Credit Reform

The Federal budget covers all Federal spending. The Federal budget generally records spending, even for capital investments, on a cash basis. The Office of Management and Budget explains:

The budget includes all types of spending, including both current operating expenditures and capital investment, and to the extent possible, both are measured on the basis of full cost. Questions are often raised about the measure of capital investment. The present budget provides policymakers the necessary information regarding investment spending. It records investment on a cash basis, and it requires the Congress to provide budget authority before an agency can obligate the Government to make a cash outlay.<sup>3038</sup>

Credit reform provides a major exception to the general rule of cash accounting. In the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990,<sup>3039</sup> Congress changed the budgetary treatment of Federal loans and loan guarantees to more accurately capture their costs. The Office of Management and Budget explains:

Some Government programs provide assistance through direct loans or loan guarantees. A direct loan is a disbursement of funds by the Government to a non-Federal borrower under a contract that requires repayment of such funds with or without interest and includes economically equivalent transactions, such as the sale of Federal assets on credit terms. A loan guarantee is any guarantee, insurance, or other pledge with respect to the payment of all or a part of the principal or interest on any debt obligation of a non-Federal borrower to a non-Federal lender. The Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, as amended (FCRA), prescribes the budgetary treatment for Federal credit programs. Under this treatment, the budget records obligations and outlays up front, for the net cost to the Government (subsidy cost), rather than recording the cash flows year by year over the term of the loan. FCRA treatment allows the comparison of direct loans and loan guarantees to each other, and to other methods of delivering assistance, such as grants.

The cost of direct loans and loan guarantees, sometimes called the “subsidy cost,” is estimated as the present value of expected payments to and from the public over the term of the loan, discounted using appropriate Treasury interest rates. Similar to most other kinds of programs, agencies can make loans or guarantee loans only if the Congress has appropriated funds sufficient to cover the subsidy costs, or provided a limitation in an appropriations act on the amount of direct loans or loan guarantees that can be made.

The budget records the subsidy cost to the Government arising from direct loans and loan guarantees—the budget authority and outlays—in credit program accounts. When a Federal agency disburses a direct loan or when a non-Federal lender disburses a loan guaranteed by a Federal agency, the program account disburses or outlays an amount equal to the estimated present value cost, or subsidy, to a non-budgetary credit financing account. The financing accounts record the actual transactions with the public.<sup>3040</sup>

In a report issued shortly before Congress enacted the 1990 law, the Congressional Budget Office explained the motivation for credit reform:

Under existing practice [before credit reform], the budget reports net outlays—that is, cash payments minus receipts—for each credit account for a fiscal year. This budgetary treatment, however, does not reflect the long-term costs to taxpayers from federal credit transactions. Current year payments differ from multi-year costs because credit creates an obligation to pay later: for federal loans, the borrower promises to repay the government; for federally guaranteed private loans, government—on behalf of taxpayers—promises to pay if the borrower defaults.

If adopted, credit reform would make it possible to compare accurately the cost of cash and credit programs without changing any credit programs or the benefits that are provided. Credit reform would also facilitate cost comparisons of high-cost and low-cost federal loans and guarantees. Credit reform would succeed in recognizing subsidy costs when these costs can still be controlled through the appropriation process. The CBO report details a method for measuring the subsidy costs of credit.<sup>3041</sup>

Shortly after Congress enacted the 1990 law, the Congressional Budget Office explained the key differences:

The heart of the new credit accounting lies in identifying the subsidy costs inherent in nearly all federal credit programs and separating these from the nonsubsidized cash flows. Under the current system [before credit reform], which applies only through fiscal year 1991, outlays measure federal credit on a cash basis; that is, outlays for direct loans and for loan guarantees that have defaulted are recorded in the budget net of collections. Programs with large volumes of credit activity, therefore, can be reported as having small net outlays. Under credit reform beginning in fiscal year 1992, the budget will reflect the budget authority and outlays needed to cover the subsidy costs of loans and guarantees at the time they are extended to borrowers. The subsidy, as defined in the FCRA, is the “estimated long-term cost to the government of a direct loan or loan guarantee calculated on a net present value basis, excluding administrative costs.”<sup>3042</sup>

More recently, some questioned how credit reform measures subsidy costs. In 2015, Raj Gnanarajah of the Congressional Research Service reported:

In recent years, Congress has debated the best way to measure subsidy costs. The debate has revolved around whether the subsidy costs should be measured as prescribed by FCRA or by what is referred to as the fair-value method. Subsidy costs estimates under FCRA adjust the cash outflows and inflows for the various risks a loan portfolio might face. These cash flows are also discounted using Treasury interest rates for estimating subsidy costs.

One method of estimating the fair-value costs of the credit programs is to use private-market interest rates. Generally, private-sector firms would charge a borrower with a government loan guarantee lower interest rates than they would charge a borrower without the government guarantee. Switching to fair value, therefore, is expected to increase the subsidy costs estimates of credit programs. For example, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) projects that changing the method of calculating subsidy costs estimates to the fair-value method would increase the 10-year budget cost estimates of student loans by $223 billion, single-family mortgage insurance by $93 billion, and the Export-Import Bank by $16 billion. Many of the credit programs that are estimated to make a profit under FCRA have a subsidy cost (incur loss) under fair value.

Proponents of fair-value cost estimates argue the government's cost of credit programs should reflect market risks. Those risks are currently excluded from FCRA cost estimates. In their view, the risk posed by the borrowers should be considered as a cost to the taxpayers because taxpayers are ultimately responsible for paying the debt of the U.S. government. Supporters of using the FCRA method argue that it is appropriate for the government to discount at the rate at which it borrows and that market risk is not the same as budgetary costs. In their view, including market risks to estimate credit subsidies includes amounts that the government will never incur. Further, adopting fair value for budget estimates does not necessarily imply that there would be a need to raise taxes or to borrow additional funds because such costs affect only the budget projections not the actual amount of cash flows.<sup>3043</sup>

The Government Accountability Office concluded that the Federal Credit Reform Act's method of estimating credit subsidy costs is more appropriate for budget estimates than a fair value approach, stating:

The additional market risk recognized under the fair value approach does not reflect additional cash costs beyond those already recognized by FCRA. The introduction of market risk into subsidy costs under the fair value approach would (1) be inconsistent with long-standing federal budgeting practices primarily based on cash outlays; (2) be inconsistent with the budgetary treatment of similarly risky programs; (3) introduce transparency and verification issues with respect to inclusion of a noncash cost in budget totals; and (4) involve significant implementation issues, such as the need for additional agency resources. Consequently, GAO does not support the use of the fair value approach to estimate subsidy costs for the budget and believes the current FCRA methodology is more appropriate for this purpose as it represents the best estimate of the direct cost to the government and is consistent with current budgetary practices.<sup>3044</sup>

502(1) (1) The term “direct loan” means a disbursement of funds by the Government to a non-Federal borrower under a contract that requires the repayment of such funds with or without interest. The term includes the purchase of, or participation in, a loan made by another lender and financing arrangements that defer payment for more than 90 days, including the sale of a [G]overnment<sup>3056</sup> asset on credit terms. The term does not include the acquisition of a federally guaranteed loan in satisfaction of default claims or the price support loans of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

502(2) (2) The term “direct loan obligation” means a binding agreement by a Federal agency<sup>3057</sup> to make a direct loan<sup>3058</sup> when specified conditions are fulfilled by the borrower.

502(3) (3) The term “loan guarantee” means any guarantee, insurance, or other pledge with respect to the payment of all or a part of the principal or interest on any debt obligation of a non-Federal borrower to a non-Federal lender, but does not include the insurance of deposits,

Budget Process Study

The Budget Act directs the Budget Committees to study how to improve the budget process. The Budget Committees have conducted numerous hearings to consider budget process reform. That study and evaluation continues.

The Congressional Research Service's Megan Lynch reports:

An array of budget process reform proposals are put forth each year seeking to refine or modify the existing constitutional requirements, laws, and rules that make up the federal budget process. Some proposals may be designed to alter the budget process, for example attempting to improve transparency or oversight, perhaps by requiring additional information when weighing the merits of a measure. Other proposals may seek to alter the budget process in an effort to produce specific budgetary outcomes, for example by creating enforceable limits on spending or revenue levels.<sup>3312</sup>

Waiver and Appeal

The strongest tree must bend in the wind. Recognizing the need for flexibility, the drafters of the Budget Act wrote in measures to waive procedural impediments when necessary.

The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (better known for its system of sequestration<sup>3316</sup>) upped the ante by raising the threshold required for waiving many points of order from a majority to three-fifths of all Senators “duly chosen and sworn” or 60 Senators (unless a Senate seat is vacant). Since then, Budget Act points of order have added to the ease with which Senators can interpose supermajority requirements. A point of order requiring 60 votes to waive is in effect an instant filibuster.

The Congressional Research Service’s Jim Saturno explains the system of waivers:

The Congressional Budget Act sets forth certain procedures, under Section 904, for waiving points of order under the act. These waiver procedures apply in the Senate only. Under these procedures, a Senator may make a motion to waive the application of a point of order either preemptively before it can be raised, or after it is raised, but before the presiding officer rules on its merits.

In the Senate, most points of order under the Budget Act may be waived by a vote of at least three-fifths of all Senators duly chosen and sworn (60 votes if there are no vacancies) . . . . The three-fifths waiver requirement was first established for some points of order under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985. Beginning with the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, this super-majority threshold was applied to several additional points of order on a temporary basis. These points of order are identified in Section 904(c)(2), and the three-fifths requirement is currently scheduled to expire September 30, 2025. The three-fifths threshold has also been required for the Senate to waive the application of many of the related points of order established in budget resolutions and other measures, such as the Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010. As with other provisions of Senate rules, Budget Act points of order also may be waived by unanimous consent.

In the House, Budget Act points of order are typically waived by the adoption of special rules, although other means (such as unanimous consent or suspension of the rules) may also be used. A waiver may be used to protect a bill, specified provision(s) in a bill, or an amendment from a point of order that could be raised against it. Waivers may be granted for one or more amendments even if they are not granted for the underlying bill. The House may waive the application of one or more specific points of order, or they may include a “blanket waiver,” that is, a waiver that would protect a bill, provision, or amendment from any point of order.<sup>3317</sup>

If the Senate does not waive a point of order and the Presiding Officer rules, a Senator may still appeal the ruling of the Chair. In Riddick’s Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian discussed appeals generally:

Any ruling by the Chair in response to a point of order made by a Senator is subject to an appeal. If no appeal is taken, the ruling of the Chair stands as the judgment of the Senate and becomes a precedent for the guidance of the Senate in the future.

Any Senator, may take an appeal from a ruling of the Chair, and when this occurs the question is stated, “Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?” Unless the Chair is supported by a majority vote of the Senate, the decision of the Chair is overruled. This decision of the Senate becomes a precedent for the Senate to follow in its future

procedure until altered or reversed by a subsequent decision of the Chair or by a vote of the Senate.<sup>3318</sup>

Thus, while waivers affect only the matter pending before the Senate, appeals set precedents that can apply to other matters thereafter. Overturning the ruling of the Chair is thus a weightier thing than waiving a point of order.

But as an appeal might open a means around a 60-vote waiver requirement, the budget law requires the same supermajority to appeal a ruling of the Chair in relation to any point of order for which the law requires a 60-vote waiver.

Commenting on this section, the House Rules and Manual explains:

Pursuant to this section, and under its authority contained in clause 5 of rule XIII (former clause 4(b) of rule XI) to report on rules and the order of business, the Committee on Rules may report as privileged a resolution recommending the temporary waiver of the provisions of section 401 of the Congressional Budget Act during the consideration of designated legislation in the House (Speaker Albert, Mar. 20, 1975, p. 7676). A point of order against consideration of a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules providing for consideration of a concurrent resolution on the budget does not lie based upon alleged violation of a statute that merely reaffirms the congressional commitment towards achieving balanced Federal budgets (P.L. 96–389), because the statute does not constitute a rule of the House and because section 904 of the Budget Act acknowledges the constitutional authority of either House to change its rules at any time (June 10, 1982, pp. 13352, 13353). A unanimous-consent agreement that only permits a (nonprivileged) bill to be considered in the House before availability requirements of the report thereon have been met, but that does not specifically waive points of order against consideration, does not preclude a point of order against consideration of the bill when called up based upon an alleged violation of the Budget Act (Feb. 4, 1982, p. 845).<sup>3329</sup>

A House Budget Committee print explained:

[T]he concurrent resolution on the budget is considered a rulemaking document tantamount to the rules of the House of Representatives, and supersedes them when they are in conflict. Budget resolutions include this language: “The House adopts the provisions of this title . . . as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of the House of Representatives, and these rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent with other such rules”.<sup>3330</sup>

The budget resolutions for fiscal years 2008 and 2016 extended the date in Budget Act section 904(e), demonstrating that a budget resolution can in effect amend the Budget Act.<sup>3331</sup> The budget resolution for fiscal year 2008 provided: “Notwithstanding any provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, subsections (c)(2) and (d)(3) of section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 shall remain in effect for purposes of Senate enforcement through September 30, 2017 . . . .”<sup>3332</sup> Similarly, the budget resolution for fiscal year 2016 provided: “Notwithstanding any provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621 et seq.), subsections (c)(2) and (d)(3) of section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621 note) shall remain in effect for purposes of Senate enforcement through September 30, 2025.”<sup>3333</sup>

Similarly, the budget resolution for fiscal year 2008 negated a section of the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Hurricane Recovery, 2006,<sup>3334</sup> that set forth discretionary caps for Fiscal Year 2007, stating: “Section 7035 of Public Law 109-234 shall no longer apply in the Senate.”<sup>3335</sup>

In Riddick’s Senate Procedure, under the heading “Rulemaking Power,” the Parliamentarian noted: “The Congress has, on several occasions, missed deadlines set out in the Budget Act for the adoption of either budget resolutions or reconciliation bills.”<sup>3336</sup> Thus Congress can exercise its rulemaking power through inaction as well as action.

EXERCISE OF RULEMAKING POWERS

SEC. 904. (a) The provisions of this title (except section 905) and of titles I, III, and IV and the provisions of sections 606, 701, 703, and 1017 are enacted by the Congress —

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, or of that House to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to such House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.<sup>3337</sup>

The Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 added titles V and VI (except section 601(a)) to the list of matters designated as exercises of rulemaking authority, so that section 904(a) then read:

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the House of Representatives and the Senate . . . .<sup>3338</sup>

In 1996, the Line Item Veto Act added sections 1025 and 1027 to the list of matters designated as exercises of rulemaking authority, but then that Act also sunsetted those changes on January 1, 2005, so that the Line Item Veto Act left no enduring change to section 904(a).<sup>3339</sup>

Waiver

In Riddick's Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian described the waiver process:

The provisions of titles III and IV of the Budget Act may be waived by motion. In some cases a super majority vote of three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn has been required for the adoption of such a waiver, or to overturn a ruling of the Chair.<sup>3369</sup>

In Riddick's Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian discussed debate under this section<sup>3370</sup>:

A motion to waive a section of the Budget Act, pursuant to section 904(b) of that Act, was held by the Chair to be debatable.<sup>[3371]</sup>

A point of order that a bill violates the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is not debatable, but a motion to waive that Act or specific sections thereof for the consideration of a bill is a debatable proposition.<sup>[3372]</sup>

After debate has concluded on an amendment which was considered under a time agreement which was silent on the question of debatable motions, a motion to waive certain provisions of the Budget Act made in response to a point of order, is not debatable.<sup>[3373]</sup>

In Riddick's Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian noted, "Motions to waive titles III and IV may be tabled."<sup>3374</sup> And a Senator may move to table a pending appeal from the ruling of the Chair.<sup>3375</sup>

Motions to waive are amendable. The Parliamentarian has written: "Motions to waive budget act/budget resolution discipline are amendable in 2 degrees, so a Senator could attempt to isolate some variation of violations and provisions subject to such violations to be the object of the waiver.”<sup>3376</sup>

Thus, in 1983, the Senate considered an amendment to broaden a pending motion to waive by adding at the end of the motion to waive: “Further under section 904(b) I move to waive the relevant sections contained in titles 3 or 4 of the Budget Act for this amendment on this bill or any other bill considered by the Senate in this session of Congress.”<sup>3377</sup> The Senate tabled that amendment to the pending motion to waive.<sup>3378</sup>

Again, in 1987, after Budget Committee Chair Lawton Chiles moved to waive the Budget Act for his amendment, Senator Pete Domenici offered an amendment to the Chiles motion to waive, saying:

Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the Chiles motion. I move that the appropriate provisions of the Budget Act as referred to by the chairman be waived as to the pending Chiles amendment and as to the to-be-offered Domenici amendment and that the motion apply to both amendments.<sup>3379</sup>

Senator Chiles argued that the Domenici amendment was out of order under a previous order that precluded amendments to amendments, but the Presiding Officer responded that “the unanimous-consent agreement precluded amendments to amendments” and “did not preclude an amendment to a motion.”<sup>3380</sup> The Senate tabled the amendment to the motion to waive.<sup>3381</sup>

The Parliamentarian’s office has noted as a precedent:

When a point of order has been made against a bill under the provisions of a budget resolution, and a motion to waive that provision is pending, an amendment to the bill is not in order absent unanimous consent.

