NUCLEAR WASTE TECHNICAL REVIEW BOARD MUST ADDRESS ENVIRONMENTAL AND SAFETY CONCERNS

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, almost 10 years ago the Nuclear Waste Technical Review Board was created by Congress to determine the most suitable site for storing nuclear waste. This board was made up of the most prominent members of the scientific community, not one of whom hails from Nevada.

What recommendation did this board make? Well, in their March 1996 report they concluded that there was absolutely no compelling technical or safety reason to remove spent fuel from its current location to a central facility. This expert, nonpartisan review board made this determination based on irrefutable, unbiased, scientific research.

What legitimate excuse, then, could possibly justify the moving of nuclear waste from on-site storage, placing the health, welfare, and safety of many citizens in jeopardy? There are still many environmental and safety concerns that must be addressed before we move forward and mandate an unsafe permanent or interim nuclear waste storage facility at Yucca Mountain.

SPONSOR H.R. 659

(Mr. BURR of North Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURR. Mr. Speaker, sometimes the Government makes a mistake and, yes, even agencies make mistakes. But the test of effective government is how quickly an institution can correct their errors.

In 1990, in a case of mistaken identity, the Environmental Protection Agency listed a chemical called ethylene glycol monobutyl ether, or EGBE, on its hazardous air pollutant list under the Clean Air Act amendments. This chemical is considered not harmful to the ozone and, according to scientific studies, does not harm the environment.

The listing of this nontoxic substance will trigger regulations costing each manufacturer about $5 million to comply, and the EPA's hands...
annual report to the American people

Congress must lead the way on Medicare much. So while the administration is trying to figure out a way to handle all the mess, I'm trying to show some leadership on the Medicare issue. I urge my colleagues to get the facts and prevent lobbyists from clouding the issue before us.

FAMILY SERVICES IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Family Services Improvement Act, H.R. 1480, which I reintroduced yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to imagine if they were a single mom who is trying to get off welfare. Mom drops her 4-year-old off at Head Start, takes her 7-year-old to second grade and goes to her own graduate equivalency degree classes, all in the same school. When the family needs immunizations or health screenings, they can go to the school-based clinic. The social services coordinator at the school can help the family find housing, food, and health care. There is also a job placement coordinator to help mom find a job when she finishes her classes.

Unfortunately, my colleagues, as you well know, this model of coordinated, one-stop programs to help children and families move off government assistance is rare.

The Family Services Improvement Act will create incentives for establishing coordinated one-stop programs. It will make the programs more effective and efficient and more available. I urge the support of my colleagues for this important legislation.

WE MUST ACT NOW TO REFORM MEDICARE

Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the administration is far too busy with all of their lawyers, trying to figure out a way to handle all the campaign laws they overlooked to show some leadership on the Medicare issue. I know that would be asking too much. So while the administration is busy busy with all of their lawyers, this Congress must lead the way on Medicare.

The Medicare trustees released their annual report to the American people last week. The trust fund is going bankrupt, probably in only 4 years. The report confirms what Republicans have been saying about Medicare for the last 2 years. The trustees state that failure to fund Medicare will result in certain bankruptcy in the year 2001. None of this is new. A Member of Congress has known this for several years.

I call on those who are more interested in saving Medicare from bankruptcy than in playing politics with seniors to join in our effort to reform Medicare. We must act now.

IRS HAS GONE HOG WILD

Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, in San Diego, Mindy, the potbellied pig, called 911. Authorities cannot figure out what caused this devil pig to perpetrate such a dirty deed. They asked, did Mindy accidentally fall out of bed? Was Mindy calling Pizza Hut, or was Mindy the potbellied pig simply love sick, calling for Mr. Good Pig?

Mr. Speaker, the truth is, Mindy dialed 911 to tell Congress to get the snouts of the IRS out of the assets of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with Mindy the potbellied pig, this is hog sense. The IRS has gone hog wild. Pass H.R. 367 and change the burden of proof in the Tax Code and treat taxpayers like every other citizen under the Constitution.

I yield back the balance of this hog sense business.

AMERICANS DESERVE EARLIER TAX FREEDOM DAY

Mr. KNOLENBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. KNOLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, today the tax burden on working Americans is as high as it has ever been. We are asking our families to pay up to nearly 40 percent of their income in taxes. Tax Freedom Day, that is the day when we start working for ourselves and our families, is later and later every year. This year it is May 9, 2 days later than last year, the latest ever.

Yet, many of my friends on the other side of the aisle do not feel our taxes are high enough. But if they would listen to the American people, they would find they are wrong. We can do something about it as well. We can provide a family with a $500 per child tax credit, cut capital gains, remove estate taxes.

The facts are clear. The American people are overtaxed and it is time to provide relief. Reaching an agreement for working families is not going to be easy, but we owe it; we owe it to the American people. Let us all do our part to make Tax Freedom Day occur earlier, urge the President to live up to his campaign promises, and join our efforts to help working Americans loosen the noose of the current tax burden.

HARSH NEW WELFARE LAW

Mr. GUTIERREZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. GUTIERREZ. Mr. Speaker, in 93 days a harsh new welfare law will wipe out assistance to legal immigrants. Yesterday I told my colleagues about one such immigrant from my district. Today let me tell you about another. Her name is Adela.

If my colleagues voted for welfare reform so they could teach people about the importance of hard work, they did not have to bicker in Adela's case. After coming to the United States, Adela worked for 8 years in a factory on Chicago's northwest side. In fact, she worked well past the age at which most Americans would have called it quits and would have retired. But the company moved out of town, closed its doors down.

Adela, now 74 years old and in poor health, has been served notice that her years of hard working, playing by the rules and paying taxes is not enough. She got her pink slip. Now it is a computer printed form letter telling her that her only means of support, Social Security, is about to be taken away from her on August 22.

Do legal immigrants like Adela need to learn the value of hard work? No. Congress needs to learn the value of hard-working immigrants who have made America what it is today. I suggest to any Member that he look back and see what his grandparents look like or great grandparents looked like.

COMMEMORATING REMEMBRANCE DAY

Mr. MANZULLO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be able to take this opportunity to commemorate the more than 8 million people, 6 million of whom were Jewish, who a little more than half a century ago were brutally, deliberately, and systematically exterminated in a state-sponsored effort to annihilate their religious, cultural, and ethnic existence. All across the United States, Americans are commemorating Remembrance Day for those who were exterminated in the death camps of Nazi Germany.

I unite with those from around the country, including my constituents of the Jewish Federation of Greater Rockford, IL, to recognize those who risked their lives and those who died trying to intervene and save those who were targets of systematic extermination.
The Jewish Federation of Greater Rockford is commemorating Remembrance Day by paying tribute to the “Righteous Gentiles,” those non-Jews who risked death to help save the lives of Jews and others from Hitler’s killing machine. These courageous people acted out of a conviction that they simply could not stand by and watch so great a crime perpetrated against fellow human beings. We are privileged to have one of those surviving Righteous Gentiles, Irene Opdyke, addressing the Jewish Federation of Greater Rockford, IL.

COMMUNITY ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH ACT

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, in our Nation’s inner cities, minority communities are being victimized by toxic pollutants, creating an environmental crisis, a health crisis, and a civil rights crisis in this country.

In my district in New York there are over 2000 industrial facilities, a radioactive storage yard and a huge sewage treatment plant. The effect of this pollution is discriminatory. The children in my district are dying of cancer, suffering from asthma, and have toxic levels of lead.

Study after study has shown that minority communities bear the brunt of toxic pollution in this country. Today I introduced the Community Environmental Equity Act, which will apply title VI of the Civil Rights Act to toxic pollutants. I urge you all to cosponsor this important legislation. It is time to realize that we cannot have social justice until we first have environmental justice.

A CALL FOR BIPARTISAN MEDICARE REFORM

Mr. NEUMANN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. NEUMANN. Mr. Speaker, the Medicare trustees released their report last week and issued a warning that the Medicare program will be bankrupt in 4 years. When I tell seniors back in Rockford, IL, that Medicare is a pay-as-you-go system, your contributions do not go into a fund for your use. The contributions you made during your working years go to support those who are ahead of you, those who have already retired. When you retire, money from the current workers, not money from your contributions, will pay your benefits.

So where do we go from here? We need to sit down and in a bipartisan manner decide how to reform the system and make it solvent. There is no other choice for our seniors in America today.

AN 11TH COMMANDMENT FOR CONGRESS: WE SHALL START TO WORK NOW ON ISSUES THAT ACTUALLY MATTER TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. BLAGOJEVICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. BLAGOJEVICH. Mr. Speaker, recently I voted in favor of a resolution supporting the Ten Commandments. I voted in favor of a resolution to study the economy of American Samoa. I voted for a resolution banning Federal funding for physician-assisted suicide, even though assisted suicide is not legal at all. In fact, let me firmly assert, I am against Federal funding for any activities that are not yet legal.

But is it not time, Mr. Speaker, that we started working on issues that are more important to people, things like making student loans more available, having affordable health care for the 10 million American children without it? We should be working to make our streets safer. And what about our crumbling schools, many of which were built before World War II? When will we address the long-term health of Medicare and Social Security?

Why does this Congress not agree to an 11th Commandment: We shall start to work now on issues that actually matter to the American people.

LET US WORK TOGETHER TO SAVE MEDICARE

Mr. ROGAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. ROGAN. Mr. Speaker, I was raised by my grandparents, and then by a great-aunt who lived on her Social Security. They relied upon Medicare for affordability, for providing health care for the 10 million American children without it? We should be working to make our streets safer. And what about our crumbling schools, many of which were built before World War II? When will we address the long-term health of Medicare and Social Security?

Why does this Congress not agree to an 11th Commandment: We shall start to work now on issues that actually matter to the American people.

SUPPORT THE $500-PER-CHILD TAX RELIEF AND OPPOSE THE WOMEN AND CHILDREN FUND

Mr. TIAHRT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, we just heard that the Republicans were trying to eliminate people on women and children fund. We have opposed increasing the number. Let me tell the Members the reason why. In Kansas right now, a family of four making $28,000 a year is eligible to receive benefits from the women and children fund. This is 180,000 people who would receive $300 per year if they did qualify for the WIC Program.

However, if Members would just give them a little relief in their tax structure, like a $500-per-child tax credit, they would actually get more money. Instead of getting $300 per year for those two children, they would actually get $1,000 per year. It would be money they could control.
The difference in philosophies here is that the other side of the aisle would like to control how people run their lives and what they have to do with their money, but the Republicans trust people. They want them to have more of their own money to meet the needs that their children have, because what best would understand what a child needs, other than its parents?

So I would support the $500 per child tax relief and oppose the women and children fund.

CONGRESSIONAL BLACK CAUCUS OPPOSES A SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL WHICH THROWS WOMEN AND CHILDREN OFF WIC

(Ms. WATERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the Congressional Black Caucus to voice the strongest possible opposition to the supplemental appropriations bill voted out of committee last week. If passed, this bill would cut $100 million from the vital supplemental food program for women, infants, and children known as WIC. The WIC program is widely regarded as the single most successful social program the Federal Government runs, allowing hundreds of thousands of women and children to avoid the disaster of hunger.

The administration requested $76 million just to maintain the current level of WIC participation for 360,000 women and children, but the Republicans cut this bare-bones minimum request in half, slashing the request to $38 million. This is a terrible and vicious attack by the Republican majority on nearly 200,000 caring mothers and their precious children.

This supplemental appropriations bill must provide the minimum $76 million needed to keep these families from hunger.

DEMOCRATS CONFUSED ON WIC FUNDING PROPOSAL

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, it appears that the Democrats are confused again. There is nothing unusual there. But on the WIC program, I do not know if they have read the bill. Had they read the bill, they would know that WIC is fully funded at $3.7 billion, a historic all time high for WIC, funded by the Republican majority in Congress. I will send them a copy of the bill if they want it. Where their confusion lies is that they are using 1994 census records and they say that WIC is not fully funded.

At least in my part of the country, it is 1997. We do not have 1996 records but we do have 1995 records, and they confirm that WIC is fully funded. Democrats, there is no reason, even for political purposes, to use 1994 records.

Second, there is a $100 million carryover of unused WIC funds right now, $100 million in unused funds sitting in reserve for WIC.

Third, the President of the United States has said welfare is down 15 percent. If welfare is down, why do Democrats insist on an emergency basis on increasing welfare funding? Again, Mr. Speaker, the Democrats are confused. What else is new?

HIGHER EDUCATION AND TRAINING MEAN HIGHER ACHIEVEMENT AND BETTER JOBS

(Mr. FORD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, on April 24 the U.S. Department of Education released a study that has serious implications for the state of our economy and for the welfare of all Americans. The study found that education and training are strongly associated with higher productivity and higher paying jobs. College graduates, according to the study, earn 50 percent more than high school graduates, and twice more than that of high school dropouts.

Workers who improve their skills through job training have higher earnings, as do those who have a record of higher academic achievement. One of the most disturbing findings, Mr. Speaker, is that the leading productivity the United States has enjoyed for decades may be slipping because we are not doing a good enough job in educating our children, we are not equipping them with the tools they need to be viable job holders in the global marketplace.

Today it is more important than ever that we provide our people with the skills they need to keep America competitive going into the next century. When “A Nation at Risk” was released in 1983, it sent a wake-up call to the Nation. At every level of government, we renewed our commitment to education to conquer the rising tide of mediocrity and education that threatened our national and economic security.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we have a choice. We can turn our backs on our human capital or invest in our future and inspire our young people for the challenges they and all people will face in this next century.

DISASTER AWAITING THE SPACE COAST

(Mr. WELDON of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, as I listen to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle talk about very important programs designed to help those who are truly in need, I am going to mention something that actually could, I believe, do probably more than any of those things that have been talked about to help those who are truly in need; and, yes, it is a reduction of the top rate on the capital gains tax.

Now we had a study done not too long ago by the Institute on Policy Innovation, which found that if we could reduce that top rate, as H.R. 14 does, one bill that we introduced on the opening day, to 14 percent, we could, in fact, increase the average take-home pay for a family by $1,500 a year.

Now so often people have in the past talked about this capital gains tax rate reduction as being nothing but a tax cut for the rich. But people are finally realizing that if we could allow those literally millions of American families who own mutual funds or other appreciated assets to see a reduction on that top rate, it would, in fact, improve the standard of living for all Americans.

ADOPTION PROMOTION ACT OF 1997

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 134 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 134

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution, any Member may, pursuant to clause (b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the While Government cannot legislate love and compassion, it can provide the leadership and the tools necessary to encourage the development of healthy, nurturing families. For example, last year Congress enacted legislation that created valuable new tax incentives designed to foster and facilitate adoptions.

In many respects, H.R. 867 addresses what might be referred to as the other side of the adoption coin. With last year’s legislation we tried to ease the financial strain on helpful parents. This bill addresses the frustrating problem of how to promote adoption of foster children who through no fault of their own are unable to return to their natural parents and who have languished for far too long in the foster care system. It is time to stop the revolving door of foster care that sends children from home to home to home with little or no hope that they will live with the same families from one month to another.

Mr. Speaker, the most important change we can make is to elevate the rights of children because too often a foster child’s best interests are abandoned while courts and welfare agencies drag their feet. To correct this injustice, H.R. 867 places the safety and well-being of children above efforts by the State to reunite them with biological parents who have abused or neglected them.

As the legislation itself clearly spells out, a foster child’s health and safety shall be of paramount concern in any effort by the State to re-unify a child’s family.

Under current law, there are no financial incentives to move children from foster care to adoption, so States continue to receive Federal subsidies as long as children stay in foster care. This is crazy, Mr. Speaker. We have created a system that in effect pays States to keep kids locked in foster care at the expense of adoption. It is too bad that we have to use cash as an incentive. We would think the joy of giving a foster child a permanent home would be incentive enough. But this bill will establish a positive incentive to reduce the foster care case load.

Mr. Speaker, the facts support the need for this legislation. Of the nearly half million kids in foster care, only 17,000 entered permanent adoptive homes. What is more astonishing is that during each of past 10 years more than half a million kids in foster care, only half million entered permanent adoptive homes. What is more astonishing is that during each of past 10 years more than half a million kids in foster care only entered permanent adoptive homes.

The changes called for in H.R. 867 offer workable solutions to some of the most pressing concerns, and I applaud the work of my colleagues, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Camp] and the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. Kennelly].
that many of those responsible couples will have a chance to make their love permanent as a result of this legislation.

As I said before, Congress and the Federal Government cannot legislate compassion and love for all of the Nation's children, but we can take reasonable steps to promote family stability and give children, especially foster children, a fighting chance to see the loving homes that they deserve. Children simply deserve better than a here today, gone tomorrow life in multiple foster homes.

In the last Congress we reformed welfare so that low income mothers and their families would not be trapped in the never-ending cycle of dependency. We need to do the same thing with the foster care program that keeps thousands of innocent children trapped in a broken system that too often places their young lives in danger of repeated neglect and abuse.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation enjoys strong bipartisan support. Like the rule before us, it was reported without any amendment by voice vote. Since being reported, several worthwhile amendments have come up and this open rule, certainly allows any Members of the House to discuss any concerns or improvements that Members may wish to discuss.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the rule and yes on the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. HALL of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague, the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. PRYCE] for yielding me the time.

This is an open rule. It is a fair rule. It will allow complete debate on H.R. 867.

The bill will continue a series of bills approved by Congress to encourage the adoption of children. This bill aims to speed up the adoption process of children in foster homes. In my own State of Ohio, there are 17,000 children in foster care. Of these, nearly 1,800 are awaiting adoption. This bill is intended to help these children and others like them all across the country find permanent homes more quickly.

The bill also gives States greater flexibility to separate children from their families when their parents are clearly abusive. And in my own community of Dayton, OH, we have witnessed tragic consequences of requiring family unification even when it obviously was not in the best interest of the child.

Under this rule, amendments will be allowed under the 5-minute rule, which is the normal amending process in the House. All Members on both sides of the aisle will have their opportunity to offer amendments. The rule under consideration waives a number of points of order on the bill, including the 3-day availability of committee reports. It also waives points of order on the Committee on Ways and Means substitute. Again, Congress and the Federal Government cannot legislate compassion and love for all of the Nation's children, but we can take reasonable steps to promote family stability and give children, especially foster children, a fighting chance to see the loving homes that they deserve. Children simply deserve better than a here today, gone tomorrow life in multiple foster homes.

In the last Congress we reformed welfare so that low income mothers and their families would not be trapped in the never-ending cycle of dependency. We need to do the same thing with the foster care program that keeps thousands of innocent children trapped in a broken system that too often places their young lives in danger of repeated neglect and abuse.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation enjoys strong bipartisan support. Like the rule before us, it was reported without any amendment by voice vote. Since being reported, several worthwhile amendments have come up and this open rule, certainly allows any Members of the House to discuss any concerns or improvements that Members may wish to discuss.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the rule and yes on the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER], my colleague on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this rule, and I do so to compliment my friend from Columbus, OH for the leadership role that she has shown on this issue of adoption which is very important.

This legislation, as has been said by both of my friends from Ohio, is designed to encourage adoption. There is a pressing need out there, and I believe that this legislation will go a long way toward creating the kind of incentive that is necessary.

I also believe that it is very good that we are doing this under the open amendment process, because I understand that there are proposals that some Members who do not sit on the Committee on Ways and Means have that they wish to offer. And it is our hope that they will be able to work those out, and we will be able to continue to move ahead with bipartisan passage of this legislation.

I would simply like to urge my colleagues to support the rule and to congratulate the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. PRYCE] for the stellar leadership that she has shown on this and a wide range of other issues.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Ms. KENNELLY], and I say thank you to the gentlewoman and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] and the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. PRYCE] for so much good work on an important piece of legislation.

Ms. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the kind words. My colleagues from Connecticut, Mr. Speaker, this rule brings to the floor something that I think we all knew was important. We enjoyed working on this issue and its result—that good things can happen when both sides of the aisle work together to try to solve some of our Nation's problems. And I could not think of anything better happening than finding safe, and loving, and permanent homes for abused children.

The conflict between the rights of parents and the needs of children is perennial and will remain a central dilemma in the field of child protection. Realizing this, almost a year ago, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP], and I began to talk about drafting legislation to protect children and promote adoption. We, and our staffs, worked on a bill together, and throughout the process we sought advice from dozens of individuals from across the country, from individuals who had joined with groups with varying points of view, some absolutely adamant in protecting the rights of parents, some absolutely adamant in protecting the rights of children. We heard from all sides of the issue.

We also worked with the Clinton administration, which has been making child adoption an increasingly important situation and a top priority.

So I will speak later on the aspects of the bill, but I would like to say something regarding the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to support this rule. But I also want them to realize that although this is an open rule, any Member, of course, can offer an amendment, this bill has been crafted to address the careful balance between parents' rights and children's safety.

Many Members interested and very knowledgeable in child welfare have agreed to hold amendments so that today's legislation could bring forth a basis for a continuing process concerning the rights of parents and the safety of children. I look forward to working with these Members, and working again with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] so that in fact this whole situation of further protections for children can grow.

But today the legislation we have before us and the rule brings to us is a careful balance between many, many, many hours of work. Of course, there will be amendments, but I do hope that amendments that break this balance will not come forward. We have so much to do. This is so important. We do not want to have this bill in jeopardy. Mr. Speaker, I urge such time as he might consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], subcommittee chair of this important legislation.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time. Mr. Speaker, there is one technical change in the Camp-Kennelly bill that was reported by the committee, and I thought it my duty to come to the floor and briefly explain this under the rule.

This change simply removes language that was inadvertently included in the committee report, which appropriated money for adoption incentive payments, and substitutes language that authorizes spending on the payments. Because the incentive payments are so important to increasing adoption, this change would be widely beneficial and save taxpayers' dollars, both the Committee on Appropriations graciously agreed to help us write language that would, if appropriations are made in any year, adjust both the budget resolution and the statutory budget caps to accommodate the additional spending.

Thus, the amended bill does not appropriate money, but the new provision does authorize the appropriations necessary to provide the money for the adoption incentive payments. Giving States the incentive payments of $4,000 for each additional adoption will save both State and Federal tax dollars. I want personally thank the chairman and the staffs of the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Appropriations for their help with this important provision.

I would also like to tell the Members of the House, in responding to some of the comments made by our colleague, the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. Kennelly) one of the authors of this bill, that we on this side, even though this is an open rule, recognize the bipartisan effort that went into building this bill and also recognize its tremendous importance and impact this bill is going to have upon some of the most fragile among us, and that is unadopted kids that are lingering in foster care.

Because of that, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to work out compromises on many of the amendments that are being offered or contemplated to be offered, to see if we might reach a bipartisan solution on acceptance of those amendments. Because the House to votes that could possibly tilt the scales away from the bipartisan bill that has been so carefully crafted by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Camp), and the gentlewoman from Connecticut.

Because of that, I would anticipate that if there are any amendments in dispute, that the committee would, in all probability, object to those amendments. Even though we might see that they are good that should require us to consider them, and even though we personally might think it might be a better bill, we feel the bipartisanship that has been brought to this bill to the floor today should survive the day and that we should report out a bill that will get the unanimous support of the entire House.

Mr. Hall of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Traficant).

Mr. Traficant. Mr. Speaker, I have a little bit of an amendment, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. Rangel), he said we really do not need to buy American kids in this, but I want to explain it.

The Traficant amendment has been passed on to many things, and it says simply, it is a sense of Congress that when funds are expended pursuant to the passage of these acts and these laws, that when they expend that money, Congress notifies them, wherever possible, to try to buy American-made products. It does not tie their hands. And they should give us a report at the end of the year as to how much was foreign-made so we can get some computerization on what is our procurement around here.

I want to say this to the Congress. We are at this point, the delegation from Massachusetts, looking into the fact that our currency, the paper that our currency, will be made in Great Britain. And the Crane Co. of Massachusetts, who has produced the paper that our currency has been printed on, will come to us from overseas. We have military troops in Chinese boots.

We have gotten to the point where we have lost sight of our procurement. I once passed an amendment on a defense bill, I would say to the gentlewoman from Ohio, that if a foreign country does not allow American companies to bid, they should not be allowed to bid on our defense contracts. And both sides of the aisle fought it and then they finally passed it.

I think it is time to say that wherever possible, we should care spending tax payer dollars that we try to buy American-made goods. It does not tie their hands. Taxpayers pay the freight coming down the track, they have the jobs, they pay the taxes. It seems to work.

It is not just for those who have some doubts, it is germane and it deals with any funds made available pursuant to the passage of this act that would be used for procurement purchases. Mr. Hall of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. Pryce of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, in many ways foster care has become a black hole for America’s most needy and vulnerable and precious children. They get sucked into it through no fault of their own, and they end up spending years bungling from one foster care family to another, spinning their wheels, with no hope of achieving the one thing that every child wants in their life, to enjoy a stable, loving home environment. Today we can begin to offer these children a small ray of hope by passing the Adoption Promotion Act.

Mr. Speaker, we just need to change the model. We do not need the latest poll or focus group to know that it takes a family to build a stronger America. By protecting the safety and well-being of children, we can ensure that the neediest and the most neglected and the most abused foster children are given a real chance, a fighting chance, to enjoy safe and permanent homes.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the thousands of foster kids living in America today, I urge my colleagues to support this fair, open rule and to vote for the Adoption Promotion Act. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered. The resolution was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Speaker pro tempore (Mr. Hobson). Pursuant to House Resolution 134 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 867.

In the Committee of the Whole

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 867) to promote the adoption of children in foster care, with Mr. Rogan in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Chairman. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Shaw) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. Rangel) each will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Shaw).

Mr. Shaw. Mr. Chairman, the Camp-Kennelly bill that we bring to the floor today is of vital importance to many thousands of the Nation’s most unfortunate children. These children are the abandoned, the neglected, the abused. To take these children out of harm’s way, state government removes these children from their families and places them in foster care.

Five hundred thousand. That is right, one-half of 1 million. That is how many children are languishing in foster care as we debate this bill today. The major goal of Federal and State policy must remain what it has been since the passage of the vital Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act of 1980, and that is to move these children to permanent placements as quickly as possible.

But today there is a new consensus throughout the Nation: Too many children are in foster care because too few children are adopted. The bill we debate today will change that. I have no doubt that if we pass this bill, within 5 years the number of adoptions in the United States will increase substantially and the number of children languishing in foster care will at last decline.

This bill does three big things to promote adoption:

First, Federal statutes now put too much emphasis on providing all kinds of services to rehabilitate troubled families. Let me be clear about this. I firmly believe that services for troubled families are important. Nothing is more important to children than their families. Thus, if their family has problems, government could and should reach out a helping hand. But not ten hands.

If families will not or cannot change within a reasonable period of time, we must, in the interest of the children, be willing to terminate parental rights and move expeditiously toward adoption. So the big thing this bill does is to push the pendulum of government concern back in the direction of the children.

We do this by allowing States to define what we call aggravated circumstances that allow them to dispense with services for the family and get on with the business of finding an adoptive home for the child. In the case of parents who have murdered another child or the bodies of other children, States are required to dispense with the services for the family and to move quickly to terminate parental rights and get the child adopted.

The second big thing this bill does is require States to move to terminate parental rights and find an adoptive family if children under 10 have been in foster care for 18 of the past 24 months. There is at present no national consensus on the maximum time children should spend in foster care. As a result, some States keep children in foster care for an average of 3 years. The average stay in foster care across all States is around 2 years.

I think of that: 2 years, 24 months, 104 weeks, 728 days. For a 4-year-old child, that is half of his or her life. This must stop. Camp-Kennelly will take us a giant step toward creating a national understanding that if families cannot be rehabilitated within 18 months, the State must move to adoption.

These first two provisions of this bill place administrative requirements on the States, but the third big provision of this bill takes a different approach. Camp-Kennelly will reward States for increasing adoptions.

If we want more of something, we simply subsidize it. So let us pay States to do the right thing. Instead of just subsidizing foster care, as we do now, Camp-Kennelly will pay the States a reward for every child adopted above the prior year’s levels.

Will this approach work? Both the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget say it will. Not only will the provision increase the number of adoptions, but it will actually save money. Members of Congress will seldom have the opportunity to vote for a bill that both does the right thing for children and saves taxpayers dollars at the same time.

I am proud to have introduced this bill, and I am proud of my subcommittee and the sponsors who have put this bill together. It will help children. It will increase adoption. It will improve the reputation of government for effectiveness and efficiency, and it will save the taxpayers money.

I would like to share with the Congress part of the testimony that was given before my subcommittee. A woman caseworker who had been involved with Camp-Kennelly told us of the first words that a child had after meeting her new parents, and this is a child who was less than 3 years old, a 2-year-old child. The first words she said in meeting her new adoptive parents were “Where have you been?” “Where have you been?” Can any of us imagine those words coming out of a 2-year-old child thirsting for a family? I say to the Congress, “Where have you been?”

I urge this Congress to pass this bill, and I urge all the Members to vote “yes” on this vital piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, let me join with my colleague from Florida in commending the drafter and the committee that worked on this very sensitive piece of legislation.

It is so difficult for us in the Congress to attempt to regulate or legislate things that concern love and emotion and the separation of mother and child, and that is why it is so important that those people, who mean well but want to fine-tune this, might do well to believe that the Congress cannot, as they have said so often, make a one size fit all according to Federal standards.

I think all of us agree that when it comes to a child that is living in a dangerous or an abandoned situation, that we all want to do what is in the best interest of the child.

We do not have all of the answers here in Washington, even though we try to impose rules on the States to help reduce the amount of time that a child should be adopted. When is the time that a child should be adopted? When is the mother’s rights terminated? Is there an arena of rehabilitation? All we know is that this bill would at least allow the resources for these very sensitive questions to be addressed in the proper way. All we can do is hope the best that we can that we have facilitated in taking children out of harm’s way into loving homes and thereby making a stronger and more productive community as these youngsters grow up to be responsible adults.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP], whose name appears first on this bill.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding me this time and also to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. RANGEL], the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], ranking member of the full committee, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP], past Congress, for his leadership on this issue.

Today the Congress has an historic opportunity to improve our child welfare system with respect to adoption. Under the fine leadership of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], past Congress, we have already made a number of important changes, providing a $5,000 tax credit for adoption expenses and eliminating racial preferences for adoption. We now have the chance to build on this outstanding record.

The legislation before us today will help reduce the amount of time that children spend in foster care and increase the time they spend in permanent loving homes. I want to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER], the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], ranking member of the full committee, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], ranking member of the subcommittee, for their support.

Nearly 500,000 children currently reside in foster care and thousands more join them each year. These children can spend up to 3 years in foster care, and since 1982 the number of children in foster care has increased by 99 percent. For a young child, that is, far, far too long. For too many children foster care has become a permanent solution to their problems instead of a temporary answer. These children wait for permanent loving homes while many parents wait to adopt children.

The names and stories are too familiar: Children returned to homes only to face continued abuse, and child advocates torn between their desire to reunite the family and their duty to ensure the child’s health and safety. Children deserve a compassionate but effective system that works on their behalf, not one that subjects them to continued abuse.

The legislation before us today strikes the appropriate balance between parental rights and child safety.
The bill calls upon States to continue efforts to reunite the family, but also realizes that in some cases reunification is not in the child's best interest. In these cases, States are encouraged to follow concurrent planning in order to end foster care spells as little time in foster care as possible.

The bipartisan legislation before us today was drafted, debated and adopted with the full participation and support of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle approved by the Committee on Ways and Means by voice vote and enjoyed strong bipartisan support. In addition, we have held hearings, received much public comment and received broad-based support for these reforms.

Mr. Chairman, the children of this Nation deserve a fighting chance. This legislation puts the system in their corner and makes sure that our children get there in a manner to us we certainly are not doing the best that we can do by our children.

Today I do not suggest that the legislation before us will eliminate child abuse, and though I also say that, or guarantee a permanent home for every child in foster care. It will not. But I do believe this legislation represents a significant step forward in providing protection and permanency for our Nation's abused and all too often forgotten children.

I also believe the bill represents what bipartisan cooperation can accomplish. The tension between the rights of parents and the needs of children will be ever-present when we talk about child welfare. Realizing this, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. L EVIN], ranking member on the subcommittee, and I also want to say what a delight it has been to work with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. C. CAMP].

Mr. Chairman, every day in America 3 children, 3 innocent, precious children, die from abuse or neglect, and every day in America 500,000 children wait in foster care for a permanent home. And I say to us we certainly are not doing the best that we can do by our children.

Let me say that in the best of all worlds, we all agree that the best place for a child is with his or her parents. But we must also recognize there are times when a child's safety is threatened by living at home. Every one of us in this body can turn to and refer to the headlines of the terrible, heartbreaking case with little Emily in Michigan, other cases across these United States, headlines telling us the very worst can happen. This legislation is not only a reaction to these kinds of situations; this legislation is on the floor today so these situations will not make headlines, that that quiet child locked in that terrible situation will not be forced to stay there or will not be returned to that situation.

But it is also to stop and prevent children from returning to dangerous homes. We must also do more to find permanent homes for children who cannot return to their birth families. Our foster care system, and I want to make it very clear, Mr. Chairman, is an extremely valuable safety net, but it should not be in any way a way of life for children.

Unfortunately, not only have the number of children in foster care doubled during the last 20 years; what we are seeing is younger and younger children going into that system. However, let me say today that foster care has provided that safety net for those children and in 1995 half the children adopted were adopted by their loving foster care parents.

In this legislation we propose four solutions to this problem. First, we call on States to pursue reasonable efforts to place children for adoption when reunifying families is not possible. Second, we ask the States to consider terminating parental rights so a child can be freed for adoption. But of course, the courts would still have the final word on whether termination is the best solution for a child.

But of course, the courts would still have the final word on whether termination is the best solution for a child.

Our legislation would provide $4,000 for every additional child that is adopted, as a lure for foster-care for a child in the foster care system.

Mr. Chairman, some may say this bill does not go far enough in one direction. Others say we certainly have not put enough financial assets into it. I fully acknowledge that the child welfare system could use more resources. However, I think we will find a wide consensus from the left, from the right and all of us in between that the legislation before us will help protect children and prevent adoption.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the lady from New York [Mrs. KELLY]. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Adoption Promotion Act, H.R. 867, and I ask that all Members do the same.

Quite simply, this measure represents progress for children. According to the Children's Defense Fund, in 1995, 3.1 million children were reported abused or neglected and 818 children died as a result of abuse and neglect. Furthermore, that same year over 1.0 million youths were arrested for various crimes, over 100,000 of which were violent crimes.

At issue here is America's future. We are failing our children if we do not provide them with positive role models. While foster care and the young people who are doing a world of good, it will go to waste without some sense of stability for the child. We should be embracing and assisting those families that are willing to care for this country's most precious resource, our children. That is what this bill is all about. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 867.

Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. L EVIN], the ranking member of the subcommittee that brought forth this bill.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I very much support this bill and I am very glad to rise in support of it. It is a common sense proposal that hopefully will bring to fruition the goal of a permanent home for kids in foster care.

This is a balanced, activist approach. Rather than theInBackground. Kids that stagnate or sometimes just move from place to place while they are stagnating. Family reunification is the primary goal, but a recognition that in some circumstances this is not workable and beneficial for the child. In some circumstances, such as abandonment, chronic abuse or sexual abuse, efforts to keep the family together, those efforts do not serve the interest of the child.

So there is a redefinition of the requirement of reasonable effort to make sure that the child’s interest is primary.

The bill also requires more frequent status reviews for children in foster care, and it gives foster parents the opportunity to be heard at the hearings. I want to thank, if I might, and express on behalf of so many the appreciation to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] and to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY] for their work and the efforts of the chairman, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW]. I hope we will keep our eye on the ball here and not go overboard one way or the other, but keep a balanced position here. That is what will keep in mind the key goal, the interest of the child. Making termination of parental interest too soon will not help the child. On the other hand, going the other way is not going to help the kid.

Also we have to remember the importance of the services that are necessary to help these children and the parents; to delete the provisions in this bill that relate to those services would also be a mistake. This has been carefully crafted, and I hope we will maintain it.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, last year I was very pleased to have played a part in making sure that the adoption credit was passed. This credit helped make adoption more affordable for numerous parents who could not afford adoption costs.

However, it is evident that costs are not the only problem of adopting. In fact, it is the system that was created to help children either be reunited with their families or be adopted that has turned out to be the problem.

In the last decade child welfare has grown into an enormous bureaucratic system that is biased toward preserving the family at any cost. In consequence, there has been a trend to expedite the movement of children that are free to be adopted into permanent homes. Currently States often take months to find parents in spite of thousands of parents waiting to adopt. Groups such as Adopt a Special Kid, the Dave Thomas Foundation, Institute for Justice, Adopt a Network, and Children with AIDS say they have hundreds of parents waiting to adopt a child.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this arrangement has been created to expedite the movement of children that are free to be adopted into permanent homes. Currently States often take months to find parents in spite of thousands of parents who are qualified and willing to adopt. If the State has failed to find an adoptive home within 90 days, then the State must contract out with a private agency to find a family within 90 days.

