MORNING HOUR DEBATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 19, 1999, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) for 3 minutes.

TRIBUTE TO LATE TEXAS LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR BOB BULLOCK

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, whenever I fly home to Texas and my plane approaches the State of Texas, I often hear the sound of rising thunder drifting across our land. The rumble is and can be known as the echoes of Texans, past and present, voicing their solid beliefs in individuality, independence and State pride. For the past few days, however, that thunder has been stilled, for the voices of all Texans have been silent in quiet reverence for the passing of our former Lieutenant Governor Bob Bullock, a great Texan and a great American.

After courageously fighting lung cancer and heart disease, Bob Bullock passed away this past Friday. As we Texans like to say, he fought a good fight, but he simply ran out of time.

Bob Bullock's long and proud legacy of service to Texas stands as a striking and fitting monument. In addition to his post as Lieutenant Governor, Bullock served 16 years as State Comptroller. He also served Texas as the Secretary of State, as a member of the Texas House of Representatives, and as an Assistant Attorney General. He truly loved public service and loved his State. From his early days as a Texas State Representative in 1956 to his final days as a retired Lieutenant Governor, Bob Bullock placed the interests of his State even before his own. He would often work when he was ailing, but he was committed to the values of our State and of this country.

As Secretary of State he strove to attain campaign and election law changes as well as voting rights for 18-year-olds. Bullock headed the first consumer protection division at the Attorney General's office as an Assistant Attorney General. And while he was a great admirer of history, particularly Texas history, Bob Bullock also knew the value of foreseeing the future, something quite evident when he became one of the first elected officials to use computers in his office.

Because I have known discrimination, I appreciate and applaud Bob Bullock's steadfast commitment to equal opportunity. He would let no one turn him around. As the Texas State Comptroller, he was the first elected official to enact an equal opportunity employment policy in his office. I can recall the many times that Bullock shared political alliances with the late Barbara Jordan, the first black woman elected to the Texas State Senate. Bullock also and always looked beyond a person's race or gender. To him, it was only the person's spirit and character that mattered. He was also a friend of our first historically black State school in the State, one born out of segregation, Texas Southern University.

As a mother of children who have grown up in the Texas school system, I am also grateful for his successful efforts to enhance the quality of Texas education by implementing improvements. As Lieutenant Governor in 1991, Bullock helped pass a school plan that encouraged wealthy school districts to share their money with districts less fortunate.

Yet it seems that Bob Bullock, like all Texas heroes, transcends his mere accomplishments. It is his character that we will cherish and remember. Bob Bullock was a force. He had a fiery temper that could put even the hottest Texas chili to shame, and he was as demanding on his staff as he was on himself. Bob Bullock, however, won the position of Lieutenant Governor and he had the respect of all the Senators.

He was one who appreciated a good joke. Although I have not completed my tribute to this great leader, this great Texan, let me say, Madam Speaker, to his wife and to his children, we have truly lost an American hero, a Texas hero, but most of all we have lost a friend who cared and loved for his fellow man and woman more than he cared for himself.

God bless you, Bob Bullock, God bless America, and God bless Texas.

Whenever I fly home to Texas and my plane approaches the Texas State line, I often hear the sound of rising thunder drifting across the land. That rumble is the echoes of Texans, past and present, voicing their solid beliefs in individuality, independence, and State pride. For the past few days, however, that thunder has been still, for the voices of all Texans have been silent in quiet reverence for the passing of former Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock.

After courageously fighting lung cancer and heart disease, Bob Bullock passed away this past Friday. As we Texans like to say, he fought a good fight. He simply ran out of time.

Bob Bullock's long and proud legacy of service to Texas stands as a striking and fitting monument. In addition to his post as Lieutenant Governor, Bullock served 16 years as State Comptroller. Bullock headed the first consumer protection division at the Texas attorney general's office as an assistant attorney general. And while he was a great admirer of history, particularly Texas history, Bob Bullock also knew the value of foreseeing the future, something quite evident when he became one of the first elected officials to use computers at his office.

Because I have known discrimination, I appreciate and applaud Bob Bullock's steadfast commitment to equal opportunity. As the Texas State Comptroller, he was the first elected official to enact an equal opportunity employment policy in his office. I can recall many times where Bullock shared political alliances with the late Barbara Jordan, the first black woman elected to the Texas State Senate. Bullock always looked beyond a person's race or gender. To him, it was only the person's spirit and character that mattered. He was also a friend of our first historically black State School in the State, one born out of segregation—Texas Southern University.

And as a mother whose children were a part of the school system in Texas, I am also grateful for his successful efforts to enhance the quality of the Texas education system by implementing improvements. As Lieutenant Governor in 1991, Bullock helped pass a school plan that encouraged wealthy school districts to share their money with districts less fortunate.

Yet, it seems that Bob Bullock, like all Texas heroes, transcends his mere accomplishments. It is his character that we will cherish and remember. Bob Bullock was a force. He had a fiery temper that could put even the hottest Texas chili to shame, and he was as demanding on his staff as he was on himself. When Bullock won his position as Lieutenant Governor, he took many Texas Senators to task, and soon the Senators deemed his fiery and confrontational demeanor as The Bullock Treatment.

As many know, however, in the midst of the Bullock storm stood a gentle calm. And it is his great capacity for kindness and consideration that most remember. Bob Bullock always had an intense loyalty for his friends and loved ones. He was known for his corps of aides composed of a vast mix of individual talents, a group he affectionately called "the world's largest group of born losers." Through his belief in their abilities, he found ways to optimize the skills and personalities of each person. Perhaps because Bullock stood behind each and every member of his staff, they, too, stood behind him with determination and die-hard loyalty. He also was always ready for a good joke and a hearty laugh.

Bob Bullock learned early in his career that the good of the State often rose well above mere politics. When Governor George W. Bush first entered office, Bullock quickly forged a friendship with the new Governor. Bob Bullock was keen enough to realize that in-fighting with the Capitol could not help his State. He built a foundation for bipartisanship that now drives the State forward.

Bob Bullock now rests in the State Cemetery, which, ironically, now stands in renewed glory thanks to Bullock's renovation efforts. This past Sunday, a crowd of mourners stood below the gray sky and said their quiet good-byes. People from all walks of life attended, a tribute to Bullock's ability to touch a great cross-section of society. And although the entire state claimed him, he loved his beloved Hillsboro and they loved and admired him.

Like all Texas heroes, Bob Bullock embraced the very ideal of Texas. His personality was tough, incendiary, yet compassionate. He was great, and he was grand. And for that, Texas embraced, and still embraces, him.

To his wife Jan, his son and daughter, his stepdaughter, his grandson and all his other family members, we all lost a great Texan and a Great American, long may his legacy be remembered.

RELEASE OF RUDMAN REPORT

uary 19, 1999, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEARNS. Madam Speaker, the report of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board that criticized the state of security at the Department of Energy nuclear weapons laboratories and recommending certain structural reforms was released last week. This advisory board was chaired by former Senator Warren Rudman and includes detailees from the CIA, the FBI, and the Department of Defense. The report was titled, quote, Science at Its Best, Security at Its Worst.

Even though the Clinton administration has tried time and time again to pass the buck on taking responsibility for the security failures and has attempted to place the blame on previous administrations, a current administration spokesman at the White House who was intimately involved in the preparation of the report said the current administration is more culpable than any since the Department of Energy was created in 1977. The Rudman report denounces the administration for ignoring the Republican-proposed reforms at the Energy Department when it took office in 1993.

Here are some of the findings from the Rudman report: One, an Energy Department employee was dead 11 months before officials realized four documents with classified and restricted data were still assigned to him.

It took 45 months to fix a broken doorknob that was stuck in an open position, allowing access to sensitive nuclear information.

Energy Department officials took 35 months to write a work order to replace a lock at a weapons lab facility containing sensitive nuclear information.

Ordering security for mislabeled software took 24 months.

No one knows how many months passed before a security audit team discovered that the main telephone frame door at a weapons lab had been forced open and the lock destroyed.

And lastly, correcting a mistake that allowed secure telephone cryptographic materials to go improperly safeguarded for 51 months.

But most damaging of all is the following section of the Rudman report, and let me read it: "Never have the members of the special investigative panel witnessed a bureaucratic culture so thoroughly saturated with cynicism and disregard for authority. Never before has this panel found such a cavalier attitude towards one of the most serious responsibilities in the Federal Government, control of the design information relating to nuclear weapons. Never before has the panel found an agency with a bureaucratic insolence to dispute, delay and resist implementation of a Presidential directive on security as DOE's bureaucracy tried to do on the President's Decision Directive No. 61 that was issued in February of 1998."

This directive mandated new counterintelligence measures at the labs, but the Advisory Board found that implementation of this directive suffered from "bureaucratic foot-dragging and even," Madam Speaker, recalcitrance" by DOE and lab officials. The report further notes that, quote, "DOE and the weapons laboratories have a deeply rooted culture of low regard for and at times hostility to security issues, which has continually frustrated the efforts of its internal and external critics," end quote.

The Rudman report makes two specific recommendations. The first is that the DOE's "weapon research and stockpile management function should be placed wholly within a new semi-autonomous agency within the Department of Energy that has a clear mission, streamlined bureaucracy, drastically simplified lines of authority and accountability" and the agency's Director would report directly to the Energy Secretary.

The second alternative recommendation was to create a wholly independent agency to handle the previously mentioned functions, and its Director would report directly to the President.

Unfortunately, I personally do not believe that a reorganization or a shake-up of the Department of Energy and how it handles nuclear secrets will be sufficient in destroying the pervasive antiestablishment culture that exists in the Department and at the weapons lab as detailed by the Rudman report. Instead, I agree with the conclusion of the Rudman report which states that the Department of Energy is, quote, "incapable of reforming itself, bureaucratically and culturally, in a lasting way even under an activist Secretary," end quote.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, the only way to protect our Nation's nuclear weapons is through the abolishment of the Department of Energy itself and placing all of its offices in other Federal agencies. I believe the management of our Nation's nuclear weapons and all classified related functions of the Department of Energy should be transferred to the Department of Defense. All other nonclassified functions should be transferred to a semi-independent agency within the Department of Commerce.

The bureaucratic stranglehold that has become the Department of Energy has placed our Nation's security at risk, and the only way out of effectively ending this ineptitude is through the ending of the Department of Energy.

A DAY TO MAKE OUR VOICES HEARD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO) is recognized during morning hour debates for 4 minutes.

Ms. DELAURO. Madam Speaker, I want to take a moment to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) for helping to organize today's morning hour. This week Americans will honor working men and women who help others to organize, who help people take those first difficult steps toward forming a union that protects their right to a livable wage, affordable health care, a secure retirement and a safe workplace.

United employees are a powerful balancing force against runaway corporate power. United employees win better working conditions, pay and benefits for all workers, not just those who belong to unions.

I have always been unapologetic about working arm in arm with Americans who fight for the values that make this Nation great: respect, fairness, security and an opportunity to give our families a brighter future. As we all know, today's battles are infused with these values.

We have come a long way since the days when the United States did not know the meaning of employee rights. We have a labor movement to thank. Unions fought to free their members from back-breaking labor, unsafe conditions and from low wages. Unions fought for basic rights. Many a union worker gave their lives for these gains and these principles.

My own mother worked in a sweatshop in New Haven, Connecticut, during the early part of this century, slaving over a sewing machine. She worked long days in awful conditions for only pennies a dress. No one should ever have to return to these days.

But we do not need to refer to the history books to understand the need for unions today. Organized labor is as relevant and as important today as during those first organizing drives. We do not have sweatshops on the same scale, and there are a litany of labor laws on the books, but attacks still continue. Workers' rights are eaten away at constantly. Employees are losing leverage and their say in the workplace and in the larger community every day.

Over the past 3 years, with the blessing of the Republican majority, the business lobby has encouraged efforts to cut enforcement of worker protection laws and blocked development of programs to improve worker health and worker safety.

I want to talk about a victory in the movement to organize that happened last year in my own district, the Third District of Connecticut, and honor the hard-working men and women who fought for that victory. Last spring, 230 employees at the New Haven Omni Hotel won the right to openly choose their own union. This was a victory over the hotel's long-standing insistence on a secret ballot election. In a fight for the basic right to choose their own union, the employees were supported by elected leaders such as myself, local clergy, academics, students and civil rights groups.

These groups held hearings, they met with hotel managers, and they even threatened to boycott the hotel. Such support should be the rule, not the exception, but sadly it is not. According to a Cornell University study, one in four employees who are active in union campaigns are fired each year for exercising their right to choose a union. Ninety-one percent of employers, when they learn that their workers want to form a union, force employees to attend closed-door meetings, to listen to anti-union propaganda, and once they have organized, working men and women still have to fight for basic rights. At the Stratford Army Engine Plant, Yale and Sikorski employees have had to fight for livable wages, health care, and adequate retirement policies. These are not only assaults on unions, they are assaults on the integrity of our communities.

Since the beginning, working men and women have fought for the values that make this Nation great, equality, fairness, security, and an opportunity to give one's family a bright future. The battle has not been easy, but together we will turn the tide and once again help improve working American's lives and set new directions for this country.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) for inviting me to join this morning. It is an honor to be here every day and every day in the fight to uphold American basic values. The fight is worth it, especially on behalf of American families.

IF NOAH LIVED IN THE UNITED STATES TODAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STEARNS). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, this is not original. It was sent to me by someone else, but I thought it was very apropos for our life today. It is called If Noah Lived in the United States Today.

And the Lord spoke to Noah and said, "In 1 year I'm going to make it rain and cover the whole earth with water until all flesh is destroyed, but I want you to save the righteous people and two of every kind of living thing on the earth. Therefore I'm commanding you to build an ark." In a flash of lightning God delivered the specifications for an ark, and fear and trembling, Noah took the plans and agreed to build he ark.

"Remember," said the Lord, "you must complete the ark and bring everything aboard in 1 year."

Well, exactly 1 year later fierce storm clouds covered the earth, and all the seas of the earth went into tumult. The Lord saw that Noah was sitting in his front yard weeping. "Noah," he shouted, "Where is the ark? Lord, please forgive me," cried Noah "I did my best, but there were big problems.

"First, I had to get a permit for construction, and your plans did not meet the codes. I had to hire an engineering firm to redraw the plans. Then I got into a fight with OSHA over whether or not the ark needed a fire sprinkler system and floatation devices.

"Then my neighbor objected, claiming I was violating zoning ordinances by building the ark in my front yard, so I had to get a variance from the city planning commission. Then I had problems getting enough wood for the ark because there was a ban on cutting trees to protect the spotted owl. I finally convinced the US Forest Service that I needed the wood to save the owls.

"However, the Fish and Wildlife Service won't let me catch any owls, so no owls. The carpenters formed a union and went on strike. I had to negotiate a settlement with the National Labor Relations Board before anyone would pick up a saw or a hammer.

"Now I have 16 carpenters on the ark, but still no owls. When I started rounding up the other animals, I got sued by an animal rights group. They objected to me only taking two of each kind of animal aboard. Just when I got the suit dismissed the EPA notified me that I could not complete the ark without filing an environmental impact statement on your proposed flood.

"They didn't take very kindly to the idea that they had no jurisdiction over the conduct of the Creator of the universe. Then the Army Engineers demanded a map of the proposed new flood plain. So I sent them a globe. Right now I'm trying to resolve a complaint filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission that I'm practicing discrimination by not taking Godless or unbelieving people on board.

"The IRS has seized my assets claiming I'm building an ark in preparation to flee the country to avoid taxes. I just got a notice from the State that I owe them some kind of tax and that I failed to register the ark as a recreational watercraft.

"Finally, the ACLU got the courts to issue an injunction against further construction of the ark saying that since God is flooding the earth it is a religious event and therefore unconstitutional. I really don't think I can finish the ark for another 5 or 6 years," Noah wailed.

The sky began to clear and the sun began to shine and the seas began to calm. A rainbow arched across the sky, and Noah looked up hopefully. "You mean you're not going to destroy the earth, Lord?"

"No," the Lord said sadly, "I don't have to. The government already has."

PROUD AND STRONG SUPPORTER OF ORGANIZED LABOR

uary 19, 1999, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) for his leadership on labor issues on behalf of working families throughout this country, and I would like to commend my friends at the AFL-CIO for organizing the seven days in June activities. This week there are over 110 organized labor rallies taking place across the Nation as a result of their hard work.

Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying loud and clear that I am a proud and strong supporter of organized labor in this country. I am proud to stand with the hard-working men and women who make up the labor movement in America. I am committed to fighting for a middle-class workforce where workers can comfortably support a family and not worry about losing their jobs, and I will continue to urge this Congress to fight not only for a minimum wage, but for a livable wage. I will continue to demand international trade agreements that create more American jobs, not lose them, and I will stand with my friends in the labor movement against any and all initiatives designed to compromise workers' safety, worker rights, or worker benefits.

The history of the U.S. labor movement is a strong and proud one. Organized labor embodies what is best in our constitution, namely our First Amendment freedoms of speech and association. But the Constitution only protects these freedoms. It has been the courage and determination of working women and men that have been the engine of social progress throughout this century.

The fact is nobody ever handed a working person the American dream. Job security, a living wage, the right to collective bargaining, these are things which were fought for. The benefits gained for the courage and blood of organized labor are now commonplace among most American workplaces. It is important to recognize that without the labor movement there would be no minimum wage, there would be no safety standards in the workplace, there would be no pensions or worker health plans. If it were not for organized labor, workers would have no rights, and that is a fact.

Organized labor continues to push for real issues important to real working people, and I urge working people across this country to keep organizing and to keep advocating. We can never allow our country to become a society where a privileged few enjoy all the benefits of the many who work. We must continue to work together in the next century to advance our issues, to pass meaningful labor legislation, and to continue to move forward toward a society which reflects the principles of social and legal justice for all, but this will only happen through continued grassroots organization by dedicated working men and women.

PAUL HARVEY ON GUN CONTROL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. MYRICK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. HEFLEY. Madam Speaker, on Tuesday, April 20 of this year a terrible tragedy occurred at Columbine High School in Colorado, and I do not represent Columbine High School. Now I do not represent Columbine High School. I represent some Littleton addresses, and I am close to Columbine, but I do not exactly represent it, but I took this tragedy very, very personally. It is something that I think all of us have a difficult time getting over.

On Wednesday, April 21, 1 day, 1 day after the tragedy, as I understand it, the chairman of the Democrat Congressional Committee was whipping his troops into line saying that this is a great time for gun control legislation to be presented to the House because it will be good for politics in the next election. I think that is shameful. We should not take advantage of this kind of a tragedy for political purposes.

I did not engage in the debate last week when we were dealing with this because I did not feel we were doing anything that was really very meaningful. Demagoguery flowed from both sides like water, and nothing much was really accomplished, and as the various amendments came up, I kept asking myself would this have done anything in the Columbine case if this amendment had been law, and most cases, sadly I have to say absolutely not.

Recently I heard a Paul Harvey broadcast which I think maybe opens up the perspective on the Columbine High School situation, and I would like to share that with my colleagues this morning:

If only the parents had kept their children away from the guns, we wouldn't have had such a tragedy. Yeah, it must have been the guns. It couldn't have been because of half of our children being raised in broken homes. It couldn't have been because our children get to spend an average of 30 seconds in meaningful conversation with their parents each day. After all, we give our children quality time.

It couldn't have been because we treat our children as pets and our pets as children. It couldn't have been because we place our children in the day care centers where they learn their socialization skills among their peers under the law of the jungle while employees, who have no vested interest in the children, look on and make sure that no blood is spilled.

It couldn't have been because we allow our children to watch an average of 7 hours of television a day filled with the glorification of sex and violence that isn't fit for adult consumption. It couldn't have been because we allow our children to enter into the virtual worlds in which, to win the game, one must kill as many opponents as possible in the most sadistic way possible.

It couldn't have been because our children, who historically have been seen as a blessing from God, are now being viewed as either a mistake created when contraception fails or inconveniences that parents try to raise in their spare time.

It couldn't have been because our Nation is the world leader in developing a culture of death in which 20 million to 30 million babies have been killed by abortion. It couldn't have been because we give 2-year prison sentences to teenagers who kill their newborns.

It couldn't have been because our school systems teach the children that they are nothing but glorified apes who have evolutionized out of some primordial soup of mud by teaching evolution is fact and by handing out condoms as if they were candy. It couldn't have been because we teach our children that there are no laws of morality that transcend us, that everything is relative and that actions do not have consequences. What the heck, the President gets away with it. No, it must have been the guns.

I think Paul Harvey's statement illustrates the corruption that has permeated our society that leads to things like Columbine. No amount of gun legislation will solve the problems in our society. The answers are complex, and they are multi-faceted. There is no quick fix. It is time that we looked at the roots of our problems and not just at the surface symptoms.

VALUE OF THE UNIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) is recognized during morning hour debates for 2 minutes.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, Madam Speaker, my father, Frank Kucinich, senior, was a truck driver and he drove a truck for 35 years, and he was proud of the work that he did, and he was also proud to be a member of Local 407 of the Teamsters Union.

I grew up with a heritage of believing in the importance of people belonging to an organized labor group, and as I was growing up, I saw how my father would attend union meetings. And I would have the occasion to go with him to some of those meetings. And I heard people talk about their desire for a better wage, not just for themselves, but for their families. I heard people talk about the desire for improved health care benefits, not just for themselves, but for their families.

I heard people talk about retirement security, not just for themselves, but for their families, and so what I saw in growing up in Cleveland, Ohio was men and women coming together to try to improve not only their lot but the lot of their families.

All across this country, working men and women are going to work every day with the intention of building a better quality of life, and the only way they can do that is to stay united, and that is what unions are all about. In unity there is strength. And across this country, men and women have been able to have a better wage level and because of that have helped to assure higher wages in the nonorganized sector.

Across this country, men and women have been able to have better health benefits, better retirement benefits because they have united, and that is something that is profoundly American. We have communicated to the world this idea that in unity there is strength, and through working men and women organizing we have demonstrated that even the humblest person should have an opportunity to have a position at the table of great power and that the humblest person in joining with others can have some control over his or her destiny and over his or her quality of life.

I am glad to be part of a Democratic Party which supports working men and women.

WELCOME TO REVEREND STEVEN L. WOLVERTON

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. MYRICK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. ERLICH) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. EHRlich. Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce you to the Reverend Steven L. Wolverson, who served as my Legislative Fellow in my congressional office in 1997. Steve is in the gallery to the right, and I welcome him to the House of Representatives here today. He is an electrical engineer with the Federal Government, as well as a youth pastor at Lee Street Memorial Baptist Church in Baltimore, Maryland.

Steve and his wife, Vicki, lead a dynamic, growing youth ministry in south Baltimore called LifeChangers, which is dedicated to establishing role models and positive life opportunities for inner-city youth. More recently he is working with a Baltimore businessman to renovate an old department store and establish a private evangelical Christian school in the southern Baltimore peninsula. I commend him on the investment he is making on behalf of the young people of Baltimore City.

Steve is a strong believer in serving God and his country, and it is my privilege to welcome him to the floor of the United States House of Representatives. Thank you, Steve, for your inspiring life, and welcome.

CELEBRATING ORGANIZED LABOR FOR AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentlewoman from Nevada (Ms. BERKLEY) is recognized during morning hour debates for 4 minutes.

Ms. BERKLEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in tribute to America's working men and women. I come from a working family. I come from a union family. I know what it is like to worry whether one's paycheck is going to stretch to the next one. I know what it is like to be laid off.

I strongly support organized labor because my father was able to put a roof over our heads, clothes on our backs, a good car in our garage, food on our table, and two daughters through college and law school because of the union wages he earned in Las Vegas.

Madam Speaker, 37 years ago my family arrived in Las Vegas with all of our possessions in a U-Haul hooked up to the back of the car. My dad joined the culinary union and landed a job as a waiter at the old Sands Hotel on the Las Vegas strip. That union job was the greatest break my family ever received. It opened the doors to opportunity for all of us.

I am the first person in my family to go to college. I worked my way through college and law school. I waitressed at the Sands Hotel, ran keno at the Desert Inn, and cocktail waitressed at the Hacienda, the Aladdin and Holiday Casino, all on the Las Vegas strip. Each of these union jobs contributed to my ability to put myself through college and law school.

Let me tell my colleagues, I am just one of hundreds of thousands of fellow Nevadans who have benefited from the positive influence of organized labor in my town. Almost without exception, the major employers of the thriving resort industry in Las Vegas have recognized that their industry and the entire city has grown strong because of good wages and good working conditions that good labor contracts have created. The prosperity of Las Vegas, built by the strong minds and backs of working men and women, can serve as a model for other parts of the country.

First and foremost, trade unions build strong families. America needs families earning a decent living, wages good enough to afford that home, that car, and an education for their children. That is how we grow the American economy.

Madam Speaker, I want our workers to have jobs free from the threats of raids on our family leave and our medical leave, free from raids on Social Security and Medicare, and free from raids on the right of every worker to collective bargaining. This country is better off for a 5-day work week, overtime pay, paid holidays and vacations, health insurance, child labor laws, and a minimum wage, all won by organized labor. Organized labor is vital to the well-being of our country, our families, and our communities. It makes a positive difference for all of us, and that is why, that is why I join in this week's celebration of organized labor.

COST OF GOVERNMENT DAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Madam Speaker, I rise today on behalf of working Americans and every American, because we have reached a milestone on the calendar. Today, June 22, 1999, ranks as Cost of Government Day.

Now, it is true that yesterday, with the summer solstice gave us our longest period of daylight, the longest day of the year, but, Madam Speaker, I believe all Americans, especially those who work so hard to feed their families, need to know that today marks the day, 170-plus days into the calendar year, when Americans can finally go to work for their families instead of paying the cost of our bloated bureaucracy and government.

What does it mean to working families, Madam Speaker? What does it mean to every American? Well, simply this: According to Americans for Tax Reform, Madam Speaker, Federal regulations during 1998 cost American taxpayers over $1 trillion. That translates to over $3,800 for every man, woman and child this year. Americans for Tax Reform estimates that working American will work in excess of 1 month, almost 40 days, in excess of 38 days, to pay for regulatory costs.

Madam Speaker, that is why today I am pleased to come to the floor to announce that I will reintroduce on this, the Cost of Government Day, the Congressional Responsibility Act. It is being sponsored in the other body by my good friend, the senior Senator from Kansas Mr. BROWNBACK. The Congressional Responsibility Act requires that new Federal regulations cannot take effect until Congress approves them and the President signs them, or until his veto is overridden.

Madam Speaker, in the weight of this compelling, overwhelming evidence that our government has grown too large and costs working Americans too much, I say it is important to restore what our Constitution said and our Founders, following the beautiful Preamble which serves as more than just a mission statement for our United States; in our Constitution, the very blueprint of our Republic, says this: Article I, section 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.

In other words, Madam Speaker, all lawmaking authority. But as historians look back upon the 20th century, Madam Speaker, they will talk about the unintended rise of, in essence, a fourth branch of government, the regulatory branch, because to deal with emerging industries, to deal with trying to control so many sectors of our economy, the Congress ceded, delegated its authority to an alphabet soup of acronymed agencies in the executive branch, where, Madam Speaker, unelected, unaccountable Washington bureaucrats, in essence, make law.

Madam Speaker, a personal indulgence. J.D. in my name does not stand for juris doctor. I am not a lawyer; I never played one on TV. That is considered an asset in Arizona. But one need not be a lawyer to recognize that when Washington bureaucrats make law, the unelected, the unaccountable suddenly have great power in our society, to the point now where we work 170-plus days every year just to pay for the cost of government; where all Americans work in excess of 1 month, in excess of 38 days to pay for regulations.

What we say with the Congressional Responsibility Act is quite simple. Those regulatory agencies can continue to promulgate and formulate regulations, but, Madam Speaker, men and women of goodwill from both sides of the aisle, constitutionally elected by their constituents, are sent to Washington to make tough choices, and what the Congressional Responsibility Act would simply do would be to say this: Once a regulation is promulgated, have it sent to the Congress for an up or down vote. That way, Madam Speaker, accountability, responsibility, authority is restored where our Founders wanted it to be: with those elected to the Congress of the United States, with those who are accountable to the people.

Madam Speaker, I ask all of my colleagues to join Senator BROWNBACK, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and me in sponsoring and voting for the Congressional Responsibility Act.

AMERICANS' RIGHT TO ORGANIZE: GOOD FOR AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) is recognized during morning hour debates for 3 minutes.

Mr. TIERNEY. Madam Speaker, I rise today to thank my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) and others who have come before us to talk about the right of American men and women to organize; certainly, the right to decide whether or not they choose to organize to be represented in the workplace to determine what their wages might be, what benefits they might get, what the safety factors at work might be, what hours they might work, all of those things that many of us have become used to understanding as a valid exercise in the workplace.

Madam Speaker, 74 percent of the American people believe that workers should be able to decide whether they want to join a union, and they should be able to make that decision without interference by management. People support a fair and open process that allows for equal access and equal time, for any discussion of what it means to join a union. And, they support a decision-making process that reaches a timely conclusion on that issue. That means that when workers vote freely to join a union, that decision is honored and accepted by management.

The reality, unfortunately, is far different. Threats, intimidation and harassment are all too commonly used against those who seek to form a union. In nearly one-third of all organizing drives, one or more workers are fired illegally. If workers are able to overcome those obstacles and form a union, the system allows for endless legal challenges and stonewalling by employers. The laws designed to protect the freedom to form a union are failing, and the penalties for ignoring them are too small to be a deterrent.

This is not a level playing field, and it is well past the time that we restore some measure of balance to the system.

Madam Speaker, we talk a good deal in this Chamber about how we might improve the lives of American families. I suggest that one specific way in which we can do that is to allow for American workers who so choose to join a union. It can make a significant difference in the ability of those workers to provide for their families.

Recently in my district, 24 employees of a small enterprise that made parts for engines being produced by the General Electric facility in Lynn signed cards to join a union. An overwhelming majority wanted that right. They had been earning $6.10 an hour, and unionized employees doing the same work were making $14 to $18 an hour.

Segments of the community, including me, contacted the owner of that company, Metal Improvements, and urged that it respect the desires of the workers and sit down at the bargaining table in good faith. I am happy to report that that was done. Unfortunately, in too many other instances, management mounts an endless series of challenges to the workers' rights to organize. The results can be bitterness and divisiveness that undermine productivity.

Madam Speaker, unions not only serve their members well, they serve the broader interests of our society. When social service workers who care for the elderly and the mentally ill and the mentally retarded earn only $7 or $8 or $9 with little or no pension or health care, as many do in my district, they are often forced to work two or three jobs a day just to make ends meet. Their ability to do just one job well suffers. Turnover is high, and the quality of care is diminished.

Madam Speaker, by joining a union, these workers can raise their standard of living, and they ought to be able to have that right to make that decision.

FREEDOM TO CHOOSE A VOICE AT WORK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. BONIOR. Madam Speaker, earlier this year a number of us heard some powerful, real-life stories and experiences of workers from North Carolina and Las Vegas, Nevada, who were trying to organize. Their stories are the stories of millions of working men and women who want a stronger voice in our workplace. Their stories are about improving lives and building better communities. They are stories that need to be told across this country. All of us need to hear the challenges workers face when they choose to organize.

When the American public learns about the tactics that employers use, threats of losing their job, verbal and sexual harassment and mandatory antiunion meetings, they overwhelmingly, overwhelmingly support the freedom to choose a voice at work. That is why the AFL-CIO has launched the "Seven Days In June," a week-long series of community forums and rallies and demonstrations all across this country.

From the June 19 to June 25, we will hear more and more of these stories. There will be more than 120 activities in 36 States, activities which started last Saturday with our colleague, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ) holding a community forum in Orange County, California.

Bringing dignity to the workplace is not easy, but it can and is being done. In fact, on the 27th of February of this year, 75,000 home care workers in Los Angeles won the largest organizing victory in 60 years when they voted to join the Service Employees International Union. This was a tremendous victory, but it did not happen overnight. It was the culmination of 10 years of hard work, of building a broad-based coalition, of gaining the support of home care consumers and political leaders.

In the end, it was about bringing the community together, uniting families behind the notion that those who take care of our parents and our grandparents ought to have some basic worker rights: A decent wage, not $5 an hour, $6 an hour, $7 an hour like they are making today; safe working conditions, and adequate benefits.

These kinds of victories are occurring more and more. The doctors in our country are starting to organize unions because of their frustration with the health care system that will not let them practice what they have learned and took so long to learn in their studies.

The graduate assistants teaching at universities and colleges all over the country are now organizing, with great victories recently occurring at the University of California.

Workers are holding and winning more union elections than in the previous year, winning 51 percent of the time in 1998. That figure is particularly remarkable when we look at the tactics that employers use to squelch organizing drives: Firing pro union employees, using intimidating and verbal harassment at the workplace, holding closed-door one-on-one shakedown sessions with workers, and spending millions on anti-union consultants.

With all these cards that are stacked against the workers, how do they win? First and foremost, it comes from deep down. It comes from a resolve and a commitment to be treated with dignity and with respect.

It also comes from raising awareness, from building coalitions with the religious community, the civic communities, with political leaders, and from building a stronger community in general.

For those of us who care deeply about working families and strengthening our community, we have a responsibility and indeed an obligation to lend our voices to workers who have chosen to organize. I know some who have joined the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PALLONE) and myself recently in sending a letter to A&P food-stores simply to allow strawberry workers the choice to organize. I thank Members for that.

For those who are unaware of the situation, the California strawberry industry is booming with the annual sales of $650 million. Yet, workers stoop to pick the berries for at least 12 hours a day and earn only $8,500 a season. Last spring the Wall Street Journal reported shocking sanitation conditions at these farms, where workers have insufficient drinking water, squalid restrooms, where workers have not been paid for overtime for 4 years, and where there is widespread sexual harassment against female employees.

To bring some semblance of dignity to their workplace, the strawberry workers simply want the ability to choose their own representation, but they have repeatedly faced attacks by the industry, including plowing under the fields, and flying in sham workers to vote in union elections, just to break the union. They would plow the fields under and import workers from other parts of the country, or other countries.

This is the exact type of situation that deserves the support from elected leaders, and there are many more situations just like that going on throughout this country.

So raising our voices and standing with the strawberry workers is one thing we can do to be helpful, but there are many more. During these 7 days in June, there are opportunities for all of us to participate in activities which will help our families have the freedom to choose a voice at work.

I invite all of my colleagues to stand together with workers, clergy, community leaders to highlight the hopes and dreams of families who are seeking to bring basic human compassion to their workplace, because when we do that, we not only build a better workplace for workers who are unionized, but for workers who are nonunionized. We set the floor, we set the standard for them. But beyond all of that, we build better communities.

I thank my colleagues who have come to speak on this and who have spoken. I ask my other colleagues to join us in these 7 days in June.

SEVEN DAYS IN JUNE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. MYRICK). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) is recognized during morning hour debates for 3 minutes.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) for organizing this discussion in support of Seven Days in June, June 7 to 25. This is a week celebrating union organizing victories, and recognizing the importance of giving workers the freedom to choose a voice at work.

I am a proud member of UNITE, the needle trades union. I am proud of the accomplishments the union movement has won. Unions brought us the 40-hour work week, workers compensation, overtime compensation, and the end of child labor in this country.

Union members on average earn 32 percent more than other workers. They are more likely to receive health insurance and pension benefits from their employers.

More importantly, they have provided an organized voice for workers who have used that voice to make improvements in productivity, workplace safety, and environmental conditions.

Today there is perhaps no greater evidence of the need for workers to organize than the health care industry. The power of the for-profit health care industry has led to unwise cost-cutting that threatens not only the health and financial security of health care workers, but the patients they serve.

Several years ago, two nurses in New Jersey raised concerns about the effect of drive-through deliveries on mothers and infants, moms and babies being sent home the same day of delivery. One nurse, a union member, was threatened with retaliation, but was protected by her union. The other, an unorganized worker, had no one to intervene on her behalf.

Since then, Congress has passed a prohibition on drive-through deliveries, but without protection against retaliation, how many health care workers will be willing to talk about dangerous conditions? We need to pass whistle-blower protections, but we also need to give health care workers the opportunity to join a union if they want to.

Health care workers all over the country are looking to unions to protect them when they report problems. They are looking to unions to ensure they have safe working conditions.

This week in Chicago the AMA, the American Medical Association, is meeting to talk about unionization so physicians can have a strong voice in negotiating with large HMOs that dictate the terms of patient care.

Yet, when workers want to form a union, they face tremendous obstructions. The decks are stacked against them. At the same time that the AMA was meeting in Chicago, respiratory therapists from Vencor Hospital held a press conference with the help of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

The therapists, concerned about the impacts on patients' safety as a result of a planned 25 percent budget cut, expressed their desire to form a union. They have been confronted with a series of anti-union tactics by their employer. One nurse was fired because she spoke out in support of union representation.

Workers across the country, particularly in the health care area, are deciding that they need union representation to protect themselves, their families, and their patients. We should ensure that they have a fair opportunity to make that choice. It is as American as apple pie.

CELEBRATING FREEDOM OF WORKERS TO JOIN A UNION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) is recognized during morning hour debates for 3 minutes.

Ms. NORTON. Madam Speaker, I come to the floor in celebration of the freedom of workers to join unions. Would that it were only a celebration for 7 days in June. Workers across the United States are crying out for their right to join unions. Is this America? It is a sad day when we have to draw attention to the importance of the freedom to organize in a society like ours.

One of those 7 days in June will be this Friday, the day in the District of Columbia where Members of the region will sit and hear testimony from union members in this region about the difficulties they have had in joining unions and forming unions in this region.

I know something about this area. I continue to be a tenured professor of law at Georgetown University Law Center. When I was full-time, one of the major courses that I taught was labor law, and I saw and read and studied the deterioration of workers' rights, of the right to strike.

I saw the contrasts between a period of great prosperity in American life when business understood that part of the symmetry of the workplace was the right to organize. We have come to a point instead where there is no longer talk about occasional union-busting, but workers meet wholesale resistance to the development of unions in the workplace whereby most employers, confronted with workers who want to join unions, develop strategies to keep unions from even getting a vote on whether workers want a union, in fact.

Show me a society where the right to organize is in danger, and I will show Members a society without full democracy.

What has our society come to? Wall Street is bursting at the seams. We have had surpluses for years on end. We have the best economy of the century, and we do not want workers to organize to get a fair share of that economy? We are sending people out off the welfare rolls, as well we should, and we do not want them to be organized so they can get a fair share, so they can in fact support their families as they leave welfare?

What have employers to fear? After all, unions have to win a vote the way we have to win a vote in order to come back to this House every 2 years. That is hard to do with today's demographics, where workers are by no means automatically oriented towards unions. Why, then, do half of the employers threaten to shut down if their workers organize? Why do they fire one in four workers who in fact organize?

Despite these extraordinary efforts, unions are now having remarkable success. They are winning half of their elections of 500 or more unions. Minority and female workers in particular fare much better when they are organized than when they are not.

THE MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELLER. Madam Speaker, this is an important year. As I look back over the last few years and the challenges that we have, and of course there have been big challenges, doing some things we were told we could not do, I remember when I was first elected in 1994 we came to Washington to change how Washington works. There was a group of us in the majority here, and all of us were committed to doing some things there were those who told us we could not do, balancing the budget, cutting taxes for the middle class, reforming our welfare system, taming the tax collectors. But by sticking together and being persistent, we accomplished those very great challenges.

We balanced the budget for the first time in 2 years, we cut taxes for the first time in 16 years. In fact, in Illinois, my home State, 3 million Illinois children now benefit from the $500 per child tax credit. When we think about that, that is $1.5 million that now stays in Illinois, rather than coming to Washington to be spent. I personally think that the folks back home can better spend their hard-earned dollars in Illinois than I can for them in Washington.

On welfare reform, the first real welfare reform in a generation is working so well that in my home State of Illinois we have now seen our welfare rolls cut in half.

When it comes to taming the tax collector, we enacted a very fundamental change with IRS reform. If Members have ever been audited or gone to court with IRS in the past, they treated one as guilty until proven innocent. But thanks to this Republican Congress, we now have the same rights in the IRS that we have in the courtroom; that is, we are innocent until the IRS proves us guilty.

Now we have some big challenges before us again this year, some challenges that the folks particularly on this side of the aisle say cannot be done. Republicans want to strengthen our local schools and make them safer. We want to strengthen social security and Medicare. In fact, we want to lock away for the first time in 30 years 100 percent of the social security surplus, so it is used only for social security. We want to pay down the national debt. We also want to continue working to lower the tax burden on middle class working families.

I believe, Madam Speaker, this year as we work to lower the tax burden on the middle class that we should listen to those concerns that I hear in the union halls and the South Side of Chicago and the south suburbs, in the VFW and local coffee shops and grain elevators.

Not only do people feel their taxes are too high, but they feel the Tax Code is too complicated, it needs to be simplified, and that the Tax Code is really unfair. I believe the first place we should start as we work to make our Tax Code fairer and more simpler is to address the most unfair consequence of today's Tax Code. That is something that has been nicknamed today the marriage tax penalty.

Why it is so important that we address this, this particular important issue that affects working middle class families, is to ask a series of questions. That is, do Americans feel that it is fair, do Americans feel that it is right, that a married working couple with two incomes pays on average $1,400 more in higher taxes just because they are married? Do Americans feel that it is right, do Americans feel that it is fair, that 21 million married working couples, on average, pay $1,400 more in higher taxes just because they are married?

It is just plain wrong that a married working couple pays $1,400 more in higher taxes than an identical couple living together outside of marriage. That is wrong. The marriage tax penalty on average is $1,400. Back home in the South suburbs and in the South side of Chicago that is one year's tuition at a junior college, a local community college. It is 3 months in day care. It is several months worth of car payments. It is real money to real people, and it is just wrong that under our Tax Code married working couples pay more just because they are married.

Let me give an example here of a south suburban couple on the south suburbs of Chicago. We have a machinist, who of course works at the Joliet Caterpillar Plant making that big equipment. He makes $30,500 a year.

Under our current Tax Code, if he is single and files as a single taxpayer, after we subtract the standard deduction and exemption, if he makes $30,500, he is in the 15 percent tax bracket. But if he meets and decides that he wants to get married to a schoolteacher with an identical income, and her income is $30,500, of course, she is in the 15 percent tax bracket if she is single and stays single, but if she decides to marry this machinist their combined income is $61,000 because they file jointly, which pushes them into the 28 percent tax bracket.

With the marriage tax penalty, they pay on average the almost $1,400 in marriage tax penalty if they choose to get married. If they choose not to, they do not pay that marriage tax penalty.

Madam Speaker, the Marriage Tax Elimination Act has 230 cosponsors, a majority of this House. Let us make elimination of the marriage tax penalty our number one priority as we work to lower taxes for American families. Let us simplify to make the Tax Code fair to eliminate the marriage tax penalty.

COST OF GOVERNMENT DAY

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, today is Cost of Government Day, and as George Bernard Shaw once said, "A government which robs from Peter to pay Paul can always depend upon the support of Paul."

Well, the tax paying Americans have been robbed because during the first 173 days of the year, every penny earned by the hard-working men and women of this Nation has been used to pay for government bureaucracy and the added cost of government regulations.

It did not go to pay for their kids' education. It did not go to pay for medical costs or expenses. It did not go to pay for the home mortgage. It all went to pay for government bureaucracy and regulatory agencies.

Almost one-half of the year's effort of these hard-working Americans was spent just to pick up the tab for government bloated bureaucracy. Decades, decades of unchecked growth and deficit spending by the tax and spenders have left the hard-working men and women of this country with this crushing tax burden.

The vast majority of Americans do not object to paying their fair share of taxes, but they do object to the suffocating level of taxation that exists today.

Mr. Speaker, for our children's sake, let us allow hard-working families to keep more of their money, not less. Let us stop robbing Peter to pay Paul.

I urge my colleagues to support meaningful tax reform this year.

SALUTE TO DALLAS STARS, STANLEY CUP CHAMPIONS

(Mr. FROST asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Dallas Stars, the 1999 NHL champions.

The Stars electrified all of North Texas en route to winning the oldest trophy in sports, the Stanley Cup.

Along the way, the champs gave us some unforgettable performances. Whether it was the clutch play of Center Mike Modano, the sparkling saves of veteran goalie Eddie "the Eagle" Belfour, the crushing defense of Captain Derian Hatcher, or the bravery of Brett Hull, who scored the Cup-winning goal, it seemed like every game a different Star player stepped up and inspired the team to victory.

To all of the Dallas Stars, I say thank you on behalf of all Texans. You have shown the whole country that Big-D is more than just America's greatest football town.

Mr. Speaker, the Stanley Cup was the first leg of what will be the 1999 Texas hat trick. I am putting my colleagues on notice. Texas teams will end the century by winning, not only the Stanley Cup, but the NBA championship and the World Series as well.

Congratulations again to the mighty Dallas Stars, 1999 Stanley Cup champions.

PRESERVATION: PROTECTING AMERICA'S TREASURED LAND

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, as I heard from my youth advisory committee visiting the Capitol today, urban sprawl has become a serious concern to Americans in many parts of the country, from the rural farm country in Lancaster and Chester County, Pennsylvania, to suburbs in the south and west.

There are several ways that Congress can help to prevent further unbridled development, yet still keep individual freedoms intact.

Today we will take one small step, through the Patriot Bill, to preserve land in Pennsylvania that is central to our American heritage. It is vital that we preserve two of our Revolutionary War treasures, the historic battlefields of Brandywine and Paoli. It will be a tragedy to lose this history to a housing development that now threatens the region.

By the same token, we must also take a larger step to give individuals in this country incentives to preserve their farmland and open space. By eliminating such burdensome taxes as the estate tax, capital gains tax which threatens so many family farmers, we allow farms in coveted open space to remain intact.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote for farms and for open space. First support the Patriot Bill. Secondly, let us get rid of the death tax once and for all.

CONDEMN THE SYNAGOGUE BURNINGS IN SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the logical final outcome of hate crimes is the nightmare we see on our television sets every night in Kosovo. This past weekend, in the State of California, three synagogues were set on fire.

This past year in this free society, which is based on respect for all religions, Mr. Speaker, there were over 8,000 hate crimes in the United States. Some of these were directed on the basis of race, religion, disability, sexual orientation, or gender.

Today, I am introducing a resolution condemning this outrageous act, which resulted in the destruction of three Jewish places of worship in the Sacramento area of California.

Scores of my colleagues from across the political spectrum are joining me in this resolution. I ask all of my colleagues to join and express unanimously our condemnation of these outrageous acts and provide assistance to all relevant agencies to bring the perpetrators to justice.

SMITHSONIAN FOLKLIFE FESTIVAL

(Mr. BASS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BASS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate New Hampshire's participation in the 33rd Annual Smithsonian Folklife Festival beginning tomorrow on the National Mall.

This festival is a celebration of the history, heritage, and culture that makes the Granite State one of a kind. More than 140 participants will be in the national spotlight exemplifying what has made New Hampshire such a beautiful, important, and unique State for the past 23 years.

The spectacular event will also include a celebration of New Hampshire's political history, as well as its essential role as the traditional host of the first-in-the-Nation Presidential primary.

Over the next 2 weeks, more than 1 million people will join representatives from New Hampshire, South Africa, and Romania in showcasing their traditions and customs through expeditions of music, dance, food, crafts, storytelling, and art.

I am extremely proud to have my home State represented here in the Nation's Capital, and I encourage everyone to find their way down to the National Mall to help New Hampshire celebrate its proud history and culture.

COMPANIES MOVING OVERSEAS AND AMERICA IS LOSING JOBS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the Hanover Shoe Company of Franklin, West Virginia is moving overseas. Another 350 jobs going overseas. But the workers have been told, and I quote, "Do not worry. You will find a job."

Beam me up, Mr. Speaker. Every day, good paying manufacturing jobs going overseas, being replaced by minimum wage service-sector jobs. Enough is enough. A superpower does not act like a colony.

The sad truth is "made in America" is now street talk for teen pregnancy.

I yield back all the minimum wage part-time jobs without benefits in these United States of America.

STAND UP TO THE GREEDY HAND OF GOVERNMENT

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, Thomas Paine, a true patriot and American hero who, of course, is no longer taught in many public schools today, once wrote: "We still find the greedy hand of government thrusting itself into every corner and crevice of industry and grasping the spoil of the multitude."

Although students today no longer find The Rights of Man on their reading lists, they would do well to take heed of Thomas Paine's observation that the government has an inevitable tendency to seek to expand its power and to confiscate the fruits of our labor. It is like a law of nature. Anyone who disputes this fact is invited to step forward and call his first witness.

Government grows and grows, and it commands more and more of what we earn. Taxes go up and our freedom necessarily is reduced. Republicans believe that the greedy hand of government has reached too far, and that Americans have seen too many of their freedoms reduced. It is time to stand up to the greedy hand of government.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG FAIRNESS ACT

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, many Democrats in the House of Representatives are working together to lower the cost of prescription drugs. We are asking this Congress to pass the Prescription Drug Fairness Act.

Unfortunately, the drug companies and my friends on the other side of the aisle do not seem much interested in letting this pass.

The drug companies will give lower prices to HMOs, they will give lower drug prices to hospitals, they will give lower drug prices to insurance companies and to the VA, but they charge senior citizens out of pocket literally twice as much in many cases for prescription drugs than they do these preferred buyers.

The prescription drug companies are banding together to oppose the Prescription Drug Fairness Act on the House floor. They say that this legislation will stifle innovation and hurt research. They say it will cost them so much money they will not be able to continue to develop new drugs. They do not say anything, Mr. Speaker, about huge executive drug companies' salaries. They do not say anything about record $22 billion drug company profits.

They do not say anything about marketing, about salespeople and about the multimillion-dollar lobbying company campaign they are foisting upon us.

TRIBUTE TO WARDELL YATAGHAN

(Mr. DAVIS of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Wardell Yataghan, a gentleman who recently passed away and was president of the Resident Council of Rockwell Gardens, a public housing development in Chicago and a founder of the Coalition to Save Public Housing.

Wardell, unfortunately, died too soon, but he gave his life as an inspiration and as a light for those who live in public housing. And I think as a testament to him, I want to urge that we continue to support public housing in the United States.

JUVENILE DIABETES FOUNDATION CHILDREN'S CONGRESS

(Mr. NETHERCUTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NETHERCUTT. Mr. Speaker, today, this week, children from every State in the Union have come to Washington to participate in the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation Children's Congress. As the cochairman of the House Diabetes Caucus, which boasts 265 Members of this body who have dedicated themselves to trying to find a cure for diabetes, it is fitting that we pay tribute to these young people who came here today and participated in a ceremony on the west front of the Capitol to highlight the need to cure diabetes.

This is not only an adult disease, it is a child's disease, a cruel children's disease that affects millions of people in this country. It is necessary, it is appropriate that this Congress devote adequate resources to try to find a cure for disease through research.

So I am happy to join all the other Members of the caucus in saluting the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation and all the children who participated here today.

I am especially proud of Nancy Stockton, the delegate from Cheney, Washington. Nancy is a tribute to her family, her community and all young people with diabetes.

CONGRESS MUST PASS COMMON SENSE GUN SAFETY LEGISLATION

(Ms. DELAURO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, last week, in the dead of the night, the Republican leadership responded to the tragedy in Littleton, Colorado, by trying to weaken gun safety laws. Instead of taking up the bipartisan measures already approved by the other Chamber, the Republican leadership joined with the NRA to kill common-sense gun safety measures and blow holes in the Brady law. Now, we are back to square one.

But I am an optimist, and I believe that this body can do what is right for America. I call on my colleagues to meet us halfway, close the loophole once and for all that allows criminals to arm themselves at gun shows without any background check at all. Let us ensure that handguns are sold with child safety locks so that children do not accidentally hurt themselves or anyone else when they find a weapon at home.

These are mainstream ideas that parents and families in the country want passed. The cost of delay is steep. Thirteen children are killed every day with guns. One hundred thousand guns are brought to schools every year. Let us take up gun legislation that will keep guns in responsible hands.

REPUBLICANS WANT TO CUT TAXES, NOT INCREASE THEM

(Mr. CHABOT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, the Democrats are arguing among themselves about which taxes they want to raise, about how to come up with additional revenue. Anyone who has any doubt about the truth of this statement need merely consult with statements made by the President, the House minority leader, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), and the minority leader in the other body, TOM DASCHLE.

