tier 3?

Answer. Combatting trafficking in persons remains a key priority for this administration, and I understand the Department is actively engaged with the Cuban Government on this issue.

The Department prepares its annual Trafficking in Persons report and determines the Tier rankings using information from a wide range of sources including U.S. embassies, nongovernmental and international organizations, media sources, and published reports. I understand that, in 2017, the Department ranked Cuba as Tier 2 Watch List for the third consecutive year. The Secretary granted Cuba a waiver from an otherwise required downgrade to Tier 3 consistent with the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) because the Cuban Government devoted sufficient resources to a written plan that, if implemented, would constitute significant efforts to meet the minimum standards. I also understand the Secretary has authority to grant Cuba one more waiver in 2018 if Cuba remains at Tier 2 Watch List, but in 2019, Cuba must be upgraded or downgraded.

If confirmed, I will seek to advance the administration’s priorities in combatting trafficking in persons in Cuba and work with the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons to ensure its annual report accurately reflects the extent of Cuba’s efforts to meet the TVPA minimum standards for the elimination of human trafficking.

Democracy Assistance

Question 81. The Cuban people have long suffered under a regime that suppresses their freedom and fails to respect human dignity.

• As the Government of Cuba continues to suppress freedom of expression and continues to carry out arbitrary detentions of peaceful demonstrators, would you advocate restoring U.S. funding for democracy, human rights and civil society programs to the traditional level of $20 million?

Answer. The administration’s Cuba policy announced in June 2017 makes our continued support of democracy and human rights in Cuba and the intention to demonstrate solidarity with the Cuban people in the face of a repressive regime our primary objective. The democracy programs, which the Department of State and USAID administer inside and outside of Cuba, are an important tool for advancing our priorities on the island.

I understand requested foreign assistance funding levels were reduced globally in FY19, but neither Cuba nor the region was singled out. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues to administer these important democracy programs to support the critical work of human rights defenders in Cuba, consistent with the administration’s policy.

Question 82. The Cuban people have long suffered under a regime that suppresses their freedom and fails to respect human dignity.

• If confirmed, how will you work support the critical work of promoting a free and democratic Cuba?

Answer. As directed by the June 2017 National Security Presidential Memorandum, “Strengthening the Policy of the United States Toward Cuba,” the Department has focused its efforts on promoting improved respect for human rights in Cuba. I understand the Department monitors human rights developments in Cuba and calls out violations by the Cuban Government. It also actively engages with many civil society. The Department and USAID administer U.S. Government-funded programs to promote democracy and the exercise of fundamental freedoms and to support the critical work of human rights defenders on the island.
If confirmed, I will continue to support these critical initiatives and work towards a more stable, prosperous, and free country for the Cuban people, consistent with the administration’s policy.

Fugitives

Question 83. The Government of Cuba has harbored fugitives who have been tried and convicted in the United States. Two of these fugitives include Joanne Chesimard, who is responsible for the murder of New Jersey State Trooper Werner Foerster during a routine traffic stop and William Morales, leader and chief bomb-maker for the terrorist organization FALN, who committed numerous terrorist attacks on United States soil, including the bombings of Fraunces Tavern in lower Manhattan in 1975 and the Mobil Oil employment office in New York in 1977. In 2013, Chesimard became the first woman named to the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s (FBI) Most Wanted Terrorists.

- If confirmed, will you advocate for the extradition of these individuals so that they can face justice in the United States?

Answer. Facilitating the return of fugitives, like Joanne Chesimard, is one of this administration’s top priorities in our bilateral engagement with Cuba. I understand the Department of State, in conjunction with the Department of Justice and other relevant agencies, actively engages with the Cuban Government on fugitive issues through our bilateral Law Enforcement Dialogue and associated technical exchanges. Through this dialogue, I understand we continue to press the Cuban Government to return these fugitives. In addition, in January 2018, New Jersey state troopers provided the Cuban law enforcement officials a briefing on the nature of the crimes committed by Joanne Chesimard, providing Cuba new information about her conduct.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with relevant U.S. agencies and the Cuban Government to push for the return of individuals like Chesimard so they can face justice in the United States.

Question 84. What has the Department of State done to ensure that none of the U.S. Government programs in Haiti were implicated by the Oxfam scandal?

Answer. It is my understanding that USAID did not fund Oxfam during the 2010 Haiti earthquake response, and that USAID currently does not have any active programs with Oxfam in Haiti.

In Fiscal Year 2015–2017, USAID provided $1.9 million to Oxfam in Haiti. This included funding to enhance disaster preparedness systems, as well as emergency humanitarian assistance following Hurricane Matthew in 2016. This funding was subject to USAID’s strict Code of Conduct requirement, mandating that partners ensure the protection of beneficiaries from sexual exploitation and abuse in humanitarian relief operations.

I further understand that the State Department has been in touch with Oxfam to ensure that no staff behaved improperly while working on programs funded by USAID.

Question 85. Does the Department of State have a process to ensure that its subcontractors are not involved in sexual misconduct and generally abide by the same conduct guidelines that regulate U.S. Government employees?

Answer. It is my understanding that the Department and USAID prioritize protecting vulnerable populations and aid beneficiaries from sexual exploitation and abuse in humanitarian relief operations.

Prior to receiving funding from us, our partners must demonstrate that their humanitarian assistance programs not only protect beneficiaries’ safety and well-being, but that they do not increase any population’s risk of violence, coercion, or abuse.

By law, any organization that receives International Disaster Assistance funding from USAID must adopt a Code of Conduct providing for the protection of beneficiaries from sexual exploitation and abuse in humanitarian relief operations.

Question 86. How do you assess our recovery effort?

Answer. Much progress has been made over the course of the past eight years. I understand that since the 2010 earthquake, the United States has made available more than $5.1 billion to Haiti to support life-saving post-disaster relief as well as longer-term recovery, reconstruction, and development programs.

More than 20,000 jobs have been created in Haiti’s growing export apparel sector, adding more than 1.5 percent to Haiti’s GDP. In the agricultural sector, it is my understanding that U.S. assistance has helped 70,000 farmers increase crop yields, and introduced improved seeds, fertilizer, irrigation, and other technologies to more than 100,000 farmers.
U.S. health programs are improving access to basic services for approximately 40 percent of the population and have contributed to improvements in basic health indicators. The U.S. Government supports food and nutrition security targeting malnourished children under five, and vulnerable households. The United States has been instrumental in training civilian Haitian police, which now number over 15,000, thus enabling U.N. peacekeeping troops to depart in October 2017.

USAID funded the construction of a power plant in northern Haiti that provides uninterrupted electricity to the Caracol Industrial Park, and local households, businesses, and government institutions have been connected with meters to the power grid.

Question 87. What have been the principal barriers to a more speedy recovery and how do you hope to address them?

Answer. While there have been successes, I believe Haiti needs to continue to take steps to create a more welcoming investment climate. It will become increasingly important for Haiti to build its own economy in order to generate greater prosperity for Haiti’s citizens, and sufficient revenue to provide for key government services. If confirmed, I will see that the State Department continues to work with the Haitian Government, the Haitian private sector, and other bilateral and multilateral donors to improve Haiti’s investment climate.

Trinidad & Tobago—ISIS Recruitment

Question 88. Several prominent media outlets have reported that more than 100 Trinidadian citizens left their country to join the Islamic State over the last few years. As ISIS retreats, Trinidad faces the possibility that trained citizens could return to radicalize a younger generation. A younger, radicalized generation is extremely concerning, especially if it were to happen in our hemisphere. If confirmed, what steps will you take to address the issue of ISIS-recruited returnees to Trinidad?

Answer. Open source media reports that 135 Trinidad and Tobago citizens have gone to fight for ISIS, the highest per capita rate in the Western Hemisphere. Many of these fighters had prior affiliations with criminal gangs. If confirmed, I would support ongoing programs designed to build Trinidad and Tobago’s capacity to counter violent extremism. Such programming includes an Embassy Port of Spain program to identify and amplify credible local voices to counter extremist messaging. Embassy Port of Spain also participated along with the Department of Defense in the Fused Response crisis management exercise with the Government of Trinidad and Tobago from April 16–26.

The Trinidad and Tobago Government approved a comprehensive counterterrorism strategy in November 2017, and has proposed amendments to its existing Anti-Terrorism Act to address critical gaps in the legislation. If confirmed, I will press the Government to pass these amendments that will broaden the scope for terrorism-related prosecutions.

Question 89. Several prominent media outlets have reported that more than 100 Trinidadian citizens left their country to join the Islamic State over the last few years. As ISIS retreats, Trinidad faces the possibility that trained citizens could return to radicalize a younger generation. A younger, radicalized generation is extremely concerning, especially if it were to happen in our hemisphere. Do you commit to working with the Government of Trinidad & Tobago to ensure that a cohesive strategy is in place?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to working with the Government of Trinidad & Tobago to ensure that a cohesive strategy is in place to counter violent extremism. The U.S. Government engagement pursues a whole of government approach to countering violent extremism that includes building law enforcement and judicial capacity, as well as programming to counter violent extremist messaging.

Question 90. Trinidad & Tobago Reporting indicates that SCL Group, the parent company of Cambridge Analytica—the data company that worked on Trump’s campaign—planned to illegally acquire the internet-browsing histories of the citizens of Trinidad & Tobago, and use it to create psychological profiles to target voters on behalf of a political party there. What is your assessment of the SCL Group’s activities in Trinidad & Tobago?

Answer. I understand that press reports asserted a Trinbagonian political party employed a private data-mining firm in a previous election. If confirmed, I would work to continue our law enforcement cooperation with host government authorities.

Question 91. Trinidad & Tobago Reporting indicates that SCL Group, the parent company of Cambridge Analytica—the data company that worked on Trump’s campaign—planned to illegally acquire the internet-browsing histories of the citizens of Trinidad & Tobago, and use it to create psychological profiles to target voters on behalf of a political party there. Trinidad & Tobago is now reportedly investigating SCL Group’s activities there—will you commit to assisting local authorities with their investigation?

Answer. I understand that the United States is already committed to building law enforcement and justice sector capacity in Trinidad and Tobago. If confirmed, I would continue our commitment to enhancing those institutions in close coordination with the Government of Trinidad and Tobago.

Question 92. Trinidad & Tobago Reporting indicates that SCL Group, the parent company of Cambridge Analytics—the data company that worked on Trump’s campaign—planned to illegally acquire the internet-browsing histories of the citizens of Trinidad & Tobago, and use it to create psychological profiles to target voters on behalf of a political party there. Will you also commit to providing this committee with any information it requests regarding this issue?

Answer. I am committed to transparency and appreciate the importance of Congressional oversight. If confirmed, I will strive to share information as appropriate with this committee.

Question 93. Do you commit to working with our Colombian partners to advance a comprehensive strategy that combats all elements of the illicit narcotics trade?

Answer. The Trump administration remains deeply concerned about the large increase in Colombian coca cultivation and cocaine production. At the U.S.-Colombia High-Level Dialogue (HLD) March 1, the United States and Colombia agreed to expand counternarcotics cooperation over the next five years, with the shared goal of reducing Colombia’s estimated cocaine production and coca cultivation to 50 percent of current levels by 2023. If confirmed, I will prioritize work with Colombia to ensure continued progress in reducing coca cultivation and the production of cocaine as agreed to at the HLD, including through enhanced eradication, interdiction, alternative development, and operations to dismantle narco-trafficking organizations.

Question 94. What do you plan to do to address some of the broader problems that are complicating our counternarcotic efforts in Colombia like a lack of state presence in vulnerable regions of Colombia and a dearth of viable economic opportunities?

Answer. Colombia needs to do more to reverse the large increase in coca cultivation and cocaine production in Colombia, including by making more progress to expand the presence of security and civilian agencies to vulnerable regions. U.S. assistance plays a key role in supporting this effort. The administration works in Colombia with all levels of government, the armed forces, and the private sector to extend government presence, confront illegality, and encourage licit, sustainable development. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Colombian Government to support the expansion of capable government services, security, and economic opportunities throughout the country.

Question 95. Do you commit to working in partnership with USAID to expanding and strengthening alternative development programs in Colombia?

Answer. The United States strongly supports Colombia’s efforts to secure a just and lasting peace. I understand the Department of State and USAID work together to support Colombia’s transition towards a durable peace through efforts to re-establish state control in vulnerable regions in a phased approach that combines security, counternarcotics, and economic and social development. If confirmed, I will commit to working with USAID to support government and citizen efforts in Colombia to expand government presence, confront criminal groups, and encourage licit, sustainable development.

Question 96. Do you commit to work with the U.S. Departments of Treasury and Justice to prioritize combatting financial crimes as part of our engagement with Colombia, including increasing money laundering prosecutions and asset forfeiture cases?

Answer. Despite the Government of Colombia’s fairly strict anti-money laundering regime, the laundering of money, primarily from Colombia’s illicit drug production and illegal mining but also from domestic terrorist groups, continues to penetrate its economy and affect its financial institutions. I understand Colombia is taking appropriate steps by addressing some of the inefficiencies in its asset forfeiture regime. I believe Colombia should continue to look for additional ways to increase efficiency and streamline its judicial system. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the U.S. Departments of the Treasury and Justice to prioritize efforts to combat financial crimes.

Question 97. How do you plan to work with our partners in Colombia to more aggressively target financial crimes?

Answer. Colombia is a vital partner in the fight against financial crimes, which fuel narcotrafficking and other forms of illicit activity. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s efforts to build Colombia’s capacity to combat money laundering and other financial crimes, pursue forfeiture, and effectively manage seized assets in order to target criminal networks and crucial business facilitators, with the goal of disrupting and dismantling their organizations. I will also encourage continued collaboration between the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, and the U.S. interagency to target the financial crimes of Colombia-based criminal organizations.

Question 98. While pursuing bilateral counternarcotics cooperation, how can we work with Colombia to arrest its alarming increase in killings of social leaders and human rights defenders?

Answer. The administration works in Colombia to support efforts to protect civil society, including human rights defenders and community leaders, from violence fueled by narcotrafficking organizations and other illegal armed criminal groups. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Colombia to reduce drug flows, dismantle illegal armed groups, hold accountable those responsible for attacks on social leaders, and support government and civilian efforts to provide effective security guarantees for civil society.

Question 99. What steps would you take to guarantee the political and human rights of Afro-Colombian and indigenous persons?

Answer. The United States strongly supports Colombia’s efforts to secure a lasting peace. The United States employs a comprehensive approach to promote peace, human rights, and social inclusion of indigenous and Afro-Colombians, including through programming, engagement with civil society, funding for the U.S.-Colombia Action Plan on Racial and Ethnic Equality, and ongoing dialogue with the Colombian Government. If confirmed, I will continue to support Colombia’s efforts to secure an inclusive peace, including implementation of the peace accord’s Ethnic Chapter, and to hold accountable all those responsible for attacks on ethnic leaders and communities as a way to deter future violence.

Question 100. As we work to advance counternarcotics cooperation, what do you see as the role of the United States in helping Colombia in its implementation of the peace accord?

Answer. The United States strongly supports Colombia’s efforts to secure a just and lasting peace. Colombia remains one of the United States’ strongest partners in the region, and successful implementation of the peace accord is in the national interest of both nations. Protecting civil society, including human rights defenders and community leaders, from violence is essential to ensuring that the promise of the accord is fulfilled. U.S. assistance plays a key role in supporting implementation. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Colombian Government to support the implementation of the peace accord.

Question 101. What is your assessment of Wikileaks and its founder, Julian Assange?

Answer. I am concerned about Julian Assange and Wikileaks’ hostile activities and intent to undermine U.S. national security.

Question 102. Do you believe that Wikileaks collaborated with the Russian Government to influence the 2016 U.S. election?

Answer. I am aware of the ODNI’s January 6, 2017, “high confidence” assessment that Russian efforts to influence the 2016 U.S. presidential election included the use of the Russian military’s General Staff Main Intelligence Directorate (GRU) to relay U.S. victim data obtained in cyber operations to Wikileaks. I am also aware of that report’s assessment that “the Kremlin’s principal international propaganda outlet RT (formerly Russia Today) has actively collaborated with WikiLeaks. The RT editor-in-chief visited Wikileaks founder Julian Assange at the Ecuadorian embassy in London in August 2013, where they discussed renewing his broadcast contract with RT, according to Russian and Western media.” I am also aware of media reports detailing Mr. Assange and Wikileaks’ interference with the domestic politics of a number of other countries, including some of our allies.

Question 103. What is your assessment of the Government of Ecuador’s decision to provide asylum for Mr. Assange at its Embassy in London?

Answer. The 2012 decision by the previous Government of Ecuador to provide asylum at its embassy in London for Mr. Assange, an Australian citizen, as he fought extradition to Sweden to stand trial for sex crimes, is a matter between the Ecuadorian and British Governments. I understand the current Government of Ecuador has been engaging with the British Government to find a solution to the issue. If confirmed, I will continue to raise our significant concerns regarding Mr. Assange with the Government of Ecuador at every available opportunity, including addressing his harmful activities and attempts to undermine the national security of the United States and our allies.

Question 104. If confirmed, in your interaction with the Government of Ecuador, how would you address the issue of Mr. Assange’s current asylum status in the Ecuadorian Embassy in London?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to raise our significant concerns regarding Mr. Assange with the Government of Ecuador at every available opportunity, including addressing his harmful activities and attempts to undermine the national security of the United States and our allies.

Question 105. If confirmed, do you commit to keeping Senate Foreign Relations committee Staff informed about your discussions with the Government of Ecuador about Mr. Assange?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will endeavor to keep the Senate Foreign Relations committee informed about my discussions with the Government of Ecuador regarding Mr. Assange.

Question 106. Is there a link between this corruption and the violence and poverty that drive so many of these countries’ citizens to migrate?

Answer. I believe that corruption is a key enabling factor for all forms of crime and violence in the region. Corruption weakens democratic institutions, undermines the rule of law, impedes economic development, and contributes to the permissive environments that allow transnational criminal organizations to operate. If confirmed, I would remain committed to advance the principles of accountability, transparency and democratic governance.

Question 107. What more can the U.S. Government do to support, train, and protect people in these countries who are revealing, investigating, and prosecuting corruption?

Answer. Across the hemisphere, we are seeing a surge in support for anti-corruption efforts. If confirmed, I will work to take advantage of this momentum by ensuring that our diplomatic engagement and capacity-building programs take a comprehensive approach to reducing corruption and protecting those who are revealing, investigating, and prosecuting corruption. If confirmed, I would work closely with civil society, the business community, and the interagency to assess which programs have proven successful and which offer the potential for future success. I also believe that a comprehensive approach should include pressing governments to improve mechanisms to protect investigators, journalists, and community leaders who are committed to battling corruption. Together, I believe our efforts to strengthen national institutions, international standards, engage civil society, and remain vigilant can strengthen representative democracy, the rule of law, and economic progress.

Question 108. What steps would you take to decrease violence and murders of social activists, human rights defenders, ethnic minorities and journalists in the region?

Answer. Around the world, human rights defenders, social activists, and journalists work tirelessly to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, advocate for government transparency and accountability, promote rule of law, and expose corruption. They work in the face of mounting challenges including threats, harassment, intimidation, and physical attacks. If confirmed, I will continue to advance the U.S. commitment to the promotion and protection of human rights, and fundamental freedoms of all people. Within the Hemisphere, I will continue our collaboration with bilateral and regional stakeholders to strengthen protection mechanisms for activists, support for independent civil society, and deepen adherence to the rule of law so as to reduce impunity. If confirmed, I will use a wide range of tools to advance respect for human rights, including working with democratic partners, international and regional organizations to include the independent bodies of the Inter-American Human Rights System, civil society, and the private sector.

Question 109. Why do you believe the United States’ standing in the region has dropped?

Answer. Our greatest asset in the Western Hemisphere is a shared vision for the future: we all want to live securely in democratic societies in which we can prosper. U.S. engagement with partners across the Western Hemisphere is based on long-standing cooperation around shared values and objectives. If confirmed, I will focus on expanding the security and economic prosperity of the United States and the Hemisphere and strengthening relationships with our partners based on common interests, goals, and values. I will work to translate our bilateral and regional partnerships into concrete initiatives that unlock increased stability, prosperity, and opportunities for the citizens of our countries.

Question 110. What is the impact of such low approval ratings of U.S. leadership in the region?

Answer. Our partnerships with countries across the Western Hemisphere are rooted in longstanding cooperation based on our shared values and objectives. The most pressing issue facing the Western Hemisphere is the restoration of democracy in Venezuela. Our diplomats have forged unprecedented consensus across the Americas in support of the Venezuelan people and repudiating the tyranny of Nicolas Maduro. Nations representing more than 90 percent of the Hemisphere’s population have come together with the United States on this issue. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen and expand this consensus to defend democracy in our Hemisphere, based on our enduring shared values and vision for the future.

Question 111. What is your assessment of our current public diplomacy programs in the region?

Answer. Through robust public diplomacy, our embassies are advancing U.S. policy goals while building people-to-people relationships, which strengthen the ties between the United States and the countries of the Hemisphere. Current public diplomacy engagement emphasizes entrepreneurship, education, English language programs, and other policy-relevant exchanges to increase economic prosperity, security, and democracy in the Hemisphere. These programs have directly benefited the U.S. economy, promoted U.S. interests, and have led to strong networks of influential individuals who share our policy priorities and values and who serve as partners and allies in our efforts.

Question 112. What public diplomacy initiatives will you pursue to recover U.S. standing in the Western Hemisphere?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use our public diplomacy engagement to advance our priorities of increased security, prosperity, and democracy in the Western Hemisphere. Our embassies will conduct exchange programs that advance entrepreneurship and innovation, which build linkages between the United States and young business and social entrepreneurs across the Hemisphere. Under my leadership, if confirmed, the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs will also continue to emphasize English language and education diplomacy to create networks of knowledge, connect and shape current and future generations of leaders, and increase academic exchange and workforce development the Americas. We will also use public diplomacy to promote people-to-people exchanges in order to build on the strong historical and cultural ties between the United States and the region.

Question 113. Do you commit to fully funding and implementing public diplomacy programs in the region, including the many important exchange programs like the International Visitors Leadership Program that are strongly supported by Congress?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will fully support public diplomacy programs in the region, including important exchange programs such as the International Visitors Leadership Program that are strongly supported by Congress.

Question 114. In the past decade, China has heavily increased its commercial ties and investments in the Western Hemisphere. Chinese President Xi Jinping has travelled three times to the region, and in 2015, he announced a five-year plan to strengthen relations with Latin America that included reaching $500 billion in trade and $250 billion in foreign direct investment. While trade between the U.S. and Latin America has doubled since 2000, China’s trade with the region has multiplied 22 times.

• Do you see China’s increased commercial ties and investments in Latin America as a U.S. security threat?

Answer. While the United States remains the preferred trade and investment partner in the region, the sharp increase in China’s engagement over the past decade presents challenges to U.S. national security and economic interests. If confirmed, working with the inter-agency to devise a strategy to address rising Chinese influence in region will be a top priority. China’s efforts to shape standards and trade rules to benefit Chinese companies run counter to U.S. interests in maintaining a rules-based international order. Further, China’s lack of transparency in its investment practices and its poor adherence to free market principles can undermine the region’s efforts to combat corruption. If confirmed, working with the inter-agency to devise a strategy to address rising Chinese influence in region will be a top priority.

Question 115. In the past decade, China has heavily increased its commercial ties and investments in the Western Hemisphere. Chinese President Xi Jinping has travelled three times to the region, and in 2015 he announced a five-year plan to strengthen relations with Latin America that included reaching $500 billion in trade and $250 billion in foreign direct investment. While trade between the U.S. and Latin America has doubled since 2000, China’s trade with the region has multiplied 22 times.

• How do you propose the U.S. reinvigorate its commercial diplomacy in order to maintain its competitiveness in the region?

Answer. The United States is the top trading partner for more than half the countries in the region and sells more goods in the Western Hemisphere than to all Asian countries combined. If confirmed, I will seek ways to build upon our commercial diplomacy efforts in order to ensure the United States remains the region’s partner of choice. I would start by fostering U.S. economic growth through fair and reciprocal trade and investment. If confirmed, I would also seek to improve the trade and investment climate for U.S. businesses in the region. This work would involve improving transparency and accountability of procurement practices for investment, boosting protection of intellectual property rights, streamlining border clearance procedures, and modernizing free trade agreements. Finally, I would encourage a whole of U.S. Government approach to provide U.S. businesses and Latin American and Caribbean partners financing and project feasibility opportunities through the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, USAID’s Development Credit Authority, and the U.S. Trade and Development Agency.

Question 116. What is your assessment of the recent decision by the Dominican Republic and Panama to cut ties with Taiwan?

Answer. I believe China’s efforts to alter the status quo across the Taiwan Strait and undermine the framework that has enabled peace, stability, and development for decades are deeply concerning. I am disappointed that these two countries did not value this critical factor in their decision to switch diplomatic recognition.

Question 117. Do you believe this is an indication of a larger trend in the region in which we will see more countries cutting ties to Taiwan?

Answer. The United States continues to oppose unilateral actions by either side to alter the status quo across the Strait. With ten countries in the Western Hemisphere who recognize Taiwan, if confirmed, I will continue to reach out to partners in the region to reaffirm our position.

Question 118. How does the Department of State help Taiwan in its efforts to curb China’s attempt to bully countries in the regions into cutting ties with Taiwan?

Answer. Per longstanding policy, the United States opposes unilateral actions by either side that alter the status quo across the Taiwan Strait. Switching diplomatic recognition is destabilizing to that delicate balance. It is my understanding that our embassies have underscored the importance of cross-Strait stability to the United States. If confirmed, I will also continue to caution countries in the Western Hemisphere that China’s financing practices can come at a steep price for recipient countries in terms of the potential negative effects on local labor and environmental conditions, debt sustainability, and rule of law.

Question 119. Do you commit to work with our allies in the region to curb this trend?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with our allies and partners in the region to continue our longstanding policy of opposing unilateral actions by either side that alter the status quo across the Taiwan Strait.

Question 120. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The promotion and defense of human rights and democracy is central to U.S. national security and prosperity. Throughout my career I have supported policies and approaches to foreign affairs that seek to support democracy and human rights. Supporting human rights can take many forms including calling out human rights violators, advocating for justice and accountability, and supporting programs to build capacity. During my career in policy work at the White House and the State Department as well as in my work at think tanks I have been involved in supporting and implementing policies in each of these areas. If confirmed I will continue to put the highest priority on support for democracy and human rights.
Question 121. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in the WHA region? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Latin America has largely transformed over the past two decades from a region of military dictatorships and civil conflicts to one with vibrant, peaceful democracies. However, democracy in Latin America still faces the challenges of economic and social disparities, insecurity, corruption, attacks on civil society, and impunity. I believe that in some countries in the region, democracy is advancing, becoming more inclusive and institutionalized, and is delivering results. In others, we see important threats to representative democracy, including a trend toward incumbents seeking to rewrite constitutional rules to enable them to run for re-election and a disrespect for fundamental freedoms. Within individual countries, certain elements of democracy are consolidating, while other specific aspects such as democratic institutions and rule of law face security-related stress. Narcotics traffickers, criminal gangs, and corrupt officials pose a threat to democracy, and they flourish where the rule of law is weak. Weak democratic institutions and the inability of governments to establish and maintain the rule of law contribute to the spread of transnational crime and corruption.

Question 122. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to promote democracy in the region? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with a full range of stakeholders including governments, regional organizations, civil society, the private sector, and the media to promote fundamental human rights and democracy. If confirmed, I will ensure U.S. policies and programs remain focused on strengthening democratic governance, rule of law, and equal access to justice. If confirmed, I will work to ensure our programs strengthen the capacity of our democratic partners to increase transparency and accountability and promote economic prosperity in their respective countries and the region. My objective would be to ensure that all citizens of the Hemisphere benefit from the fruits of democracy and economic development.

Weak democratic institutions and the inability of governments to establish and maintain the rule of law hinder effective democratic governance and weaken the ability of governments to deliver the benefits of democracy and economic prosperity. If confirmed, I will ensure our efforts to build a secure, prosperous, and democratic hemisphere are supported by programs aimed at improving the rule law, good governance, and freedom for fundamental human rights and freedoms.

Question 123. If confirmed, will you meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in the WHA region? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Around the world, civil society, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and activists work tirelessly to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms, advocate for government transparency and accountability, promote rule of law, and expose corruption. They work in the face of mounting challenges, including threats, harassment, intimidation, and physical attacks. If confirmed, I will build on our long history of engaging leaders outside of government and meet with civil society, NGOs, and activists. I will encourage our embassies to also meet at all levels with civil society, NGOs, and activists to bring attention to the dangers facing civil society and advocate for their protection and empowerment. If confirmed, I will remain committed to ensuring that all of our diplomatic and programmatic engagement maintains its end goals of protecting civil society and human rights activists, supporting them to continue their important work and raising awareness of the legitimate and critical role these actors play in the functioning of healthy and robust democracies.

Question 124. Will you, your staff, and embassy teams actively engage within the region on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in the region?

Answer. A free and active press is an integral part of a healthy democracy. The Department of State is committed to supporting regional efforts to promote freedom of the press. If confirmed, I, along with my staff and our Embassy teams, will work together with countries throughout the Hemisphere to support press freedom and freedom of expression. Under my leadership, if confirmed, the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs will continue to engage with independent local media in the region.

Question 125. Will you, your staff and your embassy teams actively engage within the region on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions? Will you and your embassy team engage political parties, and advocate for access and inclusivity for women and minorities?

Answer. The region’s labor movements have transformed in much of Latin America. Recognizing the important work of labor groups and trade unions in advancing worker rights, if confirmed, I will ensure my team remains engaged on labor issues and advocates at all levels for strengthening labor rights and advancing workplace democracy in the global economy.

If confirmed, I will support social inclusion and work to address the disproportionate impact of violence, discrimination, and poverty on vulnerable groups, including people of African descent and indigenous peoples, women and girls, and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) persons. I will work to integrate these groups and their needs into processes that seek to combat crime and promote rule of law in order to further more inclusive and prosperous economies that ensure all members of society thrive.

Question 126. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the region, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in the region? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in the Western Hemisphere?

Answer. In many parts of the world, LGBTI individuals and their supporters continue to face violence, arrest, harassment, and intimidation for standing up for their human rights, participating in peaceful marches and rallies, expressing their views, and simply being who they are. As Secretary Pompeo affirmed in his statement on the International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia and Biphobia, “the United States stands with people around the world in affirming the dignity and equality of all people regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics. Human rights are universal, and LGBTI people are entitled to the same respect, freedoms, and protections as everyone else.” If confirmed, I will promote the inclusion of LGBTI persons and support the Department’s use of public and private actions to counter violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons. These include diplomatic outreach through bilateral and multilateral channels, offering emergency assistance to LGBTI persons and organizations at risk, and imposing visa restrictions and economic sanctions, as appropriate, against those who violate their human rights.

Question 127. Do you commit to regularly consult with me and SFRC staff, as we discussed in our July 11, 2018 meeting?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I am committed to keeping you and your staff regularly apprised of developments of interest to the committee, including through briefings and consultations by me and other WHA officials.

Question 128. The Trump administration has utilized targeted Global Magnitsky sanctions against individuals in Nicaragua, Guatemala, and the Dominican Republic. However, the administration has not utilized the powerful tool against Cuban Government officials. If confirmed, do you commit to advocating for the use of targeted Global Magnitsky sanctions against Cuban officials involved in human rights abuses and corruption, as we discussed in our July 11, 2018 meeting?

Answer. If confirmed, I will consider all options, including use of Global Magnitsky sanctions, to address human rights abuses in Cuba. Where appropriate, I am committed to advocating for the use of targeted Global Magnitsky sanctions against officials involved in human rights abuses and corruption, as we discussed. The administration appreciates Congressional support for this powerful, versatile tool.

Question 129. Despite evidence that the Government of Cuba conscripts Cuban doctors and health workers to participate in foreign medical missions under conditions that regularly resemble indentured servitude, the Trump administration has maintained Cuba on the Tier 2 Watch List of its annual Trafficking in Persons Report. If confirmed, do you commit to promoting greater attention to this issue in next year’s TIP report and a ranking that appropriately reflects this information, as we discussed in our July 11, 2018 meeting?

Answer. Yes. Combatting trafficking in persons remains a key priority for this administration. If confirmed, I would work closely with the Department’s Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons to promote attention to the heinous crime of human trafficking, not only in Cuba, but throughout the Hemisphere.

Question 130. Independent Cuban activists and human rights defenders have had limited access to U.S. visa services in Havana, while Cuban Government officials and participants in U.S. exchange programs are able to regularly secure visas from the U.S. Embassy in Cuba. Despite current staffing levels at the U.S. Embassy in Cuba, if confirmed, do you commit to provide my office with information related to the current state of visa services and advocate for independent activists and human rights defenders to have greater access to U.S. visa services in Havana, as we discussed in our July 11, 2018 meeting?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues in the Bureau of Consular Affairs to provide your office with information related to the state of visa services in Havana. I will also support the access of independent activists and human rights defenders to U.S. visa services in Havana commensurate with staffing levels there.

Question 131. I am currently working on bipartisan legislation to response to the multifaceted crisis in Venezuela. If confirmed, do you commit to working with my office to provide State Department input and comments on this bill, as we discussed in our July 11, 2018 meeting?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with my team in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs and with other offices at the State Department to ensure we provide timely and substantive comments to the bill. I look forward to working with you and your staff to help peacefully resolve the political, economic, social, and humanitarian crises in Venezuela.

Question 132. Concurrent with your nomination to be Assistant Secretary for Western Hemisphere Affairs, you have been nominated to the Board of the Inter-American Foundation (IAF,) an independent U.S. development assistance agency that supports citizen-led initiatives and creates alternatives to migration, the drug trade, crime, unemployment, exclusion and corruption in Latin America and the Caribbean. The IAF has a long history of strong Congressional bipartisan and bicameral support. What is your assessment of the IAF's grassroots development work in the region?

Answer. The Inter-American Foundation (IAF) provides small grants to citizen-led organizations to build the capacity of local actors and promote the sustainability of development efforts. If confirmed, I look forward to being fully briefed on IAF's ongoing development work and how I can advance U.S. efforts in that important body.

Question 133. During fiscal years 2018 and 2019, the current administration recommended the elimination of the IAF as an independent agency. Congress has signaled in both fiscal years that it does not support the elimination of the agency; and greatly values the IAF's contributions to U.S. development and foreign policy interests in the LAC region. If confirmed to the IAF's Board of Directors, will you work to preserve the IAF as an independent agency and protect and further its mission?

Answer. If confirmed as Assistant Secretary, I will carry out all duties of the position, including serving on the IAF's Board of Directors and work in partnership with federal and independent agencies working to advance our national security and foreign policy interests of the United States. If confirmed, I am committed to implementing U.S. appropriations law with regard to the IAF.

Question 134. In multiple briefings provided by for the Senate Foreign Relations committee by the Bureaus for Western Hemisphere Affairs, International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs, and International Organizations, as well as the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, State Department officials have indicated that there is no known evidence that the Russian Government has interfered with or unduly influenced the work of the United Nations International Commission Against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG), or colluded with CICIG officials. Do you agree with this assessment provided to the Senate Foreign Relations committee by various offices of the State Department?

Answer. I take allegations of Russian influence seriously, and if confirmed commit to personally reviewing all available information related to the case in question.