After that child is with the adoptive family for 4 months, the family would have the right to petition for an expedited hearing to terminate parental rights and adopt the child.

The second problem is now we have too many children languishing in foster care situations. Five hundred thousand children in this nation are in foster care. We need to develop a way to get them through a fairly judicious and compassionate, but highly efficient, adoptive process. This bill helps do that.

Yesterday on the front page of the New York Times, and I would ask that this article be entered into the RECORD, we find that families are finding ways to make sure that they protect their children and see a beautiful family intact, as it articulately details, that the case-workers had to sit in front of a house for 10 hours to make sure that those people were not the kind of people that should have that child back. Please, please: a hundred in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

PRIORITY ON SAFETY MEANS A SURGE IN FOSTER CARE

(By Peter T. Kilborn)

RICHMOND—Years after their drug-addicted mother, Jeanelle C. Evans, died in July 1996 to decide to award custody of three children—ages 10, 6 and 4—to the grandmother of two of them. The third child is the son of the son fathered two of the children, seemed to have everything going for her. She had a new house, a prominent lawyer and the power of her appeal to keep the family intact.

But city case-workers were skeptical, and the decision was appealed. What they did next reflects a monumental change in the way cities are dealing with children from troubled homes.

“We hired a private investigator to watch her house,” said Hunter Fisher, a lawyer who is managing services for the Richmond Department of Social Services. “And in court, we introduced 10 hours of tape showing people entering and exiting each of two nights. Children were coming and going, too.”

Since most of the traffic occurred in the middle of the night, the city convinced an appellate court that the house was being used for illicit activities, including drug dealing, and the children remained in foster care.

Overturging the long-held premise that keeping families together is the best policy, child-welfare officials here and across the country are finding that they often need professional help, wherever they live, and many potential adoptive parents are reluctant to take them on.

All the hopes, scars and frustrations of children from abusive homes and the parents who take them in are on display in Vickie Ladd’s home. On the front lawn of a brick ranch house, with a pool, a trampoline, a swing set and a basketball hoop in a tranquil development just south of Richmond.

As their three foster children recounted their earliest memories, it was easy to see why they no longer resided with their biological parents:

“There was a lot of drinking,” said Dawn, 17. “My stepfather would attack me so I’d run away.”

Her foster brother, Lonnie, 14, sweats after jumping on the backyard trampoline, said that when he was 8 and 9, he would slip out from under the watchful eyes of his foster parents and go for her. She had a new house, a prominent lawyer and the power of her appeal to keep the family intact.

“The crunch of children backed up in foster care is more a statement of how damaged these children are than of the willingness of people to adopt,” said Michael A. Evans, director of the department. “There are people who would adopt healthy children. But crack mothers don’t have healthy children.”

Frederick Pond, the manager of Virginia’s adoption and foster care services, said hopes in Washington for any increase in the number of adoptions of troubled and abused children were way too optimistic unless the Government took on some costs and responsibilities.

The State of Virginia, for instance, offers one of every three adoptive parents the same $1,000 tax credit that Congress approved a $5,000 tax credit for each child adopted. It would free children for adoption when being quicker to terminate parental rights is predicted to cocaine, Ms. Evans said. “He’s a literal heart.”

“On the ground floor, he had a floor full of plastic balls. He was born addicted to cocaine, Ms. Evans said. “He’s a little delayed for a child his age.”

“I don’t have a curfew,” she said.

After the custody battle in the courts, Ms. Evans said, the girls needed therapy. But it was too much for Ms. Evans to bear.

The prospects are not so clear for two children the Ladds have adopted, Steven, 13, and Jason, 12.

When the Ladds took him in at age 4, Steven had been sexually molested in another foster home. “He never forgot,” Ms. Ladd said.

Jason came to them at 2, two years after the Ladds had married and were told that they would not have children.

“He had been severely beaten,” Ms. Ladd said. “He had broken bones. He had mental retardation and fetal alcohol syndrome.”

“She’d bring up her fist and hit me on the side of the head,” she said, mimicking the whack. “I have A.D.H.D.,” she said. “That’s attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. I take medicine. It calms me down. I’m going to be a comic artist.”

Stephanie said her childhood would need forever therapy when she grows up, she said.

“I want one kid. Just one. I want a girl, but whatever God gives me, I’ll deal with it. I’m going to be strict but not too strict. She’s going to have a curfew.”

There comes a time when the child is hurt from this attention to reunification, and that is not acceptable. The child's interests have to be paramount, and I believe the shorter timeframes will help us in this regard.

I get to tell my readers just a for-instance that happened to me. I was watching a lovely little boy, about 18 months, wander around a shop, and I was speaking with him, about the age of my son. I spoke with who I thought was the mother of this child. She indicated that she was doing a foster mother. She had had this boy from the time he was 6 months old; she had had him 1 year.

There was no question from the interaction between the child and the mother that the child thought that this woman was his mother, and yet they were in this indeterminate foster care status while they waited for unification.

We cannot let these things languish. As I wrap up, I support this legislation, commend its sponsors. Let us put interests of the children first, as advanced by this legislation.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Kentucky [Mrs. NORTHUP].

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Chairman, I think on the floor today when we think about how much time we spend discussing building roads, building schools, building businesses, it is really wonderful for me to spend a day and talk about building families.

Families with children are created in two ways: The children come by birth and they come by adoption. In our family, my husband and I have six children. Two of those children, our third child and our fifth child, are hard-to-place children that came to our family years ago. They have brought such wonderful gifts to our family. They have brought such diversity, diversity of interests, and diversity of race.

It is a team of six children that are full of life, full of noise, full of interests. I wish those two children that have brought such a wonderful presence to our home could be with us here today and that I could introduce my colleagues to them.

Twenty-one years ago, when my husband and I adopted the first of those two children, we had a lot of love and a lot of passion. We had a ready-made family. We had no money. So it was quite a decision, quite a strain to make the decision that we could, in fact, adopt that child.

The bill that is before us today will give to families across this country the opportunity to have the wonderful gifts that adopted children bring to families. In fact, it makes me very emotional to think of the special blessings that will come to so many families because of this bill.

There will be no building that we can do in this Chamber any time that will be more important than the building of families that are part of this bill.
Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], and I thank Mr. Camp as well on the Republican side. This is clearly a bipartisan, nonpartisan bill.

My colleagues before me have spoken on the priority, the premise, the focus that we have articulated in this bill and that was that we ought to unify families. My wife, who supervised early childhood education in Prince George's County, and I talked about this because of a case that was reported in the Washington Post of a young man named Dooney Waters. He was a young man who lived in a crack house. He was a young man who was not fed for days at a time. He was a young man whose bedroom was unavailable to him because it was being used to light up.

The story that my colleagues may have read, those of them who serve here, about a 5-year-old in Montgomery County, reunited with his father after his father had physically abused him. Judges with whom I have talked have been concerned about the premise of the Federal statute which said that we must reunite unless we can make an extraordinary finding to mitigate against that conclusion.

Previous speakers have said, the premise must be, and this bill adopts that premise and furthers that premise, the best interests of the child. There is no excuse for society to return or to allow a helpless, defenseless child to be subjected to abuse by those who society believes ought to be that child's major protector. This bill accelerates a process of placing the child in a safe and nurturing home.

I am very pleased to rise in support of this legislation for all the Dooney Waters in this country, and for our future, which will be made better by making children safer.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support on H.R. 867, the Adoption Promotion Act.

Our child welfare system too often protects parents' rights rather than children's rights. Severe child abuse quadrupled between 1986 and 1993. Thirty-nine percent of the children who died of abuse or neglect between 1989 and 1991 were known to agencies before they died. Monday's Montgomery Journal reported that 50 children in Montgomery County will be reunited with parents who abused them. Putting a child back in their parent's home can be deadly.

You may remember a child named Dooney Waters. The Washington Post ran a series of stories on him in 1989. Dooney was raised in a crack house in Prince George's County, MD. Dooney spent days at a time hiding behind his bed. All he ate were sandwiches his teachers sent. The bathrooms in Dooney's house did not work. Dooney was burned by boiling water and his hand was singed by a can of heat oil that he dropped. Dooney's adoptive parents asked his teachers to take him home with them. Prince Georges County Social Services investigated Dooney's case, but did nothing. Eventually, Dooney's father removed him from the crack house.

H.R. 867 speeds up the adoption process for children who have been abused and neglected. The bill requires expedited terminated of parental rights in chronic cases of abuse or neglect. Soon I will introduce legislation to strengthen Federal criminal penalties for noncustodial parents who neglect their child support obligations. In the meantime, I urge my colleagues to remember Dooney Waters and support the Adoption Promotion Act today.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE].

Mr. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Connecticut for yielding me this time.

With an abbreviated time frame, let me simply applaud the work of the congressional leadership on this legislation, because this is pro-children. I would hope that, as we proceed with this general debate, we will have an opportunity at a later time when I will be discussing on the floor of the House a sense of Congress to add discussion regarding protection for the children under this act, and that would include background checks for foster parents and adoptive parents.

It would also include the issue of dealing with early drug treatment for any parents who may have that problem who have our children in their care. Certainly I would argue that, though, no cultural difference should be a prohibition for adoption for foster care, but a cultural sensitivity to those who are adopting the foster care of our children.

The most important thing that this legislation does is that it supports moving our children to a loving home. For that reason, I support this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank and commend my colleague, BARBARA KENNELLY, for the exemplary work that she has done in bringing this much needed legislation to the floor.

I know that Congresswoman KENNELLY shares my passion and commitment to our Nation's children and has worked diligently to bring this legislation before the full House for consideration.

In 1995, 494,000 of our Nation's children lived in the foster care system. According to the American Public Welfare Association [APWA], about 450,000 children live in foster care at any given moment, and as many as 600,000 children live in foster care during the course of any given year. H.R. 867 is a major step in the right direction and I look forward to working with my colleagues on this issue in the furtherance of legislation that is pro-child and pro-family.

In my home State of Texas, the number of children living in a group home in 1990 was 13,434. Approximately one half of these 13,434 children are minorities. Studies have shown that minority children wait longer to be adopted than do white children. According to the National Council for Adoption [NCFA], African-American children constitute about 40 percent of the children awaiting adoption in the foster care system.

These children need and deserve the comfort, love, and protection of a family, therefore it is right that this Congress should do all that is within its power to assist them in this need.

There are a few issues, however, that I would like to raise. In the Senate, Senators CAMP and ROCKEFELLER passed S. 511, legislation very similar to that we have before us today. There are a number of provisions in that bill that I think are very important.

The Senate version of this legislation has requirements for criminal records checks for prospective foster and adoptive parents and group care staff. This provision will go a long way to ensure that adoptive parents are prepared and suitable parents for children.

I believe we can use this opportunity to influence the lives and fortunes of our Nation's most vulnerable citizens—our children.

They cannot vote and they do not have resources to influence this or any political process, but each of us have a special place in their lives for children. I would like to request on their behalf that we ensure that adoptive children are offered the extra protection of substance abuse treatment for their adoptive parents or caretaker parents.

I believe that this screening process foster care or adoption parents and caretakers should be and must be carefully screened, but we should also provide resources should the problem of substance abuse become evident after a child has been placed.

This measure's inclusion in the final version of this legislation would ensure that the prospective adoptive parents were sensitive to the child's ethnic or racial background as a requirement for adoption.

An area that I believe is of utmost importance is the preparation of foster or adoptive parents for the reception of a child from a different race or culture.

The real differences that separate people in our society can be the building blocks for bringing them together. If we aid the adoptive parents to instill a foundation which is pro-sharing and pro-caring regarding the diversity of the new family unit then we can aid these families in developing a strong support system for their adopted child.

If a child is Italian, Native American, Greek, Polish, African-American, Asian, Indian, or Hispanic, or many of the other diverse cultures or peoples that make up our great Nation, their culture is rich with history and customs that the child should not be robbed of through adoption or foster care.

It is extremely important that adoptive parents are sensitive to the cultural backgrounds of the children they adopt.

In no way should the racial or ethnic identity of the parents prohibit adoption, but developing an understanding of the child's heritage will contribute toward the overall development and stability of the child in later life.

Mr. Chairman, this measure is a major step in the right direction and I look forward to working with my colleagues on this issue in the furtherance of legislation that is pro-child and pro-family.
Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Ms. DELAURO].

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Adoption Promotion Act. I want to commend my colleagues, the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP], for their unyielding efforts to ensure that all of our children have a chance to settle into a loving, and into a permanent home.

Every child deserves the chance to grow up healthy and happy, ready to learn and to be able to succeed in life. Every day, children are growing, not only physically, but emotionally and intellectually. These years are too precious and too important to spend in abusive or unstable care.

But in today's foster care system, it can take years before a child is adopted and settled into a permanent and caring home.

This bill accelerates the process for adoption proceedings. It makes sure that foster children who come from a life of abuse can be removed from these situations into a loving and a caring environment. It helps to provide the resources to help children and families providing financial assistance to increase the number of adoptions.

The bill takes an important step toward balancing the rights of parents with the rights of children to loving and caring and stable homes. We need the bill now. Our children cannot wait. I urge my colleagues to vote for the Adoption Promotion Act.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Michigan has been aggressively pursuing policies and laws and regulations under the guidance of our Lt. Gov. Connie Binsfeld, to work in this area of making adoption laws more practical, more realistic, and more helpful for those children that need it. I would like to commend my colleague from Michigan, Mr. CAMP, for working and passing this exceptional legislation that is going to help not only the State of Michigan but all of our States and all of our children in this country.

Mr. CAMP of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman [Mrs. KENNELLY] for yielding me this time.

I would just like to say over the years I have been here there has not been a more aggressive advocate for children than the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], and I want to compliment her today on the achievement that she is engaging this bill to the floor. I want to compliment the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] who has also done a fine job, and also the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] who has worked previously to try and help children all through our country.

Two things concern me. Many people back in our district back in the Youngstown area have gone overseas and spent $30 to $40,000 to adopt a child. I think we must do everything possible to promote the adoption of our own children, American children.

Now, my amendment that I am offering to this bill today is pretty consistent with those two things. I think we must do everything possible to promote the adoption of our own children, American children.

Mr. Chairman, I would say this. We have had an awful lot of Americans going overseas expending thousands and thousands of dollars to adopt kids from foreign countries. All efforts must be made, and I commend the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], for making this possible here today.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I have no further speakers, but before I yield back the balance of my time, I would like to just quote from a few letters that the committee and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] received in reference to this bill. For example, Secretary of Health and Human Services Donna Shalala wrote, "This legislation would further the President’s effort to ensure the safety, permanency and well-being of children in the child welfare system and we strongly support the enactment."

Further, the Children’s Defense Fund has said, "The bill takes some important steps to keep children safe and to provide them with permanent homes."

Finally, the Heritage Foundation declared: "This legislation is a responsible attempt to speed up the adoption process for children who have been abused and have been neglected."

I hope that this broad spectrum of support shows that we have made every effort to listen to those who have spent so much time in the child welfare area.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 867, the Adoption Promotion Act of 1997, and I commend my colleagues DAVE CAMP and BARBARA KENNELLY for their work in fashioning this important bipartisan legislation.

This bill is designed to fix some very troubling problems in our Nation’s adoption and foster-care programs by striking a balance between the goals of keeping families intact where possible, and, when necessary, moving kids quickly into permanent, loving homes.

Under current law, States are required to make reasonable efforts both to keep maltreated children from being unnecessarily removed from their families, and, if children are removed, to reunify them with their families.

Keeping families intact when possible is preferable. But in the absence of clear laws or regulations defining reasonable efforts, there has been considerable confusion about when to bypass or discontinue such efforts, and place a child up for adoption. In other words, the reasonable efforts provision has sometimes served to keep kids in foster homes instead of in permanent adoptive homes, longer than necessary.

H.R. 867 represents a well-crafted refinement of current law. Under its provisions, States would no longer be required to attempt reunification of families in cases where aggravating circumstances such as chronic or sexual abuse exist. The bill also provides the opportunity to be heard at child placement hearings. Finally, the bill offers a set of incentives for States to successfully place children in permanent adoptive homes.

Mr. Chairman, as the mother of four children, I feel very strongly that a stable, permanent, loving family is vital to a child’s development. This bill will remove an obstacle between kids and adoptive parents, and help move kids into a long-term nurturing environment.

I can think of few issues more important, and I urge my colleagues to support passage.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of this legislation promotion adoption for the children of this Nation who most desperately require our care and protection.

The neglected or abused children whom we are seeking to assist today are tragic cases and our hearts go out to them. Reflecting the importance of this bill and the concern we all have for these innocent children, the cooperative, bipartisan procedures with which the Ways and Means Committee has handled this bill could be a model for Congress. My colleagues, Representatives CAMP and KENNELLY who shaped this bill, Chairmen ARCHER and SHAW, and Mr. RANGEL are all to be congratulated.

This bill strikes a balance as the Government steps into these most difficult, tragic family situations to separate children permanently from abusive and/or neglectful parents. We all want to see these children moved through foster care into loving, adoptive families as quickly as possible.

At the same time, through the timely provision of social services—whether substance abuse treatment, counseling, or other means of support—many families may be reunified successfully. This bill provides a chance for States to investigate complex family circumstances and attempt corrective actions through support services, but limits their time so that children do not spend their youths moving between foster homes.

There will be debate today as to whether we have found the correct balance between reuniting families, and providing permanent, loving homes to our most troubled children—but we all share the same goals.
I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, it pains me to know that our children in foster care are being reunited with abusive families. Our current broken system places more importance on returning children to the natural parents, despite circumstances such as abandonment and chronic physical or sexual abuse, over placing these children in strong, loving families. This is not right. The Adoption Promotion Act will correct this inequity. It is the right thing to do for children.

Today, there are over 500,000 children in custody of various State foster-care programs. However, fewer than 50,000 children per year move from foster care into permanent homes. Less than 10 percent of our foster children are adopted each year, not for lack of adoptive families, but because Washington bureaucracy is preventing these families from making foster children a permanent part of their life.

Mr. Chairman, the adoption process needs to be swift and efficient. The Adoption Promotion Act will amend current law to expedite the movement of children into permanent and loving homes. It will make the interests of the child the primary concern. We need to ensure that foster children are placed in loving homes and not just foster homes.

The strength of our Nation is based on strong families. This bipartisan legislation empowers those who know the best way to move children from foster care into loving, stable families. By returning these children to abusive families strips these children of the hopes and dreams they have for themselves. This bill will place more children in loving homes and give them the fighting chance that they so deserve.

Mr. Chairman, by streamlining the adoption process, the Washington bureaucracy will take the first steps toward increasing the number of happy and healthy children with good families and promising futures. America's foster children deserve the protection of the Adoption Promotion Act.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. I rise in opposition to the enactment of H.R. 867 because I object to the removal of the safeguards which now protect the rights of parents whose children have been taken from them.

I agree that we all can recite a litany of cases of children who have been abused, and neglected by parents and for whom expeditious adoption is fully justified. Still since the enactment of the most punitive bill ever to pass Congress in the name of welfare reform, we all know that there will be parents who will lose their cash benefits and be unable to feed and house their small children. State child welfare agencies will move to take these unfortunate children because the parents no longer have any funds to provide for them and are not able to find work. Because of the welfare law children will undoubtedly be found living in abandoned car wrecked facilities, and other unhealthy conditions without running water or heat or cooking facilities.

Under these circumstances, as predictable, in predictable circumstances such as drug abuse, physical abuse, poverty: The loss of one's children by edict of a parent.

I cannot vote for a bill that takes welfare reform and cuts the Washington bureau…

But, I do not believe, that move justifies the national Government to establish adoption as a penalty due to poverty of the parents.

If conditions of adoption exist, it should be left to the States to make these determinations. A Congress that has repeatedly argued States rights should not abandon that principle and enact legislation whose title in section 3 provides: States required to initiate or join proceedings to terminate parental rights for certain children in foster care, entering foster care after October 1, 1997.

Mr. Chairman, I include my constituents' letter and a letter to the IRS for the RECORD.

The Committee report states, "in the case of children under age of 10 who have been in foster care at least 18 of the past 24 months, the bill requires States to move toward terminating parental rights under most circumstances."

Prior to the enactment of the welfare reform bill this might have been supportable.

But in combination with the welfare reform bill enacted last August 1996, I find that circumstances of poverty and lack of work, could not under H.R. 867 become the sole basis for the termination of parental rights. This offends my function as a Member of Congress to protect the rights of parents whose children have been taken from the home. A Congress that has repeatedly argued States rights should not abandon that principle and enact legislation whose title in section 3 provides: States required to initiate or join proceedings to terminate parental rights for certain children in foster care, entering foster care after October 1, 1997. must apply to INS for their child's citizenship. The naturalization process can take another four to six months. After citizenship is granted, they can apply for a social security number. Everything goes smoothly, and the process takes about 18 months. If it doesn't, which is very possible, the wait can be much longer.

The IRS has stated that after the social security number has been obtained, the adoptive family may file amended returns to get the exemptions. But in the case of a family adopting more than one child, the number of children more than two, that means the IRS will be holding on to thousands of the family's dollars for two years or more.

For this price, very expensive as it had to take out a second mortgage on our home to adopt our daughter, Rayna. This new policy hits adoptive families at the end of the process, when they can least afford it.

It seems ironic that at the same time the President and Congress have passed generous tax credits for adoption expenses, the IRS is trying to withhold or delay tax exemptions that adoptive parents are legally entitled to.

In February, when we filed our federal tax return, we did not yet have Rayna's social security number. We have enclosed a copy of the letter sent to us by the IRS, denying the exemption. We are fortunate—we have recently received her social security number, and are now filing amended return. If it goes well, we will only be short $750 for three or four months, plus the cost of our tax preparer filing an amended return. Families just starting the adoption who have children may lose much more, especially if they have adopted more than one child.

Anything you can do to get the IRS to change this illegal new policy that runs counter to the intent of both Congress and the Administration will be greatly appreciated by ourselves and adoptive families throughout the country.

Sincerely,

DAVID AND CAROLYN STEIGMAN

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately for this country, few Members of the 105th Congress have ever heard the word that the era of big government is over. While I rise today in opposition to passage of H.R. 867, The Adoption Promotion Act, I could refer to any number of bills already passed by this Congress.

As a medical doctor, I share with other Members of Congress the strong distaste for the needless suffering of helpless, displaced, and orphaned children. As a U.S. Congressman, I remain committed to returning the Federal Government to its proper constitutional role. Fortunately, these two convictions are not incongruous.

This country's founders recognized the genius of separating power amongst Federal, State, and local governments as a means to protect the rights of citizens, maximize individual liberty, and make government most responsive to those persons who might most responsibly influence it. This constitutionally mandated separation of powers strictly limited the role of the Federal Government and, at the same time, anticipated that matters of family law would be dealt with at the State or local level.

Legislating in direct opposition to these constitutional principles, H.R. 867 would impose additional and numerous Federal mandates upon the States; appropriate $138 million over the next 5 years to be paid to States to independently follow Federal mandates; and further expand the duties of the Health and Human Services Department to include monitoring the performance of States in matters of family law.

Even as a practical matter, I remain convinced that the best interests of children are optimally served to redirecting tax-dollars—which under this legislation would be sent to Washington in an attempt to nationalize child adoption procedures and standards—to private, State and local child advocacy organizations.

For each of these reasons, I oppose passage of H.R. 867, The Adoption Promotion Act.

Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

mation of this Act. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.
Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The amendment No. 6 offered by Mr. TIAHRT:

Strike the matter proposed to be added by section 3(a)(3) of the bill and insert the following:

"(i) at the option of the State, the child is being cared for by a relative; or

(ii) a State court or State agency has documented a compelling reason for determining that filing such a petition would not be in the best interests of the child.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that is what I would consider a positive addition to the bill that we have before us. I will explain briefly what the amendment does, and I would like others to have a chance to express their concerns with the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the first thing that I would like to address is that the bill does is that it reduces a timeframe for the State to seek to terminate parental rights from 18 to 12 months.

Then I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the second part of this legislation or this amendment to the legislation removes an exception which will allow States to avoid seeking to terminate parental rights. The language reads it says, "... unless the State has not provided the family of the child such services as the State deems appropriate." In an article written by Conna Craig in the Policy Review article entitled "What I Need Is A Mom," she said, "Public agencies are paid for their performance. If they do not see, they do not get paid." The second part of this legislation or amendment to the legislation removes an exception which would allow States to avoid seeking to terminate parental rights.

The language in the bill now says 12 months, which is an improvement. But the 12 months is impossible for that two-parent situation to exist, and in compelling reasons, these should be moved into adoption

I think that decision should be made at 12 months, because it is not up to the State to determine whether this parent is going to rehabilitate themselves. That has to be something that is done by the individual.

The second part of this legislation or amendment to the legislation removes an exception which would allow States to avoid seeking to terminate parental rights.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is some consideration given in the regulations of the Department of Health and Human Services. Under the legislation, it says under the reason for change that the committee fully expects that final permanency decisions will be at 12 months. But yet the language says 18 months, which is an improvement. But the 18 months is impossible for that two-parent situation to exist, and in compelling reasons, these should be moved into adoption.

States to make a permanent plan by 12 months, and to initiate termination proceedings at 18 months. I would urge States to move forward in those cases where they see rehabilitation is not going to be possible.

Hosts, the time it is incumbent upon us both to recognize the complexity of pressures on families in America today, the need for appropriate services, and yet, the need for protection of the child and for abrogation of parental rights when adults do not take their responsibilities seriously and do not aggressively involve themselves in fixing the problems in their families that so deeply affect their children.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman withdrew his amendment. I support the underlying structure of this bill. I think it is truly a very significant step forward, but it is a balanced, thoughtful step, and I support the bill strongly, and commend both the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] and the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY] for their leadership in writing this legislation.

It took a lot of courage, frankly, to begin rethinking what reasonable means. It is true that reasonable has become unreasonable for the circumstances that many of our children face. The Members have rebalanced that and repositioned us to fight for our children and their lives, while also looking at families and their interests.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSTAD], a fellow member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to also thank my colleagues, the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CAMP, and the gentlewoman from Connecticut, Mrs. KENNELLY, for their leadership on this bill. House Rules 508 should be denied the opportunity to grow up in a loving environment. That is why I strongly support their legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CAMP was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, my own family has been blessed through adoption. I am the proud uncle of three beautiful adoptive children. I cannot imagine my life without them or my four adopted cousins. There is nothing more important than for a child to grow up in a loving home. I know there are 500,000 children in foster care, many of them awaiting adoption by a loving family. So something must be done to reform the system.

Last year we gave States and localities more authority to run social programs than they have had in 50 years. That is why I was concerned about the amendment offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] and my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON], and I am very, very pleased that they withdrew the amendment.

I understand that the authors of this amendment were trying to help children get into loving, adoptive homes as soon as possible, but I wanted to point out that nothing in this legislation prohibits the State from freeing children for adoption before 18 months. State agencies and courts need flexibility to determine the most appropriate response can be developed for each individual child.

This amendment would have established an absolute trigger that I believe is unrealistic. So we need to let those who know best, those who administer programs at the State and local levels, have the flexibility to do their job and the authority to do what is best for children.

I thank my colleagues for withdrawing this amendment.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is controversy over whether we go to 12 months or 18 months. When I was a boy, I was in a welfare agency home, a foster, and a setting of the type we are discussing today; and I can tell my colleagues I met a lot of young people that had been in that system for 12 years and it had a very debilitating impact on their lives. I know some of them ended up in jail.

Those are things that we need to take into consideration. The longer a child is in the foster care system, the more likely he or she is going to be a burden on society. Some of the statistics the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] did not mention in his statement, but he told me of a foster child who had been in over 100 foster homes. How do we know what that does to the child's psyche. It has got to have a very devastating impact.

Each year 15,000 children graduate from foster care with no permanent home. Fifteen thousand. What does that do to those kids? The ACLU reports, and I do not quote them very often, but the ACLU reports that among those graduates, 40 percent, 40 percent become dependent on AFDC, 46 percent dropped out of school, 51 percent are unemployed, and 60 percent of the women had out-of-wedlock births within 2 years from graduating from foster care.

The Bureau of Justice reports that former foster children are nearly 30 times more likely to be incarcerated than individuals who never spent any time in foster care. So the problem is, we want to get them out of there as quickly as possible.

I agree that severing parental rights is a very serious thing to consider. I mean, do not want to take it lightly. But within a year, it seems to me that is time enough to make a case as to whether or not a child should stay in that home. If the child is not going to be going back into their home, to keep them in foster care beyond that time period causes some serious problems for the child.

So while I do not want to belabor the point, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] is obviously going to withdraw his amendment, I hope in conference my colleagues will give these arguments some serious consideration. I think we are all after the same thing. We want to do what is best for the child because it has an impact on society that is very, very great. It involves AFDC. It involves crime. It involves children born out of wedlock. So all of these things need to be taken into consideration and what is best for the child.

If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TIAHRT] wants me to yield, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Indiana for yielding. I know there is some concern, it is a very big decision to move children away from their birth parents into an adoptive situation. I do not think the States should take it lightly or we should take it lightly. But in some situations, as the gentleman from Indiana has pointed out so aptly, we have some parents that just choose not to be good parents by their very actions. The way the system is, there is no incentive to move them unless the States take initiative, like Kansas has, to move them into a situation.

I am reminded of a young girl named Halie, who was 2 years old, who refused to eat her dinner and her parents tied her to an electric heater; and once she got caught into that system, they went through every different family service available, and she did not get out of foster care until she was 18 years old, 10 years caught into a system.

We must provide incentives to move these children out of this kind of situation into adoptive homes when the parents, by their very actions, choose not to be good parents.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman withdraws his amendment, I want to compliment the gentleman from Kansas for a most thoughtful amendment and really addressing the subject which is the heart of this bill. That is, how long are we going to allow the children to stay in foster care?

I would point out to the House that there is report language in the bill that I feel will pretty much accomplish what the gentleman from Kansas is asking for. As chairman of the subcommittee, we will be monitoring this whole matter very, very closely. We are going to see that the intent of this bill is met and that we are, indeed, getting these kids out of foster care and into an adoptive setting and into permanent homes.

Again, I compliment the gentleman for bringing this to the attention of the
Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say again that I want to compliment the gentleman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], who has steadfastly been a fighter on behalf of children over the years. I want to thank her for bringing children in my district and thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] for his efforts and to the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

The Clerk reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. 479. KINSHIP CARE DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—It is the sense of the Congress that, to the greatest extent practicable, shall provide to such entity a notice of the intent of Congress, wherever possible, shall be given when any of those funds, wherever practicable, they shall be expended to buy American-made goods and products and that the amendment basically states that a notice of the intent of Congress, wherever the expenditure of funds are made to buy American-made products wherever possible, shall be given when any of those funds in fact are released.

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I have explained several times the amendment. The amendment basically states that any funds that are made available pursuant to the passage of this act, that in the expenditure of those funds, wherever practicable, they shall be expended to buy American-made goods and products and that the amendment basically states that a notice of the intent of Congress, wherever the expenditure of funds are made to buy American-made products wherever possible, shall be given when any of those funds in fact are released.

I would appreciate the support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], coauthor of the amendment, and compliment her for her fine work.

Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for putting forth this amendment. I will support it.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I would concur with the gentleman from Connecticut. We also do not object to the amendment.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say again that I want to compliment the gentleman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], who has steadfastly been a fighter on behalf of children over the years. I want to thank her for bringing children in my district and thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] for his efforts and to the chairman.
We clearly need this legislation. Increasingly grandparents are being called upon to raise grandchildren of all ages. Between 1986 and 1990, the number of foster care children under the care of relatives jumped from 18 percent to 31 percent. Between 1985 and 1990, the number of children in foster care increased by 47 percent while the number of foster families decreased by 27 percent. Furthermore, when a child must be removed from his or her parents, placing the child with a caring relative helps keep the family together and limits disruption to the child's life.

The overwhelming majority of grandparents raising children must do so on limited incomes. Ironically, relatives who want to care for the child often find themselves burdened with legal and bureaucratic paperwork and regulations, and they lack the support services available to regular foster care families.

Kinship care should be considered a long-term placement option for the State. It should be considered an eligible family for kinship care placements under this bill, certain criteria must be met. The child must be removed from the home as a result of a judicial determination that continuation in the home would be contrary to the welfare of the child, the child would otherwise be placed in foster care and that there are adult relatives willing to provide safe and appropriate care for the child.

The child must be removed from the home as a result of a judicial determination that continuation in the home would be contrary to the welfare of the child, the child would otherwise be placed in foster care and that there are adult relatives willing to provide safe and appropriate care for the child.

The overwhelming majority of grandparents raising children must do so on limited incomes. Ironically, relatives who want to care for the child often find themselves burdened with legal and bureaucratic paperwork and regulations, and they lack the support services available to regular foster care families. to 15,000, but there are many children in the system at this time who have been in foster care for many years who have bounced from home to home. Some of these children are finding a new opportunity in what we call the independent living program that provides a stipend, guidance, education, and helps these young people at a high school age learn to live on their own and enjoy the support of one another as they make that transition from high school into the work force. We need to extend this program. We need to recognize it, I think, with the same validity that we recognize foster care placements or even adoptive placements and give it the kind of support and investment that it deserves.

In many instances as they look at kinship care and the opportunities that it provides within the foster care and adoption system, I would urge that they look also at the independent living program as another alternative to adoption. Identification because it is for many adolescents the best option and deserves our support. I yield back to the author of the bill.

Mr. CAMP. I thank the gentlewoman for her comments.

Amendment offered by Ms. MORELLA

Ms. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. MORELLA:

Section 11 is amended to read as follows:

SEC. 11. AUTHORITY TO APPROVE MORE CHILD PROTECTION PROJECTS.

Section 1130(a) of the Social Security Act (12 U.S.C. 1820a-9a) is amended:

(1) by striking "15" and inserting "15;" and
(2) by adding at the end the following: "At least 1 of the demonstration projects approved on or after October 1, 1997, shall address kinship care."

Mrs. MORELLA (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, my explanation is shorter than the language of reading the amendment. It is a new amendment that would simply add language to section 11 that would require that at least one of the 5 new waiver demonstrations be addressed to kinship care.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA]. The amendment was agreed to.

Amendment offered by Mrs. MORELLA

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas:

At the end of section 12(b), add the following:

(7) Assistance in establishing outreach programs to help States better identify and recruit minority families to adopt children.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, and I will pull it down at the end of the 5 new demonstration projects in section 11 that allows the development of programs for outreach to inform special minority families about the opportunities to adopt. Very, very frequently this information is not known and many times they do not know where to get it to see about adoption.

When I was growing up, which was a long time ago, my parents brought in three extra children. We never got them adopted. I am a second child, and after me they did not have another child for 8 years, and after that another one after another 8 years. But in the meantime, between these births, we had at least three children in the home and never formally adopted them.

When I became an adult and had one child and could not have another child, I wanted to adopt but I did not have the information, was not quite sure what it meant, and so we went to an orphan home and brought a young child home. If I had had access to information that would inform and allay fears and say what some of the expectations are, adoptions could have taken place.

I think there are a number of minorities in that position that really want to adopt but are a little fearful, not quite sure how to get started, and this just adds another development onto the six that simply allows the development of programs that would do outreach. It could be the form of a brochure or an 800 number or any other type of outreach activity, such as radio announcements.

Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to call that to Members' attention.

Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mrs. KENNELLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I agree that we should do more to help minority families adopt children. I commend the gentlewoman for the amendment that she was going to make under the State plan under this part, including procedures requiring that--

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I would again echo the comments of my colleague from Connecticut and appreciate the gentlewoman's willingness to withdraw the amendment and look forward to working with her regarding her efforts in this matter.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman, and allow me to thank the author of this legislation and the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY] for bringing this piece of legislation.

It is the best piece of legislation I have seen that addresses adoptions. I appreciate it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Amendment offered by Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas:

Add at any appropriate place the following:

SEC. 471(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 671(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (18), by striking "and" at the end; and
(2) in paragraph (19), by striking the period and inserting "; and"; and
(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(20) at the option of the State, provides procedures for criminal records checks and checks of a State's child abuse registry for any prospective foster parent or adoptive parent, and any employee of a child-care institution before the foster care or adoptive parent, or the child-care institution may be finally approved for placement of a child on whose behalf foster care maintenance payments or adoption assistance payments are to be made under the State plan under this part, including procedures requiring that--

"(A) in any case in which a criminal record check reveals a criminal conviction for child abuse or neglect, or spousal abuse, a criminal conviction for crimes against children, or a criminal conviction for a crime involving violence, including rape, sexual or other assault, or homicide, approval shall not be granted; and

"(B) in any case in which a criminal record check reveals a criminal conviction for a felony or misdemeanor not involving violence, or a check of any State child abuse registry indicates that a substantiated report of abuse or neglect exists, final approval may be granted only after consideration of the nature of the offense or incident, the length of time that has elapsed since the commission of the offense or the occurrence of the incident, the individual's life experiences during the period since the commission of the offense or the occurrence of the incident, and any risk to the child."