A motion to waive the Congressional Budget Act is amendable.<sup>3382</sup>

On October 26, [1993], the Senate was considering H.R. 3167, An Act to extend the emergency unemployment compensation program, to establish a system of worker profiling, and for other purposes. Mr. Nickles (of Oklahoma) raised a point of order against the bill under section 12(c) of H. Con. Res. 64, a concurrent resolution setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal years 1994–1998. Mr. Moynihan (of New York) moved to waive the Congressional Budget Act and section 12(c) of H. Con. Res. 64. Under a previous order, debate on the motion to waive was limited to one hour, equally divided in the usual form. Following expiration of that time, the Senate rejected the motion to waive by a vote of 59 yeas to 38 nays. Then, in response to a series of parliamentary inquiries, the Presiding Officer advised that because debate time had expired on the motion to waive, the motion to reconsider the motion to waive would also not be debatable; that when a motion to waive is pending, an amendment to the bill would not be in order without unanimous consent; and that a motion to waive the Congressional Budget Act is amendable.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, according to the Congressional Budget Office score, H.R. 3167 increases the deficit by $1.04 billion in fiscal year 1994.

Therefore, pursuant to section 12(c) of House Concurrent Resolution 64, the first concurrent budget resolution for fiscal year 1994, I raise a point of order that H.R. 3167 would increase the deficit in fiscal year 1994 beyond the level provided for in that resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. Breaux of Louisiana]. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move to waive the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and section 12 of the budget resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 64, for the pending bill, H.R. 3167, in the form received by the Senate, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, debate on this motion to waive the Budget Act is limited to 1 hour, which will be equally divided and controlled in the usual form.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will pay attention to this debate and realize that we are debating not just a point of order, but we are debating several important budget issues.

The point of order I just made was created by the concurrent resolution on the budget that passed earlier this year. Maybe a lot of our colleagues are not aware of this point of order, but this is part of the Senate budget resolution that passed earlier this year enforcing pay-as-you-go budgeting. I will read from the resolution. It says:

Any time after the enactment of the reconciliation bill, pursuant to section 7 of this resolution, it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that would increase the deficit in this resolution for any fiscal year through fiscal year 1998.

* * *

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. Dorgan of North Dakota]. The business before the Senate is the question on the motion to waive the Budget Act made by the Senator from New York. The yeas and nays have been previously ordered. A three-fifths vote is required. The clerk will call the roll.

* * *

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mrs. Boxer of California]. On this question, the yeas are 59, the nays are 38. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. FORD. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as Senator Moynihan said, there are disagreements. We do not accept the characterizations that the bill would add $1 billion to the debt. That is the kind of thing we now have to try to resolve in a way both sides can agree on, if that is possible.

Both the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from New York have represented to myself and the minority leader that they are prepared to make a good faith effort to do that; that they need about a day to go over it to run some numbers with the help of the committee staff, and others.

Accordingly, I now ask unanimous consent that the pending matter be set aside until 3 p.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BUMPERS. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, Mr. President. I would like to ask the majority leader, what is the status of the bill right now if it is not set aside?

Mr. MITCHELL. The status of the bill is that a motion to reconsider the vote has been made.

I will make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair as to whether or not that is, in fact, a nondebatable motion which, upon returning to the bill, the Senate would immediately vote on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. It is a nondebatable motion.

Mr. BUMPERS. And if the motion to reconsider failed, the bill is dead?

Mr. MITCHELL. Since 59 Senators voted to waive the Budget Act, and it takes only 51 to gain reconsideration, the likely outcome is that the motion to reconsider would prevail and we would then have another vote on the motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to the point of order.

I ask the Chair whether that is a correct interpretation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. Therefore, we would be right back in an hour or so where we were on this vote.

Now, it is possible that we might get 60 or 61. It is also possible we might get 56 or 57. A very clear majority of the Senate favors proceeding with the bill, but under the rules 60 votes are necessary to obtain a point of order, as was the case on the previous point of order. The vote on the previous point of order I think was 50 to 44. But that did not prevail because the 60 votes were needed.

Mr. BUMPERS. Further inquiry, Mr. President, of the majority leader. Assuming we do get 51 votes to reconsider, at that point is the only permissible business of the Senate then a renewal of the motion of the Senator from New York to waive the Budget Act?

Mr. MITCHELL. I direct that question to the Chair. I believe that would be the pending business—in the absence of unanimous consent to set that aside, that would be the case, but I inquire of the Chair.

I will restate the question. The Senator has asked, if the motion to reconsider is approved by a majority of the Senate, at that point is the pending matter the motion to waive the Budget Act, or could other business such as another amendment be offered at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question at that point would be the motion to waive the Budget Act.

Mr. MITCHELL. And so it would then take consent for the Senator, or any other Senator, to offer an amendment.

* * *

Mr. BUMPERS. One further inquiry, Mr. President. The motion to waive, is that an amendable motion?

Mr. MITCHELL. I believe it is not, but I direct my inquiry to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Motions to waive are amendable.

I believe the Senator asked about debatable.

Mr. BUMPERS. Did I say debatable?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. No, amendable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Motions to waive are amendable.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request propounded by the Majority Leader? If not, that will be the order of the Senate. The pending motion is set aside until 3 p.m. tomorrow.<sup>3383</sup>

Motions to waive are sometimes divisible. The Parliamentarian has written: "I'm not conceding that any particular motion to waive is divisible. It would depend on how such a motion were drafted."<sup>3384</sup>

Once a motion to waive has failed, the Presiding Officer will rule, and entering a motion to reconsider the failed motion to waive does not postpone the ruling. Thus the Parliamentarian's office has noted as a precedent: "The Presiding Officer sustained a point of order that had been raised against an amendment to a budget resolution, notwithstanding that a Senator had entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion to waive the Congressional Budget Act failed."<sup>3385</sup> The Parliamentarian's office recorded:

On May 23, 1996, the Senate was considering S.Con.Res. 57, an original concurre[nt] resolution setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal years 1997, 1998, 1999, 2000, 2001 and 2002, to which was pending Amdt. No. 4015, proposed by Mr. Murkowski (of Alaska). Mr. Exon (of Nebraska) raised a point of order that the amendment was not germane in violation of §305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act. Mr. Domenici (of New Mexico) moved to waive that section of the Congressional Budget Act for consideration of the amendment, which failed by a vote of 57 yeas to 41 nays. After switching his vote so as to have voted with the prevailing side, Mr. Domenici entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion to waive failed. Notwithstanding the entering of the motion, the Presiding Officer sustained the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the Murkowski amendment would create a new point of order that would deprive the minority of its right to amend with the sense-of-the-Senate language. Under the amendment, the majority could report out any sense-of-the-Senate language it wanted, but no Senator could offer a sense-of-the-Senate amendment to change that language or add to it.

Mr. President, I yield back the balance of my time. I raise a point of order that the pending amendment is not germane and it violates section 305(b) of the Congressional Budget Act.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to waive section 305(b) of the Budget Act for the consideration of the Murkowski amendment 4015.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. Coverdell of Georgia]. Are there any Senators still wishing to vote?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I change my vote from “aye” to “no.”

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the ayes are 57, the nays are 41. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn, not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion to waive the budget act for the consideration of the Murkowski amendment was defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is entered for future consideration. However, the motion having failed to be approved at this time, the Chair will rule on the motion—on the point of order. The rights of Senators are reserved to move in the future to proceed to the motion to reconsider.

The Chair will rule at this time that the amendment is not germane. The point of order is sustained. The amendment falls at this time.<sup>3386</sup>

The Parliamentarian's office has noted as a precedent: "A motion to waive a point of order raised under the Congressional Budget Act need not be submitted in writing."<sup>3387</sup> The Parliamentarian's office recorded:

On February 12, 2004, the Senate was considering S. 1072, the Safe, Accountable, Flexible, and Efficient Transportation Equity Act of 2004, to which was pending a substitute amendment, Amdt. No. 2285, offered by Mr. Inhofe (of Oklahoma). Cloture had been invoked on the substitute amendment by a vote of 86 yeas to 11 nays. Mr. McCain (of Arizona) raised a point of order that the substitute amendment increased spending in the transportation bill in excess of the allocations under the budget resolution to the Finance, Banking, and Commerce Committees, in violation of §302 of the Congressional Budget Act (CBA). Mr. Bond (of Missouri) moved to waive all points of order under the CBA for consideration of the substitute—as currently constituted—and the underlying bill, as amended with the substitute. In response to an inquiry from Mr. McCain, the Presiding Officer responded that the motion to waive was not required to be in writing. Mr. McCain asked that it be sent to the desk, to which request Mr. Bond complied.

Mr. McCain.

Therefore, I raise the point of order against the substitute amendment pursuant to section 302(f) of the Budget Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. Brownback of Kansas]. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Pursuant to section 904, I move to waive all Budget Act points of order for consideration of the pending substitute in its current status and the underlying bill as amended by the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to waive is debatable.

Mr. McCain. Parliamentary inquiry: Doesn't it have to be sent to the desk?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, the motion does not have to be in writing.

Mr. McCain. I ask for it to be sent to the desk.<sup>3388</sup>

The Parliamentarian's office has noted an instance of another waiver as a precedent, writing, "The Senate waived the relevant provisions of the Congressional Budget Act for consideration of a conference report, rendering moot a § 311(b) point of order under S. Con. Res. 70 of the 110th Congress that the conference report increased long-term deficits."<sup>3389</sup> Thus, the Parliamentarian's office reports:

On July 15, 2010, the Senate was considering the conference report to accompany H.R. 4173, the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act. Mr. Gregg (of New Hampshire) raised a point of order that the conference report would cause an increase in long-term deficits, in violation of §311(b) of S. Con. Res. 70 (110th). Mr. Dodd (of Connecticut) moved to waive all applicable budget points of order for consideration of the conference report, which was agreed to by a vote of 60 yeas to 39 nays.<sup>3390</sup>

In Riddick's Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian further discussed precedents under this subsection<sup>3391</sup>:

Waive Budget Act by Resolution and Motion:

A motion to waive any of the provisions of titles III or IV of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (in this instance section 311) may be made after a point of order under that section has been made, is debatable, stays a ruling on the point of order, and if agreed to the point of order is not ruled upon but the amendment is disposed of on its merits.<sup>[3392]</sup>

A motion to waive any provision of titles III or IV of the Congressional Budget Act may be made under section 904(b) of that act, and is privileged and debatable.<sup>[3393]</sup> A motion to waive or suspend a provision of the Budget Act, as provided for under section 904(b) is a debatable motion.<sup>[3394]</sup> A motion to waive a provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 under section 904(b) of that Act for the consideration of a conference report is debatable without a general statutory time limitation.<sup>[3395]</sup> However, after debate has concluded on an amendment which was considered under a time agreement which was silent on the question of debatable motions, a motion to waive certain provisions of the Budget Act made in response to a point of order, is not debatable.<sup>[3396]</sup>

A motion to waive a provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for the consideration of an amendment may not be made while time remains on that amendment.<sup>[3397]</sup> However, once a point of order has been ruled on by the Chair, it is too late to move to waive the provision of the Budget Act upon which the point of order was based.<sup>[3398]</sup>

A Senator who was recognized by the Chair in his own right does not lose the floor upon making a parliamentary inquiry, so another Senator may not move to waive a provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 upon hearing the answer to the inquiry if the first Senator wishes to hold the floor.<sup>[3399]</sup>

A motion to waive provisions of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 pursuant to section 904(b) of that Act may be modified by its sponsor as a matter of right, if no Senate action has occurred thereon.<sup>[3400]</sup> Such motion could only be modified by its sponsor, and only by unanimous consent if the yeas and nays had been ordered on it.<sup>[3401]</sup>

A motion made under section 904(b) of the Budget Act is amendable.<sup>[3402]</sup>

A motion under section 904(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 made in response to a point of order against an amendment, which was drafted to waive the germaneness requirement of the Budget Act without specifying the object of that motion, would waive that requirement without restriction. If a motion to waive the germaneness provision of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for the consideration of “the pending amendment” were agreed to, it would be in order thereafter to consider an amendment to that amendment that was germane either to it or the bill,<sup>[3403]</sup> since an amendment which is either germane to an amendment for which the germaneness requirement of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 was waived or germane to the bill itself, would be considered germane.<sup>[3404]</sup>

The Chair has stated in response to a parliamentary inquiry that a motion to waive a section of the Budget Act for the consideration of a measure would apply to the bill “as it is now before the Senate.” In response to a further inquiry, the Chair indicated that if new budget or spending authority were proposed in an amendment, an additional waiver would be necessary.<sup>[3405]</sup>

A single waiver resolution can waive more than one section of the Congressional Budget Act.<sup>[3406]</sup>

A motion under section 904(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 may waive provisions of that Act for a bill and “any amendments thereto,”<sup>[3407]</sup> or for a bill and “any relevant amendments thereto.”<sup>[3408]</sup>

A motion under section 904(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 may be phrased to waive “the relevant portions” of titles III and IV of that Act, and need not refer to a specific section.<sup>[3409]</sup> A motion to waive provisions of the Budget Act of 1974 made under section 904(b) of that Act is subject to amendment to extend the effect of the waiver to “any other bill considered by the Senate” in that session of Congress.<sup>[3410]</sup> A motion made under section 904(b) of the Budget Act of 1974 may waive more than one provision of that act and may be directed at several matters.<sup>[3411]</sup> A motion to waive provisions of the Budget Act for consideration of a bill may be general or identify specific sections to be waived.<sup>[3412]</sup> A motion to waive under this section has been subject to an amendment to make the motion applicable to the pending amendment as well as an amendment to be offered.<sup>[3413]</sup>

A single motion has been made to waive various provisions of title III of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and a provision of law which provided for a point of order against inclusion of extraneous matter in reconciliation bills (the “Byrd Rule”) for the consideration of three separate amendments to a reconciliation bill.<sup>[3414]</sup>

Although motions to waive generally require a majority vote for their adoption, a motion to waive section 302(f) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, requires a vote of three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn.<sup>[3415]</sup> A vote of three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn is also required to waive the germaneness requirement contained in section 305(b)(2) of the act, as amended.<sup>[3416]</sup> In addition, a vote of three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn is required to adopt a motion to waive various sections of the Budget Act when some sections require a majority vote and other sections require three-fifths for their respective waivers.<sup>[3417]</sup>

When a motion is made under section 904(b) of the Budget Act to waive provisions of titles III and IV of that Act in response to a point of order, the withdrawal of the point of order renders the motion to waive moot.<sup>[3418]</sup>

It is permissible to move pursuant to section 904(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to waive the requirement of germaneness of amendments offered to reconciliation bills. During the consideration of a reconciliation bill, a motion to waive provisions of the Budget Act offered in response to a point of order is debatable for 1 hour under the Act.<sup>[3419]</sup> A motion under section 904(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 when made during the consideration of a reconciliation bill, is debatable for 1 hour as specified by sections 310(e) and 305(b) of that Act, and is subject to a motion to table when that time has expired or been yielded back.<sup>[3420]</sup>

A point of order will lie against a motion to recommit a bill to a committee with instructions that the bill be reported back forthwith with specified amendments, if the effect of the motion is to produce a violation of section 311(a) of the Budget Act of 1974 (in this case to cause revenues to fall below the floor specified in the second concurrent resolution on the budget for the relevant fiscal year). If such point of order were raised, a motion to waive the Budget Act could be made, and that motion would be debatable.<sup>[3421]</sup>

Note the following instances where attempts were made to waive certain sections of the Budget Act:

Any bill or amendment which violates section 303(a) of the Budget Act is subject to a point of order, but can be considered by the Senate if waiver resolutions have been submitted and agreed to.<sup>[3422]</sup> When a Senator calls up an amendment which meets the definition of an entitlement under section 401(c)(2)(C) of the Budget Act, and it violates section 303(a) of the act, he may move under section 904(b) of the Act that the provisions of section 303(a) be waived in order that his amendment might be considered.<sup>[3423]</sup> On one occasion, waiver resolutions submitted by individual Senators (not reported by other committees for reference to the Budget Committee), were referred to the Budget Committee, and after being reported were adopted by the Senate to waive section 303(a) of the Act to permit the consideration of specified amendments to one or more of several specified bills.<sup>[3424]</sup>