The President said this past January, while in Buffalo, New York, that he was opposed to giving the surplus back to the American taxpayers who produced it because, "You might not spend it right." The President thinks that the government knows better how to spend our money than the people who earned it.

The House minority leader stated his vision of expanding the Federal education bureaucracy by cutting defense and raising taxes. In fact, he said he would be proud to do it.

And now we have the minority leader in the other body who just this past weekend said that tax increases were on the table. Maybe on the Democrats' table, but they are not on the Republicans' table. In fact, we are debating which taxes to cut.

Let us reduce the taxes on the people of this Nation.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 987

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of the bill H.R. 987.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, June 22, 1999.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
The Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted to Clause 2(h) of Rule II of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received the following message from the Secretary of the Senate on June 21, 1999 at 1:21 p.m.

That the Senate passed without amendment H. Con. Res. 105.

With best wishes, I am
Sincerely,

JEFF TRANDAHLL,
Clerk.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 8, rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken later today.

EXPRESSING SENSE OF HOUSE REGARDING IMPORTANCE OF RAISING PUBLIC AWARENESS OF PROSTATE CANCER

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 211) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives regarding the importance of raising public awareness of prostate cancer, and of regular testing and examinations in the fight against prostate cancer.

H. RES. 211

Whereas nearly 180,000 men will be diagnosed with prostate cancer in 1999, and an estimated 37,000 men will die of the disease;

Whereas prostate cancer is the second most common form of cancer among men and the second leading cause of cancer death among men;

Whereas prostate cancer can often be treated successfully if detected early on, although most symptoms are nonspecific and there are few reliable risk factors;

Whereas education and regular testing and examinations are critical to detecting and treating prostate cancer in a timely manner;

Whereas the American Cancer Society recommends that all men aged 50 and over have annual examinations and tests for prostate cancer, and that African American men and men with family histories of prostate cancer, who are at higher risk for the disease, should consider taking such steps at an earlier age;

Whereas the House of Representatives as an institution, and Members of Congress as individuals, are in unique positions to help raise public awareness about the detection and treatment of prostate cancer and to support the fight against prostate cancer: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that—

(1) all American men should take an active role in the fight against prostate cancer by all the means that are available to them, including regular testing and medical examinations;

(2) the role played by national and community organizations and health care providers in promoting awareness of the importance of regular examinations and testing for prostate cancer, and in providing related information, support, and access to services, should be recognized and applauded;

(3) the Federal Government has a responsibility to—

(A) endeavor to raise awareness about the importance of the early detection of, and proper treatment for, prostate cancer;

(B) continue to fund research so that the causes of, and improved treatment for, prostate cancer may be discovered; and

(C) continue to consider ways to improve access to, and the quality of, health care services for detecting and treating prostate cancer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation under consideration, H. Res. 211, and to insert extraneous material in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise, of course, in support of H. Res. 211, a resolution to raise public awareness of prostate cancer and convey the importance of regular testing and examinations to fight this terrible disease. I am proud to be an original cosponsor, and certainly it is very fitting that we all pay tribute to the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS), who has worked so very hard on this legislation and was able to keep pushing it so we could get it to this particular point.

According to the National Institutes of Health, prostate cancer is the most frequently diagnosed non-skin cancer in American men. The National Cancer Institute reports that over 200,000 new cases of prostate cancer were diagnosed in the United States in 1997 alone. Tragically, approximately 40,000 men will die of the disease this year.

Since testing for early detection of prostate cancer became relatively common, the prostate cancer death rate has declined. However, too many lives are still lost to this disease because it is not detected early enough or because treatment is received too late. It is critical, critical that American men use all available means to fight prostate cancer, including regular testing and medical examinations.

The resolution before us today encourages men to be active in the battle against prostate cancer. It also encourages national and community organizations, along with health care providers, to promote the importance of medical examinations and testing.

In addition, this resolution emphasizes the Federal Government's responsibility to provide the necessary resources to fund research to determine the causes of and treatments for prostate cancer.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Environment of the Committee on Commerce, I have been a strong supporter, as have so very many others, of increasing the Federal Government's commitment to biomedical research. In particular, I have endorsed the proposal to double Federal funding for the NIH over 5 years.

In an effort to provide additional funding for NIH research efforts, I have introduced H.R. 785, the Biomedical Research Assistance Voluntary Option, or BRAVO, as we call it, Act. My bill would allow taxpayers to designate a portion of any Federal income tax refund to support biomedical research to the National Institutes of Health.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that the war against cancer is far from over. Today, the House of Representatives can play a supportive role in the fight against prostate cancer by increasing public awareness about the importance of early detection and treatment of prostate cancer. I urge all my colleagues to support H. Res. 211.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The resolution we are considering today is important, and we are pleased to cooperate with the majority's request to discharge it from the Committee on Commerce on an expedited basis. We hope and expect that our colleagues on the other side of the aisle will extend the same consideration for issues that we hold important. Our goal must be to work in a timely manner and on a bipartisan basis so that beneficial initiatives can move through this Congress.

One out of ten men will develop prostate cancer in their lifetime. One out of ten. Forty thousand men will die from it each year. Early detection is critical, and raising awareness about the disease is the best way to promote regular testing.

This resolution says we can play a unique role in our districts and through this Congress on the national level also through national exposure to raise public awareness about prostate cancer.

In 1994, I founded the Northeast Ohio Breast and Prostate Cancer Task Force to help organize efforts at the local level to combat these cancers. Last Sunday, at Jacobs Field in Cleveland, I had the honor of presenting an award to the Cleveland Indians' Mike Hargrove and Jim Thome on behalf of the team for their support for prostate cancer research. This award is part of the Association for the Cure of Cancer of the Prostate and Major League Baseball's 1999 Home Run Challenge. During Father's Day Week, June 20 to 25, every home run hit in 60 selected games will raise money directed towards prostate cancer research.

This resolution today, Mr. Speaker, is a statement of the need to do more to fight prostate cancer and to help men who have this illness. But this Congress can and should do much more. We should pass the Patients' Bill of Rights, which would protect prostate cancer patients from arbitrary coverage denials and ensure their access to the right specialists and to clinical trials.

We should be aggressive in bringing down the cost of prescription drugs and pass the Prescription Drugs Fairness Act. Drug company markups place barriers in the way of life-saving medicine.

And we should move quickly to pass the Breast and Cervical Cancer Act.

We should follow through, Mr. Speaker, with initiatives that help prevent and treat prostate cancer and other illnesses that take such a tremendous toll on our families and on our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS), the sponsor of this legislation.

Mr. BASS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in strong support of the prostate cancer awareness resolution.

I wish to thank the minority for allowing this to be expedited through the committee process, and as I said a minute ago, I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), as well as the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY), and the rest of the House leadership. This is a very important resolution to not only myself, but many hundreds of thousands of other men around the country who may be affected by prostate cancer.

Now, last week during National Men's Health Week, which concluded on Father's Day, there was a lot of discussion about the most serious of health issues facing men, and one of them at least is prostate cancer.

This year 180,000 men will be diagnosed with prostate cancer; and, as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) mentioned, 40,000 will die of the disease.

Prostate cancer, in fact, is the second leading cause of cancer among men, second only to skin cancer; and it is the second leading cause of cancer death among men. This cancer can often be treated successfully if it is detected early, but most symptoms are nonspecific and there are very few reliable risk factors. Therefore, two of the most important weapons against prostate cancer are education and timely testing.

The American Cancer Society recommends that men 50 or over talk with their health care professionals about having annual exams and tests for prostate cancer and that African-American men and men with family histories of prostate cancer, who are at higher risk for the disease, should consider taking steps at an earlier age.

This House, as an institution, and we, as Members of Congress, are in unique positions to support efforts against prostate cancer. This resolution expresses the sense of the House that, firstly, all men should take an active role in the fight against prostate cancer and by all the means that are available to them; secondly, that the role of national and community organizations and health care providers in promoting awareness of prostate cancer and in providing related information, support, and access to services should be recognized and applauded; and lastly, that the Federal Government has the responsibility to continue to raise awareness, fund research, and consider ways to improve access to and the quality of services for detecting and treating prostate cancer.

I hope that all of my colleagues will join me today in supporting this resolution, working in our districts to get out the word, not only on Father's Day but every day, that prostate cancer is a killer. We need to educate. We need to talk to our doctors. Timely treatment is what counts.

I urge support and adoption of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Eshoo) who has been a real leader in the fight against breast and prostate cancer on the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague and good friend from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) for yielding me the time.

I want to first of all rise in support of this very important resolution and the intent that it carries. I would like to pay tribute to my colleague the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS) and certainly the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) our subcommittee chairman, who are great supporters of this very good thing. So I want to salute them for that and thank them for bringing this resolution to the floor.

After all, who amongst us can be opposed to something like this? We know the toll that cancer takes on the American people, most specifically, with men in this country.

Yesterday we celebrated a magnificent holiday for our Nation's fathers. I certainly missed mine, who went to heaven about a year and a half ago. And as we bring this resolution to the floor around Father's Day, I also want to rise to speak about an issue that is important to mothers, fathers, families across this country; and that is breast and cervical cancer.

When the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAZIO) and myself introduced a bill in the House, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Act, we made a pledge at that press conference that by Mother's Day our goal was to secure the majority of the House of Representatives in support of that legislation. Well, we not only did that. Mother's Day came and went. It passed. We now have 250 cosponsors from both sides of the aisle in support of this bill.

I think it is very important that the House Committee on Commerce take this bill up in a hearing so that it can be examined. Because the majority of the members of the committee are cosponsors, including the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) our subcommittee chairman.

Now, why this bill? In 1999, the House of Representatives passed a very important and good piece of legislation. That piece of legislation directed the Center for Disease Control, the CDC, to conduct early screening for breast and cervical cancer. It has been a very successful program, but it stopped short of something. And that is, when detection takes place and cancer is discovered either in the cervix or the breast, we now say to American women they are on their own for treatment.

This great Nation can do better than this. And so, the legislation moves beyond where we are now. It offers a carrot to the States where we offer more money in Medicaid for under-insured and uninsured women. We all have these constituents amongst us. We have heard their eloquent testimonies, very sad testimonies, too many of us.

And so, I urge that all of the members of the House Committee on Commerce, most specifically our leadership, to schedule a hearing on this bill so that we can move forward and also to a markup. I think it is an important step for the women and the families of our Nation. By next Mother's Day, hopefully, we will have this legislation in law.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, more than anything else, I would like to say to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Eshoo), through the Chair, that if her ears were ringing yesterday, it was because she was the subject of fairly lengthy conversations at the CDC in Atlanta, where the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) and I and a number of staff members attended. Part of the discussion was involving the situation that she is trying to solve, and we asked a number of questions in that regard.

As I have told the gentlewoman previously, I am committed to at least holding a hearing on this legislation in the very near future and, hopefully, get it on its way.

Insofar as the managed care problem, which the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) mentioned, the Patients Protection Act is moving. We are applying due diligence to the situation. I might add that the problem in managed care is not a new problem, it is a problem that existed for many, many years. And it is this particular Congress, along with the prior Congress, which is trying to solve the issue.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY).

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the prostate cancer awareness resolution and the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act.

I commend my colleague from New Hampshire for bringing awareness to the fight against prostate cancer. Thirty-seven thousand men will die from prostate cancer this year, 2,400 in my State of New York alone. I applaud the efforts of the community organizations and health care providers in promoting awareness of and access to regular exams and testing. But, unfortunately, awareness is only half the battle. Once a cancer is diagnosed, it is perhaps even more cruel if it must go untreated. Yet this is a situation that thousands of people have had to face.

Currently, the CDC's National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program provides cancer screening services for low-income women who have little or no health insurance. Yet cruelly, after being diagnosed, these women have no means with which to get treatment. The Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act will give States the option to provide Medicaid coverage to these women. While Congress must continue to advocate cancer awareness, it cannot continue to promote screening and early detection without providing a means for treatment.

I urge the leadership and Members of the Committee on Commerce to take action on the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act and for the House to pass the prostate cancer awareness resolution.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPs), a nurse and a new member of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment.

Mrs. CAPPs. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Ohio for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution on prostate cancer. But I also want to take a moment to speak on the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act.

As a nurse, I am very concerned about prostate cancer and I am glad that we are raising awareness of this serious disease which kills approximately 40,000 men a year in this country. I thank the chair and the leadership of our Subcommittee on Health and the Environment the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) for introducing this resolution, which I wholeheartedly support. Yet, I am very disappointed that the Committee on Commerce has yet to address the Breast and Cervical Treatment Act.

This bill, introduced by my colleagues the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAZIO), currently has 250 sponsors. The majority of the House of Representatives support the enactment of this treatment bill. And yet we see no plans for floor action in sight.

Here to my right on the screen my colleagues will see the list of agencies and groups, strong groups in this country, health groups, who support this legislation being enacted. These are our constituents across the country. They want us to move ahead on this legislation, and we need to pay heed to their strong recommendation.

The Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act gives States the option to provide Medicaid coverage to uninsured or under-insured women who have already been diagnosed through our National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program. But once they have this wrenching diagnosis, they have nowhere to turn for treatment. All the screening in the world will not help if women who are diagnosed with this disease do not have access to quality treatment for their condition.

Just a few minutes ago, I was visited in my offices here by a dozen or so representatives of the AAUW, the American Association of University Women, who are here on the Hill today talking about their issues. And my group was here from Atascadero in San Luis Obispo County.

I told them what I was going to be speaking about on the floor, and they said, yes, we have friends, we have people in our community for whom this fact is a reality, women diagnosed with no place to turn for treatment.

With 250 bipartisan cosponsors of the Breast and Cervical Cancer Act, we need in this House to take action now. We have a chance today to help millions of men with prostate cancer. I support this opportunity and thank our House for taking the lead here to do this.

Let us also take the opportunity to do more than resolve, to actually help survivors of breast and cervical cancer, as well.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.Res. 211, to raise public awareness of prostate cancer. I want to thank the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS) the introducer of this resolution. I am an original cosponsor of this legislation.

Prostate cancer is the most common type of cancer in men. One out of every five men will develop prostate cancer at some point during his life. As a matter of fact, I have two brothers who have prostate cancer. And there are many parallels between prostate cancer in men and breast cancer in women. Like breast cancer in women, the risk of having prostate cancer increases with age.

The American Cancer Society estimates that nearly 180,000 new cases of prostate cancer and 175,000 new cases of breast cancer will be diagnosed in 1999. Prostate cancer kills about 37,000 men each year, and breast cancer kills over 46,000 women. Prostate cancer is the second leading cause of cancer death in men, and breast cancer is the second leading cause of cancer death in women after lung cancer.

Recently, I attended the opening of an expanded Department of Defense Prostate Cancer Research Center in Rockville, Maryland. This research facility will work in conjunction with the National Institutes of Health in nearby Bethesda, Maryland. I am proud that this premier research corridor looking into the prevention, early detection, and cure for prostate cancer is in my congressional district.

I want to take a moment also to highlight another important piece of legislation, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act, H.R. 1070. This bill would amend the Social Security Act to give States the option of expanding medical assistance coverage to include women screened and found to have breast or cervical cancer. It has over 249 cosponsors. Yet, we have not had any further action scheduled on this important legislation.

I agree with the men's prostate cancer support group called, "Us Too!" I must say, I am also part of a support group calling for consideration both in committee and on the House Floor for H.R. 1070, we could say, "H.R. 1070, too!"

I reiterate my support for H.Res. 211. And I compliment again my colleague the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS) for his leadership and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) the subcommittee chairman for bringing this bill on the floor today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS).

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for yielding me this time.

I rise to congratulate and commend all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who have played a leadership role on this issue. But I would like to go beyond commending them, to commend three individuals who have done extraordinarily important things on behalf of this cause of fighting prostate cancer: General Schwarzkopf, the hero of the Persian Gulf War, Senator Bob Dole, and philanthropist Michael Milken. Mr. Milken, through his Cap Cure Foundation, has devoted untold resources and unimaginable energy to dealing with prostate cancer, and I am proud to publicly recognize his significant contribution.

I would also like to associate myself with the comments of my colleagues from California (Ms. ESHOO and Ms. CAPP) who talked of breast and cervical cancer problems. As we deal with prostate cancer, I think we have a moral obligation to deal with the issue of breast and cervical cancer.

I call on all of my colleagues on a bipartisan basis to deal with both of these critical health issues affecting millions of American families.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS).

(Mr. DAVIS of Illinois asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. I want to thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this resolution, which is designed to raise public awareness of prostate cancer. Prevention, access to health care, awareness, early detection, all of these are ingredients which help save lives.

Prostate cancer is the second leading cause of death among American men, causing over 39,000 deaths a year. Unfortunately for African American men, prostate cancer rates are the highest in the world. In the last 5 years, the death rate for prostate cancer has more than doubled the death rate of breast cancer, which is extremely high and must be acted upon immediately. Unfortunately for African American males, this is one of the most deadly diseases in the world.

I want to take this opportunity to thank those churches, community organizations and other groups in my district who have been promoting awareness by putting into their Sunday bulletins messages about men getting checkups and physicals and going to the doctor.

My father is 88 years old, recently diagnosed a few years ago with prostate cancer, but is a survivor and is alive because of the early detection.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that we support these two measures.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, if you reach age 40, the statistics in America are quite clear. You will live to be a wise senior citizen if you can avoid the two big takers of life, heart attack and cancer. We fund many issues. Some of them are highly sensationalized, with much press and hype. But I say it is time to wage an all-out war on cancer. It is overdue, and it must, in fact, involve all our efforts.

I want to applaud the efforts of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) here today, one of the fine chairmen in the House. His heart is in the right place. He has worked very hard on this. I want to compliment the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS) for his leadership, and I want to compliment my neighbor, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN), for his work on health-related issues.

I would also like to advise the Congress to support and work with the efforts of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN). The health-related issues facing this Congress are some of the most important issues facing the American people. I urge an "aye" vote.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) be permitted to control the remainder of my time for consideration of this legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILL).

Mr. HILL of Indiana. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I also rise in support of this resolution. Prostate cancer comes in four stages. Approximately 6 years ago, my then 51-year-old brother went to the doctor because he was having problems. He found that he was in stage four of prostate cancer. Still we did not give up hope. Still we prayed a lot, held hands a lot, talked a lot. But in the final end, he did not make it, and he died. He died a very horrible and agonizing death. I will never forget it as long as I live. It has affected me dramatically.

I hope my brother's pain and suffering does not go in vain, because today I have the opportunity to evoke his name and support this resolution, and hopefully all that pain and suffering, if we can save at least one life in America through this resolution or through this speech, if we can just save one life in America because of this resolution today, the meaninglessness and pointlessness of his pain and suffering will not go in vain.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding me this time.

I thank the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. BASS) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) for their leadership and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) for his leadership.

I am not a member of the committee of jurisdiction, but I come to the floor with a personal commentary to support the passage of this resolution dealing with prostate cancer and the enhanced opportunities to educate the American public and men about the dangers and the devastation of prostate cancer. I lost my father 3 years ago to prostate cancer. I will always be reminded of the fact that his life was shortened because of lack of early detection and education about this devastating disease.

There are an estimated 179,300 new cases of prostate cancer this year, and prostate cancer rates for African American men are significantly higher than the rates for white men. African American men have higher incidences of prostate cancer than any other ethnic group in the world since the disease is rare in Asia, Africa and South America.

The incidence of prostate cancer increases as men age. More than 75 percent of all prostate cancers are diagnosed in men over 65. Men over age 50 should have tests done every year. And, of course, African American men should be tested at an even earlier age.

I serve on M.D. Anderson Hospital's prostate cancer advisory committee, and I would say that the best celebration and commemoration we could give to our fathers across the land no matter what their ethnic background is to encourage them to get early testing and to not be afraid to go to the doctors.

I also support the passage, if you will, of the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act. I believe that as we fight the deadly disease of cancer, there can be no excessive amount of legislation that deals with these devastating diseases. I would offer my support for the resolution dealing with prostate cancer. I would ask all my colleagues to heartily support us in our fight to end this deadly disease.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here today with the men of this House to urge public awareness of prostate cancer. Prostate cancer is the second most common form of cancer and the second leading cause of cancer death. Education and regular testing are crucial to survival because prostate cancer can be treated successfully if it is found early.

I support this resolution today because it expresses our sense that public awareness, regular testing, early detection and treatment are critical to survival.

There are an estimated 179,300 new cases of prostate cancer this year. Prostate cancer rates for African American men are significantly higher than the rates for white men. African American men have higher incidences of prostate cancer than any other ethnic group in the world since this disease is rare in Asia, Africa and South America. My father who I loved dearly, Ezra Jackson, died three years ago from prostate cancer. My uncle died of the disease as well. We should be diligent in helping all men to learn about the disease and get early testing. This resolution will help some live.

The incidence of prostate cancer increases as men age—more than 75% of all prostate cancers are diagnosed in men over 65. Thus, it is crucial for men to have regular checkups for early detection. Men over age 50 should have tests done every year. African American men should be tested at an even earlier age.

The federal government has an important role to play in raising public awareness about this disease. We must continue to support research and treatment efforts to improve the chances of survival for men diagnosed with prostate cancer. We should also encourage more efforts to improve access to care for men, particularly low-income, traditionally underserved patients.

I support these efforts to battle this deadly disease. Prostate cancer will kill 37,000 American men this year. I hope that through the collective resources of the federal government, local and community health services, and through public awareness and education, we can one day refer to this disease in the past tense. Finally, Mr. Speaker I hope we will also move to the floor H.R. 1070, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act—which will also help to save lives—the many women who have or will suffer from this dreadful disease.

New Cases: An estimated 179,300 new cases in the US during 1999. Prostate cancer incidence rates remain significantly higher in African-American men than in white men. Between 1989 and 1992, prostate cancer incidence rates increased dramatically, probably due to earlier diagnosis in men without any symptoms, by increased use of prostate-specific antigen (PSA) blood test screenings. Between 1993 and 1995, prostate cancer incidence rates declined, primarily among white men.

Deaths: An estimated 37,000 deaths in 1999, the second leading cause of cancer death in men. During 1991-1995, prostate cancer mortality rates declined significantly (-1.6% per year). Like the decreasing trends in incidence, the trends in mortality occurred primarily among white men. Mortality rates in African-American men remain more than twice as high as rates in white men.

Signs and Symptoms: Weak or interrupted urine flow; inability to urinate, or difficulty starting or stopping the urine flow; the need to urinate frequently, especially at night; blood in the urine; pain or burning on urination; continuing pain in lower back, pelvis, or upper thighs. Most of these symptoms are nonspecific and may be similar to those caused by benign conditions such as infection or prostate enlargement.

Risk Factors: The incidence of prostate cancer increases with age; more than 75% of all prostate cancers are diagnosed in men over age 65. African Americans have the highest prostate cancer incidence rates in the world; the disease is common in North America and Northwestern Europe and is rare in Asia, Africa, and South America. Recent genetic studies suggest that an inherited predisposition may be responsible for 5%-10% of prostate cancers. International studies suggest that dietary fat may also be a factor.

Early Detection: Men age 50 and older who have at least a 10-year life expectancy should talk with their health care professional about having a digital rectal exam of the prostate gland and a prostate-specific antigen (PSA) blood test every year. Men who are at high risk for prostate cancer (African Americans or men who have a history of prostate cancer in close family members) should consider beginning these tests at an earlier age.

Treatment: Depending on age, stage of the cancer, and other medical conditions of the patient, surgery and radiation should be discussed with the patient's physicians. Hormones and chemotherapy or combinations of these options might be considered for metastatic disease. Hormone treatment may control prostate cancer for long periods by shrinking the size of the tumor, thus relieving pain. Careful observation without immediate active treatment ("watchful waiting") may be appropriate, particularly for older individuals with low-grade and/or early stage tumors.

Survival: Sixty percent of all prostate cancers are discovered while still localized; the 5-year relative survival rate for patients whose tumors are diagnosed at this stage is 100%. Over the past 20 years, the survival rate for all stages combined has increased from 67% to 93%. Survival after a diagnosis of prostate cancer continues to decline beyond five years. According to the most recent data, 68% of men diagnosed with prostate cancer survive 10 years and 52% survive 15 years.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I appreciate the debate today and appreciate the good efforts of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) on that side and the gentleman from California (Mrs. CAPPS), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT), the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILL), the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) on my side.

I especially ask this House with bipartisan cooperation to pass H. Res. 211 but also move forward on the Prescription Drug Fairness Act, on the Patients' Bill of Rights, and on the Breast and Cervical Cancer Act. If we could accomplish those health care issues this year, this will have been a very successful Congress.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Res. 211, I am proud to be a cosponsor of this resolution which expressed the sense of the Congress regarding the importance of raising public awareness about prostate cancer.

Prostate cancer is one of the most serious health issues facing men. One in five men will develop prostate cancer in his lifetime. According to the National Institutes of Health, this year nearly 185,000 men will be diagnosed with prostate cancer and 39,000 men will die. Prostate cancer is the most common type of cancer among men, and the second leading cause of cancer death in men. The most important thing to know about prostate cancer is that it can be treated successfully if detected early.

As you know, my predecessor, the late Congressman Dean Gallo died of prostate cancer in 1994, having been diagnosed late in his disease. Dean was a fighter for New Jersey but sadly he could not fight prostate cancer successfully. Despite Dean's death his memory lives on in the Dean and Betty Gallo Prostate Cancer Center at the Cancer Institute of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, New Jersey is 17th among all 50 states in the incidence of prostate cancer and 8th among African Americans.

Congress has declared a war on cancer, in any of its forms, and we must continue to provide the bullets to fight this war in our dedication to raising awareness about cancer, and the commitment to increase funding for cancer research.

Remember, prostate cancer may kill, but it does not have to. Early detection can save a life. I say to all men, see your doctor for a prostate examination today; take a P.S.A. annually.

Mr. Speaker, I think my good friend from New Hampshire, Mr. BASS, for introducing this important resolution.

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 211, a sense of the Congress on Raising Awareness of Prostate Cancer.

One out of every five men is at lifetime risk for prostate cancer. While about every third male over age 50 probably already has prostate cancer in some form and does not know it; roughly one-quarter of those who are stricken, will get a life-threatening form of the disease.

Prostate cancer is the second leading cause of cancer deaths in men (after lung cancer) and, excluding skin cancer, is the most common cancer in American men. Early prostate cancer often does not cause symptoms, and most people find out about their prostate cancer too late, even though the cancer can be detected in most cases with a simple, inexpensive blood test.

While the American Cancer Society and several other groups recommend that every man over age 50 get tested once a year, and General Schwarzkopf, a man who has undergone prostate surgery, said prostate cancer testing saved his life. Society still talks about prostate cancer after the fact rather than talking about the test that could quickly arrest prostate cancer in the early beginning.

The disease touches the lives of millions of men and their families, yet myths and misunderstandings about prostate cancer remain common.

Learning about prostate cancer, who's at risk and how to fight it is a crucial first step in overcoming this problem. The more you know about Prostate Cancer, the better equipped you are to fight it.

We are here today, to end the public embarrassment about prostate cancer and begin the process of making men more aware of what this disease can do and what they must do to protect themselves. Too many men have died because they made the mistake of ignoring the devastating effect of prostate cancer.

Today we can start turning the tide. Support this resolution.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution, and commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Mr. BILIRAKIS, and the ranking member, Mr. BROWN, for bringing this resolution before the House today.

No one can doubt the value of increasing public awareness of prostate cancer. Screening and testing can lead to early detection and effective treatment of this all-too-common form of cancer.

But while I strongly support this resolution, I cannot help but note the contrast between our eagerness to act here—even without committee consideration—with the failure of our committee to consider another important piece of legislation, a very reasonable and broadly supported bill to provide the option of Medicaid treatment for low-income women with breast cancer.

I am proud to be one of nearly 250 cosponsors of H.R. 1070. This bill was introduced by Congressman LAZIO and Congresswoman ESHOO to remedy the inexcusable situation we have now, where we screen low-income women for breast cancer, but then are unable to provide timely treatment when the condition is discovered.

This legislation provides States the option to provide that treatment under Medicaid.

It is a bill that has broad support, both inside and outside the Congress. Yet we have held no hearings on this bill in subcommittee. We have no schedule to mark it up.

If we did act to bring this bill to the House floor, I feel certain it would enjoy the same broad support as the resolution we have before us today.

So while I commend Mr. BILIRAKIS for his efforts on the prostate cancer resolution, I also hope we will soon again be on this House floor discussing the imminent passage of H.R. 1070. The women of America suffering from breast cancer deserve no less.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong support for H. Res. 211, which underscores our nation's support for prostate cancer research and testing. All too often, men and their families remain silent about this deadly disease, which will claim the lives of an estimated 37,000 individuals this year alone.

It is critical that our nation starts to talk about prostate cancer in order to increase our awareness about early testing and treatment options. We in the Congress took an important step in fighting this condition by providing Medicare coverage for the prostate specific antigen blood test (PSA) and the digital rectal exam (DRE). I, along with a bipartisan group of House members recently urged HCFA to implement coverage for these procedures in the most timely manner possible. By providing this critical coverage, we can save the lives of thousands of men, while saving Medicare a substantial amount of funding.

We can also provide real hope for the 180,000 men who are estimated to be diagnosed with prostate cancer by investing in research. We still have a long way to go before we really understand the risk factors associated with the disease. It is my hope that the National Institutes of Health and other Federal agencies will continue their groundbreaking research into this disease.

I ask all of my colleagues to join me in supporting this important resolution, which clearly states our commitment to treating and eventually curing this terrible disease.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 211.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LOCATING AND SECURING RETURN OF ISRAELI SOLDIERS MISSING IN ACTION

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1175) to locate and secure the return of Zachary Baumel, an American citizen, and other Israeli soldiers missing in action, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1175

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) Zachary Baumel, a United States citizen serving in the Israeli military forces, has been missing in action since June 1982 when he was captured by forces affiliated with the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) following a tank battle with Syrian forces at Sultan Ya'akub in Lebanon;

(2) Yehuda Katz and Zvi Feldman, Israeli citizens serving in the Israeli military forces, have been missing in action since June 1982 when they were also captured by these same forces in a tank battle with Syrian forces at Sultan Ya'akub in Lebanon;

(3) these three soldiers were last known to be in the hands of a Palestinian faction splintered from the PLO and operating in Syrian-controlled territory, thus making this a matter within the responsibility of the Government of Syria;

(4) diplomatic efforts to secure the release of these individuals have been unsuccessful, although PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat delivered one-half of Zachary Baumel's dog tag to Israeli Government authorities; and

(5) in the Gaza-Jericho agreement between the Palestinian Authority and the Government of Israel of May 4, 1994, Palestinian officials agreed to cooperate with Israel in locating and working for the return of Israeli soldiers missing in action.

SEC. 2. ACTIONS WITH RESPECT TO MISSING SOLDIERS.

(a) CONTINUING COMMUNICATION WITH CERTAIN GOVERNMENTS.—The Secretary of State shall continue to raise the matter of Zachary Baumel, Yehuda Katz, and Zvi Feldman on an urgent basis with appropriate government officials of Syria, Lebanon, the Palestinian Authority, and with other governments in the region and elsewhere that, in the determination of the Secretary, may be helpful in locating and securing the return of these soldiers.

(b) PROVISION OF ECONOMIC AND OTHER ASSISTANCE TO CERTAIN GOVERNMENTS.—In deciding whether or not to provide United States economic and other forms of assistance to Syria, Lebanon, the Palestinian Authority, and other governments in the region, and in deciding United States policy toward these governments and authorities, the President should take into consideration the willingness of these governments and authorities to assist in locating and securing the return of the soldiers described in subsection (a).

SEC. 3. REPORTS BY SECRETARY OF STATE.

(a) INITIAL REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall prepare and submit to the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate a written report that describes the efforts of the Secretary pursuant to section 2(a) and United States policies affected pursuant to section 2(b).

(b) SUBSEQUENT REPORTS.—Not later than 15 days after receiving from any source any additional information relating to the individuals described in section 2(a), the Secretary of State shall prepare and submit to the committees described in subsection (a) a written report that contains such additional information.

(c) FORM OF REPORTS.—A report submitted under subsection (a) or (b) shall be made available to the public and may include a classified annex.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

(Mr. GILMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, this measure before us today, H.R. 1175, is on behalf of three Israeli MIAs, one of whom, Zachary Baumel, is a dual American-Israeli national.

I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) for sponsoring this measure. I have worked closely, as has the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), with the Baumel, the Feldman and the Katz families since 1983 trying to locate and to secure the return of sons from the battle of Sultan Yakub in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley in 1982 while they were engaged against Syrian forces.

It has been a long 17 years since those Israeli soldiers faced Syrian forces in Lebanon's Bekaa valley on June 11, 1982. These soldiers were declared missing on that day, and all efforts since then, which have spanned the globe, have not brought them back to their families.

Mr. and Mrs. Baumel deserve answers, as do the Feldman and Katz families. I want to acknowledge Mr. and Mrs. Baumel, who are with us today to witness House consideration of this measure on behalf of their son and his military colleagues. They have been tireless in their quest to obtain their son's release or information with regard to their son.

Accordingly, H.R. 1175 emphasizes the importance which Congress places on helping these families locate their sons. We hope the State Department appreciates the priority that we have given to this critical humanitarian issue.

It reflects language that has been negotiated with the State Department which requires the Department of State to raise the missing in action of Zachary Baumel, Yehuda Katz, and Zvi Feldman with appropriate government officials of Syria, Lebanon and the Palestinian Authority.

This measure also requires our Nation to raise the issue with other governments which may be helpful in locating and securing the return of these soldiers.

H.R. 1175 also requires a written report and follow-up action from the Department of State to the Congress.

The legislation further notes that our Nation should take into consideration the willingness of regional governments to assist in locating and securing the return of these soldiers when reviewing U.S. financial assistance programs.

Regrettably, despite the fact that the Syrian government is in a position to assist with this investigation, appeals made to President Hafiz al-Assad has gone unanswered. Moreover, inquiries to PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat have met with a dead end.

Nonetheless, Congress continues to be extremely concerned about the lack of resolution of these cases and wants to make certain that the administration utilizes all of our available avenues in order to return these men to their families. This is evidenced by the fact that H.R. 1175 has now been co-sponsored by almost 100 Members of this body.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues to strongly support H.R. 1175, as amended.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. First I want to pay tribute to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on International Relations for his outstanding leadership on this very important issue. I also want to thank over 100 of my colleagues across the political spectrum who have chosen to co-sponsor my legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself fully with the remarks of the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), and I would like to add a few thoughts.

In 1991, our ambassador to Israel, the distinguished ambassador, William Brown, wrote a letter to the Israeli Coordinator for Lebanese Affairs, and I would like to quote from that letter: "Without the statesmanship that Israel demonstrated, I do not believe that we would be celebrating so soon the release of all American hostages."

This is the time, Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues will recall, that there were numbers of American hostages held by various Palestinian and Arab terrorist groups and governments, and the Israeli government played a pivotal role in the release of these hostages, including Terry Anderson. It is only appropriate that we now do the same thing for Israel that they did for us.

This bill calls on our State Department to do everything in its power in contacting all the relevant governments and other groups in the region to obtain the release of these three young men who have been imprisoned for 17 long years. The time is long overdue to bring their nightmare and the anguish of their families to an end.

We Americans know all too well, Mr. Speaker, the bitter legacy of missing soldiers and prisoners of war. That legacy can haunt a Nation, and it interferes with the effort of building new and better relations with the countries that are involved. At a time when Israel has a new government, at a time when there is new consideration being given to Syrian-Israeli negotiations and the achievement, at long last, of peace between those two nations, I believe it is incumbent on Mr. Asaad, President of Syria, and all other leaders in the region to deal with the issue of these three young men who have been languishing in prisons for 17 years.

In 1993, Mr. Speaker, Yasser Arafat conveyed to the late Prime Minister Rabin half of the dog tag of one of these young men. We have had constant indications over the years that these three young men are alive and in prison. The time has come to put an end to their incarceration and suffering and to allow their families to be reunited with them.

I want to pay particular tribute, Mr. Speaker, to the parents of Zachary Baumel, Miriam and Yona Baumel, who are sitting in the gallery today. As a parent myself, I do not think I can fully appreciate the 17-year ordeal they have endured. They have worked tirelessly on behalf of their son and the other two soldiers. They have visited communities across this Nation. They have met with countless Members of this House and of the Senate. I hope and pray that at long last their heroic efforts on behalf of these three young men will come to a fruitful conclusion.

I also want to applaud the efforts of the International Coalition for Missing Israeli Soldiers for spearheading the grassroots effort to bring this bill to passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The Chair reminds all Members to refrain from references to visitors in the gallery.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1175, a bill introduced by my distinguished colleague from California, Representative TOM LANTOS. I am proud to be one of 91 cosponsors of this important bipartisan initiative, which will help to locate and secure the return of Zachary Baumel, an American citizen, and other Israeli soldiers missing in action.

The United States has a unique responsibility to ensure the security of Israel—a steadfast ally and strategic partner in democracy. The United States also has an unquestionable responsibility to secure the well-being of its citizens when possible, no matter where they may be located.

Zachary Baumel is an American citizen. He has been missing since 1982, when he was captured following a tank battle with Syrian forces at Sultan Ya' akub in Lebanon. At the time, Mr. Baumel was serving in the Israeli military. It is important to note that Mr. Baumel's service in Israel at no time altered his status as an American citizen.

I feel strongly that the United States should make every effort to secure information as to the whereabouts of Zachary Baumel as well as insist upon his release. I also would hope that the United States would support efforts made by Israel to secure the release of Zvi Feldman and Yehuda Katz, two Israeli citizens who served in the Israeli military and were captured along with Zachary Baumel at Sultan Ya' akub in Lebanon.

Yasser Arafat of the PLO provided evidence to Israeli government officials that Zachary Baumel was alive and that Mr. Arafat had information as to his whereabouts. In the Gaza-Jericho agreement reached between the Palestinian Authority and the Israeli government, Palestinian officials agreed to cooperate with Israel in locating and working for the return of Israeli soldiers missing in action. Five years have passed since the Gaza-Jericho agreement and Zachary Baumel, Yehuda Katz, and Zvi Feldman are still missing.

I urge my colleagues to support this bipartisan bill. It is imperative that the U.S. Department of State raise the issue of Zachary Baumel, Zvi Feldman, and Yehuda Katz on an urgent basis with the appropriate government officials which may be helpful in locating and securing the return of these soldiers. The United States government must remain vigilant in its efforts to locate these brave soldiers, who have been missing for more than 17 years.

Mr. WEXLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1175, introduced by Congressman Lantos.

Mr. Chairman, for seventeen years, the fate of three missing Israeli soldiers has remained a mystery that has haunted their families and their nations.

On June 11, 1982, Zachary Baumel, a dual U.S.-Israeli citizen, Yehuda Katz, and Zvi Feldman were captured in northeastern Lebanon, in a battle with Syrian and Palestinian forces. The PLO had custody of the three soldiers for the first year and a half of their captivity. When a pro-Syrian faction split with the PLO, they took the three Israeli soldiers with them and their whereabouts are unknown.

The Syrian government currently claims they have no knowledge concerning the fate of the soldiers. However, western journalists and Syrian radio reported that the three soldiers were paraded through Damascus several hours after they were captured. Three weeks later, on July 4, 1982, the Syrian secret police delivered four bodies for burial to the Jewish cemetery in Damascus claiming they were the bodies of the Israeli soldiers. The Syrians also provided name tags, which Israeli intelligence sources reported were supplied by the PLO's Fatah faction. Fifteen months later, the Red Cross exhumed the four graves, finding only one Israeli body.

The most recent evidence which indicates that Zachary Baumel may still be alive came from PLO leader Yasser Arafat. In 1993, Arafat delivered half of Zachary Baumel's dog tags to Israeli officials. Chairman Arafat promised that more information was forthcoming, but it was never received. As recently as 1997, information has been obtained that Baumel, along with two other men, may still be in custody in Lebanon.

With the resumption of the Middle East peace process, the State Department should urge the Syrian and Lebanese governments, along with Chairman Arafat, to secure information that will resolve the fate of the missing soldiers. The State Department should communicate to these governments that their willingness to assist efforts in the search for the missing soldiers will be considered among other factors in the provision of future economic and foreign assistance.

The plight of the missing soldiers was brought to my attention by Miriam and Yona Baumel, who have asked me to help find more information concerning their son and the other missing soldiers and to secure their return. They believe, as I do, that the soldiers may still be alive. One cannot imagine the pain of uncertainty and fear they have felt for the past 17 years waiting to hear about the fate of their son.

I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 1175. The three missing Israeli soldiers are the longest held hostages in the Middle East, and it is time that they are released to return to their families.

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1175, a bill authorizing an investigation into the disappearance of Zachary Baumel.

Zachary Baumel, an American citizen who was serving in the Israel Defense Forces, was captured alive along with two of his colleagues in June 1982 following a tank battle against Syrian and terrorist forces during the course of Operation Peace for Galilee. It is believed that they were captured by forces affiliated with the Palestine Liberation Organization and subsequently transferred to a splinter group of the PLO. Since June of 1982, the world has heard nothing from Zachary Baumel.

Mr. Speaker, this is a cruel fate indeed. Zachary Baumel's parents have had to live with their son's missing in action status, knowing full well that he might be alive and well in some prison cell in Lebanon or Syria. They cannot mourn because they can't be sure that he is dead, only that he is missing.

It is for this reason, to end the suffering of the Baumel family and to restore their son to their care, that this bill has been introduced. The bill would require that the State Department investigate the circumstances surrounding the capture of Zachary Baumel and his colleagues and initiate discussions at the highest levels with the governments of Syria, Lebanon and the Palestinian Authority with the intention of securing the return of these prisoners of war if possible. This is a worthy cause and I urge my colleagues to support this important measure.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1175, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

COMMUNITY RENEWAL THROUGH COMMUNITY- AND FAITH-BASED ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 207) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives with regard to community renewal through community- and faith-based organizations.

H. RES. 207

Whereas, while the steady economic growth and low inflation in the United States has yielded unprecedented prosperity, many American citizens have not benefited from this prosperity and continue to be socioeconomically disadvantaged;

Whereas millions of our fellow citizens who live in the inner cities and rural communities continue to be plagued by social breakdown, economic disadvantage, and educational failure that fosters hopelessness and despair;

Whereas our most intractable pathologies—crime, drug addiction, teen pregnancy, homelessness, and youth violence—are each being addressed by small, and sometimes unrecognized, community- or faith-based organizations, whose expertise should not be ignored;

Whereas these nonprofit organizations have local experts who are moving individuals from dependency to self-sufficiency and restoring the lives of men, women, and families across the country;

Whereas many community- and faith-based organizations are offering the American public a new vision of compassion, designed to encourage volunteerism, strengthen the community, and care for the poor and vulnerable;

Whereas private sector investment in capital development—social and economic—in the most poverty stricken pockets across the country is key to long-term renewal of urban centers and distressed rural communities;

Whereas economic growth attracts new businesses, provides stability to neighborhoods, as well as provides jobs that yield income to support families and nurture self-respect;

Whereas over 100 bipartisan Members of Congress have cosponsored H.R. 815, the American Community Renewal Act, which targets the 100 poorest communities in the Nation for pro-growth tax benefits, regulatory relief, brownfields cleanup, and homeownership opportunities that combine to create jobs, hope, and a sense of community;

Whereas the President and the Vice President, along with congressional organizations such as the Renewal Alliance, have recognized the importance of community renewal and have recently promoted strategies designed to rebuild communities to empower faith-based organizations on the front lines of renewal in our country; and

Whereas a concerted effort to empower community institutions, encourage community renewal, and implement educational reform will help those who reside in inner cities and distressed rural communities to gain their share of America's prosperity: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) extends gratitude to the private nonprofit organizations and volunteers whose commitment to meet human needs in areas of poverty is key to long-term renewal of urban centers and distressed rural communities;

(2) seeks to empower the strengths of America's communities, local leaders, and mediating institutions such as its families, schools, spiritual leaders, businesses and nonprofit organizations;

(3) should work to empower community- and faith-based organizations to promote effective solutions to the social, financial, and emotional needs of urban centers and rural communities, and the long-term solutions to the problems faced by our culture; and

(4) should work with the Senate and the President to support a compassionate grassroots approach to addressing the family, economic, and cultural breakdown that plagues many of our Nation's urban and rural communities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 207 which recognizes a significant role that neighborhood community- and faith-based organizations are playing in the renewal and empowerment of struggling families and communities around this country. Today we want to commend and extend our gratitude to the private nonprofit organizations and volunteers whose commitment to meeting human needs compassionately and effectively in areas of poverty is key to the long-term renewal of our urban centers and distressed world communities.

It is the strength of mediating institutions such as families, churches, schools, nonprofit organizations, local leaders and businesses which empower individuals and communities. These are the unsung heroes in my district and throughout the country that are making the difference in the lives of people.

As a renewal alliance, our desire is to eliminate barriers which may hinder the effective community building work of these groups. We can assist legislatively by helping lessen the tax on regulatory burdens on our most distressed communities as H.R. 815, the American Community Renewal Act, does in a bipartisan manner with a hundred cosponsors, including 19 Democrats.

We can also seek to empower charities and faith-based organizations around this country by providing a level playing field so that they can also compete for government funds when they are providing services which the government is contracting out. Just last week, the House of Representatives extended this principle of religious nondiscrimination in charitable choice to juvenile justice programs by an overwhelming bipartisan vote of 346 to 83.

This principle has been in law since 1996 when we passed it in welfare reform and more recently in 1998, when we included it in the Community Services Block Grant Reauthorization. It may not be as glamorous or as newsworthy as our debates on guns and/or the Ten Commandments, but the fact is we have been moving ahead systematically over a number of years of expanding charitable choice.

Another way that we can help these community builders is by encouraging charitable donations to these effective charities. I have my own legislation which encourages giving to charities in general, the Giving Incentive and Volunteer Encouragement Act which increases the charitable deduction 120 percent of individuals' contribution, allows non-itemizers to once again receive a deduction for charitable contributions, eliminates the cap on how much people can give and deduct, and extends the charitable contribution deadline to April 15.

This House can also encourage State charity tax credits, as we did in the Community Services Block Grant where we gave flexibility—the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) in H.R. 1607, the Charity Empowerment Act, which I cosponsored, extends this discretion past what we did to other Federal block grants and expands the principle of charitable choice in a manner and addition consistent with what Vice President Gore.

Not only has the leading Republican contender, Governor Bush, but now Vice President Gore, has started promoting charitable choice. States as varied as Texas, Maryland, Indiana are partnering with faith-based organizations in the effort to assist those groups most able to walk alongside those individuals in greatest need. Local communities and taxpayers are impressed with the results. Government can be a partner rather than a hindrance in a barrier to renewed communities.

I urge the support for this resolution to commend and thank all those unsung heroes throughout this country who are working to restore hope to all segments of American society.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) will control 20 minutes pursuant to the rule.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I support the notion that faith-based organizations should be able to receive Federal funds where constitutionally appropriate to provide services for individuals in need. We all recognize the contributions that these organizations have made. Some of them, in fact, do a better job than other nonprofits that are not religiously affiliated.

But while I support the underlying premise of H. Res. 207, and recognizing the contributions that faith-based organizations have made, I take issue with the reference in the resolution, in H.R. 815, the American Community Renewal Act. This legislation presents considerable policy and constitutional issues relating to faith-based organizations.

Mr. Speaker, under current law, religiously affiliated organizations such as Catholic Charities or Lutheran Services in America and the United Jewish Communities are generally permitted to provide social services with government funds so long as the program receiving the funds is not pervasively sectarian or religiously discriminatory.

The American Community Renewal Act is a dramatic and extreme departure from current law as it seeks to fund pervasively sectarian organizations to administer substance abuse benefits on behalf of the government. Pervasively sectarian programs are those defined by the United States Supreme Court in which, and I quote, religion is so pervasive that a substantial portion of their function is subsumed in their religious mission.

In various cases, the Supreme Court has listed several criteria to be used to help to determine if the program is pervasively sectarian such as is it located near a house of worship and abundance of religious symbols on the premises, religious discrimination in the institution's hiring practices, the presence of religious activities, or the purposeful articulation of religious mission.

Specifically this resolution and this legislation that is commented by the resolution allows providers to require program participants to, 1, actively participate in religious practice worship and instruction; and 2, to follow the rules of behavior devised by the organizations that are religious in content and origin.

Thus, as proposed, the American Community Renewal Act would authorize the use of taxpayer funds to directly coerce government beneficiaries to practice certain religious beliefs, and it does so without adequately notifying participants that they have a right to seek nonreligious services. In addition, it would allow faith-based organizations to engage in employment discrimination based on religion, with public funds.

Now title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act provides for a specific exemption for religious organizations from the prohibition against discrimination on the basis of religion and private employment. For example, a church in hiring the minister can require the minister to have to belong to that particular religion, but this exemption has never been applied to employees of Federal programs sponsored by a religiously affiliated organizations.

As proposed, H.R. 815, in 815 those organizations who are receiving Federal funds may deny, for example, drug counselors' employment based on their religion. For example, this bill allows an exemption as follows: Quote, a religious organization that is a program participant may require that an employee rendering services adhere to, A, the religious beliefs and practices of that organization, and B, the rules of the organization regarding the use of alcohol. This means that a federally funded drug program sponsored by a religiously affiliated organization could for the first time since we had meaningful civil rights laws say that drug counselors of other religions need not apply.

Beyond the considerable constitutional implications of this legislation there are also several serious policy concerns that should be mentioned. Of particular note is the concern that the legislation would override State licensing and certification of drug and alcohol treatment counselors.

Additionally, there is an inclusion of an absolutely absurd congressional finding that, quote, formal educational qualifications for counselors and other program personnel in drug treatment programs may undermine the effectiveness or even may hinder or prevent the provision of needed drug treatment services. To suggest that formal educational qualifications for counselors and other personnel may be counterproductive is not anything that we have evidence to support.

Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why we have laws separating church and State activities. We have a long line of Supreme Court cases showing how this could be done and how it is appropriate to be done.

This legislation, which references H.R. 815, is an extreme and dramatic departure from that long line of cases, and for that reason the resolution ought to be opposed.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to point out for the record that we have already adopted, as I said earlier, this three times; and I understand there are some differences on the Democratic side, but the Vice President of the United States, on his home page, on Gore 2000, actually says that "where faith can play a unique and effective role such as drug treatment." He also said in his speech, "I believe the lesson for our Nation is clear in those instances where the unique power of faith can help us meet the crushing social challenges that are otherwise impossible to meet, such as drug addiction."

So he is specifically referring to some of these programs where they have the drug addiction.

In his longer speech, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), where he was referring to pervasively sectarian, that is directly contrary to the Vice President's speech where he said, "I have seen the transformative power of faith-based approaches." He talks about: While I believe strongly in separation of church and state, but freedom of religion need not mean freedom from religion. There is a better way. He specifically talks about an organization where his wife practices. He says, my wife, Tipper, practices her faith and sees its power through her work with homeless people who come to Christ House.

Now, if it is pervasively sectarian, in fact, it would undermine the very principle that both parties are backing

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of House Resolution 27.

Members of this House have the distinct opportunity to join our efforts today and stand behind the idea of community renewal. A lot has been written and spoken lately about the idea of "compassionate conservatism." Even Presidential candidates of both parties have enjoyed extolling the success of faith-based and private institutions.

Well, all of us, from both sides of the aisle, have the opportunity to support legislation that compassionately looks out for the poor among us. Yet it does this by using the resources of government to spur the local economy and market incentives for the improvement on low-income neighborhoods and communities.

For the last year, the Renewal Alliance, a group of Senators and Members committed to assisting poor neighborhoods through civic and legislative solutions and nongovernmental solutions, has recognized private sector solutions to poverty and despair all across the country. We have found neighborhood organizations and communities that are efficiently solving the problems of poverty in ways that a government-run program can only dream of. We must realize that although there is a role for government, we cannot allow it to shackle the very institutions which are providing hope to these communities.

