Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID T. FISCHER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. In your preparations to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Morocco, do you believe that there has been any impact on U.S.-Moroccan relations?

Answer. In his capacity as Chairman of the Al Quds committee in the Organization of Islamic Cooperation, King Mohammed VI addressed a letter to President Trump expressing his concern about U.S. plans to move our Embassy to Jerusalem, while at the same time recognizing the importance of the United States in the region and praising the historic role of the United States in working toward Middle East peace. Following the U.S. announcement, there were peaceful demonstrations in Morocco. However, the U.S.-Morocco relationship remains strong.
Question 2. In your view, should the objective of U.S. diplomacy on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict be a two-state solution?

Answer. The President has stated that the United States will support a two-state solution if it is agreed to by both sides. The administration has emphasized that in its efforts to advance a comprehensive and lasting peace between Israel and the Palestinians, it does not seek to impose a solution on the parties. Instead, it intends to present a plan that offers a brighter future to both Israel and the Palestinians when the time is right. If confirmed, I look forward to supporting the work of White House Senior Advisor Jared Kushner and Special Representative for International Negotiations Jason Greenblatt from the Department of State.

Question 3. What role will you play in ensuring that Israel’s Qualitative Military Edge is ensured as future Foreign Military Sales to Morocco are considered?

Answer. I share the administration’s view that Israel’s security is a top U.S. foreign policy priority, and will uphold its commitment to ensuring Israel maintains its Qualitative Military Edge (QME). If confirmed, I will work closely with the Department of State and the Kingdom of Morocco to ensure that transfers of U.S.-origin defense articles to Morocco, including by Foreign Military Sales, conform to the U.S. commitment to Israel’s QME.

Question 4. What is the Moroccan Government’s preferred outcome for Western Sahara? Does the United States share this view? How do you plan to approach this issue set, if confirmed?

Answer. In 2007, Morocco proposed an autonomy plan for the Western Sahara. The plan is serious, credible, and realistic, and represents one potential approach to satisfy the aspirations of the people in Western Sahara. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. policy of supporting the U.N.-led diplomatic process and efforts to find a just, lasting, and mutually acceptable political solution that provides for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara.

Question 5. Should the United States encourage direct negotiations between Morocco and the Polisario with preconditions?

Answer. In April 2018, the United States supported U.N. Security Council Resolution 2414, which calls upon the parties to resume negotiations under the auspices of the Secretary-General without preconditions and in good faith. If confirmed, I will encourage Morocco to work with Horst Kohler, the Personal Envoy of the U.N. Secretary General for Western Sahara, as he seeks to bring the parties together for negotiations.

Question 6. Please describe the Morocco-Algeria relationship as you understand it. What role can the U.S. Ambassador to Morocco play in improving relations between these two neighbors?

Answer. Relations between Morocco and Algeria are complicated. Moroccan Foreign Minister Nasser Bourita traveled to Algiers in January 2018—the first such trip by a Moroccan Foreign Minister since 2012. While there are direct flights between the countries, their land borders have been closed since 1994. The U.S. Government has urged both Algeria and Morocco to recognize that better relations would enable both countries to address shared bilateral and regional issues such as terrorism, illegal migration, drug trafficking, and trade integration. The State Department sponsors regional security and counterterrorism workshops in which officials from both countries participate. Over the last year, the State Department has organized several educational and exchange programs that include young people from both countries.

Question 7. What is your understanding of Moroccan investment in renewable energy? If confirmed as Ambassador to Morocco, what role do you envision for the United States in supporting or reinforcing renewable energy initiatives in Morocco?

Answer. Morocco is working to diversify its energy sector and use renewable resources to account for up to 52 percent of its installed electrical generation capacity by 2030. In January, Morocco inaugurated the second phase of its Noor solar energy complex, making it one of the largest concentrated solar power plants in the world. Morocco’s renewable energy sector presents significant opportunities for U.S. businesses. The U.S. Government is also collaborating on several initiatives with the Government of Morocco to support renewable energy. For example, the State Department is working with small Moroccan businesses to increase their involvement in the renewable energy sector and connect them to U.S. firms. If confirmed, I will support continued collaboration with Morocco in the energy sector.

Question 8. Please describe your understanding of Morocco’s investment climate. If confirmed as Ambassador to Morocco, what would be your priorities in encouraging improvements in the investment climate?
Answer. The World Bank ranked Morocco 69 out of 190 for ease of doing business in 2017. Morocco has made progress in implementing sound macro-economic policies, trade liberalization, investment incentives, and structural reforms. As a former business leader who understands the importance of these reforms, I will urge the Government of Morocco to continue to improve the business climate. I will work with the Government of Morocco to better protect U.S. intellectual property in Morocco, and support the Government of Morocco’s efforts to increase transparency and accountability.

Question 9. Are foreign fighters returning from Iraq and Syria to Morocco a concern for the United States?

Answer. The travel of foreign terrorist fighters from Iraq and Syria to Morocco, or to any other country, poses a threat to U.S. interests. The U.S. Government is collaborating with Morocco and other countries around the world to address the issue through mechanisms such as U.N. Security Council Resolution 2396 (2017), which calls for improved information sharing, technical assistance, and a whole-of-society approach to address this threat.

Question 10. Is it your assessment that the Moroccan Government is prepared to deal with this challenge?

Answer. Morocco works closely with the United States and dedicates significant resources to addressing all aspects of this problem, including monitoring the return of foreign terrorist fighters. Morocco has expanded its counterterrorism law, makes concerted use of law enforcement and community engagement tools, and cooperates and shares information with its counterterrorism partners. Moroccan law enforcement, coordinating with the Ministry of Interior, aggressively targets and effectively dismantles terrorist cells by leveraging intelligence collection, police work, and collaboration with international partners.

Question 11. What steps can the United States take to assist Morocco in dealing with the challenge of returning foreign fighters?

Answer. The U.S. Government collaborates directly with Moroccan law enforcement, including through sharing information. The State Department supports enhancements to Morocco’s aviation security and technical assistance to stop terrorist financing and prosecute terrorists.

In addition, USAID and State Department assistance supports community policing programs and socioeconomic and educational opportunities for at-risk youth, making terrorist recruitment more difficult.

Question 12. What is your understanding of Hezbollah’s presence and activities in Morocco?

Answer. Morocco shares the United States’ concern about Hizballah’s malign activities and destabilizing role in the region. Morocco supported the November 2017 Arab League condemnation of Hizballah as a terrorist organization. Moroccan authorities also arrested Hizballah financier Kassim Tajideen in March 2017 at Casablanca Airport when Tajideen sought to transit through Morocco from Guinea to Beirut. If confirmed, I will work with Government of Morocco to advance our strong counterterrorism cooperation.

Question 13. In your preparations to serve as U.S. Ambassador to Morocco, is there reason to be concerned about malign Iranian interference and activities in Morocco?

Answer. Iranian influence around the world is a significant cause for concern. However, since 1979, Morocco has not had a close relationship with Iran. Morocco and Iran severed diplomatic ties between 1981 and 1981, between 2009 and 2014, and again in May of this year. The countries do not have significant economic or cultural ties and Morocco has made clear its opposition to Iran’s malign influence in the region.

Question 14. In your preparations to serve as Ambassador to Morocco, what forms of U.S. assistance to Morocco have been most effective and which have the support of the Moroccan Government? If confirmed as Ambassador, what will your priorities be with respect to U.S. assistance? Do you anticipate any changes in funding levels or priorities?

Answer. The Government of Morocco actively seeks and appreciates American technical advice. The Government of Morocco values U.S. Government assistance, and in many cases uses its own funds to continue and expand programs started through such assistance. The Millennium Challenge Corporation’s compact and USAID’s programming in Morocco, two of the largest components of our bilateral assistance, are good examples of particularly effective programs that have the Government of Morocco’s support. If confirmed, I will consult with implementing agencies and other stakeholders to identify priorities and determine how U.S. Government assistance can be even more effective.

Question 15. Do you believe that reforms toward more inclusive governance should be a priority for the United States in its engagement with Morocco?

Answer. Morocco has made progress to implement the democratic reforms envisioned in the 2011 constitution, including by passing laws to give citizens and civil society the right to petition the Government and propose legislation, and to create a framework to decentralize government authorities and give regionally elected bodies more budgetary and decision-making authority. USAID and the State Department are helping to support this effort by building the capacity of citizens, civil society, and political parties to engage local government institutions and to improve government transparency. If confirmed, I will continue supporting these efforts.

Question 16. Have you read the 2017 State Department Human Rights Report on Morocco? What specific steps can the Moroccan Government take to address human rights concerns? Do you plan to raise these concerns with officials from the Government if confirmed?

Answer. I have read the State Department's 2017 Human Rights Report on Morocco. If confirmed, I will maintain close consultations with the Moroccan Government on human rights issues. I will encourage the Government of Morocco to strengthen implementation of laws related to gender-based violence and trafficking in persons, enhance its efforts to combat child marriage, and extend the protections offered by the 2016 Press Code law to more journalists. I will stress the importance of the equal and transparent application of the laws governing religious organizations.

Question 17. Do you agree with the assessment of Human Rights Watch that there has been a “serious deterioration of the human rights climate” in Morocco in connection with the crackdown on protests in the Rif region?

Answer. Hundreds of protests took place in the Rif region in 2016 and 2017, and the majority proceeded peacefully. Police did use tear gas to disperse crowds on several occasions, and arrested hundreds of protesters, alleging that many of them had participated in violence and destruction of property.

In October 2017, the king removed five high-level officials, which many observers saw as a signal of his determination to ensure the Government is responsive to the protesters’ socioeconomic concerns. The king emphasized the need for greater socioeconomic development in speeches to the nation in 2017 and 2018, and recently pardoned more than 180 protesters.

Question 18. What are your views on the PJD and its role in Morocco’s Government?

Answer. Following the ratification of Morocco’s current constitution in 2011, the Islamist-leaning Party of Justice and Development (PJD) won a plurality of parliamentary seats in the November 2011 and October 2016 elections. The PJD participates in government as part of a multiparty coalition. Its core issues are creating jobs and fighting corruption.

The current Head of Government Saadeddine El Othmani, a former Minister of Foreign Affairs, belongs to the PJD party and shares responsibility for the executive branch with King Mohammed VI.

Question 19. Do you believe that it is important for the U.S. Ambassador to meet with members of civil society, non-governmental organizations, human rights activists, and journalists?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with members of civil society, non-governmental organizations, human rights activists, and journalists. I believe that these meetings will be an important part of my role as Ambassador, and that hearing from these organizations and individuals will help the U.S. mission to be more effective in advancing our priorities, including human rights.

Question 20. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Much of my philanthropic and business career has been devoted to promoting human rights, democracy and the rule of law. For instance, while serving on the Board of Trustees of Oakland University, I dedicated a large amount of time and energy to supporting initiatives related to diversity and inclusiveness; fostering a warm and productive relationship between the University and the surrounding community; supporting non-traditional students; and also ensuring that we support areas of study that allow students to utilize their talents to make a difference in our community as well as across the globe. The impact is evident when we succeed in our community growing in inclusion and moving forward as one. For decades, my work within community, nonprofits, and education has been focused on taking steps to ensure everyone has a fair and equitable opportunity—in education, in healthcare and in life.

Question 21. What issues are the most pressing challenges you see to democracy or democratic development in Morocco? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. In order to continue to advance its democratic development, Morocco will need to strengthen its political and administrative institutions and address citizen concerns about corruption. The State Department has also registered its continuing concerns about allegations of mistreatment of detainees by security forces; restrictions on the freedoms of expression, assembly, association, and religion; and discrimination against women. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with Moroccan leaders to encourage progress on these issues.

Question 22. What specific steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Morocco? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. In 2015, Morocco passed a legal framework to decentralize government authorities and give regionally elected bodies more budgetary and decision-making authority. USAID and the State Department are helping to support this effort by building the capacity of citizens, civil society, and political parties to engage local government institutions and to improve government transparency. If confirmed, I will continue to support Morocco’s efforts to accelerate democratic reforms as outlined in its 2011 constitution.

Question 23. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize accountability and effectiveness in administering U.S. Government assistance. I will consult with implementing agencies, NGOs and political parties in Morocco, the Government of Morocco, and other stakeholders to determine the most effective way to support Morocco’s democratic development.

Question 24. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Morocco? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Morocco. As I have seen in Michigan, the U.S. Government is most effective when it works together with civil society. I will encourage the Government of Morocco to fairly and transparently apply the laws governing NGOs and civil society organizations.

Question 25. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically-oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with a range of political leaders and encouraging greater participation in political processes. Morocco’s democratic reforms as outlined in the 2011 constitution offer opportunities for the United States to work together with Morocco to make political processes more inclusive.

Question 26. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Morocco on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Morocco?

Answer. Freedom of the press strengthens accountability and democratic governance. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with independent, local press in Morocco and to encouraging the Government of Morocco to strengthen press freedom.

Question 27. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?
Answer. If confirmed, I will work with civil society and the Government of Morocco to counter disinformation and propaganda.

Question 28. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Morocco on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. With some restrictions, the constitution of Morocco provides workers with the rights to form and join unions, strike, and bargain collectively. The Government generally respects freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of Morocco to continue to respect internationally recognized workers' rights consistent with its laws and the U.S.-Morocco Free Trade Agreement.

Question 29. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Morocco, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Morocco? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Morocco?

Answer. There are many challenges facing LGBTI people in North Africa and the Middle East. If confirmed, I commit to defending the human rights and dignity of all people in Morocco, and I look forward to fostering a more open discussion of LGBTI issues.

Question 30. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression in Morocco? Will you commit to meet with representatives of a diverse swath of religious groups and communities and to advocate for the ability to register and worship peacefully in the country?

Answer. The Moroccan constitution provides for freedom of worship and freedom of conscience, and Morocco has hosted numerous international conferences that promote interfaith values. I have seen firsthand how Morocco's Jewish community benefits from Morocco's long tradition of religious tolerance and coexistence. However, some religious minorities in Morocco continue to report discrimination. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with a wide variety of religious leaders in Morocco and maintaining an active dialogue with the Moroccan Government on religious freedom issues.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID T. FISCHER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Much of my philanthropic and business career has been devoted to promoting human rights, democracy and the rule of law. For instance, while serving on the Board of Trustees of Oakland University, I dedicated a large amount of time and energy to supporting initiatives related to diversity and inclusiveness; fostering a warm and productive relationship between the University and the surrounding community; supporting non-traditional students; and also ensuring that we support areas of study that allow students to utilize their talents to make a difference in our community as well as across the globe. The impact is evident when we succeed in our community growing in inclusion and moving forward as one. For decades, my work within community, nonprofits, and education has been focused on taking steps to ensure everyone has a fair and equitable opportunity—in education, in healthcare and in life.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Morocco? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Morocco? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Human rights issues in Morocco include restrictions on the freedoms of expression, assembly, association, and religion; discrimination against women; corruption; and allegations of mistreatment of detainees by security forces. If confirmed, I will work closely with Moroccan leaders to encourage continued progress on these issues.

In 2018, the State Department plans to launch projects to support civil society groups advocating for greater gender equality and supporting women's leadership, in addition to ongoing USAID programs building the capacity of citizens and locally elected officials to ensure a more inclusive government that represents the interests of all citizens, especially women, youth, and marginalized groups.
Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Morocco in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Since Morocco adopted a new constitution in 2011, Morocco’s parliament has passed a number of laws enacting reforms envisioned in the constitution. In recent years, Morocco’s parliament has passed laws designed to fight trafficking in persons, violence against women, and corruption; provide for an independent judiciary; and protect journalists. However, fully implementing these laws will require additional resources, greater institutional capacity, and continued efforts at all levels of the Moroccan Government.

Question 4. Do you agree with the assessment of Human Rights Watch that there has been a “serious deterioration of the human rights climate” in Morocco in connection with the crackdown on protests in the Rif region? What is the state of press freedom in Morocco?

Answer. Hundreds of protests took place in the Rif region in 2016 and 2017, and the majority proceeded peacefully. Police did use tear gas to disperse crowds on several occasions, and arrested hundreds of protesters, alleging that many of them had participated in violence and destruction of property. In October 2017, the king removed five high-level officials, which many observers saw as a signal of his determination to ensure the Government is responsive to the protesters’ socioeconomic concerns. The king recently pardoned more than 180 protesters. Independent media continue to be active in Morocco and express a wide variety of views. In 2016, parliament passed a new press code that limits punishments for accredited journalists to fines, although many contributors working for online news outlets are not covered. Three journalists were prosecuted under the press code during 2017, compared with eight in 2016.

Question 5. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Morocco? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. These are issues that have long been important to me. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Morocco. I will continue the Embassy’s strong compliance with the Leahy Law and maintain robust vetting procedures.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Morocco to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Morocco?

Answer. These are issues of great importance to me. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing the State Department’s close consultations with the Moroccan Government on human rights issues.

Question 7. Will you engage with Morocco on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make promoting human rights, civil rights, and good governance one of my highest priorities.

Question 8. Where has Morocco been most successful in countering TIP, and why hasn’t it fully implemented State Department TIP recommendations?

Answer. In 2016, the Government of Morocco enacted a new anti-trafficking law prohibiting all forms of trafficking, and has increased prosecutions under the new law. The Government also worked to reduce vulnerability to trafficking by enacting a new law regulating domestic work and by extending legal protections and social services to irregular migrants. Nevertheless, the Government did not report screening for trafficking victims or providing them protection services. The State Department continues to encourage the Government to implement identification procedures and provide appropriate protection services for victims of all forms of trafficking in Morocco, which will require continued political will and additional resources, personnel, and training.

Question 9. What is Morocco’s current approach toward migrants and migration control, and how has the EU shaped this approach, if at all?

Answer. In 2013, the Moroccan Government launched a National Strategy for Immigration and Asylum, which provides refugees with legal residency and access to healthcare, education, and justice. Morocco has undertaken to regularize tens of thousands of irregular migrants. Throughout these campaigns, Morocco has received significant development assistance support from European partners. Morocco also cooperates closely with Spain to manage their shared borders.

Question 10. If confirmed, what will you do to combat religious discrimination in Morocco?

Answer. The Moroccan constitution provides for freedom of worship and freedom of conscience, and Morocco has hosted numerous international conferences that promote interfaith values. I have seen firsthand how Morocco’s Jewish community benefits from Morocco’s long tradition of religious tolerance and coexistence. However, some religious minorities in Morocco continue to report discrimination.

If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with a wide variety of religious leaders in Morocco and maintaining an active dialogue with the Moroccan Government on religious freedom issues.

Question 11. What are your views on what more can the United States do to help resolve the four-decade dispute between Morocco and the independence-seeking Polisario Front over Western Sahara?

Answer. The United States supports the U.N.-led diplomatic process for Western Sahara and efforts to find a peaceful, sustainable, and mutually acceptable political solution to the conflict that provides for the self-determination of the people of Western Sahara. In April, the United States supported U.N. Security Council Resolution 2414, which extended the U.N. peacekeeping mission’s mandate for only six months. The shortened mandate signaled the Security Council’s desire to see political progress.

Former German President Horst Kohler, the U.N. Secretary-General’s Personal Envoy for Western Sahara, traveled to the region in June and met with the Governments of Morocco, Algeria, and Mauritania. He also met with the Polisario and visited Western Sahara. The next step is for Personal Envoy Kohler to bring the parties together for talks.

Question 12. How likely is a new round of direct talks between Morocco and the Polisario, and what might the talks realistically accomplish? What is your assessment of MINURSO’s current ability to fulfill its mandate, given changes to civilian staffing since 2016 and worsening security conditions on the eastern side of the “berm” demarcating Moroccan and Polisario control?

Answer. Morocco and the Polisario have not met directly since 2012, and progress in resolving the dispute over Western Sahara will require the parties to work together. If confirmed, I will encourage Morocco to continue to work closely with Horst Kohler, the Personal Envoy of the U.N. Secretary-General for Western Sahara, as he seeks to bring the parties together for talks.

It is my understanding that MINURSO continues to effectively implement its mandate to monitor the ceasefire between Morocco and the Polisario. The U.N. Secretary General, in his March 2018 report on Western Sahara, noted that MINURSO has conducted a range of reviews and assessments to strengthen security, improve performance, and reorganize staffing in order to achieve its goals more efficiently. The United States supported U.N. Security Council Resolution 2414 (2018), which urged MINURSO to continue to consider how new technologies could be used to reduce risk, improve force protection, and better implement its mandate.

Question 13. What is the administration’s approach to implementing provisions in foreign aid appropriations measures—such as §7041(h) of the FY 2017 Consolidated Appropriations Act (P.L. 115–31), carried into FY 2018 via continuing resolutions—that funds for global bilateral economic assistance “shall be made available” for programs in Western Sahara?

Answer. The State Department has provided assistance through the Middle East Partnership Initiative to implement a civil society and local governance program in Western Sahara. In May, the Department issued a Middle East Partnership Initiative Notice of Funding Opportunity soliciting proposals to implement a project to promote economic private sector economic growth in Western Sahara.

Question 14. On May 1, 2018, Morocco broke diplomatic relations with Iran, citing alleged Iranian proxy support for the Polisario Front (which seeks independence for Western Sahara). This is the second time Morocco has broken ties with Iran over the past decade.

- Is there any evidence, to your knowledge, that Iran views Morocco as a primary adversary or the Polisario Front as a potential proxy with which to undermine it?

Answer. I am not aware of evidence that would support either view.

Question 15. As Morocco and other countries respond to the ongoing return of foreign fighters from Syria, Iraq, and Libya, what is the appropriate balance—in your view—between law enforcement responses and efforts to reintegrate these individuals into civilian life?

Answer. Both law enforcement and programs to counter violent extremism and terrorist recruitment play important roles in Morocco’s preparedness for the return of foreign terrorist fighters. Morocco dedicates significant resources to tracking foreign fighters, prosecuting crimes related to terrorism, reintegrating individuals who do not pose a threat, and limiting the spread of violent extremism. Moroccan law enforcement units, coordinating with the Ministry of Interior, aggressively target and effectively dismantle terrorist cells by leveraging intelligence collection, police work, and collaboration with international partners.

Question 16. What types of CVE activities have proven most effective in Morocco?

Answer. Different types of activities can all play important roles in countering violent extremism in Morocco. The Government of Morocco takes a holistic approach to addressing the threat of violent extremism, including by promoting the Maliki school of Islamic jurisprudence, which it views as less susceptible to violent extremism. Several U.S. Government programs work towards countering violent extremism through counter-messaging, community engagement, and social and economic empowerment. For example, USAID’s CVE programs provide at-risk youth with increased access to socioeconomic and educational opportunities, reducing participants’ susceptibility to violent extremist rhetoric and recruitment.

Question 17. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 18. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 19. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Morocco?

Answer. No, neither myself or any member of my family have any financial interests in Morocco.

Question 20. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I have long been an activist not only in our company, but in all our charitable involvements in advocating diversity and creativity to promote productivity and inclusion. My long experience and hiring practices gleaned from years of exposure to all manner of staffing and while building our business will, of course, be carried forward in working with and promoting, mentoring and supporting the Embassy staff no matter what their background. My “team effort” approach which has served me well in my private life and charitable venues will be carried forward in the Embassy.

Question 21. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Understanding that I will ultimately set the tone and example, everyone under my purview from Day One will be expected to carry out this goal in creating this culture each and every moment—with everyone they interact with and in everything they do. I will hold them and myself responsible for communicating and operating with such tenets at all times—with the utmost professionalism, sensitivity and self-confidence.

Question 22. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Morocco specifically?

Answer. In Morocco, as in other countries, corruption has the potential to hinder development, destabilize government, undermine democracy, and provide openings for dangerous groups like criminals, traffickers, and terrorists. As the State Department noted in its 2017 Human Rights Report for Morocco, the perception of systemic and pervasive corruption undermines law enforcement and the effectiveness of the judicial system.

Question 23. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Morocco and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Moroccan law provides criminal penalties for official corruption, and the Government recently passed a law establishing a new institution with enhanced authorities to pursue anti-corruption efforts. However, as the State Department noted in its 2017 Human Rights Report for Morocco, the Government generally did not implement the law effectively. The Moroccan public continues to view corruption as an important problem and combatting corruption as a priority.

Question 24. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Morocco?

Answer. U.S. Government assistance supports the Government of Morocco’s efforts to increase transparency and accountability. The U.S. Embassy engages actively with key government and civil society actors in the field of anti-corruption. For example, last September, the Embassy hosted a roundtable with key government officials and civil society leaders to discuss Morocco’s fight against corruption and to encourage more collaboration. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Government of Morocco on this important issue.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DAVID T. FISCHER BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. Mr. Fischer, during your confirmation hearing on August 23 when discussing the litigation brought by Ms. Day, you indicated that there was “no history, no discussion, not a hint of an allegation against me.” However, in Ms. Day’s complaint she asserted that she “informed Defendant Suburban through its agent Defendant David T. Fischer that she could not work under Defendant Darrell Dowdy, Manager of New Car Sales, because of the sexual harassment that she had been and was presently undergoing by this Defendant and Plaintiff had previously made this known to Defendant Suburban by reporting same to Defendant David T. Fischer on several prior occasions.” Can you explain your understanding of these claims?

Answer. A Motion for Summary Disposition was granted to my Company and me for the sexual harassment and discrimination charges, and all other charges except for the wrongful discharge counts. While I did have one or more discussions with Ms. Day regarding her working relationship with Mr. Dowdy prior to her filing suit, the discussions were not about sexual harassment. My recollection of this 30-year-old case is that Ms. Day did not like working with Mr. Dowdy, a boss–subordinate issue that is not uncommon in the workplace.

This suit was an unfortunate by-product of a downturn in business conditions that resulted in Ms. Day’s position being eliminated. We had hired a business consultant to review our operations. One of the recommendations from the consultant was that due to the reduced dealership sales, the payroll costs of the Finance and Insurance (F&I) Department were excessive, and he recommended that we reduce the department from two persons to one. We chose to keep the more productive person and we offered Ms. Day a lesser position within the dealership. I was involved in this decision as the owner of the Company, which is most likely why I was named personally in this suit. Ms. Day refused the reassignment, claiming that she could not work for Mr. Dowdy and she quit. She later claimed in her suit that Mr. Dowdy had been subjecting her to sexual harassment.

Ms. Day sued for wrongful discharge and a number of other charges, including sexual discrimination and sexual harassment. The charges were all determined by the Court to be without merit except for the count for wrongful discharge. As outlined in the Judge’s Opinion and Order, there was a question of fact as to whether a comment made to the Plaintiff by the Company’s General Manager, Robert Martin, modified the Company’s “at-will” contract that had been signed by the Plaintiff on her employment application. Mr. Martin commented when transferring Plaintiff to the F&I position (that was later eliminated because of economic conditions) that “as long as I did a good job, I had a job”. Accordingly, the Judge did not dismiss the wrongful discharge counts, as fact questions were raised.

The wrongful discharge counts were quickly resolved after the Motion for Summary Disposition was granted for sexual harassment, sexual discrimination, intentional infliction of emotional distress and breach of good faith and fair dealing, and the case was dismissed with prejudice and without costs on March 17, 1989. While I personally have no recollection of the settlement in this case, we were able to locate a member of the Defendant legal team, whose best recollection in this 30 year old case was that the settlement was in the range of twelve to eighteen months of compensation, which I estimate would have been in the range of $50,000 to $75,000.

Question 2. Since the time of the case involving Ms. Day, have there been any other sexual harassment cases against your company or of which you have been named as a defendant? If there have been please list them and describe how your company responded and resolved each of them.

Answer. There was a 1993 sexual harassment case against the Company that I was initially personally named as a defendant, and these charges against me personally were later dismissed. This case, Jiaquv Grattadaria vs. Suburban Toyota Volvo, Inc., David Fischer, David Wagner, Roy Coons and William Burston, Oakland County Court Case No. 93–465662–NZ, is disclosed in my committee questionnaire, under Part E, Question 4, entitled “Civil Litigation”. This case was vigorously defended, and was ultimately settled by our insurance company.

This case provided our Company with a reminder that all employees, including disgruntled employees who are parting employment with us, should be treated professionally and with respect. Additionally, as a general matter, the managers that I directly supervise have completed refreshers with their staff regarding our expectations surrounding appropriate workplace behavior.

Question 3. As a result of the litigation by Ms. Day did you implement any new sexual harassment trainings or policies for your staff?

Answer. Yes, during this period our Company instituted workplace training on harassment and discrimination to make sure that employees understood our expectations surrounding appropriate workplace behavior. I do not recall whether our training was specifically related to this lawsuit or whether it was a result of the overall cultural emphasis on the workplace behavior that was gaining momentum at that particular time. Over the years since this 1987 lawsuit, we have prepared employee handbooks (the failure to follow handbook policies by an employee can lead to termination), continued workplace training on harassment and discrimination of all kinds, instituted an “open door” policy providing employees a non-threatening avenue to discuss concerns with their managers or more senior leaders in our Company, and generally promote a positive collaborative working environment for our employees.

Our Company has very strong policies for treating our employees professionally and with respect. Given the size and expansive location of our company, I am not involved in all employee matters, but I do continue to set and reinforce this culture with the managers who I directly supervise, and other employees. Over the 50 years that I have led our Company, we have grown from one location and under 100 employees to over 50 locations and over 3,000 employees, including many long-term employees. This ability to grow our Company speaks strongly of the Company’s reputation under my direction with both its employees and our customers.

Question 4. Could you please describe the circumstances surrounding your decision to recuse yourself as a member of the Judicial Tenure Commission in the case of Judge Gorcyca. Why did you choose to reverse your recusals when the underlying issue, in this case a personal relationship with the Judge, had not changed?

Answer. I recused myself from the Judge Gorcyca matter, in an abundance of caution, as I personally know Judge Gorcyca’s husband, Dave Gorcyca. My recusal was made prior to the details of the case being presented to the JTC. However, I was made aware of many of the details of this particular case from publications in local media, which appeared to be influenced by actions of the Executive Director and General Counsel of the JTC, which I believed to be inappropriate. Upon further investigation of the standards for recusal with attorneys and judicial colleagues on the JTC, it became clear that my recusal on these specific matters was not ethically required or recommended. I therefore revoked my recusal.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. EARL ROBERT MILLER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my three and half years as U.S. Ambassador to Botswana I was a vocal high-profile advocate of democracy and human rights. I raised issues of concern directly with Botswana President Masisi and former President Khama on fundamental U.S. principles from transparent governance to gay rights as human rights and the importance of protecting marginalized communities from discrimination and violence to religious and press freedom. Speaking so directly and publicly came at a cost. My visibility on these issues earned praise from the NGO community, but often strong criticism from senior government officials. One of my proudest accomplishments as Ambassador is we could have these disagreements while still maintaining and advancing our nations' partnership. While Khama and I had a close personal relationship, I was officially convoked twice at the former President's behest over my prominent advocacy for Botswana to adhere to international norms and laws on child labor and trafficking in persons. In 2015, I was officially summoned by Khama over Botswana’s downgrade to Tier Two Watchlist on our Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report. I used the opportunity to explain how the Government of Botswana could more effectively fight human trafficking. My U.S. Embassy team and I worked closely with government officials and NGOs at all levels across the country to help Botswana achieve Tier Two status the next year, a well-deserved recognition of a country now cited as an example of how to address TIP in Africa. Candid one-on-one conversations with Presidents Masisi and Khama gained Botswana's support for important U.S. resolutions at the United Nations on Syria, North Korea, Chinese aggression in the South China Sea, Venezuela, all at odds with African Union consensus and the majority of Botswana’s neighbors in Southern Africa.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Bangladesh? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. There are a number of pressing challenges to democracy in Bangladesh, which including the following:

- Extrajudicial killings, torture, arbitrary or unlawful detentions and forced disappearances by government security forces;
- Restrictions on civil liberties, including freedom of speech, press, and the activities of nongovernmental organizations;
- Intimidation and harassment of opposition political parties and arbitrary restrictions on their ability to meet, assemble, peacefully protest and participate in the political process;
- Widespread corruption;
- Violence and discrimination based on gender, religious affiliation, caste, tribe (including indigenous persons), and sexual orientation and gender identity.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Bangladesh? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The upcoming national elections provide an opportunity to engage strongly and consistently on the democratic process and institutions in Bangladesh. If confirmed, I will seek to continue and amplify our messaging on the need for a free, fair, credible and non-violent elections process that reflects the will of the Bangladeshi people. I will also seek opportunities to continue programming to counter closing democratic space, support civil society, and encourage the Government to reverse or amend laws that curtail freedom of expression and association.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Programming and engagement work hand-in-hand to promote democratic values and fundamental human rights. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the U.S. Government interagency to support democracy and governance, including ongoing programming to support labor rights and grassroots efforts to make political parties more responsive to their constituents.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Bangladesh? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. A vibrant civil society, where human rights groups and other nongovernmental organizations are free to express their views without intimidation or fear of reprisal, is essential for all democracies. The closing of the democratic space in Bangladesh and increase in government restrictions on NGOs in recent years are serious concerns. If confirmed, I will continue to meet with such organizations and encourage the Government of Bangladesh to reverse, amend, or reconsider current or proposed laws that limit the ability of civil society to operate.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with leaders from various parties and backgrounds and advocating for expanding democratic space. This engagement has been a key priority for our Embassy in Dhaka, particularly with the upcoming election in Bangladesh. If confirmed, I would continue to call on the Government of Bangladesh to fulfill its commitment to hold free, fair, participatory, and credible elections that reflect the will of the Bangladeshi people. I would also continue USG programming and advocacy to re-open the democratic space in Bangladesh for the political opposition and civil society, so that all, including women, minorities and youth, can exercise their freedoms of expression and assembly.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Bangladesh on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine freedom of the press through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Bangladesh?

Answer. Freedom of expression is vital for a healthy democracy, particularly the ability for media, civil society organizations, and members of opposition political parties to express their views and advocate for policy change. This is especially true in advance of elections. In Bangladesh, both print and online media are active and express a variety of views, including those critical of the government. However, there are concerning and credible reports about violence, harassment, and intimidation of journalists that limit freedom of the press. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting regularly with the press and to continue advocacy and programming to support the press’ ability to become fully free and independent.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to engage with civil society and government counterparts to promote a free and independent media that accurately reports on events and is careful about repeating reports from other organizations it has not been able to independently confirm as true.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Bangladesh on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. The United States is committed to helping Bangladesh protect workers' rights and safety. If confirmed, I will support U.S. Government programming and advocacy for freedom of association for workers that meets international standards and encourage further improvements to occupational safety and health.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Bangladesh, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Bangladesh? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Bangladesh?

Answer. Defending the human rights and dignity of all people in Bangladesh is critical, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. The LGBTI population in Bangladesh experiences discrimination publicly and privately. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing to support human rights programming across vulnerable populations, and to continue to seek justice for the murder of our friend and U.S. Embassy Dhaka colleague, Xulhaz Mannan, for his human rights work in Bangladesh.

Question 11. Has the international donor support for the refugee crisis in Bangladesh been sufficient to meet the need?

Answer. In spite of generous support from multiple international donors, funding has not been sufficient to date. Overall, only about a third of the $951 million U.N. Joint Response Plan, covering March to December 2018, has been funded. U.S. contributions represent nearly 22 percent of all contributions toward the appeal. The USG is the top donor to this crisis and continues to advocate for other donors to contribute robustly. The International Organization for Migration (IOM) reports it is currently only 24 percent funded against its $182.1 million request, which impacts delivery of services.
Question 12. What more, in your view, needs to be done to leverage international humanitarian support?

Answer. While a political solution remains crucial, the United States is also focused on meeting the humanitarian needs of refugees and host communities in Bangladesh. The United States is the leading donor to the Rakhine State crisis. If confirmed, I will continue to leverage U.S. funding measures to urge others, including non-traditional donors, to contribute to the response.

Question 13. Is the U.S. doing enough and, if not, what more could it be doing?

Answer. The United States has provided nearly $300 million in humanitarian assistance to help displaced people in and from Burma and affected communities in the region since the start of FY 2017. Of this total assistance, more than $190 million has been provided since August 2017 for the refugee relief effort in Bangladesh. We need to continue to focus on the immediate needs of these vulnerable populations—basic health and safety—while also engaging in medium- and long-term planning, including education and livelihoods, to improve living conditions and reduce vulnerabilities. At the same time, we must always make clear this assistance in no way signals the United States has given up on efforts to create the conditions in Rakhine State that will allow the Rohingya who voluntarily decide to return to do so in security and with dignity.

Question 14. Are you aware of Bangladeshi Government plans to transfer Rohingya refugees from Cox’s Bazar to the island of Bhasan Char? Do you think the U.S. Government should support or oppose this transfer? What pre-conditions do you think should be required before such a transfer could take place?

Answer. Yes, I am aware of the proposed relocation plan to Bhasan Char Island. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Government to allow the U.N. to conduct a technical assessment to determine the feasibility and desirability of relocating refugees there. This must include an assessment of the safety, habitability, and protection implications of transporting, housing and providing food and other services to 100,000 refugees, including during natural disasters. Any plan to relocate refugees in Bangladesh or back to Burma must be fully voluntary, safe, and dignified. Any relocation of refugees to Bhasan Char Island would need to allow for freedom of movement to where the rest of the Rohingya are located in Cox’s Bazar.

Question 15. Do you think that the assistance directed to developing Cox’s Bazar, which is aimed at improving infrastructure and livelihoods for both the local host community and the refugees, would be preferable to relocating refugees to Bhasan Char?

Answer. Even if Bhasan Char proves to be suitable for relocation of refugees, it will not eliminate the need for additional usable land in Cox’s Bazar to help decongest the existing over-crowded camps and mitigate current risk factors, including radicalization, criminality, instability, disease, and sexual violence. Any planned relocation, or improvement to existing infrastructure, would carry the same requirements—that the new sites meet suitability standards for safety, habitability, and security needs, and any relocation plan be fully voluntary, safe, and dignified, and allow for freedom of movement. Improvements to infrastructure and an increase in livelihood opportunities in local host communities could mitigate tensions between the pre-existing population and the newly arrived refugees, and thus contribute to an overall improvement in the situation.

Question 16. There is currently a crackdown on freedom of expression in Bangladesh; social media is monitored and those that criticize the prime minister, her family members, or her Government are prosecuted under the draconian Information and Communications Act (ICT Act). After the recent student protests, photographer Shahidul Alam, activist Faria Mahjabin, and numerous students and teachers have been arrested under the ICT Act. What role do you believe the U.S. should play in responding to this situation?

Answer. We are deeply concerned about reported arrests, attacks and efforts to intimidate journalists in Bangladesh. A free press is fundamental to democracy, and we will continue to engage with the Government of Bangladesh on the importance of ensuring journalists are protected from violence and intimidation. As I noted in my testimony, media, civil society, members of opposition groups, and peaceful protesters must be able to express their views and advocate for change without fear of retribution. Ambassador Bernicat has been a superb champion of all voices in the democratic process and, if confirmed, I pledge to follow her admirable example.

Question 5. Do you have a view on the viability of other relocation sites, such as the six locations in Ukiya subdistrict near to the existing camp? Do you think the U.S. Government should support or oppose this transfer? What pre-conditions do you think should be required before such a transfer could take place?

Answer. Yes, I am aware of the proposed relocation plan to Bhasan Char Island. Question 6. The Bangladesh Government has made clear that it hopes and expects the Rohingya refugees to return to Myanmar in the near future. How realistic do you think this is? What conditions do you think would need to be place for safe and dignified refugee repatriation to occur?
Answer. While the Government of Bangladesh has pushed for the Rohingya to be able to return to Burma as soon as possible, it has fully accepted the international standard that all returns be voluntary, safe, and dignified. It is Burma’s responsibility to create the conditions conducive for return, including respecting the basic rights and freedoms of all of its diverse people. If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Governments of Bangladesh and Burma through our Embassy in Rangoon, as well as with our international partners, to most effectively achieve these conditions. This would include implementation of the recommendations of the Advisory Commission on Rakhine State (also known as the Annan Commission), which the Government of Burma has publically endorsed, including those related to access to citizenship and freedom of movement.

Question 7. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my three and half years as U.S. Ambassador in Botswana I was a vocal high-profile advocate of democracy and human rights. I used the opportunity to explain how the Government of Botswana could more effectively fight human trafficking. Candid one-on-one conversations with Presidents Masisi and Khama gained Botswana’s support for important U.S. resolutions at the United Nations on Syria, North Korea, Chinese aggression in the South China Sea, and Venezuela, all at odds with African Union consensus and the majority of Botswana’s neighbors in Southern Africa.

Question 8. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Bangladesh? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Bangladesh? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. There are a number of pressing challenges to democracy in Bangladesh, including the following:

♦ Extrajudicial killings, torture, arbitrary or unlawful detentions and forced disappearances by government security forces;
♦ Restrictions on civil liberties, including freedom of speech, press, and the activities of nongovernmental organizations;
♦ Intimidation and harassment of opposition political parties and arbitrary restrictions on their ability to meet, assemble, peacefully protest, and participate in the political process;
♦ Wide-spread corruption;
♦ Violence and discrimination based on gender, religious affiliation, caste, tribe (including indigenous persons), and sexual orientation and gender identity.

The upcoming national elections provide an opportunity to engage strongly and consistently on the democratic process and institutions in Bangladesh. I will also seek opportunities to continue programming to counter closing democratic space, support civil society, and encourage the Government to reverse or amend laws that curtail freedom of expression and association.

Question 9. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Bangladesh in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The biggest obstacle to addressing these human rights issues is the increasingly limited democratic space in Bangladesh which has reduced the ability and willingness of members of civil society and the media to speak out and actively advocate for change. Our challenge is to make the case it is in Bangladesh’s own national interest—and key to its further economic development—to have a vibrant civil society and press that can contribute to finding and implementing solutions to societal problems, including human rights. Bangladesh has rightly earned worldwide acclaim for its humane and generous response to the Rohingya refugee crisis that literally saved thousands of lives. It would be unfortunate if Bangladesh’s well-deserved reputation for inclusion and compassion is tarnished by a lack of respect for the human rights of its own citizens. The upcoming national elections are an important test of the Government’s adherence to the democratic values our two countries share. We look forward to Bangladesh living up to its commitment to holding free, fair, participatory, and credible elections that reflect the will of the Bangladeshi people. As I noted in my testimony, Ambassador Bernicat has been a superb champion of all voices in the democratic process and, if confirmed, I pledge to follow her admirable example.

Question 10. Dozens of people, including members or relatives of the political opposition, have been forcibly disappeared in Bangladesh. Officials, including both the prime minister and her son (who is a U.S. national) have denied these violations. Are you aware of these incidents? What role do you believe the U.S. should play in responding them?

Answer. Yes, I am aware of these incidents. We have consistently said we are concerned about reports of extrajudicial killings, deaths in custody, forced disappearances and unlawful detentions. We continue to urge government leaders to ensure these allegations of human rights violations and abuses by government personnel are fully investigated and all those responsible held to account. We take allegations of gross violations of human rights very seriously. We do not provide assistance to any security force unit when we have credible information that unit committed a gross violation of human rights, until and unless the Government takes effective steps to bring those responsible to justice.

Question 11. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Bangladesh? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. A vibrant civil society, where human rights groups and other nongovernmental organizations are free to express their views without intimidation or fear of reprisal, is essential for all democracies. The closing of the democratic space in Bangladesh and increase in government restrictions on NGOs in recent years are serious concerns. If confirmed, I would continue to meet with such organizations and encourage the Government of Bangladesh to reverse, amend, or reconsider current or proposed laws that limit the ability of civil society to operate. I would also continue to stress to the Government of Bangladesh that its response and investigation of any crime must respect international human rights standards. The Department of State continues to closely monitor reports of human rights violations and abuses and reports those concerns in the annual Human Rights Report including allegations of security force abuses. If confirmed, I would continue to use this annual report and other engagements to press for improvements in human rights in Bangladesh. Additionally, I will insist on and ensure full and appropriate application of Leahy Law requirements to ensure our security assistance and cooperation is consistent with human rights priorities. This includes encouraging and promoting military-military engagements and participation in U.S. military training programs, including through the International Military Education and Training (IMET) program, that expose Bangladeshi security forces to principles of democracy, human rights, and civilian-military cooperation.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Bangladesh to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Bangladesh?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, my Embassy team and I will actively engage with Bangladesh to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted.

Question 13. Will you engage with Bangladesh on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. The upcoming national elections provide an opportunity to engage strongly and consistently on the democratic process and institutions in Bangladesh. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with Bangladesh on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of our robust bilateral exchanges.
Question 14. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 15. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 16. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Bangladesh?

Answer. No.

Question 17. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue, as I have done in Botswana as Ambassador, to regularly discuss with U.S. mission employees the importance of our talented workforce reflecting and championing all of America’s strengths and diversity. I would hold bi-monthly professional development meetings, as I do in Botswana, where we discuss, among other issues, inclusion, diversity, and equal opportunities in the modern Foreign Service. I would also discuss with educational exchange students, interns, and other visitors how the U.S. Foreign Service is changing to look more like the nation we serve. I would ensure we cast a wide net when recruiting officers to serve in Bangladesh and saw these efforts pay off in Botswana when we welcomed last month our embassy’s first ever African-American Deputy Chief of Mission. As the father of two sons whose mother is from El Salvador, I have often spoken of the need to have more Hispanic Foreign Service Officers, currently comprising only about 5 percent of Foreign Service Generalists. If confirmed, I would continue to actively support and participate in the State Department’s celebrations of Asian-American and Pacific Islander Heritage Month, Hispanic Heritage Month, Women’s History Month, Black History Month, Native American Heritage Month and Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Pride Month, among others.

Question 18. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, as Ambassador I would set the example, personally and professionally, of supporting an inclusive, fair, and welcoming work environment. I would ensure all supervisors and managers, myself included, attend all mandatory EEO/Diversity Awareness training. I would insist all employees fully follow U.S. Government EEO and diversity guidelines and any who did not would be subject to disciplinary measures to include removal from employment and post.

Question 19. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Bangladesh specifically? What is your assessment of corruption trends in Bangladesh and efforts to address and reduce it by that government? If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Bangladesh?

Answer. Corruption is extremely damaging to the governance and overall functioning of every country, and Bangladesh is no exception. Transparency International’s 2017 Corruption Perception Index ranks Bangladesh 143rd out of 180 countries. The Government of Bangladesh has taken some initial steps to address issues of corruption but there is much more to be done. If confirmed, I would pursue additional progress on anticorruption measures, working both with the Government and civil society, making the case Bangladesh’s continued economic development depends on tackling this issue.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DANIEL N. ROSENBLUM BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The promotion of human rights and democracy has been a consistent element throughout my professional career. My very first job after college was as a research assistant to a Member of the British House of Lords, who was Chairman of the Parliamentary Human Rights Group. I supported his work on behalf of political prisoners in East Timor, Pakistan, and China, and did an analysis of the electoral system of Guyana, later published by Americas Watch. This and similar efforts eventually led to freer elections and a change in political leadership in that country.

During my four years with Senator Carl Levin, my portfolio included human rights and democracy promotion. I initiated and collaborated on numerous legislative efforts, such as advocacy on behalf of political prisoners in the Soviet Union and persecuted members of ethnic minority groups in Eastern Europe, and renaming the street in front of the U.S. Holocaust Museum to honor Raoul Wallenberg, who saved thousands of Jews in Hungary during World War Two. I also drafted legislation the Senator sponsored to permit the Overseas Private Investment Corporation to operate in Poland, an effort to promote the nascent private sector at the very beginning of Poland’s democratic transition.

During the six years I worked for the Free Trade Union Institute (now part of the Solidarity Center), I managed grants from the National Endowment for Democracy and USAID aimed at supporting emerging independent trade unions throughout the former Soviet republics. We provided training and equipment that helped these groups to organize on behalf of workers in the coal, garment, and metallurgical industries, as well as among teachers, air traffic controllers and other public sector employees. As a result of our programs, workers throughout the region for the first time in 80 years were actually represented by organizations that advocated for fair compensation and benefits, workplace health and safety, and other labor rights.

For 17 years at the Department of State, I coordinated U.S. foreign aid throughout the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, and in that capacity, ensured that sufficient resources and the right kinds of programs were devoted to the promotion of human rights and democracy. There are literally hundreds of examples of this, but I would single out the work I coordinated to build democratic institutions (independent media, civil society, rule of law, a vibrant private sector, free and fair elections) in countries like Ukraine, Georgia, Kosovo, and the Kyrgyz Republic. While progress in these and other countries in the region has been uneven and sometimes characterized by one step back for every two forward, we have also seen examples of real progress toward more open and accountable governance, freer press, and more active and effective civil society organizations.

Finally, over the past four years as a Deputy Assistant Secretary for South and Central Asia, I have had numerous opportunities to raise concerns about human rights and democracy with Government officials. I am particularly proud of the role I played in highlighting concerns about arbitrarily or unlawfully imprisoned political activists, journalists, and human rights defenders. Not only did I raise these cases directly with senior officials, but in a few instances had the difficult but important experience of meeting prisoners’ families to hear their stories and express sympathy for the plight of their loved ones. Although many of these prisoners have not been released to date, I am pleased to say that in Uzbekistan every one of the individuals whose cases I raised between 2014 and 2016 has now been released from prison.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges you see to democracy or democratic development in Uzbekistan? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Uzbekistan’s reform agenda is primarily driven from the top and power remains concentrated in the hands of the President. One of the first challenges is institutionalizing the reform, including passage and implementation of laws in accordance with international standards that protect the rights of the people. Second, Uzbekistan’s political system does not include genuine political competition and accountability, and political activity is limited at the grassroots level. It will take time to break away from the past to cultivate and nurture public participation in democratic governance. President Mirziyoyev has set Uzbekistan on a positive trajectory with respect to human rights. While highlighting our respect for Uzbekistan's sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity, the United States must continue to encourage Uzbekistan to remain on the path of political and economic reform, focusing on guaranteeing the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, strengthening the independence of the country's judiciary and parliament and institutionalization of reforms for the long term.

Question 3. What specific steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Uzbekistan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Since assuming power in 2016, President Mirziyoyev has taken important steps towards improving the country’s human rights situation including eliminating systemic child labor, reducing adult forced labor, strengthening the rule of law—for example by banning evidence obtained through torture—as well as simplifying registration procedures for civil society and religious groups. There is still much work to be done. If confirmed, I would continue to urge Uzbekistan to continue along the path of reform, focus on guaranteeing the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all, strengthening the independence of the judiciary and the role of parliament as guarantors of these rights and institutionalize the positive changes for the long-term benefit of the country and its people. I will utilize the full breadth of assistance resources and Public Diplomacy programming to help address these challenges. We will also continue to provide support to institutions and organizations helping to promote these positive changes. We will not shy away from raising human rights abuses and violations where they occur. I realize that building a vibrant civil society is a long-term process, but I am encouraged by many positive developments under the administration of President Mirziyoyev and if confirmed, will ensure the United States remains a leading partner in this endeavor.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance reform in Uzbekistan? What will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, under my leadership the Embassy will continue to use the full range of available assistance resources to support broad democracy and governance reforms in Uzbekistan. If confirmed, I will continue support for existing programs and in future budget years, will prioritize such programs, which include the Embassy Democracy Commission Small Grants program, USAID's Democracy, Human Rights, and Governance programs, and State Department-funded assistance programs as well as supporting public diplomacy tools such as the speakers' program and the International Visitor Leadership Program. Justice sector reform and anti-corruption programming are particularly important because of their potential impact on all aspects of Uzbekistan society.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Uzbekistan? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, I am fully committed to meeting with members of civil society and other nongovernmental organizations. I firmly believe an independent and vibrant civil society is central to Uzbekistan’s development and reform priorities. The Department of State continues to closely monitor reports of human rights violations and abuses, regularly communicates our concerns to the Government of Uzbekistan, and reports those issues in the annual Human Rights Report. If confirmed, I will continue to urge Uzbekistan to deepen its reforms stemming from President Mirziyoyev’s May 4, 2018 decree enhancing the role of civil society in the country’s reform process. As we monitor the new policies, we will continue to encourage the Government to ensure that requirements for NGOs facilitate freedom of association and bring Uzbekistan’s policies closer in line with international best practices.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically-oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes I am committed to meeting with democratically-oriented political opposition figures and parties. In my previous role as the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Central Asia, we took every opportunity both in Uzbekistan and in the other four Central Asian countries to meet with these groups wherever and whenever possible. I welcome the emergence of a democratic Uzbekistan and will use the Embassy Democracy Commission grants and other programmatic tools at my disposal to advance this goal. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for these groups and for lesser represented groups, such as women and youth, to promote greater inclusivity in the political system.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Uzbekistan on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Uzbekistan?

Answer. The Mirziyoyev administration has released more than 40 prisoners of conscience, and for the first time in more than two decades, the committee for the Protection of Journalists has declared Uzbekistan’s prisons free of journalists. In another sign of the changing times, Uzbekistan has also recently given official accreditation to the Voice of America which broadcasts in the Uzbek language. If confirmed, my embassy team and I will continue to actively engage with Uzbekistan to address emerging cases of prisoners of conscience and encourage greater freedom for journalists to operate. I also commit to regularly meeting with local press in Uzbekistan.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use the full breadth of the tools provided through our Office of Press and Public Diplomacy, USAID, Global Engagement Center, and interagency counterparts to partner with civil society organizations and the Uzbek Government to counter the impact of disinformation and malign propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Uzbekistan. The U.S. Embassy in Tashkent will play a key role in a multi-pronged regional effort to counterbalance the heavy flow of anti-American disinformation across the region. This programming will focus on activities that counter the objectives of these false narratives and pressures by engendering strong positive views of America, especially among youth, who are the future leaders of Central Asia. The programming will engage civil society, media outlets, and the Government of Uzbekistan in efforts to reduce susceptibility to such malign propaganda through expansion of our people-to-people programs, local media training initiatives, and efforts to promote media literacy among youth to ensure thoughtful media consumption.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Uzbekistan on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage the Government of Uzbekistan on the rights of workers to form labor unions and independent trade unions. Uzbekistan’s economic growth will require improved labor conditions and assurance that protections for workers are consistently implemented. If confirmed, my team and I will energetically engage the Government of Uzbekistan, workers, employers, and labor activists to promote internationally recognized worker rights, including supporting workers’ ability to form and join independent trade unions of their choice. We will also work with Uzbek partners interested in further diversifying the economy into sectors that yield greater benefits for the average worker.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Uzbekistan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Uzbekistan? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Uzbekistan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Uzbekistan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. According to the State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report, members of the LGBTI community in Uzbekistan are subject to laws criminalizing same-sex sexual conduct. As the Secretary stated on the International Day against Homophobia, Transphobia and Biphobia, “the United States stands with people around the world in affirming the dignity and equality of all people regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics. Human rights are universal, and LGBTI people are entitled to the same respect, freedoms, and protections as everyone else.” As the Secretary committed, we will continue to use a range of public and private actions to counter violence and severe discrimination against LGBTI persons across the world including through bilateral and multilateral channels, by offering emergency assistance to LGBTI persons and organizations at risk, and by imposing visa restrictions and economic sanctions, as appropriate, on those involved in violations or abuses of their human rights.

Question 11. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression in Uzbekistan? Will you commit to meet with rep-representatives of a diverse swath of religious groups and communities and to advocate for their ability to register and worship peacefully in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to press the Government of Uzbekistan, including at the highest levels, to fully meet its international obligations to uphold every individual’s right to freedom of religion or belief. To be effective, I believe it is essential to meet with an array of religious congregants from all faiths to understand the day-to-day challenges they face in practicing their religion. Our goal will be to ensure that there is religious freedom for all in Uzbekistan.

Question 13. How specifically will you engage, if confirmed, to support economic integration between Uzbekistan and other countries in the region? What further opportunities do you see to engage Uzbekistan as a partner in supporting peace and reconciliation in Afghanistan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support the C5+1 platform, which brings together the five countries of Central Asia along with the U.S. to support support intraregional economic, environment, and security cooperation. Under C5+1, the U.S. is supporting several projects aimed at supporting economic integration within Central Asia. These include the C5+1 Central Asia Business Competitiveness project that is facilitating the private sector development of the Central Asian horticulture sector, the C5+1 Transport Corridor Development Project to increase the competitiveness of Central Asian economies by improving their transport and logistics sectors, and the C5+1 Power the Future project, supporting the transition to low emission and advanced energy solutions. I will also continue to support regional integration projects such as CASA-1000, a project designed to export excess summer electricity from the Kyrgyz Republic and Tajikistan to Afghanistan and Pakistan, and the new Central Asia Regional Electricity Market (CAREM), a proposed collaboration between the five Central Asian countries and the United States government, other donors, and international financial institutions (IFIs) to establish a new, economically viable, market-based system of regional electricity trade. I would also encourage Uzbekistan to continue its leadership in driving regional economic integration as seen this year in which Uzbekistan will host meetings of the Central Asia Trade Forum and the U.S.-Central Asia Trade and Investment Framework Agreement (TIFA) from October 15-18 in Tashkent. Finally, I would encourage the Uzbek Government to continue its support to Afghanistan as it did in December 2017, when the Uzbek and Afghan governments signed over twenty bilateral agreements in Tashkent, including trade and transit trade agreements to improve their economic relationship and deepen economic integration between both countries and the region. I would also encourage continued Uzbek support for Afghan educational exchanges, such as its hosting of over 100 Afghan youth at a school in the southern city of Termiz.

The United States and Uzbekistan share a common goal in Afghanistan: to ensure regional stability, especially by reducing the threat posed by terrorist organizations operating in the region. We agree there is not a military solution to the conflict but rather the best avenue to achieve stability is through a negotiated political settlement between the Afghan Government and the Taliban. We welcome an effective Uzbek role in supporting an Afghan-led peace process, including by urging the Taliban to negotiate directly with the Afghan government. We will continue to work closely with Uzbekistan bilaterally and in constructive multilateral fora to bring the Taliban to the negotiating table and promote regional peace and stability.

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Uzbekistan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Uzbekistan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The Mirziyoyev administration has released more than 40 prisoners of conscience, and for the first time in more than two decades the Committee for the Protection of Journalists has declared Uzbekistan’s prisons free of journalists imprisoned as a result of their reporting. According to Uzbekistan officials, law enforcement agencies have removed nearly 23,000 people since 2017 from so-called security “black lists,” which restricted civil liberties due to allegations of “religious extremism.” If confirmed, my embassy team and I would continue to build on the momentum in this area by actively engaging with Uzbekistan to address any remaining persons who were unjustly imprisoned for exercising basic internationally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms. We would urge the Government to continue such releases, to treat freed individuals with dignity and to extend to them the necessary authorizations and documents required to make their new status complete and permanent. We hope that as political and rule of law reforms continue, the practice of holding political prisoners will soon be viewed purely as part of Uzbekistan’s past.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Uzbekistan in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Uzbekistan’s reform agenda has to date been initiated and driven from the top and power remains concentrated in the hands of the President. In order to last, such comprehensive reforms cannot rely only on the intentions and actions of one man but must be institutionalized in the form of laws, regulations and new societal norms that govern behavior and expectation. This is likely to be a lengthy and complicated process, and will require more involvement at all levels of society. Second, Uzbekistan’s political system does not include genuine political competition, and political activity is limited at the grassroots level. It will take time to break away from the past to cultivate and nurture public participation in democratic governance. President Mirziyoyev has set Uzbekistan on a positive trajectory with respect to human rights. While highlighting our respect for Uzbekistan’s sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity, the United States must continue to encourage Uzbekistan to remain on the path of political and economic reform, focusing on guaranteeing the political and economic rights of all individuals, and institutionalizing reforms for the long term.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Uzbekistan? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if I am confirmed, I am absolutely committed to meeting with members of civil society and other nongovernmental organizations, both in the U.S. and in Uzbekistan. I firmly believe an independent and vibrant civil society is central to Uzbekistan’s healthy political, social and economic development, and to the success of President Mirziyoyev’s reform agenda. I also believe that the U.S. Government should frequently consult with our own NGO’s with expertise in civil society development to gain insights and ideas for how to support civil society in Uzbekistan.

If confirmed, I would remind the Government of Uzbekistan that the expansion of U.S.-Uzbekistan security cooperation is contingent on ensuring that Uzbekistan’s security forces, police and military forces respect human rights. In Uzbekistan, as elsewhere, the U.S. declines to provide security assistance to any unit when we have credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights, until and unless governments take effective steps to bring those responsible to justice. If confirmed, I would closely monitor all our security cooperation with Uzbekistan to ensure that it is reinforcing respect for human rights, and would make clear to my country team and all U.S. Government elements involved in such cooperation that this is one of its essential goals.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Uzbekistan to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Uzbekistan?

Answer. The Mirziyoyev administration has released more than 40 prisoners of conscience, and for the first time in more than two decades the committee for the Protection of Journalists has declared Uzbekistan’s prisons free of journalists imprisoned as a result of their reporting. According to Uzbekistan officials, law enforcement agencies have removed nearly 23,000 people since 2017 from so-called security “black lists,” which restricted civil liberties due to allegations of “religious extremism.” If confirmed, my embassy team and I would continue to build on the momentum in this area by actively engaging with Uzbekistan to address any remaining persons who were unjustly imprisoned for exercising basic internationally recognized rights. We would urge the Government to continue such releases, to treat freed individuals with dignity and to extend to them the necessary authorizations and documents required to make their new status complete and permanent. We hope that as political and rule of law reforms continue, the practice of holding political prisoners will soon be viewed purely as part of Uzbekistan's past.

Question 6. Will you engage with Uzbekistan on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Following the admirable example of current Ambassador Spratlen, if confirmed, I will continue to engage with Uzbekistan on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as a top priority of the bilateral mission.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have about potential violations of these laws, regulations and rules through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have about potential violations of these laws, regulations and rules through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Uzbekistan?

Answer. Neither I nor any member of my family has any direct financial interests in Uzbekistan. My investment portfolio includes diversified mutual funds that may hold interests in companies with a presence in Uzbekistan. These mutual funds are exempt from the conflict of interest laws. In general, I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to any conflicts of interest, and I will remain vigilant with respect to my ethics obligations.

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to build an Embassy team that is both diverse and cohesive, celebrating the differences in our respective backgrounds while maintaining a sense of shared mission. I will make it a priority to encourage the recruitment and professional development of a staff that represents the face of America. I will try to learn as much as I can about each of my team members, and find ways to value and to benefit from their different traditions and life experiences.

Answer. If confirmed, I will make it a top priority to foster an Embassy work environment characterized by mutual respect, inclusivity, and tolerance for differences. I will communicate to senior staff from the start that I will not abide discrimination and harassment in the workplace or within the Embassy community generally. In advance of the annual personnel assignment process, I will communicate to each supervisor my expectation that we are welcoming applications from the widest possible group of qualified candidates, and that they should proactively reach out to colleagues from diverse backgrounds and invite them to apply for Embassy positions.

Answer. Corruption undermines the foundations of democratic governance. It destroys trust between the Government and the governed, and makes it nearly impossible to establish a system based on rule of law. In corrupt societies, the judiciary and law enforcement become politicized and subject to improper influence, thereby losing the confidence of businesses, other private organizations and ordinary citizens. All societal transactions become based on informal payments and personal connections, not on merit and adherence to the rules. Corruption can seep into all sectors of society, for example limiting access to quality medical care only to those who can pay the necessary informal "fees," or greatly lowering standards in the educational system by rewarding ability to pay for good grades or admission to university rather than academic excellence. Such societies cannot achieve their full economic potential or attract sufficient foreign investment; they are often characterized by political instability as well. In its 26 years as an independent state, Uzbekistan has experienced relatively high levels of corruption and has suffered some of the consequences outlined above. It has certainly affected governance, rule of law, and economic development in Uzbekistan. Fortunately, the current government has recognized the damaging impact of corruption on the country’s development. President Mirziyoyev has made addressing corruption one of his top stated priorities.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Uzbekistan and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. The Government of Uzbekistan historically has been considered one of the most corrupt in the world. Since President Mirziyoyev’s 2016 election, the Government has openly acknowledged that corruption is endemic and taken concrete steps to address it, including creation of the Interagency Commission on Countering Corruption, chaired by the Prosecutor General. The Government continues to engage with the United States’ assistance programs on justice sector reforms, including steps to increase the independence and professionalism of the judiciary, provide for more judicial control over investigative processes, and strengthen the role of the defense bar. For example, the Government is implementing a process for random assignment of judges as one step to reduce corruption. With U.S. support, the Government has also been rolling out an “e-court” system for civil courts that will greatly simplify the process for filing cases as well as provide for increased transparency, and the Tashkent State University of Law will be implementing a “Street Law” program for high school students that will have an anticorruption component. The Government has also committed to work with the U.S. on a new program to strengthen its legal and institutional capacity to investigate and prosecute complex corruption and enhance implementation of Istanbul Anti-Corruption Action Plan (IAAP) recommendations. The Government has also prosecuted a number of law enforcement officials for corruption, including Ministry of Interior Lt. Col. Odiljon Soliyev for selling exit visas to militants.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Uzbekistan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support existing U.S. funded good governance and anticorruption assistance programs and will prioritize such programs in future budget years. I will signal U.S. Embassy support for such programs and their objectives at every appropriate opportunity, including in meetings with Government of Uzbekistan officials, participation in the programs’ public events. I will also use public diplomacy tools such as speakers’ programs and the International Visitor Leadership Program (IVLP) to support these objectives.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Kip Tom by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. Recognizing that you have spent much of your career outside of government, what are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Every person has an affirmative duty to help create an environment in which human rights are promoted and respected. In our own family of businesses, in my civic and philanthropic engagement, and as a leader in the agriculture-technology industry, I have always made it a point to advocate for human rights. Whether working on my farm in Indiana, serving on the Boards of the National FFA Organization and National 4-H Council, or traveling abroad in the developing world, I have always believed it my duty to support human rights, uphold democratic principles, and serve my community.

I have and will continue to support our political representatives, business leaders, and organizations in their efforts to promote human rights and, if confirmed, I will utilize my platform at the U.N. Agencies in Rome to continuously reaffirm our commitment to protecting human rights, preserving the dignity of those we have the privilege of assisting, and utilizing our expertise to make a difference across the globe.

Question 2. Do you feel that promoting democracy and human rights abroad is in the U.S. national interest?

Answer. Promoting human rights, fundamental freedoms, and democracy around the world has been a bedrock principle of U.S. foreign policy for decades, has created enormous goodwill and trust towards the United States, and has demonstrably strengthened the security of America and our allies. In recent remarks, Secretary Pompeo laid out a human rights vision for the United States to pursue, and if confirmed I will fully support and promote those objectives. We are a more secure and more prosperous nation, and are more able to challenge our adversaries and counter threats to our security, when we project core American values including democracy and human rights abroad.

Question 3. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development today across the globe? Please be as specific as possible.
Answer. The United States remains the world’s strongest proponent of human rights and fundamental freedoms around the world. I fully support and, if confirmed, will actively promote our multilateral human rights agenda as enunciated by Secretary Pompeo. In areas where the U.N. is prepared to take meaningful and decisive action, the United States will continue to partner with likeminded allies to address challenges to fundamental freedoms including freedom of religion or belief, freedom of expression, freedom of association, and the right of peaceful assembly, as well as to address specific human rights situations including in Iran, North Korea, China, Venezuela, Syria, Burma, and Crimea.

Question 4. If confirmed, how will you use your position to further democracy and human rights globally?
Answer. As the strongest promoter of human rights and fundamental freedoms around the world, the United States works closely with likeminded partners to promote and defend human dignity. However, some countries are not interested in making the U.N. a more effective advocate for human rights, either because of complacency with the status quo or because U.N. human rights mechanisms are themselves protecting human rights abusers from scrutiny. If confirmed, I will actively promote our multilateral human rights agenda as enunciated by Secretary Pompeo, including by promoting reform of U.N. human rights mechanisms, and pressing U.N. member states to insist that U.N. human rights mechanisms genuinely address human rights concerns and do not unfairly criticize Israel.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO KIP TOM BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Sustainable development goal number two calls for “zero hunger” by 2030. Do you believe this goal is achievable?
Answer. The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and its associated 17 Sustainable Development Goals are a U.N. framework for development. I believe that although the world has seen an increase in the number of hungry people, mainly due to conflict, the goal of zero hunger by 2030 is obtainable. If confirmed, I will work with the Rome-based U.N. agencies and other partners to ensure that food insecure people worldwide have the tools they need to pull themselves out of poverty wherever possible.

Question 2. Sustainable development goal number two calls for “zero hunger” by 2030. What can the U.S. do to help the world reach this goal?
Answer. The focus should be not on development assistance alone, but also the mobilization and effective use of domestic resources and with the strong participation of the private sector. Our commitment to international development is enshrined in President Trump’s National Security Strategy, and we remain the largest provider of Official Development Assistance. If confirmed, I will work with the Rome-based U.N. agencies to assist developing countries enable their private sectors to increase agricultural production, promote domestic food security, and create jobs. However, we can’t do this alone; I will also work with our development partners to help achieve this goal.

Question 3. Do you believe the U.S. contributes too much money to UNFAO?
Answer. I will ensure that the substantial contributions of the American taxpayer yield results. FAO’s mandate to eradicate hunger and poverty, improve nutrition, and promote sustainable management and use of natural resources supports broader U.S. national security objectives. FAO promotes economic growth and regional stability through its efforts to rehabilitate economic livelihoods post disaster or conflict. FAO’s work supports U.S. trade in agricultural products and contains animal and plant diseases that can impact human health and damage the U.S. agricultural sector. However, success is not measured by dollars spent, but by the number of people those dollars help lift out of poverty and make food secure. If confirmed, one... of my priorities will be making sure that those who are food insecure receive the resources they need to achieve food security.

Question 4. Will you advocate for consistent funding in future budget years for UNFAO?

Answer. I will be a strong advocate for advancing U.S. national interests at FAO and the other international organizations under the jurisdiction of the U.S. mission in Rome consistent with administration priorities. That advocacy will include calling upon other countries and donors to help ensure that the organizations have the resources needed to perform their missions. While the United States has been the largest contributor to these organizations, other countries and donors can, and should, do more.

Question 5. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Every person has an affirmative duty to help create an environment in which human rights are promoted and respected. In our own family of businesses, in my civic and philanthropic engagement, and as a leader in the agriculture-technology industry, I have always made it a point to advocate for human rights. Whether working on my farm in Indiana, serving on the Boards of the National FFA Organization and National 4-H Council, or traveling abroad in the developing world, I have always believed it my duty to support human rights, uphold democratic principles, and serve my community.

I have and will continue to support our political representatives, business leaders, and organizations in their efforts to promote human rights and, if confirmed, I will utilize my platform at the U.N. Agencies in Rome to continuously reaffirm our commitment to protecting human rights, preserving the dignity of those we have the privilege of assisting, and utilizing our expertise to make a difference across the globe.

Question 6. What are the most pressing human rights issues at the United Nations? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy issues at the U.N.? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The United States remains the world’s strongest proponent of human rights and fundamental freedoms around the world, including at the United Nations. I fully support and, if confirmed, will actively promote our multilateral human rights agenda as enunciated by Secretary Pompeo. In areas where the United Nations is prepared to take meaningful and decisive action, the United States will continue to partner with likeminded allies to address challenges to fundamental freedoms including freedom of religion or belief, freedom of expression, freedom of association, and the right of peaceful assembly, as well as to address specific human rights situations including in Iran, North Korea, China, Venezuela, Syria, Burma, and Crimea.

Question 7. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face at the U.N. in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. As the strongest promoter of human rights and fundamental freedoms around the world, the United States works closely with likeminded partners within the United Nations to promote and defend human dignity and to address specific human rights situations. However, some countries are not interested in making the U.N. a more effective advocate for human rights, either because of complacency with the status quo or because U.N. human rights mechanisms are themselves protecting human rights abusers from scrutiny. If confirmed, I will actively promote our multilateral human rights agenda as enunciated by Secretary Pompeo, including by promoting reform of U.N. human rights mechanisms, in particular of the Human Rights Council, and pressing U.N. member states to insist that U.N. human rights mechanisms genuinely address human rights concerns and do not unfairly criticize Israel.

Question 8. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will immediately implement a plan of inclusion and diversity among staff in the missions and will work to create an environment where everyone feels comfortable discussing issues, is part of measuring our success frequenty, and will strongly support making the necessary adjustments to support every individual's rights and dignity.

Question 9. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the U.S. Mission to the U.N. agencies in Rome are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I first intend to lead by example—I will display to the supervisors at the Mission that fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive is something that I value greatly. More specifically, I will work with the three individual Executive Directors or Secretariates of the WFP, FAO and IFAD in reviewing their Missions' policies supporting diversity and inclusivity and I will continuously monitor their progress and outcomes.

Question 10. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD YAMAMOTO BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Is the approach the administration is taking in Somalia appropriately balanced between defense, diplomacy and development? If confirmed, what role will you play in ensuring a proper balance between the three D's in Somalia?

Answer. Defense, diplomacy, and development are integral parts of the U.S. Government’s whole-of-government approach in Somalia. Our primary diplomatic and development goals are to assist Somali-led efforts to: 1) build security forces that can combat terrorism and provide stability; 2) advance the federalism and political reconciliation processes, including completing the constitutional review and preparing for one-person, one-vote elections in 2020/21; 3) promote economic growth and job creation; and 4) provide lifesaving humanitarian assistance while building resilience among Somalis to withstand future shocks. U.S. military efforts in Somalia directly support these goals by strengthening security and stability, which are fundamental to opening up space for political and development efforts.

If confirmed, I will ensure close coordination between all elements of the U.S. Government in the field involved in the three D’s and provide oversight to ensure those efforts are consistent with our whole of government approach.

Question 2. How much has security assistance to Somalia increased to support increased U.S. military action, if at all? Have we accelerated our training of the Somali National Army (SNA) over the past year to improve its capacity? How long have we been providing assistance to the SNA, and when will they be capable of taking over security from the African Union Mission in Somalia? Have our military actions and assistance to the SNA significantly degraded Al Shabaab’s ability to carry out attacks?

Answer. While military action and security assistance are both components of our overall strategy to stabilize Somalia, they are separate lines of effort, and our security assistance funding requests are based solely on program requirements and partner nation capacity.

We have not accelerated our training of the Somali National Army (SNA) over the past year to improve its capacity. How long have we been providing assistance to the SNA, and when will they be capable of taking over security from the African Union Mission in Somalia? Have our military actions and assistance to the SNA significantly degraded Al Shabaab’s ability to carry out attacks?

weak institutional structures within the SNA, I assess that it will be many years before the SNA and other Somali security forces will be fully capable of assuming security responsibilities from the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM). We continue to favor a gradual transition of security responsibilities that will enable the incremental reduction in AMISOM forces without opening up any significant security vacuums.

I assess that our assistance to the SNA and direct military action (as well as our support for AMISOM) have indeed degraded al-Shabaab and hampered its ability to carry out attacks. Nonetheless, al-Shabaab remains a formidable threat, and continued U.S. engagement will be necessary to ensure its efforts continue to be disrupted. This includes continued U.S. engagement on the political and economic fronts, as I believe that al-Shabaab cannot be defeated solely through military means.

Question 3. Has there been an increase in the number of foreign service officers assigned to serve at our embassy in Somalia since January 2017? If not, what are the constraints? Has the number of individuals in Washington working on the Somali desk or in other capacities focused on Somalia at the State Department increased since January 2017? If not, what are the constraints?

Answer. There has been no increase in the number of officers assigned to the U.S. Mission to Somalia or to Somalia-focused positions at the State Department since January 2017. All positions at U.S. Mission to Somalia are assigned to Nairobi while security and safety mitigation measures at our facility in Mogadishu are being completed. No Foreign Service Officers can be assigned to Mogadishu pending completion of those measures and contingent on a determination by the Secretary to waive the requirements under the Secure Embassy Construction and Counterterrorism Act, as well as compliance with all applicable Overseas Security Policy Board standards. The creation of new Somalia-related positions in Washington or in the field are subject to the same resource constraints as any new Department positions.

Question 4. Have we increased the number of development programs and/or activities being undertaken in Somalia since January 2017? Has funding for development programs and/or activities increased over the past two fiscal years?

Answer. U.S. development funding for Somalia increased from roughly $50 million in FY 2016 to $62 million in FY 2017. This has helped enable an expansion of development activities since January 2017, particularly in the areas of stabilization and the rule of law.

Question 5. Has funding for countering violent extremism (CVE) in Somalia increased since January 2017? In what ways has our CVE approach in Somalia evolved since January 2017?

Answer. In calendar years 2017 and 2018, Partnership for Regional East Africa Counterterrorism (PREACT) funds were used to support programs that increase the capacity of the Federal Government of Somalia to process, rehabilitate, and reintegrate disengaged fighters. The United States also promotes the Somali National Defector Rehabilitation Programme through strategic communications and community-based social reconciliation. The United States also prioritizes CVE campaigns to amplify local voices of peace and tolerance to counter terrorist messages. Through assessments, monitoring, and evaluation, the U.S. Government continuously modifies and adapts its CVE approach to ensure that it is relevant and appropriate to counter extremist threats and narratives in Somalia.

Question 6. What has been the effect of the Gulf dispute on Somalia in terms of political stability and efforts to strengthen the relationship between the Federal government and Federal Member states?

Answer. I understand the Gulf dispute has affected the Horn of Africa as both sides vie for political and economic influence. The UAE has put significant pressure on Mogadishu to side against Qatar, and also engaged with Somalia’s Federal Member States in ways that have exacerbated tension between federal and regional authorities. This tension has distracted the Somali authorities significantly from efforts to advance the federalism process, make progress on security sector reform, and combat al-Shabaab and ISIS. Qatar, in turn, has increased its outreach to Somalia and sought to fill funding gaps left by the deterioration in UAE-Somalia relations. Somalia’s long-term stability depends heavily on Mogadishu and its Federal Member States reaching agreement on an appropriate delineation of authorities between national and regional levels.

Question 7. In your view, what role should the U.S. play to mitigate the effects the Gulf dispute is having in Somalia?
Answer. I believe we should discourage countries engaged in the Gulf dispute from pressuring Somalia to take sides, which runs counter to shared goals of promoting peace and stability in the Horn of Africa. We should also encourage Somalia to avoid taking steps that could be perceived by either side as taking sides in the dispute.

Question 8. What is the status of DP World’s agreement to develop an economic zone and port in Somaliland? Does pursuing such an agreement with Somaliland bypass the legitimate authority of the Somali Federal government, as has been claimed? What is the U.S. position on these efforts, and what messages should we be sending to the parties involved about the advisability of moving forward with the deal?

Answer. I understand DP World signed an agreement in March with the government of Somaliland to develop the port of Berbera and that the first phase of the $442 million expansion is scheduled to begin in October. The Federal Government of Somalia maintains that the deal violates the Somali provisional constitution because Somaliland signed it without Mogadishu’s consent. The United States understands this is a commercial transaction but generally advises third parties to avoid actions that could exacerbate tensions surrounding the dispute related to Somali sovereignty over Somaliland. The United States encourages the authorities in Mogadishu and Somaliland to resume direct talks on reconciliation, including economic cooperation.

Question 9. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my career, I have continuously worked to promote human rights, dating back to the time I served as Human Rights Officer at U.S. Embassy Beijing during the Tiananmen Square crisis in 1989, when I wrote the hard-hitting Human Rights Report documenting the many violations during that time period. As U.S. Ambassador to Ethiopia, I advocated for the release of 15,000 political prisoners in Ethiopia. More recently, as Acting Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of African Affairs, I have led our efforts to promote human rights in Nigeria, Cameroon, Democratic Republic of Congo, Zimbabwe, and others.

Question 10. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in the Federal Republic of Somalia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The most pressing governance and democracy issues in Somalia include restrictions on freedoms of speech and press, assembly and movement, and arbitrary and politically motivated arrest and detentions, including of journalists. Widespread political corruption, including vote-buying, is another significant obstacle to the development of a transparent, accountable democratic system in Somalia.

Question 11. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in the Federal Republic of Somalia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Somalis to implement their reform agenda for advancing the federalism process, finalizing their constitution, advancing reconciliation, and agreeing upon and implementing an electoral model for “one-person, one-vote” elections in 2020/21. These efforts will spearhead the push to achieve a transparent and accountable political system that serves the public. Widespread corruption among political elites will remain the primary challenge to progress in democracy and governance. I would encourage the Somali administration to take credible steps to stamp out corruption and establish strong electoral institutions to enable the elections to be free, fair and inclusive.

Question 12. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that U.S. Government resources are used effectively, particularly for Democracy Rights and Governance (DRG) programming. USAID programming is currently being used to support governance programs to help develop institutional capacity and service delivery, improve transparency, and establish the rule of law, and I would continue to prioritize this programming.
Question 13. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in the Federal Republic of Somalia? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to working with both U.S. and local civil society organizations, including organizations led by Somali-Americans and other diaspora members, to promote our human rights objectives. If confirmed, I will engage both publicly and privately to ensure that NGOs, civil society members, and ordinary citizens do not face retaliation for expressing their viewpoints and are empowered to contribute to political reforms and processes.

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the United States provides all possible support to facilitate an inclusive democratic political environment in Somalia. I will meet with representatives of all political parties and factions and advocate for the right of political opposition groups, civil society, the press, and others to peacefully express their views as it is essential that the Somali people enjoy both the right to free speech and the ability to be fully informed. I will also work to ensure that women and youth are engaged as meaningful participants at the negotiating table. When they are, they enlarge the scope of agreements and focus attention on a broader set of critical societal priorities required to achieve just and sustainable peace.

Question 15. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Federal Republic of Somalia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in the Federal Republic of Somalia?

Answer. Supporting media freedom and the protection of journalists is vital to the development of democracy in Somalia. Somalia is one of the most dangerous countries for journalists to operate in, and many face arrest, intimidation, censorship, threats of violence, and acts of violence just for doing their jobs. If confirmed, I will regularly raise concerns about freedom of expression and violence targeted against journalists with Somali government counterparts and meet with local independent journalists to hear their concerns.

Question 16. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue Mission Somalia’s public diplomacy efforts to ensure the Somali public has access to accurate and relevant information about Somali society. I commit to engaging with both civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and misinformation and will take full advantage of our social media platforms to do so.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with the Federal Republic of Somalia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. The provisional constitution provides for the right of workers to organize but employers and the authorities have not respected the right to free association. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the rights of Somali workers are respected in accordance with both Somali and international labor laws.

Question 18. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the Federal Republic of Somalia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in the Federal Republic of Somalia? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in the Federal Republic of Somalia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to defending the human rights of all Somalis, regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity. Same-sex sexual contact is punishable by imprisonment and the law does not prohibit discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity. While there is limited information about the challenges faced by LGBTI individuals in Somalia, they face harassment and violence—earlier this year, we heard the first reports of al-Shabaab executing two men reportedly on the basis of their homosexuality. As the Secretary stated on the International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia and Biphobia confirmed, “the United States stands with people around the world in affirming the dignity and equality of all people regardless of sexual orientation, gender identity or expression, or sex characteristics. Human rights are universal, and LGBTI people are entitled to the same respect, freedoms, and protections as everyone else.” If confirmed, I will ensure that our efforts to promote human rights in Somalia are fully inclusive.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD YAMAMOTO BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Animosity toward the African Union Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) is on the rise. How can the U.S. help bolster AMISOM?
Answer. The AU Mission in Somalia (AMISOM) remains critical to the stabilization of Somalia, and its continued presence is necessary to provide time and space to build effective Somali security institutions. Since AMISOM deployed in 2007, the United States has obligated more than $1.05 billion to provide equipment, training, advisory, logistcal, and other support for AMISOM troop contributing countries. I understand that this support has had a demonstrable positive effect on the capabilities of the AMISOM peacekeepers, and believe that continuing this support will allow AMISOM to continue to play its valuable role.

Question 2. Will you commit to demonstrating sustained U.S. support for AMISOM?
Answer. I will commit to our continued support to AMISOM and the AMISOM troop contributing countries as we support a smart and deliberate eventual conditions-based transition from AMISOM to Somali security forces.

Question 3. Roughly how much of the population in Somalia relies on their daily food supplies from international organizations and nonprofits?
Answer. Of the 12.3 million people estimated to live in Somalia, 5.4 million people require humanitarian assistance with 2.5 million facing life-threatening food insecurity. In July of this year, relief agencies distributed emergency food assistance to nearly 2.2 million people countrywide.

Question 4. What role if any can the U.S. play in improving the food security situation in Somalia?
Answer. Since the 2011 humanitarian crisis, humanitarian partners have implemented multi-sectoral programs in Somalia to support household—and community-level disaster risk reduction activities, increase crop production, build incomes, and strengthen community-level management of risks, all of which have helped build the capacity of communities to respond to crises.

The ongoing humanitarian and protection crisis in Somalia results from cycles of drought and floods, as well as protracted conflict. While food security has improved slightly due to a sizable scale up in the humanitarian response in 2017 and recent record levels of seasonal rains, these gains are fragile. Sustained life-saving assistance, coupled with interventions aimed at building resilience, is critical to help vulnerable households meet basic needs, reduce acute malnutrition, and protect livelihoods. The United States is the single largest donor responding to the Somalia crisis, providing nearly $642 million in humanitarian assistance since the beginning of Fiscal Year 2017, including more than $221 million to date this fiscal year.

Question 5. Neighboring Ethiopia and Eritrea have recently announced an effort to improve relations and ease decades-long tensions. What impact will an improvement in relations between those two countries have on Somalia?
Answer. The improving relationship between Ethiopia and Eritrea offers an opportunity for increased stability in the Horn of Africa and cooperation among Somalia’s neighbors, which could be beneficial for Somalia. Somali President Mohamed Abdullahi Mohamed “Farmaajo” visited Eritrea in July, raising the possibility of improved relations between Somalia and Eritrea, which have not had diplomatic relations for nearly fifteen years.

Question 6. How would you characterize relations between Somalia and Somaliland? Is it premature for the U.S. or other members of the international community to be focused on reunification, given other challenges facing Somalia?
Answer. I understand that tensions between Somaliland and Puntland, particularly over the disputed regions of Sool and Sanaag, have been an area of concern in recent months with a significant impact on the overall Somalia—Somaliland relationship. The United States and other members of the international community can play an important role in facilitating reconciliation between Somalia and Somaliland if and when the two parties are ready to hold talks.

Question 7. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my career, I have continuously worked to promote human rights, dating back to the time I served as Human Rights Officer at U.S. Embassy Beijing during the Tiananmen Square crisis in 1989, when I wrote the hard-hitting Human Rights Report documenting the many violations during that time period. As U.S. Ambassador to Ethiopia, I advocated for the release of 15,000 political prisoners in Ethiopia. More recently, as Acting Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of African Affairs, I have led our efforts to promote human rights in Nigeria, Cameroon, Democratic Republic of Congo, Zimbabwe, and others.

Question 8. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Somalia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Somalia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Al-Shabaab poses the greatest threat to human rights issues in Somalia, specifically their killing, torture, and other cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment of civilians. We have also seen in Somalia cases of arbitrary and politically-motivated arrest and detentions, including of journalists; use of child soldiers; restrictions on freedoms of speech and press, assembly and movement; and forced eviction, relocation and sexual abuse of internally displaced persons (IDPs). If confirmed, I will support the development of security and other government institutions that protect the country's citizens, operate under civilian control, and respect human rights and international law. I would also advocate for inclusive development practices throughout Somalia through community-driven development programs that encourage the participation of marginalized groups, including youth and women, in decision making processes for their communities.

Question 9. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Somalia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The Federal Government of Somalia’s inability to govern areas of territory currently under the control of al-Shabaab, where human rights violations are most prevalent, is a significant obstacle. In addition, the lack of action taken by government authorities to prosecute and punish individuals involved in human rights violations will remain a serious challenge to advancing human rights in Somalia. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the Federal Government of Somalia understands that our support is contingent upon demonstrated accountability for human rights violations. In addition, I will work to mitigate challenges to free expression, including freedom of the press, which is fundamental to ensuring electoral transparency and accountability as Somalia prepares for the 2020/2021 elections.

Question 10. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Somalia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to working with both U.S. and local civil society organizations, including organizations led by Somali-Americans and other diaspora members, to promote our human rights objectives. If confirmed, I will direct all personnel under chief of mission authority to proactively implement the Leahy Law and similar provisions and ensure that United States foreign assistance programming in Somalia reinforces human rights.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Somalia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Somalia?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will lead Mission Somalia’s efforts to address cases of political prisoners or other politically-motivated intimidation and harassment, and make clear that such cases weaken progress toward a stable political system that is supported by the Somali public.

Question 12. Will you engage with Somalia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?
Answer. Yes. A formal objective of U.S. Mission Somalia is building institutions to promote good governance and human rights, if confirmed, I will advance that objective through continuous engagement with the Federal Government of Somalia.

Question 13. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 14. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 15. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Somalia?

Answer. No.

Question 16. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. My experience leading U.S. Missions overseas has clearly demonstrated to me the importance of diversity in enabling an effective team. I am proud to say that during my tenure as Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary and Acting Assistant Secretary, the Bureau of African Affairs has led the Department in terms of having leadership from diverse backgrounds at the Chief of Mission and Deputy Chief of Mission levels. If confirmed, I will continue to promote and advocate diversity as a strength of Mission Somalia and mentor officers from a variety of different backgrounds to ensure our team is representative of the nation we serve.

Question 17. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. As I have throughout my career, I will continue to advocate for reform of our personnel and human resources systems, recommending creative approaches to ensure we are attracting qualified officers from a variety of diverse backgrounds to serve in our Mission. If confirmed, I will ensure that Mission Somalia is an inclusive environment in which all staff feel safe and empowered to contribute their best work.

Question 18. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Somalia specifically?

Answer. I understand that corruption is one of the major factors affecting the public’s support to the Federal Government of Somalia (and the Federal Member State governments). As in other countries, corruption is a significant driver of resources being diverted to terrorist groups and other non-state actors, and in Somalia, tackling the issue of corruption will be essential to the long-term success of counterterrorism efforts.

Question 19. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Somalia and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Corruption and lack of transparency remain some of the biggest governance challenges facing Somalia. Strong and transparent public financial management will be key for Somalia’s stability and future growth. I am concerned about allegations of corruption and fiscal mismanagement in Somalia. The Federal Government of Somalia and the Federal Member State governments must take steps to ensure that public funds are spent responsibly and transparently; by doing so, it will earn the trust and confidence of the Somali people and the international community.

Question 20. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Somalia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue our support to the Federal Government of Somalia’s efforts to tackle these challenges and will ensure that we continue to provide technical assistance on public financial management and financial governance initiatives. These measures will increase the public’s faith in the ability of the Federal Government of Somalia to manage finances and provide services.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD YAMAMOTO BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. At your confirmation hearing, in response to my question about the ability of Mission staff to conduct meetings outside of the airport compound in Mogadishu, you emphasized the importance of engaging with Somali Federal Member States in other Somali cities. The United States remains the only major international partner in Mogadishu that does not permit its diplomats to travel off the compound. What guarantees did Secretary Pompeo provide that you and your team would be able to get off of the airport compound to do your work in Mogadishu?

Answer. Engaging diplomatically throughout Somalia is critical to advancing our foreign policy and national security objectives in East Africa. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Bureau of Diplomatic Security to ensure sufficient security measures are in place to conduct such engagements safely and effectively. This includes the possibility of conducting off-compound movements in Mogadishu.

Question 2. While a facility is not currently certified to host diplomatic personnel in Mogadishu, do you intend to join members of your team who accepted one-year positions based permanently in Mogadishu as soon as the certifications are completed for the facility (“Arc II”) to house Foreign Service Officers? If not, how do you plan to mitigate the challenges of leading staff that are based permanently in Mogadishu when you are not also based permanently there?

Answer. If confirmed, and provided that the facility we are constructing in Mogadishu to house the U.S. Mission to Somalia is certified for occupancy, I will join those staff members in Mogadishu that are permanently assigned there.

Question 3. At your confirmation hearing you emphasized that there is not an exclusively military solution to the conflict in Somalia. Can you please provide a breakdown in annual U.S. assistance to Somalia in the following categories: humanitarian; security (including assistance from the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement, the Bureau of Counterterrorism and security assistance funds from the Bureau of African Affairs); and non-humanitarian development assistance administered by USAID. Is the current balance between these different types of assistance sufficient to achieve U.S. goals in Somalia?

Answer. In FY 2017, the State Department and USAID allocated Somalia with roughly $955 million in bilateral foreign assistance. This includes more than $64 million in economic and development assistance, $315 million in security assistance, and $605 million in lifesaving humanitarian assistance. Of the security assistance, approximately $15 million was Nonproliferation, Anti-terrorism, Demining, and Related Programs (NADR) funding administered by the Bureau of Counterterrorism; approximately $8 million was from International Narcotics Control and Law Enforcement (INCLE) funding administered by the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement; and approximately $299 million was from Peacekeeping Operations (PKO) funding administered by the Bureau of African Affairs. Achieving U.S. objectives in Somalia will require sustaining an appropriate balance of security, development, and humanitarian assistance from the United States and other international donors for the foreseeable future. While Somalia’s development challenges are just as significant as its security challenges, the current balance between types of assistance is appropriate given long-standing U.S. experience and capabilities in security assistance compared to other international partners.

Question 4. Are you satisfied with the monitoring and evaluation mechanisms that are currently in place to ensure that U.S. security assistance is not being diverted by corrupt actors or being used to perpetuate clan conflict? What metrics are you using to measure the effectiveness of our security assistance in achieving U.S. goals in Somalia?

Answer. Following the pause in assistance to any non-mentored Somali military units initiated in December 2017, the majority of U.S. security assistance is provided only to Somali and AMISOM partners with regular oversight from U.S. Government or U.S. Government-funded contractor personnel. This consistent engagement, coupled with existing program coordinators resident in Mogadishu, and a program management team and dedicated monitoring and evaluation (M&E) effort based in Washington, DC, enables the access and oversight necessary for satisfactory M&E mechanisms.
Due to the variety of assistance programming provided to AMISOM and Somali partners in Somalia, numerous and diverse metrics are utilized to evaluate progress towards achieving U.S. goals in Somalia. These metrics range from basic items like the timely delivery of food and fuel rations or the number of operations conducted, to more sophisticated measurements related to evaluating staff dynamics within AMISOM Force Headquarters or the Somali Ministry of Defense.

Question 5. Is the clan make-up of the Somali National Army and Somali National Police sufficiently inclusive that it is viewed as legitimate by most of Somalia’s major clan communities? If not, how will you adjust U.S. assistance and engagement with the Somali government to better ensure more legitimate Somali security institutions are ready to take over security responsibilities when AMISOM forces draw-down?

Answer. The clan make-up of the Somali National Army (SNA) and Somali Police Force (SPF) is representative of the regions in which the SNA and SPF operate. The United States has initiated several changes in the provision of assistance, notably in 2016 and 2017, to target units in which we have greater confidence to effectively operate in specific geographic areas and to be viewed as legitimate by major clans in those areas. Mission Somalia consistently engages with the Federal Government of Somalia and Federal Member States to emphasize the importance of investing in units that are clan appropriate for the regions in which they operate. This approach is consistent with U.S. policy to support Somali security institutions as they incrementally assume security responsibilities from AMISOM.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 3:08 p.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Johnny Isakson, presiding.

Present: Senators Isakson [presiding], Gardner, Young, Shaheen, Coons, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JOHNNY ISAKSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Senator ISAKSON. This committee hearing will come to order.
Good afternoon. Welcome. We are glad to have you here today. We have good business today. We have three witnesses testifying before us, all three great citizens of our country dedicated to the betterment of the United States of America and her citizens. We have Ms. Bonnie Glick, Michael Harvey, and Mark Montgomery.

USAID is without a doubt where America leaves its brightest spot and its mark all over the world. In the 14 years that I have been in the Senate and the 6 years I served in the House, my most memorable trips and experiences were in Africa and many other places around the world where the reach of USAID reached not only the health of people but their heart. President Bush’s program of PEPFAR, continued by President Obama and now continued as well, has proven to be we have taken a disease that we thought might wrack out all of mankind to where we have got it on the run, reducing. And God willing, if the creek don’t rise, if we all live long enough, we will get to the point where AIDS is a memory and not a problem to deal with in the future.

This does not happen because we are lucky. It does not happen because we are smart. It happens because we are committed and we care. The United States is a caring nation.

I also am one that believes that foreign assistance makes a lot of sense, not just in the gift of money or investment of money, but in knowledge and skills. And while we are criticized sometimes in Congress for our foreign relations budget and overseas budget, foreign aid is less than 1 percent of the United States appropriation. Yet, that less than 1 percent investment probably brings us 80 to 90 percent of the good will we have around the world and continues to solidify it. And we need to remember that.

If we are not getting our money’s worth, we need to have the guts to force those who are not giving it to us to look at what they are doing and maybe help join us in what we are trying to do to help their people. But to threaten people by getting away from giving aid and help is just not the right way for our country to go. And I know the chairman of the committee and the ranking member and I know the ranking member here today feel the same way as I do.

I have long believed that our diplomatic and developmental effort to keep us from having our defense capabilities are very important. I have confidence in Administrator Mark Green to further the national interests by working with developing countries to achieve self-reliance. Just what he did as an ambassador alone in Tanzania is evidence of what one person can do with the right help, the right support, and the right commitment.

So we are glad that you all are here today, and I am pleased to turn it over to the ranking member for any opening remarks she might have.

STATEMENT OF HON. JEANNE SHAHEEN, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And congratulations to each of our nominees today. I look forward to hearing your testimony.

As I think you all know, the Senate has worked consistently to restore appropriate levels of foreign assistance to ensure that the professionals at the Department of State and USAID have the tools they need to adequately and effectively do their jobs.

And in this regard, I am really interested in hearing from our nominees about some of the more challenging issues that have been taken by this administration to revoke assistance to countries in conflict-ridden regions like Syria. In particular, I have just returned from Syria this summer. I was in northeast Syria. And I am concerned by the decision to revoke the stabilization funds for that region.

I am also interested to hear about your positions on global health, on girls’ education and gender equality. I know that each of you have professional experiences dealing with those issues, and so I am interested in hearing your thoughts about that.

And, of course, I want to hear about how USAID can continue its role as the leading global development agency even as its internal reform process continues.

So, again, I thank you all for being here, for your willingness to consider taking on these challenging positions at this difficult time in the world. Thank you.

Senator Isakson. With that said, I am pleased to welcome our nominees today, first, Ms. Bonnie Glick of Maryland to be Deputy Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development; Mr. Michael T. Harvey of Texas to be Assistant Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development in the Middle East; and third, Mr. Mark Montgomery of Virginia to an Assistant Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance.

We will start with you, Mr. Montgomery, and move down the table. Welcome.
Let me do one other thing. Will you please be sure and introduce your family members and let us, on behalf of the whole committee, say to all of you how much we appreciate the sacrifice they make to make your service possible for what we do. I am sorry I did not say that right off the bat.

Mr. Montgomery?

STATEMENT OF MARK MONTGOMERY, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT, DEMOCRACY, CONFLICT, AND HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE

Mr. Montgomery. Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as the nominee for Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance at the United States Agency for International Development.

I am grateful to the President and Secretary Pompeo and especially Administrator Green for the trust they have in my leadership of a bureau so central to the United States’ foreign policy objectives. And if confirmed, I will continue to work to support the country’s national security and the administration’s agenda.

I want to thank my wife Lucinda, who is a Navy veteran herself, my son Jack and my daughter Claire, who are all here with me today. They have been a family dedicated to service and country sacrificing their needs and desires to support my lengthy U.S. Navy career. We all know that no group sacrifices more for our military service members than our families, and I am incredibly grateful to all three of these for their continued love and support.

I also want to recognize the service of the dedicated USAID staff who have led the DCHA Bureau for the past 18 months, most recently Rear Admiral Tim Ziemer. Their collective leadership has been invaluable as USAID has responded to crises across the globe from Yemen to Venezuela.

When I decided to retire from the Navy after more than 32 years of active duty, I knew I wanted to continue to serve our country specifically in a role that emphasized our exceptional American values and our commitment to democracy and humanitarian assistance. Before working on that, however, I had given my word to Senator John McCain that I would work first at the Senate Armed Services Committee on his staff. I shared his zeal for oversight on national security issues and his desire to tackle a number of Department of Defense reforms. As you all know, the Congress has recently completed the fiscal year 2019 NDAA, which bears Senator McCain’s name, and I am now excited to return to my personal goal of working on democracy and development issues, if confirmed.

I am particularly proud to be nominated to lead USAID’s DCHA Bureau. As Administrator Mark Green has said, ensuring democratic foundations is critical to USAID’s work around the world and it is pivotal for the developing state’s journey to self-reliance. I got to see this firsthand when I worked at U.S. European Command and worked with the State Department and USAID country teams. I supported the democracy and stabilization efforts in the Balkans and Caucasus. This assignment taught me the valuable role that the U.S. Government has in building stable, resilient democracies and how this work contributes to the stable international order that the United States both supports on and relies on.

During my naval career, I also had the privilege to work with USAID during the response to numerous natural disasters. There is no more powerful symbol of America abroad than a USAID disaster assistance response team heading into the heart of an emergency. When Typhoon Haiyan hit the Philippines in 2013, the carrier strike group I commanded led the response on the part of the U.S. Navy. But I worked side by side with and, in fact, I worked for the USAID DART team. Throughout our interactions, I saw the incredible value that USAID’s expeditionary teams bring to disaster response. DCHA brought speed, expertise, resources, and the spirit of the American people to a disaster that threatened tens of thousands of Filipino lives.

Taken together, the nine offices at DCHA provide rapid and effective assistance to those suffering. They provide a faster and more durable recovery, and they help shore up democracy and governance as the most critical means of preventing further conflict and lessening the devastation of natural disasters.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with Congress, working closely with the interagency, and with the international community on three key areas.

The first is to enhance the coherence of the U.S. Government’s response to conflict by improving our ability to identify fragile states and provide corrective actions upstream before a problem metastasizes.

The second is emphasizing USAID’s efforts to tackle food and humanitarian assistance as prevention and deterrence challenges, while continuing the agency’s significant response efforts.

And the third is strengthening and elevating the U.S. Government’s humanitarian voice, both by highlighting the leadership role of the United States and by encouraging consistent participation by key allies and partners.

Now finally, Senator McCain often reminded us that the United States is a great and powerful country. And with that great power comes a blessing, and that blessing incurs a responsibility and a sacrifice. I am honored to be considered for this position and am humbled by the responsibilities it entails.

I thank you again and look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MARK MONTGOMERY

Chairman Isakson, Ranking Member Shaheen, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as the nominee for Assistant Administrator for the Bureau for Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance (DCHA) at the United States Agency for International Development (USAID). I am grateful for the trust and confidence President Trump, Secretary Pompeo, and Administrator Green have in my leadership for a Bureau so central to the United States’ humanitarian, development, democracy and foreign policy objectives. If confirmed, I will continue to work to support the country’s national security and the administration’s agenda.

I also want to thank the Members of the Foreign Relations committee for your strong support of foreign assistance. I would also like to recognize the service of the extremely dedicated USAID staff who have led the DCHA Bureau superbly over the last 18 months, most recently Rear Admiral Tim Ziemer. Their leadership has been invaluable as USAID has responded to the threat of famines in South Sudan and Nigeria; the ongoing Rohingya crisis; and the humanitarian disasters in Yemen, Syria, and Venezuela.

My thanks also to my family, friends, and colleagues who have provided me unfailing support and encouragement over the years, and for those who are able to be here today. I especially want to thank my wife Lucinda, my son Jack, and my daughter Claire. They have been a family dedicated to service and country, sacrificing their needs and desires to support my lengthy United States Navy career. No group sacrifices more for our military service members than our families, and I am incredibly grateful for their continued love and support.

When I decided to retire from the Navy after more than 32 years of active duty, I knew I wanted to continue to serve our country and I specifically wanted to work in a role that emphasized our exceptional American values and commitment to democracy and humanitarian assistance. Only one thing stood in my path, and that was Senator John McCain, who had asked me to come work on his Senate Armed Services committee (SASC) Staff. I shared his zeal for oversight on national security issues, and we had a number of common challenges we wanted to work on within our national security programs. As you know, we have recently completed the Fiscal Year 2019 National Defense Authorization Act, which bears the Senator's name, and I am excited to return to my goal of working on democracy and development issues, if confirmed.

I am particularly honored to be nominated to lead the DCHA Bureau. I previously had the opportunity to see USAID’s work with democracy and governance in my first flag officer tour at U.S. European Command, where I led the Combatant Command’s political-military programs in the Baltics, Balkans and Caucasus. In this assignment, I worked closely with the State Department and USAID country teams, and I was able to observe, and support, the positive progress of U.S. democracy and stabilization efforts in these nascent and transitioning democracies. This assignment taught me the valuable role that the U.S. Government, and, more specifically, USAID, has in building stable, resilient democracies, and how the development of these democracies contributes to the stable international order the United States both supports and relies on.

DCHA’s Center of Excellence on Democracy, Human Rights and Governance helps nations build effective governments and robust civil societies so they have better potential to provide security and justice, economic opportunity, and political freedom for their people. As Administrator Green has said, the crises we see today so often reflect a lack of democratic foundations, effective governing institutions, and respect for human rights. Ensuring democratic foundations is critical to the work USAID does around the world, and is pivotal for the journey to self-reliance.

During my career as a nuclear trained surface warfare officer in the United States Navy, I had the privilege to work with USAID during the responses to numerous disasters. DCHA’s responsibilities when disaster strikes are significant, as the U.S. Government’s lead for humanitarian response through the Offices of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance (OFDA) and Food for Peace (FFP). Collectively, they responded to disasters in 53 countries around the world last year, to provide life-saving food, shelter, medical care, and other essential services.

There is no more powerful and iconic symbol of America abroad than when USAID sends a Disaster Assistance Response Team (DART) into the heart of an emergency. I witnessed DCHA’s capabilities up close during the U.S. response to Typhoon Haiyan in 2013 in the Philippines. At the time, I was serving as the Commander of the Carrier Task Force in the Western Pacific, embarked on the USS GEORGE WASHINGTON. I was immediately assigned as the Maritime Force Commander, and, in that role, led the response on the part of the U.S. Navy, working side by side with OFDA’s DART to respond to the typhoon. The DART deployed even before the super typhoon made landfall, and, throughout our interactions, I saw the incredible value USAID’s expeditionary teams bring to a disaster response. OFDA and FFP brought speed, expertise, resources, and the spirit of the American people to a disaster that threatened tens of thousands of Filipino lives.

Additionally, as the Director of Operations at U.S. Pacific Command from 2014–2017, I worked with the DCHA Bureau again in USAID’s response to the Nepal earthquake in 2015. I helped organize and coordinate the extensive military airlift support to USAID as part of Operation Sayyogyi Haat, during which USAID deployed a DART to provide relief supplies and conduct search and rescue operations to find survivors.

While at PACOM, I worked very closely with the humanitarian and civil-military advisors from DCHA’s Office of Civil-Military Coordination embedded in the combatant command. These USAID staff provided expertise and support, helped two national security entities speak the same language, and brought their unique capabilities to bear on addressing the developmental and democracy challenges throughout South and South East Asia.

DCHA also assists nations with the difficult task of post-crisis political and social transition, and works to address the root causes of instability before conflicts become humanitarian emergencies. The Office of Transition Initiatives, for instance, has programs in places such as Libya, Nigeria, Nicaragua, and Somalia, where its partners work with national and local leaders to provide basic services and give a voice to people in marginalized communities. The Conflict Management and Mitigation office assesses the prospects of conflict, and works with local and international organizations to reduce the risks of violence by supporting grassroots demands for peace. Teams from across DCHA continually analyze risk, whether of famine, mass atrocities, communicable disease, or flooding, to build resilience in our partner nations.

The Office of American Schools and Hospitals Abroad (ASHA) program within DCHA directly supports some of the leading global education and health facilities, investments that contribute to U.S. public diplomacy efforts and foster strong civil society institutions and excellence in higher education and innovation.

Taken together, the offices across the DCHA Bureau represent the core capabilities required to provide rapid and effective assistance to those suffering from disaster and conflict, to help foster a faster and more durable recovery and, importantly, to shore up democracy and governance as the most critical means of preventing further conflict and lessening the devastation of natural disaster.

If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with Congress, the interagency, and the international community on three key areas.

The first is enhancing the coherence of the U.S. Government’s response to conflict, which includes: improving the administration’s ability to identify fragile states and provide corrective, mitigating measures; institutionalizing the Stabilization Assistance Review with the Departments of Defense and State to leverage diplomatic engagements, defense, and foreign assistance effectively to stabilize conflict-affected areas; and further strengthening civil-military collaboration within Washington offices, the Combatant Commands and in the field.

The second is emphasizing USAID’s efforts to tackle food and humanitarian assistance as prevention and deterrence challenges, while continuing the Agency’s significant response efforts. These efforts can improve resilience, reduce fragility and develop relationships.

The third is strengthening and elevating the U.S. Government’s humanitarian voice, both highlighting the leadership role of the United States, and by encouraging consistent participation by key allies and partners in this global effort.

I would like to briefly mention the proposed USAID Transformation, which I have discussed with Administrator Green and others at USAID. The Transformation would change the DCHA Bureau, particularly through the proposed creation of the Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance and Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization. Both proposed Bureaus would oversee USAID functions that currently fall under DCHA, so, if confirmed, my role as Assistant Administrator would also change, pending approval of the reorganization.

The intent of the proposed structure is to further strengthen USAID’s efficient and holistic approach to programming across the spectrum of disaster preparedness, response, mitigation and prevention. The Agency also believes this would elevate USAID’s voice with interagency colleagues on these issues. I look forward to learning more about and implementing the proposed changes as Congress approves them. I believe they will help ensure USAID remains the world’s premier international development Agency, and continues the important work it does to protect America’s future security and prosperity.

As Administrator Green has said, in a world as complex as ours, with our national security under greater threat than ever, we must bring to bear the entirety of our statecraft toolbox, including our most sophisticated development tools. Senator McCain often reminded us that the United States is a great and powerful country, and with that great blessing comes great responsibility. I can think of no more important place to carry out this responsibility than with the team of professionals at USAID.

I am honored to be considered for this position, and humbled by the responsibilities it entails. If confirmed, I look forward to joining the ranks of the many dedicated and courageous men and women who are working around the world, the DCHA Bureau, and the rest of USAID. Thank you again for giving me the opportunity to appear before you today. I welcome any questions you might have.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you very much, Mr. Montgomery.

Ms. Glick?
STATEMENT OF BONNIE GLICK, OF MARYLAND, TO BE DEPUTY ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ms. GLICK. Senator Isakson, Senator Shaheen, members of the committee, I am honored to come before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as Deputy Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development. I am grateful to President Trump and Administrator Green for their trust and confidence in me to serve in this important role.

I want to thank my family members for their unwavering support. My parents, both proud first generation Americans, taught their four children the values of patriotism, the awareness of the role that our country plays on the global stage, and the understanding of the need to be loyal to friends and allies. My mother, Sherry Glick, is here today. My father, Jerry Glick, of blessed memory is watching me here from somewhere up above. I would also like to acknowledge my wonderful husband, Paul Foldi, and our sons, Matthew and Jonathan, who are here today.

I began my career as a Foreign Service officer at an interesting time in foreign relations. The influence of the Soviet Union was waning, and former satellite countries were coming out from under Moscow's grip. The Iron Curtain was lifting. I served two tours of duty in former communist countries, Ethiopia and Nicaragua. For each tour, I was trained in the local language and culture prior to assuming my duties. While in Ethiopia, I saw two nations, Ethiopia and Eritrea, emerge from the brutal dictatorship and Red Terror of one of Africa's most notorious regimes. In Nicaragua, I saw a country trying to recover from civil war. It saddens me today to see that Nicaragua, which had taken so many steps forward, has now retreated into the old ways of brutal dictatorial power games once again under Daniel Ortega. By contrast, I am heartened to see that Ethiopia and Eritrea have taken important steps to ensuring a lasting peace and look forward, if confirmed, to visiting the Horn of Africa and to promoting these efforts.

Since August of last year, I have had the great privilege of serving as the Deputy Secretary of the Maryland Department of Aging, a cabinet agency. Like development, aging is not a partisan issue. We are all doing it. Through my work in the Department of Aging, I have been reintroduced, after many years' absence, to government service. I am reminded on a daily basis of the important mission I committed to as a granting agency, as a service agency, and as a senior leader in Governor Hogan's administration. I understand the importance of being a good steward of taxpayers' dollars, of providing high quality service options particularly to vulnerable populations, and to leading a large, professional highly capable team of people committed to serving Maryland's seniors.

As Administrator Mark Green has said, the mission of USAID ultimately is to end the need for foreign assistance. Should I be confirmed, it will be my role to assist him and the exceptional women and men of USAID in achieving this goal.

If confirmed, I will ensure the agency maintains its focus on the promotion of democratic values and free elections, among the key pillars of our development work. Democracy and America's democratic values underpin all of the work done in USAID. The role of democracy and good governance cannot be underestimated when considering countries on the journey to self-reliance, countries that will one day be our partners in development projects around the world.

If confirmed, I will pursue efforts already underway to reform USAID’s offices and procedures. If I learned nothing else from my 12 years at IBM, I learned that there is always room for improvement even when something is technically perfect. What I also learned from IBM is that the private sector has an important role to play in the development space. I look forward to the opportunity to work with partners in the private sector, the nonprofit sector, and across academia to come up with new and more innovative ways to stretch everyone’s investments further in ways that are mutually beneficial to all.

If confirmed, it will be a tremendous honor to serve my country again, this time as the Deputy Administrator of USAID. I know too that I will be humbled every day by the incredible work done by development and humanitarian assistance professionals in all parts of the globe. Their dedication to helping others, usually complete strangers on those strangers’ journeys to self-reliance, is truly inspiring work, and it would my privilege to participate in USAID’s efforts to reach those in crisis and to help those striving for a better life.

Many years ago, I caught the bug for international service. It carried me to the Soviet Union, to East Africa, to Latin America, to Asia, to Europe, and now to this table before all of you today. Senators, nearly 30 years later, my commitment to make a difference through the power of American values, American compassion, and American skills is stronger than ever before. If confirmed, I will work with Administrator Green to lead a world-class team to do life-changing work in environments that are often terribly hard. I commit to working with you and your staffs, with your counterparts in the House, and with the others in the interagency to achieve our goals as a nation.

Thank you very much, and I look forward to your questions.

Ms. Glick’s prepared statement follows:

PREPARED STATEMENT OF BONNIE LAURA GLICK

Senator Isakson, Senator Shaheen, members of the committee, I am honored to come before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as Deputy Administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). I’m grateful to President Trump and Administrator Green for their trust and confidence in me to serve in this important role.

During my consultations in preparation for this hearing, I had the pleasure and honor to meet with countless USAID employees who provided me with briefings and papers that detailed their work. To those dedicated Foreign Service, Civil Service, and contract employees, thank you for your counsel and guidance. Thank you for your commitment to making USAID the world’s flagship development agency that promotes democracy and human rights, and delivers humanitarian assistance and development aid to friends, to allies, and to people who are eager to see change in the world.

I also want to express my personal gratitude to David Moore, who has done an outstanding job in the role of Acting Deputy these last months.

I want to thank my family for their unwavering support. My parents, both proud first-generation Americans, raised their four children with values of patriotism, with awareness of the role our country plays on the global stage, and with a sense of abiding loyalty to friends and allies. My mother, Sherry Glick, is here today, and my father, Jerry Glick, is watching me here from somewhere up above. I would also like to acknowledge my wonderful husband, Paul Foldi, and our sons, Matthew and Jonathan, who are here today.

I began my career at an interesting time in foreign relations. The influence of the Soviet Union was waning, and former satellite countries were coming out from under Moscow’s grip. The Iron Curtain was lifting. As a State Department Foreign Service Officer, I served two tours of duty in Ethiopia and Nicaragua. For each tour, I was trained in the local language and culture prior to assuming my duties. While in Ethiopia, I saw two nations, Ethiopia and Eritrea, emerge from the brutal dictatorship and Red Terror of one of Africa’s most notorious regimes. In Nicaragua, I saw a country trying to recover from civil war. Thousands of Nicaraguans who had fled the country when the brutal Sandinista regime took over were choosing to return to their homes under the leadership of Violeta Chamorro, only to find the Sandinistas had confiscated their properties. It saddens me today to see that Nicaragua, which had taken steps forward, which was growing economically and whose citizens were contributing meaningfully, has returned to a brutal, dictatorial regime. By contrast, I’m heartened to see that Ethiopia and Eritrea have taken important steps toward ensuring a lasting peace, and I look forward, if confirmed, to visiting the Horn of Africa and to promoting these efforts.

Since August 2017, I have had the great privilege of serving as the Deputy Secretary of the Maryland Department of Aging, a Cabinet agency. Like development, aging is not a partisan issue. We’re all doing it. Through my work in the Department of Aging, I have been reintroduced, after an absence of many years, to government service. It has been an honor to serve the older adult population of my State, many of whom are my friends and relatives. I am reminded on a daily basis of the important mission to which I am committed, as an advocate for an important service agency, and as a senior leader in Governor Hogan’s administration. I understand the importance of being a good steward of taxpayers’ dollars, of providing high quality service options and tracking their impact on people’s lives, particularly for vulnerable populations; and of leading a large, professional, highly-capable team of people committed to serving Maryland’s seniors. It’s an honor to have been asked to serve in this role.

Throughout my travels over the past nearly 30 years, a common theme was evident—a desire of proud peoples, no matter where they live, to be self-reliant, to raise children into lives that were better than their own, and to live in peace with their neighbors.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as Administrator Mark Green has said, the goal of USAID ultimately is to end the need for foreign assistance.

Should I be confirmed, it will be my role to assist him and the exceptional women and men of USAID in achieving this goal. USAID currently works in over 100 countries to provide humanitarian assistance, development skills, and capacity-building in all facets of society including health, education, democracy, economic growth, food security, and nutrition—to name but a few of the sectors in which the Agency works.

As Deputy Administrator, I will be charged with overseeing several key pieces of USAID programming, including all of USAID’s regional programming, Global Health programs, and pending Congressional approval, the Bureaus for Development, Democracy, and Innovation (DDI), which is proposed as part of USAID’s redesign. I am particularly pleased that I will oversee USAID’s democracy programming, as I believe that democracy and good governance are the underpinnings of USAID’s work around the world. Without democratic governance, no country will be able to succeed on its journey to self-reliance.

If confirmed, I will ensure the Agency maintains its focus on the promotion of democratic values and free elections, one of the key pillars of our development work. The role of democracy and citizen-responsive governance cannot be underestimated when considering countries on the journey to self-reliance—countries that will one day be our partners in development projects around the world.

Most Americans view USAID as our nation’s premier “first-responder” for those overseas suffering from disasters—both natural and man-made. Today, USAID is helping to care for Venezuelans who are fleeing chaos and dictatorship and finding safe haven in Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Brazil, and even the Caribbean. USAID is also supporting oppressed Rohingya in Burma and those who have fled across the border into Bangladesh. As Administrator Green emphasized on his trip to Burma and Bangladesh earlier this year, the U.S. Government continues to pressure the Burmese civilian Government and the military to end the violence against the Rohingya and other ethnic groups, and calls on all parties to allow unfettered humanitarian access to, and freedom of movement for, all communities in need.

Of course, refugee crises cannot be solved without addressing their underlying causes—failed, usually brutal, leadership in the countries from which refugees are forced to flee. America is a country that, from its very origins, was formed by people fleeing oppression. My ancestors fled from pogroms in Eastern Europe. My in-laws fled from the Soviets as the Red Army laid claim to lands in its so-called sphere of influence after World War II. My children are a mix of generations borne out of fear, oppression, and then new generations borne out of freedom. As American leaders, it is our duty to help others who are fearful of, and oppressed by, their own or hostile neighboring, governments, and it is the work of USAID to help foster the conditions for democratic rule to enable good governance to flourish. Regrettably, there are parts of the world where people are struggling every day to survive. They are victims of wars, of human trafficking, of sexual violence in camps for refugee or internally displaced persons, of famine, of outbreaks of disease, and countless other privations. USAID is the largest humanitarian assistance organization in the world, and its ability to respond to crises, wherever they occur, is a testament to the men and women in the Agency’s ranks, as well as to the American spirit of generosity and good will. If confirmed, it will be humbling to serve with God’s who walk in God’s path every day and serve those who cannot cure for themselves. Who bring them up, and who, in the process, put them on a journey to self-reliance.

I had the good fortune of working for many years in IBM’s storied Research Division. Working with some of the smartest and most accomplished scientists on earth, from all over the world, we developed solutions to create a “smarter planet.” The Smarter Planet envisioned by IBM is not unlike the vision we all have for a smarter, more sustainable earth with smart water use, smart energy, smart cities, smart agriculture, smart utilities, and on and on.

I share Administrator Green’s unwavering commitment to end the need for foreign assistance, which I believe requires the United States to lead and engage in the world. If confirmed, I look forward to joining the USAID team worldwide to help lead others onto this path to self-reliance, which will move more countries from recipients of aid to donors.

When USAID’s mission is achieved, it will deliver a world that is NOT one in which nations are without problems, but it will be one in which nations can determine their own course, in which they can marshal the resources necessary to be successful, and from which they can demonstrate to the rest of the world their resilience. I look forward to that day.

If confirmed, I commit to doing my utmost, every day, to make sure that we are good stewards of the U.S. taxpayers’ dollars. I know how hard my fellow Americans work, how sometimes they make sacrifices just to get by, let alone to thrive.

If confirmed, and working with you, I will pursue efforts already underway to reform USAID’s offices and procedures. If I learned nothing else from IBM, I learned there is always room for improvement, even when something is technically perfect. What I also learned from IBM is that the private sector has an important role to play in development. The private sector is a critical partner, and will have a seat at the table alongside all other actors in the development space. Having worked across public, private, and non-profit sectors, I speak the language of each one, and believe I might be uniquely qualified to help USAID further its relationship with each of them. I look forward to the opportunity to work with partners in the private sector, the non-profit sector, and across academia to come up with new and more innovative ways to stretch everyone’s investments further, in ways that are mutually beneficial to all.

If confirmed, it will be a tremendous honor to serve my country again, this time as the Deputy Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development. I know, too, that I will be humbled every day by the incredible work done by development and humanitarian assistance professionals all around the globe. Their dedication to helping others, usually complete strangers, on these strangers’ journeys to self-reliance is truly God’s work here on earth, and it would be my privilege and blessing to participate in USAID’s efforts to reach those in crisis, and to help those who are striving for a better life.

Many years ago I “caught the bug” for international service. It carried me to East Africa, to Latin America, to Asia, to Europe, and now to this table before all of you today. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee, nearly 30 years later, my commitment to make a difference, through the power of American values, American compassion, and American skills is stronger than ever before. I know that this will not be an easy job. Indeed, if I ever wake in the morning to say that there’s nothing left to do, I will know that my job is done. We’re not there yet. If confirmed, I will work with Administrator Green to lead a world-class team to do life-changing work in environments that are often terribly hard. USAID does not sit back and rest on its laurels, nor should those who lead the Agency. I commit to working with you, with your counterparts in the House, and with the State Department, Defense Department, and others in the inter-agency to achieve our goals as a nation.

Thank you very much. I look forward to your questions.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Ms. Glick.

Mr. Harvey, before you speak, I would like Mr. Cory Gardner to have a few words to say about you.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

And thank you to all of the nominees for your willingness to serve our public.

Mr. Harvey, this is a little bit of an audible. I just wanted to thank you for your service and, of course, the work we do through international development is incredibly important. We have a bill coming up tomorrow afternoon that we will work on our presence and development work in Asia.

But the real reason I wanted to say something is the gentleman over your right shoulder. And I question whether or not we should confirm you based on your brother. His brother is a Senator from Colorado, a State legislator who I served with for a number of years, and I just wanted to welcome the Harvey family. What an honor it is to have you here and your public service. And to brother Ted, we will not hold that against you.

Thank you. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARVEY. Thank you very much, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. The floor is yours.

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL T. HARVEY, OF TEXAS, TO BE AN ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT, MIDDLE EAST

Mr. Harvey. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for that allowance.

Senator Isakson, Senator Shaheen, and other distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to come before you today as the President’s nominee to be the Assistant Administrator for the Middle East at the U.S. Agency for International Development. And like my colleagues, I am extremely grateful for the confidence that President Trump, Secretary Pompeo, and Administrator Green have placed on me.

As I begin my remarks, I would like to recognize the outstanding leadership of Hal Ferguson and Maria Longi, who have headed USAID’s Middle East Bureau for the past 2 years. Maria’s knowledge and dedication, acquired over a long and distinguished career with the U.S. Government, really reflects the best qualities of the Career Senior Executive Service in our government. And Hal, with his service at the International Republican Institute, where he led the Middle East programs, enabled him to step right into the role at USAID, and I look forward to working with him if I am confirmed.

I would especially like to thank my family, including Ted, and friends and professional colleagues who have supported and encouraged me to pursue this opportunity. In particular, I would like to recognize my wife Laura, who is here with us today, and then my kids, Ellen, Hannah, and Jack, who could not be here. They know the importance of public service, and I am here with their full support.
We are a Foreign Service family. And like thousands of other families who represent America in some tough places around the world, we have had an unusual life. Our decades abroad have given us tremendous respect for the men and women who serve our country abroad, including the kids who serve our country abroad. If confirmed, I will bring that experience, as well as over 30 years of professional expertise, to this job.

And I am particularly grateful to have the opportunity to be working in the Middle East again. It is a part of the world that has had great significance for me and my family, having served in the region throughout my career. It has played a significant role in our children’s upbringing. It was a joy to watch our oldest daughter graduate from high school at the Roman amphitheatre in Jerash in Jordan, and then to hear our son sing Ha Tikva when he graduated from high school in Israel.

During my career, I have seen significant changes at USAID, especially since September 11th. I am proud that we are a much stronger, smarter, and more flexible agency than when I joined. Our role in foreign affairs and national security has evolved dramatically. We have a much closer and more integrated working relationship with our interagency colleagues. We have emerged as thought leaders and the drivers of fragility in the countries where we work, and we have accumulated a deep understanding of what drives extremism and social division. This knowledge has enabled us to be much more helpful to our colleagues across the U.S. Government as we collectively grapple with the challenges across the globe, especially in the Middle East. If confirmed, I look forward to further strengthening these important capacities and these relationships.

The complex humanitarian and development and political situation in the Middle East and North Africa presents us both challenges and opportunities. USAID can help the people of the region meet these challenges. The Middle East Bureau is responding to immediate crises in the region while building on the positive trends that do exist and laying the foundations for future U.S. Government engagements beyond the U.S. assistance programs.

While the Middle East poses many challenges, it also presents enormous opportunities to showcase what can be done and what has been done through the generosity and commitment of the American people. The people of these countries are ready for constructive change, to engage with the global community in building a prosperous, peaceful future, a future consistent with their own culture and history. The United States can easily come up alongside to support these aspirations. If confirmed, I commit to partnering with the people of the Middle East and North Africa to help them on that journey to self-reliance.

Senator Isakson, Senator Shaheen, and other distinguished members, I am honored that I am sitting here at this desk with my colleagues, and I thank you for the opportunity to be here. I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator Isakson, Senator Shaheen, and distinguished Members of the committee,
I am honored to come before you today as the President’s nominee for Assistant Administrator of the Middle East Bureau at the United States Agency for International Development (USAID). It is a privilege to appear before this committee, and I am grateful for the confidence President Trump, Secretary Pompeo, and Administrator Green have placed in me.

As I begin my remarks, I would like to recognize the outstanding leadership of Hal Ferguson and Maria Longi, who have headed USAID’s Middle East Bureau for the past two years. Maria’s knowledge and dedication, acquired during a distinguished career across the U.S. Government, reflect the best qualities of the Career Senior Executive Service. Hal’s experience at the International Republican Institute and his background in the Middle East enabled him to step right into his new role at USAID, and I look forward to working with him if confirmed.

I would especially like to thank my family, friends and professional colleagues who have supported and encouraged me to pursue this opportunity. In particular, I would like to recognize my wife, Laura, and our three children, Ellen, Hannah and Jack. They all know the importance of public service, and I am here today with their full support.

We are a Foreign Service family. Like thousands of other families who represent America in some of the toughest places on earth, we have had an unusual life. Our decades abroad have given us tremendous respect for the men and women—and kids—who serve USAID and the U.S. Government overseas and in Washington.

If confirmed, I will bring the experience I have gained over 30 years with USAID, including by leading the Agency’s Task Force to Defeat the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS), and by serving as USAID Mission Director in Nigeria, West Bank and Gaza, and Serbia and Montenegro; and by working as Deputy Mission Director in Iraq and Jordan.

I am particularly grateful to have the opportunity to once again be working in the Middle East—a part of the world that has great significance for me and my family. Laura and I have embraced the culture of the Middle East, and the region has played a significant role in our children’s upbringing. It was a joy to watch my oldest daughter’s high school graduation at the Roman amphitheatre in Jerash, in Jordan; and we were extremely proud to hear our son sing Ha Tikva at his high school graduation in Israel.

During my career, I have seen significant changes at USAID, especially since September 11, 2001. I am proud that we are a much stronger, smarter and more flexible organization. Our role in foreign affairs and national security has evolved dramatically. We have a much closer, more integrated working relationship with our interagency colleagues, most importantly at the Department of State and the Department of Defense. We have emerged as thought leaders on the drivers of fragility in the countries where we work, and have accumulated a deep understanding of what drives extremism and social division. This knowledge has enabled us to be much more helpful to our interagency colleagues as we collectively grapple with challenges across the globe, especially in the Middle East. If confirmed, I look forward to further strengthening these important capacities and relationships.

The complex political, humanitarian, and development situation in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) presents both challenges and opportunities for USAID’s work. USAID can help the people of the region meet their challenges. The Middle East Bureau is responding to immediate crises in the region, building on positive trends where they exist, and laying the foundation for future U.S. Government engagements beyond assistance programs. USAID’s priorities for the MENA region include 1) supporting core U.S. national security objectives; 2) mitigating the human impact of ongoing conflicts; and, 3) fostering inclusive development and reform as opportunities arise. If confirmed, I look forward to leading that work.

With the support of Congress, USAID’s Middle East Bureau supports development and stabilization programming across the region. The U.S. Government also provides significant humanitarian assistance in much of the region, including in Syria, Iraq, Jordan and Yemen. If confirmed, I will provide strong oversight of USAID’s programs in the Middle East, and ensure those programs respond to the needs and aspirations of the people in the region by facilitating inclusive economic growth, supporting democratic processes, strengthening civil society, and addressing other key challenges, such as helping religious and ethnic minorities across the region.

The Middle East poses many challenges, both politically and developmentally, but it also presents enormous opportunities to showcase what has been done right through the generosity and commitment of the American people. Without being naive, I am optimistic about the broad direction of events in the Arab world. We know that the people who suffer the most from the violence in the Middle East and North Africa are the people of the region themselves. The people of these countries are ready for constructive change, to engage with the global community in building a prosperous, peaceful future, a future consistent with their culture and history. The United States can support those aspirations. If confirmed, I commit to partnering with the people of the Middle East and North Africa to help them on that journey to self-reliance.

Senator Isakson, Senator Shaheen, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to be considered for the position of Assistant Administrator for the Bureau for the Middle East at USAID. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to answering your questions.

Senator ISAKSON. Well, thank you very much. We appreciate all of you being here today. Glad to have you, Mr. Gardner. And glad to have your brother too, Mr. Harvey. Was he good to you when you were growing up?

Mr. Ted Harvey: No. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARVEY. I am the older, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. I knew that was going to be the answer.

We will start with a round of questions, and I will lead off with one. I want to thank Mr. Montgomery for his comments about John McCain. John’s example is a great military leader of our country, a Member of the United States Senate, prisoner of war, a member of the United States Navy, decorated pilot. But John always believed in diplomacy. He believed everything he did with power was only made possible in the end by diplomacy that could make a peace lasting. And so your recognition of him and his philosophy as a military man and as a citizen and a servant in the Senate was really much appreciated by me, and I appreciate it very much. I just wanted to say that to you. Thank you very much.

Ms. Glick, I am old. You served the old people of Maryland, and so do young people of USAID. Is that right?

Ms. GLICK. Yes. That is exactly right, Senator.

Senator ISAKSON. How would you describe your job as Deputy Administrator of USAID?

Ms. GLICK. That is a great question. And when I was first asked if this was something that I would be interested in doing, I asked that same question. What is the job? And the answer then was anything that the Administrator does not want to do.

But the truth of the matter is it is working with the talented women and men of USAID around the world doing a lot of the day-to-day operations of the agency to ensure that the Administrator is freed up often to be the public face of USAID but falling back into that category of when he is running around in one part of the world and another part of the world needs immediate attention, certainly that would be where I fall in.

It is also part of running an agency that is spread around the world with something like 11,000 employees and staff and implementing partners and taking into account on a day-to-day basis their safety and security in operating environments that are often quite dangerous. It will be a combination of a lot of “all of the above,” and I have a feeling that no one day will be like the last.

Senator ISAKSON. You are going to be the one that gets delegated all the hard jobs.

Ms. GLICK. That could be, sir.

Senator ISAKSON. Mark is a great leader.
Ms. GLICK. Yes, he is.

Senator ISAKSON. He will be a great leader, and you will be a great person to help him out with that because, as I was listening to you talk, I was thinking when I read that you were going to be Deputy, I said I wonder what a deputy administrator is really going to do. But really what you are is vice president of USAID. You are the number two person to go set the table when the Administrator has to later come in.

Ms. GLICK. Right.

Senator ISAKSON. That is a very important job. And I think your experience in Maryland and doing the job you did there will be a tremendous help to you in doing exactly that as far as USAID is concerned.

Mr. Harvey, what do you see as the most important thing you need to know to be one who can resolve conflict in the world? That is part of your job.

Mr. Harvey. It is in fact part of my job, Senator, and it is not a small matter.

You know, having spent 30 years in one war zone after another, what has struck me is how important it is for us to understand the turf that we are on. I find too often we go in with either little understanding, a superficial understanding, or a highly misinformed understanding of where we are going, the lives that we are affecting, and the history that we are stepping into.

I said in my remarks that we are a smarter agency, which does not make us necessarily always up to the task, but I think modesty has got to be just a core value in the agency when you are trying to affect somebody else's life. And if you do not start with that, making peace is awful hard.

Senator ISAKSON. The Mahgreb I think is the term used to define North Africa—is it not—on the continent of Africa?

Mr. Harvey. The west half of it, yes.

Senator ISAKSON. The west half of it?

Mr. Harvey. Yes.

Senator ISAKSON. That part of the world is what the heart is to the human body. It is the heartbeat of what is going to happen in the future. Civilization pretty much began close to that area and developed in that area, and one day, the Bible teaches us, it is probably going to be decided in that area. And we all know from what has happened Osama bin Laden, with Daesh, with all the terrorist organizations we have had to deal with, the terrorism acts that have taken place, that that is going to be the hotbed for the immediate future, certainly for your lifetime and for mine.

What do you think the United States has to do to get ourselves in the best position to be the leader of the solution for the Mahgreb and that part of the world on the issue of terrorism?

Mr. Harvey. You know, we have been wrestling with this as a country and as a government now for almost 20 years. And it continues to be a tough, tough issue. But the thing that has struck me, as I have spent my time in that part of the world, is how broadly and deeply the people of that region want this chapter to close. And there are currents in every one of these societies that are pushing toward a future that is very consistent with what our vision would be of peace, of individual freedom even if it is expressed perhaps in a different cultural model than we would recognize here in the West. And when I see how we should be engaging with these societies, we need to come up alongside those folks who have the energy and the bravery and the vision that we share to push these very, very troubled countries and very, very troubled societies toward a future that they want that is consistent with our values because at the end of the day, there is much more that we agree with than what divides us.

Senator Isakson. I agree with that. And I think most of the difference we have is because of religion. The differences of religion and the Muslim faith and some of the things that are going on in that part of the world are the heart of some of the difficulties we had. We saw that with Sunni and Shia in Iraq in the Iraq conflict. And if we can find a way to take our USAID efforts to bond with the people of the various countries, regardless of the religion that is the base in the country, but make us a part of that and their religion a part of what we try and serve, the better we will be able to reach those people and bring about peace in that area.

Senator Shaheen?

Senator Shaheen. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Montgomery, I want to echo Senator Isakson's comments about what you had to say about John McCain. We all miss him already, and I think the model of service that he set for everyone in the country is important for us to share with the next generation.

And I think I would not be speaking out of John McCain's school of agreement if I did not say that I question your judgment for leaving Sunapee, New Hampshire to come down to Washington, D.C. I think John would probably question that as well. [Laughter.]

Senator Shaheen. Mr. Montgomery is from New Hampshire, from a very beautiful part of New Hampshire, and we appreciate that you are willing to make the sacrifice to consider taking on this role.

I want to ask you, because USAID is in the process of merging its key humanitarian offices into a single bureau, how you think we need to ensure a successful merger in doing that and what sort of challenges pose the greatest problem as you think about how that merger needs to happen.

Mr. Montgomery. Thanks, ma'am, and thanks for the comments on Sunapee. My parents will be very happy.

I have been briefed on the organizational change, and obviously, all three of us are very aware of it and it has been part of our preparation.

What I would say is it was obvious to me that what the Administrator was looking for was improving the efficiency and the effectiveness of USAID as it expends the taxpayer dollar. And obviously, all of us can agree that is a good intent.

I think for us what to look at is are we bringing together in that search for efficiency and effectiveness the elements of preparation or mitigation of a casualty—in other words, what we do ahead of time to try to prevent a fragile state from turning into a crisis state—with the portions of the agency that we are doing the response. If you do that, you can get a lot of the lessons learned. You can build a ligature between those two so that the sensing of the fragility breaking down into chaos is better seen and the investments are made to prevent that from happening. So I think whether you look at it in the democracy area, the humanitarian area, or the conflict prevention area, if we can improve the ligature between preventative efforts and then the eventual recovery efforts, we will improve the overall resilience of the states we support.

So that is what I will be monitoring if in fact the notification is all approved and we begin to do elements of the reorganization. We will be monitoring to see if the efficiency and effectiveness of the agency are improving.

If I could comment on one other thing. I think it makes it easier for outside organizations to reach in to us if we are able to organize ourselves in a more efficient way where the different elements of food security or hygiene and water or democracy or conflict resolution are housed together. If we can make it easier, whether it is inside the interagency or whether it is with international partners or allies, to make it easier to reach into, we will make our organization inherently more efficient.

Senator Shaheen. That certainly makes sense to me. I guess my question is, what do you think the biggest challenges are in doing that? Where are we going to run into difficulties, and how do we get past those difficulties?

Mr. Montgomery. Being inside DOD, I got to experience a reorganization every year or so. And I think the biggest problem thing that I have seen—

Senator Shaheen. Senator Kaine and I appreciate that because we sit on the Armed Services committee.

Mr. Montgomery. Yes, ma’am. And so I would say the biggest challenges were people protecting rice bowls, people having a presumption of responsibility not necessarily understanding the administrator’s overarching vision.

I will say, having now been briefed extensively inside AID, the mix of professionals there of civil servants, Foreign Service, and the contractor personnel—absolutely, it is a flat organization, and it is an organization that experiences turbulence in the field routinely. As a result, I found them fairly shock-hardened, and I do not think we will have that challenge of I have got my rice bowl here, they have done enough movement, had enough instability in their job assignments when they were overseas, that when they are back in Washington I do not think that will be an issue. But it is certainly something to monitor, and I will work with the Deputy Administrator, if confirmed and if she is confirmed, to ensure that we achieve that level of efficiency.

Senator Shaheen. Thank you.

Ms. Glick, as we discussed earlier today in my office—and I appreciated your taking time to do that—I think one of the values that we should be very proud of in the United States and with the work of the State Department and USAID has been the emphasis on gender equality, the importance of women empowerment. It has been a core development issue. And we have seen that USAID has gender programs in more than 80 countries.

And as I said this morning, I am concerned that this administration is beginning to chip away at that commitment to gender equality and women’s empowerment and to send ambivalent messages about how committed we are to that.

As an example, the administration stripped all reference to sexual and reproductive health and rights from the State Department’s Human Rights Report. That is an essential source of information for reporting on abuses and holding abusive governments to account.

We also saw at the General Assembly last year that the U.S. pushed back against language in a resolution on violence against children that condemned all forms of violence against children, which has implications for—the U.S. Government pushed to limit this language to unlawful forms of violence against children, which has implications for what countries consider lawful violence, which could including things like child marriage, corporal punishment, that sort of thing.

So reassure me that you will be committed to continuing that focus on women’s empowerment and gender equality.

Ms. GLICK. Senator Shaheen, thank you very much for the question, and thank you too for meeting with me this morning. I found it very useful.

And I do want to recommit to you that I am very focused on women’s issues, maternal health, reproductive health, voluntary family planning. These are issues that a society cannot develop, a country cannot get on its own journey to self-reliance if it does not take into account equal rights for 50 percent of the population. This goes to educating girls. This goes to empowering women, whether it is through small business empowerment programs or through their own maternal health and access to information about how to more properly space their pregnancies so that they too can advance societally. I must reassure you that I am fully committed to ensuring that the agency focuses and continues a traditional focus on women’s issues and women’s rights.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, can you also talk about why this is important to men, not just women?

Ms. GLICK. This is critically important to men, as I have three of my most important men sitting behind me today. It is important for men to understand that women are productive and engaged members of their societies, that girls are equally as entitled to education as boys are because those girls and women will and should be the leaders of their countries in the future.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

And what we know is that when we support women in developing countries, that they tend to give back more to their families, to their communities, and to their countries than the male members of those societies. So I think it is very important to remind us all that this is not about women. It is about building stable societies. Thank you.

Ms. GLICK. Agreed. Thank you, ma’am.

Senator ISAKSON. Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Thank you, Chairman.

And I want to thank our nominees for your interest in serving our country, most appreciated. Welcome, members of your family and friends, to this hearing.
Ms. Glick, in his June prepared testimony to this committee, Administrator Green wrote that our assistance seeks to help empower people, communities, and government leaders on their journey to self-reliance and prosperity.

In that same hearing, I contrasted the United States’ focus on building self-reliant, strategic, and economic partners with China’s focus on resource extraction and the creation of dependence. Administrator Green agreed with my characterization.

In a June speech at the Brookings Institute, Administrator Green commented on what he called, quote, emergence of China’s mercantile authoritarian assistance programs. Unquote. He said China has shown little interest in adhering to the norms of debt sustainability or the principles of development assistance that we believe in, instead securing conditions in indebtedness, essentially mortgage a country’s future. China’s neocolonial hardball tactics and use of debt to force Sri Lanka to agree to a 99-year lease on a key port should be instructive to observers around the region, including Pakistan, Bangladesh, and elsewhere.

Ms. Glick, can you share your thoughts on China’s debt trap diplomacy and mercantile authoritarian assistance programs and how the United States should respond going forward?

Ms. Glick. Senator, it is a great question, and I agree wholeheartedly with Administrator Green in his assessment of the Chinese approach to foreign assistance, which at the end of the day is leading to tremendous debt burdens for the countries that are recipients of this Chinese largesse.

What USAID seeks to put forward is something that would be referred to as a clear choice, that countries have the option—and I love the language of mercantile authoritarian assistance. That is great. He has got a great speech writer. It is very important that countries recognize what they are doing when they enter into a deal with the Chinese. And you mentioned Sri Lanka.

We just saw and I just read in the “Wall Street Journal” a column about the Maldives, very close to Sri Lanka, which has taken the turn away from the direction of China. They just held elections. 90 percent of eligible voters voted, and 58 percent of them voted for the opposition candidate who took an active, pro-Western, and anti-Chinese approach, recognizing that he is not interested in mortgaging the future of the citizens of the Maldives.

Senator Young. So that is a great lead-in to the second part of my question for you. It seems as though we have an opportunity to persuade populations within these countries that their future is, indeed, being mortgaged by accepting this sort of development assistance.

So do you agree that the United States, therefore, should be using our voice and our vote and our convening power and all measures sort of at our disposal in multinational fora to educate all countries of the world about this sort of debt trap diplomacy and we should be pushing for more transparency on these projects in these various fora?

Ms. Glick. Yes, sir, I absolutely agree.

Senator Young. What about the use of Chinese labor on these local projects? Is that of concern to you as well, or is that a lesser concern maybe than the debt dimension?
Ms. Glick. That is a great concern as well because U.S. development projects are focused on engaging with local employment, providing economic growth opportunities for people who are resident citizens of those countries where development projects occur. Importing labor from China and sometimes, I understand, importing substandard materials is a trap again. Countries are not getting economically developed the way they are through U.S. development assistance programs. And Chinese laborers come and go.

Senator Young. So that is another point of education for the United States as we work with other countries who share our values and our model of development assistance to emphasize. There is really at least a dual mandate here to build the infrastructure and help catalyze an economy that needs catalyzation. Right?

Ms. Glick. That is right, exactly.

Senator Young. Ms. Glick, I want to pursue another line of questioning with you. But first, thank you for mentioning Rohingya in your prepared statement. I have done my best to follow this horrible situation. I have somewhat of a vested interest in this. We have a significant Burmese American population in my home State of Indiana. And I met with the Bangladesh Ambassador to the United States last week to talk about this very situation.

I was pleased to see the administration’s announcement just yesterday of additional humanitarian assistance, including $156 million for Rohingya refugees in host communities in Bangladesh. The provision of critical emergency services, including protection, emergency shelter, food, water, sanitation, and health care, is in the best traditions of U.S. leadership on humanitarian assistance. And so I applaud the Trump administration for this decision.

I would also note that the Department of State released yesterday a report entitled “Documentation of Atrocities in Northern Rakhine State.” Have you had a chance to review the report, Ms. Glick?

Ms. Glick. I have not yet reviewed the report, but I know that it is out there.

Senator Young. Okay. Will you review this report, Ms. Glick?

Ms. Glick. Yes, of course.

Senator Young. Mr. Chairman, I request unanimous consent to include this in the record.

Senator Isakson. Without objection.

[The information referred is located at the end of this transcript.]

Senator Young. Thank you.

So for those who have not reviewed it yet, based on a spring 2018 survey of the firsthand experiences of over 1,000 Rohingya refugees in Cox’s Bazar, additional credibility to reports we have already heard, the report found that the violence was, quote, extreme, large-scale, and widespread. The violence seemed designed for terrorizing the population and driving out the Rohingya residents. The scope and scale of the military’s operations indicate they were well planned and coordinated, and that the tactics utilized resulted in mass casualties, including, quote, locking people in houses to burn them, fencing off entire villages before shooting into the crowd, or sinking boats full of hundreds of fleeing Rohingya.
Ms. Glick, when we see such atrocities happen, in addition to demanding a halt to the violence and demanding humanitarian access, do you agree that we should seek to identify the perpetrators and hold them individually accountable?

Ms. GLICK. Yes, Senator, I do.

Senator YOUNG. Well, I certainly agree. If the words Never Again are to have meaning in actual practice, we should not be reluctant to call atrocities like this by their name, identify the perpetrators and hold them accountable. And so I am very encouraged by your responses. Thank you so much.

Ms. GLICK. Thank you, sir.

Senator ISAKSON. Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Mr. Chair, thank you.

And to the witnesses, congratulations for your nominations.

I want to pay a compliment. I want to be blunt, and then I have a couple of questions.

So on the compliment side, you are all three very, very appropriately qualified for these positions. I had a chance to see Mr. Montgomery’s work in person on the SASC committee, and I think you will represent the nation very well.

But I want to be blunt because we have hearings with people like you, like your director, director Green, who I think is very, very solid, where you represent the best traditions and want to do the best things. And yet, we are getting such a set of mixed messages from the administration that I think your job is hard. Well, I think one of you in your testimony said the purpose for AID and our humanitarian effort generally is because, A, it is who we are and we want to demonstrate who we are, and B, we want to encourage other nations to do more by our example.

This is an administration that pulled out of—all alone among nations, pulled out of the U.N. Global Compact on Migration, that just recently announced a very dramatic reduction of past practices of accepting refugees. We have received the budget proposals from the Trump administration with respect to USAID and the State Department. The first one in 2017 dramatically slashed the budget. We came back in a bipartisan way and worked to save USAID’s budget. Did the administration learn? Did they say I guess Congress likes this and we should keep funding it? No. They came back this year and proposed a 31 percent cut for development assistance.

Today the President spoke at the U.N. He pretty much trashed international institutions. He said the focus should be on sovereignty not international organizations of the kind that USAID partners with all the time. We are engaged in trade wars not even against nations we have to be pushing very hard like Canada, but we have engaged in trade wars using national security waivers against allies of ours.

And so the notion that we want to be the leader to express who we are and we want to encourage others to do more, I frankly think that this is an administration that at the top, not people in your positions—at the top, the message is completely to the contrary. Even the report that Senator Young was asking about—it looked to me like the State Department in that report sort of took some mileage off the fast ball. They would not use the “genocide” word to summarize the evidence that was summarized very bluntly in the report, the atrocities, burning people alive, sinking their boats. But the administration would not use that word.

And so I think the message that is being sent from the top sadly is that the work of USAID and the work of professionals like yours are not a priority for this administration. I do not expect you to comment on it, but I do not think we can leave that sort of unremarked upon in a hearing where we are talking about development aid when the President just went to the UNGA and basically got laughed at as he tried to describe what the United States was doing in the world because the gathering of leaders from other nations found that to be an incredible claim based upon what he has done.

Let me ask a couple of specific questions, Ms. Glick, to you. What is the status of economic support fund assistance to the West Bank and Gaza? And what types of projects have been directly affected by the administration’s effort to redirect funding? Are multiyear projects ongoing, or will they be stopped in their tracks? And if they are, how difficult will it be to resume those projects?

Ms. Glick. Senator, thank you for your comments. I appreciate them very much. And I want to assure the committee that, if confirmed, I will follow in the footsteps of Administrator Green and be very grateful for the funding that Congress generously appropriates to the agency.

On the specific subject of the funding for West Bank and Gaza, my understanding, although, you know, I was not part of the deliberations, is that this was part of a broad administration policy that was done across the interagency. I hear your concern. I am not prepared to comment on it because I was not there at the table with all of the decision-making. If confirmed, I commit to engaging with you and certainly with my friend, Mr. Harvey, on the issues going on in the West Bank and Gaza.

Senator Kaine. Mr. Harvey, do you have anything you want to add to that?

Mr. Harvey. No, other than to assure you, Senator, these are issues I know well. This is terrain I know very well. I will be all over this and I will be watching closely. I will be consistent with my reputation and people will know my sense of things. I will be a constructive player in the game.

Senator Kaine. Excellent.

Well, I think we will continue to ask about this because, again, I have confidence that you will do everything you can with every bit of resources you have. There are some decisions that are not made by you. But as we talk to leaders in Israel and Palestine, we are hearing, even on the Israeli side, a deep concern about the U.S. slashing some of these funds. Now, we need to use funds to promote good behavior, not reward bad behavior. But basic humanitarian needs—the United States backing away from providing basic humanitarian needs to people who are pretty stressed is likely to ratchet up tension, ratchet up problems rather than reduce them. And this is certainly what we are hearing from our Israeli allies, many of them.

I want to ask about Syria. Delivering assistance there is really tough. You have to work through partners. It is very challenging.
Senator Shaheen was there recently. And it has been an immense challenge for USAID’s partners in the past and continues to be.

There is legislation currently on the table in Congress that would severely limit the work USAID could work within Assad government-controlled areas. From a humanitarian perspective, would limiting assistance to, quote, a democratic Syria and severely conditioning assistance into areas under Assad’s control be helpful or harmful to Syrian reconstruction prospects for peace and democratization?

Mr. Montgomery. Sir, I will take that question first. And I appreciate it because I think it gets at an important issue here, which is that we are still providing a specific amount of humanitarian assistance in a very challenging political environment. I think it is around $875 million a year. And if you look back over the last 4 years, our government has given about $8 billion, USAID about $4 billion of that.

And you are absolutely right, that it is challenging to deliver. I think we have the processes set up. I think as changes in the security environment have occurred in Syria, it has become more complex, but we do have a strong grouping of partners, I think 23 or so partners, that DCHA is using throughout Syria to distribute this assistance.

Obviously, if the security environment becomes more challenging, delivery will be more challenging. But I think at our core, our mission is to provide humanitarian assistance to those most in need. So we will continue to press to provide it.

We do have a series, working both internally and with our AID Inspector General, of assessments to make sure that assistance is being gotten to the right recipient and is getting there in its full context and value. And we will continue to ensure that that is happening. But you are absolutely correct, that it becomes more challenging as the security environment becomes weaker or more difficult for the United States to control.

Senator Kaine. Do you know whether the administration has taken a position on the proposed legislation that would limit humanitarian aid into Assad-controlled areas? I mean, I think it is a hard question to kind of resolve. We do not want to prop up bad behavior by the Assad regime. Nevertheless, there are people suffering within those Assad-controlled areas that we have an understandable sympathy towards. So I do not think it is an easy question. But do you know whether the administration has taken a position on proposed congressional limitations of such aid?

Mr. Montgomery. Sir, I agree with your background comments to it. And I do not believe we have taken a position, and I am not aware that we have.

Senator Kaine. All right. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Chair. Appreciate it.

Senator Isakson. Thank you, Senator Kaine.

Are there any other questions? Ms. Shaheen?

Senator Shaheen. Mr. Harvey, I want to follow up a little bit on the direction that Senator Kaine was going on Syria. You talked about in your opening statement your experience in the Middle East. You pointed out that you actually led an agency task force for USAID to defeat ISIS in Iraq and Syria.
So as Senator Kaine mentioned, I had the opportunity to visit northeast Syria during the summer and saw what was happening there after ISIS had been thrown out.

So what do you see as the risks if we are not continuing to be present in areas like northeast Syria where ISIS has been defeated as we look at the future and the challenges that those communities face?

Mr. HARVEY. Senator, I opened my remarks by thanking you for taking the trip up there, and I was extremely personally pleased to hear that you were impressed with what you saw.

Senator SHAHEEN. Very much.

Mr. HARVEY. You may know I was very deeply involved with getting that program up and running and working through the decision-making process to allow it to happen because there was a lot of uncertainty as to people's comfort with it. But I am very proud that we did it, and I am very proud of the success of it under really exceptionally difficult circumstances. A lot of the credit goes to our Syrian—most of the credit goes to our Syrian colleagues who really did the heavy lifting, but also our special forces who were just a remarkable bunch.

Senator, I will be somewhat evasive in answering your question only in that I am not quite sure as to where the conversation is within our government yet. I intend to be deeply involved in those conversations as the situation evolves and changes. I think Senator McCain's assessment that we are going to be seeing some rather big changes coming in the near future is going to be something that all of us are going to be very aware of, and I intend to be very deeply involved in sort of thinking through what does that mean for our interests and how best can the United States respond.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I really appreciate that.

I have to also give credit to the Syrian Democratic Forces. As we saw them on the ground, they were very responsible players, and while I appreciate Turkey’s view, the people we talked to did not have any interest in working with Turkey and doing anything to destabilize Turkey. They were interested in trying to maintain stability in that part of Syria. And it was really heartwarming to drive down the roads and see kids walking along flashing victory signs when they saw our military vehicles and to hear from people really urging us not to leave them alone, not to abandon them after we had thrown out ISIS.

And I think it is really important for us to remember the lessons of Iraq and some of the other countries where we have made commitments. And I think we have heard both Ambassador Jeffery and National Security Advisor Bolton confirm that the administration intends to keep U.S. troops in Syria. And so making sure that that comes with those funds to stabilize the region, which we have committed to and which Congress has already appropriated, seems to me to make a lot of sense as we look at how we maintain stability in the region going forward. Would you agree with that?

Mr. HARVEY. Yes, ma’am. These are going to be tough issues. I think the administration’s clear commitment to ensuring the enduring defeat of ISIS will ensure that we will do the right thing.

Senator SHAHEEN. Bless you. [Laughter.]
Senator SHAHEEN. Both for your comments and whoever is sneezing in the back of the room.

Ms. Glick, one of the other issues we discussed this morning was the pullback that the United States has made from UNFPA and support for family planning programs. And the explanation that has been given has been because of their support for China’s one child policy. Again, as I said to you this morning, I am very concerned that what we are doing in pulling back on our support for family planning, actually putting more families at risk, seeing more abortions, more maternal deaths as the result of that. So can you talk about what your commitment will be at USAID to ensuring that we continue to support family planning and strong families?

Ms. Glick. Senator, thank you very much.

I will confirm to you that I do continue to support strong families, voluntary family planning, maternal health, women’s health issues, access for women to quality health, quality health services, quality deliveries, access for women and men to make informed decisions on choosing the number and timing of their pregnancies.

I think that the funding that is being withheld from the U.N. Population Fund is being reprogrammed is my understanding. You and I discussed this morning about what it is being reprogrammed into. And I went back to USAID after our meeting and discussed it and learned that it is being reprogrammed into maternal health programs, into reproductive health and voluntary family planning programs and into a new initiative that the agency is taking on, which is a new focus on cervical cancer, which is closely tied to reproductive health.

Senator SHAHEEN. Well, thank you. I think that is important. As we discussed, however, the reprogramming request is also part of language that I submitted in the appropriations bill actually, and what we learned is that it required questions from this committee’s minority staff in order to get USAID to do that reprogramming and that we are still waiting to have a briefing on how that happened, why that did not happen automatically once the legislation was passed.

So will you commit to me that, once confirmed, that USAID will brief the Senate Foreign Relations committee members who are interested and my office on the original notification?

Ms. Glick. Yes, ma’am. I will commit to that. I will also commit that we will focus on these very important issues.

Senator SHAHEEN. Thank you.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ISAKSON. Thank you, Senator Shaheen.

Thank you all for your willingness to serve your country. Thank you for the service you have given to the country in the past. We look forward to seeing your confirmation completed and your serving your country in the future overseas.

For the benefit of those here and on the panel, the record will be held open until September 27th for any additional comments or any additional filings or any additional questions.

If there are no other further questions, this meeting stands adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 4:09 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]
USDA Redesign and DCHA

The administration’s proposed plan to redesign USDA significantly changes the agency’s organizational structure. For example, the current Democracy, Conflict and Humanitarian Affairs (DCHA) Bureau’s functions will now be spread across three new bureaus, with most of its functions consolidated with the Offices of Foreign Disaster Assistance and Food for Peace in the new Bureau for Humanitarian Affairs.

• Do you expect that the current DCHA bureau’s responsibilities will be completely transferred across the new organizational structure?

Question 1. Do you expect that the current DCHA bureau’s responsibilities will be completely transferred across the new organizational structure?

Answer. Yes. The functions and responsibilities currently carried out by DCHA will move to the proposed Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance; Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization; and Development, Democracy, and Innovation.

Question 2. What challenges do you anticipate?

Answer. As with any significant reorganization effort, there will be challenges around implementation and managing change, for staff, stakeholders, and partners. As I said during my confirmation hearing, in many reorganizations a big challenge is that people try to protect what they see as “theirs,” without understanding the overall vision of what leadership is seeking to achieve. In my experience with DCHA so far, however, I have found staff to be very adaptive to the turbulence they experience as a regular part of their job in the field, and I think that mindset translates to Washington as well. If confirmed, I will do my best to support DCHA staff during this transition.

Question 3. How do you believe DCHA matters will be better handled across three bureaus?

Answer. I understand that under the Transformation, the new Associate Administrator for Relief, Response and Resilience (R3) would oversee the proposed Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance, Conflict-Prevention, and Resilience and Food Security. The intent of this proposed structure is to further strengthen the programming funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), by making it more efficient and holistic across the spectrum of preparing for, preventing, responding to, and mitigating disasters. The Agency also believes this would elevate USAID’s stature with interagency colleagues on these issues.

Combining USAID’s humanitarian-assistance into programs into a single Bureau would strengthen and elevate the Agency’s stature, both within the U.S. Government and with our international partners. The proposed Bureau for Humanitarian Assistance would advance USAID’s goal of seamlessly delivering international disaster aid, which would better serve U.S. Government foreign-policy interests, and people in need throughout the world. The Bureau would achieve efficiencies by eliminating redundancies between the Offices of Foreign Disaster Assistance and Food for Peace and optimizing their resources through joint operations, and by further integrating food and non-food humanitarian assistance.

Currently, USAID implements over 70 percent of its programs in countries considered fragile or conflict-vulnerable. The proposed Bureau for Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization would better coordinate the Agency’s prevention, stabilization, and response efforts by combining small, separate offices with overlapping functions. This would enhance USAID’s operational capabilities in responding to crises, including through a strengthened focus on preventing violent extremism.

The proposed Democracy, Development, and Innovation Bureau would elevate the Agency’s democracy and governance programming through the creation of a Deputy Assistant Administrator to oversee this portfolio. Democracy and governance underpins sustainable development, but in the current structure conflict and immediate humanitarian responses often overshadow our programs in democracy and governance.

While resilience and food security do not currently fall entirely under the oversight of DCHA, I understand that while the Transformation proposals are pending Congressional approval, DCHA looks forward to deepening and expanding intra-agency coordination around resilience and food-security programming to achieve the goal and objectives of the U.S. Global Food-Security Strategy.
Human Rights

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. In a macro sense, during a 22-year military career I was involved in combat operations in Kuwait and Iraq, the former Yugoslavia, and Afghanistan, all of which attempted to ensure the deterrence or defeat of authoritarian regimes that threatened the human rights of our allies and partners.

In a micro sense, while serving as a flag officer at U.S. European Command, I worked closely with the State Department and USAID country teams in the Baltics, Balkans and Caucasuses, and in this role, I supported the positive progress of U.S. democracy and stabilization efforts in these nascent and transitioning democracies. This assignment taught me the valuable role that the U.S. Government, and, more specifically, USAID, has in building stable, resilient democracies, and how the development of these democracies contributes to the stable international order the United States both supports and relies on.

Diversity

Question 5. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to fully supporting and empowering my staff, to benefit their development, as well as that of the Bureau and the Agency.

Question 6. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the DCHA Bureau are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. It is important for leaders to foster a culture of respect and accountability. I am committed to creating opportunities for diverse voices and ideas to be heard and valued as we tackle serious development and humanitarian challenges. These are the principles I intend to model, and to foster, across all levels of leadership in the Bureau for Democracy, Conflict and Humanitarian Assistance (and its successor structures if Congress approves the Agency’s Transformation).

Conflicts of Interest

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the USAID Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARK MONTGOMERY BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. USAID has reportedly pressed for refugee-related resources in the MRA account to be shifted from State to AID. What is the rationale for this, and would this not simply handicap and debilitate the humanitarian voice within the State Department?