Ms. JACkSON-LEE of Texas (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Texas?
There was no objection.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, first of all let me thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] certainly for the persistence on legislation that is so extremely crucial to putting an end to the fostering of children.

Let me acknowledge also the ongoing and continuous leadership of the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY] on this issue that has been an abiding issue with her for many, many years.

I am very pleased and appreciate very much the staff of both Members working with me, as a member of the House Committee on the Judiciary, on an issue that we see in other forms, and that is to assist this process of protecting our children by providing for criminal record checks for prospective foster and adoptive parents and group care staff.

It is well known that adoption is only as good as the Government's recognition and sanction of marriage as a publically recognized function of Government and the procreation of families in our society. In fact, in 1994, 442,218 of our Nation's children lived in the foster care system. In 1993, 1 million cases of abused and neglected children were reported in the United States, and an estimated 1 million cases were confirmed.

In 1993, the data indicated 49 percent of the children abused were neglected. 24 percent were physically abused, 14 percent were sexually abused, 5 percent suffered emotional mistreatment, and 2 percent suffered medical neglect. This legislation in and of itself will thwart some of these tragic occurrences. In 1993 an average of five children died each day, another 140,000 were seriously injured and many were disabled for life.

Having, however, chaired the Foster Parent Retention and Recruitment Committee for Harris County in Texas, I know the good people that are foster parents and the good people who seek to adopt. This is not an amendment that speaks to them, but it does speak to the safety of our children.

According to the American Public Welfare Association, 450,000 live in foster care at any given moment, and as many as 600,000 children live in foster care during the course of any given year. Certainly this major legislation today will help us finish that number. However, we want to make sure that these caretakers have the kinds of background checks that will ensure the safety of our children.

Let me conclude by saying in my home State of Texas the number of children under the age of 18 living in foster care in 1993 was 10,880. This represents an increase of 62.4 percent from 1990, and the number continues to climb.

This amendment, which is by State option and therefore does not incur any additional cost to this legislation, will allow States to have the option to check the backgrounds of the individual who will be the caretakers for our most precious resources in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to support this amendment, and I thank the ranking member, and I thank the chairlady of the particular subcommittee, I am giving her that title because that is what she is to me, the gentlewoman from Connecticut, but I thank the chairperson, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] for his kindness.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to speak in favor of the institution of adoption.

Adoption is only surpassed by the Government's recognition and sanction of marriage as a publicly recognized function of Government and the procreation of families in our society.

The work that Congresswoman BARBARA KENNELLY has done in bringing H.R. 867 to the floor, only highlights the well established role that Government has in the facilitation of adoptions in this county.

In 1995, 494,000 of our Nation's children lived in the foster care system.

As we work to address the need to find and place these children with parents and families who will love and care for them, we must be sure to protect these children from unforeseen dangers.

Requiring criminal records checks for prospective foster and adoptive parents and group care staff will go a long way to ensure that adoptive parents are prepared and suitable parents.

Adoption is not a right in our society, but an honor. The children in foster care or who are being placed for adoption, deserve the extra care that can be demonstrated by conducting criminal background checks on prospective parents.

In 1994, 3.1 million cases of abused and neglected children were reported in the United States, and an estimated 1 million cases were confirmed.

The 1993 data indicated that 49 percent of the children were neglected, 24 percent were physically abused, 14 percent were sexually abused, 5 percent suffered emotional mistreatment, and 2 percent suffered medical neglect. In 1993, 1,080 children died each day, and another 140,000 were seriously injured while many were disabled for life.

This amendment would ensure that prospective adoptive parents were suitable caregivers and safe adoptive parents for children.

According to the American Public Welfare Association [APWA], about 450,000 children live in foster care at any given moment, and as many as 600,000 children live in foster care during the course of any given year. Certainly this major legislation today will help us finish that number. However, we want to make sure that these caretakers have the kinds of background checks that will ensure the safety of our children.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to comment on this amendment and the fact that it is the only amendment that fosters homes are safe for children. States already have the discretion to conduct background checks and licensing of foster parents, and many States do conduct background checks for people who work with children.

I want to point out for the Record that the amendment is permissive. It is at the option of the State. But if it were not, if it were mandatory, the cost to the State, according to the General Accounting Office is about $20 for each check; and States could be, if this were mandatory, required to spend hundreds or thousands of dollars because of this amendment.
I know that activities are ongoing through Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies to improve the quality of the data they receive in these background checks, but I think the change that was made is a positive one and I endorse it. As the Record states, I support the amendment.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise to address a question to the gentleman from Michigan relating to elderly caregivers. I need to ask the question as to whether or not there is protection for older caregivers who have retired or who are disabled and taking care of minor children where they might need aid to dependent children.

What provision do we find anywhere in the law that protects them from having the 2-year limit on aid to dependent children?

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

The 50 States at this time do deal with custody issues in different fashions. Sometimes radically different mechanisms are used to govern these difficult situations. Therefore, it is hard at this time to write a Federal statute, even if it were desirable, to deal with such delicate and personal matters. It is important to recognize the criticalness of these arrangements and the thought that must be given where death of a parent is a real, tragic possibility.

I am sure that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] and his subcommittee will oversee the response of the States to this sense of Congress, because if they do not move forward to modernize their guardianship laws, then it is incumbent for us to look how we do this from Washington, DC. These are very delicate arrangements, they are hard to develop.
they need foresight, the need a good structure of law to protect the interests of the children and other family members. I think it is better done from the State, but we must oversee that this does happen from Washington.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY] and the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. Kennelly], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP], and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] for their leadership on the overall issue of the protection of our children.

I rise today in support of the sense-of-Congress resolution allowing parents to choose standby guardians for their children in the event of their death. This is an important and compassionate piece of legislation. If I might add a personal anecdote as a practicing lawyer in the family courts of Texas, this is a rising crisis that we face. It is a great tragedy in the life of a young child to lose a parent through illness. AIDS is certainly a nationwide epidemic and confronting young parents on a daily basis.

Often the child is too young to understand anything other than the fact that the person who has been the center of their world, their caretaker, is gone. It is at this time in their lives that children most need a caring and supportive environment. Unfortunately, this is too often a time when a young child is taken from his home and placed in a foster family. In many cases, this is because State law prevented the child's parents from naming a guardian for their child in advance of their death.

In speaking to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY], it was evident that in many jurisdictions this happens far too frequently, and it certainly happens frequently in the crisis that occurs when loved ones are stricken with AIDS.

This legislation will provide a caring guardian for the child upon the death of that child's parents. In so doing, it will ease the child's trauma at their parents' death by allowing the child's guardian to establish a relationship before the parent's death and to be there while that child is grieving.

Standby guardianship will also allow the parent the comfort and knowledge of providing a sure future for their children. It must be terribly painful to experience for a parent to leave their young child behind. We can help to ease that pain by letting the parent be an active participant in resolving the custody of their children.

According to the Journal of the American Medical Association, noted in December 1992, many States "leave children in legal limbo at the time of a parent's death, even when a guardian has been named in that parent's will." So we see that that is not a solution. I therefore encourage my colleagues to support this sense of Congress resolution.

As I close, Mr. Chairman, let me also state that I look forward to working with the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. Kennelly], with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP], and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW]. At the direction of the Congressional Children's Caucus, on issues to provide for protection of those parents, foster parents, adoptive parents who tragically may have had a bout with drug abuse, and also then to as well ensure that we look favorably at making sure that diversity in this country is received in the adoptive process and that the child's cultural background be part of our sensitivity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. MALONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, people who are observing this meeting today probably think they have the wrong parliamentary body when they see the great agreement that this House has risen to by unanimously supporting this and by working out the various amendments. This did not come by happenstance, I would like to say, however. It came from very close work from the Democratic and the Republican side of the aisle, with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CAMP] taking the reins for the Republican side and the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. Kennelly] the Democrat side.

It shows, I think, when you find that there is a problem out there and you decide that we are not going to be running down the partisan horse trying to press our will upon each other, what we can do. It also, I think, shows the tremendous amount of good staff work that we have had going into this bill.

I would like to compliment the staffs on both sides of the aisle. I would particularly like to point out Dr. Cassie Bevan for the tremendous work that she has done on this bill. She has a reputation of herself, a well-deserved reputation. She has done many writings and is recognized as an expert on this particular subject nationwide. We are very fortunate, I think, to have staff with particularly background information. We have seen this with other bills that have been passed, and I recognize other members of the staff on both sides of the aisle in being able to bring bills to the floor, being able to dig through the process and be sure that what we pass here is a good product, but then particularly with the Campbell-Kennelly bill. We are going to be able to pass a bill today that is really going to help the most fragile among us, and those are the kids that are lingering in foster care, which is a national tragedy.

Again, we have 500,000 children across this country who are hungering for a home and a lifestyle and some structure in their life. This is a tremendous step forward, and I think that it is one of the finest hours of this Congress. I compliment all of the people who were involved in putting this bill together, and I urge its adoption.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION
Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained yesterday and this morning. On rollcall votes 92, 93, 94, 95, and 96, if I had been present, I would have voted "aye" on 92, "aye" on 93, "nay" on 94, "nay" on 95, and "aye" on 96.

I ask that my statement appear in the RECORD after the vote.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION
Mr. CAMP. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 867, the Clerk be authorized to correct section numbers, punctuation, and cross references and to make such other technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the actions of the House in amending the bill.

HAIRY OPPORTUNITY AND RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1997

H. RES. 133

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state the union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2) to repeal the United States Housing Act of 1937, deregulate the public housing program and the program for rental housing assistance for low-income families, and provide for community control over such programs, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. Points of order against consideration of the bill for failure to comply with clause 2(h) of rule XIX shall be determined by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services. On general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purposes of amendment the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered by title rather than by section. Each title shall be considered as read. Points of order against the amendment in the nature of a substitute for failure to comply with clause 5(a) of rule XXI are waived. Before consideration of any other amendment it shall be in order to consider the amendment printed in the Congressional Record of April 29, 1997, pursuant to clause 6 of rule XXII, if offered by Representative Lazio of New York or his designee. That amendment shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for ten minutes equally divided and controlled by the proponent and opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division in the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

All points of order against that amendment are waived. If that amendment is adopted, the bill, as amended, shall be considered as the original bill for the purposes of further amendment. During further consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 6 of rule XXIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. The Chairman of the Whole may: (1) postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment; and (2) reduce to five minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any postponed question that follows another electronic vote without intervening business: Provision minimum time for electronic voting on the first in any series of questions shall be fifteen minutes. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text. The time for such a motion shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendement forthwith to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr.
YOUNG of Florida). The gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] is recognized for 1 hour.

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material in the RECORD.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from South Boston, MA [Mr. MOA-KLEY], my very good friend and the ranking minority member. Pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Let me say that all time that I will be yielding will be for debate purposes only.

Mr. Speaker, in the tradition of past housing rules, this rule provides an open rule for the consideration of H.R.
2, the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act of 1997. However, the rule does waive points of order against consideration of the bill for failure to comply with House rules regarding the 3-day availability of committee reports or CBO cost estimates.

The main committee report has been available for 3 days, but because it did not include a CBO cost estimate, a supplemental report containing that estimate was filed yesterday, thus requiring these waivers.

The rule makes in order an amendment in the nature of a substitute as an original bill for the purpose of amendment which shall be read by title. It contains a minor waiver of points of order for appropriating in a legislative bill, but I understand that the Committee on Appropriations is not opposed to the waiver, Mr. Speaker.

The rule further makes in order an amendment by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] before other amendments are considered, which will be considered as read, shall be debatable for 10 minutes, equally divided between the proponent and an opponent, and shall not be subject to a demand for the division of the question. All points of order against the Lazio amendment shall be waived. If adopted, the bill, as amended, shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of further amendment, thus ensuring an open amendment process.

Finally, the rule strongly encourages preprinting of amendments in the RECORD, and allows the Chair to postpone votes and reduce votes to 5 minutes on a postponed question if the vote follows a 15-minute vote.

The rule also provides for 1 hour to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bona fide open rule. Over the years I have had the great honor of referring to the former chairman of the Federal Reserve on Banking and Financial Services [Mr.
GONZALEZ], who is sitting right here on the floor now, as Mr. Open Rule because of his strong commitment to major housing bills and bringing them under an open amendment rule.

It is a distinction that, after 2 years of experience, I am now transferring from Chairman GONZALEZ to the current chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity, the gentleman from New York [Mr.
LAZIO], and I know that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] would strongly support me in that action.

While an open rule on a bill of this nature will take time -- considerable and contentious, it is essential that we proceed in this nature.

Housing policy must be seen in the context of broader welfare policy.
Members have strong feelings about Federal housing programs, on low-income families and how these programs should be reformed. An open rule will allow all issues to be debated and will strengthen public confidence in whatever program changes we collectively decide to move ahead with in the House.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the changes called for in the bill are long overdue. Our public housing programs are a failure, and those failures have been known to us now for nearly two decades. Yet, until now, Congress has failed to offer effective solutions to adressing the housing and economic needs of poverty-level families.

Instead, we have continued to spend hundreds of billions of dollars on costly and inefficient public housing programs that encourage waste, fraud and abuse, while destroying urban communities and relegating tenants to second class status in Third World living conditions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2 will improve housing opportunity and economic opportunity for tenants by substantially reducing public housing and giving authorities the flexibility they need to operate efficiently and effectively.

While H.R. 2 does not fundamentally alter the Federal Government's intrusion into the housing market, nor does it reduce the size of the HUD's bureaucracy, it will go a long way toward reforming our failed public housing program. For that reason, I urge the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO], for his successful efforts in bringing this bill forward.

I look forward to working with him to bring about similar reforms to the remainder of HUD's budget. With the rule we can enhance local control, reduce administrative overhead and cost burdens, maximize the direct flow of housing assistance, and promote our ultimate objective, which is the achievement of economic self-sufficiency for our low-income families.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2 is a good bill that deserves our support. A similar bill passed the House 1 week short of a year ago. More importantly, this rule provides for an open amendment process, as I have said, that will allow all of the policy issues that we will be considering to come forward with a free debate.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support of the rule, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see this open rule come to the floor. It is a welcome change, and I urge my colleagues to support the rule. This rule waves points of order against failure to allow Members 3 days to review the committee report. This is the fourth time, Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks that the committee has waived this rule. I hope that this trend would stop very soon, because Members really need time to review the bills before they are considered in the House.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is another matter entirely. This bill takes public housing away from the poor and hands it over to the people who can afford better. It replaces public housing programs with block grants. It permits richer tenants into public housing and pushes poorer tenants into homelessness.

Mr. Speaker, that is not what public housing is all about. Public housing is about giving families a chance to live on their own, no matter how much money they make. It is about reducing the number of homeless children and helping low-income parents give their children the kinds of lives they desire.

Mr. Speaker, a long time ago, when I was a young boy growing up in South Boston, I lived in the first public housing ever built in the country: the Old Harbor Village, which is today called the Mary Ellen McCormack. Back then my family's moving into the project was upward mobility for me. There was no stigma, there was no crime in public housing. The Old Harbor Village was part of the community in every sense of the word. In fact, up until then, it was probably the nicest place we ever lived.
Growing up in the projects, you had a strong sense of community, a strong sense of pride, and everybody looked after everybody else. You lived for the guy upstairs, downstairs, and over the back fence. We were all treated as citizens and not subjects, and when a person is respected, they respond accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about it, public housing has slipped a long way since then. It has slipped a long way since I was a tenant. But that is no reason to try to get it back where it was. That is no reason to change Federal housing from a program that is targeted to the poorest of the poor to a program for everyone else. That is what the bill will do, Mr. Speaker. This bill takes housing away from those in most need, and pushes them further towards the fringes of society. It will widen the already enormous gulf between the rich and poor in this country at a time when the American children need all the help we can give them, no matter how much money their parents make.

Mr. Speaker, there are some good ideas in this bill. There are some provisions for flexibility and for administrative reforms that we badly need, but the rest of the bill just goes too far. My Democratic colleagues will propose a bill to improve our housing program by implementing ideas that everybody agrees to. But the Democratic substitute eliminates that risky block grant program which takes funding away from housing and does absolutely nothing to ensure that the funding will be available to operate and maintain the current units. The Democratic bill keeps public housing on the side of the children. The Democratic bill keeps public housing on the side of poor people. The Democratic bill keeps public housing on the side of the chilen.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this open rule and oppose the bill. Public housing should be a leg up for those who need it, and not for everyone else.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Columbus, OH [Ms. PRYCE], a valued member of the Committee on Rules.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio, Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished vice chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for both this open rule and the Housing Opportunity Responsibility Act. First, I want to commend the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lazio], and the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services for crafting legislation that is focused on our basic principles of, No. 1, making the American dream of affordable housing more attainable; No. 2, empowering individuals to improve their lives; No. 3, returning more decisionmaking authority to States and localities where it belongs.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2 does all of these things, fundamentally changing the public housing in section 8 rental assistance programs and allowing the Federal Government to support local communities in their decisions.

Under this bill, the emphasis is placed on providing the most service for the least cost, and tailoring Federal assistance to fit local needs, so the limited Federal resources are invested in the ways that are likely to achieve the greatest return.

Fundamental to the bill is the belief that those who receive Federal assistance share a responsibility and an obligation to pursue self-sufficiency. H.R. 2 would remove disincentives to work, while linking continued Federal assistance to a modest amount of community service each month.

While I support this legislation, I am concerned that H.R. 2 falls short of the high standards of national occupancy standards. This year I co-sponsored legislation introduced by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCollum] to give States the authority to set their own occupancy standards. In my opinion, the bill would allow of a standard of two persons per bedroom plus infants. As I understand it, the so-called McCollum language was originally included, but was later scaled back significantly during the markup.

In my view, the housing bill offers us the perfect and appropriate opportunity to give States the flexibility and authority to set their own standards and to implement a reasonable standard in their place when States fail to take action.

A major housing reform bill like H.R. 2 should take advantage of the experience and expertise of those who deal with these issues on a daily basis. I hope this may be addressed at some point in the process.

Mr. Speaker, promoting safe, clean, and healthy housing is central to the American dream, especially for low-income persons. I believe this legislation is critical to reducing the concentration of power at the Federal level that has stifled innovation and kept local housing authorities out of the decision-making process. I urge support of the bill and the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I, for one, think we can do a lot more for the poor people. There are more homeless now, after spending nearly 30 years in favor of the bill, than we had before. So I am on record for saying we must do more but we can do more by looking more carefully at the market.
Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, we have a couple Members who are very enthusiastic in expressing their desire to speak, but I am having a challenging time to educate them right now; and I do not know if my friend, the gentleman from South Boston, MA [Mr. MOAKLEY], will hold the floor.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, if it makes the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER] feel any better, after we pass the rule, I would be glad to listen to their conversation seated here in the Chamber.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I urge an "aye" vote on the rule.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I urge strong support of this rule, which will allow for a free and fair debate under an open amendment process.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution. The previous question was ordered. The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 133 and rule XXVI (b), the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODLATTE] as Chair of the Committee of the Whole, and requests the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAHOOD] to assume the chair temporarily.

Mr. LAHOOD. Mr. Chair.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH].

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Chair, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise today in support of H.R. 2, the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act of 1997. I want to thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZOIO] for his extraordinary leadership on this bill as well as the constructive commentary of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], who is the ranking member on the subcommittee, as well as the distinguished ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ].

H.R. 2 is the product of numerous hearings that were held by the Committee on Banking and Financial Services as well as 4 days of markup which included more than 70 amendments, with some 20 amendments from the minority side adopted.

H.R. 2 was reported by the committee by a vote of 28 to 19. In the last Congress, a similar bill, H.R. 2406, was reported out of the committee and passed the full House by a bipartisan vote of 315 to 107.

Reforming our Nation's public housing programs, regardless of one's philosophical beliefs, is a priority both for the Congress and the administration. The committee was encouraged when Secretary Cuomo appeared before the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity on March 6 and stated that he will work night and day to enact historic public housing reform legislation. The Committee on Banking and Financial Services has been committed to working with Secretary Cuomo to reform rather than evicerate HUD and the programs under its jurisdiction. Members may recall that 2½ years ago many in the administration body favored elimination of HUD. The Committee on Banking and Financial Services prefers to maintain a credible public housing commitment, recognizing that moneys are short and that disappoointments in some areas may be significant.

Nevertheless, we believe that reform and rehabilitation are preferable to stultification and decay.

Virtually all interested parties agree that the current public housing system does not serve the tenants of public housing well, nor does it efficiently or effectively utilize taxpayer dollars that are appropriated for public housing programs.

Quite simply, H.R. 2 is as much about improving the lives of low-income families and individuals as it is about fiscal responsibility and Government accountability.

H.R. 2 replaces outdated laws and programs with a new empowering approach for communities designed to be relevant to the 21st century. Along with welfare reform efforts, this bill is a critical step on the path to revitalizing empowerment programs that were created decades ago in a different sociocultural, legal, and economic environment.

Without question, there are a number of important issues where the majority and minority part ways on philosophical grounds. These issues were debated and considered in an open forum at the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, and I am pleased that the rule for this bill provides for the same opportunity in the full House.

While I do not wish to review all the issues with agreement at this time, I would like to briefly touch upon one issue where there appears to be an inconsistency within the ranks of the congressional minority and the Democratic administration. H.R. 2 provides that each adult member of a family residing in a public or assisted housing project contribute not less than 8 hours per month in community service activities. Individuals who would be exempt from this requirement are disabled persons who are employed and others who are otherwise physically impaired from performing such services.

Also, the provision is structured so as not to duplicate community work requirements under local welfare reform efforts.

This provision is generally based upon the long held American precept that those who receive assistance from a community should give back to that community in some way. Some of our Democratic colleagues argue that this provision is punitive and demeaning. Yet it is worth noting that the administration's public housing bill that was provided by Secretary Cuomo and introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZOIO] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] by request included the same provision to require 8 hours of community service. Also, the public housing bill that was introduced by the House in the last Congress by a resounding 315 to 107 vote, which was submitted by former HUD Secretary Henry Cisneros, included the same community service requirements to which our colleagues on the other side now raise the objection.

It is true there could be a slight administrative cost increase in this work component, but it would be our hope that this cost could in part be borne by those asked to fulfill a work commitment. In the larger picture, the bill is deregulation oriented with the CBO estimating administrative savings of $100 million over 5 years.

As for funding, this bill matches the administration request for fiscal year 1996 and is consistent with the fiscal year 1997 enacted levels. In other words, our approach represents a freeze on spending with greater administrative discretion allowed at the housing authority level.

Given efforts to balance the budget, this bill represents an administration congressional consensus. The minority is correct that the bill moves to more mixed income housing with housing authorities, at their strong request, allowing low-income families near the poor as well as the poor. While all poor currently in housing are legislatively protected, it must be understood that there are many aspects of current public housing programs which have been judged by experts as well as the public as a failure to concentrate the very poor alone in public housing, particularly high-rising, is to condemn them in many instances to poverty segregation.

On the other dimension, lowest income housing simply has not worked. For the sake of decent standards of housing for the poor, more local discretion is needed.
Mr. Chairman, I urge consideration of this reform approach as common sense.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I first want to begin my remarks by complimenting the gentleman from Massachusetts for his superb leadership that he has demonstrated on housing issues. He knows the subject matter, which is complex, very well. Equally important, though, he does deeply and sincerely care about the people who depend on public housing. He seeks to create a positive reform and works tirelessly on behalf of people who have few advocates and really no political resources.

He is a model of decency and compassion. I salute his courage, his energy, his imaginative efforts, all of which reflect great credit to him, the people that he represents and serves, and this House.

The bill before us, H.R. 2, can best be described as a series of good slogans but unworkable or undesirable policies. The bill before us is no more likely to be enacted this year than last year's failure effort, which it very closely resembles, incidentally. We will offer a substitute that makes, I believe, far more sense and which deserves the support of our Members.

I will predict that in the final analysis, any bill that is enacted will look very much like the substitute that we will offer.

H.R. 2 creates strong incentives for local housing authorities to stop renting available units to those who are in the greatest need of them. Under the bill, housing authorities will henceforth rent units only to people who can afford to pay more. The reason for this is simple: The Congress has cut operating subsidies so far below what the housing authorities need, so the only way to keep public housing units from falling into ruin is to rent fewer units to the poorest class of applicants.

To be perfectly frank, this bill abandons those who are in the greatest need and for whom this whole thing was intended in the beginning.

I sincerely believe, as I have all along, that it is possible to maintain sound housing authorities without taking the radical and callous steps provided in H.R. 2. The substitute that we will offer will target housing assistance in what I believe is a sensible and humane way.

H.R. 2 imposes huge new bureaucratic burdens on local housing agencies but provides no money for these schemes. The authors of H.R. 2 apparently believe that residents of public housing are defective or derelict and in need of social engineering. Therefore, they require that tenants sign away their personal improvement contract. If these agreements are to have any meaning or effect, they will need to be individually and expertly designed. The tenants would have to be carefully monitored, and there would have to be resources available to carry out the various components of the self-improvement plan.

But there is no money provided in this bill. One of the reasons why the housing authorities are supposed to do a better job for free than schools and social welfare agencies can do with actual money.

Likewise, the bill requires public housing residents to do at least 2 hours a week of community service. No doubt this is a well-intended thing, but, again, the bill provides no money to carry out this mandatory public service. Somebody will have to provide and create and keep the records to be sure that the residents do the required work. Somebody will have to check to be sure the work is being done, and somebody will have to be sure that the work is actually beneficial to the community.

Without some kind of administrative support, this mandatory work scheme will collapse in a welter of confusion and fakery.

These prescriptions on H.R. 2 make fine slogans but they are unworkable. There is no money for them. They are not in any way integrated with any other program or policy. They ignore the complex reality of life at the bottom of the heap. The sad reality is that H.R. 2 represents a further and a much faster retreat from efforts to provide decent and affordable housing to the millions who desperately need help. Those most in need of help will be turned away. And those who get help will pay more for it.

I have highlighted only a few of this bill's defects. There are, of course, many more. I urge my colleagues to study the Democratic substitute. They will find that it is sensible and workable. The Democratic substitute is a realistic, good-faith effort to reproduce a bill that both parties can and should be able to agree on. I urge support of the substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Kennedy], ranking member of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development, and I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to control the time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was none.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lazio], and I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to control the time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, over the next several days we will be discussing two different visions for the American community. One vision will be a portrait of the failed past. Imagine in this portrait mile after mile of 20-story projects stained by age, crumbling from neglect, isolated from jobs and business. The once empty hallways are now wide open, security locks punched out. Inside only the red light of an exit sign illuminates the hallway revealing an accumulation of debris. Outside after dark, the court yard is silent, and moms and dads trapped in their apartment will instruct their children to stay away from windows for fear of stray bullets. Such a portrait is an all too familiar picture of life in public housing. It exists even here in our Nation's Capital.

There is another vision of the American community. This vision is one filled with neighbors working together to create an environment where children can grow up safely, surrounded by working role models and with the hope that one day they can climb their own economic ladder to success.

With this bill, Mr. Chairman, we end the practice of looking the other way in the name of compassion when we see failure. To condemn another generation to a life without hope, a life without any sense of community, a life without the rewards of individual achievement or success, to defend this status quo mocks compassion and it is unacceptable.

Mr. Chairman, we are at a critical point in the debate over how we define the relationship of the Federal Government with local communities and neighborhoods. We begin today to end the cruel process of rewarding failure and punishing success. We cannot and we will not force children to grow up in an environment of violent crime where they are isolated from the economic and social opportunities of mainstream America.

And let me be clear. This legislation, this debate, is not about money. Our efforts over the next several days, no matter what we do, cannot alter the fiscal realities of the world. Money has not solved the problems of Chicago, of New Orleans, of San Francisco. It is the system itself that is broken.

Let us commit today on the floor to rectify this situation and to legitimate the practice of looking the other way.
we will begin to be able to serve an even greater number of low-income Americans than we do today.

And so we begin. H.R. 2, the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act is, I believe, the embodiment of three central themes. First, it removes Federal rules that discouraging work and encourage the breakup of families. Families with the opportunity to earn more income are able to enjoy the full rewards of their efforts, and vulnerable residents are protected from harmful increases in rent.

This bill permanently eliminates regulations that have concentrated the poorest families in the very worst housing, and this is the second theme. Decades of warehousing poor families in high-rise projects have destroyed not only their mission to generate the opportunity to live in a world much different than that which many Americans enjoy.

Our legislation allows for the creation of mixed-income environments where working people who serve as role models live alongside unemployed families. Instead of stark isolation from the economics of society, families become engaged in the activities of their neighbors and achieve a sense of accountability and responsibility for their own lives. And we are able to accomplish this without, and I repeat, without shutting out the poorest of American families from affordable housing opportunities.

Third, this legislation is about demanding accountability and performance from the thousands of housing authorities. For those housing authorities that have chronically failed their mission to generate affordable housing to low-income families, we contract out the management of the agency, take over the authority, or petition for a court-appointed receiver.

For too many years we have preserved and defended environments where drugs, rape, and murder proliferate throughout our neighborhoods. Today we say no more. We ask this: Should we allow this way of life to continue for our Nation's poor, or should low-income families expect no less than any one of us here expects in terms of the basic values of life: an opportunity to improve our own lives, a home where our children are safe and grow up learning the rewards of success.

Last year, Mr. Chairman, this House moved dramatically into the future by adopting, by an overwhelming majority, a bill that guaranteed many of the reforms that are in the bill before us today. Last year's bill was supported by almost 100 Democratic Members and virtually all Republicans who saw the desperate need to break with the status quo and embrace positive reform.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is less about shelter than it is about the creation of an environment where we can begin to successfully address poverty. Instead of a world of broken doors, broken windows, broken promises and broken dreams, we say to families in public housing, "We respect you, and we will provide you with the opportunities you need. In return, we expect responsibility and a contribution to the binding fabric of society. This is a fair deal.

Our goal is plain. We work to build a Nation of communities where every neighborhood can rise above the expectations of mediocrity and isolation to success. We promote civic responsibility that emphasizes not just the values of discipline and respect. We would like to thank the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Finance, Mr. Leach, and the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Kennedy, for his guidance, for his help and for his support, as well as thank all the members of the committee who have participated in the consideration of this bill.

I would also like to thank the majority leader who scheduled this time and allowed this bill to come to the floor in an expeditious manner, and I wanted to thank my good friend from New York, Mr. LaZio, who has worked very hard on trying to fashion the bill. I believe very strongly that it is time for the Congress of the United States to get a bill passed. The question is which bill we get passed.

We heard a lot of talk and rhetoric about the fact that one view on how we ought to deal with public housing is to continue the policies of the past, and another view, which is a new vision of the future that is, in fact, an accurate representation of the Democratic view as a continuation of the policies of the past.

Everyone is very clear that we need real reforms of public housing, of assisted housing in this country, and that we need to go to HUD and local housing authorities a great deal of additional flexibility. Those are contained in the Democratic view on how we should handle housing issues.

Before we get to the guts of the bill, I want to like personally acknowledge and thank the former chairman of this committee, who was chairman of the Housing Committee in the Congress of the United States for perhaps longer than any other Member in the history of this country, someone who has dedicated his life to assisting the poorest people in our country and helping them attain decent and affordable shelter. A fellow who, I hope, perhaps more than any other Member, knows about the issues pertaining to housing policy in this country. I would like to acknowledge the contributions of our great former chairman, the gentleman from Texas, Henry B. Gonzalez.

I also want to thank the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Lehman, for the leadership that he has shown in trying to make certain that this bill has had the open and honest debate that I think did occur, although perhaps the votes ultimately fell short by one or two on a number of very important issues at the full committee level.

Let me take a brief moment to also thank the wonderful contributions of the staff of this committee in Nancy Johnson, Fernando FaCon, Angie Garcia, Rick Maurano, Eric Olsen, and of course, Kelsay Meek, who has guided us through so many of these fights in the past. I want to thank them very much for the efforts they have made, as well.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at the housing policies of this country, there is no question that we need change. We have not had a new housing bill in this Congress in over 6 years. It is time we get a housing bill and we ought to get a fair housing bill.

First of all, let me return the compliment that a good friend from New York, Mr. LaZio, who has worked very hard on trying to fashion the bill. I believe very strongly that it is time for the Congress of the United States to get a bill passed.

Second, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

We have never provided the necessary subsidies to those poor people, we said they would get a housing bill and it is time we get it. We are going to give the Secretary the flexibility of moving in and taking control of badly run housing projects within well-run housing authorities.

What we ought not to do is condemn the entire public housing of our country simply because it has become fashion for politicians to identify some God-awful monstrosity where we have warehoused the poorest of the poor, the families who have provided us with the ability to solve the problems, in fact, take care of those poor people, then walk in front of these awful buildings and say, "Gosh, this is a terrible condemnation of the Lyndon Johnson Democratic commitment to the poor and it obviously does not work.

So what is the basic solution that we have come to in the Congress of the United States to deal with this problem? Our solution is very simple. Our solution is one that I think we ought to cut funding. Simply said, cut the funding that goes to public housing in this country and that goes to HUD from about $28 billion to about $19 billion.
It will not solve the housing problems of the very poor. It will make us look good as legislators because we are going to eliminate the very awful public housing dinosaurs that ought to be eliminated in both the Republican as well as in the Democratic bills.

We have no mandatory work requirement. All I say is, listen, if we are going to establish a new policy in this country that anybody that gets a federal benefit ought to contribute and volunteer in terms of America's future, I say that is great. Let us start with the oil and gas industry. Let us ask those boys, when they get a big tax write-off on their oil and gas leases, let us ask them to do a little volunteering.

Let us start with the people that invest in project-based section 8's. Let us say to every investor that makes money off of the HUD programs, let us see them volunteer as well.

Why do we just pick on the poor? Why do we just target these instances of saying we are going to wag our finger at the very poor and say they are the problem in America. They are not the problem in America. We spend less money helping poor people than any other country in the Government.

I would just say to my fellow Members of Congress that whether it is the personal improvement program or the accreditation boards or even the block grant process, these are not real reforms to get to getting the public housing policy in this country. These are window dressing that enable us to stand up and make fancy dancy speeches to make us look like we have changed policy, when we have done nothing but get at the very poor by saying to them that we are no longer going to make them eligible for these programs. We will throw them out on the street and leave them to rot so we can look good before the American people.

That is the truth of what is behind the Republican bill, and that is why I offer the Democratic substitute and look forward to gaining support for that over the next few days.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.
MAKING IN ORDER ADDITIONAL TIME FOR GENERAL DEBATE ON H.R. 2, HOUSING OPPORTUNITY AND RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1997

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that there be an additional 20 minutes of general debate on H.R. 2, equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], at the request of the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

HOUSING OPPORTUNITY AND RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1997

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 133 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 2.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] makes a good point. If we are going to have these work requirements, why not for the investors in oil shelters? Why not for the investors in section 8? Why not for those who receive public subsidies through the Tax Code? No, we discriminate.

I also strongly oppose the abrupt change in public housing admission and income targeting requirements.

They will permit diversion of the best public housing facilities for mixed income housing and the warehousing of very poor families into the worst public projects.

In addition, I must strongly oppose those provisions that could further politicize public housing administration.

These include providing huge unfettered block grants of most remaining housing assistance to local mayors rather than independent housing authorities, withdrawing needed CDBG funding from cities that have troubled housing authorities, and allowing Governors to allocate capital improvement funds to smaller public housing authorities within their States. Each of these proposals offers the potential for the diversion of scarce housing funds for political objectives rather than the needs of our poorest families.

I would hope that we can proceed in a bipartisan manner. That is not what happened in the reporting of the bill. Most amendments were adopted or rejected on partisan grounds. I think it is only possible to achieve a housing bill, and well the more we see a housing bill pass in over 6 years now, if we proceed in a bipartisan fashion. Hopefully at some point in time we will come to that realization.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just found it curious, Mr. Chairman, that there is a discussion about alternatives now when this bill is on the floor and ready for action and the status quo that is now being discussed or the status quo substitute that is being discussed that even negates the reforms that the Clinton administration would put forward. It appears that there are some Members in this body that are clinging to the failure that exists in certain areas. I think again that mocks compassion. What we need to do is create environments where people can make it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEY], the distinguished vice chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity.

Mr. NEY. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] for yielding my time.

Mr. Chairman, I guess we have heard it all today. The people I assume we are saying are investors make money. The people who are building projects, the people who are building housing should in fact, I guess, volunteer some time also? So I am assuming that the union working people that work for those companies should also volunteer time because they are working on the projects. Is that what we are saying? Is this some type of great philosophy we have today? We are talking about the residents.