That is why the Renewal Alliance has developed the "Real Life" agenda, the legislation the gentleman referred to, to strengthen social entrepreneurs who are changing lives and stimulating economic development in our urban centers. They primarily do it in three ways: through community renewal, a charity tax credit; through economic incentives, for investment in poor communities; and through educational opportunities for low-income children.

The Great Society program, which was initiated by the liberals, had its $30 billion experiment with government programs. Let us now turn our efforts towards empowering grass-roots leaders who are working to eliminate poverty. These leaders are united in a commitment to offering help and healing to those in need. They have been dedicated to meeting the physical and spiritual and emotional needs of individuals.

I have made many stops to small, nonprofit, faith-based charities in my district, and throughout all of my visits, over and over, it is confirmed to me that those whose work springs from a heart dedicated to following a standard larger than themselves do not stop work at 5 o'clock. They do not leave their work at work. They live it, and they breath it. They are committed to helping our society's weakest members and doing the true, time-intensive work of transforming lives and communities.

Just as the character of a person is seen in the most precious objects of its love, it has also been said that the character of a nation is shown by how it treats its weakest members. Grass-roots, neighborhood, and community-based healers are found throughout this Nation, and such organizations within the communities have the ability to demonstrate success within a new paradigm, which is often, although not always, a faith component.

We must look past the think tanks, past the lofty theories; we must look past the government programs and wasted dollars. We must embrace the common-sense community answers which already exist and are already changing lives in our midst. They do not have hefty budgets. They are places that are not quasi-government, they are charitable in nature, and the Renewal Alliance has made it its business to seek out these kinds of solutions and promote them.

It is within these groups time and again that we have seen remarkable transformations taking place, not only in the lives of individuals, but in their families and in surrounding communities. For instance, Teen Challenge of Philadelphia, a faith-based drug and alcohol recovery program, has success rates of 70 to 80 percent compared to single-digit success rates of government programs. Yet it is continually hassled and charged to have the so-called correct staffing requirements which existed in a State-run drug treatment program which had single-digit success rates.

Another type of program we must recognize is one like Dorothy Harrell's Abbotsford Tenant Management Association in Philadelphia. Dorothy, unfortunately, cannot hire the residents of her housing facility to perform maintenance tasks around the community because of a government labor law requiring highly-paid workers from outside to come in and do simple tasks. That is absurd.

It is the goal of Renewal Alliance not only to bring these wrongs to light, but to promote these "beacons of hope" to a larger community.

We know that with government programs, 70 percent of every dollar designated to serve the poor goes not to the poor, but to those who serve the poor, the poverty industry. Therefore, there is a proprietary interest in maintaining people in poverty. This is exactly what we need to work against, and it is why we brought this important issue to the forefront of debate today.

We as an institution, as Members, must embrace the work of these groups. So today, I urge and challenge my colleagues to support the truly compassionate and, yes, conservative approach to renewing our low-income programs in this community. Support the American Community Renewal Act, a common-sense, next step to restore our cities to vibrancy. I urge support of this resolution so that we can take the next step towards commitment to communities in this Nation.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, could I inquire as to how much time we have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) has 14½ minutes remaining; the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) has 10½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS).

(Mr. EDWARDS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, the issue before the House today is not whether faith-based organizations can be an effective tool in solving America's social problems. The real question is whether, in effect, an unconstitutional direct funding of churches, synagogues, mosques and other houses of religion would empower faith-based organizations or shackle them with Federal regulations.

I am going to put aside my prepared remarks and ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he would allow us to exchange a discussion and questions. Since this did not go through a committee hearing process, I think it would be very helpful if the gentleman would answer some questions about the intent of this legislation, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) would allow me to have that exchange.

Now, if I could ask the gentleman, under this bill, and H.R. 815 which it supports, it says, the program can basically require a participant in a drug and alcohol abuse program to, quote, "actively participate in religious practice, worship and instruction, and follow rules of behavior devised by the organizations that are religious in content and/or origin."

Now, if a Wiccan organization, Wiccan organization were to win a drug and alcohol abuse grant funding program from the Federal Government, can I ask, could a Christian participant in that Wiccan program be forced to participate in a religious ceremony honoring the sun or the moon?

I would like to ask the author of the legislation, since only can we know by hearing from the author of the legislation, what the intent of this important legislation is that goes to the heart of the very idea and principle of the first amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana for an answer to that question.

Would a Christian under the gentleman's legislation and H.R. 815 who is participating in a program run by the Wiccans be forced to participate in a Wiccan religious service?

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. Clearly, there will be matters of interpretation. In most of these laws, we have specifically that one cannot use specific religious indoctrination, but one does not have to change the character of the program.

For example, religious people can teach it; a priest could be in a collar, you could have religious symbols in the room.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman, if on page 75, line 23, the American Community Renewal Act says, "A religious organization that is a program participant may require a program beneficiary who is elected to receive program services from the organization; one, can require them to actively participate in religious practice, worship and instruction; and two, to follow the rules of behavior devised by the organization that are religious in content or origin."

Is that in the bill?

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, that is in the bill. And reclaiming my time, the point I would make is, that direct language in the bill directly conflicts with the gentleman's answer to my question.

Let me ask the gentleman another question about the intent of this legislation and H.R. 815, which he is supporting.

Under this legislation, would a Christian organization that has won a grant program for alcohol and drug abuse programs be able to take Federal funds to hire and fire employees, and could it then refuse to hire an employee, a perfectly qualified employee, because that person is Jewish?

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, the fundamental underlying answer to your question is nobody is required to go to this program, there is an opt-out provision; and the answer is, yes, the integrity of the hiring organization, a Jewish organization can fire a Protestant if they chose.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I appreciate the gentleman admitting that under this legislation, we are going to endorse for the first time perhaps in this country's history federally-funded job discrimination based on race, sex, religion, marital status.

I think that would be as good of an argument as I could make against this legislation.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, did I understand the gentleman to say that if one church ran a drug counseling program, that they could have a sign on their door that said Jewish drug counselors need not apply for a job under a federally-funded program?

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, the answer is absolutely. Absolutely.

Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I think this point, these answers to these fundamental questions are an example of why it is a poor reflection upon this House that an issue as important as religious freedom is defended by the first 16 words of the Bill of Rights. The last two times this was debated it was debated at 12 a.m. and 1 a.m. respectively, and today it is debated during a suspension calendar. Maybe that is appropriate. We are suspending the religious freedoms guaranteed by the first amendment of the Bill of Rights under the suspension calendar today. This deserves more consideration, and this measure should be defeated.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I think it is fair to point out that in the Civil Rights Act there are also rights for those who want to practice their belief, and we should not say Christian counselors or Jewish counselors need not apply if they are going to practice their faith. There is no mandatory requirement to go into this program. The Vice President has supported this. This House has supported a similar provision in a welfare reform and social services block grant and now in juvenile justice.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, let me, first of all, thank the gentleman from Indiana for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this important resolution. I do so because despite the rosy vision of our economy, which some believe has brought prosperity to all Americans, the fact remains that millions of Americans are unemployed, are underemployed. Decent jobs and other economic opportunities are desperately needed in low-income, cash-strapped communities.

If the future looks bright for some, there are millions of others who obviously are not looking through that same lens. The fact of the matter is that in my congressional district, in the Seventh District of Illinois, there are 175,000 people who live at or below the poverty level.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I and 100 other Members of this body have joined in sponsoring the American Community Renewal Act, H.R. 815.

Mr. Speaker, community economic development requires one to examine the reality of one's community, including the economic and social activities of its residents, small businesses and other organizations. Traditionally, government agencies often use tax incentives and regulations to attract large businesses. That is because many Members think big business brings prosperity. This thinking has resulted in destructive competition among States and local areas to attract and retain these businesses.

The fact of the matter is only so many large businesses and corporations exist to go around. Not every community can have one. However, every community has a family-owned and operated small business. Every community has a church that actively participates in the lives of its people. ACRA directs government support to these valued resources, holding onto the idea that community residents should be the first people to benefit.

This is no absolute panacea, but I can tell the Members, in spite of all the conversations that we hear, there are communities all across America that are dying on the vine because they cannot get the resources into those communities to the people who need them.

While I strongly believe in the First Amendment, while I strongly believe in the separation of church and State, I am not convinced that by allowing programs to be operated by individuals who have Christian principles, who believe in certain values and are willing to espouse those, as it has already been indicated, Mr. Speaker, there is an opt-out provision, and this program does not require or this legislation does not require anyone to come into any program. That would be established.

However, it does allow programs that have proven to be effective where in addition to the professional modalities that are used people also inject faith into them.

So with all due respect to my colleagues who see this differently, it is my hope, my desire, and my wish that we would support this resolution, that we would support the American Community Renewal Act, and give an additional tools to those communities that nobody else has found a way to save.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend and colleague for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my strong opposition to House Joint Resolution 207. While this resolution is nonbinding and sounds innocent enough, the truth is that this resolution represents an assault on the separation of church and State.

The separation of church and State is a concept that underlies our constitutional democracy and dates back to the founding of our great Nation. On the walls of the Jefferson Memorial are inscribed these words: No man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship or ministry or shall otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinion or belief." Yet, House Joint Resolution 207 endorses a law which would compel a citizen through his tax dollars to do just that.

The American Community Renewal Act, which this resolution endorses, would change current law and allow the beneficiaries of church-based social services to be proselytized. In some cases this could mean that getting help requires getting saved. Let me repeat that again. In some cases, this could mean that getting help requires getting saved, getting saved.

That is not right. It is not fair. It is not just. It is not the role of or government to subsidize the spread of God's word. That is the role of the church, the synagogue, the mosque, the temple.

The American Community Renewal Act would also appear to sanction religious discrimination against employees. This bill would override State civil rights laws and allow religious-based employers providing social services to discriminate on the basis of a person's religious tenets or beliefs.

There are many religious institutions providing good and worthwhile social services to people in need throughout our Nation. These groups and institutions are to be applauded. But as a government and as a Nation, we should not violate the separation of church and State. It has guided our country for more than 220 years. Our forefathers in their wisdom devised a system of government that protects the religious liberty of all Americans. This Congress should do nothing to undermine this great system of our great Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to defeat House Resolution 207.

(Mr. SOUDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks, and include extraneous material.)

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, nothing in this legislation requires anybody to be saved or to participate in any program. In other words, there is an opt-out provision. I believe it will unleash the incredible influence and power of the African-American church in America. The Hispanic churches are actually very effective at the grass roots level.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following material for the Record:

THE AMERICAN COMMUNITY RENEWAL ACT
ANSWERS TO OBJECTIONS RAISED TO FAITH
BASED DRUG TREATMENT PROVISIONS ON THE AMERICAN COMMUNITY RENEWAL ACT (H.R. 815)

Objection 1: It's Unconstitutional—it violates the separation of church and state:

This is untrue. Currently, two voucher programs have been successfully and legally implemented. First, the Child Care Block grant was voucherized in 1993 so that parents could use federal daycare dollars at the provider they choose—religious or secular. Second, the new welfare law allows states to contract out their social services to both religious or non-religious providers.

ACRA's drug treatment provision is the same. It voucherizes the Substance Abuse Block grant and other treatment block grants and allows the addict to decide where to use the voucher.

The Court has ruled that as long as the voucher recipient has a choice among providers both religious and non-religious and the participant makes the decision, then the choice is Constitutional.

Consider it this way: If you oppose this provision of ACRA, you oppose Pell Grants. With a Pell Grant, students use this federal grant money to attend Notre Dame, Providence College, or Yeshiva University without raising constitutional concerns. The Substance Abuse Block grants are no different.

Objection 2: There is no certification of counselors in the bill:

Why would you exclude a program that is the most successful? Let's keep our priorities straight. What is more important—curing addicts or enforcing certification requirements?

ACRA places its priorities on helping addicts—not on who has what credentials. ACRA will not allow for a program to be discriminated against if it has a high success rate—even if there is no formal certification of its counselors.

Bob Woodson of the National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise works with some of the most successful faith-based drug treatment programs around the country has testified before the House Small Business Committee saying, "The silver bullet of the success of faith based substance abuse programs is staff composed of men and women who have themselves overcome addictions and can establish a basis of trust and openness necessary for addicts to be freed from their habits."

Objection 3: Advancing these faith-based programs is an untested idea even according to a GOP commissioned GAO report:

Faith-based programs work. According to the National Institute on Drug Abuse, faith-based programs have a 60-80% cure rate. In sharp contrast, a RAND Corporation issued a report showing conventional treatment programs have only a 6-13% success rate.

In addition to being more successful, faith-based programs are almost always cheaper. Teen Challenge in PA spends only $25 to $35 a day compared with $600 a day for conventional, therapeutic hospital-based care.

Objection 4: ACRA forces religion on people:

ACRA forces religion on no one. It only makes highly successful programs accessible to more people.

The language is very clear that the individual makes the choice of where to get the treatment—not the state. Even if they are not happy with their choice, addicts can leave the program and use their voucher at another program at anytime.

Objection 5: H.R. 815 allows for faith-based programs to discriminate against hiring people with different religious backgrounds:

Doesn't it make sense that a church can have the ability to pick their staff based on their religious beliefs? If that is a part of their recipe for success, then they should be able to hire those that believe.

Essentially, this is no different than publicly run programs discriminating against counselors because they don't have a masters degree.

[From the Brookings Review, Mar. 22, 1999]
"NO AID TO RELIGION?"

(By Ronald J. Sider and Heidi Rolland Unruh)

As government struggles to solve a confounding array of poverty-related social problems—deficient education, un- and underemployment, substance abuse, broken families, substandard housing, violent crime, inadequate health care, crumbling urban infrastructures—it has turned increasingly to the private sector, including a wide range of faith-based agencies. As described in Stephen Monsma's When Sacred and Secular Mix, public funding for nonprofit organizations with a religious affiliation is surprisingly high. Of the faith-based child service agencies Monsma surveyed, 63 percent reported that more than 20 percent of their budget came from public funds.

Government's unusual openness to cooperation with the private religious sector arises in part from public disenchantment with its programs, but also from an increasingly widespread view that the nation's acute social problems have moral and spiritual roots. Acknowledging that social problems arise both from unjust socioeconomic structures and from misguided personal choices, scholars, journalists, politicians, and community activists are calling attention to the vital and unique role that religious institutions play in social restoration.

Though analysis of the outcomes of faith-based social services is as yet incomplete, the available evidence suggests that some of those services may be more effective and cost-efficient than similar secular and government programs. One oft-cited example is Teen Challenge, the world's largest residential drug rehabilitation program, with a reported rehabilitation rate of over 70 percent—a vastly higher success rate than most other programs, at a substantially lower cost. Multiple studies identify religion as a key variable in escaping the inner city, recovering from alcohol and drug addiction, keeping marriages together, and staying out of prison.

THE NEW COOPERATION AND THE COURTS

Despite this potential, public-private cooperative efforts involving religious agencies have been constrained by the current climate of First Amendment interpretation. The ruling interpretive principle on public funding of religious nonprofits—following the metaphor of the wall of separation between church and state, as set forth in Everson v. Board of Education (1947)—is "no aid to religion." While most court cases have involved funding for religious elementary and secondary schools, clear implications have been drawn for other types of "pervasively sectarian" organizations. A religiously affiliated institution may receive public funds—but only if it is not too religious.

Application of the no-aid policy by the courts, however, has been confusing. The Supreme Court has provided no single, decisive definition of "pervasively sectarian" to determine which institutions qualify for public funding, and judicial tests have been applied inconsistently. Rulings attempting to separate the sacred and secular aspects of religiously based programs often appear arbitrary from a faith perspective, and at worst border on impermissible entanglement. As a result of this legal confusion, some agencies receiving public funds pray openly with their clients, while other agencies have been banned even from displaying religious symbols. Faith-based child welfare agencies have greater freedom in incorporating religious components than religious schools working with the same population. Only a few publicly funded religious agencies have been challenged in the courts, but such leniency may not continue. While the no-aid principle holds official sway, faith-based agencies must live with the tension that what the government gives with one hand, it can take away (with legal damages to boot) with the other. The lack of legal recourse leaves agencies vulnerable to pressures from public officials and community leaders to secularize their programs.

The Supreme Court's restrictive rulings on aid to religious agencies stand in tension with the government's movement toward greater reliance on private sector social initiatives. If the no-aid principle were applied consistently against all religiously affiliated agencies now receiving public funding, government administration of social services would face significant setbacks. This ambiguous state of affairs for public-private cooperation has created a climate of mistrust and misunderstanding, in which faith-based agencies are reluctant to expose themselves to risk of lawsuits, civic authorities are confused about what is permissible, and multiple pressures push religious organizations into hiding or compromising their identity, while at the same time, many public officials and legislators are willing to look the other way when faith-based social service agencies include substantial religious programming.

Fortunately, an alternative principle of First Amendment interpretation, which Monsma identifies as the "equal treatment" strain, has recently been emerging in the Supreme Court. This line of reasoning—as in Widmar v. Vincent (1981) and Rosenberger v. Rector (1995)—holds that public access to facilities or benefits cannot exclude religious groups. Although the principle has not yet been applied to funding for social service agencies, it could be a precedent for defending cooperation between government and faith-based agencies where the offer of funding is available to any qualifying agency.

The section of the 1996 welfare reform law known as Charitable Choice paves the way for this cooperation by prohibiting government from discriminating against nonprofit applicants for certain types of social service funding (whether by grant, contract, or voucher) on the basis of their religious nature. Charitable Choice also shields faith-based agencies receiving federal funding from governmental pressures to alter their religious character—among other things, assuring their freedom to hire staff who share their religious perspective. Charitable Choice prohibits religious nonprofits from using government funds for "inherently religious" activities—defined as "sectarian workshop, instruction, or proselytization"—but allows them to raise money from non-government sources to cover the costs of any such activities they choose to integrate into their program. Clearly, Charitable Choice departs from the dominant "pervasively sectarian" standard for determining eligibility for government funding, which has restricted the funding of thoroughly religious organizations. It makes religiosity irrelevant to the selection of agencies for public-private cooperative ventures and emphasizes instead the public goods to be achieved by cooperation. At the same time, Charitable Choice protects clients' First Amendment rights by ensuring that services are not conditional on religious preference, that client participation in religious activities is voluntary, and that an alternative nonreligious service provider is available.

THE FIRST AMENDMENT AND THE CASE FOR CHARITABLE CHOICE

Does Charitable Choice violate the First Amendment's non-establishment and free exercise clauses?

We think no. As long as participants in faith-based programs freely choose those programs over a "secular" provider and may opt out of particular religious activities within the program, no one is coerced to participate in religious activity, and freedom of religion is preserved. As long as government is equally open to funding programs rooted in any religious perspective whether Islam, Christianity, philosophic naturalism, or no explicit faith perspective—government is not establishing or providing preferential benefits to any specific religion or to religion in general. As long as religious institutions maintain autonomy over such crucial areas as program content and staffing, the integrity of their separate identity is maintained. As long as government funds are exclusively designated for activities that are not inherently religious, no taxpayer need fear that taxes are paying for religious activity. While Charitable Choice may increase interactions between government and religious institutions, these interactions do not in themselves violate religious liberty. Charitable Choice is designed precisely to discourage such interactions from leading to impermissible entanglement or establishment of religion.

Not only does Charitable Choice not violate proper church-state relations, it strengthens First Amendment protections. In the current context of extensive government funding for a wide array of social services, limiting government funds to allegedly "secular" programs actually offers preferential treatment to one specific religious worldview.

In setting forth this argument, we distinguish four types of social service providers. First are secular providers who make no explicit reference to God or any ultimate values. People of faith may work in such an agency—say, a job training program that teaches job skills and work habits—but staff use only current techniques from the social and medical sciences without reference to religious faith. Expressing explicit faith commitments of any sort is considered inappropriate.

Second are religiously affiliated providers (of any religion) who incorporate little inherently religious programming and rely primarily on the same medical and social science methods as a secular agency. Such a program may be provided by a faith community and a staff with strong theological reasons for their involvement, and religious symbols and a chaplain may be present. A religiously affiliated job training program might be housed in a church, and clients might be informed about the church's religious programs and about the availability of a chaplain's services. But the content of the training curriculum would be very similar to that of a secular program.

Third are exclusively faith-based providers whose programs rely on inherently religious activities, making little or no use of techniques from the medical and social sciences. An example would be a prayer support group and Bible study or seminar that teaches biblical principles of work for job-seekers.

Fourth are holistic faith-based providers who combine techniques from the medical and social sciences with inherently religious components such as prayer, worship, and the study of sacred texts. A holistic job training program might incorporate explicitly biblical principles into a curriculum that teaches job skills and work habits, and invite clients to pray with program staff.

Everyone agrees that public funding of only the last two types of providers would constitute government establishment of religion. But if government (because of the "no aid to religion" principle) funds only secular programs, is this a properly neutral policy?

Not really, for two reasons. First, given the widespread public funding for private social services, if government funds only secular programs, it puts all faith-based programs at a disadvantage. Government would tax everyone—both religious and secular—and then fund only allegedly secular programs. Government-run or government-funded programs would be competing in the same fields with faith-based programs lacking access to such support.

Second, secular programs are not religiously neutral. Implicitly, purely "secular" programs convey the message that nonreligious technical knowledge and skills are sufficient to address social problems such as low job skills and single parenthood. Implicitly, they teach the irrelevance of a spiritual dimension to human life. Although secular programs may not explicitly uphold the tenets of philosophical naturalism and the belief that nothing exists except the natural order, implicitly they support such a worldview. Rather than being religiously neutral, "secular" programs implicitly convey a set of naturalistic beliefs about the nature of persons and ultimate reality that serve the same function as religion. Vast public funding of only secular programs means massive government bias in favor of one particular quasi-religious perspective—namely, philosophical naturalism.

Religiously affiliated agencies (type two), which have received large amounts of funding in spite of the "no aid to religion" principle, pose another problem. These agencies often claim a clear religious identity—in the agency's history or name, in the religious identity and motivations of sponsors and some staff, in the provision of a chaplain, or in visible religious symbols. By choice or in response to external pressures, however, little in their program content and methods distinguishes many of these agencies from their fully secular counterparts. Prayer, spiritual counseling, Bible studies, and invitations to join a faith community are not featured; in fact, most such agencies would consider inherently religious activities inappropriate to social service programs.

Millions of public dollars have gone to support the social service programs of religiously affiliated agencies. There are three possible ways to understand this apparent potential conflict with the "no aid to religion" principle. Perhaps these agencies are finally only nominally religious, and in fact are essentially secular institutions, in which case their religious sponsors should be raising questions. Or perhaps they are more pervasively religious than they have appeared to government funders, in which case the government should have withheld funding.

The third explanation may be that these agencies are operating with a specific, widely accepted worldview that holds that people may need God for their spiritual well-being, but that their social problems can be addressed exclusively through medical and social science methods. Spiritual nurture, in this worldview, is important in its place, but has no direct bearing on achieving public goods like drug rehabilitation or overcoming welfare dependency. Such a worldview acknowledges the spiritual dimension of persons and the existence of a transcendent realm outside of nature. But it also teaches (whether explicitly or implicitly) a particular understanding of God and persons, by addressing people's social needs independently of their spiritual nature. By allowing aid to flow only to the religiously affiliated agencies holding this understanding, government in effect has given preferential treatment to a particular religious worldview.

Holistic faith-based agencies (type four), on the other hand, operate on the belief that no area of a person's life—whether psychological, physical, social, or economic—can be adequately considered in isolation from the spiritual. Agencies operating out of this worldview consider the explicitly spiritual components of their programs—used in conjunction with conventional, secular social service methods—as fundamental to their ability to achieve the secular social goals desired by government. Government has in the past considered such agencies ineligible for public funding, though they may provide the same services as their religiously affiliated counterparts.

Some claim that allowing public funds to be channeled through a holistic religious program would threaten the First Amendment, while funding religiously affiliated agencies does not. But the pervasively sectarian standard has also constituted a genuine, though more subtle, establishment of religion, because it supports one type of religious worldview while penalizing holistic beliefs. It should not be the place of government to judge between religious worldviews—but this is what the no-aid principle has required the courts to do. Selective religious perspectives on the administration of social services are deemed permissible for government to aid. Those who believe that explicitly religious content does not play a central role in addressing social problems are free to act on this belief with government support; those who believe that spiritual nurture is an integral aspect of social transformation are not.

The alternative is to pursue a policy that discriminates neither against nor in favor of any religious perspective. Charitable Choice enables the government to offer equal access to benefits to any faith-based nonprofit, as long as the money is not used for inherently religious activities and the agency provides the social benefits desired by government. Charitable Choice does not ask courts to decide which agencies are too religious. It clearly indicates the types of "inherently religious" activities that are off-limits for government funding. The government must continue to make choices about which faith-based agencies will receive funds, but eligibility for funding is to be based on an agency's ability to provide specific public goods, rather than on its religious character. Charitable Choice moves the focus of church-state interactions away from the religious beliefs and practices of social service agencies, and onto the common goals of helping the poor and strengthening the fabric of public life.

A MODEL FOR CHANGE

Our treasured heritage of religious freedom demands caution as we contemplate new forms of church-state cooperation—but caution does not preclude change, if the benefits promise to outweigh the dangers. Indeed, change is required if the pervasively sectarian standard is actually biased in favor of some religious perspectives and against others.

For church and state to cooperate successfully, both must remain true to their roles and mission. Religious organizations must refrain from accepting public funds if that means compromising their beliefs and undermining their effectiveness and integrity. Fortunately, Charitable Choice allows faith-based agencies to maintain their religious identity, while expanding the possibilities for constructive cooperation between church and state in addressing the nation's most serious social problems.

THE GORE AGENDA: FAITH-BASED ORGANIZATIONS AND THE POLITICS OF COMMUNITY

"I believe the lesson for our nation is clear: in those instances where the unique power of faith can help us meet the crushing social challenges that are otherwise impossible to meet—such as drug addiction and gang violence—we should explore carefully-tailored partnerships with our faith community, so we can use approaches that are working best."—Al Gore, Atlanta, GA

Al Gore knows that faith is critical to strong families. That is why he has worked to promote the role of faith-based organizations in helping to strengthen families.

Through the Coalition to Sustain Success, an organization formed at the urging of the Vice President, he has worked to harness the best efforts of faith-based, community-based, and non-profit organizations to help former welfare recipients succeed in the workplace. His experiences with the Coalition have shown him that faith-based organizations are making a difference in addressing other challenges that have defied attempted solutions. Leaders of the new revolution of faith-based organizations call it "the politics of community."

Al Gore believes government can play a greater role in sustaining the quiet revolution of faith and values—not by dictating solutions from above, but by supporting the effective new policies that are rising up from the grassroots level. That is why he is proposing concrete actions to help faith-based organizations do what they do best—offer new hope for social progress.

EXTEND CHARITABLE CHOICE

The 1966 welfare reform law contains a provision called Charitable Choice that allows states to enlist faith-based organizations to provide basic welfare services and help move people from welfare to work—as long as there is a secular alternative for anyone who wants one, and as long as no one is required to participate in religious observances as a condition for receiving services. Al Gore believes we should extend this carefully-tailored approach to other vital services where faith can play a unique and effective role—such as drug treatment, homelessness, and youth violence prevention.

SCALING UP THE ROLE OF FAITH-BASED ORGANIZATIONS

Al Gore believes that the solutions faith-based organizations are pioneering should be at the very heart of our national strategy for building a better, more just nation. By "scaling up" the efforts of faith-based organizations and making them integral to strategic local, state, and national planning, we can invigorate civil society; empower faith-based and secular non-profits alike; create a myriad of new multi-sector partnerships; and bring a whole new leadership into the political process—that of the community.

ENCOURAGE PRIVATE SUPPORT FOR FAITH-BASED ORGANIZATIONS

We need to make sure the efforts of faith- and value-based organizations are recognized and supported across America. Right now it is common for employees to have their charitable contributions matched by their company, up to an annual limit. Rarely are faith-based programs approved for such matches. Al Gore calls upon the corporations of America to encourage and match contributions to faith and value-based organizations.

TEXT OF GORE REMARKS ON THE ROLE OF FAITH-BASED ORGANIZATIONS, MAY 24, 1999

I want to talk today about a dramatic transformation in America. It's one that you and your families are already a part of.

This transformation is a quiet one—and a good one. It is a movement that is entirely about solutions. And it is sweeping from home to home and neighbor to neighbor, right now in America.

In spite of the cultural soul sickness we've confronted recently, there is a goodness in Americans that, when mobilized, is more than a match for it. Americans are still the most decent people on earth—and are actually growing in service and in selflessness. America has the highest level of religious belief and observance of any advanced nation. Americans' volunteer work has doubled in twenty years, even as more women—the traditional mainstay of volunteer groups—have moved into the workplace. Both adults and teenagers are just as likely to go to church or synagogue today as their counterparts were twenty years ago. And in many ways, our public policies have shown the face of that strong and growing commitment to decency: ever-fewer Americans tolerate bigotry and discrimination, and our journey as a society reflects that.

This hunger for goodness manifests itself in a newly vigorous grassroots movement tied to non-profit institutions, many of them faith-based and values-based organizations. A church's soup kitchen. A synagogue's program to help battered women. A mosque's after-school computer center that keeps teenagers away from gangs and drugs.

It's commonplace to say that people are turned off to politics. This transformation shows that in fact people are not turned off to politics—to organized community action; rather, they are turned off to too many of the ways they have seen Washington work.

What many people are struggling to find is the soul of politics, to use Jim Wallis' words. They are living their politics, by deciding to solve the problems they see, and by going out into the streets of their communities and serving those left out and left behind. People are engaged in the deeply American act of not waiting for government to deal with the problems on their own doorsteps. Instead, they are casting a vote for their own wise hearts and strong hands to take care of their own.

I came here today to say this: the moment has come for Washington to catch up to the rest of America. The moment has come to use the people's government to better help them help their neighbors.

Ordinary Americans have decided to confront the fact that our severest challenges are not just material, but spiritual. Americans know that the fundamental change we need will require not only new policies, but more importantly a change of both our hearts and our minds. If children are not taught right from wrong, they behave chaotically; if individuals don't do what's right by their kids, no new government programs will stanch that decay. Whether they are religious or not, most Americans are hungry for a deeper connection between politics and moral values; many would say "spiritual values." Without values and conscience, our political life degenerates. And Americans profoundly—rightly—believe that politics and morality are deeply interrelated. They want to reconnect the American spirit to the body politic.

For too long, national leaders have been trapped in a dead end debate. Some on the right have said for too long that a specific set of religious values should be imposed, threatening the founders' precious separation of church and state. In contrast, some on the left have said for too long that religious values should play no role in addressing public needs. These are false choices: hollow secularism or right-wing religion. Both positions are rigid; they are not where the new solutions lie. I believe strongly in the separation of church and state. But freedom of religion need not mean freedom from religion. There is a better way.

My wife Tipper practices her faith and sees its power through her work with homeless people who come to Christ House, in Washington, DC. Many at Christ House are struggling with substance abuse and mental health issues—but they often suffer from a feeling of spiritual emptiness as well. So Christ House does more than provide shelter and medical care. It creates a loving, trusting atmosphere that helps address the issues that led to homelessness in the first place. Its founder tells the story of a reporter who spend a week there, interviewing the patients. At the end of her time, she said: "What amazed me is that for all of the medical treatment, I didn't hear anyone talking about putting on bandages, or taking medication." Instead, the reporter said, they talk of "a much deeper type of healing."

I have seen the transformative power of faith-based approaches through the national coalition I have led to help people move from welfare to work—the Coalition to Sustain Success.

In San Antonio I met a woman named Herlinda. She had given up on finding work, and had gone on welfare. She had so many challenges to face. English was her second language. She didn't think she had the skills to hold a job. And she had begun to conclude that maybe she didn't deserve one. Then she signed up for job training at the Christian Women's Job Corps, which is part of our Coalition.

There, she met a woman who mentored her through prayer and Bible study, and she soon began to regain her self-confidence. Faith gave her a new feeling of self-worth, of purpose—something no other program, no matter how technically sophisticated, could give her. When I met her, she told me that for the first time in years, she had applied for a position at Wal-Mart. Then she looked me in the eye, and said with pride, "I know I'll get the job."

And she did. In fact, Herlinda was recently honored as employee of the month in her workplace.

In San Francisco, I met a woman named Vicki. Because of a drug addiction, she had lost custody of her two children, lost her job, and gone on welfare. She had tried without success to beat her addiction. Then she joined a faith and values-based program that was part of our Coalition, and finally gained the inner strength to become clean. She regained custody of her children. And she has kept a full-time job. When I asked what she could do for others in the same bind, she said, "unfortunately, nothing—unless they want to change first." For Vicki, it was faith that finally enabled her to pry open the vise grip of drug addiction.

This better way is working spectacularly. From San Antonio to San Francisco, from Goodwill in Orlando to the Boys and Girls Club in Des Moines—I have seen the difference faith-based organizations make.

Tipper and I also began to learn about this better way at our annual "Family Reunion" policy conferences, where we saw how the power of love can reconnect fathers with children they had abandoned, and how that surrendering commitment to the father-child bond has a transforming impact on men more powerful than any program ever tried. I've also seen this approach used to clean up the environment by many local congregations working in their own communities, and working on national and global issues under the umbrella of the Religious Partnership for the Environment.

Leaders of the new movement of faith-based organizations pervasively sectarian call it "the politics of community." In this new politics, citizens take local action, based on their churches, synagogues, and mosques, but reaching out to all—to do what all great religions tell good people to do: visit the prisoners, help the orphans, feed and clothe the poor. The men and women who work in faith- and values-based organizations are driven by their spiritual commitment; to serve their God, they have sustained the drug-addicted, the mentally ill, the homeless; they have trained them, educated them, cared for them, healed them. Most of all, they have done what government can never do; what it takes God's help, sometimes, for all of us to manage; they have loved them—loved their neighbors, no matter how beaten down, how hopeless, how despairing. And good programs and practices seem to follow, born out of that compassionate care.

Here in Atlanta at the Salvation Army's Adult Rehabilitation Center, I see in you the powerful role of faith in nurturing a change of consciousness. All of the men here who are recovering from substance abuse start the day with a morning devotion period. Many of them work right here during the day refinishing and reupholstering furniture, doing the work of the Salvation Army. Captain Guy Nickum, who runs the Center, says: "Our belief in God is in all of the steps of recovery." That belief is giving new hope to many of the recovering people who are with us today.

That is why this transformation is different in many ways from what has come before. Some past national political leaders have asked us to rely on a fragile patchwork of well-intentioned volunteerism to feed the hungry and house the homeless. That approach, optimistic though it was, was not adequate for the problems too many Americans face. It left too many American children behind to suffer. If all the private foundations in America gave away all their endowments, it would cover about one year of our current national commitment to meeting social challenges. In contrast, faith- and values-based organizations show a strength that goes beyond "volunteerism." These groups nationwide have shown a muscular commitment to facing down poverty, drug addiction, domestic violence and homelessness. And when they have worked out a partnership with government, they have created programs and organizations that have woven a resilient web of life support under the most helpless among us.

Reverend Eugene Rivers, as I read recently in an article, has been widely celebrated for helping to take back the worst neighborhoods of Boston through faith. He remembers a hardened gangster telling him: "I'm there when Johnny goes out for a loaf of bread. I'm there, you're not. I win, you lose. It's all about being there." but Reverend Rivers resolved that he would be there, too. He was, and he faced down the gangs.

A second difference is that they give another kind of help than the help given in government programs, no matter how dedicated the employees. To the workers in these organizations, that client is not a number, but a child of God. Those on the front lines of our most intractable battles are surprised to discover how concrete a difference that makes. "You couldn't function effectively without ministers in Boston," says William J. Bratton, who was the city's police commissioner, talking to a reporter about the clergy who saved inner-city kids from gangs.

Partly because of Reverend Rivers and his fellow faith leaders, Boston went 18 months without losing a single child to gun violence.

These workers are motivated more by service than institutional allegiance, so they try to get every penny to go to alleviating suffering rather than upholding a program for the sake of professional credentialism. Unlike bureaucracies, which can sometimes be self-perpetuating, the churches want their helping programs to work so well that they become obsolete. Traditional "helping" often gives material aid to the poor or hungry—and that's all. FBO outreach gives food, shelter—but also the one-to-one caring, respect and commitment that save lives even more effectively than just a nourishing meal or a new suit of clothes.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

(Mrs. MEEK of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I came to this floor to talk about the goodness that I saw in House Resolution 207. I did not realize that I would run into a constitutional argument, but I have, and I do not mind addressing it.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that, barring constitutional prohibitions, House Resolution 207 is a very good resolution. I want to tell the Members why. I represent a district where people are in need. They are in need of housing. They are in need of faith. They are in need of the resolution. They are in need of reparations for long lost things, so many things.

I saw the good in this resolution. Many times a booming stock market does not boom in some of the inner city neighborhoods that I represent. The constituents which I represent, we have pockets of poverty. Faith-based organizations have come to the rescue. To the residents of these communities and these churches, it has been clear that without the help that they are receiving, many people would be homeless.

Sometimes they are the only organization, Mr. Speaker, that will provide hope to the communities. Not only have they been paragons of faith and hope for the spiritual need of their members, but they have provided economic opportunity within the limits of their financial resources. I feel that they have aggressively and should continue to aggressively venture into businesses, for-profit businesses, and to provide services.

For these reasons, faith-based organizations in my opinion deserve our close attention to be sure that we are able to deliver something to these communities.

I stand here as a woman of faith and say that there is a lot to be gained from faith-based organizations helping. They have demonstrated a sincere commitment. They are able to get the message to the people. So barring the constitutional limitations which I have heard here today, we need to support the faith-based organizations movement.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent that the time of debate be extended by 10 minutes, 5 minutes per side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

(Mr. SCOTT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks, and include extraneous material.)

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, first, I think it is important in terms of the requirement, the coercion of religious activity, I think it is important that I repeat what is on page 75 of the bill: "A religious organization that is a program participant may require a program beneficiary to actively participate in religious practice, worship, and instruction, and to follow the rules of behavior devised by the organization that are religious in content and origin."

Mr. Speaker, let us see what some religious groups have to say about this particular piece of legislation. I have a letter from the Working Group for Religious Freedom and Social Services which says "We, the undersigned religious education, health, civil rights, and civil liberties organizations, are writing to urge you to oppose House Resolution 207 which endorses the substance abuse treatment section of H.R. 815, the American Community Renewal Act, because it would violate the religious liberty rights of Federal taxpayers and social service beneficiaries."

Mr. Speaker, it goes on to say that the bill will allow religious providers to engage in religious discrimination against employees who are paid through and work on taxpayer-funded substance abuse treatment programs. Although religious institutions are permitted to hire co-religionists in the context of private religious activity, ACRA overrides State civil rights laws and amounts to Federally-funded employment discrimination by requiring employees paid with public funds to adhere to the religious tenets and teachings of the organization.

In addition, the act undercuts States' rights by preempting State constitutional and statutory provisions, including civil rights laws. Furthermore, ACRA erroneously states that counselor training undermines effective substance abuse treatment, and the bill requires States that establish such training requirements to give equivalent credit for religious education such as Bible study to course work in drug treatment.

This letter is endorsed by 31 organizations, including the American Baptist Churches, American Civil Liberties Union, the American Counseling Association, American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress, and a whole host of other religious organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I include this letter for the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE WORKING GROUP FOR RELIGIOUS

FREEDOM IN SOCIAL SERVICES,

Washington, DC, June 21, 1999.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: We, the undersigned religious, education, health, civil rights, and civil liberties organizations are writing to urge you to oppose H.J. Res. 207 which endorses the Substance Abuse Treatment section of H.R. 815, the "American Community Renewal Act" (ACRA) because it would violate the religious liberty rights of federal taxpayers and social service beneficiaries. The bill would amend the federal Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration statute so that "pervasively sectarian" religious institutions, such as churches and other houses of worship, could receive public funds to provide services on behalf of the government.

Although many religiously-affiliated nonprofit organizations currently provide government-funded substance abuse treatment, the "American Community Renewal Act" would change current law to permit churches and other religious organizations that include evangelism in their programs, to receive contracts and vouchers for programs in which government social service beneficiaries may be proselytized.

In addition to violating the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment, ACRA is an affront to the religious liberty rights of substance abuse and mental health beneficiaries. Although a beneficiary technically has the right to object to a religious provider, ACRA does not provide notice to the beneficiary of his or her right to object. This is particularly disturbing in the context of substance abuse treatment. It is difficult enough for those addicted to substances to seek help. Furthermore, in most instances, even if a beneficiary takes the initiative to seek an alternative provider, the bill makes the religious institution responsible for finding the alternative.

The bill would also allow religious providers to engage in religious discrimination against employees who are paid through, and work on, taxpayer-funded substance abuse treatment programs. Although religious institutions are permitted to hire co-religionists in the context of private religious activity, ACRA overrides state civil rights laws and amounts to federally-funded employment discrimination by requiring employees paid with public funds to adhere to the religious tenets and teachings of the organization.

Additionally, the "American Community Renewal Act" undercuts state rights by preempting state constitutional and statutory provisions (including civil rights laws). Furthermore, ACRA erroneously states that counselor training undermines effective substance abuse treatment, and the bill requires States that establish such training requirements to give equivalent credit for religious education, such as Bible study, to course work in drug treatment. This federal legislation overtly preempts state constitutions and statutes that protect religious liberty, civil rights, and training of treatment providers.

Of course, with government dollars comes government oversight. Such entanglement between government and religion violates the Establishment Clause, and demonstrates why the current law's distinction between "pervasively sectarian" and "religiously-affiliated" institutions better protects religious freedom. ACRA would obliterate this protection and open the door to other programs that provide taxpayer funds to religious institutions, such as school tuition vouchers.

For these reasons we strongly urge you to oppose H.J. Res. 207 which endorses the substance abuse section of H.R. 815, the "American Community Renewal Act."

Sincerely,

American Baptist Churches; American Civil Liberties Union; American Counseling Association; American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees; American Jewish Committee; American Jewish Congress; Americans United for Separation of Church and State; Anti-Defamation League; Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs; Catholics for a Free Choice; Central Conference of American Rabbis; CHILD Inc.; Friends Committee on National Legislation (Quaker); General Board of Church and Society, United Methodist Church; General Conference of Seventh Day Adventists; Hadassah; Jewish Council for Public Affairs; Legal Action Center; Na'amat USA; National Association of Alcoholism & Drug Abuse Counselors; National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors; National Council of Jewish Women; National Jewish Democratic Council; People for the American Way; Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); Washington Office; The Rabbinical Assembly; Union of American Hebrew Congregations; Unitarian Universalist Association; United Church of Christ, Office for Church in Society; Women's American Ort; Workmen's Circle.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a letter from a number of drug counseling institutions which says, "The undersigned organizations oppose House Resolution 207 and the portions of the American Community Renewal Act which will hurt provision of professionally competent alcohol and drug treatment services.

"Unfortunately, the Community Renewal Act will undermine treatment effectiveness. The Act will override State licensure and certification of alcohol and drug counselors, crushing State guarantees of safety in alcoholism and drug addiction treatment.

"The Act actually states that alcohol and drug treatment counseling is not a professional field and that formal education for counselors is detrimental to the practice of effective counseling. This is simply inaccurate. Alcoholism and drug addiction is a disease. Consequently, alcohol and drug counseling has long required specialized knowledge and training compelling the use of professional practitioners. Education equals effective alcoholism and drug addiction treatment.

"Even more troubling, the Act will require States which require formal education to deliver services to 'give credit for religious education and training equivalent to credit given for secular course work in drug treatment. . . ."

"Alcohol and drug treatment is a medical service requiring medical knowledge. Treatment professionals specialize in diagnosis and treatment of psychoactive disorders and other substance abuse/use dependency. These counselors and other professionals possess a constellation of knowledge that is unique to the alcoholism and drug abuse counseling profession, and distinguishes ADCs from other related professions and specialties. Religious education and training is not equivalent to training given to the medical specialty of alcohol and drug treatment."

Mr. Speaker, this letter is endorsed by the American Counseling Association, the National Association of Alcohol and Drug Abuse Counselors, the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors, the National Association of Student Assistance Professionals, the National Coalition of State Alcohol and Drug Treatment and Prevention Associations, the Partnership for Recovery, which includes the Betty Ford Center, the Valley Hope Medical Association, and a whole host of other organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I also place this letter in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MEMBERS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS: The undersigned organizations oppose H. Res. 207 and the portions of the American Community Renewal Act which will hurt the provision of professionally competent alcohol and drug treatment services.

Unfortunately, the Community Renewal Act will undermine treatment effectiveness. The Act will override state licensure and certification of alcohol and drug counselors, crushing state guarantees of safety in alcoholism and drug addiction treatment.

The Act actually states that alcohol and drug treatment counseling is not a professional field and that formal education for counselors is detrimental to the practice of effective counseling. This is simply inaccurate. Alcoholism and drug addiction is a disease. Consequently, alcohol and drug counseling has long required specialized knowledge and training compelling the use of professional practitioners. Education equals effective alcoholism and drug addiction treatment.

Even more troubling, the Act will require States which require formal education to deliver treatment services to "give credit for religious education and training equivalent to credit given for secular course work in drug treatment. . . ." Alcohol and drug treatment is a medical service requiring medical knowledge. Treatment professionals specialize in the diagnosis, assessment and treatment of psychoactive disorders and other substance abuse/use/dependency. These counselors and other professionals possess a constellation of knowledge that is unique to the alcoholism and drug abuse counseling profession, and distinguishes ADCs from other related professions and specialties. Religious education and training is not equivalent to training given for the medical specialty of alcohol and drug treatment.

The Act also mandates States to waive their formal educational requirements under certain circumstances or face lawsuits. Finally the legislation attempts to remedy a problem that does not exist. Religious organizations are already entitled to receive federal funding by complying with the rules for charitable organizations.

All of our organizations seek to include spirituality in the lives of individuals. Spirituality is an important component of treatment, and mechanisms already exist to bring this aspect of recovery to patients without changing current law.

However, by stating that establishing formal education requirements may hinder treatment and by attempting to equate religious education with knowledge about alcoholism and drug dependence, the Community Renewal Act undermines treatment efforts and removes scarce funding from effective treatment programs. Unfortunately, this legislation ensures that the millions of people suffering from addiction, their families, employers and communities will be harmed by incompetent treatment.

The Community Renewal Act will hurt the provision of professionally competent alcohol and drug treatment services. For this reason, we urge you to vote against H. Res. 207.

Sincerely,

Abuse Counselors; The National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors; The National Association of Student Assistance Professionals; The National Coalition of State Alcohol and Drug Treatment and Prevention Associations; The National Council for Community Behavioral Healthcare; The National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence; National TASC; The Partnership for Recovery; The Betty Ford Center; The Caron Foundation; Hazelden, Inc.; The Valley Hope Medical Association; The Research Society on Alcoholism; Therapeutic Communities of America.

CHARITABLE CHOICE WILL HURT THE PROVISION OF PROFESSIONALLY COMPETENT ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT SERVICES

NAADAC Opposes the Appropriation of Federal Funding to Sectarian Treatment Providers Because Such Funding Will Undermine Licensure Laws and Certification Requirements in the States.

History: Since 1995, Senator John Ashcroft (R-MO) has been offering "charitable choice" amendments and legislation which would require federal agencies to allow sectarian (religious) organizations to receive federal funding to provide community services, including alcohol and drug counseling. Senator Ashcroft has, in past years, placed a hold on reauthorization of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) in order to force a vote in the Senate to apply charitable provisions to SAMHSA. In 1996 Representatives J.C. Watts (R-OK) and James Talent (R-MO) introduced the "American Community Renewal Act" an "enhanced" charitable choice legislation to require that SAMHSA permit a "faith-based" substance abuse treatment centers to receive federal funding. NAADAC considers this to be an enhanced charitable choice provision since it specifically exempts sectarian organizations from complying with federal employment law. In November 1997, Senators Spencer Abraham (R-MI), Tim Hutchinson (R-AR) and Dan Coats (R-IN) introduced "The Effective Substance Abuse Treatment Act," which parallels the substance abuse portion of the Community Renewal Act. On January 21, 1999, Senator Abraham re-introduced his bill, re-titled "The Faith-Based Drug Treatment Enhancement Act".

CHARITABLE CHOICE ANALYSIS]

NAADAC strongly supports the requirement of individual certification and licensure for alcohol and drug counselors. Such regulations establish an organized system which ensures that the delivery of this vital health care service is provided by trained and experienced professionals who have met rigorous educational and training requirements. Licensure laws protect consumers from unethical and ineffective practices. Under charitable choice, sectarian institutions could claim exemption from state regulations, (even where legislation explicitly attempts to subject religious providers to state regulations) because the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution prevents excessive government entanglement with religious institutions. Sectarian providers would not be required to hire certified or licensed competent professionals. Charitable choice would create a system in which non-sectarian providers must meet state requirements while sectarian providers would be freed from meeting state licensure and other employment standards. Such a dual system is untenable. Religious organizations are already entitled to receive federal funding by complying with the rules for charitable organizations.

Charitable choice undermines state requirements. The millions of people suffering from addiction, their families, employers and communities may be left unprotected from incompetent treatment.

LEGISLATIVE ANALYSIS

Issues/Legislation: S. 289—"The Effective Substance Abuse Treatment Act"—Senator Spencer Abraham (R-MI), Co-Sponsors—Senators Paul Coverdell (R-GA), Tim Hutchinson (R-AR), Sen. Jeff Sessions (R-AL), Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) and Sen. Rod Grams (R-MN)

Areas of Concern: This legislation will override state alcoholism and drug licensure and certification laws, undermining state guarantees of safety in alcoholism and drug addiction treatment. This bill states that alcohol and drug treatment counseling is not a professional field and that formal education for counselors is detrimental to the practice of effective counseling. In fact, education enhances the provision of alcoholism and drug addiction treatment. Finally the legislation remedies a problem that does not exist. Religious organizations are already entitled to receive federal funding by complying with the rules for charitable organizations.

Provisions of Concern: The language at issue is contained in Title IV of the Community Renewal Act, and Section 2 of the Effective Substance Abuse Treatment Act. Both would amend Title V, Sec. 585 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) The proposed provisions state that:

1. "... formal education for counselors ... may undermine the effectiveness of [treatment] programs." This statement is incorrect. As treatment has grown more complex, the need for continuing education and formal education has also grown. Those most aware of new treatment technologies and capabilities are better able to provide appropriate treatment for all patients.

2. "... educational requirements ... may hinder or prevent the provision of needed drug treatment services." Establishing standards and requirements for the administration of treatment ensures that treatment delivered to patients is effective. It does not deny access to those services. As with the treatment of all other diseases, holding treatment professionals accountable protects the safety of the public.

3. States which require formal education to deliver treatment services "shall give credit for religious education and training equivalent to credit given for secular course work in drug treatment ..." Alcohol and drug counselors (ADCs) constitute the one group of professionals who specialize in the diagnosis, assessment and treatment of psychoactive disorders and other substance abuse/use/dependency. These counselors possess a constellation of knowledge that is unique to the alcoholism and drug abuse counseling profession, and distinguishes ADCs from other related professions and specialties. Religious education and training is not equivalent to this knowledge.

4. States must waive their education qualifications for treatment personnel if, "(iv) the State ... has failed to demonstrate empirically that the educational qualifications in question are necessary to the operation of a successful program." This legislation undermines a State's ability to protect the public by licensing and certifying qualified treatment providers. It imposes a mandate from the Federal government requiring the States to fund religious programs or face the costs of defending requirements which the State and local governments believe are necessary for protection of the public. States will be required to conduct research without being provided the means to accomplish it. States are unlikely to have the resources to spend on a demanding empirical defense of their rule and consequently may relax treatment standards to allow unfit organizations to deliver treatment with federal funding.

5. Under this legislation programs and state agencies are not required to notify individuals who are placed in religious programs, that they have the right to receive alternative services. Additionally, there is no requirement that alternative services be accessible. Individuals who enter treatment programs are frequently in a medically or mentally vulnerable situation. Despite this, S. 289 currently states that religious treatment providers may require active participation in religious practice worship and instruction. (Note: Unlike previous versions of the community renewal act, S. 289 no longer contains the specific requirement allowing sectarian providers to compel compliance with religious worship). Forced or coerced religious activity is inappropriate and may be unethical under counseling guidelines.