Question 135. Former U.S. Government officials and Guatemalan Government officials, across multiple administrations representing multiple parties, have repeatedly reaffirmed the importance of CICIG as an invaluable tool for combatting corruption and impunity in Guatemala. Do you believe that CICIG has made positive contributions to combatting corruption and impunity in Guatemala?

Answer. Yes. The United States provides funding to International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) for its important mission to combat corruption and impunity and strengthen Guatemala's justice sector. I understand the Department, USAID, and the U.S. Mission to the United Nations (USUN) have met to discuss options for ensuring oversight and reform of CICIG that can strengthen the commission and preserve its important, independent mandate, and I understand that will be presented to Secretary Pompeo.

Question 136. In your statement, you mentioned the administration’s Caribbean 2020 Strategy which you described as looking “to foster security and prosperity in a region important to our interests.” While the strategy as written is very impressive, its implementation—a full year after it was sent to Congress—leaves much to be desired.

- For each of the areas in the Caribbean 2020 Strategy (security, diplomacy, prosperity, energy, education and health), please provide the committee with a timeline of what steps you would take to specific policy actions.

Answer. In the context of Caribbean 2020, upcoming plans for further diplomatic engagement include an annual consultative meeting with Caribbean leaders. If confirmed, I will continue our commitment to the Caribbean Basin Security Initiative (CBSI) and will prioritize maritime security and counter-narcotics; law enforcement capacity building; community engagement in youth crime and violence prevention activities; and positive alternatives for at-risk youth. In order to highlight private sector engagement and sustainable growth, the Department will work with partners in the Caribbean to organize the second Prosperity Roundtable in late 2018.

The Department approved the Caribbean Energy Security Initiative (CESI) Guarantee Program on March 19, and is moving to implement it during the next year. The CESI Guarantee Program will leverage at least $300 million in lending to stimulate investment in the energy sector in Caribbean countries. On education, if confirmed, I will work to build stronger partnerships between U.S. and Caribbean higher education institutions and advance cooperation on entrepreneurship and technical and vocational skills. Finally, in the health field the Department is working with community leaders to design and install rainwater harvesting systems in Saint Lucia, supporting the American Red Cross in promoting disaster management skills training in the Eastern Caribbean, and working with the Organization of American States to bolster resiliency among small business in the Caribbean tourism sector. The Department is also joining with Caribbean diaspora partners and the Department of Health and Human Services to support universal compliance with international health regulations to prevent the spread of Zika in Barbados and the Eastern Caribbean.

Question 137. In your statement, you mentioned the administration’s Caribbean 2020 Strategy which you described as looking “to foster security and prosperity in a region important to our interests.” While the strategy as written is very impressive, its implementation—a full year after it was sent to Congress—leaves much to be desired.

- The Strategy states, “We will hold a trade and investment conference with Caribbean countries focused on increasing bilateral trade and improving the region’s investment climate and regulatory environment.” When and where will you advocate that this conference take place?

Answer. Since the Department held its first Caribbean Prosperity Roundtable in November 2017 with Caribbean policymakers and private sector representatives to spur economic development and trade, the Department has worked to ensure reconstruction efforts result in resilient, cost-effective energy systems. Plans are underway to host a second Caribbean Prosperity Roundtable in the region later this year.

Question 138. In your statement, you mentioned the administration's Caribbean 2020 Strategy which you described as looking “to foster security and prosperity in a region important to our interests.” While the strategy as written is very impressive, its implementation—a full year after it was sent to Congress—leaves much to be desired.

The Strategy states, “Were funding to become available in the future, the Department could explore expanding its diplomatic and consular presence in Eastern Caribbean countries that do not currently host a permanent U.S. diplomatic mission.” In anticipation of funding becoming available, please provide the committee with a detailed plan on how the U.S. could expand our diplomatic and consular presence in the Eastern Caribbean.

Answer. Embassy Barbados constitutes the United States' diplomatic and security presence in the Eastern Caribbean, with support from the U.S. Embassy in Grenada and the U.S. Consular Agency in Antigua and Barbuda. Official personnel based in Embassy Barbados travel frequently to engage with government officials and other host nation interlocutors in all Eastern Caribbean countries to advance and defend bilateral and regional U.S. foreign policy goals. The State Department remains focused on ensuring that it actively promotes U.S. interests from this platform and if confirmed, I would use funds to maintain and strengthen the Department’s ability to continue to do so. Any decisions on a future expansion of our diplomatic and consular presence in the Eastern Caribbean would be premised on which countries would best support the protection of U.S. citizens and advancement of U.S. interests not only bilaterally, but also regionally.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIMBERLY BREIER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?
Answer. The promotion and defense of human rights and democracy is central to U.S. national security and prosperity. Throughout my career I have supported policies and approaches to foreign affairs that seek to support democracy and human rights. Supporting human rights can take many forms including calling out human rights violators, advocating for justice and accountability, and supporting programs to build capacity. During my career in policy work at the White House and the State Department as well as in my work at think tanks I have been involved in supporting and implementing policies in each of these areas. If confirmed I will continue to put the highest priority on support for democracy and human rights.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?
Answer. If confirmed, I will support diversity in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs. I have experience and government training in diversity and inclusion as well as extensive experience in my prior government service in mentoring up-and-coming staff. If confirmed, I will explore the possibility of creating a new mentoring program in the Bureau, and will seek opportunities to mentor foreign and civil service officers, particularly through example to help aspiring women overcome obstacles to their success.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?
Answer. If confirmed, when interviewing candidates for senior positions in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs I will make it a priority to ensure all candidates affirm their support for a diverse and inclusive workplace and then will monitor that commitment among staff. If confirmed, I will take immediate action in cases where discrimination or bias is reported to me.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?
Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?
Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?
Answer. My investment portfolio consists of diversified mutual funds and diversified interests. The diversified mutual funds are exempt from the conflict of interest laws, as are my other investments because of their size. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 7. As I mentioned in your hearing, in 2015, Marylander Alex Villamayor was brutally raped and murdered in Paraguay. After years of mismanagement and delays, guilty verdicts were recently handed down in his case.
• As Assistant Secretary, in future cases involving American citizens will you apply diplomatic pressure to accept FBI assistance sooner, and review how the State Department treats cases where American citizens are slain or assaulted abroad.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working closely with our interagency partners to ensure host governments understand the benefit of accepting our technical assistance to fully investigate U.S. citizen deaths overseas. The United States enjoys strong cooperation in law enforcement and security with our partners in the Western Hemisphere, and in the past, the U.S. Government has provided technical assistance and training for judges, prosecutors, and police to many of them. If confirmed, I will engage with the relevant authorities to offer all appropriate technical assistance that might help achieve a thorough, impartial investigation and a fair trial in these cases.

Question 8. President Trump’s statements and policies on issues such as immigration and trade have been received poorly, to say the least, throughout the hemisphere, as has been reflected in various polls and studies. The Gallup’s 2017 World Poll, for example, showed only a 16 percent approval rating of President Trump in Latin America. The poll also highlighted that Latin Americans expect relations to worsen rather than improve over time.

• To what do you attribute the marked increase in negative views in the Western Hemisphere of U.S. leadership over the past year, and what specific steps will you take to help reverse those views?
• To what extent do you think negative perceptions of the Trump administration have impacted, or will impact, other nations’ willingness to cooperate with the United States?

Answer. The United States’ greatest asset in the Western Hemisphere is a shared vision for the future: we all want to live securely in democratic societies in which we can prosper. U.S. engagement with partners across the Western Hemisphere is based on longstanding cooperation around shared values and objectives.

The most pressing issue facing our hemisphere is the restoration of democracy in Venezuela. Our diplomats have forged unprecedented consensus across the Americas in support of the Venezuelan people and repudiating the tyranny of Nicolas Maduro. Nations representing more than 90 percent of the Hemisphere’s population have come together with the United States on this issue. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen and expand this consensus to defend democracy in our Hemisphere, based on our enduring shared values and vision for the future.

Trade (Tariffs, NAFTA)

Question 9. The administration announced recently that it is moving forward with steel and aluminum tariffs on Canada and Mexico (as well as Europe), with the possibility of additional future tariffs. The President has been aggressive in his efforts to re-negotiate NAFTA, and pulling out of TPP angered our neighbors who are party to the agreement. There is no question that these actions have turned U.S. trade and bilateral relationships in the region upside down and disrupted the investment markets in the region.

• What is your view of these actions and the potential impact on U.S. businesses?
• How are they impacting our relationships to regional economic partners like Canada and Mexico?
• Are you concerned about the rhetoric the president and his aides have used against the Canadian prime minister?
• To what extent are these actions affecting other aspects of U.S. relations with our regional partners?
• What are the prospects for reaching a renegotiated NAFTA agreement before Mexico’s July 1, 2018 elections? If an agreement is not reached by that time, what are prospects for negotiating with Mexico’s next government?

Answer. The United States, Canada, and Mexico remain close partners and share a wide variety of common interests. If confirmed, I will continue to build upon our existing relationships and extensive areas of mutual cooperation. The relationships with our neighbors have withstood tests before and they will withstand them now. The application of the steel and aluminum tariffs does not foreclose the possibility of arriving at alternative agreements with Canada and Mexico to exempt them in the future. If confirmed, I will continue to work with our partners to address global excess production of steel and aluminum. I will also continue to support our efforts in the ongoing NAFTA re-negotiation process that seeks to rebalance and upgrade our agreement. An updated agreement will benefit all Americans, including workers, farmers, ranchers, manufacturers, and service providers.

Question 10. I recognize that you believe that TPS was designed to be temporary, not for 20 years, that the original conditions don’t exist anymore, but why didn’t the administration follow the recommendations of the Embassy staffs in Haiti, El Salvador and Honduras that maintaining TPS was in the U.S. national security interest?

Answer. The Temporary Protected Status (TPS) statute provides the executive branch with the authority to offer temporary protection from removal for individuals from countries experiencing armed conflict, environmental disaster, or other extraordinary and temporary conditions that prevent their citizens from returning in safety. Any extension of an existing TPS designation must be tied to the original reason for designation. The statute explicitly states that if a TPS country no longer continues to meet the conditions for designation, the designation shall be terminated. The statute further provides for limitations on consideration of legislation providing a pathway to lawful permanent resident status for TPS beneficiaries, indicating a Congressional intent to underscore the temporary nature of the program. While U.S. foreign policy and economic interests may lead Congress to reconsider the future legal treatment of long-term TPS beneficiaries, the statute does not allow the executive branch to extend TPS designations on these bases.

The Department’s internal TPS review process is comprehensive and well established. It involves input from the relevant regional bureau and U.S. embassy in the TPS country under review, the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM), and the Office of the Legal Adviser. Additional offices that review and contribute to the process include the Secretary’s Policy Planning Staff, the Office of the Deputy Secretary, and the Office of the Undersecretary for Political Affairs. In these cases, the regional bureaus review Embassy cables from their region and factor the views of Posts into their decision-making.

The authority to make decisions regarding TPS resides with DHS, after consultation with appropriate agencies. With respect to the decisions on the countries mentioned, DHS consulted with the Department of State to determine whether the conditions under the applicable statute continued to be met.

Question 11. Do you believe the Haitian, Salvadoran, and Honduran Governments will be able to safely absorb TPS returnees when their designations expire? Are we looking to scale up specific programming in TPS returnee home countries to support their return?

Answer. I understand the Department of Homeland Security decided on a delayed effective termination date of 18 months for El Salvador, Honduras, and Haiti to permit an orderly transition for individuals returning home and the country receiving them. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department works closely with USAID to continue its work with governments in the region to strengthen their ability to re-integrate their returning nationals, including Temporary Protected Status (TPS) returnees. If confirmed, I will also ensure the Department provides consular services to U.S. citizen children and spouses of TPS beneficiaries.

China and Russia

Question 12. In then-Secretary Tillerson’s recent trip to Latin America in February, he warned about the activities of both China and Russia in Latin America. This committee issued a Minority Report on Russia in January, which I commissioned, that highlighted Russia’s activities in Mexico. Russia has also been friendly with the Maduro regime—Putin congratulated Maduro on his election. China has taken a similar posture.

- What is your view of the growth of Chinese and Russian activities and engagement in Latin America?
- How do the activities of the two countries in the region differ?
- What U.S. policy measures would you recommend regarding China and Russia in Latin America?

Answer. The United States remains the diplomatic, economic, and security partner of choice for the majority of the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, I am committed to advancing democratic governance and strengthening our work with partners in the region. I will continue to encourage investment and trade in the Western Hemisphere that incorporates long-standing international best practices in transparency, anti-corruption, debt sustainability, and labor rights, and respects the needs and concerns of local communities in order to ensure more secure and lasting economic and social dividends.
Since 2014, we have seen Russian engagement in the hemisphere increase, albeit from a very low baseline. Russia’s strongest relationships in the Western Hemisphere are with Venezuela, Nicaragua, Bolivia, and Cuba. Russia has also expanded its media presence in the hemisphere through Spanish and Portuguese versions of Sputnik and RT. If confirmed, I would remain vigilant of Russian involvement in the security sector and of any expansion of Russian-sponsored disinformation campaigns in the region.

China’s engagement in the Western Hemisphere has increased over the last decade as China has sought access to natural resources and markets, stronger trade relations, tourism opportunities, and infrastructure investments. We are committed to promoting economic development, prosperity, transparency, and good governance throughout the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, I would continue to press that China’s economic engagement meet high standards in terms of transparency, adherence to anti-corruption standards, debt sustainability, labor rights, environmental stewardship, and the needs and concerns of local communities.

PUBLIC CORRUPTION

Question 13. In recent years, high-profile corruption scandals in Latin America have contributed to the resignation or removal from office of several presidents, including most recently Peru’s president, and have galvanized civil society activism.

• Which U.S. assistance programs or other policy tools have been the most effective in helping to reduce corruption by public officials?
• Are there other ways you would support tackling this issue in Latin America such as the Corruption Index bill we discussed?
• How is corruption factoring into elections and appointments, such as the upcoming (July 1) elections in Mexico and Attorney General appointments in the northern triangle countries?

Answer. Across the hemisphere, a regional anti-corruption movement is growing, and that public opinion polls and street demonstrations exemplify increased intolerance of corruption within the region. In Mexico, for example, combating corruption has emerged as a key campaign issue in the July 1 presidential, gubernatorial, and legislative elections.

If confirmed, I will work to take advantage of this momentum by ensuring that our diplomatic engagement and capacity-building programs take a comprehensive approach to the problem. Working closely with civil society, the business community, and the United States Government, I will support efforts to improve program success, including the careful examination of the Corruption Index bill.

I believe that a comprehensive approach that includes United States assistance and policy tools should also include pressing governments to improve mechanisms to share information to combat money laundering, improve visa regulations, and control of offshore and shell companies. If confirmed, I will also encourage governments to enhance transparency wherever possible to include reducing red tape, increasing online services where citizens initiate government transactions, and reducing bureaucracy.

GLOBAL MAGNITSKY

Question 14. I applaud the administration for adopting the Global Magnitsky law, including with an expansive Executive Order. The next round of sanctions will be announced this summer, and I was pleased to recently see the sanctioning of Dominican Republic Senator Bautista under Global Magnitsky.

• Are you prepared to ensure full vetting of possible cases in the region, even in governments that are right of center and ‘supposedly’ aligned with U.S. interests (i.e. Honduras, Nicaragua)?

Answer. Yes. I am committed to protecting and promoting human rights and combating corruption with all of the tools at the Department’s disposal. We must lead by example and, if confirmed, I will pursue tangible and significant consequences for those who commit serious human rights abuses and engage in corruption.

RULE OF LAW

Question 15. I recently participated in a forum at the Woodrow Wilson center on Rule of Law promotion where we discussed the challenges with promoting rule of law globally and in the Western Hemisphere region.

• What are your goals for addressing rule of law challenges in the region?
• What challenges and opportunities exist in the human rights, anti-corruption, and governance space?
• How do violence and trafficking activities exacerbate rule of law challenges in the region?
• How can the interagency - State, USAID, Dept. of Defense, Department of Justice, etc.—better coordinate on regional programming to address rule of law challenges in the region?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that strengthening and extending the rule of law continues to be a critical component of our diplomatic engagement and capacity-building efforts across the region. If confirmed, I will also target our assistance programs and partner government actions to address the full range of factors contributing to the permissive environment that criminals exploit, ranging from strengthening community resilience to improving law enforcement capacity and enhancing judicial processes.

The promotion and defense of human rights is central to U.S. national security and prosperity. If confirmed, I would continue to advance the U.S. commitment to the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of all people. Within the Hemisphere, I would continue our collaboration with bilateral and regional stakeholders to strengthen protection mechanisms for activists, support for independent civil society, and deepen adherence to the rule of law to reduce impunity. If confirmed, I would use a wide range of tools to advance respect for human rights, including working with democratic partners; international and regional organizations to include the independent bodies of the Inter-American Human Rights System; civil society; and the private sector.

I understand that corruption inflicts substantial costs upon the economy, society, security, and saps confidence in rule of law, a driver of migration in the Western Hemisphere. However, across the hemisphere, we are seeing a truly regional anti-corruption movement, and if confirmed, I will work to take advantage of this momentum by taking a comprehensive approach to the problem.

I also understand violence associated with criminal activity is a major obstacle exacerbating efforts to improve governance, encourage prosperity, and enhance the rule of law. Trafficking, whether it be in illegal drugs, people, gold, or wildlife, helps finance criminal organizations, and I recognize that in certain countries a broad and comprehensive approach requires high levels of interagency coordination. If confirmed, I will ensure that we have adequate mechanisms across all key stakeholders and across all missions to strengthen the rule of law. I believe that deep and continuous interagency review and analysis at both the program and policy level is necessary for success.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Question 16. There have been numerous attacks against journalists in the region. The journalist death toll in Mexico is a particularly troubling, but violence against journalists and murders have occurred at an alarming rate across the region from Guatemala to Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, to name just a few. In your view, why is this occurring? What is the U.S. doing to get pressure governments in the region to protect journalists, as well as civil and human rights activists, and ensure those behind the attacks are brought to justice?

Answer. Respect for human rights is fundamental, and a free and active press is an integral part of a healthy democracy. I am deeply distressed by the killings of journalists and human rights activists, which have undermined freedom of speech, freedom of association, and security in the region.

The Department of State is committed to supporting efforts to increase respect for human rights and press freedom, as defining features of democracy. If confirmed, I will work together with other countries throughout the Hemisphere to promote respect for human rights and the rule of law and end impunity. We will continue to call on local and federal authorities to investigate and prosecute those responsible for crimes against journalists and human rights activists wherever they occur.

Question 17. There is no doubt that the Honduran police and military have committed atrocious crimes against innocent civilians. The Berta Caceres case is just one tragic example of why human rights advocates across the globe have highlighted the connection between indigenous rights, rule of law, corruption, and security sector abuse in Honduras. I have long called for conditioning certain aid to advance rule of law and human rights, and I acknowledge that your government did seek justice in the Caceres case, having made at least nine arrests. However, some, including CASA de Maryland and Members of Congress have called for an end to all non-humanitarian U.S. assistance provided directly to the Honduran Government, especially the police and military given widespread corruption and abuse.

• What are your views on this?
• Do you think completely withholding funds would change the behavior of the Honduran security sector?
• Has conditioning the aid helped improve the rights situation in any way thus far?

Answer. I agree that Honduras continues to face serious human rights challenges and, if confirmed, will continue to prioritize human rights issues. I understand U.S. assistance to Honduras directly supports programs and institutions to effectively address human rights in Honduras, such as impunity, public sector corruption, weak government institutions, and drug trafficking and transnational gang activities.

The congressional certification criteria outline the effective steps Honduras must take to develop its judicial system, protect human rights defenders, increase inclusive economic growth and development, and enhance the capacity and transparency of Honduran institutions. I believe addressing the security and developmental challenges in Honduras will require sustained U.S. assistance that balances security with development. Equally important will be significant political will and resources from Honduras. As we press for full accountability of Honduran institutions, U.S. assistance through the U.S. Strategy for Central America aims to support Honduran efforts to strengthen the rule of law and build stronger, more professional government institutions. These efforts are critical to protecting human rights and reducing impunity.

I understand the Department is working to help Honduran authorities develop a professional, credible, and effective police force that is free of corruption and upholds the rule of law. Properly trained and vetted civilian police are the most important long-term solution to maintaining public security in Honduras and elsewhere. It will take time for Honduras to institutionalize its ongoing efforts to reform its national police. Sustained U.S. assistance is important to achieving long-term, institutional reforms.

Question 18. The U.S. Congress has repeatedly called for the removal of the Honduran Armed Forces from domestic policing. You yourself have in the past promised to do so, and established time lines for withdrawal. Yet the military remains today more present in domestic policing than ever, with continuing deadly effects.

• If confirmed, what efforts would you make to pressure the Honduran Government to remove the military from domestic policing?

Answer. I understand that the Department does not provide foreign assistance funds to Honduran military engaged in domestic policing. The Honduran Government is aware of this policy. If confirmed, I will reinforce the Department’s long-standing position that policing is best done by civilian police who are properly trained and equipped, and I will continue to support Honduran efforts to reform its national police. I understand the Department provides foreign assistance to help develop a professional, accountable, and effective civilian police force that upholds the rule of law. I view this support as critical to the Honduran Government’s efforts to professionalize and reform its police force. If confirmed, I will support U.S. assistance to strengthen law enforcement in Honduras.

VENEZUELA

Question 19. As certain policymakers are seeking to isolate Venezuela, it is important to keep the door open for a diplomatic, negotiated solution to the crisis.

• If confirmed, what posture will you take regarding meeting with the Venezuelan Government?

Answer. Diplomats often must meet with leaders with whom we disagree in efforts to advance U.S. interests and national security. While economic pressure and international isolation are important steps toward a peaceful resolution of the crisis, if confirmed, I would also be prepared to engage with the Venezuelan Government if there were strong indications discussions would be productive and conducted in good faith.

Question 20. Given the Trump administration’s efforts to reverse President Obama’s actions to open U.S. relations with Cuba, some U.S. businesses are at risk of losing out on important opportunities.

• If you are confirmed as Assistant Secretary, will you work to ensure that any additional Trump administration actions will not adversely impact U.S. business interests on the island?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to ensure that any engagement between the United States and Cuba advances the interests of the United States, as directed by the National Security Presidential Memorandum “Strengthening the Policy of the United States Toward Cuba,” including U.S. business interests.
Question 21. In response to unexplained injuries of U.S. personnel at the U.S. Embassy in Havana, the State Department ordered the departure of nonemergency personnel from Cuba in September 2017, and subsequently ordered the departure of 15 Cuban diplomats from the Cuban Embassy in Washington, DC.

- What has been the effect of the downsizing of State Department staff in Havana on visa processing at the U.S. Embassy?
- To what extent has the downsizing affected other diplomatic activities in Cuba, such as outreach to human rights activists and political dissidents?

Answer. Given Embassy Havana’s limited staffing, Post’s ability to conduct direct outreach to human rights activists and political dissidents in Cuba is significantly constrained. However, the Department continues to monitor and advance human rights developments in Cuba, consistent with the June 2017 “National Security Presidential Memorandum on Strengthening the Policy of the United States Toward Cuba,” in Washington, in Cuba, and in third countries. The U.S. raises concerns with the Cuban Government, including in the June 14 U.S.-Cuba Bilateral Commission meeting, and with other countries and in international fora; and, along with the U.S. Agency for International Development, administer the annual Congressional appropriation of economic support funds supporting democracy programs in Cuba. The Department also continues to call out the Cuban regime’s enduring repression of its citizens and its recent undemocratic leadership transition. Due to the drawdown, only diplomatic nonimmigrant visa applications and nonimmigrant cases for applicants with life-threatening illness may be processed at U.S. Embassy Havana. U.S. consular officials have begun conducting immigrant visa interviews for Cuban nationals at U.S. Embassy Georgetown, Guyana. The United States supports efforts by Cuban human rights defenders to obtain non-immigrant visas outside of Cuba.

Question 22. How do you see the Guatemalan embassy in Israel’s move to Jerusalem impacting U.S.-Guatemalan relations?

Answer. The United States has expressed its appreciation to Guatemala for its support on Israel in the United Nations and welcomed the move of the Guatemalan embassy to Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. The United States has long-main-tained a friendly bilateral relationship with Guatemala and, if confirmed, I will aim to continue our close collaboration with the Guatemalan Government to advance the U.S. Strategy for Central America in Guatemala.

Question 23. What are your views of CICIG? What role do you expect the new Attorney General to have with CICIG? Do you see corruption as a priority issue to be investigated in Guatemala?

Answer. Anti-corruption efforts in Guatemala will be a priority for me, if confirmed. The United States provides funding to International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) for its important mission to combat corruption and impunity and strengthen Guatemala’s justice sector. The Department, USAID, and the U.S. Mission to the United Nations (USUN) have met to discuss options for ensuring oversight and reform of CICIG that can strengthen the commission and preserve its important, independent mandate, and I understand these will be presented to Secretary Pompeo. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging Guatemala’s new attorney general Marìa Consuelo Porras Arqueta to continue her government’s efforts against corruption and support for CICIG’s mission. A strong attorney general is an integral part of the fight against corruption, impunity, and transnational criminal organizations. Corruption and impunity enable illicit networks and affect the ability of U.S. companies to do business in Guatemala. Measurable progress on combatting transnational criminal organizations requires significant progress in combating corruption.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Kimberly Breier by Senator Jeanne Shaheen

Question 1. On May 7, 2018, Attorney General Sessions announced that the Justice Department would begin prosecuting every person who illegally crosses into the United States along the southern border, even if they attempt to seek asylum. This unprecedented policy has resulted in parents being separated from their children. What is your opinion of this policy? How do you think it will be viewed in Latin America, and what effect will it have on our relations with countries in that region?

Answer. No one wishes to see family members separated from each other. If confirmed I will do everything within my sphere of influence to help address the root... causes of this situation in the countries of origin. It is my understanding the Department works with countries in the region to ensure migration is well managed and legal. This includes improving border controls, combatting human smuggling and trafficking networks, and improving the capacity of countries to receive and reintegrate their citizens who have been returned from the United States and other countries.

It is also my understanding U.S. programs in Central America address the underlying causes of security, governance, and economic drivers of illegal immigration and illicit trafficking. We also work jointly with Mexico in Central America to strengthen security conditions and promote prosperity. If confirmed, I will ensure that we continue to carry out that policy.

Question 2. The Russian Government has sought to undercut U.S. sanctions against Venezuela. What has the administration done to challenge the Kremlin over its support to the Maduro regime? If confirmed, what steps would you consider to do so?

Answer. My understanding is that Russia has lent approximately $5 billion to Venezuela in exchange for oil. Media reports indicate Venezuela’s state oil company, PDVSA, and Russia’s state oil company, Rosneft, continue to make new deals, despite objections from the Venezuelan National Assembly. I understand Russian experts and banks were also involved in the Maduro regime’s brazen attempt to circumvent U.S. financial sanctions with the launch of the “petro” and other digital currencies, which the administration sanctioned on March 19.

If confirmed, I will ensure the Department continues working with the interagency and our international partners to support Venezuela’s return to a democratic, stable, and prosperous country and isolate those who are not working to bring the Maduro regime to the negotiating table, including Russia. I understand our Venezuela-related financial sanctions have prevented Russian energy companies from restructuring Venezuelan debt through the U.S. financial system. If confirmed, I will prioritize these efforts and continue the Department’s use of all diplomatic and economic tools in coordination with the interagency, the international community, and regional partners, to support the Venezuelan people’s efforts to restore a stable, prosperous, and democratic country.

Question 3. Apart from sanctions, what other policy options are available to the United States and the international community to support human rights and democracy in Venezuela?

Answer. The Maduro regime is eroding human rights guarantees and intimidating, persecuting, criminally prosecuting, torturing, or forcing into exile political critics as a means of keeping a stranglehold on power in an increasingly dire situation. The Venezuelan Government has politicized the judiciary to undermine the legislative branch and has curtailed freedom of expression and of the press. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s use of all diplomatic tools in coordination with the interagency, the international community, and regional partners, to support the Venezuelan people’s efforts to restore a stable, prosperous, and democratic country.

Question 4. According to media reports, the then-U.S. Ambassador to Mexico, Roberta Jacobson, was not invited to a meeting, which you reportedly attended, between senior White House adviser Jared Kushner and Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto in Mexico City on March 7, 2018. What role, if any, did you play in the decision not to include Ambassador Jacobson in this meeting? Do you believe it is important, as a matter of standard practice, to include U.S. Ambassadors in meetings with senior foreign government officials? If confirmed, do you commit to ensuring that U.S. Ambassadors in the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs are included in such meetings in the future?

Answer. The agenda and meetings were arranged by the National Security Council and the Government of Mexico. The National Security Council and the White House invited me to join in the trip of the Senior Advisor but did not consult me on the composition of the meetings. I have known Ambassador Jacobson for more than fifteen years and hold her in the highest regard and have regularly sought her counsel in my work. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring that U.S. Ambassadors are included in future such meetings.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIMBERLY BREIER BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. As we discussed at your nomination hearing, I am concerned about the future of democracy in Honduras, especially in light of the irregularities and violence surrounding the recent presidential election. During the hearing you stated that a report by the Organization of American States (OAS) did not call for a new presidential election in Honduras. The preliminary report of the Electoral Observation Mission in Honduras released to the public did not explicitly recommend a new election take place. However, on December 17th, 2017, the OAS General Secretariat declared in a statement that after reviewing the preliminary report, “the only possible way for the victor to be the people of Honduras is a new call for general elections.” Despite this recommendation by the OAS, days later the Department of State recognized the victory of incumbent President Juan Hernandez:

• Given the recommendation of the OAS General Secretariat, please explain in detail why the Department of State chose to congratulate and recognize President Hernandez for winning the disputed election and what factors it weighed in doing so when breaking with the OAS recommendation?

Answer. After close consultation with the Organization of American States (OAS) Election Observation Mission, the European Union (EU) Electoral Observation Mission, the EU Bilateral Mission, Mexico, Canada, and meeting with the Honduran Supreme Electoral Tribunal (TSE), the Department saw no evidence of specific and sufficient fraud that would change the outcome of the election or necessitate a new one. The Department of State recognized the election of President Hernandez on December 22, 2017, as declared by the TSE. I share your concerns regarding the electoral irregularities identified by the OAS and EU observation missions. Those irregularities and the close election results highlighted the need for a significant long-term effort to heal Honduras’s political divide and enact electoral reforms. I understand Honduras invited the United Nations to facilitate a national dialogue for reconciliation, and the United Nations is leading a series of meetings with the three leading political parties to identify parameters for a potential national dialogue. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue, the enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions and bolster Honduran democracy, and a significant role for civil society in the process.

Question 2. U.S. companies operating in Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador continue to report unjustified delays or denials of tax refunds to which they are lawfully entitled. According to the American Chamber of Commerce (AmCham) in Honduras, in 2017 the Government of Honduras owed more than $60 million in tax refunds to 49 local and U.S. companies. This includes seven U.S. companies that were owed at the time more than $34 million. The AmChams in El Salvador and Guatemala have similarly stated comparable amounts are owed to local and U.S. companies in their countries, and that requests for refunds are routinely met with delays or denials. While significant progress has been made in El Salvador, vigilance is required to ensure that all Northern Triangle governments establish and maintain refund policies and set examples that help formalize and stimulate local economies. Understanding that the Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle is designed to stimulate economic growth and strengthen trust in public institutions in the region, it is imperative that the Northern Triangle governments treat U.S. entities and affiliates operating in the region in a fair and transparent manner:

• If confirmed, how would you encourage the Northern Triangle governments to promote a culture of tax compliance among their citizens and businesses, and what steps would you take to ensure that these governments fulfill the legal and financial obligations necessary to foster an attractive investment environment and stimulate economic growth, including the timely refund of excess taxes paid by U.S. companies?

Answer. I agree that transparent, consistent, and predictable rule of law and processes that enforce legal and financial obligations, including tax collection and reimbursements, are important to attracting foreign direct investment and fostering economic growth. Credible tax collection requires taxing all companies, foreign and domestic, in a nondiscriminatory and transparent fashion. I understand our Embassies and officers at the State Department regularly meet with and advocate for the interests of U.S. companies who have invested in the Northern Triangle, including several who have concerns regarding tax reimbursements. If confirmed, I will continue this practice and will advocate for a transparent, predictable, and level playing field for U.S. companies doing business in El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIMBERLY BREIER BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. During your confirmation hearing, you stated that you believed that the Organization of American States had noted irregularities in the election of President Juan Orlando Hernández in Honduras, but not called for a new, legitimate election overseen by independent international observers. I would like to draw your attention to the OAS statement available here (http://www.oas.org/en/media-center/press-release.asp?sCodigo=E-092/17) where the OAS wrote, “For the aforementioned reasons, and given the impossibility of determining a winner, the only possible way for the victor to be the people of Honduras is a new call for general elections, within the framework of the strictest respect for the rule of law, with the guarantees of a TSE that enjoys the technical capacity and confidence of both the citizens and political parties.” With this information do you believe that the U.S. Government should also call for a prompt new election, overseen by independent, international observers, in order to ensure the democratic legitimacy of the Government of Honduras? If not, please explain.

Answer. The Department of State recognized the election of President Hernandez on December 22, 2017, as declared by the Honduran Supreme Electoral Tribunal (TSE). I share your concerns regarding the electoral irregularities identified by the Organization of American States (OAS). Those irregularities and the close election results highlighted the need for a significant long-term effort to heal Honduras’s political divide. I understand Honduras invited the United Nations to provide support to a national dialogue for reconciliation, and the United Nations is leading a series of meetings with the three leading political parties to identify parameters for a potential national dialogue. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue and the enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions.

Question 2. In March, I wrote a letter to the State Department to express my concerns regarding the reports of alleged human rights abuses by security forces in Honduras following November’s disputed presidential election and to urge that the State Department ensure that U.S.-trained police or military have not used U.S. training, equipment, or other assistance to oppress the Honduran people. I’m pleased that the State Department takes seriously these concerns, but I remain convinced that we could do more to promote human rights in Honduras. Are you committed to using all U.S. tools to encourage the Honduran Government to uphold human rights in Honduras? What will you do to ensure that U.S.-trained police and military personnel are not using U.S.-funded training, equipment or other assistance to violate the human rights of Honduran citizens?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will commit to upholding and promoting human rights in Honduras. I will push Honduran authorities to fully investigate any and all allegations of human rights abuses by security forces and prosecute those responsible. If confirmed, I will also continue to work with the Ministry of Human Rights to address the human rights challenges Honduras faces.

I understand the Department held a bilateral human rights working group with the Honduran Government in April to collaborate on improving the human rights situation in Honduras by addressing issues including strengthening governmental human rights institutions, working with international human rights partners and civil society, improving citizen security, combating corruption and impunity, and stemming outward migration. If confirmed, I will utilize mechanisms such as the bilateral human rights working group to urge the Honduran Government to uphold human rights and demonstrate a clear commitment to addressing corruption, consistent with its international commitments and legal obligations.

Question 3. The U.S. Congress has repeatedly called for the removal of the Honduran Armed Forces from domestic policing. President Hernández has repeatedly promised to do so, and established time lines for withdrawal. Yet the military remains today more present in domestic policing than ever, with escalating deadly effects. Moreover, a recent investigative story from BuzzFeed reports the Guardianes de la Patria (Guardians of the Fatherland) program is being used not only to indoctrinate young children into obedience to the military, but employing children in intelligence projects reporting on their neighbors. New units of the military police con-continue to be launched. Do you think the United States should continue to fund, train, and equip Honduran military who engage in domestic policing?