I have got plenty of residents in my district who would like to put in a little time, 2 hours a week, to feel productive, to do something toward the housing that in fact the Government is cooperating with them to provide some living situations for their family. That is all we are talking about. To stretch this out to who builds it and maybe the people for whom it should in fact put in some volunteer time, that is not what this is about. This debate is occurring today because let me tell you what the U.S. Government did from 1937 forward, when the poor of this country, the people that needed some housing, needed some assistance, came to their Government and said, “Help me. I need some help for my family.”

The Government looked at those individuals and said, “OK, we’re going to do it.” All in one category, we’re going to consider you all the same, we’ll build something called a project, then we’ll create a bureaucracy to oversee that project. We won’t try to help you out in neighborhoods. We’ll just take you to a high-rise. We’ll warehouse you. We’ll make it effectively easy for drug dealers and thieves to have a captive audience to get at your families.”

That was the philosophy. I think we should not only have that statement made in 1937 to put people in neighborhoods, just like we were raised, in neighborhoods with rich and with poor, and with middle-class working Americans.
We will probably, Mr. Chairman, see some pictures shown on this floor today of some nice housing community projects, and there are some in the country. Let us look at the realities. In October 1994 in Chicago, IL, a 5-year-old boy tossed to his death from a 14th floor window at the Ida B. Wells public housing project by two other young boys.

Mr. Chairman, there are other nightmare stories, and there are some good housing units and projects in this country, we have compared for a cause and there is a big difference of how we are going to approach helping people that need help from their Government. The way we are going to do it is to give more flexibility to be able to sell drug dealers that they are not going to come into these projects, to be able to defend families that are living there, to have a voucher system to try to eventually have people go into neighborhoods and for the Government to cooperate with them and help them get there, and for the Government to help them up the economic ladder. But there are nightmare stories. All is not good in paradise across the United States in these projects. We need to help the people of this country.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Ms. KILPATRICK], a good friend and a new member of the committee and a wonderful contributor.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, first let me say that we are in change and want they are going to come into these projects, to be able to defend families that are living there, to have a voucher system to try to eventually have people go into neighborhoods and for the Government to cooperate with them and help them get there, and for the Government to help them up the economic ladder. But there are nightmare stories. All is not good in paradise across the United States in these projects. We need to help the people of this country.
Let me just make a few brief points. No. 1, at a time when this U.S. Congress provides $125 billion a year in corporate welfare tax breaks and subsidies to large multinational corporations who do not need them, at a time when we are spending billions on B-2 bombers that we do not need, at a time in which we are giving huge tax breaks to the richest people in America who do not need them, I am not impressed by a policy which over the last 4 years has cut back on public housing by 25 percent. We seem to always have funds available to help the wealthy and corporate America, but when it comes to the need of working people and low-income people, suddenly it is on their backs that we are asked to balance the budget.

The economic facts are very clear. Just the other day we read in the papers that the CEO’s of major corporations make 78 times what their workers make, while the new jobs that are being created are low-wage jobs keeping people in poverty after 40 hours of work. In my State of Vermont and throughout the country there are millions who are working who are earning only 20 hours a week, and then they are being asked to pay 40, 50, 60 percent of their limited incomes for housing. There is a housing crisis in this country, and the way to solve the housing crisis is not to cut back on funding and not build more affordable housing.

Now my friends here say on the Republican side we do not want to warehouse people. OK, do not warehouse them. Then why do they cut back on section 8 funding so that we can spread money to the very wealthiest members of this country while the new jobs that workers make, while the new jobs that are being created are low-wage jobs, keeping people in poverty after 40 hours of work. In my State of Vermont and throughout the country there are millions who are working who are earning only 20 hours a week, and then they are being asked to pay 40, 50, 60 percent of their limited incomes for housing. There is a housing crisis in this country, and the way to solve the housing crisis is not to cut back on housing funding and not build more affordable housing.

Now in terms of public housing we hear these horror stories, and I really think that that is not a nice thing to say. Sure there are problems, some serious problems within the projects, but to give grotesque examples of what one family does is to cast aspersions on all of the people who live in public housing.

So let me tell my colleagues I was mayor of the city of Burlington. We have it, we understand it, and it serves its purpose well. It provides safe, affordable, clean housing for hundreds and hundreds of people, and it helps people. It allows them to get a footing in their lives.

I resent the fact that we talk about horror stories from public housing. Do my colleagues know what? Rich people kill their kids, too. It is not just poor people. Furthermore, in terms of this work requirement, one of the points that I argue in my bill that the committee was that we have a home interest mortgage deduction which allows multi-multimillionaires to deduct the interest up to a million dollars on the mansions, on the fancy houses that they are living in. So we have a public policy which provides a tax break for multimillionaires who own mansions.

Now that is an interesting housing policy when at exactly the same time we are asking people who are working people and poor people, and I think the suggestion was made that if we got to have a work requirement for poor people who get a subsidy, what about the multimillionaires who get a subsidy?

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire how much time is left for the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEY] has 19 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE].

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by commending the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH] and their staffs for hard work on this legislation and for their commitment to improving the future of the residents of public housing. In particular I would also like to thank Chairman Lazio for addressing my recommendations to improving H.R. 2, especially my concern that the performance of well-run housing authorities be taken into consideration in determining the formula allocation.

Mr. Chairman, if housing authorities are going to be able to best serve the interests of their residents, they will need flexibility in managing Federal funds. Most important, we need community-based solutions.

On the one hand, public housing officials must aim to rid residents in overcoming poverty and unemployment. At the same time they must work to preserve the interests of the elderly and disabled who rely on safe and well-managed housing. H.R. 2, the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act, is a big step in the right direction in empowering housing authorities to meet these diverse needs.

H.R. 2 would empower local authorities by deregulating Federal public and assisted housing programs and substantially increasing local control over those programs and decisions about how the funds are allocated. This bill will allow well-run housing authorities, such as the ones we have in the State of Delaware, the authority to develop creative ownership programs that allow for more flexible solutions for residents and communities. The bill de-regulates and decontrols housing authorities to create environments that are fiscally sound and physically safe, and eliminates the disincentive to work.

This bill also addresses the financial crisis plaguing the Nation’s most distressed authorities by providing the new management structures and effective Federal and State partnerships.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Ms. VELAZQUEZ].

Ms. VELAZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in fierce opposition to H.R. 2, the so-called Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act of 1997. Let me just say that the only thing accurate about that title is the date.

Although reform is necessary to meet today’s public housing needs, H.R. 2 is not the answer. Sixty years ago the Housing Act of 1937 began our commitment to provide safe, clean, affordable housing for our Nation’s poorest families. This bill abolishes that law and abandons that commitment.

H.R. 2’s provisions read like a litany of injustice. One of its harshest proposals chops away at the cornerstone of public housing, targeting on their income, targeting on this bill. It will take years before public housing authorities will have to accept families earning less than $10,000 a year. These are the very families public housing was created to serve.

Mr. Chairman, there are over 5 million families that do not have access to decent and affordable housing, yet H.R. 2 pours salt on the wounds of the poor by setting minimum rents between $25 and $35. That may not sound like much, but it will force many poor families to choose between food and shelter for their children.

As if the targeting and minimum rent provisions were not heartless enough, H.R. 2 also imposes a time limit on how long tenants may remain in public housing. Once this limit is reached, families will be evicted even if they still are living in poverty.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD — HOUSE and reasonable way. We must make safe, affordable housing available to those in need, and we must provide real economic opportunities so that public housing can help families become self-sufficient.

Last year, the Republicans called our Nation’s public housing system the last bastion of socialism. If H.R. 2 becomes law, we may recall our new system the first bastion of heartlessness.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SNOWBARGER].

Mr. SNOWBARGER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in support of H.R. 2. The Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act. H.R. 2 provides comprehensive overhaul of the currently troubled public housing system. It eliminates the disincentives to work, increases accountability of public housing accountability authorities and balances the privileges and responsibilities of residents.

In particular, I am supportive of the community work and self-sufficiency requirements that are central components to the bill.

H.R. 2 requires that public housing residents spend 8 hours each month volunteering in their community. Their assistance is an invaluable resource in ensuring that public housing communities are safe, clean, and healthy places to live. Furthermore, residents must set a target date for obtaining self-sufficiency and moving out of public housing.

Mr. Chairman, several weeks ago I visited the Olathe Salvation Army Family Lodge in my district. The lodge currently provides housing for 11 families who in exchange for their housing participate in a self-sufficiency program. The lodge has an 82 percent success rate in residents finding permanent private sector housing. This high success rate is attributed to the work requirements built into the program. I believe this type of success is a model for public housing authorities across America.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2 and the community work requirements.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Chicago, IL [Mr. JACKSON].

Mr. JACKSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Let me first begin by congratulating the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALES] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. AZIO] for working together on this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 2, a bill which I fear will add to the millions of Americans who are currently homeless, at risk of being homeless, or suffering under severe housing conditions.

If H.R. 2 is passed in the form it was reported out of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, it will, in essence, destroy the last remnant of the social safety net constructed to protect our Nation’s most vulnerable citizens. While we all agree that comprehensive reform of our public and assisted housing system is paramount importance to this nation, the bill unfortunately is not the vehicle to meet the needs of our Nation’s housing needs. In fact, H.R. 2 will make worse an already bad condition.

H.R. 2 fundamentally repeals the underpinning premise and principle of the Housing Act of 1937—legislation which encompassed FDR’s righteous position that safety, sanitation, and adequate housing is a human right and not a privilege. The abandonment of this 60-year commitment is a travesty for this technologically advanced industrial country which is considered to be an economic superpower among nations.

Without a firm commitment to this principle, we will never attain our stated objective of adequately housing our citizens, as is demonstrated by our history. In the late 1960’s a White House conference on housing and urban issues called for 26 million new housing starts over the next 10 years in order to meet the housing needs of our Nation. That goal translated into 2.6 million housing starts each year, with 600,000 of those starts to be federally subsidized each year. The Nation has never even approximated that goal, and current estimates show only over 1.5 million new housing starts annually.

We know that if we have an affordable housing crisis in this Nation—5.3 million Americans live under worst case housing needs scenarios—that is they are forced to pay more than 50 percent of their income for housing and/or live under deplorable conditions. H.R. 2 will exacerbate this crisis through making public housing available to higher income residents who can pay higher rents at the expense of thousands of low income families.

Let me talk about the failures of enabling mixed income communities—which I believe is a laudable goal under ideal circumstances—we must be sure not to pull the housing safety net out from underneath the poorest and most vulnerable Americans. Over the course of this debate, we will speak at length about the dangerous targeting provisions in this bill which set aside only 35 percent of public housing units for those earning below 30 percent of area median income, leaving the remainder of units to house people who earn up to 80 percent of the area median income. In Chicago, that means 65 percent of all public housing units could be set aside for people earning $44,650. Should we be displacing full-time minimum wage workers to make room for professionals who can better afford to find housing in the private market? Even at this point, this is a false debate.

Let me be clear. When we target low-income tenants as those with incomes under 30 percent of the median income, in a large metropolitan area like Chicago we are talking about people who earn $16,312. This is $5,000 more than a full-time minimum wage worker earns in a year, and nearly $10,000 more than a welfare recipient. People who will necessarily be displaced by the proposed income mix equation, will include vast numbers of the working poor. As a result, low wage workers and Americans who are ostensively encouraging to successfully make the transition from welfare to work will either be forced into homelessness or to forgo basic human necessities like health care, groceries, and clothing in order to find alternative shelter.

We must be vigilant in our efforts to ensure that just at the time that we are requiring the most from the most vulnerable among us, we do not remove the stability and security of adequate housing—an essential resource as people attempt to move from welfare to work. When we considered this legislation in the last Congress, welfare reform had not yet been enacted; 70 percent of the residents of the Chicago Housing Authority receive public assistance and have children. If there are not enough jobs to meet the welfare-to-work requirements, the potentially devastating implications of this bill are magnified.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to offer amendments to this bill which will enable us to protect against one of the more onerous and demeaning consequences. The community work provisions of section 105—which, I might add, are uniformly opposed by virtually every public housing authority in the Nation because in the first year alone, it will cost them $65 in the first year alone—require tenants to work, and does not reflect the Congressional Budget Office figures.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 15 seconds to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. Cook].

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for giving me a minute to rise in strong support of H.R. 2. Salt Lake City, Utah's capital, and the largest city in my district, has a public commitment to mixing middle-income and low-income housing. Last year the city set aside $100,000 of its own money to provide developers with incentives to mix housing. City officials have been flooded with phone calls from interested developers. Soon, the city will designate 20 percent of its projects for low-income families. I believe mixed income housing is the only way to avoid inner-city blight.

But my district can only select one or two bills is fundamental for this approach because we could not find any Federal program that supported this creative approach. I say to my colleagues, this housing bill helps adopt such a creative approach. This housing bill can help preserve the families. It not only provides the housing to the displaced residents, the integrity of their neighborhoods, and perhaps most important of all, provide opportunities to the poor young people who have for too long been isolated from the opportunities that middle-income children enjoy, opportunities that could at last break the cycle of poverty that threatens to cripple this country.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds for clarification purposes.

I would just like to say that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services asked me to file a report yesterday that suggests that the cost of this work requirement would be $55 million the first year, would be $35 million each additional year. The 100 million dollars’ worth of savings that is accounted for by the chairman of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity, the 100 million dollars’ worth of savings is accounted for by virtue of the fact that we are raising the income levels on the poor people in these housing projects, thereby collecting additional rents, thereby confirming the contention of the Democratic position that this bill is fundamentally flawed because we take richer people instead of poorer people into public housing.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. Waters].

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill. I am appalled at some of the representations of my colleagues from the other side of the aisle accusing us of wanting to protect the status quo. We do not like homelessness. We do not like substandard housing. We are trying to change the plight of poor people in this Nation. We need to do something about troubled housing, but this is not the answer. Let us talk about how troubled housing became troubled housing. Not because of the attacks on the poor that were made here today but, rather, because we have had public housing with people congested in cramped conditions with no services, we have had poor people piled on top of each other in some of these city locations. There are no clinics in many of these, no child care, no job training, and guess what? Many of the local police departments do not even want to provide police services.

We are trying to correct this situation. We have had public housing with no investment for rehabilitation, no money to fix up those places. Yet we would like to have people who long been isolated from the opportunities that middle-income children enjoy, opportunities that could at last break the cycle of poverty that threatens to cripple this country. Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to make sure that we clarify a point. This bill, according to the Congressional Budget Office, saves $100 million in administrative expenses. It is a net saver. That includes the community service requirement. So any statement to the contrary is just not true and does not reflect the Congressional Budget Office figures.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 15 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Ney].

Mr. Ney. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lazio] and that he may be able to yield blocks of time. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2 vilifies public housing residents because they find themselves in the unfortunate predicament of being poor. In the circumstances? What are the real alternatives of living in overcrowded and unsafe circumstances? Some 20 percent. We cannot support this bill. We tried to make it better. We have Republicans on the other side of the aisle who say they care about children. Where do they think children live? Where do they think they are going to go when they are driven out of this housing, the only housing that they can afford?

I ask my colleagues to reject this legislation. Again, it is worse than the bill that we had last year.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 1/2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from the great
Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Washington, Mr. METCALF, who also heads the housing caucus in the House of Representatives.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the subcommittee chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. PAUL].

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH], and the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] for their work on passing a public housing bill that works.

Transforming public housing evokes strong emotions from both sides of the aisle. Throughout this debate Members will be heard from on all sides of the issue. Our problem is that we have measured compassion by how much money we have thrown at the problem. That does not do it. We need to fix the problem at the core, and begin helping those people in public housing move up the economic ladder.

I am fortunate to live in a district with good public housing agencies that will continue to serve those who need affordable housing. Whether it is the Everett Housing Authority or the Island County Housing Authority, they express the same message: Give us greater flexibility and less Federal interference. That is what we intend to do with this bill.

Chairman, I ask my colleagues to support commonsense legislation.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the legislation that is at issue here today. Almost any bill, even if we did not read it, did not analyze it, or did not look at the provisions, but recognized that the committee that worked on it attempted to improve the current situation in housing, would be acceptable if it is placed against the last 40 years of non-success.

Every single legislative congressional district in our country has a public housing unit. Almost every single one is failing to meet the stated purpose of the housing needs of the people that it is intended to serve. There are excellent public housing authorities that have done their job and have provided the needed help for housing inhabitants in every single one of the districts, but the housing authorities themselves have constantly badgered us Members of the Congress to bring about improvements, some of which are included in this bill. We must help the housing authorities help the poor in the housing area.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] has extra time, would he yield to a question from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS]?

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman, if he would yield, that we started out with the same amount of time I tried to accommodate by giving the gentleman an extra 10 minutes. We have several Members who are on their way and will need the time when they get in the Chamber. So if we have extra time, I would be happy to try to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from the great State of Maryland [Mr. CUMMINGS], a fellow who I think represents my older sister.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, for as long as I have been an elected official, my guiding principle has been that, if we could help those that bring the resources of government to the people, it is because of these principles that I voted against last year's version of this bill.

This year's bill, H.R. 2, is not much better. It would repeal the United States Housing Act of 1937, which has provided the underpinning for the Department of Housing and Urban Development's basic purpose for more than 60 years.

Rather than improving upon the 1937 Housing Act, this year's bill abandons the basic tenets of the original bill to provide every American with safe, sanitary, and affordable housing. Abandoning these basic goals would be a disservice to every American who is struggling to provide adequately for himself or her family.

Housing is essential if families are to be safe and if those responsible for food and shelter are to seek and find permanent employment. The Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act lacks compassion. I believe that, in its current form, this bill will force thousands of needy persons onto the streets and leave many more teetering on the brink of homelessness. This measure will force our poorest citizens to pay increased rents to live in public housing units, while it allows individuals with higher incomes to receive increased governmental benefits.

The bill's income targeting provisions also are tilted too far in favor of higher-income families. This will exacerbate the shortage of affordable housing for every low-income family. Our Nation is already experiencing a shortage of affordable housing for low-income families.

More than 5.6 million low-income families currently pay more than 50 percent of their income for rent. We have lost 43 percent of this Nation's affordable housing supply over the last two decades. This bill in its current form will only make the problem worse by reducing the main source of housing affordable to very poor, namely public and assisted housing.

Additional resources must be provided to increase the number of housing units available to the poor. Otherwise, local housing authorities will charge higher rents to attract higher-income tenants. This will result in lower-income tenants being pushed into homelessness.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAXON] a member of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PAXON. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2, the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act, which I believe addresses the last bastion of our failed experiment with the welfare state by ending our tragically broken Federal public housing system.

The public housing system created by decades of Federal micromanagement has actually harmed those it was intended to help. It is time to help by penalizing work and family unity and championing never-ending bureaucracy. H.R. 2 will encourage self-sufficiency, ending the rent provisions which have illogically and disastrously penalized public housing tenants for working and at the same time encouraging community involvement and responsibility by requiring 8 hours a month of community service for unemployed individuals receiving housing assistance.

I believe this legislation will create a healthier environment in public housing by admitting more working families into housing and stop the Federal Government from artificially sustaining communities mired in hopelessness and devoid of opportunity. I encourage all my colleagues to support H.R. 2, and I commend the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] for his leadership in this legislative initiative.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAXON] has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would ask if the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] has any more speakers?

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would say we have additional speakers out of the Chamber but on the way.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman be willing to yield to me an extra 30 seconds to respond to some of the points that have been made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO]?

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman, again, we started out with equal time. We could debate this out, but we have x amount of time. I think we are going to be needing that time for our Members who are not yet in the Chamber. Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as long as the Chairman of the committee would understand that this particular amount of time is coming out of the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO], I would be happy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that. The gentleman has not yielded the time.

Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WATT].

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Opportunity for yielding the time.

I want to make it clear what this debate tomorrow will not be about, because it really has surprised me what the general debate has tried to posture as an issue.
Mr. JONES of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will yield myself 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES], a distinguished member of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, no. I will not yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, for 60 years this country has essentially run its public housing program the same way year after year. For 60 years public housing has gotten worse and worse. People living in public housing should have a right to live in clean and safe conditions, and taxpayers should have a right to know their money is being well invested. For that to happen, we must make changes. This bill will eliminate the 60-year-old law which has given us rundown and unsafe public housing projects. It will give more local control, and it will require more responsibility from public housing residents.

Mr. Chairman, for too long we have concentrated the poorest families in the worst housing. For too long we have punished public housing residents who work. We have had generations of children who have grown up in public housing complexes and never seen a parent or anyone else get up and go to work.

They have only lived in projects that are covered with graffiti, overgrown with weeds and littered with empty wine bottles. The only business people they have ever known are drug dealers, prostitutes and food stamp hustlers.

Mr. Chairman, that is wrong. With this bill we will begin to change the reality of life for poor children across America. For the first time in many of their lives, they will live in communities with people who work and who take responsibility for their behavior. They will live in public housing complexes that are held accountable.

Mr. Chairman, this bill may not be perfect, but it makes the right changes in the right direction, and changing the way we conduct our public housing policy is the first step to getting positive results. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the bill.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAZIO] has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will not yield.

I say, at the outset, again, that both sides have equal amounts of time. Both sides have an equal opportunity to speak. Mr. KENNEDY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that issue?
1997, I think it is important that the record on this legislation reflect the considerable thought and sensitivity to the needs and concerns of residents, owners, and managers alike that accompanied the decision to include this provision in the bill. This is the third Congress in which I have worked to secure for residents of public housing the right to keep pets. Indeed, last year, by a vote of almost 8 to 1, the House adopted an amendment based on a bill that my colleague from New York, Ms. MOLNARI, and I had introduced. I wish to thank Mr. LAZIO, my colleague from New York and the chairman of the Housing Subcommittee, for his efforts to include an expanded version of that amendment in the housing reform legislation.

For many years, residents of federally assisted housing designated for senior citizens and disabled persons have been allowed to own common household pets, such as dogs, cats, and birds. This has worked extremely well; even the Department of Housing and Urban Development has had to admit that the problems it forecast have never come to pass. Building on that success, section 622 will extend that privilege to residents of most other forms of federally assisted rental housing. It is not intended that this provision will in any way subject elderly or disabled persons who now own pets under current law to additional fees or requirements. Nor will it change the terms of or otherwise jeopardize the continued ownership of those pets.

One of the purposes of H.R. 2 is to renew American neighborhoods, or, as one hearing witness put it, to create caring, cohesive communities. Responsible pet ownership is a tool that can help to maintain the quality of life of both families and communities. Those persons who can demonstrate that they can be responsible pet-owning tenants should not be denied that opportunity simply because their incomes limit their housing options.

At the same time, those of us who have argued for pet ownership privileges for residents of federally assisted rental housing recognize that owners and managers of that housing have an enormous responsibility to provide a safe, healthy, and wholesome environment for their inhabitants and are thus rightly concerned that they have the authority to regulate the conditions of pet ownership. H.R. 2 provides that authority. Housing owners may establish pet policies appropriate to their properties. For instance, tenants wishing to keep pets may be charged a nominal fee and deposit. Without making the cumulative financial burden prohibitive, such a mechanism would help to defray the added expense of administering a pet policy and to cover any property damage their pets may cause.

Furthermore, it is reasonable to ask pet owners to demonstrate that they can comply with the pet ownership requirements of their housing complex and also to limit the number of animals any one resident may own or keep. Integral components of responsible pet ownership policies in federally assisted rental housing include the spaying or neutering of dogs and cats and providing pets with proper nutrition and appropriate veterinary care. It is important to emphasize, however, that residents should not be required to subject their pets to an inhumane procedure, such as declawing or declawing, as a condition for ownership.

In keeping with another of H.R. 2's goals; that is, to increase community control within the public housing program, owners and managers of federally assisted rental housing should find ways to delegate to the residents themselves the maximum possible amount of responsibility for implementing the pet policy in a given housing complex. H.R. 2 recognizes the importance of tenant participation; much like the residents of a condominium, under section 234, pet committees would enable residents to take an active role in implementing a responsible pet ownership program and ensure fair consideration and a careful balancing of the needs of everyone in the complex: The tenants, property owners, managers, maintenance staff, and pet owners, and nonpet owners alike. Housing owners and managers would do well to emulate the components of the highly successful program in Massachusetts, developed to ease the introduction of pet ownership into State-assisted public housing. In addition to pet committees, these elements include reasonable tenant and management obligations.

Experience offers ample evidence that no-pets-allowed policies fail to keep animals out of housing complexes; they also fail to offer any solutions for solving the problems that arise. Instead, by welcoming responsible pet owners under a system based on the Massachusetts model, the owners, managers, and tenants of federally assisted rental housing complexes will be able to implement sound pet policies.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 2. Although pragmatically I would like to support a public and assisted housing reauthorization bill, this bill takes the positive ideas of reform and distorts them beyond recognition. It is based on the underpinning of all Federal housing law—the 1937 Housing Act—for the symbolism and the sake of looking like reform. This key law is referred to in approximately 650 laws. It is a foundation that should not be casually tossed aside.

But that, Mr. Chairman, is from the dry pages of statute. In the real world, H.R. 2 will toss aside the underhoused in this country in much the same way.

The basis for these reforms has been in the works for more than a decade. The news is not bad enough that the 104th Congress—the last Congress—HUD's funding, cutting HUD's baseline by some 25 percent, this bill will now renege on who we are going to serve with the ever shrinking HUD budget. More mixing of income in public housing is great. However, given the extent of the housing crisis for which exists in this country, we must be judicious in our policies so that we serve those with the greatest needs. H.R. 2 retreats from the problem, wrapped in the rhetoric of reform and local control.

Mr. Chairman, this Congress may be illuminated with photos and stories of some bad public housing developments once again during this debate. Despite the rhetoric, Demo-
However, H.R. 2 twists the mission of public housing, creates new bureaucracies, provides for new and onerous micromanagement of PHA’s and residents, adds punitive CDBG sanctions that will, in the end, further harm low-income communities, and symbolically throws out the fundamental housing law of 1937. Instead of enacting reform, H.R. 2 goes further to basically assure that public housing will not continue to assist those with less. The measure before us insures public housing’s success by abandoning the challenge and the mission of serving even a portion of the poorest of the poor.

Mr. Chairman, I have several amendments that I will offer throughout the course of the floor debate. I hope to reduce some of the dupeful bureaucracy that this bill creates by offering an amendment to strike the new accreditation board but keeping the study of ways to make public housing authorities more effective, better managers. I also have an amendment to assure that we link the homeless assistance provider community with the plans being developed by the PHA’s. The answer to the problem of homelessness is permanent housing. And, finally, Mr. Chairman, I have refined amendments that I offered in committee to assure that legal immigrants negatively affected by the welfare reform law will not face a double whammy the first of every month, when they would be required to pay minimum rents of up to $50.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for the Kennedy substitute that preserves our promise to provide decent, safe, and sanitary housing options to our Nation’s poor and should that amendment not prevail, to vote against H.R. 2. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Chairman, today I rise to call for all of my colleagues from both sides of the aisle to join me in strong support for H.R. 2, the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act of 1997. I would like to thank Chairman LaZIO and all of the members of the House Committee on Banking for their hard work on H.R. 2 which we passed with a bipartisan vote last week.

H.R. 2 is a piece of well thought out, comprehensive legislation that will make a real difference in public housing in America. We have based this legislation upon simple goals that will move our public housing programs in a strong new direction to empower the residents.

These goals are:

First, personal responsibility that extends to a mutual obligation between the provider and the recipient. One of the ways we accomplish this is through a 8 hours a month work requirement for residents, exemplifying the elderly, the disabled, the employed, those who are in school, or a job training, and those who are already involved in a welfare reform program.

Second, retention of protections for the residents. One way this is accomplished is through the exclusion of income for the first few months of a new job and the increase of minors from the determination of a resident’s income level.

Third, removal of disincentives to work and empowerment of the individual and family tenant through choices that I believe reward them and encourage them. One of that ways we do this is by giving residents a choice between a flat rent or a percentage of their income.

I would like to emphasize that everyone has the same, shared objective: clean, safe, affordable housing that empowers the have-nots in our society to become people who can realize their own American dream. We all want to realize this goal, but we just have different ideas on how to get us there. So, if we all keep this in mind, then I believe we will be able to move forward in a unified effort to make sure that the benefits of this legislation become a reality.

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2, the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act of 1997. As a member of the Banking Committee, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the gentleman from New York for his leadership and his successful efforts in bringing this important legislation to the floor.

Families in this country have found themselves caught in a housing system designed as a short-term solution that, instead, has become a long-term problem. The Depression-era United States Housing Act of 1937 has evolved into creating a centralized housing program that is complex and ineffective in serving the needs of the distinct communities across the United States. It was never the intent of the Federal Government to have 57 percent of the residents of public housing to stay there for at least 5 years.

The cookie-cutter housing policy created by bureaucrats in Washington does not always successfully serve rural communities like the ones I represent in the Third District of Alabama. H.R. 2 will return the housing policy decision-making to the local level through the decentralization of the well-run public housing authorities.

Under this legislation, local communities and their PHA’s will have the flexibility to create mixed-income environment by admitting low-income families, as opposed to only very-low-income families. Mr. Speaker, we are talking about helping working families who simply cannot afford housing without some temporary assistance.

Not only will the Federal Government help these working families by allowing income mixing, but also by working to ensure a healthy mixed-income environment which a working resident may be looked upon as a role model and inspire another neighbor to seek employment. This will allow us to break the cycle of dependency on the Federal Government which has trapped so many of the residents of public housing.

I urge my colleagues to support the Housing Opportunity and Responsibility Act of 1997 so that we can, once and for all, turn the Federal housing program into a temporary assistance program instead of a permanent solution.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, this Member rises in strong support of H.R. 2. As a member of the House Banking Committee and its Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development, this Member has actively participated in the drafting and consideration of this legislation. This gentleman from New York, Rick LaZio should be complimented for the hard work and perseverance he has shown over the past 3 years as chairman of the Housing Subcommittee. His leadership has allowed this bill to come to the floor today and he should be commended.

For the Nation’s public housing programs have been run by a centralized bureaucracy with little to no input by local officials. H.R. 2 provides a new paradigm for the provision of Federal public housing programs. Rather than centralizing decisionmaking in Washington, the bill provides greater flexibility for local elected officials to work with public housing agencies to determine the housing needs of the community and decide the best way to meet these needs. Further, many of these new mandates and mandates added over the years are eliminated. This again is in the spirit of moving control out of Washington. Additionally, the bill makes positive changes in the current policy of warehousing the poorest of the poor in inadequate housing by promoting mixed-income communities.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, this Member would like to read from the declaration of policy contained in H.R. 2, which clearly states the goals the bill sets, specifically:

“(1) the Federal government has a responsibility to promote the general welfare of the nation by using Federal resources to aid families and individuals seeking affordable homes that are safe, clean, and healthy and, in particular, assisting responsible, deserving citizens who cannot provide fully for themselves because of temporary circumstances or factors beyond their control; by working to ensure a healthy local economy and a strong private housing market; and by developing effective partnerships among the Federal Government, State and local governments, and that allow government to accept responsibility for fostering the development of a healthy marketplace and allow families to prosper without government involvement in their day-to-day activities. (2) The Federal Government cannot through its direct action alone provide for the housing of every American citizen, or even a majority of citizens, but it is the responsibility of the Government to promote and protect the independent and collective actions of private citizens to develop housing and strengthen their own neighborhoods. (3) The Federal Government should act where there is a serious need that private citizens or groups cannot or are not addressing responsibly. (4) Housing is a fundamental and necessary component of bringing true opportunity to people and communities in need, but providing a physical structure is not enough—low-income families will not by itself pull generations up from poverty. (5) It is a goal of our Nation that all citizens have decent and affordable housing and our Nation should set the goal of providing decent and affordable housing for all citizens through the efforts and encouragement of Federal, State and local governments, and by the independent and collective actions of private citizens, organizations, and the private sector.”

Again, this Member rises in support of H.R. 2 and urges his colleagues to join him in supporting this important legislation.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2, the Housing and Responsibility Act of 1997 and commend its sponsor, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LaZio] for all of his diligent work in bringing this important legislation to the floor. The bill will allow for greater community control and involvement over various housing programs. Ultimately, programs run by local officials who understand the needs of their communities, will be directed toward those individuals who need assistance the most.

In addition, I thank the gentleman for including language to control the improper median income calculation for Westchester and Rockland Counties. Currently, the median incomes of Westchester and Rockland Counties are... calculated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development as a part of the primary metropolitan statistical area which includes the income data from New York City. For this reason, HUD is listing the median income of these two counties as being far less than they truly are.

Since HUD’s income levels are used in calculating eligibility for almost all State and Federal housing programs, these inaccurate statistics have drastically reduced the access of both Rockland and Westchester County residents to many new programs. A variety of programs have artificially low income caps, thus residents, financial institutions, realtors, and builders from these two counties are at a severe disadvantage in relation to their counterparts in neighboring counties.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee and Chairman Lazio for their great work in reforming the U.S. Housing Act of 1937 and attending to this extremely important local need. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lazio] has expired.

Mr. LAZIO of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Goodlatte, Chairman of the Committee on House Oversight, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 105-84) on the resolution (H. Res. 136) providing for consideration of House Resolution 129, Committee Funding Resolution.

Mr. LINDER, from the Committee on Oversight and Reform, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 105-85) on the resolution (H. Res. 137) providing for consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 129) providing amounts for the expenses of certain committees of the House of Representatives in the One Hundred Fifth Congress, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

INTRODUCTION OF “APPREHENSION OF TAINTED MONEY” BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gekas] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. Gekas. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a special piece of legislation that goes to the heart of campaign finance reform about which we hear so much.

How many will recall that during the election and immediately following there were revelations of moneys being contributed to the Democratic National Committee and then a decision made by the Democratic National Committee to return the funds to X, Y, and Z because the Democratic National Committee determined that they were illegally contributed?

Now, the question arises, does this money go back to the people who may have violated the law in making the contribution to the Democratic National Committee?

We have a situation, for instance, of a drug dealer who took thousands of dollars from profits made in the drug business and used that money to make a $20,000 contribution to the Democratic National Committee. Now we have an announcement by the Democratic National Committee that it will return that money.

Well, is that not wonderful. That money will be returned to a drug dealer to be reused, perhaps, in the drug business or to make some other kind of contribution. Who knows what.

I have introduced a bill here today which we call the ATM bill, believe it or not. Apprehension of Tainted Money. ATM. What does it do? It says that if, indeed, a national committee, the Republican committee or the Democratic committee, should receive contributions and they are questionable donations, questionable contributions, where the committee believes it may come from a tainted source, a criminal source, some illegal contributor, then instead of returning it back for further possible illegal spending, my bill would call for this money to go to the Federal Elections Commission in an escrow account, and the Federal Elections Commission then would investigate the source of this contribution.

If it is determined that indeed this is drug money or illegal money or some other tainted source of money, then the Federal Government, our Government, can latch onto this money and use it for fines and penalties against those people who violated the law in that instance. In this way we would be preventing the possibility of impacting on our election system by foreign sources and illegal sources.

At the same time, if indeed those contributions have been illegal, we could use that money to help defray the expense of the investigation and the prosecution and the restitution that must be made by the wrongdoers.

We believe that it fills a large gap in the election process and in the question of who can contribute what to what entity. We have strong laws on the books right at this moment, as we speak, but we fail in many instances to enforce the law. We fail to bring wrongdoers to justice in the hundreds of different ways that they can violate the election laws and the criminal laws of our Nation.

We believe that this could be a gigantic step towards signaling to the American people that we will not countenance violation of the criminal laws or violation of the election laws.

Every day the news brings us more revelations—and more lurid details—about the lengths to which some people went during the 1996 election to gain victory for their candidates. Unfortunately, the lengths to which many parties went were beyond the bounds of the law.

Through the investigations into campaign finance law violations have only barely begun, and, to be sure, only scratched the surface, we know very well about some egregious violations of the law involving very large amounts of money. Many more cases are rife with impropriety and unethical behavior, even if illegality has not yet been proven.

Let me address just a few: Mr. Johnny Chung, described as a “hustler” by a member of the National Security Council, made donations to the Democratic Party numerous times. Among these was a $50,000 check handed over to Margaret Williams on the White House grounds during one of his 51 visits. The Democratic National Committee has announced it will return contributions totaling $366,000 from Johnny Chung because it cannot verify his contributions.

Mr. Charles Yah Lin Trie raised and contributed more than $1.2 million to the Democratic National Committee. This money has been linked to funds transferred to him from the Bank of China, which is operated by the Chinese Government. The Democratic National Committee has returned $187,000 that Mr. Trie contributed and plans to return another $458,000 that he helped raise from others.