Conclusions: Spirituality is an important component of treatment, and mechanisms already exist to being this aspect of recovery to patients. Indeed, religious organizations are free to receive federal funds by creating a non-profit, "religiously affiliated" agency to provide services in compliance with state certification and licensure laws. However, by stating that establishing formal education requirements may hinder treatment and by attempting to equate degrees in theology with knowledge about alcoholism and drug dependence, charitable choice undermines treatment efforts and removes scarce funding from effective treatment programs.

The alcohol and drug treatment profession is currently engaged in efforts in almost every state to create and reinforce standards of practice for alcohol and drug treatment, just like the standards (licenses) states currently have for doctors and other health care providers. Such regulations establish an organized system which ensures that the delivery of this vital health care service is provided by trained and experienced professionals who have met rigorous educational and training requirements prior to serving in the sensitive position of Alcohol and Drug Counselors. Under this new legislation, "pervasively sectarian" institutions such as houses of worship, would be permitted to provide government services while claiming exemption from state regulations. This legislation would not allow the government to oversee the hiring practices of religious institutions even if complaints were made against the institution. Charitable choice would overrule the judgment of the states and would allow treatment to be provided without respect to minimal standards, undermining public safety in the provision of this necessary service. This legislation hurts the field of alcohol and drug addiction treatment along with the millions of people suffering from addiction, their families, employers and the communities in which they live.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out for those who may be viewing this in their offices and elsewhere that this is not really a close vote situation. We had 346 Members for this earlier on juvenile justice last week; the Vice President supports this concept, particularly on drug treatment, as do most Republicans. We have already had several Democrats supporting this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my distinguished friend and colleague, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. EHLERS).

(Mr. EHLERS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair reminds all Members that they are to address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favor of this resolution, just as I supported charitable choice when it was a matter of discussion some years ago.

Mr. Speaker, when my wife and I moved to Grand Rapids, Michigan, in 1966, we decided that we wanted to join a church that would make a difference, a church that would make a difference in the community. In particular, we joined the Eastern Avenue Christian Reform Church, a member of a small but strong and wonderful denomination.

We have made a difference through that church, and that church has been a strong voice in the community. It is the type of faith-based effort that this country needs.

Through this small church, small but very active, we managed to start a food program which has fed many, many people through a cooperative effort. We were instrumental in starting a community center which has sprung off and become a multimillion dollar operation providing tremendous service to the community.

We were also instrumental in helping start a housing program which is now developed into an independent organization which has rehabilitated close to 100 houses at this point for low-income individuals, and they now are enjoying home ownership.

This, incidentally, happened before Habitat For Humanity was founded. Let me describe just a little bit the food program that we have established which operates in the church basement every Saturday morning.

Members of the church and other volunteers go to suppliers throughout the community. We acquire, through donation, produce, bread, many other vital essentials; and we bring them to our church basement.

We run a small supermarket there every Saturday morning. Individuals coming through can buy supplies that they need for their daily existence for roughly 10 cents on the dollar. A poverty stricken family can come in and for $10 buy a couple of weeks worth of groceries and other essentials.

It has worked very well. It has served young and old, able and disabled, Hispanic and Vietnamese, black and white. It has served everyone. It has been a real boon to the community. Many of the volunteers have come from the community themselves, and many of them have worked for many, many years on this effort.

These are examples of activities carried on by faith-based organizations, and they have proven to be far more effective per dollar expended than any government program I have ever seen.

I think it is simple common sense that the Federal Government encourage these faith-based organizations and, in fact, make use of them in trying to solve the problems of our Nation, particularly those dealing with poverty.

Two cautions I want to offer. First of all, we have to make sure that the churches do not proselytize, in other words, do not violate the separation of church and State in that sense, even though they are working in the name of God to serve the people around them.

Secondly, the government should take care not to try to govern the faith-based organizations.

I strongly support this resolution, and I hope many churches across this country will follow this example.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, it is the unanswered questions about this legislation that bother me the greatest. But I must say that I consider it an affront to the integrity of this House that we would debate such a fundamental constitutional issue, regardless of which side my colleagues are on on this resolution, fundamentally important constitutional issues such as church and State separation, the establishment clause of the first amendment, in fact the first 16 words of the Bill of Rights, under a Suspension Calendar with no committee consideration.

I think Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison would be ashamed of the process that we are going through today. But let us talk about what unanswered questions we have in this debate, in this little time for debate.

The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) has answered our questions by saying, yes, under this legislation, let me be clear, yes, under this legislation Federal funds will be allowed to hire and fire people based on race discrimination, religious discrimination, sex discrimination.

Mr. SOUDER. Point of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Does the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS) yield to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Souder)?

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry. Why is it not a point of personal privilege when a statement is made about racism which I did not make. The question was on religion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Statements in debate do not give rise to a question of personal privilege. Is the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) raising a point of order?

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS) may proceed.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, under this legislation, if one simply reads it, which most Members of this House have not yet done, a religious organization could say, based on their religious creed, they would not hire someone based on the fact that that person is a woman. A Christian may not hire someone because he is Jewish. A Jewish group may not hire someone because they are Christian. In some religious faiths, they may not hire someone because of the color of their skin.

This bill directly endorses job discrimination, and worse yet job discrimination using Federal taxpayers dollars. For that reason and that reason alone, this House should reject this legislation and H.R. 815 which it supports.

But that is the answered question. Let us look at the unanswered questions. According to this bill, if a participant in a program is Jewish, working in a Baptist Church that has won the government program, could that Jewish program be forced to say the Lord's Prayer? If the program is an Islamic mosque, would a Christian be forced to follow the rules of Islamic law, including women in America following the rules of Islamic law? If a Buddhist group is running a program, would Jewish and Christian citizens in the program be forced to pray to Buddha?

If a Baptist group is running a program, would the Catholic be forced to say the Protestant version of the Lord's Prayer? If reciting New Testament proceedings is basically a process that a church goes through that has won these Federal funds for this program, can they force an Islamic or a Muslim or a Jewish person to read from the New Testament?

Well, how about this. What about a Wiccam group? It says we are not going to discriminate based on the religion. The courts have said the Wiccams are religious group identified in this country. What if the Wiccam group has a religious service where they honor the sun and the moon and circle as they do with candles? And they actively participate in that process in my district in Central Texas. Can they force a Christian alcoholic to participate in the Wiccam religious services? If my colleagues say yes, that is religious discrimination.

What if the Santeria, a religion than practiced, and a religion as defined by the Supreme Court of the United States, what if the Santeria win a Federal grant to administer alcohol programs? Since my colleagues say they cannot discriminate based on religion, does that mean that the Santerias can force a Presbyterian to participate in the decapitation of a chicken's head, because that is part of the prayer ritual the Santeria religion?

The fact is, there are too many unanswered questions in this legislation that go to the heart, the reason why our Founding Fathers chose the first 16 words of our Bill of Rights, to be committed to protecting religion against government intervention, that we should reject this legislation.

According to these proponents, we would think that the first 16 words of the Bill of Rights are a shackle on religious freedom. That is absolutely wrong. Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Madison, others involved in drafting that legislation did not write the establishment clause to shackle religion in America. They did it to shackle government from intervening into the religious freedom of individuals. Political conservatives should be terrified by this legislation.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS) already knows, Title 7 of the 1964 Civil Rights Act allows a religious organization to discriminate in employment on the basis of religion. This amendment simply clarifies that in spite of all the statements on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT).

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution and to point out that we just heard a very good example of what I call faith phobia. This faith phobia has taken over the country, that anyone with values and beliefs is a problem.

I support this resolution, not just to recognize what nonprofit community organizations, faith-based organizations are doing, but to point out that they are doing our work all across America better than we are.

There is an organization in my district called Mobile Meals. Every day, people from throughout the community rise at about 4:00 in the morning and feed about 1,700 people every day. They do it for one reason, to share the love of God with people in the community. They spend less than a million dollars a year. It compares with the federally funded group that does the same thing that spends over $6 million a year.

If we look around my community and I am sure my colleagues' community, the people that are feeding the hungry, that are clothing the poor, that are freeing those enslaved to drugs, that are building homes for the homeless, and providing a place for people to live who need it all across the community, these are faith-based organizations working side by side with community organizations.

If, as a government, we are going to say that, because there is some faith involved, that we cannot use these organizations to help Americans, then we are going way down the wrong road. We need to recognize that we have been making a mistake. We have not been separating the State from religion. We have been separating religion from America. It is time that we stop that at the Federal level and recognize that, if we want to help Americans, let us let faith-based organizations work side by side with community and local governments to really help America.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS).

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two points. First is in response to the last speaker. I think the fact that the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs strongly opposes this legislation today really undermines the gentleman's argument or suggestion that people of faith should be for this Federal funding and faith-based organizations.

Secondly, I would like to correct the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) when he failed to point out that the Supreme Court in 1989 ruled that, when an organization such as this case, the Salvation Army was using Federal funds to hire people, they could not fire someone based on religion.

In this particular case, the Salvation Army could not fire a Wiccans because of his religious belief. So the gentleman is really in a quandary. Either one can endorse religious-based discrimination using Federal funds, or is one going to say to the Baptist Church of Waco, Texas that they must hire Wiccans. Perhaps they must hire Satanic worshipers. Perhaps they must hire people of religious faith that are inconsistent with their own.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I inquire of the Chair how much time each side has remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) has 2½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT), our third Democrat to speak on behalf of this in a rare bipartisan effort to try to reach out to those who are hurting.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I think the Founders are rolling over in their graves. I do not believe any Founder intended to envision an America without school prayer or without support for faith-based programming. The Founders intended to ensure there would not be State-sponsored legislation creating one religion in America.

I believe all this technical mumbo jumbo has served to eliminate God from America. I want to be associated with those Members who will, in fact, look at the technicalities and include God. A Nation without God is a Nation that has invited the devil. Congress, open your eyes, because they have rolled out the carpet in America for the devil with a bunch of technical mumbo jumbo that is no more the intent of Founders than pornography.

I stand for this legislation, period. I think it is time, Mr. Speaker, to look at our cities, look at our schools. They could fund all the programs they want, but they are not going to be successful with a technical mumbo jumbo argument that God is the reason why they cannot do it because the Founders said so.

That does not work with JIM TRAFICANT at all. I believe the technicality has been stretched much too far.

I want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) and with those who support this legislation. I believe they are right, and I urge the Congress, with a little bit of technical oomph, to vote aye on the legislation.

□ 1600

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of an African American church. I grew up in an African American church, a Baptist church. I attended seminary, and am a licensed and ordained Baptist minister. But I believe in the separation of church and state.

If the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) wants to consider and call the Bill of Rights mumbo jumbo, that is all right, he has that right, but for me and my house, I am going to stand with the Founding Fathers, not with the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, some prior speaker said this was a good resolution except for the unconstitutional parts, and I tend to agree with that.

I think there is a lot this resolution has to offer except for the parts that we have referred to. I think we just need to, so we know what the Founding Fathers might have envisioned, read what is in the bill that this resolution endorses.

First, on discrimination: It provides that a religious organization that is a program participant may require an employee rendering services to adhere to the religious beliefs and practices of such organization, and any rules of the organization regarding the use of alcohol and drugs.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana has acknowledged that discrimination may occur. In fact, he wants to extend the title 7 exemption to churches which are allowed to discriminate on a religious basis when they hire people who are ministers and things like that. But this would extend it to federally-sponsored drug programs. And it would be a new day in America when a federally-sponsored drug program can hang out a sign that says, people of certain religions need not apply for a job because of their religions.

Let us go along to whether we can have coerced religion. Page 75, line 23, a religious organization may require a program beneficiary to actively participate in religious practice, worship and instruction, and follow the rules of behavior devised by the organizations that are religious in content and origin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The time of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SCOTT was allowed to proceed for 30 additional seconds.)

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, there is also a part in here that has congressional findings. It says, Congress finds that establishing formal educational qualifications for counselors and other personnel in drug treatment programs may undermine the effectiveness of such programs, and such formal educational requirements for counselors may hinder or prevent provision of drug treatment services.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether people want discrimination or whether they want coerced religion, but religious groups oppose this, professional drug counselors oppose this, civil rights groups oppose it, and we should all oppose this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has extended 30 seconds to each side.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 207, the legislation under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, we have heard some red herring arguments this afternoon about whether something violates separation of church and state. I might remind the Members that we are not voting on the American Community Renewal Act, which has been cited and debated and is merely cited in the resolution. We are voting on a Sense of the House Resolution that targets aid and money to poor communities across this Nation.

Regarding the issue of separation of church and state, if Members oppose that American Community Renewal Act on that basis, then they should oppose Pell grants. With a Pell grant students use Federal grant money to go to seminaries, to go to Notre Dame, Yeshiva University without raising constitutional concerns. The Substance Abuse Act grant that this cites is no different.

Currently, there are two voucher programs we have successfully, legally implemented, the child care block grant in 1993, so that parents could use Federal day care dollars at the provider they choose, religious or secular; second, the new welfare law allows States to contract out their social services to both religious and nonreligious providers.

The drug treatment provision is the same. It voucherizes substance abuse block grants and allows the addict to decide. They can opt out. I urge Members to support the resolution.

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the family unit is the core institution that instills in future generations the common values that we share as a society. Raising a child is a daunting task even in the most stable environments, but for families in distressed areas it is even more difficult.

We all know those pastors and community leaders in these neighborhoods—who have counseled that teenage mother—or prayed with the chronically unemployed—or lifted the spirits of those who sleep wherever they can lie their head. We do not have to list grave statistics about our inner cities or rural areas, because these are the people who are on the front-lines everyday.

That is why I support this resolution and the involvement of faith-based organizations in community development. In our urban and rural communities, the concerns of high unemployment, drug addiction and unsuitable housing have seemingly gone unnoticed during America's "economic boom." These problems can no longer be ignored—now is the time for our government to give faith-based organizations the opportunity to help resurrect America's neighborhoods.

For years our government has spent billions of dollars on Federal programs to help America's poor, and for the most part these offerings have not met with great success. It is painfully obvious that a new model is needed in revitalizing America's urban and rural communities. In February JIM TALENT, DANNY DAVIS, and I introduced the American Community Renewal Act. This legislation is designed to help communities and local leaders succeed where big government programs have failed. The American Community Renewal Act will help neighborhoods by—creating jobs—reducing burdensome regulation—increasing home-ownership—encouraging savings, and strengthening the institutions in these neighborhoods that have already begun making a difference.

However, community renewal must go beyond merely the scope of economics. We must provide support to the institutions that have historically held our country together—community, faith and family. With the eligibility of faith-based institutions to Community Renewal programs, we hope to achieve not only economic renewal but spiritual and moral renewal as well.

The essence of this resolution is not about ideology—it's about helping America's less fortunate. It's about providing a faith-based organization with the opportunity to reach out its hand, to pull that person out of the depths of drug or alcohol abuse. It is about that small businessperson providing a job to his or her neighbor. It's about putting a decent roof over somebody's head. But first and foremost, this resolution is about supporting the pillars of our country—community, faith, and family.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concerns regarding H. Res. 207 and its underlying legislation, H.R. 815, The American Community Renewal Act of 1999.

No one disputes the role that community and faith-based organizations play in sustaining and strengthening our communities and neighborhoods, our cities and towns. Throughout my career, I have shared the deep interest which motivates this resolution in harnessing the energy and creativity of community and faith-based organizations in developing solutions to our nation's persistent poverty and other serious social problems.

Instead, my concerns center on language in H.R. 815 which denigrates the importance of professional education and training to effective alcohol and drug treatment. H.R. 815 purports to improve the availability of substance abuse treatment and counseling services. Instead, its provisions undercut the proven importance and competence of qualified service providers.

Let me specify the problematic sections of H.R. 815. In congressional findings, the bill states that "formal educational qualifications for counselors and other personnel in drug treatment programs may undermine the effectiveness of such programs" and "may hinder or prevent the provision of needed drug treatment services."

Mr. Speaker, this is simply untrue. Professional education is a foundation of effective substance abuse treatment and prevention. It is a critical basis for our country's longstanding efforts to treat and prevent substance abuse. Our current national drug control strategy is premised on the fundamental importance of medical and specialized training for substance abuse service providers.

Mr. Speaker, the accompanying provisions of H.R. 815 would undercut the States in certifying and licensing substance abuse service providers. They would require the States to accept religious education and training as wholly equivalent to drug treatment. Again, this runs headlong against our nation's efforts to work in partnership with the States, professional and community organizations in combating substance abuse. Indeed, religious organizations already play an important part in these efforts through federally funded and state-funded substance abuse programs.

I am deeply concerned that language of this kind is being contemplated to this time by the Congress. As a member of the Commerce Committee, I am involved in work which will lead to reauthorization of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA). These problematic provisions of H.R. 815 fly in the face of the vital accomplishments and continuing work of our Federal agencies on substance abuse treatment and prevention, including SAMHSA and the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) and the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA) at the National Institutes of Health.

At this time, I wish to include for the RECORD a letter in opposition to H. Res. 207 which I received from a wide range of national patient and provider organizations, including the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors, the Partnership for Recovery and the American Society of Addiction Medicine.

JUNE 21, 1999.

MEMBERS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MEMBER OF CONGRESS: The undersigned organizations oppose H. Res. 207 and the portions of the American Community Renewal Act which will hurt the provision of professionally competent alcohol and drug treatment services.

Unfortunately, the Community Renewal Act will undermine treatment effectiveness. The Act will override state licensure and certification of alcohol and drug counselors, crushing state guarantees of safety in alcoholism and drug addiction treatment.

The Act actually states that alcohol and drug treatment counseling is not a professional field and that formal education for counselors is detrimental to the practice of effective counseling. This is simply inaccurate. Alcoholism and drug addiction is a disease. Consequently, alcohol and drug counseling has long required specialized knowledge and training compelling the use of professional practitioners. Education equals effective alcoholism and drug addiction treatment.

Even more troubling, the Act will require States which require formal education to deliver treatment services to "give credit for religious education and training equivalent to credit given for secular course work in drug treatment . . ." Alcohol and drug treatment is a medical service requiring medical knowledge. Treatment professionals specialize in the diagnosis, assessment and treatment of psychoactive disorders and other substance abuse/use/dependency. These counselors and other professionals possess a constellation of knowledge that is unique to the alcoholism and drug abuse counseling profession, and distinguishes ADCs from other related professions and specialties. Religious education and training is not equivalent to training given for the medical specialty of alcohol and drug treatment.

The Act also mandates States to waive their formal educational requirements under certain circumstances or face lawsuits. Finally the legislation attempts to remedy a problem that does not exist. Religious organizations are already entitled to receive federal funding by complying with the rules for charitable organizations.

All of our organizations seek to include spirituality in the lives of individuals. Spirituality is an important component of treatment, and mechanisms already exist to bring this aspect of recovery to patients without changing current law.

By stating that establishing formal education requirements may hinder treatment and by attempting to equate religious education with knowledge about alcoholism and drug dependence, the Community Renewal Act undermines treatment efforts and removes scarce funding from effective treatment programs. Unfortunately, this legislation ensures that the millions of people suffering from addiction, their families, employers and communities will be harmed by incompetent treatment.

The Community Renewal Act will hurt the provision of professionally competent alcohol and drug treatment services. For this reason, we urge you to vote against H. Res. 207.

Sincerely,

American Counseling Association; American Methadone Treatment Association; American Society of Addiction Medicine; Association of Halfway House Alcoholism Programs of North America; College on Problems of Drug Dependence; Legal Action Center; National Association of Addiction Treatment Providers; National Association of Alcoholism and Drug Abuse Counselors; National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors; National Association of Student Assistance Professionals; National Coalition of State Alcohol and Drug Treatment and Prevention Associations; National Council for Community Behavioral Healthcare; National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence; National TASC; Partnership for Recovery; The Betty Ford Center; Caron Foundation; Hazelden Foundation; Valley Hope Association; Research Society on Alcoholism; Therapeutic Communities of America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 207.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PATRIOT ACT

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 210 and ask for its immediate resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 210

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 659) to authorize appropriations for the protection of Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields in Pennsylvania, to direct the National Park Service to conduct a special resource study of Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields, to authorize the Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution at Valley Forge National Historical Park, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Resources now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered by title rather than by section. Each title shall be considered as read. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole may: (1) postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment; and (2) reduce to five minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any postponed question that follows another electronic vote without intervening business, provided that the minimum time for electronic voting on the first in any series of questions shall be 15 minutes. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommend with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio

(Mr. HALL), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

(Mr. HASTINGS of Washington asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding, I would like to take a minute to add my personal congratulations to those that have been extended from all my colleagues on both sides of the aisle on the tremendous honor that was recently bestowed on our colleague the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL). The Nobel Peace Prize, for which the gentleman from Ohio has been nominated, is among the most extraordinary measures of individual achievement that can be accorded to any man or woman from any country anywhere in the world.

The gentleman's deep commitment to fight hunger throughout the world is well known to all of us here in the House, so I will not belabor that point. But clearly, this is a Member of Congress whose tireless efforts reach far beyond the walls of this building, indeed far beyond the borders of this country. Literally countless numbers of the world's neediest people have benefited from the often lonely and frequently tireless efforts of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL).

It is not my intention to embarrass my colleague, Mr. Speaker, but simply to take a moment and give credit where credit is due, which has also been done in a very deserving way, as evidenced by the nomination of this prestigious honor.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 210 would grant H.R. 659, the PATRIOT Act, an open rule providing 1 hour of general debate divided equally between the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. The rule makes in order as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Resources now printed in the bill. The rule provides that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered for amendment by title.

Mr. Speaker, the rule authorizes the Chair to accord priority in recognition to Members who have preprinted their amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The rule allows the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to postpone votes during consideration of the bill and to reduce voting time to 5 minutes on any postponed question if the vote follows a 15-minute vote.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides one motion to recommend with or without instructions.

H.R. 659 is a relatively noncontroversial measure reported out of the Committee on Resources on April 28 by a voice vote. The bill would authorize a total of $4.25 million for the Federal Government to acquire land necessary to protect the Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields in Pennsylvania. The bill authorizes the Valley Forge Historical Society, in agreement with the Secretary of the Interior, to construct the Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution at Valley Forge National Historic Park in Pennsylvania. Once construction of the museum is complete, the bill requires all titles and interests be transferred to the Federal Government with the understanding that the Valley Forge Historical Society will continue to operate the museum.

The battles of Paoli and Brandywine took place in September of 1777 and were significant in the outcome of the American Revolution. The Battle of Brandywine was the largest land battle of the Revolution, and it was following these two battles that colonial troops, led by General George Washington, made their legendary camp at Valley Forge for the winter of 1777 and 1778.

Finally, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that enactment of H.R. 659 will cost the Federal Government about $5 million over the next 5 years. Because the bill does not affect direct spending, pay-as-you-go procedures do not apply.

As I have already mentioned, Mr. Speaker, this legislation was reported without dissent by the Committee on Resources. Accordingly, the Committee on Rules is pleased to recommend an open rule for consideration of the bill, and I encourage my colleagues to support this resolution and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his very kind words relative to the nomination. It was very nice of him to say that, and it is very encouraging to hear those kind of words on the floor of the House. So I thank him very much.

This is an open rule. It will allow for fair and full debate on H.R. 659, which is a bill to protect two American Revolutionary War battlefields. It also permits the construction of the Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution within the Valley Forge's National Historic Park.

As my colleague from Washington described, this rule provides 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Resources. The rule also permits amendments under the 5-minute rule, which is the normal amending process in the House. All Members on both sides of the aisle will have the opportunity to offer germane amendments.

Mr. Speaker, the American Revolutionary War is one of probably perhaps the most important events in the history of our Nation, and it is therefore appropriate that we preserve the battlefields associated with the war and to make them available to the public. This bill would help protect the Brandywine and the Paoli Battlefields not far from Valley Forge, Pennsylvania. The battles here were an important part of our fight for independence.

This is a bipartisan bill, it has support on both sides of the aisle, it is an open rule, and I support the bill and the rule.

Again, I want to thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) for his very kind words.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1615

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) in whose district at least one of these battlefields are located.

(Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend and colleague for his cooperation and for the support of both the minority and the majority sides on the rule.

I want to add my comments to those in praise of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL). During the 13 years I have been in Congress, we come to respect certain people; and I can tell my colleagues, there is no Member I hold in higher regard than the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) for his untiring effort on behalf of people all over the world and the problems associated with hunger.

So let us just hope for the best. We are solidly behind him in this body, and I think he represents an example for this entire country in terms of the kind of qualities we want in our elected officials. So, again, congratulations for being nominated.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. It is bipartisan. It is non-controversial. I rise under the rule because I do not want to discuss the details but rather to extend to my colleagues the significant amount of effort that was put forth by the Democrats and Republicans to find a solution to the potential development of one of the last remaining sites of the Revolutionary War.

The site that we are talking about in Paoli is directly adjacent to a site where 53 patriots were killed. They were slaughtered by the British. In fact, in such a terrible way that this battle became a rallying cry, for our soldiers for the rest of the Revolutionary War, the battle cry became "Remember Paoli" because of the way the British used bayonets to basically tear apart young Americans, Americans who were 19, 20, 21, and 22 years old.

If we do not protect this site, and this is not being done as a way to add to the Federal park land, this is being done locally and every dollar of money that we appropriate is being matched dollar for dollar by the local folks. In fact, in the case of Paoli, all but $100,000 of the $1.25 million has already been raised. The State has kicked in money; the County has. And the local folks, school kids, who have kicked in thousands of pennies in their "Pennies for Paoli" campaign, to other interested citizens who have made this a massive effort to protect one of America's real treasures.

In fact, last July 4, "Good Morning America" did a Focus for Independence Day, and that focus feature was on the Paoli Battlefield and how important it was for America to protect this site.

So I am saying to my colleagues, as we go into this open rule, please consider carefully amendments. We have the full support of the administration in this effort. It was very carefully crafted to make sure the Park Service would agree. There is nothing being done here to take land that will be acquired other than in a voluntary way. The money is being matched on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

It also sets up a process to do the same type of acquisition for the Brandywine Battlefield and also allows for the Park Service to look at a study on the possible cooperation between the Valley Forge Historical Society for a new museum. It is a non-controversial bill. It is one that is in the best interest of America. It protects sites that otherwise may be consumed by developers.

The current owners of the 40-some-acre Paoli site, the Malvern Preparatory School, have said, if we do not move in the Congress, they are going to put it up for open sale. The estimates are that it could generate tens of millions of dollars for private development. However, they have offered that if the Federal Government takes the initiative to support the local folks, they will guarantee the sale price at $2.5 million. That means that the $1.25 million that has been committed to by the local folks will be matched by $1.25 million from the Federal Government.

The land would actually be owned by the Borough of Malvern. In the case of Brandywine, it will be owned either by the Brandywine Conservancy or by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. So we are not adding to the size of our Park Service.

We also call for a study by the Park Service to look at how the interpretation of Paoli and Brandywine can be better coordinated with Valley Forge. Because these two battles, the Paoli massacre and the Battle of Brandywine, were key parts of the struggle that led to our historic encampment at Valley Forge and the major battle to protect our capitol at Philadelphia when the British were making the move to take over Philadelphia and to take over control of this country.

So these are very important sites. This bill is a very important process. I would ask my colleagues during the debate on the bill to please keep in mind that the administration is solidly behind this and any amendments that have not been supported by the administration could well doom this bill to defeat. So I ask them to please consider that as they look to possibly offer amendments as we get to the bill itself.

I want to thank my colleagues and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL) who has been very supportive for the minority side for his outstanding work as a leader from the region and again the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) for his outstanding work and the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG). And really all the members of the Committee on Resources have been so helpful in this process.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to join forces with the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS) about his kind words of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) our distinguished member of the Committee on Rules.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) has endured a lot of personal sacrifice and tragedy over the last years. But even during that time, there has never been a more outspoken and more active advocate to relieve hunger in the world. He has done a marvelous job, and we appreciate what he has done.

Now, I support the rule, and I am going to support the bill. I have a little amendment, I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON), that says that all these historic landmarks of Pennsylvania be moved to Ohio and all the funds go to the 17th District of Ohio.

No, it does not really do that. It is just a little amendment that says whatever funds we give and they create a museum or anything, it is just the sense of the Congress. Because just today, another 350 jobs in Franklin, West Virginia, are going overseas.

The Traficant amendment says they are not compelled to but to consider expending the dollars on American-made goods. I know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) will not oppose that.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend and colleague for yielding, who does such a fantastic job in this body and knows that I support, I think, almost everything that he stands for and speaks to. We have a great working relationship.

As my colleague knows, the money that we are talking about is going to actually buy land, which obviously will be American land. But I appreciate the efforts of the gentleman in constantly reaffirming to the American people that we are using their tax dollars to always buy American products.

I would not object to the amendment of the gentleman. Of course, I would have to defer to our leader because he is actually controlling the movement in this piece of legislation.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, society, though, will in fact build a museum. And, hopefully, the museum will consider this little, innocent amendment.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 210 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 659.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 659) to authorize appropriations for the protection of Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields in Pennsylvania, to direct the National Park Service to conduct a special resource study of Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields, to authorize the Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution at Valley Forge National Historical Park, and for other purposes, with Mr. LAHOOD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) and the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN).

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 659 introduced by my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON).

H.R. 659, the Protect America's Treasures of the Revolution for Independence of Our Tomorrow Act of 1999, otherwise known as the PATRIOT Act, is a very important bill that is necessary to protect two significant battlefields of the Revolutionary War and begin the process of developing a much needed new visitor center at Valley Forge National Historical Park.

This bill would authorize appropriations for the protection of the Paoli and Brandywine Battlefield in Pennsylvania. Appropriations for these battlefields must be matched dollar by dollar by non-Federal sources.

H.R. 659 also directs the National Park Service to conduct a special resource study of both the Paoli and Brandywine Battlefield to see if they warrant inclusion into the National Park System.

This bill also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with the Valley Forge Historical Society to construct and operate a museum within the boundaries of the Valley Forge National Historical Park. The construction of this facility is needed in order to accommodate the many visitors to Valley Forge.

After the museum has been built, all right, title, and interest would be conveyed to the Federal Government. However, the Society would continue to operate.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good piece of legislation. It has bipartisan support and is supported by the National Park Service. I urge all my colleagues to support H.R. 659.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 659 is a comprehensive measure that provides assistance for the preservation of two Revolutionary War battlefields in Pennsylvania. In addition, the bill authorizes the public-private partnership agreement for the construction of a museum on Federal land within Valley Forge National Historical Park.

Title I of H.R. 659, as amended, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to provide up to $1.25 million to assist in the protection and preservation of the area known as the Paoli Battlefield. It also authorizes up to $3 million to assist in the protection and preservation of an area known as the Meeting House Corridor, part of the Brandywine Battlefield.

In both instances, the funds provided are for land acquisition and all funds provided by the Secretary are to be matched dollar for dollar by non-Federal sources.

The Secretary is also authorized to provide technical assistance and to enter into cooperative agreements to provide for ownership and management of the battlefield by the non-Federal partners.

Title I further authorizes a special resource study of the two battlefields.

Title II of H.R. 659 deals with a Valley Forge National Historical Park, which is so ably represented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL). The bill authorizes the Secretary to enter into an agreement under appropriate terms and conditions with the Valley Forge Historical Society to construct the Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution on park property. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL) has been a strong supporter of this provision of the bill, and for that he is to be commended.

Unlike some other proposals for public-private partnerships regarding park visitor centers, this proposal has been developed in a non-controversial manner.

The Committee on Resources adopted an amendment in the nature of a substitute for H.R. 659 that clarified several items in the bill and provided some additional safeguards regarding the development of a cooperative agreement for a museum at Valley Forge National Historical Park. With these changes, we support this legislation and ask our colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for unanimous consent to have the balance of my time be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL).

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) the sponsor of this piece of legislation.

(Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to thank my good friend the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) for yielding me the time. He has just been unbelievable in supporting this effort, which has involved well over a year. And without his support as the subcommittee chairman, we would not be here today. And without the support of the full committee chairman the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), we would not be here today. They have just been tireless in their support of our effort to preserve these sites before they would be developed.

I also want to add my thanks to the ranking member, the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ROMERO-BARCELO). He has been fantastic. I do not know whether he has left the floor or not. He is an outstanding individual and an outstanding leader. He sat through a hearing in which we had over 100 school children from all over Pennsylvania come in. Many of them had helped inspire thousands of letters that were written to Members of Congress in both parties asking us to remember the patriots that are being honored today with this bill.

Mr. Chairman, we know the names George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Ben Franklin. We know their names because they have been recognized as great patriots who fought in the struggle for our Nation to receive its independence. We visit their historical sites at Monticello and Mount Vernon and Franklin Court to learn more about these great people. But today I ask my colleagues, do we know the names John Wilson, William MaGee, or Charles Temple? I think not, Mr. Chairman, because these are the names of over 50 patriots who were slaughtered in the Paoli massacre.

These were young Americans. They were Americans who were 18, 19, 20 and 21 years of age, who only knew they were struggling to have freedom and independence from the tyranny of Great Britain. These patriots laid down their lives. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it was on the evening of September 20, 1777, that the British troops were moving on our National Capital at Philadelphia. There had been an unsuccessful battle at Brandywine. There had been another unsuccessful battle at the Battle of the Clouds. They were about ready to have a surprise attack on the British. But unfortunately, the British troops found out about it. The leader of the British troops decided that they would not use their weapons, their guns, but rather they were told not to have any weapons fired, but to let the American patriots fire, so the British could move on them in the dark of the night and only use their bayonets.

They did that, Mr. Chairman. The British used their bayonets in ways that we cannot describe and history could never convey to us in real terms. They slaughtered young Americans. They slaughtered them in such a terrible way that when the light of day came on September the 21st and people saw the remains of these young Americans, it was no longer called the Battle of Paoli. It was referred to as the Paoli Massacre.

Now, at that point in time, we were not doing well in our Revolution. In fact, the morale of our troops was at risk. We all know the stories of the encampment at Valley Forge only a few miles away from Paoli. But this battle and the slaughter of our troops inspired our troops. The rallying cry for the rest of the war was, remember Paoli, and remember those patriots who were torn apart by the bayonets of the British.

Mr. Chairman, that battle was a turning point in our struggle for independence. It was a turning point that allowed us to turn back the British and ultimately allowed us to prevail. Today, Mr. Chairman, that holy ground, that sacred ground, is being challenged. The owners of that piece of property, the Malvern Preparatory School, no longer need the land. The land is in the same condition it was over 200 years ago. Nothing has changed. They are saying they are going to have to sell it. Now, if they sell this on the open market, which they have projected they would do later this year if we do not take action, that land will bring tens of millions of dollars because it is along the Main Line that runs out of Philadelphia, a very wealthy and a very high-priced area. But the school has said that if someone comes up and offers to maintain this property as a public property for the people of America to celebrate one of the most sacred sites in our history, that they will sell it for $2.5 million.

So what happened over 2 years ago was the folks in Chester County and southeastern Pennsylvania got together and they formed the Paoli Preservation Fund. They have raised all but $100,000 that is necessary of the local match. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania approved a $500,000 allocation. Chester County put money in. Schoolchildren raised thousands of dollars through their Pennies for the Paoli Campaign. Today, Mr. Chairman, as we are about to pass, hopefully, this bill with bipartisan support, all this will do is allow that money to be matched on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

Now, for those who are concerned that there might be some precedent here, that perhaps we are adding to our National Park land, that is not the case. The Borough of Malvern has agreed to be responsible for all operational funds for this site. There is no requirement for Federal dollars to be put in to police the site. The site will not be owned by the Federal Government. It will be maintained in its current status, and the same thing applies to the Battle of Brandywine, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) has been in the forefront here since he came to this body several years ago. That battlefield also straddles our congressional districts and is another important site that we must not lose to development.

Mr. Chairman, the final portion of this bill deals with an effort that all the major private collectors of Revolutionary War artifacts have agreed that they would work together with the Valley Forge Historical Society, one of the oldest historical societies in America, a nonprofit organization that currently has a huge collection of Revolutionary War artifacts. They have agreed that if we move forward, and the Park Service can come to terms with them, that they will fund with private dollars, yet controlled by the nonprofit Valley Forge Historical Society, a new museum that they estimate will be in the $30 to $40 million range. The museum will not be owned by a private citizen. It will be owned by the historical society, one of the oldest in America, and it will include all of the artifacts given to the historical society by the major collectors of these artifacts nationwide.

This is a good piece of legislation, Mr. Chairman. As I said before, schoolchildren have seen this as a way to impact our democracy. In fact, the children from a number of schools have traveled to this Capital, attended congressional hearings, and several of them actually spoke at that hearing. From Exton Elementary School, East Goshen Elementary School, the K.D. Markley School, the Sugartown Elementary School and many of the students at Malvern have come out and said this is something that America needs to do.

As I mentioned during the debate on the rule, "Good Morning America" last July 4 used this story about Paoli as their national focus piece as we celebrated the independence of America. Is it not fitting that if we pass this bill today, on this July 4, "Good Morning America" can come back and thank Members of both parties for their foresight and for their leadership in allowing this bill to move forward.

Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss if I did not mention one individual who has been a tireless advocate for this effort. While I am standing here as the original author of this bill, the credit for this goes to another great patriot, another great American, Pat McGuigan. It has been due to Pat McGuigan's diligence that we are here today, because Pat has committed his life to service on behalf of our country. He served in the military for, I believe, 31 years, from 1951 to 1982. He had assignments in Korea, Japan, South Vietnam, West Germany, Italy and the United States. He received during his service nearly two dozen awards and decorations. He retired from active duty as a command sergeant major and returned to service at the Valley Forge Military Academy, which is right near each of these sites. He served as a special assistant to the superintendent, a department head, and an instructor. He spent his time training young men for a future in service to their country. As many of us probably know, General Schwarzkopf is one of the famous graduates of Valley Forge. In 1991 until just recently, Pat continued his service to his community as manager of Malvern Borough. He dedicated the last 5 years to saving this land.

I ask our colleagues to join with us in a bipartisan effort in remembering the great patriots of this country, those who fought for our independence. I want to say to Pat McGuigan, you are an example of a modern-day patriot, as is the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) for his service to our country and to our people.

I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL) for his cooperation and leadership. I see the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS) on the floor who has been a tireless advocate, and an original cosponsor of this, the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) and everyone else who has helped make this bill today become a reality.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I would like to start by thanking the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) and the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ) for their leadership on this important legislation. I particularly want to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) for an extraordinary effort to bring this matter forward, for his kindness in reaching out to me as soon as I took office in a bipartisan fashion to work together on this bill, and to compliment him on the best congressional hearing I have ever attended, that he put together with schoolchildren from Malvern, that the gentleman from Utah presided over and the gentleman from Puerto Rico. It was a great day, a great day for schoolchildren to be involved in celebrating American revolutionary history, and now we are seeing the fruits of the gentleman from Pennsylvania's efforts here on the floor.

I also want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) for his cooperation and efforts on that day as well.

The PATRIOT Act, which is before us, is a very good piece of legislation. It would authorize $1.25 million for the purchase of the Paoli Battlefield. It would authorize $3 million for the purchase of the Brandywine Battlefield. It would authorize the National Park Service to work together to plan an aggressive and effective interpretation of those battlefields for the benefit of American citizens. And it would authorize the National Park Service to enter into a joint agreement, a private-public partnership, with the Valley Forge Historical Society to build a new visitors center at the Valley Forge National Historical Park to be run by the Park Service and a Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution to be run by the historical society, hopefully under one roof, in a way that would make the best possible experience for visitors to Valley Forge, with a new, up-to-date visitors center run by the Park Service and what will be an outstanding Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution run by the Historical Society of Valley Forge.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) has set forth very effectively the importance of what we are trying to save. The land that was involved in both the Brandywine Battlefield and the Paoli Massacre is truly land that was the beginning of the American revolutionary fight for freedom. It is true that the American forces lost at Brandywine. They were overrun by the British, although they did buy additional time to protect the city of Philadelphia a little while longer from the British invasion. And it is true that at Paoli, Americans were massacred at night and it truly was another disastrous defeat for America. But in those two military operations was forged the beginning of a winning spirit. Several months later, the American army under the leadership of General Washington retired for the winter to Valley Forge. We are all familiar with the history of the Valley Forge encampment. As far as I am concerned, that is where the American Revolution was truly won. No shots were fired. But because of the American army that arrived there tired and hungry and ill-clothed and ill-trained and ill-equipped emerged 6 months later, after the support of French military officers and Prussian military officers with the tremendous leadership of George Washington and American officers, the American forces emerged from Valley Forge in June of 1778 as an effective fighting force that went on to win our independence.

So we are memorializing here and saving and preserving the two battlefields that led to the encampment at Valley Forge, and we are offering an opportunity to give a far more impressive experience at Valley Forge with a new, revamped visitors center and a greatly improved opportunity for historical artifacts to be presented through a Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution. We will offer better education for the valor and the determination and the courage and the resolve that Americans showed at both those battle sites and for the 6 months where they survived a bitter winter at Valley Forge and emerged as an effective fighting army. We will preserve those battlefields so that future generations can appreciate the sacrifices that were made there. And the Park Service will be asked to interpret those battlefields and come up with a plan that is a meaningful description of the history and importance of those sites for the benefit of all Americans that visit.

The museum that is proposed at Valley Forge is desperately needed. The Valley Forge Historical Society was founded in 1918. They have a museum in the park now. It is not adequate. It does not have the climate control to safely store all of the artifacts that they possess. And as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) has pointed out, additional artifacts are available for a new museum if a proper museum is built. It is a very exciting opportunity that the historical society and its President, Jean-Pierre Bouvel, have presented to the Park Service, a public-private partnership that will really make a difference and provide an excellent opportunity under one roof for a new visitors center and a new museum.

I urge all my colleagues to support this project. It will be a remarkable preservation, not just of open space but of historical open space that is fundamental to our national history and a remarkable partnership with the private sector through the Valley Forge Historical Society to better present the history of the American Revolution to all Americans.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Chairman, first I want to applaud the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) for introducing this legislation and for the leadership in protecting Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields and thank the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) for his support and leadership.

Preserving America's historic treasures is essential if we as a Nation are to remember our past and our rich cultural heritage. It is particularly important to remember the sacrifices of our forefathers that they made to secure independence and build a new country which today is the world leader in freedom and democracy. Brandywine and Paoli Battlefields are among the few Revolutionary War battlefields that remain unprotected and are threatened by rapid development in the region. It only takes a quick drive through the beautiful Brandywine region to see the rapid and congested development that is closing in on the battlefield grounds. For this reason, it is essential that the PATRIOT Act becomes law and that Brandywine and Paoli Battlefields are preserved for future generations to enjoy and appreciate.

The PATRIOT Act will preserve a portion of the Brandywine Battlefield where the most intense conflict and loss of life took place. The Battle of the Brandywine was the largest battle of the Revolutionary War in terms of number of participants, approximately 26,000 British and American troops. It is the only battle where all the generals of both sides were convened. It was also the major conflict in the British campaign of 1777 that conquered Philadelphia. While the British eventually took Philadelphia, the Battle of the Brandywine was significant in delaying the British campaign and allowing the Congress to abandon the city and to move to Lancaster, also in my district, and then to York to escape the British takeover.

It is evident that the battles of Brandywine and Paoli are an integral part of American history. It would be a tragedy if this history were to be lost to rapid development. The local communities in the regions of Brandywine and Paoli have recognized this, they have worked together closely to preserve this land. In fact, I applaud the Brandywine community for already raising enough money to match the Federal assistance necessary for preservation. It is particularly encouraging to witness local students and their work to raise money to build support for the preservation of these battlefields.

I was once a school teacher before I went into public service. I know firsthand how important good education is to our children, and students in this region have the opportunity to grow up in an area rich with history. They have the opportunity to learn firsthand about the sacrifice that many Americans made for our freedom.

Chris Curtis, who is a student from Exton Elementary School in my district wrote a letter to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON), to myself, urging Congress to protect the Paoli Battlefield by passing this act, and here is what he writes:

"I think you should preserve the Paoli Battlefield because 53 people died for our country there. We also want to remember Paoli because we don't want to forget or bury our memories of those who fought so hard for our freedom. We also need to remember the relatives of those who died there. We never want to forget that generation of brave soldiers who died for our country when it was just beginning."

I could not say it better myself.

For our children's sake we must preserve this valuable historic land. Preserving this land will ensure that future generations will be able to experience how the battle unfolded, and history connects people and nurtures identity and community. The local communities have been doing their part to preserve the land. They will continue to do so. It is now time for the Federal Government to do its part.

The Federal Government exists for the people. The people want and need to preserve this land. It is our duty to act accordingly. I urge support for House Resolution 659.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

(Mr. ANDREWS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend from Pennsylvania for yielding this time to me. I want to thank and congratulate the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) and the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ROMERO-BARCELO) for their leadership in bringing this measure to floor on behalf of my constituents who are part of the region that will be most immediately benefit by this legislation. I thank my colleagues.

I also want to commend my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON), who has approached this legislation with his usual tenacity and enthusiasm and given us all a model to follow on the effort to get something like this to the floor. I congratulate him and all those involved, and I especially want to thank my new colleague and friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL) for his effectiveness in helping to move a piece of legislation this important to the floor this early in his tenure, and we appreciate his efforts.

I support this legislation for reasons of history, ecology and prosperity. The historical angle has been well described by my colleagues. There is a good chance that there would not be a United States of America without the bravery and valor of those who sacrificed their lives on the battlefields that will be commemorated and consecrated by this legislation. But not only is their sacrifice worthy of present mention, the reasons for which they have sacrificed have echoed through these very halls in the last few days.

We have spent much of our time debating issues of religious liberty, the establishment of religion, the importance of a well-regulated militia. Issues that were the core of the dispute over 200 years ago are the core of our debates and disputes in the last few hours. So for those who would doubt the relevance of this history, I would not direct them not to the events of several decades or centuries ago, I would direct them to the debates we have had on this very floor this very day.

For reasons of ecology I know that my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL), in particular has made the preservation of open space a major priority of his tenure here, and those of us who are involved in this debate are pleased to join him in the preservation of some very important open space in an area that is under intense pressure for development.

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) just said, one of the most desirable areas in America to live and develop a business are these areas. That is because they are so proximate to southern New Jersey I might add for the record. But there is intense scrutiny and pressure for development. It is very important that this is one of the tools for open space preservation that is at our disposal, and we are very wise to use it under this legislation.

Finally, for reasons of prosperity, I would note that there are 1 million schoolchildren living in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, proximate to the location of the sights that are mentioned in this bill. Two of them are my schoolchildren, and I know that those schoolchildren will benefit greatly from the proximity of these consecrated sights and the museum which I am sure will follow so they can learn the lessons of our history and apply those lessons in an intelligent way to our future.

So I would again commend the author of the legislation for his tenacity. He is doing a great service to our region. I am very proud to stand with him in support of this legislation.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Chairman, I thank our distinguished chairman. One of my privileges in this Congress has been to join the Committee on Natural Resources, and particularly the Subcommittee on National Parks and Public Lands with the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), and I really enjoyed this. I sought out appointment to this committee because of my interest in historic preservation and in the roots of our Nation.

My friend and colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is not only an enthusiastic champion, he is probably the foremost expert on Russia, and I had a great privilege to go with him in December. In understanding the roots of our liberty and our traditions and our culture is essential, and part of that is the part of our park system in the development of the understanding and the outreach of that park system, and I wanted to make two points:

In addition to Pennsylvania clearly being much of the cradle of our liberty from Independence Hall out to Valley Forge and Paoli and Brandywine and the capital moving to York, and my personal favorite, John Dickenson, the letters of Pennsylvania farmer who then argued against the revolution, but while the others were still talking, he went out and actually fought. Pennsylvania has all this centered there.

And I want to make a couple points: One is the battlefield integrity. It is really important for the understanding of American citizens to be able to go out where there has not been a lot of alteration, and as we work in our national parks, in the historic parks it is not supposed to be a natural preserve, it is supposed to be a historic preserve so we can understand what the soldiers faced at that particular point in time, and when we have these rare opportunities to get that land, we should purchase it.

Secondly, visitor centers, and I think in the current budget pressures we have no choice but to move to more public-private partnerships. There are dangers in the commercialization of our park system, but if we do this right, we can actually expand our ability to provide information not only to young people, but to adults.

A couple of points with this:

One is we need better visitor centers in a number of our key historical parks so that we can make history more understandable. Secondly, the artifacts that we have, as was mentioned here related to Valley Forge, is also true at Gettysburg, and other locations are often scattered.

Many of them are in harm's way, and we need better facilities to restore these. Once they are lost, they are permanently lost, and there are some places that are so critical to our American history, we should try to preserve these before they are lost and protect them before they are lost to future generations.

And then the outreach programs. There is no question that one of the largest movements in education in America, as we have seen it in the Committee on Education and the Workforce and other places, is towards brain research and trying to and capitalizing on the new research results and findings that are showing that kids interact so much better when they can sense something, participate in something, in addition to just being taught it.

As we see our national parks and our historic parks in particular reaching out to involve those schoolchildren in interactive activities, it is a major advance. They often have pre-and post-programs that they can send, and we ought to be looking at ways not only for the regional areas around Pennsylvania who will have access to this but the many field trips that come into Washington, D.C. have access to this type of thing too because it is a way to get our young people involved so they understand the fundamental underpinnings of our liberty, what people had to do and fight for to get there.

It is not just something handed to them, and so much of the efforts of the Subcommittee on National Parks and Public Lands, particularly in the historic areas is critical to our long-term preservation of liberty in America, and

I want to congratulate all my colleagues from Pennsylvania who have been a leader in this in addition to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN).

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KLINK).

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me, and first of all I want to applaud my colleagues because this is a very good bill, and I want to support it. But I cannot stand by without taking this opportunity to also talk about another battlefield which is located in Pennsylvania where a great difference was caused, a great difference in holding our Nation together, and that is the battlefield at Gettysburg.

The difference between this bill and what is occurring at Gettysburg is the fact that these projects are an example of how a process should work, of how input should be across party lines, it should be at various levels of government, it should be with people in the community, and so this is a very fine bill. It is going to do a lot of wonderful things so that the heritage of our Nation, as portrayed at Brandywine and Paoli, are going to be preserved for generations to come.

I hate to be the skunk at a garden party. It would be nice to come to the floor and only talk about all of the wonderful things this bill does. But we cannot expect to remember what happened at Brandywine and Paoli and what happened during the Civil War at Gettysburg if we are not willing to step forward and express some discomfort ourselves to protect the speech and the rights of the people around those battlefields, the people who care about our heritage, who care about what is going on in our Nation, and I am very troubled by what is occurring at Gettysburg.

Mr. Chairman, there is an attempt, and in fact a general management plan was just approved by the Interior Department last Friday for a public-private partnership in Gettysburg, and I know that many of the members of this committee have expressed their concern and their consternation, but still the Department of Interior and the Parks Department continues to move forward.

People in the community have said that they are upset that they do not have input in this plan, and still the Interior Department and the Bureau of Parks continues to move forward. This new visitors center in Gettysburg is going to move farther away from the downtown area where I would remind my colleagues that Day Two of the Battle of Gettysburg was fought. In fact, the confederates over ran the town of Gettysburg.

Many very important things occurred in Gettysburg, and now, unlike the visitor center that is currently there, many pedestrians will be unable to walk over a mile from where this new site is proposed to be built to the town of Gettysburg. And so businessmen who have invested in the community, historical groups that have fought to preserve what has happened in Gettysburg, will all be left behind, and all of this will be moved a mile away from the City of Gettysburg. And in this plan over 600 acres of trees will be taken down, 45 acres of which are going to be destroyed where this new site is planned.

The problem with what is occurring is that unlike the visitor center that Congress is about to authorize today for Valley Forge and unlike the visitor center that Congress has already authorized for the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, for Zion, and Rocky Mountain National Parks, they also involved public-private partnerships.

Now Congress will not have a role in what is going on at Gettysburg because of a loophole. What is the loophole? The Gettysburg visitor center is planned to be built within the parks of the national park, but it will be built on private land so that none of the federal procurement or workers protection will apply to the construction or operation of that visitor center.