Answer. I understand the administration has made no decisions regarding the management of humanitarian assistance between the U.S. Department of State and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID).

Staff have briefed me that, in response to the President’s request to maximize Government-wide efficiencies and promote corresponding organizational change, USAID and the Department of State have been exploring various options to harmonize humanitarian policy and ensure the most efficient and effective use of U.S. taxpayer dollars to deliver relief around the world. Both the Department of State and USAID can play important roles in this regard.
Question 2. Section 491 of the Foreign Assistance Act makes clear that the International Disaster Assistance account is a needs-based humanitarian account, to be used to aid “those most in need.” Unlike other foreign assistance streams, IDA allocations may not be driven by political or strategic considerations. Can I have your assurance that under your oversight, USAID’s use of the IDA account will adhere to this legislative requirement?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) strives to provide IDA-funded humanitarian assistance on the basis of need. If I am confirmed, USAID will continue to do so under my oversight.

Question 3. Credit unions and other types of cooperatives operate according to democratic principles and have a proven track record of promoting local self-reliance and democratic governance. For example, USAID is working with Ukrainian credit unions to help promote democracy and economic stability during Ukraine’s ongoing civil war, and USAID is working with credit unions in Haiti to help better promote democracy, strengthen Haitian civil society, and reduce conflict in that nation. If confirmed, how will USAID increase its use of local, democratic organizations like credit unions and other cooperatives in order to help better promote democracy and reduce conflict around the world?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) supports credit unions and other cooperatives to advance a range of goals, such as expanding access to financial services in rural areas and helping countries strengthen their agricultural potential. I believe these efforts help build the capacity of local citizens and institutions to manage resources for the betterment of their communities, and reinforce important democratic principles of inclusion and citizen-responsive governance. If confirmed, I am committed, alongside the Administrator, to ensuring that effective local solutions and citizen-responsive governance are a central focus of USAID’s mission to support partner countries on their journey to self-reliance.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARK MONTGOMERY BY SENATOR TODD YOUNG

Question 1. Based on your preparation for your nominations and this hearing, can you provide an update on the humanitarian situation in Yemen, particularly in and around the port of Hodeidah?

Answer. Yemen is facing the largest humanitarian crisis in the world, which stems from the ongoing conflict that broke out in March 2015. Nearly 76 percent of the country—or more than 22 million people—needs humanitarian aid, and more than two million people are unable to return home after fleeing for safety.

Regarding Hudaydah, I understand that, because Yemen has traditionally imported 90 percent of its food, and most of its fuel and medicines, through its Red Sea ports, Hudaydah is critical to both humanitarian and commercial supplies. USAID’s Famine Early-Warning System has cautioned that any conflict around Hudaydah could disrupt the operations of the port, and drive Yemen into famine. I am aware that the United States continues to urge all parties to continue to allow all humanitarian and commercial goods, including fuel, to enter Yemen through all points of access—including Hudaydah—and to allow humanitarian actors to move freely throughout the country to reach people in need.

Question 2. What do you see as the leading humanitarian concerns right now in Yemen?

Answer. I understand that access remains the overriding challenge to providing life-saving humanitarian assistance to Yemenis in need. Checkpoints, violence against humanitarians, and various bureaucratic impediments need to end. The conflict, in combination with these impediments, has left more than 1.4 million people in hard-to-reach areas.

Question 3. Do you believe all parties to the conflict have a responsibility to provide full and unfettered humanitarian access?

Answer. Yes, I believe all parties must provide free and unfettered humanitarian access into and throughout Yemen.

Question 4. If the civil war continues, how do you see this impacting the humanitarian situation there?

Answer. I expect further loss of life, increasing food insecurity and spread of disease.
Question 5. Do you agree that sustainable progress in the world's largest humanitarian crisis will require an end to the civil war?

Answer. Yes, I believe humanitarian assistance alone will not solve the situation in Yemen. Rather, we must continue to work towards a lasting, political solution to this conflict.

Question 6. If confirmed, will you keep me and my office regularly updated on developments related to Yemen?

Answer. Yes, I will.

Democracy Programs

Question 1. Democracy is coming under attack internationally, as China and are actively undermining liberal democracies around the world, as well as this model of government, more generally. A narrative exists that efforts to create or improve democratic systems can and should be de-emphasized for the sake of increasing stability within a country. Do you accept the premise of the narrative described above? That is, how should the United States weigh the tradeoffs between democracy and stability? Do you believe that democracy promotion can be counter-productive? If confirmed, how would you address the critique presented by those who prioritize stability over the system of democracy and the rights and freedoms associated with it?

Answer. No, I emphatically do not accept the premise that de-emphasizing efforts to improve democratic systems will increase stability. Instead, I believe that improving a country's citizen-responsive governance will inevitably bolster its long-term stability.

I understand the new approach of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to promote the self-reliance of partner countries includes a significant emphasis on the role of democratic institutions, processes, and principles as the basis for sustainable development. The premise is that citizen-centered, democratic governance—while not always quick or easy—offers the most-reliable pathway to make durable improvements in people's lives, drives higher levels of economic innovation, and prevents or moderates social conflict.

This approach stands in stark contrast to an emerging authoritarian model, often propagated by Russia and China, that corrodes rules-based systems, entrenches corruption, discounts the voice of citizens, and erodes individual liberties. As history has proven time and time again, that formula is not a recipe for success—in fact, it makes the world a more-dangerous place for advancing America's interests. Many of the crises to which USAID is responding are a byproduct of exclusionary politics, poor governance, corruption and impunity, weak civilian institutions, and the absence of political accountability. If confirmed, I will make it a priority to advance democracy and stability as compatible and self-reinforcing policy objectives. I will also leverage the talents in across the Agency to strengthen assistance in democracy and governance in fragile and conflict-affected states.

Question 2. Our leadership in promoting democracy is long-standing, and based on values we espouse. We value individual liberties, freedom of expression, mutual respect and tolerance. I believe our programs are complicated when our senior-most officials make public comments opposed to these values. Comments made by the President that impugn journalists, criticize individuals for expressing themselves during the national anthem, and denigrate minorities and women compromise our efforts to be a leader on democratic principles. And we have seen authoritarian leaders use the President's comments to justify their own policies. Last year, Cambodian president Hun Sen said he sympathized with President Trump's views on journalists, calling them an "anarchic" group. If confirmed, how do you plan to respond to foreign counterparts who state that some of the President's tweets and comments appear to be antithetical to foundational democratic principles? Do you see the President's comments limiting the effectiveness of our democracy promoting activities?

Answer. I have spent 33 years in the U.S. Government, including 32 years on active duty in the U.S. military, defending the rights of the American people and our allies and partners, including their rights to all forms of individual liberty, freedom of expression, mutual respect and tolerance. I am comfortable framing my discussions with foreign counterparts in language that reflects my personal experiences, and will espouse the core values of the American people in all such engagements. I place little value in the words of autocratic thugs like Hun Sen, whether they happen to support my immediate point of view or not.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MARK MONTGOMERY BY SENATOR ROB PORTMAN

Post-Soviet Countries

Question 1. What could the United States do better to promote democracy and good governance in the post-Soviet space, particularly Central and Eastern Europe?

Answer. The U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) must continually learn from, and adapt, its programs to better promote democracy and citizen-responsive governance. The Kremlin has pursued a set of measures to undermine democratic institutions and the rule of law in Central and Eastern Europe, and to spread disinformation.

To respond to the Kremlin’s actions, I understand that USAID has prioritized resources to create local news exchanges and networks of independent media outlets. Additionally, USAID staff have briefed me that programs like the Prague Center and the Balkan Trust for Democracy bring civic activists together from throughout the region to learn best practices and build the capacity of their organizations to counter malign influence in their own countries and communities.

I also understand that USAID is working to finalize a Countering Kremlin Influence Development Framework, which identifies challenges and sets priorities for promoting democracy in the presence of this external malign influence. If confirmed, I look forward to working with my colleagues at USAID, and with Congress, on how we can push back against Kremlin aggression in the region.

Question 2. Does significant Russian involvement in these countries complicate or impede U.S. efforts to support democracy and good governance? Do you believe that Russia has an interest in encouraging corruption and undermining democratic institutions in the countries in its “near-abroad”?

Answer. Yes, Russian actions and interference in Europe and Eurasia create significant challenges for U.S. efforts to support democracy and good governance. It is clear the Kremlin is increasingly drawing on a wide array of tools to undermine democratic institutions and processes, weaken the rule of law, and spread disinformation.

I believe that Russia has an interest in encouraging corruption and undermining democratic institutions in the countries in its “near-abroad,” and that the Kremlin exploits the internal corrupt practices of other countries for its own political and economic advantage.

Question 3. Specifically in Ukraine, what can DCHA do to promote good governance and fight corruption?

Answer. Years of conflict, Russian aggression and influence, and deep, systemic legacies of corruption continually threaten Ukraine’s commitment and capacity to make progress. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the Bureau of Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance (DCHA) within the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) continues to promote U.S. foreign-policy objectives by supporting citizen-responsive governance; fighting corruption; and building the capabilities of local government to be effective, responsive, and impactful.

For example, I understand that the USAID/DCHA Office of Transition Initiatives (OTI) works in Eastern Ukraine to ensure citizens have greater confidence in Ukraine’s democratic reform and roadmap for European integration. In Ukraine’s Eastern Oblasts of Kharkiv, Donetsk and Luhansk, USAID/OTI worked with local governments to establish Administrative Service Centers (ASCs), which provide over 100 necessary services related to registration, licensing and identification that previously required bribes, and involved long waits, visits to multiple locations and poor treatment by bureaucrats. By reinforcing reform efforts, these initiatives not only help promote good governance and transparency, but also work to dispel narratives (propagated by the Kremlin) that the Ukrainian Government’s reform efforts have failed.

Question 4. Which countries in this region do you believe should be of particular concern for DCHA?

Answer. I am concerned with democratic-backsliding trends in the Europe and Eurasia region. In addition to long-standing authoritarian regimes in Belarus and Azerbaijan, numerous countries in the region, such as Serbia and Bosnia, are experiencing increased suppression of media and civil society, disruptive and destabilizing Russian influence, and growing nationalist tensions. Yet other countries in the region, such as Macedonia and Armenia, are on the cusp of a democratic renewal. I believe the United States should support these positive, early-stage trends so that nascent reforms can take root and grow into systemic changes that produce stronger democracies. I also see Ukraine and Georgia as critical, priority countries for promoting democratic stability in the region.

Democracy promotion and U.S. leadership

Question 1. For many years the United States has played a leadership role in promoting and supporting democratic development around the world. I believe in this effort. However, recently there has been a phenomenon referred to as democratic backsliding, which describes the increased restrictions that many civil society leaders, political leaders, journalists, and activists have faced around the world. In fact in our own country, challenges to our own democracy have become more evident in the past several years. In supporting democratic development around the world, how does our own country's current challenges upholding democratic institutions and practices impact your efforts to encourage such reforms abroad?

Answer. Democratic backsliding is a global phenomenon, characterized by increasing governmental constraints on fundamental freedoms, including freedom of speech, religion and association. A new, more sophisticated form of authoritarianism that uses subversive tactics to undermine the legitimacy of democratic institutions exacerbates this trend. Democratic deficiencies in other countries also contribute to some of the biggest threats to U.S. national security, including violent extremism, armed conflict, and transnational organized crime, because terrorists, criminal organizations and others exploit vulnerabilities created by weak rule of law, unchecked corruption and ineffective governance. U.S. leadership and partnership with like-minded governments will continue to be critical to safeguarding democracy abroad.

Question 2. How can we effectively fight back against the democratic backsliding that is happening around the world today?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has carefully assessed the drivers of backsliding and developed programmatic responses, including by lending critical support to civil-society organizations, human rights groups, and free and independent media outlets to build awareness and pressure national authorities to reverse deteriorating social, economic, and political conditions.

Conflicts of Interest

USAID provides assistance, and has active missions, in several countries where the Trump Organization has or is pursuing real estate and other business developments, many of which require approval and/or cooperation from the central government or state owned industries.

Question 1. What steps do you believe USAID should take to ensure that a country's receipt of foreign assistance has no influence on a foreign government's dealings with the Trump Organization, and vice-versa?

• Does USAID have such a policy in place?
• If not, would you be responsible for developing it?
• If confirmed, will you assure this committee that you will work to ensure that USAID's foreign assistance will in no way be influenced by the President's private business dealings or that of the Trump organization?

Answer. I believe it is critically important that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) maintain competitive and transparent processes for providing grants, cooperative agreements, and contracts. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that USAID avoids conflicts of interest, including the appearance of a conflict.
Democracy Promotion

Helping grow democratic and citizen responsive governance abroad underpins the success of U.S. relief and development missions.

Question 2. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights?

• What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Among the duties of my first overseas tour in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, was to serve as the U.S. Embassy's Human Rights Officer, and to draft our submissions on Ethiopia for the State Department's annual Report on Human Rights. I was the only Foreign Service Officer in the Embassy trained in the Amharic language, which gave me access to populations around the country who did not speak English. I frequently traveled around the country, either on my own or with a colleague from another foreign embassy (often the Netherlands), to investigate reported violations of human rights committed by the recently deposed dictatorship, including politically motivated imprisonments, torture, false imprisonment, and other abuses. These reports were then relayed up the chain of command at the State Department, but the American Ambassador in Ethiopia also took seriously the human-rights violations being committed by the new Ethiopian Government, and raised concerns on a regular basis with the fledgling leaders themselves, by using information I had gathered.

Human rights and democracy relate to more than just political abuses. They have to do with the way individuals interact with each other, in the workplace, in communities, in countries. During my time in the non-profit sector, much of my work focused on international exchange programs designed to address populations who were vulnerable in their own countries. I ran programs for Iraqi university students from various parts of the country that were designed to build bridges across ethnic, religious, and cultural divides. Bringing more than 100 Iraqi college students to the United States each year, breaking them up into four to five different, religiously/ethnically/geographically/economically diverse cohorts, and sending them to study in universities across our country was a great way to promote understanding. This program brought together these future leaders of Iraq, women and men who had never met before, and who would never have met in their own country, and, through them, I saw a promising future Iraq. In 2016, when I convened a summit of the alumni of the program in Erbil, I was astounded to see how wonderfully the students had matured, and how they came to understand that the prejudices with which they were raised were dispelled when they had friends who represented previously "hated" communities.

Similarly, I ran a program in which high-school-aged Pakistani girls came to the United States to participate in a science program with American girls at the State University of New York Polytechnic Institute in Albany, where they learned from leading scientists and professors. The opportunity for the brilliant young Pakistani girls to be exposed to a science environment in which they were not judged by their gender was new to them, and they went back to Pakistan convinced of the need to empower girls, and to be spokeswomen for their gender in the sciences. I have no doubt they will do great things in computer science, medicine, and beyond.

If confirmed, I will be committed to promoting human rights and democracy around the world, because democracy underpins all of the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Question 3. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development around the globe? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. A major challenge is the continuing trend of democratic-backsliding, characterized by increasing governmental constraints on fundamental freedoms, including freedom of speech, religion and association, as well as abuses of human rights. The rise of a new, more sophisticated form of authoritarianism that uses subversive tactics to undermine the legitimacy of democratic institutions is exacerbating these trends. In places like Cambodia, where the Hun Sen regime has banned the only credible political opposition and civil society is under duress, the authoritarian leaders have become savvy in creating the veneer of democratic processes while prolonging their rule. In some African countries, democratically elected leaders are also changing the rules—often through Constitutional amendments—to expand the scope of their power and the length of their terms.

exploit vulnerabilities created by weak rule of law, unchecked corruption, and ineffective governance. Within our own Hemisphere, we are witnessing endemic corruption, economic mismanagement, and political repression drive instability in Venezuela and Nicaragua. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is lending critical support to civil-society organizations, including human-rights groups, and free and independent media outlets to build awareness and pressure authorities to reverse deteriorating social, economic, and political conditions.

Question 4. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy globally? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to implementing the mission statement of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), particularly its commitment to strengthening citizen-responsive, democratic governance abroad. I know this is a priority for Administrator Green, and I wholeheartedly endorse the steps he has already taken to address serious democratic challenges around the world. Because good governance is key to all development work, I would keep it in the forefront of my work to achieve two key outcomes: mitigating the risks of democratic-backsliding; and helping countries move forward in their Journey to Self-Reliance through citizen-responsive, democratic governance.

Question 5. What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The same technologies that offer opportunities for strengthening democracy can be repurposed as impediments to democracy, as authoritarian regimes develop and share tools to spread disinformation, manipulate elections, and discredit democratic institutions. The U.S. Agency for International Development often provides democracy assistance in challenging, fragile, and conflict-prone environments. I understand the Agency must continually adapt to address emerging obstacles, with long-term engagement and support in mind as a method for making gains over time.

Question 6. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to using U.S. Government resources available to implement the mission statement of the U.S. Agency for International Development, which includes an explicit commitment to strengthening citizen-responsive, democratic governance abroad. Among the priorities I envision are the following: 1) developing effective approaches to emerging issues and priorities within the democracy sector, including religious freedom, disinformation, and authoritarian influence; 2) strengthening rapid-response capabilities in fragile and transitioning political contexts; and 3) expanding the integration of democracy, rights, and governance principles in other development sectors, because participatory and inclusive approaches make for more sustainable and effective development outcomes.

Question 7. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society when you travel abroad?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with civil-society and human-rights organizations, both in Washington, D.C., and during my travels abroad.

Question 8. What steps will you take to proactively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development has funded programs to defend and improve the legal environment and expand civic space around the world, such as the Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) Legal Enabling Environment Program (LEEP), which promotes a more welcoming legal and regulatory environment for civil-society organizations and responds swiftly to NGOs by providing technical assistance on laws and regulations that affect them.

Question 9. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with political opposition figures and parties who support democratic governance?

Answer. Yes. I commit to meeting with democratically oriented political figures and parties, both in Washington, D.C., and during my travels abroad.

Question 10. What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition?

Answer. I believe that political competition is an essential element of democratic governance, and I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development funds extensive programming to foster genuine political competition in a number of the countries. If confirmed, I commit to support critical programs that strengthen political parties, improve the administration of elections and dispute-resolution institutions, provide credible and impartial domestic and international observation of elections, conduct civic and voter education, and prevent and mitigate election-related violence.

Question 11. Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will be a staunch advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties. Diversity of all sorts, particularly the diversity in viewpoints offered by these and other population segments, are critical voices to be heard as countries continue on their Journeys to Self-Reliance.

Question 12. Will you actively support freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, supporting freedom of press will remain one of my priorities. The U.S. Agency for International Development has historically recognized the important role that an independent press plays in citizen-responsive governance, and is one of the largest donors for the development of pluralistic, diverse, independent media systems.

Question 13. Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press when you travel abroad?

Answer. Yes.

Question 14. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors around the world?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to continuing engagement with civil society to counter disinformation and propaganda.

Question 15. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Yes. Administrator Green has been clear that inclusion is one of the core values of the U.S. Agency for International Development, and that non-discrimination toward beneficiaries is a basic principle of development. I wholly agree, and commit that I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people across the globe, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question 16. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people around the world?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) continues to implement its comprehensive, inclusive non-discrimination policies for the beneficiaries of contracts and grants. If confirmed, I will support the implementation of these policies.

Administrator Green has also elevated the importance of inclusive development approaches to help ensure that all marginalized groups in developing countries participate in, contribute to, and benefit from USAID's development efforts. If confirmed, I will support this approach.

Climate Change

Question 17. Climate change is an emerging threat the Department of Defense refers to as a “threat multiplier.” Do you believe that human activities, such as the burning of fossil fuels and other activities that release greenhouse gases into atmosphere is contributing to the increase global average temperatures?

- If not, do you intend to change USAID policy and programming that addresses the challenges around climate change according to your views on climate change?

Answer. I believe that the climate is changing, and that it has always been changing. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) looks at climate change and other environmental challenges through a development lens, and that the Agency continues to work with its partners around the world to help them deal with the impacts of extreme weather events and a changing climate.

Question 18. When USAID seeks to improve global food security and examines climate change’s role in increasing drought risks, or how sea level rise may infiltrate underground fresh water aquifers, or how climate change is affecting the range of disease vectors like mosquitos that carry malaria. do you believe it is not necessary, or wrong, to account for what scientific data is telling us about climate change risks?

Answer. I understand that a core principle of the development policy and programming of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is that it applies analytic rigor to support evidence-based decision-making. Staff have briefed me that USAID actively incorporates consideration of climate conditions into its country strategies and processes to design projects and activities, to ensure its portfolio of investments does not have a negative impact on the environment and positively helps to build the resilience of communities and countries in the long term. Proactively managing the risks of weather-related shocks and stresses, such as droughts, floods, and shifting rainfall patterns, also reduces the need for costly disaster response. During my time in IBM’s Research Division, scientists actively looked at ways to predict weather patterns and to plan accordingly. If confirmed, I hope to work with experts in industry and academia to find ways to plan resilient responses to climatic shocks.

An Independent USAID

Question 19. Throughout the first year of the Trump administration, the administration sought to subsume USAID into the State Department. Do you believe that USAID should be an independent agency?

Answer. Yes, I believe the U.S. Agency for International Development should remain an independent Agency.

Question 20. How important to the mission and success of USAID, do you believe we associated with maintaining USAID’s development missions separate from, but adequately coordinated with, State Dept.’s diplomatic and political missions?

Answer. I believe it is critical for the development mission of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to remain separate from, but coordinated with, the mission of the Department of State. This allows USAID to focus on long-term development programs while closely planning with the Department of State to ensure these investments align with diplomatic priorities and policy goals.

Question 21. If confirmed, will you work ensure that USAID remains independent?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will be a strong advocate for the ability of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to fulfill its critical mission and help our partner countries make progress on their Journeys to Self-Reliance.

USAID Budgets

Question 23. Two years in a row, the President proposed to cut USAID’s budget by nearly 40 percent. Do you believe USAID can do its job effectively under the budgets the President has proposed for the Agency?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to work to advance the core priority of the U.S. Agency for International Development—advancing America’s interests through our foreign assistance. While I was not involved in the formulation of previous budget requests, I believe that the Agency’s work must directly improve humanitarian and development outcomes, in ways that are clearly measurable and easily evaluated, and should be designed to contribute to the self-reliance of our partners.

Question 24. Understanding that needs may (or will) always be greater than the sums of funds provided, do you believe this is a reasonable excuse for not requesting funds that more closely or accurately reflect USAID’s needs?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging in the budget process for Fiscal Year 2021. I look forward to supporting Administrator Green in efforts to ensure the U.S. Agency for International Development is targeting its investments at critical development and national-security needs and that the funding generously appropriated by Congress directly advances America’s national interests and economic prosperity.

Question 25. What should USAID do differently to convince to budget decision makers within the White House, National Security Council and the Office of Management and Budget to provide a better and more realistic budget for USAID?

• Should USAID lean more heavily on its private sector partners to help convey the value of development to the White House, National Security Council and OMB?
Answer. I believe that the efforts by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to reduce poverty, strengthen citizen-responsive governance, and help people and countries progress beyond assistance must advance our national security, economic prosperity, and national values. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Administrator Green to diversify USAID’s partner base so the Agency engages with new actors—including those in the private sector—to work collectively to improve the delivery of foreign assistance and the impact of our development dollars.

I also expect to speak with groups domestically to educate Americans across the country about the importance of development and humanitarian assistance. Most Americans believe that the foreign-assistance budget represents between 20 and 30 percent of overall Federal spending. When they learn that it is less than one percent, and when they learn what we accomplish with that small investment and how it improves our national security, helps create economic opportunity for U.S. firms, and promotes American values, they can become some of our strongest advocates to the White House, the Congress, and beyond.

Question 26. If confirmed, will you commit to working on improving perceptions within the Trump administration on USAID’s value, and the value of development to advancing U.S. foreign policy objectives and national security?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate within the administration for the resources that are critical to advancing the mission of the U.S. Agency for International Development, including promoting and demonstrating American values abroad, and advancing a free, peaceful, and prosperous world in which we are safer and more secure.

Rescission

Question 27. This administration continues to take steps to drastically reduce our foreign aid, in direct contravention of Congressional intention. If confirmed, will you commit to advocating against these efforts, including OMB efforts to submit further rescission packages to Congress?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be a strong advocate for the U.S. Agency for International Development, to ensure it has the tools and resources needed to fulfill its mission in advancing U.S. national security, U.S. economic prosperity, and American values. I look forward to working with the interagency and the Congress to further our shared objectives.

Policy on Only Providing U.S. Foreign Assistance to “Our Friends”

Question 28. This week, at the United Nations General Assembly meeting, President Trump echoed a call he made in his 2018 State of the Union to only provide foreign assistance to “our friends.” What do you think the President means when he refers to “our friends”?

- If you do not know, would you ask the President, or the White House what defines “our friends” and include the answer in your response to these questions?
- Do you believe U.S. foreign assistance should be conditioned on how countries vote at the U.N.?
- To the best of your knowledge has USAID received or requested any policy guidance from the White House on the “our friends” policy the President recently restated?
- If so will you please articulate this policy to the committee?
- Is USAID following any orders that reflect the President’s wishes with respect to this statement?
- How do you believe a policy that “ensure[s] American foreign assistance dollars always serve American interests, and only to our friends” would, or should, be carried by USAID?
- Do you believe the U.S. should limit diplomatic and development engagements to our “friends”?
- Who are our “friends”?
- Would you agree that disengaging with a number of around the world could create opportunities for our global competitors like Russia and China, or extremist elements like Boko Haram and ISIS, to fill the void we create?

Answer. As echoed in President Trump’s remarks before the United Nations (U.N.) General Assembly (UNGA), the United States should always seek strong and sovereign global partners. The U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) can be most-effective in its development efforts by supporting countries on their Journeys to Self-Reliance, by building enduring partnerships and cultivating fellow donors.
I have not received any information from the White House regarding the President’s remarks at UNGA. I believe that foreign aid is integral to promoting our foreign-policy objectives. Helping our allies is important, but we must also recognize that sometimes foreign aid can be useful to create and cultivate potential new allies in the future.

For example, I understand that USAID is committed to helping civil society and defenders of human rights in Cuba, even though, according to the Department of State, Cuba voted with the United States 17 percent of the time in 2017 at the U.N. I understand the money USAID spends in Cuba does not go to the Castro regime, but precisely the opposite: it helps the Cuban people, especially the families of dissidents and political prisoners. I see this type of support as in the national-security interest of the United States. I believe the Trump administration is committed to helping the Cuban people, as shown by the President’s National Security Presidential Memorandum NSPM-5 of June 16, 2017, “Strengthening the Policy of the United States Toward Cuba,” which clearly supports programs to build democracy in Cuba.

We all know that development needs will always be greater than available resources, and the U.S. Government will have to make strategic funding decisions about where to focus its resources. By using a data-driven approach, I believe USAID will be able to articulate, from a development perspective, the countries that possess the greatest capacity for, and commitment to, managing and financing their own development, as well as the key barriers to this self-reliance. By using these data, I foresee that USAID can strategically focus its investments to help countries to develop strong and resilient economies and societies.

Foreign Assistance Review

Question 29. It is my understanding that the National Security Council and OMB are undertaking a review of U.S. Foreign Assistance. What do you believe is motivating this review?

- Will you pushback against any claims that devalue or distort the impact of development assistance that maybe made in this forthcoming report?

  Answer. I am also aware the Trump administration is undertaking a review of U.S. foreign assistance, although I have not been involved in the process. I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is constantly reviewing its use of foreign assistance to ensure it is being an effective steward of taxpayer dollars, and to ensure that its programs advance U.S. national security, U.S. economic prosperity, and American values.

  If confirmed, I would support any thoughtful review of assistance, especially if it is focuses on improving the effectiveness and efficiency of USAID.

Defense, Diplomacy, and Development

Question 30. The “Three Ds—Defense, Diplomacy, and Development,” is a long-standing approach the U.S. has taken to executing U.S. foreign policy. What is your opinion of the Three Ds—Defense, Diplomacy and Development and what is vision to elevate both diplomacy and development in an administration where generals have driven national security and foreign policy thus far?

- Do you agree that each of the Three Ds—Defense, Diplomacy and Development are separate and equal tools in the President’s foreign policy toolkit?

  Answer. I support the defense, diplomacy and development “Three D’s” approach to international affairs, and I agree that each of the “Three D’s” is an important tool in the President’s national-security and foreign-policy toolkit. I had the chance to see the importance of all “Three D’s” first-hand while serving as a Foreign Service Officer at the U.S. Department of State. I believe the U.S. Agency for International Development has a critical role to play in our national security, and, if confirmed, I will be a forceful advocate for development and diplomacy in the inter-agency.

Diplomacy, Development and National Security

Effective international development fosters stability, generates goodwill, and creates opportunities in developing countries. The (December) 2017 National Security Strategy acknowledges this fact by stating: “Some of the greatest triumphs of American statecraft resulted from helping fragile and developing countries become successful societies. These successes, in turn, created profitable markets for American businesses, allies to help achieve favorable regional balances of power, and coalition partners to share burdens and, helped create a network of states that advance our common interests and values.”
Question 31. If confirmed, how will you support the elevation of development as an equal and relevant tool to diplomacy within the State Department, at the National Security Council and in discussions across the White House?

Answer. Every country is on its own Journey to Self-Reliance, and the presence of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) as part of each larger U.S. Embassy community, is tailored to each country’s Journey. While USAID has general program areas (i.e., education, economic growth, maternal/child health, etc.) the success of each type of development program in each country is highly dependent on where that country is on its Journey. I understand that USAID is focusing on data-driven results, and I think that an open discussion of what this means and how it differs from diplomacy is important, as it will differentiate the work done by the Department of State and that done by USAID. Additionally, when the work done by USAID’s partners is successful, these results should speak for themselves, and thereby help to maintain development as an equal and relevant tool in the national-security toolbox.

With the elimination of the “Development” Directorate within the National Security Council, many Congressionally endorsed Presidential Initiatives (like Power Africa and Feed the Future) that have significant development outcomes have been neglected.

Question 32. If confirmed, will you support these important initiatives and elevate their use as a tool for both national security and American prosperity?

Answer. If confirmed I commit to supporting Power Africa, Feed the Future, and other important Presidential initiatives, such as the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief and Malaria Initiative.

I am a strong supporter of the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in food security, and thank this committee for its bipartisan support for Feed the Future. I understand that since Feed the Future started, an estimated 23.4 million more people are living above the poverty line, 3.4 million more children are living free of stunting, and 5.2 million more families no longer suffer from hunger.

Feed the Future is a critical program, as investments in resilience and food security help combat the root causes of hunger and poverty, build more sustainable economies, and champion local solutions and entrepreneurs.

I also believe Power Africa has been a valuable and successful program—every dollar that USAID has invested in Power Africa projects has attracted over $50 in private-sector resources, and the initiative has leveraged over $16 billion in private-sector resources to projects to date, including through engagement with over 70 American companies. I believe energy is an area in which the United States has a comparative advantage in development, and hope to see USAID replicate similar efforts in other parts of the world. If confirmed, I am interested in better understanding how we can use Power Africa and other Presidential initiatives to incentivize good policies, capacity-building, citizen-responsive governance, open markets, and private enterprise in our partner countries by leveraging the financing and expertise of the American private sector.

Question 33. The 2017 National Defense Authorization Act includes several provisions (Sections 335, 583, and 1075), which illustrate a link between defense, diplomacy and development in preserving human rights, mitigating conflict and natural disasters, and protecting national security interests. If confirmed, how will you work across the Three Ds to recalibrate the National Security Strategy, and embrace a strategic approach to democracy, human rights and conflict being a strategic and national security interest of America?

Answer. I am broadly very supportive of the defense, diplomacy and development (“Three Ds”) approach, as illustrated by the President’s National Security Strategy and the Department of State-U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) Joint Strategic Plan. These documents show that development is a core component, along with defense and diplomacy, of America’s national-security and foreign-policy toolkit. Each of the “Three Ds” is critical to addressing strategically the challenges related to threats to democracy and human rights, as well as increased conflict around the world. An example of the “Three Ds” approach in practice is the recent Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR), endorsed by the leadership of the Departments of State and Defense and USAID. I believe the SAR articulates a coordinated approach to recognizing the strategic objectives of the U.S. Government in unstable contexts. If confirmed, I would be committed to continuing cooperation and coordination across the “Three Ds” in support of U.S. national-security interests.

Question 34. Do you agree that improving economic opportunity, health outcomes, food security, and addressing natural resource scarcity in developing and fragile countries reduces insecurity and instability risks?
Answer. Yes. I fully agree that addressing national-security challenges requires work to improve economic opportunities, health outcomes, and food security, and to remove barriers to accessing natural resources. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development in these areas.

Presidential Initiatives

U.S. foreign policy has prioritized diplomacy and development activities that engage public and private sector partners in eradicating global health pandemics, feed the world through agriculture and invest in small farmers, heighten trade and economic development, elevate the full rights of women and marginalized people and expand access to electricity to reduce poverty and power market growth.

Question 35. What priorities will you advance?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working to engage both the public and private sectors in addressing the development challenges faced by countries on their journeys to Self-Reliance. As I noted in my written testimony, if confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Agency for International Development maintains its focus on the promotion of democratic values and free elections, as the role of democracy and citizen-responsive government is critical to the Journey to Self-Reliance. Women’s issues, including economic empowerment and health, are other areas to which I am fully committed, and which should remain priorities for USAID.

I also believe that our development projects must leverage the application of technology and technological solutions. Using technology can sometimes shorten timelines on projects, reduce the use of resources, and scale results. However, technology alone is not a solution—the capacity-building associated with technology-driven solutions, when directed at targeted countries, will enable citizens of those countries to sustain the technology-driven solutions. An infusion of technology into the Agency’s work, when combined with technical assistance, will be another priority for me, if confirmed.

Question 36. Do you support the extension of the following Presidential Initiatives: Power Africa, Feed the Future, the Young African Leaders Initiative, Let Girls Learn, and the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief?

Answer. In preparing for my hearing, I received briefings on most of these initiatives, and, if I confirmed, I look forward to working with Administrator Green, and with Congress, to ensure the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) maintains gains in these areas, and continues to address global health, food security, education, the empowerment of women and girls, and other development challenges throughout the world. Regardless of the specific program, sector, or region, I pledge to do my utmost to ensure USAID remains a good steward of taxpayer dollars, and that the Agency uses the funding Congress appropriates it to maximize measurable impact on the ground, advance our national security, enhance U.S. economic prosperity, and promote American values.

Gender Equity

It has come to my attention that USAID has undertaken some steps to alter the terminology in gender-equity programming.

Question 37. Do you believe there is a distinction between gender and sex?

Answer. Yes.

Question 38. What is your understanding of what gender equity means?

Answer. “Gender-equity” is the process of being fair to women and men, boys, and girls. To ensure fairness, measures need to compensate for cumulative economic, social, and political disadvantages that prevent women and men, boys, and girls from operating on a level playing field.

Question 39. What do you believe is the difference between women’s equality and gender equity?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development uses the term “gender-equality” to mean the state or condition that affords men and women equal enjoyment of human rights, socially valued goods, opportunities, and resources. Genuine equality means more than parity in numbers or laws on the books; it means expanded freedoms, and improved overall quality of life for all people. Reaching gender-equality requires working with women, men, boys, and girls to bring about changes in attitudes, behaviors, roles, and responsibilities. Women’s empowerment is a critical part of gender-equality. “Gender-equity” and “gender-equality” are different in that equity is the process, while equality is the result.
Diversity

Question 40. If confirmed, what will you do to elevate and embrace the diversity of people, voices and backgrounds within the USAID's workforce?

Answer. I know that one of the core values of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is inclusion. As Administrator Green has said, a diverse workforce and differing viewpoints makes the Agency stronger and more creative, and improves its effectiveness. I believe that diversity is critical across USAID, but particularly in the Foreign Service, which is the American face of USAID around the world.

I believe that diversity of viewpoints in the workplace is crucial. We should not discount anyone's opinion because he/she does not conform to everyone else's point of view. This is how organizations generate the best ideas, recognize the best (sometimes shy) employees, and make progress. It is also important for our Foreign Service to demonstrate the value of diversity in thinking to the rest of the world, and, if confirmed, I would strongly champion this approach.

Question 41. If confirmed, will you commit to fully support the full funding and maintenance of the Payne Fellows program, and diversity initiatives at large within the USAID?

Answer. Yes. I know that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is proud to support the Donald M. Payne International Development Fellowship program, which encourages the application of members of minority groups who have historically been under-represented in international development careers and those with financial need to complete their graduate programs and join USAID as Foreign Service Officers.

I understand that, since the Payne Fellowship began in 2012, USAID has sworn 18 Payne Fellows as Foreign Service Officers, including six in 2018, and that the Agency continues to recruit graduate students into the program. If confirmed, I commit to continuing to support the Donald M. Payne International Development Fellowship program.

Question 42. If confirmed, what will you do to support more minority candidates applying and successfully receiving promotions within the Senior Foreign Service?

Answer. I understand that one of the roles of the Deputy Administrator is to sit on the panel that reviews promotions to the Senior Foreign Service at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). If confirmed, I would take an active role in ensuring that qualified officers, regardless of race, gender, religion, etc., receive fair consideration for promotion into the senior ranks of the Foreign Service at USAID.

Food Security

We have seen in regions like the Horn of Africa skirmishes over grazing lands erupt, and food insecurity and extreme drought in places like Syria has been pointed to as a contributing factor to the violence that we see today. This violence in turn is ramping up food insecurity. There are currently four countries facing man-made famine or near famine conditions, stemming from prolonged instability, war, and conflict.

Question 43. If confirmed, what will you do to elevate the food continuum of food assistance (humanitarian assistance), resilience (both humanitarian assistance and development), food security (development assistance), and agricultural trade and investment (development assistance and development finance)?

Answer. I believe it is important to strengthen the links between the investments the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) makes in agricultural trade and entrepreneurship, resilience, food security, water and sanitation, humanitarian assistance and stabilization. I understand that as part of the Transformation designed by Administrator Mark Green, USAID is proposing several structural reforms to accomplish this task, including by establishing the Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance, Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization, and Resilience and Food Security. The proposal includes the creation of an Associate Administrator for Relief, Resilience and Response (R3) to oversee these Bureaus, which I believe will further strengthen the continuum from humanitarian assistance, to resilience, and to food security. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Administrator and Congress to implement these changes.

Question 44. Is it in the U.S. interest to help lead and initiate programs designed to improve food security?

Answer. Yes. As populations soar in many of the world’s most-fragile and impoverished regions and new stresses and unplanned shocks increase the risk of food-insecurity, investments in the creation of strong, resilient food systems are vital to U.S. national security.

Question 45. Is it in the U.S. interest to work towards addressing the causes of food insecurity, including growing scarcity of natural resources?

Answer. Yes. I understand that improving the management of natural resources is a key component of addressing food insecurity sustainably, as reflected in the U.S. Government’s Global Food-Security Strategy (GFSS). Continued stress on ecosystems, marine environments, fisheries, and the land, water, and natural resource base upon which productive agriculture relies, as well as the complex intrastate governance challenges related to water resources, pose challenges to food security. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. Agency for International Development implements the priorities outlined in the GFSS strategically to reduce poverty and hunger.

The Risks Associated with Politicizing U.S. International Development

The slogan “America First” advances a political message that emphasizes the advancement of singular U.S. interests in our foreign policy that runs the risk of complicating U.S. development initiatives. Successful international development programs depend upon the ability of our private sector and NGO implementing partners and the credibility they have as in other efforts in the GFSS. Continued stress on eco-systems, marine environments, fisheries, and the land, water, and natural resource base upon which productive agriculture relies, as well as the complex intrastate governance challenges related to water resources, pose challenges to food security. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. Agency for International Development implements the priorities outlined in the GFSS strategically to reduce poverty and hunger.

Question 46. What is your understanding of the differences between political and strategic objectives in U.S. foreign policy?

- Do you believe U.S. development assistance should only be used to advance political objectives in U.S. foreign policy?
- When is it appropriate to use development assistance to advance political priorities in foreign policy?
- Should the delivery of U.S. development assistance be a shared endeavor with NGO and private sector partners?
- How do you think foreign leaders, including U.S. adversaries who are competing with us for influence in vulnerable and strategic countries, interpret and process the “America First” doctrine?
- Do you believe the U.S. private sector should be political agents of the Trump administration?
- Do you understand why U.S. development partners may be anxious about how “America First” complicates their work and risks giving the appearance that they are political agents at the service of the United States Government when they help administer development assistance on-the-ground?
- If confirmed, will you commit to working with development stakeholders to understand better the value of development assistance and the consequences of overexposure of the “America First” doctrine?

Answer. The President has said, “America First does not mean America alone,” but he has also been clear that the United States is the largest donor of foreign aid, and has called on other countries to step up their development contributions.

I believe that U.S. development assistance is critical to advancing our national security and economic prosperity, and to promoting our values of democracy, human rights, and freedom abroad. I also believe that partners—including non-governmental organizations, faith-based organizations and the private sector, and academia—are critical to the development and humanitarian work of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). I am pleased that USAID is working to diversify its partner base to expand work with the private sector and faith-based organizations, and if confirmed, I will support this important effort.

Power Africa has shown us the impact of the private sector—every dollar USAID has invested in Power Africa projects has attracted over $50 in private-sector resources, and the initiative has leveraged over $16 billion in private-sector resources to projects to date, including through engagement with over 70 American companies. I believe energy is an area in which the United States has a comparative advantage in development, and hope to see USAID replicate similar efforts in other parts of the world. If confirmed, I am interested in better understanding how we can use Power Africa and other Presidential initiatives to incentivize good policies, capacity-building, citizen-responsive governance, open markets, and private enterprise in our partner countries by leveraging the financing and expertise of the American private sector. The potential to transfer the Power Africa model into other sectors and other geographic areas is something I would be interested in exploring, if confirmed. The use of best practices and proven successes should help to guide USAID as it considers scaling a diverse range of programs worldwide.

I also believe the people who receive our assistance should know it comes from the American people, and this is why I strongly support branding our aid.

Oversight and Vetting

Question 47. Has anyone ever made an allegation of sexual harassment, gender or racial discrimination, hostile work environment, or wrongful termination against you, whether through an informal process, or a formal complaint?

Answer. No, not to my knowledge.

Question 48. If so, what was the nature of the allegation, and how was it resolved?

Answer. Not applicable (N/A).

Question 49. Have you entered into any settlements (including but not limited to private mediation or arbitration) involving a claim of sexual harassment, gender or racial discrimination, hostile work environment, or wrongful termination against you?

Answer. No.

Question 50. If so, please include the nature of the claim and the settlement amount.

Answer. N/A

Question 51. Has anyone ever made an allegation of sexual misconduct or assault against you?

Answer. No, not to my knowledge.

Question 52. If so, what were the circumstances and how was it resolved?

Answer. N/A

Question 53. Have you ever taken any disciplinary action against any employee that you supervised in response to any allegations of sexual harassment, gender or racial discrimination, or hostile work environment in the workplace?

Answer. No.

Question 54. If so, please describe your role and the actions taken.

Answer. N/A

Question 55. What will you do to address any claims of sexual harassment, discrimination, hostile work environment, or sexual misconduct at USAID?

Answer. If confirmed, I will follow the policies of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to prevent sexual harassment, discrimination, hostile work environments, and sexual misconduct.

I understand USAID has zero tolerance for discrimination and harassment, including sexual harassment, in the workplace, and takes all accusations seriously. I was pleased to learn that USAID holds all managers accountable for living by, and promoting, a zero-tolerance work environment. I have read that USAID's policy is that employees found by the Agency to have subjected another employee to discrimination or unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature, whether that conduct was found to meet the definition of sexual harassment or not, are subject to appropriate action, which can range from a letter of warning to separation for cause. If confirmed, I commit to following this policy.

I understand that, in September 2017 and again in September 2018, Administrator Green issued USAID's Policy Statement on Equal Employment Opportunity, Harassment, and Retaliation, which makes clear that discrimination and harassment of any form, including sexual harassment, are unacceptable, and will not be tolerated. I have received information that USAID has clear channels to report improper behavior, and, if confirmed, I will follow these policies. Specifically, I understand that the Agency released a Flowchart on Reporting Sexual Harassment in June 2018 to better inform employees on how to report an incident, and whom to contact, and on November 30, 2017, the Agency disseminated an Agency Notice, entitled, “Facts About Sexual Harassment,” that explains the process for how to report allegations of sexual harassment. Additionally, staff have informed me that USAID’s harassment policy is posted and available to all employees on the Agency's intranet site. Furthermore, I have read that USAID launched a mandatory, Agency-wide sexual harassment training; released an enhanced, mandatory training to counter trafficking in persons; and piloted a new training for field staff on unwanted attention/sexual harassment and bystander intervention.

I understand that USAID’s Office of Civil Rights and Diversity (OCRD) is the responsible entity within USAID to receive and process reports of discrimination, harassment (including sexual harassment), and hostile work environments, and provides guidance on, and oversight of, the complaint process. I understand managers, supervisors, and other management officials (e.g., Administrative and Management Services Officers, Executive Officers, and Resident Legal Officers) must be alert to issues that might result in allegations of discrimination or harassment, and must report to OCRD, within 24 hours, any allegations of prohibited harassment. If confirmed, I commit to working with OCRD to ensure the Agency handles reports in the appropriate fashion.

I further understand that USAID’s Office of Employee and Labor Relations (ELR) may investigate referrals from the Office of the Inspector General, OCRD, the Office of Security, Staff Care and individual employees relative to complaints of this nature, and that ELR refers reports that are outside of the purview of the office to the appropriate unit for investigation and adjudication. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring this process is followed.

Finally, I understand USAID’s zero tolerance for sexual misconduct, including harassment, exploitation or abuse of any kind, extends to the Agency’s implementing partners. I know that Administrator Green established the Action Alliance for Preventing Sexual Misconduct (AAPSM) in March 2018, an intra-Agency group charged with leading USAID’s work on addressing sexual misconduct in all forms, including harassment, exploitation and abuse. I have read that, as part of the AAPSM, the Administrator hosted a Forum on Preventing Sexual Misconduct, which brought together senior USAID staff, the USAID Inspector General, and representatives from key partners—including non-governmental organizations, for-profit contractors, and United Nations agencies. I have received a briefing that the Agency has revised standard provisions for grants and contracts to clarify that implementers’ employee codes of conduct must be consistent with international standards on protection from sexual exploitation and abuse, and issued guidance to acquisition and assistance implementing partners to reaffirm USAID’s zero tolerance for sexual exploitation and abuse that involve employees of USAID’s grantees or contractors must be reported to the relevant USAID Agreement or Contracting Officer. I have read press reports that Administrator Green reiterated USAID’s commitment to preventing sexual exploitation and abuse by endorsing the G7 Whistler Declaration on Protection from Sexual Exploitation and Abuse in International Assistance, and led the drafting and issuance of the Tidewater Joint Statement on Combating Sexual Exploitation and Abuse in the Development and Humanitarian Sectors.

Question 56. Do you commit to ensuring the Department’s policies are clearly communicated and that employees know how to report any complaints?

Answer. Yes.

Question 57. Do you agree that any targeting of or retaliation against career employees based on their perceived political beliefs, prior work on policy, or affiliation with a previous administration, is wholly inappropriate and has no place in the federal government?

Answer. Yes.

Question 58. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that all employees under your leadership understand that any retaliation, blacklisting, or other prohibited personnel practices will not be tolerated?

Answer. Retaliation, blacklisting and other prohibited personnel practices are never acceptable, and if confirmed, I commit to ensuring that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) will not tolerate them.

Equal-employment opportunity (EEO), diversity, and inclusion are among the Agency’s core values. USAID is dedicated to removing impediments to inclusion by enforcing EEO laws and policies, promoting diversity, and providing an environment free of discrimination and harassment in which all employees are valued, and can contribute to their fullest potential.

I understand that USAID follows the statutorily required process for redress for employees who have faced harassment, including sexual harassment, which includes set timeliness and protections against retaliation. I have received assurances that, when deemed necessary, the Agency will use all resources to ensure the alleged offender and the complainant have limited or zero contact. I know that USAID is legally required to keep the identities of victims and alleged offenders confidential, except as necessary to complete an inquiry, and that the Agency makes employees subject to disciplinary actions if they are found to have engaged in discrimination or harassment. If confirmed, I will follow these processes.

Additionally, I understand that USAID provides mandatory training on the NO FEAR Act to all employees every two years as required by law, and the Agency’s Office of Civil Rights and Diversity (OCRD) conducts anti-discrimination and anti-harassment trainings. I have received information that, as part of USAID’s onboarding program, employees receive harassment training upon entrance on duty—which is vitally important. If confirmed, I commit to taking this training upon assuming the job.

Question 59. Do you commit to report any concerns you have about waste, fraud, or abuse to the USAID Inspector General?

Answer. Yes, when that is the appropriate channel. I am committed to upholding high standards of accountability, and, if confirmed, will not tolerate waste, fraud, or abuse.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BONNIE GLICK BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

USAID Redesign Topics

Global Development Lab

The Global Development Lab increases the application of science, technology, innovation, and partnerships to achieve, sustain, and extend USAID’s impact toward solve development challenges faster and cheaper in support of U.S. foreign policy goals. One of the most important aspects of the Lab are grants and private sector support and engagement on product research and development.

Question 1. Will you commit to ensuring all of the authorities and functions of the Lab in its current form will be carried over into the redesigned USAID?

Answer. I spent my last five years at IBM in the company’s storied Research Division. It was during this time in particular that I saw the power of science and innovation create what IBM calls a “Smarter Planet.” Indeed, the work that I did, in collaboration with scientists from IBM’s labs around the world, but principally in Latin America, focused on infusing problems with solutions related to technology. Much of the work I did was specifically related to semiconductor technology and microelectronics, and during my time in Research I co-authored three patents, which are currently working their way through the patent approval process. I believe in science, and in the application of science and technology to solve problems. I also believe that global scientific collaboration and a diversity of viewpoints are critical to finding the best solutions to solve some of the world’s most-complicated problems.

If confirmed, I will work to ensure that the application of science, technology, innovation, and partnerships to solve development challenges will remain a priority for the Agency, under both the current and proposed structures. By better integrating, and, in some cases, elevating, those functions to combine them with other parts of the Agency that are also working on similar issues, I believe the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) can be even more effective in this space.

DCHA

The administration’s proposed plan to redesign USAID significantly changes the agency's organizational structure. For example, the current Democracy, Conflict and Humanitarian Affairs (DCHA) Bureau’s functions will now be spread across three new bureaus, with most of its functions consolidated with the Offices of Foreign Disaster Assistance and Food for Peace in the new Bureau for Humanitarian Affairs.

Question 2. Do you expect that the current DCHA bureau’s responsibilities will be completely transferred across the new organizational structure?

Answer. Yes. The functions and responsibilities that are currently carried out by DCHA will move to the proposed Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance; Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization; and Development, Democracy, and Innovation.

Question 3. What challenges do you anticipate?

Answer. With any significant reorganization effort there will be challenges around implementation and managing change, among our employees, stakeholders, and partners. If confirmed, I will do my best to support our staff from DCHA and other Bureaus during this transition.
Question 4. How do you believe DCHA matters will be better handled across three bureaus?

Answer. I understand that under the Transformation, the new Associate Administrator for Relief, Response and Resilience (R3) would oversee the proposed Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance, Conflict-Prevention, and Resilience and Food Security. The intent of this proposed structure is to strengthen further the programming funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), by making it more efficient and holistic across the spectrum of preparing for, preventing, responding to, and mitigating disasters. The Agency also believes this would elevate USAID’s stature with interagency colleagues on these issues.

Combining USAID’s humanitarian assistance into programs into a single Bureau would strengthen and elevate the Agency’s stature, both within the U.S. Government and with our international partners. The proposed Bureau for Humanitarian Assistance would advance USAID’s goal of seamlessly delivering international disaster aid, which would better serve U.S. Government foreign policy interests, and people in need throughout the world. The Bureau would achieve efficiencies by eliminating redundancies between the Offices of Foreign Disaster Assistance and Food for Peace and optimizing their resources through joint operations, and by further integrating food and non-food humanitarian assistance.

Currently, USAID implements over 70 percent of its programs in countries considered fragile or conflict-vulnerable. The proposed Bureau for Conflict Prevention and Stabilization would better coordinate the Agency’s prevention, stabilization, and response efforts by combining small, separate offices with overlapping functions. This would enhance USAID’s operational capabilities in responding to crises, including through a strengthened focus on preventing violent extremism.

The proposed Democracy, Development, and Innovation Bureau would elevate the Agency’s democracy and governance programming through the creation of a Deputy Assistant Administrator to oversee this portfolio. Democracy and governance underpins sustainable development, but in the current structure conflict and immediate humanitarian responses often overshadow our programs in democracy and governance.

While resilience and food security do not currently fall entirely under the oversight of DCHA, I understand that while the Transformation proposals are pending Congressional approval, DCHA looks forward to deepening and expanding intra-agency coordination around resilience and food security programming to achieve the goals and objectives of the U.S. Global Food Security Strategy.

Budget

One of the objectives of USAID’s proposed redesign is to strengthen budget and policy coherence within USAID.

Question 5. Will USAID have an increased ability to determine aid budgets?

Answer. While I was not involved in the Transformation process personally, I have been briefed on it, and believe the proposals put forward will improve the way the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) performs its budget and policy functions. I also believe USAID’s proposed new structure will strengthen the Agency’s posture in interagency discussions, particularly when working with the State Department. I understand that the Secretary of State, through the Office of Foreign Assistance Resources (F), will continue to provide oversight for, and serve as the point of coordination for the State Department on, all foreign assistance.

Congressional Notifications

USAID has responded to directives in FY17, FY18, and FY19 appropriations bills to engage and notify Congress of any reorganization.

Question 6. How will consultation with Congress, the development community, country partners, and USAID’s own Missions be maintained or strengthened through implementation of this effort? Please be specific.

Answer. I understand the employees and external stakeholders of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) have been critical voices in the development of the Agency’s Transformation, and that they will continue to play an indispensable role throughout the implementation and evaluation of the Transformation’s structural and other changes. I further understand USAID’s leadership continues to consult with Congress, as the Congressional Notifications for the Transformation are currently pending approval.
While none of the structural proposals of the Transformation are specifically geared towards strengthening consultation with Congress, the development community, country partners, or USAID’s own Missions, I am personally committed to strengthening coordination and fostering consultation, internally and externally.

As the Agency moves into the implementation phase of the proposed Transformation (pending Congressional approval), if confirmed, I commit to keeping Congress, the development community, country partners, and USAID’s own Missions informed on the implementation of the package of reforms.

Foreign Assistance Cuts

Question 7. Do you support the president’s budget requests to slash foreign assistance funding? For example, the FY19 budget request proposed a more than 30 percent cut.

- Do you believe such cuts help USAID effectively carry out its mission?

  Answer. As you know, I was not involved in the process to develop the proposed budget for Fiscal Year 2019. I understand that, in a more fiscally constrained environment, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is being asked to do more with less. The Agency is focusing on its core priority-advancing America’s interests and fostering self-reliance.

  I am grateful for the funding that Congress provides to support the U.S. Government’s operations and programs, at the State Department and USAID. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing discussions with you and your colleagues about funding for our diplomacy and foreign assistance programs.

Foreign Aid Transparency and the Proposed BUILD Act

The BUILD Act significantly reforms how the U.S. Government will engage in foreign development finance. The Foreign Aid Transparency and Accountability Act I co-authored with Senator Rubio created guidelines for measurable goals, performance metrics, and monitoring and evaluation plans for foreign aid programs and to increase transparency by codifying and increasing the amount of information posted online.

Question 8. If the BUILD Act becomes law, how will you ensure that FATAA standards are integrated into BUILD Act’s implementing and monitoring and evaluation efforts?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) fully supports, and is committed to the goals of, the Foreign Aid Transparency and Accountability Act, and will work within the interagency to integrate them into the International Development Finance Corporation, if Congress passes, and the President signs, the BUILD Act.

Human Rights

Question 9. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Among the duties of my first overseas tour in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia was to serve as the U.S. Embassy’s Human Rights Officer and to draft our submissions on Ethiopia to the State Department’s annual Report on Human Rights. I was the only Foreign Service Officer in the Embassy trained in the Amharic language which gave me access to populations around the country who did not speak English. I frequently traveled around the country, either on my own or with a colleague from another foreign embassy (often the Netherlands), to investigate reported violations of human rights committed by the recently deposed dictatorship, as well as those attributed to the new transitional government. These included politically motivated imprisonments, torture, false imprisonment, and others. I reported on these up the chain of command at the State Department. The American Ambassador in Ethiopia took particularly seriously the human-rights violations being committed by the new Ethiopian Government, and raised concerns on a regular basis with the fledgling leaders themselves, by using information I had gathered.

Human rights and democracy relate to more than just political abuses. They have to do with the way individuals interact with each other, in the workplace, in communities, in countries. During my time in the non-profit sector, much of my work focused on international exchange programs designed to address populations who were vulnerable in their own countries. I ran programs for Iraqi university students from all parts of the country that were designed to build bridges across ethnic, religious, and cultural divides. Bringing more than 100 Iraqi college students to the United States each year, breaking them up into four or five different, religiously/ethnically/geographically/economically diverse cohorts, and sending them to study in universities across our country was a great way to promote understanding. This program brought together possible future leaders of Iraq, women and men who had never met before, and who would never have met in their own country. Through them, I saw a promising future Iraq. In 2016, when I convened a summit of the alumni of the program in Erbil, I was astounded to see how wonderfully the students had matured, and how they came to understand that the prejudices with which they were raised were dispelled when they had friends who represented previously “hated” communities.

Similarly, I ran a program in which high-school-aged Pakistani girls came to the United States to participate in a science program with American girls at the State University of New York Polytechnic Institute in Albany, where they learned from leading scientists and professors. The opportunity for the brilliant young Pakistani girls to be exposed to a science environment in which they were not judged by their gender was new to them, and they went back to Pakistan convinced of the need to empower girls and to be spokeswomen for their gender in the sciences and medicine. I have no doubt they will do great things in computer science, medicine, and beyond.

If confirmed, I will be committed to promoting human rights and democracy around the world because democracy underpins all of the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Diversity

Question 10. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. One of the core values of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is inclusion. We know a diverse workforce and differing viewpoints make us stronger and more creative. It also improves our effectiveness. Diversity is critical across USAID, but particularly in the Foreign Service, which is the face of USAID around the world.

Questions 11. USAID is proud to support the Donald M. Payne International Development Fellowship program, which encourages applications by members of minority groups who have historically been under-represented in international development careers and those with financial need to complete their graduate programs and join the Agency as Foreign Service Officers (FSOs).

I understand that, since the Payne Fellowship began in 2012, 18 Payne Fellows have been sworn in as USAID FSOs, including six in 2018. The Agency continues to recruit graduate students into the program. If confirmed, I commit to continuing to support the Payne Fellowship.

Additionally, I understand that USAID’s Development Diplomats in Residence Program (DDHR) Program, which places senior Foreign Service Officers at U.S. colleges and universities, conducts regional outreach and recruitment and establishes partnerships with Minority-Serving Institutions. The program particularly targets diverse potential candidates in the Agency’s areas of under-representation.

Question 12. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Agency are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. A culture of diversity starts at the top, and if confirmed, I assure you I am committed to taking additional steps to ensure that supervisors at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring USAID’s workforce reflects the diversity of America.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 13. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the USAID Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 14. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Answer. I do not have any financial interests abroad, nor does my husband, nor do our two sons. My sister, Caroline Glick, lives in Israel, and has financial interests and investments there. I do not have any visibility into her finances.

RESPONSES TO FOLLOW-UP QUESTIONS SUBMITTED TO BONNIE GLICK BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

On October 4, 2018, I received your responses to the questions I submitted for the record following your nominations hearing on September 25, 2018. I asked a series of questions surrounding the USAID Redesign and impacts on the Functions and the Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Affairs (DCHA) Bureau’s functions, as they will now be spread across three new bureaus, with most of its functions consolidated with the Offices of Foreign Disaster Assistance and Food for Peace in the new Bureau for Humanitarian Affairs.

Please provide your personal opinion on the following questions:

Question 16. What challenges do you anticipate with the transfer of the DCHA bureau’s responsibilities across the new organizational structure? Please elaborate on the specific challenges and how you plan to address them in your role as Deputy Administrator for USAID, if confirmed.

Answer. As with any significant reorganization effort, there will be challenges around the implementation of the Transformation while managing change among the employees, stakeholders, and partners of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). While the Offices of Foreign Disaster Assistance (OFDA) and Food For Peace (FFP) are coordinating their delivery of humanitarian assistance better than in the past, we need to ensure they are fully integrated in the proposed Bureau for Humanitarian Affairs. Working closely with staff through a consultative change-management process will be essential to optimize the effectiveness of the new Bureau, to build a shared culture, and, most important, break down the artificial and counterproductive barrier between food and non-food assistance.

If confirmed as Deputy Administrator, I intend to work closely with the new proposed Associate Administrator for Relief, Response and Resilience (R3) and the R3 leadership team to monitor the implementation of the new Bureaus. I would help oversee the implementation of the Transformation, particularly as it relates to the proposed Bureau for Development, Democracy and Innovation, the Bureau for Global Health and the Regional Bureaus, which I would oversee in my role as Deputy Administrator, if confirmed.

Question 17. How do you believe DCHA matters will be better handled across three bureaus? Please elaborate on how you believe the new structure will better serve the responsibilities and goals of the bureau with reasoning for your predictions.

Answer. I understand that under the current structure of the Bureau for Democracy, Conflict and Humanitarian Response (DCHA), the leadership of DHCA spends the vast majority of its time responding to crises, in particular humanitarian emergencies. While middle management ably handles other DCHA responsibilities—priorities of the administration and the Agency such as democracy and governance, civilian-military relations, fragility and stabilization—the lack of time DHCA senior leadership can spend on these other topics remains problematic. Under the Transformation, creating the Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance (HA), Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization (CPS), and Resilience and Food Security (RFS) would elevate each of these important issue sets, provide them each with Bureau-level leadership focused on their specific mandates, while also creating an overarching structure to enable deeper collaboration and a holistic approach to topics that cut across all three Bureaus.

In addition to Bureau-level leadership, a new proposed Associate Administrator for Relief, Response and Resilience (R3) would oversee the proposed HA, CPS, and RFS Bureaus. I understand that the proposed R3 structure is intended to improve the Agency’s ability to plan and operate in a holistic manner that improves humanitarian responses, responds adaptively to conflict, and reduces vulnerability to crisis and recurrent shocks. The rationale behind the R3 grouping of Bureaus recognizes the complex and intertwined nature of recurrent crises, fragility, and violent conflict, both causally and geographically. The proposed R3 “family” of Bureaus would enable the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to elevate resilience and food security in the interagency, and strengthen the ability of the Agency to build the capacity of national systems (public or private) to respond to humanitarian crises.
In addition to the new proposed leadership structure that would ensure tighter coordination across the proposed HA, CPS and RFS Bureaus, the planned structures of the individual Bureaus have their own advantages.

The proposed Bureau for Humanitarian Assistance would combine the Offices of Foreign Disaster Assistance (OFDA) and Food For Peace (FFP) into a single Bureau, which would mirror the structure of most other government donor agencies and would elevate the stature of humanitarian assistance within the U.S. Government and with our international partners. Additionally, the HA Bureau would strengthen USAID’s role as the lead Federal coordinator for international disaster assistance; unify USAID’s humanitarian policy voice; and provide a cohesive approach to USAID’s programming across the spectrum of preparing for, responding to, and mitigating and preventing disasters. The Bureau would achieve efficiencies by eliminating administrative redundancies between OFDA and FFP, which would optimize their resources through joint operations, and further integrate food and non-food humanitarian assistance.

USAID currently implements over 70 percent of its programs in countries considered fragile or conflict-vulnerable. The proposed Bureau for Conflict Prevention and Stabilization would better coordinate the Agency’s prevention, stabilization, and response efforts by combining small, separate offices with overlapping functions. This would enhance USAID’s operational capabilities in responding to crises, including through a strengthened focus on preventing violent extremism.

While resilience and food security do not currently fall entirely under the oversight of the Bureau for Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance (DCHA), I understand that the Transformation proposals identify the linkages between the resilience work in USAID’s current Bureau for Food Security, investments in addressing fragility, and humanitarian assistance, which would be housed in the Bureaus of CPS and BA, respectively. The proposed RFS Bureau would strengthen support to USAID’s Missions in the field, build resilient communities, and improve water security in countries and communities to reduce, hunger, poverty, and malnutrition.

I would also like to note that some elements of the current DCHA Bureau would not fall under the purview of the R3 family of Bureaus. One critical element, the Center for Democracy, Rights and Governance, would move to the proposed Bureau for Democracy, Development, and Innovation. I understand this shift would strengthen the Agency’s programming in democracy and governance programming through the creation of a Deputy Assistant Administrator to oversee this portfolio. Democracy and citizen-responsive governance underpin sustainable development, but, in the current structure, conflict and immediate humanitarian responses often overshadow USAID’s programs in these areas.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BONNIE GLICK BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Trump Administration Commitment to Foreign Aid

Question 1. Over the past two years, there have been indicators that the Trump administration is assigning a lower value to the role foreign aid in advancing U.S. national security, including successive budget requests that would significantly cut resources and a rescissions proposal that—if carried out—would have handicapped American aid programs. Given this administration’s views, do you believe that the U.S. Government, including USAID, should reduce the role of development as a tool for executing U.S. foreign policy? If not, what assurances do you have from the White House, or elsewhere in the administration, that you will be able to continue traditional U.S. policy that recognizes the importance of foreign assistance to U.S. national security?

Answer. I believe in the important role the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) plays in our foreign policy, and, if confirmed, commit to being a forceful advocate within the administration for USAID.

Question 2. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that any administration efforts to cut resources are carefully assessed, based on your understanding of the role of development assistance in furthering U.S. foreign policy and national security objectives?

Answer. I agree that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) plays a critical role in advancing U.S. national security interests through its development and humanitarian assistance. I understand that USAID relies on a data-driven approach to foreign assistance, which allows USAID to articulate, from a de-development perspective, the countries that possess the greatest capacity for and committment to development, as well as what the key barriers each country faces. Using these data, USAID can focus its assistance strategically and help countries on their journeys to self-reliance. If confirmed, I will support this approach, which I believe ensures our development assistance furthers U.S. foreign policy and national securitiy objectives.

Question 3. During his U.N. General Assembly Remarks on September 25, President Trump said he had asked Secretary Pompeo to take a hard look at our foreign assistance, and determine if aid recipients “have our interests at heart.” Have you been informed what will this review look like? If confirmed, would you advise the Secretary to condition aid based upon the policies toward the United States by recipient countries? Would you recommend that the administration engage Congress in any such review?

Answer. Senator, I have not been involved in the foreign assistance review, so would defer to the White House on the specifics of what the review will look like.
If confirmed, I will recommend that the administration engage with Congress on the review. If confirmed, I would support any thoughtful review of assistance, especially one focused on improving effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency if it moves forward.

USAID Management

Question 4. According to press reports from earlier this year, Bethany Kozma, a senior advisor for gender equality and women’s empowerment, attended a U.N. meeting on women’s rights and gender equality and said the United States was a “pro-life nation.” Prior to serving in USAID, she was an advocate against transgender rights, pushing for restrictions against transgender bathrooms in public schools. I am deeply troubled that someone who has a track record of speaking out against LGBT rights, and is misrepresenting U.S. law in international meetings has a senior advisory role in a U.S. agency responsible for the implementation of foreign aid programs in a non-discriminatory, impartial manner. Do you agree that the United States is a “pro-life nation?”

Answer. Senator, I am not familiar with the remarks made by that particular USAID staffer.

I believe that no country can thrive until all persons, regardless of gender, sexual orientation, religion or ethnicity, are treated as full and equal members of society.
One of USAID’s core values is inclusion, which applies across all of USAID, from programming to Agency staffing.

Question 5. If confirmed as Deputy Administrator managing the agency, what steps would you take to ensure USAID programs conform to U.S. law and are not unduly influenced by individual views and attitudes?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit that USAID programs will follow all applicable
U.S. laws and will not be unduly influenced by individual views and attitudes.

Burma

Question 6. What specific USAID programs are addressing the needs of the Rohingya in camps in Cox Bazar and any Rohingya currently in Rakhine State? Are these sufficient, and if not, what should USAID do to better address the needs of the Rohingya?

Answer. I understand the emergency humanitarian assistance provided by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in Bangladesh primarily finances the delivery of food nutrition interventions, and the strengthening of logistical capacity among organizations that are responding to the refugee crisis.
Just last week, USAID announced funding for programming to reduce the risk of natural disasters, which will facilitate the rehabilitation of multi-purpose cyclone shelters. USAID has also adapted its development assistance to the fluid needs of the displaced and the host communities in and around Cox’s Bazar, including to fund fact-based news programming that dispels rumors and misinformation; improvements in the management of environmental resources support to mitigate the challenges of deforestation in the area; and health care, through a shelter for the victims of human trafficking and three primary health clinics.

In Burma, I understand that USAID is providing emergency food assistance, water, sanitation, health care and protective services, shelter, nutrition, and economic recovery support. I believe much more is required to meet the humanitarian needs of the most vulnerable in Burma and Bangladesh, but I have seen that the U.S. Government continues to call on other donors to respond to the crisis with ad-tional resources. The United States cannot bear a disproportionate share of the cost of alleviating the suffering caused by this tragedy.
I personally remain concerned about the possibility of premature returns of the Rohingya if the Burmese Government is not fulfilling its promises, and, if confirmed, I will urge that any returns be fully voluntary and dignified, and that the Burmese ensure the long-term safety of all returnees.

If confirmed, I will work with my colleagues to continue to monitor the situation and assess the needs of the Rohingya, and I commit to reporting back to Congress.

Question 7. How much access do USAID partners have in Rakhine? Is the Burmese Government cooperating with humanitarian actors to deliver aid?

Answer. I understand the Burmese Government continues to restrict most access by international non-governmental organizations to Northern Rakhine State. I have seen that the U.S. Government advocates strongly and consistently for unfettered humanitarian access, not only to Rakhine State, but also to conflict-affected areas in Kachin and Northern Shan. I have read that restraints imposed by the Burmese Government include insufficient approvals to conduct relief activities, frequently changing the procedures to apply for authorization to travel, and restrictions on travel to field sites.

Staff at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) have briefed me that nearly 70 percent of organizations that were previously operating in Northern Rakhine State prior to August 2017 still have not received approval from the Government of Burma to conduct relief activities. I know USAID Administrator Green was able to travel to one village in Northern Rakhine when he visited in May. However, since that time, I have heard that denials of access by the Burmese Government are happening more frequently for locations outside of Rakhine and that access to Rakhine itself continues to be challenging.

If confirmed, I will be a forceful advocate for unfettered humanitarian access throughout Burma.

Question 8. While Bangladesh has been generous in providing refugee for an estimated one million refugees, they are shouldering a significant burden. Are there any signs the Government is seeking to return refugees to Burma involuntarily?

Answer. The Government of Bangladesh has been generous in providing shelter for the Rohingya, and all of us should appreciate the support the Bangladeshi people have shown to the refugees.

I understand that the Government of Bangladesh is not trying to involuntarily return refugees involuntarily to Burma. I have read that the U.S. Government, the United Nations, and other donors continue to emphasize that all returns of refugees must be safe, voluntary, and dignified, in keeping with international standards.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO BONNIE GLICK BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

No funds appropriated in FY 2017 or FY 2018 for bilateral assistance to West Bank/Gaza, which includes the USAID administered Economic Support Fund (ESF), have been obligated to date. In September, the Trump administration announced that $200 million in life-saving and development assistance would be “redirected” elsewhere without specifying where. The administration also announced that an additional $10 million in programs administered by USAID to promote relationship building between Israelis and Palestinians—including children—would be redirected away from Palestinian civilians.

Question 1. Should USAID’s Mission Director and the senior leadership of USAID’s Middle East Bureau been consulted on the administration’s decision to redirect aid from West Bank/Gaza? Had you been serving as USAID Deputy Administrator, would you have supported the administration’s decision to redirect aid?

Answer. I understand that, earlier this year, the President directed a review of U.S. assistance to the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank and Gaza to ensure these funds were being spent in accordance with U.S. national interests, and were providing value to the U.S. taxpayer.

I further understand that, throughout the review process, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) communicated to the interagency the impact such a decision would have on USAID’s programs, our Mission in Israel that covers the West Bank and Gaza, and the Agency’s partners on the ground.

If confirmed, I look forward to keeping you updated on the impact of these decisions on USAID’s programming in the West Bank and Gaza.
Question 2. If confirmed, will you pledge that USAID will fully obligate funds appropriated by Congress for the purpose intended?

Answer. As U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) Administrator Mark Green has stated, USAID continues to be grateful for all funding appropriated to it by the U.S. Congress. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring the Agency spends these funds in the best interest of the U.S. taxpayer, and to working closely with Congress to ensure the Agency obligates funding in a way that meets Congressional intent.

Question 3. Specifically where is the $200 million in bilateral assistance to West Bank/Gaza to be “redirected”?

Answer. Earlier this year, I understand the President directed a review of U.S. assistance to the Palestinian Authority and in the West Bank and Gaza to ensure these funds were being spent in accordance with U.S. national interests, and were providing value to the U.S. taxpayer.

As a result of that review, I have heard that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), at the direction of the President, has reinvested in other places more than $200 million in Fiscal Year 2017 Economic Support Funds originally planned for programs in the West Bank and Gaza. I understand that USAID submitted Congressional Notifications to redirect these funds to high-priority projects elsewhere. For example, I understand that $5 million was redirected to fund programming democracy and governance in Ethiopia, which will capitalize on the recent opening of political space brought about by the new Prime Minister.

While I have not yet received a briefing on the reprogramming decisions in detail, if confirmed, I commit to updating you on the specifics.

In a February 8, 2017 Washington Jewish Week op-ed titled, “We need a better deal at the United Nations,” you argued that the United States should end assistance to the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA).

Question 4. Why did you make this recommendation?

Answer. Hamas has misappropriated UNRWA schools and hospitals for terrorist purposes. This is unacceptable, and why I have called for UNRWA to reform.

Question 5. What impact do you believe U.S. funding cuts to UNRWA will have on Palestinian children who receive education through UNRWA?

Answer. The world is experiencing historic levels of population displacement, and this is an issue the global community must address. The United Nations plays a critical role in providing aid to displaced populations, and I am committed to working with all stakeholders to alleviate their suffering.

I understand the United States is ready to engage with governments in the region regarding humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians, including to discuss the possible transition of services provided by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) to national authorities in countries that are hosting Palestinian refugees, or to other international or local non-governmental organizations, as appropriate.

While I do not have more details at this time, if confirmed, I look forward to keeping you updated on the implications of these decisions on the programming managed by the U.S. Agency for International Development in the West Bank and Gaza, and on the details of our diplomatic efforts to engage other donors.

Question 6. Do you agree with the reported concerns expressed by Israeli military leaders1 that withholding U.S. contributions to UNRWA could lead to a humanitarian crisis in West Bank/Gaza, which risks emboldening enemies of Israel such as Hamas and other external actors?

Answer. I understand that, after careful review, the administration determined that the United States will not make additional contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA). However, I further understand the administration remains very concerned about the deteriorating humanitarian situation in Gaza, and is mindful of its impact on innocent Palestinians, including school children.

I understand the United States is ready to engage with governments in the region regarding humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians, including to discuss the possible transition of services provided by UNRWA to national authorities in countries that are hosting Palestinian refugees, or to other international or local non-governmental organizations, as appropriate. While I do not have more details at this time, if confirmed, I look forward to keeping you updated on the implications of these decisions on the programming managed by the U.S. Agency for International Development in the West Bank and Gaza, and on the details of our diplomatic efforts to engage other donors.

Question 7. In the same op-ed of February 8, 2017, you advocated that the United States should withdraw from the U.N. Framework Convention on Climate Changes (UNCCC). One of the stated focuses of USAID programming is helping recipients of aid deal with the “effects of greater climate variability and change, from more intense heat waves, droughts, flood and storms.” How would a decision to withdraw from the UNCCC advance those USAID development priorities? Additionally, do you believe that climate chaos plays a contributing role in global food insecurity, and if so, how?

Answer. The United States remains a party to the 1992 Framework Convention on Climate Change. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) continues to work with its partners around the world to help them deal with climate-related impacts.

I believe the climate is changing, and that it has an impact on food insecurity. USAID recognizes that changing climate patterns and extreme weather events, such as droughts, floods, and extended periods of extreme temperatures, pose major challenges to global food security. Evidence shows that these patterns and events result in recurrent and costly humanitarian crises. Even more broadly, they cause millions of vulnerable people to fall back into poverty, or to become poor for the first time.

If confirmed, I commit to supporting USAID’s programs that help address changing climate patterns and extreme weather events and improve food security.

Question 8. If confirmed, how will you ensure that U.S. development and humanitarian assistance is divorced from any appearance of conflict of interest with the Trump Organization given President Trump’s refusal to divest himself from his businesses and the Organization’s extensive holdings in countries that are recipients of official U.S. development assistance?

Answer. The U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) adheres to stringent procurement-integrity processes intended to promote competition and best value, and address any potential conflicts of interest. I am not aware of any connections between USAID and the Trump Organization. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules and I will consult with the Agency’s Designated Ethics Official for guidance on possible conflicts of interest that become known to me.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Bonnie Glick by Senator Cory A. Booker

USAID Reforms

Proposed USAID structural reforms include establishing several new bureaus and reorganizing where some offices are located. Currently, responsibility for programming for Democracy, Rights, and Governance sits in the same bureau that addresses conflict issues, DCHA. However, in the new design, those two elements will be separated and located in different bureaus.

Question 1. Considering that so many of the long term solutions to conflict are related to issues of democracy, rights, and governance, why is USAID now proposing to separate these two elements that would seem to merit even closer coordination?

- The Democracy, Rights, and Governance office will now be located within a new Bureau for Development, Democracy and Innovation, that brings together technical offices related to the Economic Growth, Education, and Environment (E3) Bureau, as well as the Global Development Lab. If the goal of this new bureau is to have more holistic cross-cutting program development, why exclude global health and other technical bureaus and offices? If coordination with global health and other bureaus and offices is possible without combining them together, then why is the agency combing E3, the Lab, and DRG together? What is the common theme that supports that combination?

Answer. I understand that the proposed Transformation would elevate democracy, human rights, and governance (DRG) into a new Center within the proposed Bureau for Development, Democracy, and Innovation (DDI), and that linkages between the DDI Bureau and other technical Bureaus would advance the integration of DRG practices in areas such as health and food security. While I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) currently has some systems in place for its other Bureaus to coordinate with the Bureau for Global Health, I have seen that program-design and other technical services for many sectors are scattered across the organization, and disconnected from each other. By unifying the Global Development Lab, E3 and DRG under the DDI Bureau, I believe USAID would be able to provide better and more comprehensive support to field Missions, while holding DDI teams accountable for improving the design of our programs and providing other specialized technical assistance to the field.

While I understand some facets of USAID’s DRG programming would move to the DDI Bureau under the proposed Transformation, the new Bureau for Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization (CPS) would enhance the Agency’s operational capabilities in responding to crises, including a strengthened focus on preventing violent extremism (PVE). I have noted that reports suggest that grievances regarding lack of responsiveness to citizens’ concerns by public authorities and abuses by security forces are primary drivers of young people to espouse extremist views or join violent extremist organizations, which means the CPS Bureau will have to have a strong governance component in its PVE programs. Staff within the proposed CPS Bureau would include technical experts in governance, and the Bureau would have strong institutional linkages back to the DDI Bureau.

If confirmed, I commit to working with you to ensure USAID establishes deliberate linkages between the DDI and CPS Bureaus, to ensure close coordination of technical and operational capabilities to support USAID Missions in the field.

The Journey Towards Self Reliance

Administrator Green has emphasized a new frame through which to view our development assistance: a journey towards self reliance with a distinct end goal whereby a country would no longer need development assistance. Setting this as a goal makes sense to frame how we interact with aid recipient countries. However, other than improving metrics in measuring progress towards self reliance for recipient countries, I don’t have a good sense of how actual programming would change.

Question 2. Could you provide some concrete examples of how this reframing of our development assistance goal would affect programming?

Answer. I understand the new emphasis at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) on “The Journey to Self-Reliance” uses 17 third-party, publicly available metrics to (1) help determine where a country sits in its overall development journey; and, (2) establish, at a very high level, its relative strengths and challenges on that journey. I have read that USAID will look at each country’s resulting Road Map to re-shape partnerships accordingly, to focus on enabling partner countries to marshal and manage effectively the resources they need to finance their own development. USAID staff have briefed me that programs will also engage the private sector to create more market-based solutions and more innovative, commercially oriented collaborations, and redefine relationships by using incentive-based tools (such as commitments to policy reform and cost-sharing or co-financing) to ensure the incentives on the U.S. side and the host-government side clearly propel movement along the journey to greater self-reliance.

Innovation

USAID’s Global Development Lab, the agency’s focal point for scientific and technological innovation, has sponsored a series of problem solving competitions. The most promising ideas are usually tested with pilot programs in a limited geographic area. I’m encouraged by the agency’s commitment to innovation as demonstrated by the Global Development Lab and particularly the Development Innovations Ventures (DIV) office. However, fully implementing innovative concepts beyond the pilot phase is challenged by uncertainties related to long-term funding, programming flexibility, and the ability to spread new ideas throughout the agency.

Question 3. How can USAID ensure that promising new ideas go beyond the pilot phase?

• Recognizing that new approaches can be threatening to some, how do you plan to promote a willingness to take calculated risks and encourage individuals to buck the status quo?

Answer. During the five years I spent working in IBM’s Research Division, I saw first-hand how the application of science and technology can solve problems. During that time, I co-authored three patent applications. I believe the use of science and technology are essential parts of a larger strategy to reshape the way work is done, to develop/test/refine new solutions, and to bring them to scale. I share your commitment to innovation, and agree that supporting and funding successful solutions and programs beyond the pilot phase must always be the end game. I am excited about the ways the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) can do this. As part of my consultations, I met with the Chief Information Officer of USAID, and discussed with him possible ways to scale some of the innovations that are coming out of the Global Development Lab by using new technologies like Artificial Intelligence.

As an example, through innovation-acceleration work, USAID could go beyond providing an initial grant to providing custom business support, which would help innovators overcome barriers like educating and recruiting investors, acquiring talent and operational support, and marketing their prototypes and products. Additionally, I understand USAID is pursuing reforms to its procurement policies and systems to move beyond a traditional business model by focusing on advancing collaboration and co-creation, which will allow USAID to embrace new partners and innovative solutions to development challenges, as well as to integrate proven innovations into its work.

Through merging the core capabilities of the Lab in the proposed Global Development into the proposed Bureau for Development, Democracy and Innovation (DDI), I believe USAID can infuse innovation into the design and implementation of programs across the Agency’s entire portfolio, where before the Lab only influenced a small percentage of USAID’s budget. This integration would also foster greater familiarity with calculated risk, and would contribute to the adoption of promising technological tools and approaches throughout USAID. I understand the DDI Bureau would blend the best of the “expeditionary” innovative programs of USAID, like DIV, with a focus on service to the field, to capitalize on the opportunity to integrate innovation in all areas in the Agency’s daily work.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL T. HARVEY BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Democracy Promotion

Helping grow democratic and citizen responsive governance abroad underpins the success of U.S. relief and development missions.

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to support democracy and human rights?

• What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My strategic approaches, while leading field Missions for the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in multiple countries, share the common thread of finding opportunities to enable citizens, communities and institutions to hold their governments, at all levels, more accountable to their people, and insisting that governments needs to perform and fulfill their responsibilities.

In Serbia, our community-reconciliation programs were critical to enabling both Serbian and Albanian communities to get past the violent conflict and sense of alienation that affected Southwestern Serbia. I was the most-visible face of the U.S. Government in that region: I let Belgrade know we were watching, and reassured the Albanian minority we had not forgotten them.

During my tenure in Tel Aviv, we began to invest our Conflict-Mitigation and Management (CMM) monies to support programs between Israeli Jewish and Arab citizens. (CMM funding had previously only been used to bring together groups across the Green Line). These programs probably did more to help intercommunal relationships within the State of Israel than anything else USAID did during my time as Mission Director.

I could offer several examples from my most-recent experience as USAID Mission Director in Nigeria, but let me cite just one—the mobilization of public demand for better health and education to prompt improvements in citizen-responsive governance. As in much of Africa, the funding available to the USAID Mission in Nigeria is heavily weighted toward HIV/AIDS, and there are few resources for programs in democracy and governance. Recognizing this reality, we restructured our education and health funding to do three things:

1. Organize community-level civil-society organizations (CSOs) around education and health to give active voice to public demands in these two areas;
2. Make clear to State Governors that we were conditioning our financial support on their choosing the necessary policy priorities and making the necessary personnel and budget decisions required to turn around the performance of the public sector in these two areas; and
3. Work directly with all levels of the State structures, from Departments of Budget, Procurement, Personnel, Education and Health, to enable the Governors to honor their commitments. Where we used this approach, we saw increases in State funding in these two areas, higher school attendance, better health outcomes, and improved public attitudes toward the State Governments.

Question 2. What are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development around the globe?

Answer. A major challenge is the continuing trend of democratic-backsliding, characterized by increasing governmental constraints on fundamental freedoms, including freedom of speech, religion and association, as well as abuses of human rights. The rise of a new, more sophisticated form of authoritarianism that uses subversive tactics to undermine the legitimacy of democratic institutions is exacerbating these trends. Specifically, in the Middle East, I am particularly concerned about the operating space for civil society in Egypt. I understand that USAID funds organizations that advocate for improved public services and the free exercise of key rights supported by the Egyptian Government. These projects combat gender-based violence and trafficking in persons, and promote gender equality and civic participation.

Democratic deficiencies in other countries also contribute to some of the biggest threats to U.S. national security, including violent extremism, armed conflict, and transnational organized crime, because terrorists, criminal organizations and others exploit vulnerabilities created by weak rule of law, unchecked corruption, and ineffective governance. Within our own Hemisphere, we are witnessing endemic corruption, economic mismanagement, and political repression drive instability in Venezuela and Nicaragua, for example. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is lending critical support to civil-society organizations, including human-rights groups, and free and independent media outlets to build awareness and pressure authorities to reverse deteriorating social, economic, and political conditions.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy globally? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Throughout my career as a Foreign Service Officer, including as Mission Director for the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in multiple countries, my strategic approaches share the common thread of finding opportunities to enable citizens, communities and institutions to hold their governments, at all levels, more accountable to their people, and insisting that governments need to perform and fulfill their responsibilities. If confirmed, I will be committed to implementing the mission statement of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), particularly its commitment to strengthening citizen-responsive, democratic governance abroad. I know this is a priority for Administrator Green, and I wholeheartedly endorse the steps he has already taken to address serious democratic challenges around the world. Because good governance is key to all development work, I would keep it in the forefront of my work to achieve two key outcomes: mitigating the risks of democratic-backsliding; and helping countries move forward in their Journey to Self-Reliance through citizen-responsive, democratic governance.

Question 4. What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The same technologies that offer opportunities for strengthening democracy can be repurposed as impediments to democracy, as authoritarian regimes develop and share tools to spread disinformation, manipulate elections, and discredit democratic institutions. The U.S. Agency for International Development often provides democracy assistance in challenging, fragile, and conflict-prone environments. I understand the Agency must continually adapt to address emerging obstacles, with long-term engagement and support in mind as a method for making gains over time.

Question 5. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be committed to using U.S. Government resources available to implement the mission statement of the U.S. Agency for International Development, which includes an explicit commitment to strengthening citizen-responsive, democratic governance abroad. Among the priorities I envision are the following: 1) developing effective approaches to emerging issues and priorities within the democracy sector, including religious freedom, disinformation, and authoritarian influence; 2) strengthening rapid-response capabilities in fragile and transitioning political contexts; and 3) expanding the integration of democracy, rights, and governance principles in other development sectors, because participatory and inclusive approaches make for more sustainable and effective development outcomes.
Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society when you travel abroad?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with civil-society and human-rights organizations, both in Washington, D.C., and during my travels to the Middle East.

Question 7. What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has funded programs to defend and improve the legal environment and expand civic space around the world, such as the Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) Legal Enabling Environment Program (LEEP), which promotes a more welcoming legal and regulatory environment for civil-society organizations and responds swiftly to NGOs by providing technical assistance on laws and regulations that affect them.

Specifically, in the Middle East, I am particularly concerned about the operating space for civil society in Egypt. I understand that USAID funds organizations that advocate for improved public services and the free exercise of key rights supported by the Egyptian Government. These projects combat gender-based violence and trafficking in persons, and promote gender equality and civic participation.

If confirmed I commit to continuing USAID’s efforts to support civil society and NGOs.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties?

Answer. Yes. I commit to meeting with democratically oriented political figures and parties, both in Washington, D.C., and during my travels to the Middle East.

Question 9. What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition?

- Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. I understand that a key component of the programming funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development to support elections and political processes is empowering women, youth and other traditionally marginalized groups to participate meaningfully in political life. I have received information that this work includes strengthening the role of women, youth, and minorities in the leadership of political parties, as well as increasing the supply of, and demand for, political candidates from these groups.

If confirmed, I will be a staunch advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties.

Question 10. Will you actively support freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, supporting freedom of press will remain one of my priorities. The U.S. Agency for International Development has historically recognized the important role that an independent press plays in citizen-responsive governance, and is one of the largest donors for the development of pluralistic, diverse, independent media systems.

Question 11. Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press when you travel abroad?

Answer. Yes.

Question 12. Will you actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors around the world?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to continuing engagement with civil society to counter disinformation and propaganda.

Question 13. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Yes. Administrator Green has been clear that inclusion is one of the core values of the U.S. Agency for International Development, and that non-discrimination toward beneficiaries is a basic principle of development. I wholly agree, and commit that I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people across the globe, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question 14. What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people around the world?
Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) continues to implement its comprehensive, inclusive non-discrimination policies for the beneficiaries of contracts and grants. If confirmed, I will support the implementation of these policies. Administrator Green has also elevated the importance of inclusive development approaches to help ensure that all marginalized groups in developing countries participate in, contribute to, and benefit from USAID’s development efforts. If confirmed, I will support this approach.

Climate Change

Climate change is an emerging threat that the Department of Defense refers to as a threat multiplier.

Question 15. Do you believe that human activities, such as the burning of fossil fuels and other activities that release greenhouse gases into atmosphere is contributing to the increase global average temperatures?

• If not, do you intend to change USAID policy and programming that addresses the challenges around climate change according to your views on climate change?

Answer. I believe that the climate is changing, and that it has always been changing. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) looks at climate change and other environmental challenges through a development lens, and that the Agency continues to work with its partners around the world to help them deal with the impacts of extreme weather events and a changing climate.

Question 16. When USAID seeks improve global food security and examines climate change’s role in increasing drought risks, or how sea level rise may infiltrate underground fresh water aquifers, or how climate change is affecting the range of disease vectors like mosquitos that carry malaria, do you believe it is not necessary, or wrong, to account for what scientific data is telling us about climate change risks?

Answer. I understand that a core principle of the development policy and programming of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is that it applies analytic rigor to support evidence-based decision-making. USAID actively incorporates consideration of climate conditions into its country strategies and processes to design projects and activities, to ensure its portfolio of investments does not have a negative impact on the environment and positively helps to build the resilience of communities and countries in the long term. Proactively managing the risks of weather-related shocks and stresses, such as droughts, floods, and shifting rainfall patterns, also reduces the need for costly disaster response. If confirmed, I hope to work with experts in industry and academia to find ways to plan resilient responses to climatic shocks.

USAID Independence

Throughout the first year of the Trump administration, the administration seemed to seriously be considering having the State Department subsume USAID.

Question 17. Do you believe that USAID should be an independent agency?

Answer. Yes, I believe the U.S. Agency for International Development should remain an independent Agency.

Question 18. How important to the mission and success of USAID, do you believe us associated with maintaining USAID’s development missions separate from, but adequately coordinated with, State Dept.’s diplomatic and political missions?

Answer. I believe it is critical for the development mission of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to remain separate from, but coordinated with, the mission of the Department of State. This allows USAID to focus on long-term development programs while closely planning with the Department of State to ensure these investments align with diplomatic priorities and policy goals.

Question 19. If confirmed, will you work ensure that USAID remains independent?

Yes.

Question 20. If confirmed, will you work to defend USAID’s ability to determine its own priorities and develop its own strategic approaches to achieving its missions?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will be a strong advocate for the ability of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to fulfill its critical mission and help our partner countries make progress on their Journeys to Self-Reliance.
USAID Budgets

Two years in a row, the president proposed to cut USAID’s budget by nearly 40 percent.

Question 21. Do you believe USAID can do its job effectively under the budgets the President has proposed for the Agency?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to work to advance the core priority of the U.S. Agency for International Development—advancing America’s interests through our foreign assistance. While I was not involved in the formulation of previous budget requests, I believe that the Agency’s work must directly improve humanitarian and development outcomes, in ways that are clearly measurable and easily evaluated, and should be designed to contribute to the self-reliance of our partners.

Question 22. Understanding that needs may (or will) always be greater than the sums of funds provided, do you believe this is a reasonable excuse for not requesting funds that more closely or accurately reflect USAID’s needs?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging in the budget process for Fiscal Year 2021. I look forward to supporting Administrator Green in efforts to ensure the U.S. Agency for International Development is targeting its investments at critical development and national-security needs and that the funding generously appropriated by Congress directly advances America’s national interests and economic prosperity.

Question 23. What should USAID do differently to convince budget decision makers within the White House, National Security Council and the Office of Management and Budget to provide a better and more realistic budget for USAID?

• Should USAID lean more heavily on its private sector partners to help convey the value of development to the White House, National Security Council and OMB?

Answer. I believe that the efforts by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to reduce poverty, strengthen citizen-responsive governance, and help people and countries progress beyond assistance must advance our national security, economic prosperity, and national values. If confirmed, I look forward to working with Administrator Green to diversify USAID’s partner base so the Agency engages with new actors—including those in the private sector—to work collectively to improve the delivery of foreign assistance and the impact of our development dollars.

I also expect to speak with groups domestically to educate Americans across the country about the importance of development and humanitarian assistance. Most Americans believe that the foreign-assistance budget represents between 20 and 30 percent of overall Federal spending. When they learn that it is less than one percent, and when they learn what we accomplish with that small investment and how it improves our national security, helps create economic opportunity for U.S. firms, and promotes American values, they can become some of our strongest advocates to the White House, the Congress, and beyond.

Question 24. If confirmed, will you commit to working on improving perceptions within the Trump administration on USAID’s value, and the value of development to advancing U.S. foreign policy objectives and national security?

Answer. If confirmed, I will advocate within the administration for the resources that are critical to advancing the mission of the U.S. Agency for International Development, including promoting and demonstrating American values abroad, and advancing a free, peaceful, and prosperous world in which we are safer and more secure.

Rescission

This administration continues to take steps to drastically reduce our foreign aid, in direct contravention of Congressional intention.

Question 25. If confirmed, will you commit to advocating against these efforts, including OMB efforts to submit further rescission packages to Congress?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be a strong advocate for the U.S. Agency for International Development, to ensure it has the tools and resources needed to fulfill its mission in advancing U.S. national security, U.S. economic prosperity, and American values. I look forward to working with the interagency and the Congress to further our shared objectives.
Policy on only providing U.S. foreign assistance to "our friends"

This week, at the United Nations General Assembly meeting, President Trump echoed a call he made in his 2018 State of the Union to only provide foreign assistance to "our friends."

Question 26. What do you think the President means when he refers to "our friends"?

• If you do not know, would you ask the President, or the White House what defines "our friends" and include the answer in your response to these questions?
• Do you believe U.S. foreign assistance should be conditioned on how countries vote at the UN?
• To the best of your knowledge has USAID received or requested any policy guidance from the White House on the "our friends" policy the President recently restated?
• If so will you please articulate this policy to the committee?
• How do you believe a policy that "ensure[s] American foreign assistance dollars always serve American interests, and only go to our friends" would, or should, be carried by USAID?
• Do you believe the U.S. should limit diplomatic and development engagements to our "friends"?
• Who are our "friends"?
• Would you agree that disengaging with a number of around the world could create opportunities for our global competitors like Russia and China, or extremist elements like Boko Haram and ISIS, to fill the void we create?

Answer. As echoed in President Trump’s remarks before the United Nations (U.N.) General Assembly (UNGA), the United States should always seek strong and sovereign global partners. The U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) can be most-effective in its development efforts by supporting countries on their Journeys to Self-Reliance, by building enduring partnerships and cultivating fellow donors.

I have not received any information from the White House regarding the President's remarks at UNGA. I believe that foreign aid is integral to promoting our foreign-policy objectives. Helping our allies is important, but we must also recognize that sometimes foreign aid can be useful to create and cultivate potential new allies in the future.

For example, I understand that USAID is committed to helping civil society and defenders of human rights in Cuba, even though, according to the Department of State, Cuba voted with the United States 17 percent of the time in 2017 at the U.N. In my view, we should not automatically cut funds to programs in a country just because its government votes against us at the U.N. I understand the money USAID spends in Cuba does not go to the Castro regime, but precisely the opposite: it helps the Cuban people, especially the families of dissidents and political prisoners. I see this type of support as in the national-security interest of the United States. I believe the Trump administration is committed to helping the Cuban people, as shown by the President’s National Security Presidential Memorandum NSPM-5 of June 16, 2017, “Strengthening the Policy of the United States Toward Cuba,” which clearly supports programs to build democracy in Cuba.

We all know that development needs will always be greater than available resources, and the U.S. Government will have to make strategic funding decisions about where to focus its resources. By using a data-driven approach, I believe USAID will be able to articulate, from a development perspective, the countries that possess the greatest capacity for, and commitment to, maintaining and financing their own development, as well as the key barriers to this self-reliance. By using these data, I foresee that USAID can strategically focus its investments to help countries to develop strong and resilient economies and societies.

Foreign Assistance Review

It is my understanding that the National Security Council and OMB are undertaking a review of U.S. Foreign Assistance.

Question 27. What do you believe is motivating this review?

• Will you pushback against any claims that devalue or distort the impact of development assistance that may be made in this forthcoming report?

Answer. I am also aware the Trump administration is undertaking a review of U.S. foreign assistance, although I have not been involved in the process.
I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is constantly reviewing its use of foreign assistance to ensure it is being an effective steward of taxpayer dollars, and to ensure that its programs advance U.S. national security, U.S. economic prosperity, and American values.

If confirmed, I would support any thoughtful review of assistance, especially if it is focuses on improving the effectiveness and efficiency of USAID.

Defense, Diplomacy, and Development

The “Three Ds—Defense, Diplomacy, and Development,” is a longstanding approach the U.S. has taken to executing U.S. foreign policy.

Question 28. What is your opinion of the Three Ds—Defense, Diplomacy and Development and what is vision to elevate both diplomacy and development in an administration where generals have driven national security and foreign policy thus far?

- Do you agree that each of the Three Ds—Defense, Diplomacy and Development are separate and equal tools in the President’s foreign policy toolkit?

Answer. I support the defense, diplomacy and development “Three D’s” approach to international affairs, and I agree that each of the “Three D’s” is an important tool in the President’s national-security and foreign-policy toolkit. Throughout my career as a Foreign Service Officer at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), after leading a succession of USAID Missions in conflict zones, working closely with both my State Department and Department of Defense colleagues, I have seen firsthand the importance of all “Three D’s.” I believe the USAID has a critical role to play in our national security, and, if confirmed, I will be a forceful advocate for development and diplomacy in the interagency.

Diplomacy, Development and National Security

Effective international development fosters stability, generates goodwill, and creates opportunities in developing countries. The (December) 2017 National Security Strategy acknowledges this fact by stating: “Some of the greatest triumphs of American statecraft resulted from helping fragile and developing countries become successful societies. These successes, in turn, created profitable markets for American businesses, allies to help achieve favorable regional balances of power, and coalition partners to share burdens and, helped create a network of states that advance our common interests and values.”

Question 29. If confirmed, how will you support the elevation of development as an equal and relevant tool to diplomacy within the State Department, at the National Security Council and in discussions across the White House?

Answer. Every country is on its own Journey to Self-Reliance, and the presence of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) as part of each larger U.S. Embassy community, is tailored to each country’s Journey. While USAID has general program areas (i.e., education, economic growth, maternal/child health, etc.) the success of each type of development program in each country is highly dependent on where that country is on its Journey. I understand that USAID is focusing on data-driven results, and I think that an open discussion of what this means and how it differs from diplomacy is important, as it will differentiate the work done by the Department of State and that done by USAID. Additionally, when the work done by USAID’s partners is successful, these results should speak for themselves, and thereby help to maintain development as an equal and relevant tool in the national-security toolbox.

With the elimination of the ‘Development’ Directorate within the National Security Council, many congressionally endorsed Presidential Initiatives (like Power Africa and Feed the Future) that have significant development outcomes have been neglected.

Question 30. If confirmed, will you support these important initiatives and elevate their use as a tool for both national security and American prosperity?

Answer. While I will not be working directly with Power Africa, Feed the Future, the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, or the President’s Malaria Initiative in the position for which I am nominated, I was heavily involved in all four programs during my time in Nigeria. If confirmed in my new role in the Middle East Bureau, I hope to continue to be an advocate for these successful and important initiatives as opportunities arise going forward.

I am a strong supporter of the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in food security, and thank this committee for its bipartisan support for Feed the Future. I understand that since Feed the Future started, an estimated 23.4 million more people are living above the poverty line, 3.4 million more children are living free of stunting, and 5.2 million more families no longer suffer from hunger. Feed the Future is a critical program, as investments in resilience and food security help combat the root causes of hunger and poverty, build more sustainable economies, and champion local solutions and entrepreneurs.

I also believe Power Africa has been a valuable and successful program—every dollar that USAID has invested in Power Africa projects has attracted over $50 in private-sector resources, and the initiative has leveraged over $16 billion in private-sector resources to projects to date, including through engagement with over 70 American companies. I believe energy is an area in which the United States has a comparative advantage in development, and hope to see USAID replicate similar efforts in other parts of the world. If confirmed, I am interested in better understanding how we can use Power Africa and other Presidential initiatives to incentivize good policies, capacity-building, citizen-responsive governance, open markets, and private enterprise in our partner countries by leveraging the financing and expertise of the American private sector.

Question 31. The 2017 National Defense Authorization Act includes several provisions (Sections 335, 583, and 1075), which illustrate a link between defense, diplomacy and development in preserving human rights, mitigating conflict and natural disasters, and protecting national security interests. If confirmed, how will you work across the Three Ds to recalibrate the National Security Strategy, and embrace a strategic approach to democracy, human rights and conflict being a strategic and national security interest of America?

Answer. I am broadly very supportive of the defense, diplomacy and development (“Three Ds”) approach, as illustrated by the President’s National Security Strategy and the Department of State-U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) Joint Strategic Plan. These documents show that development is a core component, along with defense and diplomacy, of America’s national-security and foreign-policy toolkit. Each of the “Three Ds” is critical to addressing strategically the challenges related to threats to democracy and human rights, as well as increased conflict around the world. An example of the “Three Ds” approach in practice is the recent Stabilization Assistance Review (SAR), endorsed by the leadership of the Departments of State and Defense and USAID. I believe the SAR articulates a coordinated approach to recognizing the strategic objectives of the U.S. Government in unstable contexts. If confirmed, I would be committed to continuing cooperation and coordination across the “Three Ds” in support of U.S. national-security interests.

Question 32. Do you agree that improving economic opportunity, health outcomes, food security, and addressing natural resource scarcity in developing and fragile countries reduces insecurity and instability risks?

Answer. Yes. I fully agree that addressing national-security challenges requires work to improve economic opportunities, health outcomes, and food security, and to remove barriers to accessing natural resources. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development in these areas.

Presidential Initiatives

U.S. foreign policy has prioritized diplomacy and development activities that engage public and private sector partners in eradicating global health pandemics, feed the world through agriculture and invest in small farmers, heighten trade and economic development, elevate the full rights of women and marginalized people and expand access to electricity to reduce poverty and power market growth.

Question 33. What priorities will you advance?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to working to engage both the public and private sectors in addressing the development challenges faced by countries on their Journeys to Self-Reliance. As I noted in my written testimony, if confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Agency for International Development maintains its focus on the promotion of democratic values and free elections, as the role of democracy and citizen-responsive governance is critical to the Journey to Self-Reliance. Women’s issues, including economic empowerment and health, are other areas to which I am fully committed, and which should remain priorities for USAID. I will also continually focus on helping communities to resist the siren call of religious extremism and protect their children for the violence it advocates.

I also believe that our development projects must leverage the application of technology and technological solutions. Using technology can sometimes shorten timelines on projects, reduce the use of resources, and scale results. However, technology alone is not a solution—the capacity-building associated with technology-driven solutions, when directed at targeted countries, will enable citizens of those countries to sustain the technology-driven solutions. An infusion of technology into the Agency’s work, when combined with technical assistance, will be another priority for me, if confirmed.

Question 34. Do you support the extension of the following Presidential Initiatives: Power Africa, Feed the Future, the Young African Leaders Initiative, Let Girls Learn, and the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief?

Answer. While I will not be working directly with Power Africa, Feed the Future, the Young African Leaders Initiative, the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief, or the President’s Malaria Initiative in the position for which I am nominated, I was heavily involved in these programs during my time in Nigeria.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with Administrator Green, and with Congress, to ensure the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) maintains gains in these areas, and continues to address global health, food security, education, the empowerment of women and girls, and other development challenges throughout the world. Regardless of the specific program, sector, or region, I pledge to do my utmost to ensure USAID remains a good steward of taxpayer dollars, and that the Agency uses the funding Congress appropriates it to maximize measurable impact on the ground, advance our national security, enhance U.S. economic prosperity, and promote American values.

Gender Equity

It has come to my attention that USAID has undertaken some steps to alter the terminology in gender equity programming.

Question 35. Do you believe there is a distinction between gender and sex?

Answer. Yes.

Question 36. What is your understanding of what gender equity means?

Answer. “Gender-equity” is the process of being fair to women and men, boys, and girls. To ensure fairness, measures need to compensate for cumulative economic, social, and political disadvantages that prevent women and men, boys, and girls from operating on a level playing field.

Question 37. What do you believe is the difference between women’s equality and gender equity?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development uses the term “gender-equality” to mean the state or condition that affords men and women equal enjoyment of human rights, socially valued goods, opportunities, and resources. Genuine equality means more than parity in numbers or laws on the books; it means expanded freedoms, and improved overall quality of life for all people. Reaching gender-equality requires working with women, men, boys, and girls to bring about changes in attitudes, behaviors, roles, and responsibilities. Women’s empowerment is a critical part of gender-equality. “Gender-equity” and “gender-equality” are different in that equity is the process, while equality is the result.

Diversity

Question 38. If confirmed, what will you do to elevate and embrace the diversity of people, voices and backgrounds within the USAID’s workforce?

Answer. If I am confirmed, from my first day in my new position the staff and officers of the Bureau for the Middle East at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) will hear and know that I expect they will continue to hold true to the Agency’s strong tradition of fostering a diverse and inclusive culture within the Bureau. If confirmed, I will hold all staff, but especially those in leadership and supervisory positions, accountable for protecting that tradition in fulfilling their responsibilities.

Question 39. If confirmed, will you commit to fully support the full funding and maintenance of the Payne Fellows program, and diversity initiatives at large within the USAID?

Answer. Yes.

Question 40. If confirmed, what will you do to support more minority candidates applying and successfully receiving promotions within the Senior Foreign Service?

Answer. I am proud to have a reputation as one of the Agency’s strongest mentors, and someone actively committed to promoting the development and advancement of staff from all backgrounds, men and women. If confirmed, I will carry forward that history into my new role.

Food Security

We have seen in regions like the horn of Africa skirmishes over grazing lands erupt, and food insecurity and extreme drought in places like Syria has been pointed to as a contributing factor to the violence that we see today. This violence in turn is ramping up food insecurity. There are currently four countries facing man-made famine or near famine conditions, stemming from prolonged instability, war, and conflict.

Question 41. If confirmed, what will you do to elevate the food continuum of food assistance (humanitarian assistance), resilience (both humanitarian assistance and development), food security (development assistance), and agricultural trade and investment (development assistance and development finance)?

Answer. Again, while food security issues will not be a central area of focus in my new position (with the possible exception of in Yemen), if confirmed, I believe it is important to strengthen the links between the investments the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) makes in agricultural trade and entrepreneurship, resilience, food security, water and sanitation, humanitarian assistance and stabilization. I understand that as part of the Transformation designed by Administrator Mark Green, USAID is proposing several structural reforms to accomplish this task, including by establishing the Bureaus for Humanitarian Assistance, Conflict-Prevention and Stabilization, and Resilience and Food Security. The proposal includes the creation of an Associate Administrator for Relief, Resilience and Response (R3) to oversee these Bureaus, which I believe will further strengthen the continuum from humanitarian assistance, to resilience, and to food security. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Administrator and Congress to implement these changes.

Question 42. Is it in the U.S. interest to help lead and initiate programs designed to improve food security?

Answer. Yes. As populations soar in many of the world’s most-fragile and impoverished regions and new stresses and unplanned shocks increase the risk of food insecurity, investments in the creation of strong, resilient food systems are vital to U.S. national security.

Question 43. Is it in the U.S. interest to work towards addressing the causes of food insecurity, including growing scarcity of natural resources?

Answer. Yes. I understand that improving the management of natural resources is a key component of addressing food insecurity sustainably, as reflected in the U.S. Government’s Global Food-Security Strategy (GFSS). Continued stress on ecosystems, marine environments, fisheries, and the land, water, and natural resource base upon which productive agriculture relies, as well as the complex intrastate governance challenges related to water resources, pose challenges to food security. If confirmed, I look forward to ensuring that the U.S. Agency for International Development implements the priorities outlined in the GFSS strategically to reduce poverty and hunger.

The Risks Associated with Politicizing U.S. International Development

The slogan “America First” advances a political message that emphasizes the advancement of singular U.S. interests in our foreign policy that runs the risk of complicating U.S. development initiatives. Successful international development programs depends upon the ability of our private sector and NGO implementing partners and the credibility they have abroad. “America First” risks putting forward the appearance that U.S. companies and NGOs are political operatives of the U.S. Government, and puts them at greater risk of being targeted by the extremist influences their work is countering.

Question 44. What is your understanding of the differences between political and strategic objectives in U.S. foreign policy?

- Do you believe U.S. development assistance should only be used to advance political objectives in U.S. foreign policy?
- When is it appropriate to use development assistance to advance political priorities in foreign policy?
- Should the delivery of U.S. development assistance be a shared endeavor with NGO and private sector partners?
- How do you think foreign leaders, including U.S. adversaries who are competing with us for influence in vulnerable and strategic countries, interpret and process the “America First” doctrine?
- Do you believe the U.S. private sector should be political agents of the Trump administration?
- Do you understand why U.S. development partners may be anxious about how “America First” complicates their work and risks giving the appearance that they are political agents at the service of the United States Government when they help administer development assistance on-the-ground?

• If confirmed, will you commit to working with development stakeholders to understand better the value of development assistance and the consequences of overexposure of the “America First” doctrine?

Answer. The President has said, “America First does not mean America alone,” but he has also been clear that the United States is the largest donor of foreign aid, and has called on other countries to step up their development contributions.

I believe that U.S. development assistance is critical to advancing our national security and economic prosperity, and to promoting our values of democracy, human rights, and freedom abroad. I also believe that partners—including non-governmental organizations, faith-based organizations and the private sector, and academia—are critical to the development and humanitarian work of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). I am pleased that USAID is working to diversify its partner base to expand work with the private sector and faith-based organizations, and if confirmed, I will support this important effort.

Power Africa has shown us the impact of the private sector—every dollar USAID has invested in Power Africa projects has attracted over $50 in private-sector resources, and the initiative has leveraged over $16 billion in private-sector resources to projects to date, including through engagement with over 70 American companies. I believe energy is an area in which the United States has a comparative advantage and that we can use Power Africa and other Presidential initiatives to incentivize good policies, capacity-building, citizen-responsive governance, open markets, and private enterprise in our partner countries by leveraging the financing and expertise of the American private sector. The potential to transfer the Power Africa model into other sectors and other geographic areas is something I would be interested in exploring, if confirmed. The use of best practices and proven successes should help to guide USAID as it considers scaling a diverse range of programs worldwide.

I also believe the people who receive our assistance should know it comes from the American people, and this is why I strongly support branding our aid.

Oversight and Vetting

Question 45. Has anyone ever made an allegation of sexual harassment, gender or racial discrimination, hostile work environment, or wrongful termination against you, whether through an informal process, or a formal complaint?

• If so, what was the nature of the allegation, and how was it resolved?

Answer. No, not to my knowledge.

Question 46. Have you entered into any settlements (including but not limited to private mediation or arbitration) involving a claim of sexual harassment, gender or racial discrimination, hostile work environment, or wrongful termination against you?

• If so, please include the nature of the claim and the settlement amount.

Answer. No.

Question 47. Has anyone ever made an allegation of sexual misconduct or assault against you?

• If so, what were the circumstances and how was it resolved?

Answer. No, not to my knowledge.

Question 48. Have you ever taken any disciplinary action against any employee that you supervised in response to any allegations of sexual harassment, gender or racial discrimination, or hostile work environment in the workplace?

• If so, please describe your role and the actions taken.

Answer. No.

Question 49. What will you do to address any claims of sexual harassment, discrimination, hostile work environment, or sexual misconduct at USAID?

Answer. I will handle any and all such situations in a manner which is fair to all employees involved, consistent with the policy requirements of the U.S. Agency for International Development and U.S. law, and with the intent to create a work environment that is respectful, safe and empowering for all employees.

Question 50. Do you commit to ensuring the Department’s policies are clearly communicated and that employees know how to report any complaints?

Answer. Yes.
Question 51. Do you agree that any targeting of or retaliation against career employees based on their perceived political beliefs, prior work on policy, or affiliation with a previous administration, is wholly inappropriate and has no place in the federal government?

Answer. Yes.

Question 52. If confirmed, what will you do to ensure that all employees under your leadership understand that any retaliation, blacklisting, or other prohibited personnel practices will not be tolerated?

Answer. If I am confirmed, from my first day in my new position the staff and officers of the Bureau for the Middle East at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) will hear and know that I expect they will continue to hold true to the Agency’s strong tradition of fostering a diverse and inclusive culture within the Bureau, and that I will not tolerate such behavior as retaliation, blacklisting, or other prohibited personnel practices. If confirmed, I will hold all staff, but especially those in leadership and supervisory positions, accountable for protecting that tradition in fulfilling their responsibilities.

Question 53. Do you commit to report any concerns you have about waste, fraud, or abuse to the USAID Inspector General?

Answer. Yes.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL T. HARVEY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Syria Stabilization and Development

The administration recently announced it was reprogramming $230 million in funds originally marked for Syria stabilization. The U.N. has estimated that Syria stabilization costs will exceed $300 billion.

Question 54. Despite other donor nations who have stepped forward, in light of the $230 million reprogramming, do you believe the U.S. and the international community will match the need?

• What in your view is USAID’s role in Syria stabilization?
• What stabilization activities, specifically, did USAID plan to support prior to the re-programming? What countries or organizations have the capacity to support and carry out similar programs in Syria?
• Syria has experienced a major exodus of academics, and primary and secondary schools across the country have shut down, leaving thousands of children out of school. How does USAID plan to support re-establishing Syria’s education system?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) continues to work hand-in-hand with the Departments of State and Defense, and with our Coalition partners, to support stabilization initiatives that enable Syrians to return voluntarily and safely to their homes in Raqqa and other former strongholds of the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS). Since the beginning of the conflict, the United States has provided more than $875 million in stabilization assistance to the people of Syria, which is in addition to the work undertaken, and still being carried out, by our Coalition partners.

While I was not involved in the decision-making process, I understand that, after reviewing the military and financial contributions made by the United States to date, as well as significant new pledges made by Coalition partners, the administration determined to redirect to other global priorities some funds from Fiscal Year 2017 originally planned for stabilization programming in Syria. USAID’s stabilization efforts in Syria have addressed locally identified needs, especially in those areas liberated from ISIS. These have included re-establishing power and water, restoring healthcare facilities, and refurbishing schools. Personnel from USAID and the State Department have worked with a variety of local Syrian partners in pursuit of these efforts to enable the safe and voluntary return of Syrians to their homes in the hope that these communities can return to normal life.

The United States remains focused on the enduring defeat of ISIS and the stabilization of those areas recently liberated, and expects to be able to continue the successful military campaign against remaining pockets of ISIS radicals.

I understand the administration intends to continue pressuring partners to contribute to the ongoing stabilization needs in Syria, by building on the significant contributions that Coalition partners have already pledged since April.
On education, I understand the Department of State’s funding in Northeast Syria helped local students in Raqqa and the surrounding area to resume their education this month.

USAID has additional, robust programs to fund education for Syrian refugees in neighboring Jordan and Lebanon. In partnership with the host-country governments, USAID’s assistance ensures equitable access to public school for refugee students, particularly at the primary level.

Human Rights

Question 55. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My strategic approaches, while leading field Missions for the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in multiple countries, share the common thread of finding opportunities to enable citizens, communities and institutions to hold their governments, at all levels, more accountable to their people, and insisting that governments needs to perform and fulfill their responsibilities.

In Serbia, our community-reconciliation programs were critical to enabling both Serbian and Albanian communities to get past the violent conflict and sense of alienation that affected Southwestern Serbia. I was the most-visible face of the U.S. Government in that region: I let Belgrade know we were watching, and reassured the Albanian minority we had not forgotten them.

During my tenure in Tel Aviv, we began to invest our Conflict-Mitigation and Management (CMM) monies to support programs between Israeli Jewish and Arab citizens. (CMM funding had previously only been used to bring together groups across the Green Line). These programs probably did more to help inter-communal relationships within the State of Israel than anything else USAID did during my time as Mission Director.

I could offer several examples from my most recent experience as USAID Mission Director in Nigeria, but let me cite just one—the mobilization of public demand for better health and education to prompt improvements in citizen-responsive governance. As in much of Africa, the funding available to the USAID Mission in Nigeria is heavily weighted toward HIV/AIDS, and there are few resources for programs in democracy and governance. Recognizing this reality, we restructured our education and health funding to do three things:

1. Organize community-level civil-society organizations (CSOs) around education and health to give active voice to public demands in these two areas;
2. Make clear to State Governors that we were conditioning our financial support on their choosing the necessary policy priorities and making the necessary personnel and budget decisions required to turn around the performance of the public sector in these two areas; and
3. Work directly with all levels of the State structures, from Departments of Budget, Procurement, Personnel, Education and Health, to enable the Governors to honor their commitments.

Where we used this approach, we saw increases in State funding in these two areas, higher school attendance, better health outcomes, and improved public attitudes toward the State Governments.

Diversity

Question 56. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I have a widely held reputation as one of the Agency’s strongest mentors and someone actively committed to promoting the development and advancement of staff from all backgrounds, men and women. I will carry forward this history will into my new role if confirmed.

Question 57. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Middle East Bureau are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. From my first day in my new position, if confirmed, the staff and officers of the Middle East Bureau at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) will hear and know that I expect they will continue to hold true to the Agency’s strong tradition of fostering a diverse and inclusive culture within the Bureau. I will hold all staff, but especially those in leadership and supervisory positions, accountable for protecting that tradition in fulfilling their responsibilities.
Conflicts of Interest

Question 58. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the USAID Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 59. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 60. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.

Assistance Cuts to West Bank/Gaza

Question 1. The administration’s recent decision to cut 200 million dollars in Economic Support Funds to civilians in the West Bank and Gaza will deny Palestinians, mostly women and children, access to clean water, food, education, and medical services. Denying this much-needed aid exacerbates poverty, fuels extremism, furthers the chance of a future peace agreement and threatens Israel’s security. The administration has led us to believe that other countries will step up to fill in the gaps for humanitarian aid to the Palestinians. Do you know which countries are being engaged, and what is the status of U.S. diplomatic efforts to address the funding shortfall and overall humanitarian needs on the ground? If you are not aware, can you commit to updating Congress on the diplomatic efforts?

Answer. I understand the United States is ready to engage with governments in the region regarding humanitarian assistance to the Palestinians, including to discuss the possible transition of services provided by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) to national authorities in countries that are hosting Palestinian refugees, or to other international or local non-governmental organizations, as appropriate. While I do not have more details at this time, if confirmed, I look forward to keeping you updated on the implications of these decisions on the programming managed by the U.S. Agency for International Development in the West Bank and Gaza, and on the details of our diplomatic efforts to engage other donors.

Question 2. It appears that the 200 million dollars in Economic Support Funds intended for civilians in the West Bank and Gaza will be reprogrammed to support other priorities. Which priorities are being considered?

Answer. Earlier this year, I understand the President directed a review of U.S. assistance to the Palestinian Authority and in the West Bank and Gaza to ensure these funds were being spent in accordance with U.S. national interests, and were providing value to the U.S. taxpayer.

As a result of that review, I have heard that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), at the direction of the President, has reinvested in other places more than $200 million in Fiscal Year 2017 Economic Support Funds originally planned for programs in the West Bank and Gaza. I understand that USAID submitted Congressional Notifications to redirect these funds to high-priority projects elsewhere. For example, I understand that $5 million was redirected to fund democracy and governance programming in Ethiopia, which will capitalize on the recent opening of political space brought about by the new Prime Minister.

While I have not yet received a briefing on the reprogramming decisions in detail, if confirmed, I commit to updating you on the specifics.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
MICHAEL T. HARVEY BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Question 1. Do you believe that the current military offensive led by the United Arab Emirates (UAE) around Yemen’s port city of Hodeida undercuts U.N. brokered peace efforts?

Answer. One of the primary concerns of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in Yemen is the humanitarian impact of the ongoing conflict. USAID urges the Saudi-led Coalition, the Houthis, and other parties to continue to allow the free movement of all humanitarian and commercial goods, including fuel, into and within Yemen to reach people in need, and to respect international humanitarian law and the safety of aid workers.

Question 2. Was USAID, international non-governmental organizations, or other donor countries consulted, pursuant to the Section 1290(b) determination in the FY2019 National Defense Authorization Act, on whether the Saudi Arabia-led coalition military operations in Yemen has upheld principles of discrimination and proportionality as is required under International Humanitarian Law (IHL) and the Laws of Armed Conflict (LOAC)?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) provided feedback to the Department of State on the determination regarding Yemen. However, as I was not involved in the certification process required under Section 1290(b) of the NDAA, I cannot comment on the specifics.

Question 3. If so, what specific evidence can USAID provide to support the conclusion that the percentage of civilian casualties in Yemen has decreased since the United States began providing various forms of military and intelligence assistance to the Saudi-led military coalition?

Answer. I have received assurances that the administration continues to press Coalition partners at the highest levels to mitigate the conflict’s impact on civilians, and reduce the risk of civilian casualties and damage to civilian assets.

East Jerusalem Hospital Funding Cut

The Taylor Force Act, which I helped ensure met the objectives of ending the despicable prisoner payments system while protecting critical assistance to the most vulnerable, is now being completely undermined by this administration. The law contains explicit language exempting the East Jerusalem Hospital Network from the cut off of assistance under the bill.

I was shocked to hear that the administration was cutting $25 million in assistance to the East Jerusalem Hospital Network. These hospitals treat some of the most difficult and needy cases, like cancer care, cardiac and eye surgeries, neonatal intensive care, children’s dialysis and physical rehabilitation of children. Our most recent Ambassador to Israel, Dan Shapiro, called the move “indescribably cruel.” Additionally, the administration cut $10 million in Conflict Management and Mitigation (CMM) grants, which bring together individuals of different backgrounds from areas of conflict in people-to-people reconciliation activities.

Question 1. Why did the administration go against the intent of Congress and cut off the funding to the East Jerusalem Hospital Network?
• Why did the administration cut off Conflict Management and Mitigation (CMM) grants in Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza?
• Explain how specifically cutting off the funding to the East Jerusalem Hospital Network will advance U.S. objectives when the administration had already announced the redirection of some $200 million in other assistance to the West Bank and Gaza?
• What is your position on providing this funding in the future?

Answer. Earlier this year, I understand the President directed a review of U.S. assistance to the Palestinian Authority and in the West Bank and Gaza to ensure these funds were being spent in accordance with U.S. national interests, and were providing value to the U.S. taxpayer.

As a result of that review, I have heard that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), at the direction of the President, has reinvested in other places more than $200 million in Fiscal Year 2017 Economic Support Funds originally planned for programs in the West Bank and Gaza, including the funds for the East Jerusalem Hospital Network. I understand that USAID submitted Congressional Notifications to redirect these funds to high-priority projects elsewhere. For example, I understand that $5 million was redirected to fund programming democracy and governance in Ethiopia, which will capitalize on the recent opening of political space brought about by the new Prime Minister.

Consistent with these decisions, I understand some smaller, regional programs also adjusted their program plans. USAID has briefed me that the global Conflict Management and Mitigation (CMM) program, which had planned to provide its $10 million in grants to organizations in the West Bank, Gaza, and Israel will refocus these funds to support CMM grants for organizations based in Israel that will support dialogue between Israeli Arabs and Israeli Jews.

While I have not yet received a briefing on the reprogramming decisions in detail, if confirmed, I commit to updating you on the specifics.

I can assure you, Senator, that I know these programs and these partners well, and if confirmed, I will continue to be closely engaged.

DOCUMENTATION OF ATROCITIES IN THE NORTHERN RAKHINE STATE—SUBMITTED BY SENATOR YOUNG

DOCUMENTATION OF ATROCITIES IN NORTHERN RAKHINE STATE
EXEClJT I VE SUMMARY

The Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR), with funding support from the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor (DRL), conducted a survey in spring 2018 of the firsthand experiences of 1,024 Rohingya refugees in Cox’s Bazar District, Bangladesh. The goal of the survey was to document atrocities committed against residents in Burma’s northern Rakhine State during the course of violence in the previous two years.

The survey used a representative sample of refugee camp populations to provide insights into the violence they witnessed. Any hearsay testimony was not recorded. Survey results reveal the pattern of events refugees experienced. There may be cases when multiple refugees reported witnessing the same event, so the percentages from this survey should not be extrapolated to come up with a definitive overall number of events. The National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency (NGA) worked with INR to map and analyze the resulting data (see Map 1).

The results of the survey show that the vast majority of Rohingya refugees experienced or directly witnessed extreme violence and the destruction of their homes. They identified the Burmese military as a perpetrator in most cases.

- Most witnessed a killing, two-thirds witnessed an injury, and half witnessed sexual violence (see Figure 1).
- Rohingya identified the Burmese military as a perpetrator in 84% of the killings or injuries they witnessed.
- Three-quarters say they saw members of the army kill someone; the same proportion say they witnessed the army destroying huts or whole villages. Police, unidentified security forces, and armed civilians carried out the rest of the observed killings.
- One-fifth of all respondents witnessed a mass-casualty event of killings or injuries (either in their villages or as they fled) with more than 100 victims.

The two main phases of violence—the first in October 2016 and the second beginning in August 2017—followed attacks against Burmese security forces by the Rohingya insurgent group Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA). The vast majority of reported incidents against Rohingya took place from August to October 2017. The survey shows that the military, which used the ARSA attacks to justify its so-called counterinsurgency operations in northern Rakhine State, targeted civilians indiscriminately and often with extreme brutality.

- Forty-five percent of refugees witnessed a rape, and the majority of rapes witnessed were committed, in whole or in part, by the army. Overall, nearly 40% of refugees saw a rape committed by members of the Burmese security services—either police or military—including 18% who saw them commit a gang rape.
- Members of the security services, as well as non-Rohingya civilians in some cases, targeted children and pregnant women.
- Those who were left behind because they were elderly, sick, or otherwise infirm were frequently found dead when their relatives returned to check on them.

The survey reveals that the recent violence in northern Rakhine State was extreme, large-scale, widespread, and seemingly geared toward both terrorizing the population and driving out the Rohingya residents. The scope and scale of the military’s operations indicate they were well-planned and coordinated. In some areas, perpetrators used tactics that resulted in mass casualties, for example, locking people in houses to burn them, fencing off entire villages before shooting into the crowd, or sinking boats full of hundreds of fleeing Rohingya.

INTRODUCTION

In spring 2018, the Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) worked with funding from the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor (DRL) to design and carry out a survey to document claims of atrocities committed against the ethnic Rohingya in Burma’s northern Rakhine State since October 2016. INR combined a quantitative approach to sampling with a qualitative, semi-structured questionnaire. This approach allowed investigators to systematically collect data on events that refugees encamped in Bangladesh had witnessed in their northern Rakhine State villages. Expert and well-trained investigators and their translators took special steps to create a comfortable interview structure that reduced possible stress on the respondents, allowed for the investigator to obtain clarifying detail on perpetrators and events, and separate firsthand experience from hearsay testimony.

DRL contracted with an expert outside group to gather a team of 18 experienced human rights investigators from around the world to conduct the research. INR trained the team on sampling methodology, and the National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency (NGA) created a map atlas that allowed the investigators to identify and locate where events occurred. The 1,024 survey respondents included only adults who left northern Rakhine State on or after October 1, 2016, though reports of violence date from as early as January 2016.1

What follows is an analysis of the resulting data, which illuminates the excessive use of force the Burmese Army and police unleashed on the Rohingya population in the name of counterinsurgency clearance operations after the October 2016 and August 2017 Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA) attacks. The survey’s most salient findings fall into the two periods that coincide with these Burmese military operations: the first focused during October 2016 and the second, and far more violent period, from August-September 2017 (see Figure 2).

Background on Systematic Abuse

The Rohingya have experienced decades of persecution and violence, largely perpetrated by Burmese security services and the government. The roots of anti-Rohingya sentiments and discrimination lie in a longstanding belief in Burma that Rohingya are not “native” to Burma but arrived from Bangladesh during British colonial rule. Rohingya separatist movements in the 1940s and 1950s, and periodic, low-level unrest since, contribute to the state-sanctioned narrative that the Rohingya are a security concern to be contained and must be treated separately from those they consider to be rightful Burmese citizens. Burma’s military government gradually stripped Rohingya of their citizenship and other rights in a series of maneuvers, including the 1982 Citizenship Law, and a decision in 2015 to revoke their temporary registration cards. State violence against the Rohingya in 1977, under the military’s Operation Dragon King aimed against “illegal immigration,” and again in 1991 in what they claimed was a response to attacks by the Rohingya Solidarity Organization (RSO), resulted in two separate waves of refugees when hundreds of thousands of Rohingya fled across the border to find refuge in Bangladesh.

SECTION I: PATTERN OF VIOLENCE IN NORTHERN RAKHINE (2016 AND 2017)

On October 9, 2016 a group of ARSA members and other Rohingya villagers attacked three border guard police stations, leaving nine policemen dead. The military responded by using what it called counterinsurgency tactics against the Rohingya population in the area. Few witnessed killings (2%) or destruction of huts (3%) between October and November 2016, most likely because the military targeted villages in only a few areas (see Map 1; see Tab 2 for background on ARSA).

Authorities Targeted Men for Abduction, Arrest (October 2016-August 2017)

As part of their military operations beginning in October 2016, Burmese security officials would take Rohingya men into custody, ostensibly to question them about ties to or knowledge of ARSA. As tensions rose between Burmese officials and Rohingya in northern Rakhine State, increasing numbers of men and boys were taken into custody. To avoid being taken away by security services, men spent nights hiding in the woods, leaving their wives and children vulnerable to invasive searches by security services. Many of these women reported being groped, stripped, or violated while intruders searched their homes and their bodies for valuables or possible weapons.

Refugees also reported abductions of women. In the year before the attack on her village, one woman said that the military would take the “beautiful” girls and they never came back. In another notable case, four months before the major attack, one refugee said the military told each village in his area that they had to provide 20 women so they could “teach them tailoring,” but the village never heard from them again.
Though in many cases the victim’s fate is unclear, refugees reported instances in which women had been raped after abduction. The week prior to an attack on his village, a man was walking in a forest near a military outpost when he saw four Rohingya girls tied up with ropes, heavily bleeding and “half dead.” They told him the military had kept them there for three days raping them.

Increased Restrictions (2017)

On August 25, 2017, ARSA launched attacks against about 30 police and army posts in northern Rakhine state, triggering a harsh military reaction. The majority of the attacks and three-quarters of the reported killings witnessed by the refugees in our survey occurred between August and October of 2017. Before the most acute violence broke out, a majority reported increased movement restrictions—even above the normal levels.

Dozens reported that Burmese authorities removed fences before the attacks, either by doing so themselves or by forcing Rohingya villagers to do so. In some cases, the military said they did not want Rohingya hiding militants. Removing fences also was meant to humiliate Rohingya, as it forced them to urinate and defecate in the open air. In at least 50 cases, respondents reported that the military and other actors removed knives, tools, iron, and other sharp objects that could be used as weapons. In some cases, local authorities photographed these objects as evidence of ARSA presence in the village.

- One-third who had these items taken said such restrictions had existed in their village for years. In about one-quarter of the cases, local authorities took these objects after the October 2016 attacks, and through summer 2017. Three-in-ten said the objects were removed between a month and a day before the attack, while the remaining 11% said they were removed while the attack was in progress or immediately prior.
- Rohingya most often cited the military as the culprit (in 88% of cases), but in some cases, civilians (31%) and police (22%) participated. In each, the removal of these objects facilitated the subsequent ground assaults, killings, and property destruction.

“When the military came, they would steal whatever we had, including knives—we could not cut vegetables or fish.” Female, age 30

Systematic, Large-Scale Violence Strikes Villages (August-September 2017)

After August 25, on the days when violence broke out in their villages, some respondents reported the attacks began in the early morning before most residents were awake. These attacks explicitly targeted Rohingya, and left neighboring non-Rohingya sites (e.g. Buddhist stupas) and critical infrastructure (e.g. cell phone towers) untouched during the assaults (see Image 1, next page). During these large-scale attacks, homes and property were destroyed, and scores of Rohingya were killed as they fled their villages. These attacks generally lasted 1-4 days, depending on the size of the village. Rohingya said the army was involved in nearly all (92%) of the ground assaults—at times alone (32%), but sometimes accompanied by other security forces (20%), civilians (11%), or both (23%).

The stories from some refugees show a pattern of planning and pre-mediation in their villages on the part of the attackers. In one case, the local heads of the military and police called together 25 Muslim leaders from the surrounding villages to tell them to leave or they would be killed or burned. Other respondents reported non-Rohingya neighbors leaving shortly before the outbreak of violence.

SECTION 2: TYPES AND PERPETRATORS OF VIOLENCE WITNESSED BY ROHINGYA

Burmese Army Overwhelmingly Identified as Main Actor

The results of the survey overwhelmingly show that Burmese security forces, and the army in particular, primarily are responsible for the violence that has driven the nearly 800,000 Rohingya from their homes since October 2016 (see Map 2, next page).

- Three-quarters witnessed a killing by a member of the army. In contrast, only one-quarter witnessed a killing by non-Rohingya civilians or any police force.
- Victims named the army as perpetrators in an overwhelming majority (88%) of the killings witnessed, as well as in nearly all armed ground assaults (92%) and aerial attacks (88%).

“The military surrounded us and shot at people. They wore green uniforms. They wore red scarves and red patches on their shoulders. They had long guns held on their shoulders and helmets.” Female, age 18

Note: This map may have been created by respondents, and does not necessarily reflect the actual number of cases. It is a visual representation and may not be accurate.
In many cases—and in half of the armed ground assaults reported—additional security services such as the Border Guard Police (BGP), the Rakhine State Police, or the Combat Police forces accompanied the army. Non-Rohingya civilians also participated in the violence and the looting that often accompanied it. In some cases, refugees said the military provided civilians uniforms and weapons to be used in the assault.

Official Rhetoric, Attackers’ Language Coincide

Official statements portrayed the Rohingya as a foreign jihadist enemy group, and those who fled as guilty of belonging to, supporting, or sympathizing with a terror group.

“Rakhine State sees an increasing number of Bengali populations. Later the Bengalis in Rakhine State drove out the natives including Rakhine, Danu, Mro, Khami and Maramagyi. Conflicts between Rakhine ethnics and Bengalis occur as Bengalis try to establish a separate region... Arrangements are being made to launch the Jihad holy war in the whole Rakhine State before October 2017.” (Army Spokesman Maj-Gen Aung Ye Win on August 31, 2017)

“ARSA extremist Bengali terrorists were not successful in attacking the security outposts, and they fled to Bangladesh for fear of the retribution of the security troops. As the terrorist took their families together with them, the number of people who fled had become large.” (Min Aung Hlaing, in comments to U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson on November 16, 2017)

Those Rohingya who were able to understand their attackers frequently heard similar themes—soldiers, policemen, and civilians telling them that they did not belong in Burma and that they must leave or face death. During the attacks on their villages and rapes, many Rohingya reported hearing perpetrators using explicit language and calling them “Bangladeshi/Bengali” or the racial slur “Kalar.” Many Rohingya cannot speak Burmese and thus were unable to say what was being shouted at them during the attacks. Others said the attackers approached their task in silence.

Killings, Destruction, Heavy Weaponry Pervasive

The violence respondents witnessed was extensive and followed consistent patterns across northern Rakhine State.

- Overall, eight-in-ten refugees said they witnessed a killing, most often by the Burmese security forces—either police or military. Over half (54%) of the killings witnessed were from shooting, 20% by machete or knife, and 11% by burning. Only 3% of the killings were from drowning, though refugees reported that more drowned during their escape.
- Two-thirds said that they were taken into army or police custody or that they saw other Rohingya being taken.
- Eight-in-10 reported they saw the destruction of homes or villages. Many more reported that others had confirmed their homes were destroyed, but this hearsay testimony was not recorded by the investigators. Imagery analysis from August 30 to October 23, 2017.
indicates that more than 38,000 buildings were destroyed by fire, significantly more than the estimated 1,500 observed in October and November 2016. Most villages where burning occurred were totally destroyed.

In some cases, refugees said several cars or trucks would arrive to take part in a coordinated attack—speedboats were also mentioned in some areas. More than 100 respondents from villages spread across northern Rakhine State mentioned seeing helicopters, though they did not always take part in the attacks; some saw them drop “bombs” or “rockets.”

- Across northern Rakhine State, but especially near Maungdaw and areas further north, respondents reported the use of heavy, explosive weapons such as rocket launchers (or “launchers”) and grenades. They most often said the army or security forces were using these weapons.
- Others said the soldiers were using long and short guns or knives. Several respondents also said the local ethnic Rakhine (also known as “Mogh”) were using long knives or machetes to take part in the attack.
- In many areas, refugees mentioned the use of flamethrowers or incendiary devices. Security forces most often used these weapons to burn down houses, but also used them to kill and injure Rohingya.

Refugees reported that the perpetrators of the violence singled out community or religious leaders as their targets in some areas. Thirty percent of the respondents reported they witnessed explicitly religious targeting or harassment. Respondents also detailed cases of the military’s desecration of sacred texts, and some saw soldiers burning or urinating on Korans.

Theft of livestock and personal property—often jewelry and cooking vessels—was commonplace. One-third said their food resources were stolen or destroyed. Though the military was most commonly named as the perpetrator (involved in 76% of reported cases), non-Rohingya civilians were involved in one-third of the thefts witnessed. Some refugees lamented that their families had been living comfortable lives and that they owned small shops, acres of agricultural land, and cows, all of which had been destroyed, leaving them with virtually nothing with which to rebuild their lives. In some villages, community elite were targeted in the theft and violence, including those who were wealthier or more educated. In other areas, respondents described the actions as more random.

The Burmese government officially ceased operations in northern Rakhine on September 5, 2017. An analysis of imagery shows villages still burning on that date (see Image 2, next page), and reports from refugees indicate the violence continued, tapering through September and early October.
Ultratation, Possible Torture Prevalent

Investigators heard reports of mostly Burmese soldiers, and sometimes civilians, mutilating or possibly torturing Rohingya before and during the attacks. One-in-ten refugees witnessed these acts.

- Reports of mutilation included the cutting and spreading of entrails, severed limbs or hands/feet, pulling out nails or burning beards and genitals to force a confession, or being burned alive.
- Thirty-three respondents reported groups of Rohingya were forced to stay outside for hours as a form of punishment, or as part of interrogations.
- Thirty-two respondents reported either seeing victims being decapitated or dismembered. Others reported passing mutilated corpses on their way to Bangladesh, but were unable to confirm what had happened.

Many reported passing dead bodies as they escaped from their home village to Bangladesh. Some appeared to have died due to various injuries—sometimes described as mutilations—while others seem to have died from exhaustion or other stresses on the journey. One-in-ten reported seeing the disposal of bodies in pits, graves, mass graves, or using other methods. In a few cases, witnesses said Rohingya were either killed in pits or buried alive, but in the majority of events, the victims were already dead when the bodies were being dumped, covered, or destroyed.
Some reported seeing dead bodies being dropped into a pit or a grave dug by the military—sometimes with the assistance of bulldozers. Perpetrators also took advantage of village wells for body disposal.

In other cases, soldiers burned dead bodies, aided by kerosene, hay, or wrapped blankets.

One refugee reported that the military put acid into victims’ eyes so they could not be identified. Others reported the military dismembered bodies.

Rohingya often saw bodies floating in water—one described seeing “heads floating in the river like footballs.”

“The military shot our honorable old Imam. They shot him twice, but he was not dead yet. So they stabbed him and hung his torso on a tree.” Female, age 30

Weak, Vulnerable Brunt of Violence

During the attacks on Rohingya communities, refugees report that the military and, to a lesser extent, the state police, injured and killed those who were not able to dodge the attacks—often women, children, and the elderly. In some cases the violence against these vulnerable populations was indiscriminate, as soldiers shot rounds of bullets into the air. At other times, it was specifically targeted. In some villages, soldiers went door-to-door to kill those who had been unable to flee after the initial phase of violence.

“I had to choose between my children and my mother... I had only two hands and two children” Male, age 35

“The military and BGP slaughtered my son, who was 5 years old. When military came, I was pregnant. The situation was very horrific. I could not get all of my children. I could not go to my son. He was killed.” Female, age 25

One-hundred and seventeen refugees from across northern Rakhine State witnessed infants and children being beaten or killed, or saw the corpses of children with gunshot wounds or cut throats in villages and along roads as they fled to Bangladesh. When the military shot adult families, multiple reports indicate they included the children in the executions. In some cases, witnesses report seeing soldiers or police grab infants out of their mother’s arms to kill them, and some reported seeing them physically brutalize young children by stomping on them, beating them or throwing infants on the ground. Most of these events occurred in August and September 2017.

Multiple witnesses report soldiers throwing infants and small children into open fires or burning huts. Witnesses also report seeing soldiers throw children into rivers and seeing children’s bodies that had been thrown into a village well. One refugee reported seeing a police officer throw an infant in a river, then shooting the mother when she ran into the water to save her child.

One refugee told of soldiers following a group of Rohingya as they fled to Bangladesh. At one point, she said they suddenly shot into a group of children who were playing on the ground, killing a 5-year-old, a 3-year-old, and a 3-month old infant.
In one report, a group of Rakhine civilians joined the military in attacking villagers in a rice paddy. One of the civilians stopped a man who was holding an infant, threw it in the air and caught it on his long knife.

Soldiers attacked women, and their infants, during or just after childbirth. Several refugees from different villages also reported that soldiers killed pregnant mothers by slashing their stomachs open and ripping out their fetuses.

Consistent with the military’s attacks on vulnerable segments of the Rohingya population, the military and police also appear to have targeted elderly men and women by beating, shooting, or stabbing them during attacks on their villages. Many respondents reported that the elderly were burned alive after their houses were set on fire and they were unable to escape.

- As his village was burning, one man witnessed soldiers physically push four disabled and elderly men who could not walk inside burning houses.
- Soldiers killed one witness’s 70-year-old mother in front of her, then mutilated her body and threw it into a fire.
- Witnesses also report seeing the dead bodies of many elderly people as they fled to Bangladesh.

Respondents Escaped, but Many Did Not

In many of the reported cases, Rohingya left their villages and escaped across the border to Bangladesh. In other areas, however, there seemed to be a concerted effort by the attackers to prevent the Rohingya from escaping, and to inflict maximum damage upon them.

- Some reported that during assaults, villagers were locked into houses, and those houses were set on fire.
- Two refugees witnessed the military blocking all roads or exits from the village before opening fire on the Rohingya population.
- Nine respondents reported the army, navy, or ethnic Rakhine civilians took their boats, or scuttled or destroyed them during the violence to prevent their use.

One-fifth of all refugees said they witnessed a mass-casualty event of killings or injuries with more than 100 victims. In some cases, respondents said the events occurred in their own villages, while in other cases they reported seeing massacres as they fled to Bangladesh. In one case, the respondent said men were forced to lie face-down on the ground, and more than two hundred men and one woman were killed by being cut across the neck.

- One respondent witnessed Rohingya being shot and shot at while hiding in the hills outside a village. Another mentioned seeing a “flood of bodies” from the same massacre there.
- Twenty-eight respondents reported the army or navy attempting to sink boats full of refugees, or shooting refugees trapped in the boats. Nine of these respondents said this caused the deaths of 100 people or more.

“All nine cousins drowned in the river after their boat was sunk by military. The soldiers beat them as boat was going down to make sure they drowned.” Female, age 30
Sexual Violence Endemic

The survey uncovered widespread sexual assault and rape against Rohingya women by the military. Rape incidents appear to have increased in number and brutality in the direct lead-up to and during the August and September attacks. Gang rape was reported across northern Rakhine State, suggesting at least some level of cooperation between the multiple perpetrators (see Map 3, next page).

In general, the military and police did not appear to try to hide the rapes from their peers or from those above them in their chain of command. Rather, rapes were largely public in nature, with many assaults either taking place in public view, or with perpetrators leaving evidence of such assaults—including the victims’ corpses which clearly portrayed marks of rape—in public view.

Twenty-seven women said they were themselves raped, a low number that could reflect a cultural stigma against admitting one was raped or discussing sexual violence openly, as well as the reports that Burmese soldiers often killed women after they were raped. However, 45% witnessed women and girls being raped, including the 20% who witnessed gang rape. More witnessed some form of sexual violence, including forced stripping of clothing, touching of women’s breasts or genitals, and sexual assault. The fact that the refugees identified the security forces as having committed so many rapes and assaults publicly likely contributes to these high numbers.

“Two police from my village raped me. I know these men by sight, but not their names. After they were done, they told me to leave the country; this is not your country.” Female, age 23

The security forces’ sexual assaults generally occurred in one of several ways, trends consistent throughout northern Rakhine State as identified below:

1. Home searches

Respondents reported that the military would routinely visit their villages, ostensibly to search for insurgents, and such searches would often involve groping, sexually assaulting, or raping the women inside their homes. Many women said the soldiers would steal valuables, particularly their gold jewelry, during the assaults. One 25-year-old reported particularly brutal home searches, saying the soldiers “raped women until they were half-dead.” Another said a soldier raped her sister because she refused to give him her gold nose ring. Women whose husbands had fled their homes to hide from the military were especially vulnerable to abuse.

“When soldiers came to the village and ‘searched’ women, they groped our breasts, entire body. Today when I think about those days, this is what makes me sick. Our husbands were never there and cannot find out.” Female, age 25
2. Mass rapes in fields, mosques, schools

Refugees from multiple villages across northern Rakhine state reported that for at least a year leading up to the August 2017 violence, military would arrive at their villages and demand that many or all the women gather in a public space or a nearby field. Some reported that if women did not leave their homes, soldiers found and raped them. Soldiers interrogated the women about their male family members, beating them if they failed to answer. They would then choose a smaller number of women—often 4 or 5, but some refugees reported up to 20—who as many 15 soldiers would then take to fields, forests, houses, schools, mosques or latrines to gang rape. Many victims were reportedly killed afterwards, though not in all cases. In some cases, instead of making all the women gather, the military would go door-to-door, choosing the “prettiest” girls to take away likely to be raped, instead.

- In one report, in the days before a village massacre, local Rakhine police and army soldiers made more than 20 women leave their home to go sit outside in direct sunlight, threatening that if the women didn’t bring their husbands to them, they would beat and rape them. Women who didn’t cooperate were beaten. They chose the younger women, taking them to nearby homes and the madrassa and raping them.
- On some occasions, large numbers of women were taken to be raped. One woman said she saw some 50 of the village’s “prettiest women” taken to the hills, where two of the survivors later told her they were all raped, and about 35 were shot afterwards.
- One refugee said that the military demanded that all the women in her village gather in the mosque, but that one woman did not, because she had just given birth. Upon discovering this, soldiers pulled her out into her home’s yard and publicly raped her.

“[They took women out and made them sit in the sun in the field, and questioned them, 'where are the men?' They took away breastfeeding moms, babies were not allowed to eat, kept them in the field for one day. They took away the young and beautiful women and raped them, gang rape, 5-7 men raping one woman.” Female, age 35

3. Rapes During Attacks on Villages

Refugees reported that on the day their villages were attacked, soldiers would grab and rape women who were fleeing from the burning homes and shooting.

- Witnesses from multiple locations report women were raped in the fields or hills, outside their homes in their own yards, or on roads in town where others could clearly see what was happening. One man saw 10 women being raped all along a road as he was fleeing, 4-6 soldiers attacking each woman, who were later killed.
- Many respondents reported seeing women’s naked corpses as they fled through villages, saying it was apparent from their gruesome injuries that the women had been raped. For example, a 19-year-old was fleeing her village when she said she passed a naked woman’s body bound to a tree “with clear signs of gang rape.”

“About 100 women were rounded up and raped in the hills, on the road, in front of their homes, wherever they could find them” Female, age 60
Witnesses reported that many women did not survive the rape attacks. In some cases they died from the brutality of the rape and the accompanying violence, and in many other cases the soldiers shot, hung, or hacked their bodies after they finished raping them.

“They were so brutal.” Male, age 55

- Those who did survive gang rapes often sustained serious injuries. One interviewee reported that her cousin was raped by six military officers, after which she has been virtually unable to walk or stand up.
- Witnesses reported exceptionally violent attacks where multiple soldiers raped women for hours at a time while beating them, sexually assaulting them with their weapons, or inflicting other injuries on them in addition to the rape.
- Nine respondents from unique locations in Rakhine state reported witnessing attacks or evidence of attacks in which soldiers cut off the breasts of women they raped during the assaults. Soldiers also reportedly mutilated genitals or other parts of bodies.

“The soldiers chased me. I couldn’t escape. Everyone managed to flee but I was pregnant so I wasn’t able to get away. Three soldiers raped me. One kicked me and I fell unconscious... When I got my senses back, I saw that my fetus had come out dead... I have seen my baby die and I find myself numb.” Female, age 25

Refugees from villages throughout Rakhine State reported that the perpetrators often killed their victims after the rape, typically by shooting or stabbing them. In multiple cases, soldiers killed some of the women during a mass rape, while releasing a small number alive.

- One refugee reported that the military abducted a woman along with some 80 others, taking them to a military camp in the village to rape for five days. Afterwards, she said soldiers killed half and let the remaining go free.
- In another village, one mother said that during a rape of roughly 100 women, her daughter was raped, then mutilated and killed, while her niece’s body was cut in half after rape.
- In yet another village, a man said he saw about twenty soldiers select five women, gang rape each one, then kill the women by shooting some, and hanging others from trees. Others reported soldiers cutting babies out of their pregnant mothers’ bellies, or killing both mother and child during or immediately after birth.
TAB 1: METHODOLOGICAL NOTE

This report is based on a DRL-funded, INR-designed survey conducted in the refugee camps in Cox’s Bazar, Bangladesh. Face-to-face interviews were conducted among a random sample of 1,024 Rohingya adults, 18 years old and older, who had left northern Rakhine State after October 1, 2016. The fieldwork took place from April 1 to April 22, 2018 by a team of 18 experienced human rights investigators from around the world. The investigators hailed from nearly every continent; many have previous experience with the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda; some are sexual and gender-based violence and/or trauma experts, some are former law enforcement officers, and all have previous experience in trauma-sensitive human rights documentation for the purposes of accountability. None were U.S. government officials. The investigators were trained by INR on sampling as well as the survey tool, which included open-ended questions and follow-up probes designed to draw out a narrative on the violence. They also received training from an expert with knowledge of the Burmese security services, which aided them in correctly identifying perpetrators.

This hybrid survey combined quantitative and qualitative methodology, and it is unique among existing research into the current Rohingya crisis because the random sampling of refugees ensured that the results represent the entire refugee population in camps in Cox’s Bazar, providing context for other qualitative research efforts.

The interviews were conducted via translator in a semi-structured format, often within the respondent’s camp residence. The translators were recruited locally, and an expert provided a two-day training on translation in the context of sensitive interviews. The qualitative content of the interview was then coded by the investigator to capture events that the respondent directly witnessed, as well as the events’ perpetrator to the extent they could be determined.

NGA created a map atlas to aid in locating the respondents’ village of origin. The atlas broke northern Rakhine State into a grid covering areas that open-source analysis had identified as containing villages burned in the violence. Even when the respondent was unable to locate his or her exact village on the map, with the guidance of the investigator, the respondent was in most cases able to locate events to a general area within the grid. NGA analysts were able to locate approximately 9 out of every 10 of the locations identified by investigators, and conducted geospatial analysis based on the overall grid.

A large majority of the respondents left northern Rakhine State in either August or September 2017, which mirrors NGO accounting of the ebb and flow of refugees since unrest began in October 2016. Though the survey was open to refugees of all ethnicities, only Rohingya were captured by the random sampling method.

The margin of sampling error is ±3 percentage points, and the study is representative of the population of camps sampled (see Map 1). Those who were living outside the officially administered camps were not included in the sample design. Though the survey results showed the vast majority of the most violent incidents occurred during a relatively brief two month period of time (see Figure 2, page 4), further analysis of the data is planned in order to reveal patterns of violence across space and time, and provide more information on specific mass-casualty events.
The analysis also benefits from additional insight provided by the expert on Burma’s security services and an informal focus group conducted among victims of sexual violence by an investigator.

There are some limitations to the data collected in the study:

- The methodology chosen for the study focuses on the pattern of events refugees experienced, and thus there are some cases when two or more refugees report witnessing the same event. Though the report accurately reflects the typical experiences of a Rohingya refugee, it cannot be used to calculate death rates or other losses in northern Rakhine State without combining this dataset with additional information.

- The presence of ARSA in the refugee camps likely gave pause to some refugees who might otherwise identify ARSA as perpetrators. ARSA’s involvement in the violence is likely under-reported. However, based on other credible research into the attacks in northern Rakhine State, we have no reason to conclude the group was responsible for more than a small fraction of the violence.

- We do not have any insight into events that occurred outside of the study time frame. The survey also did not capture any experiences from Rohingya who chose to stay in northern Rakhine State or from Burmese of any other ethnicity who resided there.
TAB 2: ADDITIONAL FINDINGS AND BACKGROUND

Some Restrictions Preceded Attacks

Rohingya interviewed for this survey indicated that human rights abuses within their villages increased significantly following the anti-Muslim riots in Rakhine State in June 2012, and an outbreak of civilian-led violence in 2014. Interviewees described numerous restrictions and abuses they faced in daily life. Local officials forced Rohingya to pay sometimes-exorbitant fees to marry or have children, and they enforced limits on family size. Restrictions on movement were particularly severe, with a complex web of regulations making it extremely difficult for Rohingya to move freely, though sometimes it was possible if a bribe was paid. Some areas reported frequent incidences of forced labor, beatings, and sexual violence. The severity of these restrictions differed village-to-village, but Rohingya generally found their lives more restricted than those of their non-Rohingya neighbors.

Many also said they were unable to practice their religion because the military had shuttered or burned mosques, closed their children’s madrasas, and banned mosques from issuing a call to prayer. In some cases, people said the military had threatened them that if they were found praying in their homes they would be beaten, arrested, or killed. In some areas, local authorities forced women to go outside unveiled, or forced men to shave their beards—and, in a few cases, tugged or pulled out their beards.

ARSA, also known by its former name Harakah al-Yaqin, or HaY, frames its objectives as those of an ethnic insurgency seeking greater rights for Burma’s Rohingya population. It has stopped short of calling for outright autonomy for Rohingya and disavowed terrorism writ large, as well as specific terrorist organizations like al-Qaida, ISIS, and Lashkar-e-Taibah. Any ties to these or other foreign extremist groups remain unconfirmed. Though ARSA reportedly receives financial support from members of the Rohingya diaspora in the Middle East and South Asia, participants in ARSA attacks were poorly equipped and resourced.

The group comprises a shadowy network of Rohingya militants in Burma and Bangladesh led by its senior leader, Ata Ullah (also known as Abu Umar al Junooni). ARSA’s size and support among Rohingya in Burma and Bangladesh are unclear. The group has only conducted one significant attack since August 2017, a January 2018 attack on a Burmese military truck. Recent murders and intimidation of ARSA critics and government collaborators inside Rohingya refugee camps have also been blamed on the group.

Only a handful of respondents mentioned ARSA as a perpetrator—some mentioned attempted recruitment or a presence in their village, some mentioned the October 9 attacks, and a few mentioned threats or violence against those who “collaborated” with the military.
OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator Flake. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order. First I want to thank Senator Booker and his staff for working on the—to schedule this hearing and accommodating the dual panel format that we have going today. The committee will consider a total of eight ambassador nominations today. All career diplomats who have dedicated their professional lives to serving the United States, we really appreciate you having—you all being here, and all career diplomats, it does make it easier for us. We have seen many of you before. It has been wonderful to meet many of you and get reacquainted with others. I am now going through kind of my second round of people in African countries being nominated, so we appreciate the sacrifices that you are all making, and to your families in particular. We are grateful that so many are here.

The first panel will include Mr. Craig Cloud, a nominee for Ambassador to Republic of Botswana; Michael Pelletier, nominee Ambassador to Madagascar and Union of the Comoros; Robert Scott, nominee for Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi; the Honorable Lucy Tamlyn, current Ambassador to the Republic of Benin, and nominee for Ambassador to the Central African Republican, also served in Chad, next-door.

The second panel will be Mr. Eric Stromayer, nominee for Ambassador to the Togolese Republic; Simon Henshaw, for Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea; the Honorable Dennis Hankins, current Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea, nominee for the Ambassador to Republic of Mali; and, finally, Dennis Hearne, Ambassador for—or nominee for Ambassador to Mozambique.

We are eager to hear all of the nominees and hear in particular about how the United States can continue to play a positive role in Africa where possible, and to help these countries continue on a sustainable path to growth and democracy and development. Considering the tremendous amount of experience the nominees have on both panels, I am encouraged by their nominations. I am looking forward to hearing from you. As I mentioned, I have seen many of you before, and traveling throughout Africa, I have traveled Africa with both of the members here and could not be more proud of the representation we have in so many countries there, the difficulty in some areas with so many threats and so much on your plate. So we appreciate you being here.

I will turn now to Senator Booker for any opening comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY BOOKER,
U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator BOOKER. First of all, I just want to say thank you to the chairman. You have been a friend and a real great guiding light for me as I have been new on this committee and focused on African issues, and it has been a privilege to be your ranking member.

I just want to say that it is an honor to sit here before the Foreign Service officers that are before me. We just do not thank you all enough. I am still a freshman and have not finished yet a full 6 years in the Senate, but I have now traveled all across this globe and been in awe of the men and women that are out there in the field, really rising above partisanship and focused on purpose, doing God’s work, helping to create stability, to create hope, to create opportunity abroad, as well as doing service for our country and in our country’s name.

I, too, want to join Senator Flake in thanking your families. I know it is not easy. I know the sacrifices that you make are not yours alone, but they are shared by your family members, and I am just grateful for that.

I am reminded of the sacrifice that diplomats make with the recent news in Madagascar this week. My heart goes out to their families, my prayers as well, to them and the whole country team that are dealing with the challenges and the heartache.

As Foreign Service officers, you have served in many centers of the world. You all collectively—in Iraq, Afghanistan, Sudan, Jordan, and many other places—have been working to promote U.S. priorities, critical relationships, and really do critical humanitarian work. You also have developed incredible specialties. You are experts in negotiations and expert managers, and I know that your experiences will be invaluable to the posts that you will hopefully be deployed to very soon.

You all are going to countries that are important to many of our strategic priorities in Africa. Most are very, very tough postings, to countries like the Central African Republic and Mali that are in the midst of extraordinary civil strife and violent conflict. Sustained U.S. engagement is actually vital—I have seen it with my own eyes—to end these kind of crises, hold parties accountable, and give a pathway for other human beings to have a quality of life that we take for granted in our country.

In other countries, such as Guinea, Togo, and Madagascar, critical elections are on the horizon, and democratic institutions need attention and support from the United States of America and the international community. HIV and AIDS continue to devastate communities in Botswana, Malawi, and Mozambique. And Ebola remains a threat in Guinea and across much of the continent.
But despite these challenges, as I have traveled in the region with Senator Flake, I have been struck again by the resilience and generosity and courage not just of Americans in those areas, but of the incredible human beings that I have met and have inspired me. If confirmed, it will be up to each of you to lend the hand of the United States to encourage your counterparts in these countries to overcome divisions, to build accountable institutions, to harness new economic opportunities, to achieve not just human rights but a higher quality of life, and to find peaceful ways to resolve longstanding conflict.

It is not an easy job, but it is absolutely a critical and essential one, not just for our nation, but for humanity as a whole. And actually before the hearing even starts, I know each of you are up for it.

We ask that, if confirmed, you remain in communications with us. One real bipartisan sentiment that I’d like to convey is that we are your allies, we want you to be successful, and we want to be supportive. Let us know the challenges you face, what is working well and what is not, and, most importantly, how we can be of service to you.

I look forward to your testimonies. As I said to many of you informally beforehand, and I will say now for the record, there is a little bit going on in Washington today, and I hope you will forgive a lot of my colleagues, who are dedicated Senators on both sides of the aisle, but are being drawn in different directions. Senator Flake and I happen to both also be on the Judiciary committee, and I know that there are pressing matters before us, so please do not count this in any way as a lack of interest and support. I have a feeling there will be lots of questions for the record, which I know you will diligently attend to, but please understand that though there are only two of us sitting here, this is a committee, as a whole, that supports you, believes in you, and should you be confirmed, will do everything they can to help you be successful.

Thank you.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you, Senator Booker.