Answer. I understand that the Department does not provide foreign assistance funds to Honduran military engaged in domestic policing. The Honduran Government is aware of this policy. If confirmed, I will reinforce the Department’s long-standing position that policing is best done by civilian police who are properly trained and equipped, and I will continue to support Honduran efforts to reform its national police. U.S. foreign assistance is helping to develop a professional, accountable, and effective civilian police force that upholds the rule of law. I view this support as critical to the Honduran Government’s efforts to professionalize and reform its police force. If confirmed, I will support U.S. assistance to strengthen law enforcement in Honduras.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIMBERLY BREIER BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. Given the current desperate situations and unrest in many countries across Central America—Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador, and Guatemala—what would you do, as Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs, to address long-term regional instability challenges, and to raise these issues as a priority within the administration?

Answer. Regional instability in Central America adversely affects countries beyond the region’s borders. The civil unrest in Nicaragua, the violence in El Salvador, and the lack of government transparency in Honduras and Guatemala directly affect the security, safety, and prosperity of the United States and the citizens of the region. High levels of violence, lack of economic opportunity, weak institutions, corruption, and political instability in Central America allow transnational criminal organizations to operate and threaten the United States and create the conditions that drive illegal immigration from Central America.

If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s work under the U.S. Strategy for Central America to help the countries of Central America to address the security, governance, and economic drivers of illegal immigration and illicit trafficking through programs that enhance economic opportunity, reduce insecurity and violence, and fight impunity and corruption. U.S. assistance combats drug and human trafficking, smuggling of people and illicit goods, and transnational gangs and criminal organizations before they reach the United States.

Question 2. With regard to economic development programs as policies, how would you ensure that the rights of indigenous people, ethnic minorities, and other disenfranchised groups are upheld by the local governments?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Bureau of Western Hemisphere Affairs’ policy to promote social inclusion and advance economic growth in the region, including through bilateral action plans on racial and ethnic equality with Brazil and Colombia. If confirmed, I will commit to working with our interagency partners to ensure U.S. development programs help historically marginalized groups increase their access to and participation in the civic and economic opportunities within their countries, including through encouraging host countries to engage in prior consultation with communities affected by development projects, as appropriate.

Question 3. In light of the challenges noted above, do you support the decision by the Trump administration to rescind Temporary Protected Status for Central Americans and citizens of Haiti?

Answer. I understand the Department of Homeland Security has the authority, in accordance with Section 44 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, to provide Temporary Protected Status (TPS) to foreign nationals present in the United States who cannot return home in safety due to temporary and extraordinary conditions, and to terminate the TPS designation of such countries when the statutory criteria is no longer met. I further understand that the Department of State’s role in TPS decisions is advisory. The Department of Homeland Security made a determination to terminate the TPS designations for Nicaragua, Haiti, El Salvador, and Honduras in late 2017 and early 2018. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department and USAID continue working with governments in the region to strengthen their ability to reintegrate their returning nationals, including TPS returnees. I will also make certain the Department provides consular services to U.S. citizens, including U.S. citizen children of TPS beneficiaries.
Question 4. As Assistant Secretary of State, how would you assess the security situation in all of the countries to which former-TPS-protected individuals would have to return?

Answer. I am aware of the security challenges in Central America and Haiti and understand the U.S. Government conducts foreign assistance programs in the region to enhance citizen security, reduce violence, deter human smuggling and trafficking, professionalize police and military institutions, and improve the ability of governments in the region to address these issues on their own. If confirmed, I will continue to promote U.S. programs that disrupt transnational criminal organizations, promote citizen security, halt illegal immigration, and promote sustainable economic growth by addressing the underlying causes of insecurity, impunity, and lack of economic opportunity.

Question 5. Would you support an alternate to deporting people, such as a path to permanent resident status for those who have no criminal records?

Answer. The Department of State’s mission is to advance the interests of the American people by leading America’s foreign policy through diplomacy. I would defer to the Department of Homeland Security or other U.S. Government entities charged with oversight of immigration policy on questions of deportation or permanent resident status.

Question 6. As Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs, how will you hold governments accountable for failing to protect women, children, and other victims of domestic violence by failing to have laws and law enforcement infrastructure that would adequately prevent these crimes, protect the victims, and prosecute the offenders?

Answer. Domestic violence is a serious problem in Latin America and many times one of the least visible spheres of citizen insecurity afflicting many parts of Latin America. If confirmed, I would continue to advance the U.S. commitment to improving citizen security and ensure that strengthening and extending the rule of law continues to be a critical component of our diplomatic engagement and capacity building efforts across the region. I will use a full range of diplomatic engagement with host governments, civil society, the private sector, and the media to press for development and implementation of laws and policies to monitor, prevent, and respond to domestic violence. This will include continued support for programs to strengthen institutions and support partner governments’ efforts to develop appropriate legislation, harmonize laws, develop action plans for implementation, and bolster oversight of and advocacy for implementation of these laws.

Question 7. As Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs, how will you hold governments accountable for failing to protect victims of crime—especially organized crime syndicates—by failing to have laws and law enforcement infrastructure that would adequately prevent these crimes, protect the victims, and prosecute the offenders?

Answer. I will ensure that strengthening and extending the rule of law continues to be a critical component of our diplomatic engagement and capacity building efforts across the region. I will work to target our assistance programs and partner government actions to address the full range of factors contributing to the permissive environment that criminals exploit, ranging from strengthening community resilience to improving law enforcement capacity and enhancing judicial processes. I will also ensure that our capacity-building efforts continue to include strong measures of effectiveness that will assist us in evaluating partner government and program performance.

Question 8. Do you believe that the Honduran constitution permitted Juan Orlando Hernandez to be a candidate for re-election in November 2017?

Answer. I understand the Department recognized the victory of Juan Orlando Hernandez in the November 26 presidential elections, as declared by Honduran electoral authorities, in December 2017. It is up to the Honduran people to determine their political future through their democratic institutions and processes.

Question 9. Do you believe that the OAS report is a credible and objective assessment of the November 2017 Honduran election?

Answer. I understand that the Department shares the concerns regarding the electoral irregularities identified by the Organization of American States (OAS). I do not believe that the Department has seen any evidence of specific fraud that would change the outcome of the election or necessitate a new one. Those irregularities and the close election results highlighted the need for a significant long-term effort to heal Honduras’s political divide. I understand Honduras invited the United Nations and the OAS to provide support to a dialogue. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue and enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions.

Question 10. Will you, as Assistant Secretary of State for Western Hemisphere Affairs, work with the OAS to push for new elections in Honduras that adhere to the Honduran constitution and that are administered according to international standards to which Honduras has agreed to be bound (but failed to meet in November 2017)?

Answer. The Department of State recognized the election of President Hernandez on December 22, 2017, as declared by the Honduran Supreme Electoral Tribunal (TSE). I share your concerns regarding the electoral irregularities identified by the Organization of American States (OAS) and European Union (EU) observation missions. Those irregularities and the close election results highlight the need for a significant long-term effort to heal Honduras’s political divide and develop much-needed electoral reforms. I understand Honduras invited the United Nations to provide support to a national dialogue for reconciliation, and the United Nations is leading a series of meetings with representatives of the three leading candidates from the election to identify parameters for a potential national dialogue. If confirmed, I will advocate for a robust national dialogue and the enactment of significant electoral reforms to strengthen confidence in Honduran institutions.

Question 11. In the wake of the election there were protests that were met with deadly violence. Do you believe there should be an independent investigation into the Honduran security forces’ use of deadly force against protesters?

Answer. I remain deeply concerned by the deaths of civilians and security forces following the election. The Honduran Government must ensure security forces respect the rights of protestors. Honduran authorities must also investigate credible allegations of human rights abuses by security forces and hold accountable those responsible.

If confirmed, I will press the Honduran Government about the need to respect the rights of protestors and push for timely investigations into civilian deaths following the election. If confirmed, I will also urge the Honduran Government to apply lessons learned from these events, including by improving its use of force procedures, to prevent them from happening again.

Question 12. Honduran Minister of Security Julian Pacheco Tinoco was named in U.S. federal court last spring to have overseen drug trafficking flights while he was a general in the Honduran Armed Forces. The Associated Press also reported in January that National Director of Police José David Aguilar Moran and his senior national police deputies oversaw the movement of over a ton of cocaine in 2013, according to a confirmed internal investigation by the Honduran police. Separately, human rights observers note that Colonel German Alfaro, the Director of Military Intelligence, has been reported to have supervised Honduran military forces implicated in the killings of dozens of small-farmer activists in the Aguan Valley. None of them has been suspended or prosecuted, despite substantial evidence.

• If U.S. security assistance training or equipment is found to have been used against civilians protesting, would you support suspending security aid?
• Please confirm that the above-named individuals have been found ineligible to receive U.S. visas based on their roles supporting drug trafficking and/or human rights violations.

Answer. In accordance with U.S. law and Department policy, the State Department conducts Leahy vetting prior to furnishing assistance to foreign security force personnel and units. Pursuant to the Leahy law, the Department does not furnish assistance to any unit of the security forces of a foreign country if the Secretary of State has credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to uphold this meticulous vetting process.

In accordance with U.S. law, the United States does not publicly disclose visa information due to statutes governing U.S. visa confidentiality. To your broader point, if confirmed, I will work to cooperate with U.S. law enforcement to hold accountable individuals involved in drug trafficking, violent crimes, and human rights violations.

Question 13. As Assistant Secretary of State, how will you prioritize pressing Honduras to hold accountable senior security and other government figures who have abused their positions of responsibility to engage in criminal enterprises?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Honduran Government to demonstrate its commitment to accountability, transparency, and the fight against impunity in Honduras. This includes holding accountable individuals who have abused their official positions to engage in criminal enterprises. The Organization of American States’ Mission Against Corruption and Impunity in Honduras (MACCIH) and the Hon-
Public Ministry work together to strengthen the rule of law and dismantle corruption networks in Honduras. If confirmed, I will prioritize assistance and support to MACCIH and the Public Ministry and encourage the Honduran Government to empower MACCIH to carry out its mission to root out corruption.

I understand the Department also provides technical assistance and training to Honduran prosecutors, judges, and justice sector actors to support more effective, transparent, and accountable judicial institutions, combat corruption and impunity, promote accountability, uphold the rule of law, and increase access to justice. If confirmed, I will support these types of anti-corruption efforts in order to promote accountability and combat impunity in Honduras, including among government officials.

Question 14. Across Latin America, there are credible reports of transgender women being targeted for abuse, with far too few perpetrators held accountable. On International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia and Biphobia (IDAHOTB) Secretary Pompeo stated that the U.S. “opposes criminalization, violence and serious acts of discrimination” against LGBTI persons.” What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in the Western Hemisphere, to ensure they are not targeted for abuse or discrimination, and to ensure that crimes against them are adequately investigated and prosecuted?

Answer. As Secretary Pompeo affirmed in his statement on the International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia and Biphobia, “the United States stands with people around the world in affirming the dignity and equality of all people regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics. Human rights are universal, and LGBTI people are entitled to the same respect, freedoms, and protections as everyone else.” If confirmed, I will promote the inclusion of LGBTI persons and support the Department’s use of public and private actions to counter violence and discrimination against LGBTI persons. These include diplomatic outreach through bilateral and multilateral channels, offering emergency assistance to LGBTI persons and organizations at risk, and imposing visa restrictions and economic sanctions, as appropriate, against those who violate their human rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENNETH GEORGE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I believe my career, both in prior government service and in the private sector, by their very nature, have promoted human rights and democracy. I served as Assistant Secretary and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service in embassies and consulates in 65 countries and 120 foreign cities in their endeavors to improve economic opportunities, the growth of human rights, and the institutions promoting democracy. In addition to these responsibilities, I was tasked to lead the economic rebuilding, the reintroduction of democracy, and the strengthening of human rights on the island of Granada. After serving in the federal government, I served four years in the Texas Legislature and supported the most important actions in any democracy, open and free elections.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Uruguay? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Uruguay enjoys free and competitive elections, active political opposition, free press, civil society, and labor unions, and strong respect for human rights. Uruguay is a significant partner for strengthening the international human rights framework through international institutions. Uruguay has advocated for creating and defending international human rights norms and standards. According to the Department of State’s Human Rights Report, the most significant human rights issues included poor and potentially life-threatening conditions in some prisons, widespread use of extended pretrial detention, and violence against women and children. At times the country struggles to effectively implement human rights-related legislation due to resource shortages, a lack of specific procedures and protocols, and difficulties with interagency coordination.
Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Uruguay? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The United States and Uruguay share strong values on democracy and human rights, and promoting governance and human rights is one of our top priorities in Uruguay. If confirmed, I will seek to provide continued capacity building and support expert exchanges for the judicial branch, the Attorney General’s Office, the Ministry of Interior, and other key institutions. I will also continue efforts to engage with and strengthen civil society organizations. The Embassy will continue to draft, circulate, and promote the Department’s annual reports on human rights, trafficking in persons, child labor, and religious freedoms with public sector counterparts and civil society in order to raise awareness on these important issues. If confirmed, I will utilize the Department’s social and traditional media resources strategically to amplify our messaging on democracy and human rights.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. As a high-income country, Uruguay does not receive U.S. assistance funding. I understand that the United States works with Uruguay to promote democracy and human rights in international institutions. I also understand that the Embassy’s small grants program supports civil society projects to promote democracy and social justice. If confirmed, I would seek to continue these efforts.

Question 5. If confirmed, will you meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Uruguay? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes. I understand that as a practice, the U.S. embassy in Montevideo meets with non-governmental organizations, think tanks, international organizations, and human rights experts and defenders, and civil society leaders. Uruguay has a free civil society and, if confirmed, I look forward to continuing the embassy’s broad engagement with such groups and individuals, both in promoting regular dialogue and providing opportunities to strengthen the role of civil society in Uruguay through exchanges and capacity-building programs. To my knowledge, the State Department has no reports of Uruguay seeking to restrict or penalize non-governmental organizations or civil society via legal or regulatory measures.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Uruguay on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Uruguay?

Answer. Yes. Fortunately, I understand the Department does not have reports of efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory, or other measures in Uruguay. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with the press and advocating for freedom of the press.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Any foreign effort—whether external or through internal actors—to improperly influence Uruguay’s elections would be completely unacceptable. If confirmed, I will remain vigilant of foreign sponsored disinformation campaigns and of any attempt to spread disinformation in the region. One of the best defenses against disinformation is a free and transparent news media environment, which is why we engage with our partners and allies, including host government counterparts and civil society, around the globe to strengthen independent journalism. Healthy and robust public debates based on facts, evidence, and reason are integral to civic engagement. I believe a well-informed citizenry is key to the strength of democratic institutions.

Question 8. Will you, your staff and your embassy teams actively engage within Uruguay on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions? Will you and your embassy team engage political parties, and advocate for access and inclusivity for women and minorities?

Answer. Uruguay has strong and active trade unions, and the Government and constitution recognize the right for labor to organize. If confirmed, my team and I will actively support labor rights. Uruguay also enjoys open competition among po-political parties from across the ideological spectrum, including active political opposition parties. Uruguay recently approved an extension of its 2009 gender-quota law, which says that one of three candidates on an election list must be female. Uruguay will hold national elections in 2019, and I understand the U.S. embassy expects an open and competitive campaign. If confirmed, I will engage with leaders from across the political spectrum, including minority and opposition candidates, and will advocate for access and inclusivity for women and minorities.

Question 9. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Uruguay, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Uruguay? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in country Uruguay?

Answer. Uruguay is one of the most progressive countries in the hemisphere on Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Intersex (LGBTI) rights. Uruguayan law prohibits discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity. The Uruguayan Government hosted the 4th Global LGBTI Human Rights Conference in July 2016, the first such conference in the Americas. Uruguay co-founded the Equal Rights Coalition, an international forum to strengthen cooperation and share information in advancing LGBTI rights and inclusion. However, LGBTI individuals face societal discrimination and some acts of violence, particularly against transgender individuals. If confirmed, my staff and I will meet regularly and consult closely with representatives of the LGBTI community on how best to support its efforts to protect, defend, and advance human rights and fundamental freedoms for all—including by strengthening Uruguay’s ability to protect LGBTI individuals from violence and ensuring that perpetrators are brought to justice.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KENNETH GEORGE BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Despite its small size, Uruguay plays an active role in promoting stability and security in the Western Hemisphere and around the world. By most accounts, Uruguay is a strong proponent of democracy and human rights, the peaceful resolution of disputes, international law, and multilateralism, and it often seeks to advance those values by serving as a consensus builder and mediator in international institutions. Indeed, Uruguay has taken an interesting approach to the OAS’s attempts to resolve the crisis in Venezuela. The Vázquez administration has condemned the undemocratic actions of the Venezuelan Government but reportedly views U.S. and regional efforts to isolate Venezuela diplomatically as counterproductive to fostering a peaceful restoration of democracy.

• How would you engage the Vázquez administration on Venezuela?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage the Vázquez administration by focusing on the multilateral approach to Venezuela within the Organization of American States (OAS). I will also strongly urge Uruguay to join its neighbors in standing up to defend the shared values that unite our hemisphere at the OAS.

Additionally, if confirmed, I will also speak with Uruguayans about something they know all too well—a people’s loss of their democratic rights. From June 1973 until February 1985, an undemocratic regime curtailed democratic rights, violated human rights, tortured, and “disappeared” Uruguayan citizens. Thousands emigrated, many never to return. Uruguayans struggled to restore their institutions, but they created a strong democracy with independent institutions. I see in Venezuela’s present circumstances echoes of Uruguay’s past. If confirmed, I will urge Uruguayans to join us and their South American neighbors in helping Venezuelans recover their own institutions and their own political rights.

Question 2. Do Uruguay’s domestic achievements, including a strong democracy and rising living standards, provide any lessons for countries elsewhere in the region?

Answer. Uruguay has done a remarkable job of securing a high standard of living for its citizens. Uruguay ranks second in Latin America on the Human Development Index, and second on the Economic Freedom Index. Sixty percent of Uruguay’s population is middle class, the highest rate in the Americas. And Uruguay has done all this while maintaining—and even strengthening—its democratic institutions.

Uruguay has demonstrated the benefits of focusing on broad social inclusion, ensuring protections for the most vulnerable, and building upon strong social consensus. While different countries have different social and economic policies as befit their unique circumstances, the process of using strong democratic institutions to build social consensuses and negotiated agreements can serve as an example for other countries of the benefits of a democratic system.

Question 3. Uruguay has deepened its bilateral trade relationship with the United States significantly in the last decade, with the U.S. as its fourth largest trading partner. However, according to the U.S. commerce department China is Uruguay’s third largest trading partner.

- What should the United States be doing to remain competitive with Chinese trade interests in Uruguay?

Answer. China has engaged Uruguay on the trade, investment, security, and cultural/education fronts. In terms of trade and investment, if confirmed, I will highlight the value of doing business with U.S. companies, arrange more trade missions, and encourage bilateral investment opportunities. I would work to ensure the U.S. mission works with Uruguay to build our capacity to engage and facilitate commercial relationships. In the security area, if confirmed, I would underscore the shared democratic values inherent in our law enforcement and military relationships, focus on the quality of U.S. partnerships, services, and products, and coordinate assistance to Uruguay’s peacekeeping operations. In the education and cultural arena, I would promote U.S. programs that assist in maintaining English predominance in foreign-language instruction and promote the quality and accessibility of U.S. education opportunities, while underscoring our shared values of individual rights and social justice.

Question 4. What recommendations do you have to further implementation of the U.S.-Uruguay Trade and Investment Framework Agreement (TIFA)?

Answer. Continued engagement in the TIFA process facilitated progress in the U.S.-Uruguay bilateral trade relationship. Recent achievements include Uruguayan bone-in lamb exports to the United States, U.S. live cattle exports to Uruguay, and a bilateral social security totalization agreement. If confirmed, I would work with the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) to use the TIFA to address trade measures implemented or under consideration by the Government of Uruguay that are not in our interests.

Additionally, amidst tight budgets and in a reach for additional revenues, Uruguay began applying increased import taxes by raising a consular fee this year. If confirmed, I would focus on Uruguay’s regional trade example; though U.S.-Uruguay bilateral trade volumes may be relatively small ($1.7 billion in two-way trade in 2016), trade issues in Uruguay could set a precedent for its MERCOSUR partners.

Question 5. President Vázquez’s economic policies have contributed to strong economic growth in the country. The poverty rate fell from 39.9 percent in 2004 to 7.9 percent in 2017. Uruguay’s middle class now encompasses 60 percent of the population, making it the largest in Latin America in relative terms. However, some groups continue to face more challenging circumstances. Nearly 17 percent of Afro-Uruguayans remain below the poverty line. I think it is important for Uruguay to ensure that all groups within the country can reap the benefits of this impressive economic growth.

- If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Uruguay, how would you address this issue with the Government?

Answer. Uruguay shares with the United States a strong belief in the equal treatment of people without regard to their race, gender, sexual orientation, ethnicity, social origin, or religion. If confirmed, I will lead the U.S. Government’s efforts in Uruguay to strengthen our cooperation to promote social inclusion and equal opportunity for all, with a focus on economic growth for disadvantaged populations. Additionally, if confirmed, I will do my best to accurately describe the situation of Afro-Uruguayans and other marginalized groups in Uruguay through the annual human rights report and use it as a tool to advocate for the rights of vulnerable populations.

Question 6. Will you vow to promote policies that prioritize economic inclusion for all Uruguays?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed I will promote policies that prioritize economic inclusion for all Uruguays. As part of that effort, I will encourage my team to continue programs that encourage educational opportunity and economic growth for historically marginalized populations.
Question 7. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I believe my career, both in prior government service and in the private sector, have promoted human rights and democracy. I served as Assistant Secretary and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service in embassies and consulates in 65 countries and 120 foreign cities in their endeavors to improve economic opportunities, the growth of human rights, and the institutions promoting democracy. In addition to these responsibilities, I was tasked to lead the economic rebuilding, the reintroduction of democracy, and the strengthening of human rights on the island of Granada. After serving in the federal government, I served four years in the Texas Legislature and supported the most important actions in any democracy, open and free elections.

Question 8. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Uruguay? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Uruguay? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Uruguay enjoys a strong record on human rights, ranging from free and fair elections to respect for freedom of expression to laws against forced labor, child labor, and employment discrimination. The most significant human rights issues in Uruguay include poor and potentially life-threatening conditions in some prisons, widespread and unreasonably long trial delays resulting in extended pretrial detention, and violence against women and children. If confirmed, I will continue to support expert exchanges and training programs to help improve respect for human rights in Uruguayan prisons and facilitate the implementation of judicial reform. I am also concerned by the prevalence of violence against women and children and the challenges Uruguay faces related to trafficking in persons. If confirmed, I will continue to support expert exchanges and training programs to help improve respect for human rights in Uruguayan prisons and facilitate the implementation of judicial reform.

Question 9. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Uruguay in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The Government of Uruguay is strongly committed to democracy and human rights. Given our shared values in this area, the United States works closely with Uruguay in promoting human rights and democracy around the world, and if confirmed, I will make it a priority to continue to do so.

In spite of this, the United States has disagreed with Uruguay in one important area—the defense of democracy and human rights in Venezuela. I was disappointed that Uruguay abstained on the June OAS resolution supported by the vast majority of its South American neighbors. If confirmed, I will push Uruguay to play a stronger role in the Venezuela crisis by speaking out in defense of democracy and human rights.

Question 10. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Uruguay? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to sustaining engagement with a broad spectrum of Uruguayan society, including human rights activists, non-governmental organizations, civil society, the media, religious groups, and other organizations. I will continue the Embassy’s outreach to these groups, promoting regular dialogue and providing opportunities to strengthen the role of civil society in Uruguay through exchanges and capacity-building programs.

Vetting of potential recipients of U.S. security assistance is vital for maintaining the integrity of our assistance programs. Embassy Montevideo already has in place a robust and active Leahy vetting program. If confirmed, I will prioritize Leahy vetting and seek ways to further strengthen the program.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Uruguay to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Uruguay?

Answer. While there are no reports of political prisoners or detainees in Uruguay, if confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with the Government of Uruguay should such issues arise. If confirmed, I will seek to ensure that all relevant stakeholders are able to play a supportive and collaborative role.

Question 12. Will you engage with Uruguay on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with the Uruguayan authorities on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of our bilateral mission.

Question 13. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 14. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 15. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Uruguay?

Answer. No.

Question 16. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I am firmly committed to promoting, mentoring, and supporting a diverse staff. In my previous government service as Assistant Secretary and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service, I led a large staff with important work in 65 countries and 120 foreign cities. Much of our work promoted a culture that highlighted diversity and inclusion within and without.

As founder, Chairman of the Board and CEO of the nation’s second largest ESOP, with 15,000 employee-owners scattered across 35 states, I feel qualified to manage and support staff from diverse backgrounds. My company’s logo was the inverted pyramid. It spoke to the culture of the company that valued and empowered the employee-owners in unique and meaningful ways. The inverted pyramid was our visual demonstration that the senior leadership’s role was to support those across all ranks of the company. This made it the company it became. Having 15,000 employee-owners in a myriad of positions in the health care industry was a natural source of diversity that was celebrated. The very nature of my company’s vision spoke to inclusion.

Question 17. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage both the State Department’s personnel managers and the other Agencies represented at Post to send personnel with a diversity of backgrounds, ethnicities and orientations to our posts in Uruguay, particularly with respect to the Embassy’s section heads, the senior-most officers reporting to me. Additionally, I believe that stressing and demonstrating the importance of providing an inclusive work environment, honoring all participants, and holding supervisors responsible is the best way to ensure an environment that is both diverse and inclusive.
NOMINATIONS

THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 2018

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:05 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker [presiding], Risch, Rubio, Flake, Gardner, Young, Isakson, Portman, Menendez, Cardin, Shaheen, Coons, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

And we thank our nominees for being here and for their willingness to serve our country.

We especially thank our distinguished Senators who are here to introduced them: Senator Nelson, Senator Hirono. As a courtesy to you, we will not go through you having to listen to the unbelievable opening comments that both Menendez and I are going to offer in just a moment, and instead let you go directly to yours so that you can go to other meetings. So why do you not all go ahead and make your introductions? We thank you for coming in here to be with us today. We thank both of you for your service, and we look forward to your comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. BILL NELSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM FLORIDA

Senator NELSON. Well, Mr. Chairman, Senator Hirono and I would be delighted to hear the eloquence of the chairman and the ranking member, but the fact that you would allow us to go ahead—it is a personal reason that we are here because we know the nominee. And we consider the Admiral a distinguished Floridian. What we in our native lingo say that he is a Florida boy having gone to junior high and high school in Pensacola.

I want to thank him for his willingness. And as you know, he was first nominated to be the Ambassador to Australia. And I think the fact that the administration decided this critically important post in South Korea—I think that indicates not only the confidence that people have in the four-star admiral, but it is also him being willing to answer the call of service wherever he is required.
And he first answered that call as a young man 40 years ago, the Naval Academy. He comes from a long line of great naval aviators. And over the course of his military career, he reached the height of his profession. His dad, Navy chief petty officer. And his record speaks for itself.

This is a nomination that is fitting and timely, and as we undertake now the diplomacy with North Korea, obviously the necessity is having the most prepared and skilled Ambassador to represent the United States in that part of the world. Like the other combatant commanders, he is not just what you think of as a combatant commander because every one of them are skilled diplomats. They are warriors, but they are also diplomats. He helped to grow the partnerships with the military and the political leaders throughout the Pacific region, and like any good military leader, he knows just how important diplomacy is. He is going to make a great Ambassador just like he made a great commander.

It is not every day that two Senators, neither from the President’s party, commend the nominee of the President. But this is a nominee that I look at—he is not partisan. He is not bipartisan. He is nonpartisan. And that is exactly what we need. It is telling that the nominee enjoys such broad bipartisan support. And I hope that this committee will move his nomination quickly. It is obvious that we need our Ambassador in that position.

And I want to thank the Admiral and his family—and my wife has gotten to know his wife—for their courtesies extended to us. And we want to thank both of you for your continued public service after 40 years. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir. Thank you very much.

Senator Hirono?

STATEMENT OF HON. MAZIE HIRONO,
U.S. SENATOR FROM HAWAII

Senator Hirono. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your courtesy, and Ranking Member Menendez and all the distinguished members of this committee.

This week was a significant moment for our engagement in the Korean Peninsula. For the first time, a sitting United States President met with the leader of North Korea. At the Singapore summit, President Trump and Kim Jong-un committed to continue negotiations and reaffirm promises that North Korea has made in the past.

However, we also heard the President question the long-term commitment of our troop presence in South Korea and accept the North Korean rationale on ending joint military exercises that have increased regional safety and cooperation.

We all share the goal of a permanent, verifiable, denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula, but the hard work lies ahead. Many obstacles remain between Tuesday’s handshake and a comprehensive, verifiable agreement between our two countries. Reaching an agreement will require months or even years of hard negotiations and considerable consultation with our regional allies, particularly South Korea and Japan.

Our next Ambassador to South Korea can play a role in these negotiations. These efforts will require an individual with experience in the region, an understanding of our military forces serving on the Korean Peninsula, and the diplomatic skills and temperament necessary to negotiate with a regime that has repeatedly failed to live up to its commitments.

I believe Admiral Harry Harris fits this bill, and I am honored to join Senator Nelson in introducing Admiral Harris to this commmittee to serve as our next Ambassador to South Korea.

After graduating from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1978, Admiral Harris served as a decorated naval flight officer. He went on to hold a variety of leadership roles throughout the Navy, including as the Secretary of State's military attache during the Obama administration.

I first met Admiral Harris just before he assumed command of the U.S. Pacific fleet in October 2013. Over the past 5 years, I have gotten to know Admiral Harris and appreciate the open, supportive, and candid relationship that we have developed. He and his wife, Bruni Bradley, have become part of our Hawaii Ohana.

Upon assuming command of the U.S. Pacific Command in 2015, Admiral Harris dedicated significant time and effort to strengthening America's regional alliances and partnerships. During visits to 22 of the 36 countries in the Indo-Pacific region, Admiral Harris met with civilian and military leaders and frequently attended joint exercises with our defense allies and partners. His work to improve military-to-military relationships often led to stronger government-to-government relationships throughout the Indo-Pacific region. In his time as Pacific fleet commander and PACOM commander, Admiral Harris developed close relationships with South Korean leaders, including current President Moon Jae-in. In 2014, he received Korea's Tong-il medal, the country's highest national security merit citation, in recognition of his work with the Republic of Korea armed forces. Admiral Harris also worked closely with our congressional delegation and other Members of Congress.

When my colleagues in the House and Senate visited Hawaii and requested a PACOM briefing, I made it a point to also attend. Admiral Harris' briefings were always thorough, often eye-opening, and left attendees with a deeper appreciation for PACOM and our country's vital interests in the Indo-Pacific region.

Many know Admiral Harris as a tough leader, with high expectations for the men and women under his command, but I also know him as a down-to-earth, empathetic person. Let me tell you a story.

The “Washington Post” recently highlighted one example of Admiral Harris’ dedication to others as part of a profile on Colonel Bruce Hollywood. Bruce was born in Japan to a Japanese mother and an American father, but Bruce’s father left his birth mother in Japan, and she put Bruce up for adoption, thinking that that would be best for Bruce under the circumstances. He was adopted by an American couple, raised in Texas, and went on to serve as an Air Force colonel.

After he nearly died of a heart attack in 2005, Bruce set off to find his birth mother and thank her for giving him the chance to have what he called a wonderful life. Bruce contacted the Japanese embassy in the United States, the U.S. embassy in Tokyo, and even hired a private detective, all to no avail. He had given up his search for his mother when by chance he met then Rear Admiral Harris at an airport and shared his story. When Admiral Harris told Bruce that he would help him find his birth mother, Bruce was very skeptical, but Admiral Harris was adamant. So Bruce gave him the information he had pieced together. And 10 days later, Bruce received a call while at work at the Pentagon. The Japanese embassy was on the phone with news that they had found, at long last, his birth mother, Nobue Ouchi. Thanks to Admiral Harris’ assistance, Bruce reunited with his mother, and they were in contact for 3 years before she passed away in 2009.

So in Admiral Harris, we have someone who is tough-minded and clear-eyed with tremendous military experience and someone who is very resourceful and focused on the task at hand.

Admiral Harris’ expertise in the Indo-Pacific region, his leadership experience and engagement with a variety of stakeholders in the region will stand him in good stead as our Ambassador to South Korea.

Last month at the Pacific Command change of command ceremony, Chief of Naval Operations Admiral John Richardson described Admiral Harris as a warrior diplomat with an insatiable spirit of adventure and an infectious can-do attitude. Secretary of Defense Jim Mattis, who said earlier this year that diplomacy must be our first approach to deescalating tensions on the Korean Peninsula, praised Admiral Harris’ experience and expressed his confidence in Admiral Harris in his new role at the same change of command ceremony.

I join Secretary Mattis and so many others in expressing my confidence that Admiral Harris will serve our country well as our next Ambassador to South Korea. And I thank this committee for its consideration. Mahalo.
bating terrorism, working to resolve the wars in Syria and Yemen, and reinforcing our regional alliances requires continuous and focused engagement, which is why I am pleased that the administration has nominated David Schenker to be the next Assistant Secretary of State for Near East Affairs.

Next, we have Ambassador Tibor Nagy to serve as Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. The United States has important interests in developing and maintaining strong partnerships with African countries, and we remain committed to supporting those that choose inclusive and responsible governance. The Africa Bureau must address an extremely large range of diplomatic challenges across the continent with resources and talent appropriate to our growing expectations of relationships we have there.

Finally, we have Mr. Harry Harris. I feel like I know more about you than I even want to know—[Laughter.]

The Chairman:—who just recently retired with the rank of Admiral after completing a highly distinguished career in the United States Navy, to serve as the Ambassador to the Republic of Korea. The U.S.-Republic of Korea alliance is an important relationship for maintaining peace and stability in the Indo-Pacific. During this critical moment on the Korean Peninsula, we require an Ambassador in Seoul that will speak frankly about the importance of alliance cohesion, including maintaining the administration’s maximum pressure strategy while pursuing negotiations to eliminate North Korea’s nuclear weapons.

I am glad the President and Kim Jong-un were able to have a meeting this week in Singapore, but I look forward to having Secretary Pompeo before our committee soon to share his insights about what of a concrete nature has occurred, including the future of security cooperation with Japan and South Korea.

We need an ambassador who appreciates that the U.S.-South Korea partnership runs deep, including cooperation across a range of political, economic, and cultural issues. I am confident that Mr. Harris recognizes the value of the relationship between Washington and Seoul and will effectively advocate for strengthening our relationship with this critical ally.

Our thanks to all of you being here before the committee.

Before I turn to Senator Menendez, we have two votes beginning at 10:30. We plan to move through. We are just going to continue on. If you could kind of time out when you leave, knowing when you are going to be coming up, that would be great so we can continue and not have a vacuum here.

With that, I will turn to our distinguished ranking member and my friend, Bob Menendez.

STATMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for holding this hearing today. We have a panel before us of high-level nominees, and I appreciate and congratulate you and your families on the nominations.

I am a bit dismayed that these nomination hearings have become one of the few opportunities the committee has to really engage on what the administration’s policies are, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, we can have more hearings on more topics with administration witnesses so the committee can exercise its oversight role.