What does that mean? It means that none of those visitors' centers, that the other visitors centers that I mentioned at the other sites involved commercial loans or commercial activities. At Gettysburg you will see a huge cafeteria that is going to take away business from the local restaurants.

We will also see that the ability to skirt Federal rules on employment, of contracting and procurement, rules like Davis-Bacon and rules requiring competitive bidding to protect against sweetheart deals will be waived at Gettysburg. Congress needs to have the ability to step back and tell the Interior Department, the Bureau of Parks, let us listen to the community. Let us answer the questions about what is going on at Gettysburg.

I am really troubled, and I would say to all of my colleagues, one of the men who owns some of the property there is a gentleman named Eric Uberman. He appeared on the Today Show on NBC this morning where he was asked questions about this. He found out on the QT that, in fact, Federal employees were in his business, people who work for the Parks Department, he imagines, taking photographs surreptitiously, surveillance of his property. I have those photographs here.

I would ask my colleagues, what is going on? When we are talking about the protections at Brandywine, at Paoli, when we are talking about preserving our country at Gettysburg, how can we in Congress stand by and allow a Federal department, whether it is the Department of the Interior, whether it is the EPA, whether it is the FBI; we are talking about all of the great courage that was shown on these battlefields. Can we not in Congress show some courage and say, it is up to us, the elected people of the people's House, to determine if the Federal Government has run roughshod over these businesses? If the employees from the Parks Department or the Interior Department who took all of these photographs of the interiors and exteriors of businesses in Gettysburg, if they had a legitimate purpose, why did they not go to Mr. Eric Uberman? Why did they not step forward and say, in determining what our plan is going to be, we need to take some pictures of your business, and we want your input, too, Mr. Uberman. Why did Mr. Uberman have to find out on the QT and then file a FOIA, which took well over a month, to get access to those photographs?

It is up to us, I say to my colleagues. We talk about courage. We talk about those who died during the Revolutionary War, who died during Gettysburg and who preserved this Nation at a time of strife during the 1860s. What about 1999? Is this Congress any less patriotic to step forward to protect these businesspeople? Even if they are right, if the Interior Department is right, if the Parks Department is right, why do we not step forward and say, hold your horses, stop; let Congress investigate this.

Again, I laud all of my colleagues. I am in support of this bill. I will offer and withdraw my amendment simply so we can have it in the record, and I will call on my friends in this Congress to act with me over the next 30 days. We have a 30-day period. Let us call this bureaucracy to account for what they have done. Let us make sure that what we are doing at Gettysburg is just as responsible, just as well thought out, as what we are doing today at Paoli and Brandywine.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON).

(Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding me this time for the appropriate thank yous. We stand up on this floor and we take credit when legislation is passed, but all of us in this body know that the real credit for the legislation goes to those staff people who work tirelessly behind the scenes to work with us to help make things happen. It would be inappropriate for me not to recognize those people who helped make this day possible.

I want to thank Todd Hall for his outstanding work on our behalf; Alan Freemayer from the full committee for his work. I want to thank Cheri Sexton and Marsha Stewart. I want to thank Rick Healy for his tremendous help. There he is over there on the minority side. It was, in fact, a bipartisan staff effort that allowed us to get here.

I would be totally remiss if I did not mention my staffer who has spent 2 years working this issue, Erin Coyle.

This is her fist major bill. You did a fantastic job, Erin Coyle, so you can bask in the glory of the passage of this bill today. Without you, it would not have happened.

I also want to say to our colleagues, Mr. Chairman, this is a unique bill. When my distinguished friend had the hearing, the key witness was none other than George Washington. George Washington in the form of Jim Gallagher, who has played George Washington in the reenactment of the Delaware River crossing for something like 10 years, came down to Washington and actually presented the testimony as perhaps General George Washington would have done 200 years ago to protect this site. So we thank General Washington, Jim Gallagher, for being here.

Ed Barrs, who is the historian emeritus of the Park Service for his cooperation; from the Park Service itself Don Berry; Jim Pepper and Arthur Stewart from Valley Forge.

I also want to thank the local folks. Governor Ridge, State Senator Thompson, State Representative Flick; county commissioners from Chester County, Republicans Carla Hanna and Karen Martynick and Democrat Andrew Denniman. They were unanimous in their support.

I also want to thank Henry Briggs from the Malvern Borough; the Chester County Chamber of Commerce, Rob Powson; and the local council member of Malvern, Sara Bones, who constantly prodded this through.

It was a tireless effort on behalf of many people, and again, I want to thank everyone for allowing us to get to this point in time.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would simply like to add to that long list of thank yous that the gentleman just read a thank you and compliment to Jon Pierre Bouvel of the Valley Forge Historical Society for his leadership in marshalling local support for this public-private partnership; and also thanks to Paul Decker, the Executive Director of the Valley Forge Convention and Visitor Bureau and a number of Montgomery County officials who have been in strong support of this public-private partnership at Valley Forge.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule by title, and each title shall be considered read.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the Congress-sional RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment and may reduce to not less than 5 minutes the time for voting by electronic device on any postponed question that immediately follows another vote by electronic device without intervening business, provided that the time for voting by electronic device on the first in any series of questions shall not be less than 15 minutes.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Protect America's Treasures of the Revolution for Independence for Our Tomorrow Act" or the "PATRIOT Act".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 1?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KLINK

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KLINK:

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL AUTHORIZATION REQUIRED FOR CERTAIN NEW CONSTRUCTION WITHIN THE GETTYSBURG NATIONAL MILITARY PARK.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior may not authorize the construction of any visitor's center or museum in the proximity of or within the boundaries of Gettysburg National Military Park, unless Congress has specifically authorized the construction of such visitor's center or museum.

(b) APPROVAL IN VIOLATION OF THIS SECTION INEFFECTIVE.—If the Secretary, through approval of a General Management Plan or any other action, approves construction of a visitor's center or museum in violation of this section after June 15, 1999, approval of such construction shall not be valid and shall have no force or effect.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall be deemed to have been enacted and taken effect on June 15, 1999.

Mr. KLINK (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is not germane under rule XVI, clause 7 of the Rules of the House of Representatives because it deals with a different subject matter than the text.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any Member wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized against the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, as I said during the general debate, and I understand that the point of order will probably be sustained, and so I would, therefore, not try to be repetitive. I understand that the chairman has expressed himself some concerns about the same thing, and I do not want to be redundant; however, I would like to be recognized for one moment.

Because what is happening, Mr. Chairman, at Gettysburg is atrocious. I think this probably does relate to these other battlefields. That is why we thought this was the amendment to bring this amendment forward.

Again, the Park Service has decided that they need to move a new visitors' center a mile or so outside of the town of Gettysburg. The problem is that the people of Gettysburg have not been able to address this problem. They have not been part of the decision-making. That is why this amendment, I thought, was so important to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KLINK) will suspend.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, let me respectfully point out that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not speaking to the point of order, but is speaking to his amendment. As I understand it, he should confine his remarks to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's remarks should be addressed to the point of order.

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Chairman, I think that during the general debate I have had the opportunity to make my point on this bill, and I respect greatly the chairman and ranking member of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate title I.

If not, the Clerk will designate title II.

The text of title II is as follows:

SEC. 202. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) Valley Forge National Historical Park, formerly a State park, was established as a unit of the National Park System in 1976. The National Park Service acquired various lands and structures associated with the park, including a visitor center, from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

(2) Valley Forge National Historical Park maintains an extensive collection of artifacts, books, and other documents associated with the Continental Army's winter encampment of 1777–1778 at Valley Forge, Revolutionary War-era artifacts of military life, important archaeological resources, and numerous structures and associated artifacts.

(3) Between 1982 and 1997 the National Park Service completed a general management plan, long-range interpretive plan, and strategic business plan for Valley Forge National Historical Park that establish goals and priorities for management of the park.

(4) These plans identify inadequacies in the park's current visitor center and interpretive programs. The plans call for the development of a new or significantly renovated visitor center that would make the collection accessible to the public through exhibits and research facilities. Plans also call for improving the interpretation of the landscape and improving the circulation into and through the park.

(5) The Valley Forge Historical Society was established in 1918 as a nonprofit organization to preserve and interpret for future generations the significant history and artifacts of the American Revolution in their historic setting at Valley Forge. The Valley Forge Historical Society has amassed valuable holdings of artifacts, art, books, and other documents relating to the 1777–1778 encampment of Washington's Continental Army at Valley Forge, the American Revolution, and the American colonial era. The Society continues to pursue additional important collections through bequests, exchanges, and acquisitions.

(6) The Society's collection is currently housed in a facility inadequate to properly maintain, preserve, and display their ever-growing collection. The Society is interested in developing an up-to-date museum and education facility.

(7) The Society and the National Park Service have discussed the idea of a joint museum and education and visitor facility. Such a collaborative project would directly support the historical, educational, and interpretive activities and needs of Valley Forge National Historical Park and those of the Valley Forge Historical Society. A joint facility would combine 2 outstanding museum collections and provide an enhanced experience at Valley Forge for visitors, scholars, and researchers.

(8) The Society has proposed to raise funds to construct a new museum and education and visitor center on park property at Valley Forge National Historical Park that would be planned, developed, and operated jointly with Valley Forge National Historical Park.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with the Valley Forge Historical Society to construct and operate a museum within the boundary of Valley Forge National Historical Park in cooperation with the Secretary.

SEC. 203. VALLEY FORGE MUSEUM OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION AUTHORIZATION.

(a) AGREEMENT AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of the Interior, in administering the Valley Forge National Historical Park, is authorized to enter into an agreement under appropriate terms and conditions with the Valley Forge Historical Society to facilitate the planning, construction, and operation of the Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution on Federal land within the boundary of Valley Forge National Historical Park.

(b) CONTENTS AND IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENT.—An agreement entered into under subsection (a) shall—

(1) authorize the Society to develop and operate the museum pursuant to plans developed by the Secretary and to provide at the museum appropriate and necessary programs and services to visitors to Valley Forge National Historical Park, related to the story of Valley Forge and the American Revolution;

(2) only be carried out in a manner consistent with the General Management Plan and other plans for the preservation and interpretation of the resources and values of Valley Forge National Historical Park;

(3) authorize the Secretary to undertake at the museum activities related to the management of Valley Forge National Historical Park, including, but not limited to, provision of appropriate visitor information and interpretive facilities and programs related to Valley Forge National Historical Park;

(4) authorize the Society, acting as a private nonprofit organization, to engage in activities appropriate for operation of a museum that may include, but are not limited to, charging appropriate fees, conducting events, and selling merchandise, tickets, and food to visitors to the museum;

(5) provide that the Society's revenues from the museum's facilities and services shall be used to offset the expenses of the museum's operation; and

(6) authorize the Society to occupy the structure(s) so constructed for the term specified in the Agreement and subject to the following terms and conditions:

(A) The conveyance by the Society to the United States of America of all right, title, and interest in the structure(s) to be constructed at Valley Forge National Historical Park.

(B) The Society's right to occupy and use the structure(s) shall be for the exhibition, preservation, and interpretation of artifacts associated with the Valley Forge story and the American Revolution, to enhance the visitor experience of Valley Forge National Historical Park, and to conduct appropriately related activities of the Society consistent with its mission and with the purposes for which the Valley Forge National Historical Park was established. Such right shall not be transferred or conveyed without the express consent of the Secretary.

(C) Any other terms and conditions as may be determined by the Secretary.

SEC. 204. PRESERVATION AND PROTECTION.

Nothing in this Act shall authorize the Secretary or the Society to take any actions in derogation of the preservation and protection of the values and resources of Valley Forge National Historical Park. An agreement entered into under section 203 shall be construed and implemented in light of the high public value and integrity of the Valley Forge National Historical Park and the National Park System.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there amendments to title II?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the end of the bill, section 205.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

SEC. 205. SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON PURCHASE OF AMERICAN-MADE GOODS.

It is the sense of the Congress that the Society, in constructing and operating the museum, purchase American-made goods to the greatest degree practicable.

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment basically urges the society, which I think is an excellent construct, to, in fact, making this bill a worthwhile bill for all of America, it encourages that society that when they expend dollars, that they expend those dollars on American-made goods and products. There will be many visitors. It does not compel them, but if anything, it is a reminder that even at our great landmarks and our great treasures, that wherever possible, if we buy American-made goods, America will be stronger.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, as usual, our friend from Ohio has come up with an excellent amendment, and this side accepts the amendment.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I urge an "aye" vote on the amendment, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other amendments?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland) having assumed the chair, Mr. LAHOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 659) to authorize appropriations for the protection of Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields in Pennsylvania, to direct the National Park Service to conduct a special resource study of Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields, to authorize the Valley Forge Museum of the American Revolution at Valley Forge National Historical Park, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 210, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The Chair announces that immediately after this vote, proceedings will resume on a motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 1175 considered earlier today, and that will be a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 418, nays 4, not voting 12, as follows:

AMERICANS ARE NOT CELEBRATING SO-CALLED VICTORY IN YUGOSLAVIA

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, our "victory" in Yugoslavia has given us the right to spend $30 to $50 billion over the next several years to rebuild what our bombs destroyed. And, of course, our troops will get to stay there for years, at tremendous expense to our taxpayers. Already General Clarke is saying he needs thousands more of our soldiers.

And what did we achieve? Columnist Jeff Jacoby of the Boston Globe said, "The Yugoslav war, fought so as to minimize NATO's casualties, maximized the suffering of the people it was meant to help."

Columnist Linda Bowles said, "Almost all the ethnic cleansing occurred after the effort to rescue them began. More than 1 million refugees were driven from their homes. Perhaps the greatest price we will pay is to live in a world in which more nations and people hate, fear, and distrust America than at any other time in our history."

Columnist Charles Krauthammer said by the President's own standard, "The war was lost, irretrievably, catastrophically lost, in the first week."

Mr. Speaker, the President is on a victory tour, but I do not see many Americans celebrating.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the complete article I referred to above by Charles Krauthammer:

[From the Boston Globe, June 11, 1999]

DEFINING VICTORY DOWN

(By Charles Krauthammer)

The papers are signed. The troops are moving in. Victory.

Victory? On the eve of the Kosovo war, the president of the United States declares the objective: "To protect thousands of innocent people in Kosovo from a mounting military offensive." This would be done in one of two ways. We would deter Serbia from "ethnically cleansing" Kosovo or, failing that, we would physically—militarily—destroy Serbia's ability to do so.

By Clinton's own standard, the war was lost—irretrievably, catastrophically lost—in the first week. NATO launched a campaign at once anemic and tentative, a campaign of bombing empty buildings. Slobodan Milosevic responded with the most massive ethnic cleansing in Europe since World War II.

Now 11 weeks and a million refugees later, there is an agreement that permits a return to the status quo ante. Well, not quite: It will be a partial and imperfect return, given that many Kosovars are dead and many will not want to return. Moreover, what they are returning to is not Kosovo, but a wasteland that was Kosovo.

This is not victory. This is defining victory down.

It did not have to be this way. After all, Milosevic finally agreed to a partial undoing of his ethnic cleansing only when NATO attacks on his civilian infrastructure became intolerable. Why, then, did we not turn out the lights in Belgrade on Day One? Two weeks into the war, I wrote, noting the obvious, that "the only possible way out of this war short of abject defeat" was an air campaign of "seriousness"—hitting "power plants, fuel depots, bridges," the kind of war that actually kills combatants and inevitably civilians but that so debilitates the enemy nation as to bring it to a halt—and to the negotiating table.

Historians will puzzle over why Clinton and Blair and Schroeder and the rest did not do this until after Kosovo had been wiped nearly clean of Albanians. But it is no puzzle: Clinton thought that military minimalism—so congenial to the ex- and current pacifists in his coalition—was a win-win proposition for him.

Either Milosevic would fold in the face of a demonstration war or, if he did not, Clinton could do exactly what he had done after his little pre-impeachment three-day war on Iraq: take to TV, offer a gaudy list of targets hit, declare victory and go home.

What he had not counted on was Milosevic's public exposure of such a fraud. In Iraq, Clinton could pinprick and declare victory because there were no cameras to record his failure—nuclear and chemical weapons are being developed by Saddam unmolested, but for now unseen. In Kosovo, on the other hand, a million refugees parade before the cameras of the world. Not even Clinton could spin his way out of that defeat by calling it victory.

So the air war went on, finally got serious, and now we have something that is being called victory. But the supposed instrument of Serb surrender, the U.N. Security Council resolution codifying the cease-fire conditions, is riddled with ambiguities.

The central point throughout the conflict has always been who will run Kosovo after Serb forces leave. The governing Security Council resolution authorizes an international security presence with "substantial" NATO participation. The command structure is not spelled out, and the Russians insist that their troops will not be under NATO command. If they are not, will they have their own occupation zone that will effectively partition Kosovo?

More muddle: Serbia is allowed a presence at the re-entry points for the refugees. Will that scare away the refugees? We don't know. And who is going to "demilitarize" the Kosovo Liberation Army?

I am not objecting to these compromises—they are the necessary accommodations to end an extraordinarily ill-conceived war. What I do object to is spinning it into a triumph. If this is such a triumph, does anyone imagine that we will ever repeat such an adventure?

And the final irony: Even if all the ambiguities are answered in NATO's favor, even if the Yugoslavs comply with every detail of the military agreement signed with NATO on Wednesday, what are we left with? The prize for victory: The United States and its allies are permitted to interpose their soldiers between mortal enemies in a continuing Balkan guerrilla war. For years.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

---

FUNDING FOR NIH, AND THE ANNUAL BUDGET IMPASSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, later on this evening we plan to conduct a full special order of 1 hour on the subject of funding for the National Institutes of Health, an important budget item every year but increasingly important as we move closer to many discoveries and preventive disease matters that require the attention of the Congress. So we will be developing where we are and some of the plans that are in action towards that funding mechanism for that NIH.

In the meantime, though, I do want to bring the attention again of the Members to the pending year-end perennial budget impasse that we reach no matter what we try to do. The fiscal year ends September 30, and rarely, if ever, are we prepared on the next day to face a fully enacted new budget for the next fiscal year. What we have tried to do over the last 10 years, with some success but with increasing frustration that we are not able to complete the job, is to put in place an instant replay mechanism to prevent government shutdowns forever. That is to say that the appropriation bills that are incomplete on September 30 will be re-enacted automatically with the previous year's numbers for the next fiscal year until such time as the appropriations process brings about a new fiscal plan for the ensuing year.

This makes so much common sense that I fear that that is the one ingredient that makes it almost impossible for us to come together to pass it. But we will make another effort this year to demonstrate the necessity for such a mechanism. We cannot, I repeat, we cannot tolerate a government shut-down.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEKAS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, with respect to the earlier part of the gentleman's statement, when he mentioned his debate that will take place tonight, I fully intended to join with him, however, I cannot join with the gentleman tonight. But I fully support the funding for the research projects that the gentleman is talking about and I have submitted comments for the record. Hopefully, they will be inserted sometime during the gentleman's statements tonight indicating my support for that.

As to the CR, we will debate that at a later time. I would suggest to the gentleman, however, that we ought to look seriously at biennial budgeting, which would accomplish the same thing. If we ever got to biennial budgeting, I think we would see surpluses growing that second year at record levels, as was the experience of the Alabama legislature.

So I just wanted to tell the gentleman that I support what he is doing with respect to adequate funding for research and for all of the institutions that do this research, and that we will debate the continuing resolution at a later time.

Mr. GEKAS. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, we will make certain the gentleman's comments are placed in the record with respect to the NIH, and then I will quarrel with him wherever and whenever I meet him, in the cloakroom or anywhere else, on the benefits that we can derive from an automatic CR on a year-to-year basis.

Mr. CALLAHAN. If the gentleman will continue to yield, far be it from me to match intelligence levels with the gentleman, because the gentleman is known for his knowledge of the institution. I just happen to have a greater depth of knowledge, I think, on the appropriation process, because I serve on that committee. But I thank the gentleman anyway.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I am available to the gentleman and he can try to convince me of that. But I warn the gentleman, he will have a tough battle on his hands.

Mr. CALLAHAN. I look forward to that.

REPEAL OF PRESSLER AMENDMENT MEANS MORE ARMS FOR RADICAL MILITANTS IN KASHMIR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, as both Houses of Congress work to lift the unilateral American economic sanctions on India and Pakistan, an effort I strongly support, another dangerous issue has been introduced into the mix, threatening stability in South Asia.

Mr. Speaker, a provision in the defense appropriations bill, recently approved by the other body, the Senate, would suspend for 5 years the sanctions imposed last year on India and Pakistan after the two countries conducted nuclear tests. Last week, in this body, legislation was approved that would continue for 1 year the President's authority to waive the sanctions. These are worthy initiatives that I hope we can build on.

But, Mr. Speaker, the Senate legislation also includes language that would repeal the Pressler amendment prohibition on U.S. military assistance to Pakistan.

In 1985, Congress amended the Foreign Assistance Act to prohibit all U.S. aid to Pakistan if the President failed to certify that Pakistan did not possess a nuclear explosive device. Known as the Pressler Amendment, after the distinguished former Senator who sponsored the provision, this law arose from the concern that Pakistan was ignoring U.S. concerns about proliferation, despite promises of billions of dollars of U.S. assistance. In 1990, President Bush invoked the Pressler amendment to block aid to Pakistan.

Now, the Senate has acted to repeal the Pressler amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is a serious mistake, as nothing has changed to justify the repeal of the Pressler amendment. Indeed, in recent weeks we have seen strong indications of Pakistani support for militants who have infiltrated into India's side of the line of control in Kashmir. Besides the so-called political and moral support for the militants that Pakistan acknowledges, there is growing evidence that Pakistan is providing material and logistic support for the militants, and that Pakistani army regulars are actually taking part in breaching the internationally recognized line of control in Kashmir. This is really in a cynical bid to ratchet up the tensions between India and Pakistan, and at such a time it does not seem prudent, in my opinion, to renew military transfers to Pakistan.

Mr. Speaker, given the long and well-documented history of Pakistani support for and collaboration with the militants who have been perpetrating a reign of terror in Kashmir, there is every reason to believe that providing U.S. arms to Pakistan would result in these American weapons being funneled to the militants.

By arming Pakistan, we would be arming the militants responsible for the deaths of thousands of civilians in Kashmir, and who are now contributing to the escalating tensions with India.

Mr. Speaker, there was an article in Saturday's New York Times entitled "Kashmir Militants Seek Islamic State," and it describes how Islamic militants from several different nations are working to transform Kashmir from a tolerant secular democratic state, that people from many faiths call home, into an area under strict Islamic religious rule. I wanted to quote from this article by Times reporter Steven Kinzer. He says,

The campaign is in part a legacy of the proxy war the U.S. waged against Soviet forces in Afghanistan during the 1980s.

The article describes how having succeeded in driving the Soviet forces out of Afghanistan and establishing a form of religious rule there under the Taliban, these warriors are now turning their attention to Kashmir. And quoting again from the Times article, it says that,

In Srinigar, the summer capital of Kashmir, militants from countries as far apart as Indonesia, Sudan and Bahrain have given interviews asserting that they learned the art of war from Americans and are now using their skills to fight the Indian Army. Many are evidently using not only tactics that Americans taught them, but also weapons Americans gave them.

In fact, the article notes how an Indian helicopter was shot down by an Islamic guerilla using an American made stinger missile, and that about a dozen more stingers, each capable of shooting down a plane or a helicopter, are unaccounted for in the region. The U.N. envoy in Srinigar is quoted as saying that, Weapons provided for Afghanistan with large help from the Americans and CIA are now in the hands of the militants.

An Indian Army colonel states that, "The militants are using not only small arms that they got from the Americans, but also Stinger missiles and American anti-tank weapons. It's not only weapons, but also battle-hardened troops. It's a direct result of the American policy in Afghanistan."

Mr. Speaker, the Soviet defeat in Afghanistan was an important turning point contributing to the collapse of the Soviet Empire. Yet, one of the unintended consequences has been the creation of a radical movement of armed terrorists, mercenaries and militants who have imposed a repressive regime in Afghanistan, are trying to take over Kashmir, and who seem to have a great deal of influence within the Pakistani government and armed forces.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that during the Cold War our fear of Soviet expansionism led us to embrace regimes like Pakistan that do not share our values of democracy and tolerance. But in the post-Cold War era, there is no justification for militarily propping up such a regime. Maybe we cannot completely stop the militants who threatened Democratic India as well as American and western interests, but we can at least make sure we do not give them what they want most, and that is American arms. Sending military assistance to Pakistan amounts to a guaranty that these American weapons will be funneled to the militants. And given this sad reality, we must not repeal the Pressler amendment.

TRIBUTE TO NUTRITION PROFESSIONALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the dedicated nutrition professionals who work in hospitals, WIC clinics, nursing homes, school lunch and breakfast programs, and many other settings where they are striving to improve the nutritional health of our Nation's citizens.

□ 1800

I would like to call special attention to one important segment of our population where nutrition services have proven to make a significant difference among our senior citizens.

In many ways, our Nation's health care system is the best in the world, partially because our free market system allows innovations to occur at a pace that is demanded by the health care consumer.

Unfortunately, too often the largest health program in the country, the Medicare program, is unresponsive and fails to keep pace with the advances that medical science demonstrates are effective.

In recent years, as science and society have uncovered more information about the critically important role of nutrition in the prevention, treatment and management of disease, more and more Americans have demanded that nutrition services be a standard part of their health care protection. In fact, by one estimate, 75 percent of all managed care health plans in America now offer some degree of coverage for nutrition therapy services.

Therefore, it is disheartening, Mr. Speaker, though perhaps not surprising, to realize that nutrition services are inadequately covered under the Medicare program. While the science of nutrition has advanced at a rapid pace over the last several decades, Medicare's coverage of nutrition services has remained largely static.

Under Medicare's conditions of participation, appropriate nutrition care is a standard part of the hospital program. However, the outpatient, or Part B, portion of the program fails to provide reliable nutrition coverage. It makes little sense to me that Medicare beneficiaries can receive comprehensive nutrition care only after they have become so sick that they are admitted to the hospital. For many years, health care treatment has been shifting away from inpatient facilities like hospitals and more toward outpatient settings. And yet, still we find Medicare adhering to an outdated system where nutrition therapy services are available only in the acute-care setting.

This clearly is a reflection of a system that is in need of change. Our modern health care program ought to ensure the adequacy and equitability of nutrition services in both inpatient and outpatient settings. A great number of diseases can be prevented and managed throughout patient nutrition therapy. Research proves that renal disease, diabetes, cancer, heart disease, and other illnesses respond well to nutrition interventions.

Nutrition professionals have documented the ability of well-nourished individuals to better resist disease and to tolerate other therapy than those who are under-nourished. These individuals are also better equipped to recover from acute illness, surgical interventions, and trauma. As a result, they experience fewer and shorter hospital stays, need less medication, and suffer fewer medical complications. All this can save money and lives.

A constituent of mine recently visited me and explained just how effective these services can be and what a difference they can make in people's lives. The constituent is a dietician from Florida who told me about a case involving her mother-in-law who lives in a different State.

During a routine medical visit, her mother-in-law was found to have a high blood sugar level. Her physician gave her medication and a blood glucose monitor to check her blood sugar level but gave her no directions about using the monitor or changing her diet. Within 2 weeks, she was hospitalized with severe low blood sugar and heart palpitations.

After working with a dietician, she is now off the medication and able to control other blood sugar level. However with nutrition counseling from the beginning, that hospitalization could have been avoided, saving the cost of the hospitalization as well as saving that mother-in-law from a life-threatening situation.

Now, I do not know if that physician lacked knowledge about the importance of nutrition in the treatment of diabetes or, knowing that the services were not likely to be reimbursed, did not want to put his patient to that expense. But the bottom line is that our health care system must provide patients with access to this important service.

According to my constituent, there are many other diseases that can be successfully managed with the medical nutrition therapy.

Mr. Speaker, I recently spoke with a constituent who is a dietetic intern working in the James A. Haley Veterans' Administration Hospital in Tampa, Florida. She described the rigorous educational and training requirements that she and others preparing for a career in dietetics must undergo.

With 5 years specifically devoted to the study of nutrition, registered dieticians learn to apply the principles of nutrition, biochemistry, and physiology toward the prevention and treatment of diseases. Most physicians understand that registered dieticians are the best qualified professionals to furnish nutrition therapy.

Clearly, registered dieticians are a valuable and indispensable part of the health care team, and Medicare beneficiaries ought to have reliable outpatient access to the care they deliver.

This Congress, Mr. Speaker, should carefully examine coverage for medical nutrition therapy as one important way to help strengthen Medicare for our children and grandchildren.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BILIRAKIS. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to rise in support of the comments of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) this evening in support of medical nutrition therapy.

It is truly a tragedy that we seem unable to reorganize Medicare in such a way that preventive health measures like nutrition therapy can be adopted. In the first few years, $2.3 billion could be saved, which would offset the overall longer cost of $2.7 billion. After the third year, the savings outweigh the cost. And savings for patients with diabetes alone would total $1.6 billion over the 7 years.

Since diabetes and cardiovascular disease affect 60 percent of the Medicare population, this is just clearly a good way to both save money and improve the quality of care.

The Lewin Group recently completed a study for the Department of Defense that estimated that annual net savings could be developed of $3.1 million if medical nutrition therapy was included in the Tricare benefit program for our military personnel.

The evidence is just growing out there. I believe it is overwhelming. I thank my colleague tonight for taking the floor in support of medical nutrition therapy as a covered benefit under Medicare, and I join him in supporting that.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for her comments. There are not many people, if any, in this House of Representatives that know more about health care than the gentleman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) and I appreciate her comments.

It is typical, is it not, when we talk about preventive care that today's dollars are not taken into the consideration, the ultimate savings over the long haul?

WE MUST PREPARE TODAY'S YOUTH FOR TOMORROW'S ECONOMY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, last week, Microsoft's Bill Gates and other leaders of the high-tech industry came to Washington and they came to tell us, among other things, that we need to do a better job of preparing today's youth for tomorrow's jobs.

Bill Gates is not alone. I hear the same message everywhere I go in my district from CEOs of pharmaceutical companies in Hunterdon County, New Jersey, to managers of local restaurants in West Long Branch.

We literally cannot afford to wait to help our schools recruit, retain, and train qualified teachers. We cannot postpone work any longer in making sure Federal aid provides more flexibility conditioned on more accountability for results. Now is the time to work in partnership with our communities to ensure that we have a school infrastructure that we need for the 21st century.

The number of school children is growing at a record-setting pace. More than 52 million students are in school today, an all-time high. In my home State of New Jersey, we are experiencing very rapid growth. That is why New Jersey communities need assistance to help pay for the bricks and mortar required to have the smaller class sizes so our kids can learn and compete with students throughout the world.

Last week, I joined with other freshmen Democrats in writing a letter to our Speaker asking that we bring willing school construction legislation to the floor of this House for a vote. We look forward to his answer. And even more, we look forward to legislative action.

We are investing billions in new prisons. We are investing billions of dollars into our military installations. But should we not also be voting on providing the resources to help our communities build schools, as well? I think so, and so do the families of Central New Jersey.

Together with my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE), I am working to help New Jersey towns afford modernized and new schools by providing tax credits to the holders of school construction bonds, in effect paying the interest on those bonds.

Under this bill, the local entity will still be responsible for paying the principal. The interest-free capital will leverage the amount of money available to meet the need to modernize our educational infrastructure in fast-growing communities, as we have in Central New Jersey. But "infrastructure" does not just mean classrooms, desks, and chalk boards. It means technology.

One of the areas I am most concerned about is technology education. It is changing our lives. Today, with the touch of a key, we can send billions of dollars of capital around the globe, where the cars we drive have more computing power than the Apollo spacecraft. There are no unskilled jobs. Even entry-level jobs demand basic computer knowledge.

Yet there is a move underway here in Congress designed to rob hundreds of thousands of Americans from developing the computer skills they need to compete in an increasingly competitive technological world. The e-rate, the popular program that provides discount telecommunications and Internet technologies to elementary and secondary schools and libraries, may fall victim to politics. We simply cannot allow this to happen.

Telecommunications and computer technology are effective in helping students master complex skills that the business community sees as critical for the future workforce. According to a recent study, students who actively use the Internet for classroom projects submit more ambitious and more complete projects. Other studies are also showing that on-line resources boost student interest and student motivation. Students are learning more and in greater depth because they have access to resources beyond their classroom, resources that are more current than their textbooks and sometimes more knowledgeable than even their teachers. However, we need teachers who can teach these subjects.

A recent survey published by the Department of Education tells us that only 20 percent of teachers feel qualified to use the technology that is available to them now. That is why I have joined my colleagues the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ROTHMAN) and the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA) in cosponsoring legislation to help teachers teach technology education.

Teachers deserve to be treated like the professionals that they are so they can continue to grow in their profession. We need to ensure that they are receiving the training they need to perform the miracles we ask of them. Of all the important jobs in our society, nothing makes more of an impact on our children than a well-trained, caring, and dedicated teacher and no job is ultimately more important to our society.

Across the Nation, recruiting and retraining high-quality teachers is becoming a major concern. Topping our list should be better targeted and more effective professional development programs. It is time we encourage partnerships with other school districts, universities, labor unions, and the business communities.

My colleagues, Mr. DAVIS and Mr. ROEMER, who will be speaking with us shortly, have introduced legislation to give grants to colleges and universities to help them train these professionals as a second career. This is patterned on the very successful "Troops to Teachers" programs, and I recommend strongly that we support this legislation.

TIME IS UP FOR MEXICO TO RETURN ACCUSED KILLER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to update the House on a situation of grave concern to me and to the constituents in my district.

It has been 19 months since 13-year-old Stevie Bellush came home from school to find her mother's body on the kitchen floor.

Sheila Bellush, a young, vibrant 35-year-old and mother of six, had been shot in the face and her throat had been slashed. Her 2-year-old quadruplets were crawling in her blood next to her body. At that moment, it would have seemed inconceivable that the drama had only begun as the case turned into a national nightmare for our Sarasota community.

An overwhelming trail of evidence immediately led to Jose Luis Del Toro, who allegedly killed Sheila in a murder-for-hire scheme. Del Toro fled to Mexico, where he was arrested on November 20, 1997, 19 months ago, and he remains in Mexican prison.

Del Toro is a U.S. citizen born and raised in Texas. His parents are U.S. citizens. Mr. Del Toro is accused of driving from San Antonio, Texas, to Sarasota, Florida, to commit a murder, driving back to San Antonio, and then crossing the Mexican border to escape justice in this country. He had entered Mexico illegally and he was scheduled for deportation 2 days after his arrest in November of 1997. At the last hour, as border patrol agents in Texas were awaiting Del Toro's arrival at the border to take him into custody, Sarasota State attorney, Earl Moreland, received a phone call from officials at the Department of Justice who informed him that Del Toro's deportation had been canceled and that the United States will have to file a formal extradition request.

No reason was given for this change. Then the Department of Justice delivered a startling and dismal message. The State Attorney's office would have to waive the death penalty in order to obtain Del Toro's return. It was a difficult decision, but Mexican demands were agreed to in the hope that Del Toro would at least return to Florida to serve a life sentence. Nineteen months later, he has still not returned.

Tomorrow morning, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) will hold a hearing on this case in the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources of the Committee on Government Reform. This hearing is another important step in keeping the pressure on Mexico to return fugitives like Del Toro to the United States. Pressure needs to be applied not only to Mexico but to the administration as well to renegotiate our extradition treaty with Mexico to prevent other U.S. fugitives from escaping justice by merely walking across the border. Mexico should not be a haven for murderers. This is a case where a U.S. citizen was murdered, the accused is a U.S. citizen, Mexico has nothing to do with the case, and Del Toro should be promptly returned to this country so justice can be served. I greatly appreciate the gentleman from Florida having this hearing tomorrow.

As the old saying goes, justice delayed is justice denied, and I will not stand by quietly as justice is denied to my congressional district by a foreign entity who should have no interest in this case. Today's editorial page in the Sarasota Herald-Tribune reads, "Time's Up for Mexico." It begins, "The reasons for Mexico to extradite murder suspect Jose Luis Del Toro Jr. will be the same tomorrow as they were a year ago. The only difference is that Mexico can no longer cite the need for time as its inexcusable refusal to send Del Toro to trial in the United States." I could not agree more. I am here today on the floor of the House to say, "Mexico, your time is up. Send back Del Toro."

DEBATE ON GUNS AFFECTS THE DISTRICT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, last week we had a heartbreaking debate on guns. Women Members of this body felt this debate with particular poignancy. If the truth be told, we regard ourselves as special guardians of issues that affect women and families, not because we are such, we are after all, self-anointed, but because we choose to be. However, I ask you to imagine a bill that came from outside, thrown in like a piece of dynamite to wipe out all your local gun laws, whether you are from the West and treasure your right to have a gun or whether you are from a crowded city and treasure your right to ban guns.

Two amendments came forward that would have invaded my district with law from this body. We defeated one handily, that that simply wiped out handgun laws in the District of Columbia. The other, we almost defeated. That is the one I want to talk about this afternoon, because it is one that is of special importance to women and children, and that is a bill that would have allowed people in the District of Columbia to have guns in their home.

Some Members came up to me and said, "Well, that sounds reasonable to me to have a gun in your own home." So why should we not impose that on the District even though your city council has said otherwise and even though no Member here would impose anything on anybody else's district. Nevertheless, I can understand the surface appeal of a gun in your own home.

Ask the women in your own district why they do not want a gun in their own home. No woman in America wants a gun in the home and there is a very good reason why. The greatest cause of death of women is inflicted upon them not by rapists in the streets but by guns and knives in the hands of their own partners in their own homes as it is now. Most of them go to the hospital, the victim of beatings, often severe. Imagine if guns were freely available in homes, particularly in large cities which have rampant domestic violence rates.

Most of those who think about guns in the home are surely unaware of the most tragic statistics of all, and they are not the statistics from Columbine. They are the statistics that are awesomely larger. They are statistics that show accidental killings occur routinely from guns that are simply lying in the home, often out of the reach of children but found by children whose natural curiosity often makes them look for guns. Very few guns are used the way they are in the movies to counter somebody entering through the bedroom window and you shoot them dead. That is not what happens to guns in the home. Look at the statistics and you will know. But in big troubled cities there are other hazards in addition.

The lady who takes care of my handicapped daughter when I told her about how some people wanted guns in the homes gave me I think the best wakeup call of all. She said, "Oh, my God, what will happen to these bad teenagers?" The first she could think of is in her high crime neighborhood in southeast Washington, the troubled teens would be all over the place. She has a hard enough time with them now, but if they think that everybody is packing a gun in her neighborhood, she did not know what she would do. I know that because I represent this city. I do not expect Members to know that who do not. That is why I do not expect them to impose guns on me when my city council has not done so. In this town, particularly in high crime neighborhoods, the criminals and, yes, the teens would be breaking in not looking for computers but looking for guns because they hear the people are packing guns now because the Congress says, "That is the thing to do if you live in a high crime city, pack your gun in."

I do not need this body to send this message to a city that is one of the most violent cities in the United States and that our police chief is just getting under control. He was at the forefront of those who said he did not want our handgun laws wiped out and for God sakes do not send a message from the House that everybody ought to pack a gun.

Mr. Speaker, on Monday, a grandmother named Helen Foster was shot in the back in southwest Washington as she gathered children after she heard gunshots, recognizing that they might be in danger. She died at D.C. General Hospital. What happens when there are guns in the home in a city like this? What happens when there are no handgun laws in a city like this? Grandmothers get shot in the back trying to defend their children.

Let the District be the District. Go home and be what you want to be. Let my District be what it is.

NORTH KOREA: EXPERIENCE DICTATES CAUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, despite a number of highly contentious foreign policy issues that have been debated in this body in recent months, this Member continues to believe that American interests are best served by a bipartisan foreign policy. When the executive and legislative branches, furthermore, speak with one voice, the Nation is more likely to enjoy success in preserving its vital interests.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific of the Committee on International Relations, this Member has had the opportunity to focus closely on the Clinton administration's policy toward this important region. Frankly, the administration deserves credit on several fronts in its overall policy there, including its active support for democracy in Indonesia and a peaceful resolution to the festering situation that is East Timor, the successful renegotiation of the U.S.-Japan Security Guidelines, its commitment with Congress to maintain 100,000 U.S. military personnel in the Asian region, and the judgment to elevate the import of the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation Forum.

Genuine bipartisanship in Congress complementary to formulating a foreign policy, however, requires that Members of the Congress speak out when serious foreign policy failings by this or any other administration are detected. It is in this context that this Member expresses deepening concerns over the Clinton administration's continued lack of a coherent, comprehensive strategy towards Pyongyang, toward North Korea. This situation presents a grave challenge to vital U.S. national security interests.

In recent weeks, two important U.S. missions have traveled to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, that is, North Korea. The first mission was that of former Secretary of Defense William Perry who has been tasked by the President to complete a congressionally mandated, comprehensive review of U.S. policy regarding the problems of the Korean Peninsula. Dr. Perry is an outstanding public servant, extraordinarily well qualified to undertake this important assignment. In large part because of his reputation, his qualifications and the high bipartisan respect he has here on Capitol Hill, expectations are very high that he will be successful in engaging Pyongyang and presenting them with a clear choice of another track for its relationship with the United States, the Republic of Korea—that is South Korea—and our allies in the region.

The second mission involved the inspection of the suspected underground nuclear facility at Kumchang-ni, North Korea. That country, my colleagues will remember, agreed to abandon its nuclear aspirations in return for the construction of two light-water reactors for power generation through the U.S.-led international consortium called the Korean Energy Development Organization, or KEDO. If it is learned that the DPRK has a secret nuclear program, this, of course, would completely undermine the credibility of the Clinton administration's policy of constructive engagement and would end KEDO.

If these missions proved satisfactory in their results, it was hoped that the Clinton administration would begin to lay a solid foundation for eliminating or at least dramatically reducing hostilities and ultimately for wholly transforming the relationship between North Korea and the United States and our regional allies. Working towards this objective certainly is a laudable and desirable goal if North Korea truly does wish to break from its history of brinkmanship and blackmail. Regrettably, this Member does not find the results of the administration's missions to be wholly reassuring, particularly when viewed against the backdrop of North Korean provocations. Of course, despite the completion of the Kumchang-ni inspection to determine if Pyongyang is covertly continuing its nuclear development program at other locations in violation of the agreed framework, we really do not have evidence that they have stopped.

Certainly, former Secretary Perry effectively delivered a strong message to the upper echelons of North Korean leadership, and the American inspection team performed its mission very well. While applauding these efforts, this body nevertheless must urge careful scrutiny of both the results and the administration's impending policy proposal.

There is an old adage that says "actions speak louder than words." With Pyongyang, actions shout louder than words. So, indeed, this Member is troubled by the provocative language and the actions of the North Korean leadership both during and after the Kumchang-ni inspection and Secretary Perry's visit. Not much time has passed since Dr. Perry's visit but Pyongyang's behavior thus far shows no real evidence of an interest in confidence-building measures or tension reduction. Rather, its behavior rings of persistent hostility, and appears to be inconsistent with defusing tensions, advancing regional security, and improving relations.

Here are just a few examples. First, the media has been reporting widely that Pyongyang will test fire the Taepo Dong II ballistic missile in July or August. If these reports are accurate, the growing capability of North Korea's missile development program, including an intercontinental ballistic missile capable of reaching the continental United States, cannot be overstated. North Korea, perhaps the most volatile and unstable regime on earth, is fast acquiring the ability to strike the continental United States with weapons of mass destruction.

Press reports indicate that talks between North Korean officials and Dr. Perry on halting the ballistic missile program and sales, a key requirement outlined by Dr. Perry as he prepared for his visit, apparently ended with the same North Korean attempts at extortion that the U.S. has received at earlier meetings. The North demanded a large direct cash payment to terminate the program. True to form, the DPRK behaves as the modern equivalent of the Barbary pirates, extorting tribute in return for barely tolerable behavior.

It is also important to note that during Dr. Perry's visit, the North Korean press condemned the U.S. with the most contemptuous invective—and also vitriolically denounced South Korea and Japan—on issues ranging from a supposed U.S. master attack plan, an alleged U.S. dress rehearsal for an attack on the DPRK being staged in the Balkans, and a condemnation of Western economic policies that must be prevented from so-called poisoning their society. Pyongyang further lambasted Seoul's "sunshine policy"—South Korean President Kim Dae Jung's policy of engagement with the North—as a blatant attempt to absorb North Korea.

Mr. Speaker, this Member also would note that the mid-June, North Korea-South Korea naval stand-off in the Yellow Sea escalated to an armed confrontation, reportedly provoked by North Korean ships that violated the demarcation line. Pyongyang subsequently threatened to cancel long-postponed talks with the South, and agreed to sit down only after a final shipment of humanitarian aid arrived in North Korea. This was the last shipment of $50 million in fertilizer aid that Seoul had agreed to provide in exchange for these talks.

The potential challenges for the U.S. and the Asia-Pacific region posed by recent North Korean activities highlight the need to remain very wary of the North's intentions and actions, despite the initial results of the Kumchang-ni expeditious withdraw and its Perry missions. In some ways, the results of these missions raise more questions and concerns than they answered. For example, it is no real surprise that the inspection team found no evidence linking the underground site at Kumchang-ni to North Korea's nuclear weapons program. If this evidence had existed, it is obvious that the United States never would have been permitted to inspect that facility.

In addition, this Member's concern about the possibility of a covert North Korean nuclear development program are exacerbated by press reports that the North is not cooperating sufficiently with the IAEA regarding reactor parts that are missing from Yongbyon, a subject which is covered by the Framework Agreement. More worrisome, however, are reports that Pyongyang has been trying to obtain items related to uranium enrichment. This material would help North Korea develop nuclear weapons without violating the Framework Agreement. Lastly, accentuating this list of concerns is the genuine difficulty we have in monitoring North Korean activities in that, the most closed society on earth.

Mr. Speaker, North Korea's continuing provocations demonstrate how important it is for the administration to clearly and, I emphasize, expeditiously lay out for Congress its policy proposal for North Korea. North Korea's behavior certainly seems to reflect a leadership that still has little intention of working constructively with the U.S. and our regional allies. North Korea's leadership appears to remain committed to its policy of orchestrating crises as a means of extorting financial and humanitarian assistance. If this is the case, forthcoming Clinton administration policy proposals that derive principally from the perceptions of the inspection team and Dr. Perry in may leave unanswered the particularly thorny policy question of how to deal with a truculent, mercurial, and menacing North Korea—one that continues to use posturing and threats to extract resources and other concessions while offering nothing meaningful in return.

Mr. Speaker, relations with North Korea are highly problematic and precarious. A policy failure on our part for the Korean Peninsula would put tens of thousands of American troops and the South Korean people at risk. Misjudging our adversary could result in virtually any Americans on the continent being vulnerable to North Korean ballistic missile attack. The administration has a responsibility to extensively and routinely consult with Congress, particularly on a threat of this magnitude, and this body has both the responsibility and right to act as a partner in the formulation of North Korean policy. This body should have further dialog with, and a road map from, the Clinton administration that clearly outlines the benefits that would be extended to Pyongyang for working in earnest with the United States, the conditions that the North must meet to obtain these benefits, and the potential consequences of remaining intractable. We also should work to ensure that any administration plan is backed by both United States willingness and capability to undertake the tough measures to bolster our national security that North Korea appears to understand.

Pyongyang subsequently threatened to cancel the long postponed talks with the south. That is not a good start to a more constructive path.

I urge my colleagues to watch this issue very carefully and to work with the administration, demanding a full report on progress on the Dr. Perry mission.

TRIBUTE TO DR. MIDDLETON H. LAMBRIGHT, JR., OF CLEVELAND, OHIO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 14, 1999, the Eleventh Congressional District and the Nation lost a medical pioneer and giant, Dr. Middleton H. Lambright, Jr., who was born in 1908, at the dawn of the 20th century, in Kansas City, Missouri. His father, Middleton Sr., was not only a medical doctor, but was a man of vision and hope for his children. Seeking greater opportunities for his son and daughter, Dr. Lambright moved to Cleveland, Ohio, at the end of World War I, when Middleton H. Lambright, Jr., was 12 years old.

Young Middleton was also interested in medicine. From the time he was very small his father had permitted him to ride with him when he made house calls, visit the hospital and spend time in his office browsing through medical literature. Very early in his life, Middleton was given the opportunity to understand the meaning of success, duty, and commitment. His father was his example of an educated, successful black man fulfilling his dream of giving service to others through his medical practice.

The son wanted to follow in his father's footsteps. Middie, as he was nicknamed, graduated from Glenville High School of the Cleveland Public Schools. He attend two prestigious historically black universities, Morehouse College and Lincoln University, before completing requirements at the Western Reserve University.

In 1934, he entered Meharry Medical College. During his 4 years there, he became interested in the field of surgery and whenever possible spent time in the emergency traumatic service, on the wards, and in operating rooms. He was privileged to have professors and lifetime friends, several famous surgeons: Dr. John Hale, Matthew Walker, and Joseph L.B. Forrester.

After graduating in 1938, he sought and was successful in an effort to receive an internship at Cleveland City Hospital. Following his surgical residency, he was appointed assistant clinical professor of surgery in the Department of Medicine at Western Reserve School of Medicine. This position entitled him to hospital privileges at University Hospitals and Mt. Sinai Hospital.

He became the first black physician to receive a full staff appointment in any hospital in Cleveland, Ohio. He continued to fill his dreams by moving into the office with his father where he built a general and thoracic surgical practice while continuing as a visiting surgeon at University Hospitals. In ensuing years, he became involved in numerous activities, was elected President of the American Academy of Medicine in Cleveland in 1964. He became only the second African-American to head a local affiliate of the American Medical Association. He also worked with his father to found Forest City Hospital which enabled other African-American doctors to head up medical departments throughout the hospital.

He believed in taking chances and seeking new opportunities. In 1971, he was offered and accepted a position as Dean and Associate Professor of Surgery in the College of Medicine at the Medical University of South Carolina. He was quoted as saying: My father would have been extremely pleased to know that his son had been invited to join the staff and faculty of an institution he could not have hoped to enter in any capacity. He was speaking to the racial segregation in the State of South Carolina.

After more than 25 years of practice, Dr. Lambright returned to Cleveland and entered his third career as the vice president of medical affairs for Blue Cross and Blue Shield. Here was a man who had a dream and who had his materialized and then had been granted the opportunity to expand the use of his success in many avenues. He believed that a man so blessed had a duty to his fellow man.

Dr. Lambright might well have been guided by the words of Thomas Paine: The duty of man is plain and simple and consists of but two points, his duty to God, which every man must fill, and with respect to his neighbor, to do as he would be done by.

His list of medical staff appointments would equal the list of several physicians combined, and included there is appointments to numerous hospitals in the city of Cleveland. He shared his knowledge and experience with young students eager to join his honored profession, serving as an instructor and clinical assistant professor at Case Western Reserve.

Involved in numerous community activities, he was a trustee, grand jury foreman, a trustee of the American Red Cross. Here indeed was a man who dared to dream, who lived his dreams, and shared his vision. Anthropologist Margaret Mead "measured success in terms of the contributions that an individual makes to his or her human beings." Booker T. Washington said "success is to be measured not so much by the position that one has reached in life as by the obstacles which he has overcome while trying to succeed." By either measure, Dr. Middleton H. Lambright, Jr., was a successful man.

On behalf of the citizens of the Eleventh Congressional District of Ohio, I express gratitude to this outstanding citizen of Ohio for his life and service and extend my condolences to his family and friends.

DR. MIDDLETON LAMBRIGHT, OVERCAME
RACIAL BARRIERS

(By Richard M. Peery)

EUCLID—Dr. Middleton H. "Middie" Lambright Jr. was a pioneer who broke barriers of racial discrimination throughout his career.

He was the first black doctor to attain full hospital privileges in Cleveland when he was admitted to the staffs of University and Mt. Sinai hospitals.

He worked with his father to found Forest City Hospital, enabling black doctors to head medical departments.

He was the second in the nation to head a local affiliate of the American Medical Association when he became president of the Cleveland Academy of Medicine in 1964.