In November, 1995, Mr. Jorge Cabrera wrote a check for $20,000 to the Democratic National Committee. Three years after an account included proceeds from smuggling cocaine into the United States. Within 2 weeks, he met with Vice President Gore. He also attended a White House Christmas reception hosted by the First Lady. The Democratic National Committee, which asked him to return the money a year later and he is now serving time in a Miami prison.

Mr. Speaker, these are just three examples, but they serve to illustrate a situation that is intolerable. The Democratic National Committee has given, and plans to give, huge sums of money back to the drug dealers, international hustlers, and foreign agents who broke the law in giving that money in the first place.

The penalty being suffered by Mr. Johnny Chung, Mr. Charlie Trie, and Mr. Jorge Cabrera is to have mountains of tainted money given back to them to use as they wish.

Mr. Speaker, these people are criminals. The American people, and particularly the people who voted for me, do not stand for it when the law allows them to be rewarded with hundreds of thousands of dollars in cash.

Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today to remedy this extraordinary situation. The apprehension of Tainted Money Act adds a new section to the Federal Election Campaign Act. The new section provides the following:

When a political committee intends to return a contribution of more than $500, it must transfer the contribution to the Federal Election Commission [Commission] and ask the Commission to return it. This requirement does not apply to contributions returned within the times set by Commission rules for return retribution of contributions, but it does apply to contributions that a political committee discoveres to be illegal after the Commission’s deadline for return of illegal and nonretributable contributions.

The Commission must establish an interest-bearing escrow account, deposit returned contributions in it, and notify the Attorney General when it receives such contributions. Interest from the funds placed in the escrow account shall be used to cover administrative costs of the account, all excess going to the U.S. Treasury.

The Commission must consider the return of the contribution in determining whether it has reason to believe that election laws have been violated.

The Commission or the Attorney General may apply returned contributions toward any fine or penalty imposed against the contributor under Federal election or criminal law. If a fine or penalty is imposed, the Commission or Attorney General may use deposited funds to cover the costs incurred in investigating the contribution.

The Commission must return the contribution if:
- First, the Commission and Attorney General certify that the contribution is not the subject of an investigation; second, the contribution will not be applied to any fine, penalty, or charge for cost of investigation, or the portion to be used has been subtracted from the returnable amount; or third, for any 120-day period, neither the Commission nor the Attorney General have pursued an investigation of the contribution.

The act applies from the date it is enacted, whether or not the Commission or Attorney General have issued regulations. Notwithstanding Administrative Procedures Act, the Commission and Attorney General must issue final regulations within 30 days of the enactment of the act.
THE NATIONAL PRAYER BREAKFAST
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARRETT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BARRETT of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year I had the distinct pleasure and the great honor of chairing the 45th annual National Prayer Breakfast here in Washington. Now, this is an annual event that is hosted by the Senate prayer group and the House prayer group, and it represents an effort by many thousands of people to come together once a year here in our Nation’s Capital in prayerful reflection. The breakfast was initially founded as an opportunity for Members of Congress to express spiritual support for the President, for the leadership of our Nation and, of course, for each other.

This year more than 4,000 people came to the breakfast from all 50 States and from over 140 countries. The personal contacts we all had from across the Nation, from around the world, were something that were impressions that will last a lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues on the congressional committee that planned this most recent breakfast, I would like to present a copy of the transcript of that breakfast to be inserted in the RECORD so that everyone might read the uplifting and inspirational messages we heard that day.

THE NATIONAL PRAYER BREAKFAST, THE WASHINGTON HILTON, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1997

Representative BILL BARRETT: It’s a special privilege for me to be able to welcome each and every one of you here this morning to the 45th annual National Prayer Breakfast, especially our friends from around the world, as well as those of you who are attending the prayer breakfast for the first time. God created us at different times and in different places, and with the flesh of a hundred different hues, but he did set us forth with a very common purpose; to love the Lord, our God, and to love our neighbor as ourselves.

We’re gathered here today from six continents. I don’t believe the Antarctica delegation has arrived yet. Ladies and gentlemen, there are nearly 170 countries represented here today—all 50 states are represented here today—here in this ballroom and in the other rooms in which people who could not get into the balcony are seated, viewing this on television.

We have nearly 4,000 people gathered for the 45th annual prayer breakfast. There are literally hundreds and hundreds of Republicans and Democrats, liberals and conservatives, all fields of service. We have laborers, we have prison parolees here, we have street people here. We have people of considerable wealth; we have people of very little wealth. There are people from all levels of society, all backgrounds, religiously and politically. There is represented here today truly a cross-section of our world.

We are not the important point. The point is that we all come together to let each other know that we come here to seek a humbly beseech guidance; to further the building of humankind, recognizing and acknowledging the reliance that each of us has on Divine Providence. What a happy time it is that so many have chosen to join us this morning in the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth and to share this time together.

From the reports that we hear, read and observe, it’s probably difficult to believe that members of Congress can ever agree on another set or find it possible to be perfectly united in mind and thought, as St. Paul admonished us to do. But it’s my pleasant duty to bring to you greetings from the House of Representatives’ Prayer Breakfast. One of the most meaningful experiences for me since I’ve been a member of Congress has been to attend that prayer breakfast, in which we gather every Thursday morning in the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth and fellowships and prayer with our colleagues. On these mornings, 40 to 50 Democrats and Republicans, without guests, with the exception of occasional parliamentarians from another nation who is a member of a prayer group in that nation, or perhaps a parliamentarian who wants to come to the prayer breakfast, the thought in mind of going back to his or her country and establishing a similar prayer breakfast. We meet simply to find fellowship in the spirit of Christ and to share burdens with each other.

We leave our differences outside the door. Labels remain outside the door. We get to know each other on a basis of something that transcends the labels that often divide us during the rest of the week. As a result, many special and many unlikely friendships have been born and even nurtured during that time together.

Our speaker each week—one week a Republican, one week a Democrat—is always a member who is necessarily a member of our prayer group. We hear from that person, in which they share with us something that they want to talk about—perhaps some of the trauma in their lives, some of the problems, some of the joys, some of the satisfactions, some of the triumphs. We’ve had some wonderful messages and, with each, an additional understanding and, of course, close friendships.

And because of the seeds that were planted by the House and the Senate fellowship over the years, at this national Prayer Breakfast, this prayer breakfast, has grown to include people from so many countries that we have to wonder today if we should perhaps rename this prayer breakfast to the International Prayer Breakfast.

“‘The International Prayer Breakfast’

“On behalf of both the Senate and the House prayer groups, who are hosting this breakfast, we thank you for sharing with us. We also acknowledge the hundreds of groups that come together around the world as we meet here together at this particular moment—meeting around the world to praise the Lord.

Many of you know that Billy Graham has been a steadfast member of this national prayer group—I believe he has missed only three National Prayer Breakfasts in 45 years. Dr. Graham had hoped to be with us today, but his health prevents it. And I’d like to share with you a message that I received from Dr. Graham:

“I hear constantly the impact that the Prayer Breakfast is having throughout the world. Since this is the first time I have every missed being at a breakfast since its beginning, I will certainly be in prayer that God will make this gathering one of the most significant prayer breakfasts we’ve ever had. Give my warmest greetings and affection to all of those in attendance, especially the president, Mr. Clinton, the vice president and Mrs. Gore.

“With warmest affection in Christ, I am cordially yours, Billy Graham.”

The gentleman from Georgia, the minority leader of the House of Representatives, the Honorable Newt Gingrich, will now read from the Old Testament.

Representative GINGRICH: Our Old Testament reading this morning is from Psalms.

“Make a joyful shout to the Lord, all your lands. Serve the Lord with gladness. Come before His presence with singing. Know that the Lord He is God. It is He who has made us, and we not ourselves. We are His people, and He is the Lord our God. For whom do you stand in awe? It is to the gates with thanksgiving, and into His courts with praise. Be thankful to Him, and bless His name for the Lord is good. His mercy is everlasting, and His truth endures to all generations.”

Representative BARRETT: Thank you, Mr. Minority leader. It’s a tradition of the National Prayer Breakfast that a person of very special talent is chosen to present a solo at our breakfast. This morning we are thrilled to be able to present a young opera star of unparalleled prospect, a mezzo-soprano who has made a name of important operas in both America and Europe. Please welcome Ms. Denyce Graves.

(Ms. Graves sings “Swing Low, Sweet Chariot” and “Every Time I Feel the Spirit.”)

Representative BARRETT: What a thrill, right? Thank you, Ms. Graves.

The Scripture from the New Testament will be brought to us by the speaker of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Georgia, the Honorable Newt Gingrich.

Mr. Speaker, for that reading from the New Testament, let me just say that I think all of our hearts, I hope, were touched by Ms. Graves just now. It was truly a wonderful moment.

“I’m going to read from John 3, verses 15 to 21.

“If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things? And no man has ascended up to heaven but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of Man, which is in heaven. And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life.”

Representative BARRETT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. Albert Gore Jr. has been a very faithful member of the House prayer group when he was a member of the House. And when he entered the Senate, he became a very faithful member as well. It was when we gathered with hammers and nails and paint brushes to rebuild it, all of the community leaders came. The African American pastor who had been asked to lead the prayers that day, and as a result, the Senate prayer group has asked him to represent them in delivering remarks of the Senate. And it’s encouraging to know, Mr. Vice President, that at least one of our own can occasionally succeed.

It is with great pleasure that I present to you the vice president of the United States, Mr. Al Gore.

Vice President Gore: Thank you. Thank you very much, Bill.

Mr. Barrett and Mrs. Clinton and Mr. Speaker: leader Gephardt, other distinguished guests at the head table; senators, congressmen; heads of state from other countries, thank you very much for your attendance; distinguished ladies and gentlemen, including those in the overflow room, we’re so proud that you are here. And among those at the head table, allow me a brief personal word.

Dr. Ben Carson—I had nothing to do with the invitation to Dr. Carson to be the main speaker this year. But after Tipper and I found out that he was going to be our speaker, we recalled that when one of our children was seriously injured and in Johns Hopkins Hospital, he was part of the medical team that consulted with us. We are among the thousands of families who are grateful to you and the others healers among us, Dr. Carson. And so it’s not surprising that Murray, Den, and Royce, in the other room.

Bill said that he was invited to bring greetings from the Senate prayer breakfast group because I was a faithful member of it. The truth is that with my travels on behalf of the president and the White House schedule, they have greeted and thanked me on my behalf so that I will definitely become a faithful member of the Senate prayer breakfast. I know what they’re doing. And it’s true that my schedule has taken me away from it. But your ploy is good to work.

May I also refer to the many thousands of prayer groups around the United States that are represented by many of you here, and around the world. I want to acknowledge a group represented here—the Religious Partnership for the Environment. I am proud to have had a chance to meet frequently with them.

Since we met here last year, something has happened that I wanted to briefly comment upon. Just recently, the rebuilding, synagogues and other houses of worship were burned, and a great outpouring of national concern took place.

Many wondered, “How could we respond to this?” I know the president gathered spiritual leaders from various denominations to talk about this issue. The House and the Senate prayer breakfast groups, the prayer group at the White House, all other prayer groups, including the one I am a member of, we were asked to come together to respond to this challenge.

Churches were rebuilt. Some of them that had been burned to the ground left the congregation just two miles away. About a year later, when the church with the black congregation burned, the first donation to rebuild it came from the black congregation just two miles away. About a year later, when the church with the black congregation burned, the first donation to rebuild it came from the white congregation burned, the first donation to rebuild it came from the black congregation just two miles away. About a year later, when the church with the white congregation burned, the first donation to rebuild it came from the black congregation just two miles away.

If we were asked to help rebuild our church, we would do so. If we were asked to help rebuild our church, we would do so. And I have a feeling that Dr. Carson, who is director of pediatrics at Johns Hopkins University, is going to tell us a story of faith and renewal.

The three were taken out, and they saw that the fire had not harmed their bodies, nor was a hair of their head singed. Their robes were not scorched, and there was no smell of fire on them.

In response to such challenges, we are called to be present with those who are persecuted.

Finally, when we saw the rebuilt church in the photographs when this minister revisited the White House earlier this year, I was reminded of the famous chapter in Ezekiel 37, when Ezekiel is placed in the valley.

"And I saw a great many bones on the floor of the valley, bones that were very dry. And the Lord asked me, ‘Son of man, can these bones live?’ And then he said to me, ‘Prophesy to these bones, and say to them, ‘Dry bones, hear the word of the Lord,’” so I prophesied as I was commanded. And as I was prophesying, there was a noise, a rattling sound, and the bones came together, bone to bone. Tendons and flesh appeared on them, and skin covered them. But there was still no breath in them. Then the Lord said to me, ‘Prophesy to the breath. Prophesy, son of Man. And say to it, ‘This is what the sovereign Lord says, ‘Come from the four winds, and breathe upon these slain that they may live.’” So I prophesied as he commanded, and he breathed upon them. They came to life and stood up on their feet a vast army.”

These houses of worship have been lifted back up, and the breath of the Spirit has been breathed into them. May the same determination to come back together and rebuild.

On August 19th, the president and the first lady, Tipper, and I went to a church that had been burned and joined in rebuilding the church. When we got there, we learned that there had been two churches burned—one with a white congregation, one with a black congregation. most noble thing a person could do. I harbored that dream from the time I was 8 years old until I was 13, at which time, having grown up in dire poverty, I decided I’d rather be a psychiatrist than a doctor. My school doctor was out and I decided I wanted to be a psychiatrist. Now I didn’t know any psychiatrists, so I went to the store and bought a dictionary and looked up what the word sounded like. They lived in these huge mansions and drove jaguars and had these big plush offices, and all they had to do is sit all day. It seemed to me that I was doing that anyway, so I said, “This should work out quite well,” and started reading Psychology Today. I was the local shrink and I thought I could do it, I was looking for a way to hide that I was a ditz. And that’s what happened. I went to medical school.

But that’s when I started meeting a bunch of psychiatrists. Now, some of my best friends are psychiatrists. Actually, on a serious note, some of the smartest people I know really turned me off. I decided that psychiatry was a medicine, as a professional, as to why the insurance companies and HMOs are giving psychiatrists such a hard time. I hope we’ll correct that.

I discovered that I wasn’t going to be a psychiatrist and I had to stop and ask myself “What are you really good at?” I discovered that I had a great mind for coordination and the ability to think in three dimensions. I was a very careful person, never knocked things over. I was a very good speller, and I enjoyed the brain. So I put all that together and that’s how I came up with neurosurgery.

If you had seen me as a youngster, and someone had told you that I was going to grow up to be a neurosurgeon, much less chief of pediatric neurosurgery at Johns Hopkins, you would have laughed until you died. You would have unilaterally dismissed it as a dumb person. When I was in the seventh or eighth grade, I thought I was dumb, and I was. I was a poor student, I did not do well in school. I was not the first one to sit down in a classroom and do my work. I did not have the intellectual agility to put those sentences and make them into concepts. Within the space of a year and a half, I went from the bottom of the class to the top of the class, to the consternation of all those people who called me dumb.” The same ones were coming to me now and saying, “Hey, Benny, how do you work this math problem?” I would say, “Sit at my feet, younger, while I instruct you.” I was perhaps a little bit condescending but it sure did feel good to do that.

The fact of the matter is, what am I talking about? It’s not a person’s image and self-concept. When I was in the fifth grade, I thought I was dumb, and I acted like a dumb person, and I achieved like a dumb person. When I was in the seventh grade, I thought I was smart, and I achieved and accordingly, Does that say a lot about the human brain, about the potential that our children have? Think about it. There is no computer on Earth that comes close to the capacity of the normal human brain. How many people here remember your telephone number? Okay, that’s pretty good for a bunch of people in Washington. What did your brain have to do for you to react to that question? First of all, all the sound waves had to leave my lips, travel through the air into your external auditory meatus, travel down to your tympanic membrane, set up a vibratory force, which traveled across the ossicles of your middle ear to the oval and round windows, setting up a vibratory force in the endolymph, which mechanically distorted the microclita, converting that mechanical energy, which traveled across the cochlear nerve to the cochlear nucleus at the pontomedullary junction, from there to the superclicial nuclei, we’ve got a ways to go—ascending bilaterally up the brain stem to the lateral lemniscus, to the inferior colliculus and the media janulariculus, across the thalamic radiations to the posterior temporal lobes to begin the auditory process; from there to the cortex of the brain, the crown of the brain.

A few years ago, I was in San Quentin—as a speaker—and I was looking out over those hardened faces, and real tearful faces except for the grace of God and our Lord and Savior, I could easily have ended up in a place like that. So, to say that I did not think about that when we believe how high and mighty we are, that except for certain circumstances, things might have been quite different for us. We need to learn how to be compassionate and how to put ourselves in other people’s places. As I was in that bathroom, thinking about my life, having turned things around academically, I realized that with that temper there was no possibility of me ever achieving anything as a human being. I fell on my knees and I began to pray. I said: "Lord, I cannot control this temper." I said: "It's up to you. I am giving it over to you."

I picked up my Bible. I started reading from the Book of Proverbs. There were so many verses about anger, so I thought, maybe they found it easier that people get into: "If you deliver an angry man, you're going to have to keep doing it"; Proverbs, 19:19. "Like a city that is broken but without walls is a man who cannot control his temper"; Proverbs, 25:28. Also verses about how God admired people who could control their temper; Proverbs, 16:32; "Mightier is the man who can control his temper than the man who can conquer a city." It seemed like, verse after verse, chapter after chapter, they were all written for me. After three hours in that bathroom, I came out of there, and the temper was gone. I've never had another problem with it since that day.

I know that it is our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who did that for me. I began to understand that we have not only a heavenly Father, but I adopted God as my earthly Father; I could go to, somebody who was a nice guy; somebody who didn't force himself upon you but someone who, if you allowed him to be in your life and to control you, could make it something special, something wonderful, would give you perspective and understanding; the ability to look at things from other people's points of view, rather than casting away people who disagree with you putting them in a corner and throwing stones at them, like so many people; I've read that the more they are the less likely they are to do that; the more likely they are to be able to engage in intelligent conversation, discussing their differences and arriving at common solutions.

There is a segment of our society that I am particularly concerned about; who seem to be affected by the things that I've talked about; the temper, the outrage, the lack of intellectual development. It's the young black males in our society in America. We've all heard of those kinds of things: "Teenagers of intelligence of a society is, the less likely they are to do that; the more likely they are to be able to engage in intelligent conversation, discussing their differences and arriving at common solutions.

The interesting thing is that young black males never had to become that way. Those of you who are in education know that young black males in the kindergarten, first grade, second grade, are as good a students as anybody else. Then something happens along the way. Why? They start reading in American history about this great nation of ours and they discover that there's nobody in there who looks like them who did anything of significance. "Well, maybe there was one year, when I take world history." Then they discover there's nobody who looks like them who did anything of significance, then they come home and they turn their TV on, and they say, "Oh! There I am. Playing football and basketball and baseball, and rapping in the industry," in the industry, you could be lining up in them, and acting a fool on some sitcom.

You begin to develop certain self-images, certain concepts: "That's how I'm going to make it. I'm going to become the next Michael Jordan." The media tells them that only sports will make it. We have to do it as a society in terms of the rest of it goes down, too. We have to do the right things. We wish we had a program that came on television every day, called "Lifestyles of the Formerly Rich and Famous," so that they could see how many of these people, because it's not as glamorous as we make it out to be. We need to empha-

But they don't have that emphasis. And then they find out later on that they're not going to be a sports star or in entertainment. What's left? Up drives this big black male who's wearing a designer tuxedo with a tuxedo tie, this guy looks, to a gentleman, jewels and furs and women, and he says "Wouldn't you like to have some of what I have? That society sold you a bill of goods? Get it." Hence, we have people who do some things that none of us can imagine that a human being would do, because they feel betrayed by society.

That's part of it, part of the sociology. That's not all of it, but it's part of it. It's something that should give us pause, but it never had to happen. Any of us could have taken that young man at age 6, and walked down the streets of Washington, D.C., and said, "Do you want to do the things he did?" If his heart, a black history lesson that could have started by pointing to his shoes and saying "It was an Mzatlinger, a black man, who invented the automatic street-sweeping machine which revolutionized the shoe industry throughout the world." Step on that clean street, they can tell him about Charles Brooks, who invented the automatic street-sweeper. Down that clean street comes one of those big refrigerated trucks and you can tell him about Frederick Jones, who invented the refrigerator car, truck, later adapted for airplanes and trains and boats. It stops at the red light, and you can tell him about Garrett Morgan, a black man who invented the gas mask, saved lots of lives during the war.

You can tell him about Henrietta Bradbury, a black woman who invented the underwater cannon, made it possible to launch torpedoes from submarines. And a black woman is walking down the street—a woman in a tuxedo. You look up at the surgical light, Thomas Edison—you didn't know he was black, did you? He wasn't, but his right-hand man, Lewis Lattimer, was. Lewis Lattimer, that guy who made the light bulb work, pioneered research in fluorescent lighting, diagramed the telephone for Alexander Graham Bell. People don't even know that Lewis Lattimer was even African American.

You walk by the railroad tracks: Andrew Carnegie. I fell on my knees and I began to pray. I said: "It's up to you. I am giving it over to you." And I'm just scratching the surface. I'm barely scratching the surface of what I have been told to talk about, the real McCoy. You got racist people like David Duke running around talking about "the real McCoy," don't even know who they're paying homage to.

And I'm just scratching the surface. I'm barely scratching the surface of what I have been told to talk about, the real McCoy. You got racist people like David Duke running around talking about "the real McCoy," don't even know who they're paying homage to.

Here's what's interesting: I can take that same walk down the street for any group, any ethnic group in this nation, you point out tremendous contributions, because the fact of the matter is we have all made enormous contributions to this nation. That's a situation got to be better than any other nation in the history of the world, because we have people here from every place, from all corners of the earth. This is not a problem, this is a good thing.

Think about it. How many people here would want to go to the National Zoo and see our diversity? This would be a disaster. This is not a problem, this is a good thing.

Think about it. How many people here would want to go to the National Zoo and see our diversity? This would be a disaster. This is not a problem, this is a good thing.
You ask—do I have a big house? Yes. Do I have many cars? Yes. I grew up in Detroit. I like cars. Do I have a lot of things that "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" think are important? Yes, I do, but those are not important. Guess what: If somebody comes and takes all those things away from me today, it's no big deal. Why? Because I can get them all right back the next day. I'm not an addict. Things are nice, but to be cherished far above those knowledge, wisdom, and understanding, because he knew with knowledge, wisdom, and understanding, you would come to understand all the gold and silver and rubies—aren't important, that the important thing is developing your God-given talents to the point where you become valuable to the people around you.

The "I" is for books. I've already talked about the importance of reading. I want you to know that my mother did eventually teach herself how to read. She finished high school. She went on to college. And in 1946 she got an honorary doctorate degree. It's never too late. It's never too late. The second "I" is for in-depth learning, learning for the sake of knowledge and understanding. We should follow the example of our Constitution talks about certain inalienable rights that we Creator endowed us with? Have they ever said the Pledge of Allegiance to that flag, which says we are one nation under God. I don't know if every courtroom in our land, on the wall, it says, "In God, we trust"; every coin in our pocket, every bill in our wallet, you don't trust something else. So tell me something, if it's in our Constitution, it's in our pledge, it's in our courts, and it's on our money, but we're not supposed to talk about it, what is that? That's schizophrenia. Does that not explain some of the things going on in our society today?

We've got to get it across to our young people that it's okay to be nice to people, to care about your fellow man, to develop your God-given talents to the utmost, to have values and principles in their lives. If we do that, I believe we in this country can lead the world to the type of civilization that this world should know. We should not be casting stones. We should be loving each other. We should follow the example of our Lord, Jesus Christ. We should make sure that in all things we honor Him. The way we honor Him is by Honoring each other.

Thank you, and good luck.

Representative Barrett: Thank you, Dr. Carson, too, for those of us who enjoy that inspirational message. We're grateful to you.

Ladies and gentlemen, it is now my great privilege and honor to introduce you to William Jefferson Clinton, the President of the United States.

President Clinton: Thank you very much. Congressman Barrett, I want to thank you for making it possible for me to follow Dr. Carson. That business about worrying about whether the Secret Service would take you away if you talked too long—if that were true, I wouldn't be here today; I'd be long gone.

That biochemical description—I've got a real problem; I can't remember my home phone number anymore. I want to help us to do this. Two and a quarter million people moved off of welfare rolls in the last four years. A million of them, more or less, were adults who went to work; the other half, most of them able-bodied. All of them are supposed to lose their benefits if they're able-bodied, after two years unless they go to work. We're not going to have to give them; private employers and churches, community nonprofits.

I see the governor of Michigan, the Governor of North Dakota here. They can actually take the welfare check and give it to you now as an employment or a training subsidy or to help you deal with transportation or child care or whatever. But you better hire them. If you don't, this whole thing will be a fraud, and we will not have repaired the breach. All that we are doing is to create more Dr. Carson out of those children of welfare recipients, will go down the drain because we come to places like this and say, you're going to get the job. You're going to have to give them; private employers, you see, and churches, community nonprofits.

We've got to get it across to our young people that we are in trouble as a country. We have succeeded in turning our young people into a country that says we are one nation under God. We're not talking about spending a lot of money here. It's only 1 percent of our budget. But we can't walk away from our obligations to the rest of the world. We can be a model for the rest of the world, but we also have to help people become what they can be. So I ask you to think about that.

The third people who are in the breach and in a deep hole and need to be lifted up are the politicians. We need your help. Some members of the press, they're in that breach themselves. They need your help. Some of our constituents are in that breach. We need your help. Some of our members of the press, they're in that breach. We need your help.

But then I got to thinking about who is it that's in the breach. Who has fallen between the cracks? If we repaired the breach, who would be the first to be lifted up? Very briefly, I'd like to just mention three things, and to ask you not only to pray for these three groups of people but also to do something about it.

I don't know about you, but whenever I hear somebody like Dr. Carson speak, I can clap better than anybody in the audience; then the next day when I get up and try to live by what he said I was supposed to do, it turns out to be harder than it was to clap. So I would like to ask you to think about who is in the breach, we're supposed to be repairers of the breach. The first group of people that are in the breach are the poor in America. They're different than they used to be. When I was a boy, most poor people were old. In 1995, we learned last year, we had the lowest rate of poverty among older Americans in the history of the country. We have succeeded in taking them out of poverty, virtually, all of them. We should be proud of that, and grateful.

Today almost all the poor are young. The second group is that of the children of welfare recipients, which I signed and voted for because I believe it. If they don't work, they don't get a check from the government just because they've got any children. We've got to get it across to our young people that if you're not supposed to talk about God and things that are important, that the important thing is developing your God-given talents to the point where you become valuable to the people around you.

The third people who are in the breach and we're supposed to be repairers of the breach. All that we dreamed of doing, which I signed and voted for because I believe it, and we did it because we believed that the welfare system had gone from being a system that helped the poor to help themselves to move off welfare to a system that trapped people because the family unit has changed and there are so many single parents out there having children, and there isn't the stigma on it there used to be. A lot of people now seem to be stuck on that system from generation to generation. So we changed it.

We didn't change it; we tore it down; we did change it. The American people said, don't worry, we'll give them food, but you don't get an income check every month. You've got to go to work if you're able to work. We're the people that are in the breach that are the people that we say have to go to work, who want to go to work, who can go to work. We've got to help them.

And then the next day when I get up and try to live by what he said I was supposed to do, it turns out to be harder than it was to clap. So I would like to ask you to think about who is in the breach, we're supposed to be repairers of the breach. The first group of people who are in the breach are the poor in America. We should be proud of that, and grateful.

Today almost all the poor are young. The second group is that of the children of welfare recipients, which I signed and voted for because I believe it, and we did it because we believed that the welfare system had gone from being a system that helped the poor to help themselves to move off welfare to a system that trapped people because the family unit has changed and there are so many single parents out there having children, and there isn't the stigma on it there used to be. A lot of people now seem to be stuck on that system from generation to generation. So we changed it.

We didn't change it; we tore it down; we did change it. The American people said, don't worry, we'll give them food, but you don't get an income check every month. You've got to go to work if you're able to work. We're the people that are in the breach that are the people that we say have to go to work, who want to go to work, who can go to work. We've got to help them.
the Republican Party because they were real mean to me over something. I went back to the White House and I asked somebody who’d been there a while in Washington, I said, “Now, if I did it, did they think I did it?” They said, “It’s payback time.” I said, “What do you mean?” They said, “Well, they think the Democrats in Congress did this to the Republican Presidents.” I said, “I don’t think I’ll ever live here then. Why are they paying me back?” They said, “Oh, you don’t understand. You just got to pay back.” So then pretty big guy, I was behaving that way. I woke up in the morning, my heart was getting a little hard. I thought “Now, who can I get even with?”

You ask: this happens to you, doesn’t it? Who can I get even with? Sometimes you can’t get even with the people that really did it to you, so you just go find somebody else because you got to get even with somebody. Pretty soon everybody’s involved in this great act.

You know how cynical the press is about the politicians. They think we’re all—whatever they think. What you should know is that the politicians have now become just as cynical about the press, because cynicism breeds cynicism. We are in a world of hurt. We need help. We are in the breach. We are in the hole here.

This country has the most astonishing opportunity we have ever had. We happen to go with this time of great change and challenge. We’re going into this enormous new world going into it hobbled with economic distress or foreign pressures, we are free of any threat to our existence and our economy is booming. It’s like somebody here “Here’s this brave new world, and I’m going to let you prepare for it and walk into it in the best shape you’ve ever been in.” Instead of doing that, half of us want to sit down and the other half of us want to get into a fight with each other. We are in the breach. We need you to help us get out of it.

The United States is better than that; we owe more than that to our people, to our future, and to the world. We owe more than that to our heritage, to everybody from George Washington on that made us what we are today. Cynicism and all this negative stuff—it’s just sort of a cheap excuse for not doing your best with your life. It’s not a very pleasant way to live; frankly—not even any fun.

CHILD CARE FUNDS DROPPED FROM WELFARE REFORM ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Bob Schaffer of Colorado). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from the Virgin Islands [Ms. Christian-Green] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. Christian-Green. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed H.R. 1048, to make technical corrections to the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996, otherwise known as the Welfare Reform Act. While I support H.R. 1048, I rise today to express my strong disappointment about the fact that a Clinton administration proposal to set aside 1 percent of mandatory child care funds for allotment among the territories was dropped from the bill during the markup in the Committee on Ways and Means because the Congressional Budget Office scored the provision as having a cost to the Federal Treasury.

I am disappointed, Mr. Speaker, because when the Welfare Reform Act was enacted, no mandatory child care funds were provided for over 4 million U.S. citizens residing in the United States non-State areas, even though residents of my district and the other territories have been operating child care programs under section 402(g) of the Social Security Act.

Mr. Speaker, welfare reform is intended to end welfare dependency through work. As a result, securing adequate child care funding will be one of our more pressing needs if we are to be successful in our goal of moving former welfare mothers from dependency into our work force.

During the markup of H.R. 1048, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Shaw], chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means, stated that there were several provisions that would be dropped from the bill because they were scored as having a cost and not purely technical in nature. The chairman went further to state that his subcommittee will go back and take a look at those issues that were left out of the bill as it came out of the subcommittee markup.

It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to work with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Shaw], the chairman, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Levin], the ranking member, to ensure that low-income parents in the U.S. territories receive adequate child care to enable them to be able to go to work to support their families.

PATHWAY FOR OUR CHILDREN’S FUTURE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from North Carolina [Mrs. Clayton] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. Clayton. Mr. Speaker, today more than ever we must stand up for the things we believe in. As a parent and as a grandmother, I simply want to pave a path to the future for our young people. Unfortunately, there are those who want to keep them trapped in the past.

Consider this. Every 5 hours, a child dies from abuse or neglect. There is a connection with the fact that every 32 seconds a baby is born into poverty, faith, and belief that our fight for children, from birth to early death, far too many of our children are behind when born, live wretched lives and die before they truly have a chance to live. We can turn this cycle inward spiral. We can move our children from under the dark cloud of planning their funerals to the bright sunshine of planning their futures.

That is why I am here, Mr. Speaker, to stand up for the needs of our children. The fight goes on.

More than 2,600 babies will be born into poverty this day and each day. We want to make a pathway for our children’s future. There are those who would want to keep them trapped in the past. We will win the fight because we dare to fight. That is why we are here, Mr. Speaker, to fight the majority that want to cut the heart out of our WIC program, a program that nourishes 1.5 million women and children in the year 1996; to fight the majority that want to cut the heart out of our Social Security Act.

Over 180,000 hungry women and children will be dropped from the WIC program, which has proven to be a successful weapon against low birth weight, infant mortality, and childhood anemia. GAO stated in 1992, for each $1 invested in the prenatal portion of WIC, the Federal Government saves at least $3.50 in Medicaid, SSI, and other relevant Federal programs, which has proven to be a successful weapon against low birth weight, infant mortality, and childhood anemia.

It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to work with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Shaw], the chairman, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Levin], the ranking member, to ensure that low-income parents in the U.S. territories receive adequate child care to enable them to be able to go to work to support their families.
loans. Two times the GOP shut down the Federal Government because the President and congressional Democrats refused to allow the extremist Republican agenda to move forward. As we all know now in the face of mounting pressure, the American public and Republicans eventually relented and restored most of the billions of dollars that they were trying to cut in education programs.

Democrats on the other hand did not just fight to prevent Republicans from gutting education programs, we developed positive plans to improve and expand Federal education. That is basically where we are today, trying to convince the Republican majority to incorporate our education agenda in their budget plans.

One of the most important aspects of the Democrats’ education program which I would like to dwell on for a few minutes is higher education, and particularly expanding access to college by making it more affordable for middle-class and lower income Americans to attend college. We are essentially trying to accomplish this goal through a combination of scholarships, grants, and tax breaks. The President in his State of the Union Address talked about the HOPE scholarship program which has probably received the most attention in terms of higher education programs. This is based on a plan in Georgia and basically what the HOPE scholarship program offers is refundable tax credits of up to $1,500 to students in their first 2 years of college who maintain B averages and stay off drugs. Our agenda also includes a $10,000 tax deduction for families with college expenses for every year that they have such expenses. All told, taking the tax credits and the tax deductions for postsecondary tuition and the fees, it would provide $36 billion of tax relief for working families and students over the next 5 years.

Another component of this higher education agenda that is extremely important is the proposed increase in the Pell grant program. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the Pell grant program is really the cornerstone, or has been the cornerstone, for a number of years of the Federal student aid program. It provides a means for students who would otherwise be unable to pay for college to get a college education. The President recently proposed in his State of the Union address and that he is now pushing in his budget is in fact the largest increase ever in the Pell grant program which would provide $40 billion of assistance to needy students over the next 5 years.

I just wanted to stress the importance of Pell grants and just bring it back to my home State of New Jersey if I could for a minute. At Rutgers University, which is in my home district and it is the State University in New Jersey, approximately 20,000 students at Rutgers received Federal assistance in the 1996-97 academic year. Of that 20,000 students, 8,498 received Pell grants. In other words, close to half of all students who receive Federal aid at Rutgers to help pay their tuition costs are getting it through the Pell grant program.

As we can see, Mr. Speaker, tax breaks and increases in the current education programs are the foundations of our higher education agenda, but I want to stress that they are not the only elements. We are also proposing cuts in student loan origination fees that would save $2.6 billion over the next 5 years. They would also expand the direct lending program. In other words, rather than have the student loan industry, the banks and financial institutions, provide the loans, or as an alternative through competition, we would let the colleges and universities provide the loans directly. Our plan also includes a proposal to provide tax incentives to employers who provide tuition assistance to their employees, the opportunities for higher education as well.

I have to stress that most of these higher education proposals were developed by Democrats in the spring and summer of last year. The American public, I think, has essentially sent a very unequivocal message about education and even about these proposals. They have indicated that we need assistance in meeting the runaway costs of a college education, and I think people in general are eager to see these Democratic proposals become law. I know that in my own district when I talk to my constituents about what they would like to see us do on the Federal level, education and particularly higher education is one of the major priorities. It is my hope that the Republican leadership learns from its mistakes during last year’s budget battle and includes some of these Democratic proposals in this year’s plan.

Working families, students and average Americans in this country will benefit and I think this is why I think the President deserves a great deal of credit for putting education at the top of his agenda in 1997. It is one of the most significant issues that everyone can rally behind.

Mr. Speaker, it is the issue that businesses are talking about, parents are talking about, everyone in the State and national level is beginning to focus on. We are talking about raising and having higher standards, that students do need to work harder and be responsible.

Earlier this year my home State of North Carolina earned the distinction which I am quite proud of, and I have called it to the attention of my colleagues before, and I want to do it again today because the National Assessment of Education Progress, also known as the NAEP, and it is probably one of the more reliable standards in which students are measured across the country. And our fourth graders in mathematics gained three times the national average of gains in their math scores, and our eighth graders doubled it, and North Carolina was ranked as one of only three States in the Nation to receive exemplary status by the Secretary of Education.