Thank you all for being here. We—as he mentioned, we have really been impressed as we travel throughout Africa with the representation we have. And some of you have been in posts that we have been to, and are going to posts that we will visit as well.

Our first nominee, Mr. Cloud, previously served as Management Counselor at the U.S. Embassy in Kabul; Deputy Chief of Mission in Swaziland. Thank you. And you will proceed just after I say something about the others as well, and then all four of you can go one after the other.

Senator BOOKER. And, Chairman, if I may.

Could you please introduce your family members, especially if there are any from Arizona or New Jersey? [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. And if any intend to run against either Jeff or myself. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. It is helpful to know, it really is. Thanks.

And you will be headed to Botswana. I was just there last month, spent a good deal of time there, and it is a great post, and you will enjoy it.
The second nominee, Mr. Pelletier, served as Dean of the School of Professional and Area Studies at the Foreign Service Institute; held positions in New Delhi, as well as Assistant Secretary, Deputy Assistant Secretary, Bureau of African Affairs.

Mr. Scott, also most recently Acting Deputy Secretary of the Bureau of African Affairs, a position he has served in since 2016. He was also Deputy Chief of Mission in Zimbabwe, that is why we got to know each other during a previous CODEL.

The last nominee on the panel, Lucy Tamlyn, has been through this confirmation process for her current post in Benin. She has served as Deputy Chief of Mission in Portugal and in Chad. She has been in the region and knows it and will bring a lot of expertise there.

But please proceed.

STATEMENT OF CRAIG LEWIS CLOUD, OF FLORIDA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF BOTSWANA

Mr. CLOUD. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker. It is a great honor to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the next Ambassador to the Republic of Botswana. I appreciate the confidence that the President and Secretary Pompeo have placed in me by putting my name forward.

I am also deeply grateful to my parents, Lewis and Marietta Cloud, who could not be here today, and my wife, Angie, who is here, and not running for Senate, and my daughter, Wallace Anne, and also my son, John Beck. Without the support of each and every one of them, I would not be here before you today.

During my 26 years in the Foreign Service, I have served in senior leadership positions in also challenging posts, most recently coming from Kabul, Afghanistan. My Africa experience includes 15 years serving in West, Central, and Southern Africa, including as Deputy Chief of Mission in what is now the Kingdom of Eswatini, working on democracy, health, and security issues.

Botswana is one of the United States’ most reliable partners on the continent. Our work in Botswana strengthens democratic institutions, protects health and human rights, conserves the environment and natural resources, and counters transnational organized crime.

Economic ties between the United States and Botswana are growing. Our exports to Botswana in 2017 were up 120 percent from the prior year. The United States is one of the world’s top purchasers of Botswana’s diamonds. And U.S. tourists, attracted to the country’s beautiful national parks and reserves, are the biggest per capita spenders in Botswana. If confirmed, I will encourage Botswana’s efforts to diversify its economy and improve our opportunities for American businesses.

The United States has invested more than $900 million in Botswana’s health sector through the PEPFAR program. Despite the impressive progress, there are still an estimated 14,000 new infections annually. If confirmed, I look forward to protecting our PEPFAR investment and leading our interagency health team as we work with the Government of Botswana on its HIV response.

The Botswana Defence Force is one of our most professional militaries on the continent, and our military engagement remains strong. The U.S. also sponsors the International Law Enforcement Academy, which has trained more than 10,000 law enforcement professionals from 36 African partner nations.

Support to both of these institutions has improved the rule of law in the country as well as on the continent, including our capacity to protect the largest populations of elephants on Earth from increasingly sophisticated poaching and ivory trafficking networks. If confirmed, I will work to expand the U.S.-Botswana military connections and our regional security cooperation through education and training programs.

The U.S. Ambassador to Botswana also serves as the U.S. representative to the Southern African Development Community. And I am excited for the opportunity to work towards increased security, health, and prosperity across the region with other southern African nations.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. And I am happy to answer any questions.

Thank you.

[Mr. Cloud’s prepared statement follows:]

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be happy to answer any questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you, Mr. Cloud.

Mr. Pelletier.

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL PETER PELLETIER, OF MAINE, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MADAGASCAR, AND TO SERVE CONCURRENTLY AND WITHOUT ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION AS AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE UNION OF THE COMOROS

Mr. Pelletier. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Senator Booker, I am honored to appear before you today as the nominee for Ambassador to the Republic of Madagascar and the Union of the Comoros. If confirmed, I look forward to strengthening our relationships with the governments and the peoples of Madagascar and Comoros.

Mr. Chairman, allow me at this time, please, to introduce to you and the rest of the committee my wife, Sujatha, and our sons, Aniketan and Ethan, who are here with me. I have been so blessed over the years to have their company and their support as we have traveled around the world representing the United States of America, and I am so pleased that they are as excited as I am about this opportunity.

I believe that my educational and professional experiences have prepared me well for this moment. My studies focused on the political and social development of Africa and led me to the Foreign Service and to my first tour overseas in Senegal. Since then, I have been privileged to work across Africa, the Arab world, and several times in India. Having served around the Indian Ocean throughout my career, it is truly an honor now to be considered as the nominee to serve as Ambassador to these great island countries of Madagascar, with its rich, proud, and unique history, and cultural and linguistic unity, and the Comoros, with its many ties to all of the regions bordering the Indian Ocean.

These are critical times for both Madagascar and Comoros. Madagascar is preparing for elections in November, on schedule, 5 years after the 2013 elections that reestablished democracy there. Comorians recent approved a number of constitutional changes in a referendum and are now working through the results of that referendum. The U.S., of course, fully supports the strengthening and reinforcing of democratic systems and the respect for democratic rights in both countries, as we do around the world.

A successful, free, fair, and transparent election this year in Madagascar would signal the further strengthening of its democracy and give us an outstanding opportunity to redouble our efforts there to support political stability and to engage with the democratically elected government to encourage resilient and sustainable development for all of Madagascar’s people and to protect its unique resources.

Madagascar’s task is made even more difficult by the ongoing drought in the southwest and the seasonal outbreaks of the plague. Our development assistance and our partnerships with Madagascar, including a vibrant Peace Corps program and our work with other international partners, can help Madagascar successfully address these challenges, including providing for the education and health needs of its people, combating illegal harvesting and export of Madagascar’s unique and rich flora and fauna, fighting for elections in November, encouraging a positive business climate, and transparency conducive to trade and investment.

If confirmed, I would also serve as Ambassador to the Union of the Comoros. Our goal is to continue to develop our positive and constructive relations with Comoros, and I look forward to supporting our local staff there and the staff in our Embassy in Antananarivo, who are dedicated to our relations, as well as to our well-focused Peace Corps program in Comoros.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, I am truly honored and grateful to appear before you today. I look forward, if confirmed, to the opportunity to serve as Ambassador to Madagascar and the Union of the Comoros, and to strengthen and advance our partnerships.

Thank you.

Mr. Scott.

STATEMENT OF ROBERT K. SCOTT, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MALAWI

Mr. Scott. Thank you. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi. I appreciate the confidence he and Secretary Pompeo have shown to me through this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other members of Congress and staff to advance American interests in Malawi.

My wife, Anne, and our twins, Jennifer and Nicolas, are here with me today. Nicolas and Jennifer grew up in Tanzania and Zimbabwe, where I served as Deputy Chief of Mission before my most recent position as Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. If I am confirmed, we would welcome the opportunity to return to serve our country in that region.

Malawi is a strong partner for the United States. Our goals in the country are to strengthen core institutions, helping make Malawi a more prosperous, healthier, and more democratic partner for the United States, and creating new jobs and investment opportunities for American companies.

MCC is winding down its energy-focused compact, and I will urge the Government of Malawi to implement the reforms needed to take full advantage of its improved power infrastructure. I will also encourage the government’s crucial anti-corruption efforts.

Malawi has been a leader in adopting policies to control and combat HIV/AIDS. PEPFAR has helped sharply reduce the number of HIV/AIDS deaths and infections. These advances are fragile, however, and if confirmed, I will work with our team to sustain and maximize the impact of all of our health programs in the country.

Agriculture is also a key to successful development. It generates nearly 80 percent of household income in Malawi and needs to be a focus of our efforts. Peace Corps is another successful program active in Malawi. My wife, Anne, is a former Peace Corps volunteer, and I fully appreciate the positive impact of this important program.

Our security cooperation with Malawi is excellent. Malawi actively contributes to U.N. peace support operations on the continent. I would build on this strong relationship. If confirmed, I anticipate witnessing Malawi’s sixth consecutive peaceful national democratic election in May of 2019, a process supported by our governance programs.

Mr. Chairman, I will vigorously pursue the safety and security of American citizens and ensure responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars through effective leadership of U.S. Mission Malawi’s strong interagency team, if confirmed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Senator Booker, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ROBERT KENNETH SCOTT

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and Distinguished Members of the committee:

I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Malawi. I appreciate the confidence he and Secretary of State Pompeo have shown in me through this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress and staff to advance American interests in Malawi. My wife, Anne, and our twins, Jennifer and Nicolas, are here with me today.

Nicolas and Jennifer grew up in Tanzania and Zimbabwe, where I served as Deputy Chief of Mission before assuming my most recent position as Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. We would welcome the opportunity to return to serve our country in that region. If confirmed, I would draw on my experience in the Africa bureau, and embassies in leading the outstanding Mission Lilongwe team in advancing U.S. interests in Malawi.

Malawi is a strong partner for the United States, and a regional leader that can showcase a history of democratic elections and peaceful transfers of power. Our goals in Malawi are to strengthen core institutions that underpin democracy, economic growth, health and security—helping make Malawi a more prosperous, healthier, and more democratic partner for the United States—and creating new jobs and investment opportunities for American companies.

If I am confirmed, I will work to ensure that our efforts to date continue to bear fruit, to the benefit of both countries. MCC is winding down a 5-year $350 million compact focused on energy, and I will urge the government of Malawi to implement the reforms needed to take full advantage of its improved power infrastructure. I will also encourage the Government of Malawi’s anti-corruption efforts, sustainable management of its environmental resources, and pursuit of regional and continent-wide economic integration. Providing Malawi’s women access to education and economic opportunities will be an important part of any future growth.

Malawi has been a leader in Africa in the adoption of policies and programs to control and combat HIV/AIDS. PEPFAR has helped reduce the number of HIV/AIDS deaths by 73 percent, and the number of new HIV infections by 41 percent since 2003, but in a country as poor as Malawi, these advances are fragile, and can easily reverse. A healthy population is fundamental to development, and, if confirmed, I will work with our USAID and CDC programs to maximize the impact of PEPFAR and our other health programs in Malawi, which have also resulted in significant gains in maternal and child health.

Agriculture is a key to successful development and also can provide opportunities for increased trade and markets for U.S. companies focused on value addition. Agriculture generates nearly 80 percent of household income in Malawi and this needs to be a special focus of our efforts; to improve resilience, generate increased income, provide better nutrition and break the cycle of food insecurity.

Peace Corps is another successful program active in Malawi. A strong and historic program, Peace Corps volunteers have been working in Malawi since 1963. My wife, Anne, is a former Peace Corps volunteer, and I fully appreciate the impact that these incredible Americans have on building capacity in communities and ties between our peoples.
Our security cooperation with Malawi is excellent. Malawi contributes to U.N. peace support operations on the continent. It currently has a battalion deployed in the Democratic Republic of the Congo with the Force Intervention Brigade and has pledged another battalion for a peacekeeping mission. Malawi also recently hosted AFRICOM’s Southern Accord Exercise. I will build on this strong relationship, if confirmed, working with the Office of Security Cooperation to explore new partnership opportunities.

Our work to reinforce democratic institutions and enhance government responsiveness to its citizens is at the core of our efforts. If confirmed, I anticipate witnessing Malawi’s sixth consecutive peaceful, national democratic election in May 2019—a process supported by our governance programs.

Mr. Chairman, if I am confirmed, I will vigorously pursue the safety and security of American citizens and ensure responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars through effective leadership of U.S. Mission Malawi’s strong interagency team.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you, Mr. Scott.

Ambassador Tamlyn.

STATEMENT OF HON. LUCY TAMLYN, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Ambassador TAMLYN. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker. It is a great honor for me to appear before you. I am grateful to President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Ambassador to the Central African Republic. I am very happy that my husband, Jorge Serpa, is here today. Jorge is a tireless advocate for Foreign Service families.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, I have served as a foreign officer since 1982, culminating with the privilege of serving as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Benin. Assignments across three continents and in war zones have given me experience in balancing the imperatives of the diplomatic mission with the sacred mission of protecting lives.

United States interests in the Central African Republic are primarily security and humanitarian. The Central African Republic is a mineral-rich country but largely ungoverned and dominated by armed groups. More than half of the country needs humanitarian assistance, of which the United States is the largest donor.

Our primary U.S. objective is to help the elected government of President Touadérbé leader expand state authority. We support the African Union-led peace process, efforts to bring justice to victims of atrocities, and reestablishment of civilian security and justice capabilities.

The United States is also the largest contributor to one of the most challenging U.N. peacekeeping missions in the world. I would like to pay tribute to the 75 MINUSCA peacekeepers who have lost their lives carrying out their mandate.

If confirmed, I will seek to continue the leadership role which my predecessors so ably performed to keep the AU-led peace process on track. Progress requires coordination with other international actors, but must be consistent with U.N. Security Council resolutions. The safety of those under my authority will be my paramount concern, along with ensuring the best use of the resources entrusted to us by the U.S. taxpayer.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I recognize that, if confirmed, I will be assuming leadership of a post in a country of extreme fragility, one where our diplomatic presence has been suspended three times in the past 20 years. The Central African Republic has looked into the abyss, and seen, in the words of Henry Kissinger, that, quote, if order cannot be achieved by consensus or imposed by force, it will be wrought at disastrous and dehumanizing cost, from the experience of chaos, end quote.

I hope that you agree with me that it is important to maintain a focus on the longer term, recognizing that there will be advances and set-backs, and that the United States has an important role to play here.

If confirmed, I very much look forward to your advice and counsel on this challenging task, and I am very happy to take your questions.

Thank you.

[The prepared statement of Hon. Lucy Tamlyn follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. LUCY TAMLYN

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee, it is an honor for me to appear before you today. I am grateful to President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Ambassador to the Central African Republic (CAR).

My husband, Jorge Serpa, is here today along with other family members. Jorge has represented our nation by my side for over 27 years and been a tireless advocate for Foreign Service families.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I have served as a Foreign Service Officer since 1982, culminating with the privilege of serving as the U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Benin. Assignments across three continents and in war zones have given me experience in balancing the imperatives of the diplomatic mission with the sacred mission of protecting lives.

United States interests in the Central African Republic are primarily security and humanitarian. The Central African Republic is a mineral-rich but largely ungoverned territory the size of Texas. In the absence of state authority, local armed groups hold sway. More than a quarter of the population has been displaced over the past decade and more than half of the country needs humanitarian assistance.

The primary U.S. objective in the Central African Republic is to help the elected government of President Touadéra expand state authority to bring security to the country. We support the African-Union-led peace process, efforts to bring justice to victims of atrocities, and re-establishment of credible civilian security and justice capabilities. U.S. humanitarian assistance brings succor to a population in desperate need.

The United States is also the largest contributor to one of the most challenging U.N. peacekeeping missions in the world. I would like to pay tribute to the 75 U.N. peacekeepers who lost their lives carrying out their mandate in CAR.

If confirmed, I will seek to continue the leadership role my predecessors so ably performed to keep the AU-led peace process on track. Progress requires coordination and thoughtful division of labor with other international actors, but must be consistent with U.N. Security Council Resolutions. The safety of those under my authority, Americans and local staff, will be my paramount concern, along with ensuring the best use of the resources entrusted to us by the U.S. taxpayer.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I recognize that, if confirmed, I will be assuming leadership of a post in a country of extreme fragility, one where our diplomatic presence has been suspended three times in the past twenty years. The Central African Republic has looked into the abyss, and seen, in the words of Henry Kissinger, that, “if order cannot be achieved by consensus or imposed by force, it will be wrought at disastrous and dehumanizing cost, from the experience of chaos.” I hope that you agree with me that it is important to maintain a focus on the longer term, recognizing that there will be advances and set-backs, and that the United States has a role to play here. I look forward to your advice and counsel in this challenging task, if confirmed, and I am very happy to take your questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you all for your testimony. And thank you to the families as well. You must be very proud.

Mr. Cloud, with regard to Botswana, recently there was an uptick survey of elephants. Animal counts revealed that there have been a bunch slaughtered lately, and there is concern that some of the problems that have been mostly confined in terms of large-scale poaching to East Africa may move south, and Botswana has been, obviously, as you mentioned, the largest concentration of elephants on the continent by far. What can we do specifically? What programs are we undertaking right now to help them deal with this issue?

Mr. Cloud. Thank you, Senator. I have consulted with the departments in the State Department and the— or the sections in the State Department and USAID who deal with conservation and biodiversity as well as the Department of Interior's Fish and Wildlife Service about the programs that are going on.

First, there are quite significant deviations in the stories. If you look at the Elephants Without Borders versus the Government of Botswana story, it is 87 elephants versus 53. And we have actually sent our Fish and Wildlife attaché as well as our regional environmental attaché up to the area to confirm the stories. And I think continuing our programs to develop professional law enforcement—law enforcement professionals who deal in cross-border trade in combating wildlife trafficking and in countering poaching are some of the best ways that we continue to do that through the International Law Enforcement Academy, as well as through SADC, because the wild—the economic benefits of the diverse wildlife and ecosystem in southern Africa benefits all the SADC region countries, and I think that it would benefit everybody to—to combat—to work to fight this kind of wildlife poaching regardless of where they are from.

Senator Flake. Well, great. We do have a good partnership with the government there. We have worked with them on this issue—and a number of other issues, PEPFAR. President Masisi has committed to move ahead and work with our—with, you know—in a partnership with us on many of these issues. So you are walking into a good situation there. Ambassador Miller did a great job in the previous post, and so look forward to your representation there if you are confirmed.

Mr. Pelletier, with regard to Madagascar, we hear often—you mentioned the issues of public health, reoccurrence of the plague every once in a while, and then on the resources as well, trying to make sure that the flora and fauna, the diversity that they have there and nowhere else, is preserved. What programs do we have that you can continue to work with on in the public health sphere as well as conservation?

Mr. Pelletier. Thank you very much, Senator. You are absolutely right to point out the numerous development challenges that exist in Madagascar. And I think we have a good program working particularly through USAID that is focused on health, health issues, such as the plague and other disasters, sort of emergency issues, but also the longer term issues: water, sanitation issues, et cetera. That is probably the biggest part of the AID program. We also have a very active sustainable agriculture development program through USAID to try to support the people of Madagascar to meet their own development needs.
I know that there are other parts of the U.S. Government that are focused on other details of the economic situation and economic growth for Madagascar, including Treasury and others. And then we have, as I mentioned earlier, a really vibrant Peace Corps program that has been in Madagascar for a long time with over 145 volunteers there separate from our other program in Comoros. So I think we have a wide-ranging program.
The other challenge really I think is to try to coordinate with all of the other donors in Madagascar, including international bodies, to try to make sure that we have the maximum impact possible.
Senator Flake. Thank you.
Mr. Peltier. Thank you.
Senator Flake. Mr. Scott, with regard to Malawi, you mentioned the energy sector that has been a focus of ours for a while. How have things improved there in that sector, and how do we continue those gains?
Mr. Scott. Thank you, Senator Flake. The MCC compact, a 5-year program, $350 million, is winding up this month, but it has certainly put in a lot of capacity based on the hydropower that is dominant there. I also just recently had a chance to speak with some colleagues from OPEC, and they are looking at about 100 megawatts of solar power, which would also be brought onto the grid. So what we are seeing is a very positive trend line to try to bring more power provided to the population. Only 10 percent currently have access to energy, to electricity.
So my sense is that our specific efforts have been very productive, that between MCC and OPEC, we have had a large impact in that sector. And if confirmed, I would certainly seek to ensure that the government takes full advantage of that program and makes the reforms necessary to take full advantage of those.
Senator Flake. Thank you.
Ms. Tamlyn, you mentioned in my office earlier today the government’s authority only extends to about 15 percent of the country in the Central African Republic. How—what are we doing to exand that with the help of international partners?
Ambassador Tamlyn. Thank you, Senator. Our primary tool is MINUSCA, the U.N. peacekeeping mission, which has approximately 14,000 people on the ground. Through MINUSCA, we have been able to secure humanitarian corridors and also start to push back the armed groups a little bit, but it needs to be a double-edged process with not only MINUSCA holding the ground in those key corridors, but also through our work with the government to stand up a national army and also to stand up a credible police and jund armed system. So we are doing this bit by bit. It is going to be a long-term process, though.
One thing that—that is in our favor is that the Central African Republic is not that big a country, and we do feel that with the resources that we have been able to muster, that we will be able to make slow but steady progress.

Thank you.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Senator Booker.

Senator Booker. Mr. Chairman, thank you. Thank you very much. And I’d pick up where Senator Flake left off. So more than 2 years ago, we know that President Touadéra was inaugurated, and 4 years ago, as you just mentioned, MINUSCA was first deployed. Humanitarian and security conditions, though, have really deteriorated since we started those efforts. I am just not confident that I see a really cohesive strategy that is focused on improving the situation in the Central African Republic.

And my senior Senator, Senator Menendez, who is not here but passionate about these issues, actually went to the floor and gave a really powerful speech that lays out a convincing case for a new strategic vision overall for the Central African Republic. And so I’d like to know what changes, if any, in diplomatic engagement, bilateral aid, military cooperation, or just general policy do you see that needs to be made?

Ambassador Tamlyn. Thank you, Senator. Well, I think we need to keep on using all the tools at our disposal. We need to keep on using the multilateral peace process and insist that regional actors, strong regional actors, such as Chad and Sudan, are there at the table and pushing parties to peace. We need to continue to work with MINUSCA and make it a more agile and more effective organization. We need to obviously leverage our bilateral relationship with the government to try to make it stronger and more effective and understand who its real friends are in this long-term path ahead to a Central African Republic which is more stable and more secure.

Thank you.

Senator Booker. Thank you very much. It was interesting from my first trip to Africa seeing the influence of China and other competitors on the continent, and I am deeply concerned about reports of Russia’s increasing influence in the country and what the Russian intentions are. I know that President Touadéra has met with Putin and that Russia has received an exemption from the arms embargo to deliver weapons to the government. And now there are also reports of activities by Russian private military contractors, some apparently seeking to engage in extractive industries, and this obviously is a concern. So how do you assess the nature of Russia’s efforts, and how do you think the United States should respond?

Ambassador Tamlyn. Thank you, Senator. That is a very important question and one that I think we are all working on right now. As you have noted, the Russian presence in part responds to a legitimate need of the Central African Republic army for equipment and training, but, as you note, the Russians are also leveraging this assistance to advance their commercial interests and to expand their influence. And they are also setting up parallel peace processes, which is both dangerous and unhelpful. I believe that the best path for the United States is to maintain a strong seat at the table with resources and through presence, and we have to make clear to President Touadéra and to the Government that the United States and western donors are the best bet for the long-term progress of the country.

My message to the CAR government, if confirmed, is that it needs to do its utmost to ensure that any commercial deals are transacted with full transparency and ensure that no sanctions redlines are crossed in the process. But definitely this is an important issue, and I will be continuing to track it very closely.

Senator BOOKER. Well, thank you very much. If I can have one more question with you. I understand that the African Union-led peace mediation effort has really suffered in general, suffered from delays, a lack of will amongst armed groups, and an apparent lack of commitment amongst regional powers with influence. What would be required for the AU mediation initiative to be more successful? Do you think there needs to be a higher level of engagement from leaders in the region? And, again, what can we do, as the United States, to more robustly support that initiative?

Ambassador TAMLYN. Thank you, Senator. I do agree that regional engagement is key to this. And, if confirmed, one of my highest priorities will be to make sure that I am able to work effectively with my colleagues in neighboring countries, as well as with multilateral institutions, so that we are bringing a real concerted pressure to bear on all of the parties to the— to the conflict.

It is difficult—it is a difficult proposition, however, dealing with armed groups who have, let us face it, few incentives to put down their arms and seek other livelihoods. So I think we need to be creative and also in the long run thinking about, ultimately what kind of development programs are we going to be putting in place here that help the country grow and develop and create an investment climate that will encourage investment in the country and job creation?

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much.

Mr. Cloud, I am going to go over some territory again that my friend and colleague Senator Flake went over, but it is just an issue that is very important for me. As you pointed out, American tourists are the biggest per capita spenders in Botswana. Ecotourism is an important part of diversifying Botswana’s economy away from the extractive industries. Nevertheless, I understand legislation in Botswana have recently proposed lifting the ban on trophy hunting, specifically the ban on elephants. Botswana has long faced challenges from organized commercial poaching, but the country has made what I think are good efforts to halt poaching altogether, which should be recognized, and I am grateful for that.

But it seems to me that the existing policy was farsighted on moral and economic grounds because there are many wildlife-watching tourists. Those tourists provide an economic boon to the region and to farmers, and they are more numerous than the people who are interested in trophy hunting. The net-net balance to me, seems very clear when I look at the numbers. Ecotourism and preserving these animals could be more helpful to the local communities.

Could you go a little bit deeper on what the United States can do to support the protection of wildlife in Botswana. And are you concerned about the effect that lifting the hunting ban may have on wildlife populations and ecotourism? I really do believe that lifting the hunting ban may not even address the problem that a lot of the small farmers are concerned with in terms of protecting their crops.

Mr. Cloud. Yes, sir. Thank you, Senator, for the question. It—in my consultations with both the Department of Interior, Fish and Wildlife Service, and the USAID and the Oceans and Environmental Sciences sections in the State Department, everybody seemed to have a consensus view that—that professional hunting, trophy hunting, if properly managed, can be a benefit to the country, but it is predicated on the ability of the country to properly control it and to ensure that the profits from that hunting are redirected back to the conservation and biodiversity of the—of the country, and to protect the natural resources.

I am—not being on the ground there, I—I believe that broadly I have served in Zimbabwe and other countries where there were both professional hunting and ecotourism based on photographing and just game viewing, and seen it work successfully both ways.

So if the Government of Botswana is able to successfully ensure that—that they have the—the controls and protocols in place, ultimately it is—it is their decision, and I understand that President Masisi is currently doing a round of consultations in the country to—to find out what—which way the country would like to—to move on this effort.

Senator Booker. Well, it is an issue of great concern to me, so I hope we can stay in touch, if you are confirmed, when you get your feet on the ground. Maybe then you could talk to my team a little bit more about it.

Mr. Cloud. Thank you, Senator.

Senator Booker. Thank you, sir.

Senator Flake. Well, thank you. Thank you for your testimony. We have two panels, so we will need to move to the other one. We appreciate your participation here. The hearing record will remain open until tomorrow night, so you will likely get some questions from some of the other members of the panel that were unable to be here. So if you could respond as quickly as possible, that would be great.

And with that, we would invite the next panel to take their place. And thank you so much. And thank you to the families as well. [Panel change.]

Senator Flake. Welcome to the second panel. And thank you for being here.

Our first nominee is Mr. Stromayer, who is previously Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for East Africa and the Sudans in the Bureau of African Affairs. Additionally, he served as Charge d’Affaires with—and the Deputy Chief of Mission Madagascar, and the Executive Director of the Bureau of African Affairs.

The second nominee, Mr. Henshaw, who most recently served as senior advisor on health initiatives. Additionally, he served multiple positions in the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration, eventually achieving the rank of Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary. And I understand you have had a family loss here, and appreciate you still being able to be here. So—so thank you.
Mr.—let us see, the third nominee is Mr. Hankins, Dennis Hankins, our second confirmed Ambassador, this afternoon. He currently serves as Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea, previously served as Deputy Chief of Mission at the U.S. Embassy in Khartoum.

And let us see, then Mr. Hearne, who is currently Principal Deputy High Representative in the Office of High Representatives in Sarajevo, Bosnia, and Herzegovina. Previously served Deputy Chief of Mission Afghanistan, Senior Advisor to the Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs.

We look forward to all of your testimony.

So please proceed, Mr. Stromayer.

STATEMENT OF ERIC WILLIAM STROMAYER, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE TOGOLESE REPUBLIC

Mr. S TROMAYER. Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Booker, I am deeply honored to have the opportunity to appear before you today, and I am grateful to the President and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence that they have placed in me as their nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Togolese Republic.

If confirmed, I will be honored and privileged to lead our Embassy team in working to advance the interests of the American people in Togo. I am immensely proud today to be joined by my wife of almost 21 years, Susmita Dastidar, and two of our daughters, Antara Helena and Lalita Leonora, all three of whom are behind me. And our eldest daughter, Aditi, is away at college. Also unable to join us is my 84-year-old mother, Sarah. She and my father, Jim, introduced me to this career. My father, who was a Foreign Service officer, died tragically young in 1983, but their lessons of decency, integrity, and patriotism have guided me throughout my life.

My interest in West Africa began when I was a Peace Corps volunteer in Senegal in the early 1980s. My second assignment with the State Department was in Burkina Faso, and I visited Togo overland several times during my 3-year tour. Additionally, I served in Africa as Deputy Chief of Mission and Charge d'Affaires in Madagascar, held senior positions in the Bureau of African Affairs, have held senior positions in the Bureau of African Affairs, over the last 5 years, and was a desk officer for several West African countries. These experiences and other postings during my 29 years with the Department have prepared me for this next challenge, if confirmed.

Togo has experienced some political instability over the past year. Despite broad consensus on several reforms, there is disagreement on the details, rooted in deep distrust between Togo's ruling party and the opposition that feels frozen and out of power. If confirmed, I would support and emphasize the role of law—rule of law, solid democratic institutions, and the role of civil society to encourage positive change.

The Government of Togo has improved the country's investment climate, creating a special Presidential body to expedite reforms;
however, much work lies ahead. Among my major objectives will be increasing transparency, tackling corruption, promoting trade and economic growth. Consolidating the economic reforms will be helped by a Millennium Challenge Corporation threshold program approved this year to further open the telecommunications market and improve land title registry, two critical constraints holding back Togo’s own efforts to lift its people out of poverty.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee, for this opportunity to appear before you. If confirmed, I will strive to reinforce our interests in a stable, prosperous, and peaceful Togo. I warmly welcome any questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ERIC STROMAYER

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and Distinguished Members of the committee, I deeply honor the opportunity to appear before you today and am grateful to the President and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Togolese Republic. If confirmed, I will be honored and privileged to lead our Embassy team in working to advance the interests of the American people in Togo.

I am immensely proud today to be joined by my wife of almost 21 years, Susmita Dastidar, and two of our daughters, Antara Helena and Lalita Leonora. Our eldest, Aditi Alexandra is away at college. Also unable to join us is my 84-year old mother, Sarah. She and my father, Jim, introduced me to this career so many years ago. My father, who was a Foreign Service Officer, died tragically young in 1983, but their lessons of decency, integrity and patriotism have guided me throughout my life.

A recent commemoration of September 11 at the State Department and remembrances of the challenges all of us have faced over the years, reaffirmed for me all the reasons I am proud to be an American and to represent our nation overseas, if confirmed as an Ambassador.

My interest in West Africa began when I was a Peace Corps Volunteer in Senegal in the early 1980s. My second assignment with the State Department was Burkina Faso, and I visited Togo overland several times during that three-year assignment. I have served in Africa as Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d’Affairs in Madagascar, senior positions in the Bureau of African Affairs over the last five years, and as a desk officer for several West African countries. These experiences and other postings around the world during my 29 years with the State Department have prepared me for this next challenge, if confirmed.

The United States and Togo enjoy a strong relationship and share broad mutual interests. Our policy priorities in Togo are to advance peace and security; promote fair trade and economic growth; strengthen democracy, human rights, and governance; and support opportunity and development. A stable, peaceful and prosperous Togo serves America’s interests and expands Togo’s ability to contribute to regional stability.

Our highest priority is to advance peace and security. Despite a small population, Togo is currently the 15th largest contributor of peacekeeping forces in the world. We continue to help professionalize its security forces. Togo’s military is graduating from the U.S. Africa Contingency Operations (ACOTA) to providing its own pre-deployment peacekeeping training, building capacity that I hope to continue to support if confirmed.

Togo has experienced some political instability over the past year. Despite broad consensus on several of the reforms, there is disagreement on the details, rooted in deep-seated mistrust between Togo’s ruling party and an opposition that feels frozen out of power. If confirmed, I would support and emphasize rule of law, solid democratic institutions, and the role of civil society to encourage positive change.

The Government of Togo has improved the country’s investment climate, with a special presidential body to expedite reforms. Togo’s hosting of the African Growth and Opportunity Act forum provided momentum for modernizing its economy. Much work lies ahead. Increasing transparency, tackling corruption, and promoting trade and economic growth will be a major focus. A Millennium Challenge Corporation Threshold program approved this year will help consolidate and extend these reforms, further opening the telecommunications market and improving land title registry—the two binding constraints holding back Togo's own efforts to lift its people out of poverty.

A fast-growing population has presented a significant youth unemployment challenge. The education system faces challenges from underfunding; infant mortality, maternal health, HIV/AIDS and malaria remain a concern. Humanitarian assistance and supporting the work of private American organizations in the health and education sectors are areas I would focus on, if confirmed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and distinguished members of the committee for this opportunity to appear before you. If confirmed, I will strive to reinforce our interests in a stable, prosperous and peaceful Togo, with the ability to contribute to regional stability and advocate for the safety and security of American citizens and our interests in Togo. I warmly welcome any questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

I introduced you out of order, but we will go ahead straight through. So, Ambassador Hankins.

STATEMENT OF HON. DENNIS B. HANKINS, OF MINNESOTA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MALI

Ambassador Hankins. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker. I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee as the next Ambassador to the Republic of Mali.

I appreciate the confidence he and Secretary of State Pompeo have shown in me through this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress to advance American interests in Mali. I would like to thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your support and this committee's support 3 years ago when I was nominated to serve in the Republic of Guinea. I am proud that my son, Navy Lieutenant Danu Hankins, could be with me today, and also that my brother, Knute—and, Senator Booker, he manages a Mondelēz factory near Paramus. So not one of your constituents, but he does live in your State and do business there.

Senator Booker. God bless him. [Laughter.]

Ambassador Hankins. Unfortunately, my wife of 36 years, Mira, could not be with me today.

My current assignment in Guinea has offered me the opportunity to help that country transition from the Ebola crisis and make real political, economic, and social progress. Postings in Sudan, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Mauritania, and Haiti have offered me opportunities for strong activist diplomacy. If confirmed, I will draw upon those experiences to deepen U.S.-Mali ties as we continue to work towards our top policy priorities in Mali, which are supporting the full and rapid implementation of the 2015 Algiers Accord, working with the Government of Mali, International Partners, and Mali’s neighbors to respond to terrorists and criminal threats that undermine peace and security, not just in Mali, but throughout the region.

And, finally, to ensure that our assistance supports those previous two priorities while also then helping the Malian people in areas of food security, health, education, governance, and economic growth.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work together with our partners to create greater stability and prosperity for the Malian people. I will vigorously pursue the safety and security of American citizens and advance U.S. interests in Mali.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, Senator Risch, for seeing me today. I look forward and would be honored to respond to any questions.

Thank you.

[Ambassador Hankin's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. DENNIS BRUCE HANKINS

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Mali. I appreciate the confidence he and Secretary of State Pompeo have shown in me through this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress and staff to advance American interests in Mali.

I am supported here today by my friends and colleagues from the State Department's Bureau of African Affairs and USAID. I am proud that my son, Navy Lieutenant Danu Hankins, could be with me today. Unfortunately, my wife of 36 years, Mira, could not attend. My career in the Foreign Service began in 1984 and has led me to challenging assignments all over the world. My current assignment in Guinea has offered me the opportunity to help that country transition from the Ebola crisis and make real political, economic, and social progress. I have sought out many opportunities in countries either in, or emerging from, conflict. Postings in Sudan, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Mauritania, and Haiti offered opportunities for strong diplomacy, where the effectiveness of our policies is immediately evident. If confirmed, I would draw upon these experiences and many others to deepen U.S.—Mali ties as we continue to work towards our mutual goals of combating violent extremism, strengthening democratic governance and respect for human rights, and fostering inclusive economic growth.

Mali faces serious challenges from growing terrorist threats, increasing communal violence, a frustratingly slow peace process, and severe poverty. Despite these obstacles, Mali recently held presidential elections for the second time since the military coup in 2012. It remains a willing counterterrorism partner, and we continue our partnership to bring development and economic opportunities to its people.

Terrorists are vying for control of more territory in Mali than at any time since the 2012 crisis. Al-Qa'ida- and ISIS-affiliated groups have been expanding their areas of operational control from the north to the center. These threats are spilling over borders and destabilizing the Sahel region. While Malian security forces have a number of challenges, ultimately they must provide security throughout the country.

The United States supports reforming and strengthening these forces so they can address these threats head-on through programs such as the International Military Education and Training, Security Governance Initiative, Trans Sahara Counterterrorism Partnership, Crisis Response Team training, and Defense Department's Joint Combined Exchange Training. These programs complement the efforts of our partners, notably France and the European Union, for whom an unstable Mali represents a direct threat, fueling terrorism, mass migration, and drug trafficking. At the same time, we continue to raise our concerns regarding serious human rights issues, including credible allegations of serious human rights violations by Malian security forces. The Government of Mali has a responsibility to extend its presence with key services, including education and health care, throughout the country to benefit all of its people.

Mali, together with its neighbors Burkina Faso, Chad, Mauritania, and Niger, have formed the G5 Sahel Joint Force, an African-led, African-owned response to terrorism and banditry that plagues the Sahel region, particularly in the Mali-Niger-Burkina Faso tri-border area. The United States supports this effort through bilateral support to the G5 members, pledging an initial $60 million to the members of the Joint Force. We recognize the Joint Force is a long-term project and want to set it up for success. This means that our focus should be on not only operational support, but also law enforcement, civilian-military relations, the promotion respect for human rights, accountability, and stabilization activities. In addition to support for the G5 Sahel Joint Force, we support the French-led counterterrorism operations and efforts to build the defense capacity in Mali and its neighbors working to contain the regional threat. Part of the reason that terrorist groups have been gaining operational space is the unacceptably slow pace of implementation of the 2015 Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali. By not living up to their commitments, the signatory parties perpetuate instability that threatens the entire region. MINUSMA, the most deadly peacekeeping mission in the U.N. system, is a vital element in creating enabling conditions that allow for implementation of the Algiers Accord. We provide significant contributions to MINUSMA by funding 25 percent of the mission costs, training and equipping troops deploying to MINUSMA, and providing 27 U.S. military observers for support. It is costly and dangerous. The sacrifice of so many should not be for naught.

It is ultimately the parties themselves that must show the political will to make compromises and act on their commitments. If confirmed, I will redouble our efforts, along with those of our international and regional partners, to bring the parties to action. In particular, I will focus on the actions called for by U.N. Security Council Resolution 2423 (2018) that include: decentralization of state services; setting up interim authorities in northern Mali; integration of at least 1,000 members of signatory armed groups into Malian security forces; joint patrols by mixed units from the signatory parties; establishment of the Northern Development Zone; and ensuring equal and meaningful participation of women in the implementation of the peace process.

Underlying the terrorist threats and the conflict in Mali’s north is the desperate poverty of the country. A growing youth population that lacks economic opportunities, corruption, ineffective governance, lack of capacity, growing instability, extreme poverty, and communal violence all contribute to challenging conditions in Mali. The United States is the largest bilateral donor to Mali, and we intend to maintain our strong partnership for development and stability. Our assistance promotes democracy and improved governance as well as increases sustainable livelihoods. USAID programs also improve maternal and child health and reduce the incidence of malaria in Mali. The United States will continue encouraging economic growth and opportunity by supporting sustainable development and increased U.S. economic investment.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work, together with our partners, to create greater stability and prosperity for Malians. I will vigorously pursue the safety and security of American citizens and advance U.S. interests in Mali. I will ensure responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars through effective leadership of U.S. Embassy Bamako’s strong interagency team.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Mr. Hearne.

STATEMENT OF DENNIS WALTER HEARNE, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MOZAMBIQUE

Mr. Hearne. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, Senator Risch. It is an honor for me to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of Mozambique. I am profoundly grateful for this opportunity and the confidence that the President and the Secretary have placed in me. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with you to advance and protect American interests in Mozambique.

I was sworn into the Foreign Service in 1985, and my 33-year career has spanned six countries and two wars, affording me the extraordinary honor of serving my country alongside many distinguished and heroic colleagues. I am deeply grateful. I cannot imagine a more rewarding life.

Yet this would be my first time in Mozambique and Africa, and I am professionally and personally inspired by that prospect. On a personal level, while my son Christopher, here today, is busy with school in Virginia and will not be joining me at post, he is very excited about the chance to visit me and get to know a wonderful country and continent, particularly its beaches. My parents, in their eighties, who have lovingly supported me throughout my career, are also hoping to make it over for a visit.

On a professional level, I believe I have a blend of experience that, while gained in other places, is particularly relevant for Mozambique at this time. I have been speaking Portuguese for 3 decades, and that can be a key facilitator for my engagements with both officials and people from all walks of life. If they chuckle a bit at my Brazilian accent, that is okay, it will be an icebreaker.

In addition, I have served in wartime in the Balkans and in Afghanistan, and I understand well the challenges of recovery from and prevention of armed conflict. My familiarity with these issues will be helpful in supporting Mozambique’s political leadership both to implement their recent peace agreement and to consolidate democracy and security.

I believe we have a moment of opportunity now to consolidate encouraging gains in political stability in Mozambique following the 2016 cessation of hostilities and the recent peace agreement, and to get ahead of developing threats in the northern part of the country. We would accomplish this in cooperation with Mozambique’s leaders and using a whole-of-government approach that could also leverage resources from the private sector and civil society.

I am eager to move ahead creatively, knowing from experience that building a solid platform of improved governance and effectively fighting corruption will be as critical for success in Mozambique as they are elsewhere.

Reconciliation and stability will allow the country to capitalize on its vast natural resources, including one of the world’s largest natural gas deposits. U.S. companies are preparing to invest $40 billion to develop liquefied natural gas in northern Mozambique, among the largest investments in Sub-Saharan Africa.

Mozambique’s expanding economy also depends on the ability to address development challenges and values the development assistance the United States provides to support peace and security, democratic institutions, human rights, a healthy and educated population, and sustainable, inclusive economic growth. The U.S. is the top bilateral donor to Mozambique with the majority of our support focused on health programs, notably PEPFAR, and that is our largest assistance program in Mozambique.

Thanks to the generosity of the American people, more than 1 million people living with HIV are now on lifesaving treatment, and, if confirmed, I will continue to vigorously support those efforts.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, I want to thank you for the privilege of appearing before you today. If confirmed, I will aim to exemplify the highest standards of our great nation and look forward to partnering with you to advance America’s interests in Mozambique.

Thank you, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you.
Mr. Henshaw.
STATEMENT OF SIMON HENSHAW, OF MASSACHUSETTS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF GUINEA

Mr. HENSHAW. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am deeply honored to appear before you today and grateful to President Trump and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me as their nominee for Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea.

I want to recognize the attendance of my wife, Jackie Greene, and my daughter, Maddie Henshaw Greene. Jackie is originally from New Jersey. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENSHAW. My second foreign assignment was in Abidjan, and my wife and I have fond memories of our time there traveling throughout the country and region. In fact, we were married by the Mayor of Abidjan.

More recently, I traveled to the continent three times in my last assignment in the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration. Most of my career has been in the developing world, and I have extensive experience working with USAID and other developmental actors, particularly on democracy, human rights, and good governance. Throughout my career, I have worked on election issues.

Despite Guinea's proud history of independence, it was only in 2010 that Guineans finally embraced democracy. With programs such as our efforts through USAID to assist the National Election Commission in revising the electoral code, to our participation as an observer in the national political roundtable, we remain committed to helping Guinea complete its democratic transformation.

The 2013–2016 Ebola epidemic killed over 2,500 people in Guinea alone and significantly set back the country economically. However, with the assistance of the international community, including the United States, Guinea overcame that horrible illness.

Today, the economy is growing faster than anticipated, sustained mostly by strong mining activity, construction, and agriculture. With the assistance of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation in 2016, U.S. investors were able to expand mining operations in Guinea. In addition, the U.S. company Endeavor was able to break ground this year on a 50-megawatt power plant.

Concerning peace and security issues, we support efforts to reform Guinea's security institutions and greatly appreciate Guinea's peacekeeping work, including in Mali.

If confirmed as the 22nd U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea, my objectives will be to continue to support and encourage the ongoing democratic process; economic development, including more advocacy for U.S. investment and economic diversification; improved public health; and a stronger security partnership.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, for the opportunity to address you today. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you in representing the interests of the American people in Guinea. I am happy to answer any questions.

Most of my career has been in the developing world and I have extensive experience working with USAID and other developmental actors, particularly on democracy, human rights, and good governance.

Throughout my career, I have worked on election issues in the Philippines, El Salvador, Honduras, and Russia.

On October 2nd, Guinea will celebrate 60 years of independence. Despite Guinea’s proud history of independence, it was only in 2010 that Guineans finally embraced democracy. From working through USAID to assist the national election commission in revising the electoral code, to our participation as an observer in the national political roundtable, we remain committed to helping Guinea complete its democratic transformation. Just as positive political and economic trends were starting to take shape, however, the 2013–2016 Ebola epidemic struck Guinea and other countries in the region and beyond, killing over 2,500 people in Guinea alone, and significantly setting back the country economically. However, with the assistance of the international community, including the United States, Guinea overcame that horrible affliction.

Today, the country is looking toward the future. The economy is growing faster than anticipated, sustained mostly by strong mining activity, construction, and agriculture. With the assistance of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, in 2016, U.S. investors were able to expand mining operation in Guinea in an environmentally friendly and community responsive way. In addition, the U.S. company, ExxonMobil, was able to break ground this year on a 50 megawatt power plant in the capital of Conakry. While remaining challenges are great and the work to be done is daunting, the United States will remain a committed partner in support of Guineans as they pursue their aspirations toward more robust democratic institutions and stronger and more inclusive economic growth. Concerning peace and security issues, we support efforts to reform Guinea’s security institutions and greatly appreciate Guinea’s peacekeeping work, including its deployment to the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA).

If confirmed as the 22nd U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea, my objectives will be to continue to support and encourage the ongoing democratic process; to promote economic development, including more advocacy for U.S. exports, investment and economic diversification; improved public health; and a stronger security partnership.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, for the opportunity to address you today. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you in representing the interests of the American people in Guinea. I am happy to answer any questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Thank you to all of you.

Mr. Hearne, with regard to Mozambique, you mentioned the large investment in natural gas. What U.S. companies are involved there?

Mr. Hearne. Thank you very much for the question. Both ExxonMobil and Anadarko are leading international consortium that are moving ahead with probably taking decisions over the next year about concerning potentially a $40 billion total investment. So those are the two main firms. Anadarko is already present in the country in a significant way. And I look forward to meeting with them, if confirmed, in the near future.

Senator Flake. Well, thank you.

Mr. Hankins, with regard to Mali, we invest in security issues there, the G5 countries, some of the other countries. Do you want to talk about that, that cooperation that we have in the region and what that involves?

Ambassador HANKINS. Yes, sir. Recently the bordering countries, through the G5, have come together to try to help Mali in handling its security threats. The northern part of the country for nearly 20 years has been essentially ungoverned, and we have seen that threat spill over and seen terrorist attacks. When I was in Mauritania 10 years ago, terrorists came and killed an American missionary in the capital when I was there. We have seen spillover into Niger, into Cote d'Ivoire, into Burkina Faso. So we see these countries coming together through the G5 to increase border security to help then on the counterterrorism part. The U.S. Government has so far already earmarked $60 million to help those countries in that operation.

We continue to have differences with those countries and with the French that are looking for a long-term stable financing arrangement. We certainly welcome and see the need for these countries to deal jointly on what is a regional threat. And we are more than prepared to help them bilaterally in that effort, but at this point, we do not support then seeing it as a Chapter 7 operation financed through financing mechanisms.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Henshaw, with Guinea, the Ebola outbreak that occurred within three countries—Sierra Leone, Liberia, and Guinea—Guinea was perhaps the most difficult, the remote part, to arrest it. What are we doing to make sure that we do not have the renewed outbreak? What are we doing in terms of cooperation in public health?

Mr. HENSHEW. Thank you for the question, Senator. USAID's program in Guinea is mostly health care. I think $23 out of the $25 million a year that we have been spending there is for health. And that program will continue. CDC is there, as is NIH. They have set up an excellent countrywide system for early detections of diseases, but human and animal, which in the future will hopefully get to stop—get to stop a disease before it reaches the—the level that Ebola did before.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Hearne, we talked a little with the last panel, Botswana in particular, and wildlife preservation, conservation efforts. Mozambique has certainly a large land mass that borders almost on Kruger Park, where a number of—well, long-term poaching issues there. Also, I was able to visit Gorongosa, where a significant investment from an American, Greg Carr, in cooperation with a number of colleges and universities and NGOs, who has really done some extraordinary things there. How can we, the U.S. Government, help promote efforts that are going on in the nongovernmental organization area?

Mr. HEARNE. Thank you very much, Senator. I—I—I think we are, as with some of the other areas I covered, at a moment of opportunity here. President Nyusi has shown himself to be quite proactive and interested in conservation and countering poaching. He has—he has made some significant changes to legislation to reinforce and fortify penalties and the ability to prosecute those cases.
With regard to our direct involvement, as you say, in Gorongosa, USAID has partnered regularly with the Carr Foundation. We have had an investment there through that cooperation of about $11 million, and that is proceeding. Also, in Niassa, we are working closely with the wildlife conservancy NGO there, and in Limpopo as well with the World Wildlife Foundation.

So I think these partnerships with NGOs, public-private partnerships, that we participate in directly, including financially, coupled with an encouraging attitude on the part of President Nyusi and his administration on this subject, give us a lot of room to expand, and I look forward to building on my predecessor’s work in that area.

Senator Flake. Right.

Mr. Stromayer, with Togo, they contribute to U.N. peacekeeping efforts. That is one of the areas where they have some income. Will that continue? And are we working with them in that regard? What military cooperation or education efforts do we have with them—or, I am sorry, cooperation, military training, and whatnot?

Mr. Stromayer. Thank you for that question, Senator. It is an opportunity to highlight one of the great areas in which we cooperate with the Togolese, though one of the smaller countries on the continent with a population of barely 7 million, they contribute 1,400 troops to U.N. peacekeeping operations, which makes them one of the 15 largest—they are the 15th ranked contributor to such operations in the world. And they have had losses in deployments in Mali, which they have—they have performed very well in those deployments. In fact, I understand with reference to the panel, that, in fact, they are proposing to deploy an additional 700 troops to supplement what is going on in CAR.

We have been their partner of choice over the years, both through IMET and ACOTA. We have provided significant support to their decision, I believe it is in the last 5, 10 years, to play a role in peacekeeping, and so much so that at this point they have, as we put it, graduated from ACOTA, they are doing some of their own training now, and we are scaling that back. But our IMET commitment remains, though it is relatively small. And I expect to do everything I can to improve and continue that cooperation with the Togolese military.

One of the other things in my research so far that I was struck by is that they have a partnership with North Dakota, of all States, on the—or sort of the—what is it? The reserve training program where we get our North Dakota National Guard, excuse me, out there and working with them, and that is a great partnership that I would hope to be able to continue and foster.

Senator Flake. North Dakota, Togo, it is all the same. [Laughter.]

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Mr. Stromayer. My pleasure, sir.

Senator Flake. Senator Booker.

Senator Booker. I am going to defer to my much more senior Senator, Mr. Risch, and—— Senator Risch. In what regard did you mean that?

Senator BOOKER. I meant just in years of service, sir. We are clearly the same age. And you have a lot more hair than me, sir, so I respect you. [Laughter.]

Senator RISCH. Well, thank you.

Actually, Mr. Hearne, I came up here to specifically talk to you because Idaho has a very distinct connection to Mozambique. You mentioned Gorongosa, and Mr. Carr, he, of course, is a citizen of Idaho, and we are glad to have him. And what he has done there has been nothing but heaven's work. I mean, he went in there after the civil war and single-handedly took Gorongosa from nothing, in decimation, to what it is today, where it is coming back.

I think there are a lot of people familiar with that work. Certainly, it is a model of ways to do this. He got a little pushback because he did it differently than some of the other conservation groups do it, where he recognized that the stability of the populace was—had to come before the stability of the animal populations because it just—it would not work in the reverse. And he has been—he has been very dedicated to that, and, of course, as a result of that, a lot of us have come to know the officials in Mozambique, and they certainly say the right things, which we are glad to do, and they are doing the—doing the right things where they can.

The questions I have for you have to do with the civil war has been quite some time ago, but nonetheless, they get flare-ups every once in a while, and every time that happens, of course, it makes you a little—it makes the hair on the back of your neck stand up and wonder, you know, is this going to take off again, because it was so devastating the last time it happened?

What is your prognosis on that? What are your thoughts on that? Are you convinced the government is doing enough and got a good enough handle on this to tamp down anything that arises?

Mr. HEARNE. Yes. Thank you very much, Senator. It is a subject that I have been thinking a great deal about as I have been preparing to, if confirmed, assume responsibilities in Mozambique. This is a center of gravity for me. I think it is essential to the consolidation of democracy, security, and stability in the country that we see a successful way forward.

Early indications are encouraging, but it is early days. We are seeing in October the—the local and municipal elections, which will be kind of the pilot really for the decentralization aspect of the agreement reached between Frelimo and Renamo. If that is successful, and certainly there will be lessons to be gleaned from it, it would be encouraging and a hopeful sign for the general election next year in which again decentralization of power and greater democratization is supposed to be part of what has been agreed to.

On the military side, we are really at the beginning of a demobilization effort, demobilization for the second time in some ways, where again it appears that President Nyusi is very forward-leaning and wanting active international engagement. He has invited the United States and a number of other partners to—to provide observers and support for this process. We—we have already a State Department officer going out very soon to fill that role, and we will look at having it staffed on an enduring basis.

But given that the size of the forces now are not what they once were, given the—given that, the age of some of the combatants, indications that President Nyusi is going to support integration into the armed forces of some of these combatants, then I think that there is real potential here to get it right this time.

And the other center of gravity that I think we have to be aware of on the stability side is the evolving potential threat in the northwest around the Cabo Delgado region. It is early days. We are still trying to get a better understanding of what we are seeing there. We have had one interagency evaluation team out there at the end of last year. We have another one on the ground right now. So we hope to get more fidelity on that and see with that information what kind of support and strategy we can work with the Mozambicans on to get ahead of that issue early on. And I am committed, if confirmed, to vigorously and creatively looking at an approach for that.

Senator RISCH. I was going to ask about the northwest because I think my sense is that that seems to be the center of the difficulties there. And you say you are working on that. Do you have any sense at all, any granularity on that at this point, as to, is it an individual? Is it a group of individuals? How—what is your—what is your sense on that?

Mr. HEARNE. Well, again, early days and most of the information I have—I have had access to is open source, but what we think we are seeing is something that began its evolution around 2014, 2015. It is——

Senator RISCH. Is that when they were having the incidents with the trains, the transportation system, up there?

Mr. HEARNE. I—I think that was around that time and into 2016. The—the early attacks were primary against police stations, and increasingly that are worrisome, we have seen them against civilians, including quite recently, just last week.

It appears at this point—and again we are proceeding cautiously with our evaluation—to be a relatively small and relatively contained phenomenon. It does, at least by their own rhetoric, have an ideological dimension to it, a religious ideological dimension, one that is worrisome to and resisted by mainstream Islamic leaders in Mozambique. They have a very different tradition, of course, there.

And so I think given that even though it is in a large ungoverned space, given that it is still—and does abut, of course, border with Tanzania, that it is still geographically and in terms of size relatively contained, and we need to work to get ahead of it quickly. And I think, again, a whole-of-government approach, once we have more fidelity on what we are dealing with, closely in coordination with the Mozambicans and with regional networks on counterterrorism, and leveraging the interests of the private sector, the companies that are going to be investing in this LNG development, which is directly related to this area, that is the littoral support platform for that activity, I think we can try to be creative in looking at ways to address any genuine local grievances or frustrations, drivers, while also working intelligently on the security and the civil affairs dimensions of this.

Senator RISCH. Thank you, Mr. Hearne. I appreciate that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you.

Mr. Booker.
Senator Booker. Thank you very much.

Ambassador, first of all, I am grateful for our time together and your willingness to meet, not just with me, but my two colleagues.

Since the coup in 2012, Mali has not been a major recipient of U.S. aid, military aid specifically. Since then, the Malian military has been implicated in numerous human rights abuses—I think we mentioned this a little bit in our private conversation—during their counterinsurgency deployments in particular in central Mali. As Mali’s defense minister acknowledged in June, a recent study by the Simon-Skjodt—Center for Prevention of Genocide, warned that overlapping violence amongst jihadists, Malian security forces, and communal self-defense groups could produce a lot of mass atrocities. And there seems to be a lot of concern, especially in northeastern Mali.

What is your understanding of our current assistance to the security forces? Is the United States considering increasing or expanding its assistance to those security forces to include training, advice, and equip assistance? And if so, to what extent is the Leahy human rights vetting a challenge for U.S. assistance to the military?

Ambassador HANKINS. Thank you, Senator. As you note, it is a challenge. At the same time, we are asking the government to reestablish its presence and authority in the northern parts of the country, but a country—a military that has a history of human rights abuses. Particularly through the security—the SGI initiative, we have been working on trying to build the institutions themselves, sending people to the U.S. to build a corps of the National Security Agency, National Security Council. We have been engaging in trying to make it a more professional entity.

There are, of course, major partners. The French have significant influence. And we are looking at how we can expand our direct engagement with the Malian armed forces. But up into there, our goal is not just to supplement what others are already doing, whether it is the European Union, which has training activities, or the French. I know we are looking, for instance, at looking at counter-IED training. We are looking at JCETs that then offer more opportunity to do exercises.

We do have challenges as well because the Malian government works not only through their own armed forces, but they work then through armed groups, many of whom, like GATIA, have problems in terms of child soldiers and the rest.

It is an area where you have terrorist organizations that create atrocities in their own right. As we discussed, it is always government troops must be held to a higher standard. If the government troops do not respect their own uniform, then they will—at no time will the population respect that uniform.

So our goals are to build their capacity, to make them more professional, to make sure that they are inclusive of the population. It is a— a challenge because there are units, there are individuals, that have created human—that have done human rights violations in the past. The Leahy vetting is an important part and a key part to make sure that none of those advance, but, again, we do not have partners that are 100 percent ideally what we would want, but if the peace process—if stability is going to be successful, those partners must eventually reestablish authority, they must gain the confidence of the Malian people, and they must be present throughout the whole country.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much, sir, for that substantive answer.

Mr. Henshaw, U.S. bilateral aid for Guinea has overwhelmingly focused on global health, $21.5 million in fiscal year 2017. In line with the administration’s proposal to cut foreign aid worldwide. It proposed $3.2 million in aid for Guinea in fiscal year 2018, which is an 88 percent decrease from the fiscal year 2017 actual allocation of $26.1 million. Congress largely did not adopt the administration’s aid and budget proposals. I have been really grateful about the bipartisan nature of the support for aid from my colleagues on the right and the left.

What would be the effect in Guinea of such a dramatic cut in foreign assistance, as previously proposed by the administration?

Mr. HENSHAW. We remain committed to supporting Guinea’s attempts and work to improve its health system. I think as time goes on, we need to encourage the Guineans to put more and more of their own resources in, and we have seen that happen in the past few years. Guinea has increased its own health budget from less than 3 percent of the total budget to over 8 percent. But I do think that we need to continue our own assistance for several more years in order to help them move forward and make sure that we do not return to the situation we saw 5, 6 years ago with Ebola.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you very much, sir. That was more a question to see how good of a diplomat you are because I tried to get you to criticize the administration, and you dealt with that so aptly. [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. I am going to come back to you, though. You have got one more test. [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. Mr. Stromayer, in August 2017, opposition groups united to push for democratic reforms in a transition from roughly 5 decades of presidential rule by members in the GnassingbChargé family. The economic community of West African states has been facilitating an end to this crisis, as I am sure you know. ECOWAS urged the adoption of constitutional reforms, a two-round presidential voting system, and term limits, but did not address the key matter of GnassingbChargé’s future electoral eligibility.

To what degree should we engage in this critical issue of term limits?

Mr. STROMAYER. Well, the issue of term limits, Senator, is obviously one that gets a lot of discussion at different levels. I think your question is very timely. As it happens, literally in the last several days, the ECOWAS-led mediation has succeeded in getting the opposition and the government to agree to move forward with parliamentary elections that are planned for the end of this year, which is a very positive sign. There have been threats of boycotting.

The issue of term limits remains the challenge, the big challenge. How do they play that out? Certainly, the G5 has been mentioned up here. There is a G5 in Togo, which consists of us, the French, the Germans, and the U.N., and the EU, who have been playing a role in encouraging all parties, the opposition and the government, to work together with the ECOWAS mediation to find a way forward through this thicket, to find a way to get to a compromise because clearly long-term democratic stability for Togo is—is our goal, is the goal of our likeminded friends, and seems to be the goal of various members of the elite in the country.

And so continuing to work with that process, encouraging the ECOWAS process, using the leverage that we have gained through our MCC threshold program, which has been very, very well received by the government and where have made it very clear, your progress toward democratic processes is going to be critical to our willingness to move beyond this point with the MCC because our aid at the moment is rather limited. The MCC program is twice what our annual aid is, of which it is only $17.5 million this year, the MCC program is larger. And so those kinds of leverage, it seems to me, with the likeminded, are the kinds of things we can use to try and find a resolution.

Togo is one of those countries where there was not a term limit process in place, and one of the things that has come up has been a willingness to talk about term limits on all sides and also to look at second—second—what would you—runoff elections, which obviously is a process that could be an incentive to the opposition to join. So despite their numerous different opposition parties, if they can coalesce in a runoff, that might give them the ability to succeed in an election, even if four were to stand in 2020, but that is a decision the Togolese will have to make for themselves.

But we would continue to participate with the support of the G5 I have mentioned in furthering the ECOWAS mediation, which, you know, is—is building off of the kinds of progress we have seen across the West Africa region. I mean, clearly, the wave of the future there seems towards democratic alternance and progress, and we would do everything—I would do, if confirmed, everything I could to further that process, as my predecessor has been doing.

Senator BOOKER. Thank you, sir.

And I said I would get back to you, sir. So, Mr. Henshaw, this is a question, and I warn you that I look askance if truth telling is not done during this questioning, and this answer of yours is going to stand in history, it is going to be part of the congressional record. Your family, your ancestors, will look back on this question. [Laughter.]

Senator BOOKER. And so I very simply ask you, sir, this is a direct question to put you on the spot. You married a Jersey girl, yes or no? Did you marry up? [Laughter.]

Mr. HENSHAW. Absolutely. I married up.

Senator BOOKER. Yes.

Mr. HENSHAW. Yes.

Senator BOOKER. Your ancestors will note that for the record. Thank you very much, sir.

Mr. HENSHAW. Thank you for that question, Senator.

Senator FLAKE. Thank you. The hearing record will stay open for another day. I doubt you will get any questions like that last one. [Laughter.]

Senator FLAKE. But if you do, or do not, but please try to answer promptly so we can make it as part of the record.
And with the thanks of the committee, to you and your families, this hearing stands adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:52 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CRAIG LEWIS CLOUD BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Botswana is designated Tier Two in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report. The report indicates that anti-trafficking efforts decreased, and recommends that Botswana among other things "amend the anti-trafficking law to remove sentencing provisions that allow fines in lieu of imprisonment; disallow suspended sentences for convicted traffickers; [and] implement the newly adopted anti-trafficking national action plan:" What explains the decrease in anti-trafficking efforts on the part of the Government? If confirmed, what specific actions will you take to encourage the Government to change laws where needed and implement the anti-trafficking national action plan?

Answer. Currently, the Government of Botswana does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking in persons, but is making efforts to do so. Botswana remained a Tier Two country in 2018 and has publicly reiterated its commitment to reaching Tier One status. The most recent Trafficking in Persons Report noted that Botswana’s anti-trafficking efforts have decreased in some areas, such as identifying fewer trafficking victims, but progress was made in other areas such as training law enforcement officials, and Botswana launched a national anti-trafficking action plan for the first time. If confirmed, I will encourage the Government of Botswana to increase its efforts to prosecute trafficking offenders and to ensure improved efforts to protect victims. By utilizing available resources, such as the International Law Enforcement Academy in Botswana, we can assist Botswana’s work to train law enforcement and judicial officials on Botswana’s Anti-Human Trafficking Act and sentencing guidelines, improving anti-trafficking efforts. If confirmed, I would emphasized the importance of strengthening existing legislation and implementing the anti-trafficking national action plan with our Government of Botswana counterparts.

Question 2. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As the Deputy Chief of Mission in Swaziland (now the Kingdom of Eswatini), I worked with youth, political opposition groups, trade unions, and civil society organizations on the issues of human rights and democracy. The Embassy hosted regular meetings as part of our public diplomacy program highlighting the U.S. experience, including our challenges with race relations, school integration, the Freedom Riders, and effecting change through non-violent protest; we used the International Visitor Leadership Program to send promising young leaders to the United States to learn about democratic institutions; and we worked through Non-Governmental Organizations to strengthen capacity building in democratic institutions. Eswatini is an absolute monarchy and our programs emphasized how the United States dealt with human rights and democracy issues and introduced the role of civil society in pressuring government to enact democratic reforms. The Ambassador and I met with King Mswati III on several occasions to directly express the United States’ view that democratic reforms would benefit Eswatini and the Swazi people. Democratic progress in Eswatini has been slow, but opposition voices continue to grow louder.

In India, where I served as the Minister Counselor for Management Affairs, I regularly met with Ministry of External Affairs officials to discuss legalizing same-sex relations and advocate for equal treatment for the same-sex domestic partners in our community. The Indian Government recently overturned Section 377 of the Indian penal code which criminalized same-sex sexual activities. Our management team also supported a taxi company with all female drivers, sending the founder on an International Visitor Leadership Program and giving the female drivers safe driving instruction and orientations on the expectation of American passengers.

Question 3. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Botswana? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Botswana has a long and impressive democratic history since independence in 1966. I will enthusiastically work with the embassy team and the Government of Botswana to strengthen democratic institutions and the rule of law, if confirmed. Botswana has regularly held fair and credible elections, and I look forward to the opportunity to witness this first-hand during the next elections in 2019.

Botswana does face challenges and, if confirmed, I would encourage improvements in areas such as the treatment of asylum seekers in government detention, and possible improvements in the judicial process, which have been highlighted in previous Human Rights Reports.

Question 4. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Botswana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Botswana is a country with a strong democratic tradition and good governance. It is a stable country with a proven record of free and fair elections. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Botswana to further strengthen its democratic institutions. Botswana is a strong partner of the United States and a strong regional partner as well and, if confirmed, I will work to further extend this relationship. Some of the potential impediments are reluctance to accept outside, non-indigenous critiques and assistance, lack of U.S. funding and capacity to address areas of concern, and suspicions about U.S. motivations.

Question 5. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government of Botswana to increase responsiveness to civil society and respect for civil liberties and would seek ways to work with civil society and media groups in this area. While we currently utilize a significant amount of assistance resources in Botswana, the vast majority goes to combat the country’s HIV/AIDS epidemic. While it is vital that we continue our response to Botswana’s epidemic, I would, if confirmed, look for additional ways we can expand our bilateral relationship.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Botswana? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. I consider working to advance human rights central to my work as Ambassador, if confirmed, and I would commit to meeting with organizations that can help further this goal. If confirmed, I would communicate these goals to my Government of Botswana counterparts and encourage the work of civil society organizations that contribute to maintaining and improving the human rights environment in Botswana.

Answer. Botswana has been democratic since its independence in 1966. However, one party has been in power since that time. As Botswana’s democracy matures, it will be imperative to ensure all democratically oriented parties are afforded fair and equal access to the democratic process. If confirmed, I will work to encourage free and fair political competition and will advocate for access for all the people of Botswana.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Botswana on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Botswana?

Answer. A free and open press is vital to a healthy democracy. The most recent Human Rights Report noted attempts to limit freedoms of the press and assembly in Botswana. This is a serious issue, and I will work with my team, if confirmed, to encourage press freedoms in Botswana. A free and professional press corps is good for Botswana, and can also help amplify the good work of our embassy team in Gaborone. If confirmed, I plan to meet regularly with the press in Botswana.
Question 9. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with civil society and government counterparts to encourage free and open access to information and will work to counter the spread of misinformation. I will encourage the embassy team to prioritize work in this area as well.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Botswana on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government of Botswana to respect the rights of all the people of Botswana. I believe that Botswana is at a moment of opportunity when it comes to taking measures to diversify its diamond-dependent economy. Amendments made to Botswana’s Trades Dispute Act limited the numbers of workers in Botswana allowed to strike. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government of Botswana to follow fair labor practices that protect its workers and encourage growth and diversification.

Question 11. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Botswana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Botswana? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Botswana?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to using my position to uphold and defend the rights and dignity of all, including members of the LGBTI community. I intend to work through the PEPFAR program and with the Government of Botswana and civil society organizations to improve the lives of all members of society. I appreciate recent positive developments in Botswana, such as a High Court decision that ruled in favor of a transgender man who successfully fought to change the gender on his government-issued identity documents.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CRAIG LEWIS CLOUD BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As the Deputy Chief of Mission in Swaziland (now the Kingdom of Eswatini), I worked with youth, political opposition groups, trade unions, and civil society organizations on the issues of human rights and democracy. The Embassy hosted regular meetings as part of our public diplomacy program highlighting the U.S. experience, including our challenges with race relations, school integration, the Freedom Riders, and effecting change through non-violent protest; we used the International Visitor Leadership Program to send promising young leaders to the United States to learn about democratic institutions; and we worked through Non-Governmental Organizations to strengthen capacity building in democratic institutions. Eswatini is an absolute monarchy and our programs emphasized how the United States dealt with human rights and democracy issues and introduced the role of civil society in pressuring government to enact democratic reforms. The Ambassador and I met with King Mswati III on several occasions to directly express the United States’ view that democratic reforms would benefit Eswatini and the Swazi people. Democratic progress in Eswatini has been slow, but opposition voices continue to grow louder.

In India, where I served as the Minister Counselor for Management Affairs, I regularly met with Ministry of External Affairs officials to discuss legalizing same-sex relations and advocate for equal treatment for the same-sex domestic partners in our community. The Indian Government recently overturned Section 377 of the Indian penal code which criminalized same-sex sexual activities. Our management team also supported a taxi company with all female drivers, sending the founder on an International Visitor Leadership Program and giving the female drivers safe driving instruction and orientations on the expectation of American passengers.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Botswana? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Botswana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?
Answer. The most pressing human rights issues in Botswana include excessive use of force by security personnel; lengthy judicial delays; government attempts to limit freedoms of the press and assembly; mistreatment of asylum seekers and refugees; gender-based violence and lack of effective government response; marginalization of the Basarwa (San) people; and government curtailments of the right to strike.

Botswana has historically proven to be a trusted partner in the promotion and advancement of democracy and a model for the region. If confirmed, I plan to work to continue and strengthen this relationship, especially on the issues of advancing human rights and democracy by making sure these issues are part of our engagement with Botswana. While Botswana has a storied democratic history, recent questions regarding restrictions on press and labor freedoms in the country have emerged. If confirmed, I plan to engage with the Government of Botswana to support its ongoing efforts to address these challenges and also work with youth, civil society, and media organizations through programmatic outreach.

By engaging with the Government of Botswana, civil society, and directly with the population, I hope to improve the lives of those affected by human rights violations. Through these actions, I hope to see a Botswana with stronger institutions to promote accountable, transparent, and democratic governance, protecting the rule of law and human rights for all.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Botswana in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Some of the potential obstacles are the Government of Botswana’s reluctance to accept critiques from a foreign nation, and weak capacity of Botswana’s own civil society organizations, which impedes their ability to press their government for change.

Additionally, though Botswana has held regular elections which have widely been regarded as free and fair, there is still room for improvement in the country’s democracy. The same political party (the BDP, or Botswana Democratic Party) has held power since independence in 1966. In addition, the Government owns and operates the country’s most popular newspaper and two radio stations, and state-owned media generally feature reporting favorable to the Government and the ruling party.

If confirmed, I will emphasize that true democracy entails more than just elections, and requires that all voices and political views are free to be heard.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Botswana? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I would consider working to advance human rights central to my work as Ambassador, if confirmed, and I commit to meeting with organizations that can help further this goal.

Additionally, if confirmed, I would ensure that U.S. security assistance in Botswana is provided consistent with the Leahy Law and that our security cooperation activities advance our mission on human rights. I would keep this mission in mind as we look for opportunities to enhance our already strong security partnership with Botswana.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Botswana to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Botswana?

Answer. There were no reports of political prisoners or detainees cited in the State Department’s most recent Country Report on Human Rights for Botswana. Nevertheless, if I am confirmed, the embassy team will encourage the Government of Botswana to maintain its good record on this front and continue to live up to its reputation as a peaceful, just, and democratic nation which respects the rule of law.

Question 6. Will you engage with Botswana on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Botswana’s legacy as a stable, democratic, and peaceful nation puts it in a strong position to stand up for values of human rights, civil rights, and good governance both domestically and regionally. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with the Government of Botswana on these matters, and will make this a focus of our bilateral relationship.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Botswana?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes diversified mutual funds that may hold interests in companies with a presence in Botswana; however, these funds are exempt from the conflict of interest laws. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will verify the existence of a robust EEO program at post that includes continuous training and sensitization, meet individually with EEO Counselors to gain their perspectives, and ensure that personnel are aware of the Department’s discrimination and harassment policies and how to report violations. I will review the mentoring and support programs currently in place, meet with the American and local staffs in the Mission to determine where inclusivity is perceived as lacking, and work with employee organizations to discuss their support. I will also meet with Mission supervisors and the management team to discuss what I have heard from the employees, where improvements are needed and, based on all of the information gathered, put a plan in place to correct any weaknesses or gaps.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet with supervisors, section heads, and agency heads to ensure that they are familiar with EEO rules, reinforce mandatory reporting requirements for supervisors and other responsible officials, solicit ideas on how to recruit a more diverse workforce, and affirm that all supervisors are expected to cultivate a work environment of respect, inclusion, and mutual support.

Answer. Political corruption undermines democratic governance and the rule of law. Botswana has been democratic since its independence in 1966. It has a history of holding regular, credible, and fair elections. If confirmed, I pledge to work with our country team to support Botswana’s democracy and respect for the rule of law. I look forward to seeing Botswana’s next free and fair elections take place in 2019, if confirmed.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Botswana and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Botswana has a strong democratic history and is a relatively prosperous country. If confirmed, I plan to work to strengthen Botswana’s democratic institutions to ensure the country can continue to avoid the corruption that has plagued other countries in the region and hindered their prospects for development.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Botswana?

Answer. Botswana has well-governed, strong, democratic institutions. If confirmed, I will enthusiastically work to strengthen good governance and anticorruption efforts. I plan to do this by utilizing the talents of our interagency country team and by taking advantage of our engagement with the Government of Botswana and civil society to emphasize these goals.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CRAIG LEWIS CLOUD BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. While there are large coal reserves in Botswana, according to Power Africa, the country has significant solar potential, with 3,200 hours of sunshine per year. I understand Power Africa is assisting with the Government's ongoing procurement for 100 Megawatts of solar panels.

- What's the status of that investment and our engagement on helping Botswana diversify its energy needs away from fossil fuels?

Additionally, Power Africa lists poor implementation of policy frameworks to encourage private sector investment and the lack of experience with renewable energy, both on and off grid, as the biggest issues and bottlenecks.

- How do you think the United States can help Botswana address these issues?

Answer. Through Power Africa, the United States is helping Botswana strengthen its regulatory environment, attract private investment, and diversify its electricity supply. Power Africa is directly supporting the Botswana Energy Regulatory authority as it develops regulatory frameworks and the Botswana Power Corporation as it develops the 100 Megawatt solar project. Regionally, Power Africa's Southern Africa Energy Program (SAEP) helps increase electricity supply and access in Southern Africa. If confirmed, the embassy team and I will continue these valuable and important projects that not only increase Botswana's electricity access and lessen its dependence on fossil fuels, but also create investment opportunities for American firms. Renewable energy presents an opportunity for American business to increase its presence in Botswana and showcase American technical expertise in this field. If confirmed, I look forward to connecting U.S. companies to opportunities in Botswana, and working with the Government of Botswana to diversify its economy and improve the environment for foreign direct investment.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL PELLETIER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. According to the most recent State Department Country Report on Human Rights Practices for Madagascar, "there were numerous reports that the Government or its agents committed arbitrary or unlawful killings of criminal suspects." The State Department report referred to reports from media and non-governmental organizations that indicated that "security forces subjected prisoners and criminal suspects to physical and mental abuse, including torture."

- Are security forces that engage in abuses held accountable? What steps will you take, if confirmed, to support efforts to improve human rights practices of security forces?

Answer. Accountability for security force abuses, including unlawful killings, remains a problem in Madagascar. If confirmed, I would take all allegations of human rights abuses seriously, speak out against any unlawful killings, and press for accountability. I would also work to support and build institutions that promote human rights and the rule of law. If confirmed, I intend to work with organizations such as the Human Right Commission in Madagascar to promote improved oversight of security forces. In addition, if confirmed, I intend to focus on capacity building of the judiciary to help address human rights violations and abuses. If confirmed, I would also prioritize reducing corruption, which undermines the effectiveness of institutions charged with providing oversight.

The Department of State follows Leahy vetting requirements for all security force units to which we provide U.S. assistance. This is true worldwide, and there would be no exception for Madagascar, and I will work to ensure that all assistance is provided consistent with the Leahy Law.

Question 2. Elections are slated for November of this year: What are the prospects for credible elections in November? What programs and activities is the U.S. supporting related to democracy in Madagascar? Do we have programs aimed at combatting corruption? What specific actions will you take, if confirmed, to help improve democracy and governance in Madagascar?

Answer. We have seen significant progress in the months since the pre-electoral crisis that characterized spring 2018, most notably through the establishment of a government of consensus and the September 7 departure of the incumbent president, in keeping with the constitutional court's decision. We are watching the pre-electoral environment closely, and we continue to stress the importance of freedom of expression throughout. The embassy will continue to work closely with the international community, in particular multilateral institutions like the AU and U.N., which have sent envoys to Madagascar to help facilitate solutions to other political crises. The current government and all political parties and candidates must facilitate genuinely free and fair elections in Madagascar, so that the country—and foreign assistance and trade agreements—will not be at risk once again due to extraconstitutional events, such as those following the coup of 2009. If confirmed, I will work closely with all member of government, NGOs and civil society to encourage cooperation in order to improve democracy and governance.

Question 3. In 2008, Comoros launched a program whereby Comoran passports could be awarded to stateless residents of Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) in return for development assistance from those countries. The program was halted in 2016, and an ensuing investigation found passports had been illegally sold, including through criminal syndicates:

- How many Comoran passports were issued under the program? Are there concerns that passports may have been issued to criminals or terrorists? Are the Governments of Kuwait and UAE helping identify those who have obtained passports from Comoros? Is the United States engaged in efforts to help identify those who may have obtained Comoran passports? If confirmed, what steps will you recommend the U.S. take related to helping identify who may have obtained these passports?

Answer. More than 47,000 travel documents were issued under this program. This is a key priority for the mission, given the national security implications of individuals from countries of concern potentially using travel documents to facilitate financial transactions, and possibly avoid sanctions, or for criminal or terrorist elements to obtain and use these travel documents. I understand that the Governments of Kuwait and UAE have not identified those who have obtained travel documents under the Comoran economic citizenship program. Nonetheless, the Department has determined that travel documents issued under the Comoran economic citizenship program are not acceptable for visa issuance. The consular sections in Abu Dhabi and in Dubai follow enhanced vetting procedures for all bearers of economic citizenship passports, to include Comoros passports obtained through this program. We continue working with all relevant law enforcement and other agencies to investigate the issue, and inform all relevant parties of the possible abuse of these travel documents.

If confirmed, I will continue to work with the Comoros’s leaders to ensure that the program does not restart, and together with my team, we will try to gain as much information as possible about the individuals who were given these travel documents, so we can communicate it to relevant law enforcement and other agencies.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my 30-year career in Africa, the Arab world, and India, I have worked to support those who share our values regarding human rights and democracy. Whether I was witnessing or monitoring elections in Nigeria and Sierra Leone, supporting nascent NGOs and civil society organizations in Africa and the Arab world, or engaging with India’s vibrant civil society, these topics have been a constant focus throughout my career. For example, I worked with journalists and NGOs in Mali in the mid-90s to establish the Maison de la Presse, which continues to this day to support independent journalism. More recently, as DCM and Charge d’Affaires in India, I directed the embassy and consulates in India to highlight U.S. Government support for equal rights for LGBTI persons through lighting rainbow lights and/or displaying the rainbow flag on our buildings. I issued a public statement in support of LGBTI rights as the Charge d’Affaires in India in June 2016. I look forward to continuing to support human rights and democracy and the proponents of these values in Madagascar and the Comoros, if I am confirmed to serve there.

Question 5. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Madagascar and Comoros? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. In Madagascar, the most pressing challenges to democracy and democratic development include pervasive poverty and the lack of infrastructure and public services, all exacerbated by corruption. Madagascar is the only country in the world whose GDP and consumption per capita have continued to decline since inde-dependence (in 1960) despite the absence of conflict. It is still recovering from a political crisis that lasted from 2009 to 2013 and saw the withdrawal of most foreign aid. In November, the country will have a presidential election, which, if successful, will be the first time there have been two successive peaceful transfers of power. Madagascar has one of the worst corruption perception ratings (ranking 155 out of 180 countries per Transparency International). There are few truly independent media outlets.

In the Comoros, which has suffered from political instability, including numerous attempts to overthrow the Government, since independence in 1974, corruption is also a major challenge, but one of the main factors that undermines democratization is the tension between the central government, which seeks to consolidate power, and the individual islands, which value the autonomy they have enjoyed throughout much of the country's history. President Azali's successful passage of a referendum in July 2018 significantly altered that system and has been met with resistance by many political opponents.

The African Union recently sent an envoy to the Comoros and may facilitate a dialogue to help resolve the current tensions. I understand the embassy is monitoring this issue very closely and will continue to do so in the coming months. If confirmed, I would use high-level engagements to encourage the Government to find a political solution with the aim of ensuring continued stability in the Comoros.

Question 6. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Madagascar and Comoros? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The most urgent need in Madagascar and the Comoros is to foster a sense of public service, accountability, and responsibility among all levels of government, and to push for the decentralization of some of the governance responsibilities. If confirmed, I intend to engage regularly with senior political leaders, in coordination with other like-minded representatives of the international community, on the importance of decentralization, accountability, and transparency as essential to the development of their countries. There is also a need to foster a sense of civic duty and increase awareness of political rights and responsibilities among the people. In both Madagascar and the Comoros, I believe this should include empowering host nation civil society organizations and NGOs, bringing in speakers on key topics, and supporting and encouraging participation in exchange programs such as the Young African Leaders Initiative and the many Fellowship programs that are available.

Question 7. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Additional exchange programs such as the Young African Leaders Initiative, the International Visitor Leadership Program, and various fellowships are key resources for us in the promotion of democracy, as they provide networks, training, and support to key groups and individuals who are supporting democracy and governance. For both Madagascar and the Comoros, sending qualified candidates to the International Law Enforcement Academy in Gaborone is another important tool. I understand USAID personnel at Embassy Antananarivo are currently implementing a program to support Madagascar’s independent election commission in the run-up to national elections. USAID personnel at post are also designing a new project that will build the capacity of civil society organizations over the next few years. That project, together with the other support our embassy already provides to that sector, will help civil society become even more effective in the future.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Madagascar and Comoros? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. For over two decades, our embassy in Madagascar has provided meeting space for civil society and NGOs, and we host a monthly meeting of 40 to 50 civil society organizations and NGOs. This offers a valuable forum to engage that community on a variety of topics and, if confirmed, I intend to continue supporting this initiative. The release of the annual congressionally-mandated reports on human rights and related issues provides other important opportunities to host public and private events with civil society and government officials to maximize the impact of those reports and to collectively seek solutions to address the issues those reports highlight. In addition,
USAID is developing activities to strengthen the capacity of NGOs and civil society organizations so that they are more capable of supporting communities by advocating for respect for human rights and for improvements in government services.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with political opposition figures and parties who support adherence to and participation in democratic processes. Our support to the United Nations basket fund for the 2018 presidential election includes the training of Madagascar’s independent national electoral commission staff; production and distribution of a voting procedure manual; and adoption of a code of ethics by the Government of Madagascar, local organizations, political parties, and the media. This is an important initiative, and, if confirmed, I will continue supporting programs such as these that ensure that all members of society are represented.

If confirmed, I will advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties. It is important to demonstrate through words and deeds that the United States values democratic principles and processes rather than individual candidates.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Madagascar and Comoros on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Madagascar and Comoros?

Answer. Madagascar and the Comoros enjoy relatively good press freedom, but there is always room for improvement. In Madagascar, the new communications code passed in late 2016 could create opportunities for the Government to hinder press freedom through regulatory measures. Thus far the law has been loosely enforced, and in a few cases used to restrict press freedom through alleged defamation on social media, and to jail and levy sentences to silence environmental defenders. The embassy has made public statements supporting media freedom and has continued to engage with responsible officials when necessary and appropriate. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with the widest possible range of media outlets, especially those who are independent or making efforts to be so, to promote awareness of media ethics and the promotion of real media independence.

In the Comoros, despite relative media independence in the past, there is an increasing trend of government meddling in press freedom. This has included short-term jailing of journalists due to their work, public berating of journalists because they report unfavorably on the Government and the suspension or withholding of media licenses. If confirmed, I commit to engaging responsible Comorian Government officials on these trends in accordance with the U.S. commitment to press freedom worldwide.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, the embassy team and I will actively engage with civil society and government counterparts to promote accurate information sharing.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Madagascar and Comoros on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Madagascar and the Comoros have a handful of independent trade unions, to include some in the media and the public service sectors. If confirmed, I certainly would advocate for the right of, and support groups to organize, while carefully considering how to address specific cases of labor abuse in ways that avoid jeopardizing the employment of those affected.

Question 13. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Madagascar and Comoros, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Madagascar and Comoros? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Madagascar and Comoros?

Answer. In Madagascar, sexual relations between individuals of the same sex is a punishable offense under age 21. While there are no laws prohibiting same-sex sexual contact over age 21, there is no antidiscrimination law that applies to LGBTI persons. No laws prevent transgender persons from identifying with their chosen gender. LGBTI persons are subject to social stigmatization and there have been reports of denial of services, including health services, for LGBTI persons. The embassy in Madagascar has routinely raised the issue in public and fostered dialogue, especially during Pride Month, and, if confirmed, I intend to continue pressing the dialogue and demonstrating U.S. support for equality and rights for all people, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. In Madagascar, our emphasis will be on access to basic services, employment, and protection from violence.

In the Comoros, same-sex sexual activity is illegal and subject to strict penalties. Arrests or prosecutions are very rare, as LGBTI persons are extremely unlikely to reveal their orientation or identity. Advocating for the rights of LGBTI persons in the Comoros is an extremely delicate issue due to strict legal prohibitions and the stigma associated with the issue, which Comorians frequently associate with religious beliefs. In the Comoros, advocating for LGBTI rights is best accomplished within the context of broader human rights, and through means such as the annual human rights report. If confirmed, I commit to advocating for LGBTI rights within this delicate context.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL PELLETIER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over the course of my 30-year career in Africa, the Arab world, and India, I have worked to support those who share our values regarding human rights and democracy. Whether I was witnessing or monitoring elections in Nigeria and Sierra Leone, supporting nascent NGOs and civil society organizations in Africa and the Arab world, or engaging with India’s vibrant civil society, these topics have been a constant focus throughout my career. I issued a public statement in support of LGBTI rights as the Charge d’Affaires in India in June 2016. I look forward to continuing to support human rights and democracy and the proponents of these values in Madagascar and the Comoros, if I am confirmed to serve there.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Madagascar? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Madagascar? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. In Madagascar, unlawful killings and other security force abuses, life-threatening prison and detention conditions, and child sexual exploitation are the most pressing issues. Some of these issues have emerged as part of Madagascar’s challenge in addressing governance concerns, including during the 2009 political crisis and its aftermath. It is also important to note that Madagascar is one of the poorest countries in the world. According to the World Bank, 76.2 percent of the population lives on less than $1.90 per day, earning Madagascar the rank of 10th poorest country in the world in 2017. More than 80 percent of the population depends on subsistence agriculture to meet basic needs. It is the only non-conflict country in the world that is poorer today than it was at independence in 1960.

If confirmed, my priority would be to support efforts to reduce corruption and impunity, which underpins and exacerbates many human rights problems. If confirmed, I would expect that we would use all the tools we have to encourage government support of anti-corruption entities and programs. If confirmed, I would support the work of organizations such as Madagascar’s Human Rights Commission, with the hopes that their work, in conjunction with training and exchanges for key members of the judiciary and others, will result in stronger and more effective efforts to combat corruption.

the work of organizations such as Madagascar’s Human Rights Commission, with the hopes that their work, in conjunction with training and exchanges for key members of the judiciary and others, will result in stronger and more effective efforts to combat corruption.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Madagascar in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Madagascar has an Independent Human Rights Commission composed of key civil society representatives. The Commission is very active, but struggles to get the support it requires from the Government. If confirmed, I plan to reinforce with the Malagasy Government the importance of supporting such independent commissions.

In Madagascar, widespread poverty coupled with pervasive corruption is the most significant obstacle to addressing human rights issues. The concentration of wealth among the elite means that between 80 and 90 percent of the people live on less than $2 per day. The struggle to make ends meet often drives people to banditry, child sexual exploitation, and other crimes; and security officials and the judiciary often engage in corruption because they are similarly struggling to survive financially.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Madagascar? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S., and with local human rights NGOs in Madagascar. In Madagascar, non-governmental organizations and civil society groups are on the frontlines in terms of advancing and advocating for human rights, and, if I am confirmed, the Embassy team and I must continue to meet with them regularly. Our embassy in Antananarivo has been hosting monthly roundtables for local NGOs and civil society groups for more than 20 years. If confirmed, I plan to continue this tradition. The Congressionally-mandated human rights, trafficking in persons, and religious freedom reports that we produce each year also offer strong opportunities to engage on these issues with local NGOs.

Accountability for security force abuses, including unlawful killings, remains a concern in Madagascar. If confirmed, I would take all allegations of human rights violations and abuses seriously, speak out against any unlawful killings, and press for accountability. I would also work to support and build institutions that promote human rights and the rule of law. If confirmed, I intend to work with organizations such as the Human Right Commission in Madagascar to promote improved oversight of security forces. In addition, if confirmed, I intend to focus on capacity building of the judiciary to help address human rights violations and abuses. If confirmed, I would also prioritize reducing corruption, which undermines the effectiveness of institutions charged with providing oversight.

The Department of State follows Leahy vetting requirements for all security force units who receive assistance. This is true across the board worldwide, and there would be no exception for Madagascar.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Madagascar to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Madagascar?

Answer. There are currently no known political prisoners in Madagascar. In Madagascar, I would continue to urge the Government to stop all cases of unjust detention and imprisonment, including those of environmental defenders who highlight trafficking of rosewood and protected animal species. Up to 70 percent of the prison population is held in pretrial detention, and we must work with our international partners to continue engaging the Government’s judiciary to clear this backlog and reduce the number of prisoners being held in crowded and life-threatening prison conditions.

Question 6. Will you engage with Madagascar on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Bilateral engagement at all levels of government and support for local non-governmental efforts are important tools to address human rights, civil rights, and governance. If confirmed, I will regularly engage with the highest levels of government and with civil society on these issues.
Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Madagascar?

Answer. Neither I nor any member of my immediate family has any financial interests in Madagascar.

Question 10. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I have promoted and supported diversity in the Department of State throughout my career, and believe that is a key responsibility and opportunity for senior leaders. For example, I was honored to serve as the Senior Leadership Liaison to the South Asian American Employee Association at the Department over the last two years. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing to support and mentor all of my colleagues, helping us to build a strong Department, which truly represents America’s brilliant diversity.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. A key responsibility of a leader is to set the right example and tone for the team, and if confirmed, I look forward to reinforcing the importance of a diverse and inclusive environment by making it clear this is a priority and by setting a positive example in all my actions and those of the Embassy.

Question 12. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Madagascar specifically?

Answer. Political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law, redirecting significant resources away from key areas such as education, infrastructure, and health services. Security is another core issue that is affected by corruption. We know from experience around the world that when security forces are not paid a living wage, they often try to make money by seeking bribes. This creates a culture of distrust towards the security services, and contributes to an increase in mob justice: people take matters into their own hands when they do not believe the security forces will help them. Locally developed codes, procedures, and penalties are often in conflict with national laws. This can create ambiguity and uneven application of national laws, and can result in impunity for perpetrators.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Madagascar and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Madagascar has been making slow but steady progress in addressing corruption. Since the 2013 election, which put an end to the 2009 political crisis, the Government has taken a number of steps. They have established and funded an independent anti-corruption commission (BIANCO) which has credibly taken on a number of corruption cases; established anti-corruption courts; and created a special tribunal for the prosecution of rosewood traffickers, an issue that is believed to be linked with high-level corruption. In 2018, nearly five years into his term, President Rajaonarimampianina named the members of the High Court of Justice (as required by the constitution) and the High Council for the Defense of Democracy and the Rule of Law. However, neither institution has been sufficiently funded or given working space. In addition, there have been very few, if any, prosecutions of high-level officials for corruption, and the Government’s efforts to address rosewood trafficking have been primarily focused on regaining control of confiscated stocks from other countries.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Madagascar?
Answer. One of the top-level goals of Embassy Antananarivo’s country strategy is to help enable Madagascar to provide reliable and effective governance that supports our mutual interests in the region. A key component of this governance is the delivery of public services, including security, and countering corruption. If confirmed, I plan to encourage the Government of Madagascar to support its own institutions whose mandates include combating corruption. This can be reinforced by high-level visitors from the U.S. Government, including congressional delegations. If confirmed, I hope to plan regular meetings with Madagascar’s anti-corruption agency, BIANCO, with the goal of completing one or more high-level corruption investigations to break the cycle of impunity. If confirmed, I plan to encourage the various exchange and capacity building programs within the embassy to continue focusing on leaders and organizations that can help the Government focus on anti-corruption efforts and the provision of services. Finally, if confirmed, I intend to hold government leaders accountable for acts of corruption or efforts to cover up corruption—at first, discreetly, but if necessary, publicly.

MICHAEL PELLETIER BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. Since 2014, Madagascar has tried to recover from a series of political crises, though recent moves in the past several months have only increased civil strife and raised questions on how free and fair the upcoming elections will be. The President has recently stepped down to run in the November 7th elections, which appears by all indications will be a hard-fought campaign between three political heavyweights. There are concerns, given Madagascar’s recent history, that electoral disputes could trigger renewed instability.

• What are the prospects for a credible electoral process?
• What actions would you like to see the current government take to ensure that the public accepts the results of the November 2018 election?

Answer. The pre-electoral crisis that occurred in the spring of this year was a reaction to the Government’s proposed electoral code changes, which the opposition thought were designed to exclude certain opposition candidates. We have seen significant progress in recent months, most notably the establishment of a government of consensus and the stepping down on September 7 of the incumbent president, in keeping with the constitutional court’s decision. We are watching the pre-electoral environment closely, and we continue to stress the importance of freedom of speech at all times but particularly in this important pre-election time.

Madagascar has a history of contested elections, and the country must come together to avoid a difficult election cycle this time. We will continue to work closely with the international community, in particular multilateral institutions like the AU and U.N., who have sent envoys to Madagascar to help facilitate solutions to other political crises in Madagascar. The current government and all political parties and candidates must facilitate free, fair, credible, and inclusive elections in Madagascar, so that the country—and foreign assistance and trade agreements—will not be put at risk once again due to extraconstitutional events, such as those following the coup of 2009.

Question 2. Comoros currently ranks 148 out of 180 countries in the Corruption Perceptions Index and the State Department reports “endemic judicial and official corruption” as a key human rights issue. And clearly with the passport scandal, corruption and poor oversight can lead to real security challenges as has been witnessed with Iranian nationals allegedly buying passports to potentially circumvent U.S. sanctions.

• What do you see as the most effective ways for the U.S. to engage to combat corruption in Comoros?
• Is there U.S. foreign assistance you think would be useful to engage with Comoros other than IMET?

Answer. We must continue working with organizations such as the Human Rights Commission in Comoros, with the hopes that their work, in conjunction with training and exchanges for key members of the judiciary, will result in a stronger effort to combat corruption. Capacity building in the judiciary would help directly address the issues surrounding corruption in Comoros. We have made progress with the Comorian Government in ensuring that Economic Citizenship Passports (ECPs) are no longer available. We must continue working closely with our counterparts in the Comoros to address the corruption that allowed such a program to exist. A society with a functioning rule of law stands the best chance of defeating the rise of corruption. Comoros has made progress toward improving its rule of law, specifically by targeting new economic reforms designed to attract foreign direct investment; solve insolvency; increase enforcement of existing laws; further integrate into the Organization for the Harmonization of Corporate Law in Africa (OHADA); and update the national development strategy.

We remain committed to seeking ways to engage with vulnerable populations in the Comoros. We continue to pursue programming to counter violent extremism, and opportunities to engage with the people and government of Comoros. If confirmed, I look forward to exploring opportunities for additional assistance.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBERT K. SCOTT BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Malawi is scheduled to hold elections in 2019. How much funding is the United States providing to support democracy and governance in Malawi? Is there specific support for elections activities? If confirmed, what actions will you take to help support efforts to ensure that elections are credible and the outcome reflects the will of the people?

Answer. The United States has contributed funds to two programs that are working to support the 2019 elections in Malawi. These programs will expand long-term political process monitoring; enhance detection, reporting, and mitigation of conflict; and assist media with professional and balanced reporting to inform citizens. Malawi has held regular, peaceful elections since democratization in 1994, and we will work to see this trend continue. If confirmed, I will lead our Mission in supporting issue-based civic and voter education to support peaceful elections. The 2019 elections are expected to be highly competitive, and we must take advantage of the opportunity to deepen our engagement with the people of Malawi. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Malawi, civil society, and citizen groups to help ensure the elections are free and fair.

Trafficking in Persons

Question 2. Malawi is listed as a Tier Two country in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report, what programs or activities is the United States undertaking to support training for judges and prosecutors and police to identify, investigate, and prosecute trafficking crimes? Do any U.S. funded programs support efforts to help working in the labor sector to recognize trafficking victims? If confirmed, what specific actions will you take to help Malawi improve its efforts to combat trafficking?

Answer. The Department of State’s Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (J/TIP) currently has one Southern African Development Community (SADC) regional program with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), in which Malawi is included. Additionally, there are three regional programs with the American Bar Association and UNODC that could benefit Malawi indirectly. There are no current projects that provide training for judges and prosecutors, but several Malawian police officers recently took part in an INTERPOL/SARPCCO regional training in Botswana that focused on trafficking in persons investigation techniques. If confirmed, I would fully support efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including in the labor sector. I would encourage Malawian Government officials to develop and participate in future training programs.

Question 3. Malawi ranks 122 out of 180 countries on Transparency International’s 2017 Corruption Perception Index, and in recent years a number of scandals have implicated government officials. In April of this year, thousands of people around the country participated in widespread protests against corruption and bad governance after reports surfaced that the Government had planned to distribute $5.5 million in development funds without parliamentary approval:

• What programs and activities are we supporting to improve transparency and good governance in Malawi? What steps will you take, if confirmed, to support those engaged in the fight against corruption?

Answer. The United States has provided grant assistance from the Fiscal Transparency Innovation Fund to support two projects, totaling almost two million dollars, to help Malawi improve budget transparency, performance, and accountability. These projects helped strengthen budget planning, execution, and monitoring and provided members of Malawi’s parliament with analytical tools for better understanding the nation’s budget.
If confirmed, I will support continued efforts to improve transparency in Malawi, such as these U.S. Government-sponsored projects and the implementation of recently passed anti-corruption legislation. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government of Malawi to fully implement these laws and, when possible, would offer U.S. technical assistance.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My engagement on human rights and democracy issues began with my first tour in Accra, Ghana in 1995–1997. I was responsible for our human rights portfolio and became very involved in assisting Liberian refugees who were seeking shelter in Ghana from the civil war in their country. I worked with USAID colleagues to generate emergency funds to support the Ghanaian Government’s hosting of a large number of Liberian refugees, visiting the camps and reporting on conditions and needs back to Washington. I also spent nearly a week on the road following a ship loaded with almost 1,000 Liberian refugees, the Bulk Challenger, up and down the coast until these individuals finally disembarked at a regional Ghanaian port. I purchased supplies in local markets and assisted in setting up an emergency housing center in a local school, as local authorities processed the refugees. My efforts were part of an overall U.S. engagement that ultimately helped bring peace to Liberia through supporting regional peacekeeper deployments and safeguarded the lives of refugees throughout the region. While serving in Kyiv, Ukraine (2006–2008) I worked with Crimean Tatar civil society organizations to support their efforts to develop a political voice as they returned to homes from which Stalin had removed them during World War II. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Zimbabwe (2010–2013), I helped lead our strong engagement on preserving political space for civil society, media, and political parties faced with an extremely difficult operating environment under the rule of then-President Mugabe. Most recently, as Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for African Affairs, I had oversight of our human rights portfolio, working closely with colleagues in the field and our Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor Bureau and Trafficking in Persons team to ensure that human rights were among our core considerations in our bilateral and multilateral engagements in Africa. For example, I worked with our Africa Bureau team in developing lists of individuals ultimately sanctioned under the Global Magnitsky Act for their human rights abuses.

Answer. Malawi has held regular, peaceful elections since democratization in 1994. Malawi’s 2014 elections were successful and credible in the eyes of the United States, regional bodies, and the international community. The 2014 elections included Malawi’s first local elections since 2000, an important step toward fulfilling the country’s intentions to decentralize its government structures. Building on these democratic gains will be important for Malawi as it approaches its 2019 elections and, if confirmed, I will support the Government of Malawi’s needed reforms to tackle corruption, a main challenge to development, and build capacity to ensure it can be accountable to citizens and safeguard development gains.

Question 6. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Malawi? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Building on Malawi’s democratic tradition, if I am confirmed, the embassy team and I will support reforms that enable democracy to mature, including those that build government and civil society capacity to enable the Government of Malawi to be accountable to its people. As Malawi gears up for its 2019 national elections, the United States and other development partners should work with the Government of Malawi to support full implementation of electoral, civil service, and public sector financial reforms. If confirmed, I will work with other donors in supporting the Malawi Electoral Commission to conduct the 2019 election, while also supporting independent civil society and media election observation.

Question 7. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?
Answer. To reinforce public accountability, if confirmed, I will work to strengthen the Government of Malawi’s public institutions and its independent media. One USAID project has already assisted with the successful devolution of the payroll function for over 100,000 front-line civil servants, the identification of potential “ghost workers” at the district level, and the elimination of a three-year backlog in the financial reporting of eight targeted districts to increase accountability and transparency. If confirmed, I would prioritize these types of programs that support democracy and governance.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with civil society organizations, human rights activists, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and Malawi, and will address any efforts to restrict or penalize their work. Malawi faces many development challenges, and we engage many partners to achieve our development goals. I am happy to say that I understand our Mission in Malawi is actively engaged with the Government of Malawi and civil society partners, and I will, if confirmed, continue these efforts. For example, in collaboration with other development partners, the United States engages with our Government of Malawi counterparts to thwart proposed regulatory barriers on civil society space through restrictive registration fees and requirements. Through the Supporting the Efforts of Partners (STEPS) program, USAID has supported 30 Malawian civil society organizations to build core organizational capacity and advocacy skills. This program equips these organizations to advocate for freedoms of association and expression. I look forward to continuing this work, if confirmed.

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet with democratically oriented opposition figures and parties as appropriate and will encourage genuine political competition as Malawi approaches the 2019 elections. The country’s four peaceful transfers of power provide a strong precedent for rotation of power between different individuals and political parties. If confirmed I will continue the embassy team’s work to ensure peaceful elections in Malawi, including advocating for the access of women, minorities, and youth to the political process.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Malawi on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Malawi?

Answer. Malawi has generally enjoyed a fair degree of press freedom, and journalists have been able to write on any issue, including government corruption, without significant reprimand from the Government of Malawi. While usually a positive model in the region for press freedom, Malawi had three cases in 2018 of politically motivated physical attacks against journalists. If confirmed, I will actively engage with the Government of Malawi on freedom of the press and will meet regularly with the independent local press. I look forward, if confirmed, to continuing great programs in support of press freedoms such as sending Malawian journalists, editors, and journalism professors to participate in the International Visitor Leadership Program to enhance their skills and knowledge of investigative journalism and media ethics.

Answer. If confirmed, I would look forward to engaging with civil society and government counterparts on these issues and continuing positive programs already in place to provide media training. The U.S. Mission to Malawi continues to partner with the Malawi chapter of the Media Institute of Southern Africa to provide training to community radio stations, government spokespersons, and investigative journalists. With support from the Voice of America, the U.S. Mission has provided in-country training to community radio announcers, the primary source of information for most Malawians.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Malawi on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?
Answer. If I am confirmed, the embassy team and I will actively engage with civil society and government partners to advance the goals of the U.S. Mission in Malawi, including promoting the rights of labor groups. I would urge the Government of Malawi to adopt safe labor practices that protect the workforce and encourage growth, and would encourage a peaceful and productive relationship with labor groups.

Question 13. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Malawi, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Malawi? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Malawi?

Answer. Malawi generally respects human rights. However, in Malawian society there is currently little community support for equal rights of LGBTI people. At the same time, the Government of Malawi has maintained a moratorium on prosecuting persons for engaging in same-sex sexual activity. The rights of LGBTI people in Malawi is a serious issue that I, if confirmed, will raise as an area where advances need to be made. If confirmed, I would engage with human rights activists, support and inform their efforts, and monitor progress.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ROBERT K. SCOTT BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My engagement on human rights and democracy issues began with my first tour in Accra, Ghana in 1995–1997. I was responsible for our human rights portfolio and became very involved in assisting Liberian refugees who were seeking shelter in Ghana from the civil war in their country. I worked with USAID colleagues to generate emergency funds to support the Ghanaian Government’s hosting of a large number of Liberian refugees, visiting the camps and reporting on conditions and needs back to Washington. I also spent nearly a week on the road following a ship loaded with almost 1,000 Liberian refugees, the Bulk Challenger, up and down the coast until these individuals finally disembarked at a regional Ghanaian port. I purchased supplies in local markets and assisted in setting up an emergency housing center in a local school, as local authorities processed the refugees. My efforts were part of an overall U.S. engagement that ultimately helped bring peace to Liberia through supporting regional peacekeeper deployments and safeguarded the lives of refugees throughout the region. While serving in Kyiv, Ukraine (2006–2008) I worked with Crimean Tatar civil society organizations to support their efforts to develop a political voice as they returned to homes from which Stalin had removed them during World War II. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Zimbabwe (2010–2013), I helped lead our strong engagement on preserving political space for civil society, media, and political parties faced with an extremely difficult operating environment under the rule of then-President Mugabe. Most recently, as Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for African Affairs, I had oversight of our human rights portfolio, working closely with colleagues in the field and our Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor Bureau and Trafficking in Persons team to ensure that human rights were among our core considerations in our bilateral and multilateral engagements in Africa. For example, I worked with our Africa Bureau team in developing lists of individuals ultimately sanctioned under the Global Magnitsky Act for their human rights abuses.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Malawi? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Malawi? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues in Malawi include: excessive use of force by security officers; harsh and sometimes life-threatening prison conditions; violence against women and lack of an effective government response; the criminalization of consensual same-sex sexual relationships; and the exploitation of children. If confirmed, I will use my position to encourage the Government of Malawi to tackle these issues and improve the human rights environment in the country, including through collaboration with civil society. I will work with the embassy team to continue the good efforts we are currently undertaking to advance these issues.
Additionally, if confirmed, I will advocate for human rights protections for marginalized populations, including LGBTI people, women and girls, and people with albinism and ensure effective and efficient use of U.S. Government resources to address these issues. I hope to continue to emphasize human rights issues in current projects and to look for additional ways we can contribute to eliminating abuses and contribute to a more just and accountable Malawi.

Answer. Impunity remains a problem in Malawi, and sometimes investigations are delayed, abandoned, or remained inconclusive. I commend the steps the Government of Malawi has taken to address human rights issues, such as prosecuting those who commit human rights abuses. However, impunity, the level of poverty, and the Malawian Government’s serious lack of resources remain large obstacles. Corruption and impunity for abuses remain problems. While the Government of Malawi generally respects civil liberties, it does not always respect freedoms of peaceful assembly and association. The lack of available resources in Malawi creates serious challenges in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general. These are serious and vital issues that must be dealt with, and I will, if confirmed, prioritize improving the human rights environment by engaging with the Government, civil society, and like-minded partners.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Malawi? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Advancing human rights would be integral to my work as Ambassador, if confirmed, and I would commit to meeting with organizations that can help further this goal.

Further, if confirmed, I would ensure that U.S. security assistance is provided consistent with the Leahy Law and that our security cooperation activities advance our mission on human rights.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Malawi to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Malawi?

Answer. Yes, if I am confirmed, the embassy team and I will actively engage with the Government of Malawi to address these issues, should they arise. Tolerance and inclusion of any opposition parties, for example, will be vitally important as Malawi approaches its next democratic election, and I look forward to the opportunity to help Malawi keep its electoral process free and fair.

Question 6. Will you engage with Malawi on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with the Government of Malawi on matters of human rights, including civil rights, and governance. As Malawi takes on many serious challenges, such as improving food security, improving the energy sector, and diversifying and expanding its economy, it must also be attentive to human rights and good governance. This will be a focus of our bilateral relationship.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Malawi?
Question 1. As you may know, over two-thirds of Malawi’s population is under 25 years old. The CIA World Factbook states, “Rapid population growth and high population density is putting pressure on Malawi’s land, water, and forest resources. Reduced plot sizes and increasing vulnerability to climate change, further threaten the sustainability of Malawi’s agriculturally based economy and will worsen food shortages. About 80 percent of the population is employed in agriculture.

- What steps do you think the United States and our donor partners must take to ensure these young people have opportunities while also addressing the threats from climate change on the Malawian agriculture sector?
- What role do you think U.S. public diplomacy programs can play in empowering young people in Malawi?

Answer. The agriculture sector generates nearly 80 percent of household income in Malawi, but the country suffers chronic food insecurity. Over the past decade, the onset, distribution, and intensity of rains have become less predictable, rendering agricultural planning more difficult and reducing yields. The agriculture sector in Malawi is also susceptible to drought and pests, such as the Fall Armyworm infestation that recently ravaged the country’s harvest. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Malawi and donor partners to encourage adaptations in Malawi’s agricultural sector to promote food security and create opportunities for the youth of the country. We can do this by helping to improve the agricultural policy environment, increasing the use of modern agricultural technologies, strengthening the competitiveness of selected value chains, diversifying smallholder farmer production away from maize and tobacco into other crops, and building household and community resilience.

If confirmed, I would emphasize outreach to and exchange opportunities for youth in our public diplomacy programs, especially for youth entrepreneurship, science, and technology programming. I would highlight our ongoing focus on adolescent girls and young women and improving their access to education, especially in the STEM field. Through the Young African Leaders Initiative (YALI) Mandela Fellowship, our mission sends young Malawian leaders to the United States, and, if confirmed, I look forward to supporting this program and making contact with program alumni.

Question 2. Ahead of what will likely be a closely contested election next May, I was concerned by the recent statement by the U.N. High Commission on Human Rights about the increasing number of threats and intimidation against human rights defenders and activists, particularly women. Additionally, there have been allegations of widespread corruption, during the current administration and previous ones, an issue that is likely to play into the May 2019 elections.

- What observers and assistance is planned for the elections next year and what efforts do you think are needed now to ensure the elections are conducted in a free, fair, and transparent manner?
- How would you assess the current government’s commitment to reform and political backing for efforts to eradicate all corruption, not just from political rivals, including through the Anti-Corruption Bureau?

Answer. The United States has contributed funds to programs that support the 2019 elections in Malawi. These programs will expand long-term political process monitoring; enhance detection, reporting, and mitigation of conflict; and assist media with professional and balanced reporting to inform citizens. Malawi has held regular, peaceful elections since democratization in 1994, and we will work to see this trend continue. If confirmed, I will lead our Mission in supporting issue-based civic and voter education to support peaceful elections. The 2019 elections are expected to be highly competitive, and we must take advantage of the opportunity to deepen our engagement with the people of Malawi. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Malawi, civil society, and citizen groups to help ensure the elections are free and fair, including continuing the embassy team’s work advocating for the access of women, minorities, and youth to the political process. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Government’s leadership on elections-related issues, both in public and private diplomatic engagements, including participating in the Election Program Steering committee, a forum between the Government of Malawi and donors.

Corruption remains a problem in Malawi. President Mutharika has stated that his administration will have zero tolerance for corruption, and the Government of Malawi has passed several pieces of legislation aimed at combating corruption. President Mutharika set up a public sector reform commission, but his administration has yet to fully implement its recommendations. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government of Malawi to act upon the new legislation and would work to ensure that the promises of reform are met with actions.
Question 1. Russia and the Central African Republic (CAR) signed a military cooperation agreement in August, and Russians are providing security for President Faustin-Archange Touadera. What does the agreement entail? Have Russia and CAR engaged in significant transactions of military equipment as defined under Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act and the administration’s Executive Orders and guidance with respect to the law? If confirmed, how will you ensure the Government is aware of the law and that it is working to diminish significant transactions with the Russian defense sector? What alternatives to Russian security assistance will you recommend if confirmed as Ambassador? Should the U.S. continue to support an exemption to the current U.N. Arms Embargo allowing Russia to provide arms to the Central African Republic? How would this exemption be reconciled under mandates under the CAATSA law? If confirmed, what will you do to advocate that the Government of CAR fully cooperate with credible efforts to investigate the deaths of three Russian journalists investigating Wagner’s activities in CAR?

Answer. Russia and the Central African Republic (CAR) signed a military cooperation agreement on August 21, 2018. This agreement appears to codify actions that are already taking place. With the permission of the U.N. Security Council, Russia donated weapons and also sent 175 personnel to train the Central African Armed Forces (French acronym: FACA). The donation of military equipment and training do not represent a clear violation of the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA). The CAR Government does not have the financial means to pay for significant numbers of weapons, but it is worth noting that there has been an increase in the activities of private Russian mining operations in CAR. If confirmed, I will work to ascertain whether the CAR Government received the weapons in exchange for granting mining concessions to private Russian companies, and if so, how that arrangement might have violated U.S. sanctions.

If confirmed, I will leverage our strong relations with President Touadera and his government in order to highlight that the United States and its allies are CAR’s best partners in the path towards creating a peaceful and stable country. I will also work with the CAR Government to ensure that it understands our laws (such as CAATSA) and how interactions and transactions with the Russian defense sector and Russian companies like Wagner could put CAR at risk of severe penalties and sanctions and compromise our ability to continue supporting CAR’s progress.

If confirmed, I will coordinate with State and Treasury Department officials to assess the interactions between the CAR Government and the Russian defense sector. I will also continue to caution the CAR Government that involvement with the Russian defense sector will place it at risk of sanctions.

The United States and its partners, the European Union Training Mission (EUTM) and the U.N. Multi-dimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission to CAR (MINUSCA), are already helping build military and civilian security institutions in CAR. While the EUTM focuses in particular on training the FACA, the United States has focused on the police and gendarmerie. Currently, the Department of State provides training, uniforms, communications equipment, and funding for the renovation of key law enforcement facilities (training academies, investigations offices, and law enforcement stations). We also have provided the armed forces with tools they need to carry out their mission, including vehicles, uniforms, and first-aid kits. If confirmed, I look forward to working with the inter-agency to see how we might provide logistical and technical support to the FACA, so that it can better sustain its forces, especially outside of Bangui.

If confirmed, I will increase our efforts in the area of public diplomacy in order to highlight the many ways in which we are already helping CAR. Although we are the largest humanitarian donor and a significant partner in building the capacity of the Government of CAR, that message does not always resonate with the public at large. I will work to improve our efforts to show Central Africans how our efforts and programs are helping to create a safer country and a stronger and more capable FACA. It is also essential that we engage more with the CAR military and law enforcement through programs like INCLE, IMET, military exercises, and other training and mentoring opportunities. For instance, we recently secured observer spots for high-ranking CAR military officers for the Silent Warrior exercise in Germany and are sending a team of law enforcement advisors to CAR for more than a year. These efforts will allow us to train future leaders within the military and civilian security sectors, establish rapport between the U.S. and CAR militaries, and improve the quality of the FACA through professional military education. These programs would also provide an alternative to Russian assistance, help achieve our shared goal of preparing the FACA to take back control over the entirety of CAR’s national territory, and build the capacity of the police and gendarmes to maintain the peace.

The United States and other U.N. Security Council members granted Russia an exemption to the U.N. arms embargo, which allowed it to provide much-needed weapons to the CAR military. The FACA needed these weapons, as its soldiers lacked the necessary equipment to carry out their mission. However, it is important that Russia and CAR conduct these weapons transfers transparently and in coordination with international partners and the U.N. peacekeeping mission (MINUSCA).

Given the precarious security situation in CAR, we must ensure that we have the ability to track, inspect, and safeguard the weapons donated to the FACA. It has been our position on the Security Council, and that of France and the UK, to place a hold on any future transfers of weapons until these requirements are met. I will continue to communicate that position to the CAR Government and our other partners.

The United States is committed to the strengthening of civil society and a free press in CAR. The Department of State supports programs to train journalists in CAR and highlights the importance of a critical and vibrant free press. The recent deaths of Russian journalists investigating activities of the U.S.-sanctioned paramilitary company Wagner in CAR are deeply concerning. If confirmed, I will leverage our relationship with the CAR Government to press for further investigations into these deaths and ensure that those responsible for this gruesome crime face justice.

Question 2.

The mandate of the Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in the Central African Republic is due to be renewed in November:

- In your view, how effectively has the mission fulfilled its mandate to take active steps to “anticipate, deter and effectively respond to serious and credible threats to the civilian population?” What resources would the mission need in order to be more effective? If confirmed, what steps will you recommend be taken to enhance effectiveness of the mission?

Answer. It is important to acknowledge the incredibly difficult circumstances that MINUSCA faces. In a country the size of Texas, MINUSCA has fewer than 15,000 troops, police, and headquarters staff with which to pursue an expansive mandate that includes civilian protection. It has performed adequately in most instances. MINUSCA’s ability to protect civilians, however, is limited by its inability to move around the country. Troops are tied to semi-permanent camps, and a lack of air transport and reliance on resource-intensive convoys hinders its mobility. In some instances, the Department of State is aware of reports of specific troop contingents failing to fulfill the mandate to protect civilians. We are closely engaged with MINUSCA’s leadership and with U.N. officials to investigate these reports, determine the cause of any failures, and take swift action to correct them. If confirmed, I will press MINUSCA leadership to more effectively deploy its troops and enforce standards for performance and behavior.

While MINUSCA is striving to fulfill its expansive mandate, it must also look for ways to more effectively leverage its limited resources. The marked lack of mobility hampers MINUSCA’s ability to respond quickly to attacks against civilians or to emerging threats against the peace. Much of the mission is dedicated to operating and protecting convoys that move troops, police, and humanitarian aid around the Central African Republic. The lack of passable roads in much of the country means that it can take up to a month for a convoy to travel 750 miles. One way that MINUSCA might improve its responsiveness is by revamping its forces to be more mobile and to streamline processes. The Secretary General and his Special Representative have provided recommendations for the Mission to improve in some of these areas. We are taking a close look at these recommendations to see which are sensible and likely to be effective and which ones may be better addressed through bilateral assistance.

If confirmed, I will remain in close contact with MINUSCA leadership in the Central African Republic and with U.N. leadership in New York. As Ambassador, I would have no authority over the MINUSCA mission, but I would continue to build on the close working relationship that my predecessors have established. I will encourage MINUSCA to work closely with the CAR Government to expand state authority while protecting civilians and addressing intercommunal conflict at the local level. I will also emphasize our expectations for the effective deployment of peacekeepers to fulfill their mandate and for appropriate standards of performance and behavior.

Question 3.

According to Najat Rochdi, the U.N. Deputy Special Representative in CAR, 64 percent of the population are in need of assistance, but the huma-tarian budget is less than 40 percent funded. What will you do as Ambassador to encourage other donors to provide additional support to the Central African Republic?

Answer. The United States is currently, by far, the largest donor of humanitarian assistance to the Central African Republic. This is not to diminish the contributions of other international partners, such as the European Union. These partners are contributing in other key areas, including in security sector reform and the recently operationalized Special Criminal Court. If confirmed, I will work with our international partners to identify critical gaps and how we can address them. I will advocate for prioritizing response to emergency needs and building governmental and societal capacity to prevent and mitigate future emergencies. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that planning is informed and realistic. We will continue to work to address critical needs where we must, while instilling resilience and capacity as quickly as we can.

USAID humanitarian assistance in CAR is leveraging other donor resources aimed primarily at recovery, rehabilitation, and development (where possible), by focusing on areas and populations with the most acute humanitarian needs and which are inaccessible to non-humanitarian actors. For example, in 2018 several USAID partners handed over health service activities in areas with relative stability to government structures supported by EU recovery funding. While difficult to predict locations, USAID will continue to phase out programming in areas where development actors are able to intervene and will focus humanitarian resources on locations and populations with the most acute needs.

USAID is also funding a $9.9 million project to support the Central African Republic to improve traceability in its diamond supply chain in order to foster social cohesion, economic growth, and domestic resource mobilization. USAID is coordinately closely with the EU and the World Bank to leverage their funding to improve transparency and accountability in CAR's diamond mining sector.

Question 4. What activities is the U.S. engaged in to strengthen key ministries and parliamentary bodies responsible for oversight of defense, the administration of justice, and law enforcement bodies? If confirmed, what activities in those areas will you recommend we emphasize?

Answer. The United States currently focuses its efforts on improving the operations and capabilities of the security and justice sectors. We are also engaged with the CAR Government at the highest levels to improve its capacity to manage these institutions. In civilian security and justice sector reform, the Department of State is working to re-establish the operations of criminal justice institutions in CAR's cities to train and build capacity of law enforcement offices, investigators, prosecutors, judges, and prison staff; renovate key facilities; and improve operations management policies and processes. In terms of members of parliament, we have focused primarily on improving their connections to their constituents. Many of them are unable to visit the districts they represent and therefore communicate back to them primarily via radio.

Question 5. Has there been a recent assessment about the potential for mass atrocities in CAR? Is the interagency prepared to take relevant preventative diplomatic and programmatic actions on an urgent basis should such atrocities unfold? If confirmed, what contingency plans to forestall mass atrocities will you recommend be put in place?

Answer. The Atrocity Prevention Board in 2017 identified the potential for mass atrocities in the Central African Republic, and the interagency continues to monitor the situation. The Department of State has a team that has provided continual, updated analysis of conflict drivers and dynamics—not only in CAR but also in the region. In my preparations for this post, I have consulted with experts at the Department, at USAID, and our partners in the interagency. I am confident that we are closely monitoring these elements in CAR and are enacting specific programming, including community violence reduction and reconciliation programs, to combat potential atrocities.

In the violence that spiked in April and May of this year, a combination of action taken by MINUSCA and the local security forces, as well as efforts by our embassy to calm the populace while supporting the Government of CAR, helped to prevent a wider spread of conflict. I want to express my admiration for the effective work done by our Embassy during that difficult time, and I intend to build on that work to continue our outreach to communities and to the Government. I will continue to work closely with our experts to craft plans and advocate for policies to prevent and mitigate potential atrocities.
Question 6. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to the Central African Republic?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to working with and briefing Members of Congress and their staff during my tenure.

Question 7. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Promoting and protecting human rights has been a core part of my Foreign Service career. As a delegate to the U.N. Human Rights Commission from 1995–1999, I lobbied for U.S.-sponsored resolutions that shed light on horrific human rights abuses in numerous countries and put political pressure on those countries to improve their human rights regime. I was also the primary negotiator for the landmark “Right to Democracy” resolution approved at the Commission in 1999. In 2014, as Director of the Office of the Special Envoy for Sudan and South Sudan, I led the team that coordinated the asylum request for a Sudanese woman who faced threats to her life due to her religion.

Question 8. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in the Central African Republic? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The Central African Republic has a democratically elected government, following internationally recognized free and fair elections in 2016. However, the authority of the central government does not reach far beyond the capital of Bangui. Armed groups—primarily community militias and criminal organizations—control the majority of CAR’s territory. Most elected officials live in Bangui and cannot effectively represent their constituents; their presence in their districts is at the whim of the armed groups that control those areas. The security and justice sectors, which collapsed during the conflict in 2015, are in the slow process of rebuilding, and courts are only beginning to function again, with U.S. assistance. Recent strides in the capability of the security forces and the courts are heartening, but are only the first steps of a process to rebuild.

The National Assembly recently brought the Special Criminal Court (SCC) into operation through legislation. The SCC has a panel of judges, officials, and a body of investigations officers. It suffers, though, from a lack of resources and does not have sufficient resources to operate through its five-year mandate.

Question 9. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in the Central African Republic? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The Department of State will continue its robust support to the elected government of President Touadera, the security and justice institutions, and the AU-led peace process. We have provided considerable support and training to the military and to the police forces and gendarmerie that secure the country and protect the civilian population. In the meantime, we continue to support the U.N. peacekeeping mission in CAR (MINUSCA) that is helping provide stability and security in CAR until the CAR Government can provide its own security. We work with the criminal justice institutions to deploy and extend governance to CAR’s provinces. The United States engages with civil society actors to manage local conflict in communities and is also working with elected officials to improve their communication and outreach. If confirmed, I will continue to support our efforts towards improving governance and accountability in CAR. I will work closely with our international partners and the CAR Government to help build its capacity while also conveying our expectations for improvement.

Question 10. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. In CAR we are balancing the immediate need for security with the understanding that, ultimately, a political solution is needed to provide enduring peace and prosperity for Central Africans. If confirmed, I will continue to support the expansion of the rule of law by strengthening the courts, law enforcement, and corrections institutions through our existing programming. USAID, the Department of State, and partner NGOs will continue to provide immediate humanitarian needs to forestall the desperation that can fuel violence. We are also working to build re-silence in communities threatened by armed groups. USAID supports improved governance in protected areas and in the artisanal mining sector, including efforts to disrupt the illicit trafficking of minerals and wildlife that finances criminal groups in CAR. Conservation activities will retain CAR’s embattled Chinko Nature Reserve as a pole of governance and stability for surrounding communities, in part by disrupting trafficking in wildlife and other products. In addition, we will work with civil society and with the AU to reduce the conflict in CAR. These efforts complement and reinforce each other. I would also continue to work with the Government of CAR to improve its ability to communicate with the people of the country, both in responding to emergencies and in countering the kinds of hate-speech and inflammatory rhetoric that can fuel violence.

Question 11. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in the Central African Republic? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. The Department of State is already working in CAR with a number of civil society actors: local communities in towns around the country, as well as NGOs, such as Search for Common Ground and Communities in Transition. We are addressing issues ranging from intercommunal conflict, horrific sexual and gender-based violence, and child soldiers, to the disruption of humanitarian aid. If confirmed, I will continue this work.

Answer. In the Central African Republic, U.S. officials have maintained a constructive dialogue with the legitimate political opposition, while encouraging the armed groups to cease hostilities and join the political process. If confirmed, I intend to ensure that this effort is continued and that support widens for the AU-led peace process. We will also continue to engage with the democratically elected government to ensure that political space for opposition and criticism is not closed.

Question 13. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Central African Republic on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in the Central African Republic?

Answer. CAR has an active radio and printed press and, if confirmed, I will work with the elected government in CAR to see that this continues. The Department of State already supports local press and provides training and advice to budding journalists and documentarians. If confirmed, I would like to broaden our efforts to make the media space in CAR more resistant to misinformation and rumor, and to strengthen voices that counter the calls to violence or discrimination.

Question 14. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. This is a serious concern in CAR. We are engaged in a number of programs to quell the rumors and conspiracy theories that can spread in CAR’s political environment. At the same time, we are working to the counter malign influence of external actors seeking to upset the fragile political balance with false information or inflammatory rhetoric and hate speech. If confirmed, I will continue to work with civil society and government leaders to ensure that outside actors do not unduly influence political processes or coopt Central African voices for their own purposes.

Question 15. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with the Central African Republic on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Per Central African law, there are no restrictions on workers forming labor unions to collectively represent themselves. There are membership and leadership restrictions based on citizenship—for example, non-citizens must be resident in CAR for two to three years. Under my tenure, if confirmed, we will continue to engage with the Government and through the International Trade Union Confederation to encourage the CAR to maintain and expand the rights of workers. Our greatest concern is the practice of forced labor by criminal armed groups who coerce workers, even children, to work in artisanal mines and to serve as combatants. Our focus will be on ending these abhorrent practices as part of the peace process.
Question 16. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the Central African Republic, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in the Central African Republic? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in the Central African Republic?

Answer. Although our focus in CAR is on the continuing violence and the widening intercommunal and sectarian divides, we engage in discussions of basic human rights, whether it involves religious freedom, protection and inclusion for women and girls, or the rights of LGBTI individuals. The dignity and rights of all people are sacred, and we will work to see that Central Africans of all walks of life enjoy those rights. While same-sex relationships are not illegal in CAR, our own report on human rights practices in CAR notes that they are subject to discriminatory practices and restrictions on public expression. The Department of State is working with vulnerable populations, such as LGBTI individuals, to protect them from mob violence, mob justice, and assist them in getting access to justice when they need it. As CAR develops its democratic institutions and the reach of its government’s authority, we will explore ways to more closely engage on this topic.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. LUCY TAMLYN BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Russia’s military, military intelligence, and private security contractors appear to have increased their presence in CAR in recent years. What is the nature of Russia’s interests in CAR?

Answer. Currently, there are two different sets of Russian actors with different but interconnected interests in the Central African Republic (CAR). First, there is the official Russian Government presence in CAR, represented by the five Ministry of Defense officers overseeing the Russian mission to train, equip, and advise the Central African military forces (FACA). There is also a non-governmental Russian presence in CAR in the form of the U.S.-sanctioned paramilitary company, Wagner.

In our estimation, the Russian Government’s primary interests in CAR are to extend its geopolitical and military influence in CAR and on the continent by presenting itself as a more responsive partner than Western countries and with fewer conditions on human rights and governance. Moscow sought and received a waiver from the U.N. Security Council last year to donate much-needed weapons to the FACA. It also provided a cadre of approximately 175 trainers, primarily paramilitary contractors, operating under the name of a CAR-based company, Sewa. On August 21, 2018 Russia and CAR signed a military cooperation agreement which codified these activities.

Wagner operates through locally created affiliates Sewa Security and a mining company, Lobaye Invest. The United States has sanctioned Wagner, along with its founder, Dmitry Utkin, and alleged owner, Yevgeny Prigozhin, for their activities in Ukraine. Wagner has also been active in Syria, Sudan, and Libya. Wagner serves as a tool to further the goals and objectives of the Russian Government in CAR, but the company’s primary interest in CAR is commercial. It has been involved in diamond and gold mining activities throughout the country, including in areas dominated by armed groups—a potential violation of U.N. sanctions. Wagner provides the security detail for President Touadéra, as well as the majority of the Russian trainers on the ground in CAR. Furthermore, Valerii Zakharov, a Russian national who currently serves as President Touadéra’s National Security Counselor, is a contractor and very likely a Wagner employee.

Question 2. Does Russia’s engagement in CAR compromise U.S. interests?

Answer. Russia’s security sector activities in CAR have been legally permissible. However, Russia’s engagement in CAR could potentially have serious repercussions for U.S. interests in the country. First, the United States has strongly supported the AU-led peace process, both diplomatically and financially. Recently, Russia and Sudan have facilitated parallel talks in Khartoum between armed groups. Recent reports in CAR state that during these meetings, armed group leaders received 30 million CFA ($53,000) to depart the country. These negotiations occurred without input from the AU, and without outside observers, including the United States. Russian and Sudanese Governments claim that they support the AU-led process, but these parallel talks could create confusion and undermine the authority of these negotiations. Also, the armed groups could use the Khartoum talks as an alternative process to strengthen their position or pursue blanket amnesty for their role in atrocities.

The United States and its partners are training and building the capabilities of the CAR security forces. In coordination with the European Union Training Mission (EUTM) and MINUSCA, we have provided more than $20 million in logistics, equipment, and training to the FACA since 2015 and nearly $17 million supporting the law enforcement sector. Training led by the United States, MINUSCA, or the EUTM includes the importance of respecting human rights and of civilian control of the military. Wagner and Russian military personnel are also training FACA troops and have expressed interest in training police and gendarmes. Given Wagner’s record of disregard for human rights and international norms in Ukraine and Syria, we are concerned that the training they are providing could undermine previous efforts. The FACA and police have moved away from a history of predation on the population and serious human rights violations. That could be at risk if they continue to be associated with Wagner.

Russia’s engagement in CAR could place the Government of CAR at risk of U.S. sanctions, undermining our ability to engage with Touadera and his Government. The donation of military equipment and training by the Russian Government does not represent a clear violation of the Countering America’s Adversaries Through Sanctions Act (CAATSA). However, by deepening its ties with Wagner and the Russian defense sector, the CAR Government is coming close to that line. If confirmed, I will leverage our strong relationship with Touadera and his government in order to highlight that the United States and its allies are CAR’s best partners in the path towards creating a peaceful and stable country. I will reinforce that all international partners are welcome to assist in the effort of rebuilding CAR’s security forces, but that their involvement must be transparent and coordinated to ensure success. And, I will also work with the CAR Government to ensure that it understands our laws (such as CAATSA) and how interactions and transactions with the Russian defense sector and Russian companies like Wagner could put it at risk of severe penalties and sanctions and compromise our ability to continue supporting CAR’s progress.

Question 3. Will you commit to tracking Russia’s engagement in CAR and keeping this committee abreast of any concerning developments related to Russia’s involvement in CAR?

Answer. If confirmed, I will follow Russia’s ongoing engagement very closely and seek to ensure that it does not compromise our work, objectives, or interests. I also commit to working with Members of Congress and ensure that they stay informed on the latest developments in CAR. Congress has always been a key player in the process of crafting and implementing the U.S. Government’s policies and objectives for CAR. If confirmed, I will do my best to ensure that this strong partnership continues.

Question 4. Our European allies have provided support to establish an internationally-backed Special Criminal Court to prosecute war crimes and crimes against humanity committed since 2003. What is the status of the Court and what is your assessment of its resources, capacity and effectiveness?

Answer. The Special Criminal Court is operational, and investigations began earlier this year. The United States has commended the CAR Government on the progress made so far. We also recognize that the Special Criminal Court (SCC) faces severe constraints. These include a lack of funding for this year and future years; lack of judicial and law enforcement capacity; lack of permanent premises; lack of maximum-security corrections facilities; and security risks to victims and witnesses from powerful armed groups. The Department currently has programs to address the lack of judicial capacity and corrections facilities to support the lower courts and the SCC. If confirmed, I will continue this important work.

Question 5. Is the United States providing assistance to the Court? Do you support United States assistance to the Court?

Answer. The Department of State has supported the CAR Government’s efforts to establish and operationalize the CAR Special Criminal Court. The Department of State has also provided more than $1.25 million in general assistance to CAR’s court system, including to the Special Criminal Court. That assistance has included training of CAR judges, prosecutors, investigative police, and defense lawyers, providing equipment for SCC staff, establishing case file management and evidence control systems, and renovating judicial and corrections facilities. If confirmed, I will continue to explore additional ways to support the Special Criminal Court and the judicial sector in CAR more broadly.
Question 6. MINUSCA’s mandate is due for renewal in November 2018. It appears that MINUSCA is looking to provide logistical support to CAR Security Forces (FACA), which is outside its mandate. What is your stance on the U.N. Secretary General’s proposal to the U.N. Security Council to authorize MINUSCA logistical support for FACA?

Answer. Currently, MINUSCA is responsible for the stability and security that we see in CAR. International efforts to build the capacity of the FACA and law enforcement bodies have shown good results in the soldiers, police, and gendarmes who have been able to deploy outside of Bangui. In some cases, FACA soldiers and law enforcement officers have deployed alongside MINUSCA troops, and their relative advantages have worked well together. MINUSCA has a superior administrative and logistical capacity, but its personnel are largely tied to working from established bases or from their vehicles. Few MINUSCA personnel speak the local language, and many are not comfortable interacting with the population they are mandated to protect. On the other hand, FACA troops and internal security forces often have a superior knowledge of the geographic and human terrain, speak the language, and can operate on foot and among the people.

My colleagues at the Department of State are discussing the recommendations of the Secretary General with great interest. If confirmed, I will support the position of the administration and the decision that is made in New York regarding MINUSCA support to the FACA. In the meantime, I will continue to further our bilateral relationship with the CAR Government and its military and security forces. I will also work with our international partners, such as France and the European Union, to provide support and capacity building to the security sector.

Question 7. Under what conditions should support be offered, if any?

Answer. If offered, support should be practical and serve the purpose of working towards the goal of a stable, self-sufficient, and peaceful Central African Republic. The resources must be available not only to make the support effective at supporting current operations, but also to build the capacity of CAR’s military and security forces in order to avoid the pitfall of fostering dependency. This would have to be done in the context of an already constrained budgetary environment and will be a difficult hurdle. The support should also strengthen the military and security forces to be self-sufficient; respect civilian authority, human rights, and the rule of law, and represent the population of the Central African Republic.

Question 8. What changes to MINUSCA’s mandate would you advocate, if any?

Answer. In preparation for this position, I will continue to consult with experts at the Department of State regarding MINUSCA and the security situation in CAR. If confirmed, I will rely on that expertise and the direction of the Department and the administration to advocate for policies with the Government in CAR. If confirmed, I will continue the strong relationship with MINUSCA’s leadership that my predecessors have established and do what I can to continue to support the mission’s successful completion.

Question 9. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. From service as a U.S. delegate to the U.N. Human Rights Commission to working to protect the life of a young Sudanese woman accused of apostasy, promoting and protecting human rights has been a core part of my Foreign Service career. As a delegate to the U.N. Human Rights Commission from 1995–1999, I advocated for important U.S.-sponsored resolutions that shed light on horrific human rights abuses in numerous countries and put political pressure on those countries to improve their human rights practices. I was also the primary negotiator for the landmark “Right to Democracy” resolution approved at the Commission in 1999. In 2014, as Director of the Office of the Special Envoy for Sudan and South Sudan, I led the team that coordinated the asylum request for a Sudanese woman who faced threats to her life because of her religion.

Question 10. What are the most pressing human rights issues in CAR? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in CAR? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. As noted in the 2017 Human Rights Report, the most significant human rights issues include reports of arbitrary and unlawful killings by government agents, enforced disappearance, and sexual violence. There are also instances of arbitrary arrest and detention; delays in holding criminal sessions in the judicial system; harsh and life-threatening prison conditions; seizure and destruction of property without due process, use of excessive and indiscriminate force in internal armed conflict, restrictions on freedom of movement, lack of protection and access for internally displaced persons to basic services, corruption, harassment of and threats to domestic and international human rights groups, lack of accountability, forced labor, and use of child soldiers.

To address these issues, if confirmed, I will continue to support efforts to reduce the influence and power of armed groups throughout CAR. These efforts include the disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration (DDR) of armed elements that contribute to an environment of predation, violence, and lawlessness in the country. Such efforts also include supporting the AU-led peace process and addressing the illicit supply chains of minerals, wildlife, and other natural resources that finance armed groups. I will also continue to support humanitarian assistance to meet the immediate needs of the people of CAR and development assistance to build the capacity of the CAR Government and civil society.

If confirmed, I would continue our partnership with the CAR Government to help train the military and civilian security forces and our work with the U.N., the CAR Government, and our international colleagues to advance security assistance and judicial sector reforms. These go beyond training soldiers and police to include reinvigorating courts, improving the detention system, and enabling deployment of forces to where they are needed. Advancing the presence and power of the state will further advance accountability, respect for human rights, and support protection of civilians and access to justice in CAR.

Question 11. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in CAR in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The lack of state presence and capacity outside of the capital is the greatest obstacle to improving the human rights situation in CAR. In many regions, local residents insist that they want to see the military and police deployed, and courts properly functioning, to ensure stability and the safety of the population. Central Africans do not want to have to rely on poorly organized and largely uncontrolled local militia for protection. The proliferation of such militia has only fed conflict and predation. Combatting the longstanding and widespread impunity in CAR will require a strong security sector with proper accountability and a justice sector that can hold criminals responsible.

Given CAR’s history of violence, reconciliation between communities will be both difficult and vital. The increasingly sectarian rhetoric used by some parties to motivate, support, and justify violence must be defused. Communities that have fallen victim to violence will have to enact mechanisms, whether through restorative justice or otherwise, to reconcile and create a better future.

Question 12. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in CAR? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. We have strong relationships with NGOs, civil society, and political organizations in CAR. Over the last few years, our embassy staff has developed a strong, frank, and open relationship with these actors. This has helped us to focus resources where they are most needed and to prevent political conflict. If confirmed, I will continue those efforts.

We are careful to vet all recipients of our security assistance. This requirement can sometimes slow the rollout of programs and cause some consternation in the CAR Government, but we must ensure that taxpayer dollars are spent wisely and appropriately. If confirmed, I will proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights, and I will strongly urge the CAR Government to hold any violators accountable for their actions.

Our training for the military, the police, and gendarmes includes human rights elements. If confirmed, I will work to make sure that we are teaching the appropriate material at the appropriate level, engaging with each level of command on the importance of respecting human rights and how this makes the security forces more effective in their duties.

Question 13. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with CAR to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by CAR?

Answer. Our embassy in Bangui has been proactive in engaging with the CAR Government regarding the need to provide political space for opposition. President Touadéra himself ran as an independent rather than as a candidate of a pre-existing political party. He has included political opposition within his government and has voiced an intent to assemble a government and security apparatus that is representative of the country as a whole. I will hold him to this and help him to institute the policies to get there, if confirmed.

Question 14. Will you engage with CAR on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will strive to ensure that the United States and our embassy remain an active partner of the CAR Government as it continues to work towards creating a peaceful and democratic nation characterized by the protection of human rights, strong governance, and a vibrant civil society.

Our embassy officials have maintained a constructive dialogue with the legitimate political opposition, while encouraging the armed groups to cease hostilities and join the political process. If confirmed, I intend continue this effort and will engage with the elected government to ensure that political space for opposition, civil society, and criticism is not threatened.

If confirmed, I will continue to support bilateral and international efforts to improve good governance, development, justice, and security in CAR. U.S. assistance has been essential in helping the democratically elected government to win several crises. We will continue to help build an accountable and professional government, military, security, and judicial structure that will serve and protect the people of CAR and aid in bringing peace, security, and prosperity to the country.

Question 15. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 16. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 17. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in CAR?

Answer. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in the Central African Republic.

Question 18. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that all staff understand the importance of full compliance with Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) and that we have well-trained and active EEO counselors who conduct EEO trainings and carry out activities that highlight the importance of promoting inclusion and diversity for American and local employees alike. As part of routine mentoring, I will encourage staff from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups to seek out resources and advice on performance and career planning make sure that they are aware of “affinity groups” within the State Department and elsewhere and make clear my support for similar affinity groups at post if employees are interested in forming them.

Question 19. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make clear that the EEO language in every employee’s work requirements will be considered an integral part of successful job performance during the evaluation period. I will regularly seek feedback from employees on their perceptions of their workplace environment and correct issues, which detract from an inclusive workplace. I will recognize those employees who demonstrate exceptional EEO leadership.

Question 20. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in CAR specifically?

Answer. The largest threat to democratic governance and the rule of law in CAR remains the fact that the state controls little beyond the capital. Armed groups—primarily community militias and criminal organizations—control the majority of CAR’s territory and natural resources where they tax, plunder, and exploit the local populations with impunity. Furthermore, such groups mimic legitimate governance, abusing their power to punish crimes and mete out arbitrary justice. With our assistance, the security forces are rebuilding their capability to take back control of the country.

Since 2015, the CAR Government has worked to rebuild its governance capabilities, but corruption remains. The judicial system suffers from a lack of resources, training, and personnel. It does not have a consistent presence throughout the country. Moreover, judicial officials are reluctant to leave Bangui and attend to their assigned offices in the provinces. This leads to extended detentions, persistence of impunity, failure to support local governance, and the uneven application of justice.

The CAR penal code criminalizes bribery, undue benefits, embezzlement, abuse of office, favoritism, and the offer, promise, or solicitation of gifts. However, the corruption of local officials and companies is rarely prosecuted or punished.

The police and military continue to suffer from incidences of petty corruption. There is also corruption among government officials, particularly those involved with customs administration and CAR’s natural resources. The lack of state presence has created a fertile ground for illegal economic activity, particularly mining and smuggling of natural resources, including diamonds, gold, and wildlife products such as elephant ivory. Smuggling of diamonds, gold, and other natural resources is common and at times facilitated by corrupt government officials, fostering impunity and undermining the rule of law. Private companies still engage in bribery, with government officials receiving gifts and other benefits in return for obtaining permits, bypassing prosecution, and receiving special access to government resources and processes.

Question 21. What is your assessment of corruption trends in CAR and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. The CAR Government, judiciary, and security forces face many challenges as they seek to combat long-standing issues of corruption. However, progress has been made towards reducing corruption in the country.

Embassy Bangui has played a key role in helping the CAR Government in its fight for increased transparency and good governance. The embassy team has forged strong ties with President Touadera and his government. This close relationship has enabled us to be active participants in anti-corruption efforts in the country. If confirmed, I look forward to building on this relationship and continuing this positive trend.

The United States Government is the leading force in a variety of programs that are essential in creating a more efficient, responsive, representative, and transparent government in CAR. For example, we are working to build the expectation for proper governance by helping elected officials improve their communication, outreach, and representation of their constituencies.

The United States, along with our international partners, has helped train and prepare the police and military forces of CAR, and our efforts have yielded positive results. Over the last few months, FACA troops have deployed outside of Bangui with success. Significantly, they have maintained a positive reputation with the local population. Although these are only the first steps, the professionalism and competence exhibited by these forces have been heartening.

We also have been a key partner to law enforcement and the judiciary in CAR as it seeks to break the cycle of criminality and impunity that has held the country back and fueled violence. We have provided training and equipment to the courts; helped train lawyers, judges, and court staff; and educated the public on their rights. This has allowed the district criminal courts in Bouar, Bangui, and Bambari to re-open, with some courts operating for the first time in more than ten years.

Furthermore, the CAR Government has recently operationalized the Special Criminal Court (SCC). The SCC has a panel of judges, officials, and a body of investigators. The Court expects to begin formal investigations in October of this year.

USAID supports the Government of CAR to implement the Kimberley Process (KP) for diamonds to address the issue of conflict diamonds and tackle corruption in the sector. CAR is the only country in the world that still has conflict diamonds as defined under the KP. From 2013 to 2015, CAR was temporarily suspended from the KP, effectively banning the legal export of diamonds. Since lifting of the temporary suspension in 2015, incremental progress has been made, but significant challenges remain. An estimated 82 percent of rough diamonds continue to exit the country illegally. In addition, only 36 percent of mined rough diamonds in the KP-compliant zones are legitimately exported. In an effort to increase legal exports, the Government of CAR has undertaken a number of activities to implement the KP
Operational Framework, which sets forth how CAR must comply with KP requirements to maintain the legal export of diamonds.

Question 22. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in CAR?

Answer. If confirmed, I will build on the excellent work already done by our embassy in Bangui and will engage directly with President Touadéra and his ministers to address issues of petty corruption by strengthening oversight of ministries and cracking down on “informal” taxation and fees often used by officials to add to their income. As the people and officials of CAR work to create a more transparent, democratic, and responsive government, I will work to ensure that they continue to find in the United States a strong and dependable partner.

If confirmed, I will serve as a strong advocate and supporter of our efforts and programs to train and rebuild the CAR military and security forces as professional and law abiding institutions that protect the rights of the citizenry. I will also work with President Touadéra and our international partners to ensure the success of our programs which seek to strengthen the CAR justice system and expand the reach of the rule of law. From training judges and investigators, implementing standard procedures and practices, repairing courts and prisons to educating the public on their rights, the U.S. Government is committed to helping develop lawful governance in CAR as the best way to fight corruption and impunity. If confirmed, I will work tirelessly to ensure that we are making steady progress to achieving these objectives.

ERIC WILLIAM STROMAYER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. In July, heads of state from the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) issued a communique suggesting the Government and political actors adopt a series of measures, among them speeding up the judicial procedures for those arrested during political demonstrations, and constitutional reforms including limitations on presidential term limits.

• In your view, will the recommended reforms help lessen current political tensions? What is the status of the constitutional reforms? Have proceedings for those arrested during demonstrations been expedited? What role should the United States play to support political reforms in Togo? If confirmed, what specific actions will you take to support reforms?

Answer. Following the ECOWAS summit in July 2018, the opposition agreed to participate in the ECOWAS electoral monitoring committee and the independent electoral commission (CENI). The Government has made progress on expediting proceedings for some of those arrested during the demonstrations. The Government has further shown readiness to compromise in accepting an ECOWAS-proposed rebalancing of the Electoral Commission. While the Government has been open to enacting run-off voting and term limits, ECOWAS did not take a position on whether term-limits should apply to the incumbent, leaving this decision to the political process. This has been a source of tension and a sticking point in the ongoing negotiations. If confirmed, I will continue to support this ECOWAS-facilitated political dialogue to ensure implementation of the recommendations, and that members of the opposition are consulted and are active participants in instituting these reforms.

Question 2. What programs and activities is the United States undertaking to support democracy and governance in Togo? If confirmed, what actions will you recommend we take to further open democratic space in Togo?

Answer. U.S. assistance has been critical to encouraging positive democracy and governance reforms in Togo. For example, efforts by the Togolese Government to implement reforms in order to meet Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC) preconditions have had an overall positive effect on government transparency. If confirmed, I will seek to leverage the Government’s strong desire for an MCC Compact to encourage further reforms that improve transparency and reduce corruption. On the security assistance side, International Military Education and Training (IMET) support targets civil-military relations, human rights, military justice, and the role of the military in a democracy. If confirmed, I will continue to leverage our very successful public diplomacy programs such as the Young Africa Leaders Initiative to help support and encourage the next generation of reformist Togolese leaders. Programs to support and defend the freedom of the press are also critically important, and I will seek to continue those, should I be confirmed.

- What accounts for the decrease in investigations and convictions? What types of assistance should the United States provide to help combat trafficking? If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure that the Government takes meaningful steps to combat trafficking in persons?

Answer. The Government of Togo has demonstrated the will to fight trafficking in persons (TIP) but lacks sufficient capacity to do so. In 2015, the Government of Togo instituted a new penal code, drafted with support from France and the U.N., which included strict TIP-related penalties. Ministry of Justice officials tell us, however, that the harsher penalties contained in the new law have resulted in reduced arrests and prosecutions. Criminal justice sector officials appear to believe that incarcerating heads of households who traffic their children will exacerbate the poverty driving them to traffic their children in the first place.

The Togolese Government, with support of the U.S. Embassy, has already taken steps to improve its anti-trafficking efforts. In April 2018, two State Department-funded workshops trained over 42 participants, including magistrates, police officers, and customs officials, on the trafficking provisions of the 2015 penal code. In addition, U.S. funding supported a local NGO to train 23 journalists and 35 social workers from various NGOs and conduct an awareness raising campaign that included a trafficking documentary, brochures, posters, and a series of radio and drama productions throughout the country. Following this, the Government of Togo established a formal partnership with an international NGO in support of a regional program targeting TIP and illegal immigration.

If confirmed, I will urge the Government of Togo to increase efforts to convict and punish traffickers, complete and enact the draft law prohibiting forced labor and forced prostitution of adults, and train law enforcement and other government officials to provide care to victims.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a junior officer I joined election monitoring teams overseas to promote democratic processes, and in more recent years, I have played a more senior policy-related role. As the Executive Director for the Africa Bureau (AF) from 2014–2017, I advocated in senior staff meetings for AF funding for election monitoring and human rights related programming in numerous places across the continent. With this support, the U.S. Mission in Abuja played a crucial role in the Nigerian elections which resulted in a peaceful transfer of power in 2015. As Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d’Affaires a.i. 2008–2011 in Madagascar, I advocated for a return to democratic norms following the March 2009 coup. With like-minded third country diplomats, I maintained pressure on the coup regime, which eventually was forced to return to democratic processes. In the past year as Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for East Africa and Sudan and South Sudan, I was a key player in Washington’s efforts to encourage a peaceful, credible outcome to the two rounds of the Kenyan elections and to bring peace to South Sudan to address the ongoing human rights tragedy unfolding there. My role included advocating for democratic and human rights with senior-level government and opposition leaders from Kenya and South Sudan.

I led the Africa/Near East Asia/Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs delegation to meetings in Cairo, Khartoum, and Addis Ababa advocating for mutually advantageous ways to move forward with the eventual filling of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) which, when operational, will potentially allow for enhanced standards of living and nutrition for tens of millions in all three of those countries. Our efforts contributed to calming what easily could have escalated into a serious international confrontation.

Question 5. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Togo? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.
Answer. Togo is going through a period of political upheaval, as the historically divided opposition has united in an effort to prevent President Faure Gnassingbé from standing for a fourth presidential term in 2020. This is a pressing challenge to democracy. A coalition of 14 opposition parties (C14) has demonstrated uncharacteristic solidarity in a dialogue with the Government facilitated by ECOWAS mediators. This was largely due to the coming together of two opposition figures, Tikpi Atchadam of the Panafriac National Party (PNP) and long-time opposition leader Jean-Pierre Fabre of the National Alliance for Change (ANC).

Political protests in 2017 and 2018 prompted the Government to propose constitutional amendments to institute a two-term limit for president and a two-round electoral system. In September 2017, the Parliament passed the amendments by 2/3 party-line majorities, without support from the opposition. The lack of a 4/5 majority to adopt the amendments directly made a popular referendum necessary, which has yet to take place.

Following a mediation effort led by Ghanaian President Nana Akufo-Addo and Guinean President Alpha Condé, ECOWAS has been pressing the Government and opposition to agree on constitutional reforms and pass them in the National Assembly by the necessary 4/5 majority, avoiding the need for a controversial referendum. However, opposition parties continue to insist constitutional changes must apply to the incumbent, barring President Faure from running for re-election in 2020. Togo is preparing to hold legislative elections in late 2018, and potentially hold local elections in 2019 for the first time in over 30 years. The disagreement between the opposition and the Government, and failure of the parties to reach an agreement, are potential obstacles to Togo’s participatory governance.

Question 6. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Togo? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will collaborate with the Government of Togo, political parties, civil society, and other diplomatic missions to promote political reforms, reinforce democratic institutions and expand political space, and strengthen electoral institutions and processes to promote fair and transparent elections. I will continue the ongoing constructive work with the Group of Five (G-5), consisting of the U.S., French, German, EU, and U.N. missions in Lomé to encourage constitutional reforms and an inclusive political settlement.

In 2015, Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC) selected Togo as eligible to develop a Threshold Program to increase competition and private sector participation in the Information Communications Technology (ICT) services market and to improve land tenure and management. If confirmed, I will seek to leverage the Government’s strong desire for an MCC Compact to encourage further reforms that improve transparency and reduce corruption.

Question 7. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. USAID does not have a mission in Togo; however, a handful of regionally- and centrally-managed program activities are present and focused largely on health. The USAID West Africa Regional Mission located in Accra, Ghana manages USAID regional program activities in Togo, including approximately $2 million a year for family planning and $1 million a year for HIV/AIDS programs. The Peace Corps established its presence in Togo in 1962, and currently has over 90 volunteers in the field working on projects in agriculture, education, and health.

On April 3, the Millennium Challenge Corporation board approved a $35 million threshold program focused on reforms to the Information Communications Technology (ICT) sector and land tenure. The MCC, in collaboration with the Government of Togo, spent nearly two years analyzing Togo’s main economic binding constraints and designing the threshold program. Togo became eligible for the threshold program in 2015, and has maintained a passing scorecard for the last two years.

In approving the program, MCC noted it will closely monitor citizens’ rights to freedom of expression and association. In addition to leveraging the MCC compact, if confirmed, I will seek opportunities to secure funding to expand political space and strengthen democratic institutions, particularly focusing on electoral processes.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Togo? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?
Answer. Meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Togo will be a priority of mine if confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Togo. This is key to understanding the political and human rights' situation in any country, and a great privilege for those of us who serve overseas.

Togo is on the path towards greater democracy. Togo is planning to hold local elections next year for the first time in 30 years. Constitutional reforms are on the table that would place term limits on the president and enact run-off voting. These steps in the right direction were made possible by the strong participation of domestic civil society groups. If confirmed, I will continue to push the Government to increase political space so that the people of Togo can make their voices heard and peacefully express dissent through the ballot box and through greater respect for fundamental freedoms.

Answer. If confirmed, I will meet with democratically-oriented opposition figures and parties. I will continue to support the ECOWAS-facilitated political process to ensure implementation of the recommendations, and ensure that members of the opposition are consulted and are active participants in instituting reforms. The Public Affairs Section of Embassy Lome has also organized a number of workshops over the last two years to encourage greater participation by youth and women in political life. Some of the participants in these trainings will be candidates in the upcoming local elections. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for the inclusivity of women, minorities and youth within political parties through such programs.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Togo on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Togo?

Answer. Independent media are active and express a wide variety of views, many highly critical of the Government. However, the Government has at times restricted these rights. The law imposes penalties on journalists deemed to have committed “serious errors” as defined in the media code. Authorities sometimes attempt to influence the press through illicit means, for example, by giving “year-end gifts” to encourage positive media coverage.

If confirmed, I will advocate for press freedoms and freedom of expression. The Togolese are receptive to our efforts. We are also engaged in public diplomacy programs that give young leaders a voice. Through various exchange programs like the Mandela Washington Fellows, we provide opportunities for them to visit the United States and bring back what they have learned in order to make Togo better, stronger, and more democratic. If confirmed, I will not compromise on these important American ideals. I will work hard, if confirmed, to encourage Togo to continue on this positive trajectory.

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, the Embassy team and I will continue to engage actively with civil society and government to counter disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Togo. The Embassy is already a leader in this regard, having launched a nation-wide campaign in 2018 to counter misinformation that has trained 150 journalists and social media influencers on how to detect and resist disinformation. The campaign has been so successful that a member of Togolese parliament has asked our trainers to give a class to the legislature.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Togo on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Togo's constitution provides for the right of most workers to form and join unions and bargain collectively, prohibits forced labor, child labor, and discrimination in the workplace, and outlines a minimum wage, occupational safety and health, and hours of work protections. The Government has demonstrated on several occasions its willingness to negotiate with labor groups. If confirmed, I will advocate for freedom of assembly and independent trade unions and respect for labor rights provided under the law.

or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Togo? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Togo?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use my position to defend the human rights of all people in Togo, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) persons face societal discrimination in employment, housing, and access to education and health care. Existing anti-discrimination laws in Togo do not apply to LGBTI persons. Togolese law provides that a person convicted of engaging in consensual same-sex sexual activity may be sentenced to one to three years’ imprisonment and fined one million to three million CFA francs ($1,701 to $5,102). Police have arrested individuals for engaging in consensual same-sex sexual activity. If confirmed, I will work with the Togolese law enforcement and government representatives to advocate for legal rights and safety for the LGBTI community.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ERIC WILLIAM STROMAYER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1 What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As a junior officer I joined election monitoring teams overseas to promote democratic processes, and in more recent years, I have played a more senior policy-related role. As the Executive Director for the Africa Bureau (AF) from 2014–2017, I advocated in senior staff meetings for AF funding for election monitoring and human rights related programming in numerous places across the continent. With this support, the U.S. Mission in Abuja played a crucial role in the Nigerian elections which resulted in a peaceful transfer of power in 2015. As Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d’Affaires a.i. 2008–2011 in Madagascar, I advocated for a return to democratic norms following the March 2009 coup. With like-minded third country diplomats, I maintained pressure on the coup regime, which eventually was forced to return to democratic processes. In the past year as Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for East Africa and Sudan and South Sudan, I was a key player in Washington’s efforts to encourage a peaceful, credible outcome to the two rounds of the Kenyan elections and to bring peace to South Sudan to address the ongoing human rights tragedy unfolding there. My role included advocating for democratic and human rights with senior-level government and opposition leaders from Kenya and South Sudan.

I led the Africa/Near East Asia/Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs delegation to meetings in Cairo, Khartoum, and Addis Ababa advocating for mutually advantageous ways to move forward with the eventual filling of the Grand Ethiopian Renaissance Dam (GERD) which, when operational, will potentially allow for enhanced standards of living and nutrition for tens of millions in all three of those countries. Our efforts contributed to calming what easily could have escalated into a serious international confrontation.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Togo? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Togo? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues that the United States is deeply concerned about in Togo are allegations of human rights violations, violence against civilians, and restrictions on freedom of expression and assembly, specifically surrounding the opposition-led protests in late 2017.

If confirmed, the most important step I expect to take will be to call upon the Government of Togo to uphold its citizens’ human rights, notably freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, and internet freedom, and to ensure that all those arrested during demonstrations are afforded the right to due process. If confirmed, I will seek to leverage the Government’s strong desire for a Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC) Compact to encourage further reforms that improve transparency and reduce corruption.

Finally, if confirmed, I will work with the team at Embassy Lomé and civil society and hope that these actions will encourage the Government of Togo to ensure the Togolese people have freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, and internet freedom.
Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Togo in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. One significant obstacle to addressing human rights and democracy in Togo would be a breakdown or stalemate in the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) mediation of the current political crisis. To help avoid that breakdown, I will, if confirmed, support this ECOWAS-mediated peace process to ensure implementation of the recommendations and to ensure that members of the opposition are consulted and are active participants in instituting these reforms. I will work with like-minded countries to continue to press the Government to make progress on human rights and advance democratic freedoms in Togo.