When he left Cleveland in 1972 to become assistant dean of the Medical College of South Carolina, he was welcomed to the state by Sen. Strom Thurmond, who had been one of the leading defenders of racial segregation in the nation.

Dr. Lambright returned to Cleveland in 1984 to serve as a vice president of Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Ohio. He retired four years later.

Dr. Lambright died Monday at his home in Euclid. He was 90.

He was born in Kansas City, Mo. When he was 12, his father moved the family to Cleveland so his children would not be subjected to segregated education. Dr. Lambright graduated from Glenville High School.

He attended Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, but his graduation was delayed while he recovered from tuberculosis. He eventually received a degree from Western Reserve University in 1934. He decided to specialize in surgery while he was a student at Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tenn., where he graduated in 1938.

Dr. Lambright completed his internship at City Hospital, now MetroHealth Medical Center, and was serving a surgical residency there when World War II broke out. Although fellow residents joined the Lakeside Medical Unit that served under Gen. Douglas MacArthur in the Pacific, Dr. Lambright was not allowed to go with them because of the racial segregation in the military. Because the Army's only black medical training unit was full, he remained at City Hospital throughout the war.

Dr. Lambright became an assistant professor of surgery at Case Western Reserve University and chief of surgery at Forest City Hospital. He was medical adviser for The Plain Dealer Golden Gloves tournaments and medical director for the Cleveland Boxing and Wrestling Commission.

In addition to his memberships in numerous professional organizations, Dr. Lambright found time for civic activities. He served on the original trustee board for Cleveland State University. He was also a trustee of several local organizations, including the Automobile Association, Growth Association, United Appeal, American Cancer Society, Red Cross, Welfare Federation, Urban League, Cedar YMCA and Barons Hockey Club.

He was appointed Cuyahoga County grand jury foreman in 1965.

After he returned to Cleveland from South Carolina, he was a trustee of the Cleveland Scholarship Program.

He was a member of Alpha Omega Alpha Honor Medical Society and Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

Dr. Lambright is survived by his wife, Willie Callahan Lambright of Greensboro, N.C.; a sister, Elizabeth B. of Euclid; and a granddaughter, Lodi of Providence, R.I.

Services will be a 11 a.m. June 26 at the Mausoleum of Lake View Cemetery, 12316 Euclid Ave., Cleveland.

Arrangements are by the E.F. Boyd & Son Funeral Home of Cleveland.

Memorial donations may be made to the CWRU/Forest City Hospital Endowment Fund, Bolton School of Nursing, 10900 Euclid Ave., Cleveland 44106-4904; or to Meharry Medical College, Division of Institutional Advancement, 1005 D.B. Blvd., Nashville, Tenn. 37208.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PETERSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. PETERSON of Pennsylvania addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

INTRODUCTION OF THE TRANSITION TO TEACHING ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROEMER. It has been said, Mr. Speaker, that as education goes, so goes America. Whether we are talking to a labor union in South Bend, Indiana, or a small business in Elkhart, Indiana, and with an unemployment rate of about 3 percent, everybody is saying the same thing across our State, that we need to work together in the United States Congress to improve education, not just simply improve it, but to creatively and boldly improve education for every single one of our Nation's children.

Now the new Democrat coalition, which I helped start and found, has taken the approach that we need to do a host of creative and bold new things. Certainly we all agree that parental involvement and community concern is the Number one issue, and in addition to that we need more charter schools and public school choice. This was a bill that I wrote and drafted with new Democrat help and with the help of Mr. Riggs from California, and we passed this bill in 1997. This is a bipartisan bill to provide more public choice for all our Nation's children and parents.

Secondly, we need more teachers, not just more of them, but better quality of teachers to compliment and supplement the number of teachers that are working so hard in America today, and my good friend from Florida (Mr. DAVIS) and I have introduced a bill called Transition to Teaching Act that will boldly improve on the Troops to Teachers bill to try to build relationships with the private companies and foundations to help transition people from their first career, as maybe a businessman or a businesswoman, somebody in science, somebody as a police officer or a fireman, and transition them into a second career of teaching. This is a dream for many people when they are in their 40s or 50s or 60s, to enter the teaching profession, and my colleague from Florida (Mr. DAVIS) and I will introduce this bill on Thursday, the Transition to Teaching Act.

Thirdly, we need technology. The E-rate, which I would say the E stands for equality or education, the E-rate needs to make sure that we win the battle of connecting up our schools and libraries to this exciting new technology of the Internet. It is not the answer, the panacea, to all our Nation's questions of research, but it does provide us some interesting opportunities for helping with new curriculum, helping develop role models for new teachers, helping share information from one classroom to another. The E-rate is the battle of the new century to make sure that all of our Nation's children in the inner city, in the rural communities which I represent in Indiana, that they all have access to get to this technology and that our teachers, that our teachers are equipped with the sufficient skills to learn this and teach it and convey it to our children.

Fourthly, when we just succeeded on this, and I worked closely with my good friend from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), a Republican, on the education flexibility bill, we will give our local communities additional waivers from Federal and State regulations if they attach more success to that student, that student that gets better scores and graduates from year to year and out of high school into college.

That education flexibility is directly tied to the success of the student and not to more and more red tape, regulations, and requirements. And, Mr. Speaker, we need to do more. We need to look at bolder and newer and more creative ideas, teacher academies set up with our universities and colleges. We need to look at preschool initiatives when we are hearing that our children are learning more and more at earlier and earlier ages and they are capable of more and more.

We need to look at helping provide the resources to our local communities to stop social promotion. It does not do our children any good to be promoted from grade to grade when they cannot provide, they cannot read, they cannot provide themselves with the opportunity to learn more about geography and math and science.

So, Mr. Speaker, as paraphrasing Abraham Lincoln in conclusion, Abraham Lincoln talked about making sure that we all have the opportunities not to guarantee that we will all finish the race of life at the same time. No, nobody can guarantee that, but at least we get the opportunity for an equal start in life, and that comes back to education.

Let us work together across the aisle, Democrat and Republican, for creative bold new reforms in education as the new Democratic coalition has sought to do.

WHAT WE WOULD BE DOING BY AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION TO MAKE IT ILLEGAL TO DESECRATE THE AMERICAN FLAG

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we have on our schedule the debate and the vote on a constitutional amendment, the amendment that would make the desecration of the flag illegal. Many who support this amendment imply that those of us who oppose it for some reason might be unpatriotic. That, of course, is not true.

I would like to call attention to my fellow colleagues just exactly what I see us doing by amending the Constitution.

The very first thing that Communist China did after it took over Hong Kong was to pass legislation to make sure that it was illegal to desecrate the Chinese flag. Now let me say that one time again. As soon as Red China took over Hong Kong, that was the very first thing they did. One of the first pieces of legislation was to make sure that the people of Hong Kong knew it was illegal to do anything to desecrate the Chinese flag.

Now another interesting thing about the Chinese and their flag is that we monitor human rights in China. As a matter of fact, the State Department is required to come before the House and the Senate and report to us about the violations of human rights in China. The purpose is to find out whether or not they qualify for full trade with us, and the argument comes up every year. Some say, well, they violate civil rights and human rights all the time; therefore, we should not be trading with Red China, which is an argument that can be presented.

But in this report that came out in April to summarize last year, our government lists as a violation of human rights that we are holding them accountable for that we want to use against them so that we do not trade with them is the fact that two individuals last year were arrested because they desecrated the Communist Chinese flag.

I think that is pretty important. We should think about that. First, the Chinese Government makes it illegal to desecrate a flag in Hong Kong, and then they arrest somebody and they convict them, and they want to hold it against them and say we do not want to give them Most Favored Nation status because they are violating somebody's human rights.

Mr. Speaker, my point is obviously that why do we want to emulate them? There are other countries around the world that have similar laws: Iraq, Cuba, Haiti, Sudan; they all have laws against desecration of the flag. But in this country we have not had this. We have never put it in the Constitution. This debate would dumbfound our Founders to think that we were contemplating such an amendment to the Constitution.

We have existed now for 212 years since the passage of our Constitution, and we have not had laws like this, but all of a sudden we feel compelled. What is the compulsion? Do we see on the nightly news Americans defying our flag and defying our principles of liberty? I cannot recall the last time I saw on television an American citizen burning an American flag or desecrating our flag. So all of a sudden now we decide it is a crisis of such magnitude that we have to amend the Constitution; at the same time, challenging the principles of freedom of expression.

There is one State in this country that has a law which they have the right to, a law against desecration of the flag. And the flag police went to a house to find out what was going on because they were flying their flag upside down. What is going to happen when we try to define "desecrate"? Desecrate is usually something held for religious symbol. Have we decided to take the flag and make it a holy symbol? But will a towel that is in the shape and the color of a flag that somebody is lying on at the beach, is that going to be a reason to call the FBI and call the flag police in to arrest someone for this desecration? Because we do not define the desecration, we just say we will write the laws to police this type of activity.

Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks we have had many Members in this Congress cite the Constitution. As a matter of fact, the Constitution is cited all the time. Sometimes I see it inconsistently cited, because when it pleases one to cite the Constitution, they do; and when it does not, they forget about it. But just recently we have heard the citing of the Constitution quite frequently. In the impeachment hearings: We have to uphold the Constitution, we have to live by our traditions and our ideals. Just last week we were citing the Constitution endlessly over the second amendment which I strongly support, and which I said the same thing. We must uphold the Constitution to defend the second amendment. But all of a sudden here we have decided to change the Constitution that we are in some way going to restrict the freedom of expression.

We say, well, this is bad expression. This is ugly people. These are people that are saying unpopular things, and they are being obnoxious. But, Mr. Speaker, the first amendment and the freedom of expression was never put there for easygoing, nice, conventional, noncontroversial speech. There is no purpose to protect that. Nobody cares. The purpose of freedom of expression is to protect controversy, and if somebody is upset and annoyed, the best thing we can do with people like that is to ignore them. If we pass a constitutional amendment and people are so anti-American that they want to display their anti-Americanism, they will love it. They will get more attention because we will be sending in the Federal flag police to do something about it.

Some will argue the Constitution does not protect freedom of expression; it protects freedom of speech, and this is not speech, this is ugly expression. But the Constitution does, does protect freedom of expression. That is what speech is. What about religion? To express one's religious beliefs. What about one's property, the right to go in and express what one believes? That is what freedom is all about is the freedom of expression and belief. I do not see how this country can become greater by having an amendment written that is in some ways going to curtail the freedom of Americans to express themselves. We have not had it for 212 years, and here we are going to change it.

It is expected that this will be passed overwhelmingly, and in the Senate possibly as well, and then throughout the country, but I do not see this as a positive step. We here in the Congress should think seriously before we pass this amendment.

NEXT STEPS FOR REDUCING GUN VIOLENCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, we first need to go back to the American people and ask them to speak to their representatives. We will work with mothers, fathers, advocates, and I won't stop until 13 children don't die every day.

I will be at front lines as we figure out every strategy open to us to pass real gun violence legislation.

First, we will work with the House and Senate conferees on the Juvenile Justice bill.

Secondly, we don't yet have a date when the conference will be appointed. The Senate first decides to appoint their conferees.

The next big litmus test for the American public to watch is the Motion to Instruct the Conferees. That motion will consist of the House asking the Conference Committee appointees to keep the Senate language on the Gun Show Loophole Amendment.

We will attempt to attach the Gun Show Loophole language to the Treasury Postal bill and Commerce/State/Justice, which both oversee some gun laws. In addition, some of my colleagues have discussed attempting to attach the language to every appropriations bill, including this week's Transportation bill.

I still believe that we need freestanding gun legislation. That's why I will continue to ask that my bill—the Children's Gun Violence Prevention Act—be given a hearing. We will work to include the bill—or pieces of it—in any gun violence legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. JONES of North Carolina addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

GUN SAFETY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DeLauro) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, last week the House had the chance to do the right thing and pass common-sense gun safety legislation, that, in fact, the American people support overwhelmingly. But the House leadership chose instead to cave in to the wishes of the NRA, the National Rifle Association. It was outrageous. House leaders actually chose to respond to the tragedy at Littleton by trying to weaken gun safety laws.

Never before have I seen the will of the American people so totally ignored.

The House last week failed to take reasonable and needed action to reverse the tide of youth violence, but that will not and must not be the end of the story. The tragic shooting at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colorado, claimed 15 lives and brought sharply into focus the crisis of youth violence afflicting our country.

When 13 children a day die from gunfire, we have a crisis that the Congress of the United States should respond to.

We know that there is no one solution to the challenge of youth violence. We need to encourage stronger relationships between parents and children. We need to make sure that schools have the resources that they need, resources to reduce class sizes so that students get individual attention, and that teachers can handle and keep a handle on their classes. We need resources for counselors and for mental health professionals, and we need to lessen the negative influence of violence in our media. All of these things we need to do.

But we cannot ignore the fact that angry and troubled youth exact the horrible price that we saw in Littleton only when they can get their hands on dangerous firearms. Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold used firearms that were purchased at a gun show. T.J. Solomon shot his classmates in Conyers, Georgia, after taking guns without child safety locks from his parents' house. Sensible gun safety measures must be a part of a comprehensive approach to youth violence.

Our colleagues in the Senate did the right thing to respond to our country's crisis of youth violence. They passed limited, but needed, measures to keep guns out of the hands of children and criminals. The bill passed by the Senate would close the loophole that allows criminals to buy weapons at gun shows; close the loophole that allows importation of high-capacity ammunition clips, and require that child safety locks be provided when handguns are sold.

The measure passed the other body, by the other body are not radical, and they were passed in a bipartisan way. They will not take away anyone's guns. They will not keep any law-abiding citizens from buying a gun. They will simply put in place a few needed protections to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and children.

This House should have passed these measures last week when we had the chance, but we did not. Why did the House refuse to take such a basic step as to close the gun show loophole? I heard a colleague of mine say that closing the loophole would create too much paperwork, that it would be an inconvenience. Imagine that. An inconvenience. Tell that to the parents of a murdered child. Tell them about paperwork. Tell them about the annoyance of waiting 3 days to buy a gun. Compare the hardship of waiting 3 days to buy a gun to the hardship of endless days of agony and mourning the loss of a murdered child.

This Congress should be ashamed for caring more about reducing paperwork than reducing gun violence.

I am disappointed that the House failed to take steps that we needed to last week, but that is not the end of the story. We are here tonight to make clear that we are determined to see common-sense gun safety legislation passed. The American people deserve no less.

Many Members have strongly supported efforts to keep guns from falling into the wrong hands, and I applaud them for their efforts. Among those who have been the most committed to protecting children from gun violence have been the women in the House of Representatives, and that is not an accident. Women are in tune to the devastating effects that gun violence has on American families and have rightly lead the charge to improve gun safety. We will keep the pressure on House leaders to ensure that effective measures are taken to protect children from violence. House leaders should act quickly to negotiate a compromise that includes the Senate-passed gun safety measures. But if the House leaders once again fail to take a strong stand to keep guns from criminals and kids, then we will keep searching for opportunities to pass the legislation that is called for by the American people.

I call on my Republican colleagues to stand up for gun safety measures. Each time that Congress has passed legislation to keep criminals from getting their hands on weapons, it is because there has been bipartisan support. I am disappointed that a much smaller share of Republicans voted for real gun safety legislation last week than when the House passed the successful Brady law that has blocked hundreds of thousands of gun sales to criminals.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join other members of the Congressional Women's Caucus expressing our disappointment with the gun safety debate of last week. It distresses me both as a mother and as a former County Prosecutor and judge. With the increase in youth violence at schools across America and the countless instances of children killed in gun related accidents, I believe there is a need for increased gun safety.

Parents across America are more concerned about their children's safety after the Columbine incident. We send our children to school to get an education and improve their citizenship, not to be threatened by classmates.

I recognize the fact that legislation restricting the access children have to guns is not the only answer to this epidemic of cultural values. Parents must take a greater responsibility for ensuring children learn right from wrong and how to resolve their problems with others in a non-violent way. Violence should not be a child's first impulse when life does not go the way they expect.

I believe that a combination of greater parental involvement in children's lives coupled with tighter restrictions on access children have to deadly weapons is necessary. As a person matures they learn better control of their emotions, and how to deal with others.

Last week we tried to close the loophole exploited by several known criminals. Unfortunately that initiative was filled with amendments seeking to loosen, not tighten, restrictions on gun purchases. Because of the action taken to weaken the legislation I was unable to support it. I care about our children and families, that is why I took the action I did.

Gun shows have become a haven for criminals and underage gun purchasers as well as those collectors seeking to buy guns. The two young men who attacked their classmates at Columbine High School bought some of the weapons used in that tragedy through a gun show. Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols, the two men convicted of bombing the Oklahoma Federal Building, financed their attack through illegal sales at gun shows.

I do not favor closing gun shows. Rather, I think we need to restrict a person's ability to go to a gun show and avoid the background checks on their purchase. A background check is not an assault on a person's Second Amendment rights. We seek to protect innocent people from the risk of gun violence by criminals and children. The law is clear and right, if you do not pass a background check you cannot legally own a gun.

An issue raised by gun advocates about background checks was the waiting period. The fact is that the majority of safety checks takes no more than a few hours. About 70 percent of these checks goes through immediately. Law enforcement is concerned about those checks that require more time, the minority of background checks. By limiting the time law enforcement has to check a person's record we allow people who are not supposed to own guns to actually buy weapons.

I do not want to prevent law-abiding citizens from seeking a weapon legally for protection, sport, or personal collection from buying a gun. Had we passed the legislation including the amendment offered by Representative DINGELL there would have been 17,000 people allowed to purchase guns who would not have been able to under current law.

I support maintaining the Brady Law background checks in order to prevent criminals and children from buying guns. It is safe to say that those who do not have access to guns and have the will to strike out against others cannot shoot another person. We need to keep it that way.

I am a mother and like all mothers I worry about my son's safety. He should not be at risk from friends who could buy a gun through the loophole in the gun show law. I support true and meaningful gun safety legislation, not taking guns away from law-abiding citizens.

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, let us protect our children. Gun violence is not a partisan issue. American children deserve no less.

H.R. 659: PROTECTING AMERICA'S TREASURES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon we passed a bill regarding the Paoli and Brandywine Battlefields and the visitors' center at Valley Forge. I had planned to do a 5-minute this afternoon where I touched on some of the points in my comments regarding that bill, regarding a dispute that has arisen in the development regarding Gettysburg National Historical Park.

This past weekend, my son Zachary, who is in fifth grade, was here with the Deer Ridge Elementary School, and among other things they went to Annetiam, and on my way back to Indiana I joined them and then went on up to Gettysburg. We had a 3-hour hearing of the Subcommittee on National Parks at Gettysburg that I sat through and found the debate fascinating. Partly it is the struggles between a community that does not want to see the visitors' center moved away from where many of the retail attractions are and the National Park Service.

I came away from that, A, not fully understanding the community's opposition. While I understood some concern if the visitors' center moves a half mile, in fact as a former retailer, and actually still own and lease out our retail businesses, it looks to me like this would be a huge advantage to every retailer in the town of Gettysburg, because the increased length of stay, the repeat visits, the more things to see and do will lead to more dollars being spent in the community.

But beyond that, this is a national area, and it raises a number of questions that we have to sort through specifically on Gettysburg, which I hope will move ahead rapidly. This report was just released last week on the final general management plan, and I hope we can proceed. It has been held up for some time, and they have gone through all the procedures, but we need to get going on this. Also, some national debates, the differences between a historical park and a National Park.

For example, this is not a wilderness area. One of the things, when we look at the basic purpose of a historical park is that it should look like it did at the time of the historic event, or at least have the feel of that historic event, and one of the problems that we have on some of our battlefields is, quite frankly, they are overgrown.

One of the points that they make in this report on page 44 is that the peach orchard, which was a very critical point in the second day of the battle at Gettysburg, that it is now fashioned for fruit production, and then it does not look like the current peach orchard.

So we look and say, how could the soldiers have used that as any type of shield as the Confederate Army moved towards the Union line?

Furthermore, the woods from McPherson Ridge, now the woods are overgrown, choked with growth, and we cannot experience the battlefield because we cannot visualize how the troops are moving. In many areas there are woods where there should not be, or farms that have been taken out so one cannot see what it was like for the soldiers to go through.

One of the important parts of the experience is to see what it was like at the time the battle was fought. The National Cemetery movement took place, of which Edward Everett and President Lincoln spoke at Gettysburg. When we had the National Cemetery movement those were places of contemplation, where we reflect what happens when people die in battles. But the National Park itself should have the historic integrity of the battlefield. That is one of the key parts of this plan.

Part of that is when we go, and currently at Gettysburg the visitors center sits at a key point in the fishhook of the Union line. So when we try to get a feeling of the battle, there sits the visitors center, there sits a modernist-looking building, which is a very architecturally significant building but nevertheless modern, that has a cyclorama in it, not to mention this huge tower going up. We cannot possibly get a feel for what it looked like to General Pickett coming up the hill or on Little Roundtop as you are looking down on the battlefield when you have this huge tower sticking up, and the visitors center and the cyclorama right in the heart where the battle was.

The proposal would move the visitors center and the cyclorama over toward an area where the fighting did not occur. There was fighting to the east of it and fighting to the west of it, but it would be out of the center of the battlefield so we could appreciate it more.

Furthermore, the visitors center has numerous purposes, one of which is interpretation. They need more space. Gettysburg is arguably, certainly in the Civil War, the case could be made it was the most significant battle.

In addition, they have storage and display problems of artifacts and archives which are now in a non-air conditioned area. We pay sometimes hundreds of thousands or more to restore guns, or in fact have withheld restoring these because they are not in air conditioning, not in a place where you would put minor or let alone major artifacts, which we have from both armies in the Gettysburg battle.

Furthermore, support services. There has been a big dispute. The restaurant and gift shop proposals have been scaled back, but one of the fundamental questions here is where do revenues come from and how are we going to fund these parks. I think this is a good plan. I hope this Congress will support it.

(Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri, addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

GUN SAFETY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, last month the United States Senate courageously passed the juvenile justice bill that would begin to close loopholes that too often have resulted in guns getting into the wrong hands.

I am very deeply disappointed that this House was unable to demonstrate similar courage last week. Instead of standing up for what is right, sensible, and what the American people want, the leadership of this House pandered to the narrow interests of the gun lobby and did not even give us the opportunity to vote on the bill passed in our Senate. Instead, they presented us with two separate bills designed to kill gun safety measures in this House.

The American people deserve a better Congress than that. They deserve a Congress that places more importance on human life, more importance on our children's sense of safety in their classroom, and on the parents' peace of mind, instead of pandering to the fringe interests of the gun lobby.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this House barely more than 6 months. When I came here my mission was to serve my district and the American people and to do everything within my power to ensure their safety. Our Constitution and the Congress' primary focus has always included the protection of our citizens safety. Last week's vote betrayed that intent, and even worse, was a great disservice to the American people.

Several Members on the other side of the debate raised concerns about upholding the Constitution's Second Amendment, the right to bear arms. Of course I and others support upholding the Constitution. However, I totally disagree with those who contend that requiring a 3-day background check on firearms buyers at gun shows or that requiring child safety locks on all gun sales is an infringement on peoples second amendment rights. What a bunch of horsefeathers. These modest gun safety measures do not prevent responsible citizens from owning guns. They simply ensure that guns do not end up in the hands of criminals likely to purchase them without adequate background checks and then misuse them.

Let us look at the known facts. In the 5 years the Brady bill has been in operation, that is the one that requires the 3-business-day waiting period for gun purchase, more than 400,000 illegal gun sales, two-thirds of which involve either convicted felons or people with a current felony indictment, were blocked. This is clear evidence that this law works and we are on the right path.

However, we still have much work to do. Vice President GORE recently told the U.S. Conference of Mayors in New Orleans that a new government study show that about two-thirds of all homicides involve the use of a handgun. Also, consider that domestic violence often turns into homicide in many instances where guns are readily available, and that law enforcement officials support gun safety because it saves police officers' lives.

It is no wonder that a recent Pew Research survey found that 65 percent of this Nation believes gun control is more important than the right to bear arms. This battle for sensible gun control is not over. Those of us who believe in closing gun loopholes will continue to fight to tighten our laws and ask for their enforcement.

Two months ago I spoke to hundreds of members of families and friends of murdered victims assembled in Rose Hills Memorial Park to honor their slain loved ones during victims' rights week. I pledged to them that I would work to ensure that we establish laws and programs that will prevent the additional loss of innocent lives, and to strengthen victims' rights.

I intend to keep that pledge. I intend to serve the American people and not special interests. I also intend to uphold the Constitution. Therefore, I proudly pledge to continue to fight and support reasonable gun safety legislation on behalf of America's children and our families.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2084, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 106-196) on the resolution (H. Res. 218) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2084) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Ms. SLAUGHTER addressed the House. Her remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

ADDRESSING AMERICA'S TEACHER SHORTAGE CRISIS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, we are about to have a major problem on our hands in this country. We have more and more children entering in our schools than we have seen in a generation. At the same time, we face a massive retirement as more and more of our teachers begin to reach retirement age.

In fact, we are going to need over 2 million new teachers over the next decade. In my home, Florida, a growth

State, we are going to need over 7,000 teachers just in Hillsborough County, one county that I represent.

Fixing our education system is like a three-legged stool. We have to modernize our schools, we have to build them the right size the first time, we need to reduce class size, especially in the early grades, so we can return control of the classroom back to the teachers, and we need to begin preparing to replenish the ranks of our teaching profession with the very best and brightest we can find.

Along with the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) who spoke earlier this evening, I will be introducing legislation on Thursday that offers one approach to attract more qualified people into our teaching profession. Our bill is referred to as the Transition to Teaching Act. It is modeled after the very successful Troops to Teachers law in this country which has resulted in more than 3,000 retired members of the military choosing to become math, science, and technology teachers since 1974. More than 270 of these men and women alone are now teaching in Florida schools.

The Transition to Teaching Act expands the Troops to Teachers program so that any midlife career professional can consider making a change in the teaching profession, and like the Troops to Teachers program, will qualify for up to a $5,000 grant or stipend to cover the cost of returning to a college or university to complete the coursework necessary to be trained as a teacher and certified as a teacher in the State where they choose to go.

In exchange for that training, we and the taxpayers of our country will expect at least 3 years of teaching, and we have targeted our bill towards those schools that have the highest percentage of students from an impoverished family where we face the greatest challenge in attracting teachers. We will expect the recipients of this grant to spend up to 3 years teaching in one of these schools, to help begin to fill the ranks of our dwindling number of teachers.

Yesterday in my home, Tampa, I met with three highly qualified individuals who formerly served in our military and are using those life experiences to be very successful teachers, Ronald Dyches, Al Greenway, and Karen Billingsley.

Ronald Dyches told me it had always been his dream to be a teacher. When it came time to retire from the military, the Troops to Teachers program was there to help cover some of the costs to pay the bills of going back to school before he could begin to earn a salary as a teacher. He told me it was always his dream to be a teacher, and that grant helped him realize his dream. Now he is doing a terrific job. As a matter of fact, as a veteran he helped design a course on the history of the Vietnam War that is not only being used in his high school, it is being used in other high schools in the Hillsborough County area. He is simply one example of some of the very talented and mature people who have worked in other professions, who can be brought into our schools.

Our bill can help move people from the boardroom to the classroom, from the firehouse to the schoolhouse, from the police station on Main Street to the school on Main Street.

Let us work together to bring more qualified people into our teaching profession. Let us reach out to people who might consider realizing their dream and making that change to a second career in teaching. Let us get together and pass this legislation, and begin to deal with the need to have quality teachers as more and more students are in our schools.

GUN CONTROL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, it was pretty outrageous last week that the Republican leadership had the nerve to offer a watered-down version of the Senate gun safety legislation. It was clear to all that watched and listened that 80 percent of the Republicans were willing to wait until there is more blood on our hands before passing real gun control legislation, legislation that would make it harder for kids to get guns.

But thankfully, 80 percent of the Democrats and 20 percent of the Republicans know that our children should be worrying about hitting their books, not about getting hit by a bullet. They know that our children should see Gunsmoke as an old TV rerun, and not a reality in their daily lives. And they know that our children must be safe in their schools, their neighborhoods, and their homes.

Increased gun safety measures will save the lives of thousands of young people every year. Regardless of our political agendas, we have to put our children first.

Fortunately, last week good sense prevailed and the legislation that would not close the gaping loopholes in our gun laws and would not make our children any safer failed. Mr. Speaker, now we have another opportunity, an opportunity to consider meaningful anti-violence legislation, rather than legislation that sounds helpful but rings hollow. We need commonsense anti-violence legislation, and we need to now.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, some of the most effective programs that we should and could be considering would begin at the preschool level. We know that the early years of a child's life are pivotal in determining their personality, determining their values and their conscience. So we must stop Band-Aid approaches that put guns in the hands of youth and put criminals behind bars after the fact.

Instead, we must do some real crimefighting at the source through effective prevention programs. In other words, let us not do what we have been doing with the staggering amount of money and a staggering lack of success. Let us not lock up people behind bars, never mind where they bought their gun.

Never mind where they bought their gun or never mind what made them so crazy in the first place because today's kids are trying to be older faster, and they do not know how to do it, and they should not have to do it. A lot of them come from homes with only one parent, and a lot of them live in poverty.

Unfortunately, the clear connection between poverty and antisocial behavior continues to be an afterthought. We think we can stumble our way to make sense of security by some puny legislation, by putting people behind iron bars instead of protecting them and preventing them from being in trouble in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, we must address the problem of youth violence in terms of prevention and in terms of effective punishment. We should be implementing solutions based upon what research, what judgments, and what other practitioners have indicated about what is needed to reduce juvenile crime and delinquency.

That is why we must step forward with real solutions. Following the good sense of 80 percent of the House Democrats and 20 percent of the House Republicans, we can strengthen gun control laws, and we can invest in prevention programs so our children will not result in violence to settle their problems.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. VITTER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. FORD addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.)

IOM REPORT ON SILICONE BREAST IMPLANTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GREEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Institute of Medicine released its report on silicone breast implant research. It evaluated past studies on the association between silicone implants and diseases as well as considering the frequency of complications including rupture, the need for additional surgeries, and problems with contraction.

Perhaps the Institute of Medicine's most important directive was to recommend areas of future research concerning silicone breast implants.

The IOM, the Institute of Medicine, report points to the undeniable need for additional scientific research on the long-term outcomes and local complications of silicone breast implants. In fact, the report states these complications occur frequently enough to be a cause for concern and to justify the conclusion that they are the primary safety issue with silicone breast implants.

Although the rate of implant rupture and silicone leakage has not been definitively established, a recent analysis of implant failure conducted by the University of Florida found silicone breast implant rupture at a rate of 30 percent at 5 years, 50 percent at 10 years, and 70 percent at 17 years.

However, in information sent to women considering implants, manufacturers currently are grossly underestimating the rupture rate at 1 percent.

The Institute of Medicine, the IOM, also concluded that the information concerning the nature and relatively high frequency of local complications and reoperations is an essential element of adequate informed consent for women undergoing breast implantation.

Therefore, the IOM recommends the development of national model of informed consent of women undergoing breast implantation to ensure women fully understand the risks associated with silicone implants.

Women have the right to choose to get breast implants, but Congress has the responsibility to make sure that they are fully aware of the risks associated with these products.

For these reasons, I, along with the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON) and nearly 45 cosponsors have introduced H.R. 1323, the Silicone Breast Implant Research and Information Act.

This bill promotes independent research at NIH in order to ensure impartial, scientifically sound studies on silicone breast implants. To date, there have been no National Institutes of Health, NIH, clinical studies of mastectomy patients who have had implants.

With the level of attention and controversy on this issue, supporters of H.R. 1323 believe leadership from NIH is critically important.

Our legislation would also require the FDA to strengthen informed consent procedures in clinical trials and institute better follow-up mechanisms for consumer complaints. Because the FDA has never approved silicone breast implants for the market, it is crucial that women and their doctors have access to accurate information concerning the possible risks.

Finally, the Institute of Medicine, the IOM, recommends additional research to determine safe levels of silicone in the human body. Everyone has some level of silicone in their body. However, there has never been any research to establish a safe level of silicone. How can scientists be expected to determine whether silicone is causing diseases if we do not know what is the safe level?

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to look at H.R. 1323.

JUVENILE DIABETES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to call to the attention of my colleagues and the House to the urgent problem of juvenile diabetes.

Today, I was visited in my office by one of my 9-year-old constituents, Ruth Hendren of Raleigh, North Carolina.

Ruth came to Washington with the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation to lobby Congress to provide needed funds for diabetes research.

We in Congress are used to being lobbied all of the time by high-priced hired guns and other big-time lobbyists who represent any number of special interests in this body.

But when one looks into the eyes of a child, whose daily battle with this terrible disease is truly the embodiment of bravery, one cannot help but be moved.

Diabetes is a chronic, debilitating disease that affects every organ system, every age group, both genders, and all ethnic minorities.

Sixteen million people suffer from diabetes. Eight hundred thousand Americans and children will be diagnosed this year alone. Victims of diabetes, of juvenile diabetes, must endure as many as six injections of insulin a day and eight finger-prick blood glucose tests every day. It would be tough for an adult to do that, but it is especially tough to see a child.

We in Congress need to do what is right on behalf of the victims of juvenile diabetes in every congressional district in the country.

Diabetes is a disease in search of a cure, a problem in search of a solution. Medical research has brought us close to the cure of diabetes.

I call on my colleagues to step up to the plate and support increased funding for the National Institute of Health for diabetes research.

On behalf of Ruth and all of America's victims of diabetes and their families, I trust that Congress will do it this year.

EDUCATION AND SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Speaker, while I am talking on this issue of education and funding, it is important that I cover an issue that is also very important for this Congress to deal with, and that is school construction. It is an urgent problem all across this country.

I want to thank my colleagues in the New Democratic Coalition for their leadership and help in this issue of school construction.

As a former State superintendent of schools in North Carolina, I have been working to help pass a school construction bill since I arrived in this Congress in 1997.

The statistics tell the tale. Today, there are nearly 53 million students in schools in America, more than at any time in our Nation's history. Schools are busting at the seams.

Children find themselves in trailers, gyms, closets, bathrooms, and other make-shift classrooms and gyms and on stages.

Substandard learning environments are unacceptable. We want higher standards for our children in academics and places for our teachers to teach.

If we are to succeed in the next generation and the new millennium, our children must have world-class education; and to have that, we must have quality facilities.

In my district alone, we have places that have grown almost a third since 1990. Wake County, our capital county, will add about 3,500 to 4,500 new students to enrollment rolls every year. That is 3,500 to 4,500 students every year.

The crisis is getting worse. What kind of example do we set for our children when we neglect their schools? Over the next 10 years, more than 1.5 million more public school children will show up at the schoolhouse door. In North Carolina alone, our high schools are projected to grow by 21.4 percent over the next 10 years; and that will be third in growth in the United States.

I have introduced a school bill, School Construction Act, that will provide $7.2 billion in school construction bonds across the United States for our fastest growing school districts.

I am working with the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and the administration, and I will work with anyone else who wants to work to make sure that we have school funds for our children.

Our legislation uses Federal resources to leverage more local financing for schools. This does not take place with local money. It leverages it. Local systems get to make the decisions. We will only provide the avenue to do it. Taxpayers get more bang for their buck, and young people get good education environments, exactly the kind of assistance that local schools need.

The Etheridge School Construction Act now enjoys more than 88 cosponsors in the House and many members of the New Democratic Coalition. I invite others of my colleagues to join me.

My bill has been endorsed by the National Education Association, by the Chief State School Offices, and many other organizations who realize that we must act and we must act now.

I join my colleagues in calling for the congressional leadership in this House to bring up school construction now so that we can act on it and we can have the resources next year.

IMPACT OF ILLEGAL NARCOTICS ON OUR SOCIETY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, it is Tuesday night, and again I rush to the floor to talk about illegal narcotics and its impact upon our society and the responsibility we have as a Congress to deal with probably the most important pressing social issue.

It is interesting to sit here and listen to some of my colleagues, not the last two speakers, but previous speakers who talked about the focus of the tension of this Congress during the last week and last several weeks since Columbine.

The latest solution is, I guess, to control gun show sales and then also putting child safety locks on guns, both remedies that may solve some incidences and crime and the use of firearms. But it is amazing how the people who really, I think, got us into this situation we are into, with some of the disrespect for the law, some of the lack of law and order, some of the lack of discipline in our schools, the liberal court decisions and appointments that have gotten us into this situation where young people do not know right from wrong and where anything goes in our society, they come up with solutions that address a tiny part of the problem.

They will go to the heart and soul of this subject, the child or the young person that is committing that crime. It is interesting.

There were 10,000 murders by guns last year in this country, and there should not be one murder in this Nation by a gun or a knife or an explosive or through any other mayhem.

But, again, the liberal side likes to look at these issues and address a little bit of the symptoms and not really address the root problems.

One of the problems that I continually come to the floor and talk about is the problem of illegal narcotics. Certainly if we looked at the root of violence in this country and crime in this country, there is a direct correlation between crime and illegal narcotics use.

Probably a vast majority of the murders committed in the United States were drug related or the individual involved was involved in some type of substance abuse. While there were 10,000 murdered by guns in this country, there were 14,000 who died from the direct cause of drug-related deaths. That does not get much attention. It is unfortunate that, again, we just address some of the symptoms, we do not address the root problems.

I am here again tonight to talk about a problem that we have in our communities. As I said before in the House, we have a Columbine in our Nation every single day times three with the number of young people that are dying of drug-related deaths. I am not talking totally about the number of suicides, the number of automobile accidents, the other unreported deaths, but more than 14,000 drug-related deaths in the United States that we can trace to this very serious problem in our Nation.

It is interesting, too, that the statistics show that some of the young people involved in violence in our schools and communities, and also involved with weapons, whether they be guns or explosives, also have a drug or substance abuse problem. This one study I will quote, by the Parent Resources and Information on Drugs, called PRID, reported that of high school students who had carried guns to school, 31 percent used cocaine compared to 2 percent of students who had never carried guns to school. The same relationship was found among students in junior high school in the study. The number of gang members, and again we are just zeroing in on one substance, cocaine, who reported using cocaine upon their arrest was 19 percent.

Again, if we start tracing illegal narcotics and substance abuse to our young people, we start looking at the root problem.

Now, we have in our Nation, across the land in jails and prisons and penitentiaries and holding facilities nearly 2 million, 1.8 million, Americans. It is estimated in the hearings that we have conducted both here in Washington and field hearings that we have conducted in our Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources of the Committee on Government Reform, that, in fact, somewhere in the neighborhood of 70 percent of the people behind bars, incarcerated in our prisons and jails, are there because of drug-related offenses. This is a startling statistic.

And, in fact, what is even more startling is the more prisoners who are tested who come into our prisons for illegal narcotics, we find the percentage is increasing every year of drug offenders coming into the system. In fact, even those who are selling drugs are hooked on drugs. Eighty-one percent of the individuals selling drugs tested positive at the time of the arrest, including 56 percent for cocaine and 13 percent of them for heroin.

Again, if we look behind the gun, if we look behind the crime, we see a very serious problem, and that is the problem of illegal narcotics.

Now, some would say, why do we not just let these people out; they are committing harmless crimes, and they should not be incarcerated. We also hear people say, well, most of the people in jail are there because of possession, maybe of marijuana or small amounts of some illegal substance. As chair of the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources, we were able to convene, and I chaired last week, probably one of the first hearings of its type in some years in the Congress. I am not sure even if there had been a previous hearing on the subject. But it was entitled the Pros and Cons of Drug Legalization, Decriminalization and Harm Reduction.

That title was chosen to get people to think and also to have people present before our committee the pros and cons of legalization, because many folks across the land are saying, again, let these folks out of jail, they are there for possession for some minor crime.

Our hearing was very interesting this past week in that we debunked a number of the myths relating to those people who are in prison for a crime. We found, in fact, that they are not there for simple possession. Several studies were reported and are part of that CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but one study that I thought was most interesting, and I pointed this out before, was one conducted in the State of New York that was just completed. It is a study just out from the State Commissioner of Criminal Justice which tells a different story about who is in prison and incarcerated there on drug-related offenses.

In 1996, 87 percent of the 22,000 people in jail in New York for drug crimes were in for selling drugs or intent to sell. Of the 13 percent doing time for possession, 76 percent were arrested for selling drugs or intending to sell. And, actually, some of the final sentences were pleaded down, as they say, to possession. So they were not actually possession.

So here we have a recent study from the State of New York that debunks the theory that people in our jails are there for possession of small amounts of so-called harmless narcotics.

It is interesting that the question also comes before our subcommittee and before the Congress about the tough laws. Are tough laws effective, and do tough laws have any effect on these people who are involved with illegal narcotics? A Dr. Mitchell Rosenthal, head of Phoenix House, a national drug treatment center based in Manhattan, said these tough drug laws have diverted lots of people into treatment who would not have otherwise gone into treatment.

So, again, some of the people who deal with people who are in prisons, people who are involved in illegal narcotics and the treatment for that, they provided testimony to our committee that debunks some of the myths about who is in prison and why they are there.

It was interesting to also have in our panel of witnesses the new Florida State drug czar, Mr. Jim McDonough. He was formerly the Deputy Director of the National Office of Drug Control Policy, and has now been appointed by Governor Bush, Governor Jeb Bush, I do not want to mix him up with the man who is going to be President. In fact, Jeb Bush, our new Governor, created a czar's office and appointed Jim McDonough to head that position.

Jim McDonough testified before us on his viewpoint, and he has a great deal of experience over the years not only at the national level, but dealing with this drug issue. And he said, and let me quote, "Legalizing drugs is a notion to which I am steadfastly opposed. I came to this position after years of observation and study of the nature of drug addiction and its horrific consequences for the addicted, their families and society. The immense costs that drug addiction extract on our Nation were driven home to me during my tenure as Director of Drug Strategy for the White House Office of National Drug Control Policy. My recent experience as the Director of Florida's Office of Drug Control have only served to reinforce my beliefs on the subject."

So we had a number of people testifying that, again, drug legalization does not make much sense, and, in fact, the liberalization policies do not work. And I want to talk about those liberalization policies in just a moment and give some very specific examples which we had in the hearing and I have talked about before.

But, again, we had a wide variety of testimony. I was quite shocked at the testimony of a representative of Cato Institute, a fairly well-respected think tank here in Washington. The executive vice president of Cato testified before our subcommittee that he felt it was time to legalize heroin and cocaine and basically market it like tobacco and alcohol and other regulated products that we have today. Again, though, the bulk of testimony disputed what Mr. Boaz commented in our hearing, and actually the facts just refuted what he was promoting.

It is important that we just look at a couple of facts that were brought out in the hearing. First of all, it is important to note that drugs are harmful, and not because they are illegal. They are illegal and have been made illegal because they are harmful, and we had scientific evidence that supported that fact; in fact, a bibliography that would probably fill the entire CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, this edition anyway, of those who have looked at these illegal narcotics and have shown us exactly what happens to the body and the mind.

What was particularly interesting is some of the scientists produced X-rays of the brain, images of the brain, which showed the effect of methamphetamine on the brain and how the pattern of abuse begins to model some of the serious diseases that we see in brain scans that are done with people who have Parkinson's or Alzheimer's or other diseases of the brain. So these types of disabilities and diseases can be induced by illegal narcotics.

We have made drugs illegal because they are harmful. Increasing the availability of drugs through legalization would dramatically increase the harm to all of our citizens. One of the problems that we would have with legalization is, the main targets and the main problem that we have today, is our young people. If we look at the statistics, the statistics are just mind-boggling as far as use of illegal narcotics among our young people. It has leveled off some in the adult population. But, for example, the teenage use of heroin in the last 6 or 7 years has soared 875 percent in our teenage population. So no one would be harmed more than those that we are trying to protect, and that is our young people.

And the question was raised in our hearing and has been raised, too, in the Congress about the public's feeling on this subject. A 1998 poll of voters conducted by the Family Research Council found that 8 of 10 respondents rejected legalization of drugs like cocaine and heroin. So certainly the testimony provided by Mr. Boaz, or Cato, for legalizing these is opposed by a most recent poll, which states, and these numbers are provided by the Family Research Council, that 80 percent of Americans oppose legalization, and 7 out of the 10 are in very strong opposition. A 1999 Gallup poll found that 69 percent of Americans oppose the legalization of marijuana.

One of the items that our hearing focused on, and one of the reasons for the hearing, was that we have lost some of the battles in some of the States around the country on the question of legalization of marijuana for medical purposes. I plan to conduct additional in-depth hearings on that subject, but it is interesting, and we sort of scratched the surface in our hearings about what has been going on, about the tens of millions of dollars that have been coming in to promote this legalization.

Both our national drug czar, Barry McCaffrey, and others testified that they felt that the efforts to get a foothold on the legalization of what are illegal drugs today is being done through this highly-financed campaign to legalize marijuana for medical use. We will look, as I said, further at that question. But this poll says that 69 percent of Americans even oppose the legalization of marijuana.

Proponents argue that legalization is a cure-all for our Nation's drug problem. However, the facts that were brought out in our hearing show that legalization is not a panacea. In fact, the statistics and facts that were brought forth show that legalization and liberalization, in fact, becomes a poison. Legalization would dramatically expand America's drug dependence, significantly increasing societal costs of drug abuse, and put countless more people's lives at risk, and, again, particularly our young people.

The legalization of drugs in the United States would lead to a disproportionate increase in drug use among our young people. Youth drug use, as I have said, has dramatically increased. And our youth drug use is also driven by additives. When young people perceive drugs as risky and socially unacceptable, our youth drug use drops.

We saw that in the Reagan and Bush administration. We had a President, a First Lady, and others who provided leadership and they started campaigns to "just say no." They started really an anti-narcotics effort, a real war on drugs. And that message really got through. Because drug use went down, down, down. Only since 1993, with this President and this administration, have we seen a reversal in that trend.

Legalization would send a strong message that taking drugs is safe and socially accepted behavior that should be tolerated among peers, and this would also go for children again who are most impressionable and do the most harm again among our young population. Such a normalization would play a major role in softening our youth attitudes, and ultimately I think we would see an even greater increase in drug use among our young people.

By increasing the rates of drug abuse, legalization would exact a tremendous cost on our society. This is another fact that was pointed out in our hearings. In fact, if drugs were legalized, the United States would see a significant increase in the number of drug users, the number of addicts, and the number of people dying from drug-related causes. And I will have a little bit more to point out on a couple of studies that were done in just a moment that confirm that.

While many of these costs would fall first and foremost on the drug user, countless others would also suffer if drugs were legalized. Contrary to what the liberal thought folks and legalizers would have us believe, drug use is not indeed a victimless crime. Legalizers will claim the fact that alcohol and tobacco, both legal substances for adults, cause so much harm to society that we should look at drugs and let drugs follow in their pattern.

According to their logic, we cannot get too much of a bad thing. That analogy is false. Law enforcement experts and prison statistics indicate that drug use is directly or indirectly related to 60 to 80 percent of the crime in the United States. And then, of course, they always point to different models. We talk about European models of Switzerland; and, of course, the most well-known is the Dutch model.

The Dutch adopted a soft approach to some drugs. And while they have adopted a softer approach, they have not legalized drugs. Under the Dutch system, possession and small sales of marijuana have been decriminalized. However, marijuana production and larger sales remain criminal. Drugs such as cocaine and heroin remain illegal.

When the Dutch coffee shops started selling marijuana in small quantities, the use of the drug more than doubled between 1984, when they began this, and 1996; and this is particularly among the young people, 18- to 25-year-olds.

In 1997, there was a 25-percent increase in the number of registered cannabis addicts receiving treatment, as compared to a mere three percent rise in the cases of alcohol use. This is interesting because it shows where they have a liberalization and legalization, they have increased addiction.

During this period, the Netherlands has also experienced a serious problem with other substances of abuse, in particular heroin and other synthetic drugs, which remain illegal. The number of heroin addicts in Holland almost tripled since the liberalization of drug policies was instituted.

Again, it shows that this liberal policy, when they liberalize with illegal narcotics, they pay for it on the other end. In most cases, crime does not dramatically drop off but what, in fact, happens is they create a whole new population of addicts.

Let me just show my colleagues, and we have used this chart before, but this is one of the most telling charts. We brought it in the hearing and I displayed it again in the hearing. This shows Baltimore. In Baltimore, in 1950, the population was over 900,000. In 1996, it was 675,000. In 1950, they had 300 heroin addicts. And these statistics were given to me by our Drug Enforcement Agency.

In 1996, as I said, the population dropped some 300,000. Although the City of Baltimore, which had a liberal policy and liberal leadership, had its heroin addict population rise to 38,985. Now, this is the statistic we had for 1996. In fact, I am told that the figure is closer to 50,000. It is almost really one per 10 in Baltimore.

So not only the Dutch model which we just cited but also the Baltimore model shows us that, as we liberalize, we end up, in fact, with this incredible population of addicts.

Now, and I used this in the hearing, if this model was continued in the United States and we legalized heroin, for example, we could have in the neighborhood of about 25 million heroin addicts in the United States. So it shows again, whether it is the Dutch model or the Baltimore model, that this does not work.

Now, we do pay a big price for all of the use that these illegal narcotics and abuse of illegal narcotics. I try to cite every week some of the latest findings or some of the latest news. I come from the State of Florida. I represent East Central Florida. Florida has been plagued by the toll of illegal narcotics.

This headline was in one of the local papers just within the last few weeks. It says, "Illegal Drug Use Toll Soars." "Drug abuse is the main force in driving up hospital charges," the study indicates. The hospital tab just indicated in this study was $137.5 million in the State of Florida.

Let me read a little bit about what took place and what this study revealed. "A new State study," and again this is in the State of Florida,

Details the high cost of drug abuse to our Floridian hospitals and also to the Florida taxpayers. The hospital costs for medical conditions, including poisoning, overdoses, and heart attacks triggered by drug abuse in the State, reached about $137.5 million in 1997, with cocaine and narcotics ranking as the most destructive. Those costs covered just the hospital charges and do not include doctors' time and other services and other things, such as outpatient care and other problems a patient might incur as a result of drug abuse. In its first drug hospitalization cost study, completed in May, the Agency for Health Care Administration said a total of 39,764 cases with drug abuse diagnosis was reported by Floridian hospitals in 1997, the most recent year of statistics that are available.

It is interesting also about this article, and it is a rather lengthy article and I am only citing part of it here, is that most of those affected in these cases, in fact, 59 percent of those who are hospitalized and incurred this cost were between age 15 and 39, the youngest part of our population again the victims of illegal narcotics.

Additionally, I like to update my colleagues on different articles about what drug abuse and illegal drug trafficking is doing. Earlier this year, "Florida Trend" produced their publication with a cover "High Times Special Report, Florida's Billion-Dollar Drug Business," another indication of the impact of illegal narcotics and drug trafficking in my State.

This article said, "High Times," that is the title, "The illegal drug industry has become a fixture in Florida's economy and nearly as corporate as Microsoft."

Let me just read a little bit. "Central Florida has become a major distribution hub and tested market for methamphetamines and especially for heroin, which killed more Central Floridians last year than homicide."

I have carried to the floor one of our headlines that said just recently that more people, particularly our young people in Central Florida, have died as a result of drug-related deaths than homicide.

This study also has some information by University of Miami Business Professor Robert Gross, who estimates that cocaine traffickers in Florida, including wholesalers and low-level dealers, earn in the neighborhood of $5.4 billion in this illegal trade. And the article goes on and on, in fact it is quite lengthy, telling about the impact of illegal narcotics, the effort to dispose of some of the income, which is all in cash. For every million dollars, it is estimated around 110 pounds of cash has to be laundered. Incredible figures in this drug war. That is in Florida.

Fairly recently a Texas publication, "The Texas Monthly," published a riveting story on "Teenage Wasteland" it is called, and that cited the death and destruction that drugs have brought to Plano, Texas.

I will just quote a little bit of that article. It says, "Now heroin has hit the city hard. There have been 15 fatal heroin overdoses in the past 2 years, nine of them teenagers, all but one younger than 23. They came from good homes, and they had bright futures." And it goes on to details. Another story of another community.