Collectively, these nominees will be taking on some of the most pressing national security challenges at a time when good will towards our country is on a steep decline, where the administration's budget proposals are slashing non-military resources, and the crumbs of U.S. credibility were left somewhere between the summits in Canada and Singapore.

But I want to welcome all the nominees. You have demonstrable records of service, expertise, and experience in your chosen fields. Admiral Harris, I almost think you should skip your opening statement because after that, I would rest my case. But I am sure that you will want to make it anyhow.

You know that you have accepted this nomination at a time when our allies and adversaries are seriously questioning U.S. commitment to Asia and at a time when, perhaps as never before, adept and agile diplomacy is needed on the Korean Peninsula. Like you, I am fully of the view that it is imperative that we improve our engagement across the region, especially with allies like the Republic of Korea politically, economically, and strategically. I think the President blindsided everyone, including South Korea, when he carelessly conceded to Kim Jong-un this week something North Korea has long wanted, the cessation of U.S.-South Korean joint military exercises, in exchange for—well, apparently nothing. So I am interested in your thoughts about how we strengthen the U.S.-Korean alliance moving forward.

From your time as our Pacific commander, you are well aware of the extent of our challenge with North Korea. So we thank you for your service.

As we consider the outcomes of the Trump-Kim meeting, any strategy to constrain North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missile programs must start with our allies and partners and lead to the complete, verifiable, and irreversible dismantlement of North Korea's nuclear and ballistic missile programs.

Mr. Schenker, in the Middle East, the Trump administration's strategy for the U.S. role in the region is something that I am still trying to deduce. If confirmed as the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs, you will have the responsibility not only to craft but to execute policy here in Washington, but also to drive diplomatic implementation in cooperation with our partners and allies.

When it comes to Iran, I share the long sought goal of stopping all of Iran's nuclear and non-nuclear threats. But I worry that the President's unilateral actions have degraded the very partnerships we need to maintain unity of effort in countering the Iranian regime's malign activities.

Regarding Israel, I share the goal of ensuring that Israel has the resources and support she needs to defend herself. But I worry that the President's desire to withdraw U.S. forces from Syria while freezing our stabilization assistance programs and closing doors to refugees are tactics without strategy and that, taken together, amount to an abdication of U.S. leadership. Over the past year, Bashar al Assad facilitated the activities of violent extremists next door to Israel. Iran is moving its proxies ever closer to Israel's borders. Lebanese Hezbollah is preparing for the next war, and Russia has demonstrated neither the resolve nor the capability to curb Iran’s actions in Syria.

I hope you share Secretary Pompeo's commitment as expressed at his nomination hearing to sustain programs that address conditions that give rise to transnational terrorist groups, including poor governance, lack of economic opportunity, corruption, and persistent human rights abuses.

Finally, I am pleased that the nominee to be the Assistant Secretary for the Africa Bureau has an impressive record of service to this country. For decades, both Republican and Democratic Presidents with the help of lawmakers on Capitol Hill have undertaken an impressive set of initiatives over the years, including the African Growth and Opportunity Act, PEPFAR, MCC compacts, and Power Africa. The administration has given us little encouragement on continued cooperation. The President’s unseemly comments about Africa and the steep budget cuts to the 150 account send an alarming signal, and while the administration's national security strategy makes lots of promises about its engagement with Africa, the budget requested would in no way facilitate that strategy or secure our interests in countering ISIS or Al Qaeda affiliates. Perhaps most troubling, the administration does not appear to have a whole-of-government approach towards Africa which places emphasis on all of the three D’s: defense, diplomacy, and development.

Take Niger. Niger is facing increasing security threats on three fronts. It also ranked 187 out of 188 on the most recent human development index. The U.S. military has over 800 soldiers deployed to Niger as part of our effort to help that government fight terrorism, four of whom were tragically killed. We are building an airfield in Agadez. However, we do not have a USAID mission in the country that could help support sustainable governance and economic growth.

I have written the administration about the need for a strategy for Mali. I have sounded the alarm about increasing violence in the Central African Republic and raised questions with Secretary Pompeo about our strategy for South Sudan, Sudan, and the Horn of Africa. We have yet to receive a satisfactory response.

So, Ambassador Nagy, I certainly hope that you and I will have an opportunity to talk soon and look forward to hearing about your priorities, your plans, and your intentions, if confirmed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

And as it relates to having witnesses in, I know I said so in my opening comments, but we are pushing to have Secretary Pompeo in so we can fully understand what actually happened in Singapore. And as you know, we have not had a lot of officials to have testify, and this meeting is, hopefully, going to help fill some of the slots. But I thank you for your comments and agree that we need to have officials in here helping us.

If you all would just move in order, starting with Admiral Harris, I would appreciate it. If you could keep your comments to about 5 minutes, we appreciate it. If you want to introduce your outstanding families who are here, please feel free to do so. It usually temper folks on this side of the dais. And if you could keep your comments to 5 minutes. If you have any written documents, we are glad to accept them here also. Admiral?

STATEMENT OF HARRY B. HARRIS, JR., OF FLORIDA, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

Mr. HARRIS. Thanks, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Menendez and distinguished members of the committee. I am honored to be with you today on Flag Day, I might add, as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea. I am humbled the President has entrusted me with this opportunity to work with the White House and our dedicated officers at the State Department and the 15 other departments and agencies that make up Mission Korea to lead our engagement with such an important ally.

Few nominees are fortunate enough to testify before their own Senators, and I am privileged to be here before you, Chairman Corker from Tennessee and Senator Rubio of Florida. I am also grateful that Senators Nelson and Hirono took the time to formally introduce me.

Knowing I have not journeyed here alone, let me take a moment to express my love and gratitude to my wife, Bruni Bradley, behind me, herself a 25-year Navy veteran.

A personal thanks as well to the many former ambassadors who have helped me these past few months, nominees of both parties.

To the men and women of the U.S. Indo-Pacific Command, it has been a privilege and joy to have served with you these past 3 years.

And finally, I am honored to be on this panel with such luminaries as David Schenker and Tibor Nagy. I hope you will ask them the hard questions and save the softballs for me. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. President Trump and his administration have made clear that our alliance with Korea is one of our top priorities. The President hosted President Moon just last June and again last month. The President also visited Korea last November in the first state visit by a U.S. President in 25 years. Following this, there have been a number of other senior-level visits, underscoring the strength and importance of our bilateral relationship. In fact, Secretary Pompeo is in Seoul today meeting with President Moon.

Mission Korea is staffed by almost 600 dedicated men and women, all working hard to advance U.S. interests in Korea and throughout the Indo-Pacific. If confirmed, I am excited to serve with this team. Importantly, the alliance and the larger partnership it undergirds enjoy strong bipartisan support. This committee and your staffs play an active and vital role in guiding this relationship, and I would like to underscore my deep appreciation for the leadership and engagement that go into maintaining our strong bond with South Korea.

I have experienced this relationship firsthand through my experiences with Korea across an almost 40-year career in uniform, including as a former Indo-Pacific Command commander overseeing the military side of the U.S.-Korea alliance. These personal connections began even before I was born, as my father was a sailor who fought in World War II and the Korean War and helped teach Korean sailors at Chinhae. His stories propelled me to a career in the Navy. Bruni’s personal connections started during her first tour of duty when we accompanied her boss to Seoul on several occasions. These experiences afforded us lasting friendships and a deep appreciation of Korean culture and history, with their profound linkages to the United States.

Everywhere I traveled, whether on ships, in jungles, or the embassies, I saw firsthand the dedication and hard work of men and women committed to making our nation and our world a better place. Along the way, I was reminded again and again of the tremendous diversity of our great country. If confirmed, I will carry with me those many voices of America, along with an abiding commitment to strengthen the shared values that lie at the heart of our relationship with the Republic of Korea.

I am acutely aware that our relationship with Korea is not one dimensional. Economically, Korea is our sixth largest trading partner and the fifth largest market for U.S. agricultural goods. Korean foreign direct investment is already the second largest Asian source of investment in the United States. As a fellow champion of the rule of law and market principles, Korea has shown its willingness to work with the U.S. to ensure free, fair, and reciprocal trade. Last year, our countries enjoyed a $154 billion trading relationship, including goods and services.

The U.S. and Korea also share deep people-to-people ties. And as good as our economic relationship is, we can do even better. If confirmed, I will support U.S. efforts to tap additional export opportunities and what I see as nascent opportunities in the energy, medical technology, and information sectors. I would support enhanced access for U.S. firms in the Korean market and more Korean direct investment into the U.S. Finally, if confirmed, I will strive to further deepen our cultural exchanges, scientific collaboration, and cooperation on global issues.

Ladies and gentlemen, I fully appreciate that I will have to come up to speed quickly. As is obvious to all of you, I have spent my life in uniform and that is where my expertise lies. But I promise I will work hard to learn the language and skill sets of diplomacy. I will even forswear acronyms. I have a lot to learn indeed, but I do understand the importance of diplomacy as an instrument of national power. As Chief of Mission of a large embassy with hundreds of U.S. Government employees, I pledge to this committee to do my utmost to keep them safe as they carry out their official duties and similarly commit to keeping the American community in South Korea informed of anything that could affect their safety and security. I testified last March to your colleagues on the Armed Services committee that a fully resourced State Department is as important as a fully resourced Defense Department. Robust diplomacy increases our chances of solving problems peacefully.

In sum, drawing on the strength of the entire U.S. Government, I would, if confirmed as Ambassador, endeavor to deepen our partnership and alliance with the Republic of Korea. I am honored to be considered for this critical post and grateful for the opportunity to continue serving our great nation.
And I look forward to your questions. [Mr. Harris's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HARRY B. HARRIS, JR.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, distinguished members of the committee, I'm honored to be with you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea. I'm humbled the President has entrusted me with this opportunity to work with the White House and our dedicated officers at the State Department and the 15 other departments and agencies that make up Mission Korea to lead our engagement with such an important ally. Along the way, I was reminded again and again of the tremendous diversity of our great country. If confirmed, I'll carry with me these many voices of America, along with an abiding commitment to strengthen the shared values that lie at the heart of our relationship with the Republic of Korea.

I'm acutely aware that our relationship with Korea is not one-dimensional. Economically, Korea is our sixth-largest trading partner and the fifth-largest market for U.S. agricultural goods. Korean foreign direct investment is already the second largest Asian source of investment into the United States. As a fellow champion of the rule of law and market principles, Korea has shown its willingness to work with the United States to ensure free, fair, and reciprocal trade. Last year, our countries enjoyed a $153.7 billion trading relationship, including goods and services.

The United States and Korea also share deep people-to-people ties. Almost 200,000 American citizens live, work, or are visiting in Korea at any given time. About 1.7 million people of Korean descent reside in the United States. Academic exchanges are an important part of our relationship with Korea, including the long-standing bi-national Fulbright program.

As good as our economic relationship is, we can do even better. If confirmed, I'll support U.S. efforts to tap additional export opportunities and what I see as nascent opportunities in the energy, medical technology, and information sectors. I would support enhanced access for U.S. firms in the Korean market, and more Korean direct investment into the United States. Finally, if confirmed, I’ll strive to further deepen our cultural exchanges, scientific collaboration, and cooperation on global issues.

Ladies and gentlemen, the U.S.-Republic of Korea alliance has served as a pillar of peace and stability in the Indo-Pacific and the world for 65 years, cooperating closely on a wide range of global priorities. Our relationship is anchored by a shared commitment to democratic values and the rule of law. America could not ask for a better friend, partner, and ally than Korea.

I fully appreciate I will have to come up to speed quickly. As is obvious to all of you, I’ve spent my life in uniform and that’s where my expertise lies. But I promise I’ll work hard to learn the language and skill sets of diplomacy. I’ll even forswear acronyms. I have a lot to learn, indeed, but I do understand the importance of diplomacy as an instrument of national power. As Chief of Mission of a large Embassy with hundreds of U.S. Government employees, I pledge to this committee to do my utmost to keep them safe as they carry out their official duties, and similarly commit to keeping the American community in South Korea informed of anything that could affect their safety and security. I testified last March to your colleagues on the Armed Services committee that a fully resourced State Department is as important as a fully resourced Defense Department. Robust diplomacy increases our chances of solving problems peacefully. I’ll also draw heavily on my experiences a few years ago when I was assigned as the Assistant to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, where I accompanied the Secretary of State abroad. In two years, I travelled to over 80 countries and saw up-close the business of diplomacy and the hard, often dangerous, work of our diplomats abroad.

In sum, drawing on the strength of the entire U.S. Government, I would, if confirmed as Ambassador, endeavor to deepen our partnership and alliance with the Republic of Korea. I’m honored to be considered for this critical post and grateful for the opportunity to continue serving our great Nation. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you very much. We will see whether you are able to forswear what you said.

But go ahead, Mr. Nagy.

STATEMENT OF HON. TIBOR PETER NAGY, JR., OF TEXAS, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, AFRICAN AFFAIRS

Ambassador Nagy: Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you as President Trump’s nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. I am grateful to the President and Secretary of State for their confidence in me. If confirmed, I very much look forward to working with Congress, especially this committee, to promote America’s interests in Africa.

My nearly half-century professional and personal association with Africa began in 1979 when I was assigned as a first tour officer to Lusaka, Zambia, a city I had never heard of, on a continent I knew little about, to the most junior positions at a U.S. embassy. That posting gave me a tremendous appreciation for Africa and its people, and I went on to complete eight tours in Africa, including two as U.S. Ambassador and three as Deputy Chief of Mission, in some of the most challenging environments possible.

After retiring in 2003, I joined academia and continued Africa-related work by teaching about it, writing about it, and making multiple trips to the continent to promote ties between U.S. and African universities.

In 2016, I was briefly called back to take charge of the U.S. embassy in Nigeria, and that experience reawakened my intense desire to again help promote U.S. interests on the continent.

Since the last time I appeared before this committee nearly 20 years ago, Africa has changed dramatically, mostly for the better.
Data points indicate improvements in overall levels of development, education especially for girls, health, governance, and economic wellbeing. These improvements have been matched by dramatic declines in poverty, HIV infections, corruption, and instability. Credit goes to the generosity of the American people and U.S. policies for much of that progress, including bipartisan programs such as AGOA and PEPFAR, which continue to significantly help Africa.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, some of Africa’s problems remain unchanged or have worsened. Terrorism and violent extremism have increased in scope and intensity. Some African leaders are perpetuating their rule through constitutional manipulation and increased repression. The most tragic case is South Sudan, born in ebullience in 2011 but since descended into ethnic warfare due to its uncaring leaders. And there is China, adversary, competitor, partner, or all three? One certainty is that the U.S. will have to address China’s activities in Africa, especially since that country is offering itself as a more Africa-appropriate model for government and development.

Africa is at a historic crossroads, and the direction it takes will impact its future and the security and wellbeing of the rest of the world. Projections are that by 2050 Africa’s population will double to 2.5 billion people with 70 percent under 30. Nigeria alone will surpass the U.S. with 350 million people, and most of this growth will take place in Nigeria’s north, its most impoverished region. Yet young Africans will have similar life ambitions to young people everywhere. If their dreams are frustrated by conflict, misrule, or lack of opportunities, the results will be catastrophic. If, on the other hand, they encounter positive prospects and good governance, Africa’s youth will be a dynamic force for global progress and prosperity.

Mr. Chairman, the U.S. is well placed to benefit from the second scenario. A well-governed, stable Africa, providing opportunities to its people and welcoming U.S. businesses as partners in development, is achievable. I saw this firsthand when I met in Abuja with some returning participants in the Young African Leaders Initiative, and I worked with another group last summer at Texas Tech University. They were some of the brightest and most impressive young people I have met anywhere and very favorably disposed towards our country and our principles. They are the future of Africa, not the corrupt dinosaurs who want to stay presidents for life immaterial of the harm they cause their own people. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the committee to promote the types of U.S. policies which can help bring that about.

And it is my pleasure and honor to introduce my dear wife of 47 years and my partner in diplomacy, Jane Nagy, sitting right behind me.

[Ambassador Nagy’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF Tibor P. Nagy Jr.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, I’m honored to appear before you as President Trump’s nominee to be Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. I am grateful to the President and Secretary of State for their confidence in me. If confirmed, I very much look forward to working with Congress, and especially this committee, to promote America’s interests in Africa.
This nomination is especially meaningful to me since I started life in America as a political refugee, having slipped out of Communist Hungary with my father just steps ahead of the secret police who were going to arrest and execute him for having fought against the Soviets during our brief 1956 revolution. America not only generously opened its doors to us, but also provided us the same opportunities available to native born citizens. He went on to serve the U.S. many years overseas in international development, while I had an opportunity to become a U.S. diplomat and represent my new country abroad. When I met diplomatic colleagues from other nations, especially after I became a U.S. Ambassador, they were often stupefied that America would allow non-native born citizens to achieve the rank of Ambassador—in their countries that could never happen. I always assured them that when someone becomes an “American” through naturalization, their citizenship is just as real as being born here. America has blessed my family in so many ways—I am beyond grateful that I can serve her in return.

My nearly half-century professional and personal association with Africa began in 1979 when I was assigned as a first tour officer to Lusaka, Zambia—a city I had never heard of, on a Continent I knew little about—to the most junior of positions at a U.S. Embassy. The CHAIRMAN. Thank you for being with us, and thank you for that testimony.

Mr. Schenker?
STATEMENT OF DAVID SCHENKER, OF NEW JERSEY, TO BE AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, NEAR EASTERN AFFAIRS

Mr. SCHENKER. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the Senate Foreign Relations committee, it is an honor to appear before you this morning as the nominee to become Assistant Secretary of State for Near East Affairs.

I greatly appreciate the members of the committee making time in recent weeks to meet with me and exchange views. If confirmed, it would be my intention to engage in consultation with Congress routinely.

I would like to thank the President of the United States and Secretary of State Pompeo for my nomination. If confirmed, it would be an honor to serve our country at the Department of State.

I am grateful some of my family members can join me this morning. My seemingly angelic children, Ethan and Dylan Schenker, are here. So are my mother and stepfather, Linda and Abraham Davis, and my aunt and uncle, Jane and Ken Friedland. My father and stepmother, Michael and Judy Schenker, could not be here today but are no doubt watching on the Web.

Let me also take this opportunity to thank my former bosses, mentors, and colleagues, without whose support I would not be here today.

The portfolio of the Assistant Secretary of State for Near East Affairs is expansive. I have, in a sense, been preparing for this job for the past 3 decades. My academic background and the entirety of my professional career has been focused on the Middle East. I have spent 4 years living in the region. In the early 1990s, I worked for a USAID contractor on projects in Egypt and Jordan. For the better part of 2 decades, I have researched and written about the region as a fellow at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, a leading nonpartisan think tank. And from 2002 to 2006, I served as Levant director in the Office of the Secretary of Defense, advising senior policymakers at the Pentagon on Jordanian, Syrian, Lebanese, Israeli, and Palestinian affairs.

Over these decades, I have had the privilege of knowing and working with many of the outstanding diplomats who have served with such distinction as Assistant Secretary of Near East Affairs. I worked with current acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield during the Bush administration. I traveled to Syria in 2004 with then Assistant Secretary William Burns. I know former Assistant Secretary Anne Patterson. This is an illustrious and impressive cohort of diplomats who handled an incredibly difficult job with commitment and dedication. If confirmed, I would be humbled to be counted among this group.

The responsibilities of the Assistant Secretary of State for Near East Affairs stretch from Morocco to Iran to Yemen. It is an AOR that faces enormous challenges, including failed states, horrific terrorism, acute humanitarian crises, and continued efforts by the regime in Tehran to destabilize the region. Given our critical alliances, the region's natural resources, its vital sea lanes, and the enormous potential of its population, it is also a region of great strategic import to the United States.

At the front line confronting these challenges and taking advantage of the opportunities are the highly professional men and women of the U.S. Department of State’s Near East Bureau. These Foreign Service officers and civil servants are dedicated and courageous. They make great sacrifices for our country. Over the past 2 decades as a scholar at the Washington Institute and as a policy official serving in the Department of Defense, I have worked closely with NEA and have great respect for both the professionalism and expertise of these career professionals. They work alongside their impressive colleagues in the U.S. military and from other departments, whom I hold in the highest esteem and with whom I would seek to coordinate as closely as possible.

If confirmed, it would be a great privilege to serve alongside these American patriots helping to advance and secure U.S. interests in the Middle East. There is a real need to strengthen alliances with our traditional partners, to defeat ISIS and other terrorist organizations, to confront and roll back destabilizing and pernicious Iranian behavior, and to work to build a more peaceful and secure region.

The U.S. faces a series of complex strategic challenges in the Middle East, which require the application of all tools of American power to mitigate and now, more than ever, especially diplomacy. As we know all too well, what happens in the Middle East does not stay in the Middle East. Washington’s regional alliances are a force multiplier in safeguarding U.S. interests at home and abroad. They need to be nurtured through diplomatic engagement.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with this committee and with the Congress as a whole to address these and other national security challenges facing our country.

I am grateful for your consideration of my nomination, and I look forward to your questions. Thank you.

I am grateful for your consideration of my nomination, and I look forward to your questions.

Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Again, we thank all three of you.

I am going to reserve my time and turn to our ranking member, Senator Menendez. Next in line will be Senator Isakson. I am going to run and go vote and come back.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you all for your testimony.

Admiral Harris, as PACOM commander, you were outspoken, rightly in my view, about the nature and extent of North Korea’s nuclear threat. And that threat is real. Right?

Mr. HARRIS. It is real.

Senator MENENDEZ. So do you think we no longer need to worry about North Korea’s nuclear threat?

Mr. HARRIS. No, Senator. I think we must continue to worry about the nuclear threat.

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate that because I know the President said the other day that after Singapore, we can sleep well because we no longer have to worry about North Korea’s nuclear threat. But I did not sleep much better. I understand that there are still nuclear warheads. There are still intercontinental ballistic missiles. There is still a nuclear fissile material development process. And so until that is dismantled, I do not think we can rest comfortably at the end of the day.

Let me ask you this. Also from your experience, do you think that it is important to have military exercises between the United States and South Korea as our forces are there, I think about 28,000, and as they ultimately prepare themselves for any defensive eventuality?

Mr. HARRIS. Senator, in my previous capacity, I spoke very strongly about the need to continue with military exercises, most notably in 2017, but we were in a different place in 2017. North Korea was exploding nuclear weapons. They were launching ballistic missiles almost willy-nilly. And if war was not imminent, it was certainly possible, maybe even likely.

I think today, following the President’s summit with Kim Jong-un in Singapore, I think we are in a dramatically different place. I think the whole landscape has shifted, and I believe that we should give major exercises a pause to see if Kim Jong-un in fact is serious about his part of the negotiations. I have spoken in the past about the need to bring Kim Jong-un to his senses and not to his knees, and I think the President’s efforts in Singapore did just that.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you think these are war games?

Mr. HARRIS. Well, you can call—I think the President——

Senator MENENDEZ. Would you in your present role call it war games?

Mr. HARRIS. I would call them major exercises.

Senator MENENDEZ. Major exercises.

Do you think they are provocative?

Mr. HARRIS. I think they are certainly of concern to North Korea and to China. But we do them in order to exercise our ability to work and interoperate with our South Korean allies.

Senator MENENDEZ. As our Ambassador, you will have to be dealing with the South Koreans who have to be concerned that they did not know about it. The Japanese did not know about it. And there is a real challenge when these countries are a critical part of us ultimately coming to the end goal that we all desire and want to see. So I think it is going to be critically important about how you speak about those issues when you get there.

Mr. HARRIS. I agree, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me turn to Mr. Schenker. In the Countering American Adversaries Through Sanctions Act, the Congress, signed into law by the President, required the administration to deliver a comprehensive Iran strategy by January of 2018. It is now June the 12th or so, and we have yet to receive a comprehensive strategy.

If you are confirmed and this has not been completed by that time, will you commit to the committee that you will work with the Secretary to produce a comprehensive strategy on Iran that has to be delivered to the Congress according to law?

Mr. SCHENKER. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. Now, let me ask you. What do you think are elements of such a strategy?

Mr. SCHENKER. Thank you, Senator.
There are several different elements. One would be, for example, the diplomatic strategy; that is, to work with our European partners to get them on board. While we have some disagreements with our European allies, we can all agree that the nuclear development, the proliferation of missiles and Iranian destabilizing regional activities are all a problem. So on the diplomatic front, the sanctions and also maintaining, at least for the time being, the presence in Syria, which prevents the establishment of a land bridge, among other things for Iran to the Mediterranean, working with the U.S. military, among other things, to prevent the shipment of missile components to the Houthis, for example, working with the Government in Iraq to try and establish a government that is inclined toward good relations with Washington, not a wholly owned subsidiary of Tehran, et cetera.

Senator Menendez. I appreciate that. I also hope we will think about how our Gulf partners play a more strategic role than they have so far.

I asked you in our private meeting and I warned you about the possibility of this question, so I am not blindsiding you. Would the purchase of the S–400 system constitute a significant transaction with the Russian defense sector? There are public reports that Saudi Arabia and Qatar have been discussing purchasing the S–400. If either government proceeds with this acquisition, would this trigger CAATSA sanctions under section 231?

Mr. Schenker. Senator, if confirmed, I would make clear to Saudi Arabia and our allies—and thank you for your leadership on CAATSA, by the way. I would make clear to our allies and friends in the region that the sanctions are intended to exact cost on Russia for its human rights violations, for its behavior in Ukraine, for its meddling in U.S. elections. And I would work with our allies to dissuade them or encourage them to avoid military purchases that would be potentially sanctionable. In other words, I would tell Saudi Arabia not to do it.

Senator Menendez. I appreciate that answer, and I appreciate your diplomacy in how you are trying to answer my question. I will leave it at this—also Egypt seeking to purchase 50 fighter jets and 46 helicopters from Russia. These entities who are our allies must understand that under U.S. law, under CAATSA, the purchase of such systems ultimately are sanctionable, and we will press very hard on the question of pursuing those sanctions, should they choose to do so. And I hope you will communicate that in your role.

Mr. Schenker. Absolutely, Senator. If confirmed, I will implement the law.

Senator Menendez. Thank you. My time has expired but I will come back. Ambassador, I do not want you to think you are left out of the process of my questions.

Senator Isakson?

Senator Isakson. Thank you, Senator Menendez. I appreciate it.

I agree with your comments about the Admiral. He is ultimately qualified, very qualified, and a great nominee.

I appreciate you all being here today.

Mr. Nagy, thank you for accepting a tremendous challenge in African affairs at the Department. Do you happen to know one of your predecessors by the name of Johnnie Carson?
Ambassador Nagy: Yes, Senator. He is a good friend of mine.

Senator Isakson. Of all the people I have got to know in my travels to Africa and the work I have done in Africa since I came to Congress, Johnnie is the most knowledgeable, insightful, and most well received American on the continent of Africa. So you did know him, which I thought you did, but if you had not, I wanted to make sure you do. Since you do know him, take advantage of him because he is a terrific asset.

Ambassador Nagy: Absolutely. When I was Ambassador in Ethiopia, he was Ambassador in Kenya.

Senator Isakson. You focused on the Sudan in part of your testimony. You mentioned the Sudan. That is a horrible problem that is getting worse by the day. We have tried a special envoy. I knew General Grayson. The comprehensive peace agreement we worked on to finally get a referendum for independence, which we finally got, but it never did anything because of the violence, the murder, the assassination, and the economic stealing from one another's assets have just destroyed the environment there.

What initiative would you try to move us to in South Sudan to go from a caretaker of chaos, which I think is where we are right now, to a caretaker of a route to peace and security?

Ambassador Nagy: Senator, thank you for that question.

In my view, South Sudan is one of the greatest tragedies in the world right now and absolutely needless. It should never have happened, especially given the positive role the United States played in creating South Sudan.

Senator, if confirmed, I promise you I will look for every pressure point possible, including the ones that have not yet been pushed, to make sure that those who are complicit in these tragedies have to pay for that, so that they do not have places where they can park their money, they do not have places where they can go and enjoy their vacations and go shopping while their people are dying, women are being raped, and people are going hungry and chased from their homes. I truly believe that I would put that at the top of my inbox, if confirmed.

Senator Isakson. Well, it is going to take our leadership to do that. Al Bashir in the north is not going to be a help to us at all. He is not going to be a problem because he is indicted in the International Criminal Court. But he is not going to be a help to us. But the South Sudanese are doing a pretty good job of messing up by themselves. So we need to move them forward as much as we can.

On that point also, last week Nathaniel, who was a former intern of mine, who was a refugee at Clarkston, Georgia, about 15 years ago, is one of the lost boys of Sudan. He came to my office last week to share with me some of his experiences in the Sudan since he has gone back to try and bring back that country. He said the biggest need that they have on the ground is a recognition by the public, the people of Sudan, that the United States is engaged, that the Government of Sudan is getting engaged with them, and that we are going to be a part of moving Sudan forward.

I asked him. I said, are we not visible now? And he said, not as visible as we should be. I think that is one of the things you are going to have to focus on, the extent of the visibility of our country and our commitment to help them come out of their problems is there, but that they are willing to take a partnership with us and do that.

Ambassador Nagy: Senator, I can promise you, if confirmed, the South Sudanese will realize just how involved the United States is. Being one of the few U.S. Ambassadors who ever spent time in a refugee camp as a refugee and not just a visitor, I am passionate about refugee issues.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, you are going to do a great job, and I am certain of that. And Africa is the continent of the 21st century for the United States in many ways. The population explosion as you referred to in Nigeria, which will be bigger than the United States by the half point of this century—it is important we have them as friends, but it is important that we help them grow economically, and using AGOA, which you also referred to in your remarks, is a way to do that. Senator Coons, who was here, and I 2 years in the work on AGOA used that as a lever to get the South Africans to open South Africa to domestic poultry, which happens to be the biggest export of Georgia and Delaware, which is why Senator Coons and I were interested in the first place. But the point is we can use—they want to business with America. We need to use our assets and use that trade agreement to open more doors of opportunity for Africans but more doors of opportunity for Americans too.

Ambassador Nagy: Absolutely, Senator. I agree with you totally.

Senator ISAKSON. My last point on—not my last point, but the last point I have time to really talk about. I want to go to South Korea. There have been some questions on what the President offered when he offered to suspend or temporarily postpone or postpone the second round of exercises in South Korea this year pending the North Koreans beginning to do what they need to do in the agreement that they made with America at Singapore.

As one who has served in the military—and I was in the Air Force. We had ORIs all the time, ordinance readiness inspections, where we were, at the drop of the hat and a phone call, called to come and go through an exercise as if we were at war, but we, of course, were not. Some could call it a war game. Some would call it an exercise. Whatever.

Does putting off or postponing what would have otherwise been a regularly scheduled exercise in any way damage our readiness in that part of the world?

Mr. HARRIS. Senator, for short periods of time, no. But I believe, without knowing with any certainly, the President was referring to major exercises. The Vice President has stated since then that regular readiness and training evolutions will continue. So I view that in terms of the ORI that you mentioned and service-related exercises and things like that will continue. But I do not know that for a fact. That would be up to the Department of Defense to determine what is allowable under the new construct. But I am convinced—and I know the administration has underscored—that our alliance commitments to South Korea remain ironclad and have not changed.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, I agree with you. I am not good at acronyms either. ORI is an old acronym because I am an old American soldier. So believe me, it could be a new name by now. But I think it is not the type of exercise that they were referring to in the agreement at Singapore.

But there is no place in the world that we are better prepared with manpower and investment and infrastructure than in South Korea to carry through on any commitment we have to the South Korean people or the people of Japan or any other people in that part of the Pacific. Would you agree with that?

Mr. HARRIS. I would, sir.

Senator ISAKSON. And I do not think suspending a temporary exercise in any way diminishes our ability to continue to do everything we have promised to do and have partnered with those countries to do to enjoy the peace and security and freedom in that part of the world.

Mr. HARRIS. I agree, Senator. I think that we do need to create some breathing space for the negotiations to continue and to assess whether Kim Jong-un is serious on his part of the deal or not. And I think this gives us that opportunity.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, as my World War II Navy captain father-in-law, William Davis—and he flew in the south Pacific for 20 years—used to say, if you got a tough job to do, give it to the Navy. So we are going to give you a tough job, and I am sure you can do it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator Isakson.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Congratulations and thank you to each of you for your nominations and for your willingness to serve, and thank you to your families also for being willing to make that kind of a commitment.

Admiral Harris, I want to follow up on Senator Isakson’s question about the military exercises not in terms of what that might do to readiness, but what the message is that that sends to not just our allies in the region but also to our adversaries. There have been news reports about China’s pleasure at our announcing this kind of a concession. Do you agree that this is a benefit to China?

Mr. HARRIS. I think it is too early to tell, Senator, if it is of benefit to China or not. I do know that the Chinese Foreign Minister Wang said that this was creating new history. But President Moon as well talked about the talks being the talks of the century. And so I think that South Korea is looking at this in a positive way, this being the summit. And I believe that we are in fact in a new landscape with North Korea. For the first time certainly in my career, we are at a place where peace is a possibility, and I think we should be encouraged by that. I have said before that we can be hopeful and we can even be optimistic as long as we are realistic also, and I am convinced that the administration has that realism at heart as we move forward in this new place that we are in.

Senator SHAHEEN. And if we are able to successfully move forward towards denuclearization, will South Korea still face a conventional military threat from North Korea and a cyber threat? Do you think those issues should be part of negotiations around denuclearization?

Mr. HARRIS. I think ultimately all of those things should be on the table. Right now, we are focused—and rightfully so—on the nuclear aspects of the North Korean capability, but ultimately we seek peace on the peninsula. No one has a greater stake on peace on the peninsula than South Korea. I mean, they are the ones that went to war and are still technically at war with the North. And I think that that encompasses all types of capabilities that the North has. But we start with the nuclear piece. That is the one that threatens the region, as well as parts of the United States, potentially all of the United States, and we start there. And then we work for peace on the peninsula writ large.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Mr. Schenker, as I am sure you are aware, yesterday the Saudi-led coalition in Yemen began an offensive to take the port city of Hodeidah. There are dramatic reports about what this assault will mean for people in Yemen, the number of people who will be killed. The U.N. has pulled out all of their humanitarian personnel there and the U.N. envoy has suggested that this is a major impediment to efforts to bring parties to the table to have a peaceful resolution in Yemen.

Should the United States be doing more to urge the Saudi-led coalition to stop that invasion and to come to the table?

Mr. Schenker. Thank you, Senator.

It is my understanding that the United States had advised the Emirati and Saudi forces not to go to Hodeidah. The Secretary has now made a statement a few days ago on this, recognizing not only the security concerns of the Saudis and Emiratis but also holding the Emiratis and the Saudis to their humanitarian commitments.

I am very concerned about the impact of the move on Hodeidah. As you know, 22 million out of 30 million Yemenis are food insecure. Hodeidah is the largest port for humanitarian and commercial goods going into the country. If there was an interruption, that would be very serious to the Yemeni people. If confirmed, I would make every effort to get all the parties to the table with the envoy, Martin Griffiths, immediately. That would be a top priority, yes.

Senator Shaheen. And are there other tools that we have, incentives, disincentives that we have that we should be using that we are not currently using?

Mr. Schenker. Senator, I do not know. I have not been privy to the deliberations or the representations with the Saudis and the Emiratis. I think there is more that can be done in terms of incentives. I would have to, let us say, consult with colleagues at the DOD, if confirmed. But, yes, I think there are ways to encourage them.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you. As I am sure you are aware, this committee has weighed in on the Yemeni conflict in a way that suggests that we should put more pressure on the Saudi-led coalition. So I certainly appreciate your commitment to do that, if confirmed.