Additionally, a major challenge I would face, if confirmed, would be the failure of the Government and opposition to arrive at a compromise acceptable to both sides. An opposition boycott of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS)-endorsed parliamentary elections scheduled for December 20, 2018, for example, could increase the risk of violence on election day.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Togo? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Togo, I will make meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States, and with domestic and international human rights NGOs in Togo, a priority. Additionally, the United States maintains a good relationship with the Togolese military and police, who have been willing partners in key areas such as maritime security and peacekeeping. Our assistance to the Togolese armed forces is designed to develop the professionalism of its ranks. All security force participants in U.S. Government programs go through a Leahy vetting process to ensure participants have not committed gross human rights violations. Units with histories of human rights violations are not permitted to receive U.S. training or assistance. This also reinforces our message that human rights violations by security forces will not be tolerated. If confirmed, I will actively support our Embassy in gathering information to contribute to important reports such as the Human Rights Report and Trafficking in Persons Report to highlight areas of weakness and opportunities for further cooperation between the United States and Togo.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Togo to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Togo?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the work Embassy Lomé has begun, and will call on the Government of Togo to uphold its citizens’ human rights, notably freedom of expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, and internet freedom, and to ensure that all those arrested during demonstrations are afforded the right to due process.

Question 6. Will you engage with Togo on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will engage with Togo to emphasize the importance of rule of law, solid democratic institutions, and the role of civil society to encourage positive change.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Togo?
Answer. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in Togo.

Question 10. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to lead by example, ensuring regularly scheduled sessions stressing for all staff, American and local, the importance of full compliance with Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) legislation and principles. I will ensure that we have well trained and active EEO counselors who conduct EEO trainings and carry out activities which highlight the importance of promoting inclusion and diversity for American and local employees alike. I will stress that mission leadership will not accept anything less. As part of routine mentoring, I will encourage staff from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups to seek out resources and my advice on performance and career planning, make sure that they are aware of “affinity groups” within the State Department and elsewhere, and make clear my support for similar affinity groups at post if employees are interested in forming them.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make clear that the EEO language in every employee’s work requirements will be considered an integral part of successful job performance during the evaluation period. I will regularly seek feedback from employees on their perceptions of their workplace environment and correct issues that detract from an inclusive workplace. I will recognize those employees who demonstrate exceptional EEO leadership.

Question 12. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Togo specifically?

Answer. Corruption remains a pervasive problem in Togo, especially for businesses. Often, “donations” or “gratuities” result in shorter delays for obtaining registrations, permits, and licenses, thus resulting in a competitive advantage for companies that are willing and able to engage in such practices. Government corruption exists among prison officials, police officers, and members of the judiciary. Corruption and inefficiency are endemic among police, and impunity is a problem. There are reports of police misusing arrest authority for personal gain.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Togo and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. The law provides criminal penalties for conviction of corruption by officials, but the Government does not implement the law effectively, and officials frequently engage in corrupt practices with impunity. The National Commission for the Fight against Corruption and Economic Sabotage and other state entities, such as the Government Accounting Office and Finances Inspectorate, have limited resources to reduce levels of corruption and produce few results.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Togo?

Answer. Efforts by the Government of Togo’s Millennium Challenge Corporation (MCC) cell to make reforms and pass good governance indicators have had a positive effect on government transparency and reform. If confirmed, I will seek to build upon the positive momentum generated by MCC’s approval of a $25 million Threshold Program to encourage further reforms that improve transparency and reduce corruption.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DENNIS B. HANKINS BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. In February, I wrote a letter to then-Secretary Rex Tillerson to express my concern about ongoing instability in Mali, recommending the administration consult with Congress on a strategy for Mali that includes sustained, high-level diplomatic engagement with regional governments, signatory groups to the 2015 Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali, and civil society actors as part of a broader integrated plan on the Sahel-Maghreb:

• What is the status of the development of that strategy for Mali as part of a Sahel/Maghreb strategy? Has Congress, to your knowledge, been consulted on the development of such a strategy? When will that consultation occur?
Answer. I understand that Mali is part of a West Africa Counterterrorism Strategy, the development of which is currently underway. I agree on the need for sustained, high-level diplomatic engagement with regional governments, signatory groups to the 2015 Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali, and civil society actors. I share your concern about the ongoing instability in Mali. Part of the reason that terrorist groups have been gaining operational space is the unacceptably slow pace of implementation of the Accord. By not living up to their commitments, the signatories perpetuate instability that threatens the entire region. If confirmed, I plan to continue Embassy Bamako’s efforts to press the parties to the Accord for full and speedy implementation of the Accord.

Question 2. What specific actions has the United States taken to build civilian institutions to promote good governance and strengthen civilian oversight in the security sector? What have these actions achieved? If confirmed, what actions will you recommend be undertaken to further strengthen civilian institutions in Mali?

Answer. The United States is committed to supporting Malian security sector reform efforts through an interagency, long-term effort focused on developing national level processes and institutions. Since 2015, the Security Governance Initiative (SGI) has worked to strengthen civilian institutions and promote good governance and civilian oversight of the security sector. Specific areas of focus include aligning Ministry of Defense (MOD) resources to operational needs; National Police (NP) recruitment and human resource management; Ministry of Justice (MOJ) human resource development; and Inter-ministerial defense and security planning and coordination. SGI has experienced varying both successes and degrees of success and challenges within each focus area. If confirmed, I will continue to promote good governance and improved civilian oversight of support these efforts to reform Mali’s security sector as well as focus on transparent investigations of serious allegations against security forces and accountability for perpetrators.

Question 3. What train-and-equip programs is the U.S. Government currently engaging in Mali? In your view, should the resumption or continuance of such programs be tied to accountability for alleged human rights abuses committed by the military and/or other security forces?

Answer. My understanding is that the United States continues to provide assistance to reform and professionalize Mali’s security sector. Security forces must more effectively address the rapidly growing threat from violent extremists and bolster their legitimacy with the population. We have begun episodic training with select units deploying to the G5 Sahel Joint Force to assess their capabilities and improve core competencies. We also working to build the capacities of a Gendarmerie crisis response team, military intelligence, Counter-Improvised Explosive Device capabilities, aviation, civil-military affairs, and limited International Military Education and Training. Human rights concerns should inform the scope of our security assistance policy. The United States is committed both to reforming the Malian security sector and to providing assistance to fill gaps in Malian security forces’ operational capacity. All recipients of U.S. security assistance undergo Leahy vetting and, if confirmed, I will ensure that all provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities continue to reinforce the importance of human rights, including transparent investigations and accountability for human rights violations.

Question 4. What assistance, if any, should we be providing through the G-5 Sahel Joint Force as opposed to bilaterally, in your view?

Answer. The United States is committed to supporting the G5 Sahel Joint Force as an African-led, African-owned effort to improve security in the Sahel. If confirmed, I will support continued strong bilateral assistance for the G5 Sahel Joint Force as the most effective way to build the capacity of G5 member states’ forces.

Question 5. What formal mechanisms exist for ensuring coordination with other donors funding security assistance activities? If confirmed, how can you ensure our activities are coordinated with those of other donors?

Answer. My understanding is that the EU through its EU Training Mission and EU Capacity Mission is Mali’s largest security assistance partner. Embassy Bamako remains in close consultation with the EU, its missions, and other donors to coordinate and de-conflict international security assistance. U.N. Security Council resolution 2391 (2017) acknowledged the EU as the coordinator for international voluntary contributions to the G5 Sahel Joint Force and the African Peace Facility as the financing mechanism to channel donor contributions. If confirmed, I will closely monitor security assistance coordination and work to achieve even closer cooperation among donors.

Question 6. Mali is on the Tier 2 Watch List. What activities is the United States engaged in to assist Mali to investigate and prosecute trafficking offenses, and/or convict and punish traffickers? Have we provided any assistance to help train law enforcement on effective case investigation techniques? What have we further trained judges and prosecutors on Law 2012–023, Relating to the Combat against Trafficking in Persons and Similar Practices, as amended? What assistance or further assistance will you recommend we provided to Mali in these areas if confirmed as Ambassador?

Answer. The Government of Mali (GOM) does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking but is making significant efforts to do so. I understand that in 2016, the U.S. Department of State awarded a grant to the International Organization for Migration to train criminal justice practitioners on victim protection measures, to institutionalize a National Referral Mechanism and Standard Operating Procedures for referring victims of trafficking to services, to build local capacity to serve victims of trafficking by issuing sub-grants to local NGO Trafficking in Persons (TIP) service providers in Bamako and Gao, and to ensure effective implementation of the country’s National Action Plan on TIP. I also understand that USAID, through a judicial strengthening program, is training paralegals on TIP so they can work with communities to raise awareness. This U.S. Government anti-trafficking funding complements other donor funding that has trained criminal justice practitioners on effective investigations and prosecutions. If confirmed, I would continue these efforts with Mali to build its capacity to address TIP issues and to urge the Government of Mali to ensure that it does not provide any material support to non-state actors who recruit and use child soldiers.

Question 7. What key obstacles to implementing the 2015 Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation remain? What assistance are we providing to assist with implementation of the provisions of the agreement? What actions will you take if confirmed as Ambassador to foster implementation of the agreement?

Answer. Key obstacles to implementing the 2015 Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali include the signatories’ lack of political will to make necessary compromises, low capacity and resources, and growing instability in Mali’s north and center. I understand that the United States continues to play a very strong role in supporting the full implementation of the Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali. The Embassy in Bamako takes a leading role in the International Mediation group by engaging with the parties to the Accord as well as the international community to resolve disagreements as they arise. The United States also works closely with regional and international partners to push for rapid and full implementation of the agreement. We have provided $1.15 billion in U.N. assessed contributions to MINUSMA and over $200 million in bilateral logistical support, training, and equipment to several countries providing troop contingents to MINUSMA since its inception. Furthermore, we continue to look for ways to reform and strengthen Mali’s security forces to facilitate the reestablishment of state presence in ungoverned areas. Additionally, USAID governance programs have worked with the Ministries of Justice and Decentralization to develop GOM work plans that operationalize the steps involved in implementation of the accord. If confirmed, I will continue these robust efforts with a particular focus on pushing the parties to fulfill the measures called for by the U.N. Security Council in resolution 2423 regarding decentralization; disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration; and development.

Question 8. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Mali?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed I will look forward to fully briefing Members of Congress and/or their staff when I am in Washington for visits or consultations.

Question 9. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have always viewed the promotion of human rights and democracy as an integral component of American diplomacy. Real development and security cannot be achieved if they are not accompanied by respect for human rights and a democratic process that respects the will of the people.

In my current assignment as Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea, I have devoted a substantial amount of my time to the support of Guinea’s young democratic process. Throughout 2017 and 2018, I harnessed Mission resources to help unblock the political blockages leading to Guinea’s first local elections since establishing a democratic system in 2010, personally leading “Election Roadshows” to all of Guinea’s regional capitals with senior members of the ruling coalition and opposition party. These efforts raised public confidence in the political process, fostered better personal relations between political rivals, and, ultimately, resulted in largely successful elections in February 2018. Those local elections have set the preconditions for national legislative elections in 2019 and a presidential election in 2020.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Khartoum, Sudan, I played a coordinating role in ensuring the successful completion of the Referendum on South Sudanese Independence in the northern parts of Sudan. Through daily meetings between State and USAID personnel working on the Referendum, and through contacts with partners and Sudanese Government officials, I was able to address small problems before they became big ones. The Referendum allowed the citizens of South Sudan to achieve their long-sought self-determination.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Nouakchott, Mauritania, I led efforts to counter the 2008 coup. Serving as Charge d’Affaires through most of the year following the coup, I played a very public role in denouncing the military seizure of power. My efforts focused on ensuring Mauritania could hold free and fair elections that were based on the rights of citizens to vote and take part in the conduct of public affairs. The Africa Bureau nominated me as a State Department “Champion of Democracy” for my efforts.

Question 10. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Mali? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. While the recent presidential elections were a demonstration by the Malian voters of their commitment to democratic values, democracy in Mali is still developing. ECOWAS found these elections “acceptable” despite some irregularities and some limited violence in less-governed areas. Some of the challenges to Mali’s democracy include the growing insecurity in Mali’s north and center, transportation problems over vast and sparsely populated territory, and low capacity and resources. Prior to the recent presidential election, the Government of Mali used powers from the ongoing state of emergency to deny a permit for a June 2, 2018 protest and then cracked down on peaceful marchers. More than 30 peaceful protesters, including presidential candidates, were injured during the violence. Following that incident, however, the Government allowed about a dozen opposition protests to take place throughout the election period, all of which proceeded without incident. The United States was also concerned by reports that the Government disrupted the internet in the election period, closed a radio station because of a controversial program it aired, and arrested opposition campaign workers.

Question 11. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Mali? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that Mali has free, fair, and transparent elections, and the rights of free speech, assembly, and the press are protected to encourage a healthy democratic dialogue. This includes not only programmatic assistance supporting elections and a strong civil society, but also the use of all the tools in our diplomacy toolkit to advance democratic values. I would make it clear that we expect open, unfettered public political discourse and credible democratic processes. While Mali suffers from very low capacity, large geographical challenges, and increasing instability, Mali must provide the opportunity for all Malians to engage in democratic expression, especially women and people from marginalized communities.

Question 12. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the United States’ strong commitment to support democracy, human rights, and good governance in Mali. This includes supporting elections, working to address corruption that fuels instability and inhibits economic development, and reforming the security sector. I will continue to fully support international exchange visitors from Mali for a variety of programs including those focused on countering violent extremism, supporting entrepreneurship, and improving economic opportunities for U.S. businesses in Mali such as in the solar sector and others. USAID is supporting a two-year $6 million project to promote women in public policy; establish a code of conduct for political parties; improve media coverage of the electoral process; strengthen civil society organizations; and advance effective voter education and voter mobilization strategies. It also has programs supporting public accountability, rule of law, access to justice, and strengthening civil society. We support a $1 million program to strengthen community resilience to violent extremism through more inclusive responses to security concerns by increasing mutual trust and cooperation between security services and citizens.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Mali to ensure that human rights for all Malian are respected. I understand that our Embassy in Bamako is in close touch with NGOs that monitor the human rights situation in Mali. If confirmed, I would work to ensure local and international NGOs are able to report on troubling situations and demand that the Government conduct credible investigations, improve both civilian and military judicial processes, and hold accountable those responsible for human rights abuses and violations.

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. I would also advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties. We have seen encouraging signs, as President Keita’s most recent cabinet has met the 30 percent legal mandate for the inclusion of women. This is a first step but there much work remains, especially with regard to the inclusion for the growing youth population. I would call for meaningful efforts to allow younger people to express freely their political opinions, register, and vote; for women to play a much greater role in elections, political affairs, and the peace process; and for the inclusion of voices from marginalized groups.

Question 15. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Mali on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Mali?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Mali on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom. I would also commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Mali.

Question 16. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will be vigilant in monitoring disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors and will actively engage all appropriate actors if such problems come to light.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Mali on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Mali on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions. I understand that Mali does have active, independent labor unions, especially in the public sector, as demonstrated by the currently ongoing Magistrates Union strike.

Question 18. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Mali, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Mali? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Mali?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to using my position to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Mali, no matter their sexual orientation, gender identity, or transgender status. While I understand that homosexuality in Mali is not per se illegal, members of the LGBTI population face severe legal and social hurdles. If confirmed, I will stand for the dignity of all people, regardless of sexual orientation, gender or transgender status. I would communicate a strong public message that the United States supports human rights, tolerance and respect for everyone, including members of the LGBTI community.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DENNIS B. HANKINS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. In recent years we have seen a breakdown in implementation of Mali's 2015 peace process coupled with "amplified intercommunal violence" in the northern and central parts of the country. However, MINUSMA, France's security operations, and the G5 Sahel force are largely focused on counter-terrorism in the North.

• How can MINUSMA's mandate and the United States' engagement be adapted to the current and evolving security situation in central Mali?

Answer. MINUSMA, as with other peacekeeping missions in the U.N. system, is tasked with supporting a peace process. MINUSMA's core focus is supporting the signatories' implementation of the Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali. That peace agreement focuses on the conflict in the north and certain armed groups' desire for greater autonomy. MINUSMA is not a counterterrorism force. However, full and rapid implementation of the Accord will address many of the grievances and instability that drive the conflict in the center and would allow the Government of Mali to address violent extremism and inter-communal violence. For this year's mandate, the U.S. worked to place specific benchmarks within UNSC resolution 2423 (2018) to apply more pressure on the signatory parties to implement the Accord. Additionally, it provided the Force Commander more flexibility to move forces into the center of the country. We will continue to closely monitor and assess the implementation of and progress on the benchmarks to determine how to best adapt next year's mandate to bring peace and stability throughout all of Mali.

Question 2. What in your opinion is the appropriate political mechanism that might lead to peaceful settlement in central Mali?

Answer. The establishment of a positive state presence in Mali's center will be critical to promoting greater stability, decreased conflict, and greater respect for human rights. Lack of government resources, trustworthy security services, development, protection of human rights, and opportunities for the growing youth population all contribute to the growing instability. All people in Mali should have security, justice, protection of human rights, and meaningful economic opportunities. Long-term resolution will require improved trust of security forces, accountability, and development in the center.

Question 3. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have always viewed the promotion of human rights and democracy as an integral component of American diplomacy. Real development and security cannot be achieved if they are not accompanied by respect for human rights and a democratic process that respects the will of the people.

In my current assignment as Ambassador to the Republic of Guinea, I have devoted a substantial amount of my time to the support of Guinea's young democratic process. Throughout 2017 and 2018, I harnessed Mission resources to help unblock the political blockages leading to Guinea's first local elections since establishing a democratic system in 2010, personally leading "Election Roadshows" to all of Guinea's regional capitals with senior members of the ruling coalition and opposition party. These efforts raised public confidence in the political process, fostered better personal relations between political rivals, and, ultimately, resulted in largely successful elections in February 2018. Those local elections have set the preconditions for national legislative elections in 2019 and a presidential election in 2020.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Khartoum, Sudan, I played a coordinating role in ensuring the successful completion of the Referendum on South Sudanese Independence in the northern parts of Sudan. Through daily meetings between State and USAID personnel working on the Referendum, and through contacts with partners and Sudanese Government officials, I was able to address small problems before they became big ones. The Referendum allowed the citizens of South Sudan to achieve their long-sought self-determination.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Nouakchott, Mauritania, I led efforts to counter the 2008 coup. Serving as Charge d'Affaires through most of the year following the coup, I played a very public role in denouncing the military seizure of power. My efforts focused on ensuring Mauritania could hold free and fair elections that were based on the rights of citizens to vote and take part in the conduct of public affairs. The Africa Bureau nominated me as a State Department “Champion of Democracy” for my efforts.

Question 4. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Mali? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Mali? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Mali faces many serious human rights issues. There is ineffective civilian control over security forces and a lack of accountability for numerous allegations of serious human rights violations and abuses by security forces, non-state armed groups, and terrorists. Security forces have reportedly committed extrajudicial killings; effected disappearances; and engaged in torture and other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment. Armed groups have committed significant human rights abuses, including summary executions, torture, and unlawful recruitment of child soldiers. Violent extremist groups commit frequent human rights abuses and continue to kill civilians and military forces including peacekeepers with impunity. Over the past year, the Government of Mali (GOM) has increased restrictions on freedoms of association and expression, including for the press. The GOM, including the security forces, censored access to the Internet and social media surrounding the recent presidential elections. Trafficking in persons and exploitative labor, including child labor, continue to be concerns.

If confirmed, I intend to draw on my experience throughout my career in addressing human rights and democracy issues and, working together with international partners and civil society, press the Government to improve human rights and democratic conditions in Mali. Our Embassy in Bamako remains very engaged on these extremely important issues. I will focus on addressing corruption; reforming security institutions and strengthening civilian oversight; calling for credible investigations into human rights allegations; pressing for accountability; and working for free expression and free, fair, transparent and peaceful elections. If confirmed, I will strengthen efforts already in place and will look for any additional opportunities to promote human rights and democracy in Mali.

Question 5. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Mali in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. In Mali, obstacles to addressing these specific human rights issues include corruption, lack of resources, weak institutional capacity within the Government, and insufficient civilian control over security forces.

One important factor in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in Mali is a shift in the culture of corruption and impunity that currently prevails. Many Malians have low expectations for their government. Many officials engage in corruption and lack a commitment to public service. Changing minds will not be easy or fast, but will be necessary to address the root causes of many of Mali’s problems.

Question 6. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Mali? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Mali.

Additionally, if confirmed, I will work to ensure that U.S. security assistance is provided consistent with the Leahy Law and that our security cooperation activities reinforce human rights. If confirmed, I will ensure that our vetting continues to be comprehensive, thorough, and in full compliance with the Leahy Law, and that those who violate human rights are restricted from receiving any assistance until the GOM takes effective steps to bring the responsible members of the security forces unit to justice. I will strongly urge the GOM to hold those responsible for human rights violations and abuses accountable for their actions.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Guinea to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Guinea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with Mali to address cases of key prisoners of conscience or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Mali.
Question 8. Will you engage with Mali on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with Mali on matters of human rights, including civil rights and governance, as part of my role leading U.S. Embassy Bamako.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Mali?

Answer. Neither I, nor my spouse nor our dependent children are invested in companies that have a presence in Mali. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest.

Question 12. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will help ensure that all staff understand the importance of full compliance with Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) principles and that we have well-trained and active EEO counselors who conduct EEO trainings and carry out activities which highlight the importance of promoting inclusion and diversity for American and local employees alike. As part of routine mentoring, I will encourage staff from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups to seek out resources and advice on performance and career planning, make sure that they are aware of Employee Affinity Groups within the State Department, and make clear my support for participation in employee organizations at post.

Question 13. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make clear that the EEO language in an employee’s work requirements will be considered an integral part of successful job performance. I will regularly seek feedback from employees on their perceptions of their workplace environment and correct issues which detract from an inclusive workplace. I will recognize those employees who demonstrate exceptional EEO leadership.

Answer. Corruption has a strong negative impact on democratic governance and the rule of law. Corruption is an obstacle for foreign investment and economic development in Mali. It plays a role in facilitating trafficking and terrorist financing. It interferes with the delivery of state services such that many Malians have severely diminished expectations for the role of the state. This makes it easier for violent extremist groups to fill the void by providing quasi-state services. Public perceptions of corruption and dissatisfaction with the state are factors driving recruitment by violent extremists. Corruption in all sectors of the administration is widespread, and the lack of accountability exacerbates the problem.

Question 15. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Mali and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Corruption is a chronic problem in Mali, and radical changes are unlikely to occur overnight. Malian law provides criminal penalties for corruption by officials, but the Government has not implemented the law effectively, and officials frequently engage in corrupt practices with impunity. To improve governance and accountability, President Keita has advocated for a “cour de comptes” (special public financial oversight entity akin to the U.S. Government Accountability Office), noting that Mali is the only country in ECOWAS that does not have one. Mali already has a Central Office for Combating Illicit Enrichment (OCLEI), which does not appear to have made a significant impact on the problem.
Question 16. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Mali?

Answer. The United States is working to address the entrenched problem of corruption in Mali and, if confirmed, I will be a strong advocate for good governance and anti-corruption efforts. I will continue and strengthen our programming in these areas. Our assistance works to improve civil society’s capacity for oversight functions, and strengthen Malian Government institutions to reduce administrative corruption in the justice sector and at the sub-national level. Our Mali Justice Project works to increase the Ministry of Justice’s institutional capacity, to promote good governance and anti-corruption efforts. Our Sub-National Governance Program works to generate responsive, accountable service delivery. Our Civic Engagement Program aims to promote effective civic engagement for improved public accountability. In the security sector, the Security Governance Initiative focuses on fiscal and human resource management in an effort to reduce corruption and promote effective service delivery. I will support all these efforts, if confirmed.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DENNIS B. HANKINS BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. The U.N. Security Council in June gave the parties to the 2015 peace agreement six months to implement the 2015 peace roadmap. The text calls for the beginning of the Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR) process, which sets a basis for demobilizing or integrating fighters into the Malian army or police. So far, progress has been disappointing.

• What can be done to more quickly bring into force the faltering peace accords with rebels as Islamist militants keep up actions to destabilize Mali and the region?

Answer. The peace process appeared to lose momentum during the recent presidential elections, but there is now an opportunity to reinvigorate the peace process. The United States works closely with regional and international partners to push for rapid and full implementation of the Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali. Our Embassy in Bamako is particularly active as an observer to the International Mediation.

If confirmed, I will continue the United States’ robust efforts to encourage the parties to fulfill the measures called for by the U.N. Security Council in resolution 2423. That resolution urges the parties to take action on: decentralization of state services, setting up interim authorities in northern Mali, integration of at least 1,000 members of signatory armed groups into Malian security forces, joint patrols by mixed units from the signatory parties, establishment of the Northern Development Zone, and meaningful participation of women in implementation of the peace process. These actions not only start the process of reconciliation in the north, they also will provide greater stability, facilitating efforts to address the growing terrorist threats in the country.

Question 2. The United Nations has deployed a peacekeeping mission of roughly 12,000 troops in Mali while the French, Americans, British and others have also sent troops or military support, and countries in the region have deployed a 5,000-man support force. But the solutions to Mali’s problems cannot be solved with guns—they depend on inclusive, fair and transparent governance. Unfortunately, the governance problems in the north also exist throughout the country, providing opportunities for extremists to expand their influence.

• The 2015 peace agreement provided for some degree of autonomy in the North. Should we be supporting decentralization efforts in the rest of the country? If so, how?

• How can we help the Malians address governance challenges throughout the country so that grievances elsewhere don’t fuel conflict?

Answer. The Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali, while focusing on the conflict in Mali’s north, calls for regulatory, legislative, and constitutional measures to decentralize power to all regions in the country. Measures include the establishment of elected regional assemblies, elected local councils and mayors, and a second chamber of Parliament. The United States supports the Algiers Accord, particularly provisions giving greater power to people at the regional and local levels and helping establish positive state presence throughout the country.

Poor governance is a critical factor in driving much of the conflict in Mali and remains an obstacle for economic development. Our democracy, human rights, and governance activities in Mali improve civil society’s capacity for oversight functions and strengthen Malian Government systems to reduce administrative corruption in the justice and public finance sectors. The United States also focuses on reforming governance in the security sector through the Security Governance Initiative. While there are no easy solutions, if confirmed, I will continue these efforts.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DENNIS WALTER HEARNE BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Mozambique has set general elections for October 2019: What will be the biggest challenge to the administration of elections? As it stands, are political conditions conducive to credible elections? What program and activities is the United States engaged in in the areas of democracy and human rights in Mozambique, and which of those activities is aimed specifically at supporting credible elections? What specific actions will you take, if confirmed, to support credible elections in Mozambique?

Answer. Both the nationwide municipal elections in October 2018 and the general elections in October 2019 will be the first held within the framework of the decentralization reforms agreed to as part of the peace process between the ruling and main opposition parties. In 2019, voters will for the first time ever elect—through a party list system—provincial governors, who were previously appointed by the president. It will also be the first general election since the August 2018 agreement governing the disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration of Renamo combatants went into effect.

As a result, the importance of free, fair, and credible elections that all parties can accept will be higher than ever, and international and domestic observers will be watching them closely, which should encourage transparency. The U.S. Government provides development assistance to strengthen democracy, human rights, and governance through a variety of activities and programs to attain an inclusive and transparent government accountable to its constitution and its citizens and to support civil society’s engagement in electoral transparency and related issues. Some projects support activities to increase women’s participation in electoral processes and train stakeholders on conflict resolution and mitigation of electoral violence. If confirmed, I would expect to mount a major U.S. Embassy election observation effort in coordination with other foreign missions for the general election in 2019, as the embassy is doing for the 2018 municipal elections. I would also continue the embassy’s regular engagement with Mozambique’s National Elections Commission, political parties, and election-related civil society organizations, who are working hard to increase transparency and efficiency in the electoral system.

Question 2. Little is known about the origins and aims of the terrorist group known as Ansar al Sunna: How large is the group, and what motives drive recruitment? Are members all of Mozambican origin? Are there any links to major transnational terrorist groups? What should the U.S. be doing to help enhance the capability of national security forces to prevent and respond to attacks by the group and to prosecute members of the group? What types of countering violent extremism programs and activities are the State Department and USAID undertaking in Mozambique? If confirmed, what actions will you take as Ambassador to help Mozambique’s efforts to counter the growing terrorist threat?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to prioritize assistance to help Mozambique counter this growing threat. The United States has been engaged on this issue since the first attacks in October 2017, carried out by primarily homegrown Islamic extremists. Growing access to the internet among impoverished, disenfranchised youth is facilitating self-radicalization, while Mozambican law enforcement remains ill-equipped to deal with the complex challenges of extremism. Some foreigners have been arrested in conjunction with the attacks. We are closely monitoring reports that the group may have links to international terrorist organizations. The pace, scale, and geographic reach of the attacks suggest the group numbers no more than a few hundred members.

Two interagency teams have traveled to post to date to conduct assessments and develop specific U.S. Government programming recommendations to assist the Mozambican Government. At the request of the Mozambican Government, the United States increased Mozambique’s participation in regional counter-terrorism initiatives and training and added Mozambique as a member of the Partnership for Regional East Africa Counterterrorism. The United States has also initiated support to civil society organizations seeking to address the root causes of extremism among young people and to improve dialogue with local government and security forces. If confirmed, I will use all appropriate and available U.S. Government resources to help our Mozambican partners better understand and counter this threat.

Question 3. The 2018 State Department Trafficking in Persons Report classifies Mozambique as Tier Two: What activities and programs does the U.S. Government engage in aimed at building the capacity of the labor inspectorate and the Women and Children’s Victim Assistance Units to investigate trafficking cases? What support have we provided to train officials to investigate and prosecute those facilitating child sex trafficking or adult forced prostitution? If confirmed, what specific actions will you recommend we support to help Mozambique improve its efforts to stop trafficking in persons?

Answer. If confirmed, I will fully support efforts to build the capacity of the Mozambican Government to monitor and combat trafficking in persons (TIP). The Government of the Republic of Mozambique improved the management of human trafficking cases in 2017, resulting in its removal from the Department of State’s TIP Watchlist, which it had been on for two consecutive years. The U.S. Embassy in Maputo engages regularly with the Attorney General, who serves as the key focal point and coordinator on trafficking issues, and Mozambique is close to approving a long-awaited National Action Plan and the National Referral Mechanism for countering human trafficking. The embassy recently sent two Mozambican prosecutors to the United States for an American Bar Association Rule of Law Institute exchange on anti-TIP issues, resulting in action plans for improving investigation and prosecution of all child trafficking crimes, and the embassy will send another prosecutor to the United States on a TIP-related International Visitors Leadership Program next year.

A two-year program funded by the Department of State aimed at building the capacity of provincial-level coordinating bodies to combat TIP resulted in improved capacity of immigration officials to identify TIP victims and the upgrading of three shelters for unaccompanied minors returned to Mozambique’s borders or repatriated, mostly from South Africa. The Department of State will also invite Mozambican Government officials to participate in a Human Trafficking and Child Exploitation Course at the International Law Enforcement Academy in Gaborone, Botswana. If confirmed, I will encourage Mozambique’s continued participation in such training and other initiatives to help Mozambique continue its efforts to stop trafficking in persons.

Question 4. In 2016, the Government of Mozambique reported over $2 billion in off-budget state borrowing to the International Monetary Fund (IMF), breaching the Government’s obligations under the IMF’s concessional lending program. The loans were partly derived from bonds issued by Russian banks, and were kept secret on national security grounds. Though the World Bank and demanded an audit, the Government restricted the auditor’s access to data related to the loans. The audit found that about 10 percent of the loans went to bank and other fees, but could not fully document disposition of the funds:

- Do the IMF and World Bank believe there is undisclosed debt in addition to the $2 billion reported in 2016? Are we aware of any debt the Government might owe to China? If so, what is the amount of debt owed? If confirmed, what steps will you recommend we take working through the IMF and World Bank to ensure that Mozambique is transparent about the amount of debt it owes to other creditors and other countries?

Answer. We have seen no indication to date of additional undisclosed debt, but we are obviously watching the situation closely and in regular contact with the relevant authorities. We have seen unofficial reports that Mozambique may owe the Chinese up to $2 billion, primarily for Chinese-financed infrastructure projects, including a $725 million bridge in Maputo, roads, airports, and other projects, but China (or Chinese banks) was not among the lenders in the $2 billion illicit debt scandal. The United States has supported IMF demands for additional information and for reform and further transparency in the wake of the hidden debt scandal, and, if confirmed, I will continue with this policy and encourage all other major donors to do the same.

The United States consistently highlights to Mozambican officials the hazards of taking on unsustainable levels of debt, including debt acquired through Chinese-financed projects, and I would continue highlighting this issue, if confirmed.

Question 5. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Mozambique?
Question 6. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have worked to promote democracy and human rights throughout my 33-year Foreign Service career, and I will continue to do so as Ambassador, if confirmed. While serving in the Balkans during the war in the early 1990s, I helped establish and operate the Bosnian refugee program for the United States, which eventually resettled in safety over 130,000 victims of war crimes, ethnic cleansing, and persecution. I established and operated other corollary programs for medical and humanitarian evacuation and rescue of Bosnians and Croatians from war zones. During the war, I reported on major human rights issues, notably in the aftermath of Operation Storm, the major Croatian operation into the Serb Krajina. After the war, I worked for two years with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) in The Hague. At the ICTY, I participated directly in the investigations and preparation of indictments for multiple war crimes suspects. Moreover, I helped establish and then was the principal operational liaison for a dedicated special operations activity, which forcibly detained in former Yugoslavia and transferred to The Hague for trial dozens of persons indicted for war crimes.

In Afghanistan, at both the combat level while serving as an advisor with U.S. airborne infantry units in the eastern provinces, and later on the senior policy level as Deputy Chief of Mission, I persistently emphasized the necessity of genuine democratic progress, improved governance and respect for human rights in all aspects of our national effort and strategy.

Question 7. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Mozambique? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Strengthening democratic governance is essential to building a more peaceful and prosperous Mozambique. Mozambique's post-civil war democratic development was hampered by episodic armed conflict between the Frelimo-led Government and the main opposition party Renamo for more than two decades. A recently concluded peace agreement that foresees the demilitarization of Mozambique's main opposition party and a decentralization process creating elected local, district, and provincial governments provides a unique opportunity for the United States to help Mozambique consolidate its democracy and achieve durable peace. If confirmed, promoting democracy and respect for human rights will be among my highest priorities as Ambassador. I commit to continuing the work of my predecessor and his team to support the peace process and advocate for political inclusion and the rule of law for long-term peace and stability in Mozambique.

Question 8. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Mozambique? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The recently achieved peace agreement presents a particularly significant opportunity for U.S. engagement to support democracy in Mozambique. Sustained U.S. support in strengthening democratic norms, processes, and institutions as the country pursues decentralization and in implementing the demilitarization, demobilization, and reintegration process envisioned for the country's peace agreement will be critical to overcoming decades of political conflict and ensuring a durable peace.

Continuing my predecessor's strong support for the peace process will be among my highest priorities, if confirmed. Supporting the two tracks (decentralization and demilitarization) of the nascent and fragile peace agreement, particularly as it weathers the critical test of national elections (president, legislative, and provincial) in October 2019 will unquestionably be a major challenge not just for the United States but for all of Mozambique's international partners. If confirmed, I will fully support these and other efforts to ensure a democratic, peaceful, and prosperous Mozambique.

Question 9. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Strengthening democracy and governance is essential to building a more peaceful and prosperous Mozambique. Mozambique's post-war economic gains have not been evenly distributed, thus extreme poverty remains pervasive. Political inclusion, respect for human rights, and the rule of law remain weak, undermining the country's long-term prospects for peace and stability. The continued convergence between the state and the ruling party has constrained democratic debate and led to endemic corruption at all levels of government. Local civilian capacity to press for reforms will require continued donor technical assistance and funding.

If confirmed, I would work with the embassy team, using a whole-of-government approach, to promote accountable, transparent, and effective democratic governance across all sectors. I will ensure the effective and efficient use of State Department and USAID resources to strengthen democracy, human rights, and governance through activities that educate magistrates and justice officials on anti-corruption laws, train journalists, improve the organizational capacities of civil society to hold their government accountable, encourage greater political participation among women and youth, and aid election observation efforts. I would also utilize the full arsenal of public diplomacy tools, including the strategic use of speaker and grant programs, to support democracy, transparency, and good governance.

Question 10. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Mozambique? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, I will as I have throughout my career. If confirmed, I will urge the Mozambican Government to increase political space for all stakeholders and seek ways to strengthen judicial independence. I will also work to increase capacity to uphold Mozambique’s constitution and laws, which provide for an independent and impartial judiciary and enshrine certain rights and freedoms. I will also continue the mission’s work to provide institutional and individual support for democratic rights through civil society and human rights organizations that advocate for legal and regulatory reforms.

Question 11. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties and will advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth in the political process. I would seek to continue the efforts of our current Ambassador in Mozambique and his team, which include regularly meeting with women and youth leaders to discuss political, economic, social, and health issues. I would also continue embassy efforts that focus on women’s political, economic, and social participation. These include entrepreneurship and mentoring programs and support to local NGOs to promote increased female political participation, change the stereotypes and cultural norms that negatively affect women in society, and promote legislation to prevent and combat violence against women.

If confirmed, I would lead embassy efforts to support the decentralization piece of the peace agreement with programming aimed at the efficient functioning of the newly decentralized provincial and local governments, which could serve as an important element in ensuring democratic development and increased political competition.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Mozambique on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Mozambique?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage on a regular basis with government-owned and independent media, promote freedom of the press, and address any attempts to undermine or limit press freedom or control media content. I will also commit to use all methods at our disposal to build professional capacity within media institutions. Mozambique currently has a number of independent print and electronic media outlets, which regularly carry reporting and editorials that could be viewed as critical of the Government, government officials, and the ruling party on a host of issues without reprisal.

Despite many positive developments, I remain concerned that those responsible for murders or physical attacks on prominent journalists and political commentators have not been identified and brought to justice. Allowing those responsible for such high-profile crimes to escape with impunity will have a negative impact on press freedom in Mozambique. If confirmed, I will advocate for an end to violence against... journalists, and would hope to work closely with the Mozambican Government to urge successful investigations and prosecutions in these outstanding cases and to ensure that press freedom is respected.

Question 13. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes. Misinformation and disinformation challenges have arisen in Mozambique. If confirmed, I will continue our mission’s support for digital and information security and work with government and civil society partners to respond promptly in correcting the record when necessary.

Question 14. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Mozambique on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, we will actively engage on the right of labor groups to organize, and meet with trade union leaders on a regular basis. It is my understanding that the Mozambican constitution and laws provide for freedom of peaceful assembly and association and for workers, with limited exceptions, to form and join independent trade unions, conduct legal strikes, and bargain collectively, and these rights are generally respected. This is important as labor unions have historically played a key role in advocating for broader fundamental human rights in addition to worker rights in Mozambique and in other countries.

Question 15. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Mozambique, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Mozambique? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Mozambique?

Answer. Yes. I commit to using my position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Mozambique, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity. In Mozambique, there is societal discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity. Antidiscrimination laws in Mozambique protect LGBTI persons only from employment discrimination. No hate-crime laws or other criminal justice mechanisms exist to aid in the prosecution of bias-motivated crimes against LGBTI persons. Since 2008, the Government has failed to take action on Mozambique’s only LGBTI civil society organization, LAMBDA’s, request to register locally. Discrimination in public medical facilities has been reported. Medical staff sometimes chastise LGBTI individuals for their sexual orientation when they seek treatment.

If confirmed, I will promote the rights of LGBTI persons and all people of Mozambique, and will continue to report on developments on this issue in post’s annual human rights report.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Dennis Walter Hearne by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have worked to promote democracy and human rights throughout my 33-year Foreign Service career, and I will continue to do so as Ambassador, if confirmed. While serving in the Balkans during the war in the early 1990s, I helped establish and operate the Bosnian refugee program for the United States, which eventually resettled in safety over 130,000 victims of war crimes, ethnic cleansing, and persecution. I established and operated other corollary programs for medical and humanitarian evacuation and rescue of Bosnians and Croatians from war zones. During the war, I reported on major human rights issues, notably in the aftermath of Operation Storm, the major Croatian operation into the Serb Krajina. After the war, I worked for two years with the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) in The Hague. At the ICTY, I participated directly in the investigations and preparation of indictments for multiple war crimes suspects. Moreover, I helped establish and then was the principal operational liaison for a dedicated special operations activity, which forcibly detained in former Yugoslavia and transferred to The Hague for trial dozens of persons indicted for war crimes.

In Afghanistan, at both the combat level while serving as an advisor with U.S. airborne infantry units in the eastern provinces, and later on the senior policy level as Deputy Chief of Mission, I persistently emphasized the necessity of genuine democratic progress, improved governance and respect for human rights in all aspects of our national effort and strategy.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Mozambique? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Mozambique? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The two most pressing human rights concerns in Mozambique are arbitrary arrest and detention and the lack of investigative follow-up on unresolved crimes against prominent opposition politicians, their supporters, and journalists, which calls into question police commitment to solving politically motivated crimes. I understand the Attorney General’s Office in Mozambique has taken steps to review cases of arbitrary arrest and detention, which has led to the release of some who were detained contrary to existing law and procedures, but not all cases have been resolved.

The Government and police leadership have publicly expressed commitment to thorough investigations in many of the unresolved cases of crimes against prominent opposition politicians, their supporters, and journalists. However, these commitments have not yet resulted in identification, arrest, or prosecution of those responsible.

Specifically, if confirmed, I hope to work closely with the Mozambican Government and civil society to urge thorough and successful investigations and prosecutions in the outstanding cases against prominent opposition politicians, their supporters, and journalists. More generally, if confirmed, I would work with the embassy team, using a whole-of-government approach, to promote accountable, transparent, and effective democratic governance across all sectors to build a more peaceful and prosperous Mozambique. This would include utilizing the full arsenal of public diplomacy tools, including the strategic use of speaker and grant programs, to support democracy, human rights, transparency, and good governance.

If confirmed, I will advocate for an end to violence against journalists and work closely with the Mozambican Government toward successful investigations and prosecutions in the outstanding cases of murders or physical attacks on prominent journalists and political commentators. Those responsible for these high-profile crimes should not be permitted to escape with impunity, as this has a negative impact on press freedom and basic human rights.

More broadly, if confirmed, I will ensure the effective use of U.S. Government resources to strengthen democracy, human rights, and governance through activities that educate magistrates and justice officials on anti-corruption laws, train journalists, improve the organizational capacities of civil society to hold the Government accountable, encourage greater political participation among women and youth, and aid election observation efforts.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Mozambique in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. While the Government has taken steps to investigate, prosecute, and punish some individuals who have committed abuses, impunity remains a problem at all levels. Many crimes against prominent opposition politicians, supporters, and journalists remain unsolved, which calls into question local authorities’ commitment to seek justice in these cases. A shortage of prosecutors, judges, and other legal professionals also exists, and some civil society groups assert that the executive branch exerts influence on the understaffed and inadequately trained judiciary.

If confirmed, I would hope to work closely with the Mozambican Government to promote the rule of law and respect for human rights, and urge thorough and successful investigations and prosecutions in outstanding cases. Political inclusion, respect for human rights, and the rule of law remain weak, undermining the country’s long-term prospects for peace and stability. The continued convergence between the state and the ruling party has constrained democratic debate and led to endemic corruption at all levels of government. Local civilian capacity to press for reforms will require continued donor technical assistance and funding.

If confirmed, I will work to increase capacity to uphold Mozambique’s constitution and laws, which provide for an independent and impartial judiciary and enshrine certain rights and freedoms. I will also continue the mission’s work to provide institutional and individual support for democratic rights through civil society and human rights organizations that advocate for legal and regulatory reforms.
Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Mozambique? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, I am committed to engaging with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Mozambique, as I have proactively done throughout my career.

If confirmed, I will fully support the Leahy Law and similar efforts and ensure that U.S. security assistance and security cooperation reinforce respect for human rights. I will ensure that my staff do the same.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Mozambique to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Mozambique?

Answer. Yes. The most recent State Department Human Rights Report did not identify any cases of political prisoners or detainees in Mozambique. However, if I am confirmed, my team and I will actively engage with the Government of the Republic of Mozambique to address any cases of political prisoners or others unjustly targeted which may arise in the future. I will continue to advocate for the respect of fundamental human rights and for all persons to receive timely, fair, and equitable access to justice in Mozambique.

Question 6. Will you engage with Mozambique on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I also commit to engage with Mozambique on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance. I would consider this central to my role as the U.S. Ambassador.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Mozambique?

Answer. No. Neither I, nor members of my immediate family have financial interests in Mozambique.

Question 10. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Diversity and inclusion are core principals of the Department of State, and I firmly believe that embracing diversity promotes stronger teams and a workplace culture that values the efforts of all individuals, increases our capabilities and creativity, and enhances the professional experiences of all of our staff. As has been the case throughout my career, if confirmed, I would reaffirm my commitment to recruiting, mentoring, and supporting employees from different backgrounds and experiences, and ensure the strict adherence to equal employment opportunity principles. I consider it a duty and a privilege to position a broad range of officers for success in the profession that has afforded me tremendous opportunities. I would actively promote a diverse, inclusive, and professionally fulfilled workforce at the U.S. Embassy in Maputo.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. As called for in the Department's precepts, I will cultivate an environment that values diversity and respect for equal employment opportunity and merit principles. I will model those behaviors and hold those under my direction to the very highest standards in accordance with Department regulations and the law.

Answer. Corruption undermines the rule of law, democratic governance, accountability, and sustainable development. It breaches the contract between citizens and public officials and diverts national resources needed to improve the lives of a country’s citizens to enrich a few. Corruption erodes the people’s confidence in government and its institutions, disrupts the provision of public services, and has a powerful negative effect on foreign investment by destroying investor confidence and impeding productivity, stifling a country’s economic growth.

Strengthening democratic governance is essential to building a more peaceful and prosperous Mozambique. With the promise of significant government revenues in the next five to ten years flowing from Mozambique’s vast natural gas reserves, the United States has a unique opportunity to support good governance, strong and independent institutions, and a robust civil society to ensure that resource-derived revenues are used for the public good rather than the betterment of a few. Additionally, with a new peace agreement in place and demilitarization underway, increased focus on political inclusion and the rule of law will be essential to long-term peace and stability. If confirmed, these will be among my highest priorities.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Mozambique and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Corruption is a serious and pervasive issue in Mozambique. Systemic weaknesses in transparency and accountability have facilitated corruption and need to be addressed, particularly before the arrival of government revenues from Mozambique’s vast natural gas reserves. Building government systems and civil society capacity to enable necessary reforms will require continued development partner technical assistance and funding.

Mozambique’s President Filipe Nyusi recently launched an anti-corruption campaign, and the Mozambican Government continues reform discussions with the International Monetary Fund. Both provide avenues through which the United States can productively engage on government transparency and accountability.

Answer. If I am confirmed, promoting transparency and strengthening national institutions and civil society will be a key part of my work in Mozambique. I would anticipate employing a whole-of-government approach working with Mozambican partners to improve accountable, transparent, and effective governance across all sectors. I would encourage regular inclusion of transparency and accountability themes in our embassy’s public outreach efforts and continue the embassy’s engagement with civil society and Mozambican Government partners on these critical issues.

Long-term growth and stability depends upon investor confidence and the active participation of the Mozambican Government and public in ensuring the responsible and sustainable use of revenue.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Dennis Walter Hearne by Senator Cory A. Booker

Question 1. There has been a long simmering conflict in Mozambique between the socialist FRELIMO ruling party against RENAMO, a guerrilla group first formed as a proxy of the white regime in Rhodesia. Direct talks between President Nyusi and the RENAMO leadership led to an early 2018 deal—albeit one requiring constitutional changes—calling for decentralization reforms. Parliament, however, conditioned passage of implementing legislation on a prospective separate deal on the demobilization and military integration of RENAMO fighters.

- To what extent are the two deals being implemented? What is your view on whether they are likely or not to definitively end the conflict? What further RENAMO-Government talks on other issues, if any, are expected?

Answer. A cessation of hostilities between the FRELIMO-led Government and the main opposition party RENAMO has held since December 2016. This, coupled with the successful conclusion of peace negotiations in August 2018, creates the opportunity for genuine reconciliation in Mozambique. Formal negotiations between the parties have ended, and the process has now advanced to the implementation phase.

As the question highlights, direct talks between President Nyusi and the late RENAMO leader Afonso Dhlakama led to the approval of constitutional amendments in May 2018 aimed at implementing a decentralization agreement, addressing a key RENAMO demand. These amendments open the door to opposition parties being able to govern the provinces and districts in which they earn a majority of votes, and the creation of elected local; district; and provincial governments provides an opportunity to assist Mozambique in consolidating its democracy. The first test of the decentralization agreement will be the October 2018 municipal elections, for which the U.S. Embassy in Maputo will field multiple teams of observers.

In August 2018, the parties concluded an agreement on the second and final element of the peace process—the demilitarization, demobilization, and reintegration (DDR) of RENAMO combatants—offering a real chance at achieving sustainable peace in Mozambique after decades of conflict. Under the terms of the DDR accord, the Government and RENAMO agreed to the integration of a small number of leaders from RENAMO's armed wing into senior leadership positions in the national armed forces and police, followed by the integration of several hundred personnel into both national security institutions and the demobilization and disarmament of the remainder of its forces. A small group of international partners, including the United States, has already responded affirmatively to an invitation by President Nyusi to provide experts to assist with monitoring the implementation of the DDR agreement, which will begin in October.

Supporting the two tracks (decentralization and demilitarization) of the nascent and fragile peace agreement and continuing the exceptional work of my predecessor and his team in this area will be among my highest priorities as Ambassador, if confirmed. Sustained U.S. and international support both for both processes will be critical for long-term peace and stability.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SIMON HENSHAW BY SENATOR ROBERET MENENDEZ

Question 1. What is the budget for democracy and governance in Guinea? What activities does it support? What activities are we supporting to help ensure credible legislative elections in 2019? What specific steps will you take, if confirmed as Ambassador, to support credible elections?

Answer. In Fiscal Year 2017, U.S. foreign assistance provided $3.0 million in support of good governance and political competition activities. These funds will improve citizens' understanding and participation in legal governance reform efforts and the accountability of elected and appointed officials both at the national and local levels. Activities will expand opportunities for citizen involvement and oversight as well as encourage a public dialogue on the importance of transparent political competition in order to rebuild public trust in the Government of Guinea.

The U.S. Embassy in Conakry continues to work with the Government, the ruling coalition, the opposition, and civil society groups to encourage dialogue, respect for the democratic process, and interethnic cooperation during Guinea's ongoing transition to democracy.

If confirmed, I will continue, and where appropriate, expand upon, the consistent and robust engagement we have with all legitimate actors in the run-up to the national legislative elections, notionally scheduled for 2019. This includes support of the Independent National Electoral Commission (CENI) and civil society efforts. We will also have Embassy observers on the ground during the legislative elections and coordinate our efforts with the international community, including but not limited to the Economic Community of West African States, the United Nations, and the European Union.

Question 2. In September 2009, security forces allegedly killed at least 150 protesters and raped more than 100 women while suppressing a peaceful protest against the military junta in what became known as the “stadium massacre.” In late 2017, a panel of Guinean judges concluded an investigation into the massacre:

Has anyone been held accountable for the so called stadium massacre? Has there been a credible investigation and or prosecution of those responsible for the killing of seven protestors in February of 2017 or the 2016 death of Thierno Hamidou Diallo? What role should the U.S. play in supporting accountability? What steps will you take, if confirmed, to foster accountability in the security sector?

Answer. Through participation in the Comité de Pilotage, the steering committee responsible for organizing the trial for the 2009 stadium massacre, and continued Embassy outreach, we continue to encourage and work with the Government of Guinea on holding the perpetrators of the 2009 stadium massacre accountable and on the organization of a fair trial. The Department of State has also allocated funds to assist Guinea with holding the trial. We are working with the United Nations, the European Union, and Guinean victim advocacy groups to help bring those responsible to justice.

We recognize that Guinea has had a long and unfortunate history that has encompassed grievous human rights violations and other atrocities. The current democratically elected government has committed itself to national reconciliation and the improvement of human rights in the country. As part of our support for human rights and national reconciliation, the United States Government has supported numerous training programs for law enforcement in the area of modern police techniques that respect human rights. The Department of State also funds security sector reform advisors in the Ministries of Security and Defense, who help support and implement police accountability and respect for human rights.

If confirmed, I will engage with the Government of Guinea on the need to continue progress in dealing with the tragedies of the past and preventing such abuses in the future. If confirmed, I will also support our Guinean friends in their own efforts to modernize and reform their security and law enforcement services.

Question 3. The 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report lists Guinea as Tier Two Watch List. Are there any State Department programs that are aimed at training magistrates and prosecutors in the lower courts on the new articles related to trafficking in the 2016 penal code? What steps will you take to ensure that the Government of Guinea holds complicit officials accountable for crimes related to trafficking? If confirmed, what specific steps can you take as Ambassador to raise public awareness about trafficking, including forced child labor?

Answer. While Guinea does not meet the Trafficking Victims Protection Act’s Minimum Standards for the Elimination of Trafficking in Persons, the Government of Guinea demonstrated significant efforts in the 2018 TIP reporting period to merit an upgrade to Tier 2 Watch List.

The Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (TIP) and Embassy Conakry are working with U.N. Office on Drugs and Crimes to deliver two five-day training courses for police, border officials, labor inspectors, prosecutors, and magistrates on victim-centered investigation and prosecution of human trafficking cases, with a special focus on the 2016 penal code trafficking articles. If confirmed, I will continue on-going coordination efforts with the TIP office and our international partners on future training opportunities for the Government of Guinea.

During the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report reporting period, the Government of Guinea prosecuted and convicted 18 individuals in four cases. Of the 18 convicted traffickers, one received a suspended sentence while 17 received non-suspended sentences; eight traffickers received sentences of at least two years’ imprisonment. This is an improvement from the 2017 TIP Report reporting period, when only four suspects were charged and three were convicted. Those three all received suspended sentences. Yet despite the progress, law enforcement capacity and victim protection efforts remained low.

If confirmed, I will work to encourage the Government to continue taking action against human trafficking, including through raising awareness and enlisting the support of communities and local government to address this crime.

Question 4. Will you commit, if confirmed, to ensuring that you fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when you are in Washington for visits or consultations during your tenure as Ambassador to Guinea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will fully brief Members of Congress and/or their staff when I am in Washington for official consultations.

Question 5. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My work on the El Salvador Desk and then as political officer in El Salvador from 1991 to 1996 supported the end of the war and the establishment of a freely elected government. I worked closely with the political parties formed by the ex-guerrillas, including pushing for investigations of all human rights abuses. In Honduras, as Deputy Chief of Mission from 2008 to 2011, I supported and implemented our policy to reject the coup d’état against the Government and to support free elections to restore democracy. In my first tour in the Philippines, 1985 to 1987, I assisted in organizing and participated in political reporting teams that spread around the country to cover the Marcos/Aquino election. As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary and then Acting Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM), I promoted U.S. humanitarian policies worldwide. I was instrumental in pushing several first asylum countries to expand employment and educational opportunities for large refugee populations. I also quickly brought

Answer. Guinea’s democratic development continues to face numerous challenges, as it remains in the early stages of a transition from decades of authoritarian rule. The challenges include, but are not limited to, creating a culture and tradition of adherence and respect for constitutional and democratic norms, including due process, combatting official impunity and corruption, increasing transparency in the governing and legislative process, and ongoing efforts to reform the security and police services.

Question 7. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Guinea? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, my priorities will include continuing our work with Guinea to develop strong government institutions, and promote inclusive, effective, and participatory governance. I am also committed to continuing U.S. participation in the Comité de Suivi, the national political roundtable created to encourage dialog and peaceful dispute resolution between political parties, government authorities, non-governmental organizations, civil society groups, and international observers. In addition to promoting dialogue and consensus, if confirmed, I will work to strengthen the capacity and structure of political parties; expand civic and voter education; and enhance the monitoring of electoral systems.

It is my hope that if confirmed as Ambassador to Guinea, these efforts, along with those from other international governmental and non-governmental partners, will help solidify a solid democratic political foundation for Guineans to nurture and cultivate their young democracy. While it is inevitable that challenges and other bumps on the road will happen, as with the creation of any national political culture, I am convinced that the United States, along with our Guinean and other international partners, can play a positive role in democracy’s taking root in Guinea and West Africa. If confirmed, I will be committed to keeping the United States as a reliable partner in Guinea’s efforts to strengthen its democracy.

Question 8. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. Government assistance will target good governance, the reinforcement of democratic processes, and improved access to justice. By assisting those Guinean institutions which fight against inequity, encourage public accountability and transparency, and counter the drivers of violence and instability, we will be strengthening citizen-responsive governance, democracy, and human rights. Specifically, our past work with non-governmental organizations, the National Assembly, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Territorial Administration and Decentralization, the Ministry of Justice, and the Ministry of Security and Civil Protection have demonstrated how much of an impact we can have when we carefully target our efforts to supporting rule of law, transparency, and democratic processes.

If confirmed as Ambassador, I intend for our assistance programs to prioritize those efforts which will prove the most beneficial in the long term to strengthening democracy, justice, and governance programs, while seeking to maximize cost efficiencies and avoid duplication with other U.S. Government or international donor efforts.

Question 9. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Guinea? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador to Guinea, I will engage with members of civil society, human rights and other NGOs, whether in Guinea or in the United States. I will also pro-actively engage the Government of Guinea to address any situation in which NGOs or other civil society organizations are restricted or penalized by the authorities. We will continue to prioritize the protection and defense of civil society, including all human rights defenders.
Question 10. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, my priorities will include regular meetings with all democratically oriented political actors. I will use all tools at my disposal to encourage the creation and maintenance of an inclusive and transparent political system, dedicated to democracy, and accessible to women, minorities, and the youth.

The U.S. Embassy in Conakry has taken and continues to take deliberate and concrete steps to foster gender equality, empower women and girls, and encourage their participation in all spheres of Guinean political and civil life. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. Mission to Guinea continues to make efforts to include women, girls, ethnic and religious minorities, young people, and other underrepresented groups in our programming efforts. In addition, I am committed to combating gender-based violence, abuse, and female genital mutilation (FGM)—one of the most widespread and damaging human rights abuses in Guinea. I will also prioritize women's and girls' access to and participation in the education, justice, health care, and economic sectors.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Guinea on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Guinea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support all efforts to advance press freedom. In addition, if confirmed, I will meet with independent media and local press as part of our Embassy's efforts to reinforce a free and open media environment in Guinea.

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring the embassy remains actively engaged with government counterparts and members of civil society to counter any disinformation or propaganda disseminated by any foreign or non-state actors. Given how damaging disinformation campaigns can be, we will remain vigilant should any such methods of propaganda emerge in Guinea, particularly as we approach legislative and presidential elections.

Question 13. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Guinea on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Guinea has a long history of labor activism. Currently, major industries, including the mining, port, public service, and transportation sectors all have active unions. In many cases, unions have freely organized and executed demonstrations against government policies. If confirmed, I will continue our long-standing engagement with the Guinean labor movement, independent trade unions, and other non-governmental organizations dedicated to defending labor rights under the law.

Question 14. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Guinea, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Guinea? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Guinea?

Answer. Guinea is a tolerant, multi-ethnic, multi-religious society. I am not aware of any acts of violence or intimidation against anyone in Guinea based on their sexual orientation, or gender identity.

If confirmed, I will use my office to highlight the strengths of diversity and acceptance of all people for who they are. The United States is rightfully proud of the strides we have made, and continue to make, in living up to our founding principle that everyone is equal under the eyes of the law. I believe that if confirmed, I can use the persuasive power of the Embassy to help Guineans begin to address this important issue.
Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My work on the El Salvador Desk and then as political officer in El Salvador from 1991 to 1996 supported the end of the war and the establishment of a freely elected government. I worked closely with the political parties formed by the ex-guerrillas, including pushing for investigations of all human rights abuses. In Honduras, as Deputy Chief of Mission from 2008 to 2011, I supported and implemented our policy to reject the coup d'état against the Government and to support free elections to restore democracy. In my first tour in the Philippines, 1985 to 1987, I assisted in organizing and participated in political reporting teams that spread around the country to cover the Marcos/Aquino election. As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary and then Acting Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM), I promoted U.S. humanitarian policies worldwide. I was instrumental in pushing several first asylum countries to expand employment and educational opportunities for large refugee populations. I also quickly brought U.S. resources to bear to respond to the Rohingya crisis, visiting both Bangladesh and Burma to focus attention on the issue.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Guinea? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Guinea? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Guinea’s democratic development continues to face numerous challenges, as it remains in the early stages of a transition from decades of authoritarian rule. The challenges include, but are not limited to, creating a culture and tradition of adherence and respect for constitutional and democratic norms, including due process; combating official impunity and corruption; increasing transparency in the governing and legislative process; and reforming the security and police services.

If confirmed, my priorities will include continuing to work with the Government of Guinea and civil society organizations to develop strong government institutions and promote inclusive, effective, and participatory governance. I am also committed to continuing active U.S. participation in the Comité de Suivi, the national political roundtable created to encourage dialogue and peaceful dispute resolution between political parties, government authorities, non-governmental organizations, civil society groups, and international observers. In addition to promoting dialogue and consensus, if confirmed, I will continue to work to strengthen the capacity and structure of political parties; expand civic and voter education; and enhance the monitoring of electoral systems.

It is my hope that if confirmed as Ambassador to Guinea, these efforts, along with those from other international governmental and non-governmental partners, will help solidify a solid democratic political foundation for Guineans to nurture and cultivate their young democracy. While it is inevitable that challenges will remain, as with the creation of any national political culture, I am convinced that the United States, along with our Guinean and other international partners, can play a positive role in democracy taking root in Guinea and West Africa. If confirmed, I will be committed to keeping the United States a reliable partner in Guinea’s struggle for democracy.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Guinea in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Guinea’s democratic development continues to face numerous challenges as it remains in the early stages of a transition from decades of authoritarian rule. The challenges include, but are not limited to, promoting greater adherence to the constitution and democratic norms, including due process and sound policy making; countering deeply entrenched mismanagement and corruption at all levels of government; and advancing security sector reform.

The challenges in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general stem from decades of authoritarian government and general mismanagement. Advancing civic education should, over time, improve civic culture, thereby reducing at least some of the challenges Guinea faces, including the lack of understanding of basic constitutional and democratic norms; the prevalence of corruption and impunity; and the need for transparency in governing and the legislative process.
Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Guinea? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed as Ambassador to Guinea, I will engage with members of civil society, human rights organizations, and other NGOs, whether in Guinea or in the United States.

Further, if confirmed, I will proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights. The Leahy laws are based on a basic principle: a government security apparatus’ respect for human rights bolsters its legitimacy and trustworthiness and enhances its ability to protect its citizens. Moreover, holding violators accountable fortifies the rule of law, which is key to improving governance in Guinea. If confirmed, I will work with the team at our Embassy in Conakry to convey this message forthrightly and consistently to the Government of Guinea at all levels. The Department of State vets all assistance to security forces in Guinea in accordance with the Leahy Law, without exception. If confirmed, I will ensure that our vetting continues to be comprehensive, thorough, and in full compliance with the Leahy Law, and that any units whose members violate human rights are restricted from receiving any training or other assistance until the responsible actors are brought to justice. I will strongly urge Government of Guinea to hold any violators accountable for their actions.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Guinea to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Guinea?

Answer. While currently there are no known political prisoners in Guinea, if confirmed, I will actively engage with the Government of Guinea to address any cases of known persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Guinea.

Question 6. Will you engage with Guinea on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will absolutely engage Guinean officials on human rights, civil rights, and governance issues as part of my bilateral mission.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Guinea?

Answer. Neither I nor any member of my immediate family, have any financial interests in Guinea.

Question 10. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to appoint staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups. I will mentor members of those groups, as I have in past assignments, and will work with them to help them advance their careers, including recommending promotion and future assignments.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will make clear that the EEO language in every employee’s work requirements will be considered an integral part of successful job performance during the evaluation period. I will regularly seek feedback from employees on their perceptions of their workplace environment and correct issues that detract from an inclusive workplace. I will recognize those employees who demonstrate exceptional EEO leadership.

Question 12. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Guinea specifically?

Answer. Poverty in Guinea is rooted in the deeply entrenched mismanagement and corruption of the state. Specifically, official corruption opens the door to human rights abuses and negatively affects good governance and the rule of law. For example, corruption and complicity by government agents in supporting the illicit drug trade in Guinea remain major impediments to international and local counter narcotics efforts.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Guinea and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Guinea has made significant strides to reduce the deeply entrenched corruption that exists at every level of government. For example, in July 2017, as a sign of its commitment to improving the business climate, Guinea passed an anti-corruption law. The Government has worked hard on transparency reforms, tackling corruption, and sustaining its commitment and leadership in the implementation of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI), in part in response to previous corruption scandals.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Guinea?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support Guinea’s continued efforts to combat corruption. I will also seek to advance human rights in Guinea by working with the Government to address the culture of impunity and official corruption that has opened the door to human rights abuses in the past. I will also support U.S. efforts that focus on developing stronger Guinean institutions that can effectively combat corruption, narcotics trafficking, and transnational crime.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SIMON HENSHAW BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. As with many African states North Korea has had long-standing relations with Guinea stemming from the 1960s and 70s. Over the past several years, the U.N. Panel of Experts responsible for monitoring compliance with U.N. sanctions on North Korea has identified a number of prohibited economic activities by North Korean individuals and enterprises in Guinea.

- What is your understanding of the current status of prohibited North Korean activities in Guinea and should we be doing more to address this issue?

Answer. The Guinean Government has indicated to us that relations with North Korea are a legacy of Guinea’s post-independence period and are more symbolic than policy driven. North Korea has an embassy in Conakry that is staffed with very few diplomats. The government of Guinea has not denied the existence of DPRK guest workers in the country and claims to be exploring ways to limit their presence.

The Department has raised the issue of Guinea’s relations with the DPRK, both economic and diplomatic, at the highest levels of government and will continue to raise the matter until Guinea is in full compliance of all U.N. Security Council resolutions aimed at the DPRK.
OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Senator JOHNSON. The hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order. I apologize for being late, and for the tardiness of this entire hearing.

We are gathered today to consider four nominations, the Ambassador to Cyprus, to Iceland, to Azerbaijan, and Bosnia and Herzegovina.

I want to welcome all the nominees. I want to thank them for their willingness to serve, your past service. I certainly want to welcome the families as well.

Because I am late, I will just ask that my opening statement be entered into the record. Suffice it to say these are incredibly important nations—countries to be represented by what I consider some excellent nominees here for the position.

[Senator Johnson's prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. RON JOHNSON,
U.S. SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN

Today’s nominees, if confirmed, will represent U.S. interests in four important relationships.

Iceland has been a U.S. ally for almost 70 years. In 1949, with a population of only 140,000 and without a standing army, Iceland became one of only twelve founding members of NATO. Iceland’s location astride the sea lanes between Greenland, Iceland, and the United Kingdom gave NATO control over the Soviet Baltic Fleet’s only access points to the North Atlantic—a critical asset throughout the Cold War. Iceland also became an important part of the U.S. early warning radar array in the Arctic. Russia’s destabilizing resurgence over the last several years has reemphasized Iceland’s enduring importance to NATO’s security. Russia has launched new classes of nuclear attack and ballistic missile submarines, modernized its nuclear arsenal, and declared expansive intentions in the Arctic. Strengthening our economic and political ties with Reykjavik and reinvesting in our longstanding defense partnership should be top foreign policy priorities.

Azerbaijan, like Iceland, punches well above its weight in international politics. The U.S. and Azerbaijan share common security and economic interests. After 9/11, Azerbaijan became an important U.S. partner in the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, providing troops and serving as a logistics hub supporting NATO and U.S. operations. With sizeable natural gas deposits in the Caspian Sea, Azerbaijan is also the key to U.S. efforts to open a southern gas corridor to Europe. However, these common interests are complicated by ongoing concerns about the state of democracy and human rights protections in Azerbaijan. Balancing this delicate relationship will require a deft touch from our Ambassador in Baku.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, though the economy has experienced around 3 percent annual growth for several years, the unemployment rate remains high and corruption is widespread. Bosnia's election next week may be a critical juncture in its history. The failure of this year's electoral reform efforts has cast doubt on whether a new government can be formed after the election. This difficult situation is complicated further by Milorad Dodik's separatist intrigues in Bosnia's Republika Srpska. Having an experienced American diplomat in Sarajevo will be important as Bosnia navigates these challenges and seeks to forge a durable political solution.

In Cyprus, the stalemate between Greek and Turkish Cypriots continues to be one of the most intractable disputes in international politics. Over nearly half a century, numerous multilateral and bilateral efforts to negotiate Cyprus' reunification have fallen short. The most recent effort appeared close to a breakthrough before it too collapsed in July 2017. The U.S. has significant interests in resolving this conflict. Cyprus continues to be a source of considerable tension between Greece and Turkey, negatively affecting NATO solidarity. Additionally, the discovery of considerable offshore natural gas deposits over the last decade have made Cyprus a major emerging energy player in the Mediterranean and an enticing option for weening Europe off its dependence on Russian gas.

Before moving to introductions, I would like to recognize the distinguished ranking member for his comments. Senator Murphy.

Senator JOHNSTON. So with that, I will turn it over to Senator Murphy.

STATEMENT OF HON. CHRISTOPHER MURPHY, U.S. SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT

Senator MURPHY. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Looking forward to your testimony. I will just say a few words about the important posts we are about to attend to, we hope.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina, ethnic tensions continue to pull this country apart at the seams, while political self-interests and navel gazing by many of its leaders has prevented Bosnia from moving forward on EU or NATO integration.

It is about time that the United States step up and try to provide some real leadership here. Ultimately, these decisions are up to the people of Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves. But U.S. leadership has been critical at so many times in the past trying to reconcile these tensions in the region, and they will be in the future.

Cyprus is another complicated assignment, given the long-standing division of the island, but we are still hopeful that an agreement can be reached as reunification under our bi-zonal, bicommmunal federation would bring benefits to everyone there. And the Eastern Mediterranean gas discovery offers some significant new economic opportunities to strengthen regional cooperation, especially with Israel.

Just as Cyprus's energy resources are a potential alternative to Russian gas, Azerbaijan is so important as a natural gas supplier to Europe. We are appreciative of their partnership, and their partnership with Europe on energy securities, but we have to remain concerned about the lessening political freedom inside Azerbaijan.

As a bipartisan taskforce on extremism recently noted, where citizens are free to engage in civic and political organizations, extremists struggle to attract followers. But where extremists provide the only viable option for change, they gain traction.
And finally, Iceland, it had its own brush with instability following the banking collapse of 2008, but it is now an economic and democratic success story, with an up-and-coming soccer team to boot.

And so we are glad to have all four of you before us today. We look forward to your testimony.

Senator JOHNSON. And as I mentioned, Dr. Gunter, make sure you have a good rain suit for Iceland.

Our first nominee will be Ambassador Judith Gail Garber. Ambassador Garber is the nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Cyprus. Ambassador Garber is a career member of the senior Foreign Service, with a rank of career minister. She is currently Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, a position she has held since 2014.

She also has served at six U.S. missions overseas, including as Ambassador to Latvia, from 2009 to 2012. Ambassador Garber is a recipient of 20 notable State Department awards, and speaks Spanish, Hebrew, Czech, and Latvian.

Ambassador Garber.

STATEMENT OF HON. JUDITH G. GARBER, NOMINEE TO BE U.S. AMBASSADOR TO THE REPUBLIC OF CYPRUS

Ambassador GARBER. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today to be considered for the position of the United States Ambassador to the Republic of Cyprus.

I am grateful to be nominated by President Trump, and appreciate Secretary Pompeo’s confidence in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work with all of you to advance in Cyprus the fundamental U.S. interests in a Europe whole, free, prosperous, and at peace.

I would like to recognize my husband, Paul, who is here today, and thank him for his love and support over a long Foreign Service career. I am humbled to be considered again to serve as a U.S. Ambassador. It is an honor and a privilege to represent the United States.

This is an important time for Cyprus, a country situated at the crossroads of Europe, the Middle East, and Africa. It is at this place that U.S. national interests in anchoring the Euro-Atlantic Alliance, securing the Eastern frontier, and stabilizing the south intersect. Our commitment to encouraging the leaders of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities to forge a just and lasting settlement remains as resolute as ever.

If confirmed, I would do all that I could to support efforts by these leaders, by ordinary Cypriots, by the guarantor powers, and by the U.N. to reach the promise of a bi-zonal, bi-communal federation.

A reunified Cyprus would provide a more prosperous future for all Cypriots. Such an example would resonate well beyond the island, strengthening the relations in all corners of the Eastern Mediterranean and throughout the world. It would also serve as an inspiration for others who wish to define a new future after a painful past.
The Republic of Cyprus is a valued friend and important strategic partner with whom we cooperate on a range of priorities, including counterterrorism, maritime security, and law enforcement. Cyprus’s participation in the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS as well as its regional efforts to prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction demonstrate its commitment to international security.

We are working systematically to strengthen our relations with the Republic of Cyprus, including in the areas of security cooperation and counterterrorism. If confirmed, I will continue this effort.

The discovery of natural gas resources in the Eastern Mediterranean, including in Cyprus’s offshore waters, has expanded possibilities for increasing regional energy security through diversification of resources, routes, and suppliers.

We have emphasized our support to the Republic of Cyprus’s right to develop hydrocarbon resources in its Exclusive Economic Zone. We also believe the resources should be shared equitably between both communities within the context of an overall settlement.

Hydrocarbons have the potential, if managed correctly, to be a catalyst for increased cooperation, for enhanced regional stability and prosperity, and should serve as an incentive to Cyprus for settlement. If confirmed, I would seek to build upon this potential.

Cyprus’s economy has proven to be resilient, with the help of an IMF program, but additional reforms will be necessary to sustain future growth. Cyprus continues to support IMF post-program monitoring, illustrating their resolve to keep the economy on a positive trajectory. However, Cyprus needs to modernize its foreclosure and bankruptcy laws, and accelerate efforts to reduce the high level of non-performing debt.

It also needs to take more steps to combat the numerous challenges and risks posed by illicit Russian money in the economy. To sustain economic growth, Cyprus needs to control public sector spending, take steps to diversify the economy, and implement legal reforms to preserve confidence in the banking sector.

We also pay close attention to the integrity of the Cypriot financial sector. We are encouraged by the progress of local banks to boost regulations by culling suspicious accounts, and hiring additional personnel to conduct due diligence. If confirmed, I will encourage the Republic of Cyprus to continue to strengthen its banking regulations and implement measures to limit the ease of shell company formation.

At the same time, progress on a settlement could have a positive impact on the entire island’s economy. Study after study has shown a Cyprus settlement would create opportunities for greater trade and investment, bringing tangible benefits to all Cypriots.

If confirmed, I will be accredited to the Republic of Cyprus. I will support both Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities in their efforts to pursue reconciliation and reunification.

I believe my experience has prepared me well for the challenges and opportunities ahead. I have dedicated much of my career to advancing U.S. economic interests. If confirmed, I will also draw upon my previous experience as an ambassador in a small European Union country with communal divisions in a complicated neighborhood.

If confirmed, I will work to strengthen the bonds between the United States and the Republic of Cyprus. I will work with Members of Congress, partners throughout the U.S. Government, and the private sector, and with the dedicated staff of the Embassy in Nicosia to further our goals in Cyprus and support the promise of a better future for all Cypriots.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you again for the opportunity to be here with you today. I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

I’d like to recognize my husband, Paul, who is here today and thank him for his love and support over a long Foreign Service career. Paul and our five children are truly the source of my strength.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you again for the opportunity to be here with you today.

I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Ambassador Garber.

Our next nominee is Dr. Jeffrey Ross Gunter. Dr. Gunter is the President's nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Iceland. Dr. Gunter is a physician and healthcare executive. He leads Jeffrey Ross Gunter, M.D., Incorporated, specializing in dermatology care for rural communities.

Previously, Dr. Gunter was a clinical professor of medicine at the Keck Medicine Center, at the University of Southern California, and Chief Resident of Dermatology at the Los Angeles County USC Medical Center. He speaks Spanish, French, and Dutch.

Dr. Gunter.

STATEMENT OF DR. JEFFREY ROSS GUNTER, OF CALIFORNIA, NOMINEE TO BE AMBASSADOR TO THE REPUBLIC OF ICELAND

Dr. GUNTER. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you Ranking Member Murphy, members of the committee.

It is a privilege and an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as the United States Ambassador to Iceland. I am humbled by the confidence placed in me by the President and the Secretary of State.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and the Congress in advancing the interests, the prosperity, and the protection of the United States in Iceland.

I would briefly like to introduce and mention my twins. My daughter, Sophie, is here today, and my son, Simon, is watching us in England, where he is studying translational science.
My wife, Johanna, was a Jewish American Dutch immigrant, a naturalized citizen, who passed away 2 years ago after a brave battle with cancer. She is the main reason why I am sitting here today.

I would like to especially thank the chairman for introducing me to the committee.

Last, but not least, I would like to thank the 18 career diplomats, my classmates, at the Foreign Service Institute. For 3 weeks, these tremendous public servants and brilliant patriots, who sacrifice so much, mentored me, guided me, and led by a shining example. Thank you.

I sit here before this distinguished committee as a private citizen who has never held a government office. However, I have spent my life serving others as a doctor, treating patients, and managing medical clinics for over 25 years. I believe my experience as a practitioner of medicine and as an entrepreneur and manager in the private sector will suit me well, if confirmed.

My medical career has been spent in the field of dermatology, where my practice has focused on providing healthcare to primarily rural areas of the Western United States. Historically these areas have had a limited access to our healthcare system, patients needing to travel long distances to receive specialized care.

Providing health access to rural communities has also blessed me with the opportunity to provide care for a great number of our military men, and women, and their dependents. Their unparalleled dedication and sacrifice is humbling, inspiring, and motivating.

I believe I will succeed as an ambassador because I have learned how to build a large organization, manage and invest in staff, deliver care to patients, and be responsive to the needs of both the individual and the larger community. Strong values, a strong work ethic, and a focus on the mission, coupled with the ability to work with others, are the reasons why I believe I have been successful.

If confirmed, I am prepared to bring all of my experience and skills to my new responsibility. If confirmed, my foremost priority as Ambassador will be promoting the United States' interests in Iceland. I will work hard to identify areas of common interest, advance these issues, and allow both countries to support each other, while working towards progress for our common goals.

While I have never been to Iceland, I have spent a considerable amount of time in Western Europe, as my late wife was from the Netherlands. I speak Dutch, French, and Spanish. What is clear from my studies of Iceland is that it is a country of tremendous history, beauty, ambition, resilience, and accomplishment. Iceland is home to a proud people, with a land shaped by its environment. The environment, like for so many of us, is important to me, growing up in Southern California, on Santa Monica Bay.

I have spent my entire career building—I have spent my entire career battling on behalf of patients against the harmful effects of the sun, and the UVB radiation, which causes not only aging, but also life-threatening skin cancer.

If confirmed, I look forward to continuing the dialogue with the Icelandic government about our environment and finding ways of engagement to go forward on this important issue.
Iceland is a NATO founding member and an ally, a close partner of the United States. The United States and Iceland cooperate on a wide range of important issues, from transatlantic security, to the sustainable development of the Arctic. In addition, completion of the Embassy’s move to the long-awaited new chancery, in a seamless fashion, is a top priority as well, if confirmed.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Embassy staff in Iceland in an encouraging and cooperative manner to achieve common goals. My management style is to respect everyone, encourage their success, while insisting on great work for you all, and the American people.

Iceland shares our democratic values and strong belief in the free market. Because of these fundamental pillars, Iceland and America can climb many mountains of opportunity together. If I am given the opportunity to represent the United States in Iceland, I cannot wait to climb together with the State Department and with the members of this committee to meet our mutual challenges, and to accomplish our goals.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for this tremendous opportunity to be here today. If confirmed, I look forward to hosting your visit to Iceland, and to working closely with each and every one of you. My door is always open.

Thank you.

Iceland is a NATO ally and close partner of the United States. Together, the United States and Iceland cooperate on a range of important issues, from transatlantic security, to the sustainable development of the Arctic. In addition, completion of the Embassy’s move to the long-awaited new chancery, in a seamless fashion, is a top priority as well.

If confirmed, I look forward to working with the Embassy staff in Iceland in an encouraging and cooperative manner to achieve common goals. My management style is to respect everyone, encourage their success, while still insisting on great work for you all, and the American people.

Iceland shares our democratic values and belief in the free market. Iceland and America can climb many mountains of opportunity together. If I am given the opportunity to represent the United States in Iceland, I can’t wait to climb together with the State Department and the members of this committee to meet our mutual challenges and goals.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, thank you for this tremendous opportunity to appear before your committee today. If confirmed, I look forward to hosting your visit to Iceland and to working closely with each and every one of you to advance the interests of the United States.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Dr. Gunter.

Our next nominee is Mr. Earle D. Litzenberger. Mr. Litzenberger is the nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Azerbaijan. Mr. Litzenberger is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, with the rank of Minister Counselor. He currently serves as senior advisor in the Bureau of Political Military Affairs.

Previously, Mr. Litzenberger served as Deputy Chief of Mission to NATO, Deputy Chief of Mission in Serbia, and Deputy Chief of Mission in Kyrgyzstan.

Mr. Litzenberger is a recipient of the Matilda W. Sinclair Language Award. He speaks French, Russian, Serbian, and Bulgarian.

Mr. Litzenberger.

STATEMENT OF EARLE D. LITZENBERGER, NOMINEE TO BE U.S. AMBASSADOR TO AZERBAIJAN

Mr. LITZENBERGER. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee: I come before you today, both honored and humbled, to testify as President Trump’s nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to Azerbaijan. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with this committee and all members of Congress to advance U.S. interests in Azerbaijan.

I would like to thank my family for supporting and sharing my 34-year career in the Foreign Service. My wife, Marianne, and daughter, Ashley, have joined me here today. Our son, Andrew, and daughter-in-law, Tara, and their children, our grandchildren, Zachary and Elliana, unfortunately are unable to be here.

Over the course of my career, I have dedicated myself to advancing U.S. foreign policy interests, promoting U.S. values, and safeguarding our national security.
Situated astride a geographic and cultural crossroads, the South Caucasus is a region of vital importance to the U.S. Azerbaijan, the only country to border both Iran and Russia, is an important U.S. partner. Our relationship matters not just to our two countries, but to Azerbaijan’s neighbors and the wider region. We stand only to gain from a stable, democratic, peaceful, and prosperous Azerbaijan strategically linked to the United States and our European friends and allies.

Since the establishment of our diplomatic relations in 1992, our cooperation with Azerbaijan has centered on three interrelated and equally important areas: Security, energy and economic growth, and democracy and governance.

If confirmed, I will invigorate America’s principled efforts in each of these areas and work with all of our partners to resolve the challenges the South Caucasus region continues to face.

Azerbaijan has long been a stalwart partner on international security. After the attacks of September 11, Azerbaijan was among the first country to extend support and offer close cooperation to combat terrorism. I saw firsthand Azerbaijan’s contributions to peace and security while serving as NATO’s Deputy Senior Civilian Representative in Afghanistan.

And earlier this year, Azerbaijan stepped up its commitment to that mission in Afghanistan, where it now deploys 120 troops. Azerbaijan is also part of the Northern Distribution Network for supporting U.S. and NATO operations in Afghanistan. If confirmed, I will sustain the security relationship and enhance our cooperation in areas such as border security, counter-proliferation, and countering human trafficking.

The United States and Azerbaijan have also enjoyed more than 20 years of cooperation on energy security that has produced some real wins for the longstanding U.S. policy of diversifying energy routes and sources for European and global markets. The Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan oil pipeline was an early success for energy diplomacy.

Today, the soon-to-be-realized southern gas corridor, stretching from Azerbaijan to Italy, is more important than ever for European energy security. If confirmed, I will work with Azerbaijan to realize the full potential of its energy resources, expand the southern gas corridor, and bolster critical energy infrastructure protection.

At the same time, if confirmed, I will support Azerbaijan’s efforts to diversify its economy away from oil and gas. Azerbaijan is already a significant export market for U.S. airplanes, our farm equipment, and other goods and services. If confirmed, I will promote a level playing field and transparent business environment to foster economic development, and create even more opportunities for U.S. companies.

Azerbaijan’s integration with the West, however, can and must go beyond pipelines, exports, and security cooperation. The United States must continue to work closely with Azerbaijan on advancing democratic and open economic principles through strong rule of law, transparency, and the protection of human rights and dignity.

It is in Azerbaijan’s own interest to undertake these reforms, both to ensure its long-term stability, and to realize the full potential of its people and economy. Democracies thrive only when bolstered by an independent judiciary, respect for the rule of law, a free media, a vibrant civil society, political pluralism, and a democratic electoral process, and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

As affirmed in the President's national security strategy, these principles form the foundation of our most enduring partnerships. As Azerbaijan advances along this path, our bilateral relationship will grow even stronger. Throughout my career I have worked to promote these core U.S. values by helping countries progress in their transitions to democratic governance.

If confirmed, I will bring all of these experiences to bear in developing a dialogue with Azerbaijan, based on mutual respect and confidence. I will also meet with a wide range of Azerbaijani society to share American values and learn about Azerbaijan's rich history and culture.

Finally, but no less importantly, Azerbaijan is a key player in the region's peace and stability. There is no higher priority for achieving a more secure and prosperous future for the South Caucasus than the peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.

As cochair of the OSCE Minsk Group process, the United States continues to work with all sides to achieve a peaceful, lasting negotiated settlement of the conflict, based on the principles of the U.N. Charter and the Helsinki Final Act, including the nonuse of force or threat of force, territorial integrity, and the equal rights and self-determination of peoples.

If confirmed, I will have the honor of advancing all of these objectives, while safeguarding American citizens, and ensuring responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars.

Thank you for considering my nomination, and I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF EARLE D. LITZENBERGER

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Murphy, and distinguished members of the committee: I come before you today, both honored and humbled, to testify as President Trump's nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to Azerbaijan. I am grateful to the President and Secretary Pompeo for the confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with this committee and all Members of Congress to advance U.S. interests in Azerbaijan.

I would like to thank my family for supporting, and sharing, my 34-year career in the Foreign Service across much of the globe. My wife, Marianne, and daughter, Ashley, have joined me here today. Our son, Andrew, and daughter-in-law, Tara, unfortunately are unable to be here.

Over the course of my career, I have dedicated myself to advancing U.S. foreign policy interests, promoting U.S. values, and safeguarding our national security. As the Deputy Chief of Mission and—prior to the arrival of Ambassador Kay Bailey Hutchison—Chargé d’Affaires at the U.S. Mission to NATO, I worked closely with our Allies during the largest reinforcement of NATO's collective defense since the end of the Cold War while promoting more equitable burden sharing in the Alliance.

In my current role as Senior Advisor in the State Department’s Bureau of Political-Military Affairs, I have worked closely with the Defense Department and the broader U.S. interagency to support Allied and partner nations, and promote security in regions of vital importance to U.S. national security.

Situated astride a millennia-old geographic and cultural crossroads, the South Caucasus is one of these key regions. Azerbaijan—the only country to border both Iran and Russia—is an important U.S. partner. Our relationship is important not just to our two countries, but to Azerbaijan's neighbors and the wider region. We stand only to gain from a stable, democratic, peaceful, and prosperous Azerbaijan strategically linked to the United States and our European friends and Allies.
Since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1992, our cooperation with Azerbaijan has centered on three interrelated and equally important areas: security, energy and economic growth, and democracy and governance. If confirmed, I will invigorate America’s principled efforts in each of these areas and work energetically with all of our partners to resolve the challenges that the South Caucasus region continues to face.

Azerbaijan has long been a stalwart partner on international security. After the attacks of September 11, then-Azerbaijani President Heydar Aliyev was among the first to extend support and to offer close cooperation to combat terrorism. That cooperation continues today. I saw firsthand Azerbaijan’s contributions to peace and security in Afghanistan while serving as NATO’s Deputy Senior Civilian Representative in Kabul from 2013 to 2014. Earlier this year, Azerbaijan stepped up its commitment to NATO’s Resolute Support Mission in Afghanistan, where it now has 120 service members deployed shoulder-to-shoulder with U.S. and Allied personnel. Azerbaijan also supports the international community’s commitment to Afghanistan as part of the Northern Distribution Network for supporting U.S. and NATO operations. If confirmed, I will sustain these crucial aspects of our security relationship and work to enhance cooperation in areas such as border security, counter-proliferation, and countering human trafficking.

The United States and Azerbaijan also have enjoyed more than twenty years of cooperation on energy security that has produced real wins for the longstanding U.S. policy of diversifying energy routes and sources for European and global markets. At the U.S. Embassy in Kazakhstan in the late 1990s, I was directly involved in our effort to support the establishment of the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan oil pipeline, an early success for energy diplomacy that brought Azerbaijani and Central Asian oil to Western markets. Today, the soon-to-be-realized Southern Gas Corridor, stretching from Azerbaijan to Italy, is more important than ever in advancing European energy security. If confirmed, I will continue to work with Azerbaijan to realize the full potential of its energy resources, expand the Southern Gas Corridor, and bolster critical energy infrastructure protection.

At the same time, if confirmed, I will support Azerbaijan’s efforts to diversify its economy away from oil and gas. Azerbaijan is already a significant export market for U.S. airplanes, farm equipment, machinery, and other goods and services, but we can create even more opportunities for U.S. companies. If confirmed, I will promote a level playing field and transparent business environment to—in the words of Secretary Pompeo—“foster good, productive capitalism” so that American firms can succeed, “local communities can flourish, and bilateral partnerships can grow.”

Azerbaijan’s integration with the West can and must go beyond energy pipelines, exports, and security cooperation. The United States must also continue to work closely with Azerbaijan on advancing democratic and open economic principles through strong rule of law, transparency, and the protection of human rights and dignity. It is in Azerbaijan’s interest to undertake these reforms, both to ensure long-term stability and to unleash the full potential of its people and economy. Democracies thrive only when bolstered by an independent judiciary, respect for the rule of law, a free media, a vibrant civil society, pluralism, democratic electoral processes, and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

As affirmed in the President’s National Security Strategy, these principles form the foundation of our most enduring partnerships. As Azerbaijan advances along this path, our bilateral relationship will grow even stronger. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Kyrgyzstan and Serbia, and throughout my career, I have worked to promote these core U.S. values by helping countries progress in their transition to democratic governance. If confirmed, I will bring all of these experiences to bear in developing a robust dialogue on these issues with Azerbaijan based on mutual respect and confidence. I will also seek to meet with a wide range of Azerbaijani society, in order to share American values and learn more about Azerbaijan’s rich history and culture.

Finally, but no less importantly, Azerbaijan is a key player in the region’s peace and stability. There is no higher priority for achieving a more secure and prosperous future for the South Caucasus than the peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. As Co-Chair of the OSCE Min Group, the United States continues to work with all sides to achieve a peaceful, lasting negotiated settlement of the conflict based on the principles of the U.N. Charter and the Helsinki Final Act, including the non-use of force or threat of force, territorial integrity, and the equal rights and self-determination of peoples. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s commitment to achieving this goal.

On the recent centennial anniversary of the founding of the Azerbaijan Democratic Republic, Secretary Pompeo looked forward to deepening America’s cooperation with Azerbaijan on “security, energy, and democratic governance” with the aim of “further [strengthening] ties between our countries.” If confirmed, I will have the great honor of advancing these objectives while safeguarding American citizens and ensuring responsible stewardship of U.S. taxpayer dollars. Thank you for considering my nomination, and I look forward to your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Litzenberger.

Our fourth nominee is Mr. Eric George Nelson. Mr. Nelson is the President’s nominee to be the U.S. Ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Mr. Nelson is a member of the Senior Foreign Service, with the rank of minister counselor. He is currently deputy executive secretary and director of the Executive Office of the Executive Secretariat, a position he has held since 2015.

Mr. Nelson has served in seven U.S. missions overseas, including as deputy chief of mission in Costa Rica, and general counsel in Munich.

He has received numerous awards for effective leadership, and speaks Spanish, German, and Italian.

Mr. Nelson.

STATEMENT OF ERIC GEORGE NELSON, NOMINEE TO BE U.S. AMBASSADOR TO BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

Mr. NELSON. Good morning, Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, Senator Shaheen, Senator Kaine. It is an honor to appear before the committee today as the President’s nominee to serve as Ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

I am grateful for the confidence the President and the Secretary of State have placed in me. I am accompanied today by my partner, Filippo Tattoni, and I wish to recognize today the great sacrifices he has made to support me in my career.

I am proud that my nomination is an example of how much the United States values diversity. America’s diversity is fundamental to our freedoms, and makes us the innovative and dynamic nation we are. Bosnia and Herzegovina shares this essential characteristic with a centuries-long history of religious coexistence.

I have been privileged to pursue a career in public service, beginning 35 years ago as a Peace Corps volunteer in Liberia, and continuing in the Foreign Service across Europe, Latin America, and Pakistan. My grandparents’ and parents’ examples of service continue to inspire me.

My Slovak grandparents ministered to Lutheran congregations across Pennsylvania and Ohio. And my Swedish and Danish grandparents survived the Great Depression, serving customers in their small New Jersey diner. My mother, Eleanor, watching today from Texas, was a school teacher, and my late father, Herbert, steered his corporate career into decades of philanthropic and community service.

If confirmed, I will proudly lead a successful interagency team in Bosnia Herzegovina, and will look for every opportunity to shine a spotlight on their excellence in service to America.

The United States is safer and more prosperous when Europe is indeed stable and prosperous. When 100,000 Bosnians died and more than 1 million fled the Bosnian War of 1992 to 1995, the United States intervened with force and diplomacy to end the war. As a guarantor of the Dayton Peace Accords, the United States remains firmly committed to Bosnia and Herzegovina’s sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Twenty-three years of relative peace has been a great achievement, but we cannot take this for granted. The surest path to securing a promising future is integration into Euro-Atlantic institutions. Unfortunately, too many politicians continue to put zero-sum ethnic nationalism and their personal enrichment ahead of critical reforms.

If confirmed, I will focus the work of the embassy on several priority areas. Firstly, expanding prosperity. A weak economy and endemic corruption undermines stability. Reforms are critical to reduce labor taxes, improve the ease of opening a business, and privatize bloated state enterprises. If confirmed, I will press for standards that ensure Bosnia Herzegovina can be an attractive destination for U.S. exports and direct investment.

Secondly, if confirmed, I will promote effective government and rule of law. Sadly, Transparency International ranks Bosnia Herzegovina as one of the most corrupt countries in Europe. I will continue our embassy’s strong efforts to improve transparency and accountability. When local institutions fail to act, or if peace and stability are threatened, targeted sanctions can be an effective response.

Our third priority will be improving security. The United States will continue our efforts to help Bosnia and Herzegovina to counter violent extremism, and malign foreign influence, strengthen law enforcement, and increase border security.

The country is a committed partner on counterterrorism, and deploys with allied troops in Afghanistan. The United States supports Bosnia Herzegovina’s continued progress towards NATO membership and Western democratic values.

Fourth, if confirmed I will press the government of Bosnia and Herzegovina to further human rights. President Trump said in Warsaw last year, “Above all, we value the dignity of every human life. We protect the rights of every person, and we share the hope of every soul to live in freedom.”

The United States will advance democracy by promoting media freedom, religious liberty, and education reform. If confirmed, I will advocate for accountability for past atrocities and equal treatment before the law of all Bosnia Herzegovina citizens.

I will strengthen our partnerships with civil society, private sector, and European partners, and I will be eager to work with all leaders in Bosnia and Herzegovina who share our goals and are ready to tackle corruption and implement reform.

Mr. Chairman, I thank this committee and other members of Congress for your steadfast interest in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Thank you for your time, and I look forward to your questions.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF ERIC GEORGE NELSON

Chairman Johnson, Ranking Member Murphy, it is an honor to appear before the committee today as the President’s nominee to serve as Ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina. I am grateful for the confidence the President and the Secretary of State have placed in me and I hope to earn your trust as well. I am accompanied today by my partner, Filippo Tattoni, who like many other Foreign Service spouses, has sacrificed much to support me in my career and I wish to recognize that.
I am proud that my nomination is an example of how much the United States values diversity. America's diversity is fundamental to our freedoms and makes us the innovative and dynamic nation we are. Bosnia and Herzegovina shares this essential characteristic with a centuries-long history of religious coexistence.

Unfortunately, too many politicians continue to put zero-sum ethnic nationalism and their personal enrichment ahead of critical reforms.

If confirmed, I will focus the work of the Embassy on several priority areas:

• Firstly, expanding prosperity. A weak economy and endemic corruption undermine stability. We need strong partnerships to help Bosnia and Herzegovina achieve peace with progress. If confirmed, I will combine forces with civil society, private sector, and our European partners. I will be eager to work with all leaders in Bosnia and Herzegovina who share our goals and are ready to tackle corruption and implement reform.

Mr. Chairman, I thank this committee and other members of Congress for their steadfast interest in Bosnia and Herzegovina. I thank you for your time and I look forward to your questions.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Mr. Nelson.

Out of respect for my colleagues’ time, I will defer my questions to the end.

Senator Murphy.

VOICE. Not here.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Kaine.

Senator Kaine. Thank you. Well, this never happens. [Laughter.]
Senator Kaine. I love this. Thank you, and congratulations to each of you for your nominations. I think you are all very qualified for these positions.

First, a question, I am not sure if you will have answer to it, if you have knowledge to answer it, but I was very disturbed when I read the news the other day that the State Department was changing a policy to say that members of the Foreign Diplomatic Corps coming to the United States would no longer be able to get a visa for same-sex partners. Many countries do not allow same-sex marriage, and the previous policy had been that we would grant a visa to same-sex partners of visiting members of the diplomatic corps, and the announcement occurred the other day that that is being stopped.

Are you aware, was that decision made purely within the State Department, or was it promoted by the White House, or others within the administration? Do any of you have knowledge of this?

Mr. Nelson. I am not aware of how that decision was reached, but I have read the briefings on it. I understand that the department made the decision based on achieving equality to following the Obergefell decision that recognized same-sex marriage—same-sex marriage in the United States.

The Department, before that time, had been forward-leaning in trying to accommodate same-sex partners coming to the U.S. They are now creating equivalence between—for same-sex and opposite-sex marriages, and they will continue to apply reciprocity when receiving states accept our families, our same-sex partners, and provide them privileges and immunities. The United States, I understand, is prepared to do the same.

Senator Kaine. Do any of you have additional facts that you could add to how the decision was made? Was it just within the State Department, or was it promoted more broadly by the administration?

Are any of you aware of whether there were any instances of the previous policy causing any problems for the United States? Sometimes a change is made because of policy that is causing a problem, and the problem needs to be fixed.

Was this change, to your knowledge, driven by any problem with the previous policy?

Ambassador Garber. Senator, I am not familiar with the reasons behind the change in policy.

Senator Kaine. And I know Dr. Gunter is not career State, but I am assuming the others—you are not aware of any problems that had been experienced under the previous rule. Ambassador——

Mr. Litzenberger. Senator, I am not.

Senator Kaine. Okay. Thank you.

Ambassador Garber, let me ask you a question. I am often in these hearings. I am on the Armed Services committee, too. So I use these hearings to make me a better Armed Services member, and vice-versa. And I have a question about Cyprus dealing with mil-to-mil cooperation.

So historically, the U.S., in trying to remain balanced and objective in the ongoing dispute, and the negotiations between the two Cypriot communities, has refrained from providing military equipment to the Republic, with a very few exceptions for policing, and also search and rescue.

There have been some in Congress that have advocated lifting that restriction. I do not know enough about the issue actually to have an opinion on it myself, but I would like to get educated.

There have also been reports that during a recent visit to Cyprus, U.S. military officials raised the potential use of Cypriot military bases as a backup to U.S. presence at Incirlik, Turkey.

What can you share with the committee about these issues? Are you aware of discussions with the republic about possibly greater use of military bases in the republic by the United States? And what would be your thought about that?

Ambassador Garber. Thank you very much for that question, Senator.

You are right. Longstanding U.S. policy, with regard to arms exports has been to avoid further militarization of the island. We are, however, looking at systematically strengthening our security relationship with the government of Cyprus. Cyprus has been a very good partner on counterterrorism, maritime, and border security, as well as, I mentioned in my testimony, nonproliferation. We look to build on those efforts systematically to help to strengthen it.

With regard to the bases, the UK sovereign bases are UK sovereign territories. So as such, that is an issue that falls between the United Kingdom and the United States.

Senator Kaine. But you are not aware of—there had been reports of some discussions at the mil-to-mil level about the potential use of those bases. Have you been read into those discussions? Are you aware what, if any, progress or items had been discussed in that area?

Ambassador Garber. I have not been specifically read into the discussions at this point. If confirmed, I look forward to learning more. Thank you.

Mr. Chair, that is all the questions I have. Appreciate it.

Senator Johnson. Senator Murphy.

Senator Murphy. Thank you very much. Thanks all for your testimony. Thanks for being here, your willingness to serve.

I wanted maybe to start with you, Mr. Litzenberger, and actually draw on some of your experience in Serbia. We are often asking you questions about places that you have not been to yet. So maybe I will ask you about a question where you have been. Senator Johnson and I both have spent a lot of time thinking about the Balkans, worry a lot about the general instability, and the desire of the Kremlin to be more influential.

During my last trip, which was admittedly several years ago, our ambassador was begging for additional dollars to help stand-up exchange programs in Belgrade, which had been wildly successful. I went and sat for an hour or so with a bunch of Serbian leaders, who had spent time in the United States. And you could just see, you could feel the difference it made for U.S.-Serbian relationships to have folks who knew something about our country. It was a relatively small amount of money, and it was being pulled back at the time.
Maybe you can share a little bit of your experience, having been to D.C. and Belgrade as to where the United States could step up its assistance in the Balkans and in the Caucasus, frankly, to strengthen the vulnerabilities that the Kremlin or others might want to exploit.

They were, frankly, begging, and continue to beg for more American presence there. Not in the billions of dollars, but in the millions of dollars, and it seems like we still have not figured out how to answer that call.

Mr. Litzenberger. Senator, thank you for that question, and I am pleased to be able to talk to you about my experience in Serbia. But actually, it is my experience in all the posts I have been in overseas. The importance, and power, and effect of our exchange programs cannot be overemphasized.

When citizens, potential leaders, future leaders of countries have the opportunity to visit the United States, to study in the United States, to travel in the United States, and learn about our society and our culture, and see it firsthand, they can form their own opinions and impressions. They are not being influenced by any outside players. And most of the time, I would say the vast majority of the time, they come back hugely impressed by this great country of ours.

So I have long been a strong believer in the importance of exchange programs, both the educational and cultural exchange. And also in our security cooperation toolkit, we have a program called IMET, International Military Education and Training, which does a similar thing to help build military-to-military relationships with countries around the world, and enhance our security cooperation.

The reality is that assistance funding decisions have to be made in the context of competing priorities, and in the case of the European area of shrinking assistance budgets. So priorities come into play, and we have to make some tradeoffs between where we want to focus our assistance.

Exchanges are important. Programs that promote rule of law that support civil society, that help support human rights activists in countries like Serbia, and in countries like Azerbaijan, are hugely important to helping us develop that dimension of our bilateral relationship with these countries.

Senator Murphy. It is just so strange to me that we force the Department of State, and in particular, the European section to make these tradeoffs, to accept the inevitability of shrinking aid budgets, when we do not expect the Department of Defense to do the same. We give them record increases in funding. We spend $4 billion on a European reassurance initiative, and then we ask our ambassadors in the Balkans to beg for $20,000 additional for exchange programs. So I appreciate your answer.

Let me go to you, Mr. Nelson. Boy, this is a—this is a tough job you are undertaking. I mentioned that there is real desire for American leadership there.

I wanted to ask you about the issue of land swaps. This is a pretty hot topic in the region, in general, and I am sure you are aware of these recent discussions around “border adjustments” between Serbia and Kosovo.
While the decision is ultimately up to the leaders in Belgrade and Pristina, many of us are worried that a precedent of changing borders might have a real destabilizing impact on places like Bosnia, where you have got a fragile political ecosystem as is.

Are you going into this with the idea that America is committed to Bosnia’s territorial integrity, and do you think that there are legitimate concerns with some of the proposals out there to shift borders, and the follow-on effects that it could have as others try to think about ways in which they could move their borders to capture different ethnic populations that they would like to have inside their national boundaries?

Mr. NELSON. Thank you, Senator Murphy.

Yes, I am going in with a clear commitment to the United States support of Bosnia’s territorial integrity and sovereignty. The discussions between Kosovo and Serbia, two sovereign states, to agree on normalizing their relations are important, are important for the region. We support the EU-facilitated dialog.

But it is important to make clear that there is no parallel in Bosnia Herzegovina. Now where sub-state entities have discussed secession, we remain steadfast in our support of Bosnia’s territorial integrity, and we will continue to work with our partners to keep Bosnia moving forward, and focused on unification within the European Union. That is the future that Bosnia should be looking to.

Senator MURPHY. I am all for creative solutions, and frankly, the chairman knows more about this subject than I do. I just worry that if it is done wrong, it could lead to more, rather than less, destabilization. But I remain open to folks using some creative ideas to try to solve century’s old problems.

Ambassador Garber, can you talk a little bit about why Russian money laundering in Cyprus should matter to America. This is something that we have spent a lot of time thinking about, and looking at. And Treasury is obviously involved in this, but it is still occurring. The Wall Street Journal called Cyprus Russia’s favorite money haven.

Why does this matter to us, and what can the next ambassador do about it?

Ambassador G ARBER. Thank you very much for that question, Senator Murphy.

Russian money laundering is a serious concern, and the integrity of Cyprus’s financial system is a serious concern for the United States, so it is not abused by bad actors, to be able to have that happen for illicit means.

As you noted, sir, the Republic of Cyprus has been cooperating with the U.S. Treasury on strengthening its anti-money laundering regime. I dealt a lot with this issue in Latvia as well. Latvian banks have also been used for money laundering in the past. And I look forward to bringing what I have learned from that experience to bear should I be confirmed as Ambassador to the Republic of Cyprus.

We have been engaging government regulators, the private sector, trying to make clear the seriousness of it, which we will be enforcing U.S. sanctions, and our intention to pursue entities that facilitate money laundering.
It is very important for the future prosperity of Cyprus that it has a very strong banking system, and one that cannot be abused by illicit actors.

Senator Murphy. Great. Thank you for that answer.

Dr. Gunter, none of these posts are easy, but yours is the easiest amongst them. We have got a great bilateral relationship with Iceland, and you will be the beneficiary of some fantastic work by previous ambassadors.

So I wanted to actually ask you a question about some of your prior work in the foreign relations space. You have been a board member of the Republican Jewish Coalition Organization, founded by Sheldon Adelson, and I want to ask you a sincere question about—your thoughts about the state of the political discussion surrounding support for Israel.

When I got to Congress 12 years ago there was very little political advantage that one party tried to seek over the other when it came to the issue of Israel. We had our differences, and there were certainly groups that existed working just with the republicans and just with democrats. But in the time that I have been here I have seen a rapid escalation of the electoral politics that get played out around the issue of Israel. And all of a sudden, whether the critiques are fair or not of one party or the other, all of a sudden you see lots of TV ads right now trying to expose vulnerabilities that one party may have over their support or lack thereof for Israel.

And I really worry that this sort of pulls apart one of the discussions that tended to be fairly nonpartisan here. It tended to be one of the things in this space that united us, and now all of a sudden there is political gain to be had. I may draw issue with some of the donors and supporters of the group that you belong to, but I understand this plays out on both sides.

So as you have worked in this space, do you worry about this—about the issue of Israel becoming politicized, becoming something that all of a sudden is inside our electoral politics in a way that it wasn't a couple decades ago?

Dr. Gunter. Thank you for the question, Senator. It is a very good one.

And like many of the issues that we face today in the current political environment, I worry. I worry because I am an American first. It is not a D or not an R issue. It is an A issue, that we are all Americans. And I worry when things become so politicized, are we forgetting, quite frankly, why we are all here today, and what unifies us, instead of focusing so much on what divides us.

So I view my role coming to Iceland as providing for the prosperity and the protection of all Americans through building strong relationships with the Icelandic government, with Icelandic companies, and most importantly, the Icelandic people. And I come there not as a D or an R, I come there as a double A, representing all Americans. And for me, that is extremely important.

Thank you.

Senator Murphy. I appreciate that answer. I take it at your word. We have sent at least ambassador to Europe who has not lost his political stripes upon taking a very important post. And so I trust that you will take a different path. Thank you for that good answer.
Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Senator Menendez.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Congratulations to all of your nominations. I have a particular interest with two of the nominees, so let me address them.

Ambassador Garber, I appreciate our visit yesterday, and our discussion. I am one who believes that in cases such as Cyprus, unless we reconcile ourselves with the past, it is difficult to move forward.

So to that end, do you acknowledge that there was an invasion of Cyprus, and that Turkey should seek to withdraw its troops?

Ambassador GARBER. Senator, thank you very much for that question, and I think it is right to recall the tragic events—you are right to recall the tragic events of 1974.

In 1974, following these tragic events, the United States supported U.N. General Assembly Resolution 3212. And this called for both sides to freely achieve a mutually acceptable political settlement on the island. This has led the United States for many years to support Cypriot-led U.N.-facilitated negotiations to reunite the island as a bi-zonal, bicommmunal federation.

We seek to use language that enables the United States to play an effective role, and we have played an effective role in helping to facilitate these discussions. We continue to see a settlement on the island as the best reason for security.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I appreciate that answer to a question that I did not pose. The question that I posed was not what do we seek in terms of a settlement. The question that I posed is whether or not Turkish troops invaded Northern Cyprus, and are still there in Northern Cyprus.

I think if we cannot accept a factual reality, then we are in trouble in terms of trying to figure out how do we move forward. So is it true that Turkish troops ultimately crossed into Northern Cyprus, and are presently there, continuing, since 1974?

Ambassador GARBER. The Turkish intervention on the island led to the events of the tragic divisions that we have today. I think the issue of the Turkish troops is one of the most sensitive issues in the negotiations, and one that will be part of a final settlement——

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you acknowledge that there are Turkish troops in Northern Cyprus?

Ambassador GARBER. Do I acknowledge that there—thank you, Senator. Do I acknowledge that there are Turkish troops on Northern Cyprus?

Senator MENENDEZ. Yes. Yes or no?

Ambassador GARBER. Yes, there are Turkish troops in——

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you. You know, the State Department—I appreciate the nuances, but there are certain things that are just real. Turkish troops, which were not existent prior to this time, invaded Northern Cyprus, and have continued to be there, and makes it one of the most militarized places in the world. That is just a fact.

Now dealing with that fact, as we tried to seek a bi-zonal, bicommmunal federation, where people can live in peace and security, is an important fact. So, you know, I gather that you are constrained, because I know you have an incredibly successful history, and a career history at the department, but this always baffles me, in terms of not just recognizing simple facts.

Let me ask you this. If confirmed, will you work to ensure access to Turkish military zones on the island, where missing Greek and Turkish Cypriot persons may be buried?

Ambassador GARBER. Thank you for that question, Senator. The issue of missing persons is a very important issue of concern to the United States. If confirmed, I will work to make sure that the Committee on Missing Persons is able to have access to all burial sites——

Senator MENENDEZ. Hm-hmm.

Ms. GARBER.—and expeditiously conclude its work.

Senator MENENDEZ. I heard your previous answer to the question about lifting the arms embargo. I am one of those who believes we should lift the U.S. arms embargo on Cyprus. This is part of the European Union. Cyprus plays a critical role with us in so many different ways, in intelligence sharing. When we have had to airlift Americans out of other areas in the region, Cyprus has been our landing point. They have been receptive. They have been helpful. I believe we should lift the arms embargo against Cyprus.

Let me ask you finally, do you believe that the Cypriot government has the right to exploration in its exclusive economic zone in accordance with international law, and if you are confirmed, will you defend that right?

Ambassador GARBER. Senator, thank you very much for that question.

The United States recognizes the right of the Republic of Cyprus to the resources and its exclusive economic zone. We believe that they should be shared equitably in the context of an overall settlement. The energy has the ability to promote greater regional cooperation, and we believe a settlement will facilitate not only the development of these resources, but their ability to work to the benefits of all Cypriots.

Senator MENENDEZ. Mr. Litzenberger, I have some questions for you.

I am concerned by Azerbaijan’s bellicose rhetoric and sporadic outbursts of violence along the Nagorno-Karabakh line of contact, which undermine diplomatic efforts to peacefully resolve the conflict.

If confirmed, what steps will you take to urge the Azerbaijani government to step back from its threatening behavior, and permit necessary monitoring along the line of contact.

Mr. LITZENBERGER. Thank you very much, Senator.

As one of the three cochairs of the Minsk Group process that is working to achieve a peaceful settlement to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, we are working along the lines of three principles. One is the non-use of force, and the non-threat of the use of force. The second is the respect for territorial integrity. And the third is the rights of peoples to self-determination. All three of those are important. Any agreement or settlement that does not fully take all three into account is unlikely to succeed.

For that reason, all of the cochairs, the U.S. especially, condemns any violence and any threat of the use of violence along the line of contact. It undermines the peace process. It violates the 1994 ceasefire, and is very unhelpful.

So if confirmed, I will continue to support the efforts of Andrew Schofer, who is our U.S. cochair to the Minsk Group process, and will urge the government of Azerbaijan to work cooperatively to help settle this conflict.

Senator MENENDEZ. Hm-hmm. So I will take that, that as part of your overall answer, that you would urge all the parties, but certainly, since you are going to be the Ambassador of the United States to Azerbaijan, to urge the Azerbaijaniis to step back from any threatening behavior that could disrupt the line of contact. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. LITZENBERGER. That’s a fair statement, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you support the provision of security assistance to Azerbaijan, and should it be tied to progress towards a peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, or to progress on accountability for human rights abuses committed by Azerbaijani security forces?

Mr. LITZENBERGER. Thank you, Senator, for that question. The U.S. does provide some security assistance to Azerbaijan, and we do it because it directly serves U.S. national interests. Our security cooperation is focused in areas such as reinforcing Azerbaijan’s border security along its southern border with Iran, clearly in our interest, towards enhancing its maritime awareness, and the ability to secure and safeguard its important energy infrastructure in the Caspian Sea. That is also clearly in our interest, as we try to support and help Azerbaijan to develop western export routes to get its energy resources to European markets, and reduce Europe’s dependence on Russian energy sources.

And we also focus our security assistance on counterterrorism, training, and capabilities to combat violent extremism, and the threat of violent extremism. So those are all core U.S. security interests. Now in——

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate that.

Mr. LITZENBERGER. Senator, in carrying out all of this assistance, we are very careful to ensure that nothing that we do or provide to Azerbaijan undermines the effort to reach a peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.

Senator MENENDEZ. Hm-hmm. And as many other places involved—I will just end on this, Mr. Chairman. And there are many other places in the world where we provide security assistance. One of the concerns of this committee, which has jurisdiction over arm sales, and other forms of assistance, is that while all of the stated reasons you gave me as to why we provide security assistance to Azerbaijan may be very valuable, we also do not want to see human rights abuses by the very forces that we arm.

So will you commit yourself to making sure that that is part of what you are looking at, if you are to be confirmed?

Mr. LITZENBERGER. Senator, thank you. And absolutely. And I apologize. I failed to mention that an important component of the security assistance that we provide Azerbaijan includes training in human rights, and the respect for human rights. So this actually affords us another avenue to engage the government of Azerbaijan on this important issue.
Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator JOHNSON. Thank you, Senator Menendez.

I spent time with all four nominees, pretty well got my questions answered. I do want to say that I think we have got some very well-qualified career Foreign Service going to very important countries. You know, we have opportunities here. I have spent a fair amount of time back and forth between Serbia and Kosovo.

I think there is a desire to solve that problem, which would certainly help in terms of Bosnia and Herzegovina. There are opportunities between Azerbaijan and Armenia. Maybe we can work in Cyprus, and start providing greater stability in these longstanding conflicts.

So, again, I really appreciate your willingness to serve in these regions. I certainly appreciate your families’ willingness to work with you on that. It really is a shared sacrifice.

I do want to, before I close this out, to talk about an area of agreement. I also am hugely supportive of these change programs, things like J–1 visas. I would say, one thing I find pretty interesting when you go into the Balkan region, one of the concerns is economic opportunities outside of their countries, and so their young people are leaving.

I have always encouraged the leaders of those nations to identify those young people that for sure want to come back. You know, send those individuals to America to learn, whether it is in work programs, or study programs, or whatever. Military exchanges.

So you have got bipartisan support. I mean anything we can do working together to make sure that the State Department has resources to encourage those things, but also just working with those governments to encourage that, make sure we get the visas for doing so. You’ve got two people up here that will work with you in all four of your nations that you represent to do just that.

So that, again, I apologize for being late. I am mindful of the time. Again, thank you for your testimony, for your willingness to serve.

The hearing record will remain open for statements or questions until the close of business on Friday, October 5th. This hearing is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 12:05 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Hon. Judith G. Garber by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career I have promoted human rights and democracy. As Ambassador to Latvia, I championed human rights and democracy with the Embassy team through programs to strengthen investigative journalism, support LGBT rights, and improve tolerance between ethnic Russian and Latvian communities. In my current role in the Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, our activities to ensure public participation on environmental issues associated with CAFTA-DR Agreement’s environment chapter implementation have directly supported stronger governance and accountability. If confirmed, I will strongly support human rights and democracy in the Republic of Cyprus.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or human rights in Cyprus? Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Republic of Cyprus to promote our shared democratic values, both in Cyprus and across Europe. If confirmed, and consistent with American values, I will continue to speak out strongly in support of human rights in Cyprus to include addressing such issues as trafficking in persons, and violence against members of ethnic and national groups.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democratic, accountable governance in Cyprus? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage Cypriot officials to encourage democratic, accountable governance. The Republic of Cyprus is a constitutional republic and multiparty democracy, which chooses its leaders through free and fair elections. If confirmed, and consistent with our shared values, I will support efforts to combat corruption and promote accountable government. I believe that illicit financial activities undermine democratic institutions. Cyprus recognizes the importance of strong financial institutions, including the risks of Russian money laundering, and has been working with the United States to make improvements to its anti-money laundering regulations and regulatory oversight. Cyprus, nevertheless, needs to remain vigilant and take additional steps to combat the numerous challenges and risks posed by illicit money in the economy. We are encouraged by the progress local banks have made to boost compliance with regulations by culling suspicious accounts and hiring additional personnel to conduct due diligence; however, we believe more needs to be done. If confirmed, I will encourage the Republic of Cyprus to continue to strengthen its banking and anti-money laundering regulations and implement measures to limit the ease of shell company formation.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. By urging our partners to uphold their own commitments to a vibrant democracy, good governance, and the rule of law, we can strengthen Cypriot capabilities to counter threats to their security and sovereignty. We have worked, and will continue to work, to strengthen cooperation with Cyprus on counterterrorism, maritime and border security, and will continue to look for opportunities for cooperation in other areas of mutual interest.

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and Cyprus in continuation of the Embassy’s practice of meeting civil society groups, from all communities on a regular basis and empowering their voices in policy debates. I will also meet with members of different religious groups and urge government officials to promote freedom of religion or belief for all Cypriots, consistent with our shared values.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I plan to continue the Embassy’s practice of meeting with democratically-oriented political opposition figures. If confirmed, I will advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Cyprus on the issue of press freedom. As Ambassador to Latvia, I championed human rights and democracy with the Embassy team through programs to strengthen investigative journalism. If confirmed, I will engage Cypriot officials on any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal or regulatory measures.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage both civil society and Cypriot officials to counter disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Cyprus on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage both civil society and Cypriot officials on the rights of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Cyprus, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with Cypriot officials on matters of human rights and civil rights as a matter of priority. As Ambassador to Latvia, I championed human rights and democracy with the Embassy team through programs to strengthen investigative journalism, support LGBT rights, and improve tolerance between ethnic Russian and Latvian communities. If confirmed, I will strongly support human rights and defend the dignity of all people in Cyprus, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Question 11. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression across Cyprus? Will you commit to meet with representatives of a diverse swath of religious groups and communities and to advocate for their ability to register and worship peacefully in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy's practice of meeting with members of different religious groups and encouraging government officials to promote freedom of religion or belief for all Cypriots. I will interact with civil society groups, from all faith communities on a regular basis and encourage their participation in policy debates. In addition, I will continue to dedicate resources to gathering information and publicizing the annual Report to Congress on International Religious Freedom, which sheds light on challenges to religious freedom around the world, including in Cyprus. By urging our partners to uphold their own commitments and the rule of law, we can strengthen Cypriot capabilities to counter threats to their security and sovereignty.

Question 12. If confirmed, how will you seek to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within Cyprus's institutions and civil society? What types of U.S. assistance do you see as most critical in this regard? How will you address corrupt political and economic influence or other illicit dealings with Cypriot actors that can increase space in the country for the Kremlin to push its agenda on the island and within the EU and NATO?

Answer. The Republic of Cyprus is a democracy, an EU member, and a strategic partner. If confirmed, and consistent with our shared values, I look forward to working with Cypriots to increase resilience to any efforts to undermine Cypriot institutions and civil society.

Recognizing the importance of strong financial institutions and the risks of money laundering, the Republic of Cyprus has been working with the United States to make improvements to its anti-money laundering regulations and regulatory oversight. Cyprus still needs to take more steps to combat the numerous challenges and risks posed by illicit money in the economy. We are encouraged by the progress local banks have made to boost compliance with regulations by culling suspicious accounts and hiring additional personnel to conduct due diligence. If confirmed, I will encourage the Republic of Cyprus as a friend and a partner to continue to strengthen its banking and anti-money laundering regulations and implement measures to limit the ease of shell company formation.

Question 13. More broadly, what do you see as most needed to effectively counter interference from Turkey, China, and other states that restrict Cypriot independence or stifle peaceful, democratic processes?

Answer. The Republic of Cyprus is a democracy and a member of the European Union. If confirmed, I will reinforce United States support for Cyprus' democratic institutions and public faith in government can help, in part, to counter foreign malign influence. If confirmed, I will support efforts to combat corruption, fight money laundering and illicit finance, promote a free press, and encourage civic participation. Ultimately, I believe a unified Cyprus would be stronger and better able to counter external interference and preserve Cyprus’ independence. To this end, I will continue to support Cypriot-led, UN-facilitated efforts to reunify Cyprus as a bi-zonal, bicommunal federation.

Question 14. What specific steps will you take if confirmed to expose and punish corruption and money laundering on the island, including through FATF, U.S. Treasury sanctions tools, and other punitive measures?

Answer. Money laundering in the Republic of Cyprus is an issue of concern for the United States. Recognizing the importance of strong financial institutions and the risks of Russian money laundering, the Republic of Cyprus has been working with the United States to make improvements to its anti-money laundering regulations and regulatory oversight. Cyprus still needs to take more steps to combat the numerous challenges and risks posed by illicit money in the economy. We are encouraged by the progress local banks have made to boost compliance with regulations by culling suspicious accounts and hiring additional personnel to conduct due diligence; however, we believe more needs to be done. If confirmed, I will encourage the Republic of Cyprus to continue to strengthen its FATF compliance including FATF standards on beneficial ownership, and measures to limit the ease of shell company formation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JUDITH G. GARBER BY SENATOR MARCO RUBIO

Question 1. The increasingly close working relationship between Israel, Cyprus, and Greece has been described as the possible beginnings of an eastern Mediterranean alliance, one that would span security, energy, and diplomacy. Do you believe that a closer working relationship among Cyprus, Greece, and Israel is a positive development? If confirmed, is this a relationship that you would support?

Answer. Cyprus, Greece, and Israel are democracies and valued friends. They have important roles in enhancing peace, stability, and prosperity in the Eastern Mediterranean. We are examining how we can support their efforts and advance U.S. interests in the region. As part of this effort, we are working systematically to strengthen security and energy cooperation with the Republic of Cyprus. If confirmed, I will take steps to further enhance the relationship between the United States and the Republic of Cyprus. The administration’s priority is to ensure the stability of the Eastern Mediterranean and, towards this end, I will support continued high-level U.S. engagement with the Republic of Cyprus on the wide range of issues of common concern to both countries, including regional security.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JUDITH G. GARBER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Under the ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP), the Turkish Government has encouraged public policy decisions and demographic changes that expand the political and cultural influence of religiously and socially conservative nationalism within the Turkish Cypriot community in contrast to the historically secular liberal identity of most Turkish Cypriots.

- Do you consider these developments a hindrance to reconciliation and reunification efforts on the island? How do you intend to address Turkey’s influence on the island?

Answer. The issue of Turkish citizens who settled in Cyprus post-1974 has been a very sensitive matter that has been the subject of a great deal of discussion between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot leaders and their respective communities. It underscores the need for the communities to find a just, lasting, and comprehensive settlement of this and all other matters. Turkey has conveyed publicly its support for the UN-facilitated settlement process and actively participated in the International Conference on Cyprus in Crans-Montana in 2017. We urge Turkey to play a constructive role in support of the UN-facilitated process. If confirmed, I will actively support efforts toward a settlement.

Question 2. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?
Answer. Throughout my career I have promoted human rights and democracy. As Ambassador to Latvia, I championed human rights and democracy with the Embassy team through programs to strengthen investigative journalism, support LGBT rights, and improve tolerance between ethnic Russian and Latvian communities. In my current role in the Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs, our activities to ensure public participation on environmental issues associated with CAFTA-DR Agreement’s environment chapter implementation has directly supported stronger governance and accountability. If confirmed, I will strongly support human rights and democracy in the Republic of Cyprus.

Question 3. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Cyprus? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Cyprus? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Republic of Cyprus to promote our shared democratic values, both in the Cyprus and across Europe. If confirmed, and consistent with American values, I will continue to speak out strongly in support of human rights in Cyprus to include addressing such matters as the need to fight trafficking in persons, corruption, and societal violence against members of ethnic and national groups.

Question 4. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Cyprus in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Addressing human rights concerns in other countries is often a challenging proposition as it touches on countries’ domestic equities. If confirmed, and consistent with our shared values, I will urge officials of the Republic of Cyprus to promote policies both at home and abroad that support respect for human rights.

Question 5. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and Cyprus in continuation of the Embassy’s practice of meeting civil society groups, from all communities on a regular basis and empowering their voices in policy debates. I will also meet with members of different religious groups and government officials to promote freedom of religion or belief for all Cypriots. I will enforce the Leahy Law and ensure that no individual or unit credibly implicated in a gross violation of human rights receives U.S. funded assistance and will assist the Government of Cyprus to hold perpetrators of gross human rights violations accountable. We have worked to strengthen cooperation with Cyprus on counterterrorism, maritime and border security, and will continue to look for opportunities for cooperation in other areas of mutual interest. By urging our partners to uphold their own commitments and the rule of law, we can strengthen Cypriot capabilities to counter threats to their security and sovereignty.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Cyprus to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Cyprus?

Answer. According to the State Department’s 2017 Country Report of Human Rights Practices, there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees in the Republic of Cyprus.

In February 2018, the country held free and fair elections in which voters again elected Nicos Anastasiades as president. The law and constitution provide citizens the ability to choose their government in free and fair periodic elections held by secret ballot and based on universal and equal suffrage. In national elections, only Turkish Cypriots who resided permanently in the Government-controlled area were permitted to vote and run for office. In elections for the European Parliament, Cypriot citizens, resident EU citizens, and Turkish Cypriots who live in the area administered by Turkish Cypriots have the right to vote and run for office. If confirmed, I plan to continue the Embassy’s practice of meeting with representatives across the political spectrum, including voices seeking to hold the Government to account for corruption or other challenges to human rights.

Question 7. Will you engage with Cyprus on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?
Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with Cypriot officials on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as a matter of priority.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Cyprus?

Answer. No.

Question 11. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. A diverse and inclusive team is the type of team that, if confirmed, I will aim to foster. If confirmed, I will lead by example in promoting greater diversity in the Foreign Service and will do everything I can to ensure the U.S. Mission in Cyprus continually strives to promote equal opportunity for our officers, including women and those from historically marginalized groups.

Question 12. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, under my leadership, the Embassy will reflect our whole-of-mission commitment to promoting diversity and inclusion. I will emphasize the importance of diversity and inclusion to all Embassy supervisors, and will make sure that supervisors have the opportunity to receive proper formal training and regular guidance to ensure they are helping to foster a work environment that is diverse and inclusive. It is my firmly held belief that diverse and inclusive teams lead to stronger and better performing organizations.

Question 13. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Cyprus specifically?

• What is your assessment of corruption trends in Cyprus and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?
• If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Cyprus?

Answer. Corruption corrodes democratic institutions and economic development. Corruption dissuades investors and weakens public confidence in institutions. Recognizing the importance of strong financial institutions and the risks of Russian money laundering, the Republic of Cyprus has been working with the United States to make improvements to its anti-money laundering regulations and regulatory oversight. Cyprus still needs to take more steps to combat the numerous challenges and risks posed by illicit money in the economy. We are encouraged by the progress local banks have made to boost regulations by culling suspicious accounts and hiring additional personnel to conduct due diligence. If confirmed, I will encourage the Republic of Cyprus to continue to strengthen its banking and anti-money laundering regulations and implement measures to limit the ease of shell company formation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. JUDITH G. GARBER BY SENATOR JOHN BARRASSO

Question 1. What are the major barriers to achieving a permanent solution to the political and physical divisions on the island of Cyprus?

Answer. The Republic of Cyprus is a valued friend and important partner. The United States has supported Cypriot-led, UN-facilitated negotiations to reunify the island as a bizonal, bicommunal federation as the best means to achieve a just and lasting settlement that benefits all Cypriots. Experts have pointed out that, over time and until the island is reunified, social, political, and economic differences could deepen. If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the leaders and all stakeholders to achieve an agreement, sooner rather than later, that benefits all Cypriots.

Question 2. What additional efforts can the United States take to encourage a negotiated settlement and reunification of the two communities in Cyprus?

Answer. If confirmed, I will actively support the reunification of Cyprus as a bizonal, bicommunal federation, which has been the long-standing policy of the United States, consistent with United Nations Security Council Resolutions. I will also continue to encourage the parties to engage constructively to reach a just and lasting settlement. The United States supports the Cypriot-led, UN-facilitated settlement effort and will continue to do so. As a friend to all Cypriots, the United States supports and engages with both sides in their efforts to reach a settlement. The Cypriots, themselves, must find a solution in the talks that is satisfactory to both sides.

Question 3. What opportunities exist for close cooperation between Cyprus, Israel, and Greece, as part of an Eastern Mediterranean Alliance?

Answer. Cyprus, Greece, and Israel are democracies and valued friends. We believe that they have important roles in enhancing peace, stability, and prosperity in the Eastern Mediterranean. We are examining how we can support their efforts and advance U.S. interests in the region. If confirmed, I will work to continue strengthening our cooperation with the Republic of Cyprus on counterterrorism, law enforcement, maritime and border security and regional stability, as well as continuing to look for opportunities to cooperate in other areas of mutual interest.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. JUDITH GAIL GARBER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. The close and increasingly closer working relationship between Israel, Cyprus and Greece—the Western World outpost countries in the Eastern Mediterranean—and America have been described as the Eastern Mediterranean Alliance (EMA) in recent articles. How do you believe this Alliance contributes to American interests?

Answer. Cyprus, Greece, and Israel are democracies and valued friends. They have important roles in enhancing peace, stability, and prosperity in the Eastern Mediterranean. We are examining how we can support their efforts and bolster the U.S. presence in the region to counter Iranian efforts to develop a window onto the Mediterranean and the growing Russian naval presence. As part of this effort, we are working systematically to strengthen security and energy cooperation with the Republic of Cyprus. If confirmed, I will take steps to further enhance the relationship between the United States and the Republic of Cyprus. The administration’s priority is to ensure the stability of the Eastern Mediterranean and, towards this end, I will support continued high-level U.S. engagement with the Republic of Cyprus on the wide range of issues of common concern to both countries, including regional security.

Question 2. Ambassador, Cyprus came close to a political settlement recently. What do you feel are the challenges to reaching a settlement in Cyprus? What role has Turkey played in negotiations between the two communities?

Answer. The United States has supported Cypriot-led, UN-facilitated negotiations to reunify the island as a bizonal, bicommunal federation as the best means to achieve a just and lasting settlement that benefits all Cypriots. We continue to believe that this process is the most promising way to arrive at a lasting solution. A settlement would unlock Cyprus’ significant unrealized economic potential, facilitate relations throughout the Eastern Mediterranean and could lead to greater cooperation between the EU and NATO. A settlement could also improve regional energy cooperation. Turkey has conveyed publicly its support for the UN-facilitated settlement process and actively participated in the International Conference on Cyprus in Crans-Montana in 2017. We continue to encourage Turkey to play a constructive role in support of the UN-facilitated process.

If confirmed, I will continue to encourage the leaders and all stakeholders to achieve an agreement that benefits all Cypriots.

Question 3. Ambassador, Cyprus has traditionally attracted Russian investment and use of the banks in that country. While Cyprus has certainly done a lot to counter money laundering, are you concerned that Cypriot banks are still being used as a destination for dirty money?

Answer. Money laundering in the Republic of Cyprus is an issue of concern for the United States. Recognizing the importance of strong financial institutions and the risks of money laundering, both from Russia and elsewhere, the Republic of Cyprus has been working with the United States to make improvements to its anti-money laundering regulations and regulatory oversight. Cyprus still needs to take more steps to combat the numerous challenges and risks posed by illicit money in the economy. We are encouraged by the progress local banks have made to boost compliance with regulations by culling suspicious accounts and hiring additional personnel to conduct due diligence; however, we believe more needs to be done. If confirmed, I will encourage the Republic of Cyprus to continue to strengthen its anti-money-laundering efforts, and measures to limit the ease of shell company formation.

Question 4. What is your view on lifting the restrictions on selling arms to Cyprus?

Answer. Long-standing U.S. policy with regard to arms exports to Cyprus has focused on avoiding further militarization of the island. Nevertheless, the United States has licensed the sale of defense equipment to Cyprus on a case-by-case basis. We have done so within existing restrictions to strengthen cooperation on explosive ordnance disposal, counterterrorism, maritime and border security, and other areas of mutual interest. If confirmed, I will continue to look at ways to systematically strengthen our security relationship with Cyprus.

HON. JUDITH G. GARBEE BY SENATOR CHRISTOPHER A. COONS

Question 1. The State Department referred to Cyprus in September 2017 as a strategic partner of the United States. Cyprus has provided assistance to the United States in many instances, such as medical treatment for U.S. soldiers in the aftermath of the 1983 Marine barracks bombing in Beirut and the evacuation of more than 2,500 Americans during an outbreak of fighting in Lebanon in 2006. What is the strategic importance of Cyprus to the United States and what are potential avenues of increased cooperation in the bilateral relationship?

Answer. The Republic of Cyprus is a democracy, an EU member state, and a key partner in a strategically important but unstable region. We are working systematically to strengthen security cooperation with the Republic of Cyprus, while continuing to support Cypriot-led, U.N.-facilitated negotiations to reunite the island. The administration’s priority is to ensure the stability of the Eastern Mediterranean and, towards this end, I will support continued high-level U.S. engagement with the Republic of Cyprus on the wide range of issues of common concern to both countries, including regional and maritime security, law enforcement cooperation, and educational and cultural exchanges.

Answer. In 2012, I co-founded the Early Investigator High School (EiHS) program for stem cell research at the University of Southern California where we supported high school students from the inner city to study and perform stem cell research regardless of social economic consideration. In addition, I have supported various charities supporting our United States military who have bravely defended human rights and democracy around the world. Regarding the impact of my actions, inner city students have had opportunities to participate in America in ways they would not have had otherwise unless given this access to education. Our military has used these donations to take care of those who fight for democracy and human rights around the world.

However, Iceland does not currently fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of human trafficking, although it is making significant efforts to do so. Answer. If confirmed, I will continue our U.S. Embassy's engagement with Icelandic counterparts to boost resilience to Russian Government malign influence and to counter Kremlin threats in the Nordic and Arctic region. Iceland is a like-minded democracy that shares our values. If confirmed, I will work closely with Iceland officials to maintain transatlantic unity and push back against Russian malign influence.

DR. JEFFREY ROSS GUNTER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Russian aggression towards our NATO allies has included violations of Icelandic waters and airspace by Russian submarines and planes. How concerned is Iceland about a resurgent Russia, and what are some areas where the United States might work with Iceland to address and counter any threat?

Answer. Icelandic leaders have said publicly that they share our concerns about Russian aggression and malign influence in Europe. They have also condemned Russia’s purported annexation of Crimea and continued aggression in eastern Ukraine. While not an EU member state, Iceland maintains sanctions on Russia in response to its actions in Ukraine, even though Russia imposed retaliatory counter-sanctions on Icelandic fish exports.

If confirmed, I will work with Icelandic officials to maintain our like-minded approach to holding Russia accountable for its malign behavior.

Question 2. In your assessment, how prepared is Iceland for an attack on its cyber infrastructure? What steps is Iceland taking to prepare, and how can the U.S. assist in building Iceland’s cyber defenses?

Answer. The Icelandic Government recognizes cyber defense as a critical component to its national security. The United States and Iceland cooperate closely on cyber issues, including through annual meetings with U.S.-Nordic-Baltic counterparts.

If confirmed, I will work with Icelandic officials to maintain our dialogue on cyber security and to identify and address threats, gaps, and vulnerabilities.

Question 3. Iceland has identified the Arctic and climate change as important priorities, and is a leader in renewable energy. If nominated, will you work with Iceland to advance its climate priorities?

Answer. The United States Government maintains a close dialogue with Iceland on climate and environmental issues. Iceland, like the United States, is an Arctic nation and will take over the Chairmanship of the Arctic Council in 2019.

If confirmed, I will continue to maintain our close cooperation with Iceland on these important issues.

EARLE D. LITZENBERGER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career—in Afghanistan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Serbia, at the U.S. Missions to the EU and NATO, and elsewhere—I have worked to promote the core U.S. values of democracy and human rights. As the Political Counselor at the U.S. Embassy in Kazakhstan, I met regularly with civil society and opposition activists to support them at a time when opposition leaders were being physically assaulted for exercising their fundamental freedoms. I worked with my colleagues at the Mission of the European Union in Kazakhstan to develop a joint U.S.-EU Democracy Award to recognize human rights activists in the country.

As the Deputy Chief of Mission in Kyrgyzstan, I met with all elements of civil society and worked to ensure that U.S. assistance programs supported civil society, an independent judiciary, and free and fair elections. On the eve of Kyrgyzstan’s presidential elections, when I learned the Government planned to deny domestic and OSCE election observers the opportunity to observe the vote, I immediately called the foreign minister to express deep U.S. concern. The Government ultimately allowed election monitors to observe the elections.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Serbia, I consistently emphasized respect for human rights, with a particular focus on rule-of-law reforms. I worked directly with the ministry of justice to ensure U.S. assistance programs could continue to operate, and I supported cooperation that resulted in Serbia rendering all remaining Serbian indictees of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia to The Hague for prosecution.

In Afghanistan, I led a NATO team that participated in the recount of votes in the 2014 presidential election that led to recognition of results that allowed the formation of the current Government of National Unity.

At the U.S. Mission to the European Union, I worked closely with the EU to encourage it to join the United States in imposing sanctions on Belarus for human rights violations and abuses. At NATO, I worked with our Allies to hold Russia accountable for its violations of international law and human rights, and I led the U.S. Mission’s engagement with the NATO Parliamentary Assembly to highlight the vital role of legislative oversight in democracies.

In all posts, I have supported vigorous U.S. exchange programs to shape the views and understanding of U.S. democracy for key opinion makers, civil society activists, and independent journalists in the countries in which I have served.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Azerbaijan? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights, and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani authorities, consistent with Azerbaijan’s constitution and international obligations and commitments, to ensure human rights and fundamental freedoms, including of assembly, association, religion, and expression; to foster an environment conducive to a vibrant and peaceful civil society; to respect pluralism; and to foster judicial independence, due process, and access to justice. I look forward to working with all partners to advance these goals. Azerbaijan’s progress in these areas would help to deepen our bilateral relationship and enhance the country’s long-term security. As U.S. officials have previously stated, Azerbaijan’s release of all those incarcerated in connection with the exercise of their fundamental freedoms would be a good first step.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Azerbaijan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. There are several potential obstacles to addressing our human rights concerns. These include challenges to pluralism in civil society, the media, political parties, religious groups, and the private sector. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani Government to create an environment in which civil society, the media, political parties, religious groups, and the private sector can operate freely, and I will work closely with all partners to ensure they can conduct their work as effectively as possible. Rule of law is critical to democratic and economic development, as well as to human and national security. The Department has raised our concerns about respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law in Azerbaijan publicly and privately with the Azerbaijani Government. If confirmed, I will advocate these core U.S. values and develop a dialogue with Azerbaijan on these important issues.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. The Department of State and USAID democracy assistance seeks to strengthen civil society, encourage and facilitate citizens to participate in local decision-making and constructive community engagement with the authorities, and support independent media. It seeks to ensure citizens have access to reliable media and outlets for independent expression and participation. If confirmed, I will continue to support these assistance efforts.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Azerbaijan? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, and, if confirmed, such meetings will be among my first priorities upon arriving in Azerbaijan. I will continue the Embassy’s current commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with those outside of the Government, such as civil society representatives and independent journalists, to demonstrate our support for pluralism and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I also will address our concerns publicly and privately about the shrinking space for civil society and restrictions on fundamental freedoms. Azerbaijan’s progress in this area would help to deepen our bilateral relationship and enhance the country’s long-term security.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties?
Answer. Yes, and, if confirmed, such meetings will be among my first priorities upon arriving in Azerbaijan. I will continue the Embassy's current commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with those outside of the Government, including political opposition figures and parties, to demonstrate our support for pluralism and fundamental freedoms. I will advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth in all spheres, including in political life.

The United States has pressed publicly and privately for full respect for political pluralism and a level playing field for democratic competition. If confirmed, I will work with the Azerbaijani Government and with Azerbaijani stakeholders in these and other related areas. I also will support continued public messaging to raise U.S. concerns about democratic electoral processes, as well as on human rights issues.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Azerbaijan on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory, or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Azerbaijan?

Answer. Independent media are key to Azerbaijan's democratic and economic development. The Azerbaijani people deserve access to independent journalism in all media forms. If confirmed, it will be among my first priorities to meet with independent, local media representatives. I will continue the Embassy's current commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with those outside of the Government, including independent journalists, to demonstrate our support for pluralism and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Azerbaijani Government publicly and privately about the importance of media freedom.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with civil society and Azerbaijani Government officials to counter disinformation and malign propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Azerbaijan. The Embassy currently supports training for journalists to counter disinformation and promote professional journalism. If confirmed, I will support these and other efforts to counter disinformation in Azerbaijan about U.S. policy and other issues.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Azerbaijan on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. In line with Department of State priorities, if confirmed, I will promote worker rights in Azerbaijan through a focus on internationally-recognized labor rights related to the freedom of association, effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining, and the elimination of forced labor, child labor, and employment discrimination. In so doing, I will engage with local civil society organizations, trade unions, companies, and other organizations. If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy's current commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with such groups.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the Azerbaijan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Azerbaijan? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in the Azerbaijan?

Answer. Governments have a responsibility to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals, including LGBTI persons. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. Advancing universal human rights is in our national interest, and as Secretary Pompeo has said, LGBTI persons deserve the same freedoms, protections, and respect as everyone else.

With respect to Azerbaijan, if confirmed, I would consult closely with LGBTI human rights defenders on how best to support them in their advocacy, including through capacity building exchange programs like the International Visitor Leadership Program. I would not shy away from speaking out publicly and privately in support of the rights of all, including LGBTI persons, as the State Department spokesperson and other U.S. Government officials did following reports of the detention of LGBTI persons in Azerbaijan. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Azerbaijani Government to uphold and respect its international human rights obligations and commitments.

Question 11. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression in Azerbaijan? Will you commit to meet with representatives of a diverse swath of religious groups and communities and to advocate for their ability to register and worship peacefully in the country?
Answer. Azerbaijan is a Shi’a Muslim majority country with a reputation of religious tolerance. However, as documented in the Department of State’s annual International Religious Freedom Report on Azerbaijan, the Government restricts legal registration of some minority religious groups, controls importation and distribution of religious materials, and disrupts the peaceful gatherings of unregistered religious communities. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts to urge the Azerbaijani Government to facilitate the registration of all religious groups and permit the importation, distribution, and sale of religious materials, and to protect the rights of members of all groups. If confirmed, I also will hold regular meetings with a diverse swathe of civil society members, religious organizations, and human rights activists.

Question 12. If confirmed, how will you seek to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within Azerbaijan’s institutions and civil society? What types of U.S. engagement do you see as most critical in this regard? How will you address corrupt political and economic influence or other illicit dealings with Azerbaijani actors that can increase space in the country for the Kremlin to push its agenda?

Answer. In addition to diplomatic engagement, the United States Government supports programs that enhance rule of law, independent media and civil society, and economic resilience as three key areas where U.S. assistance is most effective against the levers of Russian influence. These programs—including anti-corruption activities, efforts to support independent media, assistance in finding non-Russian markets for agricultural produce, and advocating for effective government supervision of financial institutions—help make Azerbaijan less vulnerable to foreign malign influence, including from Russia, and more transparent.

Question 13. More broadly, what do you see as most needed to effectively counter violent extremist influences in Azerbaijan emanating from the Gulf, Iran, or other states? If confirmed, how will you ensure that the Azerbaijani Government’s response to violent extremist threats does not involve violating individual human rights and religious freedom?

Answer. U.S. foreign assistance priorities in Azerbaijan include efforts to combat terrorism and drivers of violent extremism. U.S. assistance aims to prevent the radicalization of populations by addressing the root causes of economic, political, and social malaise, and to mitigate the appeal of violent extremist ideologies, with a particular focus on youth capacity development and employment. If confirmed, I will continue to support these efforts and make clear to the Azerbaijani Government our expectation that the Government’s response to violent extremist threats should not involve violations or abuses of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 14. Reports continue to surface of widespread corruption in Azerbaijan, including involving the Aliyev family and other senior officials, and the Organized Crime and Corruption Reporting Project investigated an “Azerbaijani Laundromat” scheme to launder illicit funds, buy influence, and whitewash the country’s poor human rights record among foreign audiences. What specific steps will you take if confirmed to expose and punish corruption and abuses in the country, including through the use of Global Magnitsky Act sanctions and other punitive tools?

Answer. As the Department of State’s annual Human Rights Report makes clear, the United States remains concerned about systemic corruption in Azerbaijan, although the Government has made some progress in combating low-level corruption in provision of government services. Corruption is a matter we have raised consistently with the Azerbaijani Government and, if confirmed, I will continue to raise U.S. concerns publicly and privately. If confirmed, I will push for progress in all areas crucial for strengthening the rule of law, including judicial independence, access to justice, citizens’ awareness of rights, engagement on legal issues, and equal protection under the law; equal status in practice for prosecutors and defense attorneys; and systemic anti-corruption measures. The State Department is committed to combatting corruption with all of the tools at our disposal.

Question 15. If confirmed, how will you support an honest accounting of corruption and human rights abuses by Azerbaijani Government officials and incorporate this information into policy decisions regarding security assistance and other engagement with Azerbaijan?

Answer. Security cooperation and democratic reform are key pillars of our bilateral agenda with Azerbaijan. Azerbaijan has been an important partner in U.S. and NATO missions in Kosovo, Iraq, and Afghanistan, as well as in combating terrorism and other transnational threats. Security cooperation with Azerbaijan is an important part of our bilateral relationship and advances U.S. strategic interests and our national security. This does not conflict with the U.S. commitment to work with Azerbaijan on improving its human rights record and, in fact, widens the opportunities we have to raise human rights issues with the Azerbaijani Government. If confirmed, I will ensure full adherence to all applicable laws, including the Leahy Law, to ensure that U.S. security assistance and security cooperation in Azerbaijan reinforces human rights.

Question 16. What measures is the United States taking to hold Azerbaijan accountable for violence and atrocities its forces have committed against Armenia troops and humanitarian or civilian infrastructure during violent flare-ups across the line of contact?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to support the efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group to help the sides find a lasting solution to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, and to ensure the implementation of concrete meaures to reduce tensions and increase effective monitoring along the Line of Contact and the Armenia-Azerbaijan international border. The United States strongly condemns the use of force and regrets the loss of life that has occurred along the Line of Contact. Such incidents are an unacceptable violation of the 1994 ceasefire agreement. We have frequently, publicly and privately, called upon both sides to refrain from the use of force or the threat of force. Such incidents only harm the peace process. The latest statement issued by the OSCE Minsk Group Co-Chairs expressed depth regret over the continuing and unnecessary loss of life resulting from this unresolved conflict. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will support our U.S. Co-Chair, Andrew Schofer, in his efforts to help achieve a peaceful resolution to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.

Question 17. National Security Advisor John Bolton recently signaled openness to selling U.S. arms to both Armenia and Azerbaijan—a policy that could escalate confusion in the region and stoke Azerbaijani aggression along the Nagorno-Karabakh Line of Contact. Please explain the justification for this policy development and what you will do, if confirmed, to ensure that arms sales or transfers to Azerbaijan are precluded from fueling conflict or human rights abuses.

Answer. Ambassador Bolton made clear in his comments that the United States could only consider weapons sales if they were consistent with our statutory framework. As a matter of policy, the United States does not approve the transfer of controlled defense articles or services that could undermine or hamper efforts to find a peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. The United States remains actively engaged as one of the OSCE Minsk Group Co-Chairs to help the sides reduce tensions and move toward a negotiated settlement. If confirmed, I will carefully implement this longstanding U.S. policy and ensure full adherence to all applicable laws.

Question 18. The ethnic hatred and anti-Armenian sentiment that is perpetrated on Azerbaijan’s state-owned and pro-government media continues to poison prospects for a peaceful settlement of the conflict, and contributes to increasing violence along the Line of Contact. President Aliyev himself has said that Armenians around the world—presumably including Armenian-Americans—are the country’s “main enemies.” If confirmed, what specific steps will you take to combat ethnic hatred in the media and reduce prospects of further Azerbaijani aggression against Armenians in Nagorno-Karabakh?

Answer. As a Co-Chair of the OSCE Minsk Group, the United States condemns any action or rhetoric that fuels tensions in the region, as well as steps by any side that serve to diminish trust or threaten to damage the peace process. We consistently have encouraged the sides to refrain from unhelpful or provocative rhetoric, which serves only to harden public opinions against the hard compromises that ultimately will be needed to ensure a lasting and peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will support our U.S. Minsk Group Co-Chair, Andrew Schofer, in his efforts to this end. If confirmed, I will urge relevant contacts to take constructive steps to advance a peaceful settlement that respects human dignity.

Question 19. The Azerbaijani Government has sought to punish U.S. persons who travel to Nagorno-Karabakh by precluding their entry into Azerbaijan, despite the importance of surveying humanitarian needs and prospects for peace in Nagorno-Karabakh and the due diligence needed to monitor U.S.-supported demining and humanitarian programs. Azerbaijani officials have also reportedly threatened to target civilian aircraft that fly into Nagorno-Karabakh. What has the administration done to raise concerns with the Azerbaijani Government about these retaliatory actions against freedom of movement, and how will you address this issue if confirmed?

Answer. If confirmed, I will do everything in my power to protect the safety and security of U.S. citizens, including by firmly condemning any threats to the safety of U.S. citizen travelers. The State Department advises U.S. citizens that the U.S.
Government is unable to provide emergency services to U.S. citizens in Nagorno-Karabakh and advises citizens not to travel to the region due to armed conflict. If confirmed, I will be prepared to engage with the Azerbaijani Government to ensure the safety and security of U.S. citizens. Violence or the threat of violence aimed at civilians of any nationality is unacceptable. If the need arises, I will deliver this message clearly to our Azerbaijani interlocutors.

Question 20. What is your view on the Royce-Engel proposals on non-deployment of snipers, heavy arms, or new weapons along the Nagorno-Karabakh Line of Contact, the deploying of OSCE observers, and the deployment of advanced gunfire locator systems along the line of contact? Do you see these proposals as a viable path to peace, and will you promote their acceptance by the Azerbaijan Government if confirmed?

Answer. As a Co-Chair of the Minsk Group, the United States has played and continues to play an active role in mediating a comprehensive, peaceful settlement of this longstanding conflict, the resolution of which would usher in a new era of peace and prosperity for the people of the South Caucasus.

The United States supports proposals to withdraw snipers, launch an OSCE investigation mechanism, and deploy sensors along the Line of Contact and the Armenia-Azerbaijan international border. The United States has been a strong advocate in the Minsk Group process for these and other confidence-building measures, which we believe would further reduce violence in areas affected by the conflict. Since President Aliyev and Prime Minister Pashinyan met on the margins of the Commonwealth of Independent States summit in Dushanbe, Tajikistan, September 27–28 and reached an understanding about the need to reduce tensions and uphold the ceasefire, the level of violence has fallen significantly. The Co-Chairs welcomed these developments, commended the sides for implementing constructive measures in good faith, and expressed their support for the leaders’ continued high-level dialogue.

If confirmed, I will support initiatives by the sides, the Co-Chairs, and others, which have the potential to further strengthen the ceasefire, reduce violence, and sustain a climate of trust for intensive negotiations on a peaceful settlement the conflict.

Question 21. Please provide more specific examples of what you will do, if confirmed, to push back against egregious violations of human rights and religious freedom, including against religious minorities, by the Azerbaijani Government. What cases will you raise, and will your engagement include condemnation of the Azerbaijani Government’s steps to desecrate or destroy remnants of Armenian and Christian religious heritage in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani authorities, consistent with Azerbaijan’s constitution and international obligations and commitments, to ensure human rights and fundamental freedoms, including of peaceful assembly, association, religion or belief, and expression; to foster an environment conducive to a vibrant and peaceful civil society; to respect pluralism; and to foster judicial independence, fair trial guarantees, and access to justice. I look forward to working with all partners to advance these goals. Azerbaijan’s progress in these areas would help to deepen our bilateral relationship and enhance the country’s long-term security.

Specifically, if confirmed, I will continue to call for the release of all those incarcerated for exercising their fundamental freedoms. I will sustain efforts to urge the Azerbaijani Government to facilitate registration of all religious groups; permit the importation, distribution, and sale of religious materials; and protect the rights of members of all religious groups. Earlier in November, the Azerbaijani authorities registered the Baku community of Jehovah’s Witnesses, which was a positive development. If confirmed, I also would condemn the destruction or desecration of any religious sites regardless of their affiliation.

The United States remains concerned about the shrinking space for civil society and political pluralism in Azerbaijan. If confirmed, I will continue to raise these concerns with the Azerbaijani Government and other partners. Likewise, if confirmed, I will support independent journalism in all media forms and press for equal access for Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty and other broadcasting organizations to be able to operate their various information platforms consistent with the rule of law and respect for freedom of expression.
Question 1. The Azerbaijani Government has scores of political prisoners of conscience behind bars, including journalists, dissidents, and religious activists. Some who have been released in recent years—such as opposition leader Ilgar Mammadov in August 2018 and former RFE/RL contributor Khadija Ismayilova in May 2016—remain subject to travel bans and have not had their records rehabilitated.

- If confirmed, what strategy do you plan to pursue to urge the Government to uphold its international commitments to provide fair and independent judicial procedures and to respect the fundamental rights of all its people?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani authorities, consistent with Azerbaijan’s constitution and international obligations and commitments, to ensure fundamental freedoms, including of peaceful assembly, association, religion, and expression; to foster an environment conducive to a vibrant and peaceful civil society; to respect pluralism; and to foster judicial independence and fair trial guarantees. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Azerbaijani Government to release all those incarcerated for exercising their human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 2. Over the past ten years, the Azerbaijani Government has targeted the operations and personnel of U.S.-funded Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty in Azerbaijan. Since December 2008, the Government has banned RFE/RL’s “Radio Azadi” from broadcasting on local radio frequencies. In December 2014, the Government raided and sealed RFE/RL’s bureau in Baku and arrested RFE/RL contributor and investigative journalist Khadija Ismayilova. In May 2015, authorities permanently closed the bureau and later that year sentenced Ms. Ismayilova to seven and a half years in jail. Since her provisional release in May 2016, Ms. Ismayilova remains subject to a travel ban and her conviction stands. In 2017, the Government blocked RFE/RL’s news website along with those of other independent outlets.

- If confirmed, how do you plan to advocate on behalf of this congressionally-funded media outlet and restore its ability to provide independent media coverage to the people of Azerbaijan?

Answer. Independent media are key to Azerbaijan’s democratic and economic development, and U.S. officials have been clear with the Azerbaijani Government in pressing for a return of Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty and other broadcasting organizations to the local FM airwaves. The Azerbaijani people deserve access to independent journalism in all media forms. The Azerbaijani Government should respect the fundamental freedom of expression, including the freedom to seek, receive, and impart information.

The United States also has called publicly and privately on Azerbaijan to reinstate online access to Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty and other independent broadcasters and media organizations. If confirmed, I will continue to support this objective.

Question 1. Earlier this year, Azerbaijan held a presidential election that international observers said “lacked genuine competition” and “took place within a restrictive political environment and under a legal framework that curtails fundamental rights and freedoms.” President Ilham Aliyev—who has removed term limits and extended his term length from five to seven years—won with a reported 86 percent of the vote. Neither the U.S. Embassy in Baku nor the State Department released a formal public statement following the worrisome conduct of this election.

- How will you approach public messaging concerning Azerbaijan’s weak democratic institutions and respect for human rights?

Answer. Free and fair electoral processes are a key component of democracy, political legitimacy, and long-term stability. As the most recent OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR) election reports on Azerbaijan indicate, much remains to be done for democratic electoral processes to be held in Azerbaijan. Following the April 11 presidential elections in Azerbaijan, the United States concurred publicly in the OSCE Permanent Council with the OSCE election observation mission’s assessment, and we urged Azerbaijan to address these concerns expeditiously.
The United States has pushed consistently for full implementation of electoral reforms in Azerbaijan recommended by international partners, such as the OSCE and Council of Europe. The United States has pressed publicly and privately for full respect for political pluralism and a level playing field for democratic competition. If confirmed, I will work with the Azerbaijani Government and people in these and other related areas. If confirmed, I also will support continued public messaging to raise U.S. concerns about democratic electoral processes, as well as on human rights issues.

Question 2. In your opinion, what value do you see in public U.S. statements that affirm the importance of democratic values and identify places in which they are violated or inadequately observed?

Answer. Promoting democracy and respect for human rights have long been central components of U.S. foreign policy. Supporting democracy not only promotes such understanding American values as religious freedom and worker rights, but also helps create a more secure, stable, and prosperous global arena in which the United States can advance its national interests. U.S. public statements play an important role in affirming the importance of democratic values, shedding light on democratic deficiencies, advocating reforms, and supporting local organizations and individuals who promote free and fair democratic electoral processes, human rights and fundamental freedoms, and rule of law in their own countries.

Question 3. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career—in Afghanistan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Serbia, at the U.S. Missions to the EU and NATO, and elsewhere—I have worked to promote the core U.S. values of democracy and human rights. As the Political Counselor at the U.S. Embassy in Kazakhstan, I met regularly with civil society and opposition activists to support them at a time when opposition leaders were being physically assaulted for exercising their fundamental freedoms. I worked with my colleagues at the Mission of the European Union in Kazakhstan to develop a joint U.S.-EU Democracy Award to recognize human rights activists in the country.

As the Deputy Chief of Mission in Kyrgyzstan, I met with all elements of civil society and worked to ensure that U.S. assistance programs supported civil society, an independent judiciary, and free and fair elections. On the eve of Kyrgyzstan’s presidential elections, when I learned the Government planned to deny domestic and OSCE election observers the opportunity to observe the vote, I immediately called the foreign minister to express deep U.S. concern. The Government ultimately allowed election monitors to observe the elections.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Serbia, I consistently emphasized respect for human rights, with a particular focus on rule-of-law reforms. I worked directly with the ministry of justice to ensure U.S. assistance programs could continue to operate, and I supported cooperation that resulted in Serbia rendering all remaining Serbian indictees of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia to The Hague for prosecution.

In Afghanistan, I led a NATO team that participated in the recount of votes in the 2014 presidential election that led to recognition of results that allowed the formation of the current Government of National Unity.

At the U.S. Mission to the European Union, I worked closely with the EU to encourage it to join the United States in imposing sanctions on Belarus for human rights violations and abuses. At NATO, I worked with our Allies to hold Russia accountable for its violations of international law and human rights, and I led the U.S. Mission’s engagement with the NATO Parliamentary Assembly to highlight the vital role of legislative oversight in democracies.

In all posts, I have supported vigorous U.S. exchange programs to shape the views and understanding of key opinion makers, civil society activists, and independent journalists in the countries in which I have served.

Question 4. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Azerbaijan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Azerbaijan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani authorities, consistent with Azerbaijan’s constitution and international obligations and commitments, to ensure human rights and fundamental freedoms, including of assembly, association, religion, and expression; to foster an environment conducive to a vibrant and peaceful civil society; to respect pluralism; and to foster judicial independence, due process, and access to justice. I look forward to working with all partners to advance these goals. Azerbaijan’s progress in these areas would help to deepen our bilateral relationship and enhance the country’s long-term security. As U.S. officials have previously stated, Azerbaijan’s release of all those incarcerated in connection with the exercise of their fundamental freedoms would be a good first step.

Question 5. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Azerbaijan in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. There are several potential obstacles to addressing our human rights concerns. These include challenges to pluralism in civil society, the media, political parties, religious groups, and the private sector. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani Government to create an environment in which civil society, the media, political parties, religious groups, and the private sector can operate freely, and I will work closely with all partners to ensure they can conduct their work as effectively as possible. Rule of law is critical to democratic and economic development, as well as to human and national security. The Department has raised our concerns about respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law in Azerbaijan publicly and privately with the Azerbaijani Government. If confirmed, I will advocate these core U.S. values and develop a dialogue with Azerbaijan on these important issues.