Mr. Speaker, these are the kinds of things we are going to have to do for all children all across this country, set high standards, work, with them, provide the resources, help our teachers, help our parents so that they can reach those standards.

As we look to the new century technology is changing the way we work, we learn and the way we live. Here in this body we vote electronically. In our State Capitol we have our own computerized machinery and computers. Every modern business office has a computer on their desk, and many are hooked into the Internet, and as we approach the 21st century I suspect that we may have classrooms that have no computers, let alone access to the Internet, and too few schools even have telephones that are accessible by the teachers.
I have said many times as we talk about high technology there are many teachers who just like to have a telephone where they call a parent when they need them, when they have a problem in the classroom, and they have to go down to the office to stand in line for another phone. That is not acceptable in a nation that has the resources that we have, and we are asking our children to meet those standards. We can do better, and I trust that this Congress will do it.

My district has high-technology firms because of the Research Triangle, an area that we are proud of in North Carolina, and it reaches all the way out to the heartland of our State, where we literally have high-technology firms in a field right next to tobacco. Now, that is a tremendous contrast in the Nation and in the State, but we must win in both those areas. We must win with our agricultural interests, and we certainly must win with our high-technology interests.

High technology in North Carolina is now the second leading industry in our State. It is bigger than furniture, it is bigger than agriculture in terms of the number of people directly employed, with 100,000 people, and in the average wage base for people working in technology in North Carolina was $42,166. Those are the best jobs around, the best paying jobs, and people must have the skills to fill those jobs, and just like the furniture industry moves in and provides that technology and those job opportunities, you do not automatically gain those skills. Those skills are required over a time, and they are acquired with education, and it starts long before a child shows up at the public schoolhouse door.

We have to start earlier providing opportunities for enrichment for our children so that when they come to school they are ready to learn. We must invest in those children early on so that they learn. According to a recent Rutgers University study, every dollar, every single dollar that we invest in early childhood education returns us $7, $7. What a tremendous return. That is a great investment, and yet we hear people talking about the expense of this and the expense of that. That is an investment with tremendous dividends for all of us.

And then we have the standards of excellence that were established 9 years ago, in math and reading, the basic foundations that we build everything else on, in my opinion, in public education. We have to have those standards of excellence so parents can know that their children are learning. They know after we adopt those rigorous standards, as we have done in North Carolina, we also need to do the same thing at the national level for every single child in this country so that we know the standards are there and the children are meeting them.

But, more importantly, we no longer deal in an economy that is within the borders of the United States. We do not compete even with just the people at our borders to the north and south. We have an international economy, and money moves, and so do jobs, and we must have an educated citizenry if we are going to have access to the jobs of the 21st century. In this future, my colleagues, we must rebuild the crumbling infrastructure of our schools.

Mr. Speaker, it is appalling to me that we will build prisons nicer than the schools where children go to every day. I have seen multimillion-dollar prisons next door to crummy, crumbling, decaying public schools, and then we have the gall to tell our children that education is important. They can see the difference in where we put our money. Certainly, we need places to put people who need to be incarcerated. I am all for that.

Last year in North Carolina I used that speech so many times. Mr. Speaker, that we put a $1.8 billion bond issue on the ballot in our State, the largest bond issue in the history of our State, and to the credit of the business community in our State, the parents, and the taxpayers, and the voters from across this State, November of last year, and it passed by the largest margin that any bond issue has ever passed in our State. The people said enough is enough. We had roughly almost 6,000 trailers where children were going to school every day, and even with those trailers they were working toward excellence in academics. So we have to get our infrastructure in order not only in our State but across this country. And I commend the President for proposing resources in this budget to help provide for the process of beginning to deal with that crumbling infrastructure. Certainly it is not enough money, but at least the $5 billion investment, and turn it into bonds, will provide about $20 billion in this country to help with it.

Let me turn to one other issue that, as we talk about education, we cannot talk about it just in education without talking of it in every area, in a number of States we need to look at. It certainly may be right outside some of our purview, but I read an article recently that there are 63,000 geriatric inmates in our Nation's prisons. Those are inmates that are there because they committed a heinous crime, but they are so old we do not have them anywhere else, and they cost on average, according to the National Criminal Justice Commission, these elderly prisoners cost on average $69,000 per inmate to incarcerate: $69,000. We need to find a better way to deal with those elderly inmates than to spend $69,000 a year when our children have tremendous needs. We are spending it in the wrong place. We need to spend it in preschool, and we need to spend it in our educational system.

Some reports estimate it costs taxpayers seven times as much to incarcerate an elderly inmate as to educate an elderly inmate. Now, granted we have got people we need to lock up and keep there, but we need to look at where we are putting our priorities.

Let me touch on one other issue, if I may. In this whole area of education because all of it is important, and when we talk about investment I happen to believe education is an investment. It is an investment in our future, it is an investment in our country, and it is really not an expenditure because it pays rich dividends. We do need to spend money on technology, but we need to make sure as we spend those dollars, and this is true in every State, and this becomes as much a State responsibility, I guess, Mr. Speaker, as anything else. Our teachers need to understand technology and be able to use it because, if we put it in the classrooms without them understanding it, it will not be used the way it should be used.

I have said that time and time again, I recommended in our State several years ago that we give every teacher a laptop and let her take it home—him and they can do as they please. Now some have done it, and it works because then it becomes integrated with their lessons and it gets used. No question that young people can adapt to technology much quicker than some of us over 35 years of age. As we are a bit of a difficult time dealing with it. We do not want folks to see that we really do not understand it that well. But it is important and imperative, I think, that we provide Internet to our schools. It would be great if it were in every classroom, but certainly will not have that access in schools so that that information is readily available to the children who live in some of the poorest areas of this country, as well as those who live in the more affluent areas, because we are all part of one Nation, the United States of America, and any child deprived of that opportunity, in my opinion all of us lose when that happens.

We need to help families who are struggling to pay for college. Today we have so many young people who are bright, who want to want to go to school, and if they borrow the money that is required for them to get through college, they come out with such a debt, and we are working on something, we have introduced a bill. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from North Carolina Mr. Price and I introduced House bill 535 called the Education Affordability Act of 1997, and it provides for student—allows the interest on the student loans to be deducted just like we do on the home loans. It seems to me that if we can allow the deductibility on a second home at the beach, at a minimum we can allow for that investment in a young person and their family makes in their children's education; and I want to again commend the President for his proposal to help those struggling families who are really reaching this country's future, and who need to get an education because they realize, and there are many young people today who will be the first in their families to graduate from college, and there are many who may be the second generation that because of the level of income of their families are going to have a difficult time. The President has proposed the HOPE scholarship for those who work hard and do well academically, he really wants to have that opportunity and a $1,500 tax credit expansion of the Pell grants.

I talked today, Mr. Speaker, with a college president of a university where he said if there is one thing I could do for these young people and others we are recruiting for from all walks of life, raise that level because the cost has gone up and we have not kept up with inflation over the years.

I yield to the gentleman again.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I think the point the gentleman is making, talking about an expenditure versus an investment, is a good one. Any good businessman wants to invest, any person does. Certainly when we invest in our children the point the gentleman made about young people get an education, we break a lot of cycles when the educational opportunity is there, because what we have done is enriched the next generation, allowing them to earn more money, obviously. They are better off for their children and members of their family. They are less likely to follow a life of crime, and they are able to move up in society into the middle class.

As we move people into the middle class, all of us benefit. So the gentleman is absolutely right. As we enrich and broaden that base, that is how we become a richer and a fuller Nation. We have done that over generations as a result of education.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, the other thing the gentleman mentions is the emphasis on early childhood education. I guess in the last couple of weeks we have heard a lot about that in the media. I think the President, and Mrs. Clinton in particular, have been going around the country talking about the need for early childhood education. The First Lady was actually at Princeton University in my State, I believe just a couple of days ago. To the Reader's Digest a special that has been coming out over the last few weeks, it is just amazing to me. I have two small children, one is 2 and the other is 3½, and I have listened to what some of the educators are saying and I can just see how true it is, that we need to spend more time. A lot of it of course is just the family, that the family spends time reading to their children or spending time with their kids, but also in terms of resources as well, on very early childhood education, because so much happens in those formative years.

That is why I think programs like Head Start, which really do not even start that early, but start fairly early, and that has been a very successful program. One of the things that we have been talking about as part of the Democratic agenda is expanding Head Start and early childhood education, because it is so important.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. The gentleman's point is well made. They are now talking about that more has been learned in early childhood development in the last 5 years than in the last 30, 35 years, and we are beginning to realize that zero to age 3 is such an important period for our children. But even with that, if we look at Head Start and the young people who need to be served, we are still serving less than half of the young people that need to be served in that area.

I was in Durham just 2 weeks ago, and they served somewhere in the neighborhood of over 700 children in an old abandoned school that they moved out of several years ago, but they have moved it into and done a lot of work. Certainly they need new facilities. But if one meets with those children and sees what is happening in their lives, and I visited twice in the last 10 days and met with the children, the bright eyes and the flow of enthusiasm, I have often said to folks, if you really want to see where we are headed in this country, go into a classroom of little folks, 5-, 6-, 7-year-olds, and ask them if they can dance and ask them to raise their hand, they will all raise their hands. If you ask them if they can sing, they will all raise their hands. Ask them anything, they will agree, they can do it.

Then wait as they get older, into high school, and ask that same question, and they have qualifiers. I only have balance, I can only sing this, et cetera.

What I am saying is that we have the opportunity that I think in 1997 in this Congress to link up all of these folks who are working our business community and others, with the President's leadership, and make a difference as we move to the 21st century like we have never made in this country before, and provide a springboard for democracy to be here for our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren, if we do the right things in providing educational opportunities for our children.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Ms. JACKSON-LEE], who I know has been involved again with these education issues and promoting the need for the Federal Government to do more on education.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PALLONE] for his leadership and raising the importance of this issue; and I thank the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ETHERIDGE], my colleague and friend, who made some very valid points.

It was interesting to hear him speak about his visits to his respective schools in his district. I too can attest to the fact that if you want to see America's promise, as has been discussed over these last couple of days, then you need to be in your schools throughout this Nation.

In contrast to my visits. This past week I visited Turner Elementary, Cullin Middle School, and Pole Middle School, and will be visiting some others in my return to the district in the next couple of days. But there certainly was an excitement and a brightness in those children's eyes.

We happen to have been visiting them and presenting them trees to plant. This month, of course, is the month that we celebrate Earth Day. It is a time to emphasize our environment. It happens to be beautiful outside today, at least in Washington, DC, and it is important to instill in children the reality of education, the real necessity of a tree and how you plant a tree. So I was very delighted to be able to go to my local school and present my students in my district and present to them in fact seedlings from Martin Luther King trees in Selma, AL.

But I say that to point out that that joyous occasion was in sharp contrast to our, my colleagues and the announcement of the closing of some 5 to 10 schools in Washington, DC.

This is not to say or to have someone who might hear my voice, "Well, that is Washington, DC." No. That is a statement of education, that here, we have in America in 1997 schools being closed because there are not sufficient enough dollars for their upkeep and the teachers and the educational programs.

If I might just diverge for a moment, because I think all of this is intertwined, and the gentleman has been a leader on the issues dealing with Medicare and Medicaid. Many times we think that these are not issues that sort of impact on each other, and in particular, on children. We have just discovered Republicans voted to eliminate some 130,000 women and children. That is a nutrition program. That is the early beginning of giving children the support basis that they need to begin the learning process.

On the WIC program, as related to us by Robert Greenstein, executive director of the Center for Budget and Policy Priorities, the WIC program is currently one of the most successful social program the Federal Government runs, with an impressive array of medical evidence showing the program reduces low birth rate, infant mortality, and child anemia, all leading to the kind of healthy child we would like to have, taking those children's eyes.

Then I would like to say that out of education comes training for dislocated workers, and most of all our young people. How do we get young people trained so they can stay in school? We fully fund the summer youth program, the jobs program that I have heard my Republican colleagues call a babysitting job. It is not. It translates academics, education, to our young high school students to understand work. It is all about going on these summer jobs and being able to get the gratification of translating book knowledge into work knowledge.

The summer jobs program has been an eye-opener. It has been a divine intervention, if you will, for those individuals that want to give up, that come from neighborhoods that might not encourage perseverance. The summer jobs program has changed lives.

I think frequently when I was in local government participating in the summer youth program, hiring one of these students and having them call me to say that they did not have the proper clothing to wear downtown to an office setting and telling me, you know, of what you wear, come down to this office, let us work with you; and seeing that younger go on to greater and bigger things because they were able to be exposed in an office setting and develop the confidence and the appreciation for work.

I would simply say to the gentleman who has organized this very vital special order that hopefully that will be the lightning rod to get us moving on supporting education for our Nation, and in fact in restoring the WIC funding to not deprive 180,000 women and children from that first start, and then of course making it so very, very crucial and such a very, very strong commitment educating our youngsters, regardless of what you wear, come down to this office, let us work with you; and seeing that younger go on to greater and bigger things because they were able to be exposed in an office setting and develop the confidence and the appreciation for work.

about, if we truly want this Nation to continue to be the economic superpower in the next century, then education is the key. Education really is the key to almost everything: Economic stability, economic development, and dealing with many of the social and economic problems that we talk about often on this floor.

I want to commend the gentleman from New Jersey for organizing this special order, and I will certainly join him and the President in the initiatives that he has outlined here today.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's comments. I just wanted to mention, if I could, and develop a couple of things the gentleman has mentioned. When he talked about the Pell grants, one of the things we need to stress, and the gentleman did so, is that the Democratic education initiatives do put a lot of emphasis on the need to expand the Pell grants, as does not mean the need to stress, and the gentleman did so, is that the Democratic education initiative does put a lot of emphasis on the need to expand the Pell grants, as does not mean we are just going to sit back and do nothing. I think a lot of the media focus or attention has been on the HOPE scholarships and the tuition tax credits, but I think we all understand that if we do not expand Pell grants then the neediest, the most disadvantaged students that really depend on Pell grants in order to finance their college education will not be able to continue.

Throughout this debate about whether to provide tax credits versus scholarships or Pell grants, we just need to continue to focus on the fact that if we do not expand these Pell grant programs, then the neediest students will not be able to go to college, because I know that the cost of tuitions and fees has gone up so much, and that Pell grants basically have not kept up with it, even though the Democrats have continued to stress the need to expand those Pell grant programs.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's comments. I would just point out that the bill that we have introduced would actually increase the maximum Pell grant award to $5,000 from a current level of $2,700, bringing the award to the level at which it was created, adjusted for inflation. I think this is the kind of bold measure the American people would appreciate.

I applaud the President for adding or increasing the amount of Pell grants in his proposal. I think we could even do better, quite frankly. I think Pell grants, from when I talk to parents, when I travel throughout my district, grant money is something they would very much appreciate. I would also say it is a wise investment of our Federal resources.

After World War II we had something called the G.I. bill of rights, which educated a whole generation of veterans coming back from World War II. I do not think anybody today would argue that the G.I. bill was misguided or not a proper use of Federal resources. One of the reasons why this country is as powerful as it is today, and continues to be an economic superpower is because of the fact that we made a commitment to education. We need to make a similar commitment now to education for this new generation, and I think Pell grants is one way to do this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS].

Mr. OWENS. I, too, want to commend the gentleman for this special order on education. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening and heard us cover a lot of territory, as is the case with the President's comprehensive program, this little booklet that came out, "A Call to Action for American Education," which ranges all the way from early childhood education to higher education and lifelong learning.

That is as it should be. I have served on the Committee on Education, and I have just pointed out, but it has been the education committee, basically, for the 15 years that I have been here.

This is a time for great rejoicing among people who care about education, and that includes the overwhelming majority of Americans. Most Americans care about education. Most Americans, every adult American, thinks he or she is an expert on education, too. That is part of the problem and also part of the strength of trying to bring about improvement in our schools. Everybody cares, and I think the American people understand that we have a President that is ready to take a comprehensive approach, he is ready to cover the whole spectrum, and that in covering that spectrum, he has made a quite a number of commitments.

I think we can add up the commitments over the next 5 years, we are talking about $50 billion at a time when everybody is afraid of being accused of being a tax-and-spend liberal. The commitment is there for education because it is absolutely necessary.

I commend the President and I commend everybody involved. I am very optimistic about the bipartisan spirit that is available to help push this education agenda. I think it is real. I think that both Republicans and Democrats want to see education improved in some significant way as we go into the 21st century.

I just want to take this opportunity to talk about one piece of this comprehensive approach. It is a piece that is bound to generate a considerable amount of controversy. It is a large amount of money. It involves expenditure for public works. And already I fear that we have some divisiveness setting in, even among Democrats, and disagreement on the construction part of the package.

Construction a lot of people feel should be left up to the States and the local areas and the Federal Government should not even get involved. But I am here to tell you, we have a real emergency. In our big cities, we have a great emergency with respect to the basics of providing a safe place, a conducive place for young people to study, and providing a conducive environment for study. That ought to be the first and most basic thing that we are concerned with, just to have them have a place to sit with decent lighting, with enough comfort to be able to concentrate on their studies, with no fear of asbestos contamination, no fear of lead poisoning.

It is amazing how old some of our schools are in the big cities. This is a plea for the construction component. It is a plea for us to be very broad-minded and understand that a proposal for $5 billion at the Federal level, with the hope that it will stimulate additional money at the State and the local level, is not an extreme proposal at all. Let me just give one example of New York City, which many people will say, well, New York City should take care of its own needs. But that has not been the case. And why penalize children. We had a bond initiative that passed, I am happy to report, on the environment. And in that initiative it talked about providing money to rehabilitate some schools' boilers in New York, boilers that were still using coal, were still burning coal in a city that has one of the highest asthma rates in the country.

The asthma rate, number of children with asthma, is a scandal. Coal burning in schools is not the only contributor. There are other factors. But that is one we should eliminate. Now I am a public official in New York, and I thought, great, this bond issue talks about putting gas burning boilers in 39 schools to eliminate the coal burning boilers; and I thought, well, that is wonderful and that eliminated the problem. In a little more digging, I found we do not have 39 schools that have coal burners, we have 200 and some schools, almost 300 schools that still have coal burners. I know when we start throwing statistics, people outside of New York get dizzy. We have approximately 1,000 schools. One-third of those schools are still burning coal, one-third.

That is a shock to me. So I am sure that is hard to understand when you get outside of New York City has one-third of its schools still burning coal. We have schools that have asbestos problems to the point where we cannot wire the schools. If you start boring holes, the costs go up astronomically because when asbestos is present, you have to have a certified contractor, you have to have a place for that contractor to store the asbestos, and it is very costly to transport it and store it and we run into all kinds of problems with our net day because of the physical condition of the schools.

We need a massive program to renovate churches and schools to make...
Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 2.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EDUCATION EXCELLENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 1997, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOEKSTRA] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, tonight I am joined by a number of my colleagues to talk about what my other colleagues were talking about in the previous hour, and that is education. And rather than going through a long introduction, I want to start right off with a quote that the President of the United States made on March 27, 1996.

This was in response to the Governors Summit on Education: Education Excellence. And the President said, "We cannot ask the American people to spend more on education until we do a better job with the money we have got now."

This is the President of the United States a year ago. That remark, along with some of the debate in Congress in 1996, led the committee that I chair, the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, to begin a project, which we call education at a crossroads, to ask and to find out what we are accomplishing and achieving with the money that we are spending today.

We started with a very basic question. We said, how many education programs are there?

Mr. PITTS. That is correct.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, tokyo is going to be introducing or announcing a resolution that I think gets at the very issue about doing some important work to find out the kind of impact that we are having with the dollars today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PITTS].

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak really on behalf of millions of students, teachers, administrators and many Members of Congress to discuss one of the most important components of our American society, and that is our education system. I would like to talk about what can and should become an American priority, sending more dollars to our Nation's classrooms.

Every citizen of this Nation agrees that children deserve an opportunity to excel. But this opportunity is inhibited when teachers and administrators are handicapped by time constraints and financial hindrances just to apply for Federal education grants.

Tomorrow, as my colleague said, I will introduce a resolution entitled the dollars to the classroom resolution, calling for the Department of Education to provide more elementary and secondary dollars to the classrooms of our Nation's children.

My resolution calls for a change in the way we spend our Federal education dollars. As American's hard-earned tax dollars have gone to bureaucracy and have churned through the Washington labyrinth instead of rightfully being placed into the classrooms, into the hands of someone who knows your child.

Of the $15.4 billion which goes to elementary and secondary programs, in the Federal Department of Education, the classroom may be lucky to see 65 percent. That means about $5.4 billion is lost in the abyss of department studies, publications, and grant administration.

To apply for a Department of Education grant, it takes nearly 216 steps, an average of 21 weeks. That is over 5 months of work for someone on the local level just to apply for a Federal grant.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, is that 21 weeks before they may ever get an answer from the Education Department as to whether they are going to receive a grant.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, that is correct.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I have got some of my colleagues with me tonight to talk about this very issue. I would like to have one of my colleagues from Pennsylvania just briefly explain to us, we will have a dialogue, more of a dialogue tonight so that we can build off each other's comments about what is going on in education because we all have our own perspectives and our own learning about what is going on and we have got six of us here tonight. We will be able to share perspectives and learn from each other.

Tomorrow my colleagues from Pennsylvania is going to be introducing or announcing a resolution that I think gets at the very issue about doing some important work to find out the kind of impact that we are having with the dollars today.

street is called. But along this road are what, all of the bureaucracies that now are controlling so much of what goes on in our local neighborhoods. We think we ought to rename the street Dependence Avenue until we change that future.

What would the gentleman's legislation, what kind of impact would it have on the people that work here on Dependence Avenue?

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, it would limit the money they would take of our Federal education dollars that we put in the budget and consume on the bureaucracy. As we know, most funding for our local schools comes from the State and local levels, only about 7 percent comes from the Federal Government. But we need to be more efficient as to how we utilize those Federal dollars. This would in effect drive those dollars through the bureaucracy, Federal, State bureaucracy into the classroom. It would deny them access to our schools.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I think what many of us have seen as we have met with school administrators and around in our districts, we constantly hear that these buildings and these people here in Washington, D.C., with good intentions but who control about 7 percent of the flow of the dollars to our local classrooms, generate 50 percent of the paperwork. For every dollar that we give them, they keep somewhere in the neighborhood of 30 to 40 cents and they send 60 to 70 cents to our kids.

What we are saying is we agree with the President. We ought to take a look at where the dollars are going, and before we pour another dollar into this building and only get 60 cents out, we ought to see exactly the bang that we are getting. If we can get that up to 90 cents, we do not have to increase taxes, the tax burden; we will just be helping our kids.

I know that my colleague from Kentucky would like to participate, and I yield to the gentlewoman from Kentucky [Mrs. Northup].

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Speaker, I would. I have been very interested in education myself as a mother of six children, as a member of the Kentucky State legislature, on the education and the Committee on Appropriations. I have had a long-standing involvement with the education. Kentucky had the courage and worked very hard in 1990, enacted one of the largest tax bills in their history in order to fund their schools. It is often pointed to as the example of school reform that we ought to look to on the Federal level.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman actually believes school reform can happen at the local and the State level better than at the Federal level.

Mrs. NORTHUP. Actually the whole key to Kentucky's education reform act is that children learn one child at a time, one classroom at a time, one school at a time, and one district at a time. The closer the effective educational occurs and the decisions are made to that child and that teacher and that classroom, the more effective schools will be and the more effective the learning decisions that are made will be.

Mr. Speaker. I particularly was interested in the President's America Reads program. First of all, one of the first weeks of the Committee on Appropriations on education, we had before us the National Institutes of Health. This is the research arm that the Federal Government spends so many billions of dollars on. They have done a great deal of research in the last couple of years on how children read and what the problems are with reading. They have come to the conclusion that children who have trouble learning to read, there are some children that will learn in any system, but children who have trouble need intensive phonics instruction. And yet this America Reads, one of the problems is we have so many teachers do not come through a phonics-based system. So retraining them is a big issue.

This America Reads program is almost as though the people that originated this idea did not read our own research on the subject of context of any phonics. It is out of context of understanding that very structured phonics is the way these children can best learn.

They, in particular, found that if you mix it with whole language or not stylized instruction that it confuses the child so we are not only wasting money we are making it is what we are going to undo the very thing that our research shows is the most effective way of teaching children to read.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, we have also had the opportunity to go around the country and have hearings. One of the first hearings that we had was in California, where we had a number of the chief administrators from a lot of the colleges in California come and testify.

What they told us is, do not cut remedial education. You are sitting there and you are thinking, this is higher ed, what are we teaching remedial education at higher ed for?

And so we asked and we said, what are you teaching? They said, well, 25 percent of the students that we get coming into our universities, 25 percent, one out of four, cannot read or write at a high school level.

It is kind of like, the President is proposing America Reads, which is the tutors and all of that, and the, you take, you peel away a little bit in California and what you found is they left phonics, they went to whole language. Did not work. Got a generation of kids now that are scoring some of the lowest scores in the country. Nobody is taking a look at what is going on in the classroom where the kids are spending 6 to 8 hours a day, and we should be focusing on them.

The message of the college administrators was, get back into the classroom. Do not ask for more remedial education money. Your job is to get back into the classroom and find out why those teachers that you have trained are giving such disappointing results with the kids that they are teaching all day. It is kind of like, get the basics, get them in the classroom and local control.

Mrs. NORTHUP. I think it goes back to the theme, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman talked about, about why spend more of our tax dollars if we cannot make effective the tax dollars we already spend on education.

Mr. Speaker. I believe that Americans are committed to education, and I believe that they care deeply about children learning, particularly learning to read. So let us look at the proven ways. Let us leave education where it can be changed, according to the research, and that is with local control and local efforts.

Let us not add a program that is unproven, untested, where the research shows there essentially would be no effect on kids learning.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Let us listen to the President and understand what works and what does not before we add any new programs and make the American taxpayer spend more money.

Mr. Speaker. I yield to the gentlewoman from Georgia [Mr. Norwood] who may have a comment.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

We are in the process of a lot of things going on at once and there are a couple of things that I felt would be important for me to say to the gentleman.

Number one, I am very pleased with the gentleman's Crossroads at Education program, because I know that the gentleman is trying to find out and we are as a committee trying to find out what works and what does not.

Secondly, I would like to thank the gentleman for providing us this opportunity to have a hearing on this just last week in Milledgeville, GA. I know that the gentleman could not be there because of a death in his family, but I wanted to come, on behalf of the people of Georgia, and my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Deal], who was also there, and say that people I talked to in Georgia said thanks.

This is the first time in their memory or their knowledge that Congress has ever had an education hearing in Georgia. It is the first time they know of, that anybody from Congress ever came to Georgia and asked them what they think.

We were talking to some people who are very, very involved in education in Georgia, and I wanted to come and tell the gentleman a few things they have said during the hearing so that the gentleman is able to respond to them.

Our superintendent, our State superintendent of schools, for example, said, and I quote, "The most frequent message I have heard is that no one can make better decisions about local education than parents, teachers, and students in the local communities." Now this is our State school superintendent. She goes on to say, and I quote, "Adiministrators in Washington will never meet the needs of individual children. I cast my vote for returning as many dollars directly to the local schools as we are able to do."

Now, I think what we are doing is trying to have an adult conversation about improving education. Everybody in the 10th District of Georgia believes in that. We all believe that is the future for the 21st century, but we all do not necessarily agree on how to get there.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. If the gentleman will yield, I think the gentleman clearly points out that we all do care about education.

We have developed a kind of a monthly brochure or brief here which we call Tale of Two Visions, because there are at least two very different beliefs on how to move education forward in our country. I think we believe that moving decision-making and dollars back to the children, back to the parents, and back to the teachers is the way to go.

There is another whole group of people here in Washington that believe in moving more power, authority, money into the buildings here in Washington, so that they can issue rules and regulations on how to do the local levels, and saying that parents and teachers and principals can be good teachers and good principals and good parents by reading manuals and saying this is what Washington wants you to do. That is not the vision that we have in mind, and I do not think that is the vision the gentleman heard in Georgia.

Mr. NORWOOD. No, I did not. But we are in the discovery process. We are trying to hear from all sides and everybody what kind of recommendations we might make to Congress.

In the 104th Congress, or certainly in 1996, we basically did not reform education. We are still number 13 on the planet in math. We will not win in the 21st century if we continue to do that. We still have at least 50 percent of the children who are graduating with a high school degree that are illiterate or cannot read their diploma. We will not win with China if we continue to do that.

It does not help, in this time when we are trying to discover what to do and hear all sides, when groups of people stand up and politicize and demagogue the issue. That is why nothing happened in the last Congress.

Let me just point out that during our hearing, the very time we were having a hearing trying to discover what works and what does not, we had a gentleman from Texas sending news releases down into our district saying, "Oh, we cannot do any of that because they want to simply shut down the Department of Education." That does not lead to an intelligent dialogue that will lead to solutions where we can reform education and improve our lot in this country.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I thank the gentleman for his comments. He points out that we need to have a meaningful dialogue on education because our kids are not getting the kind of results that we would like them to be achieving and the kind of results that we need for them to be able to be successful students.

I think my colleague from Colorado had a few statistics of his own, and we will get to our colleague from North Carolina, because I know what he wants to talk about, and we will get there. But I think my colleague from Colorado had some statistics, again, that talk about the less than satisfactory results we are getting out of our educational system today.

In 1996, SCHAFFER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. The gentleman from Georgia mentioned where we rank nationally with respect to mathematics. Actually, that number has been upgraded, or renewed. There should not be any surprise, because it was not like that at all.

The Third International Mathematics and Science Study came out recently. This is a comparison of how our students here in the United States compare with 41 other industrialized countries. This is the same report our President, right up here at the top podium during the State of the Union address, referred to and spoke of our great need to improve by it.

I want to tell my colleagues what this says because it is quite disturbing, and I do not think many Americans have any idea where we are headed as a country.

In this international comparison, again this is the third time this has been done, 41 industrialized countries, out of those 41 countries in mathematics we rank 28th. In science we do a little better. In science the United States ranks 17th.

Now, let me just read some of the names of the countries that outperform us in math and science. First, there is Denmark, Norway; there is Sweden, Israel, Thailand, Belgium, Australia, Russia, Hungary, Hungary is at No. 14. Remember, we are at No. 28. Bulgaria, Austria, Slovakia, Russia, America outperform us in math. Slovakia. The Czech Republic is No. 6 in math. Again, we are at 28 out of 41 countries. Belgium, Hong Kong, Japan, South Korea. The No. one country performing in mathematics for their elementary aged students is Singapore.

In science, again I mentioned we are a little bit better. Slovakia is still better than us. Belgium is better than us, Hungary, Austria, Slovenia, Bulgaria, South Korea, Japan, Czech Republic. And again another number one in science is Singapore. Of course, this is the land of computers which I do not know if there is any correlation between one and the other, but it seems with respect to academic performance caning may work.

I do want to, in all seriousness, though, talk about what Secretary Riley, the Secretary of Education, had said when he observed this report. Very similar to what our President had mentioned as well. He says the content of U.S. 8th grade mathematics is not as challenging as that of other countries and topic coverage is not as focused.

He also observed one explanation for our poor performance, internationally, that most U.S. math teachers report familiarity with reform recommendations, although only a few apply the key points in their classrooms.

And the final point the Secretary mentioned, and again I quote from his observations on this report, evidence suggests that the United States teachers do not receive as much practical training and daily support as their colleagues in Japan and Germany and other countries as well.

I tend to agree, frankly, with the gentlewoman from Kentucky in her observation that if we want to be serious about improving these numbers, the last place we want to look is back to Washington, DC, and to our Government here in Washington to try to do something about these numbers.

We should do something in support of our States, and that is focus on the freedom to teach and the liberty to learn. I have to tell my colleagues that when my State board of education came to visit me just a few weeks ago and came to my office, their No. 1 plea to me as a Member of Congress was for the Federal Government to leave Colorado alone, to let Colorado educate their children on their own terms, to let Colorado begin to design programs that try to turn these numbers around.

We have this picture up here that the gentleman showed earlier. If one wants to see what happens when the Federal Government takes over an educational system, look right there. Because in one spot in the world where the Federal Government have direct and constitutional authority to manage the education system in a community, and it is Washington, DC, which I would submit and challenge anyone to defy the real result that this is one of the worst places in the country when it comes to educating children.

Children are trapped in this city, Washington, DC, in an educational system where the treatments are neither right nor effective and they are identically the same. This is the city that many of us, if we read the newspapers just a couple weeks ago, we saw the headline stories of the teacher who put nine 4th grade children in a room in the side of a classroom where these children, unobserved and uncontrolled by the teacher, forgotten there for all intents and purposes for over a half-hour, began playing some kind of game where they disrobed and began to have sex. These are 4th grade children.

I would again suggest that if we want to see this activity taking place throughout the country, just put the Federal Government in control of school districts. But the advice I get from the people who really care about children, who really know what works, they say that the Federal Government needs to play less and less of a role in how we manage our local schools. We need to focus on the freedom to teach and the liberty to learn, and treating teachers like professionals and parents like customers, and that is how we will turn those appalling numbers around, and improve these statistics internationally.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will show the other poster, please. We know we have about 760 educational programs spread over 38 agencies in Washington that spend over $100 billion a year on education. Yet the gentleman has just read out some statistics in math and science and reading that are truly scary to me.

Now, does the gentleman agree with the President that we cannot ask the American people to spend more money on education?

Mr. BOB SCHAFFER of Colorado. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman repeat his question?

Mr. NORWOOD. The question is, does the gentleman agree with the President when he says since we do spend $120 billion a year over 760 programs, over 39 different agencies of Government, does the gentleman agree with the President that we cannot ask the American people to spend more money on education, in view of the numbers and statistics the gentleman just read a few minutes ago?

Mr. BOB SCHAFFER of Colorado. I would agree wholeheartedly. In fact, the other portion of that report has another graph showing that the amount of money we spend in the United States has no bearing whatsoever on our ability to teach better; that, in fact, the more and more we spend, the worse we seem to do when compared to national standards.

Here is the quote from the report. We spend, on average, about $6,500 per pupil. That is nationally. Only one country spends more than we do, and that is Switzerland. Yet these countries that outperform us, Hungary, the Czech Republic, South Korea, Japan, England, France, Denmark, Germany, and so on, all spend fewer dollars per pupil than we do here in the United States, yet we rank so poorly in comparison.

Mr. NORWOOD. Well, how should we rank before we start saying that the American people should spend more money on education? Should we come in second in math or third in math around the globe? Where should the cutoff point be?

Mr. HOEKSTRA. If the gentleman will yield, I do not think anybody in this Chamber will be satisfied until we score No. 1. The evidence our colleague from Colorado has pointed out shows the issue is not money. We are spending more than most people around the globe and we are getting mediocre, unacceptable results.

So the answer is not to pour more money into the system, but it is taking a look at where the money is going and taking a look at the system and how we make the system more effective. I want to offer a colleague from Georgia, and I appreciate his being here. This is wonderful tonight.

Mr. DEAL of Georgia. First of all, I want to join with my colleague from Georgia, Mr. Tincher, in his compliments to the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HOEKSTRA, for holding the hearing in Georgia. We do regret the gentleman was unable to be there with us, but we appreciate his scheduling this Special Order.

I want to share with my colleagues some of the comments, as my colleague from Georgia began doing a few minutes ago, as we listen to people at every level of the delivery system in our State.

Even though we have a lot of progress to be made in Georgia, there are many things we are indeed proud of. One is we have a HOPE scholarship program. And unlike the fact that the President is borrowing and adopting the name of it for his proposal, the uniqueness of ours is that we have a funding source that is separate and distinct from the taxpayers' normal revenue sources and that is in our State fund and it is a very successful program. Would it not be nice if there could be an alternative funding source to fund the President's proposal?

I want to say to the gentleman that both my parents were public school teachers. They were classroom teachers. My wife is presently a 6th grade middle school teacher in our home county. She looks at it from that point of view. He looks at it from that point of view. He said, if the dollars spent could be concentrated, there would be less disturbance and that more of the money would actually flow into education and out of administration.

Let me give a classic example that we heard from, from a lady who was a director of an adult literacy services center in Dublin, Georgia. She said this, speaking of the grant process. In other words, when applying for a Federal grant for education, this is what she observed: "The process is cumbersome and labor intensive. Writing the 1997 proposal consumed nearly two months of the literacy director's time. Measuring accountability in terms of performance rather than volume of paperwork is the best solution to the problem."

We heard some very common sense, practical observations from people who have hands-on daily experience in delivering education to children in the classroom.

Once again, I thank the gentleman for affording us this opportunity, and I thank the gentleman for allowing me to share these comments today.