Are you aware, Mr. Schenker, that the State Department is withholding $200 million in stabilization funding for Syria in areas that have previously been controlled by ISIS?

Mr. Schenker. Yes, Senator.

Senator Shaheen. Can you explain what the reasoning is behind that?
Mr. SCHENKER. My understanding is that the administration is conducting an assessment of this aid to determine what of this is appropriate and perhaps inappropriate. It is my general view that groups such as the White Helmets are doing outstanding and important work and other recipients of U.S. funding, local councils, et cetera who had been receiving money were doing important work to create the conditions in local communities that would prevent the reemergence of ISIS 2.0, for example. But I do not have any visibility into the ongoing administration review, but if confirmed, I would be happy to come talk to you about it.

Senator SHAHEEN. I appreciate that.

Can you also—beyond eliminating ISIS, can you discuss what you believe is the United States’ policy in Syria and what our long-term strategy is?

Mr. SCHENKER. Well, I can take a shot at it.

Senator, we have troops in Syria right now that are working with our allies there and doing excellent work to seek the remaining pockets of ISIS out in the east. They are also helping to train local security forces doing ordinance disposal, humanitarian demining, and generally working to create the conditions whereby ISIS 2.0, follow-on groups, Al Qaeda do not return. All this is very important work.

While the U.S. forces are there, there is another benefit which is that I think it strengthens the U.S. hand in its representations with Moscow over the future disposition of Syria.

Long-term the President has said we intend to depart. My understanding is that there are deliberations within the administration as to when that will occur. The administration appears to still be committed to the end of Assad himself.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Portman?

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And first to Admiral Harris, thank you for your willingness to serve. I enjoyed our meeting together and I have enjoyed our meetings over the years, including briefings you have given us in your role as PACOM commander. You are going at a critical time, obviously, not just for Korea but for the region and the world. And you are going to be part of a new team. You are going to be part of the Pompeo team now. And as you say, you have a lot of background and experience on the military side, which will be very helpful.

I do think that we have a real opportunity here and there is an opening. We need to be clear-eyed, as you and I have discussed, about what the challenges are. We certainly, based on experience, cannot be trusting of what North Korea says in terms of their commitments because they have made commitments in the past that they have not honored. But it is an opportunity, and I do believe that we ought to give the President and the administration the space to be able to negotiate what could be an historic agreement with regard to the Korean Peninsula and the denuclearization that all of us hope for.

I want to follow up on China just for a second because you heard from Senator Shaheen that perhaps China has a little different view than we do about what the future ought to look like, particularly as I look at it, not just about our nuclear presence on the peninsula because we do provide that nuclear umbrella, but also our troops and also exercises.

Are you concerned that China will push for the North Koreans to demand the total withdrawal of U.S. troops in Korea or redeployment of the THAAD missile defense system as a condition that, in my view, would weaken America’s military posture in the region? And if so, how would you deal with that?

Mr. Harris. Senator, I do not know how China will react with regard to pressuring North Korea as a negotiating partner of the United States. I do know, based on my previous job, that China is very unhappy with the placement of the THAAD missile system, the terminal high altitude area defense missile system, in South Korea. But that was an alliance decision taken up by both the Republic of Korea and the United States together. And I think it is important—it is critical—that the decisions—as we go forward here in this new place that we are in, that the decisions that we make with regard to troop levels, with regard to exercises, and with regard to everything else that affects the alliance, that those decisions be taken together with our South Korean ally. Now, these must be alliance decisions and not unilateral decisions.

I think one of the jobs that I will have, if confirmed as the Ambassador, is to implement policy that comes from Washington, that comes from the Secretary of State and the President and also to stay synchronized with our South Korean ally. And that will be the good work of diplomacy I believe.

Senator Portman. Speaking of that for a moment, the interoperability between the U.S. forces and the ROK forces is obviously a critical part of the security there. And my understanding is that President Moon has voiced support for an early transfer of wartime control of operational forces, the OPCON forces from the United States to South Korea, in other words, taking away operational control from the U.S. Is that a good idea? Are they ready?

Mr. Harris. At some point they will be ready.

Senator Portman. Are they ready now?

Mr. Harris. They are not ready today. The transfer of operational control, OPCON transfer—we have agreed with South Korea that it must be conditions-based, and when those conditions are met, rather than time-based, then they will be ready to do that. That is hard work. That is ongoing right now between U.S. Forces Korea, Pacific Command, and DOD to work with their counterparts in Korea to determine those conditions and when those conditions will be met.

Senator Portman. Putting on your new State Department hat—and I am confident you will be confirmed, and I am pleased again you stepped up to do this—what do you think our posture ought to be with regard to human rights abuses in North Korea? As you and I discussed, I come from Ohio, very involved in the release of Otto Warmbier, and the abhorrent behavior he received at the hands of the North Koreans is something we can never forget. But there are many North Koreans who have also been subject to human rights abuses, including war camps.

Should that be part of any agreement with North Korea?
Mr. HARRIS. I think human rights should be a part of discussions. The President did raise them. And as a nation and certainly as a department, we were very concerned with the gross human rights violations evidenced by the North Korean regime.

Senator PORTMAN. Thank you again, Admiral Harris, and we wish you the best of luck. You are going to be a critical part of these negotiations going forward.

Mr. Schenker, just briefly and I have got to run and go vote. I am probably holding things up over there. What do you think the prospects are for Iran and other parties to continue implementing the JCPOA. This is the Iran agreement that America has now withdrawn from. Would it be the administration’s intent that we continue to work with our European allies to come up with a new agreement? What would be your view on that?

Mr. SCHENKER. Senator, thank you for the question.
I do not know where the administration is at on that exactly. It seems to me that the Europeans can make their own decisions on whether to pull out or not, but the secondary sanctions that will be imposed on companies that are doing business may eventually make the Iranians leave. I do not know how this is going to play out, but it seems that the main priority of the administration and, if confirmed, one of my main priorities will be getting a new agreement that incorporates all of the elements, whether it is Iranian nuclear, countering Iranian destabilizing regional behavior, and the missile proliferation.

Senator PORTMAN. Yes. Destabilizing behavior I think is the part that we missed, and look what has happened in the last several years with regard to Hezbollah in Syria in particular but also as we see in Yemen and elsewhere.

I need to run and vote. My time has almost expired. Mr. Nagy, lots of questions for you, but I want to follow up, if I could, in writing on the Okavango Delta legislation that we are trying to work on here in the Senate and get your input on that.

Ambassador Nagy: Sure.

Senator PORTMAN. And I thank you all for your willingness to serve.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, sir.

Senator Cardin?

Senator CARDIN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And let me thank all three of our nominees. You have all had very distinguished careers, and we very much appreciate your willingness to serve in positions that are so critically important at this time on foreign policy and national security issues. And we thank your families for your willingness.

I want to start—some of my colleagues have already talked about the dimension of human rights and making sure that that is a top priority in your responsibilities, whether it is one country in South Korea or the regions of Africa and the Near East.

So I want to start with Ambassador Nagy. And I told you outside that you might get off, but let me start with you, if I might.

The comment you made about leaders in Africa wanting to hold onto power rather than allowing their countries to develop I thought was a very poignant point, and I could not agree more with that assessment.

So let me talk about a country where they have a new leader, which is Ethiopia. You are familiar with that country. I had the opportunity to meet with one of the dissidents who was in town this week who has been arrested and has had some serious issues. He is a pretty brave person. And there is some reason, I guess, for some optimism that maybe there is going to be some change. But we have not seen it demonstrated yet as far as the safety of the activists in the country.

Can you just give me your assessment as to how the United States can play a constructive role in Ethiopia?

Ambassador Nagy: Thank you very much, Senator.

I am extremely optimistic about Ethiopia. I have seen Ethiopia at its worst during my first tour there during the awful Marxist dictatorship. Then I saw it somewhat better when I was Ambassador looking at Ethiopia in an evolutionary manner. The new prime minister I am very encouraged by. In my view, he may be the first generation that will actually be willing to allow itself to be voted out of office, which I think is a huge step going forward. I have also been very encouraged by recent steps that he has taken, most especially just in the last couple of days, the agreement to implement the peace treaty with Eritrea, which is going to be quite difficult given internal Ethiopian pressures. So overall, Ethiopia had major human rights problems in the past. I am encouraged that each year it will get better and better, and if confirmed, I will certainly engage very strongly with Ethiopia, given my own history with that country, to make sure it goes forward.

Senator CARDIN. I just hope that we will be pretty tough on this. We have seen other countries like Burma where we thought they were on a path. They made an abrupt change in direction. The safety issues in Ethiopia are real. So I would hope that you would continue to do that.

Mr. Schenker, we had a chance to talk about this. I know Senator Shaheen raised the port issues in regards to Yemen. Yemen has a major humanitarian crisis now, and it is complicated as to how we can get help to the people. There are clearly outside forces trying to prevent that from happening, but we do not have the sensitivity that we believe is necessary from the Saudis or UAE. Obviously, they have security concerns. We understand that. There are outside forces causing a lot of these problems.

How much more aggressive can we be to make sure the people of Yemen get the help they need?

Mr. SCHENKER. Thanks, Senator.

I think more can be done certainly. We have UNVIM in there, the U.N. verification and inspection team, which has I think provided some bit of assurance to the Saudis and the UAE that contraband weapons are not arriving for the Houthis in these ports. It perhaps can be that we can pressure parties there to bring in cargo planes into Sana’a directly. That may ameliorate some of the situation. But it is a very I think complex and difficult situation. Hodeidah itself, even if Hodeidah shut down, they have Saleef, which is north of there. But the road from Saleef goes through Hodeidah to go east. So I think more can be done and pressured... on our allies. They have made commitments to meet the standard to Martin Griffiths of humanitarian goods getting into the country.

Senator CARDIN. I think you can play a really critical role here because there is a lot of activity by UAE and the Kingdom here in Washington, and there is a lot of engagement. I think it is important that they get a very clear message as to the importance of being as strong as possible in regards to humanitarian aid. So I appreciate your statements on that.

Mr. SCHENKER. Thank you, Senator.

Senator CARDIN. Admiral Harris, I want to talk a little bit about North Korea. I was going to let you go without that.

Most of the experts that we have had before this committee—we have had outside experts that were in the administration. We have not had yet the administration's people here—have said that the very first thing you need to do, if there is going to be any confidence that North Korea is going to give up their nuclear weapons, you have to have a declaration. You got to know what is going on in North Korea. You got to know the venues. You got to know the activities. You got to have inspectors in to verify what the starting point is. And then you need not just a statement that you are going to end the nuclear program, but you need a game plan which is realistic for the dismantling of their nuclear program from beginning to end, including the delivery systems. That is what the experts that have testified before this committee said is the first step—the first step, not the final step, but the first step—in achieving our objectives. We have not heard anything about that from the Singapore summit.

But do you agree with that assessment that if we are going to be able to have success, we need to know where we are starting from?

Mr. HARRIS. Sure, Senator. But I believe that the first step has to be the meeting. Right? And so we had that meeting.

Senator CARDIN. But we have had meetings before, I mean, not directly.

Mr. HARRIS. Right, but not meetings at this level, not meetings with the President.

Senator CARDIN. That is correct. But we have had high-level meetings in the past and commitments in the past, and we never really have had our eyes on exactly what they have and an understanding on how you dismantle that.

Mr. HARRIS. And I agree with you completely in the way you formulated that.

I think that after the meeting, the President said that the summit in Singapore was not designed to solve all issues all at once, but to be a starting point for serious negotiations. And that is the next step are those serious negotiations to establish the modalities for what a complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization means and how we are going to go about doing that. But that is the work of the negotiating teams and the experts in denuclearization, of which we have many in the United States, scientific experts that have done this in the past in other places. We need to rely on them to help us get to that point where we can be satisfied that North Korea has denuclearized.
I know the IAEA, the International Atomic Energy Agency, has also come up and said they are ready to help, should they come to that.

Senator CARDIN. Thank you.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Coons?

Senator COONS. Thank you, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, for holding this important hearing.

And to our three distinguished witnesses and your families, we are blessed to have men of your experience and strength and character willing to continue serving our country, and I am grateful for the opportunities I have had to meet with you before. Admiral Harris and Ambassador Nagy, thank you so much for our conversation yesterday—Mr. Schenker. And I look forward to supporting your nominations.

If confirmed, which I expect you to be, you will confront some of the greatest challenges the United States faces around the world from North Korea, the Indo-Pacific, and strengthening and sustaining our vital partnership with our ally, South Korea, to embracing the opportunity of the continent of Africa while also confronting terrorism and humanitarian crises to the very real challenges and risks of Iran, Syria, and the Middle East. You have a full plate.

The Trump administration has given high priority to addressing strategic competition with China in Africa. Senator Corker and I have worked hard on a bipartisan bill called the BUILD Act that will create a new development finance institution, which we hope will be marked up here next week. If realized, this new DFI would shape U.S. efforts to counterbalance China’s growing economic influence on the continent. And I am encouraged the White House has expressed strong support for it.

Ambassador Nagy, if the bill then passes into law, how could you use this new tool to promote international development and advance U.S. foreign policy interests in Africa?

Ambassador Nagy: Thank you very much, Senator.

If it passes into law, it would be in my view a tremendous asset for us to use especially regarding when you mentioned China because in talking about China’s activities in Africa, we can make the list of all the negative impacts. But the big so-what question there is, so what do we displace it with? How do we replace it? How do we get more American businesses involved in getting into Africa? I know the large businesses have no problems—the multinationals. But when I was in west Texas, so many companies came to me and said we are interested in investing in Africa, the dairies, the soybeans, and the others. How can we do it? We are afraid to do that because it is not a level playing field. If we get into a dispute, we are going to lose. That type of an act would be absolutely perfect to complement the other side of warning African Governments about China’s activities and extraction and indebtedness and all the other things.

Senator Coons. Thank you, Ambassador. It is my hope that we will deliver that tool to you and to other folks who represent us around the world in partnership with USAID to advance development and security.

Let me move to a country where we have an opportunity to advance democracy in a very real way and where they are watching very closely what is said and done here, Zimbabwe. I recently had a chance to lead a bipartisan CODEL. Senator Flake and Senator Booker were also with me where we visited with South Africa and Zimbabwe, both of which have relatively new presidents. And as you know, on July 30, there will be an election in Zimbabwe. Prospects for democracy there are uncertain. In our lengthy one-on-one meeting with President Mnangagwa, he said all the right things, and he has publicly continued to say and do good things. But there are significant unaddressed barriers to their restoration of full participation in the community of nations.

Senator Flake and I introduced an amendment to ZDERA, the Zimbabwe Democracy and Recovery Act. Do you agree the United States should not relieve sanctions on Zimbabwe until the Government takes concrete actions to demonstrate its respect for human rights, its commitment to free and fair elections, and to pursuing genuine anti-corruption measures and a rules-based economy?

Ambassador Nagy: Absolutely, Senator. Actions speak so much louder than words, and we just have to wait to see what happens there.

Senator COONS. One of the core actions we could take would be to send an American Ambassador. In your own experience, you were once recalled from retirement to serve as our Ambassador in Nigeria. We have a nominee now from the administration who we might be able to get through this committee and the floor in a month, thus would arrive in Harare a week before a generationally significant election. Would you recommend that the Department look for a seasoned, experienced former ambassador to send, as well as moving forward as fast as we can to confirm a new ambassadorial nominee?

Ambassador Nagy: Senator, if confirmed, once I can look at all the details and the information, I promise you if I believe that that would be a solution, I will move as quickly as possible for that because in my own case, it really did help to spend some time there in Nigeria.

Senator COONS. Having someone with the length of service and range of experiences and relationships you have is going to be a terrific opportunity for us. But I am concerned about the press of time in a country that has a once-in-a-generation chance to get this right.

Admiral Harris, if I might, I just wanted to both commend you for your long service and your wife’s long service in the United States Navy and to welcome you and to thank you for your willingness to take on this job.

Will you ensure that talks with North Korea do not destabilize the Korean Peninsula at the expense of expanding Chinese influence? My concern is that there is a very real prospect here of our making the strategic mistake of canceling exercises, withdrawing American troops without having a clear and verifiable and irreversible path towards denuclearization.
And I will just echo something Senator Portman asked you previously. I just met with North Korean human rights activists and folks that defected recently over many years. Should the Government of South Korea, with our partnership, be playing a role in advocating for human rights in North Korea as well, and should that be a central part of our advocacy with regard to North Korea?

Mr. Harris. Thanks, Senator.

If confirmed, I will do all of those things that you said. And with regard to human rights, I believe that the Government of the Republic of Korea, South Korea, has a big role to play in the issue of human rights and the gross violations by the North. Also, there are the issues of abductions of Japanese citizens, and the President raised those issues in his discussions. So I think that is a positive as well.

Senator Coons. Let me close by saying to Mr. Schenker, if I might, a number of us on a bipartisan basis sent a letter to the President urging that he not precipitously withdraw U.S. forces from Syria out of a concern that the vacuum created, if we were to withdraw, would both significantly put at risk or greatly harm our allies who worked with us, our partners in combat against ISIS, and that that vacuum would simply be filled by Iranian proxies.

Is it your view that our departure from the ground in Syria would create a significant vacuum and we would be at risk of having Iranian proxies simply fill that vacuum?

Mr. Schenker. Senator, thank you.

I am concerned about withdrawing precipitously. I think we have to make the decision based on conditions on the ground and in conjunction with what the combatant commanders say is appropriate.

Senator Coons. Thank you.

I appreciate your previous comment as well that the White Helmets do terrific work. I was concerned by the hold on funds to them and hope that you will also be able to make progress in releasing those vital humanitarian funds that support a number of different NGOs and vital work in Syria.

Thank you all for your testimony and your willingness to serve, and I look forward to working with you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Rubio? And I am going to go vote, and then we will have Senator Kaine who will follow you. Thank you.

Senator Rubio. It is perfect. I can go as long as I want now. [Laughter.]

Senator Rubio. But thank you all for being here. Thank you for your willingness to serve.

I wanted to begin with you, Admiral Harris—you have a deep amount of experience in that Indo-Pacific region—and just ask kind of a very basic question. You may have already been asked this. But just on your experience from the region, you would agree that perhaps the leading—if not the leading, one of the leading—reasons why what we saw earlier this week was the impossible, Kim Jong-un looking for a meeting and so forth, is because he had serious doubts about whether they could attach a warhead to a missile before the economy collapsed. They were in a race between being able to prove that capability and economic collapse that threatened the regime. And they had significant doubts and perhaps were convinced that the collapse would come before attaching it, and they needed to kind of try to stop that from occurring.

Mr. HARRIS. Thanks, Senator.

I am not sure what is going on in Kim Jong-un’s mind, but I do believe that it is the maximum pressure campaign plan that was led by the State Department and the enforcement of U.N. sanctions, pretty harsh sanctions by many countries, including China. I think the force of those sanctions and the maximum pressure campaign is what brought Kim Jong-un to the negotiating table in Singapore.

Senator RUBIO. Right. And I only raise that because in the context of all the other stuff that is going on, how many flags they had and all those other things, these are all certainly relevant to some extent, but ultimately at the core the single most important thing that got him to the table and will keep him at the table is these sanctions, this pressure. And as long as that pressure is there, that is the one thing they desperately need to figure out.

Mr. HARRIS. I agree with you. I am concerned that China is starting to relax the sanctions, and they want further relaxation of sanctions by other parties. I think it is important that we maintain those sanctions until we can come to the point where we believe that Kim Jong-un is serious about the negotiations and the ultimate aim of the talks, which is to have that complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization.

Senator RUBIO. Well, if confirmed—and I believe you will be—I think one of the fundamental tasks that you will play will be a very critical one because one of the biggest dangers in all of this is going to be an attempt on the part of the Chinese and the North Koreans to split the United States and South Korea. As we know, there is an inflated public expectation in South Korea about what this deal could mean.

And here is my concern. My concern is we reach a point that they are able to drag this thing out into extended and protracted talks, that at some point there are offers being made that South Korea is saying these ideas are fine by us, but they are not good for the United States, and that that split between the U.S. and South Korea would undermine the international sanctions. The international community, the U.N. would say, well, if South Korea is okay with this, North Korea is okay with this, and China is okay with this, then the United States is being unreasonable and that that could undermine the international sanctions. So I think that is going to be an enormous part of your responsibility, is to prevent that split from happening.

In particular, I am concerned about a push that would say something like, well, we are going to have a deal but in order for us to do some concession short of denuclearization, we want it to be step by step. We do something; you do something. And in that sort of negotiation step by step, two of those steps along the way towards a final deal would be, number one, we want you to have a significant reduction in troops, and the other is we want you to remove the missile defense system from South Korea. And each of those steps would be met by some reciprocal concession short of denuclearization. But it would show progress. And the South Korean Government, given this expectation, could come forward and say, well, we are in agreement with that. And then the world would say to the United States, well, they are all in agreement with it. You guys are being unreasonable by not agreeing with it.

So I think there is a real danger of a protracted process here where they are able to gain very valuable concessions, some of which directly benefit. The THAAD presence in South Korea—its removal would deeply benefit China and, frankly, even Russia, but would be against our national interests. But it might be something that the South Koreans would look favorably on in a step-by-step process, and we are now cast in the role of the bad guys who are standing in the way of a deal yet to be consummated.

So I just truly believe that one of the most important functions you will play will be to ensure that that split never happens, that we do not allow, as part of this negotiation, that they create a gap between us and South Korea as part of a negotiating tactic. And I believe that part of the challenges you will face is an incredible amount of expectation within South Korea and the amount of political capital that the President of South Korea has put on this deal being successful.

And I was curious whether you share that view as a risk and what your views would be about ensuring that that split does not happen.

Mr. Harris. Thanks, Senator.

I do believe that it is important that we stay synchronized and aligned with our ally in South Korea and that the decisions that we make regarding troop levels or the terminal high altitude air defense system and any other thing that could come out of the negotiations, that those decisions that we make, that we undertake are alliance decisions, are decisions that are made with our South Korean ally and not unilaterally. And they need to make their decisions based on the alliance as well. Just like the decision to put the THAAD into South Korea was an alliance decision, I believe that is important. And I think that that is one of the roles that I will have, as you said, if confirmed, is to stay synchronized and aligned with leaders in South Korea.

Senator Rubio. Can I ask with your background there obviously in that command—the existence of a missile defense system in South Korea, separate even if North Korea did not have long-range missiles and nuclear capability, would it still be in the national security interest of the United States to have a missile defense presence in South Korea and in the Indo-Pacific region beyond the North Korea threat?

Mr. Harris. Senator, based on my previous job, we put the THAAD ballistic missile defense system in South Korea with South Korea and that alliance decision because of the threat from North Korea. It is not there for anything from China or Russia or anywhere else. It is based solely on the ballistic missile threat from North Korea.

Senator Rubio. So there would be no justification for it if there were no North Korean—

Mr. Harris. I do not think there would be a justification. It is not the issue. I think there would be no need for it. That is a very tactical system designed for ballistic missiles coming from North Korea.

Senator RUBIO. Towards the mainland of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. No, no. The THAAD is there for ballistic missiles coming to South Korea. It is there for the defense of the Americans in South Korea, our South Korean allies and the people there.

Senator RUBIO. Okay.

Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you to my colleagues.

And thank you and congratulations to the nominees. I think this is a very, very impressive panel of nominees.

I want to say, Admiral Harris, my worry as a member of the Armed Services committee when you last appeared before us to complete your time at PACOM was that I would never have an opportunity again to torment you across the witness table. I am glad to see that those opportunities are not coming to an end.

To Ambassador Nagy, I have to say of any resume I have ever seen of anybody, I am giving you the best resume. Born in Hungary and a member of the Communist Youth Pioneers as a youngster until your father got a death sentence and you guys left the country. You have been involved in three political campaigns for President: Barry Goldwater, Mitt Romney, and Barack Obama. That is an unusual hat trick. There are not a lot who would say that. And some others. And your tremendous service in Africa, your multiple language fluencies. You are the most interesting man in the world. [Laughter.]

Senator KAINE. But I will tell you the thing about the resume I liked the best—those of you out in the audience did not have a chance to read this. Listen to this sentence. He failed the Foreign Service exam the first time he took it but passed in 1977. Who puts that in their resume? A very confident person who is attributing success to the most important element, which is persistence. Look at the career, being an Ambassador twice and now being nominated, and you put that front and center. That is very, very much to your credit.

My questions are going to be for Mr. Schenker. Thank you for the opportunity to visit in the office and your work. I am the ranking member on the SFRC subcommittee that kind of coincides with your area of responsibility.

In your professional expertise—I am not asking about administration policy. I am talking about your professional expertise working in this area. Do you think a peace deal between Israel and Palestine, two states for two people living in peace, is still a possibility, or have facts, you know, violence from Gaza against Israel or Israeli settlements into the West Bank—have facts eclipsed the possibility of a two-state peace deal?

Mr. SCHENKER. Thank you, Senator. It was a pleasure meeting with you as well.

No, I think it is still a possibility, but I think it depends on the wills of the party. Ultimately any solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is going to be determined by the parties. The United States has a role in facilitating those negotiations, but both parties have to be ready to make the sacrifices necessary.
Senator Kaine. Let me ask you this. Do you think it should still be U.S. policy now to promote, under the right circumstances—as you point out, it is the will of the parties—but to promote that as the ideal, which has been U.S. policy since the U.N. first recognized the state of Israel? Do you think that should be our policy?

Mr. Schenker. I do.

Senator Kaine. What do you think Israel must do to make that possibility a reality in your professional opinion, not the State Department?

Mr. Schenker. Senator, I do not want to prejudge the negotiations. I have not been privy at all to any of the internal administration deliberations, what Jared Kushner and Jason Greenblatt——

Senator Kaine. I am not really asking you about the administration. You are an expert in this field. You lived there. You studied there. You are fluent in the languages. You have worked in think tank organizations who have worked on this for years. So what I hope to do in my remaining 3 and a half minutes is just get your professional expertise based on a life of work in the area, what you think Israel must do, what you think the Palestinians must do, what you think the United States should do, what Europe Israel's neighbors should do. So, again, I am not talking about the negotiation but just in your expertise in the area, I would hope you could educate us.

Mr. Schenker. Well, thank you.

I think the broad outlines are land for peace. There is a West Bank for the parties to determine the lines. There is Gaza for the parties to determine the lines. Territorial swaps, a recognition——

Senator Kaine. That is on the Palestinian side.

Mr. Schenker. Right.

There are difficult decisions that are going to have to be made potentially between the parties about where the capital ultimately may be of the Palestinian state.

For the Palestinians, once again, it is recognition of Israel's right to exist as a Jewish state. I think that is what the Israelis are demanding right now.

Senator Kaine. And that was the terms of the original U.N. decision.

Mr. Schenker. And for Israel to live within safe and secure borders, and that is for the parties to determine, of course, but whether this future Palestinian state is largely demilitarized.

So I think those are sort of some of the key issues on that front. And I think those are surmountable.

Senator Kaine. If each side is willing to do the things that you outlined.

Mr. Schenker. Correct.

Senator Kaine. And both Israel and Palestinians have some things that they have to do if this desirable reality will be accomplished.

I am not going to ask you what the U.S. should do because you are right. The State Department and Jared Kushner and others are working that.

What about the neighbors of Israel and Palestinians? What do you think they need to do to help make the desirable outcome a reality?
Mr. SCHENKER. Thank you. I think this is the key element here, which is that for Israel presumably to make some very difficult decisions, in return there would be recognition from across the region and other parties to follow. And that is acceptance and opening ties with Gulf States. That may be ongoing now, but are I think very quiet.

Senator Kaine. Sort of sub rosa. We would want them to be publicly supporting both any peace deal, but also opening up true nation-to-nation relations in the sunlight with Israel.

Mr. SCHENKER. Right. That would be the hope, obviously.

Likewise, I think some funding support for the Palestinians to help them develop their economy in a very big way, which will be I think important to both stabilize and strengthen and counter violent extremism in these areas.

Senator Kaine. Well, I hope that we remain very committed to this. I despaired from my first visit in Israel in 2000 till my most recent visits. It seems like the prospect have gotten farther and farther apart. But I always describe having ancestors from a part of the world where the prospects looked zero for hundreds of years in Ireland, and then in our lifetime, after the Good Friday Accords, there was an accord and there are generations of kids born in Ireland today who do not even know what it was like that there were centuries of troubles.

So we need to remain committed to it and watch for those opportunities. And I appreciate your long work in this area and encourage you to keep that in the front of your mind in your capacity, should you be confirmed.

Thanks, all of you, and thank you, Mr. Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Markey for a full 7 minutes.

Senator MARKEY. Thank you.

We hoped that our agreement is matched by President Trump's negotiating skill with President Kim. Thank you.

And by the way, Senator Kaine, I agree with you. That is an incredible resume for the most interesting man in the world. It is amazing.

But I was talking to Admiral Harris yesterday.

Senator Menendez. You are going to sink his nomination if you keep saying he is the most interesting man in the world. The President is the most interesting man in the world. [Laughter.]

Senator Markey. This is true. This is true.

But Admiral Harris—his father in the Navy meets his mother in Japan. After World War II, they get married, move to Tennessee and then to Florida. And he returns as the head of our Pacific Command.

The CHAIRMAN. Those are both States with no income tax. He is very smart. [Laughter.]

Senator Markey. And then to be here as our Ambassador to Korea, just absolutely amazing. Each of these stories is just an American dream come true in each instance. And we thank you for embodying all of that.

And by the way, I support wholeheartedly each one of your nominations for confirmation. We thank each of you for your service.
I would like, if I could with you, Admiral Harris, to just move over to the sanctions regime, which is in place, and kind of some of the commentary coming out of China. There might be an interest in relaxation of that sanctions regime before we see full compliance by President Kim in the denuclearization of North Korea.

Could you talk about that, your philosophy in terms of what the sequencing should be in the removal of any of those sanctions?

Mr. HARRIS. Sure, Senator. As I understand it, sanctions remain in effect. Full sanctions remain in effect until North Korea makes concrete steps, demonstrates concrete steps toward denuclearization. The full range of United Nations sanctions is what I am talking about, and I believe that it is those sanctions that brought North Korea to Singapore in the first place, that brought Kim Jong-un to Singapore. So I think that we need to maintain those sanctions until there are some concrete demonstrations of moving toward a denuclearized North Korea.

Senator MARKEY. Are you concerned that China kind of unilaterally might just begin to turn a blind eye to an increase in trade that will help to bolster the regime?

Mr. HARRIS. I am concerned. China is a member of the United Nations, and the United Nations has determined that North Korea should be sanctioned because of their nuclear weapons development program. And the United Nations has not relaxed those sanctions. So China as a member of the United Nations in my opinion is obliged to follow those rules.

Senator MARKEY. I was there in Korea last August with Senator Van Hollen and Senator Merkley while military maneuvers were being conducted in South Korea. Could you talk a little bit about the relationship with South Korea, the concern which they voiced on day one that they had not been notified of the change in terms of those military exercises, and what you think is necessary going forward in terms of maintaining a close working partnership with South Korea?

Mr. HARRIS. Sir, I believe that President Moon Jae-in said it right after the talks in Singapore. He described them as talks of the century. I think that he is optimistic and wants to create that negotiation space so that North Korea has an opportunity to demonstrate the seriousness by which it is willing to undergo denuclearization.

So I think the first step we have to do is create that space, that negotiating space, and then go forward from there.

Senator MARKEY. Is your definition of denuclearization the complete removal of all nuclear equipment before there is any relaxation of trade sanctions?

Mr. HARRIS. Not necessarily to the extent that you just described. I believe that denuclearization means complete denuclearization of equipment, research, existing stockpiles, and all of that, including the means to deliver them. I think that is what denuclearization means.

I do not know, quite frankly, where along that timeline toward complete denuclearization that we should start to relax sanctions. I think that is part of the negotiations, and that is certainly part of the deliberations that will happen back here in Washington and in Seoul with South Korea.
Senator Markey. So how concerned are you that this Kim is still working from the Kim family playbook which in the 1990s and now in the 21st century just continues to result in them pocketing the rewards of negotiation while delaying the concessions and then accepting those rewards as now a fait accompli without ever having seen any benefits to flow to the United States, South Korea, or the West?

Mr. Harris. Yes, sir. Well, we saw with his predecessors this happen in 1994, in 2005, and 2012. But I believe that the President is spot on when he says that he is not going to wait that long. He will know within a year, maybe less and we will know within a year or maybe less the seriousness by which Kim Jong-un approaches his part of the deal and we will be able to make that decision then.

Senator Markey. Thank you. We thank you, Admiral. We thank each of you for your service to our country, and we look forward to trying to help you do your jobs in the years ahead. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Thank you, sir.

Senator Menendez?

Senator Menendez. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ambassador Nagy, let me just ask you. Do you view defense, diplomacy, and development, the three D's, as all critically important to our work in Africa?

Ambassador Nagy: Absolutely, Senator. If you get rid of the terrorists, you have to fill the space with something. And if after you get rid of the terrorists, the same conditions remain there with poor governance, abuse of human rights, a couple of years later, another terrorist group will come, as we saw in Somalia over the last several decades. So absolutely yes, Senator.

Senator Menendez. Do you think we have the balance right as of this moment?

Ambassador Nagy: Senator, I can promise you that if I am confirmed, I will be as aggressive as I can be in trying to obtain the resources that I believe are necessary. Of course, at the end of the day, I will support whatever budget the President puts out. But in my career, I have had to deal with lean budgets. I have had to deal with better budgets, and I promise you that I will optimize the resources the best way I can.

Senator Menendez. My goal is not to have you dispute the administration's budget. Nobody could defend that. But the question is will you be an advocate if you are ultimately approved, confirmed of creating the right balance among these three critical elements?

Ambassador Nagy: Absolutely, Senator.

Senator Menendez. Let me ask you. What is the effect of having such a significant military footprint in a country like Niger but no aid mission?

Ambassador Nagy: Senator, I do know that Niger has resources from USAID. They do have a limited mission there, not a formal mission, and they are also supported from other regional offices. It is one of those cases where Niger is threatened from several different directions. I think it is probably one of the most vulnerable countries in the Sahel. The question will be rightly when the terrorists are gone, what happens next. And I can promise you that, if confirmed, I will do my best to fight for those resources to replace the vacuum that is left behind.

Senator MENENDEZ. Let me ask you this. Given the concerns that some have voiced about radicalization occurring due to abuses by security forces, how should we be weighing in whether and when to sell arms to countries in Africa whose militaries have engaged in well-documented human rights abuses even in the face of significant terrorist threats?

Ambassador Nagy: Senator, abuse by security forces is a significant problem. In my experience in Africa, I have seen the positive role that U.S. military exchanges can play in actually improving the security forces from systematic abuses to a point where it is only rogue elements or rogue individuals. So based on my own experience, Senator, I am very much in favor of as full an engagement as possible.

Senator MENENDEZ. Because of the mil-to-mil relationship you are talking about.

Ambassador Nagy: Absolutely.

Senator MENENDEZ. I am talking about selling arms.

Ambassador Nagy: On those, Senator, I totally support U.S. law, and I promise you that, if confirmed, I will examine very closely the human rights situations in each of those cases.

Senator MENENDEZ. But as you know, the committee, the chairman and I, have jurisdiction over arms sales in an informal way. And I would be interested in having an understanding of what is the right calibration here, so your insights would be helpful.

Just finally, what is your position on the utility of investments in the democracy and governance sector as it relates to the African continent?