Question 6. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Azerbaijan? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, and, if confirmed, such meetings will be among my first priorities upon arriving in Azerbaijan. I will continue the Embassy’s current commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with those outside of the Government, such as civil society representatives and independent journalists, to demonstrate our support for pluralism and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will ensure full adherence to all applicable laws, including the Leahy Law, to ensure that U.S. security assistance and security cooperation in Azerbaijan reinforces human rights.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Azerbaijan to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Azerbaijan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will urge the Azerbaijani authorities, consistent with Azerbaijan’s constitution and international obligations and commitments, to ensure fundamental freedoms, including of assembly, association, religion, and expression; to foster an environment conducive to a vibrant and peaceful civil society; to respect pluralism; and to foster judicial independence and due process. If confirmed, I will continue the U.S. Government’s efforts to urge the Azerbaijani Government to release all those incarcerated for exercising their human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 8. Will you engage with Azerbaijan on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, and, if confirmed, it will be among my first priorities upon arriving in Azerbaijan. Promoting respect for human rights and good governance in Azerbaijan remains one of the three equally important and interconnected pillars of our bilateral relationship, along with cooperation on energy and economic issues, and on security.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Azerbaijan?
Answer. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in Azerbaijan.

Question 12. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor, and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As the face of America overseas, the State Department’s workforce should be diverse in every sense of the word and reflect our nation’s rich diversity. If confirmed, I will support that aim by recruiting a diverse team at U.S. Embassy Baku, mentoring all employees under my supervision to welcome and appreciate the advantages diversity brings to the workplace, and demanding that every team member be treated equally with dignity and respect.

Question 13. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will recruit a diverse team at U.S. Embassy Baku, mentor all employees under my supervision, and demand that every team member be treated equally with dignity and respect. I will make clear to all supervisors at U.S. Embassy Baku that I expect them to adhere to these principles. Throughout my career, I have worked to foster inclusive and respectful work environments, and I will not tolerate improper behavior that undermines this aim.

Answer. Political corruption is a global challenge, and it has a negative and corrosive impact on democratic governance and the rule of law. Increased transparency in governance; support for an independent judiciary, independent media, and vibrant civil society; strengthened separation of powers among branches of government; and whistleblower protections are important to help combat corruption. Corruption in Azerbaijan impedes the Government’s stated goal of attracting foreign investment, and it negatively affects adherence to democratic principles, human rights, and the rule of law in the country.

Question 15. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Azerbaijan and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Corruption is a problem in Azerbaijan, as it is in many countries of the former Soviet Union and around the world. The United States remains concerned about systemic corruption in government and throughout the economy. We welcome the Azerbaijani Government’s decision to create the State Agency for Public Service and Social Innovations, and to establish “ASAN” Service Centers (“easy” in Azerbaijani) to combat petty corruption and efficiency in delivering basic government services. However, the Azerbaijani Government should continue to take steps to reduce corruption at all levels.

Question 16. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Azerbaijan?

Answer. Corruption is a matter we have raised consistently with the Azerbaijani Government and, if confirmed, I will continue to raise U.S. concerns with the Azerbaijani authorities. If confirmed, in my engagement with the Azerbaijani Government, I will push for progress in all areas crucial for strengthening the rule of law, including judicial independence, access to justice, citizens’ awareness of rights, engagement on legal issues, and equal protection under the law; equal status in practice for prosecutors and defense attorneys; and systemic anti-corruption measures. Additionally, the State Department is committed combatting corruption with all of the tools at our disposal, including foreign assistance where possible.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO EARLE D. LITZENBERGER BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. The Azerbaijani Government has increasingly been cracking down on its political opposition, civil society, and media outlets. Reporters Without Borders ranks Azerbaijan 162 out of 180 countries for press freedom. What can the U.S. do to support political reform in Baku? If confirmed, how will you engage with the Government in Baku to strengthen civil society and help to improve its record on human rights?
Answer. If confirmed, consistent with Azerbaijan’s constitution and international obligations and commitments, I will urge the Azerbaijani authorities to ensure respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including of peaceful assembly, association, religion or belief, and expression; to promote an environment conducive to a vibrant and peaceful civil society; to respect pluralism; and to foster judicial independence, fair trial guarantees, and access to justice. I look forward to working with all partners to advance these goals. Azerbaijan’s progress in these areas would help to deepen our bilateral relationship and enhance the country’s long-term security. As U.S. officials have previously stated, Azerbaijan’s release of all those incarcerated for exercising their fundamental freedoms would be a good first step.

Independent media are key to Azerbaijan’s democratic and economic development, as are a vibrant civil society and pluralism. If confirmed, I will make among my first priorities to meet with independent, local media representatives, as well as with civil society representatives and political opposition figures. If confirmed, I will support continued public messaging to raise U.S. concerns in all of these areas.

Question 2. How does the recent appointment of younger, more technocratic officials reflect concerns about the economy in Azerbaijan? What can Azerbaijan do to develop its non-gas economy?

Answer. Diversification of Azerbaijan’s economy away from its dependence on oil and gas exports will create more employment opportunities, provide a platform for greater long-term economic stability, and foster an improved, transparent business climate where U.S. firms have a level playing field. Azerbaijan has recognized the importance of economic diversification and has prioritized policies to this end, but much more hard work remains to effectively implement reforms. U.S. assistance programs in Azerbaijan support economic diversification, including in the agriculture and tourism sectors. For example, USAID’s support to farmers and agribusinesses has increased and diversified Azerbaijan’s agricultural exports, such that tomatoes and hazelnuts are now Azerbaijan’s top exports after oil and gas.

The United States also sponsors exchange programs such as the International Visitor Leadership Program and Special American Business Internship Training program to bring Azerbaijanis to the United States and demonstrate U.S. best practices in targeted areas, including agriculture, energy efficiency, information technology, and economic development. Alumni of these programs, as well as other, younger, highly-educated Azerbaijanis, have gone on to occupy senior posts in the private sector and in the Azerbaijani Government, which has recognized the value of such experiences in developing the country’s economy.

Question 3. How important is Azerbaijan to European energy security? What role can the U.S. play in helping Azerbaijan secure its energy corridor that promotes energy diversity in Europe?

Answer. Azerbaijan has long been an important U.S. partner on energy security, an area in which we share a common strategic interest. Azerbaijan clearly recognizes the value of having multiple routes to markets for the Caspian region’s oil and gas. The Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan oil pipeline, which carries over 650,000 barrels of oil a day to Turkey, was an early success for energy diversity and for U.S.-Azerbaijan cooperation.

The United States strongly supports completion of the Southern Gas Corridor (SGC), which is poised to bring Caspian natural gas to Western Europe for the first time by 2020/21. The SGC will contribute to the diversification of Europe’s energy import routes and sources, and Azerbaijan has been a leader in its development. Azerbaijan has to date invested over $9 billion in the building or expansion of the pipeline networks that comprise the SGC. This past May, President Trump congratulated Azerbaijani President Ilham Aliyev and Azerbaijan on the inauguration of the first gas flowing through the SGC. If confirmed, I will continue to support our close cooperation with Azerbaijan on energy security, including completion of the SGC and consideration of potential pipeline expansions to serve new markets and transport gas from additional sources.

Question 4. In your view, is Russia playing a constructive or destructive role in the Nagorno-Karabakh dispute? What can the U.S. do to help bring the conflict finally to a conclusion?

Answer. The U.S. Co-Chair of the OSCE Minsk Group cooperates constructively with the Russian and French Co-Chairs to help the sides reach a peaceful and lasting settlement to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. Both Russia and France have consistently and publicly urged the parties to the conflict to demonstrate restraint and work toward a peaceful settlement. The United States continues to believe the Minsk Group format provides the best opportunity and the most trusted process for the sides to advance a settlement.
As a Co-Chair of the OSCE Minsk Group, the United States plays an active role in helping the sides find a peaceful and comprehensive settlement of this long-standing conflict, the resolution of which would usher in a new era of peace and prosperity for the people of the South Caucasus. U.S. policy remains clear: the only solution to this conflict is a negotiated settlement based on international law that includes adherence to the Helsinki Final Act principles of the non-use or threat of force, territorial integrity, and equal rights and self-determination of peoples. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Embassy in Azerbaijan continues to support the efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group to help the sides find a lasting solution to this conflict.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO EARLE D. LITZENBERGER BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. In a September 21, 2018 message to Prime Minister Nikol Pashinyan congratulating Armenia on its Independence Day, President Trump stated that “The coming months bring opportunities to resolve the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, which would create even more possibilities for U.S.-Armenian cooperation. As a member of the OSCE Minsk Group, the United States looks forward to working with you to find a lasting and peaceful resolution of this conflict.” If confirmed, how would you support efforts to reach a peaceful resolution?

Answer. As a Co-Chair of the OSCE Minsk Group, the United States plays an active role in helping the sides find a peaceful and comprehensive settlement of this longstanding conflict, the resolution of which would usher in a new era of peace and prosperity for the people of the South Caucasus. U.S. policy remains clear: the only solution to this conflict is a negotiated settlement based on international law that includes adherence to the Helsinki Final Act principles of the non-use or threat of force, territorial integrity, and equal rights and self-determination of peoples.

If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to support the efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group to help the sides find a lasting solution to this conflict, and to ensure the implementation of concrete measures to reduce tensions and increase effective monitoring along the Line of Contact and the Armenia-Azerbaijan international border. The Department has been a strong advocate in the Minsk Group process for such confidence-building measures, which it believes would reduce violence in areas affected by the conflict.

Question 2. And if confirmed, how would you support international efforts to persuade Azerbaijan to accept the proposals of the OSCE negotiating team, including the deployment of additional OSCE observers along the line of contact and the placement of OSCE-monitored advanced gunfire-locater systems and sound-ranging equipment to determine the source of the attacks along the line of contact?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to support the efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group to help the sides find a lasting solution to this conflict, and to ensure the implementation of concrete measures to reduce tensions and increase effective monitoring along the Line of Contact and the Armenia-Azerbaijan international border. The U.S., French, and Russian Co-Chairs of the OSCE Minsk Group work actively to help the sides reduce tension in the region, and over the years they have advanced a number of confidence-building measures that would reduce violence and improve the climate for negotiations. Enhancing the effectiveness of the OSCE’s monitoring efforts, including through an investigatory mechanism, is something the Co-Chairs have long supported and continue to discuss with the sides. If confirmed, I will support our U.S. Co-Chair for the OSCE Minsk Group, Andrew Schofer, in his efforts to develop and implement confidence-building measures to create an atmosphere that is conducive to progress in negotiations on a lasting settlement. The Co-Chairs have emphasized to all sides that real compromises are needed to bring about a lasting, peaceful settlement, and the Co-Chairs’ latest public statement expressed deep regret over the continuing and unnecessary loss of life resulting from this unresolved conflict.

Question 3. Azerbaijan has one the worst track records among OSCE countries on treatment of the LGBTI community. If confirmed, how will you advance the cause of LGBTI rights in Azerbaijan? Additionally, given the Department’s recent decision to no longer issue visas to same-sex partners of foreign diplomats and international organization employees working in the U.S., how will you ensure that exemptions for Azeri officials are properly applied?
Answer. Governments have a responsibility to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals, including LGBTI persons. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. Advancing universal human rights is in our national interest, and as Secretary Pompeo has said, LGBTI persons deserve the same freedoms, protections, and respect as everyone else.

With respect to Azerbaijan, if confirmed, I would consult closely with LGBTI human rights defenders on how best to support them in their advocacy, including through capacity building exchange programs like the International Visitor Leadership Program. I would not shy away from speaking out publicly and privately in support of the rights of all, including LGBTI persons, as the State Department spokesperson and other U.S. Government officials did following reports of the detention of LGBTI persons in Azerbaijan. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Azerbaijani Government to uphold and respect its international human rights obligations and commitments.

With respect to visas for same-sex domestic partners of diplomatic visa holders, if confirmed, I will work closely with my colleagues in the Office of Foreign Missions and Bureau of Consular Affairs to ensure the appropriate application of all U.S. visa laws and regulations, including with regard to visas for unmarried same-sex domestic partners of diplomatic visa holders. Within this framework, we will be ready to work with the Azerbaijani Government to explore viable options.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ERIC GEORGE NELSON BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Director of the Office of eDiplomacy at the Department of State, I promoted the office's sponsorship of TechCamps which helped citizens, civil society, and governments strengthen democracy and protect human rights. At TechCamps, we brought together technologists with civil society and citizen advocates in various countries and regions to help them identify ways to utilize technology to advance their causes. I convinced the Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy to adopt this pilot program as a permanent part of the State Department’s program toolkit. Since that time, U.S. embassies have sponsored an additional 37 tech camps whose aims include advocacy and communication campaigns, elections and civic participation, good governance and transparency, human rights, media freedom, and promotion of peace and tolerance.

As Deputy Chief of Mission of the U.S. Embassy in Costa Rica, I helped lead the embassy's broad engagement in support of human rights and democracy. In our work to improve security in Costa Rica and Central America, we focused on community policing, strengthening the judiciary and improving prison management to help Costa Rica protect the rights of all citizens. We placed a special emphasis on helping civil society and authorities address gender-based violence. I led our team to help Costa Rican youth launch TedXPuraVida Joven, an annual forum that encourages youth to engage as advocates for innovation and development in Central America. We helped the Government of Costa Rica design a project for online public procurement to help counter corruption. We also provided support to San Jose’s Pride Parade to promote diversity and respect for the LGBT community.

As Consul General in Munich, I was active in the U.S. Mission’s efforts to reach out to Muslim communities, encouraging efforts in Germany for integration and promoting United States’ values of religious tolerance. The Munich non-governmental organization IDIZEM recognized our efforts to promote interreligious dialogue with its Dialogue prize.

Over the course of my career, I have been honest about my sexual orientation and an advocate for diversity and inclusion. My visibility alongside my partner provided encouragement to host governments to improve their treatment of sexual minorities. In 1992, I was a founding officer of Gays and Lesbians in Foreign Affairs Agencies, an affinity group that has advocated tirelessly for inclusion and equal employment opportunity.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges you see to democracy or democratic development in Bosnia and Herzegovina? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Human rights and corruption are among the most pressing challenges facing Bosnia and Herzegovina. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report noted that the most significant human rights concerns in Bosnia and Herzegovina include harsh and life-threatening prison conditions; restrictions on expression and the press, including intimidation, and threats against journalists and media outlets; widespread government corruption; and crimes involving violence against minorities and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) individuals. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen adherence to our shared values and do everything in my power to combat intolerance and to promote religious freedom for all people. I also look forward to helping Bosnia and Herzegovina chart a path forward that benefits all citizens and meets democratic and European norms, including by addressing Sejdic-Finci and other rulings of the European Court of Human Rights. I will engage not only government officials and political parties, but also civil society and NGOs in Bosnia and Herzegovina, utilizing the full range of our traditional diplomatic, foreign assistance, and public diplomacy tools.

Question 3. What specific steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Bosnia and Herzegovina? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support Bosnia and Herzegovina on its Euro-Atlantic path. The path to European Union membership and a deeper relationship with NATO can only come with a strong commitment to democratic principles, including respect for rule of law and human rights, and the reforms that must come with this. Lack of political will is the biggest challenge I will face in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Corrupt politicians benefit from the status quo and have few incentives to make Bosnia and Herzegovina’s political system more democratic, free, and fair. I also look forward to helping Bosnia and Herzegovina chart a path forward that benefits all citizens and meets democratic and European norms, including by addressing Sejdic-Finci and other rulings of the European Court of Human Rights.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to utilize assistance from the State Department, USAID, and other agencies at post to strengthen the rule of law and democratic institutions, enhance government transparency and accountability, promote interethic reconciliation, and increase Bosnia and Herzegovina’s resilience to foreign malign influence. The Democracy Commission Small Grants program continues to be an important tool in empowering smaller, community-based organizations to advocate for reforms. If resources are available, I intend to use this tool to increase the capacity of civil society to fight against corruption, mobilize citizen participation in democratic processes, and support local initiatives that advance peace and stability. If confirmed, I will use our assistance tools to prioritize projects that best serve U.S. national interests and make Bosnia and Herzegovina a more functional partner.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Bosnia and Herzegovina? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Civil society is an essential part of a free and democratic society. Therefore, I am firmly committed to further developing working relationships with the numerous non-governmental and community organizations in Bosnia and Herzegovina. With respect to the Leahy Law, I will, if confirmed, ensure the Department continues to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities. Improving respect for human rights and the rule of law will be an important part of our efforts to build capacity in institutions providing security. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy.

A strong democracy requires a strong political opposition and diversity of views and backgrounds. Bosnia and Herzegovina’s opposition parties have a crucial role to play in realizing Bosnia and Herzegovina’s Euro-Atlantic aspirations. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with any opposition figure working to move Bosnia and Herzegovina forward. I will also continue U.S. Embassy Sarajevo’s efforts to increase the political participation of women, minorities, and youth.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Bosnia and Herzegovina on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Bosnia and Herzegovina?

Answer. The U.S. Embassy in Sarajevo has a strong history of engaging the press and working to preserve freedom of expression and media pluralism. Media freedom continues to face challenges in Bosnia and Herzegovina, where political parties exert undue control on newspapers, television, and other media outlets. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for freedom of the press, work to strengthen media freedom, to support investigative journalism, and meet regularly with members of the press.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. I understand that the United States—through our Embassy in Sarajevo—is already actively engaged at many levels, including through assistance programs, to support independent media voices, develop a public more discerning towards its media environment, and encourage a free and active exchange of ideas. If confirmed, I will continue this engagement.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Bosnia and Herzegovina on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Legislation protects the right of labor groups to organize in Bosnia and Herzegovina. If confirmed, I will advocate as necessary for its full implementation.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people—including LGBTI persons—in Bosnia and Herzegovina, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Bosnia and Herzegovina? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Bosnia and Herzegovina?

Answer. Governments have an obligation to protect, respect, and uphold the dignity and fundamental freedoms of all people—including LGBTI persons. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. Advancing universal human rights is in our national interest, and as Secretary Pompeo has said, LGBTI persons deserve the same freedoms, protections, and respect as everyone else. Bosnia and Herzegovina’s laws protect marginalized communities against hate crimes and bias-motivated violence; however, LGBTI people continue to face violence and discrimination.

If confirmed, my country team and I would consult closely with LGBTI human rights defenders on how best to support them in their work, including through public outreach and digital engagement to promote respect and acceptance. I would not shy away from speaking out publicly and privately in support of human rights for all, or from advocating for enhanced protections for LGBTI persons and other vulnerable populations.

Question 11. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression in Bosnia and Herzegovina? Will you commit to meet with representatives of a diverse swath of religious groups and communities and to advocate for their ability to register and worship peacefully in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to meet with representatives from the various faith communities in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH). I view their leaders as important partners in the fight to counter violent extremism and ethno-nationalism in BiH. Over the last year, the State Department has worked closely with the Inter-religious Council (IRC) to strengthen its capacity to monitor attacks on religious institutions and to promote peace, reconciliation, tolerance, and coexistence among the country’s diverse religious and ethnic communities. I hope to build on these efforts to promote religious freedom. Development and drafting of the annual International Religious Freedom report is an excellent opportunity to highlight government and societal challenges faced by members of religious groups and places of worship around the country.
Question 12. How will you seek to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within Bosnian institutions and civil society? What types of U.S. assistance do you see as most critical in this regard? How will you address corrupt political and economic influence or other illicit dealings with Bosnian political actors that advance the Kremlin’s agenda?

Answer. Strong institutions, a healthy, free society, and a robust rule of law make a country less vulnerable to foreign malign influence. Assistance targeted at combating corruption and supporting media freedom is essential to exposing Russia’s influence in Bosnia and Herzegovina. I hope to continue U.S. assistance programs to strengthen the capabilities of justice sector officials to combat corruption, including training on how to more vigorously investigate and prosecute cases. I fully support U.S. programs that counter disinformation by promoting independent, objective news and investigative journalism. It will also be critical to continue U.S. support for peacebuilding initiatives that counter Russia’s efforts to exploit tensions between ethno-religious groups. If confirmed, I will continue my predecessor’s efforts to publically condemn corruption and call out Russian malign influence.

Question 13. More broadly, Bosnia is increasingly subject to malign influence by other foreign actors, including China, Turkey and the Gulf states, and even its neighbors Serbia and Croatia. What steps do you see as necessary to preserve space for Bosnia to pursue a liberal democratic path toward NATO and the EU, and to foster internal support and consensus for this path?

Answer. The citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) overwhelmingly support the pursuit of EU membership, and deeper relationships with Euro-Atlantic institutions offer the brightest prospects for BiH’s future. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with like-minded international partners and encourage BiH’s leaders to pursue the tough reforms needed to progress on that path and fully embrace Western democratic norms.

Question 14. The Dayton Accords stopped the bloodshed of the 1990s but have proved insufficient for establishing a durable multi-ethnic, pluralist political system in the country. Meanwhile, leaders have exploited weaknesses in Bosnia’s political system to stoke interethnic tensions. How do you think the United States can best help to spur momentum on constitutional and other political and electoral reforms to ensure that governance in Bosnia and Herzegovina is genuinely democratic and accountable?

Answer. The citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina deserve a well-functioning government that works for them. As Bosnia and Herzegovina moves closer to Euro-Atlantic standards, streamlining decision-making and legislative processes will be necessary. The United States has a long history of encouraging political and constitutional reform, but timing and solid support of reform-minded players are essential for success. Any effort must be led by the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves. If confirmed, I will continue the embassy’s assistance targeting improvements in accountability, transparency, and respect for the rule of law. I will encourage political momentum for change and will support reform efforts that make the country more functional and bring it closer to democratic norms.

Question 15. Bosnian legislators recently voted to reduce their potential vulnerability to be prosecuted for corruption, and the country’s specialized state mechanism to deal with organized crime, corruption, and terrorism has declined in credibility and effectiveness since 2009. If confirmed, how would you use various punitive tools, including Bosnia-specific sanctions, the Global Magnitsky Act, and visa restrictions, to impose constraints on, and deter, corrupt actors?

Answer. As I mentioned in my testimony, when local institutions fail to act, or if peace and stability are threatened, targeted sanctions can be an effective response. Over a hundred citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina are subject to OFAC sanctions under Executive Order 13304, and last month State Department targeted corrupt politician Nikola Spircic for visa restrictions. These actions promote accountability in Bosnia and Herzegovina and remind both citizens and government officials that the international community is still watching, and still engaged. The authorities granted under the Global Magnitsky Act may be one useful tool in tackling the culture of impunity that exists across much of the globe.

Question 16. How would you work with EU, the Office of the High Representative, and other international partners to more effectively address official corruption and organized crime and strengthen the Bosnian judiciary’s will and capacity to punish it?

Answer. International institutions have an important role to play in the fight against organized crime and corruption in Bosnia and Herzegovina. Our efforts are best served through close coordination and mutual support. One example is Embassy Sarajevo’s support (financial, and through subject matter expertise) of the...
OSCE’s efforts to monitor and publically document corruption cases. If confirmed, I hope to build on efforts such as these and to strengthen partnerships with the EU, Office of the High Representative, OSCE, and others working to strengthen the rule of law.

Question 17. As presently staffed and deployed, EUFOR does not provide a credible deterrent to any potential threats against Bosnia and Herzegovina’s peace or territorial integrity, and leaders in Republika Srpska regularly call for separating from the country. With the EUFOR mission up for renewal in the UNSC next month, where it is potentially subject to a Russian veto, how will you work with allies to strengthen EUFOR’s deterrence capacity? In this regard, do you think that U.S. and other NATO forces should augment EUFOR?

Answer. The United States firmly believes EUFOR is critical to deterring violence in Bosnia and Herzegovina; its primary mandate is to maintain a safe and secure environment. I will support efforts to maintain and strengthen EUFOR’s contributions to stability in BiH. NATO Headquarters Sarajevo—commanded by U.S. Brigadier General Bissell—works in close coordination with EUFOR. Having a U.S. general officer on the ground is a visible demonstration of U.S. commitment to BiH, but serves the additional purpose of ensuring that work by EUFOR and NATO are complementary rather than redundant.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ERIC GEORGE NELSON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Outgoing Republika Srpska President Milorad Dodik has led efforts questioning if not denying what the United States and the international community generally have recognized as a genocide at Srebrenica in July 1995. How will you respond to such assertions as the U.S. Ambassador to Bosnia and Herzegovina?

Answer. As the State Department noted in its statement on August 15, the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the International Court of Justice concluded that genocide occurred in Srebrenica in 1995. Realizing the scope of the tragedy of the past war and the importance of continuing to build trust and reconciliation, the United States remains fully committed to assisting authorities in Bosnia and Herzegovina, at the state, entity, and cantonal levels, to investigate and prosecute individuals responsible for crimes against all ethnic groups. The denial of established facts of prior wars impedes these objectives and does not assist the country’s citizens. The horrific war of the 1990s reminds us that we must strive for a stable and prosperous future for the benefit of all citizens, regardless of ethnicity or religion.

If confirmed, I will strongly oppose efforts to rewrite the facts of the war, to deny history, or to politicize tragedy. It is in the interest of all citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina to reverse the trend of revering convicted war criminals as heroes, and to ensure their crimes continue to be publicly rejected.

Question 2. Some have asserted that there is a new environment for hardline nationalists in Europe, including for example some Bosnian Serb leaders, to advance dangerous programs of ethnic discrimination and division, even border changes and separation. U.S. policy, however, has traditionally been based on the primacy of individual human rights for all, not the collective ethnic privileges of a selected few. Is that still the case, and will you stress in your work as Ambassador the need to protect the rights of the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina as individuals?

Answer. Defending individual human rights and freedoms is central to U.S. foreign policy. The Dayton Peace Accords, which serves as the constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH), also established a political model of three constituent peoples—Bosniaks, Serbs, and Croats—and two sub-state entities. BiH must find a way to balance the political equality of its three constituent peoples—as called for in a 2000 ruling of the BiH Constitutional Court—with the rights of individuals, including those persons who are not or do not self-identify as members of one of the three constituent peoples. If confirmed, I look forward to helping Bosnia and Herzegovina chart a path forward that benefits all citizens and meets democratic and European norms. I will also do my utmost to defend the human rights of the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina.
Question 3. While respecting those collective privileges for Bosniaks, Serbs and Croats that are legally recognized, will you actively encourage reforms and other efforts to rid the country of the ethnic divisions which are holding the country back, including in regard to European integration?

Answer. The United States remains committed to a unified, stable, democratic, and prosperous Bosnia and Herzegovina that is firmly anchored in Euro-Atlantic institutions and fully embraces Western, democratic values and norms. If confirmed, I will actively encourage reforms that move the country closer to the European Union and take a strong stand against attempts to divide the country with ethn nationalism.

Question 4. For years now, Bosnia and Herzegovina has been in violation of its Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) commitments as well as the European Convention for Human Rights by denying a substantial percentage of its citizens of their right to seek certain elected offices due to ethnic criteria. The Sejdic-Finci case, involving prominent citizens who sought to run for President but were denied the ability to do so because they are Romani or Jewish, was the first of several examples of this problem. As Ambassador, what will you do to get Bosnian political leaders to finally address and resolve this issue?

Answer. Bosnia and Herzegovina must comply with the European Court of Human Rights' ruling in the Sejdic-Finci case, which found that provisions of the BiH Constitution that do not permit non-constituent peoples (those who do not identify as Serbs, Croats, or Bosniaks) to run for the presidency or upper house of parliament discriminate against minorities. In fact, there are several other court decisions—both of the ECHR and the Constitutional Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina—that have yet to be implemented, due to lack of political will. These decisions are legally binding upon BiH and must be adopted into law. If confirmed, I will stress the importance of complying with these rulings. I will actively support efforts to help Bosnia and Herzegovina address these rulings through appropriate amendments to the country's constitutional and legislative frameworks.

Question 5. For years now, Bosnia and Herzegovina has been in violation of its Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) commitments as well as the European Convention for Human Rights by denying a substantial percentage of its citizens of their right to seek certain elected offices due to ethnic criteria. The Sejdic-Finci case, involving prominent citizens who sought to run for President but were denied the ability to do so because they are Romani or Jewish, was the first of several examples of this problem. Will you make it a priority in your work?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize efforts to defend human rights and advance political reforms that bring Bosnia and Herzegovina's political and legal framework into conformance with its international obligations, as well as improve the country's stability and functionality.

Question 6. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As Director of the Office of eDiplomacy at the Department of State, I promoted the office's sponsorship of TechCamps which helped citizens, civil society, and governments strengthen democracy and protect human rights. At TechCamps, we brought together technologists with civil society and citizen advocates in various countries and regions to help them identify ways to utilize technology to advance their causes. I convinced the Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy to adopt this pilot program as a permanent part of the State Department's program toolkit. Since that time, U.S. embassies have sponsored an additional 37 tech camps, whose aims include advocacy and communication campaigns, elections and civic participation, good governance and transparency, human rights, media freedom, and promotion of peace and tolerance.

As Deputy Chief of Mission of the U.S. Embassy in Costa Rica, I helped lead the embassy's broad engagement in support of human rights and democracy. In our work to improve security in Costa Rica and Central America, we focused on community policing, strengthening the judiciary, and improving prison management, to help Costa Rica protect the rights of all citizens. We placed a special emphasis on helping civil society and authorities address gender-based violence.

I led our team to help Costa Rican youth launch TedXPuraVida Joven, an annual forum that encourages youth to engage as advocates for innovation and development in Central America. We helped the Government of Costa Rica design a project for online public procurement to help counter corruption. We also provided support to San Jose's Pride Parade to promote diversity and respect for the LGBT community.
As Consul General in Munich, I was active in the U.S. Mission’s efforts to reach out to Muslim communities, encouraging efforts in Germany for integration and promoting United States’ values of religious tolerance. The Munich non-governmental organization IDIZEM recognized our efforts to promote interreligious dialogue with its Dialogue prize.

Over the course of my career, I have been honest about my sexual orientation and an advocate for diversity and inclusion. My visibility, alongside with my partner, provided encouragement to host governments to improve their treatment of sexual minorities. In 1992, I was a founding officer of Gays and Lesbians in Foreign Affairs Agencies, an affinity group that has advocated tirelessly for inclusion and equal employment opportunity.

Question 7. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Bosnia and Herzegovina? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Bosnia and Herzegovina? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report noted that the most significant human rights concerns in Bosnia and Herzegovina include harsh and life-threatening prison conditions; restrictions on expression and the press, including intimidation, threats against journalists and media outlets; widespread government corruption; and crimes involving violence against minorities and lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) individuals. If confirmed, I will work to ensure the adherence to our shared values and do everything in my power to combat intolerance and to promote religious freedom for all people. I will engage not only government officials and political parties, but also Bosnian civil society and citizens, utilizing the full range of our traditional diplomatic, assistance, and public diplomacy tools.

Question 8. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Bosnia and Herzegovina in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Regrettably, divisions between ethnic and religious groups in Bosnia and Herzegovina exist and underpin a tacit segregation—most noticeable in the school systems. These divisions are at odds with the goal of the Dayton Peace Accords of a unified, multiethnic, democratic Bosnia and Herzegovina. Promoting this vision of Bosnia and Herzegovina will likely be my greatest challenge. However, it is one to which I am fully committed and look forward to tackling.

Question 9. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Bosnia and Herzegovina? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Civil society is an essential part of a free and democratic society. Therefore, I am firmly committed to further developing working relationships with the numerous non-governmental and community organizations in Bosnia and Herzegovina. With respect to the Leahy Law, I will, if confirmed, ensure the Department continues to thoroughly vet all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities. Improving respect for human rights and the rule of law will be an important part of our efforts to build capacity in institutions providing security. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Bosnia and Herzegovina to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Bosnia and Herzegovina?

Answer. According to the State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report, there were no reports of political prisoners or detainees and no indications that the Government or its agents committed arbitrary or unlawful killings, or caused ‘disappearances.’ In the unlikely event that such an incident comes to light, I will, if confirmed, work tirelessly to investigate the situation, engaging government and other officials as necessary.

Question 11. Will you engage with Bosnia and Herzegovina on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will sustain the United States’ engagement with members of civil society in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including activists, non-governmental organizations, religious groups, and international organizations with representation in Bosnia that share our vision of a democratic, free, and inclusive society. These include (but are not limited to) organizations such as the Organization for Security Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), the United Nations, the Office of the High Representative for Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Council of Europe, and the European Union, as well as local civil society organizations.

Question 12. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 13. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 14. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Bosnia and Herzegovina?

Answer. Neither I nor any of my immediate family members have any financial interests in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Question 15. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I am committed to promoting an Embassy workplace that is tolerant and embraces diversity in all its forms. Diversity results in better, more creative decision-making. If confirmed, one of my priorities will be to build a diverse team. I hope to do this by encouraging Foreign Service officers from varied backgrounds and groups to bid on Embassy Sarajevo and contribute their energies and talents to our efforts. I also look forward to serving with and developing a team of Locally Employed Staff that embraces the ethnic, religious, and geographic diversity that make Bosnia and Herzegovina so unique. I will do my best to mentor all of my staff, both American and Bosnian, to achieve their full professional potential during my tenure.

Question 16. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I intend to lead by example, and demonstrate my commitment to diversity and inclusion in all of my interactions with members of my team. Early in my tenure, I will establish my clear expectations regarding fairness, tolerance, and respect for all, and I will ensure that any behaviors that fail to meet this standard are quickly corrected. I look forward to the opportunity to provide a vision to my team of what a fair, respectful, and inclusive workplace looks like and how it benefits the work we do on behalf of the American people.

Question 17. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Bosnia and Herzegovina specifically?

Answer. As I noted in my testimony, corruption has a direct impact on the stability of a country. Corruption undermines public confidence in institutions and makes countries vulnerable to foreign malign influence and organized crime. Strengthening the rule of law in Bosnia and Herzegovina is a top U.S. priority for the country. Progress on other foreign policy goals can only happen if Bosnia and Herzegovina is governed by the rule of law. Bosnia and Herzegovina suffers from endemic corruption, which weakens all levels of government and the judiciary and stifles private enterprise. If confirmed, I intend to make anti-corruption efforts one of my top priorities.

Question 18. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Bosnia and Herzegovina and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Corruption pervades all levels of government in Bosnia and Herzegovina, broadly impacting public life—from the healthcare system, to education, employment, and the judiciary. A complex patronage network and weak rule of law allow corrupt politicians to maintain power and foster a culture of impunity. Thus far, the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina has failed to take the issue of corruption as seriously as the United States would prefer. The number of corruption cases pursued by prosecutors remains woefully low. On the rare occasion that corruption investigations lead to convictions, lenient penalties, mostly in the form of suspended sentences, are especially problematic. If confirmed, I pledge to continue Embassy Sarajevo’s efforts to strengthen the judiciary and improve government accountability and transparency.

Question 19. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Bosnia and Herzegovina?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue Embassy Sarajevo’s efforts to improve governance and tackle corruption by supporting programming that increases government transparency and accountability. Specifically, I intend to prioritize programs that strengthen the ability of law enforcement and judicial officials to investigate and prosecute corruption, increase civil society’s capacity to monitor government performance and advocate for reforms, support cross-party cooperation on anti-corruption initiatives, advance efforts to introduce e-governance solutions, and foster investigative journalism to expose corrupt practices.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ERIC GEORGE NELSON BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. Republika Srpska leader Dodik has openly called for closer ties to Russia and met Russian President Putin last Sunday. How would you ensure that the Bosnian people and its leaders recognize the value of continuing on a Western path toward EU and NATO accession if Dodik becomes a more prominent force in the country?

Answer. Membership in the European Union and in NATO are the best guarantors of Bosnia and Herzegovina’s (BiH) future stability, security, and prosperity. One possible result of the general election on October 7 is Milorad Dodik’s election as the next Serb member of the state-level tri-presidency. It is important to note that the three-member presidency and other Dayton structures provide built-in checks and balances to prevent any individual or political grouping from unilaterally changing long-established policies of the Government of BiH, including its stated commitment to pursue Euro-Atlantic integration. Continued U.S. engagement and leadership is essential to ensuring BiH continues to advance on that path. If confirmed, I will coordinate closely with like-minded international and local partners to keep BiH on a path that fully embraces Western democratic norms.

Question 2. Twenty-three years after the Dayton Peace Accords ended the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, the country’s ethnic groups are living more separately than ever. Has the Dayton structure institutionalized ethnic differences and made long-term resolution more difficult in Bosnia and Herzegovina? In your view, how should that structure be changed or replaced going forward for Bosnia to reach its Western goals?

Answer. The citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina deserve a well-functioning government that works for them. The Dayton Accords brought peace to Bosnia and Herzegovina, and stability to the region as a whole. This stability provides the foundation for Bosnia and Herzegovina’s pursuit of membership in Euro-Atlantic institutions such as NATO and the European Union. As the country moves closer to Euro-Atlantic standards, streamlining decision-making and legislative processes will be necessary. The United States has a long history of encouraging political and constitutional reform, but timely and solid support of reform-minded local actors are essential for success. Any effort must be led by the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina themselves. BiH must find a way to balance the political equality of its three constituent peoples—as called for in a 2000 ruling of the state-level Constitutional Court—with the rights of individuals, including those persons who are not or do not self-identify as members of one of the three constituent peoples. If confirmed, I look forward to helping Bosnia and Herzegovina chart a path forward that benefits all citizens.

Question 3. Unemployment, especially youth unemployment, remains very high in Bosnia and Herzegovina and corruption is endemic. What can the United States do to break this cycle and help Bosnia provide both a better future for its young people and a better business climate that foreign investors can trust?

Answer. Bosnia and Herzegovina must advance reforms to improve its business climate, attract greater foreign investment, and harness the capabilities of a young workforce that now prefers to head abroad for greater opportunities. To promote these goals, U.S. assistance programs advance trade policies, legislation, and regulatory reforms that align with EU and international standards, increase transparency, and reduce opportunities for corruption. In turn, these changes will establish a level playing field for U.S. investment and businesses. In addition, if conformed, I will support U.S. programs that promote entrepreneurship by providing targeted assistance to help small businesses access finance, improve productivity, and utilize new technologies.
The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:34 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. James E. Risch, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Risch [presiding], Gardner, Young, and Murphy.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JAMES E. RISCH,
U.S. SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Senator Risch. The committee will come to order, and we are going to start the meeting. Senator Kaine is unavoidably detained at a security briefing, and so I was going to wait for him, but in lieu thereof, we will start. I am sure he will excuse us for that.

So I want to welcome everyone to this hearing today. It is a pleasure to have all of these nominees before us today. And I want to thank each of you for being here today and for your willingness to serve. The countries you have been nominated to represent some aspect of these challenges.

Mr. Blome, Tunisia has peacefully achieved many political milestones since 2011, prompting observers to portray the country as the lone success of the Arab Spring. Internal political tensions, economic pressures, security threats and greater regional dynamics, nonetheless, pose ongoing challenges. Despite a relative lack of conflict, Tunisia remains a potential source of regional struggles among rival political ideologies and among violent extremist groups vying for prominence and recruits. The survival of the Arab Spring’s most successful political transition depends on several factors. The recovery of the economy is by far the most important factor that will determine the survivability of the Tunisian revolution.

Mr. Pommersheim, while Tajikistan has been a strong partner to the United States and international forces in efforts to bring security and peace to Afghanistan, the country remains fragile and in a vulnerable state. Tajikistan faces challenges, including border security, widespread corruption, inadequate health and education systems, and food and energy shortages. Of the former Soviet states, it has the lowest per capita gross domestic product and the highest percentage of people living in poverty. Many Tajiks travel to Russia and find work, and remittances account for over 30 percent of the GDP. Regional threats include violent extremism, terrorism, and the trafficking of weapons and narcotics. Given these conditions, Tajikistan must deal with both Russian and Chinese interests and influence.

As these countries attempt to expand their spheres of influence, it is important that the United States remain attentive to developments there. Economic growth in Tajikistan is critical to achieving overall regional stability and to strengthening regional economic integration.

Mr. Moser, Kazakhstan is becoming a central player in geopolitics. The country has always sought a multi-vectored foreign policy to balance competing interests from abroad. With Kazakhstan’s involvement in China's Belt and Road Initiative, it has the ability to rebalance its relationship with Russia. The country has much to gain but could face challenges.

As the United States implements the President’s Central Asia economic policy, it is important that we not passively watch developments with Beijing and Moscow unfold but that we ensure this process protects Kazakhstan’s interests, as well as U.S. interests.

Again, these are all challenging posts, and I look forward to hearing your thoughts on how the United States can move forward with those countries.

So with that, I would like to introduce all three of our nominees here today.

Mr. Blome has been nominated to be Ambassador to Tunisia. Born in Illinois, Mr. Blome is a career member of the senior Foreign Service, having served as a diplomat since 1993. He has extensive experience, having previously served in Tunisia, as well as many of the neighboring countries, including Israel, Egypt, and Iraq.

Mr. Pommersheim has been nominated to be Ambassador to Tajikistan. From Florida, Mr. Pommersheim is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of counselor, having served in the State Department since 1990. He has served in several tough posts, including Kazakhstan, Russia, China, and has extensive foreign language skills.

Ambassador Moser has been nominated to be Ambassador to Kazakhstan. Born in North Carolina, Mr. Moser is a career member of the senior Foreign Service class of minister-counselor and has been with the Department since 1984. He has already served as Ambassador to Moldova, but has spent time in Kazakhstan, Ukraine, and Egypt and held several senior positions at the State Department.

So with that, I would like to open the hearing and give each of you an opportunity. Mr. Blome, we will start with you and hear from our other nominees.
STATEMENT OF DONALD ARMIN BLOME, OF ILLINOIS, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF TUNISIA

Mr. Blome. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, members of the committee. Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

I am honored that President Trump has nominated me to be the U.S. Ambassador to Tunisia, and I appreciate the confidence he and Secretary Pompeo have shown in me by making this nomination.

My wife Debbie and my sons, Nicholas and Carl, are here with me today. My daughter Sarah could not be here. Like most Foreign Service families, they have shared in the adventure and the great pride of representing our country overseas, but also the burdens of disrupted schooling and careers, evacuations, and long separations. Few of us could do what we do without the support of our families, and I want to take this opportunity to thank them.

If confirmed, my highest priority as U.S. Ambassador will be ensuring the safety and security of our people and their families and that of Americans living in and visiting Tunisia.

In 2011, the Tunisian people rejected dictatorship and reset their country’s path toward democracy. Since that time, U.S.-Tunisia ties have strengthened and expanded. Tunisia has consolidated its democratic changes, partnered with the United States in the fight against terrorism, and taken steps to stabilize and open its economy. Over $1.3 billion in U.S. investments since the revolution have reinforced this trajectory.

If confirmed, I look forward to building on the strong foundations of the U.S.-Tunisia partnership to advance U.S. security and prosperity. This will require sustaining our security cooperation to counter terrorist threats, secure borders, and respond to instability in neighboring Libya. Additionally, this will require working with our Tunisian partners to press forward economic reforms for sustainable and inclusive growth, thereby increasing trade and investment opportunities for U.S. and Tunisian businesses. It will also require encouraging Tunisia’s leaders to follow through on their democratic experiment, building the institutions needed for long-term success and stability.

I will describe the three pillars of the U.S.-Tunisia relationship: security partnership, economic cooperation, and political support.

A major non-NATO ally and a member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS, Tunisia knows the real threat of terrorism. The United States has worked with the Tunisian military and police to empower a security sector capable of securing Tunisia’s territory and population while respecting the rule of law and individual rights. Tunisia also faces the challenge of holding accountable its nationals who traveled to Iraq and Syria and Libya to engage in terrorist acts. With U.S. support, the Tunisian Government is enhancing its capabilities to investigate, prosecute, and incarcerate these individuals. If confirmed, I would work to expand this security and counterterrorism relationship, helping our Tunisian partners to stand as a force for stability.
Tunisia’s leaders have outlined a vision for inclusive and open economic growth, stronger anti-corruption measures, and a level playing field where U.S. and Tunisian companies can compete on the strength of their products and ideas. Tunisia’s economic situation remains fragile as frustration with unemployment, the rising cost of living, and geographic disparities complicate the government’s reform efforts. In partnership with the IMF, the Tunisian Government has begun undertaking changes to rationalize government spending, encourage private sector development, and ensure young Tunisians are able to participate in their country’s success. If confirmed, I would prioritize advocacy for U.S. companies seeking to export or pursue investment opportunities in an expanding Tunisian economy.

Finally, while Tunisia remains firmly pointed toward democracy, difficult steps remain to consolidate its political transformation. In 2014, Tunisia held its first free and fair presidential and parliamentary elections and finalized a new constitution. And Tunisians recently voted in their first-ever municipal elections. Despite this progress, the hard work continues: finalizing a constitutional court, tackling corruption, and ensuring that steps to improve accountability in the private sector do not impinge on civil society and nongovernmental activities. Elections slated for next year will be watched as a signal of the Tunisian democracy’s maturity and robustness.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, for giving me this opportunity to address you. If confirmed, I would look forward to leading the dynamic and talented team of U.S. professionals at U.S. Embassy Tunis as we work to advance U.S. priorities there.

PREPARED STATEMENT OF DONALD ARMIN BLOME

Chairman Risch, Ranking Member Kaine, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I am honored that President Trump nominated me to be the U.S. Ambassador to Tunisia, and I appreciate the confidence he and Secretary Pompeo have shown in me by making this nomination.

My wife Debbie, and my sons, Nicholas and Carl, are here with me today. My daughter could not be here. Like most Foreign Service families, they have shared in the adventure and the great pride of representing our country overseas, but also the burdens of disrupted schooling and careers, evacuations, and long family separations. Few of us could do what we do without the support of our families, and I want to use this opportunity to thank them.

If confirmed, my highest priority as U.S. Ambassador will be ensuring the safety and security of our people and their families, and that of Americans living in and visiting Tunisia.

In 2011, the Tunisian people rejected dictatorship and reset their country’s path toward democracy. Since that time, U.S.-Tunisia ties have strengthened and expanded. Tunisia has consolidated its democratic changes, partnered with the United States in the fight against terrorism, and taken steps to stabilize and open its economy. Over $1.3 billion in U.S. investments since its revolution have reinforced this trajectory.

If confirmed, I look forward to building on the strong foundations of the U.S.-Tunisia partnership to advance U.S. security and prosperity. This will require sustaining our security cooperation to counter terrorist threats, secure borders, and respond to instability in neighboring Libya. Additionally, this will require working with our Tunisian partners to press forward economic reforms for sustainable and inclusive growth, thereby increasing trade and investment opportunities for U.S. and Tunisian businesses. It will also require encouraging Tunisia’s leaders to follow... through on their democratic experiment, building the institutions needed for long-term success and stability.

Let me describe the three pillars of the U.S.-Tunisia relationship: security partnership, economic cooperation, and political support.

A major non-NATO ally and member of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS, Tunsis knows the real threat of terrorism. The United States has worked with the Tunisian military and police to empower a security sector capable of securing Tunisia’s territory and population while respecting the rule of law and individual rights. Tunisia also faces the challenge of holding accountable its nationals who traveled to Iraq, Syria, and Libya to engage in terrorist acts. With U.S. support, the Tunisian Government is enhancing its capabilities to investigate, prosecute, and incarcerate these individuals. If confirmed, I would work to expand this security and counterterrorism relationship, helping our Tunisian partners to stand as a force for stability.

Tunisia’s leaders have outlined a vision for inclusive and open economic growth, stronger anti-corruption measures, and a level playing field where U.S. and Tunisian companies can compete on the strength of their products and ideas. Tunisia’s economic situation remains fragile as frustration with unemployment, the rising cost of living, and geographic disparities complicate the Government’s reform efforts.
In partnership with the IMF, the Tunisian Government has begun undertaking changes to rationalize government spending, encourage private sector development, and ensure young Tunisians are able to participate in their country’s success. If conformed, I would prioritize advocacy for U.S. companies seeking to export or pursue investment opportunities in Tunisia.

Finally, while Tunisia remains firmly pointed toward democracy, difficult steps remain to consolidate its political transformation. In 2014, Tunisia held its first free and fair presidential and parliamentary elections and finalized a new constitution, and Tunisians recently voted in their first-ever municipal elections. Despite this progress, the hard work continues: finalizing the constitutional court, tackling corrruption, and ensuring that steps to improve accountability in the private sector do not impinge on civil society and non-governmental activities. Elections slated for next year will be watched as a signal of the Tunisian democracy’s maturity and robustness.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Kaine, and members of the committee, for giving me the opportunity to address you. If confirmed, I look forward leading the dynamic and talented team of U.S. professionals at U.S. Embassy Tunis as we work to advance U.S. priorities there.

I would be happy to answer any questions.

Senator Risch. Thank you very much, Mr. Blome.

Mr. Moser, we would like to hear your thoughts on Kazakhstan, please.

STATEMENT OF HON. WILLIAM MOSER, OF NORTH CAROLINA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EX-TRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF KAZAKHSTAN

Ambassador Moser. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, it is an honor and a privilege to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be Ambassador to the Republic of Kazakhstan. I am honored by the trust and confidence the President and Secretary Pompeo have placed in me with this nomination.
If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with Congress to advance our country’s interests in Kazakhstan and to further strengthen the enhanced strategic partnership with Kazakhstan set by President Trump in his meeting with Kazakhstan’s President Nazarbayev in January of this year.

I want to introduce my wife Marie and my daughter Rebecca.
Unfortunately, my two sons could not be with us today, but we are all very pleased to return to Kazakhstan where I served 20 years ago. Marie and I and our children have fond memories of our time there.
For more than a quarter century, Kazakhstan has been a valued friend and a strategic partner of the United States in Central Asia. We were pleased to be the very first country to recognize Kazakhstan’s independence on Christmas Day 1991. Sovereign, independent, and dynamic, Kazakhstan over the past nearly 27 years has worked diligently to strengthen its economy, investing wisely in the future through ambitious education and infrastructure projects. A country the size of Western Europe and the ninth largest country in the world, Kazakhstan is geographically strategic, ethnically diverse, and resource rich. Its population is young, energetic, and increasingly connected with the world around them.

For the United States, our strategic goals in Kazakhstan are to strengthen Kazakhstan’s sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity, and to support Kazakhstan’s development as a prosperous, stable, and democratic state that is integrated into the world economy and that cooperates with its neighbors, the United States, and our partners to advance regional and global security. The United States and Kazakhstan have worked closely to pursue these ambitious goals. Following the renewed commitments of our two countries’ presidents, if confirmed, I look forward to further enhancing our engagement as strategic partners.

U.S. companies have long recognized Kazakhstan’s potential and today have a strong history of cooperation with Kazakhstan to develop its tremendous oil and gas resources. United States’ investment in Kazakhstan has grown to nearly $30 billion, making Kazakhstan an important economic partner in the region. If confirmed, I look forward to strengthening U.S.-Kazakhstan commercial ties and to working with Kazakhstan in sectors like agriculture, manufacturing, and IT services as it diversifies its economic base.

Kazakhstan has been a key supporter of our South Asia strategy, providing crucial support for our forces in Afghanistan and denying safe haven for terrorists. Kazakhstan continues to provide critical logistical support and access for our troops fighting ISIS and the Taliban in Afghanistan. We appreciate Kazakhstan’s work to train and educate Afghan civilian specialists and to empower women in Afghanistan’s economy. Kazakhstan can be proud of its work to focus global attention on Afghanistan and Central Asia during its rotating membership on the United Nations Security Council, which will successfully conclude this December.

Since Kazakhstan took the courageous step to voluntarily renounce its nuclear weapons after independence, the United States and Kazakhstan have worked in continuous partnership for more than a quarter century to safely and securely manage this part of its Soviet legacy. Kazakhstan has consistently been a leading voice for nonproliferation, working to ensure a safer and healthier future for the children of Kazakhstan and for the world. Kazakhstan today is a valued partner in our efforts to rid the Korean Peninsula of nuclear weapons.

I first served in Kazakhstan in 1996 in our then-embassy in Almaty as a management officer and then as energy attache. And as you have mentioned, Senator Risch, I have also served as Ambassador to Moldova. If confirmed, I intend to draw on my years of experience in order to further deepen our relationship with Kazakhstan and also to effectively manage the embassy. I have had years of experience in managing organizations within the Department of State of hundreds of employees, and I will bring that skill to my job in Kazakhstan to make sure that we have an effective diplomatic platform that serves the United States’ interests and does the best job we can of strengthening our long-term strategic partnership with the people of Kazakhstan.

Thank you very much.

[Ambassador Moser’s prepared statement follows:]
states, most recently as Ambassador to Moldova. If confirmed, I intend to draw on my years of experience in the region to work with the Government of Kazakhstan and to reach out to the people of Kazakhstan to ensure that the already strong and dynamic United States-Kazakhstan partnership continues to grow and strengthen. I will work to enhance people-to-people ties between United States and Kazakhstan and to continue our partnership with Kazakhstan on its ambitious education reform program to create a trilingual society, comfortable and linguistically capable in Kazakh, English and Russian.

Mutual interest and mutual respect underlie our relations with Kazakhstan. Kazakhstan is a regional and global leader in its own right; Kazakhstan is in no one's sphere of influence. Historic, cultural and economic ties with Russia are important to Kazakhstan, but Kazakhstan is not defined by any one relationship or neighbor, whether near or far. The United States' example of a prosperous, rule based democracy that has built durable economic growth alongside social and political stability is an attractive model that speaks for itself. Kazakhstan's future is bright, and it is for Kazakhstan to choose its path. The United States will always be a reliable and principled partner for Kazakhstan's efforts to advance market reform and its development into a free, democratic society respectful of the rights and choices of its citizens.

For the last three years, I have been the senior career official within the State Department's Bureau of Overseas Building Operations. From that position, I have worked to ensure that State Department facilities around the world are safe, secure, and operationally effective, so that the U.S. Government can best represent our country, its policies, and people abroad. If confirmed, I pledge that, as Ambassador, the safety and security of our mission in Kazakhstan and of all its personnel will be one of my highest priorities. I will also ensure that the mission is a place where no one should ever suffer from discrimination, harassment or exploitation of any kind. I know from supervising organizations with hundreds of employees, that my personal example is essential to ensure that every employee is treated with respect and that his or her contributions are valued. If confirmed, I would maintain and promote the highest standards of ethical conduct and security.

Mr. Chairman, I deeply appreciate the opportunity to testify this morning and am humbled by the confidence that President Trump and Secretary Pompeo have placed in me. If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and other Members of Congress to advance the interests of the United States in the United States of America to the Republic of Tajikistan.

I deeply appreciate the opportunity to testify this morning and am humbled by the confidence that President Trump and Secretary Pompeo have placed in me. If confirmed, I look forward to working with this committee and other Members of Congress to advance the interests of the United States in Tajikistan.

With the chairman's indulgence, I want to mention my gratitude for the support and love of my family here today. They enabled me to pursue work for the United States abroad over the last 28 years. My wife Natalia has been a pillar of support and love for over 24 years, raising our three sons in often challenging environments overseas. Our eldest son Arthur is beginning his career as a U.S. naval officer on board a U.S. nuclear-powered submarine. Andrew is finishing his studies in an Air Force ROTC program at the University of Maryland. James just started as a freshman at the College of Charleston.

I have had the honor to serve as a career Foreign Service officer for the last 28 years, and throughout my career, I have had the chance to work with many fine Americans in all branches of government on promoting universal values such as rule of law and the protection of human rights and dignity. The teams I have been privileged to lead and work with have advanced U.S. security and economic goals in countries across Europe and Asia. If confirmed, I would draw on this experience as Ambassador to Tajikistan, taking a whole-of-government approach to solving problems such as strengthening counterterrorism cooperation and advancing good governance.

Having previously served in the neighboring country of Kazakhstan as deputy chief of mission, I have seen firsthand the difficult decisions and incredible effort necessary to build a sovereign nation in the short span of 27 years and the important role that the United States plays as a partner that respects the sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity of its friends in the region. If confirmed, further strengthening the foundation of partnership and goodwill between the people of the United States and the people of Tajikistan will be my priority.

Mr. Chairman, Tajikistan is a country of extraordinary natural beauty and rich cultural heritage, but as you pointed out in your opening statement, it faces many challenges.

Tajikistan suffered a devastating civil war, which ended just over 20 years ago, with health and human development indices still impacted. Per capita, Tajikistan remains in the poorest quarter of countries in the world and its GDP is the lowest in Central Asia. It imports close to 70 percent of its food. Youth under 24 are 53 percent of Tajikistan’s population, a number that is projected to grow. Unable to find work in Tajikistan, close to 1 million migrant laborers leave the country to find work in Russia and other countries where the lack of a support system can leave them vulnerable to terrorist recruiting. And Tajikistan has a porous 800-mile long border with Afghanistan and problems such as the illegal narcotics trade, trafficking in persons, the spread of terrorism, and violent extremism are deeply concerning.

If confirmed, I will work to strengthen our partnership with Tajikistan to address these serious challenges. Tajikistan has come a long way since the dark days of the civil war, and with over 25 years of partnership, Americans and Tajiks can look back on a period of significant progress that helped transform Tajikistan and strengthen its independence and sovereignty. Continued progress in building out that partnership will contribute to stability both in Tajikistan and in the wider Central Asian region.

Tajikistan’s long southern border abuts the most restive regions of Afghanistan, provinces that harbor Islamic State and other terrorist groups, as well as Taliban-controlled territory. For years, the United States has been the foremost international supporter of training and infrastructure for Tajikistan’s border guard service. In addition, the United States has been a strong supporter of justice and law enforcement reform. As Afghanistan’s northern neighbor, Tajikistan is crucial to that country’s economic development and its future as a secure, stable, and prosperous state in a broader Central Asia that is also flourishing.

This is where Tajikistan’s future and the future of the region lies, in the connections, sometimes rebuilt, sometimes newly established, of people, of businesses, of infrastructure, of administration, of trade and transit. The United States has been a proactive supporter of connectivity. Under the President’s South Asia Strategy and the National Security Strategy, regional connectivity has taken on a new energy as we seek to capitalize on momentum among states and to harness development and economic growth as a bulwark against radicalization.

Hand in hand with intensive cooperation on key economic and security issues, we must as partners have a frank, constructive, and productive dialogue on Tajikistan’s international obligations on freedom of religion and other fundamental human freedoms. A nation cannot be truly secure while suppressing independent voices and basic human rights.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, my number one concern will always be the safety of our embassy staff at Embassy Dushanbe and all U.S. citizens in Tajikistan. As this committee’s members are aware, in July of this year, four tourists, two of them United States citizens, were targeted and killed by attackers in Tajikistan who had pledged their loyalty to the Islamic State. I want to express condolences to the families of those who died and suffered in the attack. We stand with those families, and U.S. agencies are working closely with Tajik authorities in the ongoing investigation. If confirmed, one of my highest priority goals will be, as President Trump has recently asked of President Rahmon, deepening our information sharing and counterterrorism cooperation with Tajikistan.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will always be available to and welcome the opportunity to work with you, your committee, and other Members of Congress, and professional staff to advance the United States’ interests in Tajikistan and throughout the region.

Thank you very much again for the opportunity to appear before you, and I look forward to questions.

[Mr. Pommersheim’s prepared statement follows:]

A Soviet-holdover focus on cash crops and Tajikistan’s stark geographic landscape—nearly 93 percent mountainous—constrains the country’s ability to feed its citizens. Tajikistan imports 70 percent of its foodstuffs, and U.S. development assistance to Tajikistan includes a strong emphasis on sustainable agriculture and high-nutrient farming. Unable to find work in Tajikistan, close to one million migrant laborers leave the country to find work in Russia and other countries, where the lack of a support system can leave them vulnerable to terrorist recruiting.

The United States actively participates in the “C5+1” regional diplomatic platform that brings together the United States and the five states of Central Asia. This platform catalyzes economic, environmental and security cooperation through assistance and engagement.

Hand-in-hand with intensive cooperation on key economic and security issues, we must as partners have a frank, constructive—and productive—dialogue on Tajikistan’s international obligations on freedom of religion and other fundamental human rights. Senator Risch. Thank you very much. Thanks to each of you, and again, especially thanks to your families.

I have got a few questions and we will see if Senator Kaine shows up or others who may have some questions.

Mr. Blome, in Tunisia, the president’s secular party has had a fragile government put together with the Islamists Party. And reports are that that has gone asunder. Can you enlighten us on that and tell us how that is going to affect the country in your judgment?

Mr. Blome. Thanks very much for that question.

I think to put in context what has happened, what is very important to think about in terms of Tunisia is where they have come, which is an extraordinary way since their 2014 elections, including the coalition government that they have been able to hold together for quite some time. What we see now are strains, which are part, I think, of the democratic process. The important thing to see in that is that the parties themselves, the parties that have committed to the coalition, that have committed to working within the government, have adhered to the democratic contract, if you will. They have adhered to constitutional standards. They have played by the rules of the game, and as long as they stay within those bounds, these kinds of things are what we are going to see there.

They have very important elections coming up next year at the end of 2019. Those will be both parliamentary and presidential elections, and that will be a milestone for them. It will be the second major round of elections, and it will be a good indicator of the consolidation of their democratic process there.

So I think it is not surprising that you see strains and shifts at times in the lineups or the coalitions in the way they look, but at the end of the day, the important thing to see will be whether all the players continue to adhere to the rules of the game. I think that is the important context here.

Senator Risch. Is the upcoming elections causing some of the turbulence that is there today? That is not foreign to a democratic situation as we all know.

Mr. Blome. Mr. Chairman, I think that is probably an absolutely accurate observation and something almost to be expected as political figures prepare for election and something that is part of the universal democratic experience in a way. But again, I think we will probably continue to see things like that happening, but the important part is the political leadership of Tunisia has remained committed, committed to working through the democratic institutions that they have set up since 2011.

Senator Risch. Thanks so much.

Mr. Moser, Kazakhstan, because of its size and its natural resources and just its location, is a very natural target for what the Chinese are doing as they reach out around the world. Tell us your thoughts on what counterweight we can be to that in Kazakhstan. Other countries have had not very good experience with China’s efforts in that regard. Although seemingly well intended at the outset, they do not work as well as people thought they would.

What are your thoughts as far as China and Kazakhstan?

Ambassador MOSER. Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for that question.

And in my preparation for the confirmation process, this is a question that I really have focused on because I think this is a challenge for the United States in many places in the world.

Inevitably we want Kazakhstan to have a good partnership with China. It shares a very long border with China, and of course, China is going to be involved. But I think the one thing that we need to keep reminding to our Kazakhstan partners is that free and transparent markets will be their best guarantee of their own security and, of course, the economic relationship with China. In fact, we do not discourage Chinese investment in Kazakhstan. On the other hand, we want to make sure that American companies also have the same access that Chinese companies have, and we want to be able to make sure that it is an economic level playing field where we can compete fairly because we feel that is the best way to guarantee Kazakhstan’s future and also to make Kazakhstan closer to international economic norms.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate that.

If you can off the top of your head, can you give us some examples of the Chinese investment in Kazakhstan, some of the larger investments or incursions they are making there?

Ambassador MOSER. Well, one of the most impressive investments is that China is trying to shorten its delivery of goods to Western Europe or to Europe by going through Kazakhstan via a land route. This land route takes about 15 days as opposed to a ship transit of about 50 or 60 days. So this would be tremendously economically beneficial.

But what happens now is that there is a city on the edge, very close to the Chinese border where goods are loaded from one railcar from the Chinese gauge to the Kazakhstani gauge——

Senator RISCH. They have two different gauges.

Ambassador MOSER. Yes, they have different gauges. So then those goods are then transferred on.

Now, that commercial hub is growing in size in terms of the number of containers that it handles, and this is probably what I would consider a very positive initiative because it is beneficial for both sides. But I think that we want to encourage the right kind of relationship between Kazakhstan and China.

Senator RISCH. I appreciate that.

Mr. Pommersheim, in 2016, a number of Tajik officials participated in several Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe workshops. I do not know if you are familiar with that participation or not. Obviously, the purpose was to develop a national strategy for countering violent extremism strategy. But lately that has been criticized as a front, if you would, for repressing political dissidents. Do you have any thoughts on that?

Mr. POMMERSHEIM. Thank you very much for that question, Senator.
Yes, indeed, there is a national action plan for countering violent extremism in Tajikistan that the government is seeking to implement, and the OSCE and the United States as well is hoping to partner with the government and is partnering on measures that can be taken on CVE to make Tajikistan more secure.

But as you point out in your question, it is very important that fundamental freedoms be observed in Tajikistan. We try to do that, as we have over more than 20 years, in our bilateral dialogues, making the point to our partners in Tajikistan that security issues should not be used as a pretext to put pressure, for example, on the opposition or the independent media or on civil society. Unfortunately, there has been pressure in all of those areas over the last several years.

You mentioned OSCE, Mr. Chairman. Recently there have been a few positive developments as well. Earlier this year, as a matter of fact, just about a month ago, the Tajik Government did have a meeting with members of the opposition in Warsaw at the Human Dimension Conference at the OSCE meeting there. So that was a small positive.

Another small positive was that some family members of the opposition that previously were not being permitted to leave Tajikistan were allowed to leave Tajikistan.

But I fully agree with the premise of your question, and if confirmed, I would take that sentiment with me to Dushanbe and continue to make that point in my discussions with the government there.

Senator Risch. Thank you very much.

Well, thanks to all three of you and, again, a special thanks to your family knowing the challenges that these posts face. We look forward to moving this along as rapidly as we can.

Senator Kaine is unfortunately still detained in an important matter that he needs to deal with. He is going to have an opening statement and we will include that opening statement in the record.

[Senator Kaine’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT SUBMITTED BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Thank all of you for being here to testify and for your career of service at State, and a special thanks to Mr. Blome, who hosted me in Jerusalem in January 2016. Congratulations to you and your families for your nominations.

The countries in which you have been nominated to serve as Ambassadors experienced relatively recent political upheavals—Tajikistan and Kazakhstan with their independence following the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991, Tunisia almost twenty years later with the Jasmine Revolution beginning in late 2010.

All of you have impressive records of service that make clear you are familiar with the challenges of working in emerging democracies as well as authoritarian states. It is critical that you lead your teams in championing U.S. support to strengthen democratic institutions, including civil society and a free press. I hope you will use the authority you will have as U.S. Ambassadors to diplomatically, but firmly, speak out against authoritarianism and repression and in support of freedom and inclusivity.

I remain concerned about the Trump administration’s persistent attempts to cut foreign assistance, including to the countries in which you are nominated to serve, and I will continue to support efforts here in Congress to allocate sufficient funds to encourage democratic trends, bolster civil society, work with partner nations on security and stability, and continue to assist vulnerable populations worldwide. This is particularly important to counter the historic influence of Russia in Central Asia and growing influence of China globally.
Senator Risch. Also, there may be additional questions. We will keep the record open briefly for questions in that regard.
So, again, thank you to each of you for your participation. Thank you again to your families.
And with that, we will close this hearing.
[Whereupon, at 11:06 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD ARMIN BLOME BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over a 25-year career in the Foreign Service I have worked with local civil society, election commissions, governments, and implementing partners, such as the International Republican Institute, the National Democratic Institute, and the International Foundation for Election Systems to promote democratization in countries throughout the Middle East. I have met with political opposition and dissidents and raised their cases with host governments. U.S. engagement in these cases can be vital in protecting and promoting human rights.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Tunisia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. While Tunisia has made important progress since the 2011 revolution, its democratic institutions remain fragile. The Government faces significant economic and security challenges, and there is intense public frustration over unemployment, perceived mismanagement of the economy, and corruption as the top three challenges facing their country. They hold their democratically elected representatives accountable for improving the economic situation. Many Tunisian citizens expected economic improvements as tangible benefits of the democratic revolution and have yet to see such personal benefits accrue since 2011. Delivering accountable and inclusive governance that benefits and engages all Tunisians remains a critical challenge for the Government.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Tunisia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to press the Government of Tunisia on efforts to drive forward its democratic transition, such as the establishment of a Constitutional Court; meet regularly with Tunisian civil society organizations to understand their concerns; and oversee U.S. assistance to strengthen key democratic institutions. Through these actions, we hope to encourage rights-based reforms in the Tunisian Government that respect international human rights norms. The divide between religiously-conservative and secular Tunisians complicates both the Government’s and the international community’s efforts to promote human rights reforms, but Tunisia’s constitution offers a solid basis from which to advance such reforms. Direct diplomatic engagement and U.S. support for civil society and building the capacity of government institutions is paying off.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. The United States remains committed to supporting Tunisia’s democratic path. Since Tunisia’s 2011 revolution, the United States has provided Tunisia with over $1.3 billion of U.S. aid to support security, economic, and governance reforms. Of this amount, $154 million is dedicated to democracy, governance, and human rights programming. The value of our assistance activities, however, is not just the sheer dollar amount of our programs, but rather their measurable and meaningful results. If confirmed, I would endeavor to ensure that our international partners also share the burden of supporting our Tunisian partners, as we continually evaluate how best to apply scarce resources against U.S. priorities.

Some examples of U.S. support to Tunisian democratic institutions include assistance to the Tunisian parliament and independent constitutional bodies and also to build the capacity of citizens, civil society, and political parties to engage local government institutions and to improve government transparency. USAID is implementing a program that works with newly-elected municipal officials and local governments to develop the democratic mechanisms to engage citizens and improve public services. Additional programs target capacity building in government institutions, like the parliament and independent government bodies, that govern elections, anti-corruption, and efforts to counter trafficking in persons, to name a few. Supporting Tunisia’s democratic consolidation is a priority for the State Department, and I would continue to support the Tunisian people to strengthen their democratic institutions if confirmed.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Tunisia? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Civil society in post-revolutionary Tunisia is active and vibrant, and civil society actors have a critical role to play in contributing to public debate about how the country can best advance its democratic principles. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Tunisia. I would encourage the Government of Tunisia to apply fairly and transparently the laws governing NGOs and civil society organizations.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Efforts to include marginalized populations into the political process are vital to Tunisia’s democratic transition. The U.S. Embassy in Tunisia regularly meets with multiple parties represented in the Tunisian Government and in the opposition, a practice I would continue if confirmed as U.S. Ambassador. U.S. Government assistance to Tunisian democratic institutions, such as the parliament, the political parties, and the elections commission, helps create an enabling environment for free, fair, and inclusive elections and promotes democratic pluralism. Municipal elections held in May 2018 ushered in record numbers of women and youth leaders.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Tunisia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Tunisia?

Answer. Tunisia enjoys a free, vibrant, active, and independent press landscape, and the U.S. Embassy in Tunisia regularly meets with independent, local press. If confirmed, I would continue this engagement. An active and free press plays a vital role in a democratic society, and, as Ambassador, I would take seriously any government efforts to control or undermine press freedom and would express my concerns to the Government of Tunisia.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Embassy Tunis’ public affairs team actively engages with media, civil society, and government counterparts on media literacy and responsible journalism practices through public and private forums and exchange programs. If confirmed, I would continue to support this engagement and to counter disinformation and propaganda.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Tunisia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Ensuring respect for internationally recognized worker rights and high labor standards promotes a level playing field for U.S. workers and helps create stronger trading partners for the United States. Independent trade unions are one of the fundamental building blocks for any democratic society, and Tunisia’s strong labor unions play an active role in public discourse. Embassy Tunisia staff meets regularly with members of independent trade unions, and if confirmed, I would continue this practice.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Tunisia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Tunisia? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Tunisia?

Answer. Governments have an obligation to protect, respect, and uphold the dignity and fundamental freedoms of all people—including LGBTI persons. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. Advancing universal human rights is in our national interest, and as Secretary Pompeo has said, LGBTI persons deserve the same freedoms, protections, and respect as everyone else.

There are many challenges facing LGBTI people in Tunisia and the North Africa region, such as discrimination and violence. Consensual same-sex sexual relations are a criminal offense in Tunisia, and isolated incidents of harassment at the hands of police against LGBTI individuals surface every year. Nonetheless, LGBTI advocacy organizations continue to operate and advocate vocally for the rights of LGBTI individuals; Tunisia hosted two LGBTI-themed film festivals over the past year, and a presidential report released this summer on individual rights and liberties recommended the decriminalization of homosexuality, sparking a national debate.

If confirmed, my country team and I would consult closely with LGBTI human rights defenders on how best to support them in their advocacy. I would not shy away from speaking out publicly and privately in support of the rights of all, including LGBTI persons. If confirmed, I would continue to urge the Tunisian Government to uphold and respect its international human rights obligations and commitments.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Donald Armin Blome by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. Tunisia was one of the main members of the Arab Spring revolt, and is the only member of the revolutions to currently have a “free” rating from Freedom House. However, recently we have seen Tunisia start to clumsily slide away from democracy:

• How would you—if confirmed—encourage the Tunisian Government to continue the push towards democracy?

Answer. While Tunisia has made important progress since the 2011 revolution, its democratic institutions remain fragile. The Government faces significant political, economic, and security challenges, and there is intense public frustration over unemployment, perceived corruption, and the rising cost of living. Civil society has a critical role to play in contributing to public debate about how the country can best advance democratic principles. U.S. Embassy Tunis regularly consults with Tunisian civil society and takes its concerns seriously.

U.S. security and non-security assistance plays a critical role in Tunisia’s democratic transition, enabling Tunisia’s security forces to provide the context for democracy to flourish and providing critical skills to government institutions and non-government organizations to advance democratic practices. If confirmed, I would continue to encourage the Tunisian Government and civil society to consolidate and advance the country’s democratic development.

Question 2. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Over a 25-year career in the Foreign Service I have worked with local civil society, election commissions, governments, and implementing partners, such as the International Republican Institute, the National Democratic Institute, and the International Foundation for Election Systems to promote democracy in countries throughout the Middle East. I have met with political opposition and dissidents and raised their cases with host governments. U.S. engagement in these cases can be vital in protecting and promoting human rights.

Question 3. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Tunisia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Tunisia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?
Answer. There has been modest but steady progress since the Tunisian constitution’s 2014 adoption with respect to religious freedom, freedom of expression, women’s rights, efforts to counter trafficking in persons, and the criminalization of racism. Additional proposals to improve women’s equality in inheritance are being actively debated in Tunisia.

The State Department has continuing concerns, which are documented in our annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, about treatment of persons who are detained, abuse of antiterrorism and emergency laws, the criminalization of libel, and corruption. The State Department has active and ongoing dialogues with the Government of Tunisia and with members of Tunisian civil society on many human rights issues. We hope to encourage reforms by the Tunisian Government consistent with international human rights obligations and commitments.

Question 4. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Tunisia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The State Department has continuing concerns, which are documented in our annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, about treatment of persons who are detained, abuse of antiterrorism and emergency laws, the criminalization of libel, and corruption. The State Department has active and ongoing dialogues with the Government of Tunisia and with members of Tunisian civil society on many human rights issues. We hope to encourage reforms by the Tunisian Government consistent with international human rights obligations and commitments.

Question 5. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Tunisia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. The Department remains committed to ensuring that perpetrators of gross violations of human rights do not receive U.S. training or assistance. The Embassy coordinates closely with the State Department’s Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor in the vetting process. I would ensure the Leahy vetting and end use monitoring programs for our security assistance remain comprehensive and thorough.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Tunisia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Tunisia?

Answer. The State Department has an ongoing dialogue with the Government of Tunisia and with members of Tunisian civil society on human rights issues. Human rights and good governance are central to our bilateral engagement with the Government of Tunisia, alongside security and economic cooperation. If confirmed, I would make promoting human rights, including civil rights, and good governance one of my highest priorities and would meet regularly with local human rights NGOs.

Question 7. Will you engage with Tunisia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I would make promoting human rights, including civil rights, and good governance one of my highest priorities and would meet regularly with local human rights NGOs.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Tunisia?
Answer. My investment portfolio includes diversified mutual funds that may hold interests in companies with a presence in Tunisia; however, these funds are exempt from the conflict of interest laws. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 11. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. The Department of State aims to create a culture of leadership; attract new talent; encourage individual growth; value and respect unique perspectives; enhance professional development; and inspire all its employees. If confirmed, I would support the Department’s efforts to attract and maintain a diverse and inclusive workforce.

Question 12. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. As a leader, I have sought to ensure that diverse views are welcomed and engaged, and, if confirmed, I would communicate this expectation clearly.

Question 13. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Tunisia specifically?

Answer. Corruption remains a huge barrier to economic and democratic progress in Tunisia. Even the perception of corruption in government undermines the public’s faith in their democratic institutions and discourages citizen engagement.

Question 14. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Tunisia and efforts to address and reduce it by the government?

Answer. International Republican Institute polling from 2017 in Tunisia shows that 90 percent of Tunisians believe corruption worsened since the 2011 revolution and that they remain dissatisfied with their government’s performance on this important issue.

Prime Minister Chahed launched a popular and aggressive anticorruption campaign that has led to high-profile arrests. The Tunisian public continues to view corruption as an important problem and combating corruption as a priority, but vested interests have slowed the campaign’s progress. Corruption persists, both among political and business elites and among lower-level government clerks and civil servants.

Question 15. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Tunisia?

Answer. The State Department has an ongoing dialogue with the Government of Tunisia and with members of Tunisian civil society on good governance issues. If confirmed, I would make promoting human rights, civil rights, and good governance one of my highest priorities and would work closely with Tunisian leaders to encourage progress on these issues.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO DONALD ARMIN BLOME BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. The Tunisian Government in July passed Law 30, which replaces the previous Decree 88 governing the regulation of non-governmental organizations. Civil society groups worry that the new law will abridge the freedoms they enjoy under Decree 88, creating excessive government oversight and having a chilling effect on freedoms of association and expression. They also wonder why the Government would impose harsh penalties, including possible jail time, for clerical errors in the registration process for NGOs:

• How do you assess the Tunisian Government efforts to further legislate the NGO sector and how will you address the concerns that such actions raise?

Answer. If confirmed, I would ensure that Embassy Tunis would continue to give this issue its close attention, and that we maintain a constant dialogue on the issue with our partners in civil society and government. A vibrant civil society is essential to promote good governance, stability, and prosperity.

Tur and existing is that Law 30 does not replace Decree 88, which remains in effect as the law governing the regulation and registration of NGOs. Law 30, or the July 27 business registration legislation, appears consistent with the inter-governmental Financial Action Task Force’s recommendations to Tunisia to combat terror finance and money laundering. The Government of Tunisia has a legitimate interest in improving transparency with respect to for-profit and non-profit entities. The additional annual financial reporting requirement this law imposes does not appear to be a threat to NGOs, but the proof will be in its implementation, and we will monitor this closely in consultation with NGO partners.

Question 2. Many Tunisians are highly educated, but the economy has generally created low-skilled and low-paid jobs, fueling unemployment, under-employment, and black market. Efforts since 2011 to promote private sector-led growth and create jobs have faced challenges, including investor perceptions of political risk, terrorist attacks on tourist sites, partisan disputes, and labor unrest.
Percapita GDP has fallen every year since 2014 and youth unemployment, esti-ated at 38 percent in 2012, remains high. Corruption has undermined public faith in state institutions and further entrenched regional divisions:

- What more can Tunisia and its international partners, including the U.S., do to create jobs, address economic grievances, and reduce youth marginalization?

Answer. If confirmed, I would continue to focus U.S. Government efforts to spur private sector-led growth and to help the Tunisian Government to create the conditions to achieve it. The United States works closely with the International Monetary Fund, the Millennium Challenge Corporation, and other donors to support Tunisia’s economic development. The United States has invested more than $1.3 billion dol-ars in Tunisia since 2011 to help Tunisia meet an array of challenges. Of this amount, the U.S. Government has invested $520 million since 2011 in programs to promote economic growth in Tunisia.

The Embassy has used Economic Support Fund programs to promote business growth and economic prosperity through projects that bolster small and medium enterprises (SMEs), develop workforce skills, and provide technical assistance on key reforms. Specific programs include the Jobs, Opportunities, and Business Success Program, which increases the competitiveness of Tunisia firms and builds upon a previous program, which USAID reports created 25,000 jobs; the $100 million Tunisian-American Enterprise Fund, which invests in the full range of SMEs, from microbusinesses to high-growth start-ups; entrepreneurial training and mentoring projects focused exclusively on small businesses in the interior of the country; a franchise development project that opened the door to franchising in Tunisia; assistance to chambers of commerce across the country that provide services to SMEs, and critical technical assistance to the Ministry of Finance for tax administration and customs reforms.

To address youth marginalization and in an effort to counter violent extremism, the Department of State is helping to build the capacity and networks of civil society organizations to counter recruitment to violence within their communities and supporting programs focused on countering terrorist ideologies through promotion of dialogue and tolerance. For example, the USAID community resilience program (Ma3an, or “together” in Arabic) helps Tunisian youth and other stakeholders in marginalized communities identify drivers of instability and empowers those same groups to design and implement community level actions to address those problems.
The State Department also supports the Tunisian Scouts and Girls Organization, which promotes a culture of tolerance to prevent radicalization to violence, as well as space for dialogue through our “Caf Talks” program, which provide opportunities for young people to make their voices heard through debates and discussions in cafe’s about violence, radicalism, and terrorism.

Question 3. Tunisia remains a transit point for migrants from the Middle East and Africa to Europe, with Tunisians themselves also embarking on the perilous journey across the Mediterranean. The International Organization for Migration as of October 10 recorded 1,793 deaths of migrants at sea departing from North Africa in 2018:

- If confirmed, what ongoing efforts will you support and what new approaches will you champion to address the flow of migrants from and through Tunisia?

Answer. Average Tunisians are increasingly frustrated with rising prices, declining purchasing power, and unemployment averaging 15 percent and as high as 30 percent for college degree holders. International Republican Institute polling shows that half of Tunisian youth are interested in emigration to Europe, legal or otherwise. In FY 2018, the State Department’s Bureau of Population, Refugee, and Migration Affairs (PRM) contributed a total of $4.8 million to the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees for the North Africa region and $57.6 million to the International committee of the Red Cross for Africa-wide operations, providing them with the flexibility to use the funds where they are needed most in the region. PRM also provided nearly $6.5 million to the International Organization for Migration to address irregular migration flows through Africa, including across North Africa. Our border security project, to which Germany has also contributed significantly, will lead to a more secure Tunisian land border with Libya, further reducing Tunisia’s attractiveness as a departure point or transit country for illegal migration.

To address the root causes of migration, the U.S. Government has worked with the Tunisian Government and civil society to improve economic conditions and employment opportunities. I would continue to support such assistance programming for an open and inclusive Tunisian economy that can provide jobs for its citizens.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. WILLIAM H. MOSER BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Human rights depend on an independent, effective judicial system, free from corruption. As Ambassador to Moldova, I was a leading advocate for judicial system reform, both through persistent public advocacy and private engagement with the host government. I supported U.S. judicial sector reform programs such as public internet access to judicial proceedings and human rights training for police. Even though there is much still to be achieved, our Embassy efforts facilitated Moldova’s accession to a European Union Association Agreement in 2014.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to human rights in Kazakhstan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Kazakhstan and, working in partnership with Kazakhstan, to promote human rights around the globe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to engage in an open and frank dialogue with the Government of Kazakhstan on our values and concerns about human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religion or belief, and the rule of law. At present we are particularly concerned about pressures on religious freedom, media, and civil society in Kazakhstan. Suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices leads to the kind of repressive environment that generates instability and violent extremism. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would continue to engage the Government of Kazakhstan on its creation of new laws or implementation of current laws that restrict freedoms in the country, and seek out every opportunity to engage with the Government of Kazakhstan on human rights and fundamental freedoms, including civil rights and governance, in order to strengthen civil society and solidify Kazakhstan’s democratic institutions.

If confirmed, I commit to developing and maintaining regular contact with human rights activists, civil society leaders, and other representatives of non-governmental organizations in Kazakhstan, as well as with U.S.-based NGOs, with the goal to strengthen Kazakhstan’s democratic development, stability, and prosperity.

Question 3. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations, and other members of civil society in Kazakhstan?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to developing and maintaining regular contact with human rights activists, civil society leaders, and other representatives of non-governmental organizations in Kazakhstan, as well as with U.S.-based NGOs, with the goal to strengthen Kazakhstan’s democratic development, stability, and prosperity.

Question 4. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meeting with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties and advocating for access and inclusivity for women, members of minority groups, and youth within political parties. I further commit to highlighting the importance of inclusivity, diversity, and political competition in my discussions with the Government of Kazakhstan and in public appearances.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Kazakhstan on freedom of the press and any undermining of freedom of expression in the country? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Kazakhstan?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to engage actively with the Government and people of Kazakhstan on press freedom and to advocate strongly against any efforts designed to control or undermine press freedoms. I further commit to meet regularly with members of the independent, local press in Kazakhstan and to support ongoing efforts to increase media outlets’ capacity to access new information sources and to strengthen professionalism in the sector.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign states or non-state actors in Kazakhstan? Answer. If confirmed, I will actively engage with civil society and my government counterparts to counter disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign states or non-state actors in Kazakhstan. I further commit to coordinating assistance programming in Kazakhstan to strengthen independent media and to increase access to accurate information about the United States, countering the impact of foreign state-sponsored disinformation.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Kazakhstan on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions? Answer. If confirmed, my Embassy team and I will continue to engage actively with Kazakhstan on the rights of labor groups, including independent trade unions, to organize. Ensuring respect for internationally recognized workers’ rights and high labor standards promotes a level playing field for U.S. workers and helps create strong trading partners for the United States. Independent trade unions are one of the fundamental building blocks for any democratic society and are important partners for the State Department in many countries. If confirmed, I will continue to support workers’ ability to form and join independent trade unions of their choice.

Question 8. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to support the human rights and dignity of all people in Kazakhstan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? Answer. I pledge to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Kazakhstan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. If confirmed, I commit to working with civil society and NGOs that address LGBTI issues and to have a frank dialogue with the Government of Kazakhstan on the obligation of governments to respect the human rights of everyone in their countries.

Question 9. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression in Kazakhstan? Answer. In confirmed, I pledge to support an open and frank dialogue with the Government of Kazakhstan on our values and concerns about human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedoms of religion or belief and expression. In particular, I would continue to engage the Government of Kazakhstan on its creation of new laws or implementation of current laws that restrict the space for the exercise of religious freedom in Kazakhstan. In addition, I would urge Kazakhstan to uphold its international obligations and commitments on freedom of religion or belief.

Question 10. The State Department’s Kazakhstan 2017 Human Rights Report also noted that while the Kazakh Government has selectively prosecuted officials who committed abuses, “corruption remained widespread, and impunity existed for those in positions of authority as well as those connected to government or law enforcement officials.” What will you do to ensure that the United States is working to address corruption in Kazakhstan, both in terms the sanctity of contracts and respecting the decisions of courts and the rule of law? Answer. Corruption and the arbitrary application of law are problems in Kazakhstan and hindrances to economic growth. The Department of State’s Investment Climate Statement clearly outlines these obstacles. If confirmed, I would continue our work with the Government of Kazakhstan to address these challenges. Importantly, the Government of Kazakhstan has asked for our support to do so. As Ambassador, I would work to ensure assistance programming continues to be used prudently to improve Kazakhstan’s investment climate and expand opportunities for U.S. investment. Current assistance programs, for example, are strengthening the analytical capacity of Kazakhstan’s Anti-Corruption Bureau to combat financial and corruption crimes; enabling Kazakhstan’s National Bank and private banks to better counter money laundering; strengthening citizen initiative groups to fight corruption from the grassroots level; and working with Kazakhstan’s Supreme Court to help foster an independent judiciary.

Question 11. If confirmed, how will you support an honest accounting of corruption and human rights abuses by Kazakh Government officials and incorporate this information into policy decisions regarding security assistance and other engagement with Kazakhstan?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support the Embassy’s Leahy vetting program for security force unit and individual recipients of U.S. foreign assistance, and I will ensure that all security and law enforcement cooperation activities continue to reinforce the importance of human rights and good governance in Kazakhstan. In this regard, I further understand the importance of and plan to adhere to all legislation and congressional reporting requirements.

Question 12. How will you work with Kazakh counterparts to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within its democratic institutions and civil society, and to counter Kremlin threats in the Central Asian region?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to advance our strategic interests in Kazakhstan, recognizing that Kazakhstan has longstanding ties to Russia. I would encourage Kazakhstan to have healthy and mutually beneficial relations with its neighbors and with countries around the world that strengthen Kazakhstan’s sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity. If confirmed, I would work with Kazakhstan on its goal to diversify its economy by making its investment climate and economy more open to U.S. goods and services; strengthen its media through programs designed to increase access to alternate sources of information and bolster professionalism in the sector; and facilitate greater regional cooperation and consultation in Central Asia through platforms like C5+1. I will also ensure that our public diplomacy cooperation supports independent media to increase access to accurate information about the United States and to counter the impact of foreign state-sponsored disinformation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. WILLIAM H. MOSER BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Lately, President Nursultan Nazarbayev has increased economic ties with China, looked beyond Russia for economic and military partners and called for more inclusive governance. This is quite a shift as Nazarbayev has been president since 1990 and usually had very close ties to Russia:

• In your opinion, does Russia or China pose a bigger threat to U.S. interests in Kazakhstan? Why?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to advance our strategic interests in Kazakhstan, recognizing that Kazakhstan has longstanding ties to Russia and burgeoning relations with China. I would encourage Kazakhstan to have healthy and mutually beneficial relations with its neighbors and with countries around the world that strengthen Kazakhstan’s sovereignty, independence, and territorial integrity. The United States does not view its bilateral relationships with Kazakhstan in zero-sum terms, whether vis-à-vis Russia, China, or any other third country.

Question 2. What is the biggest obstacle to the further development of Kazakhstan’s democracy?

Answer. Suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices stymies the growth of democratic society and prevents inclusive governance. If confirmed, I would regularly raise our human rights concerns as a part of our bilateral engagement, in particular our concerns about pressures on religious freedom, media, and civil society. I would continue to urge Kazakhstan to uphold its international obligations and commitments on human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 3. What are your most meaningful achievements to date in your career to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. The protection of human rights depends on an independent, effective judicial system, free from corruption. As Ambassador to Moldova, I was a leading advocate for judicial system reform, both through persistent public advocacy and private engagement with the host government. I supported U.S. judicial sector reform programs such as public internet access to judicial proceedings and human rights training for police. Even though further progress is needed, our Embassy efforts facilitated Moldova’s accession to a European Union Association Agreement in 2014.

Question 4. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Kazakhstan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Kazakhstan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to engage in an open and frank dialogue with the Government of Kazakhstan on our values and concerns about human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religion or belief, and the rule of law. At present we are particularly concerned about restrictions on religious freedom, media, and civil society in Kazakhstan. Suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices leads to the kind of repressive environment that generates instability and violent extremism. If confirmed, I would continue to engage the Government of Kazakhstan on its creation of new laws or implementation of current laws that restrict freedoms in the country, and seek out every opportunity to engage with the Government of Kazakhstan on fundamental freedoms and good governance in order to strengthen civil society, encourage the Government’s protection of these freedoms, and urge more democratic institution building.

Question 5. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Kazakhstan in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. At present we are particularly concerned about restrictions on religious freedom, media, and civil society in Kazakhstan. Suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices leads to the kind of repressive environment that generates instability and violent extremism. If confirmed, I would continue to engage the Government of Kazakhstan on its creation of new laws or implementation of current laws that restrict freedoms in the country, and seek out every opportunity to engage with the Government of Kazakhstan on fundamental freedoms and good governance in order to strengthen civil society, encourage the Government’s protection of these freedoms, and urge more democratic institution building.

Corruption and the arbitrary application of law are problems in Kazakhstan and hindrances to governance and economic growth. The Department of State’s Investment Climate Statement clearly outlines these obstacles. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Kazakhstan to address these challenges. Importantly, the Government of Kazakhstan has asked for our support to do so. As Ambassador, I would work to ensure assistance programming continues to be used prudently to improve Kazakhstan’s investment climate and expand opportunities for U.S. business. Current assistance programs, for example, are strengthening the analytical capacity of Kazakhstan’s Anti-Corruption Bureau to combat financial and corruption crimes; enabling Kazakhstan’s National Bank and private banks to better counter money laundering; strengthening citizen initiative groups to fight corruption from the grassroots level; and working with Kazakhstan’s Supreme Court to help foster an independent judiciary.

Question 6. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Kazakhstan? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to developing and maintaining regular contact with human rights activists, civil society leaders, and other representatives of non-governmental organizations in Kazakhstan, as well as with U.S.-based NGOs. If confirmed, I will support the Embassy’s Leahy program for security assistance to units and individual recipients of U.S. foreign assistance. I will further ensure that all U.S. security and law enforcement assistance activities will continue to reinforce the importance of human rights.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Kazakhstan to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Kazakhstan?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to continue to raise key individual cases with the Government of Kazakhstan and urge the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including fair trial guarantees and the rule of law.

Question 8. Will you engage with Kazakhstan on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to engage in an open and frank dialogue with the Government of Kazakhstan on our values and concerns about human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of religion or belief, and the rule of law. At present we are particularly concerned about restrictions on religious freedom, media, and civil society in Kazakhstan. Suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices leads to the kind of repressive environment that generates instability and violent extremism. If confirmed, I would continue to engage the Government of Kazakhstan on its creation of new laws or implementation of current laws that restrict freedoms in the country, and seek out every opportunity to engage with the Government of Kazakhstan on fundamental freedoms and good governance in order to strengthen civil society, encourage the Government's protection of these freedoms, and urge more democratic institution building.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Kazakhstan?

Answer. Neither I nor any members of my family have any financial interests in Kazakhstan. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 12. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make a priority of encouraging the recruitment and professional development of a diverse staff that represents the United States. Working with my staff, I will encourage the recruitment of a diverse, qualified group of applicants for each job opening, and I will work to expand our mentoring program for junior officers to include entry-level specialists and eligible family member employees.

Question 13. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will communicate to Embassy senior staff that I will have zero tolerance for discrimination and sexual harassment. In addition, ahead of our annual personnel selection season, I will communicate my expectation that we invite applications from the broadest possible slate of qualified candidates to ensure that we foster a diverse and inclusive community. I will ask our supervisors to reinforce these principles with their American and Kazakhstani staff to ensure we set appropriate expectations.

Question 14. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Kazakhstan specifically?

Answer. Corruption and the arbitrary application of law are problems in Kazakhstan and hindrances to governance and economic growth. The Department of State's Investment Climate Statement clearly outlines these obstacles. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Kazakhstan to address these challenges. Importantly, the Government of Kazakhstan has asked for our support to do so.

Question 15. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Kazakhstan and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. Corruption and the arbitrary application of law are problems in Kazakhstan and hindrances to governance and economic growth. The Department of State's Investment Climate Statement clearly outlines these obstacles. If confirmed, I would work with the Government of Kazakhstan to address these challenges. Importantly, the Government of Kazakhstan has asked for our support to do so. As Ambassador, I would work to ensure assistance programming continues to be used prudently to improve Kazakhstan's investment climate and expand opportunities for U.S. business.

Question 16. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Kazakhstan?

Answer. If confirmed, I would work to ensure assistance programming continues to be used prudently to improve Kazakhstan’s investment climate and expand opportunities for U.S. business. Current assistance programs, for example, are strengthening the analytical capacity of Kazakhstan’s Anti-Corruption Bureau to combat financial and corruption crimes; enabling Kazakhstan’s National Bank and private banks to better counter money laundering; strengthening citizen initiative groups to fight corruption from the grassroots level; and working with Kazakhstan’s Supreme Court to help foster an independent judiciary.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. WILLIAM H. MOSER BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. I am concerned about reports from the State Department, United Nations, and credible human rights groups about the lack of independence of the judiciary, widespread use of torture, and serious violations of the rights of freedom of expression, association, and peaceful assembly in Kazakhstan. There are reportedly more than 20 political prisoners in the country. Human Rights Watch, the Coalition of NGOs of Kazakhstan Against Torture, and Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe have all spoken out about the case of Iskander Yerimbetov, a Kazakhstan businessman who has been detained, tortured, and put on trial, all to force his sister to return to the country to give false testimony against an opposition politician:

• What do you think the most effective way is for us to make clear to President Nazarbayev that U.S. interests include human rights and that we expect to see these kinds of serious human rights abuses addressed?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to maintain an open and frank dialogue with the Government of Kazakhstan on our values and concerns about human rights and fundamental freedoms, and this includes raising individual cases. Working with my Embassy staff, I would continue to urge Kazakhstan to uphold its international obligations and commitments on fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and freedom of religion or belief. I would also ensure we continue to work closely with NGOs and diplomatic partners to further our engagement on human rights with Kazakhstan.

Question 2. Kazakhstan has shown interest in opening its economy to attract foreign investors including through reforms to state-owned companies and diversifying away from resource dependency. Despite the promise of this progress, corruption and arbitrary enforcement of laws and contracts inhibit foreign investors, including those from the U.S., from more robust investment. In acceding to the World Trade Organization (WTO) in 2015, Kazakhstan pledged to abide by the values of openness, transparency, good governance and respect for the rule of law:

• What is your assessment of the investment climate and what measures is Kazakhstan taking or should it take to meet its WTO obligations, including honoring the sanctity of contracts, respecting the decisions of courts and the rule of law?

Answer. Corruption and the arbitrary application of law are problems in Kazakhstan and hindrances to economic growth. The Department of State’s Investment Climate Statement clearly outlines these obstacles. If confirmed, I would continue our work with the Government of Kazakhstan to address these challenges. Importantly, the Government of Kazakhstan has asked for our support to do so. As Ambassador, I would work to ensure assistance programming continues to be used prudently to improve Kazakhstan’s investment climate and expand opportunities for U.S. business. Current assistance programs, for example, are strengthening the analytical capacity of Kazakhstan’s Anti-Corruption Bureau to combat financial and corruption crimes; enabling Kazakhstan’s National Bank and private banks to better counter money laundering; strengthening citizen initiative groups to fight corruption from the grassroots level; and working with Kazakhstan’s Supreme Court to help foster an independent judiciary.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN MARK POMMERSHEIM BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Answer. My experience working on human rights and democracy began in 1992 at the U.S. Embassy in Minsk, Belarus, where I served as the Embassy’s first political and human rights officer. In that capacity, I drafted the first human rights report for that country and maintained a dialogue with civil society and government officials. While serving as Director for the South Caucasus, I helped orchestrate active U.S. Government dialogues on human rights and democracy with the countries of Armenia, Azerbaijan, and Georgia that involved successful advocacy in individual cases and on discrete issues. In China and Russia, I worked on issues involving refugees from North Korea and achieved successful outcomes. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Kazakhstan, I worked with the Government and civil society on issues related to press freedom and freedom of religion.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to human rights in Tajikistan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to advance human rights and democracy in Tajikistan and, working in partnership with Tajikistan, to promote human rights around the globe? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. In Tajikistan, we are particularly concerned about pressures on media, civil society, and political opposition groups. We believe that suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices leads to the kind of repressive environment that generates instability. We encourage Tajikistan to protect the religious freedom of all in Tajikistan. Our experience tells us that respecting peaceful religious beliefs and practices, including the right of all to participate in religious communities, is the best way to promote a peaceful and open society. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts with Tajikistan’s Government, armed forces, media, and non-governmental organizations to improve respect for human rights and strengthen civil society and democratic engagement.

Question 3. What will you and your embassy team do to address the reported instances of torture or ill-treatment in detention carried out at the hands of the Tajik Government?

Answer. If confirmed, I pledge to maintain an open and frank dialogue with the Government of Tajikistan on our values and concerns about human rights and fundamental freedoms. This includes raising individual cases. Working with embassy staff, I would continue to urge Tajikistan to uphold its international obligations and commitments on human rights and fundamental freedoms, including its obligations under the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.

Question 4. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations, and other members of civil society in Tajikistan?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I wholeheartedly commit to ongoing dialogue with and support for Tajikistan’s civil society organizations and human rights defenders. Our consistent message to Tajikistan has been that long-term stability and security cannot be achieved without democratic and accountable governance, including respect for all individuals’ human rights and fundamental freedoms, and this is a message I would continue to promote in dialogue with the Government of Tajikistan.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes. The United States has full and robust dialogues with Tajikistan on human rights, including a significant focus on protecting the activities of human rights defenders and journalists. We consistently raise specific human rights concerns with the Government of Tajikistan, and underscore those concerns through official statements at the U.N., the OSCE, and other bodies, as well as in our annual Human Rights, Religious Freedom, and Trafficking in Persons reports. If confirmed, I will continue to use our dialogues, reports, and other tools to help Tajikistan make progress in areas of concern.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Tajikistan on freedom of the press and any undermining of freedom of expression in the country? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Tajikistan?

Answer. Yes. The United States supports freedom of expression, including for the media, and the ability of journalists to work without fear of censorship or reprisal. We have regularly raised our concerns regarding the treatment of journalists in Tajikistan, as well as our concern with restrictions of internet freedom, in private discussions with the Government of Tajikistan and publically. We are particularly concerned that news sites and social media websites are periodically blocked during periods deemed to be politically sensitive in nature. If confirmed, I look forward to expanding our support for Tajikistan’s independent press through our Embassy’s exchanges, trainings, technical assistance programs, equipment transfers, and small grants.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign states or non-state actors in Tajikistan? If confirmed, I will actively engage with civil society and my government counterparts to counter disinformation and malign propaganda disseminated by foreign states or non-state actors in Tajikistan. I further commit to coordinating assistance programs in Tajikistan to strengthen independent media and to increase access to accurate information about the United States, countering the impact of foreign state sponsored disinformation.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Tajikistan on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions? If confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with Tajikistan on the right of labor groups, including independent trade unions, to organize. Ensuring respect for internationally recognized workers' rights and high labor standards promotes a level playing field for U.S. workers and helps create stronger trading partners for the United States. Independent trade unions are one of the fundamental building blocks for any democratic society and are important partners for the State Department in many countries. If confirmed, I will continue to support workers' ability to form and join independent trade unions of their choice.

Question 9. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to support the human rights and dignity of all people in Tajikistan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? If confirmed, I pledge to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Tajikistan, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. I commit to working with civil society and NGO's that address LGBTI issues and to have a frank dialogue with the Government of Tajikistan on the obligation of governments to respect the human rights of all.

Question 10. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression in Tajikistan? Undue restrictions on religious activities run the risk of fueling radicalization to violence. When the Government limits the participation of women and children in religious services (or, dictates who may participate in religious services), bans the wearing of religious garb, and prevents members of minority religions from practicing their faiths, it is counterproductive. We have expressed this concern to the Government of Tajikistan on numerous occasions, and the Secretary of State has twice (2016 and 2017) designated Tajikistan as a Country of Particular Concern in our annual Religious Freedom Report. My objective, if confirmed, will be to work with the Government of Tajikistan to prevent the recruitment of its citizens and effectively address legitimate concerns of terrorism while protecting the human rights and fundamental freedoms of individuals.

Question 11. In 2016, Tajik President Emomali Rahmon further solidified his rule by having himself designated “Leader of the Nation,” removing term limits and allowing for lifelong immunity through constitutional amendments ratified in a referendum. The referendum also lowered the minimum age required to run for president, which would make Rahmon’s son Rustam Emomali eligible to run for president in 2020. If confirmed, what will you do to encourage pluralistic, transparent, and responsive governance from the Tajik Government? Tajikistan has much to gain from providing its citizens with genuinely free and fair elections. We emphasize the importance of providing space for voices of political opposition in discussions with Tajik leaders. If confirmed, I will work to urge the Government to move forward with the democratic reforms necessary to ensure political pluralism and a vibrant civil society.

Question 12. If confirmed, how will you support an honest accounting of corruption and human rights abuses by Tajik Government officials and incorporate this information into policy decisions regarding security assistance and other engagement with Tajikistan? The United States has been very frank with the Tajik Government that counterterrorism efforts must not involve crackdowns on the exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including religious freedom. We believe undue constraints on religious expression risk fueling radicalization to violence and terrorist recruitment, rather than mitigating it. Any counterterrorism training that we conduct with Tajikistan's security forces includes instruction on the law of armed conflict to ensure that the leadership understands the need to respect international law. If confirmed, I will support the Emb-bassy’s Leahy program for security force unit and individual recipients of U.S. foreign assistance. I will further ensure that all U.S. security and law enforcement assistance activities will continue to reinforce the importance of human rights.

If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to continue this dialogue and reinforce these messages with the Tajik Government. We also hold the view that corruption is a serious impediment to economic development and, if confirmed, I would continue efforts to improve the rule of law in the interests of establishing and maintaining a fair playing field for all economic actors, including for small and medium-sized enterprises and for U.S. investors.

Question 13. How will you work with Tajik counterparts to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within its institutions and civil society, and to counter Kremlin threats in the Central Asian region? What types of U.S. assistance do you see as most critical in this regard?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to advance our strategic interests in Tajikistan, recognizing that Tajikistan has longstanding economic and security ties to Russia.
I would encourage Tajikistan to have healthy and mutually beneficial relations with its neighbors and with countries around the world that respect Tajikistan’s sov-eignty, independence, and territorial integrity. If confirmed, I would work with Tajikistan on its goal to diversify its economy by making its investment climate and economy more open to U.S. goods and companies; strengthening and bolstering professionalism in its border guard and other security forces to increase its ability to partner with the United States in counterterrorism and counternarcotics operations; and facilitating greater regional cooperation and consultation in Central Asia through platforms such as the C5+1.

Question 14. What will you do to address concerns that Russia’s recent military aid to the Tajik army (including Russia’s possible involvement in an August 2018 airstrike along the Tajikistan-Afghanistan border) is an attempt to influence the re-region and return Russian soldiers to the Tajik-Afghan border?

Answer. We have been clear with the Governments of all neighboring countries that peace in Afghanistan will only come from an Afghan-led, Afghan-owned process and that unilateral action only runs the risk of prolonging the conflict between the Afghan Government and Taliban insurgents. If confirmed, one of my top priorities will be securing Tajikistan’s continued support for the National Unity Government in Kabul and Tajikistan’s cooperation in convincing the Russian Government to do the same.

Question 15. Given the disputed area claimed by both Afghanistan and Tajikistan, and Tajikistan’s possible growing involvement with Russia’s military activities in Afghanistan, how does Tajikistan fit in to the administration’s broader South Asia Strategy, particularly with respect to Afghanistan?

Answer. The United States continues to value Tajikistan’s partnership in implementing the President’s South Asia and National Security Strategies. We value Tajikistan’s contributions to increased stability in Afghanistan, especially the role Tajikistan plays in securing its shared border against foreign terrorist fighter flows and combatting narcotics trafficking. As Afghanistan’s northern neighbor and regional energy partner, Tajikistan is a crucial contributor to that country’s economic development and its future as a secure, stable, and prosperous state.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN MARK POMMERSHEIM BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My experience working on human rights and democracy began in 1992 at the U.S. Embassy in Minsk, Belarus, where I served as the Embassy’s first political and human rights officer. In that capacity, I drafted the first human rights report for that country and maintained a dialogue with civil society and government officials. While serving as Director for the South Caucasus, I helped orchestrate active U.S. Government dialogues on human rights and democracy with the countries of Armenia, Azerbaijan, and Georgia that involved successful advocacy in individual cases and on discrete issues. In China and Russia, I worked on issues involving refgugees from North Korea and achieved successful outcomes. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Kazakhstan, I worked with the Government and civil society on issues related to freedom of expression, including for the press, and freedom of religion.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Tajikistan? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Tajikistan? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. In Tajikistan, we are particularly concerned about the ever-shrinking space afforded to the media, civil society, and political opposition groups. We believe that suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices leads to the kind of repressive environment that generates instability. We also encourage Tajikistan to protect the religious freedom of all in Tajikistan. Our experience tells us that respecting the free exercise of religious beliefs and practices, including the right of all to practice in community with others, is the best way to promote a peaceful and open society. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts with Tajikistan’s Government, armed forces, media, and non-governmental organizations to improve respect for human rights, including religious freedom, and strengthen civil society and democratic engagement. Embassy Dushanbe has also worked diligently with the Government of Tajikistan to engage on issues of domestic violence. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate on these issues as well.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Tajikistan in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Tajikistan faces significant security concerns that its government uses as justification for repression of freedoms of association, religion, peaceful assembly, and other human rights and fundamental freedoms. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Government of Tajikistan on new or current laws that restrict human rights and fundamental freedoms in the country, including religious freedom, and seek out every opportunity to engage with the Government on fundamental freedoms and good governance to strengthen civil society, encourage the Government’s protection of these freedoms, and urge more democratic institution building.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Tajikistan? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I wholeheartedly commit to ongoing dialogue with and support for Tajikistan’s civil society organizations and human rights defenders. Our consistent message to Tajikistan has been that long-term stability and security cannot be achieved without democratic and accountable governance, including respect for all individuals’ human rights and fundamental freedoms, and this is a message I would continue to promote in dialogue with the Government of Tajikistan. The Department of State continues to closely monitor reports of human rights violations and abuses and reports those concerns, including allegations of security force abuses, in the annual Human Rights Report. If confirmed, I would continue to use this annual report and other engagements to press for improvements in human rights in Tajikistan.

We take allegations of gross violations of human rights very seriously, and we do not provide assistance to any security force unit when we have credible information that the unit has committed a gross violation of human rights unless and unless the Secretary of State determines and reports to Congress that the Government is taking effective steps to bring those responsible to justice.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Tajikistan to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Tajikistan?

Answer. U.S. Embassy Dushanbe has consistently urged the Tajik Government in public and in private to treat cases of political prisoners in a fair and transparent manner that allows for all necessary procedural protections and guarantees, including on the case of Mr. Burzugmehr Yorov. The Embassy has also established the Law Reform Working Group to bring key stakeholders together with Parliament to revise laws, combat corruption, and promote reform in the judicial system and criminal procedure code.

If confirmed, I pledge to continue to raise key individual cases with the Government of Tajikistan and urge the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms and adherence to the rule of law. If confirmed, I also look forward to expanding on this and other judicial reform opportunities with the Tajik Government.
Question 6. Will you engage with Tajikistan on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. The United States has full and robust dialogues with Tajikistan on human rights and good governance. We consistently raise specific human rights concerns with the Government of Tajikistan and underscore those concerns through official statements at the U.N., the OSCE, and other bodies, as well as in our annual reports on Human Rights, International Religious Freedom, and Trafficking in Persons. If confirmed, I will continue to use these reports and other tools to document human rights problems and encourage Tajikistan to make progress in areas of concern.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Tajikistan?

Answer. I can confirm that neither my immediate family nor I have any financial interests in Tajikistan.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I will make a priority of encouraging the recruitment and professional development of a diverse staff that represents the United States. Working with my staff, I will encourage the recruitment of a diverse, qualified group of applicants for each job opening, and I will work to expand our mentoring program for junior officers to include entry-level specialists and eligible family member employees.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will communicate to Embassy senior staff that I will have zero tolerance for discrimination and sexual harassment. In addition, ahead of our annual personnel selection season, I will communicate my expectation that we invite applications from the broadest possible slate of qualified candidates to ensure that we foster a diverse and inclusive community. I will ask our supervisors to reinforce these principles with their American and Tajik staff to ensure we set appropriate expectations.

Question 12. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Tajikistan specifically?

Answer. Corruption in government is a serious issue that affects many countries worldwide, including Tajikistan. Its impact on the rule of law and democratic governance is deleterious to the development of Tajikistan as a democracy and also to the economic growth that the country seeks.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Tajikistan and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. The Department of State's Investment Climate Statement clearly outlines the obstacles still facing Tajikistan in combatting corruption. If confirmed, this is an area where I will continue to push the Government of Tajikistan to pursue needed reforms and build respect for the rule of law.
Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Tajikistan?

Answer. Tajikistan has much to gain from providing its citizens with genuinely free and fair elections and removing the barriers to a truly democratic process presented by endemic corruption. We believe that corruption is a serious impediment to development and, if confirmed, I would continue programming and high-level engagement efforts to improve rule of law in the interests of establishing and maintaining a fair playing field for all actors, as well as to urge the Government to move forward with the democratic reforms necessary to ensure political pluralism and a vibrant civil society.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN MARK POMMERSHEIM BY SENATOR TIM KAINE

Question 1. Since 2014, the Government of Tajikistan has conducted a campaign to discredit and dismantle all viable political opposition to President Rahmon and his son. It has banned several legitimate opposition parties, such as Group 24, Youth for the Revival of Tajikistan, and the Islamic Renaissance Party of Tajikistan. The Supreme Court has declared all of these parties to be extremist organizations and has outlawed the distribution of newspapers, videos, audio recordings, literature, and leaflets connected to any of them. Moreover, the Government has arrested and imprisoned hundreds of political opposition leaders, sentencing some to life in prison:

- How concerned should we be that Tajikistan is closing off space for legitimate civil society and political expression? And what can the U.S. Government do to help ensure that Tajikistan respects its citizens’ freedom of expression and political participation?

Answer. Tajikistan has much to gain from providing its citizens with genuinely free and fair elections. Through our dialogue on these issues with the Tajik Government, we emphasize the importance of allowing space for voices of political opposition as a way to promote the stability and resilience of societies that would otherwise be left vulnerable to violent extremist messaging. If confirmed, I pledge to continue coordinating with other international organizations and missions in holding the Tajik Government accountable through public statements and private messaging to emphasize the importance of political plurality and a free and open political system.

Question 2. Since 2014, Tajik authorities have arrested and detained at least six human rights lawyers for defending government critics. Furthermore, the Government has taken steps to curtail the independence of the bar by granting the Justice Ministry the exclusive power to authorize law licenses. In the wake of these developments, the number of licensed lawyers in the country has fallen by half in the space of three years to just 600 in 2017.

- What steps will you take if confirmed to ensure that Tajikistan respects the rule of law and the independence of lawyers in the country?

Answer. The protection of human rights defenders from charges brought because of the exercise of their human rights advocacy in Tajikistan is an issue that is deeply concerning, and one that if confirmed I intend to raise with officials at the highest levels of the Tajik Government. U.S. Embassy Dushanbe has consistently urged the Tajik Government in public and in private to treat these cases in a fair and transparent manner that provides all required procedural protections and guarantees, especially in the case of Mr. Burzurgmehr Yorov. The Embassy has also established the Law Reform Working Group to bring key stakeholders together with Parliament to revise laws, combat corruption, and promote reform in the judicial system, including the criminal procedure code. If confirmed, I look forward to expanding on this and other judicial reform opportunities with the Tajik Government.

Question 3. The majority of the heroin smuggled through Central Asia to Russia, China, and Europe passes through Tajikistan. As illegal substance trafficking and human trafficking are often correlated, it is not surprising Tajikistan is rated as Tier Two Watchlist in State’s annual Trafficking in Persons report, flagged for sex trafficking and forced labor of adults and children:

- How will you lead the interagency team at Embassy Dushanbe to address trafficking issues?
Answer. U.S. Embassy Dushanbe works closely with the Government of Tajikistan on trafficking in persons issues. It also partners with likeminded countries and international organizations, such as the International Labor Organization and the U.N. Office of Drugs and Crime (UNODC) to identify opportunities for Tajikistan to improve its record in this area and thus remove itself from the Watchlist. For example, Embassy Dushanbe has just signed a $350,000 two-year project with UNODC to address the legislative and law enforcement-related concerns enumerated in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons report. If confirmed, I will seek to support and expand these partnerships and this work with the Government of Tajikistan.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN MARK POMMERSHEIM BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Since 2014, Tajik authorities have arrested and detained at least six human rights lawyers for defending government critics. Furthermore, the Government has taken steps to curtail the independence of the bar by granting the Justice Ministry the exclusive power to authorize law licenses. In the wake of these developments, the number of licensed lawyers in the country has fallen from more than 1,200 in 2015 to just 600 in 2017:
- If confirmed, what steps will you take to ensure that Tajikistan respects the rule of law and the independence of lawyers in the country?

Answer. The protection of human rights defenders from charges brought because of the exercise of their human rights advocacy in Tajikistan is an issue that is deeply concerning, and one that if confirmed I intend to raise with officials at the highest levels of the Tajik Government. U.S. Embassy Dushanbe has consistently urged the Tajik Government in public and in private to treat these cases in a fair and transparent manner to allow for all required procedural protections and guarantees, especially in the case of Mr. Burzurgmehr Yorov. If confirmed, I look forward to expanding on this and other judicial reform opportunities with the Tajik Government.

Question 2. In May 2015, Tajikistan’s U.S.-trained Special Forces chief, Gulmurod Khalimov, defected from his position and joined ISIS. In a YouTube video announcing his defection, Khalimov cited Tajikistan’s crackdown on Muslims as justification for abandoning his post. Such a statement suggests that restrictive religious freedom laws are contributing to religious extremism, rather than curbing it:
- If confirmed, how will you ensure that Tajikistan respects freedom of religion while addressing legitimate security concerns?

Answer. We have been very frank with the Tajik Government that counterterrorism efforts must not involve crackdowns on the exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including religious freedom. We believe undue constraints on religious expression risk fueling radicalization to violence and terrorist recruitment rather than mitigating it.

Any counterterrorism training that we conduct with Tajikistan’s security forces includes instruction on the law of armed conflict to ensure that the leadership understands the need to respect international law. If confirmed, I will support the Embassy’s Leahy program for security force unit and individual recipients of U.S. foreign assistance. I will further ensure that all U.S. security and law enforcement assistance activities will continue to reinforce the importance of human rights. If confirmed, it will be one of my highest priorities to continue this dialogue and reinforce these messages with the Tajik Government.

Question 3. Since 2014, the Government of Tajikistan has conducted a campaign to discredit and dismantle all viable political opposition. It has banned several legitimate opposition parties, such as Group 24, Youth for the Revival of Tajikistan, and the Islamic Renaissance Party of Tajikistan. The Supreme Court has declared all of these parties to be extremist organizations and has outlawed the distribution of newspapers, videos, audio recordings, literature, and leaflets connected to any of these parties. Moreover, the Government has arrested and imprisoned hundreds of political opposition leaders, sentencing some to life in prison:
- If confirmed, how will you help ensure that Tajikistan respects freedom of expression and political participation?
Answer. In Tajikistan, we continue to relay to the Tajik Government that we are highly concerned about increasing pressures on media, civil society, and political opposition groups. We believe and have messaged to President Rahmon and his ministries that suppressing political, religious, or civil society voices leads to the kind of repressive environment that generates instability. If confirmed, I will continue our efforts with Tajikistan’s Government, armed forces, media, and non-governmental organizations to improve respect for human rights and strengthen civil society and democratic engagement.
NOMINATIONS

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 2018

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 3:02 p.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate office Building, Hon. Jeff Flake, presiding.
Present: Senators Flake [presiding], Gardner, Young, Booker, and Kaine.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF FLAKE,
U.S. SENATOR FROM ARIZONA

Senator Flake. This hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

Today the committee will consider the nominations of three Career Foreign Service officers to serve as Ambassadors to Benin, Gambia, and Equatorial Guinea. Having presided over the confirmation hearings for the predecessors of each of these—of today’s nominees, I have enjoyed watching the progress made in these countries over the course of the past several years, and look forward to see how today’s nominees will build on that progress.

Benin underwent a peaceful transition to presidential power in 2016. And when the former president stepped down after his two terms of office were completed, implementation of the second Millennium Challenge Corporation Compact centered on the strengthening of electric power. The Electric power sector began in June of last year, and the International Monetary Fund projects that Benin’s GDP will grow to reach 6 percent in 2018 up from 5.6 percent in 2017. That is something we can all envy, is not it?

The Gambia has made considerable progress since we last sent an ambassador there with the long-serving president ultimately stepping down after losing the election in 2016. Since then, governance and human rights have improved inside The Gambia, and relations between the countries and the international community have improved significantly. These actions paved the way for previously-suspended MCC threshold programs to be finalized in December of last year and for the reinstatement of AGOA benefits for The Gambia, both of which will help elevate poverty there.
Equatorial Guinea is ruled by the longest-serving leader in Africa. His administration is charged with large-scale corruption and nepotism, and the country's economy relies heavily on oil and gas exports and has been negatively impacted by global oil prices. Oil reserves there are likely to be exhausted by 2030, and Equatorial Guinea's economy will need to be diversified, obviously, before then.

I had a chance to meet with each of today's nominees before this hearing, and I look forward to hearing from them today about how they will approach the challenges that are before them. With that, I would like to recognize the distinguished ranking member, Senator Booker, for opening comments.

STATEMENT OF HON. CORY BOOKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator Booker. Thank you. And if the witnesses would indulge me for a moment. This may be my last hearing with Senator Flake where I get to be the ranking to his chairmanship of this really important subcommittee. I have been very blessed, and I would like to say this for the record, not just by my friendship with Senator Flake, but, on issues of Africa, to be able to witness him, to learn from him, to travel with him. He is an extraordinary leader when it comes to a continent that America has so much interest in, not just our resources or our security, but also our eyes towards the beauty and the wonder of humanity.

There is a saying I say all the time, “Before you tell me about your religion, first show it to me in how you treat other people.” Jeff Flake is one of those people who lives his values. You know, he is one of those folks that policy-wise we may not agree with all the time, but the values that he exhibits are not just things I agree with him on, they are actually things I look up to.

And so, I want to thank the chairman for being such a great partner in this Congress. You have really enriched my life and made me a better senator. And I hope that I can help carry on the mantle of keeping the Senate focused on this critically-important continent.

Senator Flake. Thank you. You are very kind.

Senator Booker. Yes. Yes. [Applause.]

Senator Flake. I would normally say your time is up, but go on. [Laughter.]

Senator Booker. Well, the applause from the witnesses do not count because they are just trying to get confirmed. But everybody else who applauded, thank you very much. No, joking.

To the witnesses there, career Foreign Service officers do not get thanked enough. In my short time as a Senator, I have been blown away by the people I have met out there doing such righteous work and representing our country, our interests, and again, I think Senator Flake would agree, the interests of humanity, in such a brilliant way. And the witnesses we have before us are Foreign Service officers who have served in every imaginative corner of the world. I mean, just looking at some of the nations you all have served, from China, Iraq, Nepal, Uganda, to many, many other places, I think that all of us in the United States Senate owe you a debt of gratitude and a thank you for what you have done.
You have developed specialties as well that are critically important to America’s agenda. You are expert managers and negotiators. And the fact that you are sitting here again putting yourselves forward for very difficult posts is yet another tribute to the kind of character that you represent. And truly you are patriots that represent the best of who we are as a nation, and I am grateful for that.

You are all going, as you all know, and much better than I do, to countries that are real priorities for us in Africa. They represent a variety of challenges. Equatorial Guinea, for example, exhibits characteristics of—the resource curse that all of us know about or have studied. And your work here to deal with how the proceeds from these extractive industries fail to reach citizens and often perpetuate corruption and unaccountable governance is critical. Identifying ways to speak out forcefully on issues of human rights, on democracy, development, along with supporting American commercial interests, will absolutely critical.

The Gambia has recently undergone a dramatic transformation, one that has given me a lot of hope. In early 2017, we saw a powerful response from the region to promote and restore democracy in Gambia after the country’s long-term authoritarian leader refused to vacate his seat after losing elections.

President Barrow has overseen significant improvements in his country’s record on governance and human rights, and has drawn praise, as I am giving him here, for his efforts to undercover abuses committed under the Jammeh regime. The transition, however, is still nascent, and we have often seen how these things can go south. And so, we have to figure out ways to support and keep the changes and reforms on track.

Benin’s government has a record that is generally positive. It is a bright spot in this triumvirate that is before us right now. Democratic institutions and public policy performance remain in need of our support, and, again, we could be critical in helping to support local leaders there.

Corruption is still a key challenge, as we know. While President Talon’s government has made reforms a key policy plank, the government has drawn criticism for what critics view as efforts to curtail freedom of expression and centralize power. So, there are real challenges in these countries, and these nominees, before us today, can help us to seize huge opportunities. Your expertise can make a difference for generations to come.

In my travels in the region, I have been struck by the resilience, the generosity, the courage, and frankly the beauty of the people that I have met in that region. It will be up to you to help us to make sure that we capitalize on the promise and the hope that is there, and also serve the glorious humanity in each of those nations.

If confirmed, I hope that you will lend the hand of the United States to encourage our counterparts in those countries to overcome their divisions, build accountable institutions, harness economic opportunities, and protect and provide for the most vulnerable. I ask this often, but if—please, if you are confirmed, to stay in communications with us, with our staffs who actually do the hard work in the Senate, and let us know the challenges you face, as well as how we might best help you in your critical missions. So, I look forward to hearing your testimonies today, but it is not going to be a rough hearing for any of you, and I am truly grateful for your lifetimes of service.

Senator Flake. Thank you, Senator Booker, and thanks for the kind words. And it has been a pure pleasure to work with you over the past 2 years. And, you know, I have been in Congress, the House, and the Senate for 18 years, all 18 of those years serving on the Africa Subcommittee in the House and now in the Senate. And being able to chair the committee and to be able to meet so many wonderful Foreign Service officers, who have provided such generous service their entire lives, for—in many cases and dedicated their lives to this work, and it has been so wonderful. With, you know, 54 countries in Africa, we have a lot of opportunities to see so many go and serve and almost exclusively career Foreign Service officers.

So, I so much appreciate your willingness to serve and your families as well, the sacrifices that they make. Often these are difficult posts, sometimes dangerous posts, and it is appreciated. So, thank you all.

Patricia Mahoney has been nominated to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Benin. Previous experience includes several years at the U.S. Embassy in Uganda as well as postings at Foggy Bottom and the National Security Council. Carl Paschall has been nominated to serve as Ambassador to The Gambia. His Africa-related experience includes serving as Director for the Office of Central African Affairs at Foggy Bottom and advising the commander of Special Operations Command, Africa on foreign policy matters. Susan Stevenson has been nominated to serve as Ambassador to Equatorial Guinea, currently the State Department's principal deputy secretary for public affairs.

All three of the nominees today, as I mentioned, are career public service officers, and I want to extend the thanks of the committee for your work and your willingness to make sacrifices. Please introduce any family members that you have, and we will go to Ms. Mahoney. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF PATRICIA MAHONEY, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF BENIN

Ms. Mahoney. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to be the next ambassador to the Republic of Benin. I am grateful for the confidence the President and Secretary of State Pompeo have shown me, and I wish to thank the members of the committee for the opportunity to testify today.

I would also like to thank my children: Brian, who is a submariner serving with the U.S. Navy; Kevin, a U.S. Army veteran now at George Mason University; and Honora, who is in Indonesia right now training to be a Peace Corps Volunteer. Their patience, support, and good humor have sustained me throughout my career.
Benin stands out as one of our most steadfast partners in a region increasingly important to our strategic and economic interests, but it is also one of the poorest. Improving the prospects and well-being of its people is vital to ensuring that Benin continues on a democratic, tolerant, and stable path, and the United States has proven a reliable partner in helping Benin to do so. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other members of Congress and staff to advance U.S. policy interests, including democracy and human rights, economic prosperity, and regional peace and security.

A multiparty democracy since 1991, Benin has built a tradition of peaceful transition of power across six presidential elections and is proud of its long tradition of religious tolerance. If confirmed, I will work with the government of Benin in its efforts to increase the transparency and effectiveness of government systems, including a well-functioning, independent, and fair judicial system.

I will also work with the government of Benin, which was upgraded to Tier 2 in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report, to confront all forms of human trafficking. The United States has a modest, but positive, trade balance with Benin. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen mutually-beneficial trade and investment ties between our two countries.

Improving the well-being of a growing population is crucial in a country in which nearly 40 percent of the population lives below the poverty line. If confirmed, I will do my utmost, working with our Embassy, Congress, and U.S. agencies, to continue to support Benin in creating the conditions necessary to move beyond aid and to achieve self-sustaining economic growth.

With respect to regional security, our shared values are reflected in Benin’s commitment to stand with its neighbors, to confront the horrors of Boko Haram and ISIS West Africa, and in its contribution of troops and police to United Nations peacekeeping efforts. Benin is also making strides in preventing the spread of violent extremism by building community resilience along vulnerable border regions.

Our military and law-enforcement cooperation advance Benin’s ability to counter the spread of terrorism and transnational crime across the Gulf of Guinea and the boarders of West Africa. Through continued cooperation, we can help the nation and the people of Benin reach their full potential and advance our partnership on peace and security goals.

Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will work to deepen our bilateral ties, advance U.S. interests, and ensure the safety of American citizens in Benin. Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to appear today. I would be pleased to take any questions.

[Ms. Mahoney’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF PATRICIA MAHONEY

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am deeply honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of Benin. I am grateful for the confidence the President and Secretary of State Pompeo have shown in me, and I wish to thank the members of the committee for the opportunity to testify before you. I would also like to thank my children: Brian, who is a submariner serving with the U.S. Navy; Kevin, a U.S. Army veteran now at George Mason University; and Honora, who is in Indonesia training for service as a Peace Corps Volunteer. Their patience, support, and good humor have sustained me throughout my career.

It has been my great privilege to serve our country as a Foreign Service Officer for the past 28 years. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing that service by working with you and other Members of Congress and staff to advance U.S. policy and to strengthen our bilateral relationship with Benin across a range of shared interests, including democracy and human rights; economic prosperity; and security. Benin stands out as one of our most steadfast partners in a region increasingly important to our strategic and economic interests, but it is also one of the poorest. Improving the prospects and well-being of its people is vital to ensuring that Benin continues on a democratic, tolerant, and stable path, and the United States has proven a reliable partner in helping Benin do so. If confirmed, I will work with the team at Embassy Cotonou to promote a vibrant civil society and effective, transparent governance; support a prosperous, open and healthy society with closer, mutually beneficial trade linkages with the United States; and work in partnership with Benin to strengthen regional peace and security. I would like to highlight briefly a few priorities in each of these realms.

I. Promoting Democracy and Governance

A multiparty democracy since 1991, Benin has built a tradition of peaceful transition of power across six presidential elections, and it is proud of its long tradition of religious tolerance. Benin’s President, Patrice Talon, recognizes corruption and ineffective public administration as among the country’s biggest problems. If confirmed, I expect to witness Benin’s seventh consecutive peaceful, democratic presidential election in 2021, in addition to legislative elections to be held next spring. I will work with the Government of Benin to advance its efforts to increase the transparency and effectiveness of government institutions, including a well-functioning, independent, and fair judicial system.

Benin has advanced its efforts to counter human trafficking, resulting in an upgrade to Tier 2 in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons report. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Benin to build on this progress to confront all forms of human trafficking, in particular increasing its efforts to investigate, prosecute, convict, adequately sentence traffickers of adults and children, and develop effective systems to identify trafficking victims and provide them with care.

II. Improving the Well-Being and Economic Prospects of Benin’s Growing Population

Nearly 40 percent of Benin’s people live below the poverty line. Two-thirds of Benin’s population lacks access to electricity. The birth rate is the 13th highest in the world; malaria is the leading killer of children under five.

Democracies thrive best when their people thrive. If confirmed, I will do my utmost, working with our Embassy, Congress, and U.S. agencies to continue to support Benin in creating the conditions necessary to move beyond aid and to achieve self-sustaining economic growth, allowing the Beninese people to achieve a healthier and more prosperous future for themselves and their families.

This work is already underway. The United States is strengthening Benin’s electricity sector through a five-year $375 million Millennium Challenge Corporation compact. We expect nearly 10 million Beninese to benefit from this program.

The U.S. Agency for International Development is reducing the number of Beninese lives lost to malaria and improving the health of mothers and children; building the foundations of a healthy, productive workforce; and contributing to a 17 percent reduction in mortality of children under five since 2014.

Food security initiatives supported by the U.S. Department of Agriculture are feeding schoolchildren and helping to strengthen Benin’s agriculture industry.

More than 2,150 Peace Corps Volunteers have served in Benin over the past 50 years. While American private investment and bilateral trade in Benin are limited, many of the most notable success stories—a cashew processing company, a palm liquor producer, and a baobab-based export company—have links to former Peace Corps projects.

The United States has a modest but positive trade balance with Benin. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen mutually beneficial trade and investment ties between our two countries.

III. Strengthening Regional Security

Benin is a strong partner to the United States for peace and security in West Africa and the Sahel. Our shared values are reflected in Benin’s commitment to stand with its neighbors to confront the horrors of Boko Haram and ISIS West Africa, and in its contribution of troops and police to United Nations peacekeeping efforts in Mali and the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Benin is also making strides in preventing the spread of violent extremism by building community resilience along vulnerable border regions. Our military and law-enforcement cooperation advance Benin’s ability to counter the spread of terrorism and transnational organized crime across the Gulf of Guinea and the porous borders of West Africa that threaten American as well as Beninese interests.

Through continued cooperation with Benin, we can help the nation and people of Benin reach their full potential and advance our partnership on peace and security goals. Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will continue to work to reinforce our bilateral relationship with Benin, advance U.S. interests in Benin, and ensure the safety of American citizens.

Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to appear before you today. I would be pleased to take any questions.

Senator Flake: Thank you, Mr. Paschall?

STATEMENT OF RICHARD CARLTON PASCHALL, III, OF NORTH CAROLINA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF THE GAMBIA

Mr. Paschall. Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, other distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today, and I am deeply grateful for the trust and confidence that President Trump and Secretary of State Pompeo have placed in me as the President’s nominee to be the next ambassador to the Republic of The Gambia. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you, other members of Congress, and your staffs to advance our Nation’s national security and foreign policy interests.

I have had the privilege to serve our Nation for over 27 years as a career Foreign Service officer around the world and here in our Nation’s capital. Such a career in service, constantly on the move, furthering our Nation’s national security objectives would have been much, much more difficult without the love and support of my family. My wife and best friend, Jane Ellen, is a Foreign Service officer with USAID and a retired U.S. Army colonel with more than 24 years of service in uniform, including multiple combat zone deployments. I am the proud father of two outstanding young men. I cannot overstate the enormity of their sacrifices over the course of my career, far too many months, years, birthdays, and holidays spent apart. C.J. and William, thank you. My sister, Cathy McCluskey, and brother, Stephan Paschall, and his son, Walker, made the trip from North Carolina with my parents, Richard Paschall, Jr. and Patricia Norris Paschall.

Senator Booker. Could all your family members identify themselves?

Mr. Paschall. Sure, absolutely.

Senator Booker. The two guys behind you barely even smiled for crying out loud. [Laughter.] Senator Booker. I mean, the dude was just complimenting you on the Senate record. [Laughter.]

Senator Flake. There you go.

Senator Booker. Can’t even smile for us.

Mr. Paschall. Senator, I am sure they are going to point out that transcript with great pride. [Laughter.]

Mr. Paschall. It makes it all worth it. They are right there.

Senator Booker. And there were other family members you mentioned? Are they—— Senator Flake. They are there.

Mr. Paschall. Sister, nephew, Walker, mother, Patricia Paschall, father, Richard Paschall, and my younger brother, Stephen. I have not gotten to him yet.

Senator Flake. The young one did smile, for the record. He did smile, but anyway.

Mr. Paschall. Mom and Dad, thank you for teaching me about unconditional love, the need for compassion and compromise, the importance of education and service, and the value of hard work.

This is a particularly momentous time in The Gambia's history, one that presents an opportunity to expand further and strengthen the growing community of African democracies. The Gambian people voted out the autocratic former president, though the results were only ensured by the willingness of the democracies and the economic community of West African states to intervene when the defeated President rejected the electoral results. Today, The Gambia, with the support of the international community, is working to create a truly democratic state operating under the rule of law with respect for human rights and investing in its greatest resource, its people.

President Adama Barrow has ushered in a new era of openness and transparency and demonstrated dedication to the democratization of his country. In one of his early acts, President Barrow released all political prisoners. The Gambia has begun a process to account for the abuses of the past, launching a Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission. A commission of inquiry is exploring the financial crimes committed under the previous president’s rule. The National Assembly passed legislation to create a new National Human Rights Commission. The judiciary now operates largely independently, and arbitrary arrests and detentions have been, for the most part, though not completely, eliminated.

Efforts are under way to reform the framework that underpins the business environment to improve the business climate. These steps are reflections of the will of the people of The Gambia, and they underscore an important point. The Gambian people admire America and American values, such as freedom, democracy, rule of law, respect for human rights, promotion of education, and entrepreneurialism.

While the trajectory of these objectives is a significant, positive departure from previous troubling trends, The Gambia is really just at the beginning of what will be a long road to improve conditions in the country. The government faces significant challenges in developing and implementing reforms. And the citizenry, enthusiastic for change after 2 decades of declining governance and economic performance, are desperate for results.

In this environment, the United States must speak forcefully and consistently in support of positive changes, provide targeted expertise and assistance to develop capacity in a range of areas, and work closely with like-minded countries interested in helping The Gambia to fulfill its promise. International donors must share this burden, be nimble to respond to emerging needs, flexible given the significant capacity limitations in the country, and well coordinated to ensure no duplication of or gaps in our collective efforts.
If confirmed, I pledge to persistently pursue the safety and security of our embassy team and of private American citizens, and to work with the government and entrepreneurs of The Gambia to expand opportunities for U.S. businesses and for Gambian businesses to take advantage of their reinstated eligibility under the African Growth and Opportunity Act.

Among the great Americans making a difference every day to the people of The Gambia are Peace Corps volunteers, who touch lives in ways that most of us can only dream of at the individual level. If confirmed, I will seek every opportunity to support the work of our Peace Corps volunteers.

It is important the United States and other partners work to support the professionalization of The Gambian security services to help better ensure that respect for fundamental human rights is the norm. Security service members who honorably wear the uniform and serve the people will bolster democracy and rule of law, be a force for stability in the region and beyond, and help ensure that the country never again descends to a state of oppression. If confirmed, it would a privilege to lead U.S. efforts to help the government and people of The Gambia fulfill their ambitious agenda for peace and prosperity.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to your questions.

[Mr. Paschall’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF RICHARD CARLTON PASCHALL, III

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to be the next Ambassador to the Republic of The Gambia. I am deeply grateful for the trust and confidence that the President and Secretary of State Pompeo have placed in me as their nominee to lead our nation’s mission in The Gambia. If confirmed, I look forward to working with you and other members of Congress and staff to advance our Nation’s national security and foreign policy interests.

Mr. Chairman, I have had the privilege to represent and serve our nation in the Middle East, South Asia, Africa, the Caribbean, and Europe in addition to several assignments here in our Nation’s capital. Without the love and support of my family, such a career in service constantly on the move furthering our nation’s national security and foreign policy objectives would have been much, much more difficult. I am the proud husband of a veteran, and she is with me today. My wife and best friend, Jane Ellen, is now a Foreign Service Officer with the United States Agency for International Development having retired from the U.S. Army as a Colonel. I’m also the proud father of two outstanding young men who are here today. CJ is an internet entrepreneur, and William is a Computer Science major in college. I owe a debt that can never be repaid to my parents who I am happy to have with me here today, Richard Paschall Jr. and Patricia Norris Paschall. They taught me about unconditional love, compassion, the importance of education, the value of hard work, and the importance of service. And I am so very grateful to my sister Cathy McCluskey and brother Stephen Paschall, and his son Walker, who made the trip from North Carolina with my parents.

This is a particularly momentous time in the Gambia’s history—one that presents an opportunity to expand further and strengthen the growing community of African democracies. Free and fair elections in December 2016—the results of which were ensured by the will of the democracies in the Economic Community of West African States to intervene when the defeated president rejected the electoral results—ended 22 years of authoritarian rule. The former president raided the treasury after pursuing policies for years that bankrupted the country and put it heavily in debt, and made it an international pariah due to his disdain and disrespect for the rights and the will of the Gambian people. Today, The Gambia, with the support of the international community including the United States, is working to create a truly democratic state operating under the rule of law, with respect for human rights, and investing in its greatest resource—its people.
President Adama Barrow has ushered in a new era of openness and transparency, and expressed dedication to the democratization of his country. His administration has begun a process to account for the abuses of the past by establishing a Truth, Reconciliation, and Reparations Commission which was launched just last month. A Commission of Inquiry has held hearings for just over a year to explore the financial crimes committed under the previous president’s rule. The National Assembly passed legislation to create a new National Human Rights Commission. The judiciary now operates largely independently, and arbitrary arrests and detentions have been for the most part, though not completely, eliminated. Efforts are underway to reform the framework that underpins the business environment and improve the business climate. In one of his early acts, President Barrow released all political prisoners soon after taking office. This move underscores an important point—that the Gambian people admire America and American values such as freedom, democracy, rule of law, respect for human rights, and promotion of education.

While the trajectory of these objectives is a remarkable, significant positive departure from previous troubling trends, The Gambia is really just at the beginning of what will be a long road to broad improvement of conditions in the country. The Government faces significant challenges in terms of capacity to develop and implement reform initiatives that go well above and beyond the fiscal resources to do so. And the citizenry are enthusiastic for change after two decades of declining governance and economic performance, and desperate to see results. In this environment, it is critical that the United States speak forcefully and consistently in support of the positive changes, provide targeted expertise and assistance to the Government and civil society to develop capacity in a wide range of areas, and work closely with like-minded countries interested in helping The Gambia to fulfill its promise. It will be important that international donors share this burden appropriately, be nimble to respond to emerging needs, flexible given the significant capacity limitations extant in the country, and well-coordinated to ensure no duplication of effort, or gaps through which the potential for success might fall. If confirmed, it will be a privilege to lead U.S. efforts, with our partners, to continue to build on the positive trajectory since The Gambia’s return to democratic rule in 2017.

I look forward to working hard, if confirmed, to do what we can to help the Government and people of The Gambia fulfill their ambitious agenda for peace and prosperity, and I pledge to persistently pursue the safety and security of our Embassy team and of private American citizens, and to advance U.S. interests in The Gambia. Among the great Americans making a difference every day in the lives of the people of The Gambia are Peace Corps Volunteers. In my experience, one of the most effective programs of the U.S. Government is the Peace Corps, whose volunteers touch lives in ways most of us can only dream of, at the individual level. I will look for ways to underscore the difference our nation’s Peace Corps Volunteers make each and every day in The Gambia. Working with the Government and entrepreneurs of The Gambia, I will seek to expand opportunities for U.S. business to become active in The Gambia, and for Gambian businesses to take advantage of the reinstated eligibility under the African Growth and Opportunity Act. And I will work to support the professionalization of the Gambian security services to help better ensure that respect for fundamental human rights is the norm and not the exception. This is particularly important in The Gambia, where positive reform of the security services will further bolster democracy and rule of law, serve as a force for stability in the region and beyond, and help to ensure that the country never again descends to a state of repression.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be honored to respond to any questions.

Senator Flake. Thank you. Ms. Stevenson?

STATEMENT OF SUSAN N. STEVENSON, OF WASHINGTON, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Ms. Stevenson. Thank you very much, Senator Flake, Senator Booker, and Senator Kaine.

It is a great honor to be before you as the nominee to be the next U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of Equatorial Guinea. I am grateful for the confidence that the President and the Secretary of State have placed in me with this nomination. And if confirmed, I will do my best to uphold this trust and promote U.S. national interests.

I am very pleased that my son, Hugo, could be with me today. His sisters, Hadley and Willa, are not in the State and could not join us. But like his two sisters, Hugo was born overseas and spent over half his life in Asia. This a career that involves and impacts the entire family.

Over the past 26 years, I have been privileged to represent the United States in Thailand, in Mexico, and in China, as well as through short-term stints in the Middle East and in Africa. I have seen firsthand the impact the United States can have on people around the world. I have seen the importance of the rule of law, good governance, and transparency.

While serving as consul general in Northern Thailand, I am proud to have led U.S. efforts to promote the creative economy to strengthen local industry and to expand the market for U.S. products. And while assisting the sizable refugee communities in Northern Thailand, I saw firsthand how U.S. leadership shifted the government of Myanmar to open to the world. In China, I was part of the interagency dialogue between our two countries to tackle challenges and emphasize areas of common interest. The experience showed me that despite disagreements, diplomacy can further our national interests without sacrificing our values.

Senators, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you—unfortunately, not with you Senator Flake, but we are honored to be here during what might be your last hearing—and the honorable members of the committee to advance U.S. interests in Equatorial Guinea. Our policy priorities there are to strengthen our commercial ties, promote democracy, improve respect for human rights and civil liberties, and increase the economic health and educational opportunities for all of its citizens. As I have seen through my work in China, and on Myanmar, and North Korea, countries are more stable and prosperous when they enfranchise their people.

Equatorial Guinea, with a population of about 1 million, is ostensibly a multiparty, constitutional republic, but as you have said, there has been only one president since 1979. The ruling party controls all but one seat of the Chamber of Deputies and all but one seat in the Senate. Opposition political parties face legal restrictions, and opposition leaders have faced torture, harassment, arrest, and worse.

Equatorial Guinea has been the third largest producer of oil in Sub-Saharan Africa and enjoys one of the highest per capita income rates in the continent. But despite this, much of the population lives below poverty level, and official corruption remains rampant. If confirmed, I will encourage the country’s leadership to respect human rights and the rule of law, as has my predecessor. I will urge government leaders to enable multiparty democracy and a strong civil society. And I will stress that promoting transparency and ending corruption are key to Equatorial Guinea’s long-term growth and stability and critical to our commercial ties.

The United States is the largest trading partner of the country. American oil and gas companies have invested more than $14 billion since the 1990s. The United States embassy has played a critical role in facilitating trade and promoting U.S. investors in the country. American oil companies are Equatorial Guinea’s largest investors, and they have lead hydrocarbon exploration and extraction.

Equatorial Guinea imported nearly $112 million worth of U.S. goods in 2017. And if confirmed, I will continue to work to protect the commercial interests of U.S. companies invested in Equatorial Guinea and improve the investment climate for other U.S. businesses as will be more important with the decline of hydrocarbon reserves.

Senator Flake, Senator Booker, and Senator Kaine, while our bilateral dialogue and engagement respects Equatorial Guinea’s sovereignty and culture, we must be frank with our concerns. If confirmed, I will promote the political, economic, and social development of the country beyond its first 50 years of independence, which was celebrated just last month. And if confirmed, no goal will be more important to me than protecting the lives, interest, and welfare of American citizens living in the country and traveling to Equatorial Guinea. I promise to work closely with you and the members of the committee in this endeavor.

I thank you for opportunity to testify today, and we look forward to taking your questions.

[Ms. Stevenson’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SUSAN N. STEVENSON

Thank you very much Chairman Flake, Ranking Member Booker, and members of the committee for the opportunity to testify before you today. It is a great honor to appear before you as the nominee to be the next United States Ambassador to the Republic of Equatorial Guinea, a country that celebrated 50 years of independence from Spain last month. I am grateful for the confidence that President Trump and Secretary of State Pompeo have placed in me with this nomination. If confirmed by the Senate, I will do my best to uphold this trust and advance U.S. national interests.

Over the past 26 years, I have been privileged to represent the United States in Thailand, China, and Mexico, as well as short-term stints in the Middle East and Africa. I have seen first-hand the impact the United States can have on people worldwide. There have been common challenges in the rule of law, good governance, and transparency, as well as opportunities through entrepreneurship and public policy. While serving as Consul General in Chiang Mai, Thailand, I am proud to have led the U.S. effort to promote the creative economy, to strengthen local industry and to expand the market for U.S. products. While assisting the sizeable refugee communities in northern Thailand, I saw first-hand how U.S. leadership shifted the Government of Myanmar to open to the world. In China, I was part of the interagency dialogue between our two governments to tackle challenges and emphasize areas of common interest. The experience showed me that, despite disagreements with certain nations, diplomacy can further our national interests without sacrificing our values.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you and the honorable members of this committee to advance U.S. interests in Equatorial Guinea. U.S. policy priorities in Equatorial Guinea are to strengthen our commercial ties, promote democracy, improve respect for human rights and civil liberties, and to increase economic, health, and educational opportunities for all citizens. As I have seen through my work in China and on Myanmar and North Korea, countries are more stable and prosperous when they enfranchise their people.

Equatorial Guinea, with a population of about one million people, is strategically located on the Gulf of Guinea. Although the country is a de jure multiparty, constitutional republic, there has been only one president since 1979. The ruling party controls all but one seat in the Chamber of Deputies and one seat in the Senate. Opposition political parties face legal restrictions, and opposition leaders have faced torture, harassment, intimidation, arrest, and even murder.
Equatorial Guinea is the fourth largest producer of oil in sub-Saharan Africa, and has one of the highest per-capita income rates in Africa. Despite this, much of its population lives below the poverty level; and official corruption remains rampant. If confirmed, I will encourage the country's leadership to respect human rights and the rule of law. I will urge government leaders to enable true multi-party democracy and facilitate the growth of a strong civil society. I will stress that promoting transparency and ending corrupt practices are key to Equatorial Guinea's long-term growth and stability and critical to strengthen our commercial ties.

The United States has a robust economic relationship with Equatorial Guinea and remains its largest trading partner. U.S. oil and gas companies have invested more than $14 billion in Equatorial Guinea since the 1990s. Senators, this amount represents a substantial investment. The U.S. Embassy plays a critical trade facilitation and promotion role for U.S. investors in Equatorial Guinea. U.S. oil companies are Equatorial Guinea's largest investors, and they have the lead role in oil and gas exploration and extraction. Equatorial Guinea imported nearly $112 million worth of U.S. goods in 2017. If confirmed, I will continue to work to protect the commercial interests of U.S. oil companies invested in Equatorial Guinea and improve the investment climate for other U.S. businesses.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Booker, while our bilateral dialogue and engagement respects Equatorial Guinea's sovereignty and culture, we also must be frank in discussing our concerns. If confirmed, I will promote the political, economic, and social development of Equatorial Guinea as the country looks beyond its first 50 years of independence.

And, if confirmed, no goal will be more important to me than protecting the lives, interests, and welfare of American citizens living and traveling in Equatorial Guinea. I promise to work closely with you and the members of this committee in this endeavor.

I thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I would be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Senator Flake. Thank you. Thank you all. Ms. Mahoney, Benin is obviously, buffeted by anything that happens in Nigeria next door, heavily reliant on cross-border trade. The political situation in Nigeria often affects Benin. With elections coming up in Nigeria soon, what do we need to be concerned about in the neighborhood?

Ms. Mahoney. Thank you for the question, Senator. As you said, Benin is highly dependent upon regional trade, especially from its larger neighbor, Nigeria. That is perhaps a—not necessarily a problem. It also presents an opportunity because it offers a very, very large market for some of the products that Benin does develop, especially if they are able to provide some value added to those products. So, I think that as the elections approach in Nigeria, it is something that we will be watching very, very closely because any kinds of—any kinds of elements of trouble that may pass through Nigeria will also definitely affect Benin. And we want to be sure that they are in a position to respond to that—to that possibility.

Senator Flake. What, if anything, can we do here to push Benin to take better advantage of AGOA, the opportunities that exist there? What will you be pushing for there as Ambassador if you are confirmed?

Ms. Mahoney. So, right now, there—companies in Benin have taken very limited advantage of the AGOA benefits. And if confirmed, I would like to encourage companies in Benin to take greater advantage of the benefits that AGOA can provide. We have some technical assistance that is available to interested companies that would sharpen their ability and improve their ability to compete in those markets and to take advantage of those benefits. We also have assistance available to help the government prepare a strategy to take advantage of AGOA benefits as well.
And so, if confirmed, I would build on the efforts that our embassy has already undertaken to improve the ability of the government of Benin to take advantage of these AGOA benefits and to really kind of benefit from the increased prosperity that that can bring.

Senator Flake. Well, thank you. And, Mr. Paschall, you said in my office that decades of mismanagement in The Gambia cannot be turned around on a dime. What has President Barrow done right, and what has he done wrong, and where does he need to move to make sure that there is improvement and not sliding the other way?

Mr. Paschall. Senator, thanks. That is a great opportunity to underscore the importance of the Truth and Reconciliation Reparations Commission. Accounting for the—for the abuses of the past will be important to shine a bright light in some dark corners. It will be very important for the people of The Gambia to be able to come back together and to walk down that long road together from a wide range of issues, including the creation of the National Human Rights Commission, the Commission that created the financial crimes. All of those efforts are positive.

There are—I am not sure that I would say that there are things that have been done wrong, per se, at this point in time. I think a lot of the—the challenge that I have heard briefed to me over the past few months is one of limited capacity. There seems to have been a fairly dramatic underinvestment in the capacity of government ministries and agencies to provide services, deliver services to the people, and that is going to be a long road for the country.

They are saddled with tremendous debt that they inherited from the previous administration, and that has made it very, very difficult and constrained some of their freedom of movement on the economic front. The right words are being said. The right plans are being made. The right strategies are being offered. And now the real challenge, quite frankly, Senator, is implementing those plans and strategies to make forward progress.

Senator Flake. Thank you. Ms. Stevenson, we talked about it in my office and you mentioned here again that their hydrocarbon reserves are going to be run out in about 2030. What are they doing? Is there public discussion in the briefings you have received so far about how to bridge that gap? Once they come to it, are they making the efforts they need to to prepare for that eventuality? At what—and what percentage is that of their overall revenue?

Ms. Stevenson. Hydrocarbon industry dominates the economy of Equatorial Guinea. They present a very schizophrenic profile. Without the hydrocarbon industry, the GDP would be dramatically lower. I would say, and obviously if confirmed I will know more, but what I have seen and heard in the briefings I have received is that the government has not taken adequate attention to the fact that these reserves are finite and that they do not have a diversified economy.

The GDP has been shrinking for the past 3 years, which certainly has got their attention. The bureaucratic red tape to establish businesses and to do business in Equatorial Guinea has caused multinationals to leave starting in December of 2015, which certainly should also catch the attention of the Equatoguinean government.

You know, I certainly do not have a panacea, but we would be very willing to work with the government on public policy management and on diversification ideas to develop, for example, tourism. They have got lush resources on the mainland. Their timber industry could be managed more successfully, and to really cramp down on corruption, which is affecting every level of the government and every aspect of society. So, if confirmed, I would like to take advantage of what really is a window now to catch the seriousness of the economic challenge that faces the country.

Senator Flake. Speaking of that, you mentioned logging and forestry there. What is going on now in terms of our efforts to help them prevent illegal logging and the depletion of that resource?

Ms. Stevenson. We are certainly working with them on capacity building, but there is corruption in that area and abuse in that area as well. We are somewhat limited. We cannot provide foreign assistance to the government of Equatorial Guinea. They are both too rich a country in terms of GDP per capita, but also we are constrained—so foreign assistance is limited. But we are also constrained by their Trafficking in Persons ranking, which is Tier 3.

Senator Flake. Thank you.

Senator Booker.

Senator Booker. I am going to defer to Senator Kaine.

Senator Kaine. Thank you to the Chairman and Senator Booker for letting me go first, and congratulations to each of you. I want to echo the comments that Senator Booker made about our chairman. Jeff Flake is a really good friend. We are really going to miss him.

I have people who ask me what I like about this guy, and I say, well, he is a decent, valuesfocused person. But in terms of as a legislator, even though we are in different parties and do not always see eye to eye on policy, I say about this guy that if you can—if you convince him on the merits, he will stick with you regardless of what any poll or leader says. And what more can you ask of a colleague is the opportunity to convince him on the merits and have him stick with you. So, I know we will have more opportunities to talk, but, Senator Flake, we will really miss you.

Let me just put a concern on the record. Sometimes we have these hearings, and something has happened at the State Department that is not really related to you all, but this is our opportunity just to express our concerns. So, I will do that, and I have questions for each of you.

There was a recent decision to remove the subsection on reproductive rights from the Human Rights Report’s section on women, and also a reduction in reporting on issues affecting women and LGBTI individuals, including gender-based violence. This report should be a gold standard, a gold standard human rights report, and it is used, not just by the United States, but by others. Having vigorous reporting upon reproductive rights and fair treatment of women is really important.

Oxfam issued a report noting a reduction in 31 percent on reporting in—on women’s issues in the 2017 report as compared to 2016, and it looks like that is going to be a continued trend. Many do-
Domestic agencies use the information in the Human Rights Report to make determinations on immigration and asylum cases. And many international organizations look to us as the authority on human rights reporting, including the reproductive rights. And then they use their resources—or they use our report to determine how to allocate their resources.

Thirty-one of us sent a letter recently to Secretary Pompeo asking that the reproductive rights section be restored. I am heartened to see that the laws in the countries that you have been nominated to represent have a good track record on reproductive rights issues. There is nobody that cannot improve, including us, but generally, the track records are positive. But there are issues, such as early marriage and access to neonatal and maternal healthcare, that remain in each of your nations. And I hope, even if we are not reporting as vigorously as we have in the past, I just will hope that you will take seriously the importance of advocating for reproductive and all equality rights for women in the societies should you be confirmed.

I would like to ask questions to each of you. So, Ms. Mahoney, loved hearing about your public service children, including a George Mason student. My wife teaches at George Mason. The election—the recent election of the independent candidate, Patrice Talon, in 2016 was determined to be free and fair by international election observers. But he has soon, after taking control or taking power, taken an aim at democratic institutions to some degree. In addition to banning public sector strikes, he has taken steps to curtail freedom of expression, including shutting down media outlets that are critical of him and imposing a tax on internet and social media use. As a U.S. Ambassador, how will you try to promote freedom of expression in Benin?

Ms. Stevenson. Thank you for the opportunity to address this very important question, Senator. As it stands right now, I believe that there is one publication which has been suspended, La Nouvelle Tribune. Right now, its operations have been suspended, and this is a newspaper that I think was characterized by sometimes unfavorable coverage of the administration.

Benin in general has a very vibrant and open press and a very vibrant and open civil society as well. And if confirmed, I will build on what the embassy in Cotonou is already doing to underscore and to stress at—in every engagement and at every opportunity the importance of freedom of expression, and to continue our programs which are most vigorously used through the International Visitors Leadership Program to train and professionalize journalists, especially in the field of investigative journalism. Thank you.

Senator Kaine. Thank you for that. Mr. Paschal, let me ask you this question. Troops from ECOWAS were put into Gambia as a military intervention to counter the previous leader’s effort to hold onto power in 2017. That mission—I think it is now called ECOMIG—remains in The Gambia. What are the pros and cons of the continued presence of these ECOWAS troops in The Gambia, and should we be advocating that they stay for their withdrawal, or is this a situation that you think is in a—is in a good position on its own right now?
Mr. PASCHALL. Yeah, thank you, Senator. ECOWAS was instrumental, as you know, in the transition and ensuring that the votes of the people were honored and respected by former President Jammeh. The introduction of ECOWAS forces was crucial to provide reassurance to the population. There are remaining questions in many Gambians’ minds about the—about the security services based on—based on history. I would be remiss if I did not point out that The Gambia has long contributed troops to the U.N. peacekeeping mission in Darfur. And they have, as far as I have been able to learn, have always performed honorably and admirably in the field. So, there is a core of professionalism there, and as I noted in my opening remarks, those who wear the uniform and serve honorably and serve the people can be a force for good.

The continuance of ECOMIG obviously is a decision that fundamentality rests with the government of The Gambia and the—and the ECOWAS heads of state. I believe, at least insofar as I have read and understand, they provide some stability during the continued transition period. We are just—we are still under 2 years since President Barrow took office, and they generally are viewed as a stabilizing force. They are also taking part in the international efforts to provide some security sector reform support to The Gambia. So, at present, I think, on that theory, they continue to be a positive—a positive presence.

Senator KAINE. Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Paschall. And finally to Ms. Stevenson, you dealt with this a little bit in your prepared testimony, your opening comments. But obviously, there are significant issues of democracy and institutions and respect for those institutions. In Equatorial Guinea, the government has shown a real interested in engaging in dialogue with political opposition, significant human rights abuses, security forces using excessive violence, deadly force and imposition of external exile on political opposition members, fairly brutal prison conditions, harsh restrictions on civil society and civil liberties, widespread corruption, violence against women with impunity, restrictions on freedom of expression and freedom of the press, and a litany of other concerns. Should you be confirmed, how will you try to use the power of the position to engage with civil society elements in Equatorial Guinea to strengthen them?

Ms. STEVENSON. Thank you, Senator. As you point out, it is going to be a challenging environment. I know that my predecessor is working very vigorously in engaging with civil society, and if confirmed, I would want to continue this. I would also want to show the government of Equatorial Guinea that it is in their own interest to have more representation to cultivate civil society because the lack of enfranchisement actually affects their stability.

They have been worried about the threat of coups. They have been—as recently as December 2017, arrested over 40 people for plotting a coup, and that shows that although the tenure of President Obiang has been quite long, it has not been smooth. And hopefully with this window of opportunity as the hydrocarbon industry is no longer the gravy train for the country, they will be able to reassess and choose what is right for their people. And if confirmed, I will work very dedicatedly on helping the government of Equatorial Guinea see that there are other choices and that opening up will actually help them, not harm them.

Senator Kaine. Thank you. Thanks, Mr. Chair. Thanks to Senator Booker.

Senator Booker. Ms. Stevenson, your son’s name is Hugh?

Ms. Stevenson. Hugo.

Senator Booker. Hugo. It is a little unorthodox, Hugo, but would you stand up for a second? Oh my God, sit down. [Laughter.]

Senator Booker. I had some——

Ms. Stevenson. You have made his day.

Senator Booker. I had some really, really tough questions for you. But now that I see you have Hugo, who has a very intimidating stature and size, I am going to hold back a little bit. It is good that you brought him, sat him in the front row. I am a big guy, but I would have a tough time. But what you said is really right. This is a post that often affects families very deeply. And Hugo obviously has had a privilege of being overseas, but it is also a sacrifice as well. And for all of you, I am grateful for that. Senator Kaine, who just left, you know, has to travel all the way from Virginia to get to D.C. It is real tough on him. But your family really does show that, and I just want to say thank you again.

And so, Ms. Stevenson, it is a tough balance. Literally, we were having a conversation, some of my colleagues today, about Bahrain, about this balance between human rights issues and strategic interests or economic interests. And finding that right balance for a country leading with our values is very difficult.

And so, I was wondering, in Equatorial Guinea you mentioned that—and rightfully so—the United States has an interest in supporting American firms involved in the oil and gas sector. At the same time, the Obiang administration has an abysmal human rights record. It has been accused of large-scale corruption, nepotism, and since the oil wealth of the 1990s, you have seen a lot of that bad behavior grow far more egregious. So, can you just give me some philosophical understanding and help really inform me about how you balance those interests that are in conflict? We have to admit that there is a conflict between those interests, and maybe you can give me an example of how we navigate that.

Ms. Stevenson. I appreciate the question because obviously this is a big priority for the United States, but it is an environment that will be very difficult. As you have seen this year, Equatorial Guinea is a non-permanent member of the U.N. Security Council. They are on the world stage. The president had interventions during the U.N. General Assembly in September. This is important them, the international status. Being able to attract international investment is important to them. They had just announced pledges by U.S. companies to look at investing a further $2.4 billion in hydrocarbon industry.

The fact that doing business in Equatorial Guinea is so difficult the fact that there are human rights abuses that my predecessor, who is still in place, has spoken out very vigorously against, these are stains on the record of the government. As long as the oil is flowing, there is perhaps a perceived less urgency to address these issues. I am hoping, if confirmed, that I will be able to use what is clearly a desire for international recognition to—as a lever to push the government to have—actually enforce some of the laws that they have on the books and to be able to have real elections, which their new constitution in 2011 does call for.