Mr. HOEKSTRA, I thank my colleague from Georgia. I do express my regrets that I was unable to be at the hearing. I think the gentleman has got some wonderful testimony. I find it interesting. It has been one of the most exciting projects I have ever worked on because we have been able to go around the country. We have been in California, we have been in Arizona, we were in Georgia, we are going to New York, we have done some things in Michigan, and in Chicago. There is a lot of learning about what is working on education. From what my colleague has told me, I did not catch the full impact, there are some that are blasting or taking some pot shots at a discovery process, but finding out what is working when we obviously know that what we are doing today is not working, but there are some that are taking a real critical look at that.
Mr. NORWOOD. If the gentleman will yield, if we do not stop politicizing this issue, we are never going to get to the point where we can resolve the problem. I would point out that the gentleman from California [Mr. DASHLIN] is a constituent of mine in Dublin, GA. She is from my district and I was very proud of her for her commentary, but I also want to remind the gentleman that Dr. Dowling from Valdosta, GA, yes, he is a principal of a school but he is also a father of five or six children and one of his quotes that has stuck with me since the day we were down there is that he said, and I quote, "I firmly believe that school improvement can only be achieved in the classroom."

I think many of us come to this discovery process with that bias. It is true. I believe that we ought to send back the responsibility for education, not just the classroom but the parents and the teachers. We will conclude to go to another meeting, Mr. Speaker, but one of the very fine things that was said in our hearing was said by Mr. Kelly McCutchen, executive director of the Georgia Public Policy Foundation. I think he almost sums the whole thing up in this quote: "Education in America is the constitutional responsibility of the States, the social responsibility of communities, and the moral responsibility of families and except when the civil rights of individuals are menaced, the management less disbursed, then more of the money would actually flow into education and out of administration."

Mr. Johnny Isakson, Chairman of the State Board of Education: (speaking about Mr. Clinton’s suggestion of increased federal funding of school construction) "While this is a laudable recommendation, it really should be the responsibility of local boards of education and their taxpayers to fund and pay for the school facilities improvements that they want. The dollars scattered in far too many programs and the teachers' representatives are wining and dining the text-book selection committee." Mr. John Roddy, Director of Federal Programs for Georgia: Mr. Roddy reported a conversation he had with a researcher who mentioned that courts and States have said in our hearing was said by Mr. Kelly McCutchen, executive director of the Georgia Public Policy Foundation. I think he almost sums the whole thing up in this quote: "Education in America is the constitutional responsibility of the States, the social responsibility of communities, and the moral responsibility of families and except when the civil rights of individuals are menaced, the management less disbursed, then more of the money would actually flow into education and out of administration."

Mr. Johnny Isakson, Chairman of the State Board of Education: (speaking about Mr. Clinton’s suggestion of increased federal funding of school construction) "While this is a laudable recommendation, it really should be the responsibility of local boards of education and their taxpayers to fund and pay for the school facilities improvements that they want. The dollars scattered in far too many programs and the teachers' representatives are wining and dining the text-book selection committee." Ms. Dahlia Wren, Director, Adult Literacy Services, Heart of Georgia Technical Institute: (speaking about the federal grant process) "The process is cumbersome and labor intensive. Writing the [1997] proposal consumed nearly two months of the literacy director’s time. Meaning accurate accountibility in terms of performance rather than volume of paperwork is the best solution to the problem."

I do not know of a better statement that sums up exactly how I feel about it.

Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. Mr. HUNTD. I thank the gentleman. necessarily an equation between more money and better quality. That clearly is the case.

What I would suggest is that I have observed the education of my two little girls, that there is no better laboratory I think in existence than the education of our children in the schools that we have here in our communities.

I think it is important for us to have a better quality product if we are willing to do that.

As I was growing up in a small school system, I have learned that it is important to have the kind of education that we have here in Washington. Good intentions do not equal good policy.

I believe that education is a process that we need to work through and that we need to make sure that we are getting the kind of results that we need.

That is why I am here to express a concern about the desperate need to build more schools. It is a concern that is shared by the taxpayers, and the taxpayers will be interested in what may happen.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to move to talk about one of the President's proposals.

Mr. BALLENGER. The gentleman and I attended a hearing in Oklahoma. The gentleman has talked about and have discussed the President's proposal to increase the amount of money that is spent on education.

That sounds like motherhood, apple pie, and the greatest thing since sliced bread. But one of the problems that the gentleman and I both know is that the President's proposal is not going to work.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to move to talk about one of the President's proposals.

Mr. BALLenger. The gentleman and I attended a hearing in Oklahoma. What I wanted to bring up, and we have discussed it here in this country, and elsewhere, but the idea of spending money wisely. I am here to express a concern which our Democrat friends mentioned.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. My colleague from North Carolina has talked about and have mentioned the importance of education. I do not know whether the gentleman is familiar with her or not but she is someone who grew up on the prairies of the Midwest, and spent much of her growing-up years in South Dakota. My 9-year-old, 10-year-old now, is currently reading those same books.

One evening, as she was reading it, I mentioned to her, "Brat- tany, is it true that Laura Ingalls Wilder spent a great deal of her growing up time right in the State of South Dakota, in your home State?"

She said, "I know, Dad, she was a conservative, committed to smaller government and a better future." I thought, they are also very impressive. It is clear to me she had listened to some of the speeches I had made along the way. The point being that when Laurel Ingalls Wilder was growing up, it was a time at which we had a pioneer spirit, we were an independent self-sufficient people and we did not look to big government for solutions to a lot of our problems.

I think at the heart of this debate and the fact that we need to focus that attention back on what we can do to put that power, that control, that authority, that decision-making in the hands of people at the local level. If in fact we will shift that model in that direction, we will get the kind of results and the quality and the performance that I think the gentleman has talked about and have drawn attention to throughout this country.

I thank the gentleman for his good work and look forward to being a part of this dialogue in which we can do to make our model and really the example around the world of the highest quality education that we can possibly have.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I thank the gentleman for his comments. We really are going through a process where we are identifying what is working. We actually have developed what we call lessons learned. One of the lessons we have learned as we have had hearings around the country are: Parents care the most about their children's education. They actually know the name of the teacher like the student does versus the bureaucrat that may be here in Washington. Good intentions do not equal good policy. We have seen that in Washington. Every time there appears to be a problem, we create a new program. The end result is 760 programs, 39 agencies.

What does Davis-Bacon do? Maybe our colleague from Kentucky can explain exactly what the Davis-Bacon law is. What is the Davis-Bacon law? What does it do? We are paying higher wages for construction.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to move to talk about one of the President's proposals.

Mr. BALLenger. Strangely enough, we had heard that there were strange things going on in Oklahoma. Luckily for us, the Secretary of Labor out there had investigated the actual operation of the Davis-Bacon law as far as Oklahoma was concerned.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. What does Davis-Bacon do? Maybe our colleague from Kentucky can explain exactly what Davis-Bacon does because it is important that people understand this concept. Then we can go back into what we found about paving machines doing concrete. We found about paving machines doing concrete. Workers supposedly were paid $15 an hour. In reality, the parking lot had only room for 30 cars and it was made of concrete. There was no way that you could use asphalt paving on it. The Department of Labor determined that the wages instead of being $15 an hour should have been $8 an hour if it had occurred. But it did not happen.

Mr. BALLenger. Let me give another one. The case showed that asphalt machines, extremely large machines, as big as trucks, were used to pave a parking lot for an Internal Revenue Service building in Oklahoma. Workers supposedly were paid $15 an hour. In reality, the parking lot had only room for 30 cars and it was made of concrete. There was no way that you could use asphalt paving on it. The Department of Labor determined that the wages instead of being $15 an hour should have been $8 an hour if it had occurred. But it did not happen.
what can lead to excessive costs for further Federal projects.

Mrs. NORTHP. Actually there are two problems here. One is the fraudulent data. When you have a building in Washington, DC that is trying to determine many facts in Kentucky, places where if you were an individual, if you were a taxpayer, if you were going to construct something, you would never pay those construction wages. You would never pay those same level of construction wages.

I might say that in Kentucky, when I looked over those wage scales, there were $28 an hour, $26 an hour. We are a poor State. You know, we have people that are working for minimum wage, that are working as hairdressers, that are working in gas stations, that are driving school buses, that are working on the assembly line at Ford Motor Co. None of those people make $28 an hour. And for them to pay their taxes and have to pay people who are working at schools for their children at extraordinarily high wage rates is an absolute abuse of their tax dollars.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. The gentleman from North Carolina will explain why that will not happen with the school construction now.

I thought we were helping the schools to get more bang for their buck.

Mr. BALLenger. Well, the truth of the matter is you know as well as I do that if you add this additional labor cost—I mean suppose the President is going to guarantee your interest rate on your bonds that you have. North Carolina sold a billion, $200 million worth of bonds. My own county sold $50 million worth of bonds. Thank goodness I think they are in such financial shape that they will not be desiring of using this thing, but if they were, and those bonds cost 6 percent, and the labor costs were 10 percent higher, you have lost 4 percent because you use Federal assistance.

It is unbelievable.

Mrs. NORTHP. I want to just remind you that even though North Carolina sold those bonds, the tax dollars that they paid to Washington, and they are just going to lose it for some State that does not have the foresight to be able to afford this.

Mr. BALLenger. If I might, I would like to quote from the Wall Street Journal one statement here. An inspector general’s report has blown this whole construction projects and costs in Kentucky, places and costs in which 1931 law by which the Labor Department drives up the cost of federally subsidized construction by requiring what are in effect union wages. A Federal audit of 800 wage survey forms used to calculate the local prevailing or union wage found that nearly two out of three forms contained significant errors and that deliberate misreporting activity may exist.

It is also in fraud and abuse, and there is an indictment out in Oklahoma for one of the fellows that our hearing brought to the light of the law enforcement.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. If any of my colleagues may answer the question. I mean if Washington does not set the wages for these projects, how would we actually find out the wages?

Mrs. NORTHP. The best way to build a school for our children is for each school district to do it as they do it right now. They say, what do we need? We need this many classrooms, we need these certain specifications, and they put it out for an open bid process, and then all the companies that build can bid on those bid processes. They get the best price for the school they are going to build. That is what they deserve for the sacrifice they pay in their taxes, and that is the best way, close to home, to make sure that each school is built: it is the specifications and at the cheapest price.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. It is kind of interesting what the woman has outlined. It is that would make the people in this building feel very uncomfortable because it is the competitive bidding actually works in the construction industry. Even though we build huge buildings, construction projects, and we use it every day, for some reason the Federal Government does not believe that competitive bidding would work for us.

Mrs. NORTHP. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to challenge the Department of Education and the President to rethink their proposal. Since they believe that schools should be competitive, this is so important, since they believe the need is so great that we cannot afford it, I am going to ask them to resubmit their proposal and take out the Davis-Bacon provision, say that they will be excepted from this, so that those projects that they say we need so badly will be built, there will be an opportunity for more schools for our children, and they can prove how dedicated they are to our kids by removing this very Federal law and let competition actually work in the first place. But sometimes the stuff looks just so enticing, and it makes great rhetoric.

I think the gentleman from Colorado is absolutely right. We are not talking about the quality of education. We are talking about designing the best system of getting the financial resources to the child and to the classroom and the school construction program, and as with many of the other programs, other members of my colleagues pointed out earlier, some of these programs take 21 weeks, not some, most of them on the average take 21 weeks, 216 steps, and even then you get an inflated price.
Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to realize that there will be a lot of rhetoric about this. I know that I have heard the debate that what you get is more efficiency when you use higher-price labor, but the true effect right now is if you get more efficiency, those companies that used the $28 an-hour workers would be able to bid on the job and get it without prevailing wage. If you actually save money by using higher price labor, then you could come in with lower bids, you would lose the bid contract. So I think that you are going to hear some misinformation.

The other question is that if you do not set those wages high, that you are going to take advantage of people who are very poor. The truth is the people who are very poor, the people who have modest incomes, middle-income America, are going to subsidize with their tax dollars extraordinarily high pay rates for those people that work on the school projects. The workers who are talking advantage of on the schools, but all the other workers in our States and across this country that are going to pay higher taxes in order to get school projects they could get at a cheaper price.

Mr. BALLenger. Suppose all the money they could save went into buying computers. This is capital outlay, the same deal. In other words, the money that they have to spend on higher construction costs could go into computer kinds of equipment that would make the school a better place.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. This is all about using the taxpayers' dollars more effectively.

Mr. BALLenger. Right.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. My colleague from Colorado.

Mr. BOB SCHAFFER of Colorado. I wanted to just give you one more example on this Davis-Bacon Act and what it means on public projects and construction projects.

I returned from a couple weeks in, over the Easter break, going town meetings throughout eastern Colorado; I went to a town called Trinidad which is in the southern part of Colorado, and the mayor, a Democrat I might add, came to me, and he talked about the Davis-Bacon Act as the No. 1 problem, however, that there are people holding on to the past, the recent environment, the recent problem, however, that there are people who are very sincere and very real. We have a lot of Federal money going towards our States, as a matter of fact, are better off unencumbered by Federal intrusion in the efforts of trying to repair schools and taking care of children. That is where our confidence ought to be placed, not here in Washington.

Mr. BALLenger. We thank the kind gentleman. I would like to congratulate you on first of all your hearings throughout the country, but second of all, bringing this to, I hope, our TV audience to let them better understand what this is all about.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I thank my colleagues for participating tonight. We are going to continue this dialogue on education. It is a very important one. We are going to continue hearings. This President in many cases has the atmosphere vision 2000 and education for our children, the best educated kids in the world. We share that vision. I think where we separate and go down different paths is he believes the answer lies at the local level, the school level, the parent level. We believe the answer lies with parents, with teachers and a local classroom.

I thank my colleagues for being here tonight.

BIPARTISAN COOPERATION IN THE AREA OF EDUCATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARRETT of Nebraska). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 1997, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, first I would like to applaud the fact that we have been discussing education now for more than 2 hours and that both parties have decided to make the turn. Given the necessity of getting re-elected, they did a 360 degree turnaround. I applaud the fact that they were not so ideologically entrenched, so philosophically dogmatic that they could not make the turn. Given the necessity of getting re-elected, they decided to make the turn.

I applaud the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, who is a former school principal, teacher, school superintendent, been around a long time, been on the Committee on Education and the Workforce for a long time, he was there with his insight, his experience, his wisdom. So when the turnaround took place, the chairman can tell them where to intelligently make the changes.

The turnaround, which was a 360 degree turnaround, instead of cutting education by $4 billion, they increased education issues as a new political environment, and they discovered that political environment last year during the 104th Congress.

The Contract With America made an onslaught on Federal participation in education. The Contract With America put forward in the 104th Congress, the Department of Education. They proposed to cut school lunches, they proposed to cut Head Start, they proposed to cut Title I.

I do not want to dwell too much on that unfortunate, very uncomfortable situation of the 104th Congress, but it is important to set all discussion within the context of the great triumph accomplished by the common sense of the American people. The common sense of the voters triumphed over all of the proposals of the Republican majority for education, the proposals that would have rolled us backwards. They even proposed a total of cuts that would have amounted to about $4 billion at the time.

Let me just conclude this recapitulation of the 104th Congress by saying that I want to pay tribute to and give credit to those leaders in the Republican majority who decided to turn it all around. They listened. They listened to the common sense being expressed by the American people. They listened to the voters. They listened.

They watched the polls which showed that the American voter ranked education as a high priority, and they have consistently been doing so for some time. They listened and at the last minute, faced with the possibility that their negative positions on education might very much impact on their reelection possibilities, they did a 360 degree turnaround. I applaud the fact that they were not so ideologically entrenched, so philosophically dogmatic that they could not make the turn. Given the necessity of getting re-elected, they decided to make the turn. Given the necessity of getting re-elected, they decided to make the turn.
education by $4 billion, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Goodling] helped to guide them in making those increases in Head Start, in title I, in Pell grants. You name it, the positive increases in education were made, and I applaud the majority for responding to the common sense of the American people.

Given the fact that the common sense of the American people has been discovered as a reality politically, we can only do the same in defense. If we look at the defense, you might have a number of weapons systems, which if we were into the fallacy of measuring effectiveness and efficiency by numbers, we would say shut down some of these weapons systems, because automatically to have too many is to have an ineffective defense. Yet Mr. Speaker, what is a rational approach. If we are going to streamline the way the Federal Government approaches education, let us not begin by making irrational proposals about the number is too great and therefore we should wage war on the numbers.

What has happened with that irrational approach is that small has become evil and big has been too big to contain. So a lot of small programs that were very meaningful and very efficient and effective were cut out, and that is why we are here today. That is this is the size was great so that the people who wanted to wage war on a number of programs did not bother to touch them.

Some small programs related to libraries, related to foreign language, literature and libraries, made a lot of sense. They had networks that cut across all the libraries of the country, and for a very tiny amount of money we were able to build up the inventory of books in foreign languages. That was significant. That was cut out, so small that it was deemed one of those programs, automatically, if they are that small and we have too many programs and numbers mean so much in view of education, then automatically let the small programs go. That is not a rational approach.

I hope as we go forward in the spirit of bipartisan cooperation we will cease using these kinds of irrational barometers and measurements and that we be using these kinds of rational barometers so that we can have a place to sit in school on opening day. To what degree that exists right now, I cannot tell you. We have been there for some time, but it was highlighted last fall when we had 91,000 children in school on opening day. How did they solve the problem of overcrowding? Did they move children around to empty schools or schools that have less than capacity? How did they solve the problem of 91,000 children in school on opening day not having a place to sit? How did they solve the problem? We still do not know.

What we do know is the mayor took the initiative and said, I will find places for 1,000 children in parochial and private schools; I will raise the money from private sources. So every day in the paper we have new articles about the 1,000 children, the fact that the corporations and the private sector have come forward and provided the tuition money, the fact that they have a lottery, the number of children that the parents have applied to put their children in the program, and the last count was close to 20,000. They have 1,000 slots. Close to 20,000 have applied, so they are going to have a computerized lottery system to select the 1,000. I want to congratulate the mayor for doing something concrete about a problem.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to help place 1,000 youngsters. The only question that we have is, is that happening to the other 90,000? There are 90,000 youngsters that we still have not placed. The 1,000, we hope that they will find secure places in the parochial and private schools. And we want to express our thanks to the private entrepreneurs and put up the money to pay the tuition. We want to congratulate the parents who were lucky in the lottery; 1,000 out of 20,000, and the number may still be drawn. I do not know when the cutoff point was. In that lottery, though, we will have 19,000 losers. But we congratulate and bless and wish the best of luck to those 1,000 who do go forward.

This is a good idea. Private industry, let us do more, let us place more children. Mr. Speaker, there are a few questions that we can ask to show that this is not the answer to the problem. New York City has 1 million students; 91,000 had no place to sit as of last September. How do we solve the problem? Do they have the capacity in the parochial schools to take all 90,000? I do not think so. Are we going to be able to raise the money for all 91,000? Is the private sector that generous? Are we going to get the money for 91,000? I do not think so.

I do not think that is the solution to the problem. The solution to the problem lies in a plan to rebuild and renovate and build new schools in New York City, the kind of plan that was proposed by the previous chancellor of the New York City school system. We do not have a superintendent; because we are so big, we have a chancellor. The chancellor presides over 32 community school districts in New York City.

The chancellor of the last system proposed a plan over I think, 5 or 7 years to renovate, rebuild, build new schools. The present mayor ran him out of town, ridiculed him and made all kinds of roadblocks. So, the man with the plan to take care of the problem was run out of town.

The solution now becomes, instead, placing children in private and parochial schools, as well as private schools. This is all worth about $1 of the 91,000.

So we have to be careful. In the present atmosphere, everybody wants to jump on the bandwagon. The voters have spoken. Education is a priority issue. The voters have awakened and they have spoken: Well, Mr. Speaker, we spent the money necessary for defense, we spent the money to contain the evil empire, billions and billions. We went from a horse and buggy Defense Department after World War I to a multibillion-dollar Defense Department before the end of the Cold War.

We were spending money on a scale which is impossible almost for most voters to comprehend. Mr. Speaker, $3.5 billion for an aircraft is beyond the comprehension of most people: $2 billion for a submarine, beyond the comprehension. We take the cost of one submarine, and we can solve the problem of New York City for the next 20 years of buildings.

We can do a great deal with $2 billion in terms of construction, renovation, taking care of asbestos problems in some schools, lead poisoning problems in some other schools, boilers that still burn coal. We have one-third of the city schools almost that still burn coal, polluting the environment and contributing to the high asthma rate in New York City. A large number of young people have asthma, larger than most big cities.

So be careful, beware. The Trojan horses are within the walls. They say that they are in favor of improving education; they say that they want to support the effort to revitalize and guarantee that every young person in America has a decent school, but the old and existing in the 19th Century Congress are still underneath the surface. There is an underground movement. There are guerrilla actions, there are ambushes that are going to take place, and we have to beware.

Let me just pause for a moment to talk about what it means to have a Nation committed to go forward in every way possible to improve our education system from the cradle to the grave.

We are creating a learning society. Before these were kind of loose terms thrown around, but we are really creating a learning society. President Clinton talked about a learning society, a lifelong learning society, where you learn from the time you are a baby all the way to the time you die.

This comprehensive approach dealing with adult literacy and adult education, the Call for Action for American Education, understands that that is the kind of society we want to create. As we go into the 21st century we ought to be able to spend less for defense and less for weapons systems, and spend more to guarantee that there is a maximum opportunity for every person in America to be all that they can be. That is a sentimental, hokey slogan, you say, from the Armed Forces' pubic relations campaign, but it is pretty good. I will accept it.

Mr. Speaker, let us try to guarantee that the opportunity for every American will be there to be all that they can be, to strive for excellence in every way, to come with the kid who was in preschool, preschool age, through kindergarten, Head Start, right up to high school, college. Let us dedicate ourselves to the proposition that in this great country of ours, we are going to give every person an opportunity to be all they can be.

One part of this process ought to be to let us glamourize education and excellence more. Let us give more credits and more incentives to our students to become the winners in the arena of education; a real competition of academics. We have had a few national contests, the Westinghouse Science Contest and a few other well-known contests that reach out and embrace a small group of youngsters. We need more. We need to have a whole new level of sports, so young people fulfill themselves and attain some kind of recognition among their peers and among adults by participating in activities which improve their minds.

A healthy body, of course, is a premium. We want to encourage healthy bodies. We still have a problem in America with people who do not exercise enough. We have a problem of obesity. Exhibition No. 1 is standing here. We do not want to denigrate sports, we do not want to denigrate physical activity, but we do want to exalt academic activity, intellectual activity.

I am here to pay tribute to a project, one of these 700-some projects in Federal education that has been about since 1976. I am going to say this before. I want to pay tribute to that for exalting the academic achievements of students. It is called "We the People * * * The Citizen and the Constitution." "We the People * * * The Citizen and the Constitution" is a national competition that is organized to encourage young people to learn more about our Constitution and our Government and how it works.

This was initiated, by the way, during the celebration of the bicentennial—the 200th anniversary of the Constitution. It was one of the activities initiated. Now it is continued by the Center for Civic Education.

The Center for Civic Education is part of the operation of one of our education centers funded by the Federal Government. I want to applaud them and congratulate them for this. They have now brought in the kid who was in the 5th grade in a school and they started out as an ad hoc sort of thing just for the celebration of the Bicentennial. Now it has been institutionalized. I want to congratulate the Center for Civic Education for carrying it forward.

They have now been doing this for quite a long time. I do not remember whether it is 10 years or more. Each year in each State, or first in each local competition for the State championship. This happens all over the country, in all 50 States. The State champions then are invited to Washington in the spring, and they compete against themselves for the national championship. The competition is all about who knows the Constitution, the Government, and its operations the best. What they do here, let me just read some background. The top high schools or the winners in the country come here and they participate in national finals and Bill of Rights, and more than 1,250 outstanding high school students from 50 States came this spring. There were 50 States and the District of Columbia to participate.

This has been going on for some time now. I think we have had the participation of something like 24 million students totally, at the local level as well as at the national level; in every locality, every State, they get a lot of participation.

This year, of course, they came on April 25 and 26, and after 2 days of intense examination of their knowledge of the Constitution the field was reduced from 51 teams to 10 teams, the top 10 teams. The first two rounds of competitive hearings were held April 26 and 27, at the J.W. Marriott Hotel here in Washington, and the combined scores of each team determined the 10 teams to compete Monday in the championship round on Capitol Hill. They were right here a few days ago, Monday, in this Capitol, in the Rayburn Building, competing for the final championship, 10 different teams.

In the competitions, students demonstrate their knowledge of the Constitution and Bill of Rights before simulated congressional committees composed of constitutional scholars, lawyers, journalists, and government leaders. Students compete as classes after completing a comprehensive course of study on the Constitution to qualify for the competition. The national finalists had won congressional district and State competitions in order to advance to this point. Then after the day's competition here on Capitol Hill they announced the winners last Monday night.

I want to pay tribute to the winners of the contest. First I will pay tribute to the top 10 schools. This is the kind of business that we get on television. The championship games are broadcast for college and at the local levels you have championship games broadcast for high schools and sports.
Students who are good in sports always get attention. They get trophies, and there is a trophy case in every high school. We would like to replicate that and have academic and intellectual activities given the same status. So I salute them for this.

There are top 10 schools in the country that have consistently won the national competition in a variety of activities. These schools have been the members of the Central Brooklyn Martin Luther King Commission. The diversity of their district is reflected in the names of these children. They come forward. So we have 150,000 of the first 582,000. So I have one of the largest classes. The rules require that the participants in this contest be a whole class, and that the class be under the instructor, the coach, for the whole year. So it is a class in social studies or history, or some related matter that comes as a class.

What happened at Clara Barton High School this year is that because of their past reputation, because they had consistently won the state championships, the teacher, the coach who heads the class, was inundated with requests to get into his class. So we are talking about 40 students who wish to take this college prep course. The largest class to come to the test, all 40 students.

New York City has an overcrowded situation, but high school teachers do not have enough students. The top off, and I want to congratulate the top 10 schools in America. Lincoln High School in Portland, OR, was one of those top 10. East Kent High School from Kentwood, MI; Clara Barton High School from Brooklyn, NY; Castle High School from Newburgh, IN; Maine South High School from Park Ridge, IL; East Brunswick High School from East Brunswick, NJ; Tahoma High School from Kent, WA; Arcadia High School from Arcadia, CA; and Our Lady of Lourdes Academy from Miami, FL. These are the top 10 schools in the competition on "We the People." This is a competition designed to test the students' knowledge of both the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

I salute all of the top 10, and I would like to pay additional tribute to the top winner. Our Lady of Lourdes Academy, Miami, FL. They came in first this year, first place. The second winner was Arcadia High School from Arcadia, CA. Congratulations, Arcadia. Congratulations, Our Lady of Lourdes.

Then No. 3 wasTahoma High School of Kent, WA. Congratulations to Tahoma High School. No. 4 was Clara Barton High School of Brooklyn, NY, from the 11th Congressional District. I want to congratulate the members of the team from Clara Barton High School in my district in Brooklyn. My hat goes off to them. This is the second time they came in fourth in the contest. This is, I think, the sixth time that they have made it to the national finals as State champions, so something great is going on at Clara Barton High School.

I want to congratulate the students who participated. This was one of the largest classes. spelling bees and the science fairs and a number of incentives to have children participate more in academic activities which develop their minds is an absolute necessity and must go forward.

Again, this is one of those 700-some federal programs that have been called by the previous discussion. The Center for Civic Education does a great job. And I would not want it to arbitrarily be denied funding because it happens to be one of many programs. That is an irrational approach. That is an approach that people who have already have not quite come around 100 percent to the understanding of the need for education to become America's No. 1 priority.

Our national security is all tied up with what we do with education. Our national security, certainly defense and our military services still have a great deal to do with national security. I am not denigrating that, but in a world which is much more connected to the competitive world, in a world where there is great competition for ideas, our No. 1 resource are our people and the education of those people must be our No. 1 agenda.

I came to talk to the American voters. The American people understand that. They understood a long before the Members of Congress were willing to admit it, but now the Members of Congress have been forced by the insistence of the electorate to admit that education must be our No. 1 priority.

Political necessity has dictated it. What we have to worry about now is a people who are not sincere who, because of political necessity, they give lip service to their support for education. We have to worry about the Potemkin village effect. Does anybody know what a Potemkin village is? There was a general named Potemkin in Russia who took Catherine the Great who was his empress, on a tour to show her how magnificent a village that he was in charge of was; and in that village they had fronts. The houses were beautiful, but they had nothing behind them. They were all linked together. So Catherine the Great could not see behind them. And Potemkin's village was a beautiful village, but it was nothing but facades.

The danger is that there are some people that would want us to go to the American people, with a Potemkin village of educational improvement. They are satisfied to just get the headlines, make it appear that we have gone forward, but really not do the job. It is a big job that we face. It is a big undertaking. And unless you are willing to follow the leadership of the President and take a comprehensive approach, comprehensive, a call for action for American education, this is a comprehensive approach. It starts with preschool education. It goes to Head Start.

Preschool education and Head Start have been given a great intellectual and philosophical boost by the recent conference that was held at the White House on early childhood education and learning. Several magazines have run some articles on the brain of young children, how the braindevelops. It seems now that there are no de-tractors. And nobody opposes the theory now that the brain of a young child is the most valuable thing on Earth. It has potential that has seldom been tapped. They can learn much more than we teach them. They can be developed in so many more constructive ways than we know. We should focus maximum attention on what happens to young children.

The brain is affected by how often they are squeezed, by how often they are cuddled. The brain is affected. The brain is affected whether they are yelled at or whispered to. The brain is affected by the number of times their hands are held and encouraged to grip the hand. It is affected by the way you move to help their eyesight develop. These are things that all the scientists agree on. These happen to the brain just by the proper nurturing.

Recently we had scientists that affirm that this is happening positively. Recently we had several studies that showed that if you do not take care of children when they are very young, what the results are.

The Romanian children that came from the Romanian orphanages have been cited in several, several times in several studies from some of the Soviet and other Middle Eastern people. People saw these beautiful little children who had no mothers and fathers. They were being kept in pens and being thrown into big boxes. And the adults only came around to feed them. And they were physically beautiful children and needing some help and attention in the hearts of many American parents who did not have children, and some who had children to help so they added some of these children. They have gone and adopted children.

We had a heart-breaking example on television, I think, last night a news story about a family that adopted two Russian youngsters, fraternal twins, and what that family went through as a result of the damage that those young people had already suffered. You could not reverse it. Their brains had been changed and could not be changed. So they are very anti-social. They have been ignored so long until they can form no attachments to other people, all of this is affected. Their ability to work on their peers, all of this is affected. They respond to other people in a constructive way, they always responded to them in a positive way, they correspond to other people in a positive way. Their ability to work on teams, their ability to work and relate to their peers, all of this is affected.

One concrete instance which documents this. More important than genetic, the old debate of inheritance versus conditioning, environment versus the inheritance, that old debate can be put to rest. The inheritance does count. The genes you get do set you up positively or negatively.

The overwhelming number of people respond to stimuli and the brain is affected. So that nation which understands the importance of handling its young people with the maximum amount of nurturing and care; that is, the nation which first commits the most resources to young people, will certainly be in a position to not only save a lot of money later on in terms of the social dislocations that people who are damaged perpetuate, but in terms of the benefits of alive minds capable of learning, alive minds that have been expanded and can absorb new information and new changes in technology very rapidly.

If you treat the minds of the young people a certain way, they have those kinds of minds and they have the mental and emotional attitudes, which are also constructive. Because people have always responded to them in a positive way, they respond to other people in a positive way. Their ability to work on teams, their ability to work and relate to their peers, all of this is affected.

The greatest problem is in the way those genes are handled in the early years of life. You can take some weak genes and improve on them, actually, if children are nurtured in a certain way and treated in a certain way. You can take some beautiful genes, strongest genes, and you can destroy them. They will atrophy, they will shrivel, dry up in terms of the brain, and you will have a set of behaviors that has nothing to do with the genetics that they inherit, the condition is there.

So what we put into Head Start, the dollars we spend for Head Start are the dollars that the poor children benefit from. If Head Start programs are going to degenerate and if we are going to put them on tight funding and say, yes, we subscribe to the principle that early childhood education ought to be supported by the public and not appropriate money so you can really have teachers who know, child-care specialists who know how to handle children and you just put them out there and you get welfare recipients, as has been proposed in some cities, you take people who are on welfare and you force them to go to work in child-care centers. Nothing could be worse than to have a person taking care of children who does not want to take care of them. Nothing could be worse than to have a person taking care of children who will be hostile to them because they feel they are being forced to do something they do not want to do.

So do not put people who are on welfare to work in child-care centers unless they want to go and receive training as to how to raise children, unless they are mothers already that have gone through the process already and understand how to nurture the children. And do not do it in a happenstance way so maybe they know it, maybe they do not.

It pays to screen the people who are taking care of children in day-care offices and Head Start, anywhere else. Let us not try to solve our welfare jobs problem by using children as unfortunate guinea pigs. That is one lesson we ought to learn. Education funding for early childhood, education for Head Start should be adequate funding.

What is adequate funding? You can determine whether or not the standards that either the place is safe or it is not safe. The day-care center or the Head Start center, either the place is conducive to learning, with enough light, enough air, or it is not. There are standards that can determine what is adequate.

When it comes to personnel, you can determine whether the person has experience, training and they are able to deal with children that they are assigned to do with respect to children. The dietician in the kitchen, they can determine whether they really know what they are doing, are they going to put too much salt in the food. All these things are doable. We can do them, but we have to have adequate funding to guarantee that they get done.

What I am saying is that the Potemkin village approach to say we are for education, we are for early childhood education, but say what is too much money? Head Start should not spend too much money, what is so much money? Let us determine what is adequate.

Which brings me to my final discussion for today. If you have bipartisan cooperation here in the House and they really want to go forward to improve education in America, then there is a set of standards which must be reexamined. I invite the voters, the citizens who are listening, to apply their common sense.

I spoke to a group in Cleveland called PS-21, a group of people who are dedicated to the proposition they want to improve education in Univer-sity Heights, Cleveland Heights, they want to have the best possible schools. One of the ways that they are trying to accomplish this is to make sure that local citizens, leaders, teachers, people concerned about education and parents have a maximum discussion of what it takes to make good schools.

A series of forums that they have had last year and this year, they are going to go all the way to the year 2000 because they are getting ready, they are compacting to be the best possible schools as they go into the 21st century. So that is why they call it PS 21.

We had a good discussion, and I talked to them about macro programs, the level at the citizens level, out there in the schools, the PTA's, people on the firing line, teachers. We have to have this kind of dialogue to make certain we get the maximum benefits from what is happening at the micro level. The macro level is that President Clinton is proposing. The macro level are Federal programs. Macro level is what Congress will do when it acts on President Clinton's proposal.

The macro level involves such things as the vote that is going to be taken next week on the discount to schools for telecommunications services. The Federal Communications Commission acting on a mandate given to them by Congress, is proposing to provide telecommunications services to schools and libraries across the country at a discount rate of between 20 percent and 90 percent. The poorest schools will get up to 90 percent discount on telecommunications services, and any school in the merit system will get at least a 20 percent discount on telecommunications services.

And by telecommunication services, I mean anything from computers to providing telephones to schools. We have the technology learning under way. We cannot take advantage of those in the schools that do not have the initiative to deal with the local problems that allow them to link up with these problems. That is why it becomes so important to deal with construction before you deal with anything else.

They cannot go into the 21st century and take advantage of the educational technology that is being developed. Computerized learning, videos, all kind of things will be needed to supplement the teacher in the classroom. There is no substitute for the teacher in the classroom, by the way. Recent studies have shown that no matter what you do, the quality of the teacher in the classroom determines whether or not children will get an adequate education or superior education.

So the quality of the teacher we have to take as one of the constants. But we also have to determine what kind of teacher they are if they have enhanced and can use the Internet, the videos, the educational television, computerized learning. All that is available and we should, these should take a maximum opportunity to use it.

Mr. Speaker, we need what we call opportunity-to-learn standards in our great discussion of how to improve education in America. We need to focus on opportunity-to-learn standards. We know about the standards for curriculums. The President has pushed that and I agree with curriculum standards.
We know about testing standards where we are going to have tests that are similar enough from one State to another to be able to compare the performance of States, schools within States and performance of States with each other. The idea is that what is happening in America overall with respect to adequate and excellent education. What the set of standards that we have not agreed on, we did agree on, and it was reversed. And the great horror story of the 104th Congress, they turned it around and kept one in one area they went backwards at a rapid rate.

We had opportunity-to-learn standards written into the legislation. The Goals 2000 Educate America Act had three sets of standards. They are the curriculum standards. They had the testing standards. And through a long debate, we members of the Education Committee had gotten the opportunity-to-learn standards.