Ambassador Nagy: Thank you very much for that question. In my view governance and democracy is the glue that holds all other programs together because without governance and democracy—for example, we can have a phenomenal Power Africa program but if the citizens in the country after the power is there do not believe in their government or do not believe that people are paying for their bills, the infrastructure will be destructed. So from my experience, I am totally committed to governance and human rights and democracy projects.

Senator MENENDEZ. As a follow-on—and I am thrilled to hear your answer. As a follow-on to that, I hope you will be, within the confines of the State Department and the administration, an advocate for funding in that regard because we are sorely lacking in this.

Lastly, I would like commitments from you that, if confirmed, you will return in a relatively brief time to brief us on the status of the development of a coordinated diplomatic approach to both the Horn and the Sahel Mahgreb part of the continent.

Ambassador Nagy: You have that, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

I want to thank all three of you for your willingness to serve. I can tell you in recent times we have not had a committee hearing like this where all of the nominees are so broadly supported on both sides of the aisle. And I think it speaks to who you are as people but also your professionalism. So we thank you for that. We thank your families for joining you in your service.

We are going to keep the record open until the close of business tomorrow. So there will be some written questions. I know all three of you are very familiar with this. If you could respond to those fairly quickly, it will help speed along your nomination.

Senator Menendez. One very brief comment, Mr. Schenker. You suggested that your children are not angels. They have behaved extraordinarily well. [Laughter.]

Senator Menendez. I do not think there are adults who could behave as well in the audience. [Applause.]

The Chairman. Do you want to respond to that? [Laughter.]

Mr. Schenker. No comment. [Laughter.]

The Chairman. Thank you so much.

And with that, the meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 11:55 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HARRY B. HARRIS, JR. BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

State of U.S.-ROK Relations

Question 1. Despite our shared interests and values with Korea, your nomination comes at a time when there are serious questions about U.S. commitment to Korea and the broader Asia-Pacific region under the Trump administration. We have not had an Ambassador to Korea since January 2017, approval of U.S. leadership by Koreans is ebbing, and although President Trump and President Moon have managed to find firm footing on how to deal with North Korea, the relationship has also been strained by disagreements over trade and alliance burden-sharing, among other issues.

• How do you plan to build our relationship with this important ally and restore our image in the region?

Answer. As former PACOM Commander, I understand U.S.-Republic of Korea alliance is ironclad. The strength of the relationship is significant not just in a bilateral context but for the entire Indo-Pacific region. With this in mind, I will endeavor to deepen our partnership with the Republic of Korea, by focusing on communication and engagement with both the Government of the Republic of Korea and with the Korean people.

President Trump and President Moon have committed to foster expanded and balanced trade while creating reciprocal benefits and fair treatment between the two countries. I plan on building upon this and making our economic relationship a priority.

In sum, if confirmed, I will ensure that all concerns about the alliance are put to rest and expend all my efforts towards conveying President Trump’s and the administration’s continued commitment to this historic alliance.

Question 2. What measures do you intend to take to undo the damage of our ambassadorship being empty for such an extended period—at such a crucial time?

Answer. The State Department has a roster of capable and experienced diplomats working on Korea policy, including at our U.S. Embassy in Seoul. I am very confident in the abilities of the dedicated officers from the 15 departments and agencies that make up Mission Korea. Our Charge d’Affaires in Seoul is also a seasoned diplomat and Korea expert.

I believe that ambassadors should be seen and heard. To that end, if confirmed, I intend to pursue a robust public diplomacy focused on reassuring the Korean people of America’s resolve and commitment to the Alliance. Equally important is private diplomacy to reassure the Korean leadership of America’s resolve.
Question 3. What is your assessment of where we stand today with containing the threat of a nuclearized North Korea?
Answer. The President achieved his objectives at the Singapore Summit. He secured a DPRK commitment to complete denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula and built a good working relationship with Chairman Kim. This is the beginning of the process to completely, verifiably, and irreversibly denuclearize North Korea.
Our alliances remain ironclad, and ensure peace and stability in the region. The security of South Korea and Japan are America’s security, and the United States will continue to meet all of its alliance commitments.

Question 4. How would you use your future role as U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea to advance our objective to denuclearize North Korea?
Answer. Following the June 12 U.S.-DPRK summit in Singapore, there is a great deal of work ahead to ensure the DPRK’s commitment to denuclearize is fulfilled. If confirmed, I will work closely with our ROK allies to ensure that we remain in lockstep in our approach toward the DPRK. I will also ensure that U.S. Embassy Seoul provides Secretary Pompeo all necessary expertise and support to ensure that follow-on negotiations to implement the outcomes of the U.S.-DPRK summit are a success.

Question 5. As former PACOM Commander, what is your sense of how realistic U.S. military options were—or might yet need to be—on the Korean Peninsula? Do we have real military options that don’t spill into a very costly general war in the region?
Answer. The fact that President Trump and Chairman Kim met in Singapore shows that the two sides are very serious about finding a diplomatic solution. These efforts give us hope that we can find real success where past efforts have fallen short. As the former PACOM commander, I am confident in our military options which are both real and comprehensive. These options cover the entire spectrum of violence.

Question 6. What is your view of the current pace and trajectory of North-South dialogue and the Panmunjom (pan-moon-john) Declaration?
Answer. The United States congratulates the Republic of Korea and the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea on their historic meeting and the Korean people’s aspirations for peace and prosperity.
The United States is encouraged by President Moon Jae-in and Chairman Kim Jong Un’s stated goal of complete denuclearization in the Panmunjom Declaration. It is important the DPRK match its words with actions. After all, no one has more stake in the outcomes of the North-South dialogue and Singapore summit than our treaty ally, the Republic of Korea.

Question 7. Do you have any concerns about how we keep the denuclearization process and the North-South diplomatic process linked together?
Answer. Of course I do. But I'm encouraged by President Moon’s statement that, “the improvement of relations between North and South Korea cannot advance separately from resolving North Korea’s nuclear program.” This is the hard work of diplomats and negotiators. If confirmed, I look forward to beginning this hard work.

Question 8. What steps would you recommend to make sure Pyongyang does not drive a wedge between Washington and Seoul?
Answer. I understand we remain in constant and close contact with the Republic of Korea about our unified response to North Korea. If confirmed, there will be no change in this posture as I will make communication and engagement with the Government of the Republic of Korea my top priority.

North Korea-U.S. Forces

Question 9. Some analysts have suggested that as the price for any deal North Korea might demand that U.S. forces on the Korean Peninsula leave. President Trump himself has suggested he would like to withdraw U.S. forces from South Korea.

• What is your assessment of how such a retreat of U.S. forces would affect U.S. security interests and posture on the Korean Peninsulas? In Asia? In the Indo-Pacific?

Answer. While it is difficult to engage in a hypothetical question, as I stated in my testimony, any decision regarding a change in the force posture of United States Forces Korea (USFK) should be an alliance decision between the United States and the Republic of Korea.
Question 10. What steps will you take under the Korea-US trade agreement to assure that South Korea open its legal services market and further remove regulations that hinder foreign investment?

Answer. President Trump and President Moon have committed to foster expanded and balanced trade while creating reciprocal benefits and fair treatment between the two countries. If confirmed, I will build on the President’s 2017 visit to Seoul when 42 ROK companies announced their intent to implement 64 projects in the United States valued at $17.3 billion over the next four years. Twenty-four ROK companies announced planned purchases of U.S. goods and services valued at $57.5 billion, to include $22.8 billion in energy purchases. I’m also encouraged by last March’s negotiations where U.S. Trade Representative Lightizer and ROK Minister for Trade Kim Hyun-chong announced that both countries had reached an agreement in principle on KORUS amendments and modifications to address investment disputes, tariffs, trade in automobiles, and customs procedures. Both countries are actively engaged in discussions to prevent competitive currency devaluation and exchange rate manipulation. These are good steps to ensure that the totality of trade between our countries, including goods and services, is free, fair, and market-based. If confirmed, I intend to pursue and advance this concept vigorously.

Question 11. As U.S. Ambassador to Korea, and as a Japanese-American, how will you handle these issues and assure that our two important Northeast Asian allies maintain a constructive relationship?

Answer. If confirmed, I’ll work hard to emphasize that my personal ethnic background is representative of the strength and diversity of America. That a Japanese-American boy from rural Tennessee who immigrated with his mother from Japan can rise to be a 4-star Admiral in command of all U.S. military forces in the Pacific and then be nominated to be the Ambassador to a key American ally is emblematic of America as a nation of immigrants and a country that values diversity. I will endeavor to ensure Embassy Seoul works closely with the Department and Embassy Tokyo to remain in close contact with the ROK and Japan to coordinate our DPRK engagement. President Trump spoke with President Moon and Prime Minister Abe before and immediately after the U.S.-DPRK Summit, and Secretary Pompeo spoke with Foreign Minister Kang and Foreign Minister Kono shortly after the summit. I also understand that Secretary Pompeo visited Seoul from June 13–14 to provide an in-person readout of the summit to President Moon, ROK Foreign Minister Kang, and Japan Foreign Minister Kono. Our alliances remain ironclad, and ensure peace and stability in the region.

Question 12. China: Both the U.S. and Korea are interested in encouraging China to be a responsible global and regional leader. How do you plan on working with Korea in order to build a collaborative regional framework that will ensure China follows established international economic rules, and supports international institutions, laws, and norms?

Answer. The U.S.-Republic of Korea alliance has served as a pillar of regional peace and stability and we cooperate closely on a wide range of global priorities, including engagement with China. Our relationship is anchored by a shared commitment to democratic values and the rule of law.

If confirmed, I believe the United States must remain engaged to maintain U.S. power and influence, and to work with allies and partners to address areas in which China’s actions are undermining established rules and norms. If confirmed, I will work closely with our South Korean allies to draw attention to, and contest, Chinese policies and actions that undermine the international order.

Question 13. What is your understanding of the administration’s Indo-Pacific strategy?

Answer. The Indo-Pacific strategy seeks to advance U.S. leadership and preserve a rules-based order in the region by redoubling our commitment to allies and partners, strengthening regional institutions, advancing our economic interests, and promoting U.S. values. The strategy has three lines of effort: security, economics, and governance. Regarding security, the aim is to build a resilient network of security partnerships, ensure regional stability, advance maritime security and respect of international law, including freedom of navigation and overflight and other lawful uses of the sea, by building our partners’ capabilities, and encourage India to play a greater role in the region. In economics, the strategy seeks to advance free, fair, and reciprocal market-based trade and investment policies, diversify opportunities for trade and investment, and enable partners to build sustainable infrastructure that will increase regional connectivity. With respect to governance, the United States seeks to build capacity for good governance, preservation of national sovereignty and territorial integrity, respect for human rights and the rule of law, greater transparency, and adherence to international rules and standards.

Question 14. How do you plan to advance it [Indo-Pacific Strategy] as Ambassador to the Republic of Korea?

Answer. As a long-time ally and partner, the Republic of Korea is an important nation in helping us advance our Indo-Pacific Strategy. If confirmed as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea, I will work with the President and Secretary of State to partner with the Republic of Korea so that we are working together to achieve the Indo-Pacific Strategy's objectives.

Question 15. Following the Singapore Summit Secretary Pompeo stated that sanctions relief “cannot take place until such time as we have demonstrated that North Korea has been completely denuclearized.” President Trump stated that “I hope it’s going to be soon. At a certain point, I actually look forward to taking them off,” following the summit. Other U.S. officials have discussed sanctions relief if North Korea takes steps towards denuclearization. And North Korean state media reported after the summit that President Trump had discussed lifting sanctions against Pyongyang during his talks with Kim in Singapore and that “The President of the U.S. expressed the possibility of suspending the U.S.-South Korea joint military exercises... and, as progress is made from dialogue and negotiations, lifting sanctions against DPRK.” Those positions all represent wildly different standards for when sanctions might be lifted off North Korea.

- What is your understanding of the statutory requirements for sanctions relief?

Answer. My current understanding is that sanctions remain in full effect until North Korea denuclearizes. The full implementation of U.N. Security Council resolutions by the international community brought us to this moment, and will ensure a successful outcome of this process.

Question 16. Following the Singapore Summit Secretary Pompeo stated that sanctions relief “cannot take place until such time as we have demonstrated that North Korea has been completely denuclearized.” President Trump stated that “I hope it's going to be soon. At a certain point, I actually look forward to taking them off,” following the summit. Other U.S. officials have discussed sanctions relief if North Korea takes steps towards denuclearization. And North Korean state media reported after the summit that President Trump had discussed lifting sanctions against Pyongyang during his talks with Kim in Singapore and that “The President of the U.S. expressed the possibility of suspending the U.S.-South Korea joint military exercises... and, as progress is made from dialogue and negotiations, lifting sanctions against DPRK.” Those positions all represent wildly different standards for when sanctions might be lifted off North Korea.

- What is your understanding of U.S. Government policy regarding sanctions relief?

Answer. My current understanding is that sanctions remain in full effect until North Korea denuclearizes. The full implementation of U.N. Security Council resolutions by the international community brought us to this moment, and will ensure a successful outcome of this process.

Question 17. Following the Singapore Summit Secretary Pompeo stated that sanctions relief “cannot take place until such time as we have demonstrated that North Korea has been completely denuclearized.” President Trump stated that “I hope it's going to be soon. At a certain point, I actually look forward to taking them off,” following the summit. Other U.S. officials have discussed sanctions relief if North Korea takes steps towards denuclearization. And North Korean state media reported after the summit that President Trump had discussed lifting sanctions against Pyongyang during his talks with Kim in Singapore and that “The President of the U.S. expressed the possibility of suspending the U.S.-South Korea joint military exercises... and, as progress is made from dialogue and negotiations, lifting sanctions against DPRK.” Those positions all represent wildly different standards for when sanctions might be lifted off North Korea.

- What is your understanding of the agreement reached between President Trump and Kim Jong Un in Singapore regarding sanctions relief?

Answer. I have not yet been briefed by principals who participated in the U.S.-DPRK Summit. However, I believe sanctions remain in full effect until North Korea denuclearizes. The full implementation of U.N. Security Council resolutions by the international community brought us to this moment, and will ensure a successful outcome of this process.

Question 18. Following the Singapore Summit Secretary Pompeo stated that sanctions relief “cannot take place until such time as we have demonstrated that North Korea has been completely denuclearized. President Trump stated that “I hope it's going to be soon. At a certain point, I actually look forward to taking them off,” following the summit. Other U.S. officials have discussed sanctions relief if North Korea takes steps towards denuclearization. And North Korean state media reported after the summit that President Trump had discussed lifting sanctions against Pyongyang during his talks with Kim in Singapore and that “The President of the U.S. expressed the possibility of suspending the U.S.-South Korea joint military exercises ... and, as progress is made from dialogue and negotiations, lifting sanctions against DPRK.” Those positions all represent wildly different standards for when sanctions might be lifted off North Korea.

- What is your understanding of what North Korea believes that understanding to be?

Answer. My current understanding is that sanctions remain in full effect until North Korea denuclearizes. The full implementation of U.N. Security Council resolutions by the international community brought us to this moment, and will ensure a successful outcome of this process. While I'm currently not in a position to determine what North Korea's understanding regarding sanctions is, I believe that, following Secretary Pompeo’s clear and unequivocal statements, North Korea should be under no illusions about the seriousness with which the U.S. ties sanctions relief to actual and complete denuclearization.

Question 19. If confirmed, how do you view your role in coordinating with the Republic of Korea to assure that the United States and the Republic of Korea maintain a common and unified position on this issue?

Answer. I understand we remain in constant and close contact with the Republic of Korea about our unified response to North Korea. If I am confirmed, there will be no change in this posture as I will make communication and engagement with the Government of the Republic of Korea my top priority.

Question 20. As Ambassador, if confirmed, what sort of consultations do you think are constructive and necessary when different voices in the United States administration appear to offer different views on critical issues for diplomacy and denuclearization?

Answer. I have always sought out diverse and different opinions to guide me throughout my career. If confirmed, I plan to take the same approach as the U.S. Chief of Mission in Korea.

Question 21. On April 20, 2018 North Korean Government announced it would suspend nuclear testing. On May 16 its ambassador to the conference on disarmament said North Korea “will join international disarmament efforts for a total ban on nuclear tests” and on May 24 before a group of invited journalists North Korea apparently destroyed entrances to some of the test tunnels at its Punggye-ri site.

In recent weeks, U.S. allies including Japan and France have called upon North Korea to solidify its no-test pledge by signing the 1996 Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty. Meanwhile, U.N. Secretary General Guterres and the Executive Secretary of the CTBTO Technical Secretariat Dr. Lassina Zerbo have suggested that, if invited, the CTBTO can help provide on-site technical assessment of the Punggye-ri site “closure” activities, which would may yield data relevant to a better understanding the history of the North Korea’s nuclear tests and how much nuclear material it may have used up in the process.

- Is the United States satisfied that these actions provide a sufficient legal and technical basis to monitor and verify that that North Korea will permanently end nuclear weapons testing, and if not, what specific legal, political, and technical measures is the Trump administration pressing North Korea to take in order to do so?
- And has the USG been in communication or in consultation with our allies, the UNSO, and/or the CTBTO regarding monitoring and verification of North Korea’s nuclear test halt pledge?

Answer. I welcome the DPRK's announcement that it will suspend its nuclear testing program and dismantle its nuclear testing site. In the June 12, 2018 summit joint statement, Chairman Kim Jong Un reaffirmed his firm and unwavering commitment to complete denuclearization. The President made clear he did not expect we could solve all issues in one meeting. The U.S. and the DPRK will hold follow-on negotiations led by Secretary Pompeo to implement summit outcomes.

The independent inspection and full verification by international experts of the dismantlement of all nuclear weapons sites, including the nuclear test site, is a key step in the complete, verifiable, irreversible denuclearization of the Korean peninsula. As the President said, the complete denuclearization of North Korea will be verified. Observation by journalists is not sufficient. The United States remains in regular communication with allies and partners, including international organizations, on achieving denuclearization of the Korean peninsula.

Question 22. If you are confirmed as Ambassador to the Republic of Korea how will you explain President Trump’s moral and ethical views about human rights to the Korean people?

Answer. As stated in the State Department’s most recent Human Rights Report, we are a nation founded on the belief that every person is endowed with inalienable rights. Promoting and defending these rights is central to who we are as a country. The President’s foreign policy reflects who we are and promotes freedom as a matter of principle and interest. I will work to ensure the Republic of Korea knows we seek to lead other nations by example in promoting just and effective governance based on law and respect for human rights, and that the United States will continue to support those around the world struggling for human dignity and liberty.

Question 23. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While our diplomats overseas normally have the lead on issues of democracy and human rights in other countries, the military has a role to play, particularly in those countries led by authoritarian regimes. In my previous uniformed life as the Pacific Command commander, three examples come to mind which get at your question. First, I was the first 4-star in many years to visit Thailand following that country’s coup in 2012. In 2017, I opened exercise Cobra Gold and, during my public address, I encouraged Bangkok to return to full-throated democracy as soon as possible. I reiterated this in my meetings with the highest level of Thai Government and military leaders. In the Philippines, another important treaty ally of the U.S., I encouraged that country’s leaders, both civilian and military, to avoid involving the Armed Forces of the Philippines in operations where allegations of extrajudicial killings might arise. Finally, I made Women, Peace, and Security a major theme of my tour. I believe these actions contributed to Bangkok’s stated intent to hold elections next February and to the Armed Forces of the Philippines remaining generally untainted by allegations of human rights violations. I am proud of my military career and, if confirmed, I look forward to my new role as the President’s leading diplomat in the Republic of Korea, where both democracy and human rights will be front and center in much of what I would do as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

Question 24. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Korea, in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The June 13 regional elections in the Republic of Korea, as well as the country’s 2017 presidential election were considered free and fair. So, while work in democratic development continues, the country has made great strides in recent decades. Given President Moon’s push for increased transparency, the near-term signs are good for continued democratic development. Regarding challenges, the State Department’s 2017 Country Report on the Republic of Korea highlights the most significant human rights issues as: government interpretation and application of the National Security Law, libel laws, and other laws that limited freedom of expression and restricted internet access; corruption; domestic violence; and the military’s prosecution of male soldiers for homosexual activities, although President Moon’s Government discontinued this action. If confirmed, I look forward to getting to the Republic of Korea to better understand these issues and what the United States can do to help address these ongoing challenges.

Question 25. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Korea? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. President Moon was elected in the wake of the Republic of Korea’s candle light revolution which led to the impeachment of his predecessor. To date, he has made transparency and rooting out corruption cornerstones of his presidency. If confirmed, I will work with President Moon and his government to better understand his efforts to further democracy within the Republic of Korea to make sure the country continues on its current path of strong, democratic development.

Question 26. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Democracy and governance will be important priorities for me if confirmed as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea. While I am encouraged by President Moon’s focus on both democracy and governance, it is too early for me to say specifically what I will do to maximize the impact of State Department and USAID funding to further our efforts in the Republic of Korea. But, I can assure you that as I undertake my consultations in Washington to better understand current operations and should I be confirmed and upon arriving in Seoul, I will focus on democracy and governance to ensure the United States is doing what it can, and should, to further these traditional United States foreign policy hallmarks in the Republic of Korea.

Question 27. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Washington and in Korea? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will prioritize meeting with civil society, human rights, and other non-governmental organizations in the Republic of Korea and Washington. If confirmed, and given the urgency to get the President’s new Ambassador to Seoul, it is doubtful I would be able to conduct these meetings before my initial departure. That being said, meeting with these groups in the Republic of Korea will be a priority and I will make it a priority to meet with these groups whenever I am back in Washington. For the most part, and per the State Department’s most recent Human Rights Report, most of these groups generally operate without government restrictions in the Republic of Korea. However, there are several civil society groups, NGOs, and umbrella labor unions that have encountered problems in recent years and if confirmed I will be sure the United States continues to call out these problems while also providing support when possible.

Question 28. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes. The United States makes a point to meet regularly with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. I understand that our diplomats have traditionally done this in the Republic of Korea and we will continue to do this should I be confirmed as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea. Of course and perhaps ironically, the primary political opposition in Korea today is the center-right and conservative parties which support the ousted former president. I will advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties.

Question 29. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Korean leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Korea?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I and my country team will actively engage with Korean leaders on freedom of expression, including for the press and address any government effort to control or undermine press freedom. If confirmed, I will meet regularly with independent, local press in the Republic of Korea.

Question 30. Will you and your leadership team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the region?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage actively with civil society and government counterparts to counter disinformation and propaganda from foreign state or non-state actors.

Question 31. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with Korean interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I and my country team will actively engage with Korean interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions.

Question 32. The United States has been a loud voice globally in the struggle against discrimination, and specifically against discrimination towards women and members of the LGBTI community. What kind of efforts do you envision undertaking to protect the rights of all citizens and oppose discrimination?
Answer. If confirmed, and just as I have done in the military, I will be a voice in the struggle against discrimination. If confirmed, and upon my arrival in Seoul, I would meet with Embassy Seoul personnel to better understand exactly what we have been doing to protect the rights of all and oppose discrimination. Should I be confirmed, and after consultations, I can better determine what more we can do to raise awareness and call attention to discrimination so that we can continue reducing its harmful impact.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HARRY B. HARRIS, JR. BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While our diplomats overseas normally have the lead on issues of democracy and human rights in other countries, the military has a role to play, particularly in those countries led by authoritarian regimes. In my previous uniformed life as the Pacific Command commander, three examples come to mind which gets at your question. First, I was the first 4-star in many years to visit Thailand following that country’s coup in 2012. In 2017, I opened exercise Cobra Gold and, during my public address, I encouraged Bangkok to return to full-throated democracy as soon as possible. In the Philippines, another important treaty ally of the U.S., I encouraged that country’s leaders, both civilian and military, to avoid involving the Armed Forces of the Philippines in operations where allegations of extrajudicial killings might arise. Finally, I made Women, Peace, and Security a major theme of my tour. I believe these actions contributed to Bangkok’s stated intent to hold elections next February and to the Armed Forces of the Philippines remaining generally untainted by allegations of human rights violations. I am proud of my military career and, if confirmed, I look forward to my new role as the President’s leading diplomat in the Republic of Korea, where both democracy and human rights will be front and center in much of what I would do as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Korea.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As I testified, I am committed to diversity and the concept that America is stronger because of our diversity. If confirmed, I will draw on my personal background as an Asian-American to convey this to my Korean interlocutors and Embassy colleagues. That an Asian-American country boy from Tennessee can rise to become the 4-star Admiral in charge of all American forces in the Indo-Pacific, then be nominated to become our next Ambassador to the Republic of Korea, speaks to how we value diversity in America. Finally, I have received numerous national awards for my work in diversity. don’t come to this as a novice; I’m a true believer!

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe that people, including supervisors, follow orders better than they read minds. I confirmed, I intend to lay out my commitment to diversity and my expectations that they foster an inclusive environment that values all and means none.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff??

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.
Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HARRY B. HARRIS, JR. BY SENATOR TOM UDALL

Question 1. The President stated that “We will be stopping the war games, which will save us a tremendous amount of money, unless and until we see the future negotiations is not going along like it should. But we’ll be saving a tremendous amount of money. Plus, I think it’s very provocative.” When you served as commander of U.S. Pacific Command, did you consider proper military preparation and exercises with our allies as “provocative” as the President just said?

Answer. Our annual U.S.-ROK combined military exercises are transparent, defense-oriented, and have been carried out regularly and openly under the Combined Forces Command for over 40 years. They are designed to increase our readiness and maintain stability on the Korean Peninsula. Depending on the security environment, our exercises can be used both as a message of deterrence against aggressive behavior as well as an effective means of enhancing interoperability amongst allies. In fact, in 2017, I testified before the Senate Armed Services committee that we needed a robust exercise program with our Republic of Korea (ROK) ally. That said, as I testified last week, we are in a dramatically different place today than we were in 2017. Last year, North Korea was exploding nuclear weapons and launching ballistic almost willy-nilly. If war wasn’t imminent in 2017, it was certainly possible, even likely. Now, following the President’s summit with Kim Jong Un in Singapore, the strategic landscape has changed—for the better I might add. I believe we should give major exercises a pause to see how serious Kim Jong Un is regarding nuclear disarmament.

Question 2. As the Commanding Officer of PACOM, can you give us an idea of how much the joint exercises with South Korea cost, and what percentage of your budget they represented? Will the U.S. actually be saving “a tremendous amount of money” as the President represented?

Answer. I do not know the cost of our exercises with South Korea and, since I am no longer the Commander of U.S. Indo-Pacific Command, I ask that you refer to the Department of Defense for their latest estimates on those costs.

Question 3. Will the military incur additional costs to improve readiness in the future if we cancel exercises now and our preparedness suffers?

Answer. Our men and women in uniform are true professionals, and the United States remains committed to the defense of our allies. Our exercises are just one part of the varied and extensive preparation our military undertakes to meet that commitment to defend and deter. As the Vice President said, regular readiness training and training exchanges will continue.

Question 4. As PACOM Commander, you stated that North Korea is the greatest threat we face. This week, President Trump tweeted: ‘Just landed—a long trip, but everybody can now feel much safer than the day I took office. There is no longer a Nuclear Threat from North Korea.’

• However, North Korea still has nuclear weapons, the IAEA is not allowed into North Korea, and there is no program in place to denuclearize and verify. In your opinion, is North Korea QUOTE “no longer a nuclear threat”, as the President tweeted?

Answer. As I testified last week, I believe North Korea still poses a nuclear threat to the United States. I also testified that I believe we can accept some risk to permit some breathing space for negotiations to continue and to assess whether Kim Jong Un is serious on his part of the deal or not. Peace is worth this risk. The President secured a DPRK commitment to complete denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula. I understand the challenges that lay ahead, but this is the bold first step to completely, verifiably, and irreversibly denuclearize North Korea.

Question 5. Has there been a reduction in centrifuges enriching uranium in North Korea?

Answer. I do not know. I left PACOM on May 30. A lot has happened in the U.S.-ROK — North Korea space since then and I have not been briefed on latest developments. Addressing the DPRK’s enrichment capabilities is a key element of the complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization of the DPRK. I would ask that you refer this question to the intelligence community.

Question 6. Have the scientists and engineers responsible for nuclear and missile research and development been told to stop work?

Answer. I do not know. I left PACOM on May 30. A lot has happened in the U.S.-ROK-North Korea space since then and I have not been briefed on latest developments. I would ask that you refer this question to the Intelligence Community. In the June 12 Joint Statement from the U.S.-DPRK summit, Chairman Kim Jong Un reaffirmed his firm and unwavering commitment to complete denuclearization. The role of scientists and engineers working on the DPRK’s unlawful nuclear and ballistic missile programs will need to be addressed as a part of complete denuclearization. I know that U.S. negotiators are eager to see this process progress as quickly as possible.

Question 7. President Trump rejected the Iran deal—a highly detailed agreement that required Iran to get rid of its nuclear weapons within a time frame and subjected Iran to strong verification measures—the strongest in history. The President reneged on our agreement with Iran.

- So why should the North Koreans—or the world—believe that we will uphold our end of the bargain if we enter into an agreement with North Korea?
- Are there any specific improvements upon the Iran agreement that are in the Trump administration’s agreement with North Korea?

Answer. Our relationships with countries around the world stand on their own merits. In Singapore, the President secured a DPRK commitment to complete denuclearization and built a good working relationship with Chairman Kim. This is the beginning of the process to completely, verifiably, and irreversibly denuclearize North Korea. The administration looks forward to follow-on negotiations, led by the U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, at the earliest possible date to implement the outcomes of the U.S.-DPRK summit.

President Trump is not pursuing discussions with Kim Jong Un just for the sake of a deal. If anything, the North Korea situation shows the folly of doubling down on a bad nuclear agreement. The United States is serious about complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization of North Korea. I am not privy to any linkages between the Iran deal and the Singapore Summit, especially in terms of improvements to the former as an outcome of the latter.

Question 8. If your nomination is confirmed, will you pledge to work with the nuclear experts at our national labs to ensure that all pathways to a nuclear weapon are cut-off?

Answer. Yes. American nuclear experts are the best in the world and their extensive knowledge will greatly contribute to the complete, verifiable, and irreversible denuclearization of the DPRK.

Question 9. The summit gave Kim Jong Un equal footing as the President of the United States on the world stage—while President Moon of South Korea has largely taken a back seat. What is the role of South Korea in the denuclearization talks and in denuclearization of the peninsula? If confirmed, how will you ensure we keep in lock step with our ally? And how will you make sure that South Korea is part of the conversation and decision-making?

Answer. We remain in close contact with the ROK to coordinate our DPRK engagement. President Trump spoke with President Moon before and immediately after the U.S.-DPRK Summit, and Secretary Pompeo traveled to Seoul to speak with President Moon and Foreign Minister Kang (as well as Foreign Minister Kono of Japan) immediately shortly after the summit. If confirmed, I will continue to strengthen our lines of communication with the ROK. We will maintain all of our alliance commitments. There is absolutely no change to our commitment to the defense of the Republic of Korea.

Question 10. North Korea sees denuclearization as entailing the exit of U.S. troops from the peninsula and the withdrawal of the U.S. nuclear umbrella for South Korea and Japan. As the Ambassador to the Republic of Korea and as the former Commander of the Pacific Command, would you recommend withdrawing our troops from South Korea? Would you recommend removing South Korea and Japan from the United States’ nuclear umbrella?

Answer. As I stated in my testimony, any decisions we make with regard to U.S. troop levels in the Republic of Korea will be made together with our South Korean ally. These must be alliance decisions and not unilateral decisions. That said, I want to be clear: there is absolutely no change to U.S. commitment to the defense of the Republic of Korea and Japan. South Korea and Japan’s security is America’s security, and the United States will continue to meet all of its alliance commitments to both of our allies.

Question 11. Secretary Pompeo has said that the U.S. “has been fooled before” by North Korea. And the fact Kim Jung Un’s statements on denuclearization at the summit use the same language that his father, Kim Jong-il, used in the 1990s when President Clinton was engaged in talks with North Korea should be highlighted. If there is a deal but it turns out we got fooled again, what would be your recommended course of action? Would you recommend a “bloody nose” strategy?

Answer. The President has made clear that we will suspend major exercises with South Korea until and unless the talks with North Korea break down. The United States seeks peace on the Korean peninsula and, thanks to our robust diplomatic, economic, and military pressure on the DPRK, we are in a place where peace is a possibility. But, we are also realistic—there is absolutely no change to our commitment to the defense of the Republic of Korea and Japan. South Korea and Japan’s security is America’s security, and we will continue to meet all our alliance commitments to both of our allies. Finally, as I testified before the Senate Armed Service committee earlier this year, I had no “bloody nose strategy” in my toolkit at PACOM.

Question 12. In your opinion, what more needs to be done to reconcile the relationship between Japan and South Korea? And how will you work to ensure the two countries show a united front on issues of mutual importance?

Answer. As the PACOM commander, I made improving the bilateral relationship between Korea and Japan an important part of my theater strategy. While the United States does not, and should not, take sides in this century-long historical argument between our two allies, it is important to encourage them to reconcile their differences in the face of a common threat from North Korea and a common challenge from China. If confirmed, I will endeavor to ensure we remain in close contact with the ROK and Japan to coordinate our DPRK engagement. President Trump spoke with President Moon and Prime Minister Abe before and immediately after the U.S.-DPRK Summit, and Secretary Pompeo spoke with Foreign Minister Kang and Foreign Minister Kono shortly after the summit. Secretary Pompeo visited Seoul from June 13–14 to provide an in-person readout of the summit to President Moon, ROK Foreign Minister Kang, and Japan Foreign Minister Kono. U.S. alliances remain ironclad, and ensure peace and stability in the region.

Question 13. There has been a good deal of confusion about exactly what was agreed to at the Singapore summit. Have you been briefed on the precise parameters of the agreement by senior administration officials? If yes, could you set forth the provisions of the agreement with as much specificity as possible?

Answer. No, I have not yet been briefed by principals who participated in the U.S.-DPRK Summit.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HARRY B. HARRIS, JR. BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. I was pleased to see that the joint statement between President Trump and Kim Jong Un included an explicit commitment from North Korea to “recovering POW/MIA remains, including the immediate repatriation of those already identified.” Many Americans are still trying to recover the remains of their loved ones who fought and died in the Korean War. According to the Defense POW/MIA Accounting Agency (DPAA), “More than 7,800 Americans remain unaccounted for from the Korean War,” including 176 from Indiana.

• If confirmed, do I have your commitment that you will do all you can to help bring our fallen heroes from the Korean War home, and that you will let me know if there is anything I can do to be helpful?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed I will support the recovery of remains from the Korean War in any way I can.

Question 2. Based on your military and command experience, what do you see as the benefits for the United States of our military presence in South Korea?

Answer. Our men and women in uniform serving in the Republic of Korea provide stability not just to the peninsula, but also to the entire region. That stabilizing presence affords great protection and benefit to the United States. Longstanding American commitment to the security of the region provides stable conditions, including for free and open trade and cultural exchange.
Question 3. Do the benefits for the United States of having our troops in South Korea extend beyond the North Korean threat? What are some of those additional benefits?

Answer. Our military presence in the Republic of Korea is not only stabilizing to the peninsula but to the entire region. In addition to being ready to meet our treaty obligations to our allies in the region, U.S. and international forces conduct training with allies and partners, enhancing interoperability and readiness.

Question 4. Based on your experience as Indo-Pacific Command Commander, do you believe China and Russia would like to see U.S. troops leave South Korea? Why do you believe China and Russia would like to see U.S. troops leave South Korea?