It is not just Florida our hearings have indicated. It is Texas, Minnesota, Iowa, California, the list goes on and on, of areas where we have had incredible problems from the impact of illegal narcotics.

I cited a little bit earlier the Baltimore model and the Dutch model, which were brought up in our hearings and provided as evidence in our hearings relating to legalization. We do know, however, that in fact top policies relating to illegal narcotics do work. There is no more telling evidence than the evidence that is supplied by DEA on the deaths in New York City. These are the decreases in the murder rate in New York City.

If we look back to the early part of this decade, they were averaging over 2,000 deaths in New York City according to this report again by DEA.

The tough policies of the mayor, a former prosecutor, Rudy Giuliani, have brought the latest tally of murders down to 629, a 70 percent decrease in murders in that city. It just shows again that tough enforcement policy does in fact work and is effective in reducing murders, drug abuse and drug-related crimes. There is no question about it. The statistics speak for themselves.

What I would also like to do tonight, in addition to talking about the hearing that we held last week, is talk about a hearing that we are going to hold tomorrow, and that is a hearing on extradition, and it relates to Mexico. As I have pointed out before, we know where the drugs are coming from.

Let me pull up another chart here. This chart shows where heroin is coming into the United States, its origin. Seventy-five percent of the heroin comes from South America. This is a dramatic change over a few years ago, mostly brought about as a result of the Clinton policies to stop drug interdiction, to stop the crop eradication programs, to take the military out of the war on drugs; to basically close down the war on drugs, that decision was made. We now see South America as the source of 75 percent of the heroin. We see smaller amounts, 5 percent from Southeast Asia and Southwest Asia is 6 percent. If we added Mexico in, we are looking at 89 percent of the heroin coming from Mexico, in South America.

The Clinton administration had a very specific policy of not providing assistance, arms, helicopters, resources in any way to Colombia. That is how Colombia got to be the number one producer of cocaine in the past 6 years. It was not even on the chart 6 years ago. The number one producer of heroin in the last 6 years. There was almost zero heroin or opium poppy grown in Colombia 6 years ago. Again, the direct result of this administration's policy was to have that country now become the major producer. That heroin and cocaine are transiting not only directly from Colombia but 60 to 70 percent of the hard drugs coming into the United States are transiting through Mexico. That includes cocaine, heroin and methamphetamines. Mexico has the distinction of being our number one producer of methamphetamines, but it also accounts for 60 to 70 percent of all the hard drugs coming into the United States and probably even a bigger percentage of marijuana.

For that reason, I intend to focus attention tonight, tomorrow and in the future on the problems we have had with Mexico, because in spite of the United States providing incredible trade benefits, financial support to Mexico, Mexico has snubbed its nose at the United States. They have gotten away with allowing this President, this administration, to certify Mexico as fully cooperating, and this administration, this President, have really made a sham of the certification process, because Congress passed a law back in 1986 that said the President must certify annually whether a country is fully cooperating with the United States in order to get foreign aid, trade and financial benefits. That is the law of the land. Now, they have certified Mexico as fully cooperating, in spite of the fact that Mexico, after repeated requests, have not extradited to date one Mexican national who is a major drug trafficker.

Tomorrow, our hearing will focus primarily on the question of Mexico becoming a haven for murderers and drug traffickers. According to testimony before our subcommittee by the Department of Justice recently, as of last month, there are currently about 275 outstanding requests for extradition of Mexican nationals. About 47 of these individuals are in custody in Mexico. Unfortunately, many of these individuals, including the individual we are talking about tomorrow in our hearing, who was convicted of a brutal slaying in southwest Florida of the mother, I believe, of six children, who fled this country and is charged with murder and we have had an extradition request for nearly 2 years, Mexico has ignored those requests, for 275 outstanding extradition requests and the Del Toro request. The Del Toro request again is the focus of our hearing tomorrow, a heinous crime, and after repeated requests this administration still has not extradited that individual. Tomorrow we hope to find out more of the details surrounding this case and put additional pressure on Mexico to act.

Unfortunately, what we have found in just our hearings to date is that the system of justice in Mexico is nearly completely broken, that bribes are paid to judges and to prosecutors, that the system of justice is corrupt and subject to corruption and that many of these individuals who we are seeking extradition of back to the United States to face justice which they fear, these individuals are gaming the system in Mexico. Now, Mr. Del Toro, who is wanted on a charge again of this heinous murder in southwest Florida, is not a Mexican national, he is a United States citizen. He was born in the United States. His parents were born in the United States. And he fled to Mexico and has used Mexico as a cover and again the corrupt Mexican judicial system to avoid prosecution, to avoid coming to the United States through extradition. We will find out why he and others have not been extradited.

In the area of narcotics violation, Mexican narcotics trafficking organizations facilitate the movement of between 50 and 60 percent of the almost 300 metric tons of cocaine consumed in the United States annually. Mexico is now the source, as we saw from the chart, of 14 percent of the heroin seized by law enforcement in this country. Just a few years ago, it was not even on the charts. Now they are becoming a major producer. And Mexico also takes the leading role and wins the Emmy award for being the chief smuggler of methamphetamine and the base ingredient for methamphetamine, as well as marijuana.

What again is a slap in the face to the United States Congress who requested over 2 years in a resolution passed on this floor the extradition of major drug traffickers, to date not one major drug trafficker has been extradited.

Let me just point out a few of those suspects who were most wanted and for whom we have asked for extradition. These will be a few of our most popular individuals tonight.

This is Rafael Caro-Quintero. Mr. Caro-Quintero is a Mexican national and a U.S. fugitive. He is incarcerated in Mexico on drug charges and the U.S. has asked that he be extradited. He has 22 pending U.S. criminal charges against him. His organization was responsible for sending tons of drugs into the United States. If anyone can deliver him to the United States, I think there is a multi-million-dollar award for his capture. We would like him extradited. We would like him to see justice in the United States of America.

Let me also bring up two more suspects we will talk about a little bit tomorrow and tonight. In fact, we have a family routine here. We have Luis and Jesus Amezcua. We have two brothers and a third here. The Amezcua brothers, there are three of them, are the chiefs of one of the world's largest methamphetamine trafficking organizations. Recently, despite overwhelming evidence, all Mexican drug charges have been dismissed. These drug dealers, and again the major identified methamphetamine dealers who are bringing that death and destruction into the United States have had their drug charges dismissed in Mexico. The Amezcuas, I believe two of them, are being held in custody on extradition orders from the United States but to date have not been extradited. Again the Mexican court, making a joke of justice even in their own country, have dropped charges against them. Another major methamphetamine kingpin, their younger brother, Adam, was released from prison in May. A Mexican appellate judge threw out trafficking and other charges against him. So we are also looking for the Amezcua brothers. I will say since we began our harangue against Mexico this year and pressure that we have brought and also legislation that has been introduced by myself, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. McCOLLUM), the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and others that we are going to go after the assets of these major drug kingpins and other assets of some of those organizations that are related to these drug traffickers.

We have succeeded just in the last 2 weeks in getting the extradition of William Brian Martin. He was turned over, I believe, recently at the border. He was wanted on a whole bunch of charges. This individual is an American national. Again we have waited since 1993 for that extradition.

It is my hope through tomorrow's hearing that we can bring a murderer to justice in the United States and that we can shed light on how he has escaped justice and how he has used the Mexican judicial system to avoid extradition. We still have over 40 major Mexican drug traffickers.

Mr. Speaker, I ask to include in the RECORD a list of all of the major drug traffickers with outstanding extradition requests.

The list is as follows:

MAJOR MEXICAN DRUG TRAFFICKERS WITH OUTSTANDING EXTRADITION REQUESTS
(SOURCE: DEA)

Agustin Vasquez-Mendoza
Ramon Arrellano-Felix
Rafael Caro-Quintero
Vincente Carrillio-Fuentes
Miguel Angel Martinez-Martinez
Antonio Reynoso-Gonzalez
Mario Antonio Hernandez-Acosta
Jesus Amezcua-Contreras
Arturo Paez-Martinez
Jaime Ladino-Avila
Jose Gerardo Alvarez-Vasquez
Luis Amezcua-Contreras

Mr. Speaker, again we will continue to bring to the Congress, to the House of Representatives, the problem that we face with illegal narcotics, the problem that we face in dealing with countries like Mexico where we have 60 to 70 percent of the hard drugs trafficking through that country into the United States, now becoming a source country of production and a country that has failed miserably in cooperating with extraditing both murderers and major drug traffickers to the United States. We hope additionally to get assistance from Mexico in signing a maritime agreement which we have requested for 2 years and they have ignored. We hope to get assistance from the Mexicans to aid our DEA agents to defend themselves while in Mexican territory, and there are just a handful of these brave DEA agents in that country. We hope, and we have some reports that Mexico is beginning to install radar in the south, and we hope to hold their feet to the fire because the drugs coming up from Colombia and South America transit through the south of Mexico. Finally, we want to seek the cooperation of Mexico in enforcing laws that they have passed dealing with illegal narcotics trafficking which they have really thumbed their nose at, including Operation Casa Blanca, a U.S. Customs operation where last year our Customs investigators uncovered a plot to launder hundreds of millions of dollars through banks and arrested individuals, indicted individuals, and Mexican officials knew about it and even so Mexico when these indictments and arrests were made threatened to arrest United States Customs officials and other U.S. law enforcement officers. So rather than cooperate fully as the law requires for certification, they have actually thumbed their nose at the United States.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those comments tonight, tomorrow we will hear more about Mexico and how it has become a haven for murderers and for drug traffickers, and we will return to the floor with additional information both to the Congress and the American people on the biggest social problem facing our Nation and the root problem to many of the crimes, the murders, the gun offenses that we see in this Nation. That is the problem of illegal narcotics.

EVENTS IN THE BALKANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) is recognized for 30 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, before I get into tonight's discussion, I want to first compliment my good friend from Florida (Mr. MICA) for his weekly reminder to this body and to the Nation about the evils of drugs and the drug war and the challenges that we still face as a Nation.

As a former prosecutor in western Wisconsin and special prosecutor in the State of Wisconsin, I saw up front and close and personal the evil effects that drugs have, not only in our society, but with individuals and the families and the communities in which the problem persists. And I look forward to working in the coming weeks and for the rest of this session with my friend from Florida to develop a comprehensive and commonsense policy in order to tackle this scourge in American society. But I do compliment him for all the wonderful work that he has done in committee and for this body for the sake of the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, what I like to do right now is kind of change gears a little bit. I rise today along with a few other colleagues who I anticipate will be joining me in a little bit to talk for a while about the events in the Balkans and, more specifically, our involvement in Kosovo. The events have been progressing quite rapidly over the last week and a half or so after Milosevic had finally agreed to capitulate.

Now I think now is a good opportunity for us to kind of stand back and take a look at the past, present conditions in the Balkans area and also the vision of the future in that area, as tenuous as it may be.

There is no question that, thus far, things seem to be progressing according to plan, knock on wood, but it is going to be a very difficult task of implementing the peace, of securing it. Now that we have won the conflict, it is vitally important that we do everything possible not to lose the war, and that is the next great challenge that we face as a Nation, as the leader of the NATO alliance for the sake of the European continent.

But let us give credit where credit is due tonight, Mr. Speaker, starting with the troops in the area. I had the opportunity, the privilege really, a few short weeks ago to be a part of a small congressional delegation of 10 other Members who headed over to the Balkans on a fact-finding mission.

It was really a threefold purpose for going over there. One was to meet with military command, the leadership there, and get an assessment from them.

Another reason for going was to meet with the troops in the field, make sure that everything that they needed in order to carry out their mission as safely and efficiently as possible was being delivered to them.

Finally, a chance to get into the refugee camps, meet with the Kosovar refugees, families, hear from them firsthand what terror and horror they had just been put through in Kosovo, the fortunate ones that were able to successfully leave the country.

It was a fascinating trip, it was incredibly emotional and very moving listening to the firsthand accounts of the innocent civilians who were forced out of the country and what had just taken place inside their villages and cities.

All of them had their own horror story to tell. Each of them explained in their own terms the terror that they had just survived. I did not encounter one person in those refugee camps, Mr. Speaker, who was not affected by the loss of a loved one, either someone who they had personally witnessed executed before their very eyes or who had fled, many of them up into the mountains to avoid the Serb forces.

And you cannot help but go to a region and experience what I think we did as a delegation and not be moved and profoundly affected by what has taken place in the Balkans.

But I do believe that was the right policy for the right reason at the right time, the NATO campaign against Milosevic. I also believe that credit should go to the 19 democratic nations of NATO who stood united and through their perseverance finally prevailed in getting Milosevic to capitulate and to end the atrocities in Kosovo.

I think it was a real show of determination and the very credibility of NATO and the U.S. leadership on the European continent, and as the leader of NATO was very much on the line.

But this policy has been difficult to explain to the folks back home in Wisconsin. I think by and large the people who I have had the opportunity to talk to about this and to elicit their opinions have felt very conflicted about our role in the Balkans and with the NATO air campaign.

They see, as everyone else does in the country, the horror image that has been reported on TV, and they have heard the stories, the plight of the Kosovar families, the ethnic cleansing and the atrocities that have taken place in Kosovo, and I think the natural reaction for most Americans is to try to do something to prevent that.

But on the other hand there was also the tug, the concern, that this could turn into a quagmire. It may be our next Vietnam in areas so far away that we knew very little about as far as the history and the peoples and the origins of the conflicts, the politics of the situation, the socioeconomic conditions in the Balkans, that people also felt conflicted about our active and leadership role in this campaign.

And so you get a lot of conflicting advice, as you can imagine, from folks back home. I have been certainly severely criticized in the press, letters to the editor, people on the street who come up to me who vehemently disagree with my support for the NATO campaign and my belief that it was in the United States' interests to be involved on the European continent again.

But hopefully what we have today is the dawn of the new era of peace, a lasting peace in the region, a peace that is going to finally see the removal of Slobodan Milosevic from power in Serbia, a peace that will see real democratic reform take place within the Balkan countries and a peace that will see the eventual inclusion of these Balkan nations into the community of nations in Europe as full-fledged partners in the European Union and perhaps even some day members of the NATO alliance itself.

Is this an illusion or a pipe dream? I really do not think so. But I think first and foremost the credit really does belong to those young men and women in American uniform who are being asked yet again in the 20th century to try to restore some peace and stability on a conflict-torn region called the European continent and to try to restore some humanity to the European continent.

I think the concern was as the 20th century entered in very bloody internecine warfare primarily in this region. The beginning of the 20th century that we were going to exit the 20th century under the same type of conditions, and I think today is a day where Americans can stand tall and feel proud about the role that the United States of America played in trying to help innocent civilians to end the atrocities that were being committed in Kosovo by Milosevic's forces and to try to bring some peace and stability to this continent, a continent that we have paid dearly with our own blood during the first half of the 20th century.

It was, after all, even though the United States was the first half of the century pursuing a policy of disengagement from Europe of isolationism, it was a single shot that rang out on the streets of Sarajevo, the capital of Yugoslavia, back in 1914 that provided the spark that led to the blaze that eventually engulfed all of Europe and ultimately drew the United States, reluctantly albeit, into the First World War at a tremendous cost and sacrifice to our Nation with the loss of young lives that were spilled on the continent of Europe.

And then in the shadow of the First World War and all of the conditions that were created in trying to form a lasting peace, we ultimately saw a Second World War just two short decades after the first one on the continent. But again, between the inter-war periods, the United States and the people in this country felt that it was not in our interest to be actively involved in Europe, that we can retreat across the ocean again, pursue a policy of splendid isolationism, hope that the countries in Europe can settle their differences themselves and that things would just work out on their own, but unfortunately the efforts of Europe proved otherwise.

In fact, public opinion polling before the bombing of Pearl Harbor; yes, they did do some polling back then, too; revealed that the overwhelming majority of Americans felt that the problems on the European continent were not our problems, that it was something we should avoid at all costs, that we had our own issues and concerns to deal with within the continental United States and that the last thing we wanted to do was get dragged into the European conflict again.

And we tried pursuing that policy of splendid isolationism while at the same time FDR was trying to move the country into the realization that, no, we do have vital interests at stake regarding the stability and the peace in Europe. But it did take the bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, to arouse this Nation into action and again draw us into the Second World War as reluctant participants.

And the cost of those two world wars were tremendous. Over 500,000 young American lives lost during those two conflicts, over a million casualties we suffered. And at the end of the Second World War we made a policy change in the country, that never again should it be viewed in our interests to stand back and to let events go unheeded in Europe, that it was in our interests to remain engaged and to pursue a policy of peace and stability and promoting democratic reforms throughout the continent.

That is what gave rise, after all, to the Marshall Plan. We literally rebuilt Europe and Japan from the ashes of conflict from the Second World War, and it ultimately gave rise to the NATO alliance that has had U.S. leadership for the past 50 or so years.

And who can argue with the success of NATO? The last 50 years in Europe have been some of the most peaceful years that the continent has ever experienced, and I would submit it is in a large measure due to the United States participation, active involvement, with not only economic conditions in Europe, but the NATO military alliance, to provide some stability and to give these countries a chance to experience real democracy, real freedom, and liberties that we unfortunately at times take for granted in the United States.

But none of this could have been done without the tremendous commitment and professionalism exhibited by our U.S. troops throughout Europe, but especially in this conflict. It is truly amazing for me to have gone over there and to have met with many of the troops who are involved in carrying out their mission whether it was the logistical support base at Ramstein Air Force Base in Germany. And we met with the troops there providing assistance to the campaign or meeting with the pilots in Aviano, Italy, the F-15, the F-16 pilots carrying out the sortie missions over Kosovo, even spending half a day in Tirana, Albania, with Task Force Hawk, the Apache helicopter task force that was deployed, and they were ultimately employed in the Kosovo conflict.

But just meeting with these young men and women was truly inspiring, seeing their professionalism, the dedication, the commitment that they exhibited. No other Nation in the world, Mr. Speaker, could have done what the United States did do in this situation within a very short period of time, being able to deploy a force of that magnitude, deployed even in Albania in a short time period in which it was deployed and still dealing with the humanitarian catastrophe, the likes of which the continent has not seen since the Second World War. It was truly an amazing feat that I think America can be proud of given our logistical capabilities that do exist on the European continent.

And I just wish all Americans had the opportunity that I and the rest of my colleagues who went on that mission over to the Balkans to see and to meet these troops as I did. These are the young men and women who are day and night guarding the fence of freedom, protecting our security and maintaining our interests across the globe.

They are the best trained, the best capable military that the world has ever seen. I think they proved that in the Kosovo conflict.

But it has been a difficult policy to explain and to justify U.S. interests in the Balkans. However, I believe it was the right policy for the right reasons. If we are going to learn any lessons from the Second World War, it is that the United States should not stand idly by when we do have the capability to do something about it and watch the innocent slaughter of civilians in Europe, and in the Balkans in this instance.

It was not my first trip to the Balkans. I went over about a year ago and visited the NATO peacekeeping mission in Bosnia, a policy I believe has been extremely successful since the end of the hostilities in that country back in 1996. I also had a chance to visit the former Yugoslavian Republic back in 1990 as a student, Mr. Speaker, with a backpack on my back, traveling by myself throughout the region, when I, as a student of history, who loved to read a lot about European history in particular, saw the war clouds on the horizon after Milosevic came to power in 1989. I wanted to take that opportunity to get into that country quickly and meet the people throughout Yugoslavia, and other students, and get their reaction and their impression as to whether war was imminent and inevitable.

It was striking back then that those who I met were not convinced that this was necessarily and inevitably going to lead to warfare. In fact, many of them believed that it would have been catastrophic for those different ethnic groups to turn on one another. They were working incredibly hard back then to make economic progress, to have an integrated Yugoslavian area that could eventually be included into the European Union and the rest of the Western European continent for the benefits of trade and the economy. And they felt that it was senseless for them to turn on one another and to begin a conflict and to subject the region to war. But 6 short months after my visit to the region, sure enough, that is when the first fighting broke loose.

I think all too often when we get involved in these types of military conflicts across the globe, but here in particular, we tend to focus on the short term and on the specifics of the immediate situation. I think it is helpful from time to time to step back and get a historical perspective as far as what is happening around the countries and where all of this is leading. I think with that historical perspective, we have a lot of reason to be optimistic that we can see a lasting peace in the Balkans, a peace that will lead to democratic reforms and to economic integration into that region.

Let me just go down to the well in order to illustrate a point of what I am trying to get at. It is really a remarkable phenomenon that we have seen take place across Europe in the last decade or so. I think the historical trends that have been sweeping across Europe over the last 10 years are working in our favor when it comes to managing a lasting peace and an optimistic vision for the Balkans.

With that, let me descend into the well.

Mr. Speaker, what I put up here a little bit earlier is a map of Europe. The title of it is European Transition to Democratic Government, 1989-1999. Why is 1989 a significant date? Well, that is when the Berlin Wall fell, and that is when the collapse of communism and the Soviet Union occurred. That is when the Communist nations throughout Europe started to fall one right after another. I had a chance to visit Central Europe a few short months after the collapse of the Communist governments.

But what this map depicts, the blue area showing the countries in Western Europe show what nations had democratic governments before 1989, before the collapse of communism. We recognize the boot-shaped Italy, Spain, Great Britain, Norway, Sweden, but we can see how limited this map is before 1989 when it came to democratic governments that were already existing on the continent of Europe. But after the collapse of the Berlin Wall and the Communist regimes, the purple area demonstrates how democracy has since swept Europe and what countries now have been included into the fold of democratic nations. All of central Europe, including East Germany which is now a part of Germany; all of the former Soviet Union.

What the red portions of this map demonstrate are those nations that are still lagging behind in this great historical sweep of Europe, that are still dominated by authoritarian and dictatorial regimes, one of which is still right here in the heart of central Europe, Belarus; and the other happens to be the Yugoslav Republic under the Milosevic regime down here in the Balkans.

I think what this demonstrates all too well is that Milosevic in this situation is isolated. He is an island. He is surrounded by emerging democracies. I mean, who amongst us could have predicted that in 10 short years some of the most repressive Communist regimes in central Europe would today be flourishing democracies and full members of the European Union, and even members of the NATO Alliance itself, within 10 short years. That was unimaginable pre-1989. But, in fact, that has been the historical trend right now. It is only so long when one Communist dictator can withstand the force of historical events.

What we see here is a Serbia that is completely surrounded and isolated by emerging democracies; some that are full-fledged democracies, others that are well on the road to democratic reforms and democratic institutions. I think that, more than anything, gives us hope that it is going to be a matter of time, I think, in my own opinion, a matter of a very short time when Serbia and these Balkan nations are going to institute democratic reforms, when they are going to reject the authoritarian and criminal policies of Slobodan Milosevic and move to democratic institutions, have democratic elections, and then ultimately change the conditions which would allow their acceptance into the rest of Europe and into the European Union. That, for me, gives me a lot of hope, a lot of promise, really, that what we did in the Balkans, albeit very difficult in the short term, is going to be the right policy in the long term by giving these people a chance of realizing true peace and stability and allowing democratic reform to take place.

I think that is a message that we have not heard all that much of during the course of this conflict in the Balkans, during the NATO air campaign, is that we certainly have time on our side, and that Milosevic is facing irresistible forces throughout the continent of Europe, and that as long as we can continue to maintain the policy in the international community of isolating him, as has been accomplished now through the NATO air campaign, through the International War Crimes Tribunal issuing an indictment against Milosevic as a war criminal, the first time any sitting President of a nation has been indicted for war crimes, and also given the significant event of Russia coming over and accepting the NATO objectives during this campaign and further isolating Milosevic, he is basically left with no friends anymore in the international community.

That is what gives me a lot of hope that what we can see happen in this region is a very successful policy of engagement, leading to democratic reforms and leading to a Balkans area that will be included within the rest of the European community as far as democracy and economic integration is concerned. So I think certainly we have that possibility, we certainly have that capability right now, but the reports, the news stories coming out, at least right now, appears to show that things are working according to plan.

What I would like to do now is yield to my friend, the gentlewoman from Chicago, Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY), who is one of my colleagues who was able to join us on the trip over to the Balkans just a few short weeks ago.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for organizing this intelligent and thoughtful and optimistic discussion, and for allowing me to participate.

From May 20 to May 24, we were both part of a congressional delegation to the Balkans that was led by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR), and due to the persistence really of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON), our delegation was able to get a firsthand picture of the situation in the days before the agreement was signed, a very comprehensive picture of the refugee camps and the troop deployment, and to meet with General Wesley Clarke. It was quite an informative and incredible trip.

The most poignant moment for me and I think for all of us came on Sunday, May 23, when we were at the Kosovo/Macedonia border of Blace when traumatized refugees began streaming, or, more appropriately, staggering, across the border. We were able to talk with them, and what we heard made us literally weep along with them. Stories of guns to the head, a grenade thrown into a family group; being driven from home with 5 minutes' notice; eating grass in the hills; hunger; terror; murder.

In a tent of some 15 women, I would say, and a few dozen children, it was eerily quiet. Those of us who have children know that when we get that many little kids together, it is usually noisy and a lot of energy. It was really silent in there. These women had no idea where their husbands were, and their children, of course, had no idea where their fathers were.

In another tent, a well-dressed man pointed to the wheelbarrow he had used to wheel his frail, elderly mother across the border. He was fine for a while in talking about what happened to his family, but then, when he talked about the wheelbarrow and pointed to his mother who was sitting on a blanket, he broke down. She was comforting him by saying, at least we are still alive. He did not know, however, if the same were true for his grown children.

The day that I came back, there was an e-mail waiting for me from a constituent that said, I quote, "I have serious reservations about your casual use of terms like atrocities, crimes against humanity, genocide." I guess that e-mail kind of hit me at the wrong moment, because after having talked to victims of and witnesses to the terror of the Serbian forces, I felt that these words were exactly appropriate.

And now, of course, we are learning more every day about the extent of the atrocities committed against the ethnic Albanian Kosovars. Estimates of the number dead keep rising. Evidence of torture abounds. Mass graves, rape, burned bodies, human shields, it is really hard to read the accounts.

Then the evening after our return, the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT), who was also part of our delegation, and I cohosted a reception at the Holocaust Museum for our freshmen colleagues. At that event, Miles Lehrman, who is president of the Holocaust Council and a Holocaust survivor said, this is his quote: "It is here," he was talking about the museum, "It is here where you will fully comprehend that the Holocaust did not begin in Auschwitz or in any of the death camps. It began when lawmakers lacked the stamina to speak out against the constantly escalating evils. It is here where it will become clear to you what our role in Kosovo must be. It is here where you will see what can happen to a people who become mesmerized by a political charlatan who professed to simple answers to complex and difficult problems. It is here where you will be able to fortify your inner strengths, to stick to your convictions and speak your mind in your legislative deliberations, even at times when your opinion may not be most popular. It will strengthen your determination to stand alone, if need be, and speak truth to power.”

That was Miles Lehrman, the president of the Holocaust Council.

I often speak of my granddaughter, Isabel, on this floor. She is now 15 months old. I thought about her when I thought about Kosovo and knew that if, when she grew up, she asked me what I did to stop the killing of innocent people, I wanted to tell her that I did the right thing. And when I listened to that brave survivor of the Holocaust, I heard him saying that we did the right thing to stop Milosevic.

But our job is not done yet. It will not be done until those mothers are reunited with their husbands who we hope are still alive; until the man and his mother are home, and the wheelbarrow is used in the garden again; and until our children start playing games of peace and not of war. And until the vision of the gentleman from Wisconsin, his vision of Europe that, with the help of the United States and NATO and the international community, can be a unified Europe working as part of a more unified international community, I think that was the ultimate goal of our mission there, and I hope very much that we can be part of achieving that goal as we move forward.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her comments and participation on this issue, and for traveling with me just a few weeks ago. It really was a moving, very emotional experience, I think, for all of us.

I have never seen a group of representatives, Mr. Speaker, who were quieter or more chagrined than we were when we boarded that bus at Blace, the refugee camp in northern Macedonia, having met with the families the moment they took their first steps out of Kosovo and talking to them, and hearing firsthand accounts of the atrocities and the terror that they were just put through.

Now we read the headlines of the recent days showing that what we feared is in fact materializing; that once NATO troops, the peacekeeping troops, were allowed to go into Kosovo along with the western media, who were specifically excluded during the 78-day air campaign, that the atrocities are even more magnified and even more horrific.

In fact, this headline in the papers a couple of days ago reads “Kosovo Albanians returning in droves,” which is no surprise. When we talked with the families in the camps, they were very eager that once NATO prevailed, that they wanted to get back to their homes, which was a natural reaction.

What was interesting, however, was another reason they gave, for why they felt it was so important to get back to their homes as soon as possible. It was the same that thing that many Albanians and Muslims experienced during the Bosnia conflict just a few short years ago when Serb forces overran their towns. They stripped them of everything that they had, identity, identification papers, documents proving ownership of property.

And when they were eventually allowed to come back and resettle, it was very difficult for them to prove up ownership of their properties and of their homes. They were concerned the same thing was going to happen in Kosovo. In fact, they knew when they were expelled that many of the towns and villages were being laid waste and burned to the ground, but they were eager to get back see what did remain, and to lay claim again to their ownership and to their lands.

But the other subtitle to this article reads, “Serb-led Offensive Took 10,000 Lives, According to British Estimates.” That figure was still higher than what the actual predictions were earlier. In fact, that number is being escalated every day with the revelation of more mass graves and the body counts that are coming with it. It was something that we feared at the time. Since we did not have people inside Kosovo that could give us firsthand accounts, other than the refugees themselves, it was very difficult to predict just the magnitude of the atrocities and the mass executions and mass graves that are now being uncovered.

Sure enough, now that the NATO peacekeeping troops are allowed in they are uncovering mass grave after mass grave, and the number is only going up and up and up. Again, I think our worst fears are being realized. I also believe that but for the NATO campaign, the atrocities would have been much more severe than what we are witnessing today.

There has been some criticism that because of the NATO campaign, it led to the brutality and to the ethnic cleansing that occurred in Kosovo. I happen to disagree with that, given historical indicators and facts. In fact, the policy of oppression within Kosovo itself and even Bosnia really began shortly after Milosevic came to power in 1989.

These were groups, provinces within Yugoslavia that enjoyed a form of self-autonomy during the Tito regime. Tito realized that given the ethnic diversity of the region, it made sense to allow them a form of self-autonomy, to allow them to practice their own religion and culture and have their own language.

But Milosevic came to power by nationalizing the issue and by claiming that Kosovo is Serbia. Immediately when he took power in 1989 he started cracking down on the ethnic Albanians within Kosovo, stripping them of their identity, of their culture and history, and even disallowing the use of their own language.

But the atrocities really started to be stepped up in the early 1998 period when Serb forces started moving in. That is when the negotiations between the West and Milosevic started. It was later in the year at Rambouillet where we were trying to reach a peaceful resolution to what was occurring in Kosovo.

But this is not something that started overnight. This was not a change in NATO policy. In fact, it was a policy that was clearly enunciated back in 1991 and 1992 within the NATO nations themselves, but also within the Bush administration, when President Bush clearly warned Milosevic that if he moved on Kosovo, that NATO would move on him. It was really a continuation of that policy into the Clinton administration and within the NATO alliance that ultimately led to the NATO air strike campaign against Milosevic's forces in Kosovo.

But I think we are going to see in the coming days more and more stories of the atrocities and the brutality that was perpetrated on these people within Kosovo.

Another article I think demonstrates a little bit of the ambivalence that not only the American people were feeling in the course of this campaign, but some of the troops themselves in the area.

It was interesting when I was in Aviano, Italy, talking to a lot of the pilots, asking them their opinion as far as the policy and whether or not this made sense and if it was working, one of the pilots came to me and said, if you could see what we see flying these missions over Kosovo, the lines of refugees streaming out, and you could tell where the line originated from because of the black plumes of smoke coming up from behind them of the burnt villages and burnt cities that they were fleeing from Serb forces, and the bodies strewn along the countryside, if you could see that as we are flying over the countryside it would remove any doubt that this is something we have to do.

In fact, in an article last week a couple of the other troops were interviewed. Let me just quote this. This was in USA Today. The headline reads “Marines Play Hurry Up and Wait.”

“The moment arrives beneath a trash-strewn overpass in the heart of Skopje.

“Huddled in the shadows are dozens of children, some in underwear, others barefoot, each waving dirty hands formed into peace symbols.

“‘Nah-toe! Nah-toe!’ their cries thunder off the overpass walls.

“‘Wow,’ says Lance Corporal Jon Hager, 23, of Carlisle, Pa., at the wheel of a marine Humvee. . . .

“‘I’ll never forget it,’ says Lt. John Marcinek, 28, of Rochester, N.Y., commander of the Marine Combined Anti-armor Team, which will be responsible for securing" the part of Southeast Kosovo that the United States is responsible for.

"Resting in the sizzling sun near the border with Kosovo, Marcinek searches out a pen and pad.

He says, "I want to write my girlfriend and tell her this was the best experience that has ever happened to me," says the former Utah ski bum. "It hits you straight in the heart. The tears flowed."

"For Sergeant James Loy, the sight does nothing less than change his views on being in the Balkans.

He said, "I'll be honest, until now I didn't really feel like we needed to be here. Until I saw those kids," and he has a 10-month-old son himself called Christopher. He went on to say, "We do have a purpose here, and that's to get those kids back home. Some people in the U.S. think we're just here to kill. But we can help give these people their freedom back."

And get something monumental in return: "This is our moment in history," he said. "If people in the United States could see this now, they'd understand."

What is encouraging in recent days are some of the reports coming out of Serbia itself indicating that internal opposition to Milosevic is rising. This article reads "Serbian orthodox church urges Milosevic and his cabinet to quit."

Another article in today's paper, the Washington Post, entitled "Serbs From Kosovo Assail Government. Pro-Western Politicians Seek Elections."

Here the article reads "Last week, a 45-year-old Serbian lawyer named Dragan Antic fled his home in southern Kosovo for fear of ethnic Albanian guerrillas who were beginning to pour into town. Today he stood in the center of Belgrade denouncing Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic as the source of his troubles.

"It is Slobodan who is guilty," he shouted as police attempted to break up a protest rally by a hundred or so Serbs who had just recently fled Kosovo. "What was the purpose of fighting this war if we had to give Kosovo away? Before the war we were living in our homes. Now we have nothing more than the clothes you see on our backs." "Milosevic led us in the wrong direction," complained another displaced Serb. We should be entering the European Union and cooperating with the rest of the world. Instead, we are completely isolated."

Adding to the pressure on Milosevic, a pro-Western political opposition group announced plans today for a series of demonstrations to demand early parliamentary elections in Serbia.

I think what we are seeing is internal opposition starting to rise up against Milosevic, realizing that it is because of his policies in the region that has cost them their homes as a result, and that they realize that their future cannot any longer be tied into the brutal regime of the butcher of Belgrade. I think he has been so aptly named the butcher of Belgrade.

A couple more stories in the paper indicating what has transpired in recent days. "Framework for peace takes shape. Last Serb soldiers leave Kosovo." They had left 12 hours ahead of time, which allowed NATO to formally declare an ending of the NATO air campaign.

Then perhaps, most significantly, the KLA signs a peace agreement calling for the demilitarization of the KLA army. That is one of the key linchpins to a successful peaceful resolution and stability in the region, is that the KLA, the guerillas that were fighting against Milosevic's armies in Kosovo, are agreeing to disarm and to allow democratic reforms to take place in the country.

Here is one that really gives me a lot of hope: "KLA Chief Appeals to Serbs to Return. Political Leader Says Rebels Support 'Democratic Kosovo.'"

The political leader of the Kosovo Liberation Army said today that the ethnic Albanian rebel group is committed to building "a modern civil society" in the Serbian province, and appealed to fleeing Serbs to return to live in a democratic Kosovo, as long as they have not committed any crimes against their people.

I think these are all indications of what is transpiring in recent days that could give us a lot of hope to be optimistic regarding the success of our mission in Kosovo.

What I would like to do right now is to yield some time to one of our leaders in the Democratic Caucus, someone who has been at the forefront of this issue, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin, for yielding to me. I want to congratulate the gentleman for focusing on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we do so because I think we need to reflect upon what the lessons of this operation are. Many had doubts. Many were concerned that we were going to lose large numbers of people. Many were concerned that those who had been expelled from Kosovo would not want to go home. Many frankly were opposed to the President's leadership on this issue because they thought it was wrong.

Mr. Speaker, the butcher of Belgrade, however, is in full retreat. NATO's 78-day air campaign operation allied force has harnessed Slobodan Milosevic's unbridled barbarism. It is producing the results we knew it would. It has made the world, in my opinion, a safer place today.

When we look at Southeastern Europe tonight and compare it to the situation there just 3 months ago, what do we see? First, of course, as I have said, we see a weakened Milosevic, both at home and abroad. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) mentioned and I will repeat that just this morning the Washington Post reported that demonstrations denouncing Milosevic's genocidal rampage in Kosovo have begun to occur in Belgrade. We expected them in Pristina, but they are occurring in Belgrade.

One Serb protester complained, and this bears repeating, as the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) just used this quote, "Milosevic lied to us. He led us in the wrong direction. We should be entering the European Union and cooperating with the rest of the world. Instead, we are completely isolated."

Second, we see 1.3 million Kosovars who were forced to flee their homeland or displaced within their province preparing to return home. We have some measure of confidence that the nightmarish scenes and gross violations of human rights in Kosovo are at an end and will not be replayed there soon.

Third, we see the unified, decisive action by NATO forces can repulse a ruthless dictator, protect and preserve the sanctity of human rights, and help stabilize the entire region.

Can anyone seriously question whether the threat to Macedonia or the Yugoslavia Republic of Montenegro is less tonight because of NATO's unwavering action against Milosevic and his henchmen? No one can doubt that the same could not be said had we fallen prey to the isolationist experts who coached appeasement.

In 1940, as the European continent was about to explode into a Second World War, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt said of appeasement, no man can tame a tiger into a kitten by stroking it. There can be no appeasement with ruthlessness. There can be no reasoning with the incendiary bomb."

Milosevic's ruthless actions, his rejection of reasoning during the entire decade, left us little alternative but to confront him with force.

Mr. Speaker, let me again repeat, for the entire decade. This was not something that was sprung on the West. In fact, in my opinion, the West waited too long. But it is never too late to do the right thing.

□ 2100

With President Clinton, an extraordinarily courageous and forceful Prime Minister of Great Britain, and other leaders in NATO who obviously had in their own parliaments voices of doubt, voices of nonsupport, but notwithstanding that, they courageously stood as a NATO alliance to say that this kind of genocidal activity will not stand in the bosom of Europe.

Fourth, we see that the credibility of the United States has been enhanced throughout the world. As William Kristol and Robert Kagan wrote recently in the Weekly Standard, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure my colleagues well know, neither Mr. Kristol nor Mr. Kagan are known as spinmeisters for the Clinton administration, but they said this, the victory in Kosovo should “send a message to would-be aggressors that . . . the United States and its allies can summon the will and the force to do them harm.”

We have sent, I think, a very simple message to would-be aggressors in Europe and elsewhere. Do not do it. Do not do it. Do not do it. The West has the will, and the West clearly has the ability to confront you, stop you, defeat you, and drive you back. Do not do it.

If one takes aggressive hostile action against one's neighbors or one's own people, one will pay a very high price indeed.

Fifth, we see that a policy that recognizes and embraces basic human rights, decency, and democratic values is not just the right thing to do, but, Mr. Speaker, a strategic imperative. This policy, in this case, has been vindicated.

Syndicated columnist William Safire hit the nail on the head when he wrote recently, “International moral standards of conduct, long derided by geopoliticians, now have muscle.”

How proud Americans ought to be of their President, this Congress, and their young men and women in the armed forces of the United States who align with those in NATO made that quote possible. That the cynics, the realpolitiks of the world who said that we did not have a strategic interest there, yes, of course, there was a moral imperative, but we did not have a strategic interest; therefore, perhaps as we did during the 1930s we ought to stand and simply watch, perhaps lament, perhaps wring our hand, but not take action.

The Clinton administration with the support of this Congress not only unified, not always out front, but nevertheless united in our conviction that we would let this policy go forward and congratulate themselves for standing for what is right. Why? Because of NATO's unified unwavering action in Kosovo, we have made it clear that international wrongdoers can and will be confronted.

This does not mean we can intervene, Mr. Speaker, in every instance. As Secretary of State Madeleine Albright stated recently, and again I quote, “In copying with future crisis, the accumulated wisdom of the past will have to be weighed against the factors unique to that place and time.”

Unfortunately, for Milosevic, Kosovo was the place and the time.

Finally, in closing let me state our efforts to secure peace in the Balkans are not over. We must keep the faith. We must keep our will. We must keep our focus. We must keep our ties to our allies strong and unbroken.

Milosevic has properly been branded as a war criminal by the International War Crimes Tribunal at the Hague. He, Mr. Speaker, and those who committed crimes allied with him or, very frankly, those who committed crimes on the other side must be held accountable.

Our policy goal now should be, not only his removal from office, but his being held accountable for the atrocities for which he is clearly responsible. If we do not, Mr. Speaker, if we do not hold those who have committed war crimes accountable, then I fear we will see a continuation of the cycle of violence and revenge that has plagued the Balkans for so many years.

If, however, we hold accountable those responsible, then there will not be cause for the victims and their families and their successors to again strike out, to in vengeance, to restore the honor that has not been restored because we did not hold the criminals accountable.

We should encourage the Serbs to remove Milosevic and the brutal leaders who have caused this tragic suffering and misery. Serbia also must be clear about this. So long as Milosevic remains in power, it will not and should not receive financial assistance for its reconstruction. Humanitarian aid, yes. Reconstruction aid, economic aid, no.

Mr. Speaker, I am one of the Members of this House who has traveled to Macedonia and Albania, been to Pristina and Kosovo, and seen with my own eyes the devastation and the consequences of genocide. These images are seared into my memory forever.

We will not always be able to intervene to stop injustice wherever it occurs, but we have laid down a powerful precedent in Kosovo. Our credibility, as I said, earlier has been enhanced. NATO has been strengthened. A brutal dictator has been repulsed, and the cause for human rights has been advanced. If those are not good causes, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what are.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) who has himself been such a leader in this effort and who is ensured that the American public had the facts and were themselves focused on the objectives we sought, the means we used.

Parenthetically, let me say that we were extraordinarily lucky, the redress of the wrongs that were occurring, if they occur in the future, may not be as costless as this enterprise was. But having said that, the enterprise will be worth it.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for his comments and for the leadership that he has shown on this issue. What a long ways we have come in a short period of time when, just a few short weeks ago, this Chamber by a 213-213 vote tied on whether or not to even continue to support the NATO air campaign in the region. Now we are on the precipice of peace breaking out in the region.

A while back, I had a chance to have a conversation with Elie Wiesel, one of the Nazi concentration camp survivors, one of the foremost experts on the Holocaust. I asked him what his thoughts were in regards to the NATO air campaign in the Balkans.

What he said I thought really crystallized the issue, for me at least, in which he said, “Listen, the only miserable consolation that those people in the Nazi concentration camps had during the Second World War was the belief that, if the Western democracies of the world knew what was going on, they would do everything possible to try to stop it, bombing the rail lines, bombing the crematoriums.” But history later showed that the western leaders did know, but they did not do anything to try to stop it.

This time is different. This time the Western democracies know, and they are intervening. This time, in his opinion at least, he feels we are on the right side of history in this situation.

With that, I yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. REYES) who was also one of my colleagues who joined us on the trip to the Balkans, Albania and Macedonia just a few weeks ago.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I am one of those that took the opportunity to go to the region, to the Balkans, and take a firsthand look at what was occurring.

I will tell my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, that I had an opportunity to go, not once, not twice, but three times into this region. In fact, on Easter Sunday, I was in Prague and had the opportunity to go to the NATO bunker that was recently admitted to the NATO alliance, the Czech Republic had made available.

That day that I was there, on Easter Sunday at that NATO bunker, the Czech Republic cleared 130 sorties to go through their airspace to bomb Yugoslavia. I mention that because it is very significant when we have heard over an over the last few weeks that, first of all, a bombing campaign would never work, a bombing campaign would not bring about the desired effect and the desired impact to force Milosevic to come to the peace table.

Interestingly enough, every time I heard that, it was being espoused normally by people that have never been on the receiving end of a bombing campaign or a mortar attack or any of those.

Having had the experience of Vietnam and having been involved in some of those attacks, I can tell my colleagues that there is nothing more taxing, more horrifying that makes one feel more helpless than being attacked by bombs or mortars.

So to those that were criticizing the strategy, I say it worked. It is something that we all have to recognize and give credit where credit is due to the President and to the whole NATO alliance.

We also heard over and over, what is our interest in the region? What kind of national interests could we possibly have? I think a number of my colleagues this evening have gone over that interest and that compelling and overwhelming obligation that we, as Americans, can take full pride in tonight and in the coming days that President Clinton took the tough stand, made the tough decisions, and ultimately brought Milosevic to the peace table and provided us an opportunity to once more see how great we as a country and as a nation can be.

Even though over the past few weeks we have not all been in complete agreement, we have not all been satisfied that all the things that were happening and that were occurring were being done according to the strategy or according to the game plan, but one thing that we do know tonight and that we have known since Milosevic came to the peace table is that we have so many thousands of refugees that are grateful for the role that the United States and NATO played in giving them the opportunity to go back and regain what they had, go back and take hold of what we hope is the future, the rest of their lives in their home country, in their home turf.

We heard a lot of the pundits night after night after night telling the American people and the audience worldwide that the refugees that had left their homes would never want to go back. They were wrong. They were wrong, and they should admit it. Just like they were wrong about the air strategy and the bombing campaign that it would never work, it worked. They should admit it.

Part of the compelling story, part of what I hope is chronicled in this campaign and in this great humanitarian effort led by the United States and NATO is the tremendous impact that it had on many thousands of individuals of every size and every age and every description, many thousands of individuals that were forced to flee their homes.

I would ask the American people tonight to stop and reflect for a moment what would happen to them personally if they were to suffer this contend of trauma, a trauma that to us is unimaginable, to us it is incomprehensible because we cannot even begin to imagine what it would be like to be forced out of our homes and to be forced into the refugee camps and the conditions of which my colleagues and I had a first-hand look, and conditions that today are going to be resolved by allowing these refugees to go back to their homeland.

Mr. REYES. I am proud to be in the well of the House this evening to thank President Clinton and to thank the NATO alliance. Over and over in the past weeks we heard it would never hold together. It held together. It brought about the desired successful conclusion that is going to, I think, write yet another chapter in the great history of this country where we do not do things because they are easy, we do not do things because they are simple, but we do do things, no matter how difficult the task, because they are the right thing to do.

I am proud of the President, I am proud of our men and women in uniform, and I am proud of those of my colleagues that stood with our President.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude by saying that, in the final analysis, someone had to stop Milosevic in Kosovo. And given the current geopolitical global lineup, that someone was us. I just hope and pray that for the sake of peace in the region, that what has started now will continue and we will see a lasting peace. And that our troops in the region, who are being asked to act as peacekeepers, will be able to do their jobs successfully, efficiently, and as quickly as possible so they can all return to their families safely.

“(A) the moving party had an ownership or possessory interest in the forfeited property, and the Government failed to take reasonable steps to provide such party with notice of the forfeiture; and “(B) the moving party did not have actual notice of the seizure within sufficient time to file a claim within the time period provided by law.

“(2) If the court grants a motion made under paragraph (1), it shall set aside the declaration of forfeiture as to the moving party’s interest pending forfeiture proceedings in accordance with section 602 et seq. of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1602 et seq.), which proceedings shall be instituted within 60 days of the entry of the order granting the motion.

SEC. 7. INNOCENT OWNER DEFENSE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 982 the following:

§ 983. Innocent owners

“(a) An innocent owner's interest in property shall be forfeited in any judicial action under any civil forfeiture provision of this title, the Controlled Substances Act, or the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952.

“(b)(1) With respect to a property interest in existence at the time the illegal act giving rise to forfeiture took place, a person is an innocent owner if the person establishes, by a preponderance of the evidence—

“(A) that the person did not know that the property was being used or was likely to be used in the commission of such illegal act, or

“(B) that upon learning that the property was being used or was likely to be used in the commission of such illegal act, the person promptly did all that reasonably could be expected to terminate or to prevent such use of the property.

“(2) With respect to a property interest acquired after the act, giving rise to the forfeiture, took place, a person is an innocent owner if the person establishes, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the person acquired the property as a bona fide purchaser for value who at the time of the purchase did not know and was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture. A purchaser is ‘reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture’ if, in light of the circumstances, the purchaser did all that reasonably could be expected to ensure that he or she was not acquiring property that was subject to forfeiture.

“(3) Notwithstanding any provision of this section, no person may assert an ownership interest under this section in contraband or other property that it is illegal to possess. In addition, except as set forth in paragraph (2), no person may assert an ownership interest under this section in the illegal proceeds of a criminal act, irrespective of State property law.

“(c) For the purposes of this section—

“(1) an ‘owner’ is a person with an ownership interest in the specific property sought to be forfeited, including but not limited to a lien, mortgage, recorded security device or valid assignment of an ownership interest. An owner does not include—

“(A) a person with only a general unsecured interest in, or claim against, the property or estate of another person;

“(B) a bailee, unless the bailor is identified, and the bailor has authorized the bailee to claim in the forfeiture proceeding, pursuant to the Supplemental Rules for Admiralty and Maritime Claims;

“(C) a nominee who exercises no dominion or control over the property; or “(D) a beneficiary of a constructive trust; and

“(2) a person shall be considered to have known that his or her property was being used or was likely to be used in the commission of an illegal act if the government establishes the existence of facts and circumstances that should have created a reasonable suspicion that the property was being or would be used for an illegal purpose.

“(d) If the court determines, in accordance with this section, that an innocent owner has a partial interest in property otherwise subject to forfeiture, or a joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety in such property, the court shall enter an appropriate order—

“(1) serving the property;

“(2) transferring the property to the government with a provision that the government compensate the innocent owner to the extent of his or her ownership interest once a final order of forfeiture has been entered and the property has been reduced to liquid assets, or if neither (1) or (2) is reasonably practical under all of the circumstances; and

“(3) permitting the innocent owner to retain the property subject to a lien in favor of the government to the extent of the forfeitable interest in the property. To effectuate the purposes of this subsection, a joint tenancy or tenancy by the entireties shall be converted to a tenancy in common by order of the court, irrespective of State law.”.

SEC. 7. RETURN OF SEIZED PROPERTY.

Section 981 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following at the end:

“(k)(1) SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE.—A party with standing to challenge a seizure and forfeiture under this section may move to suppress the use of the property as evidence on the ground that the Government lacked probable cause at the time of the seizure. Suppression of the property as evidence shall not affect the right of the Government to proceed with a forfeiture action based on independently derived evidence.

“(2) RETURN OF SEIZED PROPERTY.—A person with standing to challenge the forfeiture of property seized under this section may file a motion for the return of the property in the manner described in Rule 41(e), Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure. If such motion is filed, the court shall conduct a hearing within 90 days and shall order the release of the property, pending trial on the forfeiture and the entry of judgment, unless—

“(A) the Government establishes probable cause to believe that the property is subject to forfeiture, based on all information available to the Government at the time of the hearing;

“(B) the Government has filed a civil forfeiture complaint against the property, and a magistrate judge has determined there is probable cause for the issuance of a warrant of arrest in rem pursuant to the Supplemental Rules for Admiralty and Maritime Claims;

“(C) a grand jury has returned an indictment that includes an allegation that the property is subject to criminal forfeiture;

“(D) the person filing the motion had notice of the Government's intent to forfeit the property administratively pursuant to 19 U.S.C. 1608, and failed to file a claim to the property within the specified time period;

“(E) the property is contraband or other property that the moving party may not legally possess; or

“(F) the property is needed as evidence in a criminal investigation or prosecution.”.

“(3) COMPLAINT; MOTION TO DISMISS.—A party with standing to challenge a forfeiture under this section may move to dismiss the complaint for failure to comply with Rule E(2) of the Supplemental Rules, or on any other ground set forth in Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Notwithstanding the provision of section 615 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1615), a party may not move to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the evidence in the possession of the Government at the time it filed its complaint was insufficient to establish the forfeitability of the property.