Under section 904(b) of the Budget Act, section 306 of the Act is subject to a motion to waive, but such a motion to waive may be tabled, and if it is tabled the Chair must then rule on a point of order made against an amendment on the grounds that it contained subject matter within the jurisdiction of the Budget Committee.<sup>[3425]</sup>

Section 311 of the Budget Act as originally enacted was waived by a majority vote in order to consider a Food Stamp Supplemental Appropriations Act, the waiver being necessary because the bill would have caused a breach in the outlay ceiling for the current fiscal year.<sup>[3426]</sup> After the act was amended to require a supermajority to waive section 311, the Senate by a three-fifths majority waived that section for the consideration of a committee amendment to a supplemental appropriations bill which would have limited the use of funds in the instant bill or any other act for the purpose of implementing a certain Internal Revenue Service regulation with a resulting loss of revenues in a fiscal year at a time when revenues for that fiscal year were below the level set out in the applicable budget resolution for that year.<sup>[3427]</sup>

The Senate has waived section 401(b) of the Congressional Budget Act for the consideration of an amendment to be effective on the last day of the current fiscal year, which would provide an entitlement to trade adjustment assistance for certain workers.<sup>[3428]</sup>

The Chair sustained a point of order made under section 311(a) of Budget Act, after a motion to waive that section had failed to obtain the 60 votes necessary for adoption (56 yeas, 42 nays), against an amendment which proposed to delay for one year the effective date of a section of the Internal Revenue Code, which was producing revenues in the current fiscal year, since this would have caused revenues to fall further below the revenue floor for that fiscal year.<sup>[3429]</sup>

The Senate has adopted a motion to waive titles III and IV of the Budget Act for the consideration of a bill.<sup>[3430]</sup> The Senate has adopted a motion to waive section 303(a) of the Budget Act for the consideration of a committee amendment which created an entitlement to begin in a fiscal year before the concurrent resolution on the budget for that fiscal year had been agreed to.<sup>[3431]</sup>

The Senate has waived the provisions of titles III and IV of the Budget Act, after a point of order was made under section 311(a) of the Act against the consideration of a bill (that had been introduced and placed on the Calendar without being referred to a committee) which would have caused a further breach in the revenue floor for that fiscal year.<sup>[3432]</sup>

The Senate adopted a motion to waive the relevant sections of the Budget Act, in response to a point of order made against a bill granting a pay increase to Members of the House of Representatives and Federal judges.<sup>[3433]</sup>

The Senate agreed to a motion to waive section 311(a) of the Budget Act for the consideration of an amendment that repealed a provision of law imposing an obligation ceiling on certain State Department operating accounts, that had the effect of breaching the maximum deficit amount for that fiscal year.<sup>[3434]</sup>

Appeals<sup>3466</sup>

In Riddick's Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian described the Budget Act appeal process<sup>3467</sup>:

Appeals From the Decision of the Chair:

Debate on appeals with respect to the consideration of budget resolutions and reconciliation bills and amendments and motions relating thereto is limited to one hour,<sup>[3468]</sup> and the same limitation on debate also applies during the consideration of rescission bills.<sup>[3469]</sup>

On June 21, 1976, when a point of order was made against an amendment as being contrary to the provisions of the Budget Act, the Chair sustained the point of order from which an appeal was taken, and the Chair informed the Senate pursuant to a parliamentary inquiry that an appeal from the ruling of the Chair was debatable.<sup>[3470]</sup>

Impoundment

In commenting on the Constitution’s mandate that the President “take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed,”<sup>3476</sup> the Congressional Research Service’s annotation of the Constitution discusses the history of impoundment<sup>3477</sup>:

In his Third Annual Message to Congress, President Jefferson established the first faint outline of what years later became a major controversy. Reporting that $50,000 in funds which Congress had appropriated for fifteen gunboats on the Mississippi remained unexpended, the President stated that a “favorable and peaceful turn of affairs on the Mississippi rendered an immediate execution of the law unnecessary. . . .” But he was not refusing to expend the money, only delaying action to obtain improved gunboats; a year later, he told Congress that the money was being spent and gunboats were being obtained.<sup>[3478]</sup> A few other instances of deferrals or refusals to spend occurred in the Nineteenth and early Twentieth Centuries, but it was only with the Administration of President Franklin Roosevelt that a President refused to spend moneys for the purposes appropriated. Succeeding Presidents expanded upon these precedents, and in the Nixon Administration a well-formulated plan of impoundments was executed in order to reduce public spending and to negate programs established by congressional legislation.<sup>[3479]</sup>

Impoundment<sup>[3480]</sup> was defended by Administration spokesmen as being a power derived from the President's executive powers and particularly from his obligation to see to the faithful execution of the laws, i.e., his discretion in the manner of execution. The President, the argument went, is responsible for deciding when two conflicting goals of Congress can be harmonized and when one must give way, when, for example, congressional desire to spend certain moneys must yield to congressional wishes to see price and wage stability. In some respects, impoundment was said or implied to flow from certain inherent executive powers that repose in any President. Finally, statutory support was sought; certain laws were said to confer discretion to withhold spending, and it was argued that congressional spending programs are discretionary rather than mandatory.<sup>[3481]</sup>

On the other hand, it was argued that Congress's powers under Article I, § 8, were fully adequate to support its decision to authorize certain programs, to determine the amount of funds to be spent on them, and to mandate the Executive to execute the laws. Permitting the President to impound appropriated funds allowed him the power of item veto, which he does not have, and denied Congress the opportunity to override his veto of bills enacted by Congress. In particular, the power of Congress to compel the President to spend appropriated moneys was said to derive from Congress's power "to make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution" the enumerated powers of Congress

There is no satisfactory definition of impoundment. Legislation enacted by Congress uses the phrase deferral of budget authority which is defined to include: (A) withholding or delaying the obligation or expenditure of budget authority (whether by establishing reserves or otherwise) provided for projects or activities; or (B) any other type of Executive action or inaction which effectively precludes the obligation or expenditure of budget authority, including authority to obligate by contract in advance of appropriations as specifically authorized by law. 2 U.S.C. § 682(1).

and “all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof.”<sup>[3482]</sup>

The President’s decision to impound large amounts of appropriated funds led to two approaches to curtail the power. First, many persons and organizations, with a reasonable expectation of receipt of the impounded funds upon their release, brought large numbers of suits; with a few exceptions, these suits resulted in decisions denying the President either constitutional or statutory power to decline to spend or obligate funds, and the Supreme Court, presented with only statutory arguments by the Administration, held that no discretion existed under the particular statute to withhold allotments of funds to the states.<sup>[3483]</sup> Second, Congress in the course of revising its own manner of appropriating funds in accordance with budgetary responsibility provided for mandatory reporting of impoundments to Congress, for congressional disapproval of impoundments, and for court actions by the Comptroller General to compel spending or obligation of funds.<sup>[3484]</sup>

Generally speaking, the law recognized two types of impoundments: “routine” or “programmatic” reservations of budget authority to provide for the inevitable contingencies that arise in administering congressionally-funded programs and “policy” decisions that are ordinarily intended to advance the broader fiscal or other policy objectives of the executive branch contrary to congressional wishes in appropriating funds in the first place.

Routine reservations were to come under the terms of a revised Anti-Deficiency Act.<sup>[3485]</sup> Prior to its amendment, this law had permitted the President to “apportion” funds “to provide for contingencies, or to effect savings whenever savings are made possible by or through changes in requirements, greater efficiency of operations, or other developments subsequent to the date on which such appropriation was made available.” President Nixon had relied on this “other developments” language as authorization to impound, for what in essence were policy reasons.<sup>[3486]</sup> Congress deleted the controverted clause and retained the other language to authorize reservations to maintain funds for contingencies and to effect savings made possible in carrying out the program; it added a clause permitting reserves as specifically provided by law.<sup>[3487]</sup>

“Policy” impoundments were to be reported to Congress by the President as permanent rescissions and, perhaps, as temporary deferrals.<sup>[3488]</sup> Rescissions are merely recommendations or proposals of the President and must be authorized by a bill or joint resolution, or, after 45 days from the presidential message, the funds must be made available for obligation.<sup>[3489]</sup> Temporary deferrals of budget authority for less than a full fiscal year, as provided in the 1974 law, were to be effective unless either the House of Representatives or the Senate passed a resolution of disapproval.<sup>[3490]</sup> With the decision in INS v. Chadha,<sup>[3491]</sup> voiding as unconstitutional the one-House legislative veto, it was evident that the veto provision in the deferral section of the Impoundment Control Act was no longer viable. An Administration effort to utilize the section, minus the veto device, was thwarted by court action, in which, applying established severability analysis, the court held that Congress would not have enacted the deferral provision in the absence of power to police its exercise through the veto.<sup>[3492]</sup> Thus, the entire deferral section was inoperative. Congress, in 1987, enacted a more restricted authority, limited to deferrals only for those purposes set out in the Anti-Deficiency Act.<sup>[3493]</sup>

With passage of the Act, the constitutional issues faded into the background; Presidents regularly reported rescission proposals, and Congress responded by enacting its own rescissions, usually topping the Presidents’. The entire field was, of course, confounded by the application of the other part of the 1974 law, the Budget Act, which restructured how budgets were received and acted on in Congress, and by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.<sup>[3494]</sup> This latter law was designed as a deficit-reduction forcing mechanism, so that unless President and Congress cooperate each year to reduce the deficit by prescribed amounts, a “sequestration” order would reduce funds down to a mandated figure.<sup>[3495]</sup> Dissatisfaction with the amount of deficit reduction continues to stimulate discussion of other means, such as “expedited” rescission and the line-item veto, many of which may raise some constitutional issues.

In Riddick’s Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian summarized the Impoundment Control Act:

Title X of the Act also sets out a procedure for the control of impoundments. Pursuant to the Act, the President must notify Congress whenever he proposes a rescission or deferral of funds. If Congress does not pass a rescission bill within 45 days of continuous session, the President must release all funds proposed for rescission. The President may defer funding within a particular fiscal year, subject to the enactment of a measure disapproving the deferral.<sup>3496</sup>

During Senate consideration of what would become the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act, the Chair of the committee of jurisdiction, the Government Operations Committee, Senator Sam Ervin, had this colloquy with Senator Warren Magnuson, who 3 years later would chair the Appropriations Committee:

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to express my support for the efforts of the senior Senator from North Carolina [Senator Ervin] in his efforts to draft legislation designed to reaffirm congressional intent in the whole area that has come to be known as “impoundments.”

I understand that title X of the Budget Reform Act of 1974 is intended to reaffirm and reassert the congressional intent that the President shall be prohibited from impoundments or any such activities involving the refusal to obligate to the full extent, or any action with similar effect, the appropriations provided by the Congress. This is my understanding of title X. Does the Senator believe and intend that title X should resolve this impoundment problem?

Mr. ERVIN. The Senator from Washington [Senator Magnuson] is correct in his statement that title X is intended to reach the problem of impoundment, reserves, and apportionments in all its forms.

The purpose of title X is to define, clarify, and thereby limit the authority under which the President and any other officer or employee of the executive branch may take any action which places appropriated funds in reserve, or has that effect for any period of time.

I would like to emphasize the intent of the committee that the word "reserve" is to be interpreted in its broadest sense. As the Senator from Washington knows, the President and his officers have become increasingly resourceful at making new interpretations of the intent of the Antideficiency Act as well as the appropriations acts insofar as they concern administration arguments which would allow the President to legally impound funds. Fortunately, the Federal courts have recognized consistently that Congress has intended that appropriations be obligated and expended and have not allowed semantic arguments of the executive branch to frustrate such congressional intent.

In this respect, the committee intends the provisions of title X to reach all the past and future mechanisms which this President or any other Executive has devised or will devise.

We intend the language in title X to mean any action by the executive branch which would have the effect of establishing a reserve, or otherwise delaying or making unavailable for obligation or expenditure appropriations made by the Congress in a manner inconsistent with achieving the full scope, intent, and objectives of Congress in enacting that appropriation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I fully agree and support the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, and I wish to insure that the record clearly reflects that the interpretation and purpose of the committee is the same as the entire Senate, if and when title X becomes the law of the land.

I am particularly concerned that the President or any other member of the executive branch not be allowed to adopt a narrow interpretation of the word "reserves" as it appears in title X. Is it the intent of the committee that "reserves" be interpreted to mean any action which has the effect of establishing a budgetary reserve? This would include, for example, the delaying of the obligation of appropriated funds by the impoundment of positions, which is a new variation of the impoundment theme now being proposed and contemplated in the executive branch.

One way this works is to fire or transfer the staff so as to so disorganize the grant-processing organization of a department or agency as to make it impossible to award the grants and obligate the funds before the close of the fiscal year. The net effect is the same impoundment.

Another variation of impoundment that is being proposed by some executive agencies is called forward funding or multiple-year grant periods. One way this works is for an agency to obligate the funds in a way that spreads the expenditure over a period of years instead of the usual practice of awarding funding for 12-month grants. The net effect is that the level of funding is lowered – another devious method of impoundment.

So, I ask the distinguished Senator, is it the intent of the committee that “reserves” be interpreted to mean any action which has the same effect as establishing a budgetary reserve?

Mr. ERVIN. Yes. The phrase “In apportioning any appropriation, reserves” clearly encompasses any effort or action by the executive branch which has the effect of delaying the appropriation, obligation, or expenditure of funds, or which has the effect of reducing the program level below the level contemplated by the Congress in the enactment of an appropriations bill or budget authority. Any such delay in expenditure of appropriations is, in effect, the creation of a “reserve” within the meaning of title X of the bill.

As the Senator knows, the administration proposed rescission of $328.8 million in funds in the fiscal 1974 budget that had been appropriated by Congress for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Department of Labor. The administration apportioned the funds to the agencies, with instructions not to obligate or spend the money until Congress acted on the rescission proposals.

Since the funds were apportioned, and thus not in a “budgetary reserve,” the Office of Management and Budget did not include those funds in its report on “impoundments.” But the proposed rescissions were functionally identical to the withholding of funds so reported, thus delaying by many months the implementation of prog[r]ams enacted and funded by Congress. The committee does not countenance such practices. The apportionment, obligation, contracting, or personnel practices of the executive branch cannot be used as a method of withholding funds. All such actions are properly characterized as having the effect of establishment of a “reserve” and fall within the mandate and directives of title X.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for his comments. It is reassuring to know that the clear congressional intent in the word “reserve” as used in title X is to include any action by any executive branch officer which has the same effect as the establishment of a budgetary reserve of appropriated funds.

Is it correct to say that under title X, the executive branch may not take any action to delay or withhold appropriations or budget authority, whatever the method or semantic description of the method?

Mr. ERVIN. That is correct.<sup>3497</sup>

During Senate debate on the conference report for the Act, Senator Ervin explained the impoundment provisions of the conference report:

The impoundment of appropriated funds by the President—a highly controversial issue that has plagued the Congress for many years—is dealt with by way of an effective compromise.

I have worked on this issue for the past several years, and, I am extremely pleased that the major concerns of each House have been taken care of in title X of the act, which I believe will provide a sound and workable solution to the problem.

The impoundment title is based on the assumption that the President has no power under the Constitution to impound lawfully appropriated funds in the absence of a delegation of such authority by the Congress. However, it recognizes that there are times when the proper exercise of the executive function might make the deferral or rescission of budget authority the best public policy. In order to meet these situations, the title deals with three types of executive actions and places restrictions on each of them.

First, it retains the Senate's modification to the Antideficiency Act which provides for routine reservations of budget authority "solely to provide for contingencies, or to effect savings whenever savings are made possible by or through changes in requirements or greater efficiency of operations." The so-called other developments clause of the Antideficiency Act—which has been used by the Executive to justify many impoundments—is deleted, and reservations are restricted to those made under the provisions of that act or other laws.

Second, it requires the President to request the rescission of all or part of an appropriation which he determines is unnecessary to carry out the full objectives and scope of a program or which should not be obligated for fiscal policy or other reasons, including the termination of programs. In other words, both Houses of Congress must pass a rescission bill in order for the President to terminate or cancel a program or to delay the obligation of 1-year appropriations to the end of the fiscal year in which they are available.

Third, it delegates to the President a limited authority to defer the obligation of budget authority for a period not to exceed the expiration of the fiscal year in which they are deferred. Deferrals by the President include any delay or withholding of budget authority, whether by establishing reserves or otherwise. The President must notify Congress that he proposes to defer budget authority, and the deferral will be subject to the disapproval of either House of Congress by adoption of an "impoundment resolution." If either House passes a resolution of disapproval at any time, the President is thereby required to make the budget authority available for obligation.

Proposed rescissions and deferrals will be submitted to Congress by special message which will be published as a House or Senate document and in the Federal Register. They will be delivered to the Comptroller General and be referred to the appropriate committees. Both rescission bills and impoundment resolutions disapproving proposed deferrals will be referred to the appropriate committees, with provision for their discharge by petition after 25 days.