Opportunity-to-learn standards are exactly what they say. If you are going to have a curriculum that is a great curriculum, if you are going to have testing, you are testing the children to see if they measure up and can learn that curriculum, one thing else has to happen. You have to have a guarantee that the students have an opportunity to learn by seeing to it that they have the right books so that they can measure up to the standards, pass tests, guarantee that they have a safe place to study, a safe place to learn.

That is part of the opportunity to learn. Guarantee that they have qualified teachers, people who know what they are doing. At one point we had a survey in New York City and found that two-thirds of the teachers who were teaching math and science in public schools in New York City had not majored in math and science in college. In junior high school, if you have teachers who are not qualified, when you have teachers who did not major in science in college, you have a problem. Opportunity-to-learn standards would say that the standard is that no State, no locality should permit a situation where children do not have an opportunity to learn because the teachers are not qualified.

Opportunity to learn means that, if you are going to teach science, the school ought to have a science laboratory. The science laboratory ought to have adequate supplies. Opportunity to learn means that you have books in the library which enhance the textbooks which are not 30 years old.

We have a problem with history books, social studies books being 30 years old in some of the libraries in New York City. So opportunity to learn and the agreement to accept opportunity-to-learn standards is one of those barometers by which we can measure whether people are sincere about improving education in America. One of those barometers to flesh out the Trojan horses and the underground operatives and the people trying to ambush the effort is to ask them, how do you feel about opportunity to learn?

One of the first tests of opportunity-to-learn standards is, will you support the President's construction initiatives that should be there in a building that is safe, in a building that is warm. In a building that does not burn coal and put pollutants in the air for children to breathe to get contaminated with all kinds of harmful substances. A building that is safe, a building that has decent ventilation, a building that is adequate so that you do not have what is happening in New York City. Again, schools will tell you because the board of education and the bureaucrats have told them that they do not have an overcrowding problem. We had a little test, the Central Brooklyn Martin Luther King Commission, which is my advisory committee on education, they sent people to school to see if they solved their overcrowding problem.

Principals said, we have no problem, slightly over capacity. They were lying. The next question I told them to ask was, how many lunch periods do you have? How many lunch periods do you have? That is a telltale sign of an overcrowded school. We have numerous schools that have three lunch periods. Children start eating at 10:30. They do not stop until 2:30. We have discovered one school that has five lunch periods. I said, if you have five lunch periods, when does the first group eat lunch? At 9:45. Is it not child abuse to make a child eat lunch at 9:45? Is there not something wrong nutritionally, psychologically with making a child eat lunch at 9:45 in the morning?

The principal who told me this has been living with it so long she was not embarrassed. She said, we let them starve. We have not been able to get them fed and we have to make them hungry. The last group that eats, we let them have a snack in the morning because they get hungry before we finally get to them. Five lunch periods, from 9:45 up to nearly 2, they are eating in relay teams. It is overcrowded. The capacity has been exceeded.

You should not do that to children. No matter what they do to lie about the statistics and tell us, once we asked the question, how many lunch periods do you have, we have a telltale sign that they are overcrowded.

We can go around and see with our own eyes that children have classes in storerooms, sometimes in the hallway, two or three classes are in the auditorium. We can see that the overcrowding is there, even when the bureaucrats do not admit it.

We still have the problem, 91,000 children did not have a seat in New York City when school started last fall, and a good number of those seats did not exist and nobody is willing to admit it. So opportunity to learn means that the construction initiative of President Clinton should go forward because at schools like the schools in New York and the schools in numerous other cities that are overcrowded, that do have unsafe environments, lead poisoning, asbestos, all kinds of problems which affect the health of children. The greatest problem is now in the inner-city communities. Children do not have an opportunity to learn because they are denied the basics of a decent place to sit, a safe place to sit, a place free of dust, bugs and germs, and a place which is ventilated properly and lighted properly. It is that basic.

Opportunity to learn means much more. But let us at least start with the President's construction initiative. We will follow through. The President is proposing training for teachers, suppliers. The President is proposing a number of items that become very important.

The incentive of having young people in elementary, secondary schools know that they can go to college, if they apply themselves to their studies in elementary and secondary school, that is also important. It is a continuum from the early childhood, from the cradle and how you handle a baby when you pick them up and nuture them all the way to lifelong learning of retired people who can still contribute to the society by volunteering, by helping to mentor, by trying to improve our society in a number of ways.

In the process, we should also make certain that we build into our popular culture, build into our popular culture incentives that glamorize academic activities, that glamorize intellectual activities.

I will close by saluting the Clara Barton High School championship team from my district for their performance in the contest to show their knowledge of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. I congratulate all the schools and all the youngsters across America who are champions in the area of intellectual and academic activities.

ISSUES FACING THE 105TH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore, Mr. BOB SCHAFER of Colorado). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 1997, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] is recognized for 60 minutes.

We still have the problem, 91,000 children did not have a seat in New York City when school started last fall, and a good number of those seats did not exist and nobody is willing to admit it. So opportunity to learn means that the construction initiative of President Clinton should go forward because at schools like the schools in New York and the schools in numerous other cities that are overcrowded, that do have unsafe environments, lead poisoning, asbestos, all kinds of problems which affect the health of children. The greatest problem is now in the inner-city communities. Children do not have an opportunity to learn because they are denied the basics of a decent place to sit, a safe place to sit, a place free of dust, bugs and germs, and a place which is ventilated properly and lighted properly. It is that basic.

Opportunity to learn means much more. But let us at least start with the President's construction initiative. We will follow through. The President is proposing training for teachers, suppliers. The President is proposing a number of items that become very important.

The incentive of having young people in elementary, secondary schools know that they can go to college, if they apply themselves to their studies in elementary and secondary school, that is also important. It is a continuum from the early childhood, from the cradle and how you handle a baby when you pick them up and nuture them all the way to lifelong learning of retired people who can still contribute to the society by volunteering, by helping to mentor, by trying to improve our society in a number of ways.

In the process, we should also make certain that we build into our popular culture, build into our popular culture incentives that glamorize academic activities, that glamorize intellectual activities.

I will close by saluting the Clara Barton High School championship team from my district for their performance in the contest to show their knowledge of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. I congratulate all the schools and all the youngsters across America who are champions in the area of intellectual and academic activities.
Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure to be with you tonight and discuss the many issues that are facing the 105th Congress.

One of the things that we will be voting on very soon is the supplemental appropriations for Bosnia. As I was addressing Members of the Committee on Appropriations, there is a provision in the bill that is supposed to provide $26 to $41 billion, that was a cut. And from $190 to $270 billion, that was a cut. When we increased Medicare funding, what was the gentlewoman from the Democratic Party in Washington, that was the President and many, many of the House members of the committee said, listen, we are increasing? It is the same mentalité, it cuts it in half. The Democrats still said we are cutting it.

There are a lot of us who want to get our troops home from Bosnia. But at this time, we need to fund the areas that are there, and we need to have the debate about getting them home also. But the two purposes of this funding bill are emergency for the flood victims and emergency for Bosnia.

Politics is politics, and we cannot pass a bill around here without something totally unrelated being attached to it. That is always going to be the case, and that is the case with this bill that we are considering. One of the nonemergency items which many people in this House have supported is increased funding for WIC, which is the Women, Infants and Children Program. It is a milk formula program, and the program does a lot of good.

We have identified in our society that if we make sure that a pregnant woman does not get into default diet, that the chances of the baby being born without medical complications is much greater; and, similarly, in the first couple of years of the life of the child, if the child is getting proper nutrition and proper diet, then the child experiences far fewer health care problems, which in terms of budget are more expensive. So it is an ounce of prevention.

Now, the Democrats and some of the liberals in the media, the New York Times, the L.A. Times, are actually accusing WIC. Now, I am on the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Speaker, and I am thinking, what is going on? No one has even brought WIC up.

Here is what the Democrats are saying. They, in this flood bill, want to increase WIC funding $78 million. In the spirit of compromise, the Republicans on the committee said, listen, we are not certain that this needs to be increased, but $38 million is a compromise, it cuts it in half. The Democrats still said we are cutting it.

Now, again, how do we cut what we are increasing? It is the same mentality. Mr. Speaker, that we heard last year from the President and many, many of the liberal members of the Democratic Party in Washington, that when we increased Medicare funding from $130 to $270 billion, that was a cut. When we increased student loans from $26 to $41 billion, that was a cut. And when we increased the school lunch program 4.5 percent, that was a cut according to liberal mathematicians.

It is not the case in elementary school math classes all over the country, but somehow a lot of people got to Congress without ever taking math courses.

Now, what the Democrats are obviously confused over, and I think very purposely in some cases playing games on the floor, is that I want to make sure Members realize, A, No. 1, there is a $100 million carryover from WIC. It is somewhat of an escrow account because we cannot estimate how many children and mothers will be participating in the benefits.

But right now we are sitting on a $100 million escrow account. It is sitting there. It has not been depleted. It is unused. That is very, very important when we are talking about we have to do something in an emergency flood bill. That is A.

B, welfare rolls have gone down 15 percent. Now, if we have 15 percent of the national population getting out of welfare, it shows it that the President wants to increase a welfare program on an emergency flood bill? It does not make sense. We cannot brag about how well welfare reform is working on the one hand and then on the other hand Trying to benefit every welfare recipient.

No. 3. The Democrats who are pushing to increase WIC funding at this time are using 1994 census data. Now, 1994 was 2½ years ago, and here we have a situation where those are the numbers they are using. But, Mr. Speaker, if we look at 1995 census data, we see that it is being fully funded. Conveniently, the liberals who are pushing for this WIC increase are forgetting the fact that there is new census data available from 1995 which shows full participation.

Mr. Speaker, I really wish in the U.S. Congress, and in the political arena, people would start talking truth and cut out the politics. What is happening here is the same old crowd who were scaring our grandmothers last year, scaring students, and scaring the school kids regarding their lunch programs, they are trying to work them on. It is all the familiar fracas again, saying that Republicans are picking on little children and mammas, which is hardly the case.

But just to remind my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, listen to some of the charges made by Members of Congress in the past. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 23, 1995: “You are abusive in getting at abuse. You are harsh. You use a meat axe against handicapped children and their parents.” I cannot believe that kind of extreme language.

Here is another one: “They want to make sure that our children, who need preventive health care, do not have, and the Members of Congress do not, access the nursing homes.” That was the gentlewoman from Texas, [Ms. JACkSON-Lee], CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 9, 1996.

Here is a quote from the President of the United States. Ollie North is a great one. Mr. RUSH, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 3, 1995: “Olly North is banking on the fact that he can raise enough money from the extreme right wing, the extra chromosome right wing, to defeat worse, to defeat Speaker.” Oh man, what dignity coming from the Vice President of the United States.

Here is another one, March 23, 1995. Representative GREEN, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: “We are talking about stopping children from having a hot lunch.”

Here is another one. The gentlewoman from Connecticut [Ms. DELAuro], May 9, 1996: “And they are sincere in wanting to do harm to working men and women in this country.”

Here is a great one. Mr. MILLER, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 3, 1995: “It is a glorious day if you are a fascist. It is a glorious day.”

Here is another one, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RUSH, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 3, 1995: “The blood suckers in this Congress are lead by Count Dracula.”

One more. Senator LEAHY, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 24, 1995: “This assault on America’s children will be stopped.”

Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of extreme garbage we have to hear on the floor of the House. And it is one thing for the Speaker and myself, as a Member of Congress, to have to listen to such charges, because, after all, it is somewhat what our job is about, but to go out to school kids, to go out to the elderly, to go out to the moms and dads and say this kind of thing, I cannot imagine. I could not do that, Mr. Speaker.

Certainly there are times when I get furious with the other side. I know the Speaker feels the same way. But I do not remember ever saying that a Member of Congress was going to use a meat cleaver on kids or wanting to put harm on American working men and women. What kind of low level has public debate in America sunk to when...

Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of winning a debate, this is a matter of public decency. We are the leaders in this country. We should act at a higher standard of behavior than the local bar. And yet this is what some of the Members of Congress seem to think is the right tactic.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we are not cutting WIC. And if my colleagues listen to the cries about cuts in the past, we can see it is the same old game.

Here is what has happened. When we passed welfare reform, and in doing so we scaled back a number of programs, we also increased the funding in other programs such as child care, such as parent support, tracking down deadbeat dads. And now, because these programs have been reformed, many people are getting off welfare.

But many of the poverty brokers in government circles are doing everything they can to try to get around these reforms. They are saying, “Oh, well, now we have a politically privileged environment for doing new programs and trying to raise the government involvement in folks’ lives.” Right now they are about to get independent, the government poverty bureau bureaucrats are rushing back in there and saying, “Wait a minute, I found some gray area in this law. You do not have to get independent, even if you are a 25-year-old able-bodied man.”

I am sick and tired of single women in my district with two kids, working a job, raising children and paying taxes and having to come home after a 60-hour week and supporting some 25-year-old male who is too lazy to work. It is time that we say to folks that they have got to get to work. Some of them just got to get out of the wagon and help pull it. I think it is very, very important.

Mr. Speaker, we went a long way in the last Congress to change a lot of things. Welfare reform was only part of it. But, in addition, we passed the line item veto so that the President of the United States could zap fat out of the budget. We passed security reform legislation. We passed a tough gift ban. We passed lobbyist registration, the first time in 50 years. We passed products liability reform.

We made farm subsidies and gave farmers the freedom to farm so that they would have more flexibility in deciding which crops to plant and when to plant them.

We passed the Paperwork Reduction Act so that businesses that do commerce with the Federal Government would not have to fight so much red tape.

We stopped the practice of unfunded mandates, and this is the practice of the Federal Government saying to the local county commissions that they have to provide certain services, that they have to increase the taxes in their county to pay for it because the Federal Government is not going to help them. In other words, we were micromanaging counties all over the United States right here out of Washington, DC.

So the irony is when our plan was defeated, the taxpayers now have to pay $4 billion more and we saved the banks, who would still have made a good income from participating in the Student Loan Program.

That was one example, going from $24 billion to $36 billion.

Mr. KINGSTON. Is it not true that run by the Government the student loan program lost $1 billion, but run by the private sector it did not lose any of the money?

Mr. SHAYS. We have a certain part we call the direct student loan, which is in essence run by the private sector. The government was saying that this program was cheaper than to have the banks do it. But what they forgot to do was to compute in the cost of the government administering the program. So it did look better until the GAO and the inspectors General said, Wait a second, you better take a look at this, because this program is going to cost you more.

Also I need to say that when you had the institutions deciding who would get the loans, primarily with the proprietary schools, they were giving out loans under the direct student loan, actually giving out the government loan to students who would participate but some of them not pay it back because frankly in some of the proprietary school programs they were in, they were not going to have employment when they were done.

This is just to establish the fact that the student loan program, which some of my constituents thought was being cut, it went from $24 billion to $36 billion and we saved the taxpayers $4 billion, and the banks would have had to pay more. It is funny that sometimes the Republicans are associated with wanting to privatize. Here is the big issue, the banks, the banks were the ones that were going to have to step up to the plate and make up that difference.

I think I was most outraged when I first heard of the school lunch program, because the thought that we would, we Republicans, cut the school lunch program, I thought was probably one of the dumbest things I could imagine. When I heard, saw the President come before the students and have them be set up as the prop for the White House on a 5-year effort to get our financial house in order and balance the Federal budget. But it is very distressing when we still hear the rhetoric that when spending goes up we are still having a cut.

I just think something I would like at least to do would be to revisit what did not happen last year, because I do not want people to think it is going to happen this year.

What did not happen last year is we did not cut Medicare, we slowed its growth. We did not cut Medicaid, which is health care for the poor and nursing care for the elderly poor.

Mr. KINGSTON. In fact, if the gentleman would yield, as I recall the numbers, we went from $59 billion to over $140 billion for health care for the poor, or Medicaid.

Mr. SHAYS. Medicaid. That is correct. And we did not cut the School Lunch Program, we slowed its growth slightly, but allowed for more discretion in how it is spent.

And I want to get back to each of those. We did not cut the Student Loan Program. It went up quite significantly.

I would just go backward from the issues I mentioned. The Student Loan Program was being cut. And I want to get back to the numbers. When we passed it, the President was spending $24 billion. And in the 2nd year of the plan, under our plan, it would have spent $36 billion. Only in Washington when we spend 50 percent more do people call it a cut, but here we called it a cut.

Now, it is true that it would have gone to $40 billion in terms of tax money. There was $4 billion that we did not spend. But the $4 billion we did not spend was actually money that we said that the banks would pay instead of the taxpayers. The banks would cover more of the bad debt and the banks would cover more of the administrative costs.

So the irony is when our plan was defeated, the taxpayers now have to pay $4 billion more and we saved the banks, who would still have made a good income from participating in the Student Loan Program.

April 30, 1997
Washington again when you go from $5.1 billion to $6.9 billion would people call it a cut. But they did.

But what we did do, which was very important, is, I do not know if everyone in the country knows, I did not know. As a Member of Congress, I had been here 8 years at the time, that every student in the country, rich or poor, is subsidized 30 cents. My daughter was subsidized 30 cents in a suburban school that is quite wealthy. What we were saying under our plan, we were allowing local governments and State governments to design the plan better so that they could reallocate the money from the wealthy kids in the wealthy communities and spend more in the urban areas. So when the President suggested that maybe my students in Bridgeport or Norwalk or Stamford might actually be in a premium, but most of it is paid for out of the tax income each year. They said 7 people who sit on this board were his President Clinton’s appointees, 5 of the organization separate from the administration out of the tax income each year.

Mr. KINGSTON. This is what we are paid and elected to do and that is to act in a responsible manner and as the report indicated the other day, I believe, Medicare today is losing $36 million each and every day.

Mr. SHAYS. It is really incredible to think that right now the trust fund has in the balance $112 billion. That will go down in 1998, the next year, to $92 billion. When you figure that loss on a daily basis, each and every day that passes the trust fund is losing $35 million. That is in the year we are in now. Next year it is going to lose $55 million each day. And the next year after that, in 1999, it is going to lose $78 million each and every day.

This is according to the President’s trustees of this fund, the people who have the fiduciary responsibility to protect it as we do. They have shared this information with us. They have told us the problem. It is up to us to come up with a solution. Then they have said in the year 2000, it will lose about $103 million a day, and it will be bankrupt in 2001, because it will be losing $134 million each and every day.

We came up with a plan 2 years ago that we will continue to advocate and promote that did not increase the copayments for seniors, did not increase the deductible for seniors, it did not in any way affect the premium. What it did do was allow seniors for the first time to choose to have a private medical plan. In having the private medical plan, they could get into this plan and the only way they would be interested in doing it is if they get under the traditional Medicare fee-for-service plan that we have now.

By getting into a managed care plan, the managed care plans would have to freeze what they get now, because what they get now is pretty nice. But they still have to pay the MediGap under existing, they still have a premium to pay. But some of the managed care programs were going to give eye care, dental care, a rebate on the copayment of the deductible, and in some cases pay the premium and the MediGap.

If a senior did not like the managed care plan, we allowed them under the bill that the President vetoed to get out of the plan each and every month for the next 24 months. In other words, if they were in it for 3 months and did not like it, they could leave. If they were in it for 6 months and did not like it, they could leave.

Mr. KINGSTON. This first election to get into it was up to them because automatically they would be reenrolled in traditional Medicare.

Mr. SHAYS. Right. They were not required to take this. The only way they would have gotten into it, it is not like some of the telephone plans where you could have had a new long distance carrier. You stayed under the plan you were. But what would have happened in my judgment is some of their neighbors would have gotten into the managed care plan, that would have paid out given they were getting eye care, dental care, prescription drug assistance that they were not getting under the traditional Medicare plan and people would have said, well, I want that too, and they were.

The reason why the managed care plans could save money is there is so much waste and fraud and abuse in government oversight of health care that the managed care plans could oversee it better and they would still have made money, they would have saved money, through all the waste that exists. Yet they would have been able to give more than the seniors would have now. We would have saved money for medical savings accounts. We did not require people to participate. But if someone wanted to put money, the government would have actually given a senior a certain payment, $2,000 or $3,000 a year, we would have given the senior that money, they could have put it in the account. If they spent less than $3,000, they would have actually saved money. If they spent more, they would have had to pay for it on their own. The only requirement is that they would have had to get a $10,000 catastrophic plan, so that if they really had serious health problems, there would be an insurance program for them.

What we happen is for seniors who were in good health and decided they could take whatever smaller bills that were manageable, they would pay that out of that escrow account, keeping half of what they saved. And the next year after that, in 1999, it is going to lose $78 million each and every day.

Mr. SHAYS. And it was tax-free. Mr. KINGSTON. Tax-free. Yet they would be covered for the million-dollar claim.

Mr. SHAYS. That is why when the gentleman says, the traditional view is that we are playing with dynamite, I was proud to go to my constituents and tell them. This is a plan I had worked on with the gentleman and others for literally years. We believed it was possible, we believed it was possible, the majority had a chance to finally begin to implement it.

Mr. KINGSTON. The only thing about Medicare that is dynamite is when it is misconstrued intentionally and political gain has been seen people who just maliciously go out there and lie to the American seniors. I think it is an insult to the generation who fought for freedom and liberty in World War II and my dad and your dad. I just think it is totally sick for people to go out and lie to grandparents, but that is what happened, and Medicare, being Medicare,
Mr. SHAYS. I think that more and more people began to understand what was happening, but it required a lot of work to make sure people did understand.

One last point we should make on the Medicare plan that I thought was really ingenious and I thought would save a lot of money. We were providing in our legislation language that allowed a senior whose name had a mistake in their bill to get a percent of what they found. For instance, I had some seniors who have talked about bills that they saw. First off the bills sometimes are not sent to the senior. Under our legislation we would have required the seniors to have a copy of their bill. We would have required the bills to be put in simple language that an individual could understand. If you had a chest x-ray, you say that. If you had a visit from the doctor, you make clear the visit the doctor and how much it was and what it was for. Then a senior could say, "I never had that visit with the doctor, and the $300 charge is not a valid one." We would have given a senior, we had not written the regulation that the agency would have put in up to the administration, but they could have determined that, say, 10 or 20 percent of the savings would have gone to the senior. Some seniors would have found that they would have made money. But in the process, they would have saved us literally hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. KINGSTON. That is exactly right. I do not think it is always fraud. I think a lot of it is just sloppiness and negligence. There is a story, I am sorry I cannot cite the person but she received a bill for an autopsy, went to a doctor and said, "I never had an autopsy," and they said, "Yes, you did. Here is the bill." She said, "No, I did not have an autopsy. It's me, I'm alive." They said, "Okay. Well, you had an MRI." She said, "No, I did not have an MRI." They said, "Well, you had a mastectomy." "No, I've never had a mastectomy, either. I know with certainty that none of the above were received."

Mr. SHAYS. I had a senior who in one meeting, she gave me a stack of envelopes that must have been about 3 inches tall, many, many envelopes. They were all the bills that she received. She received them all the same week. She simply said, why could they not have been put in one envelope? Some of them were duplicative. It was a pretty extraordinary thing.

I will say to the gentleman that another person stood up at this meeting and said, "You understand I am a man." I said, "Sure, you look like a man. You look like a senior." He was charged for giving birth." He said, "That is not possible but I was charged that."

I notice, and the gentleman is in charge of this floor, but if I could have the honor of introducing my colleague the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mr. KINGSTON. If the gentleman will wait one second before he does that. What we need to do is we need to have a bill that would say if we might have a bill that would say that we were going to do a ridiculous and absurd Medicare story, and let us all go out there and find these crazy stories. I just think it is so ridiculous, that this system is so broken that live people are being billed for autopsies, men are being billed for women-only types of procedures to change it and we need to protect and prevent it. I am going give the gentleman the pleasure of introducing his colleague from Connecticut, the leader on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SHAYS. I might say to the gentleman before I introduce her that one of the reasons we have these abuses is the way that Medicare pays the bill is the bills are submitted and paid for and then after the fact, they are reviewed, basic enforcement tools, and if there are errors, the $103 million of the savings would have gone to the administration, but they could have saved us literally hundreds of millions of dollars. The fact was we passed it the first time. You mean the one that was signed into law by the President.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. That is right. There were a few other provisions that we were able to get into other bills a second time, and the President did sign, and one of those was an aggressive attack on Medicare fraud.

Now I am the chairman of the Ways and Means subcommittee that does Medicare, and so we have oversight of the programs that are under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means, but one of them is Medicare, and we had our high-risk program hearing; that is, the highest risk of fraud programs under our jurisdiction, and one of them was Medicare. Medicare is one of the programs in our Nation that has an extraordinarily high risk of fraud and a high volume of fraud. The inspector general said $20 billion of our expenditures in Medicare every year are fraudulent, paying for health care you did not get or did not need.

So it is a very big problem, and I am proud to say that last year we did get passed a new antifraud program that will put regional people out in every regional office looking at nothing but Medicare fraud.

Mr. KINGSTON. Now if the gentlewoman would yield for 10 seconds, $26 billion in Medicare fraud was being aid together. That is twice the annual budget of the entire State of Georgia. I am not sure what your budget is in Connecticut, but you can run the State of Georgia tax-free for 2 years just on what the Medicare and Medicaid fraud is.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. That is truly stunning, that is truly stunning, and people ought to try to imagine in their minds what $26 billion would buy if it were spent right.

You know Medicare is an outmoded benefit package. It does not cover prevention. It only helps you after you get sick. If we had $26 billion that is spent on fraud to use for preventive benefits, it would not be a wonderful thing for the senior citizens of America.

Well, I am proud to say that we passed a bill that put $900 million into fraud inspectors in the regions, and those people are now, most of them are hired. That program will be completely in place in another few months, and next year when we stand here at least I hope we will have better numbers and we will be able to demonstrate that the Republicans put in place a very strong antifraud effort in Medicare.

But I do regret that the President vetoed the bill that would have let every senior in America be part of making Medicare honest.

Mr. SHAYS. I think that we could point out that there are times that we have big disagreements with the administration, but this dealing with the fraud area, that was one area where we had some cooperation and we wanted to build on the cooperation we had with the White House. In that bill that passed in the Medicare reform that dealt with the whole issue of portability, in that bill that you make refertence to, section 2 which dealt with fraud, also we made health care fraud a Federal offense for public and private sector, and the reason why we did that was that we found that those that wanted to cheat the system were sometimes going from one State to another, and if the public sector was being more aggressive, it went into the private secctor. So we put it all in one package, and they had in health care and we could follow them, and in some instances we are talking about some organizations cheating the system not $10 million but literally hundreds of millions of dol-ars.

So we are proud of the fact that that is something we did and grateful that the President agreed that it was something that he could sign.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I am also on in the Medicare and Medicaid working with us this year on another very important part of the Medicare reform bill that will be good for seniors but also good for all Americans of every age. In the Medicare reform bill we had written a provision that allowed hospitals and doctors to develop their own networks so they could compete with insurance companies. That would give us competition in the management of health care and an insurance company plans where there are stockholders involved and you have to have a return on your investment and pro-dered by the White House. In that bill that you made reference to, section 2 which dealt with the whole issue of portabilty, the President agreed that it was something we did and grateful that the White House are yielding fruit. I think they are.

I know what our ultimate objective is. We want to balance the Federal budget and get our country's financial house in order. We want to save our trust funds, particularly Medicare, not just for future generations, but for the generations that exist now, and we want to transform that caretaking social and corporate and agricultural welfare state into what some call caring opportunity society. I think that we are not just trying to transform social welfare in which a congressman from Connecticut was so active, but we are looking to end welfare for corporations and we are looking to end welfare in the farming industry.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] was so on target in pointing out that with the freedom to farm bill we are allowing the energies of the farmers to not be encumbered by lots of Government intervention and welfare payments.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. You know I am very proud of this Congress and the way we are working together. I know the press has reported primarily controversy around campaign practices of the White House and the last election and some other things, but underneath that we are doing the people’s business, and the negotiations around the budget that have gone on have been frankly a serious thing about how we get to pass a balanced budget that will reach the goal of a balanced budget and return fiscal sanity to this Nation.

J ust today on the House floor, I guess it was yesterday on the House floor, we passed an adoption and foster care reform bill that children will not get lost in our foster care system, and we did that bipartisan, both parties working together, both parties here on the floor talking about the ways in which this big problem in children in America, some of our concerns about that bill as well, and today had a long debate about housing, public housing policy, and we will bring forward in the next few days a bill by bipartisan vote.

Mr. SHAYS. It is interesting, if the gentleman would yield, probably not many people know what we did with foster care and adoption because there was not this rancorous battle between Republicans and Democrats.

So it does not always get the attention of the media, but it was excellent legislation. We do a lot of good.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, that is why I wanted to bring that up, because we do a lot of real thoughtful work here about the problems in our lives and certainly abused children. Sometimes it is very difficult.

and in doing so, in that framework, out for the United States of America, from Connecticut. We all have to look, always look at the big picture. Why I think it is so important that we look, always look at the big picture.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, that is why I think it is so important that we look, always look at the big picture. Why I think it is so important that we look, always look at the big picture.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, is it not vote. I would just point out that we from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON] could represent Connecticut. We all have to look, always look at the big picture. Why I think it is so important that we look, always look at the big picture.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, that is why I think it is so important that we look, always look at the big picture. Why I think it is so important that we look, always look at the big picture.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. KINGSTON] to repeat that.

Mr. KINGSTON. I am not sure I got it right anyhow, but the fact is, it gets down to this: If you bring in a dollar, you should never, ever spend more than a dollar. And we have since World War II been spending $1.59 on every dollar that we bring in.

Now, that is not the case in the last 3 years, but the fact is, you cannot go on forever defying gravity. The children in America need to live in a world where the budget is balanced and where Congress is not spending more money than we bring in.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman mentioned the children of the world, and I would love the indulgence of my colleagues just to thank the participants of the summit that was in Philadelphia this past Saturday. I wanted to go to the summit, and I have to tell my colleagues that it was very moving to see Mrs. Reagan there on behalf of her husband, President Reagan, to see Jerry Ford and Jimmy Carter and George Bush and our President, Bill Clinton, all focused in a common effort to direct the public’s attention on the need to really respond to our children.

I know that there is some controversy in terms of say AmeriCorps, with some who say that AmeriCorps is a waste of taxpayer money and others who disagree with it. I certainly am a strong supporter; others raise questions. But as a former Peace Corps volunteer, I just found it extraordinary that we had Republican and Democrat Presidents all saying that this matters so much to them that they were willing to devote a sizable amount of their time. More importantly, to have Colin Powell basically take this on as really a lifetime effort.

This is an act of judgment, I would want to see the floor of the House for the record, I am absolutely convinced that people will look back and say that something very wonderful happened in this country about drawing the public’s attention to our kids.

Mr. Speaker, we have been told by some who say that politicians are elected by adults to represent the kids, and I really believe that. Here we had our Presidents and a First Lady; we had Colin Powell, a distinguished citizen, who basically said that he is going to devote his life to making sure that Americans realize the need of helping kids. He is doing it, our Presidents are doing it by example, and this is something that he is asking all Americans to focus on and think about.

In my city of Bridgeport that I represent, I would contrast it to the city right next door, the community of Fairfield. I was in a parade, in a Fourth of July parade, and near the beginning of the parade in Fairfield and you march along and there are just literally tens of thousands of people along the march, and you get to the reviewing stand. And an hour and 20 minutes later I said, “When is this going to end?” And he looked at me and said, “It is going to go on for a while.” And what was it? It was a wonderful parade of Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts and Indian Guides and Indian Princes and soccer teams and volleyball teams and bands. I thought, the challenge for some children in our country is deciding what do they do not do, they have so many options.

Then I thought, right next door in the city of Bridgeport I know the children do not have that same option. After school there is really nothing for them to do. We are asking in this summit for Americans to adopt a child, to be a mentor, and to help them. Not Government.

I will just say one thing. One of the absurdities that took place in the summit was a group that marched in opposition to the summit because they said it was wrong for us to think that volunteers should be doing these things, that it was government’s responsibility. We wanted to do what it was the very basis of our strength as a country, the active participation of citizens.

President Clinton I think pointed out something that I found was very striking. We were at the site of the founding of our country, and I remember as he gave his speech as the other Presidents had given theirs, he said that when Jefferson left after the conclusion of the Constitution, a woman asked Jefferson where he was going to be a monarchy or a republic. And Mr. Jefferson said to her, “It is a republic if you can keep it.”

Then the President talked about a more perfect union, and I was in that room that Constitution we had slaves. In that Constitution, the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. Johnson] could not vote. I would just point out that we are making this a more perfect Union. I think the task for our President is really alert the American public for the need to not depend on government. The era of big government is over, but the era of big problems still remains.
I was stirred by this, and I hope other Americans were, that this is going to be a citizen Government helping our kids, giving them activity, giving them a framework, giving them discipline, helping them see mentors that are something more than someone selling drugs and leading a bleak future.

So I appreciate the indulgence of my colleagues, but it was stirring, and I really believe that if we can use that summit and the bipartisanship that existed there and throw these politics out the window a bit, we will be a more perfect Union.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I certainly am proud of my hometown of New Britain, CT. Last Saturday we had Christmas in April and I and many, many, many other people from the town turned out.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman might want to explain Christmas in April. People of all walks of life, some brought their children, and we put in a lot of time and effort and we did it.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Christmas in April, it is a way the community gives the gift of Christmas to families who need help.

I have been working at the home of an elderly couple who for decades have helped lead and care for veterans of this Nation’s wars. They have done so much for others, and it was so nice to be a part of a team of 19 or 20 that painted and repaired things outside, that cleaned up the yard, that replaced a ceiling. I mean it was just wonderful. It was a gift to people who have given all of their lives and who now in their elderly years need some help with that kind of work.

And in New Britain, Connecticut, volunteers painted, repaired and up-graded the homes of 40 families. Some of them elderly, some of them single parents with young children, some of them just people who for one reason or another do not work with those kinds of chores, and some brought their children, just so their children could see that working together we are a powerful force, we Americans, and Government can never replace that energy, that faith, that love, that hope.

I am proud to be a part of a Government that understands that people are the power and is working to assure that Government partners those powerful people and shares with them their vision of hope, opportunity, and justice for all. That is I think what we are talking about and why we have been so concerned with Medicare, preserving Medicare, strengthening Medicare, protecting Medicare for our seniors, but also fixing it so it besides serves not only our seniors but their kids as they retire and our grandchildren when they retire.

It is very nice to be with you gentlemen tonight. I am sorry that I have to excuse you because I have some calls that I have to make.

Mr. KINGSTON. We thank the gentlewoman for joining us, and we thank the gentlewoman on behalf of all Americans, particularly seniors, for all that you are doing to help protect and preserve Medicare.

Mr. SHAYS, if the gentleman is going to stay, I wanted to touch base a little bit on some of these tax issues.

Mr. SHAYS. I would love that.

Mr. KINGSTON. Let me ask you this: We have been talking about balancing the budget. Is it consistent or inconsistent to talk about cutting taxes and balancing the budget?

Mr. SHAYS. Oh, it is definitely consistent.

Mr. KINGSTON. Consistent with a "C".

Mr. SHAYS. And important, for a variety of reasons. First off, we need to recognize that when you increase some taxes you actually get less revenue because in a dynamic model people respond. They say taxes are higher and they find ways to avoid paying them by doing other things. If you have a luxury tax on boats, they simply decide not to buy boats, as we found in our 1990 budget agreement when we increased the tax on boats and people stopped buying them.

So you have a dynamic model. Sometimes with lower taxes you get more revenue. We would find that to be true specifically with the capital gains exemption.

Imagine a farmer out West whose neighbor wants to sell land and they want to buy the land, but the neighbor does not sell, and why does the neighbor not sell? Because they would realize such a large capital gain, they do not want to pay 28 percent of that gain to the Government. It might be what is their retirement, it might be what pays for their child's college tuition, and so they simply do not sell.

What you have is, you do not have a transaction taking place, whereas if we lowered the capital gains you would find, in fact, that there would be greater transactions and more revenue. So one of the things that we hope happens is that there is, in fact, a capital gains exemption.

We also hope that there would be a reduction in the tax that people pay on inheritance so that they do not have to sell the farm or sell the business.

So we believe that it is consistent, and I would also say to the gentleman that we would pay for our tax cuts. So if you want a smaller Government, as I do and the gentleman does, you make the Government smaller and you return the money back to the people to spend as they want and create economic activity which also brings in more revenue.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has answered that very eloquently. The bottom line is, we American people can spend our money better than bureaucrats in Washington can. Let American people keep more of their own savings. They will create jobs, more people go to work, less people are on public assistance. When less people are on public assistance, again, more people working and paying in, revenues do go up. I think Presidents Kennedy and Reagan have both proven that and I think we need to prove that again in this session of Congress.

Mr. SHAYS. And I think we will.

Mr. KINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for being with us tonight and for all of his hard work for the folks in Connecticut and all over the country.