Now, according to that constitution, the president could actually, theoretically, stand again, but, he has said that he does not want to stand again, so, there could be a window of opportunity. On a bright spot, we talked earlier about the importance of reproductive health and LGBT issues. The government of Equatorial Guinea has been—has had a fairly good record on LGBT issues, or at least has it on the books, issue same sex visas, has been—we have, as the U.S. Embassy, been able to program on those issues, and so we are—and we are—continue to be able to engage with civil society.

It is not all terrible, but I am going to continue pushing this rock uphill as my predecessors have done for a long time before me. But I am hoping that this window of the need, the urgency to reform the business community, diversify the economy, and attract more investment and engagement in the other areas will give us that window to push forward. It has happened before in other countries, and hopefully we will be able to make progress here.

Senator Booker. Well, that is very helpful. Mr. Paschall, The Gambia has recently launched the Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission, which I find very interesting. They are going to examine a lot of the disappearances that have happened, killings, and other very troubling human rights issues. And I wonder what are your ideas, because, the commission also faces a lot of challenges, and I am just not sure how successful they will be, as we have seen in other models in the continent. And how will it balance the need for justice for victims with a lot of the resentment you find from Jammeh supporters? And so, what, in your opinion, are the realistic outcomes that we should expect from the commission?

Mr. Paschall. Thank you, Senator Booker. The TRC, they just swore in the commissioners last month. I think what is impressive, at least people who are expert in the field of transitional justice have told me, that the law that The Gambian legislature passed is a really good, strong law. It is well founded. Unfortunately, as you know, we have a lot of precedence for these types of efforts, and so, there are a lot of lessons learned.

But it appears that, frankly, they have incorporated a lot of those lessons learned, at least in legislature framework, that is going to guide their efforts. They did—they have been working very hard to ensure that there is a lot of awareness, The commissioners have hit the ground running. They were sworn in, I believe, it was the 15th of October. They have already made a number of requests of the government, in particular, to provide assistance to the victims who suffered physical harm and some of those abuses.

What can we expect at the end? That is a great question, and I think what is most important for us right now is to ensure that we are providing the support that we can provide to the operation of TRC and the active participation of The Gambian people themselves, the civil society in particular, to ensure that that process remains transparent, that it remains consistent with the very high goals that have been set, and that what comes out of it is meaningful and does help move the country forward while accounting for the many allegations and very well-documented cases of abuse that occurred previously.

Senator Booker. Thank you very much. And very quickly with the indulgence of the chairman, this is interesting. In Benin almost 65 percent of the population is under the age of 25. The youth bulge is just something we have seen throughout Africa as well as the Middle East. And Benin’s total fertility has been falling over time, but still remains high. And declining from almost seven children per woman in the 90s to now, I guess, it is 4.8. And so, Benin’s low contraceptive use and high unmet need for contracep-tion contribute to what is still considered a very high fertility rate.

And just really quickly, what steps can the U.S. take or what foreign assistance programming could really target this large population in general, and how would you engage with the country’s authorities to encourage policy changes to address the challenges and opportunities associated with the youth bulge?

Ms. Stevenson. Thank you for the question, Senator. As you point out, economic development in Benin has not kept pace with the growth of the population. And there is this demographic bulge of very young people who will be in need of jobs and are in need of jobs right now. And I believe that President Talon is very acutely aware of the need to diversify the economy and to attract and unlock private investment as an engine to drive the economy so that it will be able to create jobs for this youth bulge and for these—this member—members of the demographic bulge.

So, if confirmed, I would work to support the government’s efforts to attract private investment and to diversify the economy, which is largely based on subsistence agriculture right now. And one of the programs that is under way aimed at doing that is our Millennium Challenge Corporation Compact, which is designed to remove one of the main constraints to more rapid economic growth, and to improve the reliability and the capacity of the power sector, and also to provide a regulatory framework to attract private investment, independent private power operators. So, that is one example of an area where we as the U.S. Government are working to support the government and the people of Benin to promote economic development and to help the government and the people in their efforts to diversify the economy.

Senator Booker. Thank you very much. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Flake. Thank you all. Thank you all for your preparation for this hearing, and thank the families as well for the sacifice that you have made and will continue to make for this service. And I thank—the hearing record will remain open until the close of business tomorrow, including for members to submit questions for the record, and we would ask the witnesses to respond as promptly as possible. Your responses will be made as part of the record.

But before I close, I will take the personal privilege to recognize my staffer here. Colleen Donnelly has been with me for over 10 years in the House and the Senate. This is likely the last hearing that she has prepared me for, and I just want to—her to know how much I appreciate her fine service to me, and to the committee, and to the Senate. And she will be missed around here. I have a feeling that she will be doing more of this for other members that are probably easier to work for, but I appreciate that. And thank you, all of you, for being here.

Senator Booker. Mr. Chairman, can I take a moment of personal privilege? The hearing is officially almost over, and I just think I would like to memorialize your last hearing with a selfie with them in the background. [Laughter.]

Senator Booker. I want to get the Ambassador nominees in there. [Photo.]

Senator Flake. All right. Nothing is finished. I know there is a Booker selfie. [Laughter.]

Senator Flake. That is wonderful. Thank you. Thanks to the committee. The hearing stands adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 3:52 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO PATRICIA MAHONEY BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. In your view, is Talon’s appointment of Djogbenou a signal of a broader strategy to centralize power by putting allies in key judicial posts? What specific steps will you take if confirmed to monitor undue consolidation of power in the executive and prevent democratic backsliding?

Answer. I take seriously concerns expressed by Benin’s National Union of Magistrates (UNAMAB), among others, regarding the degradation of the independence of the judiciary as a result of recent changes in the judicial sector. I recognize the importance of ensuring that our partnership continues to thrive on shared democratic values to prevent backsliding. If confirmed, I will deploy available resources to engage the Government of Benin on the importance of maintaining Benin’s commitment to the key principles of democracy and the rule of law, including the maintenance of a well-functioning, independent, and fair judiciary.

Question 2. Talon’s Government has also drawn criticism for what critics view as efforts to curtail free expression. The High Authority for Broadcasting and Communication has shut down several media outlets during his tenure, including a television station owned by his leading rival and an opposition newspaper. The state broadcaster has reportedly ceased its coverage of the opposition:

• In August 2018, Talon imposed via executive decree a tax on internet and social media use, an action criticized by domestic civil society. Do these actions in your view represent closing media space? What will you do if confirmed to ensure that the Government respects media freedoms?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Embassy Cotonou to engage with the Beninese on press freedom and support for a more open media space. While Benin has a long-held tradition of upholding freedom of expression, last year the Government temporarily suspended several opposition media outlets. Most have since reopened but at least one opposition media outlet remains suspended indefinitely. Several journalists have reported government pressure for positive coverage, while others admit to self-censorship.

The Government of Benin increased taxes on certain types of internet usage in 2018, but these taxes were quickly annulled in response to significant public opposition. Embassy Cotonou, at all levels, continually engages our Beninese partners on the importance of press freedom for maintaining a healthy democracy, and I pledge to continue to address this issue if confirmed. In addition, we will continue to use all the tools available to us to work with Beninese media on programs addressing media literacy, investigative journalism, and professionalism.

Question 3. Benin was upgraded to Tier 2 in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report. What assistance are we providing to the Government of Benin to enact legislation to criminalize all forms of trafficking consistent with the 2000 U.N. TIP Protocol? Are we engaged in programs or activities to help law enforcement increase efforts to investigate, prosecute, convict, and adequately sentence trafficking offenders, or train law enforcement officials on identification and referral procedures?

• Does the Government have the resources to increase funding to the Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM) to provide adequate support to victims? What actions will you take if confirmed to help the Government of Benin improve its efforts to combat trafficking?

Answer. Embassy Cotonou assists the Government of Benin in its anti-trafficking efforts by engaging with all levels to increase awareness and to spur action to counter trafficking. One example of United States’ Government assistance was our support for Benin’s organization of a national anti-Trafficking in Persons (TIP) workshop in 2017. Benin has demonstrated significant efforts to combat TIP and was upgraded from Tier 2 Watch List to Tier 2 in the 2018 TIP Report. Successful efforts by the Government include increased prosecutions and convictions of child traffickers; more child trafficking victims identified; establishment of formal procedures for identification and referral of children vulnerable to abuse, including trafficking; introduction of screening procedures at airports to identify adult victims traveling abroad; and increased collaboration with neighboring countries to prevent transnational trafficking of adults resulting in the identification of 16 potential trafficking victims. Benin also established an inter-ministerial committee to coordinate national anti-trafficking efforts, which developed a national action plan to address all types of trafficking in persons, including adults, in collaboration with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and international organizations.

Benin must enact legislation to criminalize all forms of trafficking, including trafficking of adults, consistent with the Palermo Protocol, and implement the 2018–2021 national action plan. The Government of Benin should increase efforts to investigate, prosecute, convict, and adequately sentence offenders of sex and labor trafficking of adults and children and train law enforcement officials on identification and referral procedures. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Benin to increase its success in countering all forms of human trafficking.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my Foreign Service career I have worked to advance United States policy to support and promote democracy and human rights. I regard that work as not only essential to my mission as a diplomat representing values of the United States but also among the most personally rewarding aspects of my career. With the exception of some successes in the cases of specific dissidents, human rights activists, and refugees, the impact of my individual efforts is difficult to identify immediately or as exclusively the result of my intervention. Instead, I believe that the impact of my efforts has generally been incremental (as in a counterpart government’s long-term efforts to institutionalize accountability mechanisms for its military) or part of a broader team effort (as when our Embassy, the Department of State, other U.S. agencies, members of Congress, and civil society advocated against the Anti-Homosexuality Act in Uganda). If confirmed, I commit to continue promoting and supporting democracy and human rights in the Republic of Benin.

Question 5. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Benin? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. One of the most pressing challenges facing Benin’s democratic development is the need to increase transparency in governance and develop more accountable and responsive institutions. Helping Benin accomplish this is one of Embassy Cotonou’s top mission goals. Major obstacles to this goal include: unemployment and poverty; a population dissatisfied with the provision of public services; corruption among the ranks of government officials; limited issues-focused debate in the political arena; and undue limitations to freedom of expression.

Question 6. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Benin? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will collaborate with the Government of Benin, political parties, civil society, other diplomatic missions, and other stakeholders to promote political reforms, enhance democratic institutions and broaden political space, and strengthen electoral institutions. I will utilize all diplomatic tools available to advance our policy goals of promoting democracy and governance, improving well-being and economic prospects of Benin’s growing population; and strengthening regional security.

I will, if confirmed, continue our diplomatic engagement to impress upon the Government of Benin that improving governance will increase the confidence Beninese citizens have in their leaders and institutions. We will demonstrate our strong support for good governance and strong democratic institutions through our public dip-loamy and International Narcotics and Law Enforcement programming, as well as our flagship health and energy development programs, through USAID and MCC, respectively.

Question 7. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Embassy Cotonou deploys multiple assistance programs to help support democracy and governance in Benin. I will work, if confirmed, with the Government to strengthen Benin’s democracy with these programs, which include public diplomacym activities that support Beninese civil society organizations and media and pro-press a free and independent media. We also support programming on police accountability and law enforcement coordination following the integration of the gen-darmerie into the national police to help reinforce civilian policing in the domestic security domain as well as training and equipment for police in rural border areas help officers better serve citizens by responding to needs and maintaining security.

USG health programs strengthen citizen engagement with government in identifying priority services and ensuring accountability of the public sector. In addition, we work with civil society and the Government to advance the country’s potential membership to the Open Government Partnership, which reinforces good governance by establishing standards for transparency and accountability. If confirmed, I will work closely with our various Embassy sections and agencies to explore ways that my position can help advance the objectives of our programs in Benin, and ways to target our assistance to encourage important reforms that will lead to a more transparent and accountable government.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Benin? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Benin. While Benin’s record on human rights is generally positive, I will be ready to use the diplomatic tools at my disposal to encour-gage further improvements and address issues that arise during my tenure.

Question 9. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented poitical opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties. A democratically oriented political opposition is a healthy part of any democracy, and it is important that the embassy hear from many sides of the political spectrum. I will continue Embassy Cotonou’s efforts to advocate for access and inclusivity for women, members of minority groups, and youth within Benin’s political parties.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Benin on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Benin?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Embassy Cotonou to engage actively with Benin on press freedom, and address government efforts to control or undermine the press. I will commit to meet regularly with the independent local press in Benin, if confirmed.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, Embassy Cotonou and I will continue our engagement with civil society and government to counter disinformation and malign propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Benin.
Question 12. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Benin on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If I am confirmed, my leadership team and I will actively engage with Beninese interlocutors on labor rights, including with respect to freedom of association and the strengthening of independent trade unions. I will work with the Government of Benin, worker organizations, unions and other members of civil society to promote the protection of internationally recognized labor rights by the Government. In light of recent strikes among the public sector workers and efforts to enact legislation limiting the right to strike, it is more important now than ever that we engage the Government of Benin on these rights.

Question 13. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Benin, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Benin? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Benin?

Answer. I commit, if confirmed, to defending the human rights of all individuals in Benin, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity. There are no laws explicitly criminalizing same-sex activity in Benin, and no reports of criminal or civil cases involving consensual same sex sexual conduct but there is a negative stigma against the LGBTI community, and LGBTI community members report discrimination and social stigma based on sexual orientation.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO PATRICIA MAHONEY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my Foreign Service career, I have worked to advance United States policy to support and promote democracy and human rights. I regard that work as not only essential to my mission as a diplomat representing the values of the United States but also among the most personally rewarding aspects of my career. With the exception of some key successes in the cases of specific dissidents, human rights activists, and refugees, the impact of my individual efforts is difficult to identify immediately or as exclusively the result of my intervention. Instead, I believe that the impact of my efforts has generally been incremental (as in a counterpart government’s long-term efforts to institutionalize accountability mechanisms for its military) or part of a broader team effort (as when our Embassy, the Department of State, other U.S. agencies, Members of Congress, and civil society advocated against the Anti-Homosexuality Act in Uganda). If confirmed, I commit to continue promoting and supporting democracy and human rights in the Republic of Benin.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Benin? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Benin? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The Government of Benin generally respects human rights. There are some significant human rights issues such as reported incidents of torture, which were punished by the authorities; arbitrary arrest and detention; harsh and life threatening prison conditions; and violations of freedom of expression against members of the press. There are also pressing concerns in Benin that need to be addressed, including trafficking in persons; abuse and discrimination against women and children; vigilante violence; lack of accountability in cases involving rape and violence against women due to inadequate enforcement and police training; female genital mutilation; and child labor.

Benin has a long-held tradition of upholding freedom of expression; however, last year the Government temporarily suspended several opposition media outlets. While most have since re-opened, at least one opposition media outlet remains suspended indefinitely. Some journalists report pressure by the Government for positive coverage, while others admit to self-censorship. If confirmed, I will deploy all of our resources to work with the Government of Benin to promote human rights and democracy in Benin. Benin is a strong example of peace, stability and tolerance in the region. I will do my best to make sure our partnership continues to thrive on shared democratic values.
Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Benin in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Helping Benin address these human rights issues is one of Embassy Cotonou’s top mission goals. Obstacles to achieving this include unemployment and poverty, an inefficient public sector, rising cross-border crime, endemic corruption among the ranks of government officials, and possible challenges to freedom of expression. If confirmed, I will focus my efforts on helping Benin overcome these obstacles and serve as a positive influence in West Africa for democratic governance, respect for human rights, and an active and engaged civil society.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Benin? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Embassy Cotonou to engage actively with human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Benin.

The United States has a solid security sector partnership with Benin based on shared goals of regional peace and security, and we maintain a good relationship with the Beninese military and police. We have worked together in critical areas such as maritime security and peacekeeping. Our security assistance to the Benin is designed to develop the professionalism of its ranks. Consistent with U.S. law and Department policy, all military or security force participants in U.S. Government-funded training programs undergo a Leahy vetting process to ensure there is no credible information implicating the participants or their units in the commission of gross violations of human rights (GVHRs). Security force units or members that are credibly implicated in GVHRs are not eligible to receive U.S. training or assistance. This process also reinforces our message that human rights violations by security forces will not be tolerated. If confirmed, I will actively support our Embassy in gathering information to contribute to important reports such as the Human Rights Report and Trafficking in Persons Report to highlight areas of weakness and opportunities for further cooperation between the United States and Benin, and will encourage Benin to move forward with the creation of an independent national human rights commission.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Benin to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Benin?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the work Embassy Cotonou already engages in on this issue. I will call on the Government of Benin to uphold human rights, including freedoms of expression and peaceful assembly, as well as internet freedom. We will work to ensure that individuals arrested on criminal charges are afforded fair trial guarantees.

Question 6. Will you engage with Benin on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. I will engage with the Government of Benin, local civil society, and other stakeholders on matters of human rights, including civil rights and governance, if confirmed. Working with the Embassy and our counterparts in the Government of Benin, we will continue to work to promote political reforms, enhance democratic institutions, broaden political space, and strengthen electoral institutions.

I will engage with the Government of Benin on improving governance, and emphasize that improved governance will increase the confidence of Beninese citizens in their leaders and institutions. We will demonstrate our strong support for good governance and strong democratic institutions through our public diplomacy and programming from the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL), as well as through our flagship health (United States Agency for International Development) and energy (Millennium Challenge Corporation) development programs.

Question 7. Benin is ranked Tier 2 in the State Department’s 2018 Trafficking in Persons (TIP) report. Where has Benin been most successful in countering TIP, and why hasn’t it fully implemented State Department TIP recommendations?

Answer. The U.S. Government and Embassy Cotonou assist the Government of Benin in its anti-trafficking efforts by engaging at all levels with Benin’s Government to increase awareness of trafficking and to spur action to counter trafficking. One example of United States’ Government assistance was our support for Benin’s organization of a national anti-TIP workshop in 2017. We are exploring other ways to support Benin’s anti-trafficking efforts.

The Government of Benin has demonstrated significant efforts to combat Trafficking in Persons (TIP) and as a result was upgraded from Tier 2 Watch List to Tier 2 in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report. Successful efforts by the Government include increased prosecutions and convictions of child traffickers during the reporting period for the 2018 TIP report; the identification of more child trafficking victims; establishment of formal procedures for identification and referral of children vulnerable to abuse, including trafficking; introduction of screening procedures at airports to identify adult victims traveling abroad; and increased collaboration with neighboring countries to prevent transnational trafficking of adults, resulting in the identification of 16 potential trafficking victims. The Government of Benin also established an inter-ministerial committee to coordinate national anti-trafficking efforts, which developed a national action plan to address all types of trafficking in persons, including adults, in collaboration with NGOs and international organization. Benin must enact legislation to criminalize all forms of trafficking, including trafficking of adults, consistent with the Palermo Protocol and implement the 2018–2021 national action plan. The Government of Benin should increase efforts to investigate, prosecute, convict, and adequately sentence offenders of sex and labor trafficking of adults and children and train law enforcement officials on identification and referral procedures.

Question 8. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Benin?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes funds that may have investments in companies in Benin; however, these funds are exempt from the conflicts of interest rules and have been reviewed by the State Department Ethics Office. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest.
I will divest my interests in any investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary in the future to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 11. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Servcice?

Answer. Throughout my career I have benefited from the mentorship of my supervisors and have regarded mentoring employees to be among the most important and gratifying responsibilities of leadership. I have also experienced firsthand the benefits of collaborating in a diverse and inclusive workplace. If confirmed, I will continue to mentor staff from all backgrounds, establish open lines of communication, and do my utmost to ensure that each receives the training, acquires the expertise, and is afforded the opportunity needed to advance in the Foreign Service.

Question 12. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Building upon the existing Equal Employment Opportunity program at the Embassy, I will, if confirmed, ensure regular training, engagement, and interaction on this topic. I will make clear at the outset that I expect supervisors to foster an environment that is diverse and inclusive, and I will model that behavior myself.

Question 13. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law, and in Benin specifically?

Answer. Corruption among the ranks of government officials is an obstacle to democratic governance and the rule of law in Benin. President Patrice Talon has described endemic corruption as one of the country’s biggest problems, and has made it a key part of his administration’s development agenda. If confirmed, I will work together with our team at Embassy Cotonou to continue ongoing efforts to impress upon the Beninese Government that anti-corruption measures must dem-strate that no person or group of people is above the law.

Question 14. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Benin and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Benin?

Answer. President Talon developed an agenda that includes reforms to the political system and a strategy to fight corruption. The Government of Benin has made some progress, but more work remains. The Government recently pursued several high profile cases of public sector corruption and imposed administrative punishment or dismissals on civil servants found to have engaged in corruption. Other measures to uproot corruption include the modification of rules regarding the procurement and use of official vehicles; the consolidation of government travel arrangements under a single provider; professionalization reforms and training to improve the conduct of police officers, such as the cessation of a previous practice of roadblocks along major thoroughfares to stop and “inspect” vehicles for bribes; and the trial and sentencing of five major pharmaceutical wholesalers for participating in the proliferation of counterfeit medications. Some of these anti-corruption efforts have been recently implemented, so in due time it will become evident the degree to which these efforts are reinforcing norms of fairness across the political spectrum.

Question 15. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Benin?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with Embassy Cotonou and the Government of Benin in support of their anticorruption efforts. For example, we are working with civil society and the Government to advance the country’s potential membership to the Open Government Partnership, which reinforces good governance by establishing standards for transparency and accountability. I will actively engage local civil society partners and explore ways to help advance important reforms at both the national and local levels that will lead to a more transparent and accountable government.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO PATRICIA MAHONEY BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Constitutional Reform

Question 1. President Talon recently decided to put his constitutional reform project on hold, arguing that the organization of a vote would cost too much and was not a priority. The reforms included the improvement of women’s representation in parliament, the abolition of the death penalty, the establishment of a court of auditors and, most importantly and controversially, the consolidation of all elections:

• What is your evaluation of this decision to not move forward with these constitutional reforms and to what degree should the U.S. engage on these issues?

Answer. President Talon campaigned on a reformist platform prior to taking office in 2016. While some Beninese may have found his constitutional reform project a fulfillment of a campaign promise, others have indicated they believe his reforms are moving too quickly. Other criticisms of the Talon administration’s constitutional amendment proposals are based upon reforms being achieved through changes to legislation instead, where there is no need to make so many changes to the constitution. Following the failure of the amendment proposals, the Talon administration has moved forward with some of the proposed reforms through legislation.

If confirmed, I will address the need for reform in those areas that affect good governance. I will also engage the Government of Benin and its people in areas like increasing women’s participation in politics.

Renewable Energy

Question 2. In 2017 the Millennium Challenge Corporation signed a $375 million compact with Benin that aims to develop Benin’s power sector through investments in energy generation and distribution and off-grid electrification, including renewable energy projects:

• Could you describe the degree to which renewable projects are prioritized over those that rely on fossil fuels as part of the compact?
The $375 million Benin MCC Power Compact prioritizes renewable sources of power generation over fossil fuels. The compact will support the construction of 45 Mega Watts (MW) of solar photovoltaic generation through a bankable independent power project (IPP) transaction, as well as off-grid electrification projects (mainly solar) through the Off-Grid Clean Energy Facility (www.ocef.bj)—the largest of its kind supported by the United States Government in a single country.

The compact is also making major investments in Benin’s electricity distribution system that will reduce technical losses, and include support for energy efficiency measures. Both of these activities will assist in lowering costs while reducing the consumption of fossil fuel sources of electricity, which currently account for most of the power consumed in Benin.

Candidate Fees

Question 3. The Benin parliament recently passed legislation that would increase the fee for registering a Presidential candidate or for submitting a party list for parliamentary elections to over $400,000. The law has been overwhelmingly condemned by political parties, civil society groups and the public, who accuse the president of formulating laws to favor the rich and privileged:

- What is your opinion of this move and should the U.S. engage on this issue?

Answer. Of the various amendments to the Electoral Code passed by Benin’s parliament on September 3, the most controversial was the amendment increasing several fees: the fee for presidential candidates increased from $27,000 to $447,000; and the fee for parliamentary elections increased from $175 per candidate to $429,000 for a party list of 83 names. Benin has long been a model of multi-party democracy in West Africa, with six consecutive free and fair presidential elections, and peaceful transfers of power, since 1991. If confirmed, I will work to engage with the Government of Benin on any challenges to that democracy, using all the tools in our diplomacy toolkit.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Richard Carlton Paschall III by Senator Robert Menendez

Question 1. Gambia was selected for an MCC Threshold Program in 2017, which is now under development with implementation slated to begin in mid-2019. What other assistance has the U.S. provided since President Adama Barrow? How much of that assistance has been specifically aimed at democracy and governance? Has any of the assistance been aimed at helping build democratic institutions and improve governance in Gambia? What will you do, if confirmed, to help the Barrow administration build democratic institutions and foster political participation in Gambia?

Answer. With The Gambia’s change to democracy, the United States has embarked on a number of programs, through the State Department and other U.S. Government agencies, to bolster capacity in financial management and financial crimes investigations, strengthen civil society, advance security sector reform, and improve health care. The Millennium Challenge Corporation is working with the Government of The Gambia to identify projects in a Threshold Program to remove constraints to economic growth and better integration into regional infrastructure and market activities. In addition, we have programs in the pipeline to improve agricultural productivity, bolster fiscal transparency, and support electoral and legislative reforms.

Question 2. In late 2017, Gambia regained eligibility under the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA). How has the country taken advantage of AGOA? What steps will you take as Ambassador to help, if confirmed?

Answer. In January 2018, the United States restored AGOA trade benefits to The Gambia due to progress in strengthening the rule of law, improving respect for human rights, and supporting political pluralism. If confirmed, I will encourage the Gambian Government to continue demonstrating progress on the full range of AGOA eligibility criteria, and as noted in my statement, I will work to help Gambian businesses take advantage of AGOA.

Question 3. The 2018 Trafficking in Person’s Report lists Gambia as Tier 2 Watch List. What programs and activities are we undertaking to help Gambia improve its ranking? What steps will you take to advocate for an improved approach to trafficking by the Barrow administration.
Answer. The Department of State’s 2018 Trafficking in Persons report placed The Gambia on the Tier 2 Watch List for the second consecutive year. The Government demonstrated significant efforts during the reporting period for the 2018 TIP Report by identifying and providing services to an increased number of potential trafficking victims, assisting with repatriation of Gambian child trafficking victims exploited abroad, and continuing efforts to prevent forced child begging in Quranic schools. However, the Government did not initiate any trafficking investigations, complete any trafficking prosecutions, or adequately fund The Gambia’s National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons, which severely impeded the Government’s ability to investigate reports of human trafficking. If confirmed, I will partner closely with The Gambia’s National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons and engage with stakeholders throughout the country to highlight the problem. I also commit to working closely with colleagues at State and in other U.S. Government agencies to work with The Gambia to increase its capacity to prevent trafficking crimes, protect victims, investigate and prosecute trafficking offenses and convict and hold trafficking offenders accountable.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Fundamental American values that I have sought to project and promote abroad include respect for human rights and the dignity of individuals, and the importance of democratic principles and accountability of a government to those it governs. I have sought to engage with people in every position I have held to advance these concepts—whether democracy and human rights promotion was formally included in my job duties or not—from my earliest tour in Saudi Arabia through my most recent in the Bureau of Counterterrorism and Countering Violent Extremism. Fundamentally, it starts with how you interact with your colleagues. Treating co-workers—whether American or Foreign National—with dignity and respect is the first foundational aspect of how we promote such treatment among other people, between nations, or between a foreign government and those it governs.

Question 5. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in the Gambia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Under the current Barrow administration, some concerns remain with undue intermittent restrictions on press freedom, freedom of association, and the right of peaceful assembly. The Department of State 2017 Human Rights Report indicates harsh and potentially life-threatening prison conditions, arbitrary arrests, lack of accountability in cases involving violence against women, including rape and female genital mutilation/cutting; trafficking in persons; and child labor as the most significant human rights problems in The Gambia. The Gambia recognizes these challenges but struggles with deeply rooted cultural norms and lack of resources to adequately address the problems. If confirmed, my priorities will include continuing to work with the Government of The Gambia and civil society organizations to develop strong government institutions, and promote inclusive, effective, and participatory governance.

Question 6. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in the Gambia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The Gambia’s democratic development continues to have numerous challenges as it remains in the early stages of a transition from decades of authoritarian rule. The challenges include, but are not limited to, promoting greater adherence to the constitution and democratic values including strengthened rule of law and sound policy making, countering deeply entrenched mismanagement and corruption at all levels of government, and advancing security sector reform.

Question 7. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to ensure our assistance programs prioritize those efforts that will prove the most beneficial in the long term to strengthening democracy, justice, and good governance, while seeking to maximize cost efficiencies and avoid duplication with other U.S. Government or international donor efforts. If confirmed, our assistance will prioritize those efforts that will prove the most beneficial in the long term to strengthening democracy, justice, and governance programs, while seeking to maximize cost efficiencies and avoid duplication with other U.S. Government or international donor efforts.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in the Gambia? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with members of civil society, human rights and other NGOs, whether in The Gambia or in the United States. I will also pro-actively engage the Government of The Gambia to address any situation in which NGOs or other civil society organizations are unduly restricted or penalized by the authorities. If confirmed, I will continue to prioritize the protection and defense of civil society, including all human rights defenders.

Question 9. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, my priorities will include regular meetings with all democratically oriented political actors. I will use all tools at my disposal to encourage the creation and maintenance of an inclusive and transparent political system, dedicated to democracy, and accessible to women and members of minority groups. If confirmed, I will ensure that the U.S. Mission to The Gambia continues to make efforts to include women, girls, individuals from ethnic and religious minority groups, young people, and other underrepresented groups in our programming efforts. I will also prioritize women’s and girls’ access to and participation in the education, justice, health care, and economic sectors.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Gambia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in The Gambia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to support all efforts to advance press freedom. I will meet with independent media and local press as part of our Embassy’s efforts to reinforce a free and open media environment in The Gambia.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to ensuring the embassy remains actively engaged with government counterparts and members of civil society to counter any disinformation or malign propaganda disseminated by any foreign or non-state actors. Given how damaging disinformation campaigns can be, we will remain vigilant should any such methods of propaganda emerge in The Gambia.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with the Gambia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue engagement with the Gambian labor movement, independent trade unions, and other non-governmental organizations dedicated to defending labor rights under the law.

Question 13. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the Gambia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in the Gambia? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in the Gambia?

Answer. The Gambia is a tolerant, multi-ethnic, multi-religious society. If confirmed, I will use my office to highlight the strengths of diversity and acceptance of all individuals for who they are. The United States is rightfully proud of the strides we have made, and continue to make, in living up to our founding principle that everyone is equal under the eyes of the law. I believe that if confirmed, I can use the persuasive power of the Embassy to help Gambians begin to address this important issue.
Question 1. How can we support these new institutions in the Gambia such as the Commission as it pursues this work?

Answer. The leaders and employees at government ministries in The Gambia have my utmost respect as they have shown the will to move their country forward on a clear democratic path. The United States is working hand-in-hand with our Gambian partners to improve capacity by supporting the work of the Truth, Reconciliation, and Reparations Commission (TRRC) to ensure civilian and NGO engagement with the Commission is bolstered. Likewise, we support capacity training in numerous ministries and provide advisers on security sector reform and government financial planning. Additionally, U.S. Government exchange programs broaden Gambian leaders exposure to our democratic institutions which will help inform their work when they assume leadership roles within government. If confirmed, I will work to ensure capacity building programs for government and civil society continue.

Question 2. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Fundamental American values that I have sought to project and promote abroad include respect for human rights and the dignity of individuals, and the importance of democratic principles and accountability of a government to those it governs. I have sought to engage with people in every position I have held to advance these concepts—whether democracy and human rights promotion was formally included in my job duties or not—from my earliest tour in Saudi Arabia through my most recent in the Bureau of Counterterrorism and Countering Violent Extremism. Fundamentally, it starts with how you interact with your colleagues. Treating co-workers—whether U.S. or Foreign National—with dignity and respect is the first foundational aspect of how we promote such treatment among other people, between nations, or between a foreign government and those it governs.

Question 3. What are the most pressing human rights issues in the Gambia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in the Gambia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Under the current Barrow Government, some concerns remain with intermittent undue restrictions on press freedom, freedom of association, and the right of peaceful assembly. The Department of State 2017 Human Rights Report indicates harsh and potentially life-threatening prison conditions, arbitrary arrests, lack of accountability in cases involving violence against women, including rape and female genital mutilation/cutting; trafficking in persons and child labor as the most significant human rights problems in The Gambia. The Gambia recognizes these challenges but struggles with deeply rooted cultural norms and lack of resources to address the problems adequately. If confirmed, my priorities will include continuing to work with the Government of The Gambia and civil society organizations to develop strong government institutions, and promote inclusive, effective, and participatory governance.

Question 4. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in the Gambia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. The Gambia’s democratic development continues to have numerous challenges as it remains in the early stages of a transition from decades of authoritarian rule. The challenges include, but are not limited to, promoting greater adherence to its constitution and democratic values including strengthening the rule of law and sound policy making, countering deeply entrenched mismanagement and corruption at all levels of government, and advancing security sector reform.

Question 5. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in the Gambia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage with members of civil society, human rights and other NGOs, whether in The Gambia or in the United States. A core component of any nation’s security services is to protect and serve the people—the individuals—in any country. This is no different in The Gambia, where recent memory of abuses by security services remain fresh and raw. It is imperative that we engage, in partnership with others, to ensure that compliance with international humanitarian law and international human rights law are foundational aspects of the training and performance expectations of Gambian security forces.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Gambia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Gambia?

Answer. One of the first actions undertaken by President Barrow following his assumption of office was to free prisoners of conscience detained under his predecessor's administration. If confirmed, my country team and I will continue to engage with the Government of The Gambia to ensure that such violations do not happen again and that ensure that accountability for past acts is achieved through The Gambia's Truth, Reconciliation, and Reparations Commission.

Question 7. Will you engage with the Gambia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, reinforcing the fundamental concepts of respect for human rights, dignity of the individual, and good governance are core U.S. Government objectives in The Gambia and will remain so in the foreseeable future. If confirmed, I will continue this longstanding U.S. Government policy approach.

Question 8. Where has the Gambia been most successful in countering TIP, and why hasn’t it fully implemented State Department TIP recommendations?

Answer. The Department of State’s 2018 Trafficking in Persons report placed The Gambia on the Tier 2 Watch List for the second consecutive year. The Government demonstrated significant efforts during the reporting period for the 2018 TIP Report by identifying and providing services to an increased number of potential trafficking victims, assisting with repatriation of Gambian child trafficking victims exploited abroad, and continuing efforts to prevent forced child begging in Quranic schools. However, the Government did not initiate any trafficking investigations, complete any trafficking prosecutions, or adequately fund The Gambia’s National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons, which severely impeded the Government’s ability to investigate reports of human trafficking. If confirmed, I will partner closely with The Gambia’s National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons and engage with stakeholders throughout the country to highlight the problem. I also commit to working closely with colleagues at the State Department and in other U.S. Government agencies to work with The Gambia to increase its capacity to prevent trafficking crimes, protect victims, investigate and prosecute trafficking offenses and convict and hold trafficking offenders accountable.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in The Gambia?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes funds that may have investments in companies in The Gambia; however, these funds are exempt from the conflict of interest rules. I also have financial interests in several large companies with a global business, but those holdings are either below the $15,000 de minimis threshold in the conflict of interest laws or were not identified as posing a conflict of interest. All of my financial interests were reviewed by the State Department Ethics Office. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in any investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary in the future to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 12. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. One of our country’s greatest strengths, especially when we are representing our nation overseas and advancing our national security interests, is our diversity—ethnic, religious, racial, gender, sexual orientation and identity, background and upbringing. I have strived throughout my career to be a colleague, leader, mentor and friend in fierce support of our nation’s promise of equality to all, embracing our differences and distinctions because that diversity is a fundamental reflection of what makes the United States of America so uniquely great. I will continue to advocate for and personally work towards a workforce that represents the diversity of the America we represent abroad.

Question 13. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. There is simply no room for a failure to foster a diverse and inclusive environment. I will foster a work environment in which personnel are treated with respect and dignity. It’s far from simply a policy or legal question—it’s a need to get the very best America has to offer, the very best our foreign national employees have to offer, and to leverage our diversity to find more creative and innovative solutions to the foreign and national security challenges our nation faces. Secretary Pompeo has pledged to foster a more diverse and inclusive Department of State, and demanded that every member of our agency treat their colleagues with dignity and respect. I share his commitment, and if confirmed, I will ensure that there is no lack of clarity on my expectation that each member of my Embassy team will work every day to advance these principles.

Question 14. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in the Gambia specifically?

Answer. Poverty in The Gambia is rooted in the deeply entrenched mismanagement and corruption of the state. Specifically, official corruption opens the door to human rights abuses and overall negatively affects good governance and the rule of law. The Gambia recognizes that eliminating corruption is essential to gaining the trust of its citizens and creating an environment conducive to investment. To that end, The Gambia is increasing government transparency and working to eliminate corruption.

Question 15. What is your assessment of corruption trends in the Gambia and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. The Barrow administration has made significant strides to reduce the deeply entrenched corruption that exists at every level of government. The U.S. Government is assisting The Gambia through multiple anti-corruption courses and public corruption investigation trainings through the International Law Enforcement Academy in Gaborone, and the West Africa Regional Training Center (RTC) in Accra, Ghana. In addition, a joint program between the Departments of Justice, Homeland Security, and State is providing targeted training and advice to support Gambian efforts to investigate financial crimes.

Question 16. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in the Gambia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support The Gambia’s continued efforts to combat corruption. I will also seek to advance human rights in The Gambia by working with the Government to address the culture of impunity and official corruption that has opened the door to human rights violations and abuses in the past. I will also support U.S. efforts that focus on developing stronger Gambian institutions that can effectively combat corruption, narcotics trafficking, and transnational crime.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO RICHARD CARLTON PASCHALL III BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Question 1. What specific metrics should the international community be closely monitoring to ensure that this critical transition does not go off track?

Answer. The international donor community meets monthly to discuss metrics and programming regarding the transition. Monitoring the following metrics helps to assess this period of transition in The Gambia: GDP; level of debt; unemployment rate; percentage of students who pass college entrance exams; level of irregular mi-
Question 2. As the Gambia strives to further develop its economy and resolve foreign debt issues, how will you engage with the Government to ensure it also protects its natural resources and does not enter into exploitative agreements with foreign companies or governments that will harm its long-term economic potential?

Answer. It has become clear to many Africans that development and business deals with global partners require strict attention to ensure the needs of their own country's government, businesses, and people are the foremost beneficiaries. We encourage the international community to abide by internationally accepted environmental, labor, social, investment, and governance standards to ensure protection of natural resources and minimize exploitation. If confirmed, I will consider cooperation where our interests intersect and work to mitigate potential negative agreements that could harm The Gambia's long-term economic potential.

Question 3. What foreign assistance or U.S. technical assistance regarding the protection of marine fisheries and ending illegal, unreported and unregulated fishing are needed in the Gambia?

Answer. I understand the Embassy in Banjul is in close touch with the Fisheries Minister regarding the challenges to fisheries and illegal, unreported, and unregulated (IUU) fishing. Expanding regional programs offered via the defense attaché, Drug Enforcement Administration and other law enforcement agencies would provide training opportunities to key agencies to help them hone the tools and skills necessary to intercept illegal activities at ports and at sea.

Question 4. What should be the priorities in this security sector reform and are there ways that we can help that we are not already doing?

Answer. President Barrow has announced on numerous occasions his support for security sector reform. The State Department, through the Peacekeeping Operations account on a Bureau of African Affairs managed contract, funds a security sector advisor who has worked in close cooperation with The Gambia's National Security Advisor for the past year, and provides technical subject matter expertise and coordinates U.S. activities with security sector reform efforts of other international partners. It is important to acknowledge that The Gambia has for many years been a contributor to the U.N. peacekeeping Mission in Darfur—there is a solid foundation of professionalism in much of the Gambian security sector, even if there are challenges in institutional capacity and accountability for wrongdoing. There are a number of international partners working in this area, and if confirmed I commit to ensuring that the burden of this work is shared appropriately and that U.S. efforts will be synchronized and coordinated with those of others to better ensure a positive outcome.

Question 5. With these limited resources, how can we best target our assistance and creatively use other existing mechanisms to help encourage the reform process that President Barrow has initiated?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that U.S. assistance will target good governance, the reinforcement of democratic processes, and improved access to justice. By assisting Gambian institutions that fight against inequity and the lack of public accountability and transparency, and counter the drivers of violence and instability, we will be strengthening citizen-responsive governance, democracy, and respect for human rights.

If confirmed, our assistance programs will prioritize efforts most beneficial in the long term to strengthening democracy, justice, and good governance, while seeking to maximize cost efficiencies and avoid duplication with other U.S. Government or international donor efforts.

Question 6. And given France's recent announcement of a 50 million euros aid package that includes budgetary support, drinking water and agriculture projects, how do you think we can collaborate with France and other donors to maximize such assistance?

Answer. The international donor community meets monthly to discuss how international aid can work together to best support The Gambia at this critical time. Our Embassy, together with the French and other donors, works beyond this formal meeting to share best practices and planning to ensure that U.S. assistance is strategically implemented and promotes democratic values.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SUSAN STEVENSON BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. In January, opposition political party Citizens for Innovation reported that one of its members Santiago Ebee Ela, died in January as a result of torture. Are their claims credible? Has Mr. Ela’s death been credibly investigated? If confirmed, what concrete actions will you engage in to ensure that allegations of torture by government security services are thoroughly investigated and perpetrators held accountable?

Answer. U.S. Embassy Malabo has serious concerns regarding the reports of the death of opposition member Santiago Ebee Ela while in the custody of Equatoguinean security forces. Spain and the European Union also stated similar concerns. President Obiang said in an interview with French television shortly after Mr. Ebee’s death that President Obiang believed Mr. Ebee was ill when he was arrested and that this was the cause of his death. President Obiang promised an investigation into Mr. Ebee’s death; however, the Equatoguinean Government has not conducted one to date as far as Embassy Malabo is aware. If confirmed, I will make sure that Embassy Malabo continues to investigate the reports and press the Equatoguinean Government to hold accountable those responsible for torture.

Question 2. According to the Trafficking in Person’s Report for 2018, “The Government of Equatorial Guinea does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking and is not making significant efforts to do so; therefore Equatorial Guinea remained on Tier 3.” What steps will you take, if confirmed, to ensure that the Government takes actions to prosecute suspects and identify and/or refer victims to care?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work with like-minded Embassies and international organizations such as the United Nations Development Program (UNDP) to implement programs that the U.S. Embassy is supporting to train law enforcement and judicial authorities on trafficking in persons. The support also includes sensitization and public awareness campaigns. I will impress upon the Equatoguinean Government that the Tier 3 ranking is a serious impediment in the bilateral relationship. I will remind the Equatoguinean Government that the importance of combatting trafficking in persons is a matter of concern for the citizens of Equatorial Guinea. I would encourage relevant authorities to implement the recommendations for Equatorial Guinea outlined in the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report which include developing and implementing an Action Plan, investigating potential trafficking cases, using the 2004 anti-trafficking law to prosecute and convict traffickers, and other methods to combat trafficking.

Question 3. Equatorial Guinea ranks 171 out of 180 on Transparency International’s 2017 Corruptions Perceptions Index. What are the major barriers to transparency in Equatorial Guinea? What could the U.S. do to support improvement in this area? What specifically will you do to help foster improved transparency in Equatorial Guinea, if confirmed?

Answer. Public sector corruption in Equatorial Guinea is a serious problem. If confirmed, I will remind the Equatoguinean Government that U.S. companies remain the gold standard. By complying with the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, U.S. companies demonstrate through their actions that public sector corruption is not permissible and serves as an impediment to attracting foreign Investment. The Government’s interest in rejoining the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative is a positive step in this direction. Certain U.S. foreign assistance to the Government of Equatorial Guinea is restricted based on the country’s middle-income status and its Tier 3 Trafficking in Persons ranking, and concerns about human rights abuses also hinders cooperation. However, if confirmed, I will continue to leverage grant programs, U.S. exchange opportunities, higher education in the United States, public events, and other outreach activities as appropriate to influence and encourage young leaders to demand greater accountability from their Government. I will emphasize and underscore the importance of eliminating corruption at all levels and reinforce the important role of civil society in pushing for greater transparency and accountability in my messaging and cooperation with civil society, the international community, and others.

Question 4. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While serving as press attaché at the U.S. Embassy in Beijing, I had an international platform through which I could shine the light on China’s troubling human rights abuses, including reports of arbitrary detentions of Chinese dissidents. When we knew of a troubling case, we made sure to coordinate with Washington so that the individual could be mentioned from the podium at the State Department as well as by my office in Beijing. In addition, U.S. legal permanent residents often told us that they were treated better in prison because the Chinese authorities knew that the Americans were watching.

Also in China, we organized the embassy’s presidential election watch party in 2008. The event was significant for three reasons: we provided actual ballots from the state of California that had been translated into Chinese, showing attention to the diversity of American voters; we prepared a mock ballot for our Chinese guests, allowing them to experience voting not only for the president but for local initiatives; and we witnessed the election of someone from a minority group, a result that was unimaginable in China. I made sure to highlight the concession and acceptance speeches to the Chinese press, demonstrating the peaceful transition of power in a democracy. The event had a significant impact for many of the guests, given the contrast with their own one-party dictatorship.

One of the guests was a journalist who traveled to the United States on a Foreign Press Center program to witness the 2004 election first hand. He was able to witess campaign rallies and voting in local precincts. When he returned to China, he wrote a book on his experiences to explain the American system, and we featured him in interviews by other Chinese journalists in 2008. This made the story acceptable to Chinese censors, since it was told by a Chinese national rather than an American, allowing for the story’s publication to reach a potential audience of hundreds of thousands.

Question 5. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Equatorial Guinea? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. U.S. policy priorities in Equatorial Guinea are to encourage the Government there to expand its democratic space, including increasing respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, diversify its economy and strengthen our commercial ties, and ensure our engagement benefits the economic, health, and educational opportunities for all its citizens. Achieving these goals while faced with a very restricted media environment and two generations of citizens who have lived under one president are challenges. At the same time, Equatorial Guinea has been the third largest producer of oil in Sub-Saharan Africa and is a middle-income country.
This economy and the youth bulge in country are forces that will need to be addressed to ensure a peaceful and prosperous future. Should I be confirmed, I will stress that promoting transparency and ending corrupt practices are key to Equatorial Guinea’s long-term growth and stability.

Question 6. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Equatorial Guinea? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Good governance and democratization in Equatorial Guinean requires the Government to allow space for civil society leaders and political opposition parties to participate in the national debate on how to address some of the country’s societal issues. If confirmed, I will encourage the Equatoguinean Government to build upon its July 2018 political dialogue in order to build genuine political dialogue and the exchange of ideas. If confirmed, I will meet with a wide cross sector of Equatoguinean society. I will continue to leverage grant programs, U.S. exchange opportunities, higher education in the United States, public events, and other outreach activities to influence and encourage future and present leaders to demand greater accountability and push for greater space for dialogue from their Government. The largest potential impediments to increasing democracy in Equatorial Guinea is the ability of citizens to understand their laws and responsibilities as citizens and to express themselves freely, without fear of reprisal or undue restrictions.

Question 7. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Certain U.S. foreign assistance to the Government of Equatorial Guinea is restricted based on the country’s Tier 3 ranking in the 2018 annual Trafficking in Persons report. However, if confirmed, I will continue to provide assistance consistent with applicable legal limitations, such as through the Ambassador’s Special Self-Help Fund and Democracy Funds, to ensure that our engagement benefits the economic, health, and educational opportunities for all its citizens by supporting the development of civil society, transparency, and good governance. For example, this year the Embassy is working with the United Nations Development Program and the Government of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea to increase public awareness and provide training for government officials to prevent trafficking in persons. I would also prioritize programs that support the development of Equatorial Guinea’s people, such as entrepreneurship and education programs, which increase people-to-people interactions between our nations and provide opportunities for economic growth and increased trade.

Question 8. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Equatorial Guinea? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to meeting with organizations and individuals that are concerned with human rights and civil society issues in Equatorial Guinea. I would make sure that the Department of State documents in the annual Human Rights Report efforts by the Government of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea to restrict unduly or penalize the lawful activities of NGOs and other civil society organizations and raise the issue at the highest levels of government.

Question 9. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to meet with all democratically oriented political figures and parties. I would encourage the government to create a truly independent Ombudsman, as well as an Electoral Commission that will allow the citizens of the country to raise concerns with the appropriate authorities and vote freely. If confirmed, I would encourage the Government to open more space for people, political parties, and organizations, to express their opinions freely without fear of reprisals.

Question 10. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Equatorial Guinea on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Equatorial Guinea?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I commit to engage with Equatorial Guinea on press freedom and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom. I also commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Equatorial Guinea should I be confirmed.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and malign propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, my team and I will actively counter disinformation and malign propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Equatorial Guinea.

Question 12. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Equatorial Guinea on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Although labor law prohibits antiunion discrimination, the State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report states that the Equatoguinean Government placed practical obstacles before groups seeking to organize, such as not allowing groups to register legally. If confirmed, I will actively engage the Government on the right of labor groups, including independent trade unions, to organize.

Question 13. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Equatorial Guinea, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Equatorial Guinea? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Equatorial Guinea?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to using my position to defend the human rights and dignity of LGBTI people living in Equatorial Guinea. According to the 2017 State Department Human Rights Report, there are no laws criminalizing same-sex relations, but the Government took few steps to combat societal stigmatization of, and discrimination against LGBTI people. If confirmed, I will build upon my predecessors’ engagement with the LGBTI community in Equatorial Guinea by opening our embassy as a space for the exchange of ideas and identifying exchange programs for LGBTI leaders so that they can learn best practices from the United States and elsewhere as they pursue their rights.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SUSAN STEVENSON BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. While serving as press attaché at the U.S. Embassy in Beijing, I had an international platform through which I could illuminate China’s troubling human rights violations and abuses, including reports of arbitrary detentions of Chinese dissidents. We worked to ensure our efforts were closely coordinated with Washington. In addition, U.S. legal permanent residents often told us that they were treated better in prison because the Chinese authorities knew that the Americans were watching.

Also in China, we organized the embassy’s presidential election watch party in 2008. The event was significant for three reasons: We provided actual ballots from the state of California that had been translated into Chinese, showing attention to the diversity of American voters; we prepared a mock ballot for our Chinese guests, allowing them to experience voting not only for the president but for local initiatives; and we witnessed the election of someone from a minority group, a result that was unimaginable in China. He was able to witness campaign rallies and voting in local precincts. When he returned to China, he wrote a book on his experiences to explain the American system, and we featured him in interviews by other Chinese journalists in 2008. This made the story acceptable to Chinese censors, since it was told by a Chinese national rather than an American, allowing for the story’s publication to reach a potential audience of hundreds of thousands.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Equatorial Guinea? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Equatorial Guinea? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most important human rights problems for Equatorial Guinea, as noted in the State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report, include excessive use of force and torture by security forces; severe conditions in detention facilities, arbitrary arrest and incommunicado detention, the use of internal exile against political opponents, restrictions on privacy rights and freedom of movement, denial of freedoms of expression, peaceful assembly, and association, including for members of the press; the inability of citizens to choose their Government in free and fair elections; widespread official corruption; and violence against women. If confirmed, I will pursue opportunities to continue to engage leaders from the Government, opposition parties, and civil society to increase respect for human rights and protection for fundamental freedoms, and to press Equatorial Guinea to abide more fully by democratic principles.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Equatorial Guinea in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. President Obiang has governed Equatorial Guinea since 1979. Decision making power is highly concentrated which can lead to delays in the implementation of certain reforms. The rights of members of civil society, media, and political parties that are not supportive of the ruling Democratic Party of Equatorial Guinea (PDGE) are severely restricted. Many individuals choose not to criticize the Government and security forces due to fear of reprisal.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Equatorial Guinea? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed to meeting with organizations and individuals that are concerned with human rights and civil society issues in Equatorial Guinea. Ensuring that the United States does not provide assistance to foreign security force units that violate human rights is crucially important. If confirmed, I will ensure that Embassy Malabo personnel responsible for Leahy vetting are familiar with that process and can implement vetting fully and effectively. I will engage host government interlocutors to remind them of the importance the United States places on respect for human rights.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Equatorial Guinea to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Equatorial Guinea?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will engage with the Equatoguinean Government on prisoners of conscience and persons otherwise unjustly targeted by the Government.

Question 6. Will you engage with Equatorial Guinea on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage regularly on human rights, including civil rights, and governance with the Government of Equatorial Guinea, opposition parties, NGOs, and civil society.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Equatorial Guinea?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes funds that may have investments in companies that operate in Equatorial Guinea; however, these funds are exempt from the conflicts of interest rules and have been reviewed by the State Department Ethics Office. I also have financial interests in several large companies with a global business, but none were identified as posing a conflict of interest. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in any investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary in the future to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I hope to continue the initiatives that I have undertaken as the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary the Bureau of Public Affairs and as the president of an employee affinity group, which include unconscious bias training, organizing professional development sessions focused on diversity and inclusion, and seeking to remove barriers to advancement for all employees. Not only does the Bureau of Public Affairs have an active diversity initiative, but we have placed people with disabilities into prominent positions based on their skills. American legal protections from discrimination and to promote accessibility are hallmarks of our society and values that I will promote, if confirmed, among both my American and locally-engaged staffs.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure that each of the supervisors at Embassy Malabo—many of whom will be in supervisory positions for the very first time—have access to training on unconscious bias and harassment. I will set out my expectations from the start and model the behavior I would like to see in them. If given this opportunity, I will ensure that diversity and inclusion are part of every officer’s work commitments.

Question 12. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Equatorial Guinea specifically?

Answer. Political corruption weakens democratic governance and the rule of law by eroding citizens’ faith in these systems. Political corruption can lead to widespread apathy. At its worse, political corruption can lead to instability. Corruption remains a major concern in Equatorial Guinea. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report notes that while Equatoagueinian law provides severe criminal penalties for official corruption, the Government did not implement the law, allowing officials to engage in corrupt practices with impunity at all levels.

Question 13. In your testimony, you highlighted the importance of strengthening commercial ties between Equatorial Guinea and the United States. How do you intend to promote this without furthering the already rampant corruption and further entrenching President Obiang’s dictatorship?

Answer. Encouraging greater U.S. business engagement and investment that is fully compliant with the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act can help promote international best practices in Equatorial Guinea. If confirmed, I will emphasize to government, private sector, and civil society representatives that stable and open political space, corruption free institutions and processes, and fair and equal treatment of investors are essential to improving the investment climate—and the key to economic diversification. I will also work closely with like-minded governments and international partners already working in Equatorial Guinea to improve the business climate, governance, accountability, and transparency.

Question 14. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Equatorial Guinea and efforts to address and reduce it by that government? If confirmed, how would you engage the Government of Equatorial Guinea regarding its reported lack of transparency and high levels of corruption? What steps would you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Equatorial Guinea?

Answer. Public sector corruption in Equatorial Guinea is a serious problem. If confirmed, I will leverage the Government’s interest in diversifying its economy to press for greater anti-corruption measures along with more stringent transparency and accountability mechanisms as a means of attracting foreign investment. Although U.S. engagement may be constrained by both the country’s Tier 3 ranking on the annual Trafficking in Persons report and concerns about human rights abuses, I will continue to leverage grant programs, U.S. exchange opportunities, higher education in the United States, public events, and other outreach activities to influence and encourage young leaders to demand greater accountability from their Government. I will emphasize and underscore the importance of eliminating corruption at all levels and reinforce the important role of civil society in pushing for greater transparency and accountability in my messaging and cooperation with civil society, the international community, and others.

Question 15. What impact has corruption had on development and the provision of social services in Equatorial Guinea? To what extent has the Government of Equatorial Guinea used its oil wealth to fund social services, public infrastructure, or efforts to improve the state’s capacity to implement development programs?

Answer. Corruption has hindered the full and effective delivery of social services in Equatorial Guinea. Despite its high GDP, the Government distributes social services poorly and unevenly. However, capacity constraints and technical expertise gaps have also impeded better implementation. In response, the Government has partnered with U.S. oil and gas companies’ corporate social responsibility arms to develop and run targeted programs. Equatorial Guinea graduated from the U.N.’s list of least developed countries (LDC) in 2017, even though its Human Assets and Economic Vulnerability indices remain low. The Government also self-funds the majority of the United Nations’ development programs in Equatorial Guinea. Through its development program called Horizon 2020, the Government spent significant resources on large public infrastructure projects, such as modern highways, public buildings, recreational spaces, and a new airport terminal that is expected to open in early 2019. The Government has prioritized the delivery of electricity to most citizens as well. The next phases of the development program were stalled by the economic downturn of the last few years. The Government is redressing the Horizon 2020 program in March 2019 to address the human capacity and industrialization goals.

Question 16. If confirmed, how will you engage with the Equatoagueinian Government to take the charity selection process seriously and push Nguema to fully relinquish his assets?
Answer. If confirmed, I will coordinate with the Department of Justice regarding the Government of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea’s compliance with the agreement. I would also engage with the appropriate Equatoguinean interlocutors and the United Nations implementers as needed to help ensure that the agreement is implemented to the full benefit of the Equatoguinean people.

Question 17. Do you believe investigations by the United States and other foreign governments (e.g. France’s 2017 conviction of Nguema for embezzlement) are an effective way to hold corrupt Equatoguinean actors accountable?

Answer. Investigations by the United States and other foreign governments are one tool that can be effective in ascertaining the extent of ill-gotten gains and other benefits of corruptions outside of Equatorial Guinea.

Question 18. Do you believe economic sanctions would incentivize a reduction in corruption among Obiang and his cronies?

Answer. Economic sanctions are a powerful tool the U.S. Government possesses. If confirmed, I will consult frequently with my colleagues at Embassy Malabo and in Washington to identify the best ways to support good governance and the fight against corruption in Equatorial Guinea.

Question 19. How will you work with colleagues at the State Department and the Department of the Treasury to track the Obiang administration’s illicit financial activity?

Answer. If confirmed, I and my subject matter experts at Embassy Malabo will communicate regularly with relevant offices in the State Department and the Treasury to track illicit financial activity.

Question 20. If confirmed, how will you engage with the Equatoguinean Government for the extradition of Jammeh to Gambia so that he may be held accountable for the crimes committed under his regime?

Answer. If confirmed, I will seek to monitor any formal requests by the Gambian Government for Mr. Jammeh’s extradition or return. I would encourage the Equatoguinean Government to comply with all of their international obligations concerning the extradition or return of Jammeh to the Gambia.

Question 21. How credible were the 2016 presidential and 2017 legislative elections? How have election processes evolved over time? What is your assessment of the recent national dialogue?

Answer. The State Department’s 2017 Human Rights Report notes “irregularities and nontransparency” in the 2017 legislative and municipal elections and the 2016 presidential election. Unfortunately, elections and political participation remain areas of concern for the country. The July 2018 national dialogue had mixed outcomes. On a positive note, Equatoguinean television carried the event live and the Government did not censor it. Opposition parties like the Convergence for Social Democracy openly called for a peaceful and democratic discussion about a transition to a future government. This opposition party has not suffered any repercussions to date for this dissent.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Susan Stevenson by Senator Cory A. Booker

Question 1. Do you agree that political leaders of Equatorial Guinea, including the Vice President, meet the statutory requirements to be sanctioned under the Global Magnitsky Act as implemented under Executive Order 13818?

Answer. Global Magnitsky is a powerful sanctions program and you have my commitment, if confirmed, to support its use as appropriate. No region is immune from human rights abuse or corruption. If confirmed, I will use all available resources to work with the Treasury Department to determine if any Equatoguinean citizens should be sanctioned under the Global Magnitsky Act as implemented under Executive Order 13818.

Question 2. Has the State Department made a policy determination not to sanction political leaders of Equatorial Guinea in spite of evidence of actions that would make them eligible for asset blocking and visa denials under the Global Magnitsky Act?

Answer. Global Magnitsky is a powerful sanctions program and you have my commitment, if confirmed, to support its use as appropriate. No region is immune from human rights abuse or corruption. If confirmed, I will use all available resources to work with the Treasury Department to determine if any Equatoguinean citizens should be sanctioned under the Global Magnitsky Act as implemented under Executive Order 13818. Embassy Malabo has consistently reviewed each application from political leaders on a case-by-case basis, in line with our responsibilities under the Vienna Convention while applying all applicable laws. Visa eligibility is governed by U.S. immigration law, including the Global Magnitsky Act. If I am confirmed, I will continue to insist on appropriate review of all visa applications, including those received from Equatoguinean leaders.

Question 3. What is the status of the joint selection of a charity or other organization by Nguema and the U.S. Government to receive the settlement assets, as stipulated in the settlement, which was supposed to occur within 180 days of the sale of Nguema’s property?

Answer. In March 2018, the U.S. Government notified the Government of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea that the settlement agreement moved forward to the distribution of the settlement funds. At that time, the representative of then-Second Vice President Teodoro Nguema Obiang Mangue and the Department of Justice agreed to program the funds through the United Nations Joint Fund for Agenda 2030 as the U.S. Government had been unable to find a charity or other organization that could effectively disburse the amount of money committed that met the criteria of the full agreement. Since March 2018, the parties have been developing the program to be implemented in Malabo. The Department of Justice is planning to program the funds this calendar year.

Question 4. As a result of this settlement and his involvement in significant acts of corruption, has Nguema been banned from travel to the United States, except as part of official travel to the United Nations? If not, why not?

Answer. I have not participated in any policy discussions to date regarding a travel ban on any Equatoguinean nationals.
NOMINATIONS

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 2018 (A.M.)

U.S. Senate,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, DC.

The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 9:34 a.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Cory Gardner, presiding.

Present: Senators Gardner [presiding], Rubio, and Markey.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. CORY GARDNER,
U.S. Senator from Colorado

Senator Gardner. This committee will come to order.

Let me thank all of you for your time today, your willingness to serve. Welcome to this full committee hearing of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on nominations. Today, we will examine the Ambassadorial nominations to the nations of Mongolia, Cambodia, and Brunei Darussalam.

I would like to warmly welcome the nominees and their families who are here today. Thank you for your service. This is not just an individual post. This is a family post, and we are grateful to all of you for your willingness to allow spouses and family members to serve in this capacity. We are grateful for it. So, welcome.

Senator Markey, I will turn it over to you for your opening statement.

STATEMENT OF HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
U.S. Senator from Massachusetts

Senator Markey. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And thank you for your partnership and your leadership on the subcommittee in this past year.

Beyond the importance of these three countries themselves, this hearing also is critical because of a number of key issues—China’s growing regional influence, North Korea’s illicit trade relations and human rights—are all relevant to the countries for which these witnesses have been nominated to be Ambassador. And I am particularly interested in hearing how our nominees plan to address the challenges of promoting U.S. values and strategic interests in countries where there is still progress to be made.

In the interest of time, I will conclude my opening remarks, and I look forward to hearing from the witnesses.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
Senator GARDNER. Thank you. And we have a hearing after this on China as well. I was going to say nice things about Senator Markey there, but I am going to say them here.

Senator Markey, thank you for your great partnership this past Congress on issues related to Asia. I think we have done some great things in committee. I just appreciate all the work that you have been helping us accomplish this year. So, thank you.

Our first nominee is Mr. Michael Klecheski. He is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, who is currently Deputy Chief of Mission at the United States Embassy in Manila, Philippines, a position he has held since 2015.

Welcome, Mr. Klecheski, and thank you very much for your service.

We are also joined by our second nominee, Mr. Matthew Matthews. He is a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, who has served as an American diplomat since in 1986. He is currently Ambassador for Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation and Deputy Assistant Secretary for Australia, New Zealand, and the Pacific Islands in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs.

Mr. Matthews, thank you, welcome. Thank you for your service.

Our final nominee is Mr. Patrick Murphy, career member of the Senior Foreign Service, Class of Minister-Counselor, who is currently Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs. Mr. Murphy has served for over 25 years in the Senior Foreign Service in numerous senior positions.

Welcome, Mr. Murphy. Thank you for our service as well.

Thank you all. I will turn to you for your 5 minutes of opening statements.

Mr. Klecheski, please begin.

STATEMENT OF MICHAEL S. KLECHESKI, OF NEW YORK, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF MONGOLIA

Mr. KLECHESKI. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Markey.

It is really an honor to appear before you as President Trump’s nominee to be Ambassador to Mongolia. I am grateful for the support and confidence of the President and Secretary Pompeo. Working these many years in the Foreign Service has been a privilege, most importantly because it has allowed me to serve my country, and I would be honored to do so again in this important capacity.

I have blessed by a supportive, loving family. My wife, Eloisa, who I feel fortunate to have with me here today, and our three children—Stefan, Kara, and Adam—have been with me throughout. We have traveled throughout the world, and I really could not have done it without them.

Last year marked 30 years of our diplomatic relations and 27 years since Mongolia’s peaceful transition from communism to democracy. Looking back, the United States takes pride in having assisted Mongolia’s market-oriented reforms and expanded political, cultural, education, and defense cooperation. These have clearly served both our interests. Today, as an open free-market society, Mongolia is a model for others who wish to join the community of free, democratic countries.

We have built a close relationship with Mongolia on a foundation of shared values and common interests. Mongolia takes active part in the Community of Democracies and recently participated enthusiastically and constructively in the Secretary of State’s first-ever Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom. It has also announced the designation of its own first-ever Ambassador at Large for Religious Freedom.

It has been with us in forging a safer, more just world. Its soldiers have stood alongside our own in Iraq and Afghanistan, all while sustaining one of the world’s largest per capita U.N. peacekeeping contributions.

President Trump has set forth a vision of an Indo-Pacific in which all nations are sovereign, strong, and prosperous. And in this vein, Mongolia’s continued independence is clearly in the U.S. national interest. So let me here just lay out a few key themes of effort that, were I to be confirmed, I would pursue to this end.

So, first, Mongolia’s sovereignty stems, to a significant extent, from its free-market economy and notable economic growth. It presents many opportunities for U.S. firms and investors, and if I were confirmed, I would focus heavily on economic and commercial issues. That would include alerting the U.S. private sector to those opportunities and advocating for American business. It also would involve supporting good governance, which is key to Mongolia’s economic future and has really been a hallmark of U.S. programming.

In these realms, there is much to build on. We already have engaged across a broad front to assist Mongolia in improving its business climate and protecting its economic autonomy. We are seeking full implementation of the U.S.-Mongolia Transparency Agreement, pushing for further improvements through the USTR-led Trade and Investment Framework Agreement, helping Mongolia develop robust anti-money laundering capabilities in partnership with the U.S. Treasury Department, and boosting U.S. exports and commercial opportunities through Commerce Department-led trade missions. And of course, the Millennium Corporation Challenge second compact also is pivotal in this regard.

So it has really been a whole-of-government effort. And as an Ambassador, were I confirmed, I would, of course, make coordinating that effort in order to maximize the effectiveness of U.S. taxpayers’ dollars of prime importance.

As noted previously, Mongolia has been our steadfast partner in some of the world’s most troubled regions. Mongolian troops serve in concert with the NATO coalition in Afghanistan. Many thousands of Mongolian soldiers have served in this role. Some thousand are currently active in U.N. peacekeeping missions in South Sudan and elsewhere.

Indeed, on peacekeeping is another area Mongolia has proven a willing and able security partner. This is something I would obviously focus on as well.

Then there is the question of shared values. From the outset of our bilateral relationship, the ties between our countries and our peoples have been a force for Mongolia’s democratic development and the foundation of our friendship. Over 1,300 Peace Corps volunteers have served in Mongolia since 1991, and they play a role in many areas, including English language education. USAID has played a significant role in terms of democratization and development. And I would, of course, continue our work in those areas and many others.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the U.S.-Mongolia relationship has been strong and highly constructive, and there is every reason to be optimistic that we can build on what has been achieved. So it would be my great honor, were the Senate to confirm my nomination, to pursue that effort.

Thank you very much. And I would, of course, welcome your questions. Thank you.

[Mr. Klecheski’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF MICHAEL S. KLECHESKI

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Markey, members of the committee, it is my honor to appear before you as President Trump’s nominee to be U.S. Ambassador to Mongolia. I am grateful for the support and confidence of the President and of Secretary Pompeo. Working these many years in the Foreign Service has been a privilege, most importantly because it has allowed me to serve my country, and I would be honored to do so again in this most important capacity.

I have been blessed by a supportive, loving family. My wife Eloisa, who I feel fortunate to have here with me today, and our three children, Stefan, Kara and Adam, have traveled the globe with me. I could not have done it all without them.

Last year we celebrated thirty years of diplomatic relations with Mongolia; it also marked the twenty-seventh year since Mongolia’s peaceful transition from communism to democracy. Looking back, the United States takes pride in having assisted Mongolia’s market-oriented reforms and expanded political, cultural, educational, and defense cooperation that has served both our countries’ interests. Today, as an open, free-market society, Mongolia stands as a model for others in the region and around the world who wish to join the community of free, democratic countries.

We have built a close relationship with Mongolia on a foundation of shared values and common interests. Mongolia is an active member of the Community of Democracies, and recently participated, enthusiastically and constructively, in the Secretary of State’s first-ever Ministerial to Advance Religious Freedom. It has also announced the designation of its first-ever Ambassador at Large for Religious Freedom Issues for that purpose. Mongolia has also been with us in forging a safer, more just world: their soldiers have stood admirably alongside our own in Iraq and Afghanistan since 2003, all while sustaining one of the largest per capita U.N. Peacekeeping contributions.

President Trump has set forth a vision of an Indo-Pacific in which all nations are sovereign, strong, and prosperous; in this vein, Mongolia’s continued independence and autonomy are clearly in the U.S. national interest. I would like to lay out the key lines of effort that, were I to be confirmed as Ambassador, I would seek to pursue to this end.

Trade, Business, and Economics

Mongolia’s sovereignty stems, to a significant extent, from its free-market economy, and its notable economic growth and large reserves of coal, copper, gold, uranium, and other minerals present many opportunities for U.S. firms and investors. If confirmed as Ambassador, I would continue to focus heavily on economic and commercial issues, including alerting the U.S. private sector of the vast opportunities Mongolia offers and advocating for American business, as well as supporting good governance that is so vital to Mongolia’s economic future and that has been one of the hallmarks of U.S. programming in this area.

In these realms, there is much to build on. We already are engaged across a broad front to assist Mongolia in improving its business climate and protecting its economic autonomy, including by seeking full implementation of the U.S.-Mongolia Transparency Agreement; pushing for further improvements through the USTR-led Trade and Investment Framework Agreement discussions; helping Mongolia develop robust anti-money laundering capabilities in partnership with the U.S. Department of the Treasury; and boosting U.S. exports and commercial opportunities through Department of Commerce-led trade missions.

Mongolia's growth has reaped many rewards, but also placed significant strain on its infrastructure and environment. The challenge of ensuring the sustainable supply of water to the capital, Ulaanbaatar, is a striking example. Recognizing this hurdle to growth and challenge to the Mongolian capital's population, our Millennium Challenge Corporation has concluded an agreement to invest $350 million in a new water supply system for the city. Not only will this support much-needed infrastructure, but it also will foster the development of new regulatory and institutional reforms to set Ulaanbaatar—and Mongolia—on a path to more sustainable development. The success of this project is a top priority, and if confirmed, I would work closely with my MCC colleagues to ensure it accomplishes its goals.

Security

As I noted previously, Mongolia has been a steadfast partner of the United States in some of the world's most troubled regions. Mongolian troops serve in concert with the NATO coalition in Afghanistan, and we were pleased that Mongolia's Prime Minister announced at his October 18 White House meeting that his country would extend its NATO commitment beyond 2018. Nearly 1,000 Mongolian soldiers are also currently active in the U.N.'s peacekeeping missions in Sudan and South Sudan, where they have developed a reputation as an honorable and reliable force. Mongolia reinforces its peacekeeping capabilities each year in its Khaan Quest Exercise, which the United States co-hosts. That exercise takes place at the Five Hills Training Facility, the construction and maintenance of which the United States proudly supports. The U.S. Indo-Pacific Command is a major actor in this, but it also is worth noting how tremendously constructive Mongolia’s partnership with the Alaska National Guard has been, as part of one of the most successful partnerships of a state national guard abroad. Indeed, on peacekeeping as in other areas, Mongolia has shown itself a willing and able security partner, and it is clearly a worthy investment to continue our efforts to improve its armed forces' capability and interoperability.

Shared Values

From the outset of our bilateral relationship, the ties between the people of the United States and Mongolia have served as a force for Mongolia’s democratic development and the foundation of our friendship based on shared values. Deepening its ties not only to U.S. civil society, but also to international groups focused on democratic values and human rights, is essential to preserving Mongolia's political space, sovereignty, and independence.

Over 1,300 Peace Corps volunteers have served in Mongolia since 1991, including 97 at present; they play a vital role in many areas, including English-language education, thus helping address the hunger in Mongolia for knowledge of English. Support for English language education will strengthen our trade and investment opportunities and deepen people-to-people ties. If confirmed, I will also support continuing USAID’s vital efforts in democratization and development as key foundations for Mongolia’s sustained growth, orientation towards the West, and continued political and economic sovereignty. The USAID Leaders Advancing Democracy Project, or LEAD, connects young democratic leaders in Mongolia not only with their counterparts in the United States, but also in the region, building networks that improve their resilience and resourcefulness. We are already working with Mongolia to enhance border security and rule of law, and have launched an outreach campaign to promote responsible travel to the United States.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the relationship between the United States and Mongolia has been strong and highly constructive, and there is every reason to be optimistic that we can build on what already has been achieved. It would be my great honor, were the Senate to confirm my nomination, to pursue that effort. Thus, I thank you for considering my nomination, and welcome your questions.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Mr. Klecheski.

Mr. Matthews?
STATEMENT OF HON. MATTHEW JOHN MATTHEWS, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO BRUNEI DARUSSALAM

Ambassador Matthews. Thank you, Mr. Chairman and Ranking Member Markey.

I am honored to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Brunei. I appreciate the confidence the President and Secretary Pompeo have shown to me, and if confirmed, I look forward to working with you to advance U.S. interests in Brunei, as we work to foster the international rules-based system that supports the sovereignty of all nations, large and small, and a commitment to partnership to all nations seeking to do the same.

I am both happy and thankful to be here with my wife, Rachel. We have served together through more than 12 postings in our 32 years in the Foreign Service. And without her support and encouragement, I would not be here today. While my son could not make it today, I am grateful that our daughter, Kristen, could join us as well.

Mr. Chairman, the United States and Brunei have enjoyed strong and prosperous relations for 150 years—actually, 170 years, since 1850 when our two countries first signed the Peace Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation. Still in effect today, the treaty has underpinned our close cooperation. More recently, the United States was one of the first countries to recognize Brunei’s independence from the United Kingdom in 1984. In the time since, the United States and Brunei have worked together to promote, peace, stability, and development in the region. And if confirmed, I hope to continue that tradition by further strengthening our bilateral relationship.

In recent years, the United States and Brunei have cooperated to address a host of matters important to Southeast Asia. Brunei’s position as a South China Sea claimant state with good relations throughout ASEAN and with others across the broader Indo-Pacific region allows Brunei to play a significant role in defusing tensions and advancing our interests within ASEAN.

The United States and Brunei have an active and growing defense relationship highlighted by regular bilateral and multilateral exercises both in Brunei and the wider Indo-Pacific region. We have three fundamental defense agreements, a Defense Memorandum of Understanding, an Access and Cross Servicing Agreement to facilitate logistics cooperation, and a long-awaited General Security of Military Information Agreement signed in July of 2018. This last agreement will help facilitate information exchange between our two militaries and significantly strengthens our bilateral security relationship.

Our economic relationship is also on a positive trend. One, the United States enjoys a modest annual goods and services trade surplus. Brunei generally has very low tariffs, and U.S. companies seeking to export to Brunei usually do so freely. If confirmed, I would work to expand our bilateral trade relationship and would seek to employ the BUILD Act to encourage the participation of U.S. firms in Brunei in infrastructure projects.

Our cultural, educational, and people-to-people ties continue to grow and define our bilateral relations in new and positive ways. Together, these programs highlight a multifaceted relationship that is deep and broad, and one that is central to both promoting U.S. interests in the region and fostering peace and stability that bring economic growth. I believe we can and should work hard to expand all these exchanges.

Certainly, there are challenges in the relationship. Freedom of expression and freedom of religion and belief, which includes the right to change one’s religious beliefs, are enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We regularly communicate with the government of Brunei regarding human rights, including religious freedom, and encourage Brunei to uphold its international commitments on human rights, including for minorities.

In this context, the United States has serious reservations regarding certain provisions of Brunei’s Sharia Penal Code. We are concerned that it potentially criminalizes aspects of freedom of religion and belief.

I am also concerned about the corporal punishments described in the code. While we understand that none of these punishments have been carried out, as a signatory to the U.N. Convention against Torture, Brunei must ensure that its laws prohibit torture or other cruel, inhumane, or degrading treatment or punishment. And we must continue to urge Brunei to ratify and implement this important international convention as soon as possible.

Despite some challenges, the long-term prognosis for strengthening our bilateral relationship with Brunei is excellent. Hence, we consider our engagement with the next generation of Bruneian youth to be critical, including through promoting their participation in the Young Southeast Asian Leaders Initiative, or YSEALI. Brunei was instrumental in developing the focus of YSEALI, which has now grown to nearly 130,000 members across Southeast Asia.

Through the Fulbright U.S.-ASEAN initiative, we are also supporting Bruneian scholars and professionals to conduct research at U.S. universities on topics of importance to ASEAN and the U.S.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Markey, thank you for inviting me to testify before you today and for giving my nomination your serious consideration. I am happy to answer any questions you may have.

[Ambassador Matthews’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. MATTHEW JOHN MATTHEWS

Mr. Chairman, and members of the committee; I am honored to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to serve as the U.S. Ambassador to Brunei. I appreciate the confidence the President and Secretary Pompeo have shown in me and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you to advance U.S. interests in Brunei as we work to foster the international rules based system that supports the sovereignty of all nations, large and small, and a commitment of partnership to all nations seeking to do the same. Without her support and encouragement, I wouldn’t be here today. While my son Daniel could not break away from his commitments at his clinic in Bethlehem Pennsylvania, I am greatful that our daughter Kristen could join us today along with friends and colleagues from the Department of State.
The United States and Brunei have enjoyed strong and prosperous relations since 1850, when our two countries signed the Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Commerce, and Navigation. Still in effect today, the treaty has underpinned our close cooperation for nearly 170 years. More recently, the United States was one of the first countries to recognize Brunei’s independence from the United Kingdom in 1984. In the time since, the United States and Brunei have worked together to promote peace, stability, and development in the region, and if confirmed, I hope to continue that tradition by further strengthening our bilateral relationship.

Our partnership with Brunei is an integral part of our free and open Indo-Pacific Strategy, in which independent nations with diverse cultures and different aspirations can prosper side-by-side in freedom and in peace. Support for ASEAN centrality, including with Brunei as a member of ASEAN, a valued partner, and 2021 ASEAN Chair, remains a cornerstone of our Indo-Pacific Strategy.

Brunei has long been an active and positively engaged participant in the region. In recent years, the United States and Brunei have cooperated to address a host of issues important to Southeast Asia. Brunei’s position as a South China Sea claimant state, with good relations throughout ASEAN and with others across the broader Indo-Pacific region, allows Brunei to play a significant role in defusing regional tensions and advancing our interests within ASEAN.

Our economic relationship is also a positive one, and the United States enjoys a modest annual goods and services trade surplus with Brunei. Brunei generally has very low tariffs, and U.S. companies seeking to export to Brunei can usually do so freely. Our positive collaboration with our Bruneian colleagues in APEC allows us to promote free trade in the region. If confirmed, I would seek to expand our bilateral trade relationship and employ the BUILD act to encourage the participation of U.S. Firms in Bruneian infrastructure projects.

Our cultural, educational, and people-to-people ties continue to grow and define our bilateral relations in new and positive ways. Together, these programs highlight a multifaceted relationship that is deep and broad, and one that is central to both promoting U.S. interests in the region and fostering the peace and stability that bring economic growth. Freedom of expression and freedom of religion and belief, which includes the right to change one’s religious beliefs, are enshrined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We regularly communicate with the Government of Brunei regarding human rights, including religious freedom, and encourage Brunei to uphold its international commitments on human rights including for minorities. In this context, the United States has serious reservations regarding certain provisions of Brunei’s Sharia Penal Code. We are concerned that it potentially criminalizes aspects of freedom of religion and belief, for example. I am also concerned about the corporal punishments described in the Code. While we understand that none of these punishments have been carried out, as a signatory to the U.N. Convention against Torture, Brunei must ensure that its laws prohibit “torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,” and we must continue to urge Brunei to ratify and implement this important international convention.

Despite some challenges, the long-term prognosis for strengthening our bilateral relationship with Brunei is excellent. Hence we consider our engagements with the next generations of Bruneian youth to be critical, such as through promoting their participation in the Young Southeast Asian Leaders Initiative, or YSEALI. Brunei was instrumental in developing the focus of YSEALI, which has now grown to nearly 130,000 members across Southeast Asia. Through the Fulbright U.S.-ASEAN initiative, we are also supporting Bruneian scholars and professionals to conduct research at U.S. universities on topics of importance to ASEAN.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Markey, and members of the committee, thank you for inviting me to testify before you today and for giving my nomination your serious consideration. I am happy to answer any questions you may have.

Senator Markey. Thank you, sir, for your testimony.
Mr. Murphy, please proceed.
Mr. MURPHY. Thank you, Chairman Gardner, Ranking Member Markey, and members of the committee for considering my nomination to be the next United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Cambodia.

I am grateful to our President and our Secretary of State for their confidence.

I have deep appreciation for the support of my family, part and parcel of my entire career, including my wife, Kathleen, and daughter Gillian with me here today; my son, Seamus, in Richmond, Virginia; and my daughter Meghan, watching from Morocco. My mother-in-law, Barbara, is also here today, and my folks are supporting from Florida.

I am thankful to colleagues in the Foreign and Civil Services, local employees overseas, and counterparts across our interagency and armed services for their collegiality over my three decades of public service. If confirmed, I will work very closely with Congress to advance U.S. interests in Cambodia, promoting democracy, rights, and freedoms, building on the strong support the United States enjoys among the Cambodian public and strengthening cooperation on our vision for the Indo-Pacific.

Representing my country as a Peace Corps volunteer in West Africa and for 26 years as a diplomat has been an honor. I have benefited from my upbringing in Vermont, where I was exposed early to the value of public service. I have spent much of my career in Southeast Asia and, if confirmed, look forward to further contributions to this critical part of the world.

Cambodia is the product of an impressive ancient civilization. The tumultuous 20th century, however, proved challenging. I started my diplomatic career in 1992, a point of inflection for Cambodia, when the U.N. Transitional Authority arrived to administer elections made possible by the Paris Peace Accords through which Cambodians, the United States, and many others negotiated the end to a long and devastating conflict.

I am proud of our work in Cambodia, including partnerships with civil society. Today, over 85 percent of Cambodia’s people are above the poverty line and enjoy a growing economy. With help through USAID and other U.S. programs, Cambodia has achieved nearly universal primary education, decreased maternal mortality, and served as a model for tackling HIV-AIDS.

The United States has been a leading donor in helping Cambodians address painful legacies via efforts aimed at demining and achieving justice and accountability. If confirmed, I will continue these efforts and strengthen our work with partners to end trafficking in persons.

In recent years, regrettably, there has been backsliding in governance, rule of law, and corruption. This administration has been clear in our concern that recent national elections fell short, in part because of the dissolution of the main opposition party, jailing of its leader, Kem Sokha, and banning of others. If confirmed, I will advocate strongly for reconciliation, adherence to the principles enshrined in Cambodia’s constitution, and efforts to protect the country’s sovereignty.

Our Cambodian-American community has contributed to the home States of the distinguished Senators, as well as to the bilateral relationship. I would like to grow connections between Pueblo and Phnom Penh, Boston and Battambang by increasing International Visitor Leadership Program and other exchanges, and sustaining a Peace Corps program through which hundreds of Americans have contributed to Cambodia’s development and mutual understanding.

If confirmed, I would seek to balance and increase our $3.5 billion in annual two-way trade by promoting U.S. business interests, Cambodian adherence to international labor standards, and a leveling of the field for U.S. investors and workers.

I also commit to working steadfastly for the fullest possible accounting of U.S. personnel missing from the Indochina conflict period. This is our solemn obligation, a foundational area of cooperation, and an issue close to my heart.

My family, like many, lost a loved one in service during the Vietnam War, and I understand the profound need to account for our personnel. If confirmed, I will work closely with our Defense POW/MIA Accounting Agency and American families to keep this humanitarian issue at the forefront of our Cambodia policy.

Our U.S. agencies and staff in Phnom Penh are world-class. And if confirmed, I will count myself truly fortunate to lead them. I will make their security and that of their families and all Americans in Cambodia a top priority and dedicate myself to facilitate our collective efforts to advance U.S. interests.

Thank you, members of the committee, for your consideration of my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

[Mr. Murphy’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF W. PATRICK MURPHY

Thank you Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member, and members of the committee for considering my nomination to be the next United States Ambassador to the Kingdom of Cambodia. I am grateful to our President and Secretary of State for their confidence. I have deep appreciation for the support of my family, part and parcel of my career, including my wife Kathleen and daughter Gillian with me here today; my son Seamus in Richmond, Virginia; and my daughter Meghan watching from Morocco. I am thankful to colleagues in the Foreign and Civil Services; local employees overseas; and counterparts across our interagency and armed services for their collegiality over my three decades of public service.

If confirmed, I will work closely with Congress to advance U.S. interests in Cambodia, promoting democracy, human rights, and fundamental freedoms; building on the strong support the United States enjoys among the Cambodian public; and strengthening cooperation on our vision for the Indo-Pacific.

Representing my country, as a Peace Corps volunteer in West Africa and for 26 years as a diplomat, has been an honor. I benefitted from my upbringing in Vermont, where I was exposed to the value of public service. I have spent much of my career on Southeast Asia and, if confirmed, look forward to further contributions in this critical part of the world.

Cambodia is the product of an impressive ancient civilization, admired throughout the world. The tumultuous 20th century, however, proved challenging. I started my diplomatic career in 1992, a point of inflection for Cambodia when the U.N. Thank you, members of the committee, for your consideration of my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you, Secretary Murphy, and who is watching from Morocco?

Mr. Murphy. My daughter Meghan is there studying, taking a gap year, Senator, studying Arabic for the year before she starts university.

Senator GARDNER. Well, it is a little bit of a different time zone. So thank you very much. She is doing a great job. So you are going a great job. Thank you.

Mr. Murphy. Much appreciated. We appreciate her support, too.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you very much.

Mr. Klecheski, actually, Ambassador Matthews, Secretary Murphy, I am going to start with just a question for all three of you.

Senator Markey and I have worked on a bill called the Asia Reassurance Initiative Act, ARIA. ARIA is built around three sort of pillars—economic pillar, security pillar, rule of law.

Provides funding for an Asia-Pacific Security Initiative, $1.5 billion authorization for 5 years every year to help counterterrorism training, military capacity-building, those kinds of things. Economy, talks about the promotion of bilateral, multilateral trade engagement opportunities. Again, capacity-building for additional trade in the countries that you will be serving and the countries you are serving with today. And then, of course, rule of law and democracy, provides additional funding to help address issues like human rights, civil society, and what we can do to engage that voice of America with and throughout the region.
So I will just start with you, Mr. Klecheski. A bill that is built upon the premise of reestablishing—not reestablishing, excuse me, but bolstering U.S. presence in the region, what does it mean to you, and how could you use the tools of a bill like ARIA?

Mr. KLECHESKI. Thank you for the question, Senator.

Indeed, there has been a lot of programming with regard to Mongolia to support its independence, strengthen its human rights, improve its governance, but there is a lot more to be done, and that is particularly true at a time when China and Russia, the two large neighbors of Mongolia, are seeking to increase their influence in a country where they already have significant influence.

So having more resources across a wide range of areas, and I mentioned some of those in my statement, would be extremely useful in terms of reasserting the commitment of the United States. A commitment that I think is well understood, but nonetheless is worthy of reassertion and reinforcement, shall we say, in a country like Mongolia at this very critical moment.

So we would certainly welcome those kinds of resources. And that kind of statement of support, I think, is equally important across the wide range of issues that you raised and some of which I mentioned in my own comments.

Thank you, Senator.

Senator GARDNER. Ambassador Matthews?

Ambassador MATTHEWS. Mr. Chairman—excuse me, Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned earlier, there is—we have very substantial military-to-military ties with Brunei. But I think since the recent incidents in Marawi, there has been a significant uptick in interest on the part of Brunei, particularly in counterterrorism training, and we hope to be able to continue to expand working with Brunei on that.

When it comes to rule of law, again, the interests that we have in the South China Sea, I think, are consonant with those of Brunei. We respect their sovereignty. We respect the rights of all claimants to be able to resolve their issues and their overlapping claims in a peaceful way, consistent with international law, and I think ARIA can be helpful in supporting programs that help emphasize how to go about doing that.

Thank you, Senator.

Secretary Murphy?

Mr. MURPHY. Thank you very much, Senator Gardner.

And I want say at the outset how much we appreciate the acts of Congress on the Indo-Pacific, not just on the Asia initiative that you cite, but the BUILD Act, doubling the financing available from $30 billion to $60 billion, increasing flexibility with political risk insurance and equity lending. This will make a big difference in the region, but your messaging, in particular on the rule of law and governance, has been heard resoundingly.

Cambodia is a country that has made a lot of progress in recent decades, remarkable, recovering from a period of utter devastation. And they have a lot to show for it in terms of their economic growth, the space for civil society, and indeed, a constitution that provides a multiparty democracy. The elections that they held in 2017 were quite remarkable.
That all, however, has deteriorated with elections this year at the national level. And hearing the strong voice from Congress helps us considerably, and if confirmed, it is a message I bring. The United States is quite unified. We would like to see a reversal in Cambodia of this deterioration for Cambodia to resume its place of political growth and expansion, and the merits that have been benefitted to the public of Cambodia.

Senator Gardner. Thank you.

And Mr. Klecheski, to all of you again, whether it is Mongolia, Brunei, or Cambodia, what more can we be doing to assure our allies throughout the region that they no longer simply have to turn to China for economic or security opportunities? You mentioned the BUILD Act, we mentioned ARIA, but how else can we develop stronger opportunities to work with them economically as well?

Mr. Klecheski. Thank you, Senator.

Indeed, reinforcing that message is very important. And some of the issues we have already mentioned are important. I would say in the case of Mongolia, the MCC is a very important symbol. It is important economically for a country that—whose capital is really struggling with a fundamental issue, which is the availability and quality of water.

But it is much more than that. MCC, as you well know, sir, also involves a great deal of governance training, and that is important in terms of economic influence as well because strong governance plays very much into the hands of the U.S. rather than some other countries. So, in that regard, that is one area where we will be doing more.

But rule of law, I would say, and governance are very important issues with regard to the economy. There is much more that can be done.

Senator Gardner. Thank you, Mr. Klecheski.

And I am out of time, but I would just say this, we talked about it in the office. If you buy a Caterpillar tractor in Mongolia, you do not necessarily refer to it as a Caterpillar, you call it a Wagner. They call it a Wagner because the of Wagner company headquartered out of Denver, Colorado, that has a lot of employees there. So we are excited about the relationship, economic relationship that Colorado has with Mongolia.

Senator Markey?

Senator Markey. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, very much.

Mr. Murphy, I am particularly concerned with the attacks on all independent voices, but especially the free press, since most Cambodia media is under the control of Hun Sen, his family, and the ruling party. How would you use your role as Ambassador to reiterate America's strong interest in maintaining a free press amid a crackdown that has included the shuttering of the Cambodia Daily, Radio Free Asia's Phnom Penh Bureau, the band of FM radio stations carrying Radio Free Asia and Voice of America, and the jailing of independent journalists, including two former RFA reporters?

Mr. Murphy. Senator, first, I want to share the concerns that you express. I have the same concerns, as does the administration, and we have made that clear.
I think we have reason to be encouraged because Cambodia in the past has demonstrated there is room for a free press and a vibrant civil society. The backsliding that has occurred over the last year and a half is incredibly disappointing and unnecessary. Cambodia can be, and it has demonstrated it can be, a multiparty democracy. If I am confirmed, I will bring the strong message of Congress and the administration, work with all stakeholders, including civil society, other partners, international organizations, to strongly urge the authorities to resume and expand the space for media.

You are absolutely correct in citing the closing down of the Cambodia Daily, the restrictions on Voice of America, and Radio Free Asia broadcast, but also let me add that the Cambodian government invited out of the country the National Democratic Institute. NDI had worked successfully for over 20 years in the country. That was an unnecessary step. We would like to see those steps reversed.

Senator Markey. Now, let me ask you about the sanctions on Hun Sen and his regime. Have we exhausted targeted sanctions? Should we examine further steps such as reevaluating the U.S. provision of Generalized System of Preferences benefits to Cambodia?

Mr. Murphy. Thank you, Senator.

Citing the backsliding, again, the administration responded to the concerns about the diminished space for democracy and civil society by imposing visa restrictions. Those apply to individuals who have contributed to backsliding and the closing of space and on one occasion have been expanded. That is an authority the Secretary of State has. We continue to watch that and would consider expanding that tool further.

You cite GSP trade benefits. Cambodia is a big beneficiary. That has provided employment for many Cambodians, particularly women, I would note, and helped the economy. We think, in fact, that trade and expanding that $3.5 billion in two-way trade can help create more opportunities, including for civil society. But we are not alone on this. We are working with—for example, our European friends are closely scrutinizing what they call Everything But Arms, the equivalent of their trade benefits, and that is under review now. We will continue to look at all tools available to us, sir.

Senator Markey. I would urge you to closely examine that as an additional tool, which you can use in order to put pressure on this government.

In your current role as a senior official at the East Asia Bureau at the State Department, you helped oversee the U.S. policy response to the humanitarian crisis in Burma and the Burmese military assault against the Rohingya. I am deeply concerned by the fact that the crisis continues one year after the attacks with nearly 1 million Rohingya in refugee camps in Bangladesh, and there appears to be no solution to allow for the safe and voluntary return of the Rohingya back to Rakhine State.

Yesterday, the legal firm that the State Department worked with to investigate the 2017 attacks produced its full report. In it, the investigator said that based on the evidence, there are reasonable grounds to believe that crimes against humanity, genocide, and war crimes have been committed against the Rohingya. The State Department had access to this data in the production of its own report on the atrocities committed in Rakhine State, yet we are still waiting for a final determination from the Secretary of State on how to categorize these attacks.

Do you have any idea why Secretary Pompeo has not made a determination of the violence committed against the Rohingya? Based on the evidence we now have, do you believe the violence committed against the Rohingya was ethnic cleansing, crimes against humanity, or genocide?

Mr. Murphy. Senator, we share the profound concerns of you and many of your colleagues here in the U.S. Senate and in Congress about the humanitarian disaster in Rakhine State. The treatment of the Rohingya has been appalling and it has been the case for many decades. I was with Vice President Pence just a few weeks ago in Singapore when he met with state counselor Aung San Suu Kyi and made it clear that the abuses inflicted on the Rohingya people are unacceptable and without excuse.

Our Secretary of State has made a determination that ethnic cleansing took place. We continue to review all information available, and the finding of ethnic cleansing does not preclude further determinations. However, the body of information available does keep us squarely in pursuit of accountability for those abuses.

Also, efforts to meet the humanitarian needs of the Rohingya people. Close to 1 million have sought refuge in Bangladesh, neighboring Bangladesh, and have many needs. We are proud to be the leading donor.

But on the accountability, we have taken many actions. We have, using the tools provided to us by Congress—specifically, the Global Magnitsky Act—we have sanctioned seven individuals and entities. We have supported the U.N. Fact-Finding Mission. We have supported the U.N. Special Rapporteur for Human Rights in Myanmar, and we are continuing to support the U.N. Secretary General’s special envoy on improving relations between Burma and the United Nations organizations. We are in full pursuit, sir, of accountability for egregious human rights abuses. That is clear.

Senator Markey. Well, in my opinion, you cannot be too tough on Burma. You cannot hit them hard enough. You cannot call them out enough. So that is my view. It is just an absolute atrocity. It must end.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator Gardner. Thank you, Senator Markey.

Senator Rubio?

Senator Rubio. Thank you.

Mr. Murphy, you were—in your role at the time in the State Department—your role on October of 2016, you were in the bureau that oversaw East Asia. This was part—Myanmar, Burma was part of your portfolio. Is that an accurate assessment?

Mr. Murphy. Senator, I was in a different capacity than I am now, but Burma was among the countries.

Senator Rubio. Were you at that time the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for EAP?

Mr. Murphy. I was not. I was the Deputy Assistant Secretary.

Senator Rubio. Okay. Right. Principal Deputy Assistant or just—irrespective, you were in that bureau. Let me ask you, what was your position at that time regarding imposing targeted sanctions on Burma and Burmese officials in the wake of the violence that took place in 2016?

Mr. Murphy. In 2016, sir, I was the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Southeast Asia. And I had an opportunity, in fact, to travel to Burma at that time and have made subsequent visits as well. The attacks that you are talking about and the violence did occur in 2016, again at much greater scale in 2017. This is not new. The Rohingya population has been, in my view, one of the most repressed, discriminated against populations anywhere in the world. And we have worked for decades on trying to protect their rights, help them achieve fundamental rights denied them, including the ability to——

Senator Rubio. Mr. Murphy, I do not mean to be rude because I will run out of time. I just wanted to know what was your position? There was an internal debate within the administration, it has been documented, between those in the human rights department and those overseeing our diplomatic efforts. Can you tell us what your position was with regards to recommendations on whether or not to impose targeted sanctions on senior military leaders responsible for the abuses in 2016?

Mr. Murphy. Senator, I think, you might be referring to 2017 when the attacks took place in August committed by a so-called entity called ARSA against security forces, and the disproportionate response began the series of abuses that led to exodus. I have been a very firm supporter, sir——

Senator Rubio. I am referring to the October 2016 violence, which was the first initial wave—in October of 2016. You are familiar with that wave of violence?

Mr. Murphy. Yes, Senator, I am.

Senator Rubio. And at that time, were you engaged or not in the internal debate about whether or not to impose sanctions on Burmese military leaders?

Mr. Murphy. I have been part of our internal deliberations in response to these attacks for the past few years.

Senator Rubio. Yes. So is it possible for you to tell us on which side of that debate were you on? We all are aware, and it has been documented extensively by former officials of the previous administration, there was an internal conversation about whether or not to sanction senior Burmese officials or not, given sort of the progress that was allegedly being made on democracy. Can you share with us your position was at the time or your view of it was at the time regarding sanctions on senior Burmese military officials?

Mr. Murphy. Senator, if I could, I think the deliberations are a constant theme of the shaping of foreign policy, and I am not really in a position to reveal individual positions. But the results are incredibly important. We have sanctioned, under the Global Magnitsky Act, seven individuals and entities. I am fully supportive of those results, and I am fully supportive of ongoing efforts to achieve accountability for the egregious abuses that have been inflicted on the Rohingya people.
Senator Rubio. So, just so I can be clear, you do not feel you can tell us what you were arguing for at the time because those were internal deliberations?

Mr. Murphy. Well, Senator, I am incredibly supportive of our ability to use the tools provided to us by Congress, including identifying individuals responsible for abuses and atrocities.

Senator Rubio. I know. But I want to go back to—I do not want to belabor the point, but I just want to know if I can get an answer or not on this particular point? In the aftermath of the violence in October of 2016, there was, we know, an internal debate within State Department among different factions or groups about whether or not there should be sanctions against military officials in Burma responsible for this. And there was one camp that was saying, no, because we were making progress on democratization, we do not want to slow that down, and another group that was arguing human rights need to take precedence.

And my question is, were you involved in that debate? I think you told us you were involved in all the deliberations regarding Burma. And what at that time was your position, not hindsight, but at that time? And I understand if you feel like you cannot tell us what your position was because it was an internal deliberation. That is fine. I just need—I just want that question answered one way or the other.

Mr. Murphy. Sir, at no time have I been opposed to the use of any of the tools available to us——

Senator Rubio. Okay.

Mr. Murphy [continuing]. Sanctions or restrictions.

Senator Rubio. So, at no time did you oppose recommendations from within State and from outside human rights organizations to impose targeted sanctions on senior Burmese military officials? That is accurate?

Mr. Murphy. That is correct.

Senator Rubio. Okay. That was the question I wanted to get an answer for. Thank you.

And I think part of our—the trouble we have had, of course, over Burma in the past couple of years is the responses during the previous administration where sanctions were lifted, I think mistakenly so. And there are a few that remain in place, but despite evidence that there were conflicts, continuing violence being committed within the country, there were efforts taken and sanctions relief given prematurely, in my opinion. And I think is it safe to say that you supported the toughest sanctions possible at the direction of the Secretary at the time?

Mr. Murphy. Senator Gardner, I think it is important to call it like it is. It is not business as usual with Burma. We still enact the JADE Act that Congress provided us the tools, restrictions on assistance, and engagement with the military, the Tatmadaw, the armed forces of Burma. The sanctions relief that you refer to——

Senator Gardner. I will remind you, too, though, in the Defense Authorization Act we actually reversed some language that was written in the Defense Authorization Act that would have allowed further military engagement. That language came from somewhere. So I think that is concern we have.
Mr. Murphy. Yes, sir. Referring to the sanctions relief of several years ago, it was the request of the civilian-elected government in Burma, the first elected government in nearly 50 years and the opinion of that government that sanctions had run their course. That does not dictate our policy, but that was an important contribution to our deliberations on how to help—how to help this country transition from authoritarian rule to civilian elected government. It is an ongoing transition, predictably an incredibly bumpy one, but it is one that we need to see succeed for our national interest and for the interest of all 60 million Burmese people.

Senator Gardner. There is no doubt we need it to succeed. That is absolutely right. But I think we also have to make sure that U.S. values are represented, that we do not prematurely end sanctions when the objectives of our country have clearly not been achieved. And I think that was the case that we were worried about several years ago when these sanctions were lifted.

Mr. Klecheski, quick question. Mongolia and North Korea, what more should we be doing to make sure Mongolia is engaging North Korea in a productive matter toward denuclearization?

Mr. Klecheski. This is, indeed, an important question, Mr. Senator. So, Mongolia has made a clear commitment to the U.N. Security Council resolutions. To the best of our knowledge, they have been implementing those. At the same time, Mongolia does have a relationship with North Korea, partly because of its communist past and because of a desire to continue that. So we should continue, as we have been doing, maintaining the pressure and highlighting to DPRK the long-term commitment that all, the entire community has for denuclearization.

In other words, it is a goal that we all share. And in his recent visit here, the Prime Minister of Mongolia, again, reiterated that commitment and highlight regularly in diplomatic discussions the importance of the kind of maximum pressure campaign that we have been pursuing.

Thank you, sir.

Senator Gardner. Thank you.

Senator Markey?

Senator Markey. Quickly, Mr. Murphy, on the demining efforts in Cambodia, there is a goal of meeting it by 2025. It looks dubious that this goal can be met. What else can we do to make sure that that legacy—the United States' relationship with Cambodia—is dealt with to telescope the timeframe it is going to take to remove those mines?

Mr. Murphy. I appreciate the question, Senator. The country was incredibly heavily mined over many years of conflict, conflict internally to Cambodia, conflict with neighbors. And indeed, Cambodia was caught up in the Indochina, the broader Indochina conflict. We have been a proud donor working with civil society and other partners inside the country and international partners to help that country address its serious mining issue.

Senator Markey. Do you have specific steps that you would recommend to us right now?

Mr. Murphy. I would, sir. I think it merits continued U.S. support. We are not the only donor. We want to leverage that to en-encourage other donors to contribute and, indeed, entities with inside Cambodia. But I think congressional support for demining is in the interest of the United States.

Senator MARKEY. So, would you support increasing the funding in order to give the U.S. more leverage to get other countries to increase their support?

Mr. MURPHY. Well, I am very cautious when it comes to asking Congress for funding. I think we have broader administration policy to approach you with priorities squarely lined up. But I can say this, U.S. funding has been instrumental in that country and puts us in a position as a leading donor. And it has saved countless lives, including among vulnerable populations like women and children.

Senator MARKEY. And one final question for you, Mr. Matthews. In Brunei, the government has a dismal record regarding the treatment of the LGBT community. What would you recommend that we do to encourage them to be fairer in their treatment of that population?

Ambassador MATTHEWS. Thank you, Senator, for that question. We, of course, consistently support fair and equal treatment for all citizens of all countries, and we will continue to ensure that that is a position that we clearly——

Senator MARKEY. Yes. So homosexuality is illegal in Brunei——

Ambassador MATTHEWS. It is.

Senator MARKEY [continuing]. And punishable by death. What would you recommend that we do in Brunei specifically?

Ambassador MATTHEWS. So, in Brunei in particular, we need to ensure that Brunei is—we are encouraging Brunei to ensure that it meets all the requirements of the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights. We need to ensure that they follow up and follow through on the initial steps that they took when they signed.

Senator MARKEY. And that would mean not making homosexuality illegal? Is that the position you would take?

Ambassador MATTHEWS. That is correct.

Senator MARKEY. And that it should not be punishable by death? Would that be the position you would bring?

Ambassador MATTHEWS. Absolutely. That is absolutely the case. Senator MARKEY. I think that is very important. I think it is a very important human rights message and should be encouraged using whatever means possible.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Senator GARDNER. Senator Rubio?

Senator RUBIO. Thank you, and I will be brief.

Back to Mr. Murphy, I just want you to explain kind of my line of questioning. We see it now even with the Saudi Arabia situation, there is always a tension between respect and defense of human rights and geopolitical reality. It is a constant balancing act.

In the case of Myanmar, Burma the previous administration made a decision that engagement would lead to democratic opening, and there were steps in that direction. And there was an argument that anything that disrupted that would be problematic because, in the end, finding a more open space for the vast majority of the population was better than nothing at all.
Embedded in it, of course, this is a country that already has very significant ethnic divisions to begin with. And in the case of the Rohingya, frankly, they are hated by every sector of power there and sort of in a way that makes no sense in my mind and is certainly evil. But nonetheless, it manifested itself in this horrifying atrocity. From my perspective, when someone, Ambassadors—particularly in countries such as these—have a very important role to play, and what they speak out in and what they say, it sets the tone and, in many ways, sets policy by their willingness to step forward.

And we have seen in the past how courageous Ambassadors have been able to set the tone at key moments within a country, which is why I ask this. It is important for me to know about nominees, how they balance these two realities. We do have to have realism in foreign policy, but we also have to infuse it with human rights, which I believe, frankly, is in our pragmatic interest, not to mention our moral interest, which is why to me it is so important.

I recognize what the previous administration’s decision was. I hope that in hindsight some would reconsider whether there were some strategic mistakes made. And I do not hold the current administration blameless in that front. There is yet to be a determination made.

Yesterday, and I think Senator Markey alluded to this already, the Public International Law and Policy Group, they said with regard to the crime of genocide, this report concludes that there are reasonable grounds to believe that genocide was committed against the Rohingya. The U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum published a statement yesterday that they believe there is compelling evidence that the Burmese military committed ethnic cleansing, crimes against humanity, and genocide against the Rohingya.

So, increasing number of groups have looked at the fact patterns that the State Department has available to them as well and concluded that genocide has been committed. And I understand that that term, that terminology triggers all sorts of legal requirements and the like on international forums. But nonetheless, there has to be a decision made.

So my question—I am not even asking you what the recommendation is. I just want to know has EAP made a recommendation to the Secretary on a determination with regards to genocide or the crimes committed? I am not asking you to tell me what the recommendation is. I just—because I understand that is an internal deliberation. Could you tell us if a recommendation has been made, or do you know if a recommendation has been made?

Mr. Murphy. Senator, first, I appreciate the attention you give to human rights and, I think more broadly, democracy. I share that need to prioritize these issues. It has defined my entire career. I lived in Burma a decade and a half ago under that country’s military rule. And the Burmese people and the United States does not want to see a return to that kind of authoritarian governance situation.

With regards to what we call the atrocities that have taken place inside Rakhine State, I noted the determination that ethnic cleansing occurred. And we are in hot pursuit of full accountability for those abuses and atrocities. That does not preclude other determinations that are available for a Secretary of State, for example, crimes against humanity or genocide.

We continue to gather all the information. The report that you cite feeds into that body of information about what transpired, and where and when, inside Rakhine State. We will continue to avail ourselves of those tools and those possibilities going forward.

Senator Rubio. But the specific question about whether a recommendation has been made, is that something you cannot answer, if a recommendation has been made to the Secretary on a determination yet? Again, I am not asking for what the recommendation is, just whether one has been made or not?

Mr. Murphy. Sir, I think I am in a best position to tell you that there are robust deliberations and discussions inside the State Department with other agencies to help shape and inform our policies, make these determinations. Nothing has been ruled out about future determinations. We are solid in the fact that ethnic cleansing took place, which is no small matter. And it allows us to remain very, very firm in pursuit of full accountability, working with our partners, U.N. agencies, stakeholders inside the country.

Senator Markey. If I may just follow up, Mr. Chairman? I just want to follow up on Senator Rubio because I do agree with him very strongly that it is important to know whether this administration thinks it is ethnic cleansing, is it a crime against humanity, or is it genocide? And what is the plan this administration has to release that determination? A lot of the policy that we have in our country—and the way the rest of the world is going to view this government in Burma is going to depend upon the judgment that is made.

So, it has not been made, and I agree with Senator Rubio very strongly that this is very important determination. I feel strongly that it is genocide, but to the extent to which this administration must speak, Secretary Pompeo is repeating what Secretary Tillerson said about ethnic cleansing. But I think the plan is actually something that goes beyond that, and I just would like to echo the thought of Senator Rubio.

Senator Gardner. Yes, I am going to go out on a limb here and suggest that the question Senator Rubio asked was not answered, and I would just encourage you in the coming days to answer the question. It is a pretty clear question. The question is, if you were in a capacity in your previous role to make a recommendation to the Secretary about violence and actions, activities against the Rohingya in Burma, whether that is ethnic cleansing, whether that is genocide, and what recommendations you have made to the Secretary in how to respond to that. Is that correct?

Senator Rubio. It is. And look, I, on the one hand, appreciate the idea that if you work someplace and you have made recommendations, but there has not been a final decision made, to announce that publicly at a forum ties the hands of the Secretary. So I respect that part. That is why I did not ask what the recommendation was.

On the other hand, when a decision is made, assuming, for example, that they decide not to determine it is genocide, they are going to say it was based on the advice of professional staff who looked at it.
So, I just want to know whether or not a recommendation has been made. And perhaps you are in a position to need to go back and get clearance to tell us the answer to that, since you are currently employed there now and have been involved in that and have not been authorized to potentially say that.

The bottom line is this—part of our role is oversight over the State Department. And I understand that realism has an important role to play in our politics. It is just—you know, the world is a dangerous place with a lot of bad actors in it. But I do believe so does human rights. And in many cases, we are just playing games with names here and words and titles for what we want to call it. Ethnic cleansing is genocide. It is just the legal terminology that triggers actions that perhaps some do not want to take in the broader geopolitical perspective.

I would like to just know whether a recommendation has been made or not, not what the recommendation is. We will find out soon enough.

Senator MARKEY. And again, if I may, Cambodia suffered a genocide, and that is what this hearing is really about. It is about the history, but also the future, how you deal with the consequences of that. And I think the more quickly we come to grips with it and name it for what it is, the more quickly we put in place policies that we can look back on and be proud that we took the strongest possible steps.

Senator GARDNER. Secretary Murphy?

Mr. MURPHY. Thank you very much, Senators.

First, I just want to share the concerns about the atrocities and human rights abuses committed in Rakhine State. We fully concur with those concerns and pursue accountability.

Distinguished Senators, a year ago or so, I had the opportunity to testify at a hearing before this full committee on the situation in Rakhine State. There were many members pressing for a determination on ethnic cleansing. At that time, I was in a similar position. I was not able to reveal deliberations and the path to a determination because of the process involved.

That determination was subsequently made—ethnic cleansing. I am now in a position to say we fully supported that across our building, including within the East Asian and Pacific Bureau.

I hope you will be fair to me now with regards to any subsequent determinations. Those are not ruled out. Inside our department, we have many experts. Many more, far more versed on the legal aspects with regards to a determination of crimes against humanity or genocide.

Those deliberations continue. And I think, Senator Rubio, you are correct. We do not want to tie the hands of our Secretary of State. He needs the ability to hear all information, explore all information. We will continue to gather facts as they become available.

Remember, Rakhine State is a part of that country largely off limits to humanitarian assistance and international media. We are pressing for that kind of access. We take onboard all the reports available, and we will pursue regardless of where determinations go. The fact that ethnic cleansing has taken place, we have made that determination, that is incredibly serious. We know abuses took place and atrocities, and we will not stop until we achieve accountability. We will pursue all efforts.

Senator GARDNER. Secretary Murphy, I just want to encourage you to continue your conversations with Senator Rubio until he gets an answer that he can work with.

Senator RUBIO. If I may, Mr. Chairman, just to point out the idea that that part of the country is off limits to humanitarian assistance, aid, and human rights observers is pretty clear evidence that there is something going on there. It reminds me of why Saudis did not want to give the Turks access to their consulate for a number of days until the cleaning crew got there. It is—that alone is pretty indicative of——

Senator GARDNER. And Secretary Murphy, remind me, you, yourself, were denied access to Rakhine when you visited several years back. Is that correct?

Mr. MURPHY. No, sir. I did have access.

Senator GARDNER. Where were you denied?

Mr. MURPHY. I went to Sittwe, the capital of Rakhine State and the environs. In past decades, I have been able to visit Northern Rakhine State, where I could see firsthand almost 20 years ago——

Senator GARDNER. You were denied access in certain areas, though, correct, your visit several years ago?

Mr. MURPHY. No, sir, not me personally.

Senator GARDNER. Okay.

Mr. MURPHY. I did access refugee camps in the vicinity of Sittwe in Rakhine State. At that time, those were our requests.

Senator GARDNER. Yes.

Senator RUBIO. Was that after 2016?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes, sir.

Senator RUBIO. When was the last time you had access to the area?

Mr. MURPHY. In 2017, roughly October 2017.

Senator GARDNER. And you were not denied? For whatever rea-on, I apologize if I had that wrong. I was under—thinking that you were denied access. I am sorry if that is incorrect.

Mr. MURPHY. No, sir. That is not correct. There may have been some media reports that speculated that at the time, but we were not denied where we made the request to go.

Now I want to clarify, Senator, there has been humanitarian access, some media access. We find it inadequate. We would like to see more. Our Ambassador to Burma, Scott Marciel, has been able to go to Rakhine State, including Northern Rakhine State and, for that matter, other parts of the country that are experiencing conflict as well. Just this week, he was in Northeast Burma, where Kachin State and Shan State continue to suffer from internal conflict.

Senator GARDNER. Thank you.

Thanks again to everyone for attending today’s hearing, and thanks for your willingness to serve and your public service over the past many years. The witnesses, grateful for your appearance today.

For the information of members, the record will remain open until the close of business on Thursday, including members—for members to submit questions for the record. And I would ask kindly that you return your homework as quickly as possible, and the responses will be made a part of the record.

Senator GARDNER. Thanks to this committee.
The hearing is now adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 10:28 a.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO

MICHAEL S. KLECHESKI BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, promoting democracy and human rights have been key foci of my work. That began early in my career, when as a political officer in Embassy Moscow in what was then the USSR, human rights was the core of my portfolio, and included regularly meeting with and reporting on the circumstances of human rights activists and ‘refuseniks’ (Soviet citizens of Jewish faith whom the authorities had precluded from receiving exit visas to emigrate). As many of those people subsequently commented to me, my efforts and those of our team demonstrated the commitment of the U.S. to human rights, as well as lending those people much-needed encouragement in their often difficult circumstances. I continued that effort in my subsequent assignments in Russia, finding creative ways, in that country’s changing political context, to make clear the U.S. commitment to human rights and contributing to the formation of U.S. policy on that set of issues. As Political Counselor at the U.S. Mission in Geneva, I led a team that worked predominantly in the U.N. Human Rights Council, often serving as the USG’s senior representative in that body’s proceedings. In that capacity, I articulated the U.S. position on human rights and democracy concerns, engaged informally with other delegations and with non-governmental organizations to promote our positions, and highlighted our concerns with the Council and its workings. Those efforts contributed to passage of numerous resolutions condemning the human rights behavior of various countries and proposing measures to monitor and improve their behavior. As a Team Leader of a Provincial Reconstruction Team in Iraq, I led the effort to foster key elements of democracy, such as a free press and independent judiciary, in the province in which I worked. The effort was challenging, but we succeeded in strengthening the media environment, boosting the work of NGOs involved in women’s and other issues, and much else. These are among the highlights of a career in which human rights and democracy issues have enjoyed pride of place, and I am proud that it has had an impact in furthering these key American values.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Mongolia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Mongolia has held multiple free and fair elections since its transition to democracy in 1990, including several peaceful transitions of power between competing political parties. Some voters, dissatisfied with the choice of candidates for the most recent presidential elections in 2017, cast blank ballots to demonstrate their commitment to democracy, the first time this was seen in Mongolia. The country is host to a lively free press and growing civil society. Mongolia’s judicial sector needs to increase its capacity to strengthen the rule of law and enhance transparency. Public corruption and institutional weakness stand as the most serious threats to Mongolia’s democracy. These interrelated challenges can erode public trust in Mongolia’s democratic governing institutions, now barely a generation old.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Mongolia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Our shared democratic values are the cornerstone of the U.S.-Mongolia relationship, and Mongolia’s democracy is its best defense in support of its continued sovereignty and independence. The U.S. Government has long worked to promote transparency and good governance in Mongolia through support to civil society, exchange programs for leaders and public officials to share good governance practices, and training for law enforcement, and if confirmed, I look forward to continuing these efforts. Combined, these serve to address public corruption by promoting a more open and just society. Any effort to combat corruption will encounter resistance from those who benefit from it, in particular in a country only recently removed from its communist past, but Mongolia has overcome great challenges before; I am confident a brighter future awaits if we keep up the fight.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. One of the best ongoing U.S. investments in support of Mongolian democracy and governance is the Leaders Advancing Democracy (LEAD) Project, funded through USAID. LEAD connects young democratic leaders in Mongolia not only with their counterparts in the United States, but also in the region, building networks that improve their resilience and resourcefulness. The State Department’s International Visitor Leadership Program, or IVLP, is also a highly effective and targeted tool that allows us to provide timely and relevant capacity building to leaders across civil society, government, academia, and elsewhere. The Department of State also funds Export Control and Related Border Security (EXBS) and International Narcotics and Law Enforcement (INL) programs, which are helping to improve Mongolia’s border security and sovereignty. Similarly, Open World Leadership Center exchange programs for judges and members of parliament have greatly contributed to Mongolia’s democratic development. If confirmed, I would continue to support these lines of effort.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Mongolia? What steps will you take to proactively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Our engagement with Mongolian civil society is as old as the bilateral relationship itself. U.S. civil society organizations were a motive force in Mongolia’s transition to a democratic, free-market society. We continue our close cooperation with the Mongolian NGOs that have followed in their footsteps. I view continuing our engagement as an invaluable force-multiplier for our efforts to strengthen and reinforce U.S.-Mongolian shared values.

Mongolia currently places few restrictions on the activities of NGOs and civil society, but is now considering revisions to the statutes governing their registration and operations. If confirmed, I would closely monitor related developments.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Engaging with all parties in the political process is essential to promoting U.S. interests—including our interest in underlining the legitimacy of Mongolia’s existing multiparty democracy. The Mongolian people have demonstrated repeatedly that they will hold their elected officials accountable, leading to several peaceful democratic transitions of power since Mongolia’s first free elections in 1990. Today’s opposition could very well be tomorrow’s government; it is in our interest to maintain constructive relationships with groups across the political spectrum. Mongolia’s youth will be its next generation of political leaders and decision makers. If confirmed, I would consistently advocate for broader inclusion of women, minorities, and youth in the political process.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Mongolia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Mongolia?

Answer. Mongolia is fortunate to possess an active press that represents a wide range of perspectives largely without restriction. Mongolia’s press does need to develop a stronger capacity and will to verify information before disseminating it. However, Mongolia’s free press is an essential asset in protecting the country’s democracy and independence and a key player in fighting corruption by holding political and business leaders accountable. As such, if confirmed, I would place importance on its institutionalization and development.
Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Mongolia?

Answer. As a vibrant democracy, Mongolia’s media and information environment is varied and accessible to a range of actors. This is fundamentally a strength of Mongolian society, and reflects our shared values of openness and inclusiveness. As elsewhere, the price of this openness is vulnerability to those who seek to leverage it to advance other agendas. If confirmed, I would work with the embassy team to continue U.S. efforts to strengthen media and civil society—including through programs such as LEAD and training for journalists—providing a toolkit to increase resilience in the face of disinformation and propaganda. Regular information sharing about foreign influence efforts with our partners in the Mongolian government would also remain an important element of our effort to support Mongolia’s preservation of its sovereignty.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Mongolia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Mongolian law protects the rights of workers to join independent unions and professional organizations, along with the right to conduct strikes and engage in collective bargaining in most circumstances. If confirmed, I will actively engage with both the Mongolian government and labor groups to ensure these laws are enforced fairly and effectively.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Mongolia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Mongolia? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Mongolia?

Answer. Defending the basic dignity and human rights of all people is a core tenet of our foreign policy and an essential element of a healthy democratic society. Mongolia’s new criminal code, effective last year, prohibits discrimination based on sexual orientation or gender identity, advancing legal protections for the LGBTI community. However, enforcement of these provisions has been sparse, and discrimination and violence against LGBTI individuals remains prevalent, especially in Mongolia’s rural areas. If confirmed, I would use our strong and growing relationship within Mongolian law enforcement, prosecutors, and judges to enhance Mongolia’s enforcement of these provisions and to raise the profile of offenses against LGBTI individuals within the criminal justice community.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO MICHAEL S. KLECHESKI BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career, promoting democracy and human rights have been key foci of my work. That began early in my career, when as a political officer in Embassy Moscow in what was then the USSR, human rights was the core of my portfolio, and included regularly meeting with and reporting on the circumstances of human rights activists and “refuseniks” (Soviet citizens of Jewish faith whom the authorities had precluded from receiving exit visas to emigrate). I continued that effort in my subsequent assignments in Russia, finding creative ways, in that country’s changing political context, to make clear the U.S. commitment to human rights and contributing to the formation of U.S. policy on that set of issues. As Political Counselor at the U.S. Mission in Geneva, I led a team that worked predominantly in the U.N. Human Rights Council, often serving as the USG’s senior representative in that body’s proceedings. In that capacity, I articulated the U.S. position on human rights and democracy concerns, engaged informally with other delegations and with non-governmental organizations to promote our positions, and highlighted our concerns with the Council and its workings. Those efforts contributed to passage of numerous resolutions condemning the human rights behavior of various countries and proposing measures to monitor and improve their behavior. As a Team Leader of a Provincial Reconstruction Team in Iraq, I led the effort to foster key elements of democracy, such as a free press and independent judiciary, in the province in which I worked. The effort was challenging, but we succeeded in strengthening the media environment, boosting the work of NGOs involved in women’s and other issues, and much else. These are among the highlights of a career in which human rights and democracy issues have enjoyed pride of place, and I am proud that it has had an impact in furthering these key American values.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Mongolia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Mongolia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Corruption, abuse of prisoners and detainees by law enforcement, and discrimination and violence against LGBTI individuals stand as the most pressing human rights issues in Mongolia today. All of these actions are prohibited by Mongolian law, but a lack of institutional capacity to support enforcement, along with weak norms in support of their criminalization, inhibit progress on addressing these issues. If confirmed, to make progress I would continue our efforts to build the capacity of Mongolian government and legal institutions, along with encouraging broader transparency and engagement with civil society through initiatives such as the Transparency Agreement signed in 2017. Mongolia is already a vibrant democracy—by providing more avenues through which the Mongolian people may improve their own government, we can assist them in pushing for the responsive government they want.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Mongolia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Corruption is the greatest challenge to Mongolia’s young democracy, as it undermines not only the country’s institutions themselves, but the public’s faith in those institutions. Mongolia’s people are calling for more effective and transparent governance that better addresses and responds to society’s needs. Mongolia’s principal agency for investigating corruption, the Independent Authority Against Corruption, last year increased its workload four times over the previous year. Capacity and financial challenges are real. However, Mongolia has proven over the last 30 years just how much it can change and I am confident the future will bring more positive developments in line with our ideals. Continued U.S. investment in increasing the capacity of Mongolia’s free press, active political participation, and law enforcement and judicial actors will pay dividends as Mongolia continues to look westward in its future.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Mongolia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Our relationships with Mongolian civil society are longstanding and help strengthen our partnership built on shared values. If confirmed, I would continue our robust engagement with NGOs promoting human rights, among other worthy causes. Ensuring that our security assistance and cooperation reinforce human rights is of vital importance. I would work to ensure that our efforts in this arena continue to fully comply with the Leahy Law and support its aims so that vital training and exchanges, such as those at the International Law Enforcement Academy (ILEA) in Bangkok, continue and grow in the future. Of particular note, the Mongolian soldiers who serve in concert with the NATO coalition in Afghanistan and in active roles in U.N. peacekeeping missions enjoy a well-deserved reputation as honorable and reliable.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Mongolia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Mongolia?

Answer. Mongolia’s democratic institutions have largely replaced the repressive practices of its communist past. While political prisoners are not currently an outstanding issue with the Mongolian government, the criminal code continues to allow the imposition of exit bans restricting travel outside the country. If confirmed I would steadfastly work to help Mongolia improve the transparency, neutrality, and impartiality of the criminal justice system in order to ensure that the accused are afforded due process and, if prosecuted, a fair trial.

Question 6. Will you engage with Mongolia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?
Our relationship with Mongolia is built on shared interests and shared values. We maintain robust engagement with the Mongolian government and civil society on human rights, civil rights, and governance. Through grants, exchanges, and training programs, we develop civil society leaders, increase the capacity of government officials, and enhance Mongolia's governance. For example, judicial exchange participants impressed with the transparency and openness of U.S. courts have assisted in the movement to ensure court decisions in Mongolia are accessible to the public. Similarly, our funding has helped to train law enforcement personnel on effective implementation of hate crimes legislation to better protect the LGBTI community. If confirmed, I would continue such efforts.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Mongolia?

Answer. No.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I firmly believe in the importance of diversity, both because it represents American values and because it fosters greater productivity and creativity. Throughout my career, and notably in two assignments as Deputy Chief of Mission (DCM), I have fostered diversity. I have been an active mentor of First- and Second-Tour Officers, and in both DCM positions extended our embassies’ career development programs to include mid-level officers. I have made it a point to ensure diversity in our programs, with a focus on underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service. As DCM in Embassy Manila, I proudly worked with a group of activist colleagues to spearhead an innovative program to promote gender diversity, the Regional Gender Network. Having proven its strong impact in Manila, the program was subsequently extended to many other posts in the East Asia and Pacific Bureau. Diversity is an asset to the Foreign Service, and I would continue my career-long efforts to promote it if confirmed.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I would make the importance of diversity and inclusivity key points in the workings of Embassy Ulaanbaatar. I would do so by highlighting the importance that the State Department and I attach to it. More significantly, I would model my commitment to diversity and inclusivity, drawing on my experience in previous posts, to stress that our post’s commitment would be regular and sustained.

Question 12. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. Political corruption clearly harms democracy and the rule of law throughout the world, which is why I have been proud, in my prior Foreign Service assignments, to work on U.S. Government programs to counter corruption. In Mongolia, political corruption is a serious challenge to democratic governance and the rule of law. A public weary of political corruption has less confidence in its government’s actions and less faith in its decisions. Conflicts of interest impede the government’s ability to enact difficult regulatory and economic reforms. An opaque bureaucracy and weak civil service system leads to questionable decision making and capricious tender selections. Poor enforcement of campaign finance laws undermines the public’s trust in the political system and breed further corruption throughout the government and political class. Mongolia’s continued progress in addressing corruption remains slow. The government in 2016 adopted a National Program Combatting Corruption, and recently introduced more severe punishments for corruption-related offenses for public servants and officials. For example, the criminal code now bans those sentenced for corruption from public service. It also offers immunity from punishment to any person reporting their own bribery of an official at the official’s request. The Independent Authority Against Corruption (IAAC), which the public views as effective, faces an increasing workload without commensurate resources. It is clear that corruption is on the mind of the Mongolian public and some government officials, and we support and encourage these actions. We must also recognize, however, that high-profile corruption scandals continue to emerge regularly and businesses report little reduction in working-level corruption. Mongolia should redouble its efforts.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Mongolia and efforts to address and reduce them by the government of Mongolia?

Answer. Mongolia’s continued progress in addressing corruption remains slow. The government in 2016 adopted a National Program Combatting Corruption, and recently introduced more severe punishments for corruption-related offenses for public servants and officials. For example, the criminal code now bans those sentenced for corruption from public service. It also offers immunity from punishment to any person reporting their own bribery of an official at the official’s request. The Independent Authority Against Corruption (IAAC), which the public views as effective, faces an increasing workload without commensurate resources. It is clear that corruption is on the mind of the Mongolian public and some government officials, and we support and encourage these actions. We must also recognize, however, that high-profile corruption scandals continue to emerge regularly and businesses report little reduction in working-level corruption. Mongolia should redouble its efforts.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Mongolia?

Answer. If confirmed, I would prioritize engagement on multiple fronts. Throughout the Indo-Pacific region, of which Mongolia is a part, we are committed to working with Indo-Pacific nations to create the conditions needed to unlock greater private investment, combat corruption, and secure nations’ autonomy from foreign coercion. I would continue to pursue full implementation of the U.S.-Mongolia Transparency agreement, which would improve Mongolia’s provision of fair and predictable regulation. I would also continue to support efforts by my interagency colleagues to build the capacity of Mongolian law enforcement to combat money laundering, which aids and abets public corruption. Continued investment in Mongolia’s young emerging leaders through exchange programs will promote better future governance practices.

Question 15. If confirmed, will you support efforts to establish a trade preference program focused on cashmere imports from Mongolia?

Answer. By 2020, mining is expected to account for thirty percent of Mongolia’s GDP. Alongside supporting the sustainable utilization of the country’s resource wealth, the United States agrees with Mongolia that economic diversification is an important component of the country’s long-term prosperity and independence. If confirmed, I will work with you and other stakeholders, including my colleagues at USTR, to help Mongolia diversify its exports and markets.

Question 16. How will you work to ensure that Mongolia meets and maintains GSP eligibility requirements (e.g., protection of intellectual property rights, worker protections, level of economic development in country) in order to qualify for trade preferences?

Answer. In September 2018, the United States and Mongolia released a Roadmap for Expanded Economic Partnership that charts a course towards progress on a wide range of issues considered in GSP eligibility. Both sides, for example, expressed a shared interest in improving transparency and protection for intellectual property rights in Mongolia’s economy as part of the Roadmap. We also expressed a desire to continue engagement through the USTR-led Trade and Investment Framework Agreement consultations and to ensure that U.S. economic priorities are advanced through our U.S.-Mongolia Annual Bilateral Consultations. If confirmed, I would continue to press forward along the broad front of our economic engagement with Mongolia.

Question 1. If confirmed, how will you seek to enhance the bilateral relationship with Mongolia, in light of increased Chinese investments and the long-standing relationship with Russia? Are you concerned that our policies will raise geo-political concerns of putting Mongolia in the middle of a broader rivalry for strategic influence?

Answer. The United States has made clear that our approach to a free and open Indo-Pacific excludes no nation. We conduct our relations with Mongolia, an Indo-Pacific partner, in that spirit. Our collaboration with Mongolia focuses on improving transparency, strengthening the rule of law, fighting corruption, and promoting economic sustainability. This engagement with Mongolia is part of the Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative announced by the Vice President on November 17. If confirmed, I would continue these efforts.

We anticipate that Mongolia will continue to seek outside partners for investment to further its economic development, as it has done since its independence. We want American investment to be an important part of that development. By strengthening Mongolia’s capacity to manage investment transparently and sustainably, we enhance its ability to ensure these investments serve the interests of Mongolians and the Mongolian people, to include the nation’s sovereignty and independence. Our partnership with Mongolia fosters the conditions needed to attract greater private investment and improve the ease of doing business there, benefiting all who conduct commerce there.

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. In my role as Ambassador for APEC, I have had the opportunity to work along with my team to promote and support Women’s Economic Empowerment throughout all 21 APEC Economies. Since 2011, we have led efforts in APEC to break down barriers that inhibit women entering and remaining in the workforce. For as we all know, as the participation rate of women in our economies rises, the social benefits are clear: better distribution of income across our societies and better economic, health and education outcomes for all families. By working to ensure that all barriers to women in the workforce are eliminated, we not only strengthen the ability of women to speak out and act in accordance with their interests, we create an environment where their contribution will generate better economic outcomes for everyone. Such outcomes not only support women’s ability to engage successfully in the economic sphere, but in the sphere of social and political rights as well.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Brunei? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Bruneian citizens do not have the ability to choose their government. The sultan rules through hereditary birthright. While the country is a constitutional sultanate, in 1962 the ruler at the time invoked an article of the constitution that allowed him to assume emergency powers. The present sultan continued this practice, which places few limits on his power.

Other challenges include limitations on freedoms of expression, press, assembly, and association. The law gives the Government of Brunei the right to bar distribution of foreign publications and requires distributors of foreign publications to obtain a government permit. The law also allows the Government to close a newspaper without giving prior notice or showing cause. The law provides for prosecution of newspaper publishers, proprietors, or editors who publish anything with an alleged seditious intent.

The Government’s proclamation of emergency powers restricts the right to assemble. Public gatherings of 10 or more persons require a government permit, and police may disband an unofficial assembly of five or more persons deemed likely to cause a disturbance of the peace. The law does not provide for freedom of association. It requires formal groups, including religious, social, business, labor, and cultural organizations, to register with the Registrar of Societies and provide regular reports on membership and finances.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Brunei? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The United States is working to promote civil society, the rule of law, and transparent and accountable governance across the region, including in Brunei, as part of the governance pillar of the Indo-Pacific strategy. The new Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative under this pillar encompasses efforts to empower the region’s citizens, help combat corruption, and strengthen nations’ autonomy. If confirmed, I hope to promote good governance in Brunei that is responsive to the needs of the public and respectful of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Although there are few limits on the sultan’s power, the Government of Brunei has an avowed interest in the economic development of the country. I hope to highlight that weak institutions, corruption, and poor human rights conditions drive away smart private sector investment, and American businesses are motivated to invest in countries that operate transparently, uphold the rule of law, and protect intellectual property.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. In general, the United States does not provide U.S. Government assistance to high-income countries such as Brunei. As part of the new regional Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative, the United States has continuous and ongoing programs supporting good governance, rule of law, civil society, independent media, elections and political processes, and human rights. The Transparency Initiative provides a framework to prioritize those programs and expand work with partners in support of a free and open Indo-Pacific. Although the United States does not generally provide foreign assistance to Brunei, if confirmed I will continue to work with all countries in the region to make them aware of our programs and encourage their support for these initiatives.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Brunei? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs and other members of civil society in Brunei. The United States is committed to protecting and promoting human rights and combatting corruption, advancing a world order that reflects U.S. values and increasing the security of the United States, our allies, and our partners. The strength and vibrancy of all nations depend on an active civil society and robust engagement between government and civil society. I will ensure that this message remains constant in our engagement with the Government of Brunei, including at the highest levels.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Political authority and control rests entirely with the sultan, and there are no political opposition figures and parties in Brunei. The National Development Party is the only registered political party, and it pledged to support the sultan and the Government. If confirmed, I will actively promote good governance, rule of law, civil society, and an independent media. I will also advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth in all government and civil society institutions, as the United States is a strong proponent of the inclusion of diverse and minority voices in political processes around the world.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Brunei on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Brunei?

Answer. Yes, my embassy team and I will actively engage with Brunei on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures. We encourage the Government of Brunei, as we do all countries, to respect freedom of expression, including for members of the press. My team and I will continue to support the development of a more active press, including new on-line publications, through professional training opportunities. I commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Brunei.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes, my embassy team and I will actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Brunei.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Brunei on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with Brunei on the right to form and join independent trade unions. I will continue the United States’ ongoing efforts to support and promote the rights of workers to freedom of association and fair wages, contracts, and working conditions in all countries, including in Brunei.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Brunei, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Brunei? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in Brunei?

Answer. Yes, I commit to using my position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Brunei, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity. Brunei is a deeply traditional, conservative society. Some reports indicate that LGBTI individuals in Brunei avoid disclosing their sexual orientations due to fear of social or legal retribution. Brunei’s laws criminalize sodomy and “carnal intercourse against the order of nature,” which in the past has been interpreted to include sexual relations between men. Brunei’s strict Sharia Penal Code, if fully implemented, would prescribe harsh punishments such as stoning to death for sodomy.

Promoting, protecting, and advancing human rights, including of LGBTI persons, has long been and remains the policy of the United States. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. The Department of State’s LGBTI-related efforts focus on deterring violence, advocating against laws that criminalize LGBTI status or conduct, and working to prevent serious levels of discrimination in areas such as employment and occupation, housing, and access to government services. The Bureau of Democ-incy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL) also administers an approximately $10 millon per year Global Equality Fund, a multi-donor fund that provides financial support to LGBTI civil society organizations and human rights defenders. If confirmed, advancing dignity and human rights for all will be a top priority for my engagement with the Government of Brunei.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
HON. MATTHEW JOHN MATTHEWS BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. In my role as Ambassador for APEC, I have had the opportunity to work along with my team to promote and support Women’s Economic Empowerment throughout all 21 APEC Economies. Since 2011, we have led efforts in APEC to break down barriers that inhibit women entering and remaining in the workforce.
For as we all know, as the participation rate of women in our economies rises, the social benefits are clear: better distribution of income across our societies and better economic, health and education outcomes for all families. By working to ensure that all barriers to women in the workforce are eliminated, we not only strengthen the ability of women to speak out and act in accordance with their interests, we create an environment where their contribution will generate better economic outcomes for everyone. Such outcomes not only support women’s ability to engage successfully in the economic sphere, but in the sphere of social and political rights as well.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Brunei? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Brunei? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. I am concerned about further implementation of Brunei’s Sharia Penal Code, especially Phases 2 and 3, which include corporal punishments such as amputation for theft and stoning for apostasy, adultery, and sodomy. Other challenges include limitations on freedoms of expression, press, peaceful assembly, and association. Bruneian citizens also do not have the ability to choose their government, since the sultan rules through hereditary birthright.

If confirmed, I will regularly communicate with Brunei regarding human rights and encourage the Government of Brunei to uphold its international commitments on human rights. I will encourage Brunei to ratify and implement the United Nations Convention Against Torture, which it signed in 2015, and to sign, ratify and implement the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. We encourage the Government of Brunei, as we do all countries, to respect freedom of expression, including for members of the press. I will continue to support the development of a more active press, including new on-line publications, through professional training opportunities.

The United States is working to promote civil society, the rule of law, and transparent and accountable governance across the region, including in Brunei, as part of the governance pillar of the Indo-Pacific strategy. The new Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative under this pillar encompasses efforts to empower the region’s citizens, help combat corruption, and strengthen nations’ sovereignty through transparency and accountability. I hope to promote good governance in Brunei that is responsive to the needs of the public and respectful of fundamental human rights.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Brunei in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Brunei is a majority-Muslim country, and Islam has long played a role in its laws and government. Since political authority and control rests entirely with the sultan, he could decide to further implement the Sharia Penal Code at any time. Brunei is a deeply traditional, conservative society, and some changes will take more time to bring about. Civil society in Brunei is still nascent, the media is accustomed to self-censorship, and there are no political opposition figures and parties in Brunei.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Brunei? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I commit to meet with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and with local human rights NGOs in Brunei. The United States is committed to protecting and promoting human rights and combatting corruption, advancing a world order that reflects U.S. values and increasing the security of the United States, our allies, and our partners. The strength and vibrancy of all nations depend on an active civil society and robust engagement between government and civil society. I will ensure that this message remains constant in our engagement with the Government of Brunei, including at the highest levels. Consistent with U.S. law and Department policy, I will also ensure that we fully vet all Bruneian security force recipients of USG-funded assistance, and that provisions of U.S. security assistance and cooperation activities reinforce human rights.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Brunei to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Brunei?

Answer. We are not aware of cases of political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Brunei. If confirmed, my embassy team and I will actively engage with Brunei should we learn of such cases.

Question 6. Will you engage with Brunei on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will engage with Brunei on matters of human rights, including civil rights, and governance as part of the bilateral mission.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Brunei?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes funds that may have investments in companies in Brunei; however, these funds are exempt from the conflicts of interest rules and have been reviewed by the State Department Ethics Office. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in any investments the State Department Ethics Office deems necessary in the future to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As I have taken on increasingly broad managerial responsibilities in the Foreign Service, I have mentored entry level and mid-level officers from diverse backgrounds to ensure they develop the skills and enjoy the kind of opportunities that will enable them to rise successfully to higher levels in the Foreign Service. I have also worked assiduously to ensure they have properly prepared for competitive promotions within our internal competitive job bidding process, both in our missions abroad and in the Department of State in Washington, D.C.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. As the Ambassador, the first step is to send a clear message to every person in the mission, supervisors as well as other employees, that fostering an environment supportive of diversity and inclusiveness is key to obtaining and maintaining optimal performance. The second step is to make it clear that this is the standard to which we will operate. The third step is to set an example by modeling leadership and management approaches that help to achieve those outcomes, and making it clear that I will evaluate supervisors on their ability to deliver on creating and maintaining an environment where diversity and inclusiveness is strongly supported.

Question 12. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. Democratic governance and the rule of law cannot flourish when political corruption runs rampant. Corruption, weak institutions, and poor human rights conditions also drive away smart private sector investment, which further entrenches political corruption and robs a country of needed capital to meet its development goals. The United States is working to promote civil society, the rule of law, and transparent and accountable governments across the region, including in Brunei, as part of the governance pillar of the Indo-Pacific strategy. The new Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative under this pillar encompasses efforts to empower the region’s citizens, help combat corruption, and strengthen nations’ autonomy.

We assess that corruption is not pervasive in Brunei, although isolated incidents of low-ranking officials accepting bribes reportedly occur. In September 2016, Brunei’s Anticorruption Bureau reported seven government officials were summoned to court for corruption, and two officials were charged. The law provides criminal penalties for corruption by officials, and the Government generally implements these laws effectively. If confirmed, I will work to promote good governance in Brunei that is responsive to the needs of the public and respectful of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Brunei and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Brunei?

Answer. We assess that corruption is not pervasive in Brunei, although isolated incidents of low-ranking officials accepting bribes reportedly occur. As of September 2016, Brunei’s Anticorruption Bureau reported seven government officials were summoned to court for corruption, and two officials were charged. The law provides criminal penalties for corruption by officials, and the Government generally implements these laws effectively.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Brunei?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to further strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Brunei. The United States is working to promote civil society, the rule of law, and transparent and accountable governments across the region, including in Brunei, as part of the governance pillar of the Indo-Pacific strategy. The new Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative under this pillar encompasses efforts to empower the region’s citizens, help combat corruption, and strengthen nations’ autonomy. I hope to promote good governance in Brunei that is responsive to the needs of the public and respectful of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Question 1. In your view, in countries that do not share U.S. views on LGBT rights, how should a U.S. chief of mission advocate for full privileges, immunities and other rights for same-sex spouses?

Answer. Promoting, protecting, and advancing human rights, including of LGBTI persons, has long been and remains the policy of the United States. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. The Department of State’s LGBTI-related efforts focus on deterring violence, advocating against laws that criminalize LGBTI status or conduct, and working to prevent serious levels of discrimination in areas such as employment and occupation, housing, and access to government services. The Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL) also administers an approximately $10 million per year Global Equality Fund, a multi-donor fund that provides financial support to LGBTI civil society organizations and human rights defenders.

If confirmed, advancing dignity and human rights for all will be a top priority for my engagement with the Government of Brunei. I will continue the mission’s ongoing and constructive engagement with the Government of Brunei, including through our regular bilateral Senior Officials Dialogue, to ensure that Brunei grants full privileges, immunities, and other rights for same-sex spouses.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO HON. MATTHEW JOHN MATTHEWS BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. The Government of Brunei has publicly expressed interest in diversifying its economy, reducing its dependency on fossil fuels, and potentially investing in renewable energy. If confirmed, will you encourage these efforts? If so, how?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will encourage the Government of Brunei to diversify its economy, reduce its dependency on fossil fuels, and invest in renewable energy and the services sector. In recent years, Brunei’s economy has been in recession. In 2017, Brunei saw its first positive economic growth in five years, but only at 0.5 percent. The economy is expected to grow by a mere 1 percent in 2018, but increase to nearly 8 percent in 2019 based on forecasted oil prices, potentially making it one of the fastest-growing economies in the region. Economic growth in Brunei is closely tied to the price of oil, and the country remains one of the most hydrocarbon-dependent economies in the world.

Brunei is continuing efforts to diversify its economy away from its enduring reliance on oil and gas exports. Investment opportunities in Brunei are driven both by government planning and consumer demand. If confirmed, I look forward to deepening the economic ties between Brunei and the United States, including areas of U.S. competitive advantage that match Brunei’s economic priorities, and promoting U.S. and U.S.-linked companies trading with and operating in Brunei. I will also continue to support high U.S. standards for trade and economic development in the region.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO
W. PATRICK MURPHY BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. As you know, many human rights groups, members of Congress, and even parts of the State Department, including the Bureau of Democracy, Rights, and Labor, opposed the administration’s October 2016 decision to revoke a state of emergency and lift the bulk of the last main set of sanctions about the Burmese Government. They argued that lifting the sanctions would remove one of the U.S.
Government’s last remaining strong pieces of leverage over the Burmese Government and the military in particular. Tragically, within days of that decision being made, a small group of Rohingya militants attacked police personnel in Rakhine State, and Burmese security personnel launched a massive and disproportionate attack on dozens of Rohingya villages, resulting in over 87,000 displaced into Bangladesh. Subsequent violence in 2017 led to the displacement of almost ten times more people, meaning that almost a million Rohingya are now displaced.

Given the violence that has occurred since then, and the Burmese Government’s ongoing denialism and recalcitrance in the face of international criticism, what is your perspective, today, on the administration’s October 2016 decision? Do you think there are lessons to be learned—for Burma, for Cambodia, and elsewhere—given how the situation played-out in Burma following the removal of sanctions that suggests that a calibrated approach in which some sanctions are removed and others kept might be more effective to advance U.S. interests and values?

Answer. The horrific atrocities that have occurred in Rakhine State, the ongoing violence in Kachin and Shan States, and the continuing human rights concerns across Burma are reprehensible, regardless of Burma’s leadership. These issues, however, are rooted in decades-old conflicts that festered under successive repressive and isolationist military dictatorships. While there is no easy or quick solution, I believe that strengthening Burma’s democracy, improving Burma’s civilian governance, along with fostering greater respect for freedom of religion and other human rights and the rule of law, offer the best hope for the people of Burma.

While we continue to assist Burma in this transition to a more open and democratic system of governance with civilian control of the military, we recognize the continuing risk the Burmese military poses to Burma’s current civilian administration and populations across Burma. As such, in accordance with the Tom Lantos Block Burmese JADE Act of 2008, we have kept in place strict limitations on the issuance of visas for entry to the United States by senior Burmese military officials and their families, as well as restrictions on U.S. assistance to Burma, particularly to its military, and an embargo on arms sales to Burma.

In response to recent violence, the United States has supported new accountability measures including the U.N. Fact-Finding Mission, the establishment of an evidence gathering mechanism, the U.N. Special Rapporteur on Human Rights, and the U.N. Special Envoy to Burma. Additionally the United States has implemented financial sanctions on five individuals and two entities since August 2017 for atrocities committed in Rakhine, Kachin, and Shan States.

Question 2. Congress has also received reports that in late 2016 and early 2017 you and other State Department officials opposed EU proposals at the U.N. Human Rights Council to create an independent fact-finding mission (FFM). Is that true?
If so, what was the basis for the opposition?

Answer. The State Department has consistently supported the mandate and work of the U.N. Fact-Finding Mission (FFM). Further, we have ensured that the FFM was able to brief publicly the U.N. Security Council, despite opposition from some member states. This U.N. Security Council briefing was open and live streamed for those interested in the report’s findings and ensuing discussion.

Question 3. Can you provide the committee with a complete chronology of the discussions between the U.S. and the GoB regarding sanctions relaxation in 2015 and 2016, including the principal proposals advocated by each government at each step in the process?

Answer. The United States has supported and continues to support Burma’s transition to democracy, along with associated political and economic reforms; promote national reconciliation; encourage government transparency, accountability, and strengthened institutions; empower local communities and civil society; press for responsible international engagement; and build respect for and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief.

I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, though the Congressional Research Service’s comprehensive February 2017 report provides a detailed chronology of the U.S. easing of sanctions, which was undertaken in conversation with Congress through the end of 2016, after Burma elected its first civilian-led government in more than 50 years in November 2015. Significant restrictions remain in place, as we recognize the continuing threat the Burmese military poses to Burma’s current civilian administration and to Burma’s long-term prospects to transition toward a more open, inclusive, and democratic society. We have maintained strict limitations on issuing visas to enter the United States to senior Burmese military officials and their families; restrictions on U.S. assistance, particularly to its armed forces; and an embargo on arms sales.

Question 4. What have you learned given the real world tests in Southeast Asia over the past several years while you have served as a senior official in the Department about the relative benefits and costs of sanctions relaxation and re-imposition?

Answer. Sanctions, whether broad-based or targeted, are most effective when coupled with incentives, linked to specific actions or milestones, calibrated to the associated costs and benefits, and implemented in concert with other members of the international community. In the case of Burma, the decision to gradually relax sanctions began in 2012—in close consultation with Congress—in response to specific reform steps undertaken by the then-military government. We kept, and still maintain, restrictions aimed at the military—including our arms embargo and visa restrictions for military commanders—while reducing the restrictions for U.S. business and assistance to enter Burma and assist the country and its economy in transitioning out from under the military’s grip.

While sanctions can limit the influence of human rights abusers, other programs can go a long way to support democratic reform. Since 2012, U.S. development assistance has been carefully integrated with our diplomatic efforts, focusing on deepening and sustaining key political and economic reforms, ensuring that the democratic transition benefits the diverse Burmese population, and mitigating social divisions along intercommunal, ethnic, and religious lines. Since 2012, the United States has provided over $500 million to support Burma’s transition, advance the peace process, and improve the lives of millions, including by assisting communities affected by violence and combating hate speech and communal violence.

The United States also has a powerful tool in Executive Order 13818, which builds upon the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. We have employed this tool with effect in Burma against five Burmese commanders and two military units. These calibrated sanctions enable the United States to target bad actors while avoiding collateral damage to Burma’s continued political and economic reforms.

Question 5. With the benefit of hindsight, do you agree or disagree with the argument that many outside observers, human rights groups, and some members of Congress made when they argued that the U.S. should have maintained some of its previous sanctions on Burma, and encouraged other countries to do so, and that if the U.S. had in fact done so, at least some of the terrible atrocities that have occurred since 2006 might have been avoided? Would such an approach have given the U.S. and democratic leaders in Burma more or less leverage to press on human rights, democratic transition, ethnic and religious reconciliation and the peace process?

Answer. The U.S. Government, with the support of Congress, has employed an engagement strategy that has recognized the positive steps undertaken by the Burmese Government in recent years, and sought to incentivize further changes. The guiding principles of this approach have been to support Burma’s political and economic reforms; promote national reconciliation; encourage government transparency; urge accountability and strengthened institutions; empower local communities and civil society; promote responsible international engagement; and strengthen respect for and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief. The United States was among the last countries to lift economic sanctions on Burma, which had been implemented to support the pro-democracy movement and improve respect for human rights, in response to a series of important democratic reforms that started in 2011. The European Union lifted its economic sanctions in April 2013, and the United States followed suit on October 7, 2016.

Ultimately, we assess that improving the current conditions and future prospects of people across Burma, and precluding further abuses by the Burmese military, depend on Burma evolving to a more open and democratic system of governance, civilian control of the military, strong institutions, and a government that upholds human rights and fundamental freedoms. Accordingly, we continue to seek a successful transition to full democracy in Burma so that its government will deliver good governance, end impunity, and improve human rights practices.

Further, significant restrictions remain in place, as we recognized the continuing threat the Burmese armed forces pose to Burma’s current civilian administration and populations across Burma. We have kept in place limitations on issuing visas to enter the United States to senior military officials and their families; restrictions limiting the types of U.S. assistance to Burma, particularly to its military; and an embargo on arms sales to Burma.

In response to increasing levels of violence, the United States has supported new accountability measures including the U.N. Fact-Finding Mission, the establishment of an evidence gathering mechanism, and the U.N. Special Rapporteur on Human Rights. Additionally the United States has implemented financial sanctions on five individuals and two entities since August 2017 for atrocities committed in Rakhine, Kachin, and Shan States.

Question 6. Anti-Americanism in Cambodia: Despite considerable U.S. and international aid to help rebuild Cambodia since the early 1990s, strongman Prime Minister Hun Sen’s evolution into dictatorship has had a strong anti-American dimension. Last year, opposition leader Kem Sokha was imprisoned on false charges of colluding with the United States; U.S.-backed newspapers and radio programs have been closed and taken off the air; the National Democratic Institute was expelled from the country; the Peace Corps was sent home; and the Government has made a number of statements attacking the United States, including calling American democracy “bloody and brutal.” Other autocrats around the world seem to think the United States will turn a blind eye to such backsliding. How do you plan to push back against this trend in Cambodia and vigorously defend America’s values and interests?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Cambodian Government publicly and privately? to restore its democratic institutions, realize civil and political rights for all, and ensure freedom of the press, all based on principles enshrined in its Constitution. We will also engage human rights advocates, independent journalists, civil society organizations, private sector associations, and trade unions to ensure their views are visible in Cambodian society. We will strengthen people-to-people ties and demonstrate that only a democratic Cambodia is best equipped to lift Cambodians out of poverty, empower its citizens to tackle the challenges Cambodia faces?, and meet the aspirations of Cambodia’s booming youth population. We will also emphasize that only a democratic Cambodia can maintain an independent foreign policy and resist influences that seek to erode the country’s sovereignty.

I note that the Peace Corps remains active in Cambodia and was not forced to cease operations. The organization remains an important component of U.S. engagement in Cambodia, especially in the field of education, and if confirmed I will support fully the Peace Corps presence as a successful means to help meet the country’s development goals and to foster mutual understanding.

Question 7. Not surprisingly, Cambodia’s pivot away from the United States has seen Hun Sen increase his country’s political alignment with China. Given the Cambodia economy’s reliance on Western markets, why do you think the United States has been so reluctant to use economic leverage to moderate Hun Sen’s behavior?

Answer. Targeted sanctions are an effective tool that can influence the behavior of those individuals directly involved in perpetrating human rights abuses and/or undermining Cambodia’s democracy without inadvertently penalizing the broader Cambodian population. The U.S. Government continually aims to shape policies that use the full range of tools available to the United States to promote a more democratic Cambodia.

Question 8. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Tackling human rights and democracy challenges has defined my career. I have served in, and guided relations with, numerous countries struggling under authoritarian rule, conflict, or fragile transitions—circumstances that eroded civil liberties and democratization. I have therefore prioritized unambiguous messaging on core principles; consulted civil society, likeminded countries, and relevant international organizations; and, in collaboration with Congress, contributed to developing sanctions and restrictions on travel and assistance. Results are not always readily apparent, but I am proud of my contributions to shelter nearly one million refugees in Guinea, negotiate peace in conflict-torn Sierra Leone, defend the rights of HIV-afflicted women in Lesotho, assist vulnerable minorities in war-torn northern Iraq, protect Chinese and North Korean dissidents, and help to restore the freedoms of citizens under non-democratic rulers across Southeast Asia. I was recognized as the Department of State’s runner-up for the 2005 Democracy and Human Rights Award and efforts to support Burmese suffering under decades of military rule and to protect the country’s highly repressed ethnic Rohingya, efforts that I continue to this day.
Question 9. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Cambodia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The United States is very concerned by the democratic setbacks in Cambodia over the past couple of years. After Cambodia’s free and fair local elections in 2017—in which the opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP) won nearly 44 percent of local council seats—the ruling Cambodian People’s Party Government took steps to marginalize the opposition, including by dissolving the CNRP, usurping local council seats won by the CNRP in 2017, imprisoning the party’s leader on spurious treason charges, and banning 118 CNRP officials from engaging in political activity for five years. The Government also imposed new restrictions on civil society organizations and forced the closure or sale of more than 30 independent media outlets.

As a result of these measures, the national elections held in July 2018 were neither free nor fair and failed to represent the will of the Cambodian people, as noted in the White House statement released July 29. The flawed elections and the anti-democratic steps that preceded them represent the most significant setback yet to the democratic system enshrined in Cambodia’s constitution, and substantially erode Cambodia’s achievements in promoting political reconciliation and economic growth since the 1991 Paris Peace Accords.

Question 10. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Cambodia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The United States has repeatedly called for the Cambodian Government to release immediately and unconditionally CNRP opposition leader Kem Sokha; remove undue restrictions on the political opposition, including the ban on 118 opposition leaders from engaging in political activity, and initiate a meaningful process aimed at building genuine national reconciliation. We have also urged the Government to remove restrictions on civil society and independent media, which are critical in any democracy. If confirmed, I will urge the Cambodian Government to take these steps and will work with like-minded partners to encourage Cambodia’s leaders to fulfill their commitments under the country’s constitution and the Paris Peace Accords.

Question 11. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. The State Department and USAID support a number of successful programs that work with civil society, independent media, youth, and other groups to support democracy and governance. If confirmed, I will seek to expand programs that empower Cambodia’s young people—who account for 70 percent of the population and represent the country’s future—to engage in the political process. I will further seek to develop programs that empower and train independent media in Cambodia.

Question 12. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Cambodia? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes, absolutely. The State Department regularly engages human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations in the United States and in Cambodia, as I have done in previous capacities as a senior diplomat. I am committed to continuing that engagement. If confirmed, I will continue to press the Cambodian Government to protect the freedoms of expression, association, and religion enshrined in Cambodia’s constitution, and to remove undue restrictions on NGOs and civil society organizations. I will regularly and actively seek out civil society organizations’ views and advice to inform our policies and programs in support of democratic institutions and human rights in Cambodia.

Question 13. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes, absolutely. The State Department regularly engages democratically-oriented political opposition figures and parties in the United States and in Cambodia, as I have done in previous capacities as a senior diplomat. I am committed to continuing that engagement. If confirmed, I will meet with a wide variety of political groups to understand their concerns and determine how the United States can assist them in supporting a more democratic Cambodia. Our Embassy is actively engaged in work that encourages women, minorities, and youth to engage in the political process. I plan to continue that work, if confirmed.

Question 14. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Cambodia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory, or other means? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Cambodia?

Answer. We are very concerned about the restrictions imposed on independent media in Cambodia and have called on the Cambodian Government to allow the independent media to carry out its constitutionally protected work. If confirmed, I will strongly advocate for greater press freedoms, including the lifting of the ban on Voice of America (VOA) and Radio Free Asia (RFA) from broadcasting on FM radio. I am committed to meeting often with independent journalists and editors.

Question 15. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Cambodia?

Answer. If confirmed, my Embassy team and I will work with the Department of State's Global Engagement Center, civil society, and independent media outlets to counter disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Cambodia. The Embassy has already hosted trainings, exchanges, and workshops on countering disinformation in Cambodia, and we will continue this work.

Question 16. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Cambodia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. If confirmed, my Embassy team and I will work closely with a range of partners, including unions, international brands, and government ministries, to promote respect for internationally-recognized worker rights in Cambodia.

Several U.S. trade associations have raised with us their concerns about the continued restrictions on workers’ rights, including limitations on independent trade unions and labor leaders. These associations and the U.S. companies they represent have also engaged the Cambodian Government to promote fair labor practices. We will continue to work with these groups to address their concerns.

Question 17. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Cambodia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Cambodia? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Cambodia?

Answer. If confirmed, I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender. Lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and intersex (LGBTI) people in Cambodia experience discrimination, but have also enjoyed some official support from the King and the Cambodian Government. For example, the Ministry of Information issued a letter calling for artists and presenters in the media to stop mocking the LGBT community as it “degrades the honor and rights of LGBT people who are also protected by the state’s law as well as other citizens.” As we have done in the past, I am committed to working with NGOs focused on LGBTI rights to improve awareness and build understanding to decrease discrimination in Cambodia.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to W. Patrick Murphy by Senator Marco Rubio

Question 1. Did you participate in the Executive Branch’s decision-making process that led to President Obama’s October 7, 2016, Executive Order (Termination of Emergency with Respect to the Actions and Policies of the Government of Burma)?

Answer. In my role as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Southeast Asia in the Department of State’s Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs—a role I began in April 2016 and held in October 2016—I was part of the team that assisted the Bureau’s Assistant Secretary of State regarding Burma policy.

Question 2. Did you, in any way, advocate for lifting sanctions against the Burmese Government prior to President Obama’s October 7, 2016, Executive Order (Termination of Emergency with Respect to the Actions and Policies of the Government of Burma)?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, but in my role as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Southeast Asia, which I began in April 2016, I was part of the Department and interagency’s Burma policy discussions. Department colleagues and I have continually aimed to shape policies that use the full range of tools available to the United States to support Burma’s political and economic reforms; promote national reconciliation; encourage government transparency, accountability, and strengthened institutions; empower local communities and civil society; achieve responsible international engagement; and improve respect for and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief. During this pivotal time in Burma’s history, which included the seating of Burma’s first elected civilian government in over 50 years, the Department coordinated and communicated regularly with Congress on the administration’s policies that had commenced with a Burma policy review in 2010.

Question 3. Prior to President Obama’s October 7, 2016, Executive Order (Termination of Emergency with Respect to the Actions and Policies of the Government of Burma), did Burmese State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi express any concerns with State Department officials or other officials in the administration about lifting sanctions against the Burmese Government?