The Comptroller General will be granted authority to sue in the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia to enforce the provisions of the title, using attorneys of his own choosing, 25 days after he gives notice to Congress. This authority is not intended to infringe upon the right of any other party to initiate litigation. The Comptroller General also will be charged with the responsibility of monitoring the Executive and reporting to Congress on any deferrals, reservations, or impoundments which are not reported by a special message.

A disclaimer section directs that nothing in the impoundment title should be construed as ratifying or approving any past or present impoundment, affecting the claims or defenses of any party to litigation concerning any impoundment, or asserting or conceding the constitutional powers or limitations of either the Congress or the President. The disclaimer also disavows any intention by Congress to supersede any law which requires the mandatory obligation of budget authority, since several such statutes have been enacted in response to the wholesale impoundment of funds appropriated for specific programs.

The President is required to notify Congress by the 10th of each month the amount of budget authority which is being reserved or deferred, including the amounts which he has proposed to be rescinded or deferred. These monthly reports will take the place of the present quarterly reports required by the Federal Impoundment and Information Act of 1972, as amended, which will be repealed.

The delegation to the President of authority to “defer” the obligation of budget authority for definite and limited periods of time is not the same as a wholesale license to “impound” as that term is commonly understood today. This is an important distinction because no authority is granted to terminate or cancel a program, whether by direct or indirect action, or by inaction, nor is the authority to defer granted for indefinite periods of time.

Mr. President, I firmly believe that the impoundment control and congressional budget procedures provided in this act are workable. They constitute the first major reform of the method of authorizing and appropriating funds in more than half a century, and they are necessarily complex. However, men of reason and good faith can make them work efficiently so that Congress can gain effective control over the financial resources of the Federal Government.

This act will not guarantee fiscal responsibility on the part of Congress and the Executive, but it will make that goal attainable by those who serve here in the future so that history will record this act as the most lasting achievement of the 93d Congress.<sup>3498</sup> in response to a parliamentary inquiry involving the right of the Senate to act on proposed legislation on rescissions when the time for the consideration of a rescission bill specified in the Act had expired, the Chair informed the Senate “that it is conceded that the timeframe provided for in the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 has elapsed, and in fact had elapsed before this body considered the bill. Notwithstanding this, it is the Chair’s view that Congress nevertheless has the power to act on a rescission bill irrespective of the Act, as the Act itself states in section 1001:

‘Nothing contained in this Act, or in any amendment made by this Act, shall be construed as —

(1) asserting or conceding the constitutional powers or limitations of either the Congress or the President; . . .’

“Therefore, it is the Chair’s view that this is simply a regular bill and conference report thereon and it is proper for the Senate to act on them, but that the provisions of the act relative to rescission bills and conference reports thereon do not obtain.”<sup>[3540]</sup> Thus rescission bills can either be defined under the Congressional Budget Act, in which case they are considered under the special procedures, or under Rule XXV, as amended, in which case they are treated as any other bill.<sup>[3541]</sup>

During the consideration of a bill on military construction appropriations for 1977, the Chair had an occasion, an amendment having been called up to the bill, to state to the Senate that rescissions offered in the form of an amendment from the floor are legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair further asserted that the Appropriations Committee could have put it in a rescinding provision, but an amendment offered from the floor to do that would be held to be legislation on an appropriation bill.

For that reason, he said, the point of order was sustained.

The Chair further stated that under the Budget and Impoundment Act, the Appropriations Committee is given the jurisdiction over rescissions, but this jurisdiction does not waive Rule XVI, paragraph 4, which precludes legislation on appropriation bills.<sup>[3542]</sup>

An amendment to restore the funding of medical schools involving appropriations enacted into law a previous year in a rescission bill does not give rise to a point of order under the Congressional Budget Act.<sup>[3543]</sup>

However, an amendment which would have stricken a proposed rescission was held (in the House) to provide additional budget authority and to cause additional budget outlays in excess of limitations contained in the concurrent resolution on the budget for a fiscal year and was therefore subject to a point of order under section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act.<sup>[3544]</sup>

No Withholding of Funds Through Their Date of Expiration—In 2018, the General Counsel of the Government Accountability Office issued an opinion stating:

Under limited circumstances, the [Impoundment Control Act (ICA)] allows the President to withhold amounts from obligation for up to 45 calendar days of continuous congressional session. See ICA, § 1012(b); 2 U.S.C. § 683(b). At issue here is whether the Act allows such a withholding of a fixed-period appropriation scheduled to expire within the prescribed 45-day period to continue through the date on which the funds would expire.

. . . [W]e conclude that the ICA does not permit the withholding of funds through their date of expiration. The statutory text and legislative history of the ICA, Supreme Court case law, and the overarching constitutional framework of the legislative and executive powers provide no basis to interpret the ICA as a mechanism by which the President may unilaterally abridge the enacted period of availability of a fixed-period appropriation. The Constitution vests in Congress the power of the purse, and Congress did not cede this important power through the ICA. Instead, the terms of the ICA are strictly limited. The ICA permits only the temporary withholding of budget authority and provides that unless Congress rescinds the amounts at issue, they must be made available for obligation.<sup>3545</sup>

The joint statement of managers accompanying the conference report on the Budget Act explained:

If the President determines that all or part of any budget authority will not be required to carry out the full objective or scope of programs, or that such budget authority should be rescinded for fiscal policy or other reasons, including the termination of authorized projects, or whenever all or part of budget authority provided for only one fiscal year (one-year money) is to be reserved from obligation for such fiscal year, he shall transmit a special message requesting a rescission of the budget authority. The message shall include the amount of budget authority involved; the appropriation account or agency affected; the reasons for rescission or placing the budget authority in reserve; the fiscal, economic, and budgetary effects; and all facts, circumstances, considerations, and effects of the proposed rescission or reservation. Unless both Houses of Congress complete action on a rescission bill within 45 days, the budget authority shall be made available for obligation.<sup>3547</sup> as days of continuous session, rescission proposals sometimes result in appropriated funds being withheld for up to 75 or more calendar days. Seriatim proposals covering the same subject matter have the effect of extending indefinitely the period of unavailability.

Senate Amendment

The Senate amendment (Section 230) adds language to Section 1012(b) to prohibit the Executive practice of submitting seriatim rescission messages covering similar matter when Congress fails to act on such proposals within the statutory 45-day period. The Senate amendment limits the Executive to one rescission proposal in any year regarding substantially the same budget authority.

Conference Agreement

The conference agreement amends Section 1012(b) of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 to prohibit proposals to rescind budget authority which were the object of a previous rescission proposal not accepted by Congress. The conferees intend that the President be allowed to propose one rescission for any given activity. If the rescission proposal for that activity is not agreed to by Congress, no further rescission proposal for that activity would be allowed during the availability of that appropriation.

The conference agreement is not meant to diminish the restriction on the Executive from the Senate amendment. The conferees intend that the conference agreement will cover cases in which the Executive seeks to rescind substantially the same budget authority, not just exactly the same budget authority.

The conferees intend that authority granted to the President under this Act regarding the sequestration process shall in no way augment the authority available to him, and the requirements imposed on him, under existing law regarding the deferral or rescission of funds.<sup>3549</sup>

Deferrals and rescissions of budget authority are governed by the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (which is title X of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974).

Deferrals of budget authority may occur whenever “the President, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the head of any department or agency of the United States, or any officer or employee of the United States proposes to defer any budget authority provided for a specific purpose or project” and the President notifies Congress of such deferral.<sup>[3576]</sup> However, such deferrals “shall be permissible only to provide for contingencies; to achieve savings made possible by or through changes in requirements or greater efficiency of operations; or as specifically provided by law * * * and, no officer or employee of the United States may defer any budget authority for any other purpose.”<sup>[3577]</sup> A deferral may not extend beyond the fiscal year in which it is proposed, and Congress notified.<sup>[3578]</sup>

Under the Impoundment Control Act as originally enacted in 1974, any deferral of budget authority was subject to disapproval by the adoption of an impoundment resolution by either House of Congress, in which case the amount of budget authority proposed to be deferred would be made available for expenditure.<sup>[3579]</sup> However, disapprovals of executive proposals by one House of Congress were ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in 1983,<sup>[3580]</sup> and the provision of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 which required that amounts deferred be made available for obligation if either House adopted an impoundment resolution<sup>[3581]</sup> was then ruled unconstitutional in 1987 by the Court of Appeals.<sup>[3582]</sup> This section was subsequently amended later that year to conform to these court rulings. The amendment deleted the requirement to make available budget authority proposed to be deferred if either House adopted an impoundment resolution, and inserted the provision noted above permitting deferrals only under certain circumstances.<sup>[3583]</sup> The language of the original Impoundment and Control Act which provided expedited consideration of such impoundment resolutions<sup>[3584]</sup> was not changed to conform to the court rulings, since such language could provide expedited consideration of a joint resolution of the two Houses, which would be constitutionally sufficient to disapprove a proposed deferral of budget authority.<sup>3585</sup>

DISAPPROVAL OF PROPOSED DEFERRALS OF BUDGET AUTHORITY

SEC. 1013. (a) TRANSMITTAL OF SPECIAL MESSAGE.—Whenever the President, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the head of any department or agency of the United States, or any officer or employee of the United States proposes to defer any budget authority provided for a specific purpose or project, the President shall transmit to the House of Representatives and the Senate a special message specifying—

- (1) the amount of the budget authority proposed to be deferred;
- (2) any account, department, or establishment of the Government to which such budget authority is available for obligation, and the specific projects or governmental functions involved;
- (3) the period of time during which the budget authority is proposed to be deferred;
- (4) the reasons for the proposed deferral, including any legal authority invoked by him to justify the proposed deferral;
- (5) to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated fiscal, economic, and budgetary effect of the proposed deferral; and
- (6) all facts, circumstances, and considerations relating to or bearing upon the proposed deferral and the decision to effect the proposed deferral, including an analysis of such facts, circumstances, and considerations in terms of their application to any legal authority and specific elements of legal authority invoked by him to justify such proposed deferral, and to the maximum extent practicable, the estimated effect of the proposed deferral upon the objects, purposes, and programs for which the budget authority is provided.

A special message may include one or more proposed deferrals of budget authority. A deferral may not be proposed for any period of time extending beyond the end of the fiscal year in which the special message proposing the deferral is transmitted to the House and the Senate.

(b) REQUIREMENT TO MAKE AVAILABLE FOR OBLIGATION. — Any amount of budget authority proposed to be deferred, as set forth in a special message transmitted under subsection (a), shall be made available for obligation if either House of Congress passes an impoundment resolution disapproving such proposed deferral.

(c) EXCEPTION.—The provisions of this section do not apply to any budget authority proposed to be rescinded or that is to be reserved as set forth in a special message required to be transmitted under section 1012.<sup>3586</sup>

The joint statement of managers accompanying the conference report on the Budget Act explained:

A second type of special message concerns deferrals. This category includes any withholding or delaying the availability for obligation of budget authority (whether by establishing reserves or otherwise), or any other type of Executive action or inaction which effectively precludes the obligation or expenditure of budget authority, including authority to obligate by contract in advance of appropriations as specifically authorized by law. Such action or inaction may occur at the level of the Office of Management and Budget, such as through the apportionment process, or at the departmental and agency level. The special message from the President shall contain basically the same types of information included in a rescission special message. However, the procedure for congressional action is different in that the President will be required to make the budget authority available for obligation if either House of Congress passes an “impoundment resolution” disapproving such proposed deferral at any time after receipt of the special message. The authority to propose deferral is limited to the fiscal year in which the special message making the proposal is submitted to the House and Senate.<sup>3587</sup>

In Immigration & Naturalization Service v. Chadha,<sup>3588</sup> the Supreme Court held legislative vetoes unconstitutional. Applying Chadha, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit struck down section 1013 in City of New Haven v. United States.<sup>3589</sup> In City of New Haven, the Court of Appeals said:

City of New Haven v. United States

In this case, we are called upon to decide the extent of the President's statutory authority to delay (or "defer") the expenditure of funds appropriated by Congress. Under section 1013 of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 ("ICA" or the "Act"), the President must indicate his intention to defer a congressional appropriation by sending a "special message" to Congress. In that message, the President is required to justify the deferral and specify its amount, its intended length and its probable fiscal consequences. Under the Act, if either House of Congress passes an "impoundment resolution" disapproving the "proposed" deferral, the President is required to make the funds available for obligation. If neither House acts, the deferral takes effect automatically, although it may not last beyond the end of the fiscal year.<sup>[3590]</sup>

The majority of proposed deferrals are routine "programmatic" deferrals, by which the Executive Branch attempts to meet the inevitable contingencies that arise in administering congressionally-funded agencies and programs. Occasionally, however, the President will seek to implement "policy" deferrals, which are intended to advance the broader fiscal policy objectives of the Administration. The critical distinction between "programmatic" and "policy" deferrals is that the former are ordinarily intended to advance congressional budgetary policies by ensuring that congressional programs are administered efficiently, while the latter are ordinarily intended to negate the will of Congress by substituting the fiscal policies of the Executive Branch for those established by the enactment of budget legislation.<sup>[3591]</sup>

In the instant case, the President invoked section 1013 as authority for implementing four separate policy deferrals. In particular, the President deferred the expenditure of funds earmarked for four housing assistance programs to be administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development ("HUD"). The appellees—various cities, mayors, community groups, members of Congress, associations of mayors and municipalities and disappointed expectant recipients of benefits under the four programs—brought these consolidated actions challenging the authority of the President to implement policy deferrals pursuant to section 1013.<sup>3592</sup> That challenge was based on the inclusion in the statute of

<sup>3590</sup> The court's note 1 said: "While the statute by its terms only permits the President to 'propose[]' the deferral of funds, the effect of the statute is to permit the President to implement a deferral of up to one year until such time as Congress acts to disapprove the deferral."

As a hypothetical example, one might consider a congressional appropriation of $10,000,000 to construct a new highway between Washington, D.C. and New York. If inclement weather threatened completion of the construction project, the President might seek to defer the expenditure of the appropriated funds for "programmatic" reasons. However, if the President believed that the project was inflationary, he might attempt to delay the expenditure of the funds for "policy" reasons.

a legislative veto provision of the type held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha. According to the appellees, the unconstitutional legislative veto provision contained in section 1013 rendered the entire section invalid, leaving the President without statutory authority on which to base the deferrals in question. The appellees requested a declaratory judgment that section 1013 was void in its entirety and an injunction obligating the nominal defendants (the United States, the Secretary of HUD and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget) to release the funds appropriated by Congress for the four HUD programs.

After carefully analyzing the intent of Congress in enacting section 1013, the District Court held that the section's unconstitutional legislative veto provision was inseverable from the remainder of the section. City of New Haven v. United States, 634 F. Supp. 1449 (D.D.C. 1986). Accordingly, it declared section 1013 void in its entirety and ordered the defendants-appellants to make the deferred funds available for obligation. Id. at 1460. Shortly thereafter, however, the President signed into law legislation overturning the challenged deferrals. Pursuant to this legislation, the funds deferred by the President have been made available for obligation.

For much the same reasons offered by the District Court in its thorough and able opinion, we hold that the unconstitutional legislative veto provision in section 1013 is inseverable from the remainder of that section. We therefore affirm the District Court's declaratory judgment striking down section 1013 in its entirety. . . .

I. BACKGROUND

In November of 1985, President Reagan signed HUD's fiscal year 1986 appropriations bill. Included in that bill were appropriations for four programs administered by HUD: the Community Development Block Grant Program, under which HUD makes grants to state and local governments for community development projects; the Section 8 Housing Assistance Payments Program, under which HUD provides subsidies (through public housing agencies) to low-income families to enable them to obtain low-cost housing; the Section 312 program, under which HUD lends money (typically to cities or local public agencies) to be used to rehabilitate residential property in low-income neighborhoods; and the

As will be seen shortly, the President need not rely on section 1013 as authority for making routine programmatic deferrals without prior congressional approval. Although the President must report programmatic deferrals to Congress under the procedures outlined in section 1013, the President has separate statutory authority under the Anti-Deficiency Act to implement such deferrals. See note 18 infra. Thus, while the appellees seek to void section 1013 in its entirety, they in effect challenge only the authority of the President to implement policy deferrals without prior congressional approval.

Section 202 program, under which HUD lends money to rehabilitate low-cost rental units for the handicapped and the elderly. In February of 1986, the President sent impoundment notices to Congress pursuant to section 1013 announcing his intention to defer the expenditure of funds for these four programs. One of the reasons provided by the President for the deferrals was to bring 1986 spending levels into line with the Administration's 1987 proposed budget. See 51 Fed. Reg. 5953–58 (1986). Previously, the President had failed in his efforts to convince Congress to drastically reduce these expenditures in its 1986 budget. Thus, it is not disputed that the deferrals were made for “policy” reasons.