Answer. Our longstanding alliance with the Republic of Korea, including our military presence, is a bilateral U.S.-ROK issue. China and Russia do not have a vote in our troop presence in the Republic of Korea. Our military presence on the peninsula, and in the region, is a stabilizing force that promotes peaceful conditions for the benefit of all countries. China and Russia are also benefitting from the stability and the free and open conditions for economic growth undergirded by the presence of U.S. and allied forces in the Indo-Pacific.

Question 5. Can you provide a general overview from your perspective regarding Chinese activities in the South China Sea? Can you discuss China’s militarization of the artificial islands? What are the implications of that? Do you have any thoughts on how we can respond in a more multilateral and effective manner to China’s activities in the South China Sea?

Answer. The United States continues to call out publicly and privately Chinese policies and actions that run counter to U.S. national interests. Specifically, the U.S. makes clear that China’s militarization activities should halt in keeping with President Xi’s 2015 commitment not to militarize the Spratlys, and ongoing activities raise concerns over China’s sincerity in negotiating with ASEAN a meaningful Code of Conduct for the South China Sea consistent with international law.

The United States works with our treaty allies and partners in the region, as well as with like-minded nations around the world, to uphold freedom of navigation and overflight, and other lawful uses of the sea in the South China Sea. This includes by flying, sailing, and operating wherever international law allows. Together with our allies and partners, including many ASEAN Member States, the administration has made clear our shared concerns over China’s militarization of the region. If confirmed, I will join the administration as it continues to do so.

Question 6. What is your assessment of China’s core national security interests on the Korean peninsula?

Answer. After the June 12 summit in Singapore, the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA) issued a statement on the summit and its approach to North Korea. The MFA characterized China’s position as “committed to and will make tireless efforts toward denuclearization of the Peninsula, the maintenance of peace and stability on the Peninsula and resolution of issues through dialogue and consultations.” I remain clear-eyed about China’s track record on North Korea and its stated goals. If confirmed, I will work with Congress, the White House, and the rest of the administration to effectively pursue and attain U.S. national objectives on the Korean Peninsula.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Harry B. Harris, Jr. by Senator Cory A. Booker

ROK-U.S. Relationship

Question 1. South Korea is one of the United States most important trading partners. Annual bilateral trade in 2017 reached $155 billion in goods and services, and South Korea is America’s seventh largest trade partner. Yet the Trump administration has threatened South Korea with tariffs and talked about tearing up the Korea-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. My home state of New Jersey is home to a number of Korean firms that employ hundreds of workers.

• What will you do to maintain and improve the vital trading relationship between South Korea and the United States?

Answer. President Trump and President Moon have committed to foster expanded and balanced trade while creating reciprocal benefits and fair treatment between the two countries. The United States and ROK have strengthened an important economic relationship by agreeing to an exemption to steel tariffs for the ROK and substantial improvements to KORUS that will help rebalance our trade, reduce our trade deficit, and expand U.S. export opportunities. If confirmed, I will build on the President’s 2017 visit to Seoul when 42 ROK companies announced their intent to implement 64 projects in the United States valued at $17.3 billion over the next four years. Additionally, twenty-four ROK companies announced planned purchases of U.S. goods and services valued at $57.5 billion, to include $22.8 billion in energy purchases.

Question 2. Was this decision to end or curtail the military exercises coordinated with South Korea?

Answer. I was no longer serving in uniform with the United States military when this was being decided and I cannot speak to this point. As I stated during my testimony, it is critical as we move forward that decisions that affect the alliance be taken together with our South Korean ally. If confirmed, that will be my approach.

Question 3. What will be the military and political impact of ending these exercises?

Answer. There is absolutely no change to our commitment to the defense of the Republic of Korea. South Korea’s security is America’s security, and we will continue to meet all our alliance commitments. Our alliances remain ironclad, and ensures peace and stability in the region.

Question 4. How will you ensure that important decisions such as this that impact the bilateral relationship are properly coordinated with South Korea?

Answer. We have been in close contact with the ROK and Japan to coordinate our DPRK engagement and I will work to ensure this continues, if confirmed. President Trump spoke with President Moon and Prime Minister Abe before and immediately after the U.S.-DPRK Summit. Secretary Pompeo traveled to Seoul to personally meet with President Moon, Foreign Minister Kang and Japanese Foreign Minister Kono immediately after the summit.

Responses toAdditional Questions for the Record Submitted to Tibor Peter Nagy, Jr. by Senator Bob Corker

Question 1. How will the administration treat humanitarian assistance in this review?

Answer. The United States is committed to saving lives through principled humanitarian action that is not associated with predatory or corrupt behavior by parties to the conflict. I understand our humanitarian assistance will continue during the comprehensive review of all U.S. assistance programs to South Sudan.

Question 2. What consideration will be given more broadly to U.S. assistance in the region, to South Sudan’s neighbors, for their unwillingness to counter the financial flows and malign policies in South Sudan that put our long-term investments in each of these countries at risk?

Answer. I understand that the United States is urging regional governments to prevent corrupt South Sudanese leaders from investing or conducting financial transactions within their countries, a policy I intend to vigorously advance if confirmed. The Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD), and all regional and international partners, must also increase pressure on the warring parties to end the conflict. This pressure could include a multilateral arms embargo and targeted sanctions against South Sudanese leaders who continue to obstruct peace.

Question 3. What diplomatic leadership will the administration provide in helping to urgently promote peace and fundamentally alter the current course of destruction end this man-made catastrophe?

Answer. I understand the United States is deeply engaged with regional and international partners to seek an end to the conflict in South Sudan. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s stated view that the only way forward for South Sudan is through a negotiated arrangement for an inclusive transitional government that reflects South Sudan’s diversity, and which is structured to provide checks and balances on political and economic power. If confirmed, I will look into what more can be done to reach this goal in addition to the targeted sanctions, unilateral arms embargo, and other measures imposed over the last several months.

Question 4. How are Gulf countries such as UAE and Qatar, as well as the Governments of Turkey and Egypt, influencing events and geo-political calculations across East Africa and what is the impact of their involvement on U.S. national security interests?
Answer. The Gulf States, Egypt, and Turkey are heavily engaged in and compete for political, security, and economic influence across East Africa. In Somalia, these countries provide considerable humanitarian and security assistance and have major economic investments, particularly in the transportation sector, much of which is constructive and consistent with U.S. interests. A notable exception has been engagement related to the Gulf dispute, where the UAE, in particular, has pressured the Federal Government of Somalia to publicly side with the Quartet (UAE, Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, and Egypt) against Qatar. This has exacerbated tensions between Mogadishu and its Federal Member States and undermined U.S.-backed stabilization and reform efforts.

Regarding Sudan, the Gulf States support Sudan’s engagement with the United States. Saudi Arabia has been active in encouraging more moderate policies. Qatar has been active in encouraging parties to the Darfur conflict to take steps toward a more sustainable peace. Egypt has recently been more engaged with Sudan and Ethiopia to resolve concerns and disagreements regarding the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) and related Nile water usage issues. That said, these countries are competing for influence in Khartoum and have diverse interests on a range of issues in Sudan including the GERD, the Yemen conflict, and Sudan’s position in the Gulf dispute. If confirmed, I will continue to make United States’ priorities known—including ending internal conflict, expanding humanitarian access, countering terrorism, improving regional stability, and advancing respect for human rights—and coordinate with these countries on shared interests.

Question 5. How are Chinese policies and loans also playing into the uncertain economic futures of these countries and the region?

Answer. Studying Africa from outside of government for the past fifteen years, I have become concerned by some aspects of China’s trade and investment with Africa, particularly non-transparent, concessionary lending and overreliance on imported labor for the completion of projects. I believe that China can play a role as a source of capital and knowledge for African development, but that it must apply the highest international standards of openness, inclusivity, transparency, and governance. If confirmed, I hope to engage with China on its role in Africa and, most importantly, work hard to encourage U.S. trade and investment on the continent.

Question 6. What steps is the United States prepared to take should he register as a candidate in July?

Answer. I understand that the administration has made clear that we expect the DRC to hold elections in December and for President Kabila to abide by his commitment to refrain from running or changing the constitution. President Kabila serving as a candidate would clearly be inconsistent with credible elections. If confirmed, I would support a strong administration response if President Kabila were to register as a candidate. I would consider a full range of options, including accelerated targeted sanctions among other steps. I understand the administration’s immediate focus is to continue using the full range of foreign policy tools to press for greater progress on the electoral process and ensure that President Kabila abides by constitutional requirements and does not present himself as a candidate for the December elections.

Question 7. What if any substantive steps will the United States employ prior to the decision date for candidates to register in order to achieve a reasonable electoral process without Kabila?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to continue the administration’s active engagement in pressing for greater progress on the electoral process in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC). As part of continuing U.S. pressure, I am aware that the United States has been clear that it remains prepared to impose additional targeted sanctions, as developments warrant. Steps taken by the DRC Government between June and August will be critical in determining the prospects for credible elections in December. To this end, I understand that the administration is employing the full range of foreign policy tools in support of our objectives. This policy approach includes targeted sanctions; international coordination and pressure, including with our European and African partners as well as the U.N.; public messaging; diplomatic engagement, including senior-level visits; and technical assistance to support a transparent and credible process.

Question 8. How will the United States contribute to support a reasonable election in DRC, including the specific financial commitment, if Kabila selects an alternative candidate to himself?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue U.S. diplomatic efforts to make clear to the DRC Government and the DRC’s electoral commission, the CENI, that the administration stands ready to support a process that is credible and inclusive. I will work closely with USAID, as well as our international donor partners, to determine how best the United States can support a credible, inclusive electoral process in the DRC, possibly through additional programming if there are positive steps.

USAID has provided approximately $37 million in election and political processes support since 2013. USAID is providing civic and voter education to an estimated 1.9 million Congolese through civil society organizations, face-to-face community campaigns, and through a nationwide media campaign. USAID also supported DRC’s leading domestic observer group to monitor voter registration and provide timely recommendations to the CENI. USAID funding also supports democratic activists, such as human rights defenders, and the media, which brings greater transparency to the electoral process.

Question 9. What is the status of U.S. diplomatic efforts to convince other donors to step up to meet these mutual international resource appeals?

Answer. The administration has regular discussions with like-minded allies, including the EU, France, and UK, to discuss the need for greater assistance to Africa to support peace and security, development, and humanitarian efforts, and the need to coordinate assistance among foreign partners. Each of these partners has expressed a willingness to work with us to achieve shared goals related to these critical issues in the region. If confirmed, I will engage our partners regularly to ensure our shared goals and objectives on the Continent are addressed appropriately and in a coordinated manner.

Question 10. How will the United States reinforce and help sustain these courageous steps of this new government while assuring principled expectations of sustained reform and good governance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that United States policy continues to support and encourage the reform agenda of Prime Minister Abiy in Ethiopia. The United States is actively highlighting the many new opportunities for American investment in Ethiopia, even as State and other U.S. agencies continue other political, economic, developmental, and humanitarian support for the people of Ethiopia and their fast-growing economy.

Question 11. What would such reform and improved policies mean for the already strong bilateral relationship with the United States?

Answer. For decades, the United States Government has steadfastly expressed its concern over human rights issues, political and economic freedom, and other matters to the Government of Ethiopia. During those years, the U.S. and Ethiopian Governments have managed to maintain a close and strategic relationship. However, the reforms you have described might be characterized as the dawn of an Ethiopian Government the United States—and the people of Ethiopia—hoped to see for those many years. These reforms, which must be supported and strengthened internally and with the help of Ethiopia’s friends like the United States, will benefit both countries and help deepen our historic and significant relationship.

Question 12. Given that the scheduled election in Zimbabwe on July 30 is a critical juncture to assess the degree to which the new government leaders are committed and implementing fundamental reforms, will the administration send a senior and experienced diplomat to serve as Charge ad interim for the election period?

Answer. I understand that the White House nominated Brian Nichols on June 4 to be the U.S. Ambassador to Zimbabwe. Brian Nichols is a Career Member of the Senior Foreign Service and was most recently the U.S. Ambassador to Peru. It would be ideal if Ambassador Nichols could be quickly confirmed so he could arrive in Zimbabwe before the election. I understand that, in the interim, the current Charge d’Affaires, a member of the Senior Foreign Service with well-established credentials and experience and the confidence of her interlocutors and counterparts in Zimbabwe, will continue to lead the U.S. Embassy in Harare. If confirmed, I commit to giving my immediate attention to this important election and the resources we have deployed to contribute to a successful outcome.

Question 13. How will the United States ensure that real and fundamental reform in Zimbabwe are the minimum necessary criteria for the United States to support any international financial relief of arrears or new financing, especially given the deep corruption and theft of state assets to date?

Answer. I understand that our policy regarding arrears clearance or new international financing for Zimbabwe continues to be guided by the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act (ZDERA), passed with strong bi-partisan support by Congress in 2001. ZDERA directs the Treasury Department, through the U.S. executive directors, to oppose and vote against any new lending or debt relief for Zimbabwe at the International Financial Institutions (IFIs), except for lending intended to support basic human needs or good governance. For this restriction to be lifted, the President must certify that a list of conditions have been satisfied. These conditions include restoration of the rule of law, including respect for freedom of speech and association, a presidential election widely accepted as free and fair or a pre-election environment consistent with international standards, a commitment to legal land reform, and control of the Zimbabwean Armed Forces by an elected civilian government.

I believe strongly in the centrality of these democratic and governance principles and, if confirmed, will interpret them as Congress intended as real and credible benchmarks.

Question 14. To what extent is Uganda likely to remain committed in Somalia on its own regardless of U.S. expectations due to the fiscal value of paying for their security forces?

Answer. The Government of Uganda has repeatedly indicated that it remains steadfast in its participation in the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM). A reduction in international support for the mission, particularly EU-financed troop stipends, could have a negative impact on that position, however.

Question 15. To what extent is Uganda engaged in neighboring DR Congo, and how has that enflamed the region?

Answer. Uganda shares a long border with the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) and hosts over 285,000 Congolese refugees in settlements. Uganda also considers the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), a rebel group active in the DRC whose stated goal is the overthrow of the Ugandan Government, to be a national security threat. ADF forces have been responsible for a number of violent attacks in eastern DRC. For these reasons, Uganda remains engaged with the Government of the DRC from a national security and humanitarian perspective, including having conducted joint military operations against the ADF, and consults with other regional governments about increasing stability in the Great Lakes region. Uganda is also believed to be engaged in the illicit trade of gold from the DRC.

Question 16. To what extent is Uganda working toward diminishing the necessity of foreign assistance, and what does the assistance timetable look like over the last ten years, and projected over the next five?

Answer. Bilateral foreign assistance to Uganda, which aims to promote public health, accountable and transparent governance, economic development, and regional peace and stability, has been holding relatively steady at between $400 million and $500 million over the past several years. With a stated goal of growing the economy to become a middle-income country and diminishing its reliance on foreign assistance, the Government of Uganda has taken on increasing levels of national debt in recent years to develop its infrastructure for national transportation networks and electricity generation. Uganda has the fourth largest proven oil reserves in sub-Saharan Africa. If developed responsibly, Uganda could double its GDP as oil production comes online within the next five years. If confirmed, I will work with the Ugandan Government to leverage these developments and reduce Ugandan reliance on foreign assistance in the medium term.

Question 17. What steps have been taken to more appropriately leverage U.S. cooperation and assistance to achieve a more sustainable Ugandan governance given the many instances of internal policies working at direct cross-purposes to U.S. interests? These include:

- The government massacre of Ugandans at Kasese
- The manipulation and apparent theft of massive UNHCR and WFP resources intended to respond to refugees, including the reported 1 million from South Sudan whose presence is in part due to Uganda’s ongoing support to President Kiir’s man-made crisis.
- Direct manipulation of multiple electoral processes and recent forced parliamentary changes to enable President Museveni to run for years to come.

Answer. I fully concur that our development assistance to any country should carry with it expectations about governance and respect for human rights. If confirmed, I would continue to press for government accountability and reform on such fundamental issues.

I understand that the U.S. Government continues to urge the Government of Uganda to conduct or permit fair and independent investigations into alleged human rights abuses, including the killings in Kasese. We have engaged at a high level with both the Ugandan Government and international assistance providers to address the allegations of fraud in refugee programs, and, if confirmed, I will prioritize our response to ongoing investigative reports.
Our Embassy directly communicates with the Government to raise concerns about arrests and raids of non-profit organizations, as well as police investigations that serve to stifle the Ugandan people’s right to free expression and tarnish Uganda’s global image. If confirmed, I will continue to press for the protection and expansion of democratic rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TIBOR PETER NAGY, JR. BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. If confirmed, what steps will you take to secure access to the Anglophone regions for international and domestic observers to ascertain the veracity of the current accounts of widespread government abuses in the area?

Answer. I am deeply concerned about continuing violence, including against civilians, in the Anglophone regions. If confirmed, I will continue to call for an end to violence and will urge all sides to initiate a broad-based dialogue, without pre-conditions. All elements of Cameroonian society must undertake a genuine, inclusive dialogue to resolve these differences peacefully.

The safety and security of American citizens is of paramount concern. All but mission-essential travel by U.S. Embassy Yaoundé personnel to the Southwest and Northwest Regions is currently prohibited and private American citizens are discouraged from all but essential travel to these regions.

With adequate security, greater access for observers to assess the situation on the ground is key to obtaining accurate information about humanitarian assistance needs and to investigating reports of human rights violations and abuses on both sides. If confirmed, I will work with our Embassy in Yaoundé and international partners to urge the Government of Cameroon to facilitate that access and to hold accountable anyone responsible for human rights violations and abuses, on either side of the conflict.

Question 2. What do you see as the role of the U.S. in addressing this escalating conflict?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with our Embassy in Yaoundé to continue to call for an end to violence in the Anglophone regions and for unfettered humanitarian access, and to urge all sides to initiate a broad-based dialogue without pre-conditions. All elements of Cameroonian society must undertake a genuine, inclusive dialogue to resolve their differences peacefully.

If confirmed, I will condemn the ongoing violence in the Anglophone regions perpetrated by both sides. I will also call on the Government of Cameroon to afford detainees all the rights and protections enshrined in Cameroon’s constitution and consistent with the nation’s international obligations and commitments, and to investigate promptly and transparently all allegations of human rights abuses perpetrated by Cameroonian security forces.

Question 3. If confirmed, what steps will you take to reiterate the imperative that elections are held by the end of the year, and Kabila upholds his commitment to step down?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s pressure on the DRC Government to make clear that we expect the DRC to hold elections in December and that President Kabila will not run for re-election, per his commitments made in December 2016. To this end, I would plan to continue the administration’s policy of employing the full range of foreign policy tools in support of our objectives. This policy approach includes targeted sanctions; international coordination and pressure, including with our European and African partners as well as the U.N.; public messaging; diplomatic engagement, including senior-level visits; and technical assistance to support a transparent and credible process.

Question 4. What steps should be taken to ensure the human rights situation does not deteriorate further?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s active engagement in pressing for greater respect for human rights in the DRC. This includes condemning the excessive use of force by security services against civilians and government attempts to pass laws severely restricting civil liberties, holding accountable those responsible for human rights violations and abuses, supporting the implementation of U.N. resolutions, cooperating with the U.N. Office for the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), and supporting human rights defenders and media freedoms. This also includes consideration of further use of our sanctions authorities against human rights abusers or those responsible for undermining democratic processes in the DRC. Finally, while elections alone will not solve DRC’s human rights problems, they are critical to averting violence and improving the overall human rights climate in the country.

Question 5. How will you coordinate with USUN and the Bureau for International Organizations on efforts to ensure elections by the end of the year?

Answer. Coordination with our Mission to the U.N. and the Bureau for International Organizations has been an important part of our strategy to increase pressure on the DRC to hold elections in December. If confirmed, I will work closely with Ambassador Nikki Haley, who travelled to the DRC in October 2017, to ensure that the U.N. Security Council continues to call for elections and to coordinate on U.N. sanctions. I would also ensure that we continue our close cooperation with the U.N. Organization Stabilization Mission in the DRC (MONUSCO), which is required under its mandate to support the electoral process through a broad array of activities to ensure the holding of credible elections in December 2018.

Question 6. Will you consider asking for the Appointment of a Special Envoy for the Great Lakes to assist with these efforts?

Answer. If confirmed I will closely evaluate all current mechanisms which are in place to promote stability and an improved human rights environment in the Great Lakes region. I will then strongly advocate for any additional policies or processes which I believe will lead to the changes the U.S. seeks in the Great Lakes.

The Department currently has a Senior Coordinator for the Great Lakes, the distinguished Ambassador (ret.) Laurence Wohlers. Ambassador Wohlers has a wealth of Africa experience and is spearheading our engagement with other Great Lakes envoys and key regional actors. If confirmed, I will work closely with Ambassador Wohlers to leverage the coordination, advocacy, and messaging work he is conducting with key African, international, and multilateral partners to maintain pressure on the DRC to hold elections in December.

Questions 7. What do you see as key priorities for the U.S. in the short to medium term in light of the reforms being announced?

Answer. If confirmed, I will insure that United States policy continues to support and encourage the reform agenda of Prime Minister Abiy in Ethiopia. We are actively highlighting the many new opportunities for American investment there, even as we continue our other political, economic, developmental and humanitarian support for the people of Ethiopia and their fast-growing economy. I believe it is of the utmost importance for us to help these reforms take root and flourish.

Question 8. What specific steps, if any, should the U.S. take to support further reforms, especially in the area of democratization?

Answer. I believe we can help advance these reforms by supporting the new government, and deepening our engagement where we can. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts to enhance democratization and good governance in Ethiopia. I expect some of the Prime Minister’s legislative reforms, including changes to the laws on civil society and non-government organizations, will greatly improve our ability to provide support in those areas.

Question 9. Should the U.S. continue to press for expansion of political space through participation in the U.S.—Ethiopia Working Group on Democracy, Governance and Human Rights?

Answer. Yes. This Working Group has been an important and successful venue for both of our governments and, in my opinion, should continue. For decades, the U.S. Government has steadfastly expressed its concern over human rights issues, political and economic freedom and other matters to the Government of Ethiopia. During those years, we have managed to maintain a close and strategic relationship. However, the reforms you have described might be characterized as the dawn of an Ethiopian Government we—and the people of Ethiopia—have hoped to see for those many years. These reforms, which must be supported and strengthened internally and with the help of Ethiopia’s friends like us, will bring us all benefits in deepening our historic and significant relationship. The dialogue created by this Working Group is an important part of our ongoing engagement.

Question 10. How should the United States address the issue of allegations of abuses by security forces, including the military, and how should that impact our security assistance and cooperation?

Answer. The United States has a long history of engagement with the Ethiopian National Defense Forces (ENDF), including in the context of U.N. Peacekeeping operations, where the ENDF has played a crucial and professional role as the largest provider of forces to the U.N. We have also very precisely explained our concerns with regard to reports of abuse or improper conduct by some ENDF personnel, largely inside Ethiopia. If confirmed, I will continue that close engagement and will support the new Prime Minister’s efforts to improve the ENDF at all levels.

Question 11. What diplomatic messages in your view should our Ambassadors in Riyadh, Ankara, Abu Dhabi, and Doha be delivering about the actions these countries are taking that could potentially play a destabilizing role in the Horn of Africa?

The UAE, Saudi Arabia, and Turkey have increased their military presence along the coast of the Horn of Africa—should the United States be concerned about a potential “base race” in this turbulent region, particularly the implications for fragile states like Somalia and Eritrea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Bureaus of European Affairs and Near Eastern Affairs to encourage our Ambassadors in countries engaged in the Gulf crisis to urge host governments to avoid pressuring third countries to take sides in the dispute. This message is particularly important in the Horn of Africa, where a number of fragile states rely heavily on support from both sides to the dispute for economic, political, and security development, including counterterrorism support. It also will be important to avoid a military buildup of opposing forces in this region due to its proximity to strategic shipping lanes and susceptibility to further destabilization.

Question 12. What impact has the dispute between Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and the UAE had on the border dispute between Djibouti and Eritrea? Has any other country stepped in to fill the mediation role previously played by Qatar? Are tensions between Djibouti and Eritrea likely to flare in the near term? Do the tensions between Djibouti and Eritrea pose any threat to our military presence in Djibouti?

Answer. Tensions between Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates have significantly complicated the situation in the region, but I understand they are not likely to precipitate conflict between Djibouti and Eritrea. Though no other nation has stepped in to take over the Qataris’ former mediation role on the border, Djibouti-Eritrea tensions have not worsened and we do not believe the situation on the border constitutes a threat to our military presence in Djibouti. If confirmed, I will urge all parties to disputes in the Gulf region to de-escalate tensions and refrain from any actions that could lead to instability among their neighbors.

Question 13. How would you assess the roles played by the United Arab Emirates and Turkey in Somalia—are they playing constructive roles in supporting international efforts to stabilize the country?

Answer. The United Arab Emirates and Turkey are among many partners that provide security and humanitarian assistance to Somalia. Both are also investing in transportation and other sectors of the Somali economy. The international community seeks to coordinate and deconflict the bilateral assistance efforts in Somalia through structures such as the Somalia Partnership Forum and Comprehensive Approach to Security. I understand the Gulf dispute has been a significant distraction for Somalia, as the UAE has put significant pressure on Mogadishu to side against Qatar, undermining stabilization efforts.

Question 14. News reports indicate that the United Arab Emirates engages directly with Somalia’s nascent Federal Members States, bypassing and/or allegedly seeking to circumvent the federal government at times. How is this direct engagement affecting the formation of relations between the Federal and state governments? In your view, does this have the potential to destabilize the Somali state?

Answer. I understand that the United Arab Emirates and other international partners engage and invest with Somalia’s Federal Member States, and that in some cases these activities have exacerbated tension between federal and regional authorities in Somalia. This tension has distracted the Somali authorities significantly from efforts to advance the federalism process and make progress on security sector reform. Somalia’s long-term stability depends heavily on Mogadishu and its Federal Member States reaching agreement on an appropriate delineation of authorities between national and regional levels.

Question 15. Tensions between the Somali Federal Government and the UAE appear very high right now—what messages should we be conveying to Abu Dhabi about its actions in the country? How might Al Shabaab seek to exploit the current situation? Is the recent disagreement over the legality of Somaliland’s Berbera port deal with DP World linked to the Gulf crisis?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs and our Embassy in Abu Dhabi to emphasize to the UAE that its pressure on Mogadishu over the Gulf crisis runs counter to our shared goals of promoting peace and stability in Somalia. This includes efforts to combat al-Shabaab and promote reconciliation between Mogadishu and Somaliland. I understand that Mogadishu’s challenge of the legality of the DP World’s Berbera port deal with Somaliland has exacerbated tensions between Abu Dhabi and Mogadishu and reflects the political sensitivities surrounding Somali sovereignty issues.

Question 16. South Sudan, plunged into a civil war in 2013 that has been characterized by large-scale attacks on civilians, destruction and looting of civilian property, sexual violence including rape and gang rape, enforced disappearances, arbitrary arrests and prolonged detention, beatings and torture, and extrajudicial executions. Despite public pronouncements of support, the Government has made no progress on establishing a hybrid court as envisioned by the 2015 peace agreement. The U.S. has imposed sanctions on government officials, and imposed a unilateral arms embargo, yet attempts at a U.N. Security Council arms embargo have failed. Will you support a Special Envoy for Sudan and South Sudan?

Answer. I understand that resolving the conflict and resulting humanitarian crisis in South Sudan is a top policy priority for the U.S. Government in Africa. If confirmed, I am committed to leveraging the available tools to achieve our goals for South Sudan effectively and efficiently, including by analyzing the value and impact of a Special Envoy.

Question 17. What should the United States be doing to incentivize each member of the Intergovernmental Authority on Development to prioritize and pursue a sustainable peace in South Sudan?

Answer. Achieving peace in South Sudan will require the assistance of South Sudan’s neighbors. The Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) member states and all regional and international partners must increase pressure on the warring parties to end the conflict. I understand that the United States is urging IGAD member states to prevent corrupt South Sudanese leaders from investing or conducting financial transactions within their countries, a policy I intend to vigorously advance if confirmed. This pressure could include a multilateral arms embargo and targeted sanctions against South Sudanese leaders who continue to obstruct peace. If confirmed, I will reach out to neighboring IGAD countries bilaterally and through multilateral bodies such as the African Union (AU) to urge them to help us end the conflict by pressuring the warring parties, cutting off the flow of arms and ammunition, and stopping illicit financial flows from South Sudan to neighboring countries.

Question 18. What role should the U.S. play in ensuring the peace process includes all relevant stakeholders, not just those who were party to the 2015 Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in South Sudan?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Government and its international partners demanded from the outset the participation of all relevant stakeholders in the Intergovernmental Authority on Development’s High-Level Revitalization Forum (HLRF) peace process. Through three rounds of the ongoing HLRF process, I understand participation has been expanded beyond the original signatories of the 2015 Agreement, to include a coalition of nine opposition parties, civil society members, and the South Sudanese Council of Churches.

Question 19. What further steps do you believe the U.S. can take to support accountability for human rights abuses and crimes against humanity, including accountability for those at senior levels of the South Sudanese Government and opposition?

Answer. I support accountability for human rights abuses in South Sudan. If confirmed, I will press the Government of South Sudan to cooperate with the African Union to establish the Hybrid Court for South Sudan. I would also support multilateral and domestic sanctions on those responsible for human rights abuses and crimes against humanity.

Question 20. What efforts can the U.S. undertake that would further implementation of the 2015 peace agreement?

Answer. I understand that the United States continues to play a very strong role in supporting the full implementation of the Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali. The Embassy in Bamako is particularly active as an observer to the international mediation. In September 2017, the United States backed the establishment of a U.N. sanctions regime. I anticipate working closely with our partners on the U.N. Security Council to find ways to use this tool to pressure the parties to make progress in implementing the Algiers Accord. If confirmed, I intend to work closely with the interagency community and our international and regional partners to identify new pressures and inducements to move the process forward.
Mali will hold presidential elections beginning on July 29. I believe it is essential that we engage early and at a high level with the next President to insist on full implementation of the Algiers Accord.

Question 21. What actions should the U.S. take to help counter the spread of violent extremism in both central and northern Mali?

Answer. I am concerned about the instability in Northern and Central Mali. If confirmed, I intend to look closely at the tools and resources we are utilizing to address this challenge and to work closely with international and regional partners. Ungoverned spaces like in Northern and Central Mali allow bad actors take advantage and exploit drivers of violent extremism. If confirmed, I will continue our ongoing coordination with the Department of Defense, USAID, and our international partners to advance our development, security, and governance objectives in the Sahel, and address drivers of violent extremism.

Question 22. What factors should be taken into consideration prior to resumption of U.S. security assistance for Mali?

Answer. My understanding is that the United States continues to provide assistance to strengthen Malian security institutions and make its security forces better able to address the rapidly growing threat from violent extremists, including through bilateral support to Malian units deploying to the G5 Sahel Joint Force. Mali faces the enormous challenge of addressing a grave terrorist threat while at the same time reforming its security sector. As we help with both efforts, if confirmed I would insist that we continue to consider the forces’ ability to respect human rights, maintain appropriate command and control, develop positive civilian-military relations, address corruption, and re-establish a constructive state presence in unstable areas. I believe the performance of Malian forces is central to peace and security in the country and the region. If confirmed, I will continue our ongoing coordination with the Department of Defense, USAID, and our international partners to advance our development, security, and governance objectives in the Sahel, and address drivers of violent extremism.

Question 23. What do you believe is the right approach for the United States when it comes to security cooperation with Nigeria?

Answer. I believe that the U.S. Government needs a robust inter-agency effort that aims to help the Nigerian Government and civil society address instability across Nigeria while building more capable, professional, and accountable Nigerian security forces that respect human rights and protect civilians. The U.S. Government must employ its full toolkit—including diplomacy, foreign assistance, senior military engagement, and security assistance—to help improve the Nigerian military’s conduct and capabilities, to advance respect for human rights and upholding of the Law of Armed Conflict, to support security sector doctrinal and operational reforms, and to better enable the protection of civilians. We must press the Nigerian Government for credible, transparent, and thorough investigations into allegations of corruption and human rights violations, pursuing accountability for those responsible. I understand that due in part to our deepening military and diplomatic relationship, we are beginning to see positive steps toward change. For example, then acting President Osinbajo established an independent Presidential Investigative Panel in 2017 with a broad mandate to investigate allegations of human rights violations, the Nigerian military has created human rights desks, and the Nigerian Army is also taking increased action to hold soldiers found guilty of abuse to account transparently, in particular through court-martial proceedings in northeast Nigeria. We must continue to work to ensure these first steps lead to real change and accountability. If confirmed, I will ensure that our security cooperation with Nigeria continues to support our goals of respect for human rights and protection of civilians.

Question 24. How can the U.S. strike the right balance between addressing national security and human rights concerns?

Answer. To effectively combat both ISIS-West Africa and Boko Haram, the Nigerian military must become a force capable of effective military operations against asymmetric threats. It must also be a force that protects its citizens and respects human rights. In the press conference during his April 30 visit to the White House, President Buhari reiterated his deep commitment to the principles of human rights as well as the promotion and protection of people’s freedom, even in the process of fighting terror. He also committed to ensure that all documented cases of human rights abuses are investigated and those responsible for violations held accountable for their actions. If confirmed, I will work to hold Nigeria to that commitment while bolstering Nigeria’s long-term ability to maintain peace and security within its own borders.
Question 25. To your knowledge, has anyone been held accountable for the Rann bombing or the Zaria massacre through a transparent legal process?

Answer. As I understand, in December 2016, the Kaduna State Government accepted the findings of the state-level Judicial Commission of Inquiry that the Nigerian Army used “excessive and disproportionate” force in attacks against the Islamic Movement of Nigeria (IMN), which left at least 348 IMN members and one soldier dead in Zaria in December 2015. The Judicial Commission of Inquiry also recommended the prosecution of an army commander and the prosecution of other senior officers as well as ordered the State Commissioner of Police and the Attorney General to commence investigations. I am not aware that anyone accused of wrongdoing by the Judicial Commission of Inquiry has been held to account, but I will look into the matter if confirmed.

I also understand that the Nigerian Government established an independent, civilian-led Presidential Investigative Panel in 2017 with a broad mandate to investigate allegations of human rights abuses by the military, including the events at Zaria in Kaduna State, but that the findings have not yet been made public.

The January 2017 Rann bombing was a terrible tragedy. I understand that the Nigerian Government and military immediately assumed responsibility for the incident. The Nigerian Air Force established a six-person panel to investigate the incident, but I am not aware that that investigation has been made public or if anyone has been punished for wrongdoing. The Nigerian military initiated a number of corrective actions to prevent future such mistakes, including closer coordination with humanitarian organizations in the region and U.S.-provided air-to-ground integration training. If confirmed, I will prioritize human rights and the protection of civilians, and press the Nigerian Government to hold those found guilty of wrongdoing to account.

Question 26. If confirmed, what specific actions will you take as Assistant Secretary of State to support accountability for the Rann bombing and the Zaria massacre?

Answer. If confirmed, I will underscore to the Nigerian Government that human rights abuses and impunity for such violations tarnish Nigeria’s international reputation, undermine the trust of its citizens, impede counterterrorism efforts, and hinder U.S. ability to partner with Nigeria. I will urge the Nigerian Government to carry-out credible investigations into allegations of security force abuses and undertake more transparent efforts to end impunity and ensure accountability. The State Department will also continue to use its annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices and other reporting to document publicly human rights concerns.