Answer. The Obama administration consulted closely with Burma’s first democratically-elected government in more than 50 years on lifting sanctions. During her visit to Washington in 2012 to receive the Congressional Gold Medal, Aung San Suu Kyi, in her capacity as an elected legislator, discussed initial easing of some sanctions and restrictions on Burma with administration and Congressional leaders. She held similar discussions during her 2016 visit as State Counsellor. Following that visit, the administration lifted sanctions, but retained restrictions on the Burmese military and certain forms of assistance. The administration assessed that overcoming 50 years of repressive military rule would be neither quick nor without significant challenges.

Question 4. Prior to President Obama’s October 7, 2016, Executive Order (Termination of Emergency with Respect to the Actions and Policies of the Government of Burma), were you aware of a policy option in which the United States could have terminated the national emergency declared in Executive Order 13047 while, at the same time, retaining some sanctions against the Burmese military and military entities under Tom Lantos Block Burmese JADE (Junta’s Anti-Democratic Efforts) Act of 2008 (Public Law 110–286) (the “JADE Act”) or other existing authorities?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, although as part of the standard interagency process the then-administration considered many options to further U.S. interests in assisting Burma’s transition toward a more open, inclusive, and democratic society. Although Congress took steps to ease sanctions in 2012 and the then-administration terminated the national emergency in 2016, significant restrictions remained and continue today in light of threats posed by the Burmese military to the country’s civilian administration and to long-term prospects for a complete transition toward a more open, inclusive, and democratic society. We have generally kept in place strict limitations on issuing visas to enter the United States to senior military officials; restrictions on U.S. assistance to Burma, particularly to its military; and an embargo on arms sales to Burma.

Question 5. Prior to President Obama’s October 7, 2016, Executive Order (Termination of Emergency with Respect to the Actions and Policies of the Government of Burma), did you ever inform, or recommend that the administration inform, Burmese State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi about the existence of an alternative policy option in which the United States could terminate the national emergency declared in Executive Order 13047 while, at the same time, retaining some sanctions against the Burmese military and military entities under Tom Lantos Block Burmese JADE (Junta’s Anti-Democratic Efforts) Act of 2008 (Public Law 110–286) (the “JADE Act”) or other existing authorities?

Answer. The Obama administration consulted closely with Burma’s first democratically-elected government in more than 50 years. Significant restrictions remain in place, including portions of the JADE Act, in light of continuing threats the Burmese military poses to the country’s current civilian administration and long-term prospects to complete a transition toward a more open, inclusive, and democratic society. The administration has consistently kept in place strict limitations on issuing visas to enter the United States to senior military officials and their families; restrictions on U.S. assistance to Burma, particularly to its military; and an embargo on arms sales to Burma.
Question 6. Prior to President Obama’s October 7, 2016, Executive Order (Termination of Emergency with Respect to the Actions and Policies of the Government of Burma), did you or anyone in the State Department’s Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs (EAP) ever oppose policy options in which the United States could terminate the national emergency declared in Executive Order 13047 while, at the same time, retaining some sanctions against the Burmese military and military entities under Tom Lantos Block Burmese JADE (Junta’s Anti-Democratic Efforts) Act of 2008 (Public Law 110–286) (the “JADE Act”) or other existing authorities?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, though as part of the interagency process the then-administration, in consultation with Congress, evaluated a range of options to further U.S. interests in assisting Burma’s transition toward a more open, inclusive, and democratic society. Significant restrictions remain in light of the continuing threat the Burmese military poses to Burma’s current civilian administration and to the country’s long-term prospects to complete a transition. The administration generally kept in place strict limitations on issuing visas to enter the United States to senior military officials and their families; restrictions on of U.S. assistance to Burma, particularly to its military; and an embargo on arms sales to Burma.

Question 7. Given the Burmese military’s subsequent October 2016 campaign of murder and violence against the Rohingya and the Burmese military and security forces’ August 2017 mass atrocities against the Rohingya, do you today, with the benefit and clarity of hindsight, believe it was premature to lift sanctions against the Burmese Government, including the Burmese military and Burmese military entities and owned enterprises, in October 2016?

Answer. In October 2016, in response to the country’s election of its first civilian government in over 50 years and initial steps that government took with regard to human rights, President Obama, in consultation with Congress, terminated the national emergency with respect to Burma and took other measures related to financial sanctions on Burma.

Improving the conditions and future prospects of people across Burma, and efforts to prevent continued abuses by the Burmese military, depend on Burma evolving to a more open and democratic system of governance with civilian control of the military and strong institutions to enforce the rule of law. Accordingly, the administration continues to focus on helping the elected government of Burma successfully transition to full democracy, deliver good governance, end impunity, and improve human rights practices. Significant restrictions remain in place in light of the continuing threat the Burmese military poses to Burma’s current civilian administration and populations across Burma, including Rohingya. The administration has generally kept in place strict limitations on issuing visas to enter the United States to senior military officials; restrictions limiting the types of U.S. assistance to Burma, particularly to its military; and an embargo on arms sales to Burma. The administration has also sanctioned military personnel and entities for their role in abuses committed against Rohingya and other ethnic minorities.

Question 8. When, after President Obama’s October 7, 2016, Executive Order (Termination of Emergency with Respect to the Actions and Policies of the Government of Burma), the Burmese military engaged in a campaign of violence against the Rohingya—which ultimately led to the displacement of over 87,000 refugees into Bangladesh—did any Bureau or official in the State Department recommend or otherwise suggest that the United States should consider reimposing some targeted sanctions against the Burmese military or its military leaders?

Answer. Yes.

Question 9. After the Burmese military’s October 2016 campaign of violence against the Rohingya, were you involved in any discussions or decisions about whether or not to reimpose targeted sanctions against the Burmese military or its military leaders? If so, what policy options did you personally advocate?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, but in my role as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Southeast Asia, which I began in April 2016, I worked with Department and interagency colleagues to shape policies that use the full range of tools available to advance U.S. national interests in Burma. To date, results have included the use of targeted sanctions on military personnel and entities.

Question 10. Did the State Department’s Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs (“EAP”) recommend to the Secretary of State any specific options in response to the Burmese military’s October 2016 campaign of violence against the Rohingya?
Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, but the Bureau has worked with other Department entities and the interagency to shape policies that use the full range of tools available to the United States to support Burma’s political and economic reforms; contribute to national reconciliation; encourage government transparency, and promote accountability and institutions; empower local communities and civil society; urge responsible international engagement; and strengthen respect for and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief.

Question 11. Did EAP advocate against the re-impose targeted sanctions against the Burmese military or its military leaders in response to the Burmese military’s October 2016 campaign of violence against the Rohingya?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, but the Bureau has consistently worked with other Department entities and the interagency to shape policies that use the full range of tools available to the United States to support Burma’s political and economic reforms; contribute to national reconciliation; encourage government transparency, and promote accountability and institutions; empower local communities and civil society; urge responsible international engagement; and strengthen respect for and protection of human rights, including freedom of religion or belief.

Question 12. Do you, with the clarity of hindsight, today believe that if the United States would have re-imposed targeted sanctions against the Burmese military and its military leaders in response to the Burmese military’s October 2016 campaign of violence against the Rohingya, this course of action could have contributed to deterring or preventing the Burmese military’s subsequent escalation in violence, including the Burmese military and security forces’ August 2017 mass atrocities against the Rohingya?

Answer. Atrocities committed in Rakhine State, ongoing violence in Kachin and Shan States, and continuing human rights concerns across Burma are reprehensible, regardless of who is in leadership in Burma. These issues are rooted in decades-old conflicts that festered under successive repressive and isolationist military dictatorships, even during periods of broad U.S. and international sanctions. Burma’s continued transition to democracy offers an important path toward a better future for all of the country’s diverse peoples. In consultation with Congress, we will continue to seek a successful and complete transition to democracy in Burma, using the full range of tools available to us, so that its government will deliver good governance, end impunity, and improve human rights practices.

Question 13. Were you, in your capacity as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Southeast Asia, aware of any strategic, tactical, and operational warning signals of an imminent threat to the Rohingya prior to the Burmese military and security forces’ August 2017 mass atrocities against the Rohingya? If so, what were they?

Answer. Successive administrations have raised concerns about and taken actions with regard to the despicable treatment of ethnic Rohingya. Although Rohingya have been vulnerable to, and victims of, violence for decades, the scale of abuses and degree of insecurity that arose in late 2017 were without precedent. Attacks on August 25, 2017 by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA) on Burmese security forces also contributed to further insecurity in Rakhine State.

Question 14. What course of action, if any, did you advocate for in the State Department to prevent the escalation of violence by Burmese military and security forces against Rohingya in August 2017?

Answer. On the day of Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA) attacks in Rakhine State on Burmese security forces, the Department issued a statement that condemned the deadly violence, and called upon the Government and security forces to prevent further violence in a way consistent with the rule of law while protecting human rights and avoiding inflaming the situation. Our Embassy in Rangoon, our Mission to the United Nations, and senior U.S. officials immediately and have continuously called upon the Government and the security forces to end violence, respect human rights, and hold those responsible for atrocities to account. I worked in the Department with colleagues to utilize all options available to stem further violence and ease sufferings of victims. My own specific actions following the August violence included meeting the Ambassador of Burma at the Department and visiting Naypyitaw and Rakhine State to communicate our messages on violence directly to authorities and other stakeholders. I have also continuously supported efforts to encourage likeminded countries and Burma’s neighbors to engage with the Government to end violence, grant humanitarian and media access, and investigate and hold accountable those responsible for atrocities.
Question 15. At what point did you become aware of the full scope and scale of the Burmese forces' attacks against the Rohingya starting in August 2017?

Answer. Following Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA) attacks on Burmese security forces, and subsequent Burmese military operations, large waves of Rohingya refugees crossing the border into Bangladesh were one of the first true measures of the scope and scale of the atrocities. I visited Naypyitaw and Rakhine State in September 2017 to communicate directly to senior authorities and other stakeholders our concerns and to urge immediate actions to end the violence and to protect vulnerable populations.

Without unhindered access to northern Rakhine State and a full, impartial international investigation into the atrocities that began in August 2017, the United States will not have a fully complete understanding of the full scope and scale of the violence that occurred in Rakhine State.

Nonetheless, the Department used available information to conclude that ethnic cleansing had occurred in Rakhine State. In an effort to understand better the dimensions of the crisis, the Department initiated the Rakhine State Documentation Project to compile further information about the abuses and inform U.S. policymakers.

Question 16. What is your assessment of the nature and scale of the attacks against the Rohingya population? How many people were killed? How were they killed?

Answer. Without unhindered access to northern Rakhine State and a full, impartial international investigation into the atrocities that began in August 2017, the United States will not have a fully complete understanding of how many were killed during the violence that occurred in Rakhine State. Nonetheless, the exodus of over 700,000 Rohingya to Bangladesh, and others displaced internally, clearly indicates a high degree of violence and insecurity as result of Burmese military operations as well as attacks by the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army (ARSA).

Due to ongoing access restrictions in northern Rakhine State, information is difficult to obtain. One of the best sources of information are Rohingya refugees now in Bangladesh. In recognition of this, the Department initiated the Rakhine State Documentation Project to compile information about abuses and inform U.S. policymakers. The documentation project found that a substantial majority of refugees interviewed had witnessed killings and sexual violence.

Question 17. Do you assess that the Burmese military and security forces, in their campaign of violence against the Rohingya that began in August 2017, committed ethnic cleansing?

Answer. The U.S. Government has characterized the atrocities that took place in northern Rakhine State since August 2017 as “ethnic cleansing.” This conclusion of ethnic cleansing in no way prejudices any potential further determination on whether other mass atrocities have taken place, including genocide or crimes against humanity. We continue to review and analyze new evidence and information as it comes to light.

Question 18. Do you assess that the Burmese military and security forces, in their campaign of violence against the Rohingya that began in August 2017, committed crimes against humanity?

Answer. The U.S. Government has characterized the atrocities that took place in northern Rakhine State since August 2017 as “ethnic cleansing” and continues to review and analyze new evidence and information as it comes to light. This conclusion of ethnic cleansing in no way prejudices any potential further determination on whether other mass atrocities have taken place, including genocide or crimes against humanity.

Question 19. Do you assess that the Burmese military and security forces, in their campaign of violence against the Rohingya that began in August 2017, committed genocide?

Answer. The U.S. Government has characterized the atrocities that took place in northern Rakhine State since August 2017 as “ethnic cleansing” and continues to review and analyze new evidence and information as it comes to light. This conclusion of ethnic cleansing in no way prejudices any potential further analysis on whether other mass atrocities have taken place, including genocide or crimes against humanity.

Question 20. Has the State Department’s Bureau of East Asian and Pacific Affairs (“EAP”) made any recommendation to the Secretary of State on whether or not the Burmese military and security forces’ crimes, violence and mass atrocities against... the Rohingya that began in August 2017 amount to genocide? If not, why have you and EAP not made any recommendation to the Secretary of State on this matter?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal and ongoing Department deliberations, but Department colleagues, interagency officials, and I have continually aimed to shape policies that use the full range of tools available to the United States to ease suffering, address root causes of violence, and attain justice for victims using the best evidence and analysis available to us. Last year, with EAP support, the Department concluded that the situation in Burma’s northern Rakhine State constituted ethnic cleansing against Rohingya. This conclusion of ethnic cleansing in no way prejudices any potential further analysis on whether other mass atrocities have taken place, including genocide or crimes against humanity. EAP has consistently advocated and ensured that human rights remain a top priority in the formulation of policies to protect and advance our national interests with regard to Burma, including determinations on what abuses transpired in Rakhine State and targeted sanctions to bring about accountability for them.

Question 21. What is your current assessment of the impact of Chinese influence on the Cambodian Government and the Cambodian people?

Answer. We have noted the increasing influence of China in Cambodia, and are very concerned about reports of the possible establishment of a Chinese military base in Cambodia, which would be prohibited by the Cambodian constitution. Such an action would undermine regional stability, Cambodia’s democratic development, and raise serious rule of law and national sovereignty. If confirmed, I will consistently underscore to the Cambodian Government and Cambodian people the importance of a free and open Indo-Pacific in which, as Vice President Pence said, “nations large and small can prosper and thrive” and where each nation “chooses to respect its neighbors’ sovereignty; embrace free, fair, and reciprocal trade; uphold human rights and freedom.”

Question 22. If confirmed, under your leadership what would the U.S. Embassy in Phnom Penh do differently to address Cambodia’s pivot to China?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy’s work to focus on how the United States and Cambodia can work together to advance shared goals, such as democracy, freedom, economic prosperity, and regional stability. I will engage like-minded partners, civil society, the private sector, and multilateral institutions to promote the principles of a free and open Indo-Pacific that benefit Cambodia and the United States.

Question 23. Do you believe that the atmosphere for free speech in Cambodia is under threat?

Answer. In recent years, the Cambodian Government imposed severe restrictions on civil society organizations and forced the closure or sale of more than 30 independent media outlets. Many of our civil society partners have said they do not feel free to express themselves freely. The Cambodian Government has also prohibited Radio Free Asia and Voice of America from broadcasting on FM radio in Cambodia. In previous years, Cambodia enjoyed a more vibrant free press and broader space for civil society. If confirmed, I will advocate for the freedom of expression, including for the press, which is protected by Cambodia’s constitution.

Question 24. Do you believe that Cambodia is no longer has a pluralistic, free, independent, and vibrant media landscape?

Answer. In recent years, the Cambodian Government imposed severe restrictions on civil society organizations and forced the closure or sale of more than 30 independent media outlets. Many of our civil society partners have said they do not feel free to express themselves freely. The Cambodian Government has also prohibited Radio Free Asia and Voice of America from broadcasting on FM radio in Cambodia. In previous years, Cambodia enjoyed a more vibrant free press and broader space for civil society. If confirmed, I will advocate for the freedom of expression, including for the press, which is protected by Cambodia’s constitution.

Question 25. If confirmed, will you use your position to advocate for the protection of freedom of speech and expression in Cambodia?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will continue to advocate for the freedom of expression, including for the press, which is protected by Cambodia’s constitution.

Question 26. Do you believe that persons in the Cambodian Government who are credibly shown to be complicit in gross human rights abuses or corruption should be prohibited from obtaining visas to travel to the United States under the Global Magnitsky Act?

Answer. In June, the United States designated a senior security official under E.O. 13818, which implements the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. If confirmed, I will consider all options that could incentivize better behavior from Cambodian Government authorities. I am grateful for the many tools that Congress has provided us, including the Global Magnitsky Human Rights and Accountability Act.

Question 27. If confirmed as Ambassador, what efforts will you undertake to press the Cambodian Government to release opposition leader Kem Sokha?

Answer. The United States has repeatedly called for the Cambodian Government to release immediately and unconditionally CNRP opposition leader Kem Sokha; remove undue restrictions on the political opposition, including a ban on 118 opposition leaders from engaging in political activity; and initiate a meaningful process aimed at building genuine national reconciliation. If confirmed, I will continue to engage the Cambodian Government to urge that charges against Kem Sokha be dropped unconditionally and I will work with like-minded partners to reinforce that message.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO W. PATRICK MURPHY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Tackling human rights and democracy challenges has defined my career. I have served in, and guided relations with, numerous countries struggling under authoritarian rule, conflict, or fragile transitions—circumstances that eroded civil liberties and democratization. I have therefore prioritized unambiguous messaging on core principles; consulted civil society, likeminded countries, and relevant international organizations; and, in collaboration with Congress, contributed to developing sanctions and restrictions on travel and assistance. Results are not always readily apparent, but I am proud of my contributions to shelter nearly one million refugees in Guinea, negotiate peace in conflict-torn Sierra Leone, defend the rights of HIV-afflicted women in Lesotho, assist vulnerable minorities in war-torn northern Iraq, protect Chinese and North Korean dissidents, and help to restore the freedoms of citizens under non-democratic rulers across Southeast Asia. I was recognized as the Department of State’s runner-up for the 2005 Democracy and Human Rights Award for efforts to support Burmese suffering under decades of military rule and to protect the country’s highly repressed ethnic Rohingya, efforts that I continue to this day.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Cambodia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Cambodia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The United States is very concerned by the setbacks to democracy and human rights in Cambodia over the past couple of years. In advance of 2018 elections, the ruling Cambodian People’s Party (CPP) took a number of steps to marginalize the political opposition, including by dissolving the Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP), imprisoning its leader Kem Sokha on spurious treason charges, and banning 118 CNRP officials from engaging in politics for five years. The Government also imposed restrictions on civil society organizations and forced the closure or sale of more than 30 independent media outlets.

The United States has repeatedly called for the Cambodian Government to immediately and unconditionally release Kem Sokha; remove restrictions on the political opposition, including the ban on 118 opposition leaders from engaging in political activity; and initiate a meaningful process aimed at building genuine national reconciliation. We have also urged the Government to remove restrictions on civil society and independent media, which are critical in any democracy. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Cambodian Government to take these steps and will work with like-minded partners to encourage Cambodia’s leaders to fulfill their commitments under the Cambodian constitution and the Paris Peace Accords.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Cambodia in advancing human rights, civil society, and democracy in general?

Answer. New government-imposed restrictions as well as the ruling party’s near-absolute control over government institutions, the judiciary, and the security services have unduly limited the space for civil society and free expression. This creates challenges for civil society and independent media to carry out their mission and to express views critical of the Government, ruling party, or leadership.

If confirmed, I am committed to finding ways to continue actively supporting democracy, good governance, and human rights in Cambodia, including through State Department and USAID programs and by working with like-minded partners to ensure the Cambodian leadership respects the freedoms enshrined in the Cambodian constitution and the commitments made in the Paris Peace Accords.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Cambodia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. The State Department regularly engages human rights, civil society, and other non-governmental organizations both in the United States and in Cambodia.
I am fully committed to continuing that engagement, if confirmed.

Embassy Phnom Penh has a robust Leahy vetting program. If confirmed, I will ensure our Leahy team continues to thoroughly vet all Cambodian security and law enforcement officials that could benefit from U.S. security assistance to make sure they have not engaged in any form of human rights abuse.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Cambodia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Cambodia?

Answer. The United States has and will continue to engage Cambodia on cases of political prisoners, like Kem Sokha. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Cambodian Government to drop all charges against Kem Sokha, release him and other political prisoners, and remove undue restrictions on his and others’ human rights.

Question 6. Will you engage with Cambodia on matters of human rights, civil rights, and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. The United States has repeatedly called the Cambodian Government to respect human rights, including civil rights, and ensure good governance by restoring democratic institutions. If confirmed, I will continue to actively engage this issue.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I am committed to complying with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raising any concerns through the appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to informing the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I am committed to complying with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raising any concerns through the appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Cambodia?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes diversified mutual funds that may hold interests in companies with a presence in Cambodia; however, these funds are except from the conflict of interest laws. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Services?

Answer. I firmly agree that diversity improves creativity and productivity and, for the Foreign Service, improves America’s diplomatic strength. If confirmed, I will ensure that Embassy supervisors consider our diversity goals in the recruitment and hiring of new employees. I will work closely with relevant Embassy officers and staff—including the Deputy Chief of Mission, the Management Officer, the Community Liaison Office Coordinator, Equal Employment Opportunity counselors, and others—to ensure not only full compliance with U.S. laws and regulations, but also to implement any and all efforts to mentor American and local staff and to foster a workplace and mission community that is fully inclusive of all groups and individuals.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. Recently, Secretary Pompeo made it clear that discriminatory harassment and/or toxic behavior has no place in the work place, both domestically and in our diplomatic missions abroad. I commit fully to actively facilitating a work culture of civility and respect, using all appropriate guidance and tools available to hold supervisors accountable for upholding these principles. I also find strength in the diversity and inclusivity of our workspace and will ensure, if confirmed, that Embassy supervisors foster a work environment that embraces diversity of thought, background, and experience.

Question 12. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. Corruption remains a serious challenge, and hinders economic and political development in Cambodia. Some companies have engaged in opaque, non-competitive land and investment deals, a particular problem that fuels political corruption in Cambodia. If confirmed, I will actively urge the Cambodian Government to ensure transparency and accountability in all investment deals and transactions, and to ensure that U.S. companies are not unfairly disadvantaged in any tender or contract process.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Cambodia and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Cambodia?

Answer. Systemic corruption is a major obstacle to Cambodia's political and economic development. The Government has taken some steps to address this issue, including by establishing an Anti-Corruption Unit, but these efforts to date have not been effective in stamping out rampant corruption. If confirmed, I will urge the Cambodian Government to increase transparency and accountability.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Cambodia?

Answer. If confirmed, I would leverage U.S. Government resources, including State Department and USAID programs, to support civil society organizations and NGOs addressing corruption issues and increasing government transparency. I would also make these issues a priority in engaging government authorities.

Question 15. Over Hun Sen's past 34 years in power, Hun Sen has consolidated power through the CPP through undemocratic processes, including restrictions on opposition parties. If confirmed, will you commit to positioning the United States as a productive force in the fight for political pluralism, anti-corruption, and democratic elections in Cambodia?

Answer. If confirmed, I am committed fully to fighting for a more pluralistic, transparent, and democratic Cambodia in accordance with the country's own constitution and as part of a free and open Indo-Pacific. The United States has repeatedly called for the Cambodian Government to release immediately and unconditionally CNRP opposition leader Kem Sokha, remove burdensome restrictions on the political opposition, including a ban on 118 opposition leaders from engaging in political activity, and initiate a meaningful process aimed at building genuine national reconciliation. We have also urged the Government to remove restrictions on civil society and independent media, which are critical in any democracy. If confirmed, I will urge the Cambodian Government to take these steps and will work with like-minded partners to encourage Cambodia's leaders to fulfill their commitments under the country's constitution and the Paris Peace Accords.

Question 16. Under Hun Sen's regime, and particularly ahead of elections in 2017 and 2018, grassroots human rights organizations have documented a continued and concerted attack on human rights, including freedom of expression, association, and assembly. Amid this crackdown, human rights defenders have experienced increasing levels of state harassment, including those persons advocating against land grabs and corrupt trade arrangements. If confirmed, I will support and advocate against repressive laws and highly restrictive amendments—including the Law on Associations and Non-Governmental Organizations (LANGO) and the Law on Political Parties—that perpetuate an enabling environment for human rights abuses in your post?

Answer. Supporting democracy and human rights are always important aspects of U.S. foreign policy, as highlighted by the new Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative that the Vice President announced on November 17. In Cambodia, political opposition parties and our civil society partners have raised many concerns regarding the Law on Associations and Non-Governmental Organizations (LANGO) and the Law on Political Parties including undue financial reporting requirements, registration of new organizations any time already registered organizations work together, and the requirement to notify authorities of any planned activities three days in advance. The Cambodian Government recently announced that it will no longer require the three-day advance notification; we are monitoring full implementation of this guidance. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Cambodian Government to roll back undue restrictions on civil society organizations and political parties to restore a more open, democratic Cambodia.

Question 17. What are the specific actions that the U.S. Embassy in Cambodia will take to protect and support human rights defenders?

Answer. Government-imposed restrictions and the ruling party’s near-absolute control over public institutions, the judiciary, and security services have unduly limited the space for civil society and free expression. This creates challenges for civil society and independent media to carry out their mission and to express views critical of the Government, ruling party, or leadership.

If confirmed, I am committed to actively supporting democracy, good governance, and human rights in Cambodia, including through State Department and USAID programs and by working with like-minded partners to ensure the Cambodian leadership respects the freedoms enshrined in the Cambodian constitution and the commitments made in the Paris Peace Accords. We will continue to urge that the Cambodian Government drop charges against and release all political prisoners, including those who fight for the human rights and fundamental freedoms guaranteed by Cambodia’s constitution.

Question 18. What levers does the U.S. Government have in pressuring Hun Sen to ease his campaign against human rights and civil society organizations?

Answer. The United States uses a variety of tools to urge the Cambodian Government to restore democratic governance. The White House, State Department, and U.S. Embassy have all issued statements urging Cambodia to respect the rule of law and the freedoms enshrined in its Constitution. In June, the United States designated a senior Cambodian security official under E.O. 13818, which implements the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. We also implemented visa restrictions under Section 212(a)(3)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act for those undermining democracy in order to send a strong signal that the United States does not welcome those involved in anti-democratic actions in Cambodia. If confirmed, I will also continue to engage like-minded diplomatic partners to encourage the Cambodian Government to respect the civil and political rights of all.

Question 19. In 2017 and 2018, the U.S. decided to suspend or curtail programs that supported individuals and institutions complicit in human rights violations and corruption in the country. Do you believe targeted sanctions through levers like the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act and cutting military aid can encourage a change in the Cambodian Government’s behavior?

Answer. The United States has available a variety of measures including targeted sanctions and adjustments to military aid that can be used to promote accountability for human rights abuse and corruption that undermines the values that form an essential foundation of stable, secure, and functioning societies; have devastating impacts on individuals; weaken democratic institutions; degrade the rule of law; perpetuate violent conflicts; facilitate the activities of dangerous persons; and undermine economic markets. In June, the United States designated Cambodian General Hing Bun Hieng for being the leader of an entity responsible for or complicit in, directly or indirectly, serious human rights abuse under E.O. 13818, which implements the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. Any assets Bun Hieng has within U.S. jurisdiction are blocked, and U.S. individuals and entities are generally prohibited from engaging in transactions with him. In order to enjoy a productive military-to-military relationship with the United States, the Cambodian Government must demonstrate greater progress in reversing its democratic backsliding.

Question 20. How will you engage with the sanctions process and do you pledge to support these measures when credible information about abuses or corruption is provided to the U.S. Government?

Answer. I pledge to consider all options that could incentivize better behavior from the Cambodian Government and security forces and, if confirmed, to support them where I see they can be most effective. I am grateful for the many tools that Congress has provided us, including the Global Magnitsky Human Rights and Accountability Act.
Question 21. On November 16, the U.N.-backed Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia (ECCC) convicted three individuals of genocide committed under the Khmer Rouge regime. While the decision is historic, fissures remain between the collective consciousness of the Cambodian people and what the ECCC has been able to deliver in justice and accountability. After over a decade and more than $300 million, the ECCC sentenced just three defendants. Although the Court has assembled a remarkable historical record of crimes committed, the ECCC has struggled with cooperation from the Cambodian Government. If confirmed, how will you work to pursue accountability for crimes committed against Cambodians and ethnic Vietnamese under the Khmer Rouge in the face of Cambodian Government opposition to continued ECCC investigations?

Answer. On November 16, the ECCC found former Khmer Rouge President Khieu Samphan and Pol Pot Deputy Nuon Chea guilty of genocide, crimes against humanity, and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions in one of the most complex criminal cases since Nuremberg. Despite the long delay, the convictions by the ECCC provided justice for thousands of victims and opened the space for the people of Cambodia to address this tragic part of their past, seek justice and reparations, and demonstrate that those responsible for atrocity crimes will be held to account.

If confirmed, I would encourage that we stress to the tribunal that it complete the remaining cases with all deliberate speed while ensuring the conclusion of the remaining cases on the basis of the facts and the law and that justice is served. It is important that the United States continue to support the tribunal as it completes its mandate to help ensure its orderly drawdown, including, in particular, the establishment of publicly-accessible court archives, which will preserve the historical record of the Khmer Rouge atrocities.

Question 22. Given the ECCC’s mixed record as a U.N.-backed hybrid court, do you believe the United States and international community should pursue a hybrid court model to seek accountability for crimes committed against the Rohingya?

Answer. In Burma, the United States continues to call for accountability for those responsible for atrocities committed in Rakhine, Kachin, and Shan States. Our efforts to date include supporting the U.N. Fact Finding Mission; an independent mechanism to collect, consolidate, preserve, and analyze evidence; and the respective mandates for the U.N. Special Envoy to Myanmar and the U.N. Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Situation in Myanmar. A hybrid court model could form another option for pursuing justice for crimes in Burma. A policy decision regarding what type of international justice mechanism the United States would support would need to take into account speed, cost, and efficacy, among other factors.

Question 23. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Cambodia specifically?

Answer. Corruption remains a serious challenge that hinders economic and political development in Cambodia. Some companies have engaged in opaque, non-competitive land and investment deals, a particular problem that fuels political corruption in Cambodia. If confirmed, I will actively urge the Cambodian Government to ensure transparency and accountability in all investment deals and transactions, and to ensure that U.S. companies are not unfairly disadvantaged in any tender or contract process.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO W. PATRICK MURPHY BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. In your testimony, you noted that as Deputy Assistant Security of the Bureau of East Asian and Pacific (EAP) Affairs, you were involved in the internal discussions on additional sanctions on senior level Burmese officials in response to the 2016 and 2017 attacks on Rohingya communities in Burma. Can you clarify what you recommended to the Secretary on whether to impose sanctions on senior level officials? Do you believe the U.S. should impose sanctions on Commander-in-Chief Min Aung Hlaing? If not, why not?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, but Department colleagues and I have continually aimed to shape policies that use the tools available to the United States to ease suffering, address root causes of violence, and attain justice for victims using the best evidence and analysis available to us. We continue to promote accountability options to attain justice for victims of atrocities in Rakhine State and other areas in Burma.
Question 2. Do you support the use of U.S. financial sanctions such as the Global Magnitsky Act against members of Hun Sen’s inner circle and crony business supporters (specifically Lao Meng Khin and his wife Choeung Sopheap, Ly Yong Phat, Try Pheap and Mong Reththy) as a means of preventing them from benefiting from the proceeds of grand corruption, human rights abuses and stolen elections?

Answer. In June, the United States designated a senior Cambodian security official under E.O. 13818, which implements the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act. I am grateful for the many tools that Congress has provided us, including the Global Magnitsky Human Rights and Accountability Act. If confirmed, I will encourage consideration of all options that could incentivize better behavior from the Cambodian Government and support those that I assess can be most effective.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO W. PATRICK MURPHY BY SENATOR JEFF MERKLEY

Documentation of Atrocities in Northern Rakhine State

On September 24, 2018, the U.S. Department of State released its “Documentation of Atrocities in Northern Rakhine State” Report.

Question 1. According to a press report, the State Department Bureau of East Asia and Pacific Affairs (EAP) recommended against making a determination of “genocide,” for fear that such a move would drive the Government of Burma closer to China. Was that a correct characterization of EAP’s position?

Answer. U.S. efforts have been and remain focused on steps to improve the situation for Rohingya refugees, internally displaced persons (IDPs), and all people in Burma. In the wake of the horrific acts committed against the Rohingya, the Department has pursued a three-pronged strategy to ease humanitarian suffering, address the root causes of violence, and hold accountable those responsible for atrocities. In this regard, we seek to work with likeminded countries to amplify these efforts.

Question 2. Do you help make this recommendation from EAP and do you agree that the State Department should not make this determination?

Answer. I cannot comment specifically on internal Department deliberations, but Department colleagues and I have continually aimed to shape policies that use the full tools available to the United States to ease suffering, address root causes of violence, and attain justice for victims using the best evidence and analysis available to us. Last year, the Department concluded that the situation in Burma’s northern Rakhine State constituted ethnic cleansing against Rohingya. This conclusion of ethnic cleansing in no way prejudices any potential further analysis on whether other mass atrocities have taken place, including genocide or crimes against humanity.

Question 3. On August 28th, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Nikki Haley, previewed that the U.S. Report was “consistent” with the findings of the U.N. Fact Finding Mission Report. However, the U.S. Report did not reach the same conclusion of the U.N. Fact Finding Mission, which said that acts of “ethnic cleansing” with “genocidal intent” occurred. What additional witness testimony or evidence is required for the United States to arrive at the same determination of the U.N.?

Answer. Last year, the Department concluded that the situation in Burma’s northern Rakhine State constituted ethnic cleansing against Rohingya. This conclusion of ethnic cleansing in no way prejudices any potential further analysis on whether other mass atrocities have taken place, including genocide or crimes against humanity. The Department has thoroughly reviewed the U.N. Fact Finding Mission’s (FFM) report, and has strongly supported the FFM’s mandate. Further, we have ensured that the FFM was able to publicly brief the U.N. Security Council a month ago, despite opposition from some member states.

The Documentation Report produced by the State Department was not meant to serve as the basis for a particular legal finding, but rather as a means to gather and organize information about the atrocities in northern Rakhine State since 2016. Ambassador Haley’s reference to consistency between the two reports means just that—the information gathered in the two reports is broadly consistent. We continue to review all evidence, reports and analysis, including the reports and analysis released on December 3 by the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum and the Public International Law & Policy Group.
Question 4. Would the United States support the establishment of an International, Impartial, and Independent Mechanism (IIIM) to gather further evidence of crimes to build a case for potential future prosecutions?

Answer. A key recommendation from the FFM was to establish an initiative to collect, preserve, and catalog evidence of atrocities and other crimes in northern Rakhine State akin to an IIIM. In support of this recommendation, in November we co-sponsored and voted for a U.N. General Assembly Third committee resolution that called for the immediate operationalization of a mechanism, which was created by the U.N. Human Rights Council in September of this year. Going forward, the Department will work to support this initiative so that it can have the strongest impact toward advancing accountability.

Question 5. On December 3, 2018, the United States Holocaust Museum said that “there is compelling evidence that the Burmese military committed crimes against humanity, and genocide against the Rohingya,” citing the U.N. Fact Finding Mission Report, U.S. State Department Report, and a Report led by the Holocaust Museum and Fortify Rights. Why does the United States disagree with their findings?

Answer. The U.S. Government characterized the atrocities that took place in northern Rakhine State as “ethnic cleansing” in November 2017, and since then has continued to review and analyze new evidence and information as it comes to light. The underlying information and findings of the State Department’s report, along with a variety of other credible reports, provide information to Secretary Pompeo and the Department as the U.S. Government seeks to advance accountability and prevent future atrocities in Burma.

Question 6. The United States Treasury Department announced in August 17, 2018, that it had sanctioned four Burmese military and Border Guard Policy (BGP) commanders and two Burmese military units, pursuant to the Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act of 2016. Would you recommend the United States sanction other senior military leaders, as is recommended by the U.N. Fact Finding Mission, to include the Commander in Chief of the Myanmar Armed Forces, Min Aung Hlaing?

Answer. The Department of State has played an important role within the inter-agency process in identifying and sanctioning those responsible for abuses against the Rohingya people. We will continue to evaluate all avenues to promote accountability.

Question 7. Has the State Department made specific recommendations to Treasury about individuals to sanction in Burma that have not yet been implemented? If not, why?

Answer. I cannot discuss potential or ongoing sanctions investigations.

Question 8. What additional accountability measures do you believe would be appropriate for the United States to take in response to the ethnic cleansing against the Rohingya?

Answer. The United States continues to pursue accountability for those responsible for the violence and atrocities in Rakhine, Kachin, and Shan States. We also have consistently called for the establishment of civilian control of the Burmese armed forces. We have worked closely with our allies and partners to support efforts and mechanisms at the U.N. to foster accountability for human rights abuses in Rakhine State and other areas of Burma. These efforts include the U.N. Fact Finding Mission; an independent mechanism to collect, consolidate, preserve, and analyze evidence; and the mandates for the U.N. Special Envoy to Myanmar and the U.N. Special Rapporteur on the Human Rights Situation in Myanmar. We will continue our efforts in this regard, pursuing additional accountability measures as appropriate for the atrocities committed in Rakhine State.

Question 9. Do you believe that U.S. support of Burma’s democratic transition must not be used as justification for not aggressively pursuing accountability for crimes committed against the Rohingya and other ethnic minorities in Burma?

Answer. We are committed to pursuing both goals at once: supporting Burma’s democratic transition and pursuing accountability for human rights violations and abuses committed against Rohingya, other ethnic and religious minorities, and all others in Burma. Empowering Burma’s democratic institutions is key to addressing longstanding underlying challenges following some fifty years of authoritarian military rule. We are focused on helping the elected government of Burma successfully transition to full democracy, deliver good governance, end impunity, and improve human rights practices.

Ultimately, improving the current conditions and future prospects of the people of Burma—including the 500,000–600,000 Rohingya remaining in Rakhine State and the nearly one million Rohingya seeking refuge in Bangladesh—depends on Burma transitioning to a more open and democratic system of governance. We continue to raise concerns regarding the Government’s human rights record, including with respect to fundamental freedoms and the rights of members of minority communities, and we stress the need to hold accountable those persons who commit atrocities in Rakhine State and elsewhere.

Question 10. Will the United States continue to insist that all parties uphold the principle of non-refoulement governing the return of Rohingya refugees to Burma consistent with international humanitarian law?

Answer. The Department will continue to vigorously support the principle of non-refoulement regarding the possible repatriation of Rohingya refugees. We continue to insist that both the Governments of Bangladesh and Burma ensure that any repatriations are voluntary, safe, sustainable, and dignified.

Question 11. Specifically, what progress has the Government of Burma made in implementing the Kofi Annan-led Advisory Commission Recommendations, particularly as they relate to freedom of movement, access to services, documentation, and livelihood opportunities?

Answer. The Government of Burma independently established the Rakhine Advisory Commission (RAC), prior to the events of August 2017 and as a means to address root causes of violence and discrimination, and accepted all of its recommendations. The Government has made limited progress in implementing some of the 88 RAC recommendations, but not on some of the more crucial recommendations, including those related to freedom of movement, civil documentation, a transparent pathway to citizenship, and access to livelihoods. We continue to urge the Government to make greater and more rapid progress on all recommendations and coordinate with likeminded countries to advance our advocacy efforts. Further, we are partnering with members of the local communities of Rakhine State to advance intercommunal reconciliation and trust-building efforts to improve the lives of those Rohingya remaining in Rakhine State and other vulnerable populations there. This is a necessary step to prepare for the eventual voluntary repatriation of Rohingya refugees from Bangladesh.
The committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:32 p.m. in Room SD–419, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Bob Corker, chairman of the committee, presiding.

Present: Senators Corker, Gardner, Young, Barrasso, Menendez, Cardin, Murphy, Kaine, Markey, Merkley, and Booker.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. BOB CORKER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

The CHAIRMAN. The Foreign Relations committee will come to order.

I know we have a number of my friends here in pink. Good to be with you. I thank you all for respecting democracy and respecting the fact that other people here want to be able to hear what is happening. I will say this one more time. I have in the past said that I am able to unarrest people when they have been arrested. I no longer have the ability to do that. So I would just hope that everybody would remain quiet and respectful. We have some outstanding nominees here today that we want to hear from.

We are going to hold a nomination hearing for four positions. Our nominees today are Arthur B. Culvahouse, to be Ambassador to Australia; the Honorable Carol Perez, to be Director General of the Foreign Service; Christopher Henzel, to be Ambassador to Yemen; John Barsa, to be Assistant Administrator of USAID for Latin America and the Caribbean; Sarah-Ann Lynch, to be Ambassador to Guyana; and Lynn Tracy, to be Ambassador to Armenia.

First, however, we have a very distinguished guest, one of my best friends in the Senate. He has served our State with distinction in many ways. He is here to introduce a great friend of both of ours, and out of respect for him so that he can go on about other business today, we are going to call on him first before we make opening comments. With that, we welcome the Great Lamar Alexander from Tennessee.

STATEMENT OF HON. LAMAR ALEXANDER, U.S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE

Senator ALEXANDER. Thank you, Senator Corker. It is good to be in your committee. Senator Menendez, Senator Cardin, Senator Barrasso.
It is my privilege today to introduce to the committee Arthur B. Culvahouse, Jr., and I am going to do that by saying a few words about him and a few words about the country that President Trump has nominated him to be the Ambassador to.

First, about A.B. Culvahouse, Jr. He is the most accomplished lawyer I know, and I do not know many of any public servants more accomplished than he is. That may sound like an extravagant claim, but I mean it sincerely.

He had the great advantage of being born and raised in Ten Mile, Tennessee. So that got him off to a good start.

Then he went to the University of Tennessee where, according to the professors there, he had the highest grades in finance of anybody and that lasted for a long time.

He was selected as a Root-Tilden Scholar at New York University Law School, which is sort of a public service scholarship for outstanding students who want to practice law in the grand manner.

He became Legislative Counsel to Howard Baker, our Senator, who later became Majority Leader of the United States Senate and whose daughter is in the audience today.

He became counsel to both John McCain and Donald Trump during their campaigns as they began to consider vice presidential selections.

He was counsel to President Ronald Reagan while he was in the White House.

And in the midst of all of that, he has been the chairman of one of the world’s largest law firms, O’Melveny & Myers.

I will not read all the other activities that he has had, but they are enough to establish him as enormously well qualified for this position.

He was awarded by President Reagan the President’s Citizens Medal, an award established in 1969 to recognize citizens who perform exemplary deeds of service.

He was a member of the President’s Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board and the Intelligence Oversight Board, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce Commission on Regulation of U.S. Capital Markets, Board of Visitors of the U.S. Naval Academy, a member of the Board of Trustees of the Brookings Institution, and Howard H. Baker, Jr. Center for Public Policy at the University of Tennessee.

So he is enormously well qualified. That is my comment about A.B. Culvahouse, Jr.

Now, a short comment about Australia, a country to which he has been nominated to be Ambassador.

My family lived there in 1987 for 6 months, and at a dinner there, I heard the Governor General of Australia talk about the relationship between the United States and his country. He said, it is a happy accident of faith that the Constitution of the United States was being signed in 1787 just as our first fleet was sailing eastward across the Atlantic from Rio to Capetown on the third leg of its 10-month long voyage. The fleet carried a cargo of convicts who would have been on their way to Georgia in the United States had not the American Revolution succeeded and denied the British the opportunity to send their prisoners to America.
Then he went on. The links between our two nations, Australia and the United States, have evolved from earliest times. Our pioneers, like yours, were as unlikely a band as one could conceive. Your Gold Rush spilled into ours. Our soldiers have died together, and we have shared freedoms of speech and of association and of laws and of humanities and of civil liberties. And now both of us are a melting pot. This is the Governor General of Australia speaking. We read your prose. We speak your poetry. We watch your plays and films. We even watch your terrible television dramas.

Mr. Chairman, the English are our ancestors. The Australians are our cousins. And I would suggest they are our first cousins. They deserve to have, as the representative of our country to them, one of our finest. I believe that A.B. Culvahouse, Jr. is one of the finest public servants we have. I hope he is confirmed rapidly by this committee and by the full Senate.

And the only other thing I would say is that I am more than a little jealous that he is the Tennessean who gets to be the Ambassador to Australia. If he is confirmed by the Senate, which I hope he will be, he will have a wonderful experience ahead of him.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Thank you very much.

With that, you are welcome to—we understand you are very, very busy and would like to leave. [Laughter.] The CHAIRMAN. I would like to also, before opening comments, recognize the fact that Darrell Issa is here. He has been nominated to be USTDA head, and at some point, hopefully soon, that will be taken up.

Today, as I mentioned, we will consider the nominations of six individuals to serve our nation both at home and abroad in a variety of important positions. We welcome all of you here and thank you for your willingness to serve. Thank you very much.

First, we have Mr. Arthur B. Culvahouse of Tennessee to serve as Ambassador to Australia. Mr. Culvahouse brings with him a wealth of experience in both government and the private sector. He previously served as top aide to U.S. Senator Howard Baker and as the White House Counsel to President Reagan, and for decades, he practiced law with the firm of O'Melveny & Myers where he is currently Chair Emeritus and Of Counsel.

Through his work on various presidential advisory boards, numerous nonprofits, and countless political campaigns, Mr. Culvahouse has gained a reputation as a person of integrity and of great intellect. It is a personal honor for me that I am able to call him my friend, and I know he will represent our nation well in Canberra.

Next, we have Ambassador Carol Perez to serve as Director General of the Foreign Service and Director of Human Resources at the Department of State. While much of the attention usually given this position focuses on the role it plays in relation to Foreign Service, this position is also the Chief Human Resources Officer for Civil Service. Thank you.

Ambassador Perez is a career member of the Foreign Service and currently serves as our Ambassador in Santiago, Chile where she has been stationed since 2016.
Having previously served as the U.S. Consul General in Milan and Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary in the Human Resources Bureau, Ambassador Perez is amply familiar with the bureau she will be heading and brings with her a variety of State Department management experience as she takes on her new role.

Next we have Mr. Christopher Henzel to be Ambassador to Yemen. Mr. Henzel is also a career member of the Foreign Service and has completed numerous tours across the Middle East. Currently he serves as Deputy Chief of Mission at our embassy in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, and as the post to Yemen is currently based in Saudi Arabia, he is already familiar with the environment where the mission he is headed for is located.

Having viewed the conflict in Yemen from inside the Kingdom for the last 2 years, Mr. Henzel brings with him a unique perspective and a wealth of knowledge both of the conflict and of Saudi Arabia’s influence in the country.

Accepting this position is a great responsibility. Mr. Henzel will have to navigate the political and social complexities of this region in an effort to bring peace to this war-ravaged nation.

Next, we have Mr. John Barsa to serve as Assistant Administrator of USAID for Latin America and the Caribbean. Mr. Barsa currently serves as the Acting Assistant Secretary of Homeland Security in the Office of Public Liaison, and he previously served in the U.S. Army Reserve until his honorable discharge in 1996.

Before joining the current administration, Mr. Barsa led the strategic communications and business development efforts for various corporations and also served on the staff of former Congressman Lincoln Diaz-Balart.

Mr. Barsa’s family came to this country after fleeing oppression from Cuba. He has vast knowledge of Latin America and is a fluent Spanish speaker. As you can tell, I am not. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. With his personal background and his experience in both government and the private sector, I believe he will be an asset to USAID in furthering its mission in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Next, we have Sarah-Ann Lynch to be Ambassador to the Co-operative Republic of Guyana. As career foreign officer currently serving as Senior Deputy Administrator in USAID’s Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean, I believe she has the experience and management skills necessary to serve as head of mission in Georgetown.

Finally, we have Lynne Tracy to be Ambassador to Armenia. As a career Foreign Service officer with deep experience in Eurasian affairs, I believe she will be an asset for the United States in the Caucasus.

Our thanks to all of you for being here, and with that, I will turn to my friend, the ranking member, Bob Menendez, for any opening comments he wishes to have.

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ, U.S. SENATOR FROM NEW JERSEY

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.
First of all, there is no more room at the table to have the hearing. So we have maxed out on the number of nominees who are here.

But we congratulate you all. It is an extremely impressive and distinguished panel of nominees from varied backgrounds and agencies. Among others, we have a U.S. Ambassador, a former Counsel to the President of the United States, a holder of the Secretary’s Award for Heroism. So we thank you all for your service and your continued willingness to serve.

Mr. Henzel, while we have serious challenges all over the world, I expect that you may receive more attention than some of your colleagues on this panel. As our Deputy Chief of Mission in Riyadh for the past 3 years, you have had a front row seat to the crisis in Yemen. You understand the dynamics, the states, the key actors, and I hope that you will be able to provide us some insight into the trajectory of U.S. policy towards Yemen and the Saudi coalition’s efforts there.

I hope you can provide some insight not just into the facts on the ground but what we assess to be our objectives and our specific diplomatic and political tools for achieving them. With more than 10,000 people dead, 14 million on the brink of starvation, millions displaced and suffering, the status quo is not tenable and we need some strong diplomacy. So we look forward to your insights.

The Ambassador to Armenia is a very important position of great interest to me. Armenia experienced a change in government earlier this year, and we encourage the continuing strengthening of democratic institutions in the country. Many challenges remain outside the borders of this small nation. I remain concerned about the aggressive role of Azerbaijan and the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh, and I welcome the efforts of the Minsk process to find a path forward.

The Kremlin has made no secret of its agenda to undermine democracies across the world, and we must work together to counter such malign Russian influence in Armenia.

Central to my work in Armenia over the years has been my advocacy for the truth with respect to the Armenian genocide. I have long worked in the United States Senate to push for an honest accounting of the Armenian genocide and to ensure that anyone who represents the United States Government does so as well.

In every session of Congress since 2006, I have introduced or cosponsored resolutions affirming the facts of the Armenian genocide. When I was the chairman of this committee, I was proud to preside over the first-ever passage of an Armenian genocide resolution out of the committee.

I have also scrutinized ambassadorial nominees to Armenia and other countries in the region. These actions are motivated by what I believe is a moral imperative for us all to recognize the atrocities against the Armenian people. So I look forward to engaging with you on your views with respect to the genocide this afternoon.

Next, with Mr. Barsa, the nominee for Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean at USAID, a region of the world that I have spent a lot of time on, if confirmed, Mr. Barsa will assume this position at a time of many challenges in the region, from the economic and humanitarian crisis in Venezuela to the challenges of insecurity and violence in Central America driving thousands to flee to the consolidation of peace in Colombia after more than a half a century of war and at a time when the oppressive regimes of Cuba, Venezuela, and Nicaragua continue to carry out human rights violations.

The Assistant Administrator’s position is an important one, as it requires vision and leadership to carry out the agency’s mission of promoting democratic values and advancing inclusive economic growth.

I look forward to hearing from you, as well as from Sarah-Ann Lynch, our Ambassador nominee to Guyana, a country with many challenges but also much potential.

I am also pleased that the President has nominated two well qualified candidates for the positions of Ambassador to Australia and the DG of the Foreign Service. I look forward to hearing from both of them.

Australia is a key ally. It is instrumental to our diplomatic security and economic success in the Indo-Pacific and dealing with the challenge of a rising China.

And the DG of the Foreign Service is essential for a well-functioning Department of State.

So we look forward to all of your testimony and to having an opportunity to ask you some questions.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I yield back to you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

It would be good if you just gave your testimony in the order that we introduced you. I know you may have some family members that we would love to meet. There is a plus and minus to having six people here today. We have asked that you shorten your comments to 2 and a half minutes, if possible, just to help everyone out. A little less time in front of C–SPAN but a little quicker. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. As you will realize, as this moves through, the quicker, the better for the nominees.

And with that, again, thank you for wanting to present yourself for service in this way. We are grateful to you and your families. And with that, A.B., if you would begin, we would appreciate it.

STATEMENT OF ARTHUR B. CULVAHOUSE, JR., OF TENNESSEE, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLeni-POTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA

Mr. CULVAHOUSE. Yes, sir, Mr. Chairman.

Shall I introduce my family first?

The CHAIRMAN. Sure.

Mr. CULVAHOUSE. Okay.

I am joined today by my three daughters, Liz, Sarah, and Anne, their three husbands, Steve, Jim, and Mike, and my three grandsons, three of my five grandsons, Joe, Ty, and Connor. The two youngest grandsons, in the interest of regular order and no protests, are not here, since they are 3 years old and 1 year old. But I am a lucky person to be represented by some people I love dearly.
Chairman Corker, Senator Menendez, it is my deep honor to testify before the committee as the President’s nominee to be Ambassador to Australia, a vital and steadfast ally of the United States.

I sit here today in the Dirksen Building on the same floor and just a few steps away from where my government service began as Chief Legislative Assistant to Senator Howard H. Baker, Jr., a fellow Tennessean. Howard took a risk in hiring me right out of law school to be his Chief Legislative Assistant, although I was recommended to him by a then young Tennessee lawyer named Lamar Alexander.

Howard later took me with him to the Reagan White House where he recommended to President Reagan that I be appointed Counsel to the President when Howard became White House Chief of Staff. It was, therefore, my rare privilege to work in a White House led by two American Presidents, President Ronald Reagan, of course, and then Vice President George H.W. Bush, whom we honor this week.

I very much appreciate Senator Alexander’s introduction. More than that, I appreciate our longstanding friendship. I am likewise grateful, Mr. Chairman, for your friendship and support. I would be remiss if I did not pay tribute to your stellar service to the Senate and to our home State.

More than anything, however, I treasure my three daughters, Sarah Culvahouse Mills, Elizabeth Culvahouse Callahan, and Anne Culvahouse Teague. I am thankful that if I am confirmed, they will continue to support me in this new adventure.

The United States and Australia have been formal allies since 1951 but friends for far longer. Australian troops have joined us in every major military conflict for the past 100 years. That shared history resonates personally with me, as two of my uncles, my father’s brothers, served in the U.S. military in the Pacific in World War II, while my father served in Europe. I have visited the Australian war memorial in Canberra where I learned firsthand about the sacrifices Australians have made to defend freedom and democracy worldwide including, as I speak today, standing with us in Afghanistan and in the campaign to defeat ISIS. The relationship between the United States and Australia is as rock solid as ever, and if confirmed, it will be my solemn duty to ensure that our alliance remains as vibrant and strong as when the ANZUS treaty was first signed in San Francisco.

Australia is likewise a key foreign policy partner, working closely with us to persuade North Korea to denuclearize and to promote a free and open Indo-Pacific.

Our economic ties are centuries longstanding and extremely consequential. The United States is far and away Australia’s largest foreign investor. U.S. exports to Australia support 300,000 American jobs, while American companies now employ more than 300,000 Australians.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to close by saying that, if confirmed, I look forward to continuing to broaden and deepen these and many other relationships that tie our governments and our people so very closely together.

Thank you.

[Mr. Culvahouse’s prepared statement follows:]
Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and members of the committee, it is my deep honor to testify before you today as the President’s nominee to be Ambassador to Australia, a vital and steadfast ally of the United States. I am humbled by the trust the President has placed in me by considering me to fill this important role.

I am here today in the Dirksen Building, on the same floor and just a few steps away from where my government service began as chief legislative assistant to the distinguished late Senator Howard H. Baker, Jr. A fellow Tennessean, he took a risk in hiring me right out of law school on the recommendation of a young Tennessee lawyer named Lamar Alexander. I was fortunate to learn from Howard Baker’s experience and wise counsel in the Senate, and then as law partners, and again in the Reagan White House when he was Chief of Staff and I was the White House counsel. I am also thankful for the friendship and advice of many distinguished colleagues in public service, particularly Senator Corker. More than anything, though, I value the support of my three daughters, Sarah Culvahouse Mills, Elizabeth Culvahouse Callahan, and Anne Culvahouse Teague. Their steadfast love and encouragement has been critical to every success I have enjoyed, whether in government or in the private sector. I am so pleased that they could join me today. I am thankful that, if confirmed, they will continue to support me in this new adventure.

The United States and Australia established diplomatic relations 78 years ago and have been formal allies since 1951, but we have been friends for far longer. The United States and Australia first fought side-by-side 100 years ago during World War I and have faced combat together in every major global conflict since, including World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Afghanistan, and Iraq. That history of shared sacrifice resonates personally with me since two of my uncles served in the U.S. military in the Pacific during World War II, while my father served in Europe. During a recent trip to Australia, I visited the War Memorial in Canberra, where I learned about the sacrifices Australians have made to defend freedom and democracy worldwide. I was honored to lay a wreath in gratitude for these contributions. Today, the relationship between the United States and Australia is as solid as ever. If confirmed by the Senate, my first priority will be to ensure that our alliance grows even more robust than when the ANZUS treaty was signed in San Francisco nearly seven decades ago.

In addition to the remarkably strong and active U.S.-Australia military relationship, our diplomatic, economic, and people-to-people ties with Australia are dynamic and growing. Australia is a key foreign policy partner, working closely with us to persuade North Korea to de-nuclearize; to promote a free and open Indo-Pacific region; and to increase development assistance and infrastructure investment in the Pacific. Our economic ties go back to the late 1700s when American whaling ships provisioned in Sydney Harbor. One hundred years ago, the first U.S. firms opened offices in Australia. Today, the United States is far and away Australia’s largest foreign investor. Two-way trade topped $64 billion in 2017, and the United States enjoys a trade surplus with Australia of nearly $29 billion. U.S. exports to Australia support roughly 300,000 jobs in the United States, while American companies employ more than 300,000 Australians. And our people-to-people connections are also deep and broad. In 2017, almost 1.5 million Australians visited the United States and nearly 730,000 U.S. residents visited Australia, up nearly 27 percent over the last two years. The United States is the top destination for Australians wishing to study abroad. If confirmed, I look forward to continuing to broaden and deepen these relationships—relationships that bring not only our governments more closely together, but our people as well.

Importantly, our relationship with Australia is not only about honoring our shared military sacrifice and close diplomatic, economic, and personal bonds over the past century—it is equally about nurturing and deepening these ties in the century to come. I am convinced that we have a bright future together, whether by working to confront current and emerging security challenges, by expanding our already strong bilateral diplomatic ties to include even greater cooperation with like-minded partners in the region, or by leveraging the opportunities presented by our open and innovative economies to work with Asia’s rapidly growing middle class to make the entire Indo-Pacific a more prosperous and stable region in the years to come. If I am confirmed, I look forward to working with our team at Embassy Canberra and our consulates in Sydney, Melbourne, and Perth to connect to younger Australians through education exchanges, science and technology collaboration, investments by cutting-edge American firms, and our common foundation of shared history, enduring democratic values, and deep cultural bonds.
Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you. Go ahead.

STATEMENT OF HON. CAROL Z. PEREZ, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE DIRECTOR GENERAL OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE

Ambassador Perez, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be the Director General of the Foreign Service and Director of Human Resources at the Department of State.

It would be my privilege to advance America’s security and values by empowering and strengthening the workforce charged with this critical mission, our Foreign Service, Civil Service, locally employed personnel, family members, and other colleagues who work at the State Department in Washington and at our 277 posts around the world. Secretary Pompeo noted in his confirmation statement, diplomacy is not for the faint of heart, especially at a time of growing global challenges.

Mr. Chairman, for over 31 years, I have had the pleasure of working with capable, dedicated, and patriotic public servants. These women and men toil both at home and abroad in service to our country. They swear an oath to protect and defend the Constitution often at great sacrifice to themselves and their families. And I can think of no higher honor than directing the recruitment, development, and retention of our personnel.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a moment to recognize the members of my family in the room: my husband Al, my son Michael, and my daughters, Marisa and Caroline and her husband Jacob, who are here with today. They have stood by my side and I am forever grateful for their love and support.

The Secretary noted in his confirmation testimony that his first priority would be setting the mission empowering our people, and to that end, on May 15th, he lifted the hiring freeze, ending the workforce reduction plan. The Department is actively recruiting and hiring to fill our highest priority, mission-critical vacancies. The Secretary has also made clear his commitment to filling senior vacancies. And if confirmed, these will be among my top priorities. Our employees are self-motivated and committed to the mission, but vacancies have had a demoralizing effect and we must work hard to turn this around.

Mr. Chairman, putting our people first is not just about hiring. It is also about retention, professional development, engagement, and workplace culture. Like the Secretary, I believe in fostering a culture of excellence anchored in performance, accountability, and communication. And communication begins with listening, but it also requires responsiveness and transparency. The Secretary has made this a priority, and if confirmed, I will follow his lead.

Thanks to your longstanding bipartisan support for building a workforce that reflects our country’s rich diversity, we have made important progress. Today’s State Department looks and feels very different from the one that I entered in 1987. But we have a ways to go, especially in fostering diversity at more senior levels. If confirmed, I will work with the members of this committee to build on the progress we have made.

Mr. Chairman, like our military, the State Department needs an array of different capabilities and skills to meet its mission. Our almost 14,000 Foreign Service employees are a forward-deployed force, doing everything from opening markets for American companies to preventing the spread of weapons of mass destruction. Our nearly 11,000 Civil Service personnel are the Department’s institutional memory and are subject-matter experts. Our 50,000 locally employed staff are the mainstay of our U.S. diplomatic operations abroad. But whatever our position or title, as the Secretary has noted, we are one team with one mission and with one future. And I will work to enable this team effort to advance America’s security, prosperity, and freedom.

We live in a complex and changing world. Change has always been with us, but the pace has accelerated exponentially. Successful organizations share one characteristic: they adapt. And while our people excel at adapting, the Department as an institution has had a mixed record of doing so. And this must change. The Secretary has emphasized the need to be nimble, smart, and relevant. But to deliver better results for the American people, the Department must do a better job of supporting its own personnel, and if confirmed, I am committed to doing just that.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today.

[Ambassador Perez’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF HON. CAROL Z. PEREZ

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as the President’s nominee to be Director General of the Foreign Service and Director of Human Resources at the Department of State. I am deeply grateful for the confidence the President and Secretary Pompeo have shown in putting forth my nomination.

It would be my privilege to advance America’s security and values by empowering and strengthening the workforce charged with this critical mission—our Foreign Service, Civil Service, Locally Employed personnel, family members, and other colleagues who work at the State Department in Washington and at our 277 posts around the world. Secretary Pompeo noted in his confirmation statement, diplomacy is not for the faint of heart, especially at a time of growing global challenges. Strategic competition from China, Russian aggression, Iran’s malign actions, terrorism, and narcotics and human trafficking are just some of the challenges.

For more than 31 years, I have had the pleasure of working with capable, dedicated, and patriotic public servants. These women and men toil both at home and abroad in service to our country. They swear an oath to protect and defend the Constitution, often at great sacrifice to themselves and their families. Our locally employed staff sometimes also incur great risks working with and for the United States. I can think of no higher honor than directing the recruitment, development, and retention of all our personnel.

I would like to take a moment to recognize the members of my family—my mom and dad, Irene and John Zelis, who are at home in Chicago, my husband Al, my son Michael, my daughters Marisa and Caroline and her husband Jacob, who are here with me today. They have stood by my side as I proudly represented the United States overseas and in Washington. I am forever grateful for their love and support.

The Secretary noted in his confirmation testimony that his first priority would be setting the mission and empowering our people. To that end, on May 15, he lifted the hiring freeze on Foreign Service and Civil Service employment, ending the workforce reduction plan. The Department is actively recruiting and hiring to fill our highest priority, mission-critical vacancies. If confirmed, this will be one of my top priorities. The Secretary has also made clear his commitment to filling senior vacancies. If confirmed, I will support his efforts to identify our best career candidates for senior positions so we can get them in place and on-the-job. Our employees are self-motivated and committed to the mission, but, as the Secretary has noted, vacancies have had a demoralizing effect and we must work hard to turn this around. Putting our people first is not just about hiring. It is about retention, professional development, engagement, and workplace culture. Like the Secretary, I believe in fostering a culture of excellence that is anchored in performance, accountability, and communication. Leaders have a special responsibility to communicate. Communication begins with listening, but it also requires responsiveness and transparency. Communication is also critical to unleashing the talent of a diverse workforce. The Secretary has made this a priority, and, if confirmed, I will follow his lead.

Thanks to our long-standing diversity efforts and bipartisan Congressional support through the Pickering and Rangel programs and other initiatives, we have made important progress in this area. Today’s State Department looks and feels very different than the one I entered in 1987. But we have a ways to go, especially in fostering diversity at more senior levels. Addressing barriers to advancement and supporting professional development and career advancement opportunities will be a critical part of our efforts. If confirmed, I will work with the members of this committee to build on the progress we have made.

Like our military, the State Department needs an array of different capabilities and skills to meet its mission. And while we do not have five services, we have three distinct personnel systems. Our almost 14,000 Foreign Service employees, both our officers and specialists, are our forward-deployed force doing everything from opening markets for American companies and helping American citizens overseas to preventing the spread of weapons of mass destruction. Our nearly 11,000 Civil Service personnel are the Department’s institutional memory, continuity, and subject matter experts, based mostly in Washington, but also at our passport, security, and foreign mission offices across the country. Our 50,000 locally employed staff are the mainstay of our U.S. diplomatic operations abroad. Whatever our position or title, as the Secretary has noted, we are “one team, with one mission, and one future.” If confirmed, I will work to enable this team effort to advance America’s security, prosperity and freedom.

We live in a complex and changing world. Change has always been with us but the pace has accelerated exponentially in recent decades. Successful organizations share one characteristic: They adapt. While our people excel at adapting, the Department as an institution has a mixed record of doing so. This must change. The Secretary has emphasized the need to be “nimble, smart, and relevant.” Our people add value every day in big and small ways. But to deliver better results for the American people, the Department must do a better job of supporting its own personnel by empowering them, removing barriers and streamlining processes.

If confirmed, I am committed to smart, strategic talent management that will build a diverse, capable, agile workforce capable of meeting the challenges and opportunities of our times.

Thank you for the opportunity to appear before you today. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

STATEMENT OF CHRISTOPHER PAUL HENZEL, OF VIRGINIA, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER–COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE REPUBLIC OF YEMEN

Mr. HENZEL. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Yemen. I am grateful to the President for his nomination and to Secretary Pompeo for his continued trust and confidence. I welcome the opportunity to discuss Yemen today.

First, I want to publicly thank my amazing wife Adrienne and our children, Claire, Brendon, and Joey. I have had the privilege of serving as a Foreign Service officer for 32 years and have spent most of my career focusing on the Middle East and the Muslim world. I cannot imagine having done this without the support of my family. Families are an essential part of the Foreign Service and they share both the rewards and the hardships of foreign service life.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the committee, if confirmed, I will work to advance our country’s foreign policy and national security interests in Yemen. I will work to support the United Nations-led efforts toward a negotiated cessation of hostilities and a comprehensive peace agreement in Yemen, to bolster U.S. security cooperation with the Yemeni Government to foster stability, support efforts to address the dire humanitarian consequences of the conflict in Yemen, and ensure the safety and security of U.S. citizens and employees under Chief of Mission authority.

If confirmed, I will continue the work of my predecessor and engage with the internationally recognized government of the Republic of Yemen, now operating in Aden and Riyadh. If confirmed, I will support the efforts of the U.N. Special Envoy, Martin Griffiths, to press for cessation of hostilities and to begin negotiations towards reconciliation, a comprehensive peace agreement, and a representative government. It is also imperative that we continue to urge all parties to allow commercial goods and humanitarian aid to reach the Yemeni people, something I know this committee has been very active on.

In early November, the administration announced that it would cease refueling coalition aircraft after the Government of Saudi Arabia notified the United States that it no longer required this assistance. At our urging, the Saudi-led coalition has incorporated the no-strike list into its target development procedures, stopped the use of cluster munitions, changed its rules of engagement to incorporate U.S. recommendations, and established the Joint Incident Assessment Team. The United States will continue to press the coalition and the Republic of Yemen Government to minimize civilian casualties and expand urgent humanitarian efforts throughout the country.

The United Nations estimates that 22 million Yemenis, 80 percent of the population, are in need of assistance. An estimated 14 million people could face severe food insecurity if conditions worsen. The United States is among the top humanitarian assistance donors to Yemen, providing more than $697 million since fiscal year 2018, which includes nearly $131 million in additional emergency food assistance the Secretary announced on November 27th. A unified and prosperous Yemen at peace with itself and its neighbors is critical to the security of the Gulf Region and to safe navigation in the Bab al-Mandab. The United States will continue to lead the international community’s response to mitigate the humanitarian crisis, while helping to build a stronger foundation for durable peace.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, I am grateful for this opportunity to appear before you today and look forward to answering your questions.

[Mr. Henzel’s prepared statement follows:]
Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the committee, it is an honor to appear before you today as President Trump's nominee to serve as Ambassador to the Republic of Yemen. I am grateful to the President for his nomination and to Secretary Pompeo for his continued trust and confidence. I welcome the opportunity to discuss Yemen and ask that my full testimony be submitted for the record.

First, I want to start by publicly thanking my amazing wife Adrienne, and our children Claire, Brendan, and Joseph, who have shared with me the rewards and hardships of Foreign Service life. I have had the privilege of serving as a Foreign Service Officer for nearly 33 years, currently as Charge D'Affaires at the U.S. Embassy in Riyadh and have spent most of my career focusing on the Middle East and Muslim world. Without their support none of this would have been possible.

Mr. Chairman, Ranking Member Menendez, members of the committee, if confirmed, I will work to advance our country's key foreign policy and national security interests in Yemen. I will work to support the United Nations (U.N.)-led efforts towards a negotiated cessation of hostilities and a comprehensive peace agreement in Yemen; bolster U.S. security cooperation with the Yemeni Government and other partners to foster greater regional and global stability; support efforts to address the dire humanitarian consequences of the conflict in Yemen; and ensure the safety and security of U.S. citizens and employees under Chief of Mission authority.

The Office of the United States Ambassador to Yemen operates out of the Yemen Affairs Unit located at the United States Embassy in Riyadh, with monitoring offices in Jeddah and Amman, due to the security situation in Yemen, which is now entering a fifth year of conflict. This protracted war has exacerbated the world’s largest food insecurity emergency and cholera epidemic, and created an economic crisis. The conflict has drawn in neighboring states, has led to collapsed state institutions, local power vacuums and ungoverned spaces that the Houthis and terrorists have exploited to threaten important partners in the region, and has threatened U.S. national security interests, as well. The war in Yemen has complicated our ongoing counterterrorism efforts and has facilitated Iran’s ambitions, further threatening regional stability. If confirmed, I will continue the work of my predecessor and continue to engage with and support the internationally recognized Republic of Yemen Government (ROYG), including President Hadi and the Prime Minister and cabinet members now operating in Aden and Riyadh, as well as the other governments supporting it.

The administration’s position on bringing an end to the conflict in Yemen is clear: only a negotiated settlement can end this protracted war and unify Yemen. If confirmed, I will fully support U.N. Special Envoy to Yemen, Martin Griffiths’ efforts to press for a cessation of hostilities, particularly in the western port of Hudaydah, and to begin negotiations towards reconciliation, a comprehensive peace agreement, and a representative government. It is also imperative that we continue to urge all parties to allow commercial goods and humanitarian aid and supplies to continue to flow through this crucial port to reach the Yemeni people—something I know this committee has been very active on.

In early November, the administration announced that we would cease refueling Coalition aircraft after the Government of Saudi Arabia notified the United States that it no longer required our assistance. At our urging, the Saudi-led Coalition incorporated the No-Strike List into its target development procedures; stopped the use of cluster munitions; changed its rules of engagement to incorporate some U.S. recommendations; established the Joint Incident Assessment Team; and now primarily utilizes precision-guided munitions, which can help decrease civilian casualties and collateral damage. However, the United States will continue to focus on working with the Coalition and the ROYG to minimize civilian casualties and expand urgent humanitarian efforts throughout the country.

The United Nations estimates that 22.2 million Yemenis, 80 percent of the population, are in need of assistance. An estimated 14 million people could face severe food insecurity if conditions worsen. The United States is among the top humanitarian assistance donors to Yemen, providing more than $697 million in FY 2018, which includes nearly $131 million in additional emergency food assistance the Secretary announced November 27. Our continued assistance is critical to preventing famine-level conditions. The United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and the Department of State will continue to play a pivotal role in stabilization and governance capacity building in areas of Yemen under ROYG control. USAID efforts include promoting social protection programs to create job opportunities, providing technical assistance to the Central Bank of Yemen to strengthen this critical pillar of the Yemeni economy, and investing in Yemen’s education system.
by feeding more than 900,000 Yemeni children daily and putting over two million children back in school. USAID will also support the recovery of Yemen’s health system and repair infrastructure to provide potable water and reduce the likelihood of further devastating cholera outbreaks.

Developing stabilization and governance capacity building in areas of Yemen under ROYG control in order to enhance Yemenis’ capacity to manage conflicts at the local level is also critical. Looking ahead, once a peace agreement is reached, experts project that there could be over one million former combatants in Yemen.
To prepare for this, the Department is planning long-term engagement on post-conflict Security Sector Reform and Disarmament, Demobilization, and Re-integration needs. If confirmed, I will also continue our security cooperation programming with the ROYG and the Saudi-led Coalition to strengthen the counter-smuggling and counterterrorism capacity of Yemeni forces, in addition to their maritime defense and customs and border protection capabilities. While Coalition efforts in eastern and southern Yemen have produced measurable gains, Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) and the Islamic State in Yemen (ISIL-Y) continue to use Yemen as a safe haven, seizing every opportunity to expand their operations. We must also continue to strengthen U.S.-Yemeni coordination in the fight to defeat terrorism by continuing strong U.S. support for programs that develop the capability of our partners within Yemen’s security forces, counter violent extremism, and build the capacity of law enforcement for a future unified Yemen.

A unified and prosperous Yemen, at peace with itself and its neighbors, is critical to stability in the Gulf region and safe navigation in the vital waterways of the Red Sea and Bab al-Mandab. The United States will continue to lead the international community’s response to mitigate the humanitarian crisis, while helping to build a stronger foundation for durable peace by strengthening Yemeni systems, including government, civil society, and private sector institutions that reduce conflict.

We must prepare ourselves to have a strong presence in a unified Yemen, despite future threats that may be posed by the efforts of rebuilding and unification.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, I am grateful for the opportunity to appear before you today and I look forward to answering your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Mr. Barsa?

STATEMENT OF JOHN BARSA, OF FLORIDA, TO BE AN ASSIST-ANT ADMINISTRATOR OF THE UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT FOR LATIN AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN

Mr. BARSA. Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as the nominee to serve as the Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean at USAID.

I am deeply grateful to President Trump and USAID Administrator Mark Green for the support and confidence they have placed in me with this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the U.S. Congress to ensure that USAID’s programs in the region advance U.S. national security and geopolitical interests.

As I begin my remarks, I would like to recognize the outstanding leadership of Sarah-Ann Lynch, seated here with me and Steve Olive who have headed up USAID LAC Bureau for the past 2 years. Thanks to their efforts, the LAC Bureau has been able to continually and successfully function in sometimes challenging times.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my wife Lisa and my daughters Camille and Olivia, who are here today seated behind me, for their unwavering love and support.

As the son of a Cuban refugee who grew up amongst immigrants from throughout the western hemisphere, my understanding of the forces that deny people the ability to live in freedom, prosperity, and safety in their own countries is not just something I know because of academic studies; it is part of my history. I know it in- nately and viscerally.
Throughout my career in public service, as a member of the U.S. Army Reserves for almost a decade, as a congressional staffer working in the U.S. House of Representatives, and as an appointee in the executive branch at the Department of Homeland Security, I have always appreciated the ability of an individual to make a difference.
If confirmed by the Senate, the charge before me of leading the Latin America and Caribbean of USAID is a great one. The men and women of the LAC Bureau are engaged in critical work throughout the hemisphere. If confirmed, it will be my responsibility and greatest honor to ensure that each and every individual in the bureau has the guidance and resources they need to accomplish their mission of furthering the U.S. national interests by ensuring the growth of freedom, prosperity, and democracy throughout the western hemisphere.
It would be a particular honor to serve under Administrator Mark Green. His unwavering moral compass and leadership in the execution of the USAID mission is inspirational.
If confirmed, I also look forward to working closely and collaboratively with this committee to tackle the scourges of corruption, impunity, failed governments, and dictatorial regimes that plague too many in our part of the world.
I am humbled by the opportunity being afforded to me as an individual to enable positive change for countless individuals in our world. If confirmed, I can, without hesitation or reservation, pledge to you that I will endeavor to bring every talent and skill that I may have to the challenges before me in furtherance of the USAID LAC mission.
Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify before you today. I am honored to be here, and I welcome your questions.
[Mr. Barsa’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF JOHN BARSAR

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) at the United States Agency for International Development (USAID). I am deeply grateful to the President and USAID Administrator Mark Green for the support and confidence they have placed in me with this nomination. If confirmed, I look forward to working closely with the U.S. Congress to ensure that USAID’s programs in the region advance U.S. national security and geopolitical interests.
As I begin my remarks, I would like to recognize the outstanding leadership of Sarah-Ann Lynch and Steve Olive, who have headed USAID’s LAC Bureau for the past two years. Thanks to their efforts the LAC Bureau has been able to continually and successfully function in sometimes challenging times.
I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my wife, Lisa, and my daughters, Camille and Olivia, who are here today, for their unwavering love and support.
Throughout my career, I have been blessed with the opportunity to work with many talented and inspiring leaders. I would also like to thank these mentors, too many to name here, who have made me a better public servant, manager, and leader.
I truly am humbled to have been nominated to lead the men and women of USAID’s Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean. I cannot agree more with Secretary Pompeo who just last week said the administration considers “our relationship with South America, Central America and Mexico to be central to American success.” In addition to furthering our national interest, it’s also the right and moral thing to do. If confirmed, I will use my experience—coordinating with other Agencies, collaborating with Congress, leading teams in a results-driven manner, participating in disaster responses and coordinating with the military—to lead USAID’s Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean.

My interest in Latin America and the Caribbean is not purely academic. It is quite literally in my blood. My mother was born in Santiago de Cuba, to a middle-class family that never harbored any desire to leave their country. They were not political in any sense of the word. Like just about everyone else, my mother and her four siblings simply sought educations, careers, the ability to start and support their own families, and the opportunity to provide an even brighter future for their own children.

As the nightmare of Fidel Castro’s communist revolution descended upon the island, it became clear that not only were their highest aspirations no longer possible, their ability to live in safety with the most basic of freedoms was in jeopardy as well. Many were placed in jail for the crime of possessing U.S. dollars. Family properties were seized. Jobs were lost. People they knew were being summarily executed for not supporting the revolution. For my family’s own survival they felt they had to flee the island. And so they did.

When my mother and most of her immediate family settled in Miami, they were able to restart their lives as is only possible in America. It was there in Miami that she met my father. It was there that I was born and raised as a fully bilingual and bicultural individual. And it is there that I graduated from Belen Jesuit High School, and it was there that I received my B.A. in International Relations from Florida International University. And throughout it all, I was not only surrounded by first- and second-generation Cuban refugees, but also by first- and second-generation refugees and immigrants from Haiti, Nicaragua, Guatemala, Colombia, Venezuela, and other countries throughout the Western Hemisphere.

Growing up among immigrants and their descendants does not make me unique. The vast majority of Americans are the descendants of immigrants. But because I grew up in Miami as the son of a Cuban refugee and surrounded by other immigrants from across Latin America and the Caribbean, my understanding of the forces that deny people the ability to live in freedom, prosperity, and safety in their own countries isn’t just something I know because of academic studies. It is part of my history. I know it innately and viscerally.

The Jesuit ideal of “being a man for others,” which I was taught at Belen Jesuit High School, was something I first put into practice in 1987, when I joined the United States Army Reserve, where I ultimately became a member of the 11th Special Forces Group, and later served in a Civil Affairs unit. It was while I served in Civil Affairs that I first learned about the unique partnership between USAID and the Department of Defense, and U.S. Army Reserve’s Civil Affairs in particular. If confirmed as Assistant Administrator for Latin America and the Caribbean at USAID, I will use this unique understanding of the organization and role of the military in general, and Civil Affairs in particular, to ensure continued USAID-Department of Defense partnerships to advance U.S. foreign policy goals.

My next instance of public service occurred in 1993, when I joined the personal staff of Congressman Lincoln Diaz-Balart (R-FL). It was there that I developed a deep appreciation for Congress’ oversight responsibilities. While on Congressman Diaz-Balart’s staff, I also learned the critical importance of working in a bipartisan manner for the greater good of the country. Perhaps no better example of this was the 1997 passage of the Nicaraguan Adjustment and Central American Relief Act (NACARA), which was the culmination of countless hours of bipartisan negotiations and interparty discussions. I believe it remains a great testament to what Congress can achieve regarding immigration reform, and I am extremely proud to have played a very small part in its passage.

I am also extremely proud to be continuing my public service today, in my current role as the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for the Office of Partnership and Engagement (OPE) at the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). DHS OPE coordinates the Department’s outreach efforts with critical stakeholders nationwide, including state, local, tribal, territorial (SLTT) governments, SLTT elected officials, SLTT law enforcement, the private sector, and academia, ensuring a unified approach to external engagement. OPE advocates and represents the interests of these stakeholders through the Department’s policy making process and as a conduit for the Secretary to engage with stakeholders or share information.

Early in the administration, when I arrived at OPE as the Acting Assistant Secretary, I found that my organization was in charge of three separate public awareness campaigns: the “If You See Something, Say Something” campaign, the “Blue Campaign”—the unified voice for Anti-Human Trafficking efforts throughout DHS—and a Cyber Security Awareness campaign given to DHS by the 114th Congress. All three campaigns had different reporting structures and mechanisms. It was clear to me that for each of the campaigns to grow and flourish they needed to operate out of their existing silos and share resources and information. I merged all three campaigns into one “Campaign Office” within OPE. I hand-picked a political appointee to lead this new office, and together we helped realize multiple efficiencies and benefits for all of the campaigns. Perhaps most importantly to this committee, under my tenure at DHS OPE, the Blue Campaign to raise awareness about human trafficking has grown remarkably.

Another aspect of my professional experience is also relevant to the position for which I have been nominated: disaster response. I have worked on disaster responses for Hurricanes Katrina, Irma, and most recently, Maria. When I deployed to Puerto Rico in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria, I was asked to set up an intergovernmental affairs operation within the FEMA response framework that would somehow establish communications and regular contact with each of Puerto Rico’s 78 mayors. I am told today, it is by Puerto Rico was impacted. Not only was the physical devastation severe, but traditional means of communication were virtually non-existent.

I arrived in Puerto Rico not fully knowing exactly how I was to accomplish this mission. However, upon seeing the familiar Civil Affairs patch on the arm of some soldiers at FEMA’s Joint Field Office, I knew that the Army Reserve’s Civil Affairs would be part of my solution.

And they eventually were. A Civil Affairs Battalion, mostly fluent native Spanish speakers, became part of my team which included other fluent Spanish speakers from the U.S. Coast Guard and a myriad of other civilian agencies. My teams established regular contact with local government leaders, allowing improved disaster response and life-saving efforts. This—the largest and most complex intergovernmental affairs effort in FEMA history—has been lauded by FEMA and military leaders as an example for future post-disaster cooperation. I am proud that my knowledge of just how civilian and military organizations can work together helped to contribute to this success. If confirmed, I will bring this experience to USAID, the U.S. Government lead on international disaster responses.

However, as we know, meeting the development and prosperity challenges in the Western Hemisphere necessitates more than just disaster response. Each country has unique challenges as they move forward on what Administrator Green has eloquently described as the Journey to Self-Reliance. In the Northern Triangle of Central America, challenges include weak democratic governance, corruption, a lack of economic progress, and a dearth of job opportunities for those who desperately seek them. Taken together, these challenges darken the future of those living there and all too often drive them to undertake a treacherous journey north and seek to illegally immigrate to the United States. USAID programs in the Northern Triangle, such as programs in El Salvador that target communities with high homicide rates; and programs in Honduras and Guatemala that combat corruption, seek to directly take on these challenges.

In Haiti, USAID continues to help the people of Haiti to gain stability and prosperity so that they can build their futures at home. In Colombia and Peru, USAID and its partners must continue promoting rural economic development so that we can curb the flow of cocaine into our country and mitigate the effects of illegal mining and resource extraction. For those countries further along on their Journey to Self-Reliance, such as Mexico, Chile, and Brazil, USAID’s relationship has gone from strictly donor to one of partnership. If confirmed, I look forward to strengthening and expanding these current partnerships, to further the prosperity and security of the entire Western Hemisphere.

And as Administrator Green has repeatedly noted and as National Security Advisor Bolton recently said in Miami, there are three countries that stand out among others. These countries—Cuba, Venezuela, and Nicaragua—are led by regimes who daily show their disregard for human rights, the rule of law, and the betterment of their own people. Cuba, in particular, is not just oppressing its own people, but is exporting their brutal techniques and expertise to support the tyrannies in Venezuela and Nicaragua. With Cuba’s support, Maduro’s repression of his own people has led to the greatest migration crisis in the history of the Western Hemisphere. To date, approximately 3 million people have fled the brutal dictatorship to seek refuge in neighboring countries, putting fragile democracies at risk. USAID is contributing life-saving humanitarian and development assistance to Venezuelans throughout the region and the countries generously hosting them.

Right now, USAID’s programs in Venezuela, Nicaragua and Cuba maintain a crucial lifeline to independent media and civil society in these countries who are under threat from their own governments. If confirmed by the Senate, you will have my unwavering commitment to build upon USAID activities to further the cause of freedom in Cuba, Nicaragua, and Venezuela.

I believe in Vice President Pence’s vision—echoed by Administrator Green—of a Hemisphere of Freedom in which all people have a voice in their governments. If confirmed by the Senate, I will ensure that USAID programs continue to address the root causes that hinder prosperity and freedom throughout the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, thank you for the opportunity to testify before you today. I am honored to be here, and I thank you for your consideration. I welcome your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Ms. Lynch?

STATEMENT OF SARAH–ANN LYNCH, OF MARYLAND, A CAREER MEMBER OF THE SENIOR FOREIGN SERVICE, CLASS OF MINISTER-COUNSELOR, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO THE CO-OPERATIVE REPUBLIC OF GUYANA

Ms. Lynch, Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Co-operative Republic of Guyana.

I am deeply grateful to the President, Secretary Pompeo, and USAID Administrator Mark Green for the support and confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with you, with this committee and its staff, and other Members of the Congress, to advance our nation’s interest in the Co-operative Republic of Guyana.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank my husband, Dr. Kevin Healy, who is with me here today, for all his support over the years. Our children could not be here, but I would like to also thank them, Mariah, Garrett, and Dylan, for their support, as well as for their service to AmeriCorps/City Year, the U.S. Army National Guard, and various community organizations. I am also extraordinarily grateful for the encouragement of my mother Evelyn, a former member of World War II’s Cadet Nursing Corps, and my late father Robert, an Army veteran of World War II.

My passion for international affairs was sparked years ago when I was accepted into the U.S. Peace Corps. I was honored to serve as a Peace Corps volunteer in Morocco and continued my work in international affairs as a USAID Foreign Service officer, serving for the past 25 years overseas in Bangladesh, Peru, Afghanistan, and Iraq, and in Washington, more recently, in the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean. Having served over half my career working on issues related to Latin America and the Caribbean, I am particularly honored to be considered for this important position in a region that is near and dear to my heart.

If confirmed, I will proudly promote U.S. values and represent the United States in Guyana, a melting pot of ethnic and religious diversity. I pledge to work with Guyana in areas of mutual interest as we seek to support the Government of Guyana as the country emerges as a petroleum producer, increase fair and reciprocal bilateral trade and investment, and work with the Guyanese Government and people to build upon gains in democratic governance, the rule of law, and citizen security. A secure democratic and prosperous Guyana will be a key ally for the United States for years to come in the region that we share.

This is a particularly momentous time for Guyana, a country that the World Bank currently identifies as middle income. However, the discovery of significant reserves of oil in recent years could alter the equation for this small nation. As such, it is critical that the country not fall into the trap of the resource curse. Guyana must continue to look for opportunities to diversify its economy, improve its governance, and strengthen its civil society. If confirmed, I will look for ways to build upon the work that Guyana has already done to chart a productive course for its future.

I look forward to enhancing U.S.-Guyanese relations and exploring every opportunity to engage with the government and the people of Guyana to help them fulfill their ambitious agenda.

Also, as the Secretary of State’s representative to CARICOM, if confirmed, I will work closely with our regional partners to broaden our engagement under the U.S.-Caribbean 2020 strategy.

Finally, as a matter of the highest priority, I will strive to protect U.S. mission personnel and private U.S. citizens in Guyana.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and committee members, I thank you all again for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I welcome your questions. Thank you.

[Ms. Lynch’s prepared statement follows:]

PREPARED STATEMENT OF SARAH-ANN LYNCH

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez, and distinguished members of the committee, I am honored to appear before you today as President Trump’s nominee to serve as the next U.S. Ambassador to the Co-operative Republic of Guyana. I am deeply grateful to the President, Secretary Pompeo and the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) Administrator Mark Green for the support and confidence they have placed in me. If confirmed, I pledge to work closely with you, with this committee and its staff, and other members of Congress to advance our nation’s interests in the Co-operative Republic of Guyana.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank my husband, Dr. Kevin Healy, who is with me today, for all his support over the years. Our children could not be here, but I would also like to thank them—Mariah, Garrett and Dylan—for their support, as well as for their service to AmeriCorps/City Year, the U.S. Army National Guard and various community organizations. I am also extraordinarily grateful for the encouragement of my mother, Evelyn, a former member of World War II’s Cadet Nursing Corps, and my late father, Robert, an Army veteran of World War II.

My passion for international affairs was sparked years ago when I was accepted into the U.S. Peace Corps. I was honored to serve as a Peace Corps volunteer in Morocco, and, if confirmed, it would be a privilege to work with today’s volunteers who are delivering critical U.S. assistance to the Guyanese people. I continued my work in international affairs as a USAID Foreign Service Officer, serving for the past 25 years overseas in Bangladesh, Peru, Afghanistan, and Iraq, and in Washington, most recently as the Senior Deputy Assistant Administrator in the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean. Having served over half of my career working on issues related to Latin America and the Caribbean, I am particularly honored to be considered for this important position in a region that is near and dear to my heart.

If confirmed, I will proudly promote U.S. values and represent the United States in Guyana, a melting pot of ethnic and religious diversity. I pledge to work with Guyana in areas of mutual interest as we seek to: (1) support the Government of Guyana as the country emerges as a petroleum producer and leverages its newfound revenues to expand economic opportunities and social services for all its citizens; (2) increase fair and reciprocal bilateral trade and investment, including promoting opportunities for U.S. businesses; and, (3) work with the Guyanese Government and people to build upon gains in democratic governance, the rule of law and citizen security. A secure, democratic and prosperous Guyana will be a key ally for the United States for years to come in the region that we share.
This is a particularly momentous time for Guyana, a country the World Bank currently identifies as middle-income. However, the discovery of significant reserves of oil in recent years could alter the equation for this small nation. It is estimated that Guyana holds over 4 billion barrels of offshore oil reserves, which could put it into the top twenty oil producing countries in the world. As such, it is critical the country not fall into the trap of the “resource curse.” Guyana must continue to look for opportunities to diversify its economy, improve its governance, and strengthen its civil society. If confirmed, I will look for ways to build upon the work that Guyana has already done to chart a productive course for its future.

We only have to look to Guyana’s west—to Venezuela—to see how poor governance and corruption have destroyed what should be one of South America’s most prosperous economies. Venezuelans are fleeing their country in droves, with thousands now entering neighboring Guyana. While the Government and people of Guyana have been extremely generous in their assistance to the Venezuelan people, Guyanese systems could become overwhelmed. If confirmed, I pledge to work with the Government of Guyana to help them continue to look for ways to address this situation.

I look forward to enhancing U.S.—Guyanese relations and exploring every opportunity to engage with the Government and people of Guyana to help them fulfill their ambitious agenda. Also, as the Secretary of State’s representative to CARICOM, if confirmed, I will work closely with our regional partners to broaden our engagement under the U.S.-Caribbean 2020 strategy.

Finally, as a matter of the highest priority, I will strive to protect U.S. Mission personnel and private U.S. citizens in Guyana.

Chairman Corker, Ranking Member Menendez and committee members, I thank you again for the opportunity to appear before you today, and I welcome your questions.
democratic aspirations of the Armenian people. And we are grateful for the assistance from Congress that has made a lasting impact on Armenia’s economic development and democratic transition.

The peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict is essential for a more secure and prosperous future for Armenia and the South Caucasus. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s commitment to achieving this goal.

Mr. Chairman, the horrific events of 1915 represent one of the worst mass atrocities of the 20th century when 1.5 million Armenians were deported, massacred, or marched to their deaths in the final years of the Ottoman Empire. As President Trump stated on Armenian Remembrance Day this year, such atrocities must not be repeated. If confirmed, I pledge to do everything in my power to remember the victims and encourage Turkey and Armenia to acknowledge and reckon with the painful elements of the past.

Armenia has been a steadfast partner on many fronts, and the bonds between Armenia and the United States are further bolstered by the active participation of the Armenian American diaspora. If confirmed, I will do everything in my power to strengthen and deepen the U.S.-Armenian partnership.

Finally, as a veteran of multiple high danger postings, questions of safety and security for American citizens and embassy personnel will have my complete attention and will be my highest priority, if confirmed.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for the privilege of appearing before the committee and considering my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

[Ms. Tracy’s prepared statement follows:]
We are grateful for the assistance from Congress that has made a lasting impact on Armenia’s economic development and democratic transition by supporting anti-corruption initiatives, civil society, independent media, private sector productivity, regional integration, and efforts to counter malign influence. I am mindful that these are hard-earned U.S. taxpayer dollars that must be spent effectively in support of U.S. goals and priorities.

The peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict is essential for a more secure and prosperous future for Armenia and the South Caucasus. As Co-Chair of the OSCE Minsk Group, the United States is working to help the sides achieve a peaceful, lasting negotiated settlement of the conflict based on the principles of the U.N. Charter and the Helsinki Final Act, including the non-use of force or threat of force, territorial integrity, and the equal rights and self-determination of peoples. If confirmed, I will support the administration’s commitment to achieving this goal.

Mr. Chairman, the horrific events of 1915, the Meds Yeghern or Great Calamity, when 1.5 million Armenians were deported, massacred, or marched to their deaths in the final years of the Ottoman Empire, must never be forgotten. As President Trump stated on Armenian Remembrance Day this year, “As we honor the memory of those who suffered, we [must] ensure that such atrocities are not repeated.” If confirmed, I pledge to do everything in my power to remember the Meds Yeghern victims and uphold that solemn commitment.

We must also look to the future and the opportunities for Armenia’s next generation. Progress toward reconciliation with Turkey can help reduce Armenia’s isolation and bolster its economy. Towards that end, we encourage Turkey and Armenia to acknowledge and reckon with painful elements of the past. If confirmed, I will do my best to support Armenian and Turkish efforts to forge a more peaceful and productive relationship.

Armenia has been a steadfast partner on many fronts, contributing 161 troops to NATO operations in Afghanistan and Kosovo and showing great generosity in welcoming Syrian refugees. Three years ago, Armenia and the United States signed a Trade and Investment Framework Agreement, and we saw significant increases in U.S.-Armenia trade in 2017, including several major U.S. investments. We want to help grow Armenia’s economy, especially the burgeoning information technology sector, and broaden Armenia’s economic diversity and ties to international markets.

People-to-people initiatives, including U.S. study and exchange programs, continue to be one of the pillars of our relationship, bringing nearly 450 Armenian students and professionals to the United States in the last five years. The bonds between Armenia and the United States are further bolstered by the active participation of the Armenian-American diaspora. Mr. Chairman, if confirmed, I will do everything in my power to strengthen and deepen the U.S.-Armenian partnership.

Finally, as a veteran of multiple high danger postings, questions of safety and security will have my complete attention. The safety and security of American citizens and our talented Embassy personnel and their families will be my highest priority, if confirmed.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for the privilege of appearing before the committee and considering my nomination. I look forward to your questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you, and thank you all.
I will defer to our ranking member, Senator Menendez.
Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

While I agreed to this panel, one of the challenges of having a large set of nominees with substantive geographic and jurisdictional issues is the ability to ask the questions. I see there are other colleagues. So I would like to reserve the right to come to a second round because I do not think I will get to all of my questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Sure, absolutely. By the way, thank you for letting us have this near the end of this Congress. I very much appreciate that.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Henzel, despite repeated assertions that there is no military solution to the conflict in Yemen, we have not seen an investment in a robust diplomatic strategy, and we, from my perspective, continue to pay only lip service to the support of the U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths’ efforts to bring the warring parties to the negotiating table in Sweden, hopefully as soon as this week.

In fact, the administration has argued against something that the Senate is presently considering, the Sanders-Lee resolution to remove U.S. forces from unauthorized hostilities in Yemen because of the prospects for renewed talks under U.N. auspices. But we have seen this pattern of hope for new talks followed by spoilers and collapse time and time again.

So can you explain to me very specifically why there is such optimism about this particular set of talks in Sweden? And what specifically should the United States be doing? What leverage or conditions should we apply to ensure that this round of talks is different than all other previously failed rounds of negotiations?

Mr. HENZEL. Senator, thank you. Those are all very important issues that you raise. You are correct. There is no military solution to the conflict, and it is a tragedy what has been happening in Yemen.

The administration is working to end the hostilities. It is supporting the efforts of the U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths, and it is supporting him by engaging with important parties to the conflict.

The humanitarian crisis is a tragedy. Millions are at or near starvation. The U.S. has put almost a billion dollars toward alleviating the humanitarian crisis. The Saudis and the Emiratis have made similar efforts. Iran, however, has provided nothing to address the humanitarian side of the crisis, but instead has been exacerbating the military conflict with a wide range of weapons that range up to ballistic missiles and advanced UAVs.

The administration is determined to both address the humanitarian crisis, support peace efforts, and ensure that the result is not an Iranian proxy on the southern border of Saudi Arabia——

Senator MENENDEZ. I do not mean to interrupt you, but my time is limited. And I appreciate the overview, which I know. I had two specific questions which I would like answered.

Number one, why is there so much optimism about this particular round of talks compared to the past where we have had failures? Can you give me some insight into that? I will start there, and then we will move to the next one.

Mr. HENZEL. Well, sir, I think it is appropriate to have measured expectations for this immediate round. I think it would be a great success if Mr. Griffiths were able to get the parties to show up, first of all, which the Houthis did not do during his last round.

Griffiths has also advanced some confidence building measures in order to get the process started, and actually a couple of those have come about.

First of all, a plane-load of wounded Houthis has gone to Muscat for medical treatment. This is something that Griffiths was not able to accomplish last time. It happened this time in no small part because the United States weighed in with a number of the parties, most importantly the Saudis, to make sure that this happened. So now that the Houthis have arrived in Muscat, I am more optimistic that their delegation will go to Sweden.
Griffiths has also been pushing for prisoner exchanges as a confidence building measure. I saw in the news today that it appears that one of the first exchanges has actually taken place.

So, again, I do not think it is appropriate to be over-optimistic about this immediate first round, but we have seen a couple of small signs of initial progress. And I think we have great confidence in Griffiths, and I think that if he can get the parties to show up in Sweden this time, there is the prospect of getting a substantive process started.

Senator MENENDEZ. So that is a much more measured view of these talks.

Let me ask you this. The Associated Press, Human Rights Watch, Amnesty International, the U.N. Panel of Experts on Yemen have all issued reports detailing the torture of Yemeni detainees by Yemeni forces receiving support from the United Arab Emirates. There are also allegations that at times UAE forces themselves have directly participated in the torture and illegal detention of Yemeni detainees in a network of secret prisons.

Mr. Henzel, my staff has told me that you read these reports. Can you confirm for me today that you did so? Have you read these reports?

Mr. HENZEL. No, sir, I have not. I have been based in Riyadh for the last couple of years focused on Saudi issues.

Senator MENENDEZ. In preparation for this hearing, you have not read these reports?

Mr. HENZEL. I have heard of reports. I have heard of the U.N. Panel of Experts’ statement from January of 2018 I believe. My colleagues in the Department—first of all, the Department is very concerned about these reports, and my colleagues in the Department tell me that they are looking into these, in large part, to answer questions from this committee about it.

Senator MENENDEZ. Well, I would hope that before we confirm you, that you are going to get a chance to read these reports.

If you were confirmed as the Ambassador to Yemen, what is going to be your role in investigating the allegations of illegal detention and torture?

Mr. HENZEL. Sir, if confirmed, I will also pursue answers to this question from the Emirati Government and any other places we can look.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. So let me go back to my question. If you were confirmed—you are now the Ambassador of the United States for Yemen—what do you envision your role, not the Department’s role, being in this regard?

Mr. HENZEL. Sir, if confirmed, I will also pursue answers to this question from the Emirati Government and any other places we can look.

Senator MENENDEZ. I have a lot more questions, Mr. Chairman, but I will yield for my colleagues.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Young?

Senator YOUNG. Mr. Henzel, in your prepared statement, you write, quote, if confirmed, I will work to advance our country’s key foreign policy and national security interests in Yemen. Unquote. And you go on to list those national security and foreign policy interests.
The first U.S. national security interest you mention is supporting the U.N.-led efforts towards a negotiated cessation of hostilities and a comprehensive peace agreement in Yemen.

Why do you believe the cessation of hostilities and a comprehensive peace agreement in Yemen is in the national security interests, not just the humanitarian interests, of the United States?

Mr. HENZEL. Well, sir, the conflict in Yemen, first of all, of course, is a terrible humanitarian catastrophe. But beyond that, from the point of view of our security interests, it has provided an opportunity for Iran to advance its goals in the region. Iran's involvement has become more and more worrying with each year of the conflict. So for that reason alone, I think we have an important interest in seeing a cessation of hostilities and a political settlement that involves all Yemeni parties, including the Houthis who are part of Yemen.

Furthermore, as I mentioned, having a client of Iran secure on Saudi Arabia's southern border and next to the Bab Al-Mandab where they could launch missiles whenever it is convenient to Iran would clearly be a serious problem for our national interests.

Senator YOUNG. Just to fill in a little bit, using your own language, you mentioned Iran and how their ambitions in the region could be furthered by the perpetuation of this conflict and destabilization of Yemen moving forward.

You mentioned in your written testimony local power vacuums in ungoverned spaces that have been created by the civil war, that the Houthis and terrorists have exploited to threaten important partners in the region, Saudis and others. You also say that the civil war in Yemen has complicated our ongoing counterterrorism efforts.

So particularly for my colleagues who do not yet share a sense of urgency on the national security imperative for ending the civil war, let me summarize what the Trump administration's nominee to serve as our next Ambassador in Yemen has said here today.

You have testified the ongoing civil war in Yemen has exacerbated the world's largest food security emergency, created power vacuums—I know I am being redundant, but this is very important—that the terrorists have exploited, facilitated Iran's ambitions, and complicated our counterterrorism efforts.

Mr. Henzel, I will not ask you to comment on the following because I know these decisions are made well above you. However, if the ongoing civil war has exacerbated the world's largest food security emergency and created these power vacuums and created further dangers of terrorism, it would seem we should use all available leverage to pressure the combatants to bring the civil war to an end.

I have been arguing for some period of time, frankly, that we have not done that. We have leverage, particularly with the Saudis, and given the national security interests that the civil war is undermining, I still say we should use all of that leverage to achieve a negotiated cessation of hostilities and a comprehensive peace agreement.

That is why I and Senator Shaheen and others have repeatedly called for this. And in my view, we clearly have not used all available leverage with the Saudis. So this is one of my reasons why we have arrived where we have arrived legislatively as a body here in the United States Senate, and that is why Senate Joint Resolution 54, despite the opposition of the administration, is before this body.

Mr. Henzel, on October 30, Secretary Pompeo issued a statement, which you are familiar with, on ending the conflict in Yemen. He called for the Houthis to stop missile and UAV strikes, and he called on the Saudis, with whom, again, we have partnered in this conflict, to stop airstrikes in populated areas in Yemen.

On that very same day, Secretary Mattis called for a ceasefire in the next 30 days, including ceasing dropping of bombs.

Now, by my count, 30 days from October 30 expired on November 29.

Mr. Henzel, given the clear demand of our Secretary of State and our Secretary of Defense, have the Saudis ceased dropping bombs in Yemen?

Mr. Henzel. Senator——

Senator Young. Yes or no, sir.

Mr. Henzel [continuing]. No, not completely, sir. No. The Saudis and the Emiratis dialed back their military operations, especially around Houdeidah. My understanding is that the current situation around Houdeidah remains generally static. There have been some exchanges of fire across the line of control there, but there has been a reduction in the violence.

Senator Young. Okay.

So according to local media reports cited by OXFAM, there have been repeated airstrikes since November 29, including in Houdeidah, Hajjah, Sana’a. That includes 48 airstrikes yesterday alone.

Mr. Chairman, with unanimous consent, I request permission to enter this list of airstrikes in the record.

The Chairman. Without objection.

Source: Civilian Impact Monitoring Project (UN High Commissioner for Refugees).

Senator Young. So this is a list of airstrikes in Yemen just since November 29 that has been compiled by the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees' Civilian Impact Monitoring Project.

I will not ask you to comment, Mr. Henzel, but I do not believe it is in our national security interests to do nothing when our Secretaries of State and Defense have been so clearly and directly blown off by Riyadh.

Thank you. I yield back.

The Chairman. Thank you.

Senator Murphy?

Senator Murphy. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Henzel, I am going to come back to you, but I will give you a break for a moment. I wanted to bring Ambassador Perez into the conversation here for a moment because there are going to be some pressing issues that you are going to be dealing with, should you be confirmed.

I wanted to ask you about a number of reports that have emerged from senior diplomats who have given rise to concerns that the Trump administration has exacted political revenge at the State Department on career diplomats who worked on President Obama's foreign policy priorities, including the Iran deal, the Paris Climate Accord, and relationships with Cuba, by failing to promote them or by moving them into leadership positions that were clearly meant as a signal to them about their prior work.

I understand the Inspector General is probing these allegations today. Do you have any update as to the Inspector General's work on this matter? And do you think that the proper protections are in place today to protect our career diplomats from an overtly political agenda to push them out or damage their careers, given what they have worked on previous administrations?
Ambassador PEREZ. Senator, thank you very much for that question.
First of all, the kinds of things that you are talking about right now are illegal. They are illegal under both title 5 and under the Foreign Service Act. And we have those protections in place.
I, unfortunately, do not have an update on where that investigation is. I am currently serving as the Ambassador to Chile. So I am aware of these cases from what I have read in the press. My understanding is there are two different investigations: one for the Office of the Inspector General, one for the Office of Special Counsel.
And so, if confirmed, my job will be to make sure that our employees understand what their protections are under the law and to make sure that we do work with those entities to give the documents that they need and to support those investigations going forward.
Senator MURPHY. And if there are any recommendations from these reviews, to implement those recommendations.
Ambassador PEREZ. Absolutely. Absolutely, Senator.
Senator MURPHY. Thank you.
Mr. Henzel, thank you for the time in our office. Thank you for your commitment to this very difficult job.
I wanted to raise one additional issue with you. Some concerning recent reports from “The Guardian” newspaper have found that weapons from the United States that were given to our partners in the Saudi-led coalition have ended up in the hands of militias that are linked to Al Qaeda and ISIS. These weapons include rocket launchers, grenades, and rifles.
We also hear repeatedly from researchers and partners and nonprofits on the ground that the coalition provides arms and financing for radical Salafist groups, militias that are often the most zealous fighters against the Houthis. This is not something that the United States is engaged in on the ground. This is something that our coalition partners are engaged in on the ground.
Are you aware of these reports? Do we have end-use requirements that prohibit the transfer of weapons to third party groups?
And what is the U.S. policy towards the coalition’s support for these dangerous Salafist militias inside Yemen?
Mr. HENZEL. Senator, yes, there are end-use requirements in place on weapons that are sold to partners of the United States overseas, and the U.S. Government does check to ensure that those are enforced. I have heard of these reports. I understand that they are being looked into.
As for extremists on the ground in Yemen, yes, my understanding is that there are individuals and small groups that are mixed in with some of the groups that partners are supporting, especially the United Arab Emirates. This is something that the United States has engaged with our partners about, and I would be happy to take the question back to get some more details for you.
Senator MURPHY. Does the administration or the embassy have independent knowledge, separate and aside from the report in “The Guardian," that these weapons ended up in the hands of these militia groups?

Mr. HENZEL. I do not know, sir. I can take that question back for you.

Senator MURPHY. Okay. Thank you and thank you for your acknowledgement that this is a deepening problem on the ground. It is not something that we talk about enough in the context of the war inside Yemen. This has happened in Syria. This has clearly happened in Afghanistan. Time and time again, when we give weapons to people that we think are on our side, they end up getting into the hands of people that we are, in fact, doing battle with. If that is happening inside Yemen today, the weapons that we are providing to the Saudi coalition are ending up in the hands of groups aligned with Al Qaeda and ISIS, it is more and more evidence that we need to get out of this partnership as quickly as possible.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Kaine?

Senator KAINE. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Henzel, I appreciated the opportunity to dialogue with you earlier. The fact that you have already served once in Yemen, 1997 to 1999, that your service in Riyadh now, I think makes you a good candidate for this position.

One of the issues we talked about in my office was making sure that we have a meeting of the minds about the cause of the civil war in Yemen. And I do not want to put words in your mouth, but my understanding is while Iran is engaged in a lot of activity with the Houthis that we would be opposed to, just as they are engaged in other activity in the region we would be opposed to. Senator Coons and I just did a letter yesterday about prisoners being held by Iran, including Americans.

The civil war in Yemen is driven or there is an origin to that civil war, which is the Houthis’ dissatisfaction as a minority with the way they are being treated by the government. And that is really the origin of the civil war, whatever Iran’s participation in it is.

Would you agree with me in that statement?

Mr. HENZEL. Sir, it is a long story going back, the origins of the Houthis. At their very first beginnings, they had grievances with the regime of Ali Abdullah Saleh and their position in Yemen. They turned to violence to address those problems. Over the course of, I believe, six wars between the Houthis and the central government, their strength grew until they were in a position where they were able to overrun the capital.

Senator KAINFE. And some of their concerns were the way they were treated as a minority, and other concerns were corruption by the government that they objected to. I mean, they had a whole series of sort of concerns that were fomenting their dissatisfaction with the central government. Correct?

Mr. HENZEL. At their origins, they had a number of concerns like that. But as I said, they turned to violence to address those problems and touched off a chain of conflicts that has resulted in the terrible situation in Yemen today.
Senator Kaine. And then Iran has been exploiting that division. They exploited a division in Bahrain when the 30 percent Sunni population essentially rules the 70 percent Shia population. There was dissatisfaction, and Iran moves in to exploit that dissatisfaction, which is not be excused and must be countered.

The reason I raise this issue is I hear the Saudis and also many from this administration talk about this war in Yemen. They act as if it is all caused by Iran. And there is a very dangerous blindness if we look at the problem that way.

The war in Vietnam between France and Vietnam was because of a failed colonial project. The U.S. had no equities in that war in 1954 after the French defeat in Dien Bien Phu. But we got convinced that it was not a colonial issue, that it was a battle against communism. And we took over the failed French colonial project in Southeast Asia, and it turned into this massive challenge for us. We misread the problem. We did not recognize that a native population had real concerns about their own politics, and we tried to interpret through our lens.

I very much worry that administration policymakers and the Saudis are interpreting Yemen as if it is just an instance of Iranian adventurism. And I think if you look at the problem just from that lens, you miss what the problem is.

And I appreciated the conversation that we had about it. We have got to deal with Iranian bellicosity in the region, but if we are not also willing to deal with legitimate grievances of populations that feel like they are under the thumb of a corrupt or unresponsive central government, then we will misunderstand. And I really will count on you giving our policymakers good advice about that, should you be confirmed.

I want to say to you, Ambassador Perez, congratulations on your nomination and your service.

Virginia is a very militarily connected State, but we also have 3,500 FSOs who call Virginia home. And I think the American public has gotten really good, whatever they think about the status of wars abroad, at really sincerely thanking our men and women who serve in the military. But we are not as good at thanking our other civil servants who serve in difficult positions abroad. Many FSOs get posted to places that they might not have chosen. They get posted to places where they cannot take their family. And some of you on the panel have taken such posts. So I think your work in this new position is very important to advocate for—and hopefully some of us will help you to advocate for the needs of some wonderful public servants.

Finally, I want to ask you, Mr. Culvahouse. Congratulations on your nomination. This is an incredibly important position. I am very intrigued with the notion of the Quad as our military and other leadership discuss a loose affiliation, military and otherwise, between the United States, Japan, Australia, and India. And I would like, if I could, ask one question as I conclude. Offer your thoughts about the utility of this idea in terms of both security cooperation and, more broadly, economic cooperation in the Indo-Pacific.

Mr. Culvahouse. Thank you for your question, Senator.
I frankly need to know more about the Quad. I think in the briefings I have received, people have been excited about it, excited about the opportunity. They think it should be a priority that I should look at, if I am lucky enough to be confirmed. And certainly the challenges, the threats, and the geopolitical competition, if you will, from China in the region is such that I think the Quad initiative is one that definitely should be pursued.

Senator Kaine. Excellent. Well, I will just remind everybody that the Big 10 has 12 teams now, and the Big 12 has 10 teams. So just because we call it a Quad does not mean we cannot have other nations that want to join in also to participate. [Laughter.]

Senator Kaine. And I would encourage you on that as well.

Mr. Culvahouse. Well said, sir.

Senator Kaine. Thanks, Mr. Chair.

The Chairman. I am just reading a note. At this point in time, the witnesses are saying, thank goodness for Yemen. [Laughter.]

Senator Menendez. Not that quick, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Okay.

I do want to just say—I know you are in Saudi Arabia now as the DCM. We heard the clearest testimony I have ever heard from intelligence this morning. I have been here 12 years. I have never heard ever a presentation like was made today. There is no doubt in my mind if the Crown Prince was in front of a jury, he would be convicted unanimously of murder in 30 minutes.

I do hope that somehow the administration will find a way to speak to this. I know that we are going to take this issue up, and it ties into Yemen, as you know, because of the conflict that is taking place there. To allow a crown prince to plan the sawing up of a—a sawing up of a journalist, to monitor that, to know that, and for that to go without any statement from the United States of America of condemnation.

Could you share with me a little bit about how in a culture like Saudi Arabia that affects a close-knit royal family and their sense of what they are able to continue to do once the world knows they have done this and they move on with impunity?

Mr. Henzel. Well, Senator, they are very important issues. The administration has condemned what happened to Mr. Kashoggi. It was an atrocity. And it continues to press for accountability for the persons responsible.

I think inside Saudi Arabia—I left about a week after these events came to light, but at that point, it seemed as if, unfortunately, popular opinion was rallying around the royal family. There is a sense that the leadership was being unfairly attacked from outside.

But however that progresses, the administration believes that there needs to be accountability for what happened to Mr. Kashoggi.

The Chairman. Senator Booker?

Senator Booker. Thank you very much.

Forgive me for not being here when a lot of the other questions were asked about Yemen, but I am going to go right there as well and just ask, first and foremost—really there is a counterterrorism issue that keeps being talked about. And in the midst of the conflict in Yemen between the Houthis and the coalition, Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula and other groups really do remain potential threats. We heard about that in our classified briefing.

But, Mr. Henzel, in your testimony, you noted that the war Yemen has complicated our ongoing counterterrorism efforts. Is it possible that as long as the war continues, Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula will find plenty of ungoverned space to thrive and that this is actually going to create worse of a threat?

Mr. HENZEL. Senator, I cannot predict how the situation will progress, but it is definitely the case that the war in Yemen, which has been fueled and exacerbated by Iranian weapons, has made it more difficult for the United States to pursue its counterterrorism goals mostly in the eastern and southern part of Yemen.

Senator BOOKER. And so how would you characterize right now AQAP’s current power position in Yemen as it relates to threats to the United States?

Mr. HENZEL. The UAE, sir?

Senator BOOKER. No. AQAP.

Mr. HENZEL. AQAP. Sorry.

AQAP remains active in ungoverned spaces in eastern and southern Yemen. The U.S. is engaged with its counterterrorism partners, including the UAE and Saudi Arabia, to push back on that threat. There have been a number of notable successes over the past year or so, including the killing of an important leader of Al Qaeda. This is an effort that the administration will continue, but bringing about a cessation of hostilities for the other conflict in Yemen, the Houthi war, and the establishment of an interim government that can better control Yemeni territory will certainly make the counterterrorism struggle easier for the U.S. to succeed at.

Senator BOOKER. I am sure you have heard today from my colleagues this bipartisan concern about the war, about the humanitarian consequences, the god-awful realities on the ground for children and other civilians. And maybe for me—and you may have said this already, but can you make it clear to me at least what policy changes you are going to advocate, should you be confirmed, that are going to be different from years past? Are you planning a different policy agenda to try to deal with this crisis that I have watched now over many months just grow worse?

Mr. HENZEL. Well, Senator, the administration’s policy, shaped here in Washington and in consultation with Congress, remains to support efforts to bring about a political settlement among the parties in Yemen, which include the Houthis. And in our assessment, the best way to bring that about is to continue to support the efforts of the U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths.

And in fact, this week he is likely to convene the parties in Sweden. There have already been two important confidence building measures carried out: the transfer of some Houthi wounded to Muscat for treatment, and some discussions about prisoner exchanges, which seem to be bearing fruit.

As I said earlier, I think it is appropriate to be cautious when assessing the prospects for some immediate breakthrough. But as a first step, bringing the parties together will be more than anyone has been able to do for the past couple of years.

Senator BOOKER. Well, again, I am grateful that you are willing to step into what I think is one of the more urgent humanitarian crises on the planet earth with implications for the region. And I am hoping that as you step up to this very important post, that what you said in your answer to me continues to be the case, which is your willingness to engage with Congress. And right now, I have a lot of frustrations with how the administration is engaging or not engaging, and I am hoping that from your position, you will cooperate fully with us in sharing information and, using your word, consultation.

But, again, thank you for your willingness to step forward and put yourself up for such an important post, not just for the United States but for all of humanity. There is an indivisibility to human dignity, and the assaults on human dignity that are happening in Yemen diminish the dignity of this country and humanity as a whole. So thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator Markey?

Senator MARKEY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Last Wednesday, we had a vote on the Senate floor on the Yemen law and the War Powers Act. But on the same day, Secretary Pompeo announced $131 million in additional food assistance for Yemen to be provided through U.N. World Food Program. However, that announcement came after the World Food Program had already raised the alarm, that in recent weeks, imports through Houdeidah have fallen by nearly one-half at a time when half of the country’s population is on the brink of starvation, and when 85,000 children have been estimated to have died from starvation in Yemen.

How does the administration, Mr. Henzel, expect the World Food Program and other agencies to successfully implement food distribution with this new funding without also sufficiently addressing humanitarian access constraints by parties to the conflict, including U.S. allies, the Saudis, the Emiratis? How do we do that? How do we get their cooperation? You can say that you are going to send in the food. The kids are dying. But we have other countries who are allegedly our allies who just have not been cooperating and, in fact, are the cause of the problem.

Mr. HENZEL. Senator, you are absolutely right that humanitarian access and access for commercial goods is of utmost importance, given the horrible humanitarian situation in Yemen.

When problems have come up from time to time over the last couple of years, like the one you just described in Houdeidah, the administration has engaged with the U.N., with the Saudis, with any party we could in order to try to straighten out these bottlenecks. The administration was engaged last week over some difficulties in the Port of Aden.

I am not familiar with the news you just mentioned, but I am sure that the administration at senior levels will be engaging with the Saudis if they are the source of the problem. The American embassy in Riyadh also engages regularly with the Saudi officials who manage these permits, and I am sure they will be doing that as well.

Senator MARKEY. Well, you know, my wife retired as a two-star admiral and had been the chief of behavioral medicine at the National Institutes of Health. And what she always tells me is that individuals and countries are the same. You either have reenactment or you have reconciliation.

So my fear here is we are just going to go through reenactment, that we can say we are going to send in the food, but if the Saudis, the Emiratis are not really going to cooperate, then we are just going to see further exacerbation and, in fact, reenactment of what we have been going through. So without firm commitment by our government to ensuring that these countries get out of the way so we can get to these kids, we are just going to see a dramatic additional increase in unnecessary deaths, and without access, it just is not going to work.

So I like the concept, but that is only 20 percent of life. 80 percent of life is execution. So if we cannot pull this off, we cannot get in there, then it is just going to wind up with additional futility.

So I just say that to you, Mr. Henzel. We have high expectations that this problem is going to be alleviated and not exacerbated.

On Armenia, my question is it seems unlikely that the Trump administration will change its longstanding U.S. policy on how we refer to the Armenian genocide. How will you address calls by the Armenian community to call what the 1915 slaughter was, a genocide?

Ms. TRACY. Senator, thank you for that question.

Let me be absolutely clear. The Trump administration and I personally acknowledge the historical facts of what took place at the end of Ottoman Empire, the mass killings, the forced deportations, and marches that ended 1.5 million lives, and a lot of suffering. And I will, if confirmed, do everything in my power to acknowledge and respect the losses and the suffering and commit myself to participating in any remembrance activities.

Senator MARKEY. Well, it is time for us just to stand up and call it what it was. It helps us in the future to have credibility.

The peaceful transfer of power in May of 2018 seemed to present an opportunity, but there has been a poor track record on the previous government. So what are we going to do to support the Armenian Government in promoting reforms, either diplomatically or through our assistance?

Ms. TRACY. Senator, thank you for that question.

It was a very remarkable moment what happened this past spring to see a peaceful transition of power. And since then, we have mobilized resources to focus on three areas. Fighting corruption, which is a place where this new government has also set a high priority, and we are working to try to assist them on that. Continuing to strengthen civil society where we have a long record in Armenia and where I think that played an important role in what happened this past spring. And supporting an independent media. These are three areas that help maintain accountability, I think buttress the checks and balances that are necessary in a democratic society. And so those are the areas where we are going to work to help support the democratic aspirations of the Armenian people.

Senator MARKEY. I hope so. Armenians in America are maybe the most successful ethnic group. We want to make sure that the Armenians who stay can enjoy all of their God-given abilities as well, and I think we have to help to just continue to promote the reform they are going to need.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

Senator Menendez?

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Let me ask all of the nominees first a question that I would like your verbal response to. Will you provide this committee and members thereof with a timely, honest, and candid response to inquiries that are put to you, either if you are an Ambassador nominee in a situation on the ground, or if you are heading a department with reference to the jurisdiction of your department? Give me a verbal answer to that.

Mr. CULVAHOUSE. Yes, Senator.

Ambassador PEREZ. Yes, Senator.

Mr. HENZEL. Yes, Senator.

Mr. BUSBY. Yes, Senator.

Ms. LYNCH. Yes, Senator.

Ms. TRACY. Yes, Senator.

Senator MENENDEZ. And I appreciate that because for us to determine what is the right foreign policy anywhere in the world, having an honest assessment of what is going on is critical. So I know that while you are nominated by the President, you are advised and consented to by the United States Senate. And so, therefore, you work for the whole of the American government, and it is important for us to know, as we have experienced most recently on some issues.

Let me turn back to you, Mr. Henzel. I am perplexed and I have given our government and the Saudis the benefit of the doubt, but no longer—about our assistance to them under the guise that we would create less terrible humanitarian consequences as a result of our military assistance to them and our strategic information to them as to how they go about their missions.

Why is it, since you have been the charge d'affaires, that you think that they cannot capture that and succeed in doing it? Is it a lack of will? Is it a lack of capacity, experience? What is it? Because it hard to see that the bombing of a school bus and other civilian targets is a perfection of what we are doing.

Mr. HENZEL. Yes, sir. You are right. These civilian casualty incidents are unacceptable. Even one would be and the fact that there has been a chain of them is a tragedy.

The U.S. military has attempted to assist the Saudis and the Emiratis with their targeting procedures, their overall operations. I have seen a lot of this work taking place. I believe there have been some results, but clearly the results are not nearly adequate yet. And the administration is committed to continuing to press the Saudis to ensure that there are no more of these incidents.

You asked why there has not been an improvement. My impression from being there is that while the operational levels of the Saudi military have taken on board the lessons they have gotten from the U.S. military and through their own desire to avoid more of these problems, there is still a lack of discipline in some parts of the Saudi command structure, and they sometimes bypass all the good procedures that they have set up. And we often find that that is at the root of these new civilian casualty incidents.

Senator MENENDEZ. The problem with that is when you bypass the procedures and there is no consequences for bypassing and you allow that bypassing to go on with impunity at the end of the day.

Let me turn to Ms. Tracy. Do you acknowledge that from 1915 to 1923 nearly 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children were killed by the Ottoman Empire?

Ms. TRACY. Yes, Senator. As I stated, the administration and I acknowledge the historical effects that you have mentioned.

Senator MENENDEZ. You can keep your microphone on because I am going to have a series of questions for you.

Do you acknowledge that on May 24th, 1915, the allied powers of England, France, and Russia jointly issued a statement explicitly charging for the first time ever another government of committing crimes, "against humanity and civilization?"

Ms. TRACY. Senator, I am not aware of that particular event.

Senator MENENDEZ. I commend it to your attention, and ask that you give me a written response after you read it.

Ms. TRACY. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you acknowledge that the United States Holocaust Memorial Council, an independent federal agency, unanimously resolved on April 30, 1981 that the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum would document the Armenian genocide in the museum and has done so through a public examination of the historic record?

Ms. TRACY. Senator, I will provide a written acknowledgement to you of that.

Senator MENENDEZ. Do you acknowledge that Henry Morgenthau, the United States Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire at the time, said that the Turkish Government’s deportation order for the Armenians was, “a death warrant to a whole race” and an aim which, “they made no particular attempt to conceal” in their discussions with him?

Ms. TRACY. Yes, Senator, I acknowledge the facts of that reporting of Ambassador Morgenthau.

Senator MENENDEZ. Would you discipline or otherwise punish an employee of the U.S. embassy in Armenia for an honest remembrance of the Armenian genocide?

Ms. TRACY. Senator, I would expect that, as with myself, we follow the policy of the administration, and the policy is that we acknowledge the historical facts of the events of 1915 as a mass atrocity and that we participate in any remembrance activities.

And I will just say as a senior leader in the Foreign Service, I am always open to debate on my team. I do not punish people for expressing their viewpoints. But as members of the executive branch, at the end of the day we support the President’s policies.

Senator MENENDEZ. This is the problem with nominees who come before us—not you particularly—that in fact, we have a historical reality: 1.5 million people were massacred. That is a genocide. And yet, we send an ambassador to a country. We will have them go to a memorial of a holocaust of the Armenian people, and yet they will not be able to call it a genocide. Pretty ironic. If we are not able to acknowledge the past, we are destined to relive it. This is not unique to this department. It has been going on for a while. We need to change that reality.

You know, I gave you a series of questions because I am trying to give you all the other elements. But the reality is it seems that we cannot have the words come off our lips: “Armenian genocide.” That is what took place. That is what history shows. That is what the world recognizes. That is what our own federal agencies like the Holocaust Museum recognize.

So I hope that you will look at those other questions and give me answers in order to get to a better place.

There are some efforts for a U.S.-Armenia tax treaty. I hope that you will work to advance the timely negotiation of this accord to help promote transparency and protect U.S. investors from the threat of double taxation, if you are confirmed.

Ms. TRACY. Senator, if confirmed, I will be very pleased to look further into this issue. My understanding is that the lead federal agency is the Treasury Department’s Office of Tax Policy. But I will certainly be very happy to look into this issue further with the Treasury.

Senator MENENDEZ. It is, but as the Ambassador, if you promote it, then we will hopefully move it along. So I hope you will do that.

Ms. TRACY. Yes, sir.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you.

Now, Ambassador Perez, I want to follow up on questions that Mr. Murphy raised with you. I have asked the State Department for a series of information, emails, memos, and other information with reference to the targeting of career employees for retaliation of their perceived political beliefs and other elements, which I have not received, which is the legitimate oversight of this committee. No different than when we had Benghazi hearings and a whole host of others in the past. So in the absence of receiving that, I will continue to hold nominees until I can get a response.

But having said that, do you agree, if you were to be confirmed, that any such targeting of career employees, whether for perceived political beliefs, ethnic origin, or association with prior policies is illegal under federal law?

Ambassador PEREZ. Senator, I do agree.

Senator MENENDEZ. And if confirmed, what will you do to communicate to the offices within your purview that any such targeting or retaliation is unacceptable? And how will you ensure that the appropriate targeting or retaliation does not occur?

Ambassador PEREZ. Sir, I believe communication is really critical—Senator, is really critical in this regard. We have to make sure that the employees of the State Department understand what are prohibited personnel practices, and I think that would be my role, if confirmed, to do that and to make sure that our employees know where they can go if they believe that their rights have been violated. As we discussed earlier today, the Office of the Inspector General and the Office of the Special Counsel are two entities that would look at that review.

There is also an accountability part of this that needs to be addressed. And obviously, once we have the results of those, to deal with accountability.
Senator MENENDEZ. I think I heard your answer to Senator Murphy. I just want to make sure. You are committed to implement, if you are confirmed, any of the recommendations put out by the Inspector General or Special Counsel?

Ambassador PEREZ. Yes, sir. Again, I do not know the specifics of the cases right now, but yes, sir, generally the recommendations made by the Office of the Inspector General are taken very seriously by the department, and we will be committed to responding to those.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. Responding to does not mean implementing.

Ambassador PEREZ. Sir, yes. To implement those questions, absolutely. I do not know what they are going to say, so I just do not know if I have the authority to do that in the job that I will have.

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate that. But within your authority.

Ambassador PEREZ. Within my authorities.

Senator MENENDEZ. Okay. And one last question for you.

I have, in my 26 years of doing foreign policy between the House and the Senate, had a real challenge with the State Department’s lack of diversity. And America’s Foreign Service should look like America in both gender and race and ethnicity.

What will you do to work, since this comes under your bailiwick, to make the State Department more diverse than it is today? It is one of the worst of the federal agencies that we have.

Ambassador PEREZ. Sir, I could not agree more. As I said in my statement, the State Department looks a little bit different today than when I joined. But we are not doing a good enough job, especially at the senior levels. We have to be able to weave diversity into the fabric of our entire lifecycle of talent management. So it starts, obviously, with recruitment, but it continues through promotion, succession planning, the entire talent management cycle.

I can tell you as Chief of Mission, I work with a diverse group in Santiago. I am a better Ambassador because of that. I have a better mission because of that. We have people with different experiences, with different opinions. We are better able to represent the U.S. Government.

So my job is going to be able to make sure people understand why diversity is important, and it has to be a part of everything that we do.

Senator MENENDEZ. I appreciate that.

Mr. Culvahouse, I wonder if you understand the interplay with Australia and China and the influence that China has in Australia and the activities that China has actually taking place in Australia to influence elements of Australian society. Could you give me a sense of that, and how is it that we put our relationship, which started off a little rocky under the administration, in a way that promotes Australia as a critical partner in this part of the world, especially with a rising China that seeks to exert its influence throughout that region in a way that seeks dominance at the end of the day?

Mr. CULVAHOUSE. Yes, Senator. And it is an excellent question, excellent point. And other members of the committee have mentioned it as well.
The fact is that China is Australia's largest trading partner, and that it gives it outsized influence and outsized opportunities to a nation that is already—let us say—aggressive. And I know that from my commercial experience representing U.S. companies in the Asia-Pacific.

The Australians have recognized some of the aggressive efforts to influence them, have done some housecleaning, have passed domestic legislation, creating a counterpart of our Foreign Agents Registration Act. CTE and Huawei have been denied the opportunity to participate in certain investments. There has been an investment by a Hong Kong company that is in the energy sector that has been denied. So I think the Australians are already quite sensitized to it.

But just let me say that I view the strategic and security relationship between the United States and Australia to be strategically critical, and I, if confirmed, will make an assessment of efforts by third countries, third parties to undermine that relationship, and if there are such efforts, including China, I will not refrain from forthrightly reporting same up the chain of the department and to speak publicly if and as required.

Senator MENENDEZ. Very good.

Finally, Mr. Barsa—and Ms. Lynch, you will forgive me, but you are not going to the world’s worst assignment.

This role is incredibly important in the western hemisphere. I have serious concerns about where we are headed in the hemisphere. I have serious concerns that I expressed to the Administrator about the continuing part of AID’s mission in democracy and human rights. We see a backsliding in democracy and human rights in the hemisphere. We have seen it in Venezuela, of course, longstanding in Cuba, as well as the realities of what is going on in Nicaragua. But that is not it in and of itself.

We have a series of movements across the hemisphere of changing constitutions under the guise of having a democratic process only to give people the opportunity to continue to stay in power for longer periods of time.

So AID’s mission on democracy and human rights is critical. We constantly see budgets that are sent to us that would dramatically cut those elements.

I want to hear from you, if you are confirmed, will you be an advocate for these provisions of AID’s portfolio that are critical, I think, to the national interests and security of the United States?

Mr. BARSA. Thank you for your question, Senator.

I share your belief in the importance of these funds and these activities furthering the national interest. If I did not believe this to be the case, I would not have accepted this nomination. It is a great honor given to me to be nominated to lead the men and women of LAC in carrying out this work.

I can certainly, without hesitation, commit to you, members of the committee, that certainly any funds coming to me from the United States Congress to expand freedom, prosperity, and democracy in the hemisphere—I will ensure that they are spent in an efficient manner. And I will advocate for this work within the process within the administration.
Senator MENENDEZ. And as an example of that, one of our challenges—and I will close on this. I have a series of other questions which I will submit for the record. And I would ask you all, to the extent that I have questions sent to you, for the sake of time and your families here, not to belabor it, but give me a substantive answer, please.

Central America. Perfect example of our own national—this is not being a good neighbor—our own national interests and our national security. The reason that people flee Central America is they have a choice: stay and die or see my daughter raped or see my son forcibly put into a gang, or flee and take a chance at living. Until we change the dynamics of those countries, we will continuously have this challenge.

So AID’s mission in part in governance and institution building and democracy and human rights in those countries are critical for our own interests and our long-term elements. So I hope that, if you are confirmed, you will be an advocate of that because I think it is critically necessary for us to change the dynamics of what we see at the border as a result of the realities of what is happening on the ground in Central America.

Mr. BARRSA. Thank you, Senator. I most assuredly will be an advocate for that.

There is certainly a difference between what we are seeing on the border and what you mention is going on in the countries. I have always advocated for going for root causes, and it is the root causes that are obviously the drivers of all kinds of migration. And certainly, if confirmed, I will absolutely be working towards those.

I am heartened by some data I have been seeing from El Salvador, where USAID funds worked closely with INL and the State Department have worked to drop homicide rates. And interestingly enough, with the drop of homicide rates in El Salvador, what we are seeing in the border is less Salvadorians coming into the border. So while that may not be replicated in the western highlands in Guatemala and Honduras, there may be some best practices there. But I agree with you wholeheartedly on the need to go to the root causes.

Senator MENENDEZ. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. Absolutely.

Thank you all for being here.

I am going to ask one question and the rest of them I will do in writing to make it easier for you and those who are with you.

But to Ms. Perez, section 404 of the Department of State Authorities Act of 2017 required the Secretary of State to establish a 3-year pilot program for lateral entry into the Foreign Service that targets mid-career individuals from the Civil Service and the private sector. This was something we pushed for and we think can enhance the department in a very positive way.

It is months overdue as the statute requires. And I just want to have your commitment that you will implement this program as required by law.

Ambassador PEREZ. Thank you, Senator.

Yes. My understanding is that because of the hiring freeze, this program has not yet been implemented. But I really do look forward to working with you and the committee about what this program might look like. We need to get the best people we can find. It is very complex world we live in, and I think we need to look creatively and innovatively at how we staff. So I look forward to further discussions on this.

The CHAIRMAN. Thank you.

What we will do is keep the record open until the close of business on Thursday. I would hope that there would be some miraculous way to have a markup before we leave here. I do not know when we are leaving here with all of the things that have occurred. But hopefully the process you went through to prepare for the hearing today will make you even more prepared for the assignments you have upcoming. Thank you again for your desire to serve our country in this way, for your families in supporting that. And with that, the meeting is adjourned.

[Whereupon, at 4:10 p.m., the hearing was adjourned.]

Additional Material Submitted for the Record

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ARTHUR B. CULVAHOUSE JR. BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. One of the first policy initiatives I undertook during my tenure as chair of O’Melveny & Myers LLP was the launch of our firm-wide “Pro Bono Initiative.” By formalizing and prioritizing our pro bono program, we set about to honor the firm’s historic commitment to serving communities in need, and to create a platform to raise the prominence of our firm’s pro bono efforts. Under my leadership, we adopted formal policies and procedures that rewarded our lawyers for using their skills to provide access to justice for those in need. Our program grew into one of the most respected in the country. O’Melveny’s pro bono work frequently targets matters of basic human rights and core democratic values. These efforts include combating human trafficking, protecting victims of abuse and neglect, preserving access to high quality education for low-income children, assisting military veterans, ensuring access to health care and food security for the most vulnerable, assisting with adoption and foster care proceedings, and fighting for civil rights. I am extremely proud of how successful our program, our lawyers, and our firm have been in promoting human rights and democratic values, and I look forward to continuing this work if confirmed as Ambassador.

Question 2. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Australia? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. Australia is a vibrant constitutional democracy with a freely elected federal parliamentary government. An independent press, an effective judiciary, and a highly functional democratic political system combine to promote individual freedoms. We work closely with Australian civil society to promote an already robust civic debate on a range of social, academic, economic and security issues. Over the past few years, Australia has focused on the growing efforts by foreign entities to interfere in its domestic politics and influence its foreign policy. Since 2017, Australia’s Government and parliament have debated and passed several ground-breaking laws that restrict foreign political donations, require foreign agents to register, and curb and penalize acts which are injurious and undermine confidence in public institutions and civic life.
In any major, cosmopolitan society there are always groups that face tougher challenges economically or socially. Australia has taken great pains to acknowledge the value and historic role of its indigenous inhabitants, the aborigines, and help address some of the lingering social issues that face that community. Voters elected the first indigenous woman to the House of Representatives in 2016. If confirmed, I would seek opportunities to share America’s own experiences in encouraging greater inclusivity.

Question 3. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Australia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. Australia is an advanced, free and open democracy. The United States and Australia consult frequently on the challenges that mature democracies face. We work closely on how best to support and nurture the young democracies in the Indo-Pacific. If confirmed, I intend to continue our close and productive dialogues on this and many other topics.

Question 4. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. As an advanced and free-market-based economy, Australia is not generally eligible to receive U.S. Government assistance. Rather, we robustly partner with Australia to coordinate our assistance to developing nations, particularly in the region. We seek to further such collaborative engagements with more people-to-people, educational, civic and scholarly exchanges and programs.

Question 5. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Australia? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Australia is a mature democracy with a vibrant civil society. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting with civil society members to hear about their goals and objectives and to learn how we might work together in areas of common concern and share best practices.

Just as certain groups are underrepresented in the U.S. political system, in Australia women, indigenous peoples and minority groups are generally under-represented in political bodies relative to their proportion of the population. If confirmed, I would seek opportunities to share our own experiences in encouraging greater inclusivity, possibly through U.S. Government-sponsored programs.

Question 6. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Australia is a constitutional democracy with a freely elected federal parliamentary government. If confirmed, I intend to develop cordial relationships with members of all political parties in order to better understand their positions on issues of importance to us and to them, and to explain U.S. positions and their merits. I view this advocacy role as a key element of my position as Ambassador. As the father of three daughters, the issue of inclusivity of women, minorities, and youth, in all facets of public, economic, and political life is near and dear to me. I am particularly proud that each of my daughters have spent time in government service following college graduation.

Question 7. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Australia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in country Australia?

Answer. Australia enjoys the benefits of an independent and lively press. We are aware that Australia’s defamation laws are different from ours, and it is concerning that some journalists who have done groundbreaking work on China’s interference in Australia’s domestic politics and foreign policy are being tried for defamation. We are tracking those cases closely. If confirmed, I look forward to engaging with a wide array of traditional and social media outlets.

Question 8. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?
Answer. Like many mature democracies with a tradition of openness, Australia is coming to terms with the fact that it is an active target of foreign influence campaigns, agents, and actors. In June 2018, the Australian parliament approved ground-breaking national security legislation that bans foreign interference in politics, stiffens the punishment for leaking classified information, and makes it a crime to damage Australia’s economic relations with another country. In November 2018, the Australian parliament also passed legislation that bans foreign governments and state-owned enterprises from donating to Australian political parties, individual candidates and political campaigns. We seek to support Australia as it develops these tools to tackle a serious problem.

Question 9. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Australia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I and my Embassy team will actively engage with the Government of Australia, employers, and civil society to promote internationally recognized worker rights, including freedom of association. Independent trade unions are one of the fundamental building blocks for any democratic society and are important partners for the State Department in many countries. Moreover, ensuring U.S. trade partners respect internationally recognized worker rights and adhere to high labor standards promotes a level playing field for U.S. workers and helps create stronger trading partners for the United States.

Question 10. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Australia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Australia? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Australia?

Answer. In Australia, discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity is prohibited by law in a wide range of areas, including in employment, housing, family law, taxes, child support, immigration, pensions, care of elderly persons, and social security. Same-sex marriage has been legal in Australia since December 2017. Nonetheless, instances of discrimination are sometime reported, usually due to lingering social prejudice.

If confirmed, my team and I will work supportively with Australian Government agencies, non-governmental organizations and other members of civil society to bolster public acceptance of the LGBTI community.

Question 11. Australia has been cited in several reports as “ground zero” for Chinese influence campaign activities, including interference with parliamentary elections, strong-arming of publishers, influencing the media, leveraging aggressive investments and business activities, Chinese student association activities, and so on:

- What is your understanding of these activities and how Chinese trade-craft differs from Russian trade-craft when it comes to influence activities?

Answer. Like many advanced and open democracies, Australia is an active target of influence and interference campaigns by foreign actors, agents, and states, including China, according to many credible reports. Should I be confirmed, I will undertake to work hard with my Australian colleagues to combat any and all efforts by foreign actors, agents, or states, including China and Russia, to interfere in Australia’s or America’s democratic processes, free markets, and academic institutions.

Question 12. Are there lessons we can learn from Australia’s experience?

Answer. As kindred systems with a similar political, economic, and social systems, the United States and Australia have a lot to learn from each other and should continue to actively work together to understand the common threats that face us. We can make further progress on tackling this very serious issue by continuing to closely coordinate with one another and other like-minded governments, share best practices on deterrence and prosecution, and share relevant intelligence under our robust information-sharing practices.

Question 13. Where are the opportunities for the U.S., Australia, and others, to work more closely to seek to counter these Chinese activities?

Answer. Australia has recently taken steps to address inappropriate Chinese influence. In August 2018, the Australian parliament approved by a wide margin sweeping national security legislation that bans foreign interference in Australian public life, requires foreign agents to register with the state, and penalizes a host of activities that damage Australia’s economic, political, or other systems of public trust. In December 2018, the parliament passed further legislation that bans foreign governments and state-owned enterprises from making contributions to Australian political parties, individual candidates, and political campaigns. The legislation also created an Office of the Counter Interference Coordinator (CIC). We welcome these actions and will seek to apply, wherever possible, Australia’s experience, lessons and responses to the situation in the United States as we face many of the same problems with foreign interference.

Collaboration is the key to containing and reversing this multifaceted problem. If confirmed, I will strongly advocate for sharing best practices in prosecuting foreign interference cases and deterring foreign actors, supporting the new CIC Coordinator, and learning from the experiences of Australia and our closest allies. We must also continue to collaborate to limit, ban, or reverse improper foreign interference in our critical infrastructure.

Question 14. Do you agree? In the specific case of Chinese student activities, the “export” of university education is the single largest service export Australia has, and China has shown willingness to restrict their purchases of education—and tourism—when Australia threatens to retaliate for political interference. What can the U.S. offer that matches the resources and leverage China can bring? What should we be doing to respond?

Answer. China is Australia’s largest trading partner and one of its biggest sources of higher education revenue. However, by far and away, the United States is Australia’s number one investor and economic partner of choice. Our bilateral economic relationship is robust, led in large part by our dynamic bilateral trade agreement from 2005. Our historical relationship is also very robust, buttressed by our shared values of democracy, free markets and human rights, grounds on which China cannot compete. This relationship has helped to insulate Australia from the brunt of Chinese efforts to leverage its growing economic clout in exchange for political influence. If confirmed, I will work to counter Chinese influence, increase our ties and strengthen our alliance through greater people-to-people ties, opportunities for U.S. private sector investment, and coordination on shared security challenges in a transparent and collaborative way.

Question 15. With the U.S. withdrawal from TPP, and APEC’s first failure in its 29-year history to agree on a summit communique, what is our message to Australia when it comes to cooperation in multilateral negotiations and institutions?

Answer. Both the United States and Australia continue to actively lead multilateral efforts to promote a free, open, and secure Indo-Pacific. Despite China’s scuttling consensus on the Leaders’ Statement at APEC 2018 for the first time in its history, the United States and Australia were successful in making progress on a host of areas that support our partner economies in the region and our shared goals in the Indo-Pacific. These are reflected in the Chair’s Statement. We will continue to build off of these successes in future negotiations and we will urge China to put an end to obstructionist behavior and support these laudable goals.

Question 16. Virtually all economic analysis, and particularly official and private assessments from Australia, conclude that the Trump-China trade confrontation—including the threatened next round of 25 percent tariffs on $200 billion of Chinese exports—will materially harm Australia’s economy. One estimate put the damage at half a trillion dollars over the next decade. What is the U.S. explanation to Australia for the price they are paying for our confrontation with China?

Answer. Over many years, the United States and Australia have repeatedly attempted to work with China in a cooperative and constructive manner, both bilaterally and multilaterally, to address China’s unfair policies that challenge or subvert the rules of the international trading system. China has failed to resolve our concerns. As you know, at the G-20, the United States and China agreed to engage in negotiations over the next 90 days on changes with respect to China’s structural issues such as forced technology transfer; counterfeiting and other forms of intellectual property theft; cyber intrusions into American business networks to steal trade secrets for commercial purposes; an undervalued currency; state-directed investment and China’s state-owned enterprises; and high tariff and non-tariff barriers.

Question 17. Are you concerned that the administration’s approach to information security—including sharing highly classified material with Russia, the use of unsecure information technology, and Ivanka Trump’s use of a personal email account—undercuts the faith and confidence that our Australian ‘Five Eye’ partners have in us when it comes to intelligence cooperation?

Answer. No, under this administration, Australia has been and will remain an important and trusted ‘Five Eye’ partner. If confirmed, I will work to ensure that our intelligence cooperation remains a key part of our relationship.

Question 18. Given that the important position as Ambassador that you have been nominated for has been open for almost two years, what are the immediate steps you will take, if confirmed, to convey to the Australian Government and the Australian people that this relationship is, in fact, one that we cherish and value, and that this alliance is one of our most important?

Answer. The U.S.-Australia alliance is steadfast and enduring, and underpinned by a deep alignment of mutual interests and shared values. If confirmed, I will immediately begin to work with my Australian Government counterparts on the joint work plan that advances our shared strategic interests in the Indo-Pacific. This work plan reflects diplomatic, security, and economic dimensions agreed to during the annual U.S.-Australia Ministerial meeting in Palo Alto in July. Additionally, I will work with our entire U.S. Mission Australia team to engage the Australian public in the importance of the U.S.-Australian alliance through media interviews, social media outreach, and public speeches and engagements.

Question 19. Given the critical nature of freedom of navigation and the free flow of commerce for both the U.S. and Australia as maritime trading nations, are there areas for deeper alliance cooperation that you see to address security and stability in the Indo-Pacific maritime domain?

Answer. I share your concern about China’s activities in the South China Sea and the broader Indo-Pacific region. Australia supports U.S. Freedom of Navigation Operations in the South China Sea and, along with the United States and Japan, supports ASEAN and Chinese efforts to negotiate a meaningful Code of Conduct (COC) for the South China Sea that respects the rights and interests of all states and is fully consistent with international law. While appreciative of U.S. efforts to uphold the rule of law against excessive maritime claims in the area, the Government of Australia has not conducted Freedom of Navigation Operations within 12 nautical miles of disputed features in the South China Sea, either independently or alongside American vessels. Australia does, however, conduct presence operations and sails and flies regularly through the South China Sea. If confirmed, I will work with our interagency colleagues to explore with Australia how we might further enhance our cooperative efforts in a number of areas, both in the South China Sea and the broader Indo-Pacific region.

Question 20. How can the U.S. and Australia work together to promote democracy in Asia?

Answer. Good governance is a core pillar of the U.S. vision for a free and open Indo-Pacific. The Vice President announced the Indo-Pacific Transparency Initiative during his recent visit to the region in mid-November. As part of this initiative, the United States, with allies and partners such as Australia, will promote just, transparent and responsive governance through anti-corruption efforts while encouraging strong civil society and honest business practices. We will also continue to work with regional institutions, including ASEAN and APEC, to advance these shared goals and principles.

We are committed to working with all Indo-Pacific nations to create the conditions needed to instill greater attention to the importance of democracy, transparency, and good governance throughout the region.

Question 21. Given the Trump administration’s apparent disdain for many of the key components of democracy here at home, how do you propose the United States position itself as a credible partner for Australia and a credible messenger for values in the region?

Answer. Good governance is a core pillar of the American experience and the U.S. vision for a free and open Indo-Pacific. The United States is committed to working with Indo-Pacific nations, including Australia, to create the conditions needed to unlock greater private investment, combat corruption, and secure nations’ autonomy from foreign influence. We will continue to promote transparency, openness, rule of law, and the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms. We are already working together with Australia in a number of regional fora to convey this message and to develop programs that strengthen local institutions that support these values. If confirmed, I look forward to working with my Australian colleagues to ensure that good governance flourishes in the region.

Question 22. Given its own history with immigration, what messages do you think that Australia and the Indo-Pacific region are taking away from the Trump administration’s family separation policy? The President’s desire to “build a wall”? Our efforts to deny refugees entry and asylum seekers their rights under international law?

Answer. The United States and Australia share a strong history of immigration and adherent law. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Australian Government and people of Australia to communicate the administration’s policies clearly and accurately.
Question 23. Australia is an important trading partner of the United States. However, constituents have brought to my attention a concerning case in our trade and investment relationship. I am told that the Government of New South Wales (NSW) expropriated a company's mining license and left investors, including those from the U.S., with no recourse to challenge the action or ability to seek compensation. These were rights the investors had when they made the investments, but were later nullified by an act of the NSW Parliament. I have twice raised this issue with USTR Ambassador Lighthizer when he was before the Finance committee. To his credit, USTR continues to broach the topic of the treatment of U.S. investors with the Australian Government. In October 2017, Ambassador Lighthizer sent a letter to his counterpart formally requesting consultations with Australia under Article 11.16 of the Australia-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I ask you to review the facts of this matter and encourage the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade to undertake discussions with the New South Wales Government, the affected company, and USTR with the goal of establishing an impartial and transparent process for considering the claims of U.S. investors:

- Will you commit to review this case?

Answer. The investment case involving the New South Wales Government is an important issue for the Australia-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Over the last year, Chargé d'Affaires Jim Carouso and the Economic team at Embassy Canberra have continued to press the investor dispute with Australian officials, including members of the North South Wales Government. If confirmed, I commit to review this case and raise the dispute, as appropriate, with Australian authorities.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ARTHUR B. CULVAHOUSE JR. BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. One of the first policy initiatives I undertook during my tenure as chair of O’Melveny & Myers LLP was the launch of our firm-wide “Pro Bono Initiative.” By formalizing and prioritizing our pro bono program, we set about to honor the firm’s historic commitment to serving communities in need, and to create a platform to raise the prominence of our firm’s pro bono efforts. Under my leadership, we adopted formal policies and procedures that rewarded our lawyers for using their skills to provide access to justice for those in need. Our program grew into one of the most respected in the country.

O’Melveny’s pro bono work frequently targets matters of basic human rights and core democratic values. These efforts include combating human trafficking, protecting victims of abuse and neglect, preserving access to high quality education for low-income children, assisting military veterans, ensuring access to healthcare and food security for the most vulnerable, assisting with adoption and foster care proceedings, and fighting for civil rights. I am extremely proud of how successful our program, our lawyers, and our firm have been in promoting human rights and democratic values, and I look forward to continuing this work if confirmed as Ambassador.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Australia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Australia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Australia is a constitutional democracy with a freely elected federal parliamentary government. The most significant human rights issue involved allegations of abuses against asylum seekers in offshore detention centers, including Manus Island in Papua New Guinea and in Nauru. As noted in the 2017 Australia Human Rights Report, the Government of Australia took steps to prosecute officials accused of abuses, and ombudsmen, human rights bodies, and internal government mechanisms responded effectively to complaints. If confirmed, I will support the continued efforts of the United States to create brighter futures for some of the world’s most vulnerable people, including many of those in the immigration detention centers on Manus Island and Nauru. I will have regular contact with Australian Government officials and other humanitarian organizations in Australia to monitor the conditions of those in the centers. I look forward to working with Australian officials... to continue addressing these issues and share best practices between our two governments.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Australia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Australia takes human rights seriously. Thanks to our close bilateral relationship and Australia’s commitment to human rights, they are natural partners for addressing human rights issues not only in Australia, but in the Pacific and Southeast Asia region. If confirmed, I look forward to working with them to advance these issues.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Australia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes. I will meet with human rights, civil society, and non-governmental organizations in Australia. If confirmed, I will engage the Australian Government on best practices in incorporating human rights in Australia’s own security assistance and security cooperation activities.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Australia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Australia?

Answer. Australia has high regard for its international human rights obligations, including with respect to freedom of expression, and is not known to have targeted individuals unjustly.

Question 6. Will you engage with Australia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will work with Australian authorities to engage on matters of human rights, including civil rights, and governance. I will also seek to exchange best practices on human rights and governance between our governments and to partner with Australia to promote human rights in the region and beyond.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any such concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise any such concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in the Australia?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes funds that may hold positions in companies in Australia. However, these funds are exempt from the conflict of interest rules due to their diversified investment strategies. I also hold financial interests in several large companies with global operations, but out of an abundance of caution I committed in my Ethics Agreement to divest from all such assets within 90 days of my confirmation. The State Department Office of the Legal Adviser has reviewed all of my financial interests. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethical obligations as Ambassador.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. I agree that diverse teams are more creative and productive. Indeed, promoting diversity has been a focus throughout much of my career, and will continue to be so if confirmed as Ambassador. While Chair of O’Melveny, I oversaw the implementation of a number of measures to help promote diversity at the firm. First, during my tenure the firm focused heavily on the recruiting, retention, and promotion of lawyers from diverse backgrounds. Under my leadership, the firm also launched a comprehensive mentoring, sponsorship, and professional development platform, with diversity and inclusion a key focus. Third, I launched O'Melveny's Diversity & Inclusion Department, overseen by a full-time Director of Diversity and supervised by key partners across the firm, including Warren Christopher (Secretary Christopher was one of my predecessors as Chair of the Firm and graciously served as our first Partner in charge of our Diversity initiatives). Fourth, we established diversity-based “Affinity Groups” for our lawyers and staff. If confirmed, I will use the experience gained from our diversity initiatives at O'Melveny to mentor and support Embassy staff from diverse backgrounds.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe that diversity must be championed by management and supervisors while embracing a grassroots perspective. During my tenure as Chair of O'Melveny, improving diversity was a top strategic goal of the firm. Diversity was a highlight of the firm's Values Statement which was developed during my tenure and continues to guide the firm today. As Chair I also mandated that every partner, lawyer, and staff member, around the globe, attend diversity awareness interactive workshops. In addition, from 2009–2012, I served on the first Board of Directors for the Leadership Council on Legal Diversity, a group now comprising more than 300 corporate chief legal officers and law firm managing partners working to improve diversity in the legal profession. In this role I helped shape the best practices for fostering diverse and inclusive legal working environments. If confirmed, I will work with the leadership at the Embassy to reflect these best practices as appropriate to the Embassy environment.

Question 12. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Australia specifically?

Answer. Political corruption can undermine good governance and the rule of law. Fortunately, the United States and Australia are both open democracies with foreign policies based on the principles of individual freedom, free markets, and the rule of law. Our alliance and overall relationship is an affirmation of the timeless nature of these shared foundational principles. These values are embodied both in our National Security Strategy and in the 2017 Australian Foreign Policy White Paper. Transparency in our civil society and educational institutions, economic governance institutions, and political processes is fundamental to the strength of our democracies. Laws that prevent corruption from negatively affecting governance and rule of law are strong in Australia. Just as any robust democracy, however, Australia does suffer from occasional and isolated cases of corrupt actors in their governing system. In those rare cases, the legal and political systems have been quick to react and remedy the situation.

In June 2018, the Australian parliament approved groundbreaking national security legislation that bans foreign malign influence in politics, stiffens the punishment for leaking classified information, and makes it a crime to damage Australia’s economic relations with another country. In November 2018, the Australian parliament also passed legislation that bans foreign governments and state-owned enterprises from donating to Australian political parties, individual candidates and political campaigners. This brings Australia’s national tools for preventing foreign malign influence in Australian governance up to the highest standards.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Australia and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Australia?

Answer. Like the United States and other states around the world, Australia is debating how best to balance maintaining a free and open society with the need to safeguard against interference by corrupt individuals and foreign actors. The United States and Australia discuss these issues and regularly share information with our close partners. Domestic corruption remains low in Australia and the legal system has the appropriate tools to combat future cases.

In June 2018, the Australian parliament approved groundbreaking national security legislation that bans foreign malign influence in politics, stiffens the punishment for leaking classified information, and makes it a crime to damage Australia's economic relations with another country. This brings Australia’s national tools for preventing foreign malign influence in Australian governance up to the highest standards.
Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Australia?

Answer. The United States promotes responsive governments, empowered citizens, and strong regional institutions across the Indo-Pacific. Part of our Indo-Pacific strategy relies on close cooperation with our Allies, like Australia. If confirmed, I will work with the Government of Australia and civil society to increase Australia’s already large commitment to good governance, transparency, and adherence to international rules and standards in collaboration with the United States across the region.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO ARTHUR B. CULVAHOUSE JR. BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. Earlier, you discussed the importance of better messaging the importance of the U.S.-Australia partnership, especially to a new generation of Australian. Can you share some of your ideas for how best to do this?

Answer. If confirmed, I will lead efforts by our Mission, including through personal appearances and media interviews, to highlight how the United States and Australia are working together today to advance our shared vision for the Indo-Pacific—a region composed of nations that are independent, strong and prosperous. Additionally, I will work with colleagues in Washington and in Mission Australia to use the full range of public diplomacy tools, including educational and cultural exchanges, information programs, social media outreach, promotion of studying abroad in the United States and increased engagement with youth. Two themes that would seem to bear emphasis are the United States’ long-standing position as Australia’s largest economic partner and U.S. leadership in developing innovative technology. The aim is to deepen mutual understanding and to forge new relationships between the people of the United States and Australia in order to address the bilateral, regional, and global challenges we jointly face.

Question 2. Australia’s new coalition government is under pressure from its members to advance Australia’s commitments on climate change, as well as ways it could relax its refugee admissions policies to allow families to leave detention facilities on the island of Nauru. If confirmed, how would you address policy changes in Australia that may expand commitments to climate change and refugee admissions?

Answer. Our strong bilateral cooperation spans several changes in administration in both countries, and if confirmed, I will work to ensure that this cooperation continues with the current Australia coalition government. That includes continuing close coordination on Australia’s refugee admissions policies, sharing information about best practices in refugee processing and resettlement, and continuing to fulfill U.S. commitments associated with the admission to the United States of refugees in Nauru via the U.S. Refugee Admissions Program. Approximately 450 refugees have been resettled to date. I will also seek continued cooperation with Australia on climate change, especially through research and development of new renewable and clean energy technologies. The United States is a leader in clean energy and innovation, producing affordable, reliable energy and stable, high-paying jobs while dropping carbon emissions to the lowest level in 25 years.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CAROL Z. PEREZ BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Hiring Efforts Post-Freeze

Now that the Department has rescinded the unjustified and unproductive hiring freeze, I am pleased to hear there are efforts to increase staffing and restore some of the damage that was done. However, the hiring of civil service employees in particular has been slow. In September of this year, there were 300 fewer civil service employees than at the start of the year—and that does not reflect the full reductions due to the hiring freeze:

Question 1. Do you commit to hiring the most qualified candidates and seeking to restore civil service jobs to where they were before the freeze?

Answer. The flexibility to hire the most qualified people with the rights skills is essential to promoting the Department’s mission and U.S. foreign policy goals. All Civil Service hiring options are now available to bureaus, including laterally reas-signing and promoting Civil Service employees from within the Department; competitively hiring from the outside, to include using special hiring authorities (e.g., Schedule A (disability), VEOA (Veterans Employment), and Direct Hire Authority); utilizing special programs and fellowships (e.g., Presidential Management Fellows); and converting Pathways interns to meet mission priorities. Additionally, bureaus are authorized to hire in advance of projected attrition for the fiscal year. If conformed, I will continue to consult and work with Congress to ensure that all critical priorities are met within appropriated funding levels for FY 2019. As I understand it, these levels if funded, will bring us to or very near pre-freeze levels for both Civil Service and Foreign Service positions.

Question 2. When do you anticipate that all civil service vacancies will be restored to pre-hiring freeze levels?

Answer. I understand that the Department has been focused on expediting hiring since the Secretary officially lifted the hiring freeze on Foreign Service and Civil Service employment on May 15 this year. Civil Service employees, unlike the Foreign Service, are hired one vacancy announcement at a time following OPM prescribed procedures. The security clearance process adds an additional time lag. In November, the Department established a task force to increase the pace of Civil Service hiring and it is beginning to show some gains. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Secretary and other Department leaders to expedite hiring and return the Department to authorized employment levels as funded in the Department's appropriation.

Loss of Experience in Foreign Service

One of the most severe impacts of the hiring freeze was the depletion of senior Foreign Service Officers, who were denied opportunities and promotions commensurate with their experience.

Question 3. How do you plan to restore the loss of senior leadership, particularly in the Foreign Service?

Answer. One of the Director General's most important responsibilities is the strategic selection and development of personnel. If confirmed, I will routinely analyze promotion opportunities and career development assignments to not only build a strong Senior Foreign Service but to develop the bench strength we need for the future. I will ensure that we are meeting the Secretary's goals of recognizing our taltented workforce and having the right people in the right places, doing the right job to succeed in our foreign policy mission.

Special Education for Children of Foreign Service Officers

I continue to remain perplexed and concerned about reports that Foreign Service Officers who have children with special needs are facing a variety of obstacles in obtaining the funds and services they need—reports that medical clearances have been revoked, families have been asked to repay benefits, and reduced funds were available for special education services. I have yet to receive a satisfactory response from the Department to my inquiries on this issue. I will be following up again with the expectation that the Department will be fully transparent and forthcoming about how it is ensuring that these families and children are treated equally, and that the Department is making it easier, not harder, for those willing to serve our country abroad.