Because the President relied solely on section 1013 as authority for the deferrals, the District Court was faced squarely with the question whether the unconstitutional legislative veto provision in section 1013 is severable from the remainder of that section. This question, the District Court recognized, was purely one of congressional intent. Specifically, the court was required to consider what Congress would have done had it known at the time it passed section 1013 that the legislative veto provision was unconstitutional. Would Congress nonetheless have conferred deferral authority on the President, even though it could not exercise control over that authority by means of a legislative veto? Or would Congress have refused to confer deferral authority on the President, preferring “no statute[] at all”<sup>3593</sup> to a statute that permitted the President to defer funds without the check of a legislative veto?

After thoroughly examining the statutory language, the legislative history and the historical political context surrounding passage of the Act, the District Court had little difficulty concluding that Congress would have preferred no statute at all to a statute that conferred unchecked deferral authority on the President. Beginning with the title of the statute itself, and continuing with an analysis of the statute's legislative history, the court found that the “raison d’etre” of the entire legislative effort was to wrest control over the budgetary process from what Congress perceived as a usurping Executive:

Control—how to regain and retain it—was studied and debated at length, on the floor and in committee, over a period of years by a Congress virtually united in its quest for a way to reassert its fiscal prerogative. A clearer case of congressional intent—obsession would be more accurate—is hard to imagine.

<sup>3593</sup> The court's note 10 cited Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Donovan, 766 F.2d 1550, 1560 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (quoting Gulf Oil Corp. v. Dyke, 734 F.2d 797, 804 (Temp. Emer. Ct. App.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 852 (1984)), cert. granted, ___ U.S. ___ (1986).

In the course of its analysis, the District Court cited numerous statements by individual legislators illustrating Congress' anger at frequent presidential impoundments and its preoccupation with limiting the President's authority to override duly enacted budget legislation. Id. at 1455–58. The court also noted that these same sentiments were expressed in the Conference Committee Report. Id. at 1455 (citing S. CONF. REP. NO. 924, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 49, 76–78, reprinted in 1974 U.S. CODE CONG. & ADMIN NEWS 3462, 3591, 3616–18). In contrast, the trial court was unable to find a single legislative expression of support for the proposition “that the President be allowed to defer budget authority without the check afforded by at least a one-House veto.” Id. at 1457 n.9 (emphasis in opinion). This overwhelming evidence of congressional intent, the court concluded, conclusively demonstrated that Congress—had it known that it could not disapprove unwanted impoundments by means of a legislative veto—would never have enacted a statute that conceded impoundment authority to the President. Indeed, it could be said with “conviction” that Congress would have preferred no statute to one without the one-House veto provision, for with no statute at all, the President would be remitted to such pre-ICA authority as he might have had for particular deferrals which, in Congress' view (and that of most of the courts having passed upon it) was not much.

Id. at 1459.

Having found that the legislative veto provision in section 1013 was inseverable from the remainder of the section, and that the President had therefore relied on an invalid statute in making the policy deferrals in question, the court imposed two remedies. First, it ordered the appellants to make the improperly deferred funds available for obligation. Second, it declared section 1013 void in its entirety. Subsequent to this decision, however, Congress duplicated the District Court's injunctive relief by enacting legislation (signed by the President) disapproving the deferrals and ordering that the funds be made available for obligation. It is in this posture that we review the appellants' appeal from the District Court's Memorandum and Order.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Mootness

The threshold question presented by this appeal is whether the appellees' challenge to the President's exercise of deferral authority under section 1013 was mooted by the recent legislation overturning the HUD deferrals. . . .

In the instant case, the appellees' original complaints similarly challenged both the particular deferrals implemented by the President and the facial validity of the statute under which the President acted. And, as in Better Government, the Executive Branch has not disavowed reliance on the challenged statute. Indeed, the appellants frankly concede in their reply brief that they foresee continued reliance by the Executive Branch on the Act as authority for implementing policy deferrals, and that the appellees are likely to be affected by such deferrals in the future. Thus, although the appellees' claim for injunctive relief is clearly moot, we must still decide whether the appellees are entitled to declaratory relief on their claim that section 1013 of the Act is facially invalid. It is to this issue that we now turn.

B. Severability of the Unconstitutional Legislative Veto Provision in Section 1013

The appellants concede, as they must, that the legislative veto provision in section 1013 is unconstitutional under the Supreme Court's decision in Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha. The sole question for decision is whether that unconstitutional provision is severable from the remainder of section 1013, which ostensibly authorizes the President to defer congressional appropriations for a period not exceeding one fiscal year.

Recently, in Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Donovan, this circuit had occasion to consider the test for determining when an invalid statutory provision will be found severable from the otherwise valid portions of the statute. In that case, we read the Supreme Court's decision in Chadha as establishing a presumption in favor of severability if what remained after severance of the unconstitutional provision would be "fully operable as law."<sup>3594</sup> That presumption could be overcome, however, by strong evidence indicating that Congress would not have enacted the statute had it known it could not include the unconstitutional provision. In this respect, we recognized that the question of severability was ultimately one of congressional intent. While a court was to presume severability, and attempt to "save as much of the statute as [it could]," the ultimate inquiry was whether "Congress would have preferred [the] statute[], after severance of the legislative veto provision[], to no statute[] at all."<sup>3595</sup>

In the instant case, we assume without deciding that section 1013 is "operable" in the absence of its legislative veto provision. However, even assuming the statute is operable, on the record in this case we must affirm

the District Court’s judgment on congressional intent, i.e., that Congress would not have enacted section 1013 had it known that the legislative veto provision was unconstitutional. Indeed, to the extent that section 1013 is “operable” absent the legislative veto provision, it operates in a manner wholly inconsistent with the intent of Congress in enacting deferral legislation. We therefore hold that the unconstitutional legislative veto provision in section 1013 is inseverable from that portion of the statute conferring deferral authority on the President.

1. Congressional Intent

We assume for purposes of our severability analysis that section 1013 is in a purely technical sense “operable” even without a legislative veto provision. As noted earlier, however, the ultimate inquiry in a severability case is not whether the statute may somehow continue to function after excision of the invalid portion, but rather whether it continues to function in a manner consistent with congressional intent. Phrased differently, the question is whether Congress would have intended the statute to operate even in the absence of the invalid provision, or whether it would have preferred no statute at all. In the instant case, the conclusion is inescapable that Congress would have preferred no statute at all to a statute that conferred unchecked deferral authority on the President.

As the District Court observed and catalogued, the ICA was passed at a time when Congress was united in its furor over presidential impoundments and intent on reasserting its control over the budgetary process. Although the Senate and House initially differed over the precise means for reasserting congressional prerogatives,<sup>3596</sup> the legislation that eventually emerged from Congress contained several strong measures expressly designed to limit the President’s ability to impound funds appropriated by Congress. For permanent impoundments (or “rescissions”), Congress adopted the Senate approach, which required prior legislative approval of proposed impoundments. See 2 U.S.C. § 683 (1982). For temporary impoundments (or “deferrals”), Congress adopted the House approach, which allowed impoundments to become effective without prior approval if neither House of Congress passed a resolution disapproving the impoundment. See 2 U.S.C. § 684 (1982). Importantly, Congress also amended the Anti-Deficiency Act to preclude the President

The bill originally passed by the Senate would have required advance approval by Congress through concurrent resolution if the impoundment was to last beyond 60 days. S. 373, 93d Cong., 1st Sess., 119 CONG. REC. 15,255–56 (1973). The bill passed by the House would have allowed impoundments to go into effect automatically if neither House of Congress vetoed the impoundment. H.R. 7130, 93d Cong., 1st Sess., 119 CONG. REC. 39,721–22 (1973).

from relying on that Act as authority for implementing policy impoundments.<sup>3597</sup>

It is abundantly clear from both the statute and its legislative history that the overriding purpose of the deferral provision was to permit either House of Congress to veto any deferral proposed by the President—particularly policy deferrals. The title of the statute itself—“Disapproval of proposed deferrals of budget authority”—makes it plain that Congress was preoccupied with assuring for itself a ready means of disapproving proposed deferrals. The House Report accompanying H.R. 7130—from which the deferral provision was drawn—expressly states that the “basic purpose” of the bill was to provide each House an opportunity to veto an impoundment. H.R. REP. NO. 658, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. 43, reprinted in 1974 U.S. CODE CONG. & ADMIN. NEWS 3462, 3488. The Conference Committee Report also emphasizes that the bill was designed to provide Congress with an effective system of impoundment control. S. CONF. REP. NO. 924, 93d Cong., 2d Sess. 49, 76–78, reprinted in 1974 U.S. CODE CONG. & ADMIN. NEWS 3462, 3591, 3616–18.

When the numerous statements of individual legislators urging the passage of legislation to control presidential impoundments are also considered, the evidence is incontrovertible that the “basic purpose” of section 1013 was to provide each House of Congress with a veto power over deferrals. Yet, the appellants would have us hold that Congress, had it foreseen Chadha, would nevertheless have gone ahead and enacted section 1013 without a legislative veto provision. As difficult (and precarious) as it may be at times to reconstruct what a particular Congress might have done had it been apprised of a particular set of facts, we refuse to entertain this remarkable proposition. As the District Court aptly noted, the “raison d’être” of the entire legislative effort was to assert control over presidential impoundments. 634 F. Supp. at 1454. It is simply untenable to suggest that a Congress precluded from achieving this goal would have turned around and ceded to the President the very power it was determined to curtail.

Before it was amended, the Anti-Deficiency Act authorized the President to “apportion[]” funds where justified by “other developments subsequent to the date on which such appropriation was made available.” 31 U.S.C. § 665(c)(2) (1970). This open-ended language was amended to limit apportionments to three specified situations: “to provide for contingencies,” “to achieve savings made possible by or through changes in requirements or greater efficiency of operations” or “as specifically provided by law.” 31 U.S.C. § 1512(c)(1) (1982). The purpose of the amendment was to preclude the President from invoking the Act as authority for implementing “policy” impoundments, while preserving the President’s authority to implement routine “programmatically” impoundments. See, e.g., 120 CONG. REC. 7658 (1974) (statement of Sen. Muskie). President Nixon had attempted to use the Act as an instrument for shaping fiscal policy. See generally Nixon, Addressing the Resurgence of Presidential Budgetmaking Initiative: A Proposal to Reform the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, 63 TEX. L. REV. 693, 699–700 (1984).

In this respect, this case is the complete converse of Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Donovan, where we held that an unconstitutional legislative veto provision contained in section 43(f) of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 was severable from that portion of the statute authorizing the Secretary of Labor to issue regulations necessary to administer an employee protection program. Here, rather than adding the legislative veto provision as somewhat of an afterthought, as in Alaska Airlines, Congress focused almost exclusively on the means for asserting control over presidential impoundments.<sup>3598</sup> The conclusion is thus inescapable that Congress would not have enacted section 1013 had it known that it could not exercise control over deferrals by means of a legislative veto.

The appellants argue vigorously that the opposite conclusion is compelled by the distinction drawn in the Act between rescissions and deferrals. As noted earlier, the original bill passed by the House would have permitted both rescissions and deferrals to go into effect automatically, subject of course to a legislative veto. The House Report explained that the Committee favored a legislative veto mechanism because [i]n the normal process of apportionment, the executive branch necessarily withholds funds on hundreds of occasions during the course of a fiscal year. If Congress adopts a procedure requiring it to approve every necessary impoundment, its legislative process would be disrupted by the flood of approvals that would be required for the normal and orderly operation of the government. The negative mechanism provided in H.R. 7130 will permit Congress to focus on critical and important matters, and save it from submersion in a sea of trivial ones.

H.R. REP. NO. 658, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. 41, reprinted in 1974 U.S. CODE CONG. & ADMIN. NEWS 3462, 3486–87. In the final analysis, however, the House approach prevailed only for deferrals; for rescissions, Congress adopted the Senate approach, which required prior congressional approval before a rescission could go into effect. According to the appellants, this

It is true, as appellants assert, that the congressional debates also touched on the need for more effective notice to Congress of the President's intention to impound funds. See, e.g., 120 CONG. REC. 20,481–82 (colloquy between Sen. Humphrey and Sen. Ervin). However, the District Court was correct in observing that the central issue debated at great length by Congress was "whether the President should be able to impound at all, or should be permitted to impound, but with various congressional circumscriptions of his power to do so." 634 F. Supp. at 1457–58. Our examination of the Act's legislative history also confirms the District Court's conclusion that Congress was not "very much concerned with, let alone determined to achieve, further detail about future Presidential impoundments absent a mechanism for exercising control over them." Id. (emphasis added).

distinction is critical, for it demonstrates that Congress' intent in enacting section 1013 was to render deferrals "presumptively valid." Brief of Defendants-Appellants at 31-33. Because Congress did not want to trouble itself by approving deferrals in advance, they argue, Congress would have authorized the President to implement deferrals even had it known that it could not maintain oversight over those deferrals by means of a legislative veto.

This argument completely misreads the above-quoted passage and is completely at odds with Congress' expressed intention to control rather than authorize presidential deferrals. First, the quoted passage plainly speaks to "trivial," everyday programmatic deferrals. It is these "trivial" impoundments relating to the "normal and orderly operation of the government" that Congress expected to present little controversy. Congress most certainly did not mean to suggest that impoundments designed to negate congressional budgetary policies would be "presumptively valid." It is precisely this sort of impoundment that Congress was determined to forestall.

Second, the quoted passage proves only that Congress preferred a system in which it need not enact legislation approving deferrals because it could easily disapprove them by the relatively simple expedient of the one-House veto. Nowhere in the legislative history is there the slightest suggestion that the President be given statutory authority to defer funds without the possible check of at least a one-House veto. Indeed, the House Report completely refutes the notion that Congress would have granted the President statutory authority to implement deferrals, thereby forcing itself to reenact an appropriations bill each time it disapproved of a deferral:

[The one-House veto] is suggested on the ground that the impoundment situation established by the bill involves a presumption against the President's refusing to carry out the terms of an already considered and enacted statute. To make Congress go through a procedure involving agreement between the two Houses on an already settled matter would be to require both, in effect, to reconfirm what they have already decided.

H.R. REP. NO. 658, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. 42, reprinted in 1974 U.S. CODE CONG. & ADMIN. NEWS 3462, 3487 (emphasis added). Yet, a finding of severability would create a presumption in favor of deferrals and require Congress to legislate a second time in order to effectuate its budgetary policies. We cannot conceive of a result more contrary to congressional intent.

The appellants further argue that Congress' more permissive treatment of deferrals suggests that the congressional furor over "impoundments" was principally a dissatisfaction with rescissions. Brief of Defendants-Appellants at 37–39. Again, this contention has absolutely no basis in the legislative history. Although Congress certainly distinguished between rescissions and deferrals, it spoke in general terms of the need to control “impoundments,” which it defined as “withholding or delaying the expenditure or obligation of budget authority . . . and the termination of authorized projects or activities for which appropriations have been made.” H.R. REP. NO. 658, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. 52, reprinted in U.S. CODE CONG. & ADMIN. NEWS 3462, 3497 (emphasis added).<sup>3599</sup> The appellants can point to nothing in the legislative history to suggest that members of Congress were disturbed with rescissions but tolerant of deferrals. Indeed, to the extent that Congress expressed any tolerance of deferrals at all, it was referring to routine programmatic deferrals, not policy deferrals. Id. at 42, 1974 U.S. CODE CONG. & ADMIN. NEWS at 3488 (“[T]he Committee recognizes that a brief delay in expending or obligating funds may sometimes be legitimately necessary for purely administrative reasons.”).<sup>3600</sup>

We cannot emphasize enough in this context the critical distinction between programmatic and policy deferrals. As the appellants concede, see Brief of Defendants-Appellants at 33, our holding in this case will not impair the President’s ability to implement routine programmatic deferrals. When Congress amended the Anti-Deficiency Act in the ICA, it did not disturb the President’s authority to “impound” funds for purely administrative purposes. See note 18 supra. Thus, the President may still invoke the Anti-Deficiency Act as authority for implementing programmatic deferrals. By amending the Anti-Deficiency Act, however, Congress intended to foreclose the President from relying on that Act as separate statutory authority for policy deferrals. Congress intended to permit policy deferrals only under section 1013, and only if it could ensure itself a ready means of overturning policy deferrals with which it disagreed. Had Congress known it could not employ such a mechanism, it most assuredly would not have nullified its own amendment to the Anti-Deficiency Act by creating new statutory authority for policy deferrals.

Finally, the appellants contend that if we invalidate section 1013 in its entirety, we must also strike down the ICA’s other “deferral-related provision” — i.e., Congress’ amendment to the Anti-Deficiency Act. Brief of Defendants-Appellants at 57. We find this argument to be wholly specious.