I understand that in 2017, the Nigerian Government created an independent, civilian-led Presidential Investigative Panel in 2017 with a broad mandate to investigate allegations of human rights abuses by the military, including the events at Zaria in Kaduna State. If confirmed, I will press the Nigerian Government to release these findings publicly and hold those found guilty of wrongdoing to account.

Question 27. Should we condition the delivery of Super Tucanos to the Government of Nigeria on assurances that the Government would share with us the findings of the investigation into either incident [Zaria or Rann]?

Answer. It is my understanding that the United States sale of twelve A-29 aircraft to the Nigerian Government was concluded earlier this year. The Department did not specifically condition delivery, but this sale includes training and other components that are aimed at improving the professionalism of Nigerian security forces, and have a specific emphasis on protecting human rights, preventing harm to civilians, and upholding the Law of Armed Conflict. The sale is part of a broader strategy that, if confirmed I intend to continue, that aims to support a more capable and professional Nigerian security force that respects human rights and upholds the Law of Armed Conflict, and is better able to protect civilians from terrorism. If confirmed, I will urge timely and credible investigations into allegations of human rights abuses, broader and more transparent efforts to end impunity, and accountability for all individuals implicated in wrongdoing.

Question 28. If confirmed, how will you work with the Government of Nigeria to address restriction of access, the lack of safety assurances, and bureaucratic impediments to ensure that U.S. assistance is delivered effectively and efficiently to those in greatest need?

Answer. I share your commitment to ensuring that U.S. humanitarian assistance is delivered effectively and efficiently to those in need. The Nigerian military provides escort and protection to humanitarian workers while also conducting offensive operations and protecting the civilian population from attack in a large geographic area. If confirmed, I will continue to support U.S. assistance to increase the capacity... and professionalism of the Nigerian military. I will also encourage improved civilian-military coordination and increased dialogue and coordination between the military and humanitarian responders, and encourage the Government of Nigeria to reduce any hurdles to getting life-saving assistance to its population.

Question 29. Do you believe climate change is real and that human activities that release of greenhouse gases into the atmosphere are the principle catalyst for climate change?

Answer. The facts indicate the earth is getting warmer and that there is likely a human component and that Africa may be especially negatively impacted. As a global leader in innovation, I believe the United States will continue support for developing countries’ energy, land use, and resilience activities where mutually beneficial to our broader foreign policy, economic development, and national security objectives.

Question 30. It was recently reported that the White House has weighed whether to deliberately ignore climate change. Given that the threats from climate change can be seen across the African continent, do you believe that it is wise to ignore or debate the issue when it comes to engaging African leaders?

Answer. I believe the United States supports a balanced approach to climate mitigation, economic development, and energy security that takes into consideration the realities of the global energy mix. Currently, the United States guiding principles are universal access to affordable and reliable energy, and open, competitive markets that promote efficiency and energy security, not only for the United States but for other countries, including those in Africa. Over the past 10 years, the United States has shown that it can reduce emissions while growing the economy and promoting energy security. The United States’ net greenhouse gas emissions have fallen by 12 percent since 2005 even as the economy has grown by 17.5 percent, adjusted for inflation. I believe the United States will continue supporting a balanced approach to climate mitigation, economic development, and energy security that takes into consideration the realities of the global energy mix.

Question 31. What will be your strategy for engaging with African countries on challenges associated with climate change?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with other countries on advancing innovation in the development and deployment of a broad array of technologies that will ultimately enable us to achieve our climate and energy security goals. Currently, the United States, through our work with Power Africa, the Government has been able to catalyze some $60 billion in energy investments that will provide modern energy services for roughly 300 million citizens across Africa by 2030. Beyond energy, I believe the United States will continue to help our partner countries reduce emissions from forests and other lands, to adapt to the impacts of climate change, and to respond to natural disasters.

Question 32. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my career in the Foreign Service, I had the good fortune to perform work that allowed me to support democracy and human rights on a routine basis. Some examples that I find particularly notable include the following:

• Cameroon (Deputy Chief of Mission 1990–1993). When the Cameroon Government, largely in response to domestic instability and pressure from the U.S., allowed the first-ever multi-party Presidential elections, I led the U.S. Embassy training and monitoring efforts. I managed to obtain permission for the National Democratic Institute’s (NDI) delegation to be admitted to the country and to observe the elections, and dispatched Embassy observers to key voting areas.
After the Governing Party claimed victory there was considerable political instability and the Government responded with force. I traveled to the English-speaking part of Cameroon to personally investigate the killing of demonstrators and submitted a report for inclusion in the annual Human Rights report.

• Nigeria (Deputy Chief of Mission 1993–1995). My time coincided with the illegal coup of General Abacha and the imprisonment of Mashood Abiola, the rightful winner of the 1993 elections. I maintained close personal relations with leading human rights figures, including making high profile visits to them after their imprisonment. I was the Embassy’s contact with the highest profile “house arrestee”—General Obasanjo—whom I visited at his farm and served as the conduit for his correspondence with segments of the U.S. Government. Obasanjo subsequently became President of Nigeria.
• Guinea (Ambassador 1996–1999). The Guinean Government arrested Alpha Conde, the major opposition leader and kept him totally incommunicado under house arrest. I pressed the Government and obtained permission for a group of Western Ambassadors to visit him, and provided him with materials to write, read, and listen to the radio. I also maintained ongoing dialogue with all of the opposition leaders. Alpha Conde subsequently won the presidential elections and is currently Guinea’s President.

• Ethiopia (Ambassador 1999–2002). I opened the Ambassador’s Residence on an ongoing basis for round table discussions with key opposition leaders, despite the Ethiopian Government’s strong disdain for my actions. My residence was the one place they could gather and communicate unhindered and not fear arrest. I also personally investigated reports of the Government killing demonstrators in a remote part of the country.

Question 33. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Africa in your view? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Democratic deficiencies contribute to transnational threats across the region; therefore, I believe we must help states and communities foster legitimate, inclusive political systems that reduce fragility and mitigate risks of violent conflict and instability. The African continent has made important gains on democracy and institution building; however, those gains are fragile and must be supported over time. Elections are widely accepted as the norm in the region, but there is an increasing frequency of electoral events that contribute to democratic backsliding rather than consolidation. In many countries, corruption is endemic and state institutions remain weak. In addition to corruption, fiscal indiscipline and unaccountable public financial management systems in Africa will impact economic growth and democratic governance. Strong, accountable, and democratic institutions, sustained by a deep commitment to the rule of law and human rights, generate greater prosperity and stability, and meet with greater success in mitigating conflict and ensuring security than their less democratic counterparts.

Question 34. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Africa? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Democracy is the foundation for a country’s success. African voters understand how important democracy is, and they support it. When they are given the opportunity to vote, they do it enthusiastically. But again, elections alone do not define a democracy, particularly as some incumbents in Africa and elsewhere narrow or close altogether the space for competition, participation, and a free press long before an election is held. A healthy democracy requires checks and balances, including a strong judiciary and legislature, competitive political parties, a free press, and an engaged civil society. If confirmed, I am dedicated to strengthening democratic norms and institutions on the continent, which has made important, but fragile democracy and governance gains. I will also promote the rule of law, respect for human rights, adherence to constitutionally mandated term limits, and strong democratic institutions, which are all fundamental to a country’s peace, security, and prosperity.

Question 35. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues within the Department and at USAID to strategically apply resources to democracy, human rights, and governance (DRG) programs critical for safeguarding national security, fostering global prosperity, asserting U.S. influence and leadership, and ensuring foreign assistance programs are sustainable and effective. Recognizing the foundational importance of DRG programs to sustainable development, I will seek to advance these principles in Africa by utilizing resources to promote the rule of law and access to justice, respect for human and civil rights, credible and legitimate elections, a politically active civil society, and accountable and citizen-centered democratic governance. Working in partnership with African Governments and civil society, if confirmed, I will continue to support programs which strengthen governance institutions and protect the democratic and development gains that have been made across the continent and to prevent democratic backsliding.
Question 36. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Washington and in Africa? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working with a broad spectrum of actors from African civil society. A robust and diverse civil society is imperative for the achievement of a peaceful and prosperous Africa. I will support mechanisms to protect human rights and respond to abuses and provide assistance to civil society organizations for human rights monitoring activities. I will strive to empower all Africans with particular emphasis on engaging and empowering women and youth to constructively shape and participate in their social, political, and economic environments. Civil society continues to face challenges to its role in representing and advocating for citizens, particularly where the enabling environment is closing or closed; therefore, I am committed to promoting and protecting the role of civil society as an essential element of citizen-centered democratic governance. I will support the development of the institutional architecture to support victims, enhance access to justice and promote voices that encourage local dialogue among Africans, respect the rule of law, foster civil society, and recognize the value of independent media.

Question 37. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working with all democratically engaged actors on the Continent, including political opposition parties. I will focus on enabling and supporting credible electoral processes that are participatory, representative, and inclusive. I will encourage engagement by key actors within civil society, advocate for independent national elections commissions, promote of minority representation in government, and support voter education and election observation programs. I will also encourage policies to increase women’s, youth’s and marginalized groups’ political participation as voters, civil society members and leaders, political party leadership, and office holders at all levels of government.

Question 38. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with African leaders on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Africa?

Answer. If confirmed, I will champion a free press and open media in line with the National Security Strategy, which states, “An informed and engaged citizenry is the fundamental requirement for a free and resilient nation.” As disinformation and manipulation work best in a monopolized information space, I will work with allies and partners to encourage and support professional, balanced, and fact-based reporting, and expose and counter hostile disinformation campaigns. I will support efforts to help civil society and independent media protect themselves from attacks by hostile actors and draconian laws restricting press freedoms.

Question 39. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to advance democratic values and counter actors attempting to undermine democratic institutions and promote authoritarian objectives across sub-Saharan Africa. As disinformation and manipulation work best in a monopolized information space, I will work with allies and partners to encourage and support professional, balanced, and fact-based reporting, and expose and counter hostile disinformation campaigns. I am committed to partnering with civil society and independent media to help them protect themselves from attacks by hostile actors, and I will take proactive stands against the arbitrary or unlawful use of surveillance technologies by malicious actors.

Question 40. Will you and your Bureau leadership team actively engage with African interlocutors on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Ensuring respect for internationally recognized worker rights and high labor standards promotes a level playing field for U.S. workers and helps create stronger trading partners for the United States. Independent trade unions are one of the fundamental building blocks for any democratic society and are important partners for the State Department in many countries. If confirmed, I will continue to support workers’ ability to form and join independent trade unions of their choice.
Question 41. The United States has been a loud voice globally in the struggle against discrimination, and specifically against discrimination towards women and members of the LGBTI community. What kind of efforts do you envision undertaking to help move countries to uphold their international obligations to protect the rights of all of their citizens and oppose discrimination?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to protecting the fundamental rights and freedoms of all citizens, particularly historically marginalized or persecuted populations. The safety and security of all citizens, including LGBTI persons, is of the utmost importance; therefore, I will ensure our approach in Africa, first and foremost, does no harm. I will encourage our Posts to develop their strategies through regular discussions with local LGBTI community and civil society partners so that we can avoid sending messages or taking actions that might be counter-productive or dangerous to the community. I will also raise LGBTI issues in the context of larger human rights concerns wherever possible. And finally, I will support and encourage the development of local voices in support of LGBTI rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TIBOR PETER NAGY, JR. BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Ambassador Nagy, as you know, the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo is increasingly worrisome. We are nearly 18 months past the end of President Kabila’s second and final term in office. Violence and conflict have displaced more than 5 million people and many more face severe food insecurity.

Elections have been announced for December, but notwithstanding an agreement brokered by DRC’s Roman Catholic bishops, several leading opposition figures, including former Governor Moise Katumbi, have thus far been unable to return to the country, due to what many believe are trumped-up legal proceedings.

Question 1. If confirmed, what will you do to support the return of free and fair elections?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration’s pressure on the DRC Government to make clear that we expect the DRC to hold inclusive and transparent elections in December and that President Kabila will not run for re-election, per his commitments made in December 2016. To this end, I would plan to continue the administration’s policy of employing the full range of foreign policy tools in support of our objectives. This policy approach includes targeted sanctions; international coordination and pressure, including with our European and African partners as well as the U.N.; public messaging; diplomatic engagement, including senior-level visits; and technical assistance to support a transparent and credible process.

Question 2. If confirmed, would you prioritize nominating an Ambassador for the DRC?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to working closely with the Secretary and the White House to identify qualified candidates for key leadership positions. Pending the appointment and confirmation of a new Ambassador, we have a talented, capable, and experienced career diplomat in place as Chargé d’Affaires. Jennifer Haskell and her team have faithfully carried out our policy of pressing the DRC Government on the importance of holding credible elections in December 2018 and a subsequent peaceful, democratic transfer of power.

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my career in the Foreign Service, I had the good fortune to perform work that allowed me to support democracy and human rights on a routine basis. Some examples that I find particularly notable include the following:

I maintained close personal relations with leading human rights figures, including making high profile visits to them after their imprisonment. I was the Embassy’s contact with the highest profile “house arrestee”—General Obasanjo—whom I visited at his farm and served as the conduit for his correspondence with segments of the U.S. Government. Obasanjo subsequently became President of Nigeria.

- Guinea (Ambassador 1996–1999). The Guinean Government arrested Alpha Conde, the major opposition leader and kept him totally incommunicado under house arrest. My residence was the one place they could gather and communicate unhindered and not fear arrest. I also personally investigated reports of the Government killing demonstrators in a remote part of the country.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I will pursue the same policies I did while managing U.S. embassies in Africa—which included Americans, local employees, and third country nationals of diverse backgrounds. I insisted on equal and respectful treatment of everyone; immaterial of local cultural, religious, or ethnic practices. I received several awards during my Foreign Service Career for my professional and caring management of my people, and my mentoring of junior staff. While serving as diplomat-in-residence at the University of Oklahoma (2002–2003) I made it a priority to recruit Native Americans for the State Department from throughout the region.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will continue my past practice of frequent meetings, personal coaching and mentoring sessions to reinforce the precepts of equality, fairness, and non-discrimination. I will also take a pro-active approach to immediately address any problems which arise and correct any perceptions of discrimination or a hostile working environment—whether in Washington or in the field.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TIBOR PETER NAGY, JR. BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. Are you familiar with the National Guard’s State Partnership Program in which state national guards establish mutually beneficial partnerships with foreign militaries? The Indiana National Guard established a partnership program with the Republic of Niger in January 2017. If confirmed, do you commit to working with me to strengthen this relationship?

Answer. Yes. I am familiar with the National Guard’s State Partnership Program, and if confirmed, I will work with you to reinforce the Indiana National Guard’s work in Niger, in close coordination with the Department of Defense.

Question 2. What steps can or should we take to encourage more private investment in Africa, particularly in high-risk markets? What specific steps should be taken with respect to corruption?

Answer. If confirmed, I would look at encouraging African countries to reduce constraints on investment, strengthen rule of law and work to ensure a competitive environment for private investment. Reducing corruption would be an integral part of this effort, as it will help to mitigate risks that often scare away investors. To help prevent and combat corruption, I would also, if confirmed, support measures to increase transparency, public accountability, and rule of law.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TIBOR PETER NAGY, JR. BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER MURPHY

Question 1. The United States has increasingly relied on our military as the primary mode of engagement with African countries since the September 11 attacks. The Obama administration increased military spending and deployed more troops to combat terrorism across Africa. Under President Trump, the number of U.S. forces in Africa has increased by nearly 1,500 to total 7,500. In 2017, U.S. troops were deployed to 50 of Africa’s 54 countries. Military advisers now outnumber diplomats in embassies across Africa:

• As the African continent continues to grow in population and economic importance, do you believe the United States needs to recalibrate the balance between military and non-military engagement with African countries? Do you believe our Ambassadors have sufficient input in, and oversight of, U.S. military assistance offered to host nation governments?

Answer. I believe there is a link between economic development and peace and security within Africa. Without a sustained diplomatic engagement and programs emphasizing critical human rights norms, democratic processes, and good governance, peace and security in the region will remain unattainable. If confirmed, I will work closely with my DOD and USAID colleagues to ensure there is a balanced approach to policy and resource allocation, and afford our Ambassadors the tools necessary to provide sufficient input in, and oversight of, U.S. military assistance.

Question 2. Following the tragic death of four U.S. service members in Niger last year and one in Somalia last week, are you concerned that U.S. troops are being drawn into harm’s way during these supposedly non-combat missions? If U.S. troops can reasonably be assumed to encounter combat situations, should the administration be required to seek additional authorization from Congress?

Answer. I respect Congress’s role in authorizing the use of military force and in providing oversight on these issues. I understand that the administration is not seeking any new or additional authority to use military force.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO TIBOR PETER NAGY, JR. BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. I had an amendment that was included in the FY 2017 NDAA (Section 385) that gave combatant commanders the flexibility to help support State and USAID counter violent extremism (CVE) programs through shared resources, which would in turn help DOD’s mission. Can you speak to how you would work with AFRICOM in this position to take advantage of this authority and if you would commit to working with AFRICOM to ensure strong proposals are sent to address CVE challenges in Africa?
Answer. I understand State, Department of Defense, and USAID are coordinating Section 385 proposals this year giving combatant commanders the needed flexibility to counter violent extremism in Africa. If confirmed, I will ensure that our CVE policy and programmatic coordination with the Department of Defense, USAID, and others is continuous and comprehensive, and I will commit to working with AFRICOM to ensure strong proposals are sent to advance our CVE objectives in Africa.

Niger

Question 2. The number of U.S. special operations forces in Africa over the past years has dramatically increased, especially compared to our diplomatic presence. I understand that following the attack in Niger last October that led the death of four U.S. service members and the need to address other strategic threats, these force levels are currently under review for reduction. In this position, if confirmed, you will be responsible for ensuring that the U.S. Government has the appropriate balance between our diplomatic, development and military efforts to achieve our foreign policy objectives in Africa. I have serious concerns and questions about our “train, advise, assist, and accompany” missions, particularly in Africa, and believe our diplomatic efforts should be prioritized in our overall strategy. If confirmed, will you report back to me by the end of this calendar year to provide your assessment of our diplomatic strategy and whether it is appropriately balanced with our military efforts in Africa? Will you also commit to informing SFRC on a bi-annual basis, beginning this fall, on the status of coordination between the Department of State and DOD on decisions regarding military operations, specifically AFRICOM coordination between AFRICOM and our Chief of Mission in Africa? In both briefings, will you commit to providing your candid assessment even if they are not aligned with DOD?

Answer. I believe there is a critical link between democracy, human rights, and governance and peace and security within Africa. Without a sustained diplomatic effort and programs emphasizing critical human rights norms, democratic processes, and good governance, peace and security in the region will remain unattainable. If confirmed, I will work closely with my DOD and USAID colleagues to ensure there is a balanced approach to policy and resource allocation, and will provide SFRC my candid assessment of the status of interagency coordination in Africa. If confirmed, I look forward to maintaining a constructive dialogue with you on these issues.

Somalia

Question 3. Do you agree that the State Department and USAID have the appropriate expertise to conduct stabilization operations in the post conflict environment of Somalia? Do you agree that a lack of embassy or State Department presence, a lack of security and logistics capability has inhibited the State Department from conducting stabilization operations in Somalia? Can you provide some examples of where this stabilization authority could be useful in helping USAID and State gain access to areas in Somalia where security and logistics issues are currently preventing them from implementing post-conflict assistance?

Answer. I am confident that the Department of State and USAID have personnel with the requisite talent and expertise available to implement stabilization programming within Somalia. I agree that lack of presence, security, and logistics are severe impediments to such efforts. I believe that Department of Defense assistance would be most useful in enabling Department of State and USAID activities in those areas of southern and central Somalia that remain contested by al-Shabaab and other elements opposed to expanding the reach of legitimate governance, and where DoD-enabled partner forces from the African Union Mission in Somalia and Somali security forces are currently operating.

Fragile States

Question 4. AFRICOM Commander General Waldhauser stated in his 2017 testimony to Congress, “In Africa, weak and ineffective governance is the leading cause of state fragility. According to the 2017 Fund for Peace ‘Fragile State Index,’ 15 of the 25 most fragile countries in the world are in Africa.” One aspect of addressing fragile states is working to improve weak and ineffective governance which is led by State and USAID but also include Commerce, Treasury, Justice, the CDC, NASA and more. In this position, how would you improve the effectiveness of U.S. Government efforts to prevent violent conflict in fragile states in Africa? What would a more effective interagency approach to conflict prevention in fragile states in Africa look like? What changes in interagency goals, coordination structures, funding, and authorities will be needed?
Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to addressing the root causes of conflict in sub-Saharan Africa. There is a critical need to address democratic deficiencies that contribute to transnational threats. States and communities need assistance to foster legitimate, inclusive, and transparent political systems that reduce fragility and mitigate risks of violent conflict. I believe in an interagency approach to foster democratic governance, the rule of law, and respect for human rights. Current efforts, such as the Security Governance Initiative, rely on expertise from throughout the U.S. Government to strengthen the governance and effectiveness of security and justice institutions.

Niger

Question 5. The number of U.S. special operations forces in Africa over the past years has dramatically increased, especially compared to our diplomatic presence. I understand that following the attack in Niger last October that led the death of four U.S. service members and the need to address other strategic threats, these force levels are currently under review for reduction. In this position, if confirmed, you will be responsible for ensuring that the U.S. Government has the appropriate balance between our diplomatic, development and military efforts to achieve our foreign policy objectives in Africa. I have serious concerns and questions about our “train, advise, assist, and accompany” missions, particularly in Africa, and believe our diplomatic efforts should be prioritized in our overall strategy.

• If confirmed, will you report back to me by the end of this calendar year to provide your assessment of our diplomatic strategy and whether it is appropriately balanced with our military efforts in Africa? Will you also commit to informing SFRC on a bi-annual basis, beginning this fall, on the status of coordination between the Department of State and DOD on decisions regarding military operations, specifically the coordination between AFRICOM and our Chief of Missions in Africa? In both briefings, will you commit to provide your candid assessment even if they are not aligned with DOD?

Answer. I believe there is a critical link between democracy, human rights, and governance and peace and security within Africa. Without a sustained diplomatic effort and programs emphasizing critical human rights norms, democratic processes, and good governance, peace and security in the region will remain unattainable. If confirmed, I will work closely with my DOD and USAID colleagues to ensure there is a balanced approach to policy and resource allocation, and will provide SFRC my candid assessment of the status of interagency coordination in Africa. If confirmed, I look forward to maintaining a constructive dialogue with you on these issues.

Niger (follow-up)

Question 6. Thank you for your responses, though I would like a more direct answer to my question on Niger. Will you meet with me no later than December 31, 2018 to provide your assessment of our diplomatic strategy in Africa and whether it is appropriately balanced with our military efforts? Will you also commit to informing SFRC on a bi-annual basis on the status of coordination between the Department of State and DOD on decisions regarding military operations, specifically the coordination between AFRICOM and our Chief of Missions in Africa?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed I would be pleased to meet with you before the end of this calendar year to discuss our diplomatic strategy in Africa. Additionally, please know that I understand the importance of engaging with Congress and providing information regarding State Department efforts across the globe. If confirmed, and when asked, my staff and I would be happy to brief Members and staff of the Senate Foreign Relations committee regarding the Bureau’s work across Africa, including the efforts of our Chiefs of Mission and our coordination with other agencies.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Tibor Peter Nagy, Jr. by Senator Cory A. Booker

Question 1. How do you plan to rethink our humanitarian and political engagement in South Sudan?

Answer. I agree that the situation in South Sudan is urgent. If confirmed, I will work with interagency and international partners to assess U.S. humanitarian and political engagement in South Sudan in order to help the South Sudanese people achieve the peace and security they deserve.
Question 2. If confirmed, what steps will you take to reach out to the neighboring countries and put pressure on them to put forth a regional effort to end the war in South Sudan?

Answer. Achieving peace in South Sudan will require the assistance of South Sudan's neighbors. If confirmed, I will reach out to those neighboring countries bilaterally and through multilateral bodies such as the Intergovernmental Authority on Development (IGAD) and the African Union (AU) to urge them to help end the conflict by pressuring the warring parties, cutting off the flow of arms and ammunition, and stopping illicit financial flows from South Sudan to neighboring countries.

Question 3. The U.S. has advocated for sanctions and an arms embargo at the U.N. Security Council. If the Security Council does not back this call, what should the U.S. do next?

Answer. I believe the United States should continue pushing for sanctions and an arms embargo at the U.N. Security Council as appropriate. If the Security Council does not back the U.S. position, the United States has an array of authorities that can be used to apply domestic sanctions. If confirmed, I will also engage with international and regional partners to enact similar measures.

Question 4. Do you believe AFRICOM’s role in Niger is helping us to meet our development goals in the Sahel?

Answer. I believe that security is a necessary condition for development but not sufficient alone to bring it about. AFRICOM’s work and U.S. Government support of Niger has been critical to maintaining security for a country facing terrorist threats on three of its borders with a relatively small and overstretched military of 15,000. These trends continue to spill over from neighboring Mali and Nigeria. There are 129,500 internally displaced Nigerians and the country is host to some 167,000 refugees from neighboring Mali and Nigeria. These trends further add to political instability and create unique development challenges, making it increasingly difficult for development assistance implementers to work safely in the field. So long as Niger is vulnerable to debilitating attacks from terrorist threats, development efforts will face significant challenges. U.S. security assistance through AFRICOM helps meet these important challenges by seeking to improve Niger's ability to defend itself against threats from violent extremist organizations both within and outside its borders. If confirmed, I would look to continue this important cooperation and look for greater opportunities to bring development and governance assistance into newly secured areas.

Question 5. Do you believe that AFRICOM is effectively coordinated with the State Department and USAID?

Answer. While I would need to be confirmed and in the job before I can completely determine this, I understand that there is good coordination between AFRICOM and the State Department and USAID. At the policy level, discussions among the leaders of the three organizations set common policy that drives diplomatic engagement as well as development and security sector engagement. The AFRICOM Commander, Assistant Secretary for African Affairs, and USAID Assistant Administrator for African Affairs hold a yearly African Strategic Dialogue (ASD) to establish common goals and direction for their organizations. Beyond this, I understand that there are regular conversations between the Bureau leadership and AFRICOM to ensure consistency in strategic direction and messaging. At the country team level, where programs are enacted, I understand that strong relationships among the chiefs of mission, the USAID country directors, and the senior defense officials exist. Finally, my understanding is that each of these entities exchanges advisors to provide policy and technical advice.

Question 6. If confirmed, how do you plan to ensure that our military operations in the Sahel are coordinated with State Department and USAID?

Answer. I share your belief that diplomacy and development are essential components of a successful and sustainable strategy in the Sahel and that we must coordinate closely with our Defense Department counterparts. Chiefs of Mission, their staff, and AFRICOM routinely engage as required by Presidential directive and U.S. law with regard to AFRICOM activities. In support of our Chiefs of Mission, the State Department coordinates closely with the Department of Defense and participates in the interagency process to determine regional strategic priorities in the Sahel. If confirmed, I will ensure that our coordination with the Department of Defense is continuous and comprehensive, and I will pursue the resources necessary to advance our development and governance objectives in the Sahel.
Question 7. How will you make sure that President Kabila understands that he cannot run for a third term, and that the elections should happen before the end of the year?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration's pressure on the DRC Government, including President Kabila, to make clear that we expect the DRC to hold elections in December and for President Kabila to abide by his commitment to refrain from running or changing the constitution. To this end, I would expect to employ the full range of foreign policy tools in support of our objectives. This approach includes targeted sanctions; international coordination and pressure, including with our European and African partners as well as the U.N.; public messaging; diplomatic engagement, including senior-level visits; and, technical assistance to support a transparent and credible process.

Question 8. Would you be in favor of sanctions on Kabila’s family in the event he runs again or delays elections further?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the administration's pressure on the DRC Government, including President Kabila, to make clear that we expect the DRC to hold elections in December and for President Kabila to abide by his commitment to refrain from running or changing the constitution. This would include consideration of further use of our sanctions authorities, as appropriate, both to press President Kabila to hold credible elections, as now scheduled for December 2018, and to step down from power as mandated by the DRC’s constitution, as well as in response to steps that undermine a credible electoral process or respect for fundamental rights. To this end, if confirmed, I will work closely with the Department of the Treasury on possible further DRC sanctions designations.

Question 9. If confirmed, will you urge President Trump and Secretary Pompeo to appoint an Ambassador to DRC so that we have a confirmed Ambassador in place prior to the planned December elections?

Answer. Regarding the status of specific Presidential appointments, I would defer to the White House. If confirmed, I am committed to working closely with the Secretary and the White House to identify qualified candidates for key leadership positions. Pending the appointment and confirmation of a new Ambassador, we have a talented, capable, and experienced career diplomat in place as Chargé d’Affaires. Jennifer Haskell and her team have repeatedly pressed the DRC Government on the importance of holding credible elections in December 2018 and a subsequent peaceful, democratic transfer of power.

Question 10. How has the Gulf dispute affected the stability of the Horn of Africa?

Answer. The Gulf crisis has intensified competition between the Gulf States across the Horn, whether on political, commercial, or security issues.

In the case of Somalia, Gulf States have pressured the Federal Government of Somalia to take sides in the dispute. Some Gulf countries have also engaged directly with Somalia’s Federal Member States on political and economic issues in a manner that has exacerbated tension between federal and regional authorities. This tension has distracted the Somali authorities significantly from efforts to advance the federalism process and make progress on security sector reform. Somalia’s long-term stability depends heavily on Mogadishu and its Federal Member States reaching agreement on an appropriate delineation of authorities between national and regional levels.

Question 11. If confirmed, how will you tackle this issue?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with my counterparts in the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs and our Embassies in the region to emphasize to relevant Gulf partners that pressuring countries in the horn of Africa to take sides in the Gulf dispute runs counter to our shared goals of promoting peace and stability in the region. In Somalia, I will discourage partners from engaging with Somalia’s Federal Member States in a manner that undermines Somali national unity and distracts from stabilization and reform efforts. These include efforts to combat al-Shabaab and promote progress on federalism and reconciliation between Mogadishu and its Federal Member States.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to David Schenker by Senator Robert Menendez

In a June 10, 2018 article in the Wall Street Journal titled “U.S. Pushes to Avert ‘Catastrophic’ U.A.E. Attack on Yemen Port,” an unnamed U.S. official characterized the administration as giving the U.A.E. a “blinking yellow light” for the operation.
In a June 11, 2018 Press Statement, Secretary Pompeo said “I have spoken with Emirati leaders and made clear our desire to address their security concerns while preserving the free flow of humanitarian aid and life-saving commercial imports.”

Question 1. Did any Senate-confirmed individual in the U.S. Government explicitly communicate U.S. opposition to military operations at the Hudaydah Port?

Answer. I understand that the administration supports a political settlement negotiated through U.N. mediation, not a military solution, to resolve the conflict and to ensure the critical goal of continued humanitarian access.

Question 2. What did the U.S. specifically offer to address Emirati security concerns in Hudaydah in order to dissuade the current military operations?

Answer. Acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield has publicly testified that the United States has been consistently clear with Saudi, Emirati, and Yemeni officials at every level that the destruction of critical infrastructure or disruption of the delivery of vital humanitarian aid and commercial goods is unacceptable. I understand that the administration supports a political settlement negotiated through U.N. mediation, not a military solution, to resolve the conflict and to ensure the critical goal of continued humanitarian access.

Question 3. What is the U.S. recommendation for “preserving the free flow of humanitarian and commercial imports” at the port, and is the U.S. recommendation shared by the U.N. Special Envoy for Yemen?

Answer. The United Nations has said the port of Hudaydah receives as much as 70 percent of the imports arriving in Yemen. I understand the administration continues to stress, at the highest levels, to the United States’ foreign partners and Coalition leadership the need to avoid any action that disrupts the flow of humanitarian assistance and commercial goods through Hudaydah port. In his June 13 statement, the U.N. Special Envoy to Yemen Martin Griffiths expressed concerns about the serious consequences a military conflict in Hudaydah could have on the dire humanitarian situation in Yemen—asking the parties to constructively engage with his office. The Department of State has said it supports the efforts of the U.N. Special Envoy and believes that the conflict can only be resolved through a comprehensive political agreement. In the Secretary of State’s statement on June 11, he called on the parties to honor their commitments to the U.N. Special Envoy, support the political process, and ensure access for humanitarian aid and critical commercial goods.

Question 4. In a June 10, 2018 article in the Wall Street Journal titled “U.S. Pushes to Avert ‘Catastrophic’ U.A.E. Attack on Yemen Port,” an unnamed U.S. official characterized the administration as giving the U.A.E. a “blinking yellow light” for the operation. In a June 11, 2018 Press Statement, Secretary Pompeo said “I have spoken with Emirati leaders and made clear our desire to address their security concerns while preserving the free flow of humanitarian aid and life-saving commercial imports.” Is there a “red line” for the Emirati operations at Hudaydah, which if crossed would result in cessation of U.S. military support?

Answer. The administration has stated that it continues to provide limited support to the Coalition in support of the Republic of Yemen Government and that the support includes efforts to improve Coalition process and procedures, including regarding compliance with the law of armed conflict and best practices for reducing the risk of civilian casualties. Acting Assistant Secretary David Satterfield has publicly testified that the United States has been consistently clear with Saudi, Emirati, and Yemeni officials, at every level, that destruction of critical infrastructure or disruption of the delivery of vital humanitarian aid and commercial goods is unacceptable. I understand that the administration supports a political settlement negotiated through U.N. mediation, not a military solution, to resolve the conflict and to ensure the critical goal of continued humanitarian access.

Question 5. In Secretary Pompeo’s April 12, 2018 responses to my Questions for the Record, he stated that if confirmed he would urge the UAE Government to conduct a thorough investigation of its detainee practices, to include allowing the International committee of the Red Cross to have regular access to the centers.

- Can you now confirm that the State Department has indeed urged the UAE Government to conduct such an investigation?

Answer. I cannot speak to the commitments the Secretary made previously. However, if confirmed, I will work to follow through on the Secretary’s commitments and engagement with the Emirati Government.

Question 6. If not Secretary Pompeo, has any official representing the U.S. Government engaged in such a discussion with any official of the UAE Government?
Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on these important issues.

Question 7. Has the Statement Department, or any other agency of the U.S. Government, conducted an assessment regarding the allegations of fraud in the May 12, 2018 national elections in Iraq?

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on this issue in greater detail.

Question 8. If the U.S. Government has not conducted such an assessment regarding the credibility of these allegations, is the State Department aware of any other government or non-government effort?

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on this issue in greater detail.

Question 9. Is U.S. policy to (a) support continued negotiations by Iraq’s political parties to form a government or (b) support a pause in government formation negotiations in order to assess the credibility, fairness, and security of Iraq’s elections?

Answer. I must defer to the Department of State, which I understand stands ready to brief you or your staff on this matter. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with you and your staff on this issue in greater detail.

Question 10. What are the risks if the majority of Iraqi citizens believe that the allegations of electoral fraud are credible?

Answer. If a state fails to reassure its citizens that their votes count, it diminishes the legitimacy of the electoral process, weakens the credibility of democracy, and runs the risk of instability or social unrest. Iraq is particularly susceptible to these issues due to its history of sectarianism and the recent widespread violence associated with the fight against ISIS. All governments need to reassure their citizens that they are taking actions to protect the rule of law. The Iraqi Government has done this by demanding a recount of ballots from the May 12 election, to help ensure the credibility of its democratic institutions.