Question 4. Do you commit to ensuring these families and children are treated fairly by the Department and will have the resources they need, and to review current policies to ensure that State is fully complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act?

Answer. As a Chief of Mission currently and, if confirmed, as Director General, nothing is more important to me than the welfare of our personnel and the wellbeing of our family members. If confirmed, I will ensure that the families of Foreign Service personnel who have children with special needs are treated fairly by the Department. I further commit to ensuring that State is fully complying with all applicable laws. In fact, the Department is already taking action in response to employees' concerns. A task force was convened to review current policies and practices and to address the concerns raised.

Building on the findings of the task force, which examined issues related to administering the Special Needs Education Allowance, I understand the Department is now implementing an action plan to support employees with special needs children. Priority actions include filling vacancies in the Bureau of Medical Services Child and Family Program and effectively communicating the criteria for receiving a Special Needs Educational Allowance.
Vacant Senior Positions

Nearly two years into this administration, the Department remains crippled by prolonged vacancies of key leadership positions. A proposal by OMB to cut the Foreign Affairs Budget by 32 percent led the Secretary of State to pursue a sustained hiring freeze—both for new officers and eligible family members—that assumed passage by Congress of these steep cuts and to cut promotions into and within the Senior Foreign Service by more than 50 percent. In particular, the lack of permanent—or even acting—principal deputy assistant secretaries (PDAS) in several critical bureaus seriously undermines the Department’s ability to fulfill its mission and jeopardizes our national security and prosperity. As the debate on our relationship with Saudi Arabia continues, for example, we have no permanent PDAS for the Bureau of Near Eastern Affairs. Two years into this administration, we only recently received a nomination for Ambassador to Saudi Arabia. These vacancies have hamstrung the United States’ ability to engage diplomatically on critical national security and humanitarian issues in the region. And that is just one example.

Question 5. I would like to hear how and under what timeline you will work to fill—with qualified candidates—crucial posts, including the PDAS positions in critical bureaus such as Near Eastern Affairs, Political-Military Affairs, Arms Control, Verification, & Compliance, Conflict and Stabilization Operations, and Democracy, Human Rights, & Labor.

Answer. Ensuring that leadership positions are filled with the most qualified candidates is an important role for the Director General. As vacancies in bureaus in the Department’s senior positions have occurred, Senior Career officials—from both the Senior Foreign Service and Senior Executive Service—have stepped in as Acting Principal Deputy Assistant Secretaries and Deputy Assistant Secretaries to provide the experience and essential leadership needed to ensure U.S. interests are protected.

If confirmed, I commit to working closely with the Secretary to identify and expeditiously assign the most qualified Career candidates to fill important positions both at home and abroad.

Vacant Senior Positions

Nearly two years into this administration, the Department remains crippled by prolonged vacancies of key leadership positions. A proposal by OMB to cut the Foreign Affairs Budget by 32 percent led the Secretary of State to pursue a sustained hiring freeze—both for new officers and eligible family members—that assumed passage by Congress of these steep cuts and to cut promotions into and within the Senior Foreign Service by more than 50 percent. These vacancies have hamstrung the United States’ ability to engage diplomatically on critical national security and humanitarian issues in the region. And that is just one example.

Question 6. Is it the Department’s intention to decrease the size of the Senior Foreign Service permanently?

Answer. Not at all. The FY 17 promotions levels were lower than previous years in anticipation of workforce reductions. Soon after coming on board in May, Secretary Pompeo lifted the hiring freeze and effectively ended the workforce reduction plan. The FY 2018 promotions returned to more traditional levels and have already been released to the field. If confirmed, I will work with the Secretary to authorize the appropriate number of promotions needed to supply a steady flow of Foreign Service into the senior ranks so that we have the right people with the right levels of experience, in the right places, doing the right job to succeed in our foreign policy mission.

Cuba Attacks

As you know, more than 2 years has passed since the first reported attack on our diplomats in Cuba. We still do not know what or who is behind these attacks. And while the Department is taking action to address the health needs of those affected, many questions remain. In particular, I remain concerned that we do not know the extent of the threat to diplomats serving elsewhere in the world. I continue to have many questions and look forward to hearing more from the State Department on how to ensure the safety of security personnel abroad.

Question 7. Have you read the September 2018 GAO report recommending better communication and reporting of security and health incidents?

Answer. I have read the September 2018 GAO report. HR has also briefed me on its participation in the Deputy Secretary’s Health Incidents Response Task Force and its ongoing communication and coordination with other federal agencies. I take GAO recommendations very seriously and am committed to ensuring prompt, clear communication and reporting through formal channels regarding potential security and health incidents.

Question 8. Do you commit to ensuring that HR promptly addresses and responds to any concerns related to similar attacks, and that all personnel affected receive the full medical treatment that they require?

Answer. The Department of State’s number one priority is the health and welfare of its employees, as well as the employees and family members from State and other agencies who serve overseas under Chief of Mission authority. If confirmed, I am committed to ensuring that our affected employees and family members receive all the care and benefits to which they are entitled. By statute, the Federal Employees’ Compensation Act (FECA), i.e. workers’ compensation, is the exclusive remedy for federal employees with work-related injuries or illnesses.

I understand that HR has encouraged our employees to apply for workers’ compensation and the Department appointed Ambassador Robert T. Yamate (ret.) in September to serve as Senior Advisor and Care Coordinator for employees and family members affected by the health incidents in Cuba and China. Ambassador Yamate communicates directly with the employees one-to-one and in group settings, and advocates for them on a daily basis. We are also working on a legislative fix to include family members in our coverage.

Question 9. Do you commit to cooperating fully with any investigations by the Inspector General and Office of Special Counsel?

Answer. I take management’s responsibility to cooperate fully with investigations by the OIG and the U.S. Office of the Special Counsel (OSC) very seriously. If confirmed, I commit to cooperate fully with any investigations and implement IG recommendations within the scope of my authority.

Sexual Harassment

Sexual harassment continues to be an issue that all workplaces, including federal agencies, can improve upon. Women who work in the national security sector face unique and complex challenges that often leave them especially vulnerable to sexual harassment, especially as there continue to be too few women in the senior ranks.

Question 10. Do you commit to ensuring that HR promptly addresses and responds to any complaint of sexual harassment, and to continually review and update training to ensure that it is adequately addressing the vulnerabilities women face?

Answer. Yes, I am strongly committed to ensuring the Department provides a workplace that is inclusive and free from sexual and discriminatory harassment. There is no room for harassment in today’s workplace. Earlier this year, the Department directed mandatory harassment awareness training for all agency employees, including local staff and contractors. Thanks to the efforts of the Office of Civil Rights, we accomplished that mission by June. Additionally, the Secretary sent out a cable to all employees in October about the importance of a culture of civility and respect. It outlined employee protections from harassment and toxic behavior at work. Both the training and supporting cable reinforce our effort to make sure employees understand the commitment of Department leadership to ensuring a workplace free from harassment and the support available if they are harassed.

The Department’s policies addressing sexual harassment and retaliation are strong and are covered in the Department’s Foreign Affairs Manual (FAM). The policies make it mandatory for all supervisors and other responsible management officials to immediately report incidents of possible harassment that they observe, are informed of, or reasonably suspect to the Department’s Office of Civil Rights for investigation and further action by HR, when warranted. If confirmed, this will continue.

Yes, I commit to ensuring that these policies are clearly communicated, conveyed in mandatory employee training courses, and posted online. All new employees receive at least one hour of EEO and Harassment Awareness Training during the Foreign Service Officer, Foreign Service Specialist and Civil Service orientation classes. This education continues through the life cycle of all employees as they progress in their careers. Additionally, the Foreign Service Institute has created a new on-line harassment awareness-training module that is part of the Department’s mandatory training courses. It will be available to employees shortly.

Question 11. Are you familiar with the National Security #MeToo letter from last November? What else do you think the Department can do to protect women and ensure that they are not dissuaded from seeking out senior positions in government because of harassment or intimidation?

Answer. Yes, I am aware of the #MeToo letter. If confirmed, I will ensure that the State Department’s strong policies continue to be enforced and that employees continue to receive effective training on these topics. Additionally, I will ensure that senior leadership convey the important message that all inappropriate behavior is unacceptable, and that any individuals who engage in improper conduct and/or violate these policies are held accountable. I will ensure that policies, messaging, and training are continuously reviewed and refreshed as necessary. It is unacceptable for any employee to intimidate or harass others, or in any way dissuade anyone from seeking out senior positions to advance their careers.

DEA Incident in Honduras

In 2012, there were 3 deadly force incidents in Honduras related to DEA operations. At the time, you were the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for INL. An Inspector General report from last year stated that you raised objections to Diplomatic Security (DS) conducting an investigation of the incidents and that INL refused to assist DS in its investigations.

Question 12. What is your response to the IG report?

Answer. As one of three Deputy Assistant Secretaries during the time of the Ahuas incident, my intent during my conversation with DS-Washington was to ensure that the U.S. Chief of Mission to Honduras had full control and oversight for this incident. At no point was I suggesting that DS should not engage, nor was I attempting to undermine the Chief of Mission; in fact, my efforts were to ensure that she could exercise her authorities fully by asking that all parties, including DS, work through her to resolve the investigation. In retrospect, I could have communicated this differently so that there would be no ambiguity or room for misinterpretation regarding my intent.

Question 13. As Director General, would you take the same action today?

Answer. As a current Chief of Mission, I have the requirement to coordinate and manage all activities for all agencies under my authority and understand completely the extent of my responsibility for actions that occur in my country. As Director General, I will fully support the Chief of Mission, including when they ask for assistance from DS domestic offices with regard to in-country investigations.

Question 14. What assurances can you give this committee that you will fully support DS staff in any jurisdictional dispute overseas?

Answer. I will fully support the role of Diplomatic Security in jurisdictional disputes overseas according to U.S. statute and regulations.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CAROL Z. PEREZ BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have been an active and committed defender of human rights and democracy during my 31-year career in the Foreign Service. During my tenure as Consul General in Milan, as waves of North African immigrants arrived in Italy, we started a series of roundtable discussions with local authorities, policy makers and religious leaders that highlighted the positive benefits of immigration and exchanged best practices on integration. We funded a grant that expanded a Muslim online magazine throughout Europe, supporting efforts to counter violent extremism, improving communication and collaboration among a target audience of second generation Muslims. As Ambassador to Chile, I have made human rights a focus for the Embassy. I led Embassy campaigns that promoted women’s empowerment and combated gender-based violence, expanded the Embassy’s outreach to and programs in support of marginalized populations, such as LGBTI community members, indigenous populations, and economically disadvantaged communities, and met with religious minority groups, including Chile’s Jewish and Arab populations, to discuss religious freedom and promote tolerance. My focus on increasing opportunities for indigenous populations resulted in the first English language program for young indigenous entrepreneurs that will open new horizons for trade and commerce. Finally, as the political and humanitarian crisis has deepened in Venezuela, I have encouraged Chilean officials to work with regional counterparts to provide a safe-haven for those Venezuelans in most dire need, to meet with Venezuelan dissidents and human rights activists, and to hold the Venezuelan government accountable for violating the rights of its own citizens.

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. Mentoring and staff development are important to me. If confirmed, I will work to strengthen the Department’s diversity and inclusion efforts at every level. Effective mentoring and support can help the Department retain a diverse workforce and sustain that diversity as employees progress through their careers. Throughout my career, I have benefited from the guidance and counsel of mentors. Because I know first-hand just how important that kind of support can be, I have mentored entry-level and mid-level officers whenever I have had the opportunity. As Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary, I led HR Bureau efforts to strengthen our mentoring programs by incorporating best practices from the private sector and other government agencies.

We now have a number of programs in professional development, career advancement, and unconscious bias training. These programs are important to retaining and developing a diverse and prepared workforce so they can be successful, and we can be successful as a country. If confirmed, I will review these programs regularly to ensure they are as effective as they can be.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors in the Bureau of Human Resources are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If we are going to continue to have the best diplomatic service in the world, we must continue to weave diversity, inclusion, and respect into the whole lifecycle of employees’ careers, from the moment they join the Department to the end of their service.

I believe that setting an example at the top and communicating expectations can be effective in supporting leadership efforts to foster diversity and inclusion at the bureau level. If confirmed, I will work with bureau leaders as they examine processes or practices that might hamper their efforts to cultivate a diverse and inclusive work environment.

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. My investment portfolio includes widely traded funds that may have investments in foreign companies; however, these funds are exempt from the conflict of interest rules. I also have financial interests in several large companies with global business, but these holdings either are below the $15,000 de minimis threshold in the conflict of interest laws or were not identified as posing a conflict of interest. The State Department Ethics Office and the U.S. Office of Government Ethics reviewed all of my financial interests. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest. I will divest my interests in any investments the state Department Ethics Office deems necessary in the future to avoid a conflict of interest, and will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.
Question 1. Consistent, predictable staffing is essential to the maintenance of core diplomatic capabilities, effect career development, and an orderly flow of talent in the Foreign Service. If confirmed, how would you ensure that the Foreign Service has at the present and will have in the future appropriately experienced personnel at all grades?

Answer. The Department has a robust strategic workforce planning process with the goal of aligning resources, people, and policy priorities. There are three main components, which ensure a predictable flow through the Foreign Service ranks and ensure the right officers with the right level of experience are assigned to the right positions—intake/hiring, assignments/career development, and the promotions process. Recent hiring, with the exception of FY 2017, has been fairly consistent. In FY 2018 Foreign Service intake/hiring returned the Department to pre-2017 hiring levels as stipulated in the Department’s FY 2018 appropriation Statement of Managers. Preliminary Foreign Service intake planning for FY 2019 assumes continued robust hiring within our final authorized funding levels.

If confirmed, I will work with the Secretary and advocate for a budget that fully funds the Department’s staffing, training and career development requirements.

Question 2. How do you assess the current and planned training, professional development and professional education opportunities in the State Department? What is your view of making the George P. Schultz National Foreign Affairs Training Center an accredited academic institution, on a level equivalent to the U.S. military’s war colleges, capable of granting a Master of Arts degree in diplomatic studies?

Answer. The State Department’s Foreign Service Institute, located primarily at the George P. Shultz National Foreign Affairs Training Center, provides outstanding training and professional education for the State Department and other foreign affairs agencies personnel. That said, Secretary Pompeo has asked me, if confirmed, to work closely with the new Director of FSI, Ambassador Daniel Smith, to review our overall talent management, including the professional development and education opportunities we provide to our personnel over the course of their careers. One possibility FSI leadership will be considering is whether to enable FSI to grant a Master of Arts degree in diplomatic studies, either by itself or in partnership with another academic institution. Expanding current professional development opportunities through long-term training and detail assignments is another option. These assignments help us to fulfill the strategic goals of the Department and meet personal and professional development goals for our Civil Service and Foreign Service employees.

Question 3. Foreign language capability is one of the principal skills unique to Foreign Service officers in the federal government. If confirmed, how would you work to promote high-level language proficiency and to ensure that Foreign Service officers are able to maintain and improve the foreign language skills with which they enter into service or acquire through training?

Answer. I share your view that foreign language skills are critical to the Foreign Service. The State Department currently operates a Recruitment Language Program to attract individuals with specific language skills and a Language Incentive Pay program to encourage personnel to retain acquired language skills. The Foreign Service Institute established a “Beyond 3” program several years ago to enable officers to elevate their language skills. If confirmed, I look forward to working with FSI to evaluate the effectiveness of these programs and to identify additional or new ways to ensure that Foreign Service officers are able to acquire, maintain, and improve the language skills needed to effectively accomplish our mission.

Question 4. Even though the United States recognizes same sex marriage and the State Department treats all employees equally, LGBTI diplomats and their families often experience bureaucratic obstacles to serving worldwide—with the same privileges and immunities—as heterosexual colleagues. As the head of the State Department’s Bureau of Human Resources, if confirmed, how would you ensure Department leadership advocated with foreign governments so that LGBTI employees and their families could serve in all assignments worldwide without undue impediment?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the Department’s strong support for our LGBTI employees and their families. Specifically in the area of assignments, I will ensure that our embassies strongly advocate for our LGBTI employees and their families assigned overseas to have their accreditation accepted by the host country.
and be afforded appropriate levels of privileges and immunities equal to their heterosexual counterparts. The Department has made good progress in recent years in achieving acceptance of accreditation in more than half of the countries where we have representation (97 of 170). We will continue to engage other governments to “Move them to YES.”

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CAROL Z. PEREZ BY SENATOR CORY A. BOOKER

Diversity at State

As Director General of the Foreign Service, if confirmed, you will have an awesome responsibility overseeing the men and women who make up our incredible civil and foreign services and ensuring we cultivate the most talented and hardworking individuals to serve. But we also want a corps that represents the richness of America.

The Charles B. Rangel International Affairs and Thomas R. Pickering Foreign Affairs programs help us do just that.

Question 1. If confirmed, would you support expanding the Rangel and Pickering fellowship programs?

Answer. As I noted in my testimony, thanks to our long-standing diversity efforts and bipartisan Congressional support through the Pickering and Rangel programs and other initiatives, we have made important progress. I understand that, beginning in FY 2017, Congress requested that the Department expand the Pickering and Rangel Programs by ten fellows each.

Without additional funding, adding twenty Fellows would result in a significant decrease in tuition assistance that would endanger the program. If confirmed, I will carry out a comprehensive assessment to evaluate opportunities for expansion and determine the best options for the Department to continue to recruit diverse and talented candidates.

Question 2. What policies do you think are needed to increase the share of women in the Foreign Service and better ensure that more women are promoted to the Senior Foreign Service?

Answer. If we are going to remain the world’s premier diplomatic service, the Department must continue to weave diversity into the whole lifecycle of our talent management system, from recruitment to training and promotions.

Our recruitment efforts place a strong emphasis on diversity and talent. The Pickering and Rangel Fellowship programs in particular have a high proportion of women and have contributed significantly to bringing female candidates into the Foreign Service.

If confirmed, I look forward to building upon the significant progress the Department has made over the last several years to ensure that our workforce reflects the diversity and talent of America.

Mid-career Diversity Programs

As of the end of September, both the Senior Executive Foreign Service (SES) and Senior Foreign Service (SFS) are overwhelmingly white (over 88 percent) and male (over 60 percent). In order to create a more diverse and representative SES and SFS, the State Department needs to ensure it is investing in and retaining junior and mid-career professionals. The Department is a sponsor of programs including the International Career Advancement Program (ICAP), which seeks to increase the quality and diversity of senior international affairs policymakers by assisting highly promising mid-career professionals from underrepresented groups.

Question 3. Will you commit to continuing to support mid-career training and advancement programs, including ICAP, for underrepresented groups?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will continue to support critical mid-career training and advancement programs. The Department supports its retention goals by funding diverse mid-level employees’ participation in the International Career Advancement Program (ICAP). We view this program as a cornerstone to fostering growth and development in our Civil Service and Foreign Service employees. Since 2016, the Department has sent ten participants every year to participate in ICAP. If confirmed, I will work to ensure this targeted leadership program remains a mainstay of our retention efforts.
Question 4. What other steps do you think are needed to support a more diverse and representative SES and SFS?

Answer. I am committed to ensuring the gains in diversity at the entry and mid-levels are reflected at the senior levels. If confirmed, I will work to foster greater diversity at the senior levels of the State Department by assessing whether barriers to advancement exist, and by building on current efforts to utilize the talents of all employees, including continued support for mid-career development programs such as ICAP and the SES Candidate Development Program for more senior employees.

Supporting LGBTI Employees

On January 9, 2017, Secretary Kerry took the unprecedented step of apologizing to gay, lesbian and other State Department employees who were fired or otherwise discriminated against in the past because of their sexual orientation during the so-called “Lavender Scare” and at other periods in the Department’s history.

Question 5. Does the State Department continue to support and reaffirm Secretary Kerry’s statement?

Answer. Yes. The Department has a strong record supporting our LGBTI employees, which Secretary Pompeo has continued. In noting LGBTI Pride Month in June, Secretary Pompeo said: “The United States joins people around the world in celebrating Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Intersex (LGBTI) Pride Month, and reaffirms its commitment to protecting and defending the human rights of all, including LGBTI persons.” If confirmed, as Director General I will fully support LGBTI employees and their families as valued members of the State Department community.

Visas for Same-Sex Partners

While U.S. laws and Supreme Court decisions in recent years have paved the way for same-sex couples to legally marry, same-sex marriage is still not legal in the vast majority of countries around the world. This can be a challenge for LGBTI Foreign Service officers with same-sex spouses, as they may be entering a country that does not recognize their marriage and thus the government may refuse to issue a visa for their spouse. However, given the importance of reciprocity in diplomatic relations we would expect countries to fully accept the legal marriages of all U.S. Foreign Service officers and their spouses, regardless of sex.

Question 6. What is the list of the names of countries that routinely deny visas to same-sex partners of U.S. Foreign Service officers or personnel posted overseas?

Answer. The list of countries that routinely deny diplomatic visas to same-sex spouses of our officers and personnel includes the following 72 countries:

- East Asia and the Pacific: Brunei, China, Fiji, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Korea, Malaysia, Marshall Islands, Micronesia, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Singapore, Thailand
- Europe: Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Poland, Russia
- Near East: Algeria, Bahrain, Egypt, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates
- South and Central Asia: Afghanistan, India, Kyrgyzstan, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan
- Western Hemisphere: Barbados, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Nicaragua, Suriname, Trinidad & Tobago

Question 7. What steps do you plan to take to ensure such countries do not have de facto vetoes over where U.S. Foreign Service officers or personnel posted overseas with same-sex spouses can be assigned due to their sexual orientation?

Answer. Department policy is to seek appropriate visas and to request from receiving, i.e., host, states appropriate privileges and immunities for all our employees and their families serving overseas, including employees in same sex marriages. In cases where the receiving state will not accept accreditation and provide privileges and immunities for same-sex spouses equal to those of their opposite-sex counterparts, we try to find informal arrangements that nonetheless allow the spouse to accompany the employee.
In most cases, this is possible. Regrettably there are times when it is not possible, such as when we conclude that assignment to a particular post might be inadvisable for an employee accompanied by a same-sex spouse because of personal safety or similar concerns. Although these informal arrangements can be sensitive, information on options is readily available to employees as they make decisions to bid on overseas assignments. Please note that some assignments are unaccompanied because conditions at post are too dangerous or difficult for families to accompany the employee regardless of sexual orientation.

Increasing Diverse Hiring

In a speech on August 18, 2017, then-Secretary of State Rex Tillerson laid out a number of new initiatives to increase the hiring of a diverse talent pool for the State Department. He said that he had “directed the relevant committees to adopt a new procedure. Every time we have an opening for an ambassador position, at least one of the candidates must be a minority candidate.”

Question 8. What is the status of this new procedure? Has it been implemented? If not, why not?
Answer. The Department takes very seriously our goal to foster diversity in the senior ranks. Diversity is one of the factors in considering candidates for Chief of Mission positions, as well as for Deputy Chief of Mission and Principal Officer positions. If confirmed, I am committed to strengthening these efforts by examining potential structural barriers to promotion to the senior ranks.

Question 9. Secretary Tillerson also stated that the Department is “going to build our recruiting team operations out in places that we haven’t concentrated before. Now, that doesn’t mean coming through town once a year and dropping some pamphlets off at the recruiting office. We’re going to build and develop relationships with institutions around the country so that people can more easily find us, and more importantly, we can find them, not just to rely upon people seeking us out;”

- What is the status of this recruiting team expansion? Has it been implemented?
  If not, why not?
Answer. The Department is committed to working hard to find diverse candidates. The Department’s current recruitment efforts span the United States and utilize targeted recruitment strategies to ensure the Department consistently meets its hiring needs, with a particular emphasis on diversity. Recruiters are based in Washington, D.C and at key institutions, including historically black colleges and universities (HBCUs) and Hispanic-serving institutions (HSIs), across the United States. If confirmed, I commit to reviewing the footprint and effectiveness of our recruiting program.

Question 10. Secretary Tillerson also stated that the Department wanted “to expand our footprint at minority-focused job fairs, and we can do more to recruit from one of the most diverse and proven talent pools;”

- What is the status of this job fair footprint expansion? Has it been implemented? If not, why not?
Answer. Our recruitment team includes Foreign Service Officers and Specialists assigned as regional “Diplomats in Residence” (DIRs) throughout the United States, as well as headquarters-based recruiters. The DIRs are hosted by, or recruit at Historically Black Colleges and Universities and Hispanic Serving Institutions (HSIs) with significant minority enrollment. All efforts focus on diversity recruitment.

In addition to attending job fairs, their activities include building relationships with campus career counselors, study abroad offices, and regional university consortia, and recruiting through World Affairs Councils, professional associations, and state and local diversity coordinators, to reach populations underrepresented in the Department.

As a chief of mission, I understand fully the value of a highly diverse team to advancing our nation’s foreign policy objectives. If confirmed, diversity will continue to be one of my highest priorities and I commit to reviewing the footprint and effectiveness of our recruiting program.
RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER PAUL HENZEL BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Does the UAE conduct assassinations? Can you confirm press accounts that the United Arab Emirates hired a U.S. firm to conduct assassinations, as described in press reports?

Answer. I am not able to confirm these press accounts. If confirmed, I intend to look into these allegations.

Question 2. For what services was Spear Operation Group, Abraham Golan, and associated U.S. citizens, hired to perform by the UAE?

Answer. I am not able to confirm these press accounts. If confirmed, I intend to look into these allegations.

Question 3. Did the U.S. citizen who has been working as a military officer for the United Arab Emirates, reportedly in the Joint Aviation Command, receive an export license to perform such activity?

Answer. I am unaware of any export license being issued to Spear Operations Group.

Question 4. What other military or security services are being performed for the UAE by U.S. citizens, and do they have ITAR licenses to perform such services?

Answer. In my current capacity as Deputy Chief of Mission in Saudi Arabia, I have not been following specific licensing or end-user issues in other countries. However, I understand that any U.S. person who provides defense services, as defined in 22 CPR 120.9 of the International Traffic in Arms Regulations, to UAE end-users requires authorization by the Department. Authorizations can come in the form of a license (for services limited in scope or duration) or through an agreement (for longer-term performance of defense services). A defense service means the furnishing of assistance related to a particular defense article or technical data being exported, and it can also mean military training for regular or irregular UAE forces, whether in the United States or abroad.

U.S. Training of Yemeni Forces

Secretary Mattis stated last month that “[t]he U.S. and the Coalition are planning to collaborate on building up legitimate Yemeni forces to defend the Yemeni people, secure their country’s borders, and contribute to counter Al Qaeda and ISIS efforts in Yemen and the region.” We understand that DoD is considering support for military and security elements under the control of the internationally recognized Republic of Yemen Government (ROYG), possibly relying on their section 333 authority. If you are confirmed as Ambassador, you would oversee such efforts.

Question 5. Which “Yemeni forces” are being considered for this support?

Answer. I understand that DoD, as part of the administration’s goal of improving the capacity of the Republic of Yemen Government, would like to increase existing training of Yemen’s Coast and Border guards. Assisting the Republic of Yemen Government to protect its own borders is central to our objectives of countering Iranian malign influence, preventing the flow of weapons to terrorist groups like Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP) and the Islamic State in Yemen (ISIS), ensuring the security of strategic waterways, and eradicating the conflict economy that is an obstacle to peace in the country. I refer you to the Department of Defense for further specifics on this issue.

Question 6. What forms, and from what funding sources, will this support take?

Answer. I understand that the Department of Defense, as part of the administration’s goal of improving the capability of the Republic of Yemen Government, would like to increase existing training of Yemen’s Coast and Border guards. I refer you to the Department of Defense for specifics on this issue.

Question 7. What sort of vetting of Yemeni individuals will be done, how, and by whom?

Answer. I refer you to the Department of Defense for specifics on this issue.

Question 8. When will this support commence; over what time period; and according to what metrics of evaluation?

Answer. I refer you to the Department of Defense for specifics on this issue.

Yemeni Detainees

On June 22, 2017, Human Rights Watch issued a report detailing UAE support for Yemeni forces that have arbitrarily detained, forcibly disappeared, tortured, and abused individuals in Yemen during security operations:
Question 9. Please confirm that you have read this report.
Answer. I have read this report.

Question 10. What are the Yemeni forces named in the report? Please describe the nature of the support these forces received from the UAE, according to the report.
Answer. It is my understanding that the Yemeni forces named in the report, the Security Belt and Hadrami Elite Forces, were trained by the UAE. The Security Belt, a force created in spring 2016, is officially under the ROYG Interior Ministry but is funded, trained, and directed by the UAE. The Hadrami Elite Forces are formally a part of the Yemen Army, which covers parts of Hadramawt governorate. The UAE provides salaries, training, weapons, and direction to the Elite Forces, according to the Human Rights Watch report.

Question 11. According to the report, detainees were held in UAE-run detention facilities. Where were these facilities located, according to the report?
Answer. According to the report, there are detention facilities and secret prisons in Aden and Hadramawt, including at least two run by the UAE and others run by UAE-backed Yemeni security forces. The report states that the UAE ran at least one detention facility in Aden for terrorism suspects they deemed to be high-value or sensitive cases. There are allegations that the Yemeni Security Administration, which falls under the Yemeni Interior Ministry but whose top official is UAE-supported, also ran informal detention facilities and secret prisons in Aden. The report alleges that the UAE runs unofficial detention facilities in Mukalla, with the principal detention facility at al-Riyan airport, Mukalla’s main airport. It is my understanding that the UAE says it no longer runs detention facilities in Yemen. The United States Government does not have a presence or access to these facilities and is unable to verify the Human Rights Watch report.

Question 12. Please describe the abuse inflicted on detainees at these facilities, according to the report.
Answer. According to the report, former detainees and family members told Human Rights Watch that some detainees had been abused or tortured inside detention facilities, most often through beatings by officers using their fists, guns, or other metal objects. Others mentioned electric shocks, forced nudity, threats to the detainees or their family members, and caning on the feet. Other allegations include exposure to cold temperatures, insults, death threats, and sexual abuse, including threats of rape.

The United States Government does not have a presence or access to these facilities and is unable to verify the Human Rights Watch report.

Question 13. What recommendations does the report give for the Governments of Yemen and the UAE regarding the detention and treatment of detainees?
Answer. The Human Rights Watch reports recommends all parties carrying out detentions in Yemen should:

- Immediately stop forcibly disappearing, arbitrarily detaining, or torturing detainees. No exceptional circumstances may justify torture, and states are required to investigate and prosecute those responsible for torture.
- Release anyone arbitrarily detained or detained for involvement in peaceful political activities, including especially vulnerable people such as children.
- Immediately provide a list of all detention sites and of everyone currently in detention or who has died in custody.
- All detainees should be promptly brought before an independent authority, like a judge, provided specific reasons for their detention, and given the ability to contest the detention. Anyone not being prosecuted for a criminal offense may only be held for exceptional reasons of security, set out clearly in domestic law, and must be released as soon as the reasons for the deprivation of their liberty cease to exist. All such detainees should be brought promptly before a judge.
- Detention under such circumstances should be reviewed at least every six months.
- Every detainee must be treated humanely at all times.
- Visits from family members must be allowed if practicable.
- Under applicable human rights law, children should be detained only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest appropriate period of time. In all cases, children should be held separately from adults, unless they are detained with their family.
• Yemen is obliged to ensure that the Security Belt and Hadrami Elite Forces, as well as any other forces operating with the Yemeni Government's consent, comply with relevant legal requirements and procedural safeguards, including taking active steps to prevent disappearances, such as through regularizing the procedure of registering detainees and notifying family members of their whereabouts. The UAE has similar obligations, given its role in detentions.

• Yemen is responsible for taking all reasonable steps to protect the well-being of anyone they transfer to the UAE or other governments or groups. Anyone being transferred out of a country should be able to contest the transfer in that country's courts. Transfers cannot be made if the person would likely face torture or other major human rights abuses.

Question 14. On June 27, 2017, the Associated Press issued a report detailing the torture of Yemeni detainees by Yemeni forces receiving support from the UAE. Please confirm that you have read this report.

Answer. I have read this report.

Question 15. What are the specific allegations they made regarding the torture inflicted upon detainees?

Answer. According to the report, former inmates described being crammed into 3-by-10 meter shipping containers by the dozens, smeared with feces, blindfolded, and legs and hands bound for weeks on end, some for months. They said they were beaten, rotated on a spit and sexually assaulted, among other abuse. Others described being flogged with wires regularly and reported being inside a metal shipping container when the guards lit a fire underneath to fill it with smoke. A detainee reported being given electrical shocks on his neck, back, chin and "sensitive parts" of his body. One detainee said he underwent a fake execution where he was dressed in what he was told was an explosive suicide belt, then a sound grenade was set off near him. The United States Government does not have a presence or access to these facilities and is unable to verify the Human Rights Watch report.

Question 16. What are the specific allegations made about the involvement of UAE forces? What are the locations of the UAE's secret prisons detailed in the report?

Answer. According to the report, a member of the Hadramawt Elite alleged that American forces were at times only yards away from where torture was taking place. The report states that Department of Defense officials confirmed that U.S. forces have interrogated some detainees in Yemen but denied any participation in or knowledge of human rights abuses. The U.S. provides questions to the Emiratis and receives transcripts of their interrogations. According to the report, a Yemeni witness of American interrogations also told the AP that no torture took place during those sessions where he was present. The Department of Defense has responded that that U.S. forces have not witnessed or participated in such events.

Question 17. What are the specific allegations made in the report regarding the involvement of U.S. interrogators?

Answer. According to the report, a member of the Hadramawt Elite alleged that American forces were at times only yards away from where torture was taking place. The report states that Department of Defense officials confirmed that U.S. forces have interrogated some detainees in Yemen but denied any participation in or knowledge of human rights abuses. The U.S. provides questions to the Emiratis and receives transcripts of their interrogations. According to the report, a Yemeni witness of American interrogations also told the AP that no torture took place during those sessions where he was present. The Department of Defense has responded that that U.S. forces have not witnessed or participated in such events.

Question 18. What has been the administration's response to these allegations?

Answer. I understand that the Department of Defense conducted an investigation in July 2017 and determined that no U.S. officials had observed or participated in torture of detainees in Yemen. The administration has raised concerns about these allegations with UAE Government counterparts at senior levels through diplomatic, intelligence, and military channels and has urged the UAE to conduct a thorough investigation.

We urge all parties, including the UAE, to treat prisoners and detainees humanely, and to ensure that abuses are investigated and those responsible are held accountable. All parties must act in accordance with international law, including human rights law and the laws of armed conflict.

The administration has also asked the United Arab Emirates Government to take steps to prevent such incidents from occurring and has urged the Government to allow regular access by the International committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to any detention facilities in Yemen under its control, so that it can ensure detainees are being treated in accordance with international law. It is my understanding that the UAE claims it has turned over management of all detention facilities in Yemen to the ROYG.

Question 19. On January 26, 2018, the United Nations Panel of Experts issued a report that, among other things, included allegations of the unlawful detention and abuse of individuals in Yemen. Please confirm that you have read this report.

Answer. I have read this report.

Question 20. Please describe the Panel’s findings on the role of UAE forces in the detention of individuals in Yemen and the specific Yemeni units they partnered with.

Answer. The Panel found that the rule of law is deteriorating rapidly across Yemen, regardless of who controls a particular territory. It found that the Government of Yemen, the United Arab Emirates and Houthi-Saleh forces have all engaged in arbitrary arrests and detentions, carried out enforced disappearances and committed torture. The Panel reports that forces of the United Arab Emirates engaged in, or supervised, joint arrest operations with the Hadrami and Shabwani Elite Forces.

Question 21. Please describe the abuses against detainees that the Panel found UAE forces were responsible for and the number of detainees the Panel estimated to be in the custody of UAE forces.

Answer. The Panel found that forces of the United Arab Emirates were responsible for: (i) torture (including beatings, electrocution, constrained suspension and imprisonment in a metal cell (‘the cage’) in the sun); (ii) ill treatment; (iii) denial of timely medical treatment; (iv) denial of due process rights; and (v) enforced disappearance of detainees, in violation of international humanitarian law and international human rights law.

Question 22. The Panel has requested from both the UAE and the Government of Yemen the relevant legal authority under which the UAE is authorized to arrest and detain individuals in Yemen. To your knowledge, have those authorities been provided?

Answer. I am not aware whether those authorities have been provided. I would refer you to the Panel.

Question 23. According to the Panel, has either the Yemeni or the UAE Governments conducted credible investigations into these reports of detention and abuse? To your knowledge, have either government conducted a credible investigation on this matter since the Panel’s report was issued?

Answer. I am not aware of the results of any such investigation and would refer you to the Panel. While the administration is not in a position to independently verify these reports, we have raised concerns about these allegations with UAE Government counterparts at senior levels through diplomatic, intelligence, and military channels and have urged the UAE to conduct a thorough investigation.

Question 24. On June 20, 2018, the Associated Press released a second report detailing the sexual abuse of Yemeni detainees at UAE-controlled prisons. Please confirm that you have read this report.

Answer. I have read this report.

Question 25. What are the specific allegations made in the report regarding the sexual torture inflicted upon detainees?

Answer. The report includes allegations of rape, electrocution and abuse of prisoners’ genitals, and sexual violation with wooden or steel poles.

Question 26. What are the specific allegations made about the involvement of UAE forces? What are the locations of the UAE’s secret prisons detailed in the report?

Answer. The report alleges that Emirati forces and Yemeni guards under the direction of Emirati officers abused prisoners and states that the UAE runs secret prisons in southern Yemen, at Beir Ahmed, Burqah, at the house of Aden’s security chief, and in Wadah.

Question 27. Has the UAE acknowledged the presence of any of its detention facilities inside or outside Yemen?

Answer. The UAE has publicly stated that Yemeni authorities are in complete control of local and federal governance, judicial and prison systems, and that the UAE has never managed or run prisons or secret detention centers in Yemen.

Question 28. What allegations are made regarding the presence of U.S. personnel in the report?
Answer. The report alleges that U.S. personnel have been seen at the Buriqa base, along with Colombian mercenaries, according to two prisoners and two security officials. The detainees could not say whether the Americans, some of whom wear military uniforms, are members of the U.S. Government or mercenaries. It is my understanding that the Department of Defense has stated that U.S. forces have not witnessed or participated in such events.

Question 29. On July 12, 2018, Amnesty International issued a report alleging that UAE-backed Yemeni forces have conducted hundreds of arbitrary arrests and committed serious violations, including enforced disappearance and torture and other ill-treatment. Please confirm that you have read this report.

Answer. I have read this report.

Question 30. Please describe the Yemeni forces named in the report and their relationships with the UAE, including support received from and cooperation with the UAE.

Answer. The report refers to local Yemeni security forces known as the Security Belt and Elite Forces, and states that these forces were created, trained, equipped and financed by the UAE. The report states that the Security Belt forces operate in southern Yemen, and that the Elite Forces of Hadramawt and Shabwa perform military and police roles.

Question 31. What recommendations does the report give for the Governments of Yemen and the UAE regarding the detention and treatment of detainees? What recommendations does the report have for the United States?

Answer. The report recommends that the UAE Government:

- End all practices of arbitrary arrests, enforced disappearance, torture and other ill treatment and human rights violations in Yemen;
- Reveal the fate and whereabouts of all persons who have been subjected to enforced disappearance and give those remaining in custody access to their families and to lawyers;
- Release all persons who have been arbitrarily arrested and detained and hand their files over to Yemeni prosecutors to promptly charge them with internationally recognizable criminal offenses and try them in proceedings that fully comply with international standards and without the possibility of the death penalty.
- Reveal the locations of the detention facilities it runs or supervises in Yemen and bring these under the supervision of the Yemeni Prosecutor General.
- Allow independent monitors to access all places of detention it runs or supervises in Yemen and to visit all detainees.
- Initiate a prompt, impartial investigation into the allegations of violations of international humanitarian law committed by its troops and the Yemeni forces it backs.
- Ensure that all individuals who have suffered violations of international humanitarian law or serious violations and abuses of human rights law are afforded an effective remedy and reparations.
- Immediately implement the decisions of Yemeni prosecutors and refrain from obstructing their release orders.
- Co-operate fully with the U.N.-appointed group of international experts to investigate abuses by all parties to the conflict in Yemen and provide it unhindered access to detention facilities it runs and supervises.
- Ratify the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention for the Protection of all Persons against Enforced Disappearance and the Rome statute of the International Criminal Court.

It recommends that the Government of the Republic of Yemen:

- Ensure that people in Yemen are protected from enforced disappearance and other serious human right violations carried out by agents of other states;
- Establish an office mandated to collect and centralize information related to detainees and forcibly disappeared persons; the office would be the main point of contact for updating relatives on individual cases and for submitting information to the prosecutorial authorities for investigation.
- Publicly clarify the authority under which the UAE and UAE-backed forces carry out arrests and detention in Yemen, and take effective measures to ensure that these forces fully comply with international human rights law and international humanitarian law;
• Ensure that all security forces are brought under its effective control, and that prosecutors have jurisdiction over all those deprived of their liberty and all detention facilities;

• Conduct prompt, effective and impartial investigations into the alleged involvement of Yemeni officials and units in arbitrary arrests, enforced disappearance, torture and other ill-treatment. Suspend officials suspected of responsibility pending the outcome of investigations; wherever there is sufficient admissible evidence of responsibility for serious violations, prosecute suspects in fair trials;

• Initiate a prompt, effective, and impartial investigation into the conduct of UAE forces in Yemen and allegations of violations of international humanitarian law and other serious violations and abuses of human rights law against them;

• Ensure that law enforcement officials provide a response to the numerous correspondences sent to them by various government entities and families of disappeared detainees inquiring about the whereabouts of these persons unlawfully deprived of their liberty;

• Ensure that all individuals who have suffered violations of international humanitarian law or serious violations and abuses of human rights law are afforded an effective remedy and reparation, including restitution, compensation, rehabilitation, and guarantees of non-repetition;

• Ratify the International Convention for the Protection of all Persons from Enforced Disappearance and the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.

• Extend invitations to the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, and facilitate their visits.

It recommends that the Prosecutor General of Yemen:

• Initiate prompt, impartial and effective investigations into allegations of torture and other ill-treatment, deaths in custody, arbitrary detention and enforced disappearances by Yemeni and UAE forces even if specific complaints were not formally filed;

• Continue efforts to try to bring unofficial detention facilities under judicial oversight;

• Ensure that officials responsible for security forces and directors of detention facilities require their subordinates to maintain records regarding every detainee, including the date, time, and location of arrest, the name of the detainee, the reason for detention, and the specific unit or agency.

And it recommends that the United States:

• Refrain from receiving information likely to have been obtained through use of torture or other ill-treatment and take preventive measures to ensure that intelligence sharing between states does not reward unlawful interrogation practices;

• Actively promote the compliance of counter-terrorism partners, namely the UAE, with international humanitarian law and respect for human rights, in particular the absolute prohibition of torture and other ill-treatment.

• Facilitate independent oversight, including by the U.S. Congress, over U.S. military or intelligence cooperation with Yemeni and UAE forces involved in detention activities in Yemen. Investigate the role of U.S. military or intelligence personnel in detention-related abuses in Yemen and comply with all legal investigation and reporting requirements related to this issue.

• Once accountability mechanisms are in place, ensure that any forces in Yemen with whom the USA is cooperating with receive appropriate training in human rights and international humanitarian law, including in international standards for law enforcement.

• Suspend the supply of weapons, munitions, and related military equipment to the UAE and other parties to the conflict in Yemen, where there is a substantial risk of these arms being used in Yemen.

Question 32. On August 28, 2018, the U.N. Human Rights Council’s Group of Regional and International Eminent Experts on Yemen issued a report that, among other concerns, detailed widespread arbitrary detention and abuse by UAE-backed Yemeni Forces and UAE forces. Please confirm that you have read this report.

Answer. I have read this report.
Question 33. Please list the UAE-backed forces named in the report and the abuses alleged against them.

Answer. The United Arab Emirates has established control across southern Yemen, both by its direct action and through its proxy forces, namely the Security Belt Forces, the Hadrami Elite Forces and the Shabwani Elite Forces. The Southern Transitional Council forces, backed heavily by the United Arab Emirates, continue to control major cities in southern Yemen.

The report states that hundreds of individuals have been detained for perceived opposition to the Government or to the United Arab Emirates in detention facilities or undeclared centers under the control of the United Arab Emirates. According to the report, detainees have been subjected to torture and other cruel treatment in facilities such as the Al Rayyan and Bureiqa facilities (controlled by the United Arab Emirates); the 7 October facility in Abyan, Lahij Central Prison and Al Mansoura Prison (controlled by Security Belt Forces); and Ma’rib Political Security (controlled by the Government). The Group of Experts also investigated sexual violence, including rape of adult male detainees, committed by United Arab Emirates personnel.

Question 34. Please describe the abuses against detainees that the Group found UAE forces were responsible for, and the role of UAE-controlled facilities in the detention and abuse of Yemenis.

Answer. The Group has reasonable grounds to believe that the Governments of Yemen, the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia are responsible for human rights violations, including enforced disappearance. As most of these disappearances appear to be conflict related, they may amount to the following war crimes: rape, degrading and cruel treatment, torture and outrages upon personal dignity.

According to the report, detainees were not informed of the reasons for their arrest, were not charged, were denied access to lawyers or a judge and were held incommunicado for prolonged or indefinite periods. Parties to the conflict are using undeclared detention facilities in an apparent, and if confirmed unlawful, attempt to put detainees outside the reach of the law. A few individuals detained in areas under the control of the de facto authorities reported that they had been brought before tribunals where proceedings flouted basic due process standards, including the right to legal representation. Death sentences have been passed and implemented in Sana’a and Aden, in the absence of due process standards.

According to the report, in detention, during interrogation and while blindfolded and/or handcuffed, detainees were beaten, electrocuted, suspended upside down, drowned, threatened with violence against their families and held in solitary confinement for prolonged periods in violation of the absolute prohibition on torture, cruel or inhuman treatment. Reports indicate poor material conditions and grossly inadequate medical care for detainees. The Group has also received allegations of deaths in custody.

The Group of Experts also investigated sexual violence, including rape of adult male detainees, committed by United Arab Emirates personnel. Detainees described being interrogated while naked, bound and blindfolded, sexually assaulted and raped. In March 2018, nearly 200 detainees were stripped naked in a group while personnel of the United Arab Emirates forcibly examined their anuses. During this search, multiple detainees were raped digitally and with tools and sticks.

Question 35. What recommendations does the report give for the Governments of Yemen and the UAE regarding the detention and treatment of detainees?

Answer. (i) Ensure that all persons deprived of their liberty have their detention reviewed by a judge in compliance with national and international law; (ii) Ensure that arrests of individuals in connection with the ongoing conflict are carried out on legal grounds; (iii) Document all unofficial detention centres and transfer detainees to official detention facilities in line with national and international law; and (iv) Create a national register for missing persons and inform families of the whereabouts of all detainees.

Question 36. Given the findings of these reports, do you agree or disagree with the conclusions of the U.N. Panel of Experts on Yemen and the Group of Independent Eminent International and Regional Experts of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights that the UAE has responsibility for secret or undeclared detention facilities in Yemen?

Answer. While I am not in a position to determine responsibility, I find these reports disturbing. The administration has raised its concerns regarding the reports of detainee abuses in detention facilities in Yemen with UAE military and diplomatic officials.
Question 37. Given the findings of these reports, do you agree or disagree with the conclusions of the U.N. Panel of Experts on Yemen and the Group of Independent Eminent International and Regional Experts of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights that the UAE has responsibility for the torture and disappearances of detainees in Yemen by its own forces or by Yemeni forces under the UAE’s effective control or direction?

Answer. The administration is not able to independently verify the allegations upon which the findings of the reports are based, but given the seriousness of the allegations, we have raised and will continue to raise with the UAE Government the importance of investigating such reports and ensuring that any forces found to have engaged in such abuses are held accountable.

Question 38. If you are confirmed, what steps will you take to investigate the allegations of illegal detention and torture by UAE-backed Yemeni forces and UAE forces in Yemen? What steps will you take to push those forces to release any and all unjustly held individuals and to hold accountable those responsible for arbitrary detention and torture?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work closely with administration colleagues to continue to urge all parties, including the UAE, to treat prisoners and detainees humanely, and to ensure that abuses are investigated and those responsible are held accountable. In my engagements with Yemeni Government and Saudi-led Coalition officials, I will urge all parties to allow regular access by the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) to any detention facilities in Yemen under their control, so that it can ensure detainees are being treated in accordance with international law.

Question 39. Do you agree or disagree with the conclusions of the U.N. Panel of Experts on Yemen and the Group of Independent Eminent International and Regional Experts of United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights that the UAE is, in effect, supporting the breakup of Yemen through its support for the separatists of southern Yemen?

Answer. The UAE is an important partner of the United States in combatting AQAP in southern Yemen and has repeatedly stated in diplomatic engagements its support for the territorial integrity and unity of Yemen. The South has been a sensitive political issue for Yemen for a very long time and it is the administration’s position that Southern issues should be addressed through ROYG-led intra-Yemen discussions and negotiations. Any future political solution or agreement in Yemen should be representative and include the voices of all Yemenis.

Security Training Oversight

The U.S. Embassy in Yemen has been closed since 2015. The U.S. has pledged over half a billion dollars to Yemen in FY 2018. However, if confirmed, you will still have an important role in approving, monitoring and conducting oversight on U.S. security assistance in Yemen.

Question 40. Do you believe that our ability to evaluate and monitor U.S. assistance in Yemen is sufficient?

Answer. If confirmed, I will take end-user assurances, equipment security, and monitoring very seriously. Yemen remains a country in the middle of a civil war. It is my understanding that any assistance to Yemen undergoes an interagency process that assesses the U.S. Government’s ability to evaluate and monitor assistance in-country, among other things. We do not provide U.S. assistance to a country if we are not satisfied after this review.

Question 41. Given the Saudi-led Coalition pledges of assistance, where can U.S. assistance be most effective and value added?

Answer. According to the U.N., Yemen’s humanitarian crisis is currently the world’s worst. Any assistance to Yemen, especially through U.N. channels, is of great use. The U.S. works with the U.N., other donors, and humanitarian organizations to coordinate response efforts and make sure aid is reaching the people who need it most. If confirmed as Ambassador to Yemen, I will be part of these ongoing efforts to make sure that we maximize the positive impact of any aid coming from the United States. In addition, I will work hard to build on efforts to reform Yemen’s governing and economic institutions to increase the services to all the country’s citizens.

Civilian Casualties

Secretary Pompeo certified in September that the Saudi-led coalition was “undertaking demonstrable actions to reduce the risk of harm to civilians and civilian infrastructure resulting from military operations.” However, over the same time period there was a significant increase in civilian causal-ties and deaths from Saudi-led coalition airstrikes.

Question 42. Mr. Henzel, you are in a unique position to provide this committee with insights into the efforts of the Saudi military to reduce civilian casualties, given your most recent position as the Charge d’Affairs in Riyadh. In your assessment, has the Saudi military applying effective measures to protect civilians and reduce civilian casualties in Yemen?

Answer. The United States consistently urges the Saudi-led Coalition to take all feasible precautions to reduce the risk of harm to civilians, take appropriate measures when such casualties occur, and draw lessons from operations to reduce the risk of harm to civilians. We have seen tangible steps by the Saudi-led Coalition to reduce civilian casualties, including designation of over 10,000 targets on a No-Strike List. The Saudi Government has further provided significant humanitarian aid to Yemeni civilians as well as provided financial support to stabilize the country’s faltering economy.

That said, we have consistently said that more needs to be done. If confirmed, I will continue to engage counterparts to make sure this issue remains a top priority for all parties involved. We will continue to press all parties to the conflict in Yemen to take all feasible measures to mitigate the impact of the conflict on civilians and to investigate fully all credible allegations of international humanitarian law violations and hold all those responsible to account.

Question 43. Did you support the decision to certify in Section 1290 of the FY 19 National Defense Authorization Act that the Saudi Government is undertaking “demonstrable actions to reduce the risk of harm to civilians and civilian infrastructure resulting from military operations” in Yemen?

Answer. Pursuant to section 1290 of the Fiscal Year (FY) 2019 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA), the Secretary certified that Saudi Arabia and the UAE are supporting diplomatic efforts to end the civil war, taking appropriate measures to alleviate the humanitarian crisis, and undertaking demonstrable actions to reduce the risk of harm to civilians and civilian infrastructure. As a part of this decision-making process, I along with many stakeholders throughout the Department, and the Department of Defense and USAID, provided information to the Secretary to allow him to make an informed decision.

Question 44. Last week, Secretary Pompeo announced $131 million in additional food assistance for Yemen, to be provided through the U.N. World Food Program (WFP). However, this announcement came after WFP had already raised the alarm that in recent weeks, imports through Hodeidah have fallen by nearly half, at a time when roughly 50 percent of the country’s population is on the brink of starvation, and when 85,000 children have been estimated to have died from starvation. How does the administration expect the WFP and other agencies to successfully implement food distributions with this new funding without also sufficiently addressing humanitarian access constraints by parties to the conflict?

Answer. The administration takes humanitarian access constraints very seriously. We recognize that scaling up to the level needed will be a significant challenge. The United States continues to call on all parties to the conflict to take all feasible measures to allow for the free flow of humanitarian and commercial goods through the ports and around the country. We routinely encourage our partners to increase their contributions, as well as to avoid the obstruction of visas and movement of humanitarian aid workers. We urge them to do everything they can to facilitate the timely delivery of this life-saving assistance.

Question 45. For roughly a year, nearly all humanitarian NGOs operating in Yemen—including U.S.-funded ones—have had to circumvent the port of Hodeidah and instead ship humanitarian commodities and supplies through Aden in the south, due to ongoing conflict around Hodeidah and Saudi/UAE coalition bureaucratic constraints. NGOs report this significantly increases time, costs, and risk for delivering aid to the millions of Yemenis in need. What has the administration done in its engagement with the Saudis, Emiratis, and Hadi Government to reduce bureaucratic restrictions through Aden port and onward across the country?

Answer. While Hudaydah port remains operational, the administration recognizes that bureaucratic obstacles at all ports lead to unnecessary and unhelpful delays that cost humanitarian partners time, money, and, in some cases, their perishable goods. These are goods that need to make it to the most vulnerable Yemenis who are acutely and catastrophically food insecure. On December 1, the United States, United Kingdom, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates met with the U.N. to discuss humanitarian access and other challenges, including the backlog at Aden Port. We will continue working with the Saudi-led Coalition and Yemeni Government to address the problems there. The United States continues to call on all parties to improve access restraints and take all feasible measures to allow for the free flow of humanitarian and commercial goods through the ports and around the country.

Question 46. As Ambassador to Yemen, what steps will you take to increase the flow of goods through Hodeidah?

Answer. The United States strongly supports U.N. Special Envoy (UNSE) Martin Griffiths' efforts to de-escalate tensions in and around Hudaydah and his proposal to create a U.N. role in the port's operation. The United States continues to call on all parties to improve access and take all feasible measures to allow for the free flow of humanitarian and commercial goods through the ports and around the country. If confirmed as Ambassador to Yemen, I will continue to work towards these goals.

Question 47. The Senate has shown that we are deeply concerned about the humanitarian situation in Yemen. Given that you will be situated in Saudi Arabia, how will you work both with the Saudi Government and independent of the Saudi Government to prevent a further decline of the humanitarian situation?

Answer. The United States is one of the largest donors of humanitarian assistance to the Yemen response, providing more than $697 million in aid since fiscal year 2018. If confirmed as Ambassador to Yemen, I will continue to assess Yemen's humanitarian needs, and will work closely with the U.S. Embassy in Saudi Arabia to coordinate our efforts with the Saudi Government and the U.N. to address short-comings and improve the humanitarian situation in Yemen. Bringing an end to the conflict represents the most positive step that would have the greatest impact on resolving the humanitarian crisis and the underlying economic collapse that is feeding it. To this end, the administration will continue to support U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths' efforts to bring both sides of the table for negotiations.

Question 48. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have consistently impressed upon government officials that their respect for human rights has a direct bearing on how their countries are perceived in the United States and on American support for bilateral cooperation. During my time as Deputy Chief of Mission and Charge d'Affaires in Saudi Arabia, I regularly raised the cases of detained activists, including female activists who fought to lift the driving ban and for revisions to guardianship laws that restricted opportunities for women in employment and public life. Last month, I personally raised the travel ban that had been placed on Jamal Khashoggi's son, Saleh, with Saudi Interior Minister Prince Abdel Aziz Al Saud; I was pleased to see that Saudi officials then permitted Saleh to travel to the United States. I cannot claim that my engagements in Riyadh on human rights always have been successful, but letting the Government there know that we are monitoring and care about these issues is essential, and something on which I will continue to engage seriously if confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Yemen.

Question 49. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Yemen? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The most pressing challenges to democracy in Yemen include extrajudicial killings, forced disappearances and kidnappings, as well as reports of torture and harsh and life-threatening conditions in prison following arbitrary arrest and detention by Yemeni Government, Houthi, and external actors. Other issues include arbitrary infringements on privacy rights; repression of the freedoms of expression, the press, association, and the right to peaceful assembly. We must remain concerned about the inability of citizens to choose their government through free and fair elections. Finally, there is unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers and trafficking in persons, including forced labor. The Republic of Yemen Government has taken some steps to investigate, prosecute, and punish those found to have committed crimes related to such violations and abuses.

Question 50. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Yemen? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. The ongoing conflict in Yemen has created a complex network of regional authorities that poses a significant challenge to protecting democracy and human rights. The closure of Sanaa airport and Coalition restrictions on media and human rights organizations' ability to travel into and out of the capital severely restrict independent investigation and monitoring of human rights violations in the north. Our access to areas of Houthi influence remains severely limited. In addition, Houthi influence over government institutions where they do operate has severely reduced the Government's capacity to conduct investigations. If confirmed, I will give full U.S. support to national reconciliation efforts that will bring all Yemenis under the authority of a government that is responsive to their needs and that can credibly investigate instances of human rights abuse when they occur. I will also demonstrate to the Yemeni Government that human rights are a priority U.S. interest by continuing to push the Government to build its own capacity to fully and transparently investigate incidents when they occur.

Question 51. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. I will work with our Public Affairs Section to ensure that Yemenis benefiting from State Department and USAID funding are in fact the ones best placed to benefit from these programs. Whenever possible, I will prioritize diversity in the recipients of such benefits, to ensure that we are practicing what we preach when we push the parties to the conflict on an inclusive approach to national reconciliation. In addition to efforts at the national level, I will push for continued engagement at the local level with diverse recipients and partners across Yemen.

Question 52. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Yemen? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. I am deeply committed to human rights and will work closely with civil society and non-governmental organizations to ensure that Yemenis' voices are heard on this important set of issues. Even in cases where we cannot physically reach the victims of human rights abuses, we can work with humanitarian organizations that have the access to advocate on their behalf. I will closely monitor any efforts by the Yemeni Government or the Houthis to restrict or penalize the freedom of civil society groups to operate without fear of reprisal.

Question 53. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I will welcome engagement with all democratically oriented actors interested in a stable, unified Yemen, and will also encourage these parties to dialogue with one another. I will promote genuine political competition by ensuring the Yemen Affairs Unit retains a broad contact base that is representative of all Yemenis, not just those currently in power, and that we emphasize the importance of including women, minorities, and youth in any national dialogue that occurs during my tenure.

Question 54. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with the Government of Yemen on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Yemen?

Answer. If confirmed, I will register our concerns regarding government efforts designed to control or undermine freedom of expression for members of the press, at the highest level of Yemen's Government. I will underscore to my Public Affairs team the importance of meeting independent, local Yemeni press. If face-to-face meetings are not possible, I will ensure my team has the resources to facilitate connections over voice or video calls.

Question 55. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. I will emphasize to my team the importance of identifying and countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state and non-state actors, and work with civil society and government counterparts to address such messaging.
Question 56. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with the Government of Yemen on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. I recognize the important role that unions have in organizing and informing workers around the world. My team will actively engage the Yemen Government on the importance of protecting workers' right to organize and to form independent trade unions.

Question 57. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Yemen, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Yemen? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Yemen?

Answer. LGBTI persons face significant discrimination and even the death penalty in Yemen, although there have been no known executions of LGBTI persons in more than a decade. The penal code criminalizes consensual same-sex sexual conduct, with the death penalty as a sanction under the country's interpretation of Islamic law. Due to the illegality of and possible severe punishment for consensual same-sex sexual conduct, there are no LGBTI organizations, limiting the community's ability to organize to assert its rights. If confirmed, I will defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Yemen, irrespective of their sexual orientation or gender identity.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Christopher Paul Henzel by Senator Benjamin L. Cardin

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. I have consistently impressed upon foreign government counterparts that their respect for human rights has a direct bearing on how the United States perceives their countries and on American support for bilateral cooperation. During my time as Deputy Chief of Mission and Charge d'Affaires in Saudi Arabia, I regularly raised the cases of unlawfully or arbitrarily detained activists, including female activists who fought to lift the driving ban and for revisions to guardianship laws that restricted opportunities for women in employment and public life. Last month, I personally raised the travel ban that had been placed on Jamal Khashoggi's son, Saleh, with Saudi Interior Minister Prince Abdel Aziz Al Saud; I was pleased to see that Saudi officials then permitted Saleh to travel to the United States. It is a top priority for me to ensure that my counterparts in the Saudi Government fully understand the United States Government monitors and cares greatly about these issues. This remains a priority on which I will continue to engage seriously if confirmed as U.S. Ambassador to Yemen.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Yemen? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Yemen? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. Due to the ongoing conflict, our most pressing current concerns in Yemen are to mitigate civilian casualties and alleviate the dire consequences of the humanitarian situation. We have worked closely with U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths, the Republic of Yemen Government (ROYG), and the Coalition to promote peace, prosperity, and security in Yemen through a negotiated peace settlement.

Pressing human rights issues in Yemen also include extrajudicial killings, forced disappearances and kidnappings, and reports of torture and harsh, life-threatening conditions in prison following arbitrary arrest and detention by Yemeni Government, Houthi, and external actors. Other issues include arbitrary infringements on privacy rights; repression of the freedoms of the press, expression, association, and the right of peaceful assembly; and the inability of citizens to choose their government through free and fair elections. Finally, there is unlawful recruitment and use of child soldiers and trafficking in persons, including forced labor. The ROYG, to the best of its ability, has taken some steps to investigate, prosecute, and punish officials found to have committed crimes related to human rights violations and abuse. Their capacity, however, will remain limited as long as the conflict continues. If confirmed, I will give full U.S. support to national reconciliation efforts that will bring all Yemenis under the authority of a government that is responsive to their basic needs and can credibly investigate instances of human rights violations and abuse when they do occur. I will also demonstrate to the Yemeni Government that human rights are a priority U.S. interest by continuing to push the Government to build its own capacity to fully and transparently investigate incidents when they occur.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Yemen in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Our access to areas under Houthi influence remains severely limited. The closure of Sana’a airport and Coalition restrictions on media and human rights organizations’ ability to travel into and out of the capital severely restrict independent investigation and monitoring of human rights violations in the north. In addition, Houthi influence over government institutions where they operate has severely reduced the Government’s capacity to conduct investigations. The ongoing conflict in Yemen has created a complex network of regional authorities that poses a significant challenge to protecting human rights.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Yemen? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. I am deeply committed to human rights and will work closely with civil society and non-governmental organizations to ensure that Yemenis’ voices are heard on this important set of issues. Even in cases where we cannot physically reach the victims of human rights abuses, we can work with organizations that have the access to advocate on their behalf. I will ensure that my staff are adequately trained so that all procedures associated with Leahy vetting are followed before security forces are provided U.S. assistance.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Yemen to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Yemen?

Answer. If confirmed, I will continue the work of my predecessor in ensuring that all those unjustly targeted in Yemen, by any party to the conflict, will receive full U.S. support. I will work to broaden our contact base and ensure it covers at-risk populations. I will use our messaging platforms to underscore U.S. opposition to the unlawful detention of political prisoners wherever it occurs. I understand the Yemen Affairs Unit’s Regional Security Office engages regularly with both the Government authorities and the Houthis on the issue of detainees. I plan to work closely with our security experts on these matters.

Question 6. Will you engage with Yemen on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. If confirmed, I will engage fully with the Government of Yemen on these matters and to message the leaders of the Republic of Yemen Government and the Houthi movement on their importance. A comprehensive political agreement to end the Yemen conflict must provide guarantees of fundamental freedoms, and rule of law.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Yemen?

Answer. No.
Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. In my current assignment as Deputy Chief of Mission and Chargé d’Affaires in Riyadh, I have made clear that the U.S. Government’s commitment to equal employment opportunity should be respected and promoted. I have encouraged the expansion of the Equal Employment Opportunity Counselor program at the Embassy in Riyadh and at the consulates general in Jeddah and Dhahran, and have met monthly with them and supported their work. I will continue this approach if confirmed as chief of mission for Yemen.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I will make clear to supervisors that both they and I are expected to support the Department’s management precepts, including commitment to equal employment opportunity, and will strive to reinforce this message by my example.

Question 12. How does political corruption impact democratic governance and the rule of law?

Answer. Political corruption robs citizens of their right to participate in their government or to reap the benefits of that participation. When government officials use public power for personal gain, we all lose. This is as true for the United States as it is for Yemen or any other country. I will bring our core value of transparency and accountability in government to my work in Yemen.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Yemen and efforts to address and reduce them by the Government of Yemen?

Answer. Transparency International ranked Yemen 175 out of 180 countries in its 2017 Corruption Perceptions Index. A culture of corruption is pervasive and can be found in nearly every government office, with officials benefiting from insider arrangements, embezzlement, and bribes, especially in the security sector. Political leaders and most government agencies have taken negligible action to combat corruption; their capacity to do so has been severely limited since the outbreak of war. The Central Organization for Control and Audit (COCA), a national auditing agency for public expenditures and the investigative body for corruption, has not conducted any known investigations since 2015, when the Houthis took control over most government agencies, including COCA.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Yemen?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure first and foremost that my staff understands that any malfeasance or complicity in local corrupt activities will not be tolerated. I will also ensure all of our contacts and interlocutors, no matter how senior, understand the U.S. stance on corruption, and will encourage them to work with the Embassy to develop programming to improve the Yemeni Government’s internal capacity to prevent corruption. Finally, I will work with our Public Affairs Section to ensure that Yemeni Government officials benefiting from U.S. training or programming are in fact the ones best placed to benefit from these programs.

Responses to Additional Questions for the Record Submitted to Christopher Paul Henzel by Senator Jeanne Shaheen

Question 1. Following Secretary Mattis and Secretary Pompeo calling for a ceasefire in Yemen we saw a dramatic increase in attacks from the Saudi-led coalition. What do you assess as the reason for this surge and does the ceasefire have any chance of taking hold? What does success in Yemen realistically look like for the Saudis?

Answer. The Coalition at this point has begun to observe Secretary Pompeo’s October 30 call for a cessation of hostilities by de-escalating all but defensive operations in and around Hudaydah as a measure of support for the political process. The Coalition has also signaled its support for political negotiations to proceed by supporting the United Nations Special Envoy efforts this week in Sweden.

Saudi Arabia’s primary goal is to stop the growing malign influence of Iran in the Arabian Peninsula—a goal we share. With constant U.S. and U.N. diplomatic engagement, we seek to move all parties forward in the political process.
Question 2. Congress established firm benchmarks on avoiding civilian casualties in the NDAA. In your capacity in Riyadh now and, if confirmed, working on Yemen, how would you work to reduce civilian casualties in this war?

Answer. The United States consistently urges the Saudi-led Coalition to take all feasible precautions to reduce the risk of harm to civilians, take appropriate measures when such casualties occur, and draw lessons from operations to reduce the risk of harm to civilians. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will continue that engagement to the utmost extent possible. Working with Department of Defense partners, we will continue to engage the Coalition and regional leaders at all levels. Through continued bilateral and multilateral training efforts and exercises, we will seek to bolster the Coalition’s adherence to international rules of engagement, respect for international humanitarian law, and best military practices to avoid civilian casualty incidents.

Question 3. The murder of Jamal Khashoggi underscored the increasing tension in our relationship with Saudi Arabia. In your view should we change our approach to our relationship with the Kingdom?

Answer. The murder of Jamal Khashoggi was a terrible, heinous act. We have sanctioned those against whom we have evidence they had a role in the murder, including visa restrictions and financial sanctions on 17 individuals under the Global Magnitsky Act. As the President and the Secretary have stated, we will continue to work to ascertain the facts, assess all information, and promote accountability, and we have consistently urged the Saudis to do the same as they continue their investigation. At the same time, the President has been clear that his priority is the safety and security of the American people, and part of that requires good partners and stability in the Middle East. The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia is an important part of that effort, and it remains in our national interest to maintain the important strategic relationship.

I can assure you that our engagement with the Saudi Government on the Khashoggi murder continues on a daily basis. My colleagues in Riyadh and Washington engage their Saudi and international counterparts on this matter at every opportunity, and continually examine next steps to ensure American interests are best served. We will continue to urge the Saudi Government to produce a credible, transparent investigation and legal process, and to hold accountable not only those who executed the murder, but also those who led and were involved or connected to it.

Question 4. What tools does the U.S. and global community have to bring the Houthis to the negotiating table? In your assessment, does power-sharing have a better chance of drawing the Houthis to negotiations?

Answer. The United States strongly supports the efforts of the U.N. Special Envoy’s office to bring all sides of the conflict to the negotiating table. We encourage international partners, including the Saudi-led Coalition and Yemeni leaders, to continue to meet with U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths to engage in the political process and map a stable political future for Yemen. We also leverage countries with known ties to the Houthis, such as Oman, to leverage their influence. The administration has repeatedly admonished Iran for its provision to the Houthis of ballistic missiles that threaten Saudi Arabia’s major population centers.

When negotiations commence, all sides will have to make compromises in order to reach a political solution. During negotiations, Griffiths must address Houthi threats to Saudi Arabia’s legitimate national security concerns. The Saudis will have to make compromises of their own, as the Houthis will likely retain a political role in Yemen. A durable commitment must have buy-in of key Yemeni parties, including the Republic of Yemen Government, Houthis, southerners, and other Yemeni actors.

Question 5. In your assessment, are further Yemen-related sanctions on Iran impactful on the Houthis’ ability and will to fight in Yemen? How would you describe the scope of the Iranian—Houthi relationship?

Answer. Iran’s provision of a broad range of weaponry to the Houthis, including rockets and missiles, exacerbates this conflict and advances Iran’s regional ambitions. The Houthis have repeatedly used Iranian ballistic missile and cruise missile technology and have targeted Aramco facilities, Red Sea shipping lanes, and various locations in Riyadh, including the international airport. Additionally, the Houthis also launch rockets along and across Saudi Arabia’s southern border on an almost daily basis. More than 100,000 U.S. citizens live in Saudi Arabia.

It is my understanding that further sanctions on Iran and Iranian-backed groups are only one tool under consideration to limit Iranian malign activities in the region. The administration is strengthening its engagement with regional governments to improve their support for, and compliance with, the arms embargo in U.N. Security Council Resolution (UNSCR) 2216. The United States publicly displayed recovered materiel from Houthi missile attacks and shared this information with the Secretariat and the independent U.N. Panel of Experts charged with investigating violations of UNSCR 2216. In the medium-to-long term, resolution of the conflict in Yemen will reduce the instability in which the Iranian regime spreads its influence.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO CHRISTOPHER PAUL HENZEL BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. During your testimony, you said that the administration was working to address humanitarian access issues in the port of Aden. Can you clarify what we are exactly doing to encourage the Hadi Government and coalition to ensure that impediments to humanitarian access to the port are removed?

Answer. We continue to raise with all parties the importance of ensuring unfettered access for humanitarian aid and commercial goods, especially food, fuel, and medicine, to reach Yemen. On December 1, the United States, the United Kingdom, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates met with the U.N. to discuss humanitarian access and other challenges, including the backlog at Aden Port. We will continue working with the Saudi-led Coalition and Yemeni Government to address the problems there. The United States continues to call on all parties to improve access and take all feasible measures to allow for the free flow of humanitarian and commercial goods through the ports and around the country. In response, we understand the Coalition has agreed to deploy additional cargo scanners to expedite the inspection process as one means of addressing the backlog.

Question 2. There are reports that the U.S. is slow rolling the introduction of a UK-drafted resolution at the U.N. Security Council calling for a ceasefire and increased humanitarian aid in Yemen. Can you confirm these reports?

Answer. We remain in constant communication with the British Government to ensure that the proposed U.N. Security Council Resolution's timing and content support the U.N.-led talks in Sweden. Both the United States and the UK firmly support the U.N. Special Envoy's efforts to bring about a political process, which remains our priority. We continue to coordinate closely on the U.N. process and will take stock of next steps once the talks in Sweden run their course.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN BARSA BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

In Congress, there is broad bipartisan consensus that the U.S. Government must work with our partners in the region to address the root causes—lack of security, weak rule of law, and extreme poverty—pushing people to leave their countries and migrate to the United States. Parents and families have a choice: stay and die, or flee and have a chance at a better life. That is why Congress, in recent years has provided increased foreign assistance to Central America in order to tackle these challenges. To that end:

Question 1. How will you push back against proposed budget cuts and make sure that USAID has the funding to carry out its critical missions to address community security, strengthen democratic governance, and facilitate conditions for broad-based economic growth?

Answer. As I stated in my nomination hearing, I believe the efforts of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in Central America are critical to the U.S. national interest, and I would be a vocal advocate for this work within the Executive Branch, and with the U.S. Congress, if I am confirmed. I recognize that the budget process is a long, complex one, that takes many months from the initial formulation of the President's Budget Request to the enactment of appropriations legislation; if I am confirmed, I would advocate throughout this process for USAID's work in the region, including programs to address the root causes of migration from Central America; support the people of Venezuela, Cuba, and Nicaragua; counter transnational criminal organizations and their criminal enterprises, including in narcotics and illicit mining in places like Colombia; promote economic growth and citizen security; and push back against the rise of malign external actors in the region.
Question 2. Will you work to defend USAID’s mission, and the importance of U.S. international development to the achievement of U.S. foreign policy goals through the interagency process and the development of the annual budget request process?

Answer. Yes.

Question 3. Will you commit to being responsive and transparent with all requests for information that come from the Senate Foreign Relations committee and its members?

Answer. Yes.

Question 4. If confirmed, how will you approach your relationship as Assistant Administrator with Congress?

Answer. Having served in both branches of government, I believe the relationship between the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) and the Congress is a critical one. I believe this not only because of Congress’ responsibility to conduct appropriate oversight, and because it holds the power of the purse, but also because I believe that the only way the United States can address the challenges in the region adequately—from migration from Central America to the crisis in Venezuela and its neighbors—is if the Executive and Legislative Branches work collaboratively, and in partnership, to advance U.S. national security. To that end, I commit to providing you timely information, both proactively and when requested, both personally and on behalf of the team that I would lead, if I am confirmed.

Question 5. Will you commit to keeping the USAID missions in Latin America and the Caribbean regularly apprised of the functional, programmatic, and workflow changes that will result from Admin. Green’s proposed redesign of the Agency?

Answer. Yes. I look forward to supporting Administrator Mark Green’s Transformation. Administrator Green has stated that the Transformation will make the structure of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) more field-focused, and allow the Agency’s staff to respond better to the challenges they face in the field. As USAID’s mission rightly focuses on the Agency’s work in the field, it would be a critical piece of my role, if I am confirmed, to help the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean work with USAID’s Foreign Service Officers and locally employed staff in our Missions in the region to implement the Transformation, which would include ensuring they receive regular updates on functional, programmatic, and workflow changes that will occur in Washington.

Temporary Protected Status (TPS)

In the past year, the administration terminated Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for El Salvadorans, Hondurans, Nicaraguans and Haitians. While a judge has issued a temporary stay on the termination, the fact remains that these countries are not fully prepared to take back the hundreds of thousands of TPS beneficiaries or the U.S. citizen children that will be traveling with them.

Question 6. Do you believe the U.S. has a responsibility to assist TPS returnees or host country governments that will be accepting TPS returnees, and to responsibly manage individuals’ return?

Answer. I understand that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) currently assists countries in the Northern Triangle of Central America with the reception and repatriation of returned migrants, including longer-term efforts to help those who are returning readjust and, ultimately, stay in their home countries. The potential return and assimilation of larger populations whose Temporary Protected Status (TPS) has expired poses a greater challenge to host governments. I believe USAID should assist host countries with this potential challenge as much as resources will allow. If confirmed, I would look to understand how USAID’s programs can best support this and other development challenges in the region.

Question 7. Will you work to ensure that USAID helps to build local capacity so that countries can safely repatriate their citizens?

Answer. Yes. If I am confirmed to this position, it would be my responsibility to work to ensure all of the programs funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) are responsive to all changing circumstances, including returns and reintegration, such as those that could result from changes to Temporary Protected Status (TPS). I understand that the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean within USAID has supported efforts to look at best practices across the region related to the repatriation of returnees, including in Ecuador, México, Colombia, and Peru, to build upon lessons learned for any work that takes place as the United States repatriates people who have held TPS to their home countries.
Question 8. What specific role do you believe USAID should play in countries that the administration is intent on ending Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for foreigners residing in the US?
Answer. While I do not want to presuppose the outcome of some of the thinking that the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean within the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has undertaken prior to my nomination, I believe the Agency has the knowledge and the relationships to support reintegration, and to end recidivism. While the Governments of the countries in Central America must lead such efforts, I do believe USAID can, and should, share the lessons from its examination of the effectiveness of existing reintegration efforts. One key factor will be the specific demographics of the population that ultimately returns; some could bring desperately needed skills and knowledge back to their home countries to advance economic prosperity, while at the same time, being perilously susceptible to extortion. If confirmed, I would ensure USAID’s programs respond adequately to these unique challenges. I am also aware of the Government Accountability Office’s recent report that examined reintegration efforts in Central America; while the report does not have any specific recommendations for USAID, it offers insights into best practices. If I am confirmed, I would seek to implement the findings of this report that relate to USAID’s programs.

Question 9. What is USAID’s strategy for assisting individuals whose TPS status is ending acclimate and avoid victimization upon returning to their home countries?
Answer. As stated above, I am concerned that some of the individuals who could return following the determinations of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security to terminate Temporary Protected Status (TPS) could be particularly at risk for victimization once they resettle in their home countries. At the moment, I understand that while there is not a formal strategy for tackling this challenge, in part because we do not yet know who will ultimately return to their home countries as a result of the TPS determinations, I do know that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has been reviewing its own past and current efforts related to reintegration, as well as those of other donors and host countries. It is self-evident that the programs funded by the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean within USAID can only succeed if they are able to respond to new developments in the operating environment, whether in response to a crisis, a change in country context, or relevant policy decisions. If I am confirmed, I would like to work closely with you and your staff to ensure we can apply the appropriate kinds of programs that can address this, and other dynamics related to the reintegration of returnees, in Central America.

Question 10. What do you believe should happen with families where the parents are TPS recipients, and their children were born in the United States?
Answer. Decisions related to Temporary Protected Status (TPS) are the responsibility of the Secretary of Homeland Security. I believe the role of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) in Central America can be to assist individuals who return to their home countries and the communities that are receiving them with any development-related challenges they face. If I am confirmed to lead the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean within USAID, I would seek to ensure USAID’s programs do the best they can to support the countries, and their people, by advancing their economic prosperity and security.

Question 11. Do you believe TPS status should be ended for Haitians?
Answer. The decision to terminate Temporary Protected Status for Haitians made by then-Acting Secretary of Homeland Security Elaine Duke factored in inputs from throughout the U.S. Government, and from external sources as well. My staff at the Office of Partnership and Engagement within the U.S. Department of Homeland Security and I met with some stakeholders regarding this issue, and did pass along information to assist in the decision-making process. However, by no means have I been exposed to the totality of inputs available to then-Acting Secretary Duke when she made the determination.

Venezuela’s Manmade Humanitarian Catastrophe

Venezuela’s manmade humanitarian catastrophe has unleashed a refugee and migration crisis that is swiftly approaching the scale of the Syrian migration crisis that has engulfed Europe in recent years.

Question 12. If confirmed, do you commit to working with me and other members of this committee on legislation to strengthen U.S. efforts to address the growing crisis in Venezuela?
Answer. Yes. I have sincerely appreciated the leadership of the Congress, in particular the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, which has ensured that the United States, and the world, remained focused on the tragic, man-made crisis in Venezuela, which is straining its neighbors, including Colombia, Brazil, Ecuador, Peru, and Trinidad and Tobago, among others. While I have not yet reviewed the Venezuela Humanitarian, Relief, Reconstruction, and Rule of Law Act in full, I support the objectives of doing all we can to support the humanitarian needs and the democratic aspirations of the Venezuelan people, and, if confirmed, I look forward to working with you on any current or future legislation on Venezuela.

Question 13. How do you think the U.S. can strengthen its response to Venezuela’s growing humanitarian crisis? Should the U.S. be hosting a donors conference to galvanize greater global funding for this challenge?

Answer. I have been impressed and heartened by response to the Venezuela crisis by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), which I understand includes over $140 million in humanitarian and development assistance provided to Venezuelans who have fled the tyranny and chaos in their country, and to the communities that are hosting them in neighboring countries. Yet it is clear that no amount of U.S. assistance will be sufficient to address the needs of the Venezuelan people, which grow worse by the because of the actions—and inaction—of the Maduro regime. If I am confirmed, I commit to you that I would do all in my power to galvanize global attention to the challenge, as well as global action, including funding. I would also undertake a detailed look at the assistance that USAID and the U.S. Department of State have provided to date; given how quickly the situation can change, I would ensure we are responding where the Agency’s assistance can be of most help.

USAID

Given the absence of democracy in Cuba, Venezuela and Nicaragua, and the human rights violations faced by citizens of all three countries, it is critical that USAID maintain its vital support for democratic civil society and human rights defenders.

Question 14. If confirmed, do you commit to aggressively fight to ensure that USAID does not cut funding to these essential programs?

Answer. Yes. I believe programs in democracy and governance, particularly support for civil society and defenders of human rights, are a core part of the mission of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), and they will certainly be a priority of mine if I am confirmed to this position. I understand such programs are, in some of these cases, a critical lifeline to civil-society organizations that are on the front lines of pushing back against government repression, and, in other cases, are a major reason the international community even understands what is taking place within these countries. If confirmed, I would look forward to working with you and the committee on how USAID can continue to support the people of Cuba, Venezuela, and Nicaragua.

Question 15. If confirmed, what strategies will you pursue in order to support democratic civil society in Cuba, Venezuela and Nicaragua, and help them strengthen efforts to defend basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in these countries?

Answer. As I noted in my written testimony, Cuba, Nicaragua, and Venezuela stand out in the region as countries with leadership who does not care for human rights, the rule of law, or the betterment of their own people. I pledge that, if I am confirmed, I would build upon the current activities of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to further the cause of freedom in these countries. I believe a lack of accountability is the greatest challenge to democracy and citizen-responsive governance in the world, and, if confirmed I, would seek to ensure that USAID’s programs are promoting accountability. Whether it be supporting independent media to shed light on the actions of the Ortega regime in Nicaragua, or providing training and capacity-building support to civil-society organizations that continue to operate in Maduro’s Venezuela, USAID’s role is undeniable. If confirmed, I would review USAID’s current portfolio in each of these countries to ensure the Agency is doing all it can to support those who are advancing human rights and freedom.

Colombia

The U.S. Congress has appropriated more than $11 billion to Colombia over the last 18 years, demonstrating an unwavering bipartisan commitment across numerous presidencies. Today, Colombia is working through the difficulties of implementing its peace agreement. Given the complexities of the accord and the ongoing problems faced in different geographic regions of the country, it is essential for the U.S. to remain engaged so that we can help Colombia win the peace. To that end,

Question 16. What priorities would you have for engaging Colombia?

Answer. If I am confirmed, my main priority in Colombia would be addressing the production of coca, as the flow of cocaine into the United States is an acute threat to our national security. While the production of coca might, at times, increase or decrease for many reasons, I believe the alternative-development investments made by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) are a key piece of an ongoing interagency effort. However, alternative development will not succeed if conducted in a vacuum; we simultaneously need improvements in the governance of previously ungoverned spaces. Accordingly, working to improve the efficacy of local governments, and the capacity of local civil society to promote citizen-responsive governance, would be another priority. Finally, Colombia is suffering severely because of the crisis in neighboring Venezuela, as it is graciously hosting over a million refugees. I am not optimistic that the Venezuela crisis will end any time soon, as the Maduro regime has shown little sign that it is willing to, or capable of, undertaking the reforms and other actions necessary to improve the lives of the people of Venezuela. As such, if confirmed, I would seek a clearer understanding of Colombia’s immediate needs in communities most affected by the crisis. It is clear we will only succeed in these areas if we do our work in close collaboration with the Government of Colombia. I appreciate the efforts that USAID Administrator Mark Green has undertaken to date to engage with the administration of President Duque, and, if confirmed, I would commit to building on these ties.

Question 17. In a world of limited resources and competing priorities, how would you support peace accord implementation?

Answer. The programs in Colombia funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) have been working to address the main drivers of the 50-year conflict, and are currently supporting four pillars of the implementation of the peace accord: Promoting equitable and sustainable rural development, ending the conflict, addressing illicit drugs, and supporting the victims of the conflict. While we all hope that the accords signed in 2016 can maintain the peace, successful implementation clearly brings its own challenges. I know USAID will continue to work to promote alternative development so farmers have a pathway to licit economic self-sufficiency. But alternative development on its own is not a panacea, and so I believe USAID will need to continue to work with interagency partners—including the U.S. Department of State and the Drug Enforcement Administration within the U.S. Department of Justice—to address the interlocking set of issues that allow coca and transnational criminal organizations to operate. Partnership with the private sector is also critical, as local producers need to be connected with regional, national, and international markets. If confirmed, I would look forward to engaging with the private sector to see how best we can continue these efforts. Additionally, improving citizen-responsive governance in rural areas that have lacked state presence will remain critical, so that transnational criminal organizations do not have the space in which to operate. More specifically, I believe this entails working to increase the resources available at the local level for public investment, and strengthening local government’s capabilities to deliver services and perform other necessary functions.

Question 18. In a world of limited resources and competing priorities, how would you ensure that USAID has sufficient resources to carry out its important mission?

Answer. I am fully cognizant that the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has limited resources, which underlies my commitment to be a good steward of the taxpayer resources Congress generously provides the Agency. I view this as a sacred trust, and so I would always be working with the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean within USAID, the Agency’s leadership, and the U.S. Government interagency to make sure USAID’s priorities are sound and the Agency has the appropriate resources. I am concerned that if the situation in Venezuela continues to worsen—which I believe it will—that the burden on neighboring countries, in particular Colombia, will continue to grow. However, I think it is critical that USAID not lose its focus on the development needs of Colombia related to reducing the production of coca and countering the influence of transnational criminal organizations, while still supporting the Government of Colombia and the communities that are hosting Venezuelan migrants. As this situation is fluid, I would expect regular updates from USAID’s staff who are on the ground to ensure the Agency’s efforts focus in the places they are most needed. If confirmed, I would be a vocal advocate within the administration’s budget process for sufficient resources to address all of these challenges.

Question 19. Over the last two decades, waves of violence in Colombia have targeted human rights defenders, journalists, labor leaders, and most recently social... activists and community leaders. How can USAID best support these important leaders in Colombia?

Answer. Support for human rights, including those who dedicate their lives to advancing and defending such rights for others, is a critical component of the work of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). I am very concerned by the targeting of human-rights defenders, community leaders, and other members of Colombian civil society, particularly in rural areas. USAID has been working to support those organizations and individuals by investigating abuses and strengthening the ability of citizens to voice their complaints and concerns. The Venezuela crisis has added an additional dynamic to this challenge, and I understand USAID has provided new assistance to support community defenders, and to assist victims of human-rights violations along the Colombia-Venezuela border. I understand the Office of the Attorney General of the Government of Colombia and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights track statistics on attacks on human-rights defenders; if confirmed, I would closely study these data, and work with the USAID Mission in Colombia and the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean in Washington to see how the Agency's programs can respond best to these troubling cases.

Democracy

Question 20. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My work as a staffer in office of Representative Lincoln Diaz-Balart afforded me the opportunity to play a role in the passage of the LIBERTAD Act and other Congressional actions that helped further the causes of democracy and human rights. I believe the passage of legislation such as the LIBERTAD Act and other actions that the Congress can take are critical ways both to demonstrate to civil society and the people of countries under repression that the United States stands with them, and to promote policies that can aid them in their efforts. Most recently, in the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, I have lead the team that has been managing the “Blue Campaign” to bring awareness to the scourge of human trafficking. The “Blue Campaign” has helped increase both the knowledge and recognition of the signs of human trafficking. This has had the direct impact of lessening opportunities for this horrific practice to go unnoticed, or unpunished. If confirmed, I would be committed to promoting human rights and democracy in Latin America and the Caribbean because democracy underpins all of USAID's work.

Question 21. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Latin America? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. I believe the greatest challenge to democracy and democratic development around the globe is the lack of accountability. The greatest impediments to accountability are corruption and impunity. I firmly believe that sunlight is the greatest disinfectant. Believing this, while others see the increase in prosecutions for corruption in the Western Hemisphere and worldwide as a negative development, I do not think this is necessarily the case. I think this trend is a positive development in that actions that have hitherto gone unnoticed are coming into the light of day, and individuals who once could count upon darkness to mask their actions are now being exposed and held accountable.

Question 22. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Latin America? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I would hope to enable the people in Latin America and the Caribbean to demand accountable, effective, citizen-responsive governance by supporting them directly, by working with like-minded Ministries and other governmental institutions to improve their capacity to govern justly and democratically, and by supporting those organizations and institutions that demonstrate their commitment to those ideas. Unfortunately, we see too much endemic corruption, economic mismanagement, and political repression in countries such as Venezuela and Nicaragua, which is driving regional instability. I believe the advent of modern technology to capture and share information widely is something we should welcome and expand, and, if confirmed, I would look into how our programs can incorporate use of such technology better. These are the tools for independent journalists and others to let individuals know how the wicked seek to take advantage of them and rob them of their human rights and ability to self-govern.
I share the concerns you expressed at my nomination hearing, that the region is seeing a tragic backsliding in democracy and citizen-responsive governance. This goes beyond the overt cases of repression in countries such as Cuba, Nicaragua, and Venezuela, to undemocratic actions undertaken by other governments in the region.

I am deeply concerned by corruption and the culture of impunity that have contributed to this backsliding. Beyond this, I am concerned by the lack of capacity on the part of the governmental institutions that must be stewards of the trust and resources of a country’s citizens. If confirmed, I would look forward to seeing how the programs of the U.S. Agency for International Development in the region can address these, and other, challenges in the most-effective way possible.

Question 23. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I would be committed to using U.S. Government resources available to implement the Mission Statement of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), which includes an explicit commitment to strengthening citizen-responsive, democratic governance abroad. I admire the effort and assistance that USAID Administrator Mark Green has marshalled to support democracy and governance in Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC). The LAC Bureau at USAID has been working to address the core components of democracy and citizen-responsive governance throughout the region: if confirmed, I would continue these important efforts. In particular, in light of the crises caused by oppression in countries such as Venezuela, Cuba, and Nicaragua, I would prioritize ensuring that USAID’s assistance remain a critical lifeline to civil society. Speaking at the Center for Strategic and International Studies Administrator Mark Green correctly stated that “[W]e refuse to be spectators.” If confirmed, I would join him in this pledge.

Question 24. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in the region? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I would commit to meeting with members of civil society and human-rights organizations both in Washington, D.C., and during my travels to Latin America and the Caribbean. If confirmed, it would be my honor to stand alongside civil society, human-rights leaders, and those who are fighting for the rule of law, not only by meeting with them, but also by using all other tools at my disposal to support them. While we all understandably focus on high-profile instances in which some governments seek to eliminate civil society outright, I agree that it is critical that we recognize that some governments employ far-more subtle tools to restrict civil society. Unfortunately, we are too familiar with the tactics that some governments in Latin America and the Caribbean employ to restrict, or outright eliminate, civil society. Whether it is monitoring the human-rights situation in Colombia to contribute to protecting targeted human-rights defenders, working with civil society to seek to improve the effectiveness of justiciable systems in Central America to be more-responsive to the needs of their citizens, or providing a rapid-assistance grant to the groups on the front lines of the Nicaragua crisis this year, I believe the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) can play a role in supporting these groups and their efforts. If confirmed, I would plan to examine USAID’s current programs to look for areas in which additional support could be needed because of the crises in the Hemisphere. In addition, I believe the position for which the President has nominated me can help give voice to civil society and organizations under threat, which can, in and of itself, support them in their efforts to bring attention to the need to combat malign influences that seek to stymie their critical work.

Question 25. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I would commit to meeting with democratically oriented political figures and parties, both in Washington, D.C., and during my travel abroad.

I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has been working on political competition in the region for some time. However, it is clear that challenges remain. Even in countries that have experienced more-genuine political competition, a controversial election, such as that in Honduras in 2017, can quickly undermine any progress, as it can undermine the people’s trust in the system, which can lead to violence or migration. I believe that USAID’s assistance to encourage political competition can be successful if we can cultivate partners who respect the rule of law and other basic tenets of citizen-responsive governance. True partners in this respect do not engage in any acts of corruption. There are some areas of promise in the region. For example, in Ecuador, I am heartened by the actions of the Moreno administration, and I understand USAID has been working to help ensure continued increased transparency and open political participation there. If I am confirmed, and if this positive trajectory continues, I would look forward to learning more about these efforts, continuing the partnership, and examining how to replicate these efforts elsewhere in the region. Finally, if confirmed, I would certainly advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth within political parties.

Question 26. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Latin American countries on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in the region?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I would actively support freedom of the press with whatever means at my disposal, including through the programs in Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID). I also would commit to meeting regularly with independent, local media when traveling abroad. It is my view that the occupant of the position to which the President has nominated me has a moral responsibility to speak to the people of the LAC region, and to understand their concerns and views about their countries’ development. I believe this necessitates regular engagement with independent, local press. While there are many reasons that I might travel in this position, if confirmed, one such reason would be to engage with the press for this purpose. I am also cognizant that some countries to which it might be difficult for me to travel if I am confirmed, and often it is in those countries in which independent media is especially under attack. Accordingly, I would look forward to hosting them and meeting with them when they are able to travel to the United States, or through virtual means.

Question 27. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the region?

Answer. Yes. I believe the unrestricted flow of accurate information, free of political propaganda, is fundamental to a strong civil society and a stable, democratic nation. Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) certainly faces a range of challenges to independent media, which range from a lack of capacity to intentional and blatant efforts to undermine it, including through disinformation or the direct targeting of independent media outlets. I am heartened by the efforts to date by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) to address this challenge in even the most-difficult of environments, including the Agency’s additional assistance in response to the crisis in Nicaragua, which has included funding for independent media, which I hope can continue to counter the disinformation and propaganda of the Ortega regime.

In addition, I am concerned by increased activity in the LAC region by malign external actors, including the People’s Republic of China. If confirmed, I would ask USAID’s Missions in the region to be aware of any instances in which external actors are spreading disinformation to further their own objectives, as opposed to being true partners with the nations of the LAC region to advance their development.

Question 28. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Latin American countries on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. I support the rights of workers to organize. If confirmed, I would pledge to work with legitimate organizations that are working to defend the rights of workers throughout Latin America and the Caribbean.

Question 29. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in the region, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer (LGBTQ) people face in Latin America? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTQ people in the region?

Answer. Yes. Administrator Mark Green has been clear that inclusion is one of the core values of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), and that non-discrimination toward beneficiaries is a basic principle of development. I believe all people—regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity—are born with equal rights we should defend and preserve. I believe this is an integral aspect of USAID's mission to promote and demonstrate democratic values abroad. If confirmed, I would do all that I can to ensure USAID's assistance supports the people of Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) realize their human rights. While I believe this is a moral issue, I believe it is not just a moral issue. For example, I believe there are many reasons that individuals in the Northern Triangle of Central America choose to undertake the dangerous journey northwards. This can include sexual or gender-based violence, including violence directed at LGBTQ individuals or human-rights advocates who support them. I understand USAID is currently undertaking a substantial investment in the region to support civil-society organizations and human-rights defenders, including for members of the LGBTQ community, and I would look forward to learning more about the results of these efforts, and building upon them as appropriate.

Climate Change

Question 30. Do you believe that climate change is happening as a result of anthropogenic carbon emissions into the atmosphere?

Answer. I believe climate change is taking place. While I do not personally have the scientific knowledge to determine the cause, I do understand there is a broad-based scientific consensus that emissions of carbon are a large part of the cause.

Question 31. Do you believe that climate change is a threat to food security and food production and the abundance of water resources in countries across Latin America and the Caribbean?

Answer. Yes.

Question 32. According to NASA researchers, within the last decade Bolivia's Second largest lake, Lake Poopo, has dried up. What do you believe caused the (relatively) sudden disappearance of this centuries old lake happened due to natural variations in the Earth climate?

Answer. While I am not familiar with the specifics of Lake Poopo, I understand analysts see climate change as a likely cause of the current status of the lake, as is diversion of water for mining and other purposes. Such ecological changes can have devastating impacts on local communities. While the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is not currently working in Bolivia, I understand the Agency is working on biodiversity and conservation efforts in other countries in the region, including Brazil. If confirmed, I would look forward to examining the lessons USAID has learned to date from this work to see how we can assist such affected communities better.

China

Question 33. What is the U.S. strategy for combating China’s influence in Latin America and the Caribbean?

Answer. Administrator Mark Green of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has spoken eloquently about the dangers of the “authoritarian approach” to foreign assistance. In my view USAID’s development approach in Latin America and the Caribbean contrasts greatly with that of other competing powers, and offers a clear alternative to our partner countries. USAID seeks to promote transformational change; help countries move away from dependence and toward self-reliance; promote transparency, strong and accountable institutions, and market-based, enterprise-led development. If confirmed, I would not shy away from the magnitude of this challenge, and would always look for ways to demonstrate better why partnership with USAID and the United States is in the best interest of the countries of the region.

Question 34. When USAID discusses its “clear choice” initiative in Latin America and the Caribbean what “choices” are in fact being given?

Answer. At its most basic level, I believe the clear choice of America’s development assistance and so-called development assistance from the People’s Republic of China is that ours is a model of partnership, while China’s is one of dependency. In general, support from the U.S. Agency for International Development to these countries is in the form of sustainable projects, developed collaboratively, intended to promote economic prosperity and citizen-responsive governance—all towards the greater end of helping these countries in their efforts to become more self-reliant. China’s approach with these countries is to provide loans on unfair terms, in a manner that cannot fairly be called “development,” and that undermines self-reliance.
Question 35. What concrete examples, or planned projects, can you give that demonstrate either actual, or anticipated, success of the Clear Choice initiative in Latin American and the Caribbean?

Answer. While I have not received a full briefing on the Clear Choice Initiative of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), I believe efforts to support countries counter malign external influence could take many forms. I believe a part of the strategy of the People’s Republic of China in Latin America and the Caribbean is to stymie or reverse transparency and governmental reforms, and that, as a result USAID’s programs should continue to encourage such reforms—both by assisting those governments that are willing to undertake them, and by working with civil society so citizens are in a position to demand them. The more transparent these governments are, the more difficult it will be for China, other malign actors, or public officials who act in bad faith to get away with actions that undermine the well-being of these countries and the trust of the people. As a key part of China’s approach has been to cultivate unsustainable debt for their so-called partners, I believe USAID’s efforts that support appropriate fiscal management and domestic resource-mobilization provide a clear alternative, one that will better serve the economic needs and the Journey to Self-Reliance of countries in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Energy

Question 36. Do you believe it is in the best interest of the United States, and critical to countries’ “journey to self-reliance” for the U.S. to help countries develop domestic energy production?

Answer. Yes.

Question 37. Understanding that part of the U.S.’s Joint Strategic Plan is to enhance export markets for U.S. fossil fuels (like natural gas), how does helping developing countries build power generation capacity that relies on imported fuels improve a country’s “self-reliance”?

Answer. Energy is certainly part of a countries’ development journey. While I do not have personal expertise on energy issues, I understand the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) within the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) does have in-house expertise on energy as a part of its Office of Regional Sustainable Development, and that USAID more broadly has energy expertise from its work in other regions. Energy-security is a part of the President’s National Security Strategy and the “Prosperity Pillar” of the U.S. Strategy for Central America, and I do believe that functioning energy grids, access to affordable energy, and creating investment opportunity for U.S. businesses must be our goals as we support countries throughout the LAC region. If confirmed, I would work with USAID’s experts to improve my personal understanding of the energy challenges facing countries throughout the LAC region and determine where programs can support these countries in reaching this goal.

Food Security

Question 38. What policies do you believe are necessary to improve the food security of Central America’s rural and underserved populations?

Answer. Food-insecurity is one of the drivers of migration from Central America, and can be a particularly difficult development challenge, as it can entail volatility of food prices and a lack of political institutional capacity to undertake necessary reforms. I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is currently addressing this through the Feed the Future Initiative, specifically in Guatemala and Honduras, where food security is a particularly acute development challenge. It is critical that the Governments of these countries examine and address the specific needs in key geographic areas—such as the Western Highlands in Guatemala and the “Dry Corridor” in Honduras. I understand that, in light of the importance of policy decisions in shaping the opportunities for improved food security in the region, USAID is engaging the Governments of Guatemala and Honduras to encourage improved policies and investment in a number of areas, such as nutrition, food safety, agricultural-extension services, and the management of water resources, among others.

Question 39. What role is food insecurity playing in countries of the Northern Triangle in terms of driving poverty and migration in the region?

Answer. While it is clear that there are many root causes of migration within, and from, Central America, food-insecurity certainly counts among them. It is ultimately in the interest of the United States that the people of Central America remain healthy and prosperous in their home countries, and that goal is impossible without food security. For this reason, if confirmed, I would look forward to learning more about the current and past efforts of the U.S. Agency for International Development to address food security, including internal and external evaluations of this work, and to integrating lessons-learned into the Agency's current and future programming.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO JOHN BARTA BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Human Rights

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. My work as a staffer in the Office of Representative Lincoln Díaz-Balart afforded me the opportunity to play a role in the passage of the LIBERTAD Act and other Congressional actions that helped further the causes of democracy and human rights. I believe the passage of legislation such as the LIBERTAD Act and other actions the Congress can take are critical ways both to demonstrate to civil society and the people of countries under repression that the United States stands with them, and to promote policies that can aid them in their efforts. Most recently, at the U.S. Department of Homeland Security, I have lead the team that is managing the “Blue Campaign” to bring awareness to the scourge of human trafficking. The “Blue Campaign” has helped increase both the knowledge and recognition of the signs of human trafficking, which has had the direct impact of lessening opportunities for this horrific practice to go unnoticed, or unpunished. If confirmed, I would be committed to promoting human rights and democracy in Latin America and the Caribbean, because democracy underpins all of work of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Diversity

Question 2. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups at USAID?

Answer. As a manager, I have always taken great pride in empowering my team. In exercising this approach, I make no distinction between members of my team for reasons of race, age, sex, color, or creed. I do strongly believe that a diverse workforce makes a workplace stronger and more creative, which is critical as we seek innovative solutions to the development challenges that the region faces. This has always been my philosophy, and I am proud to have a tangible record of doing just this.

Question 3. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at USAID are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. I believe a culture of inclusivity and diversity starts at the top, and, if confirmed, I would hold anyone who reports to me, including those who supervise others, to a high standard on many fronts, including by ensuring they are fostering an environment that is open, inclusive, and diverse. Straying from this course is not something I would tolerate, if confirmed.

Conflicts of Interest

Question 4. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the USAID Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. Yes.

Question 5. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. Yes.

Question 6. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in any country abroad?

Answer. No.
Western Hemisphere Issues

Efforts to limit irregular migration from Central America's Northern Triangle will be useless unless they target the root causes of instability in those countries.

Question 7. If confirmed, how would you address the governance, human rights, economic, and security challenges that force Central Americans in Honduras, El Salvador, and Guatemala to flee home?

Answer. I could not agree more that it is crucial that we focus our attention and efforts on targeting the root causes of migration in the countries of Central America. People make the decision to migrate for a variety of factors, and I believe that if U.S. Government programs are to succeed in addressing migration, we must understand what drives different people to make this decision. I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has been collecting data to do this, and if confirmed, I would do all I can to ensure the appropriate assistance reaches those individuals and communities who need it most. I also believe that these efforts will only succeed if the countries of the Northern Triangle continue to put resources towards their own development needs, as they have done under the Alliance for Prosperity. Finally, it is clear that corruption can undermine this entire effort, as citizens who have no faith in their government's ability to use public resources for public good, instead of their own gain, will be less likely to remain in their home communities. Accordingly, USAID programs that promote citizen-responsive governance are key to addressing the problem of illegal migration.

The deteriorating situation in Venezuela is producing both a humanitarian, as well as a human rights, crisis. If confirmed:

Question 8. Would USAID work to provide humanitarian assistance in Venezuela, as well as for those leaving the country? I understand that to date the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has provided over $140 million in humanitarian and development assistance for Venezuelans who have fled the repression and chaos in their country, as well as the communities in neighboring countries that are hosting them. Even if Maduro were to reverse his previous, public repudiations of U.S. assistance, it is clear that corruption can undermine this entire effort, as citizens who have no faith in their government's ability to use public resources for public good, instead of their own gain, will be less likely to remain in their home communities. Accordingly, USAID programs that promote citizen-responsive governance are key to addressing the problem of illegal migration.

Question 9. How would USAID support the courageous work of remaining democratic actors in Venezuela, including those in the democratically elected national assembly?

Answer. I admire the efforts the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has undertaken to date to support what remains of democratic civil society in Venezuela, which I understand totaled $9 million in Fiscal Year 2017. I understand this work has focused on defending human rights; strengthening civil society, including to prepare is to be better-positioned to provide information to the international community on the humanitarian situation within Venezuela; partnering with the democratically elected National Assembly on improving its legislative effectiveness, even in the face of the unconstitutional actions taken by Maduro; supporting independent media; and promoting transparent electoral processes. If confirmed, I would look forward to working with the interagency and the Congress to build upon these efforts.

Colombia’s historic 2016 accords gives the nation an unprecedented opportunity to consolidate peace in the country and address many of the development challenges at the root of the decades old conflict.

Question 10. If confirmed, how would USAID work to support the Colombian Government in the implementation of the development stipulations and related aspects of the accord?
Answer. The peace accords are bringing to an end an almost-unprecedented 52-year conflict, which left approximately 220,000 dead, and displaced approximately five million people. Large amounts of the country have never been under the jurisdiction of the Government of Colombia, which leave this land and its inhabitants open to coercion at the hand of transnational criminal organizations. The programs in Colombia funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) have long been working to address the main drivers of the 50-year conflict, and are currently supporting four pillars of the implementation of the peace accord: Promoting equitable and sustainable rural development, ending the conflict, addressing illicit drugs, and supporting the victims of the conflict. While we all hope that the accord signed in 2016 can maintain the peace, successful implementation clearly brings its own challenges. Accordingly, I understand USAID will continue to work to promote alternative development so farmers have a pathway to licit economic growth. But alternative development on its own is not a panacea, and so USAID will need to continue to work with our interagency partners—including the U.S. Department of State and the Drug Enforcement Administration within the U.S. Department of Justice—to address the interlocking set of issues that allow coca-producers and transnational criminal organizations to operate. Partnership with the private sector is also critical, as local producers need to be connected with regional, national, and international markets. If confirmed, I would look forward to engaging with the private sector to see how we could continue these efforts. Additionally, improving citizen-responsive governance in rural areas that have lacked state presence will remain critical, so transnational criminal organizations do not have the space in which to operate. More specifically, I believe this entails working to increase the resources available at the local level for public investment, and strengthening local government’s capabilities to deliver services and perform other basic necessary functions.

The crisis in Nicaragua is concerning and tragic. We are also hearing a renewed call for democratic reforms in the country that have not been seen at this level for years.

Question 11. If confirmed, how would you work to support democratic actors and their calls for reform in the country?

Answer. Since April 2018, the Nicaraguan regime again reminded the world that it does not have the best interests of the people of Nicaragua at heart. I understand that, in response to the events in Nicaragua since April 2018, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is providing emergency assistance to independent journalists and media outlets, as well as other civil-society actors, including human-rights defenders. Such support will remain critical, as the Ortega regime continues to oppress its own people. If confirmed, I would work to ensure USAID continues to provide the support to the people of Nicaragua as they voice their desire for freedom and their civil rights. This could include support to independent media, human-rights defenders, and the organizations that continue to constitute civil society, despite the efforts of the Ortega regime. If confirmed, I would look forward to working with the interagency, and with the Congress, to continue and build upon this support.

The administration is imposing a range of restrictions on foreign assistance to several countries in the hemisphere. For example, the decision not to issue a waiver for several countries in the hemisphere under the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) has the potential to greatly affect USAID’s work. I understand the importance of these restrictions, but I am concerned that if not properly implemented these restrictions could hurt our ability to bring about positive changes, particularly in the areas of democracy, human rights, health, and education.

Question 12 If confirmed, how would USAID work to continue its invaluable programming in these areas in places like Venezuela where the administration is continually tightening restrictions?

Answer. I understand the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) does have programming in Venezuela, which is listed in Tier 3 of the 2018 Trafficking in Persons Report produced by the U.S. Department of State.

As you know, the governments of the countries listed in Tier 3 did not undertake an effort to meet even minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking in persons during the past year. I understand the administration continues to work on implementation of the November 29 Presidential Determination with Respect to the Efforts of Foreign Governments Regarding Trafficking in Persons. But I have not been a part of deliberations on this matter to date.

Unfortunately, trafficking-in-persons is only one of the many areas in which the Government of Venezuela has failed to address the needs of its people. If confirmed,
I would make it a priority to work to advance the democratic aspirations of the Venezuela people, and to support them in their human rights effort.

I am concerned about continued democratic backsliding in the region, along with alarming reports of persecution of human rights defenders, journalists, and ethnic minorities throughout the hemisphere.

Question 13. If confirmed, how would adjust and enhance USAID efforts to counter these concerning trends?

Answer. I share your concern about this backsliding. As observed during my confirmation hearing on December 4, this backsliding can take many forms, and ranges from the outright collapse of governance—and the economy—in Venezuela to more nuanced efforts to undermine civil society, or to promote a culture of impunity by other governments in the region. Part of the Mission Statement of the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) is to “promote and demonstrate democratic values.” I believe the greatest challenge to democratic development in the world is a lack of accountability, and if confirmed, I would make finding ways to advance accountability my top priority. I believe the advent of modern technology to capture and share information widely is something we should welcome and expand. If confirmed, I would look forward to drawing on the expertise of the democracy and governance experts in the Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Center for Democracy, Human Rights, and Governance in the Bureau for Democracy, Conflict, and Humanitarian Assistance within USAID.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SARAH-ANN LYNCH BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. What is your assessment of the dispute between Guyana and Venezuela? To your knowledge, are there any other U.S. interests that could be affected by the Venezuelan Government’s aggressive tactics?

Answer. The United States supports the definitive resolution of the Venezuela-Guyana border controversy. The United States has called on all parties to respect the 1899 arbitration decision unless and until a competent legal body rules or both parties agree otherwise. While there are no indications that Venezuela intends to use force to assert its claims, resolution of the controversy will improve regional security and rule of law. If confirmed, I am committed to addressing this issue.

Question 2. How is Guyana being affected by Venezuela’s humanitarian crisis? What is the United States’ role with regard to Venezuelan migrants in the region, including in Guyana?

Answer. The Guyanese Government reports approximately 2,800 Venezuelans are resident in Guyana and the United Nations estimates as many as 15,000 Venezuelans reside in Guyana. The number of Venezuelans in Guyana rises as Venezuela’s economic and political crisis further deteriorates.

Since FY 2017, the United States has provided nearly $97 million across the region in life-saving humanitarian assistance for Venezuelans who have fled their country, including shelter for the most vulnerable, safe drinking water and hygiene supplies, protection from violence and exploitation, and work and education opportunities, in coordination with other humanitarian organizations and relevant government authorities. Of that humanitarian assistance, the State Department’s Bureau of Population, Refugees and Migration provided nearly $48 million, including $500,000 to UNICEF to provide education and child protection assistance for Venezuelans in Guyana.

Question 3. If confirmed, what role do you think the U.S. Embassy can play as U.S. businesses participate in Guyana’s discovery, exploration, and production efforts?

Answer. The discovery of oil, with production coming online in early 2020, will transform Guyana’s economy, which is poised to become one of the top 20 oil producers in the world.

If confirmed, I will commit the U.S. Embassy in Georgetown to supporting our U.S.-Caribbean 2020 strategy, a regional initiative focused on enhancing engagement with our Caribbean neighbors on energy, security, prosperity, health and education. I will also commit to supporting the American Chamber of Commerce as a resource for U.S. businesses participating in the discovery, exploration, and production of petroleum in Guyana. The U.S. Government was instrumental in establishing the American Chamber of Commerce in Guyana in 2018 in light of growing U.S. commercial interest in the country.
The U.S. Embassy is helping Guyana prepare for oil coming online within the rubric of the country's Green State Development Strategy, which aims to use the majority of the oil for export and use renewable sources of energy for domestic power and consumption. The U.S. Government has provided technical assistance to Guyana to create stable and transparent oversight of oil and gas projects that should bring economic growth. The U.S. Government has also assisted Guyana with becoming a member of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI), to ensure the country manages its resource wealth responsibly and transparently.

Question 4. How can the U.S. support Guyana in its efforts to ensure that new potential revenues are used productively and contribute to inclusive economic growth in the country?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to working closely with both the Guyanese Government and civic institutions to strengthen Guyana's ability to manage its resources responsibly. The U.S. Government has supported Guyana joining the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative to ensure the country manages its resource wealth responsibly and transparently. The U.S. Government has shared our expertise to assist in the promulgation of an effective and transparent oil regulatory and legal regime. We have encouraged the establishment of a sovereign wealth fund that is independent, transparent, inviolable, and non-partisan. The U.S. Government has also provided technical assistance to Guyana in the areas of human resource management and regulatory structures.

Question 5. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As the Senior Deputy Assistant Administrator for USAID's Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) and a career Foreign Service Officer, I have implemented and administered a large number of programs that have sought to build democratic institutions, support freedom of the press and good governance, and promote defense of human rights. These programs and activities have run the gamut from administration of justice/rule of law, to election monitoring, to civil liberties awareness trainings. Results of these efforts include the creation of a protection mechanism for journalists in Mexico, increased participation of marginalized populations (Afro-Colombians, indigenous populations, and women) in Colombia's peace efforts, and support to independent Venezuelan media outlets and civil society to shine the spotlight on corruption and gaps in governance in Venezuela. If confirmed, my commitment to supporting democracy and human rights around the world will continue to be steadfast and unwavering.

Question 6. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or democratic development in Guyana? These challenges might include obstacles to participatory and accountable governance and institutions, rule of law, authentic political competition, civil society, human rights and press freedom. Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. The Guyanese people demonstrated their commitment to democracy in May 2015, when a coalition of five parties narrowly won national elections, replacing the Indo-Guyanese-dominated People's Progressive Party Civic, which had governed the country since 1992.

One of the challenges to democracy or democratic development in Guyana is corruption. Transparency International ranks Guyana 91 out of 180 for perceptions of corruption, which saps economic growth, hinders development, destabilizes governments, and undermines democracy. Guyanese law protects freedom of expression and freedom of the press, which are guaranteed by the country's constitution. Penalties for defamation are found in both civil and criminal law, but public officials more commonly utilize civil defamation suits to stifle criticism in the media. While such suits are frequently unsuccessful, the threat of legal liability can be enough to silence journalists. Although physical harassment is rare or absent, government officials often refuse to give information to journalists affiliated with opposition media and instead limit their media contacts to state television outlets.

Question 7. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democracy in Guyana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to sustained engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Guyana, including political parties, human rights activists, religious groups, and watchdog organizations. I will champion existing embassy programs designed to foster democracy and human rights. I will also engage directly Guyana enjoys a strong and stable democracy but needs to take action to address corruption in sectors of the government and society. If confirmed, I will continue to support U.S. training to military and law enforcement personnel, prosecutors, government employees, and policymakers to build capacity and bolster democratic institutions in Guyana and the region. If confirmed, I will push back on government pressure on journalists that leads to self-censorship. I will advocate for freedom of the press, including passage of freedom of information legislation, as a key component of democratic governance. I will encourage the press to foster active debate, increase investigative reporting, and serve as a forum to express different points of view, particularly on behalf of those who are marginalized in society.

Question 8. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. If confirmed, I will use available U.S. Government assistance to preserve and expand democratic practice and governance standards, including increasing the transparency, capacity, and citizen accountability of Guyana's Government during a potential period of economic transformation. My focus will be on the targeted and creative use of limited assistance resources to achieve these policy goals. I commit to working closely with all of our partners in Guyana, and all relevant agencies of the U.S. Government, to ensure every dollar of U.S. assistance is used wisely and in accordance with our human rights and democracy goals in the region.

Question 9. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society in Guyana? What steps will you take to pro-actively address efforts to restrict or penalize NGOs and civil society via legal or regulatory measures?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to sustained engagement with a broad spectrum of civil society in Guyana, including human rights activists and religious groups. I will ensure the Department continues to vet thoroughly all individuals and units nominated to participate in U.S.-funded security assistance activities, in accordance with the Leahy law. If there are findings of credible information regarding gross violations of human rights, I will take the necessary steps in accordance with the law and Department policy to ensure those implicated do not participate in U.S.-funded assistance.

If confirmed, I will engage with the Government to advocate for the continued open environment for NGOs and civil society groups to operate without unnecessary legal or regulatory restrictions. To the extent possible, I will urge that the perpetrators of gross violations of human rights be held accountable.

Question 10. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. If confirmed, I will commit to meet with all democratically oriented Guyanese political opposition figures and parties. In my interactions with Guyanese officials, I will emphasize the importance of a free, open, and fair political system as the basis to modern democracy. If confirmed, I will also advocate for the inclusion of underrepresented and historically marginalized groups, including women, minorities, and youth, in political parties.

Question 11. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Guyana on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press in Guyana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will support freedom of the press in Guyana as an essential pillar of democracy. I will commit to advocating for the rights of journalists in the print, broadcast, and digital space. Guyana has well-developed print and broadcast media and, if confirmed, I will fully support the U.S. embassy’s efforts to preserve and strengthen the capacity of journalists on all of these platforms, including training in investigative skills, transparency, accountability in reporting, and digital security. I will work closely with interagency colleagues and the international community to broaden resources for start-up outlets and established media organizations. If confirmed, I look forward to meeting regularly with independent and local press in Guyana to underscore my commitment to a free and well-informed press.
Question 12. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. The Department of State is concerned by any efforts to disseminate disinformation and anti-U.S. propaganda in Guyana and the region. One of the best defenses against disinformation is a free and transparent news media environment. If confirmed, I, along with my Embassy team, will work to promote accurate messages about the United States and other nations in the pursuit of freedom, prosperity, and security in the Western Hemisphere. If confirmed, I would work to monitor and counter any such efforts in Guyana, including by encouraging digital media literacy, independent journalism, and supporting civic-tech groups and other local stakeholders to inform the public and stem the malign spread of disinformation.

Question 13. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Guyana on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, my Embassy team and I will actively engage with Guyana on the right of Guyanese labor groups, including independent trade unions, to organize within Guyanese law.

Question 14. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Guyana, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity? What challenges do the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex (LGBTI) people face in Guyana? What specifically will you commit to do to help LGBTI people in Guyana?

Answer. Governments have an obligation to protect, respect, and uphold the dignity and fundamental freedoms of all people—including LGBTI persons. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. Advancing universal human rights is in our national interest, and as Secretary Pompeo has said, LGBTI persons deserve the same respect, freedoms, and protections as everyone else. LGBTI conduct is criminalized in Guyana, and LGBTI persons face widespread discrimination in education, employment, and health care. If confirmed, my country team and I would consult closely with LGBTI civil society and human rights defenders on how best to support them in their advocacy, including through capacity building programs. I would not shy away from speaking out publicly and privately in support of the rights of all. If confirmed, I will continue to urge the Guyanese Government to uphold and respect international human rights obligations and commitments.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO SARAH-ANN LYNCH BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to promote human rights and democracy? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. As the Senior Deputy Assistant Administrator for USAID's Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) and a career Foreign Service Officer, I have implemented and administered a large number of programs that have sought to build democratic institutions, support freedom of the press and good governance, and promote defense of human rights. These programs and activities have run the gamut from administration of justice/rule of law, to election monitoring to, civil liberties awareness trainings. Results of these efforts include the creation of a protection mechanism for journalists in Mexico, increased participation of marginalized populations (Afro-Colombians, indigenous populations, and women) in Colombia’s peace efforts, and support to independent Venezuelan media outlets and civil society to shine the spotlight on corruption and gaps in governance in Venezuela. If confirmed, my commitment to supporting democracy and human rights around the world will continue to be steadfast and unwavering.

Question 2. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Guyana? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Guyana? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. The most pressing human rights issues in Guyana include harsh and potentially life-threatening prison conditions and laws that criminalize same-sex sexual activity, although they are not generally enforced. Additionally, Guyana continues to see human trafficking and some of the worst forms of child labor, including in mining and in commercial sexual exploitation. Law enforcement agencies have insufficient funding and capacity to consistently enforce laws related to human trafficking and child labor, including its worst forms, and existing laws do not fully prohibit using children in certain forms of child labor. Even when perpetrators are convicted, they have received light sentences that are not commensurate with the seriousness of the crime.

If confirmed, I would champion existing embassy and U.S. Government programs designed to address these and other human rights issues. I will also use my platform as Ambassador to deliver public and private messages to the Guyanese people and the country's leadership to make clear the United States' expectations with regard to human rights protections as well as the measures we intend to take to address our concerns.

Question 3. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Guyana in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. Guyana's challenge is to use its limited resources to promote respect for the rule of law while respecting human rights in a high-crime environment. Law enforcement agencies lack funds and capacity to enforce child labor laws, and the laws that exist do not fully prohibit child labor.

If confirmed, I will work with my embassy staff to augment existing training programs for Guyanese justice-sector officials, while ensuring that Leahy vetting is properly conducted where applicable. I would champion existing embassy and U.S. Government programs designed to promote human rights in Guyana.

Question 4. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Guyana? If confirmed, what steps will you take to proactively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. If confirmed, I will prioritize support for human rights and civil society, and commit to meeting with non-governmental and other organizations in the United States and Guyana to demonstrate my support.

Implementation of the Leahy Law serves the legal and policy goal of ensuring that the United States does not provide foreign assistance to individuals or units credibly implicated in gross human rights violations. If confirmed, I would work to ensure that my team is fully informed of and committed to all procedures required to implement the Leahy Law. I will engage with colleagues in Washington and throughout the interagency to ensure thorough implementation.

Question 5. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Guyana to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Guyana?

Answer. The State Department's 2017 Human Rights Report states there were no political prisoners or detainees in Guyana in 2017. If confirmed, however, I will work actively with the embassy team to address any cases of political prisoners or persons unjustly targeted by government entities to ensure their rights and fundamental freedoms are respected.

Question 6. Will you engage with Guyana on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with Guyana on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance.

Question 7. Do you commit to bring to the committee's attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President's business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. If confirmed, I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 8. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President's business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 9. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Guyana?
Answer. My investment portfolio includes diversified mutual funds that may have investments in companies with a presence in Guyana; however, these funds are exempt from the conflicts of interest rules. I am committed to ensuring that my official actions will not give rise to a conflict of interest and I will remain vigilant with regard to my ethics obligations.

Question 10. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. If confirmed, I look forward to leading the team of U.S. and Guyanese nationals at Embassy Georgetown and to tapping the unique and diverse talents each person brings to advance our bilateral relationship with Guyana and to promote U.S. foreign policy objectives. At the State Department’s core are its people. The Department is committed to fostering a workforce that reflects the diverse people it represents. Diversity not only enhances our effectiveness but also promotes a workplace culture that values the efforts of all members and enhances the professional experience of our valued public servants. The Department’s diversity efforts are outlined in its 2016 Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan. If confirmed, I will prioritize a variety of training opportunities, mentoring, and career development programs to ensure employees have the skills necessary for current and future work assignments.

Question 11. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. The State Department is committed to equal employment opportunity (EEO) and to ensuring the Department’s work environment is free from discrimination and harassment in all phases of employment—including hiring, evaluation, promotion, and training. This includes improving and enhancing mentorship programs, exerting outreach to managers who make hiring decisions, and encouraging collaboration with external partners. If confirmed, I will communicate strongly the Department’s EEO policies in my mission and ensure they are followed. I will also take advantage of the variety of programs the Department offers to help supervisors work with a multicultural staff.

Question 12. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Guyana specifically?

Answer. Corruption saps economic growth, hinders development, destabilizes governments, undermines democracy, and provides openings for dangerous groups like criminals, traffickers, and terrorists. The Department has made anti-corruption a national security priority and works across the globe to prevent graft, promote accountability, and empower reformers. Ranking 91 out of 180 on Transparency International’s Corruption Perceptions Index, Guyana suffers many of the effects of political corruption and inconsistent enforcement. Anti-corruption efforts will be particularly important given the recent discovery of petroleum reserves expected to bring rapid economic growth. If confirmed, I commit to addressing this issue.

Question 13. What is your assessment of corruption trends in Guyana and efforts to address and reduce it by that government?

Answer. According to Transparency International’s Corruption Perception indices, Guyana has markedly increased transparency since 2014, but the Government must do more to counter corruption. Guyana ratified the Inter-American Convention against Corruption, and bribery is established as a criminal offense under Guyanese law. Although the Government passed legislation in 1997 that requires public officials to disclose their assets to an Integrity Commission prior to assuming office, the Integrity Commission has not been constituted and remains inoperative. Public officials’ compliance with the legislation is, therefore, uneven. If confirmed, I commit to addressing this issue.

Question 14. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Guyana?

Answer. If confirmed, I will encourage Guyana’s Government to make anti-corruption a national security priority and work to prevent graft, promote accountability, and empower reformers. I will highlight and assist groups committed to tackling corruption through strengthening democratic institutions and empowering citizen advocates to hold the Government accountable for corruption. I will work with global partners to enhance law enforcement cooperation across borders, improve data sharing between major financial hubs, and develop tools to recover stolen assets.
If confirmed, I will address corruption in the security arena, explaining how corruption threatens Guyana’s national security; reduces trust in law enforcement; and diminishes its ability to protect its citizens, hold terrorists at bay, and defend national sovereignty.

Question 15. If confirmed, how would you work to prevent the humanitarian and political crisis from impacting Guyana, while addressing the needs of those Venezuelans who are fleeing to Guyana?

Answer. Guyana is a solid member of the Western Hemisphere’s diplomatic consensus against the Maduro regime. If confirmed, I will continue to foster Guyana’s efforts to support actions that enable Venezuelans themselves to forge the peaceful, democratic, and prosperous future they deserve in their home country. If confirmed, I will encourage Guyana to continue to coordinate with the international community to hold Venezuelan regime officials accountable for their actions, including supporting efforts at the Organization of American States, and to press the Maduro regime to accept international humanitarian assistance commensurate with needs. If confirmed, I will work with Guyana and other countries in the region to address the challenges posed by the exodus of Venezuelans from the Maduro regime.

Question 16. Given the CARICOM secretariat’s location in Georgetown, how would you plan to strategically engage with the broader Caribbean community if confirmed?

Answer. Within the rubric of our U.S.-Caribbean 2020 strategy, engagement with CARICOM is essential to maintain regional cooperation and promote U.S. interests through engagement in the Caribbean on diplomacy, security, prosperity, health, education, and energy. If confirmed, I would leverage my role as the Secretary of State’s representative to CARICOM to advocate for greater regional coordination and cooperation along these six Caribbean 2020 pillars.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LYNNE M. TRACY BY SENATOR ROBERT MENENDEZ

Question 1. Do you acknowledge that on May 24, 1915, the Allied Powers of England, France, and Russia jointly issued a statement explicitly charging for the first time ever another government of committing crimes “against humanity and civilization”?

Answer. Yes, I acknowledge this historical fact. I acknowledge and mourn the mass killings and forced deportations that devastated over one and a half million Armenians at the end of the Ottoman Empire. These events constituted one of the worst atrocities of the twentieth century.

Question 2. Do you acknowledge that the United States Holocaust Memorial Council, an independent Federal agency, unanimously resolved on April 30, 1981, that the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum would document the Armenian Genocide in the Museum, and has done so through a public examination of the historic record?

Answer. Yes, I acknowledge that fact. I recognize and deplore the mass killings and deportations of Armenians that occurred during the final years of the Ottoman Empire. I mourn the loss of so many innocent lives and fully respect that the Armenian people want their pain and loss to be acknowledged.

Question 3. Do you acknowledge that Henry Morgenthau, the U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire at the time, said that the Turkish Government’s deportation order for the Armenians was “a death warrant to a whole race” and an aim which “they made no particular attempt to conceal” in their discussions with him?

Answer. Yes, I acknowledge that U.S. Ambassador Henry Morgenthau made those statements. The magnitude of these terrible acts—over 1.5 million killed or forcibly deported—defies comprehension. I empathize with the great suffering experienced by the Armenian people during this dark chapter in their history.

Question 4. If confirmed, do you commit to substantially engaging with the Armenian-American community over the course of your tenure?

Answer. Yes, I commit to substantially engaging with the Armenian-American community. I value the insights of the Armenian-American community and look forward to working with them to further strengthen U.S.-Armenian relations.

Question 5. What are the prospects for the Minsk Process moving forward?
Answer. As a Co-Chair of the Minsk Group, the United States plays an active role in helping the sides find a peaceful and comprehensive settlement of the long-standing Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, the resolution of which would usher in a new era of peace and prosperity for the people of the South Caucasus. The Minsk Group has continued to engage with the sides at the highest levels to promote dialogue in support of finding a peaceful and comprehensive settlement of the conflict. In July 2018, the Minsk Group Co-Chairs organized an introductory meeting in Brussels between Armenian Foreign Minister Mnatsakanyan and Azerbaijani Foreign Minister Mammadyarov. At that meeting, the foreign ministers exchanged views regarding the situation on the ground and discussed next steps and parameters for re-engaging in substantive negotiations as well as possible confidence-building measures. In September 2018, the two foreign ministers met again under the auspices of the Co-Chairs on the margins of the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

Acting Armenian Foreign Minister Mnatsakanyan and Azerbaijani Foreign Minister Mammadyarov plan to meet this week under the auspices of the Co-Chairs on the margins of the OSCE Ministerial Council meeting in Milan, where the Co-Chairs will encourage them to reaffirm their commitment to work intensively toward a just and lasting peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. Since Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan and President Aliyev met on the margins of the Commonwealth of Independent States summit in Dushanbe, Tajikistan, on September 27–28 and reached an understanding about the need to reduce tensions and uphold the ceasefire, the level of violence has fallen significantly. The Co-Chairs welcomed these developments, commended the sides for implementing constructive measures in good faith, and expressed their support for the leaders’ continued high-level dialogue.

Question 6. How can Azerbaijan and Russia be encouraged to play a more constructive role in the process?

Answer. The U.S. Co-Chair cooperates with the Russian and French Co-Chairs of the OSCE Minsk Group to help the sides reach a peaceful and lasting settlement to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict. Both Russia and France have consistently and publicly urged the parties to the conflict to demonstrate restraint and work toward a peaceful settlement. The United States continues to believe the Minsk Group format provides the best opportunity and the most trusted process for the sides to advance a settlement. U.S. policy remains clear: the only solution to this conflict is a negotiated settlement based on international law that includes adherence to the Helsinki Final Act principles of the non-use or threat of force, territorial integrity, and equal rights and self-determination of peoples.

As the Co-Chairs of the OSCE Minsk Group, the United States, Russia, and France have repeatedly condemned the use of force along the Line of Contact, and called on all sides to take measures to reduce tensions and improve the atmosphere for negotiations. If confirmed, I will ensure the U.S. Embassy in Armenia continues to support the efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group to help the sides find a lasting solution to this conflict.

Question 7. What is the level of Russian Federation Foreign Minister Lavrov’s engagement on this process? What is the level of Sec. Pompeo’s level of engagement?

Answer. All three Minsk Group Co-Chairs are actively engaged—as are Secretary Pompeo and Foreign Minister Lavrov—in helping the sides find a peaceful and comprehensive settlement of this longstanding conflict. Acting Armenian Foreign Minister Mnatsakanyan and Azerbaijani Foreign Minister Mammadyarov plan to meet this week under the auspices of the Co-Chairs on the margins of the OSCE Ministerial Council meeting in Milan, where the Co-Chairs will encourage them to reaffirm their commitment to work intensively toward a just and lasting peaceful settlement of the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.

Question 8. Given Azerbaijan’s ongoing cease-fire violations, what steps is the United States taking to hold Azerbaijan accountable?

Answer. If confirmed, I will ensure the Department of State continues to support the efforts of the OSCE Minsk Group to help the sides find a lasting solution to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, and to ensure the implementation of concrete measures to reduce tensions and increase effective monitoring along the Line of Contact and the Armenia-Azerbaijan international border. The United States strongly condemns the use of force and regrets the loss of life that has occurred along the Line of Contact. Such incidents are an unacceptable violation of the 1994 ceasefire agreement. We have frequently, publicly and privately, called upon both sides to refrain from the use of force or the threat of force. Such incidents only harm the peace process. If confirmed as Ambassador, I will support our U.S. Co-Chair, Andrew Schofer, in his efforts to help achieve a peaceful resolution to the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict.
Since Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan and President Aliyev met on the margins of the Commonwealth of Independent States summit in Dushanbe, Tajikistan, on September 27–28 and reached an understanding about the need to reduce tensions and uphold the ceasefire, the level of violence has fallen significantly. The Co-Chairs welcomed these developments, commended the sides for implementing constructive measures in good faith, and expressed their support for the leaders’ continued high-level dialogue.

Question 9. What steps is the United States taking to ensure the implementation of enhanced border monitoring as well as the deployment of more monitors along the line of contact?

Answer. As a Co-Chair of the Minsk Group, the United States has played and continues to play an active role in mediating a comprehensive, peaceful settlement of this longstanding conflict, the resolution of which would usher in a new era of peace and prosperity for the people of the South Caucasus.

The United States supports proposals to withdraw snipers, launch an OSCE investigation mechanism, and deploy sensors along the Line of Contact and the Armenia-Azerbaijan international border. The United States has been a strong advocate in the Minsk Group process for these and other confidence-building measures, which we believe would further reduce violence in areas affected by the conflict.

Since Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan and President Aliyev met on the margins of the Commonwealth of Independent States summit in Dushanbe, Tajikistan, on September 27–28 and reached an understanding about the need to reduce tensions and uphold the ceasefire, the level of violence has fallen significantly. The Co-Chairs welcomed these developments, commended the sides for implementing constructive measures in good faith, and expressed their support for the leaders’ continued high-level dialogue.

If confirmed, I will support initiatives by the sides, the Co-Chairs, and others, which have the potential to further strengthen the ceasefire, reduce violence, and sustain a climate of trust for intensive negotiations on a peaceful settlement the conflict.

Question 10. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career—in Russia, Turkmenistan, Pakistan, Kazakhstan, Afghanistan, and elsewhere—I have worked to promote democracy and human rights. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Russia, I consistently promoted support for democracy and human rights as a core U.S. message and objective across the Mission. I provided strategic direction to Mission activities aimed at holding Russia accountable for its violations of international law and human rights. I met with human rights activists and civil society to demonstrate U.S. support at a time when these elements of Russian society were under increasing pressure from Russian authorities for exercising their fundamental freedoms. I represented the U.S. Embassy at the 10th anniversary ceremony of the murder of journalist Anna Politkovskaya and spoke out publicly at this event on the need for independent journalism and for the protection of journalists. I met with members of the LGBT community in the wake of increasing repression in Chechnya of this group and discussed how to seek and secure their protection.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Turkmenistan, I fought hard to protect our Peace Corps program and Future Leaders Exchange program, which gave ordinary Turkmen citizens a rare window into democratic values. As Principal Officer in Peshawar, I championed literacy programs and other assistance for women and young girls to better enable them to exercise their rights and civic responsibilities. In Astana, Kazakhstan as Principal Officer, I intervened with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs when a high-profile Uzbek dissident was facing deportation to Uzbekistan. I helped find a compromise solution that permitted the dissident to depart safely to a third country.

As a Political Officer in Kabul just after the fall of the Taliban, I worked with members of Afghanistan’s Human Rights Commission on their efforts to construct the country’s future framework for the protection of human rights. I traveled extensively outside of Kabul to document political and human rights developments and provided ground truth to our first human rights report on Afghanistan in 23 years that was generated by a permanent U.S. presence inside the country. My contributions shaped Washington’s understanding of the realities of entrenched warlords and the regressive treatment of Afghan women.

If confirmed, I pledge to uphold the U.S. commitment to democracy and human rights in Armenia.
Question 11. What issues are the most pressing challenges to democracy or human rights in Armenia? Please be as specific as possible.

Answer. This spring brought remarkable changes to Armenia, when a peaceful popular movement inspired tens of thousands of people to take to the streets and change the course of Armenian history. I commend the Armenian people, law enforcement, and Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan for ensuring the protests and subsequent government transition were non-violent. It is heartening to see how the events of the spring have given so many Armenians hope for the future of their country. I share in this sense of optimism for Armenia’s future.

There is a hard journey ahead to keep the goals and priorities of the April/May transition on track. If confirmed, I would stress the importance of respect for the rule of law as crucial for democracy and human rights in Armenia and for the country’s long-term stability. Public confidence in the fairness of the judicial system is especially important. Ensuring rule of law and fair trial guarantees also helps create the conditions to attract investment and support sustainable economic development.

Additionally, checks and balances to limit the power of any one leader or party, are important for democratic development. We also attach great importance to the ability of civil society, the media, and opposition politicians to criticize the Government, hold it accountable, and offer constructive ideas to move the political process forward. A strong democratic culture is integral to the ability of civil society, the media, and political parties to play their role.

Question 12. What steps will you take—if confirmed—to support democratic, accountable governance in Armenia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions? What are the potential impediments to addressing the specific obstacles you have identified?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to help the Armenian Government meet the aspirations of the Armenian people, who are calling for accountable governance, an end to corruption, and a level playing field. I will press publicly and privately, if confirmed, for full respect for political pluralism and democratic competition. To support democratic, accountable governance, if confirmed, I will prioritize helping Armenia strengthen checks and balances, including an independent judiciary, a parliament with the capacity to hold the executive branch accountable, and democratic electoral processes.

Potential impediments to addressing these challenges include corruption, weak rule of law, and entrenched economic interests, though there have been positive developments in some of these areas. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Armenian Government, civil society, and other stakeholders to address such impediments and advocate for progress in all of the areas crucial for strengthening democratic, accountable governance. Political will is a key first step to creating a strong independent judiciary, but building up institutions is equally important. I will also encourage the Armenian Government, if confirmed, to continue to consult with civil society as it formulates its policies and reform priorities going forward.

Question 13. How will you utilize U.S. Government assistance resources at your disposal, including the Democracy Commission Small Grants program and other sources of State Department and USAID funding, to support democracy and governance, and what will you prioritize in processes to administer such assistance?

Answer. Current Department of State and USAID democracy assistance seeks to strengthen civil society, encourage and facilitate citizen participation in local decision-making, and support electoral processes and independent media. We stand ready to assist the Armenian Government in making sustainable institutional changes in the justice and law enforcement sectors that will assist the new government’s anti-corruption policies, and continue to build transparency and accountability through civil society and media. If confirmed, I will continue to support these assistance efforts and will look for other ways to productively utilize assistance funds to promote shared objectives.

Question 14. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with civil society members, human rights and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S., and local human rights NGOs, and other members of civil society across Armenia?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, it will be among my top priorities to meet with those outside of the Government, such as civil society representatives, including human rights-focused NGOs, to demonstrate our commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms. Armenia has a vibrant civil society, as we have seen in recent months, and I look forward to engaging actively with the groups and individuals who are at the forefront of pushing for meaningful change in Armenia.
Question 15. If confirmed, do you commit to meet with democratically oriented political opposition figures and parties? What steps will you take to encourage genuine political competition? Will you advocate for access and inclusivity for women, minorities and youth within political parties?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, I will continue the Embassy’s current commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with those outside of the Government, including political opposition figures and parties, to demonstrate our support for pluralism, checks and balances, and genuine political competition. I will advocate for equal access and inclusivity for women, minorities, and youth in all spheres, including in political life.

If confirmed, I will continue to support USAID and the Department of State’s new initiatives following the political transition in Armenia in May. These new activities support priority programs in the political processes, anti-corruption, civil society, and independent media sectors. These assistance activities will help Armenia to build a multiparty political system and support free and fair elections.

Question 16. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Armenia on freedom of the press and address any government efforts designed to control or undermine press freedom through legal, regulatory or other measures? Will you commit to meeting regularly with independent, local press across Armenia?

Answer. Independent media are key to Armenia’s democratic and economic development. We support this objective with programs aimed at improving access to independent and reliable sources of information through media literacy programs and by strengthening professional standards and quality content of independent media.

If confirmed, I will engage actively on freedom of the press and will support the Embassy’s continued commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with those outside of the Government, including independent journalists.

Question 17. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with civil society and government counterparts on countering disinformation and propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in the country?

Answer. Yes. If confirmed, I will engage with civil society and Armenian Government officials to counter disinformation and malign propaganda disseminated by foreign state or non-state actors in Armenia. The Embassy currently supports training for journalists to counter disinformation and promote professional journalism. If confirmed, I will support these and other efforts to counter disinformation in Armenia through Countering Russian Influence Fund (CRIF) programming and across our assistance portfolio.

Question 18. Will you and your embassy teams actively engage with Armenia on the right of labor groups to organize, including for independent trade unions?

Answer. In line with Department of State priorities, if confirmed, I will promote worker rights in Armenia by focusing on internationally-recognized labor rights related to the freedom of association, effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining, and the elimination of forced labor, child labor, and employment discrimination. I will engage with local civil society organizations, trade unions, companies, and other organizations. I will convey the need to increase efforts to investigate and prosecute labor trafficking cases. I will continue Embassy efforts to raise a lack of an effective labor inspectorate with the Government of Armenia. If confirmed, I will continue the Embassy’s current commitment to have Embassy officers, at all levels, meet with labor and civil society groups.

Question 19. Will you commit to using your position, if confirmed, to defend the human rights and dignity of all people in Armenia, no matter their sexual orientation or gender identity?

Answer. Governments have a responsibility to respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all individuals in their countries, including LGBTI persons. As the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states, all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and in rights. Advancing human rights is in our national interest, and as Secretary Pompeo has said, LGBTI persons deserve the same freedoms, protections, and respect as everyone else.

As documented in the 2017 Human Rights Report, in recent years the Government of Armenia has failed to protect LGBTI persons from violence. Societal discrimination against LGBTI individuals on the basis of their sexual orientation or gender identity negatively affected all aspects of life, including employment, housing, education, and health care.

If confirmed, my team and I would continue to urge the Government of Armenia to uphold and respect international human rights obligations and commitments for all individuals in their country.
Question 20. If confirmed, how will you engage in support of religious freedom and peaceful religious expression across Armenia? Will you commit to meet with representatives of a diverse swath of religious groups and communities and to advocate for their ability to register and worship peacefully in the country?

Answer. Armenia is a Christian majority country with a history of religious tolerance. Followers of many religions are able to practice their faith in Armenia. However, in the Department’s annual International Religious Freedom Report, we have documented the difficulties some religious groups reported in registering their organizations, as well as reports of groups experiencing harassment when trying to practice their faith in Armenia.

If confirmed, I would continue our efforts to urge the Government to facilitate the ability for all people to worship as they choose, provide for straightforward registration of all religious groups, and remove controls on the importation, distribution, and sale of religious materials, as well as to protect the human rights of members of all groups. I would also continue to monitor the status of religious freedom in Armenia through regular meetings with civil society members, religious organizations, and human rights activists.

Question 21. If confirmed, how will you seek to boost resilience to Russian Government meddling within Armenia’s institutions and civil society? What types of U.S. assistance do you see as most critical in this regard? How will you address corrupt political and economic influence or other illicit dealings with Armenian actors that can increase space in the country for the Kremlin to push its agenda?

Answer. The United States Government supports programs that make Armenia less vulnerable to foreign malign influence, including from Russia, by strengthening democratic institutions, reducing corruption, increasing civic engagement, sending civil society and youth to the United States on exchange programs, and strengthening independent media. Additionally, U.S. assistance focused on trade diversification, rural development, and creation of a skilled workforce in innovative and fast-growing sectors, such as information technology and cultural tourism, help diversify Armenia’s economy and reduce its dependence on any one market. USAID also supports civil society, independent media, civic engagement, local governance, and economic reform to counterbalance Russian malign influence.

The Department of State and USAID have allocated $6.4 million in FY 2018 AEECA and INCLE funds specifically designated towards the Countering Russian Influence Fund (CRIF) for these activities in Armenia. If confirmed, I will work with my team at the Embassy and USAID to continue to identify levers of malign influence in Armenia and leverage our assistance programs to combat those threats.

Question 22. What do you see as most needed to effectively counter malign interference from other foreign states, including Iran?

Answer. We encourage our Armenian partners to assess Iran’s intentions in the region comprehensively, and to partner with us in encouraging Iran to be a responsible member of the international community. The support we provide for strengthening democratic institutions, building economic resilience, and increasing trade help make Armenia less vulnerable to foreign malign influence, including from Iran.

Question 23. What specific steps will you take if confirmed to expose and punish official and unofficial corruption and organized criminal activity in Armenia?

Answer. Corruption has a negative and corrosive impact on democratic governance and the rule of law, and perceptions of corruption and a lack of justice were drivers behind Armenia’s spring political transition. Corruption in Armenia impedes the Government’s stated goal of attracting investment and it negatively affects adherence to democratic principles, human rights, and the rule of law in the country. Corruption is also a national security issue. Increased transparency in governance, support for an independent judiciary, and strengthened separation of powers among branches of government are all important to help combat corruption. Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan has identified combating corruption as one of his top priorities.

In addition to its stated efforts to reduce the scope for future corruption, the current Armenian Government has sought to investigate past cases of suspected corruption. The Armenian Government has made clear a much higher standard of public servant conduct will be the expectation going forward. The Department welcomes the Government setting a higher standard for public servant conduct and making genuine efforts to decrease corruption in Armenia and, if confirmed, I stand ready to assist with these efforts.

Political will is a necessary component of any genuine anti-corruption effort, but it is also important to put in place institutional mechanisms for deterring and punishing corruption, including those in high office. If confirmed, I would be ready to assist the Armenian Government in making sustainable institutional changes in the justice and law enforcement sectors that will assist the new government’s anti-corruption policies and continue to build transparency and accountability through civil society and media. The Embassy will continue to advocate for a level playing field in Armenia, free of corruption and bribery, in which honest businesses and free competition may thrive.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LYNNIE M. TRACY BY SENATOR BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

Question 1. Armenia’s recent “Velvet Revolution” led a former journalist, Nikol Pashinyan, to become acting Prime Minister in a peaceful overthrow of its government. What steps, if any, are being taken to engage in high level bilateral dialogue, and how will you work to expand the scope and depth of U.S.-Armenia dialogue?

Answer. This spring brought remarkable changes to Armenia, when a peaceful popular movement inspired tens of thousands of people to take to the streets and change the course of Armenian history. I commend the Armenian people, law enforcement, and Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan for ensuring the protests and subsequent government transition were non-violent. It is heartening to see how the events of the spring have given so many Armenians hope for the future of their country. I share in this sense of optimism for Armenia’s future.

The Government and people of Armenia are valuable partners. The United States continues to support Armenia and is committed to Armenia choosing its own future and partners, free from outside interference. Department officials engage regularly in high-level dialogue with the Armenian leadership. If confirmed, I will continue this practice of regular and active engagement. The U.S.-Armenia Task Force (USATF) is a valuable opportunity to take stock of the bilateral relationship and make progress in areas of mutual interest. Earlier this year, the Department and the Armenian Government expanded the scope and participants in the USATF dialogue to better capture the changes underway in Armenia and the full state of bilateral relations. We are in agreement with the Armenian Government about the general parameters of the new USATF format, and we are currently working out dates and a proposed agenda for the next USATF meeting, which we hope to have in the first quarter of 2019.

Question 2. What are the most important actions you have taken in your career to date to support democracy and human rights? What has been the impact of your actions?

Answer. Throughout my career—in Russia, Turkmenistan, Pakistan, Kazakhstan, Afghanistan, and elsewhere—I have worked to promote democracy and human rights. As Deputy Chief of Mission in Russia, I consistently promoted support for democracy and human rights as a core U.S. message and objective across the Mission. I provided strategic direction to Mission activities aimed at holding Russia accountable for its violations of international law and human rights. I met with human rights activists and civil society to demonstrate U.S. support at a time when these elements of Russian society were under increasing pressure from Russian authorities for exercising their fundamental freedoms. I represented the U.S. Embassy at the 10th anniversary ceremony of the murder of journalist Anna Politkovskaya and spoke out publicly at this event on the need for independent journalism and the protection of journalists. I met with members of the LGBT community in the wake of increasing repression in Chechnya of this group and discussed how to seek and secure their protection.

As Deputy Chief of Mission in Turkmenistan, I fought hard to protect our Peace Corps program and Future Leaders Exchange program, which gave ordinary Turkmen citizens a rare window into democratic values. As Principal Officer in Peshawar, I championed literacy programs and other assistance for women and young girls to better enable them to exercise their rights and civic responsibilities. In Astana, Kazakhstan as Principal Officer, I intervened with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs when a high-profile Uzbek dissident was facing deportation to Uzbekistan. I helped find a compromise solution that permitted the dissident to depart safely to a third country. As a Political Officer in Kabul just after the fall of the Taliban, I worked with members of Afghanistan’s Human Rights Commission on their efforts to construct the country’s future framework for the protection of human rights. I traveled extensively outside of Kabul to document political and human rights developments and provide immediate truth to our first human rights report on Afghanistan in 23 years that was generated by a permanent U.S. presence inside the country. My contributions shaped Washington’s understanding of the realities of entrenched warlords and the regressive treatment of Afghan women. If confirmed, I pledge to uphold the U.S. commitment to democracy and human rights in Armenia.

Question 3. What are the most pressing human rights issues in Armenia? What are the most important steps you expect to take—if confirmed—to promote human rights and democracy in Armenia? What do you hope to accomplish through these actions?

Answer. If confirmed, I would stress the importance of respect for the rule of law as crucial for democracy and human rights in Armenia and for the country's long-term stability. Public confidence in the fairness of the judicial system is especially important. Ensuring rule of law and fair trial guarantees also helps create the conditions to attract investment and support sustainable economic development.

Additionally, checks and balances to limit the power of any one leader or party, are important for democratic development. We attach great importance to the ability of civil society, the media, and opposition politicians to criticize the Government, hold it accountable, and offer constructive ideas to move the political process forward. A strong democratic culture is integral to the ability of civil society, the media, and political parties to play their role.

Current Department of State and USAID democracy assistance seeks to strengthen civil society, encourages and facilitates citizen participation in local decision-making, and supports electoral processes and independent media. We stand ready to assist the Armenian Government in making sustainable institutional changes in the justice and law enforcement sectors that will assist the new government's anti-corruption policies, and continue to build transparency and accountability through civil society and media. If confirmed, I will continue to support these assistance efforts and will look for other ways to productively utilize assistance funds to promote shared objectives.

If confirmed, I will press publicly and privately for full respect for political pluralism and democratic competition. I will also, if confirmed, encourage the Armenian Government to continue to consult with civil society as it formulates its policies and reform priorities going forward.

Question 4. If confirmed, what are the potential obstacles to addressing the specific human rights issues you have identified in your previous response? What challenges will you face in Armenia in advancing human rights, civil society and democracy in general?

Answer. If confirmed, I will work to help the Armenian Government meet the aspirations of the Armenian people, who are calling for accountable governance, an end to corruption, and a level playing field. Strengthening rule of law and ensuring an independent judiciary are especially important, and require sustained effort and commitment. Potential impediments to addressing these challenges include corruption, weak rule of law, and entrenched economic interests, though there have been positive developments in some of these areas. If confirmed, I will work closely with the Armenian Government, civil society, and other stakeholders to address such impediments and advocate for progress in all of the areas crucial for strengthening democratic, accountable governance. Political will is a key first step to creating a strong independent judiciary, but building up institutions is equally important.

Question 5. Are you committed to meeting with human rights, civil society and other non-governmental organizations in the U.S. and with local human rights NGOs in Armenia? If confirmed, what steps will you take to pro-actively support the Leahy Law and similar efforts, and ensure that provisions of U.S. security assistance and security cooperation activities reinforce human rights?

Answer. Yes, if confirmed, it will be among my top priorities to meet with those outside of the Government, including civil society representatives and human rights-focused NGOs, to demonstrate our commitment to human rights and fundamental freedoms. Armenia has a vibrant civil society, as we have seen in recent months, and I look forward to engaging actively with the groups and individuals who are at the forefront of pushing for meaningful change in Armenia. If confirmed, I will ensure that the Embassy team continues to adhere to all applicable laws, including the Leahy Law, to ensure that U.S. security assistance and security cooperation in Armenia reinforce human rights.

Question 6. Will you and your embassy team actively engage with Armenia to address cases of key political prisoners or persons otherwise unjustly targeted by Armenia?

Answer. If confirmed, I would stress the importance of respect for human rights, rule of law, and fair trial guarantees. Public confidence in the fairness of the judicial system is especially important to democratic development and long-term stability. Ensuring rule of law also helps create the conditions to attract investment and support sustainable economic development, and fosters long-term stability. We attach great importance to the ability of civil society, the media, and opposition politicians to criticize the Government, hold it accountable, and offer constructive ideas to move the political process forward. If confirmed, I will press publicly and privately for full respect for political pluralism and a level playing field for democratic competition.

Question 7. Will you engage with Armenia on matters of human rights, civil rights and governance as part of your bilateral mission?

Answer. Advancing universal human rights and fundamental freedoms, including civil rights and good governance, is in our national interest, as well as in Armenia’s interest. If confirmed, my team and I would continue to urge the Government of Armenia to uphold and respect international human rights obligations and commitments. If confirmed, I will publicly and privately press for full respect and protection for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including civil rights, and will utilize diplomatic and development assistance tools to support good governance efforts.

Question 8. I, along with many members of Congress have supported efforts to officially recognize the Armenian Genocide, yet am disappointed with the U.S. Government’s failure to issue an official recognition of genocide. If confirmed, how will you work to bring the United States Government and other international actors to a clear genocide determination?

Answer. The horrific events that took place 103 years ago resulted in one of the worst atrocities of the twentieth century. The administration recognizes the terrible events of 1915, when one and a half million Armenians were massacred or marched to their deaths in the final years of the Ottoman Empire. This event is commemorated every year in the United States so that we never forget this dark chapter in history. President Trump’s focus is on remembering the past and on encouraging the Armenian and Turkish people to work together to heal the wounds of the past and move forward together in a shared future of security and prosperity in the region. Should I be confirmed as the personal representative of the President, I will faithfully represent the policies of the President and his administration.

Question 9. Do you commit to bring to the committee’s attention (and the State Department Inspector General) any change in policy or U.S. actions that you suspect may be influenced by any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the business or financial interests of any senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 10. Do you commit to inform the committee if you have any reason to suspect that a foreign government, head of state, or foreign-controlled entity is taking any action in order to benefit any of the President’s business or financial interests, or the interests of senior White House staff?

Answer. I commit to comply with all relevant federal ethics laws, regulations, and rules, and to raise concerns that I may have through appropriate channels.

Question 11. Do you or do any members of your immediate family have any financial interests in Armenia?

Answer. Neither I nor any members of my immediate family have any financial interests in Armenia.

Question 12. U.S.-Armenia trade is relatively low and has declined in recent years. What accounts for this decrease in trade? As Ambassador, how would you promote greater U.S. trade and investment with Armenia?

Answer. The U.S. Government has been actively involved in helping Armenia become a more welcoming place for U.S. foreign investment. Deepening the U.S.-Armenia business and trade relationship is one of our top priorities, and several multi-million dollar deals have been announced in the last few years. Embassy Yerevan plays a strong advocacy role on behalf of U.S. firms that do business or want to do business with Armenia.

If confirmed, I will promote U.S. trade and investment with Armenia. The Armenian Government’s focus on tackling corruption and promoting competition are encouraging signs, but more can be done to improve the investment climate. Many factors, some outside of our control, impact overall trade numbers. We continue to stress that strong intellectual property rights protections, rule of law, and a level playing field all contribute to a predictable business environment that attracts foreign investment. If confirmed, I will continue to stress that impartiality, transparency, and predictability in the rule of law and regulatory processes are key for investor confidence.
Question 13. How will Armenia's change in government affect its relations with Russia, which is Armenia's ally and largest economic partner? Does Armenia now have a better opportunity to pursue closer integration with the West?

Answer. The United States believes every country has a sovereign right to determine its international relations. Any form of pressure to prevent sovereign states from pursuing greater integration with Western institutions runs contrary to the commitment to respect the sovereignty and independence of that state enshrined in important international instruments, such as the United Nations Charter, the Helsinki Final Act, and the Charter of Paris.

The Department of State and USAID are assisting Armenia to decrease its dependence on any one market and build resilience against malign influence by helping Armenia expand its access to European markets, foster opportunities for U.S. investment, and facilitate regional energy integration. U.S. assistance focused on trade diversification, rural development, and creation of a skilled workforce in innovative and fast-growing sectors, such as information technology and cultural tourism, helps diversify Armenia's economy and reduce its dependence on any one market. USAID also supports civil society, independent media, civic engagement, local governance, and economic reform to counterbalance Russian malign influence.

Armenia has been an active and productive partner in NATO's Partnership for Peace program since its inception, contributing troops to NATO-led peacekeeping operations in Kosovo and Afghanistan. Armenia is also working to fulfill the tasks set out in its NATO Individual Partnership Action Plan. In 2017, Armenia signed the Comprehensive and Enhanced Partnership Agreement (CEPA) with the European Union that is peaceful, democratic, and prosperous is a valuable partner for the United States and Europe.

Question 14. Research from private industry demonstrates that, when managed well, diversity makes business teams better both in terms of creativity and in terms of productivity. What will you do to promote, mentor and support your staff that come from diverse backgrounds and underrepresented groups in the Foreign Service?

Answer. As the face of America overseas, the Department's workforce should be diverse in every sense of the word and reflect our nation's rich diversity. If confirmed, I will support that aim by recruiting a diverse team at the U.S. Embassy in Yerevan, mentoring all employees under my supervision to welcome and appreciate the advantages diversity brings to the workplace, and demanding that every team member be treated equally with dignity and respect.

Question 15. What steps will you take to ensure each of the supervisors at the Embassy are fostering an environment that is diverse and inclusive?

Answer. If confirmed, I will recruit a diverse team at U.S. Embassy Yerevan, mentor all employees under my supervision, and demand that every team member be treated equally with dignity and respect. I will make clear to all supervisors at U.S. Embassy Yerevan that I expect them to adhere to these principles. Throughout my career, I have worked to foster inclusive and respectful work environments, and I will not tolerate improper behavior that undermines this aim.

Question 16. How do you believe political corruption impacts democratic governance and the rule of law generally, and in Armenia specifically?

Answer. Corruption has indeed been a problem in Armenia. Transparency International ranked Armenia 107 out of 180 countries surveyed in its 2017 Corruption Perceptions Index. At the same time, there are some encouraging trends. The World Bank's 2019 “Doing Business Report” ranked Armenia 41st overall in the world in ease of doing business, compared to 47th last year. I am encouraged that tackling corruption is a high priority for Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan.

Corruption in Armenia impedes the Government's stated goal of attracting investment, and it negatively affects adherence to democratic principles, human rights, and the rule of law in the country. Corruption is also a national security issue. Increased transparency in governance, support for an independent judiciary, and strengthened separation of powers among branches of government are all important to help combat corruption. Acting Prime Minister Pashinyan has identified combating corruption as one of his top priorities.
impressive strides in just a few months in investigating cases of corruption. Additionally, the Armenian Government has made clear a much higher standard of public servant conduct will be the expectation going forward. The Department welcomes the Government setting a higher standard for public servant conduct and making genuine efforts to decrease corruption in Armenia and, if confirmed, I stand ready to assist with these efforts.

Question 18. If confirmed, what steps will you take to strengthen good governance and anticorruption programming in Armenia?

Answer. Political will is a necessary component of any genuine anti-corruption effort, but it is also important to put in place institutional mechanisms for deterring and punishing corruption, including those in high office. We stand ready to assist the Armenian Government in making long-lasting, sustainable institutional changes in the justice and law enforcement sectors that will assist in achieving an Armenia free of corruption. If confirmed, I will continue to advocate for a level playing field in Armenia, free of corruption and bribery, in which honest businesses and free competition may thrive.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LYNN M. TRACY BY SENATOR JEANNE SHAHEEN

Question 1. If confirmed, how would you work to balance U.S. interests with Russia’s considerable influence over Armenia? How would you work to make Armenia a stronger partner of the European Union and NATO?

Answer. The United States believes every country has a sovereign right to determine its international relations. Any form of pressure to prevent sovereign states from pursuing greater integration with Western institutions runs contrary to the commitment to respect the sovereignty and independence of that state enshrined in important international instruments, such as the United Nations Charter, the Helsinki Final Act, and the Charter of Paris.

RESPONSES TO ADDITIONAL QUESTIONS FOR THE RECORD SUBMITTED TO LYNN M. TRACY BY SENATOR EDWARD J. MARKEY

Question 1. While Russia remains highly influential with the Armenian Government, there are signs that the Armenian Government is pursuing talks with European nations to diversify its economic relations. If confirmed, what will you do to encourage this dialogue? Do you foresee a Russian backlash, and if so, how will you address any potential Russian reaction?

Answer. The United States believes every country has a sovereign right to determine its international relations. Any form of pressure to prevent sovereign states from pursuing greater integration with Western institutions runs contrary to the commitment to respect the sovereignty and independence of that state enshrined in important international instruments, such as the United Nations Charter, the Helsinki Final Act, and the Charter of Paris.