<sup>3600</sup> The court’s note 21 said: “Cf. id. (suggesting that Congress will employ legislative veto only when it perceives that the President is attempting to alter Congress’ budgetary policies, not when the proposed deferrals ‘are for routine financial purposes and involve neither questions of policy nor attempts to negate the will of Congress’).”

As noted earlier, a court's duty in a severability case is to preserve as much of the statute as it can consistent with congressional intent. We are unable to preserve section 1013 absent its legislative veto provision because to do so would produce a result wholly contrary to that intended by Congress. The amendment to the Anti-Deficiency Act, in contrast, is fully consistent with the expressed intent of Congress to control presidential impoundments. Thus, there is absolutely no basis for overturning Congress' amendment to the Anti-Deficiency Act.

III. CONCLUSION

Section 1013 was designed specifically to provide Congress with a means for controlling presidential deferrals. As a consequence of the Supreme Court's decision in Chadha, however, that section has been transformed into a license to impound funds for policy reasons. This result is completely contrary to the will of Congress, which in amending the Anti-Deficiency Act sought to remove any colorable statutory basis for unchecked policy deferrals. We cannot imagine that Congress would have acted in complete contravention of its intended purposes by enacting section 1013 without a legislative veto provision. Accordingly, we hold that the unconstitutional legislative veto provision contained in section 1013 is inseverable from the remainder of the section, and we affirm the judgment of the District Court invalidating section 1013 in its entirety.<sup>3601</sup>

The joint statement of managers accompanying the conference report on the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 explained:

9. Codification of Law Regarding Deferral Authority

Current Law

The Supreme Court in Immigration and Naturalization v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983), held legislative vetoes unconstitutional. Applying Chadha, the Court of Appeals in City of New Haven v. United States, 809 F. 2d 900 (D.C. Cir. 1987), struck down Section 1013 of the 1974 Impoundment Control Act, dealing with deferrals, thereby denying the President his sole statutory authority to make deferrals for policy reasons. The Court noted its view that the Executive’s power to defer was now limited to so-call programmatic deferrals under the Antideficiency Act, which it characterized as dealing with “routine” and “trivial” matters “relating to the normal and orderly operation of the Government that Congress expected to present little controversy.” The reporting requirements of Section 1013 have continued in force by virtue of other statutory reference to that section.

Section 1015 of the 1974 Impoundment Control Act directs the Comptroller General to report to Congress when he determines that the President has failed to transmit a special message with respect to a deferral or rescission, or has incorrectly classified an action in such message. Section 1016 of the Act empowers the Comptroller General to bring a civil action to require that unlawfully impounded budget authority be made available for obligation. The Comptroller General has expressed the view that he lacks authority to take any action to compel the release of impounded funds since such authority was linked to the invalidated Section 1013.

Senate Amendment

The Senate amendment (Section 229) enacts a new Section 1013 that codifies the New Haven decision and General Accounting Office administrative interpretations by prohibiting policy deferrals and providing that deferrals will be permissible only: (1) for contingencies, (2) for efficiency, or (3) as specifically provided for by law. Programmatic deferrals must be reported to the Congress and be accompanied by a detailed description and justification of the proposal. Deferrals may not be proposed for any period extending beyond the end of the fiscal year in which the proposal is reported.

The Senate amendment also reaffirms the Comptroller General's authority under Sections 1015 and 1016 of the Act to initiate suits to compel the release of impounded funds and his duty to safeguard Congress' institutional interest in the spending process.

During Senate debate on the conference report for the Act, Senator Sam Ervin, the sponsor and Manager of the bill, explained this section:

The Comptroller General will be granted authority to sue in the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia to enforce the provisions of the title, using attorneys of his own choosing, 25 days after he gives notice to Congress. This authority is not intended to infringe upon the right of any other party to initiate litigation. The Comptroller General also will be charged with the responsibility of monitoring the Executive and reporting to Congress on any deferrals, reservations, or impoundments which are not reported by a special message.<sup>3680</sup>

PROCEDURE IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND SENATE

1017(a)        SEC. 1017.<sup>3681</sup> (a) REFERRAL.—Any rescission bill<sup>3682</sup> introduced with respect to a special message or impoundment resolution<sup>3683</sup> introduced with respect to a proposed deferral of budget authority<sup>3684</sup> shall be referred to the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives or the Senate, as the case may be.

1017(b)        (b) DISCHARGE OF COMMITTEE.—

1017(b)(1)        (1) If the committee to which a rescission bill<sup>3685</sup> or impoundment resolution<sup>3686</sup> has been referred has not reported it at the end of 25 calendar days of continuous session of the Congress after its introduction, it is in order to move either to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill or resolution or to discharge the committee from further consideration of any other rescission bill<sup>3687</sup> with respect to the same special message or impoundment resolution<sup>3688</sup> with respect to the same proposed deferral,<sup>3689</sup> as the case may be, which has been referred to the committee.

1017(b)(2) (2) A motion to discharge may be made only by an individual favoring the bill or resolution, may be made only if supported by one-fifth of the Members of the House involved (a quorum being present), and is highly privileged in the House and privileged in the Senate (except that it may not be made after the committee has reported a bill or resolution with respect to the same special message or the same proposed deferral,<sup>3690</sup> as the case may be); and debate thereon shall be limited to not more than 1 hour, the time to be divided in the House equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill or resolution, and to be divided in the Senate equally between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees. An amendment to the motion is not in order, and it is not in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

1017(c) (c) FLOOR CONSIDERATION IN THE HOUSE. —

1017(c)(1) (1) When the committee of the House of Representatives has reported, or has been discharged from further consideration of, a rescission bill<sup>3691</sup> or impoundment resolution,<sup>3692</sup> it shall at any time thereafter be in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill or resolution. The motion shall be highly privileged and not debatable. An amendment to the motion shall not be in order, nor shall it be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

The Parliamentarian has advised that section 1017 implies a simple majority motion to proceed and a potential vote-a-rama.<sup>3719</sup>

In April 2018, the Parliamentarian advised that the 1992 consideration of a reconciliation bill<sup>3720</sup> instructs that when several Presidential rescission proposals come to the Senate in separate messages on the same calendar day, then the Senate can group those several rescissions together in one rescission bill.<sup>3721</sup>

Discharge—The Parliamentarian has advised that, given that the Senate operates with a presumed quorum, it would not be unreasonable to read section 1017(b)(2) to call for 20 signatures to satisfy the discharge requirements, so that a motion to discharge and 20 Senators’ signatures would get a rescission bill on the calendar, making a motion to proceed in order thereafter.<sup>3722</sup>

No amendment that is not germane—The Parliamentarian has confirmed that section 1017(d)(7) creates a point of order against nongermane amendments, but has noted that the Impoundment Control Act does not provide an explicit waiver process for the point of order. Any Senator could appeal a ruling of the Chair that an amendment was not germane. As a result, a simple majority of the Senate could attach a nongermane amendment by overturning a ruling of the Chair that an amendment was not germane. The Parliamentarian has advised that the President’s message provides the outer limit of germaneness. The word “only” in section 1011(3) has implications for germaneness, but the Parliamentarian’s office has not settled on how to interpret the limitation.<sup>3723</sup>

Privilege, Corrosiveness, and Inappropriate Material—The Parliamentarian has advised that section 1017 implies no “corrosiveness” concept, and the Parliamentarian does not want to read one into section 1017 along the lines of the Parliamentarian’s letter of 2008. The Parliamentarian’s office has, however, entertained using the concepts of germaneness or the definition of a “rescission bill” as limits on the privilege of rescission bills.<sup>3724</sup>

Referral—The Parliamentarian has confirmed that both Budget and Appropriations Committees receive the messages and the bills. If the message also includes borrowing authority, then it will also go to the authorizing committee. The Budget Committee is supposed to provide its views to the Appropriations Committee, which reports the bill out. In 1992, the Budget Committee sent its views after the Appropriations Committee had reported the bill.<sup>3725</sup>

Sequestration

In the 1980s, Congress became concerned with Federal budget deficits. Senators Phil Gramm, Warren Rudman, and Fritz Hollings came together to create a new mechanism to eliminate those deficits, called sequestration.

In Riddick's Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian described the evolution of the sequestration process through 1992:

Both the 99th and 100th Congresses enacted significant formal changes in the budget process. In the 99th Congress, the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Pub. L. 99-177), commonly referred to as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act streamlined and tightened the Congressional Budget Act, established deficit targets for 6 fiscal years (fiscal years 1986-1991), and created emergency procedures for deficit reduction, referred to as sequestration.

Under the 1985 Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, sequestration occurred when the Directors of the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office projected a deficit for a fiscal year that exceeded a maximum deficit amount set out in the Budget Act. The projected deficit was based on economic assumptions and the anticipated effects of legislation enacted up to the point the projection was made. If the projected deficit exceeded the maximum deficit amount by a certain specified margin, the President was required to issue an order cancelling an amount of spending sufficient to reach the maximum deficit amount. Half of the amount to be cancelled was to come from defense accounts, and half from non-defense accounts, with a uniform percentage reduction to occur in each account within these two major categories of accounts. Certain specified accounts were exempt from sequestration.

In September 1987, as part of a measure increasing the public debt limit, Congress enacted the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act (Pub. L. 100-119). The 1987 Reaffirmation Act restored the so-called automatic trigger for sequestration (which had been invalidated by a ruling of the Supreme Court), by assigning to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) responsibility for issuing the triggering reports to the President that led to a sequestration order. The Act also revised the deficit targets in the 1985 Balanced Budget Act, extended the goal of budgetary balance by 2 years to fiscal year 1993, and made certain additional changes in the sequestration and budget processes. The Reaffirmation Act gave the President flexibility with respect to the savings to be achieved from certain defense accounts. Under the revised process, the President could choose to exempt some or all military personnel accounts from sequestration as long as he notified Congress in a timely manner. Further, he could propose changes that lessened or eliminated completely the reductions for some defense programs, projects, and activities (PPAs), as long as greater reductions were made in other defense PPAs so that the total amount of required outlay savings for defense were met. In the latter case, Congress could affirm the proposed changes through the enactment of a joint resolution.

As noted above, the budget process was altered again in 1990 with the enactment of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 (title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, Pub. L. 101-508). This Act revised and extended the existing process of sequestration through 1996. It also created a five year period of discipline by authorizing budget resolutions to cover five years, and by providing points of order against proposals that exceeded committee allocations both in the first year covered by a budget resolution, as well as the total of the five years. For fiscal years 1991 through 1996, the Act established limits of discretionary spending by category.

For fiscal years 1991 through 1993, separate limits were placed on discretionary spending in the following three categories: defense, international, and domestic. For fiscal years 1994 and 1995, a limit was placed on all discretionary spending. Should any of these limits be exceeded, sequestration was authorized within the relevant category. Sequestration would be ordered within 15 calendar days after the end of a session of Congress ("end of session sequestration"), 15 calendar days after a breach occurred in a category for a fiscal year in progress (but before July 1 of that fiscal year), or if a breach occurred within a category after July 1 of a fiscal year in progress, the limit for that category would be adjusted downward by a comparable amount for the next fiscal year.

For these five fiscal years, legislation affecting revenues and entitlements was placed on a pay-as-you-go basis. To the extent that such legislation increases the deficit, non-exempt direct spending programs were made subject to sequestration annually to offset the deficit increase.<sup>3726</sup>

Also in Riddick's Senate Procedure, the Parliamentarian wrote: "For a discussion of how sequestration would affect certain full-year appropriations, see the colloquy which occurred between the ranking minority members of the Committees on Appropriations and Budget."<sup>3727</sup>

Emergency—Designation of a provision—usually spending—as “emergency” has several consequences. Under Congressional Budget Act section 314\(d\), in the House of Representatives, a provision designated as an emergency does not count for Budget Act purposes.<sup>3807</sup> Congressional Budget Act section 314\(e\) creates a Senate point of order against an emergency designation.<sup>3808</sup> Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act section 251\(b\)\(2\)\(A\) provides for adjustments so that emergency appropriations do not count for discretionary spending limit purposes.<sup>3809</sup> Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act section 252\(e\) similarly removes emergency direct spending and revenue provisions from pay-as-you-go enforcement.<sup>3810</sup> Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010 section 4\(g\) excludes emergencies from counting under that act.<sup>3811</sup> And section 4001 the fiscal year 2022 budget resolution exempts emergencies from congressional enforcement.<sup>3812</sup>

The criteria that Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act section 250\(c\)\(20\) uses to define “emergency” trace back to a 1991 Office of Management and Budget report.<sup>3813</sup> Compare these criteria to those in section 4001\(a\)\(5\) of the fiscal year 2022 budget resolution.<sup>3814</sup>

Consultation with the Committees on Appropriations and the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Senate—For example, conveying the President’s fiscal year 2023 budget request to Congress, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget reported:

Functional Classification

This year, OMB’s annual consultations with the Congress regarding reclassification of accounts or activities as to their function or subfunction resulted in the reclassification of one account: the Department of Veterans Affairs Asset Infrastructure Review Commission account, first proposed in the 2022 Budget, is reclassified in the 2023 Budget from subfunction 551, “Health care services” to subfunction 705, “Other veterans benefits and services.”<sup>3815</sup>

Except as expressly provided otherwise, the adjustments provided by section 251(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901(b)) shall not apply to allocations, aggregates, or other budgetary levels established pursuant to this concurrent resolution.<sup>4058</sup>

“Continuing disability reviews” means continuing disability reviews under sections 221(i) and 1614(a)(4) of the Social Security Act—Section 221(i) provides:

(i) Review of disability cases to determine continuing eligibility; permanent disability cases; appropriate number of cases reviewed; reporting requirements

(1) In any case where an individual is or has been determined to be under a disability, the case shall be reviewed by the applicable State agency or the Commissioner of Social Security (as may be appropriate), for purposes of continuing eligibility, at least once every 3 years, subject to paragraph (2); except that where a finding has been made that such disability is permanent, such reviews shall be made at such times as the Commissioner of Social Security determines to be appropriate. Reviews of cases under the preceding sentence shall be in addition to, and shall not be considered as a substitute for, any other reviews which are required or provided for under or in the administration of this subchapter.

(2) The requirement of paragraph (1) that cases be reviewed at least every 3 years shall not apply to the extent that the Commissioner of Social Security determines, on a State-by-State basis, that such requirement should be waived to insure that only the appropriate number of such cases are reviewed. The Commissioner of Social Security shall determine the appropriate number of cases to be reviewed in each State after consultation with the State agency performing such reviews, based upon the backlog of pending reviews, the projected number of new applications for disability insurance benefits, and the current and projected staffing levels of the State agency, but the Commissioner of Social Security shall provide for a waiver of such requirement only in the case of a State which makes a good faith effort to meet proper staffing requirements for the State agency and to process case reviews in a timely fashion. The Commissioner of Social Security shall report annually to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives with respect to the determinations made by the Commissioner of Social Security under the preceding sentence.

(3) The Commissioner of Social Security shall report annually to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives with respect to the number of reviews of continuing disability carried out under paragraph (1), the number of such reviews which result in an initial termination of benefits, the number of requests for reconsideration of such initial termination or for a hearing with respect to such termination under subsection (d), or both, and the number of such initial terminations which are overturned as the result of a reconsideration or hearing.

(4) In any case in which the Commissioner of Social Security initiates a review under this subsection of the case of an individual who has been determined to be under a disability, the Commissioner of Social Security shall notify such individual of the nature of the review to be carried out, the possibility that such review could result in the termination of benefits, and the right of the individual to provide medical evidence with respect to such review.

(5) For suspension of reviews under this subsection in the case of an individual using a ticket to work and self-sufficiency, see section 1320b-19(i) of this title.<sup>4059</sup>

Section 1614(a)(4) of the Social Security Act—Section 1614(a)(4) provides:

(4) A recipient of benefits based on disability under this subchapter may be determined not to be entitled to such benefits on the basis of a finding that the physical or mental impairment on the basis of which such benefits are provided has ceased, does not exist, or is not disabling only if such finding is supported by—

(A) in the case of an individual who is age 18 or older—

(i) substantial evidence which demonstrates that—

(I) there has been any medical improvement in the individual's impairment or combination of impairments (other than medical improvement which is not related to the individual's ability to work), and

(II) the individual is now able to engage in substantial gainful activity; or

(ii) substantial evidence (except in the case of an individual eligible to receive benefits under section 1382h of this title) which –

(I) consists of new medical evidence and a new assessment of the individual's residual functional capacity, and demonstrates that –

(aa) although the individual has not improved medically, he or she is nonetheless a beneficiary of advances in medical or vocational therapy or technology (related to the individual's ability to work), and

(bb) the individual is now able to engage in substantial gainful activity, or

(II) demonstrates that –

(aa) although the individual has not improved medically, he or she has undergone vocational therapy (related to the individual's ability to work), and

(bb) the individual is now able to engage in substantial gainful activity; or

(iii) substantial evidence which demonstrates that, as determined on the basis of new or improved diagnostic techniques or evaluations, the individual's impairment or combination of impairments is not as disabling as it was considered to be at the time of the most recent prior decision that he or she was under a disability or continued to be under a disability, and that therefore the individual is able to engage in substantial gainful activity; or

(B) in the case of an individual who is under the age of 18 –

(i) substantial evidence which demonstrates that there has been medical improvement in the individual's impairment or combination of impairments, and that such impairment or combination of impairments no longer results in marked and severe functional limitations; or

(ii) substantial evidence which demonstrates that, as determined on the basis of new or improved diagnostic techniques or evaluations, the individual's impairment or combination of impairments, is not as disabling as it was considered to be at the time of the most recent prior decision that the individual was under a disability or continued to be under a disability, and such impairment or combination of impairments does not result in marked and severe functional limitations; or

(C) in the case of any individual, substantial evidence (which may be evidence on the record at the time any prior determination of the entitlement to benefits based on disability was made, or newly obtained evidence which relates to that determination) which demonstrates that a prior determination was in error.

Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to require a determination that an individual receiving benefits based on disability under this subchapter is entitled to such benefits if the prior determination was fraudulently obtained or if the individual is engaged in substantial gainful activity, cannot be located, or fails, without good cause, to cooperate in a review of his or her entitlement or to follow prescribed treatment which would be expected (i) to restore his or her ability to engage in substantial gainful activity, or (ii) in the case of an individual under the age of 18, to eliminate or improve the individual's impairment or combination of impairments so that it no longer results in marked and severe functional limitations. Any determination under this paragraph shall be made on the basis of all the evidence available in the individual's case file, including new evidence concerning the individual's prior or current condition which is presented by the individual or secured by the Commissioner of Social Security. Any determination made under this paragraph shall be made on the basis of the weight of the evidence and on a neutral basis with regard to the individual's condition, without any initial inference as to the presence or absence of disability being drawn from the fact that the individual has previously been determined to be disabled.<sup>4060</sup>

(c) Period for determination of benefits

(1) An individual's eligibility for a benefit under this subchapter for a month shall be determined on the basis of the individual's (and eligible spouse's, if any) income, resources, and other relevant characteristics in

Eligibility for and the amount of such benefits shall be redetermined at such time or times as may be provided by the Commissioner of Social Security.<sup>4061</sup>

Section 1614(a)(3)(H) of the Social Security Act—Section 1614(a)(3)(H) provides:

(H)(i) In making determinations with respect to disability under this subchapter, the provisions of sections 421(h), 421(k), and 423(d)(5) of this title shall apply in the same manner as they apply to determinations of disability under subchapter II.

(ii)(I) Not less frequently than once every 3 years, the Commissioner shall review in accordance with paragraph (4) the continued eligibility for benefits under this subchapter of each individual who has not attained 18 years of age and is eligible for such benefits by reason of an impairment (or combination of impairments) which is likely to improve (or, at the option of the Commissioner, which is unlikely to improve).

(II) A representative payee of a recipient whose case is reviewed under this clause shall present, at the time of review, evidence demonstrating that the recipient is, and has been, receiving treatment, to the extent considered medically necessary and available, of the condition which was the basis for providing benefits under this subchapter.

(III) If the representative payee refuses to comply without good cause with the requirements of subclause (II), the Commissioner of Social Security shall, if the Commissioner determines it is in the best interest of the individual, promptly suspend payment of benefits to the representative payee, and provide for payment of benefits to an alternative representative payee of the individual or, if the interest of the individual under this subchapter would be served thereby, to the individual.

(IV) Subclause (II) shall not apply to the representative payee of any individual with respect to whom the Commissioner determines such application would be inappropriate or unnecessary. In making such determination, the Commissioner shall take into consideration the nature of the individual's impairment (or combination of impairments). Section 1383(c) of this title shall not apply to a finding by the Commissioner that the requirements of subclause (II) should not apply to an individual's representative payee.

(iii) If an individual is eligible for benefits under this subchapter by reason of disability for the month preceding the month in which the individual attains the age of 18 years, the Commissioner shall redetermine such eligibility –

(I) by applying the criteria used in determining initial eligibility for individuals who are age 18 or older; and

(II) either during the 1-year period beginning on the individual's 18th birthday or, in lieu of a continuing disability review, whenever the Commissioner determines that an individual's case is subject to a redetermination under this clause.

With respect to any redetermination under this clause, paragraph (4) shall not apply.

(iv)(I) Except as provided in subclause (VI), not later than 12 months after the birth of an individual, the Commissioner shall review in accordance with paragraph (4) the continuing eligibility for benefits under this subchapter by reason of disability of such individual whose low birth weight is a contributing factor material to the Commissioner's determination that the individual is disabled.

(II) A review under subclause (I) shall be considered a substitute for a review otherwise required under any other provision of this subparagraph during that 12-month period.

(III) A representative payee of a recipient whose case is reviewed under this clause shall present, at the time of review, evidence demonstrating that the recipient is, and has been, receiving treatment, to the extent considered medically necessary and available, of the condition which was the basis for providing benefits under this subchapter.

(IV) If the representative payee refuses to comply without good cause with the requirements of subclause (III), the Commissioner of Social Security shall, if the Commissioner determines it is in the best interest of the individual, promptly suspend payment of benefits to the representative payee, and provide for payment of benefits to an alternative representative payee of the individual or, if the interest of the individual under this subchapter would be served thereby, to the individual.

(V) Subclause (III) shall not apply to the representative payee of any individual with respect to whom the Commissioner determines such application would be inappropriate or unnecessary. In making such determination, the Commissioner shall take into consideration the nature of the individual's impairment (or combination of impairments). Section 1383(c) of this title shall not apply to a finding by the Commissioner that the requirements of subclause (III) should not apply to an individual's representative payee.

(VI) Subclause (I) shall not apply in the case of an individual described in that subclause who, at the time of the individual's initial disability determination, the Commissioner determines has an impairment that is not expected to improve within 12 months after the birth of that individual, and who the Commissioner schedules for a continuing disability review at a date that is after the individual attains 1 year of age.<sup>4062</sup>

“Disaster relief” means activities carried out pursuant to a determination under section 102(2) of the Robert T. Safford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act – Section 102(2) provides:

(2) MAJOR DISASTER. – “Major disaster” means any natural catastrophe (including any hurricane, tornado, storm, high water, winddriven water, tidal wave, tsunami, earthquake, volcanic eruption, landslide, mudslide, snowstorm, or drought), or, regardless of cause, any fire, flood, or explosion, in any part of the United States, which in the determination of the President causes damage of sufficient severity and magnitude to warrant major disaster assistance under this chapter to supplement the efforts and available resources of States, local governments, and disaster relief organizations in alleviating the damage, loss, hardship, or suffering caused thereby.<sup>4063</sup>

Grants to States under section 306 of the Social Security Act – Section 306 provides:

§ 506. Grants to States for reemployment services and eligibility assessments

(a) In general

The Secretary of Labor (in this section referred to as the “Secretary”) shall award grants under this section for a fiscal year to eligible States to conduct a program of reemployment services and eligibility assessments for individuals referred to reemployment services as described in section 503(j) of this title for weeks in such fiscal year for which such individuals receive unemployment compensation.

(b) Purposes

The purposes of this section are to accomplish the following goals:

(1) To improve employment outcomes of individuals that receive unemployment compensation and to reduce the average duration of receipt of such compensation through employment.

(2) To strengthen program integrity and reduce improper payments of unemployment compensation by States through the detection and prevention of such payments to individuals who are not eligible for such compensation.

(3) To promote alignment with the broader vision of the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act (29 U.S.C. 3101 et seq.) of increased program integration and service delivery for job seekers, including claimants for unemployment compensation.

(4) To establish reemployment services and eligibility assessments as an entry point for individuals receiving unemployment compensation into other workforce system partner programs.

(c) Evidence-based standards

(1) In general

In carrying out a State program of reemployment services and eligibility assessments using grant funds awarded to the State under this section, a State shall use such funds only for interventions demonstrated to reduce the number of weeks for which program participants receive unemployment compensation by improving employment outcomes for program participants.

(2) Expanding evidence-based interventions

In addition to the requirement imposed by paragraph (1), a State shall —

(A) for fiscal years 2023 and 2024, use no less than 25 percent of the grant funds awarded to the State under this section for interventions with a high or moderate causal evidence rating that show a demonstrated capacity to improve employment and earnings outcomes for program participants;

(B) for fiscal years 2025 and 2026, use no less than 40 percent of such grant funds for interventions described in subparagraph (A); and

(C) for fiscal years beginning after fiscal year 2026, use no less than 50 percent of such grant funds for interventions described in subparagraph (A).

(d) Evaluations

(1) Required evaluations

Any intervention without a high or moderate causal evidence rating used by a State in carrying out a State program of reemployment services and eligibility assessments under this section shall be under evaluation at the time of use.

(2) Funding limitation

A State shall use not more than 10 percent of grant funds awarded to the State under this section to conduct or cause to be conducted evaluations of interventions used in carrying out a program under this section (including evaluations conducted pursuant to paragraph (1)).

(e) State plan

(1) In general

As a condition of eligibility to receive a grant under this section for a fiscal year, a State shall submit to the Secretary, at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may require, a State plan that outlines how the State intends to conduct a program of reemployment services and eligibility assessments under this section, including—

(A) assurances that, and a description of how, the program will provide—

(i) proper notification to participating individuals of the program's eligibility conditions, requirements, and benefits, including the issuance of warnings and simple, clear notifications to ensure that participating individuals are fully aware of the consequences of failing to adhere to such requirements, including policies related to non-attendance or non-fulfillment of work search requirements; and

(ii) reasonable scheduling accommodations to maximize participation for eligible individuals;

(B) assurances that, and a description of how, the program will conform with the purposes outlined in subsection (b) and satisfy the requirement to use evidence-based standards under subsection (c), including —

(i) a description of the evidence-based interventions the State plans to use to speed reemployment;

(ii) an explanation of how such interventions are appropriate to the population served; and

(iii) if applicable, a description of the evaluation structure the State plans to use for interventions without at least a moderate or high causal evidence rating, which may include national evaluations conducted by the Department of Labor or by other entities; and

(C) a description of any reemployment activities and evaluations conducted in the prior fiscal year, and any data collected on —

(i) characteristics of program participants;

(ii) the number of weeks for which program participants receive unemployment compensation; and

(iii) employment and other outcomes for program participants consistent with State performance accountability measures provided by the State unemployment compensation program and in section 116(b) of the Workforce Innovation and Opportunity Act (29 U.S.C. 3141(b)).

(2) Approval

The Secretary shall approve any State plan, that is timely submitted to the Secretary, in such manner as the Secretary may require, that satisfies the conditions described in paragraph (1).

(3) Disapproval and revision

If the Secretary determines that a State plan submitted pursuant to this subsection fails to satisfy the conditions described in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall —

(A) disapprove such plan;

(B) provide to the State, not later than 30 days after the date of receipt of the State plan, a written notice of such disapproval that includes a description of any portion of the plan that was not approved and the reason for the disapproval of each such portion; and

(C) provide the State with an opportunity to correct any such failure and submit a revised State plan.

(f) Allocation of funds

(1) Base funding

(A) In general

For each fiscal year after fiscal year 2020, the Secretary shall allocate a percentage equal to the base funding percentage for such fiscal year of the funds made available for grants under this section among the States awarded such a grant for such fiscal year using a formula prescribed by the Secretary based on the rate of insured unemployment (as defined in section 203(e)(1) of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970 (26 U.S.C. 3304 note)) in the State for a period to be determined by the Secretary. In developing such formula with respect to a State, the Secretary shall consider the importance of avoiding sharp reductions in grant funding to a State over time.

(B) Base funding percentage

For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term “base funding percentage” means —

(i) for fiscal years 2021 through 2026, 89 percent; and

(ii) for fiscal years after 2026, 84 percent.

(2) Reservation for outcome payments

(A) In general

Of the amounts made available for grants under this section for each fiscal year after 2020, the Secretary shall reserve a percentage equal to the outcome reservation percentage for such fiscal year for outcome payments to increase the amount otherwise awarded to a State under paragraph (1). Such outcome payments shall be paid to States conducting reemployment services and eligibility assessments under this section that, during the previous fiscal year, met or exceeded the outcome goals provided in subsection (b)(1) related to reducing the average duration of receipt of unemployment compensation by improving employment outcomes.

(B) Outcome reservation percentage

For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term “outcome reservation percentage” means —

- (i) for fiscal years 2021 through 2026, 10 percent; and
- (ii) for fiscal years after 2026, 15 percent.

(3) Reservation for research and technical assistance

Of the amounts made available for grants under this section for each fiscal year after 2020, the Secretary may reserve not more than 1 percent to conduct research and provide technical assistance to States.

(4) Consultation and public comment

Not later than September 30, 2019, the Secretary shall —

(A) consult with the States and seek public comment in developing the allocation formula under paragraph (1) and the criteria for carrying out the reservations under paragraph (2); and

(B) make publicly available the allocation formula and criteria developed pursuant to subclause (A).

(g) Notification to Congress

Not later than 90 days prior to making any changes to the allocation formula or the criteria developed pursuant to subsection (f)(5)(A), the Secretary shall submit to Congress, including to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, a notification of any such change.

(h) Supplement not supplant

Funds made available to carry out this section shall be used to supplement the level of Federal, State, and local public funds that, in the absence of such availability, would be expended to provide reemployment services and eligibility assessments to individuals receiving unemployment compensation, and in no case to supplant such Federal, State, or local public funds.

(i) Definitions

In this section:

(1) Causal evidence rating

The terms “high causal evidence rating” and “moderate causal evidence rating” shall have the meaning given such terms by the Secretary of Labor.

(2) Eligible state

The term “eligible State” means a State that has in effect a State plan approved by the Secretary in accordance with subsection (e).

(3) Intervention

The term “intervention” means a service delivery strategy for the provision of State reemployment services and eligibility assessment activities under this section.

(4) State

The term “State” has the meaning given the term in section 205 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970 (26 U.S.C. 3304 note).

(5) Unemployment compensation

The term unemployment compensation means “regular compensation”, “extended compensation”, and “additional compensation” (as such terms are defined by section 205 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970 (26 U.S.C. 3304 note)).<sup>4064</sup>

Committee) tasked with providing additional deficit reduction. Backup budgetary enforcement measures were installed and scheduled to take effect in the event that the Joint Committee did not reach a timely agreement.

The Joint Committee was tasked with reaching an agreement on an additional $1.2 trillion to $1.5 trillion in deficit reduction over the FY2012-FY2021 period. Absent an agreement by January 2012, or with an agreement on deficit reduction lower than $1.2 trillion, the BCA created “automatic enforcement measures” to ensure an additional $1.2 trillion in deficit reduction was reached. These measures consisted of (1) lower caps on discretionary budget authority, implemented through separate restrictions on defense and nondefense activities, from FY2013 through FY2021; and (2) automatic reductions in mandatory spending from FY2013 through FY2021, with large exceptions for activities related to Social Security and Medicare.<sup>4242</sup>

Conveying the President’s fiscal year 2023 budget request to Congress, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget explained the continuing effect of this section:

Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act (BBEDCA) Section 251A Reductions

The failure of the Joint Select Committee on Deficit Reduction to propose, and the Congress to enact, legislation to reduce the deficit by at least $1.5 trillion triggered automatic reductions to discretionary and mandatory spending in fiscal years 2013 through 2021. The reductions were implemented through a combination of sequestration of mandatory spending and reductions in the discretionary caps, with some modifications as provided for in the American Taxpayer Relief Act of 2012, and the Bipartisan Budget Acts (BBAs) of 2013, 2015, 2018, and 2019. By amending section 251A of BBEDCA, the mandatory sequestration provisions were extended beyond 2021 through 2031. The 2023 Budget proposes to continue mandatory sequestration into 2032 to generate additional savings for deficit reduction.

Section 251A of BBEDCA generally requires that the percentage reductions calculated in 2021 for non-exempt mandatory defense and non-defense spending be applied each year through 2031. Those reductions are 5.7 percent for non-defense accounts, 8.3 percent for defense accounts, and

2 percent for Medicare and community and migrant health centers. Because the percentage reduction is known in advance, the 2023 Budget presents these reductions at the account level. Prior to 2022, the Budget reflected sequestration reductions starting in the budget year in a central allowance account.<sup>4243</sup>

In a footnote, the Director recounted the history of the treatment of Medicare under this section:

The 251A sequestration for Medicare programs was suspended between May 1, 2020 and December 31, 2020 by the CARES Act. This suspension was extended to March 31, 2021 by Public Law 116-260, the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2021, further extended to December 31, 2021 by Public Law 117-7, and extended again to March 31, 2022 by Public Law 117-71, the Protecting Medicare and American Farmers from Sequester Cuts Act, which also decreased the sequestration percentage for Medicare for the period from April 1, 2022 through June 30, 2022 to 1 percent and increased the sequestration percentage for Medicare to 2.25 percent for the first half of fiscal year 2030 and 3 percent for the second half of fiscal year 2030. Additionally, Public Law 117-58 modified the sequestration percentage for Medicare to 4 percent for the first half of fiscal year 2031 and 0 percent for the second half of fiscal year 2031.<sup>4244</sup>

The Director further noted: “Sequestration was most recently extended through 2031 by Public Law 117-58, the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act.”<sup>4245</sup>

Thus, pursuant to this section, on March 28, 2022, President Biden issued the following order:

253(g)(1) (1) ADJUSTMENTS. —

253(g)(1)(A) (A) When the President submits the budget for fiscal year 1992, the maximum deficit<sup>4444</sup> amounts for fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995 shall be adjusted to reflect up-to-date reestimates of economic and technical assumptions and any changes in concepts or definitions. When the President submits the budget for fiscal year 1993, the maximum deficit<sup>4445</sup> amounts for fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995 shall be further adjusted to reflect up-to-date reestimates of economic and technical assumptions and any changes in concepts or definitions.

253(g)(1)(B) (B) When submitting the budget for fiscal year 1994, the President may choose to adjust the maximum deficit<sup>4446</sup> amounts for fiscal years 1994 and 1995 to reflect up-to-date reestimates of economic and technical assumptions. If the President chooses to adjust the maximum deficit<sup>4447</sup> amount when submitting the fiscal year 1994 budget, the President may choose to invoke the same adjustment procedure when submitting the budget for fiscal year 1995. In each case, the President must choose between making no adjustment or the full adjustment described in paragraph (2).<sup>4448</sup> If the President chooses to make that full adjustment, then those procedures for adjusting discretionary spending limits<sup>4449</sup> described in sections 251(b)(1)(C)<sup>4450</sup> and 251(b)(2)(E),<sup>4451</sup> otherwise applicable through fiscal year 1993 or 1994 (as the case may

STATUTORY PAY-AS-YOU-GO
ACT

Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act

Pay-as-you-go is an idea from the 1990 Budget Enforcement Act. That law replaced unattainable fixed deficit targets with a system in which Congress has to pay for direct spending and tax legislation, or else trigger cuts in direct spending programs. That system expired in 2003. Congress reinstated it with the Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010.

The Congressional Research Service's Bill Heniff and Bob Keith explain how the statutory paygo process works:

The Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010 (Statutory PAYGO Act) establishes a process intended, as Section 2 of the act states, "to enforce a rule of budget neutrality on new revenue and direct spending legislation." The budgetary effects of revenue and direct spending provisions enacted into law, including both costs and savings, are recorded by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) on two PAYGO scorecards covering rolling five-year and 10-year periods (i.e., in each new session, the periods covered by the scorecards roll forward one fiscal year). The budgetary effects of PAYGO measures are determined by statements inserted into the Congressional Record by the chairmen of the House and Senate Budget Committees and referenced in the measures. As a general matter, the statements are expected to reflect cost estimates prepared by the Congressional Budget Office (CBO). If this procedure is not followed for a PAYGO measure, then the budgetary effects of the measure are determined by OMB.

Shortly after a congressional session ends, OMB finalizes the two PAYGO scorecards and determines whether a violation of the PAYGO requirement has occurred (i.e., if a debit has been recorded for the budget year on either scorecard). If so, the President issues a sequestration order that implements largely across-the-board cuts in nonexempt direct spending programs sufficient to remedy the violation by eliminating the debit. Many direct spending programs and activities are exempt from sequestration. If no PAYGO violation is found, no further action occurs and the process is repeated during the next session.

The new statutory PAYGO process was created on a permanent basis; there are no expiration dates in the act. The process became effective upon enactment.

As a budget enforcement tool, the new statutory PAYGO process is aimed at preventing, or at least discouraging, net deficit increases arising from the enactment of direct spending and revenue legislation. Any costs designated as emergencies are excluded from the scorecards, and significant costs associated with four specified categories of legislation may be excluded as well. . . . Finally, debt service costs are excluded as well.

The statutory PAYGO process does not address deficit increases, stemming from changes in direct spending or revenue levels, that are projected to occur under existing law. Other budget enforcement procedures, such as the reconciliation process under the Congressional Budget Act (CBA) of 1974, may be used to reduce deficit levels projected under existing law. Further, the statutory PAYGO process does not apply to discretionary spending, which is provided in annual appropriations acts.<sup>5213</sup>

CHIMPs

You can be forgiven if you think of chimps as animals that live in zoos. But in the budget world, a CHIMP (or ChIMP) is a CHange In a Mandatory Program done in an appropriation act. The 2009 budget resolution created a point of order against certain kinds of these changes.

According to longstanding scorekeeping conventions, “Substantive changes to or restrictions on entitlement law or other mandatory spending law in appropriations laws will be scored against the Appropriations Committee’s section 302(b) allocations in the House and the Senate.”<sup>5897</sup> This follows the general rule that the doer of the deed gets the credit or the blame.

Thus, by including savings in mandatory programs in appropriations law, appropriators can make room for more appropriations under the same top line. Some view this as an evasion of the allocation to the Appropriations Committee under Budget Act section 302 or of discretionary spending limits (when they existed). Efforts to constrain these changes led to the provision here.

The joint explanatory statement accompanying the conference report on the 2009 budget resolution explained the provision:

Senate-passed Resolution

The Senate-passed resolution for 2009, S. Con. Res. 70, included the following enforcement provisions, most of which updated provisions that were part of the 2008 budget resolution.

Sec. 213. Appropriations changes in mandatory programs (ChIMPs) with net costs

The Senate-passed resolution again included a 60-vote point of order against any provision of appropriations legislation that would have been estimated as affecting direct spending or receipts if it were included in legislation other than appropriations legislation, if all three of the following conditions are met:

(1) the provision would increase BA in —

(a) at least one of the nine fiscal years that follow the budget year, and

(b) over the period of the total of the budget year and the nine fiscal years following the budget year;

(2) the provision would increase net outlays over the period of the total of the nine fiscal years following the budget year; and

(3) the sum total of all changes in mandatory programs in the legislation would increase net outlays as measured over the period of the total of the nine fiscal years following the budget year.

The point of order would not apply against any ChIMPs that were enacted in each of the three fiscal years prior to the budget year. The point of order works like the Byrd rule in that it applies against individual provisions of legislation rather than against an entire bill, amendment, or conference report. If the point of order is not waived then the offending provision is stricken.

Sec. 315. Senate point of order against legislation increasing short-term deficit

This section creates a point of order in the Senate against legislation other than appropriations measures that would increase the on-budget deficit by more than $10 billion in any year covered by the budget resolution, unless the legislation is fully offset over the total of all of the years covered by the budget resolution. Its purpose is to complement paygo, by requiring that any measure with a cost of over $10 billion in any year be paid for over the budget window. agreed to budget resolution. The prohibition is enforced with a point of order that, if raised, could be waived with the affirmative vote of three-fifths of Members, duly chosen and sworn. Paragraph (d) provides an exception for any legislation considered under the reserve fund in section 303(1) – repeal of the President’s health care law.

HOUSE AMENDMENT

Section 407 of the House amendment prohibits the consideration of any measure reported by an authorizing committee that increases direct spending by $5 billion over the long-term. The prohibition is enforced with a point of order. Subsection (b) states the applicable periods for this section are any of the 4 consecutive 10 fiscal year periods beginning in fiscal year 2026.

Point of Order — On March 8, 2022, Senator Rick Scott raised a point of order under this section against the Postal Service Reform Act of 2022,<sup>5967</sup> saying:

Mr. SCOTT of Florida. Mr. President, the pending measure, H.R. 3076, Postal Service Reform Act of 2022, would increase on-budget deficits by $5 billion or more in at least one of the four 10- year periods beginning in 2032.

This increase violates section 3101 of the 2016 budget resolution, which prohibits consideration of legislation that would cause a net increase in on-budget deficits in any of the four 10-year periods beyond the current budget window.

I raise a point of order under section 3101(b) of S. Con. Res. 11, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2016.<sup>5968</sup>

Waiver— On March 8, 2022, Budget Committee Chair Bernie Sanders moved to waive this point of order for consideration of the Postal Service Reform Act of 2022,<sup>5969</sup> saying:

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, pursuant to section 3101(c) of the fiscal year 2016 budget resolution, I move to waive section 3101 of that resolution for purposes of the pending measure, and I ask for the yeas and nays.<sup>5970</sup>

The Senate voted 68 to 30 to waive the point of order.<sup>5971</sup>

The Parliamentarian's office has noted as a precedent an instance of a waiver of the predecessor to this section, writing, "The Senate waived the relevant provisions of the Congressional Budget Act for consideration of a conference report, rendering moot a § 311(b) point of order under S. Con. Res. 70 of the 110th Congress that the conference report increased long-term deficits."<sup>5972</sup> Thus, the Parliamentarian's office reports:

On July 15, 2010, the Senate was considering the conference report to accompany H.R. 4173, the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act. Mr. Gregg (of New Hampshire) raised a point of order that the conference report would cause an increase in long-term deficits, in violation of §311(b) of S. Con. Res. 70 (110th). Mr. Dodd (of Connecticut) moved to waive all applicable budget points of order for consideration of the conference report, which was agreed to by a vote of 60 yeas to 39 nays.

Mr. GREGG. . . . Therefore, I make a point of order that the pending bill violates section 311(b) of S. Con. Res. 70 of the 110th Congress.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and the waiver provisions of applicable budget resolutions, I move to waive all applicable sections of that act and those budget resolutions for purposes of the pending conference report, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mrs. Gillibrand of New York]. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

Senate PAYGO

The fiscal year 2018 budget resolution updates the paygo point of order in the Senate.<sup>5974</sup> The Congressional Research Service's Bill Heniff Jr. described the paygo rule:

The Senate pay-as-you-go, or PAYGO, rule prohibits consideration of legislation that is projected to increase on-budget deficits in any of the following four fiscal-year periods: (1) the current year; (2) the budget year; (3) the six years beginning with the current year; and (4) the 11 years also beginning with the current year. The rule applies to legislation estimated to affect direct spending (commonly referred to as mandatory spending) and revenues. It does not apply to spending provided and controlled through the annual appropriations process (i.e., discretionary spending).

The rule generally requires that any legislation estimated to increase direct spending or reduce revenues must be offset so that the legislation does not increase the on-budget deficit. The offsetting provisions must be estimated to reduce direct spending, increase revenues, or a combination of the two. Without such offsetting provisions, the legislation would require the support of at least 60 Senators to waive the rule and be considered on the Senate floor.

The Senate first established the PAYGO rule in the FY1994 budget resolution in 1993. As originally established, the rule prohibited the consideration of any direct spending and revenue legislation that was projected to increase the deficit over a 10-year period. The Senate has modified and extended the rule seven times in subsequent budget resolutions and once in a Senate simple resolution. Most recently, in the FY2018 budget resolution, the Senate modified the rule to add two additional periods (the current fiscal year and the budget year) to the existing periods (the six-year and 11-year periods) for which legislation may not increase the projected on-budget deficit.

Since 1993, when the rule was established, through November 5, 2021, the PAYGO rule has been used to prevent the consideration of 46 amendments. During the same period, the Senate voted to waive the PAYGO rule 18 times, allowing consideration of the matter: six times in relation to a measure, 11 times in relation to an amendment (eight of these amendments were full-text substitutes to a bill), and once in relation to the disposition of a House amendment.<sup>5975</sup>

Emergencies and Advance Appropriations

The budget resolution for fiscal year 2022 includes permanent budget process provisions on two issues—emergencies and advance appropriations.<sup>6043</sup>

Emergencies—The budget resolution’s emergency legislation provision updates the provision on emergency provisions last adopted in the fiscal year 2018 budget resolution.<sup>6044</sup> The section permits the Senate Budget Committee Chair to exempt emergency legislation from allocations, aggregates, and levels included in this resolution. And the section defines what constitutes an emergency.

The budget process created emergency designations in the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990, which created caps on discretionary spending and a pay-as-you-go system for mandatory spending and taxes, and also created exceptions to those constraints for emergencies.<sup>6045</sup> The budget resolution for fiscal year 1994 extended those caps, enforced by points of order, and also adjusted those caps for emergency appropriations.<sup>6046</sup> The budget resolutions for fiscal years 1996,<sup>6047</sup> 1997,<sup>6048</sup> and 1998<sup>6049</sup> included similar language. Similarly, the budget resolution for fiscal year 1995 created a point of order for enforcing pay-as-you-go that included an exception for emergency provisions.<sup>6050</sup> The Balanced Budget Act of 1997 added a parallel system of adjustments<sup>6051</sup> to the Congressional Budget Act as section 314.<sup>6052</sup>

The budget resolution for fiscal year 1997 expressed the sense of the House that “Congress should consider alternative approaches to budgeting for emergencies, including codifying the definition of an emergency,”<sup>6053</sup> and the budget resolution for fiscal year 2001 similarly expressed the sense of the House that the Budget Committees should develop a definition of emergencies.<sup>6054</sup> The budget resolution for fiscal year 2000 permitted the Senate Budget Committee Chair to make adjustments for emergency legislation much as the fiscal year 2022 resolution does and also created a point of order allowing Senators to challenge emergency designations.<sup>6055</sup> The budget resolutions for fiscal years 2001,<sup>6056</sup> 2004,<sup>6057</sup> 2006,<sup>6058</sup> 2008,<sup>6059</sup> 2010,<sup>6060</sup> and 2018<sup>6061</sup> included similar provisions, as did the Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010.<sup>6062</sup> The section in the fiscal year 2022 resolution also parallels that in the 2021 House resolution providing for budget allocations for the Committee on Appropriations.<sup>6063</sup>

Conveying the President’s fiscal year 2023 budget request to Congress, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget acknowledged this provision, stating:

Advance Appropriations

The 2023 Budget freezes most discretionary advance appropriations at the 2024 proposed level, below the limits included in sections 4002 and 4003 for the Senate and the House, respectively, of the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2022 (S. Con. Res. 14). Those limits apply only to the accounts explicitly specified in the joint explanatory statement of managers accompanying the resolution. Outside of these limits, the Administration would allow discretionary advance appropriations for veterans’ medical care, as is required by the Veterans Health Care Budget Reform and Transparency Act (Public Law 111-81).<sup>6156</sup>

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The author owes a debt of thanks to Budget Committee Chair Bernie Sanders, Budget Committee Staff Director Warren Gunnels, and Budget Committee Deputy Staff Director Mike Jones for authorizing the publication of this volume.

Thanks are due, as well, to the Senate Parliamentarians who served during the author's time in the Senate—Bob Dove, Alan Frumin, and Elizabeth MacDonough. Each was a patient teacher. The author also learned much from assistant Parliamentarians Gail Millar, Kevin Kayes, Pete Robinson, Jim Weber, Michael Beaver, Beth Smerko, Jennifer Smith, Leigh Hildebrand, and Christy Amatos, and they each have contributed to the work of the Parliamentarian's Office cited in this volume. Budget maven Mike Jones contributed greatly to the author's understanding of the budget process and also serves as a role model to which to aspire.

Former Budget Counsels Jodi Grant, Lisa Konwinski, Joe Gaeta, Robert Etter, and Jill Harrelson thoughtfully created and preserved many of the records recorded here. Similarly, Budget Counsel Melissa Kaplan-Pistiner researched, collected, and organized many of the communications cited in this volume, and Budget Analyst Sion Bell recorded invaluable notes on meetings related to the Build Back Better Act and Inflation Reduction Act of 2022 reflected in the text. Budget staffers Joshua Smith, Melissa Kaplan-Pistiner, Tyler Evilsizer, and David Snower carefully read parts of this volume and offered very useful suggestions for improvement. Any errors are the author's alone.

Budget Committee staffers Hufsa Husain, Joey Alpert, Zach Green, April Lobo, Jimmy O'Donnell, Melissa Kaplan-Pistiner, and Tyler Evilsizer produced the Budget Point of Order appendix.

The author owes a debt of gratitude to the Budget Committee Chairs and Ranking Members who hired and retained him—Senators Lawton Chiles, Jim Sasser, Jim Exon, Frank Lautenberg, and Bernie Sanders—as well as their Staff Directors—Rick Brandon, John Hilley, Larry Stein, and Warren Gunnels—for their trust.

And the author owes limitless gratitude to his dear spouse Ellen Weintraub for enduring countless hours of his working on and discussing of this volume.