“§ 983. Civil forfeiture procedures

“(a) ADMINISTRATIVE FORFEITURES.—(1)(A) In any nonjudicial civil forfeiture proceeding under a civil forfeiture statute, with respect to which the agency conducting a seizure of property must send written notice of the seizure under section 607(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1607(a)), such notice together with information on the applicable procedures shall be sent not later than 60 days after the seizure to each party known to the seizing agency at the time of the seizure to have an ownership or possessory interest, including a lienholder's interest, in the seized article. If a party's identity or interest is not determined until after the seizure but is determined before a declaration of forfeiture is entered, such written notice and information shall be sent to such interested party not later than 60 days after the seizing agency's determination of the identity of the party or the party's interest.

“(B) If the Government does not provide notice of a seizure of property in accordance with subparagraph (A), it shall return the property pending the giving of such notice.

“(2) The Government may apply to a Federal magistrate judge (as defined in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure) in any district where venue for a forfeiture action would lie under section 1355(b) of title 28 for an extension of time in which to comply with paragraph (1)(A). Such an extension shall be granted based on a showing of good cause.

“(3) A person with an ownership or possessory interest in the seized article who failed to file a claim within the time period prescribed in subsection (b) may, on motion made not later than 2 years after the date of final publication of notice of seizure of the property, move to set aside a declaration of forfeiture entered pursuant to section 609 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1609). Such motion shall be granted if—

“(A) the Government failed to take reasonable steps to provide the claimant with notice of the forfeiture; and

“(B) the person otherwise had no actual notice of the seizure within sufficient time to enable the person to file a timely claim under subsection (b).

“(4) If the court grants a motion made under paragraph (3), it shall set aside the declaration of forfeiture as to the moving party's interest pending forfeiture proceedings in accordance with section 602 et seq. of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1602 et seq.), which proceedings shall be instituted within 60 days of the entry of the order granting the motion.

“(5) If, at the time a motion under this subsection is granted, the forfeited property has been disposed of by the Government in accordance with law, the Government shall institute forfeiture proceedings under paragraph (4). The property which will be the subject of the forfeiture proceedings instituted under paragraph (4) shall be a sum of money equal to the value of the forfeited property at the time it was disposed of plus interest.

“(6) The institution of forfeiture proceedings under paragraph (4) shall not be barred by the expiration of the statute of limitations under section 621 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1621) if the original publication of notice was completed before the expiration of such limitations period.

“(7) A motion made under this subsection shall be the exclusive means of obtaining judicial review of a declaration of forfeiture entered by a seizing agency.

“(b) FILING A CLAIM.—(1) Any person claiming such seized property may file a claim with the appropriate official after the seizure.

“(2) A claim under paragraph (1) may not be filed later than 30 days after—

“(A) the date of final publication of notice of seizure; or “(B) in the case of a person receiving written notice, the date that such notice is received.

“(3) The claim shall set forth the nature and extent of the claimant's interest in the property.

“(c) FILING A COMPLAINT.—(1) In cases where property has been seized or restrained by the Government and a claim has been filed, the Attorney General shall file a complaint for forfeiture in the appropriate court in the manner set forth in the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims not later than 90 days after the claim was filed, or return the property pending the filing of a complaint. By mutual agreement between the Government and the claimants, the 90-day filing requirement may be waived.

“(2) The Government may apply to a Federal magistrate judge (as defined in the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure) in any district where venue for a forfeiture action would lie under section 1355(b) of title 28 for an extension of time in which to comply with paragraph (1). Such an extension shall be granted based on a showing of good cause.

“(3) Upon the filing of a civil complaint, the claimant shall file a claim and answer in accordance with the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims.

“(d) APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL.—(1) If the person filing a claim is financially unable to obtain representation by counsel and requests that counsel be appointed, the court may appoint counsel to represent that person with respect to the claim. In determining whether to appoint counsel to represent the person filing the claim, the court shall take into account—

“(A) the nature and value of the property subject to forfeiture, including the hardship to the claimant from the loss of the property seized, compared to the expense of appointing counsel;

“(B) the claimant's standing to contest the forfeiture; and

“(C) whether the claim appears to be made in good faith or to be frivolous.

“(2) The court shall set the compensation for that representation, which shall be the equivalent to that provided for court-appointed representation under section 3006A of this title, and to pay such cost, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary as an addition to the funds otherwise appropriated for the appointment of counsel under such section.

“(3) The determination of whether to appoint counsel under this subsection shall be made following a hearing at which the Government shall have an opportunity to present evidence and examine the claimant. The testimony of the claimant at such hearing shall not be admitted in any other proceeding except in accordance with the rules which govern the admissibility of testimony adduced in a hearing on a motion to suppress evidence. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prohibit the admission of any evidence that may be obtained in the course of civil discovery in the forfeiture proceeding or through any other lawful investigative means.

“(e) BURDEN OF PROOF.—In all suits or actions brought for the civil forfeiture of any property, the burden of proof at trial is on the United States to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the property is subject to forfeiture. If the Government proves that the property is subject to forfeiture, the claimant shall have the burden of establishing any affirmative defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

“(f) INNOCENT OWNERS.—(1) An innocent owner's interest in property shall not be forfeited in any civil forfeiture action.

“(2) With respect to a property interest in existence at the time the illegal conduct giving rise to the forfeiture took place, the term ‘innocent owner’ means an owner who—

“(A) did not know of the conduct giving rise to the forfeiture; or “(B) upon learning of the conduct giving rise to the forfeiture, did all that reasonably could be expected under the circumstances to terminate such use of the property.

“(3)(A) With respect to a property interest acquired after the conduct giving rise to the forfeiture has taken place, the term ‘innocent owner’ means a person who, at the time that person acquired the interest in the property, was a bona fide purchaser for value and was at the time of the purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture.

“(B) Except as provided in paragraph (4), where the property subject to forfeiture is real property, and the claimant uses the property as his or her primary residence and is the spouse or minor child of the person who committed the offense giving rise to the forfeiture, an otherwise valid innocent owner claim shall not be denied on the ground that the claimant acquired the interest in the property—

“(i) in the case of a spouse, through dissolution of marriage or by operation of law, or

“(ii) in the case of a minor child, as an inheritance upon the death of a parent, and not through a purchase. However, the claimant must establish, in accordance with subparagraph (A), that at the time of the acquisition of the property interest, the claimant was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture, and was an owner of the property, as defined in paragraph (6).

“(4) Notwithstanding any provision of this section, no person may assert an ownership interest under this section—

“(A) in contraband or other property that it is illegal to possess; or

“(B) in the illegal proceeds of a criminal act unless such person was a bona fide purchaser for value who was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture.

“(5) For the purposes of paragraph (2) of this subsection a person does all that reasonably can be expected if the person takes all steps that a reasonable person would take in the circumstances to prevent or terminate the illegal use of the person's property. There is a rebuttable presumption that a property owner took all the steps that a reasonable person would take if the property owner—

“(A) gave timely notice to an appropriate law enforcement agency of information that led to the claimant to know the conduct giving rise to a forfeiture would occur or has occurred; and

“(B) in a timely fashion, revoked permission for those engaging in such conduct to use the property or took reasonable steps in consultation with a law enforcement agency to discourage or prevent the illegal use of the property.

The person is not required to take extraordinary steps that the person reasonably believes would be likely to subject the person to physical danger.

“(6) As used in this subsection—

“(A) the term ‘civil forfeiture statute’ means any provision of Federal law (other than the Tariff Act of 1930 or the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) providing for the forfeiture of property other than as a sentence imposed upon conviction of a criminal offense.

“(B) the term ‘owner’ means a person with an ownership interest in the specific property sought to be forfeited, including a lien, mortgage, recorded security device, or valid assignment of an ownership interest. Such term does not include—

“(i) a person with only a general unsecured interest in, or claim against, the property or estate of another;

“(ii) a bailee unless the bailor is identified and the bailee shows a colorable legitimate interest in the property seized; or

“(iii) a nominee who exercises no dominion or control over the property;

“(C) a person shall be considered to have known that the person's property was being used or was likely to be used in the commission of an illegal act if the person was willfully blind.

“(7) If the court determines, in accordance with this subsection, that an innocent owner had a partial interest in property otherwise subject to forfeiture, or a joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety in such property, the court shall enter an appropriate order—

“(A) severing the property;

“(B) transferring the property to the Government with a provision that the Government compensate the innocent owner to the extent of his or her ownership interest once a final order of forfeiture has been entered and the property has been reduced to liquid assets; or

“(C) permitting the innocent owner to retain the property subject to a lien in favor of the Government, to the extent of the forfeitable interest in the property, that will permit the Government to realize its forfeitable interest if the property is transferred to another person.

To effectuate the purposes of this subsection, a joint tenancy or tenancy by the entireties shall be converted to a tenancy in common by order of the court, irrespective of state law.

“(8) An innocent owner defense under this subsection is an affirmative defense.

“(g) MOTION TO SUPPRESS SEIZED EVIDENCE.—At any time after a claim and answer are filed in a judicial forfeiture proceeding, a claimant with standing to contest the seizure of the property may move to suppress the fruits of the seizure in accordance with the normal rules regarding the suppression of illegally seized evidence. If the claimant prevails on such motion, the fruits of the seizure shall not be admitted into evidence as to that claimant at the forfeiture trial. However, a finding that evidence should be suppressed shall not bar the forfeiture of the property based on evidence obtained independently before or after the seizure.

“(h) USE OF HEARSAY AT PRE-TRIAL HEARINGS.—At any pre-trial hearing under this section in which the governing standard is probable cause, the court may accept and consider hearsay otherwise inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

“(i) STIPULATIONS.—Notwithstanding the claimant's offer to stipulate to the forfeitability of the property, the Government shall be entitled to present evidence to the finder of fact on that issue before the claimant presents any evidence in support of any affirmative defense.

“(j) PRESERVATION OF PROPERTY SUBJECT TO FORFEITURE.—The court, before or after the filing of a forfeiture complaint and on the application of the Government, may—

“(1) enter any restraining order or injunction in the manner set forth in section 413(e) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 853(e));

“(2) require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds;

“(3) create receiverships;

“(4) appoint conservators, custodians, appraisers, accountants or trustees; or

“(5) take any other action to seize, secure, maintain, or preserve the availability of property subject to forfeiture under this section.

“(k) EXCESSIVE FINES.—(1) At the conclusion of the trial and following the entry of a verdict of forfeiture, or upon the entry of summary judgment for the Government as to the forfeitability of the property, the claimant may petition the court to determine whether the excessive fines clause of the Eighth Amendment applies, and if so, whether forfeiture is excessive. The claimant shall have the burden of establishing that a forfeiture is excessive by a preponderance of the evidence at a hearing conducted in the manner provided in Rule 43(e), Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, by the Court without a jury. If the court determines that the forfeiture is excessive, it shall adjust the forfeiture to the extent necessary to avoid the Constitutional violation.

“(2) The claimant may not object to the forfeiture on Eighth Amendment grounds other than as set forth in paragraph (1), except that a claimant may, at any time, file a motion for summary judgment asserting that even if the property is subject to forfeiture, the forfeiture would be excessive. The court shall rule on such motion for summary judgment only after the Government has had an opportunity—

“(A) to conduct full discovery on the Eighth Amendment issue; and

“(B) to place such evidence as may be relevant to the excessive fines determination before the court in affidavits or at an evidentiary hearing.

“(l) PRE-DISCOVERY STANDARD.—In a judicial proceeding on the forfeiture of property, the Government shall not be required to establish the forfeitability of the property before the completion of discovery pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, particularly Rule 56(f) as may be ordered by the court or if no discovery is ordered before trial.

“(m) APPLICABILITY.—The procedures set forth in this section apply to any civil forfeiture action brought under any provision of this title, the Controlled Substances Act, or the Immigration and Naturalization Act.”.

(b) RELEASE OF PROPERTY.—Chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to add the following section after section 984:

“§985. Release of property to avoid hardship

“(a) A person who has filed a claim under section 983 is entitled to release pursuant to subsection (b) of seized property pending trial if—

“(1) the claimant has a possessory interest in the property sufficient to establish standing to contest forfeiture and has filed a non-frivolous claim on the merits of the forfeiture action;

“(2) the claimant has sufficient ties to the community to provide assurance that the property will be available at the time of the trial;

“(3) the continued possession by the United States Government pending the final disposition of forfeiture proceedings will cause substantial hardship to the claimant, such as preventing the claimant from working, leaving the claimant homeless, or preventing the functioning of a business;

“(4) the claimant's hardship outweighs the risk that the property will be destroyed, damaged, lost, concealed, diminished in value or transferred if it is returned to the claimant during the pendency of the proceeding; and

“(5) none of the conditions set forth in subsection (c) applies;

“(b)(1) The claimant may make a request for the release of property under this subsection at any time after the claim is filed. If, at the time the request is made, the seizing agency has not yet referred the claim to a United States Attorney pursuant to section 608 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1608), the request may be filed with the seizing agency; otherwise the request must be filed with the United States Attorney to whom the claim was referred. In either case, the request must set forth the basis on which the requirements of subsection (a)(1) are met.

“(2) If the seizing agency, or the United States Attorney, as the case may be, denies the request or fails to act on the request within 20 days, the claimant may file the request as a motion for the return of seized property in the district court for the district represented by the United States Attorney to whom the claim was referred, or if the claim has not yet been referred, in the district court that issued the seizure warrant for the property, or if no warrant was issued, in any district court that would have jurisdiction to consider a motion for the return of seized property under Rule 41(e), Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The motion must set forth the basis on which the requirements of subsection (a) have been met and the steps the claimant has taken to secure the release of the property from the appropriate official.

“(3) The district court must act on a motion made pursuant to this subsection within 30 days or as soon thereafter as practicable, and must grant the motion if the claimant establishes that the requirements of subsection (a) have been met. If the court grants the motion, the court must enter any order necessary to ensure that the value of the property is maintained while the forfeiture action is pending, including permitting the inspection, photographing and inventory of the property, and the court may take action in accordance with Rule E of the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Cases. The Government is authorized to place a lien against the property or to file a lis pendens to ensure that it is not transferred to another person.

“(4) If property returned to the claimant under this section is lost, stolen, or diminished in value, any insurance proceeds shall be paid to the United States and such proceeds shall be subject to forfeiture in place of the property originally seized.

“(c) This section shall not apply if the seized property—

“(1) is contraband, currency or other monetary instrument, or electronic funds unless such currency or other monetary instrument or electronic funds constitutes the assets of a business which has been seized,

“(2) is evidence of a violation of the law,

“(3) by reason of design or other characteristic, is particularly suited for use in illegal activities; or

“(4) is likely to be used to commit additional criminal acts if returned to the claimant.”.

“(d) Once a motion for the release of property under this section is filed, the person filing the motion may request that the motion be transferred to another district where venue for the forfeiture action would lie under section 1355(b) of title 28 pursuant to the change of venue provisions in section 1404 of title 28.”.

(c) CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The chapter analysis for chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting after the item relating to section 982 the following:

“983. Civil forfeiture procedures”; and

(2) by inserting after the item relating to section 984 the following:

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking “gross receipts” and “gross proceeds” wherever those terms appear and inserting “proceeds”; and

(B) by adding the following after paragraph (1):

“(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘proceeds’ means property of any kind obtained, directly or indirectly, as the result of the commission of the offense giving rise to forfeiture, and any property traceable thereto, and is not limited to the net gain or profit realized from the commission of the offense. In a case involving the forfeiture of proceeds of a fraud or false claim under paragraph (1)(C) involving billing for goods or services part of which are legitimate and part of which are not legitimate, the court shall allow the claimant a deduction from the forfeiture for the amount obtained in exchange for the legitimate goods or services. In a case involving goods or services provided by a health care provider, such goods or services are not 'legitimate' if they were unnecessary.

"(3) For purposes of the provisions of subparagraphs (B) through (H) of paragraph (1) which provide for the forfeiture of proceeds of an offense or property traceable thereto, where the proceeds have been commingled with or invested in real or personal property, only the portion of such property derived from the proceeds shall be regarded as property traceable to the forfeitable proceeds. Where the proceeds of the offense have been invested in real or personal property that has appreciated in value, whether the relationship of the property to the proceeds is too attenuated to support the forfeiture of such property shall be determined in accordance with the excessive fines clause of the Eighth Amendment."

SEC. 3. COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE TO SEIZED PROPERTY.

(a) TORT CLAIMS ACT.—Section 2680(c) of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "law-enforcement" and inserting "law enforcement"; and

(b) DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.—

"(2) PRE-JUDGMENT.—The United States shall not be liable for pre-judgment interest in a proceeding under any provision of Federal law (other than the Tariff Act of 1930 or the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) providing for the forfeiture of property other than as a sentence imposed upon conviction of a criminal offense, except that in cases involving currency, other negotiable instruments, or the proceeds of an interlocutory sale, the United States shall disgorge to the claimant any funds representing—

"(A) interest actually paid to the United States from the date of seizure or arrest of the property that resulted from the investment of the property in an interest-bearing account or instrument; and

"(B) for any period during which no interest is actually paid, an imputed amount of interest that such currency, instruments, or proceeds would have earned at the rate described in section 1961.

"(3) LIMITATION ON OTHER PAYMENTS.—The United States shall not be required to disgorge the value of any intangible benefits nor make any other payments to the claimant not specifically authorized by this subsection."

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 106th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

Vol. 145

WASHINGTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1999

No. 89

Senate

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

The hour is coming, and now is, when true worshipers will worship the Father in spirit and truth; for the Father is seeking such to worship Him.—John 4:23.

Gracious Lord of our lives, we respond to this invitation to worship You. In the quiet of this moment, we worship You in the splendor of Your majesty. You are infinite, eternal, and unchangeable; in Your being, You are wisdom, holiness, goodness, and truth. We worship You in response to Your grace: Your unqualified love for each of us. Thank You for Your faithfulness. You never give up on us. Even though we falter and fail, You neither leave nor forsake us. Your providential care for our Nation has been consistent all through our history. As a people we return to You.

Now Lord, how shall we worship You in the midst of the work of this day? We want to live magnificently by magnifying You in the mundane as well as the momentous. We want our work itself to be our response of worship. Our desire is to glorify You in all we think, decide, and do. Everything within us stands on tiptoe to worship You, for You are our God in whom we place our trust. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able majority leader, Senator LOTT of Mississippi, is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Thank you, Mr. President.

SCHEDULE

Mr. LOTT. Today the Senate will resume consideration of the State Department authorization bill under a previous order. A cloture vote on the motion to proceed to H.R. 975, the steel import limitation bill, will take place at 12:15, with 40 minutes of debate on the motion prior to the vote.

Following that vote, the Senate will stand in recess until 2:15 p.m. so the weekly party caucuses can meet. It is our intention to complete action on the State Department reauthorization bill during today's session of the Senate and to resume consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill.

I thought we had reached an agreement as to exactly how to complete the State Department authorization bill late yesterday afternoon, but because of the absence of some Senators who needed to be consulted, we were not able to lock in the procedure and the time for completing that action. I hope we can complete it this morning and have a vote or votes on or in relation to the State Department authorization bill after the party caucuses at 2:15. When we go back to the agriculture appropriations bill, we would expect a number of votes this afternoon.

Unfortunately, the Democratic leadership has chosen to confuse the issue and delay action on the agriculture appropriations bill by offering the Patients' Bill of Rights to this very important bill. We could work out an agreement otherwise, if they would be reasonable as to how we might consider that issue. But for now it is pending to the agriculture appropriations bill, and I would expect there would be a couple of votes on or in relation to that issue also.

MEASURE PLACED ON CALENDAR—S. 1256

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I understand there is a bill at the desk due for its second reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the bill by title.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

A bill (S. 1256) entitled the "Patients' Bill of Rights."

Mr. LOTT. I object to further proceedings on this bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes to the calendar.

Mr. LOTT. Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2000 AND 2001

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOINOVICH). Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 886, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 886) to authorize appropriations for the Department of State for fiscal years 2000 and 2001; to provide for enhanced security at United States diplomatic facilities; to provide for certain arms control, non-proliferation, and other national security measures; to provide for reform of the United Nations; and for other purposes.

Pending:

Feingold amendment No. 692, to limit the percentage of noncompetitively awarded grants made to the core grantees of the National Endowment for Democracy.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be able to address the Senate as if in morning business for up to 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MACK. I thank the Chair.

STEEL QUOTA

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, proponents of the quota legislation to be considered later today have spoken with vigor and passion regarding the "injury" that was suffered by domestic steel companies and the threat imports pose to the workers at those companies.

However, I am compelled to rise today to respond to many of the assertions raised regarding the steel industry specifically, and more generally I think it is important to speak to several other factors related to the bill. First, there are economic benefits all Americans enjoy as a result of lowering trade barriers; second, the harmful message a quota bill would send to our trading partners; and, third, the inappropriateness of Congress singling out a specific industry for special treatment.

The first point I would like to make is that the import surge is over. According to the Department of Commerce, imports have returned to their traditional levels. In fact, overall steel imports in the first 4 months of 1999 were below the "pre-import" surge level. Moreover, even with the import surge of 1998, U.S. steel producers reported profits of over $1 billion.

Furthermore, in reviewing data provided by the Steel Manufacturers Association, I was surprised to find that U.S. steel production has increased over the last 10 years. The 1998 steel output of 107.6 million tons was 10 percent greater than 1990 and the highest for any year since 1981.

Additionally, I was interested to discover that since 1987, imports as a percentage of domestic consumption have remained constant at around 20 percent. Again, according to this data, no ground has been lost despite protestations to the contrary.

Some have argued that the financial ill health of several specific companies such as Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Weirton Steel Corporation, Laclede Steel Company, Acme Metals Incorporated, and Geneva Steel Company are the direct result of last year's import surge. However, the fact is that many of the integrated steel mills have a history of declining financial health evident well in advance of the Asian crisis and the 1998 import surge. This is reflected in their stock performance which, without exception, shows a pronounced decline in the value of the stock over the last 5 years. Again, it has nothing to do with the surge in imports.

Noting the declining employment figures in the steel industry, proponents of the quota bill suggest that the United States is losing market share, but the fact is imports have not led to a decrease in market share. U.S. steel production in traditional integrated mills has remained fairly flat. Import competition has merely forced U.S. steel to become more efficient. The growth in domestic production that has allowed U.S. steel to retain its domestic share has been almost exclusively a result of our Nation's mini-mills which now account for almost 50 percent of domestic steel production. Mini-mills use an innovative production technique to recycle scrapped steel. These highly efficient and environmentally friendly producers are transforming the steel industry, and I think here it is worth noting that the association of mini-mills is neutral with regard to the proposed quota legislation.

Finally in this area, some argue our foreign competitors are playing by a different set of rules. This is exactly what our current antidumping laws are intended to address. The steel industry has shown itself to be intimately familiar with and more than willing to take advantage of these laws. Even though steel accounts for only 5 percent of our imports, the industry has generated 46 percent of the unfair-trade complaints brought before the U.S. International Trade Commission during the last 2 decades. Our current laws provide appropriate protection for all industries. They should not be circumvented in order to provide extraordinary protection for a single industry.

All too often we hear complaints of lost jobs and invariably the blame is laid on trade. This allegation has gone unanswered for far too long. Trade has given us far more jobs than would otherwise be available. The fact is that the size of the trade sector has grown steadily during the last 50 years. As a share of the economy, trade doubled between 1950 and 1980, and it has doubled again between 1980 and 1998. Not surprisingly, employment has expanded from 99 million in 1980 to 133 million today. And, the unemployment rate has fallen to 4.2 percent, the lowest level in 30 years.

Far from harming our economy, trade has been a major contributing factor to our growth and our prosperity. Real GDP is now 64 percent greater than it was in 1980 and we have experienced only 9 months of recession during the last 16 years. Moreover, our growth rate is now the highest and our unemployment rate the lowest among the G-7 nations.

Trade makes it possible for us to focus on the production of the things we do best, and thereby produce a larger output and enjoy a higher standard of living. For goods and services that we produce cheaply, we can expand our output and sell abroad at attractive prices. And for things we do poorly, we can acquire them more economically from foreign producers. Thus, trade promotes prosperity.

We have fought for open markets both through GATT and now the WTO. And we have been engaged in this fight, this battle for almost 50 years. For some time, we have told the world that economic freedom and a market economy are key ingredients of prosperity. The steel quota bill undermines this message.

Let me make four points with respect to the message.

A quota bill would send the wrong message to the European Union. A quota bill would send the wrong message to the former Communist countries seeking to establish market economies. A quota bill would send the wrong message to investors. And a quota bill would send the wrong message to our trading partners.

Let me just touch lightly on each of those.

With respect to the European Union, we are currently in the midst of a trade dispute with the EU regarding their restrictions on both bananas and beef. The steel quota bill undercuts our position on these issues. How can we complain about the restrictions of others while we ourselves are erecting trade barriers?

With respect to the leaders of the former communist countries, this bill says when we think it is convenient, it is all right to substitute political manipulation for markets. I can assure you, the leaders of the former communist countries are watching. If a prosperous America with a low unemployment rate is willing to bail out troubled firms, how can we expect them to refrain from such action.

With respect to investors, while much of the world has been in recession, investment flowed into the United States and the U.S. economy remained strong. In no small degree, this confidence of investors was due to the openness of our economy and our reliance on markets rather than politics.

Again, with respect to our trading partners, our trading partners—most of which have lower and slower rates of growth and higher unemployment—are unlikely to stand idly by while we impose trade barriers. Retaliation and escalation of trade barriers are likely side-effects.

Finally, it bears mentioning that it is a serious mistake for Congress to play favorites. This is precisely what is involved here.

This bill imposes a tax on steel-users in order to subsidize steel-producers. A substantial share of the U.S. steel industry refines raw steel into finished and specialty goods. The U.S. steel industry is therefore a major purchaser of imported steel. Higher steel prices which will surely accompany import quotas will increase the cost of refined steel and make these products less competitive than would otherwise be the case.

Moreover, this bill would treat the steel industry different than other industries. Steel is not the only industry that has been adversely affected by currency devaluations and weak demand due to the Asian crisis and recession in several parts of the world. The sales of many firms were affected as the result of these factors. Why should this industry be singled out for special treatment?

In conclusion, I want to stress that the legislation we will be considering later today proposes that the Congress intervene in the market, risk a trade war, and endanger the future health of our economy in order to insulate a segment of our steel industry from competition. I maintain there is already sufficient legislation on the books to protect industries against unfair competitive practices. Quotas and trade barriers are the wrong path. The world has already gone down this "trade war" road once before with the Smoot-Hawley Law of 1930. Let's not make that same mistake again.

Additionally, I should note that Chairman Greenspan recently has sounded the dangers of protectionism. He now believes that rising protectionism is the single most dangerous threat to our future growth and prosperity. I share his concern.

Make no mistake about it—important principles are at stake here. We should be reducing trade barriers rather than increasing them. We have no business playing favorites. As our recent High-Tech Summit indicated, trade in both goods and ideas has made an enormous contribution to our prosperity. We must not allow this misguided effort to assist some at the expense of others and endanger American prosperity.

With that, I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I congratulate our dear colleague from Florida, the distinguished chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, for his remarks. I identify myself with what he said.

The steel quota bill is a trade war starter and a job killer. It is imperative that this bill be defeated on the floor of the Senate today. Let me just try to outline a few reasons why I think that is absolutely essential.

First of all, America is the world's largest steel user. We have 40 times as many jobs in America using steel as we have jobs in making steel, so if we decide we are going to effectively, through this quota, impose a tax on steel, for every 1 worker we help we are going to hurt 40 workers. In fact, it has been estimated that to save one job through protectionism in steel it will cost Americans about $800,000.

How can it make sense to impose a cost of $800,000 to save a $50,000 or $60,000 job? It makes absolutely no sense. It would be an irrational decision for an individual or a family to make such a decision. And what is wisdom for an individual or family cannot be folly for a great nation.

You might ask yourself, if, in fact, everybody knows we have 40 steel-using jobs for every 1 steel-producing job—and we are debating imposing a quota on imports which will hopefully protect a few jobs while destroying many jobs—why are we doing it? We are doing it because the steel workers are very organized and are very tied in politically. That is what this is about.

The important thing to remember, however, is it costs not only about $800,000 per worker to protect a steel job, but because the steel quota is World Trade Organization illegal, it means that our competitors around the world, who will find these quotas being imposed on their steel, will be able to impose similar quotas and tariffs on American manufactured products,

American agricultural products, American services that we sell around the world.

So the first point I want people to understand is that, by the most conservative estimate, when you take into account 40 jobs in steel using for every 1 job in manufacturing, when you take into account that this steel quota is illegal and therefore will produce countervailing quotas and tariffs against American products where we clearly are competitive on the world market, we are going to end up paying, as American consumers, over $1 million for every job in steel we might protect under this quota.

The next point I want to make is that the problem in steel is largely not imports. In 1980, we had 459,000 people employed in the steel industry. Today, we have 163,000 people employed in the steel industry.

You would think, in looking at these numbers, that steel production in America had fallen right through the floor; but, in fact, steel production since 1980 is up 56 percent. In fact, steel production in America was at an all-time high in 1997, even though we had reduced the number of people working in steel production from 459,000 to 163,000.

How do you reduce the number of workers from 459,000 to 169,000 and have production go up by 56 percent? You have that occur because of modernization and because of the implementation of new technology. In fact, since 1980, on average, America has reduced the number of people working in steel production by 9,000 a year, and they have done that not because of foreign competition but because of the implementation of new, modern technology.

Senator MACK mentioned it, but we have trade law section 201 that allows an industry that is suffering from foreign competition, where it can prove that job loss is due to the foreign competition, to get granted relief under current law. The steel industry, which has a record of filing more unfair trade practice suits and more complaints under the trade laws than any other industry in America, has not availed itself of 201. Why? Because if you look back to 1980, the primary reason they are losing jobs is not foreign competition.

In fact, in 1997 we had a record level of steel production in America—105 million tons. We had a record level of demand; hence we had a surge in imports and we had the demand because we are producing more cars, more trucks, more heavy equipment, and we are producing more washing machines, more dryers, more dishwashers than ever in history. And I can't think of a happier time, in terms of the economy, than we are looking at today.

In fact, in 1998—the last year we had data—steel production in America was near the all-time record, at 102 million tons. So the second point is that there is not a lot of data to suggest that the problem is with imports.

The third point I want to make is that the import crisis, if there ever was one, has passed. Steel imports are down from November 1998 to April of 1999—the last month we have data—by 28 percent. So if this ever was a problem, it is a problem that has largely been eliminated.

Finally, where is the evidence that the steel industry is on its back? The steel industry earned $1.4 billion in 1998. Of the 13 largest steel makers, 11 earned a profit in 1998. The bankruptcy of the three steel companies that are largely discussed as part of this bill, most analysts estimate, would have happened without regard to imports because of their high level of debt and because of the failure of investment that they made in new technology.

Now, no one is unconcerned when 10,000 Americans lose jobs in a year. That is a very real human story, and to be opposed to the quota bill is not to say that you don't care about the 10,000 people who lost their jobs. But it is important to remember that 9,000 people a year have lost their jobs due to technological change since 1980, and nobody wants to stop that change because it has created more jobs; it has produced better products; and it has produced products at lower prices, which have raised the real wages and living standards of every working family.

Finally, we are creating 7,500 jobs a day in America. We are the envy of the world. We are the world's most open market. We are the world's largest importer and, as a result, every day in America we are creating 7,500 new permanent, productive, taxpaying jobs for the future. We are creating them in industries that are going to grow and prosper, where these jobs represent jobs that will be there 20, 25, 30 years from today. Why in the world would we, the greatest beneficiary of international trade, want to start a trade war over 10,000 jobs when 9,000 of them were probably lost due to technological change, and in the process, jeopardize the creation of 7,500 jobs a day?

So the question we have to ask ourselves is: Do we want to risk 7,500 jobs a day in job creation in America due to being the world's greatest trading Nation? Do we want to put those jobs at risk for 10,000 jobs in the steel industry that will cost us over a million dollars, in terms of consumer cost, individually to protect? And, finally, there is no guarantee that technological improvement will not end up eliminating these jobs in any case.

I think our choice is clear. I think we have to reject this bill. This bill will kill jobs. This bill will start a trade war, and since we are the greatest trading Nation in the history of the world, we will lose more than anyone else. So I urge my colleagues to vote no on this bill, and to vote no because we are the richest, freest, and happiest people in the history of the world because we are the one Nation in the world that believes in trade and practices it every day.

Why we would want to change our minds on trade in the midst of an economic boom that is virtually unprecedented in the history of the world is a great mystery to me. Why this bill is even on the floor of the Senate is a testament to the level of economic illiteracy in America. Why it would make any sense whatsoever to impose an effective tax on steel and destroy 40 jobs for every one job that you save is a great mystery, and only politics can explain it.

This is a bad bill. It could not come at a worse time. It is totally unjustified. It threatens the economic future of America, and I urge my colleagues to reject it.

FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2000 AND 2001

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WELLSTONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPO). The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, what is the current situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is to be recognized on his amendment at this point.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, in order to save time, let me speak to these amendments and then I will send up a modification.

For just one minute, I do want to respond to my colleague from Texas and say that I think this vote today around noon on cloture on the Rockefeller amendment is a test of economic literacy. But I have a different definition of that than my colleague from Texas. One more time, I want to make about two or three points. The first point is that our administration has no problem when it comes to tariffs, or when it comes to imposing tariffs on European imports in support of Chiquita Bananas in Central America. But now when it comes to the steelworkers, there is opposition.

My second point is that in many ways what happened with the Asian crisis was you had hot capital going in and out of those countries with no kind of regulatory framework that made sense. George Soros, a financier who knows something about this, is saying we have to have a different kind of framework for the global economy. Some of the financial interests that benefited most from financial liberalization and then were hurt the most from the Asian crisis were able to get some public money and public assistance through IMF bailouts. But again, when our steelworkers ask for some support under existing trade statutes, we don't get it.

Finally, let it be clear that this is not all about whether we have free trade. This is about fair trade. That is what I think matters the most. Our workers can compete with workers anywhere. But when you see the dumping of steel below the cost of production in our markets and saturating our markets and prices going down and people losing their jobs, of course, working people stand up and fight back. That makes all the sense in the world.

Finally, I want to argue a little bit of economics focusing on how we can help countries going through these crises—countries such as Thailand, Indonesia, Russia, and Mexico—how we can help those countries help their working class people consume more. Right now we are emphasizing that those countries should try to export their way out of their crises instead of relying on domestic demand, which does not make a lot of sense. We ought to be focused on how people in these countries can earn a decent living so they can, in fact, buy some of what they produce in their countries—some of their own products.

I say to my colleague from Texas that economic analysis is a little bit different than his but one which I think makes more sense.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I have two amendments that I want to talk about today.

The first amendment deals with one of the most alarming human rights abuses in the world today. It is the growing use of child soldiers.

Today, in 25 countries there are a quarter of a million, or more, children being used in government armies and rebel groups. Some of these children—if you are ready for this—are as young as 8 years old.

Children are recruited in a variety of different ways. Some are conscripted. Some are forcibly recruited or kidnapped and literally dragged from their homes, schools, and villages. In some instances, children are recruited based solely on whether or not they are big enough to hold a gun.

I think I need to repeat that.

In some cases these children are recruited, abducted, or kidnapped on the basis of whether or not they are big enough to hold a gun.

These young combatants are not only subject to grave physical risk but are all too often encouraged, or even forced themselves, to commit barbaric acts. Children are forced to do this. They are considered dispensable. Child soldiers are often sent to the front lines of combat, or sent into mine fields ahead of other troops. Children who protest or who cannot keep up with the march or attempt to escape are killed often by other child captives who are forced to participate in the killings as a means of breaking their wills and their spirits.

Those who survive these experiences are frequently physically and emotionally scarred. In addition to dealing with severe emotional and psychological trauma, malnourishment, disease, and physical injury suffered while in captivity, many children worry about their basic survival—how they will feed, clothe, and shelter themselves.

For example, in northern Uganda, the Lord's Resistance Army, an opposition group, has abducted some 10,000 children. Children as young as 8 years old have been taken from their schools and homes and forced to march to rebel-based camps in southern Sudan. They are made to carry heavy loads, without rest, and with very little food and water.

Accounts of the use of these children as soldiers by the Lord's Resistance Army in Uganda and in the devastating Sierra Leone conflict make clear that child combatants may suffer not only physical injury or disability but also psychological damage or rejection by their home communities.

Last year, I met with Ms. Angelina Atyam, the mother of one such child. Angelina's 14-year-old daughter, Charlotte—Charlotte is the first name of Charlotte Oldham-Moore, who is with me on human rights issues—was abducted from her school dormitory over a year and a half ago by rebels from the Lord's Resistance Army. Angelina described to me that fateful October morning when she arrived at her daughter's school to find all the windows broken, the girls' clothes scattered everywhere, and her daughter missing. The rebels had arrived at St. Mary's girls school the previous night, tied up the girls, beat them if they cried, and then took them away into unspeakable horrors. One hundred and thirty-nine students were abducted at gunpoint.

That is why this amendment is a very important amendment.

Thankfully, many of them have been rescued or escaped or their freedom has been purchased. But many others, such as Charlotte, have not returned. Charlotte turned 15 in the captivity of the Lord's Resistance Army. In Angelina's own words:

Until peace comes, the kidnaping will continue. My daughter Charlotte turned 15 in Sudan. Like other parents in the Concerned Parents Association, my husband and I can only rely on those few children who manage to escape from captivity for news of our daughter. Two weeks ago, I spoke with a girl who had just escaped. She said the rebels are now intentionally impregnating the girls, to make them too ashamed to go back to their parents. She mentioned that one of the pregnant girls is a St. Mary's student named Charlotte.

I pray that one day my daughter will come home, and my family can become whole again. Uganda's future depends on how the government acts to end this tragedy and how quickly society reintegrates the children. No nation can have a valid strategic interest in prolonging the captivity and abuse of children. President Clinton has a unique opportunity to help start this healing process.

Important efforts are being made to address this moral outrage. Graca Machel, the former U.N. expert on the impact of armed conflict on children, has recommended that governments immediately demobilize all child soldiers.

I believe the United States must do more to end this grave human rights abuse and assist its victims. Rehabilitation and social reintegration programs are essential to help former child soldiers regain a place in civilian society and help prevent their re-recruitment into subsequent conflicts. I believe strongly that the need for demobilization, rehabilitation, and reintegration programs of former child soldiers in conflict areas must be incorporated into U.S. policy.

The United States must take a leadership role in demobilizing and reintegrating these children back into their communities.

That is why this is a resolution that directs the State Department to study the issue of rehabilitation of former child soldiers, the positive role the United States can play in this effort, and to submit a report to the Congress on how we should address it.

Armed conflict has already taken the lives of 2 million children in the last decade. Three times as many have been injured or disabled. With the continued use of child soldiers, those numbers will only rise.

Our country must be a champion for children and their welfare. Consequently, the United States should be making the strongest possible effort to protect children of combat and to assist them in reentering their societies. It is the very least that we can do.

This amendment represents a continuation of some work that the Senator and I have been doing in this area. Today we focus on the need to provide the support services for these children.

Today we focus on the need to get a report from our State Department as to how we can play as positive a role as possible.

In the past, I have talked about these abuses on the floor. I certainly hope that we will continue to be very active and play a positive role in efforts to have some kind of international protocol agreement to protect these children.

I can't think, quite frankly, of a more important issue.

I have talked with some parents. As a parent, I find it unbelievable that this happens to so many children in so many countries. It would seem to me that we really ought to, as a country, as a government, take the lead and play as positive a role as possible.

I thank my colleagues for supporting this modification of this amendment.

When Senator HELMS comes to the floor, we will go ahead and do that.

Mr. President, also in order to move forward, let me go on and speak about another amendment that I was going to introduce to this bill—the State Department authorization bill, which I will now hold off on for a little bit longer period of time as we continue to build support.

This amendment also deals with another horrendous human rights violation in our time—the trafficking in human beings, particularly the trafficking of women and children for the purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labor.

Earlier this year, I introduced a bill called the International Trafficking of Women and Children Victim Protection Act of 1999, which addresses this issue and is cosponsored by Senators FEINSTEIN, BOXER, SNOWE, MURRAY, and TORRICELLI.

If passed, this bill will put the Senate on record—or this amendment, which we will be introducing shortly. We are going to continue to work with people and work with the State Department and with other Senators and build the support. But we want to go on record in the Senate, the U.S. Congress, as opposing trafficking for forced prostitution and domestic servitude, and acting to check it before the lives of more women and more girls are shattered.

One of the fastest growing international trafficking businesses is the trade in women. Women and girls seeking a better life, a good marriage, or a lucrative job abroad, unexpectedly find themselves forced to work as prostitutes or in sweatshops. Seeking this better life, they are lured by local advertisements for good jobs in foreign countries—including our country—at wages they could never imagine at home. Every year, the trafficking of human beings for the sex trade affects hundreds of thousands of women throughout the world.

The U.S. Government estimates that between 1 and 2 million women and girls are trafficked annually around the world. According to experts, somewhere between 50,000 and 100,000 women are trafficked each year into the United States alone. They come from Thailand, they come from Russia, they come from the Ukraine, they come from other countries in Asia, and they come from other countries from the former Soviet Union.

Upon arrival in countries far from their homes, these women are often stripped of their passports, held against their will in slave-like conditions, and sexually abused. Rape, intimidation, and violence are commonly employed by traffickers to control their victims and to prevent them from seeking help.

Through physical isolation and psychological trauma, traffickers and brothel owners imprison women in a world of economic and sexual exploitation that imposes a constant fear of arrest and deportation, as well as of violent reprisals by traffickers themselves, to whom the women must pay off ever-growing debts. Many brothel owners actually prefer foreign women—women who are far from home, far from help, don't speak the language—because it is so easy to control them. Most of these women never imagine the life in hell they would encounter, having traveled abroad to find better jobs or to see the world. Many believe that nothing would happen to them in rich countries like Switzerland, Germany or the United States. However, many of them now are put in a living hell.

Last year, First Lady Hillary Clinton spoke powerfully of this human tragedy. She said,

I have spoken to young girls in northern Thailand whose parents were persuaded to sell them as prostitutes, and they received a great deal of money by their standards. You could often tell the homes of where the girls had been sold because they might even have a satellite dish or an addition built on their house. But I met girls who had come home after they had been used up, after they had contracted HIV or AIDS. If you've ever held the hand of a 13-year-old girl dying of AIDS, you can understand how critical it is that we take every step possible to prevent this happening to any other girl anywhere in the world. I also, in the Ukraine, heard of women who told me with tears running down their faces that young women in their communities were disappearing. They answered ads that promised a much better future in another place and they were never heard from again.

Lest you think this is just in other countries, and this only happens in far off lands, let me talk about the United States. Earlier this spring, six men admitted in a Florida court to forcing 17 women and girls—some as young as 14—into a prostitution slavery ring. The victims were smuggled into the United States from Mexico with a promise of steady work, but instead they were forced into prostitution. The ring was uncovered when two 15-year-old girls escaped and went to the Mexican consulate in Miami.

According to recent reports by the Justice Department, teenage Mexican girls were also held in slavery in the Carolinas and forced to submit to prostitution. In addition, Russian and Latvian women were forced into nightclub work in Chicago. According to charges filed against the traffickers, the traffickers picked up the women upon their arrival at the airport, seized their documents and return tickets, locked them in hotels and beat them up. The women were told that if they didn't dance nude in nightclubs, the Russian mafia would kill their families. Further, over 3 years, hundreds of women from the Czech Republic who answered advertisements in Czech newspapers for modeling were ensnared in an illegal prostitution ring.

These victims are unfamiliar with the laws, they are unfamiliar with the language, they are unfamiliar with the customs, and quite often they don't know what to do. They are completely helpless. They are completely hopeless.

Trafficking in women and girls is a human rights problem that requires a human rights response. Trafficking is condemned by human rights treaties as a violation of basic human rights, and it is a slavery-like practice. Women who are trafficked are subjected to other abuses—rape, beatings, physical confinement—squarely prohibited by human rights law. The human abuses continue in the workplace, in the forms of physical and sexual abuse, debt bondage, and illegal confinement, and all are prohibited.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights recognizes the right to be free from slavery and involuntary servitude, arbitrary detention, degrading or inhuman treatment, as well as to the right to protection by law against these abuses.

The United Nations General Assembly has passed three resolutions during the last three years recognizing that international traffic in women and girls is an issue of pressing international concern involving numerous violations of fundamental human rights. The United Nations General Assembly is calling upon all governments to criminalize trafficking, to punish its offenders, while not penalizing its victims.

Fortunately, the global trade in women and children is receiving greater attention by governments and NGOs following the U.N. World Conference on Women in Beijing. The President's Interagency Council on Women is working hard to mobilize a response to this problem. Churches, synagogues, and NGOs are fighting this battle daily. But, much, much more must be done.

My bill provides a human rights response to the problem. It has a comprehensive and integrated approach focused on prevention, protection and assistance for victims, and prosecution of traffickers.

I will highlight a few of its provisions now:

It sets an international standard for governments to meet in their efforts to fight trafficking and assist victims of this human rights abuse. It calls on the State Department and Justice Department to investigate and take action against international trafficking. In addition, it creates an Interagency Task Force to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in the Office of the Secretary of State and directs the Secretary to submit an annual report to Congress on international trafficking.

The annual report would, among other things, identify states engaged in trafficking, the efforts of these states to combat trafficking, and whether their government officials are complicit in the practice. Corrupt government or law enforcement officials sometimes directly participate and benefit in the trade of women and girls. And, corruption also prevents prosecution of traffickers. U.S. police assistance would be barred to countries found not to have taken effective action in ending the participation of their officials in trafficking, and in investigating and prosecuting meaningfully their officials involved in trafficking. A waiver is provided for the President if he finds that provision of such assistance is in the national interest. This is a modest enforcement provision that will encourage governments to take seriously this extremely serious human rights violation.

On a national level, it ensures that our immigration laws do not encourage rapid deportation of trafficked women, a practice which effectively insulates traffickers from ever being prosecuted for their crimes. Trafficking victims are eligible for a nonimmigrant status valid for three months. If the victim pursues criminal or civil actions against her trafficker, or if she pursues an asylum claim, she is provided with an extension of time. Further, it provides that trafficked women should not be detained, but instead receive needed services, safe shelter, and the opportunity to seek justice against their abusers. Finally, my bill provides much needed resources to programs assisting trafficking victims here at home and abroad.

We must commit ourselves to ending the trafficking of women and girls and to building a world in which women and children are no longer subjected to such horrendous abuses.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

I say to the chair of the committee, I will not introduce the amendment to today's bill. What we want to do is have an amendment, and I hope to get the support of the chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, which will set an international standard for governments to meet in their effort to fight trafficking and assist victims of human rights abuse. It will call on the State Department and Justice Department to investigate and take action against international trafficking. It will create an interagency traffic force to monitor and combat trafficking in the Office of the Secretary of State. It will direct the Secretary of State to submit an annual report to Congress on international trafficking.

We will also take a look at what different governments are doing and which countries are involved in this illegal practice, what police forces are involved, and whether or not we ought to be taking action with a clear message that we, as a government, will not tolerate that.

On a national level, it will ensure that our immigration laws don't encourage the rapid deportation of women, that insulates the traffickers from being prosecuted. Women are terrified; they have no protection, and therefore, they can't even testify against what is happening to them. We want to make sure they are provided with some protection.

We want to commit ourselves to ending the trafficking of women and girls and to building a world in which women and children are no longer subjected to this horrendous abuse.

We don't agree on all issues, I say to the chairman of the committee, but I know him and I know he finds this practice abhorrent. Out of respect for him, I will not introduce this amendment to this bill because I know he wants to move the bill forward. There are a couple of issues we are trying to resolve in terms of getting support. I had a commitment from the chairman we will go forward with hearings. This will not be delayed.

Perhaps even more importantly, I say to the chairman, because he has had nothing to do with delaying this, I have been waiting for the State Department to come forward with their modifications. I have asked for quite some period of time. My hope is within the next week we will be doing this work together. I will work with the chairman; I will work with Senator BIDEN; I will work with the State Department. We will come to some agreement on our language, which surely we can do. When the foreign operations bill comes to the floor, my hope is we will be ready with this amendment. If at that point in time I can't get the State Department to come forward and give me their suggestions and talk about their approach and have us work together, I will just bring the amendment to that bill and we will have an all out debate and a vote up or down and see where people stand.

I am convinced with a little bit more time—not too much more time but a little bit more time—I will get to work with the chairman and I will be able to get the support of the chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee and Senator BIDEN and other Senators and we can move this forward.

My goal is to get this passed. Members don't come to the floor to give a speech for the sake of giving a speech. Quite often, we don't even get to see, Senator HELMS, the results of our work in a concrete way. But we do know if we can pass something like this and get it in a bill, it can help a lot of people around the world, and we have done something good. I want to do something good, do something positive.

I will wait a little while longer. I do want the State Department to know I will not wait much longer. Let's go forward in the spirit of working together. This will not be something that we will delay and delay. We will pass this. Some good work is being done in the State Department. There is no reason we can't do this together. There is no reason this can't be a bipartisan bill. There is no reason why our government, our country, can't take the lead in trying to put an end to this abhorrent, unconscionable, vicious practice. This is a huge civil rights issue. As a Senator, I intend to address this with some good legislation.

I say to the Chair, I have already had a chance to speak on the amendment dealing with child soldiers. We have a modification.

What I would like to do now is call up amendment No. 697 and ask unanimous consent it be in order for me to modify the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 697, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To express the sense of Congress that the global use of child soldiers is unacceptable and that the international community should find remedies to end this practice)

Mr. WELLSTONE. I send the modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE] proposes an amendment numbered 697, as modified.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 115, after line 18, add the following new section:

SEC. 730. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON THE USE OF CHILDREN AS SOLDIERS OR OTHER COMBATANTS IN FOREIGN ARMED FORCES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) There are at least 300,000 children who are involved in armed conflict in at least 25 countries around the world. This is an escalating international humanitarian crisis which must be addressed promptly.

(2) Children are uniquely vulnerable to military recruitment because of their emotional and physical immaturity, are easily manipulated, and can be drawn into violence that they are too young to resist or understand.

(3) Children are most likely to become child soldiers if they are orphans, refugees, poor, separated from their families, displaced from their homes, living in a combat zone, or have limited access to education.

(4) Child soldiers, besides being exposed to the normal hazards of combat, are also afflicted with other injuries due to their lives in the military. Young children may have sexually related illnesses, suffer from malnutrition, have deformed backs and shoulders which are the result of carrying loads too heavy for them, as well as respiratory and skin infections.

(5) One of the most egregious examples of the use of child soldiers is the abduction thousands of children, some as young as 8 years of age, by the Lord's Resistance Army (in this section referred to as the "LRA") in northern Uganda.

(6) The Department of State's Country Reports on Human Rights Practices For 1999 reports that in Uganda the LRA abducted children "to be guerillas and tortured them by beating them, raping them, forcing them to march until collapse, and denying them adequate food, water, or shelter".

(7) Children who manage to escape from LRA captivity have little access to trauma care and rehabilitation programs, and many find their families displaced, missing, dead, or fearful of having their children return home.

(8) A large number of children have participated and been killed in the armed conflict in Sri Lanka, and the use of children as soldiers has led to a breakdown in law and order in Sierra Leone.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—

(1) CONDEMNATION.—Congress hereby joins the international community in condemning the use of children as soldiers and other combatants by governmental and non-governmental armed forces.

(2) FURTHER SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(A) the Secretary of State should—

(i) study the issue of the rehabilitation of former child soldiers, the manner in which their suffering can be alleviated, and the positive role that the United States can play in such an effort; and

(ii) submit a report to Congress on the issue of rehabilitation of child soldiers and their families.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I urge adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, we certainly accept this amendment, amendment No. 697, as modified. We have discussed it on both sides.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 697), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for his help and his support.

Mr. HELMS. To the contrary, I thank the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HELMS. I commend the Senator from Minnesota for working with us on his amendments. The issues he raised are—"significant" is not strong enough. They are grave issues that ought to be considered, and I commend him for it. I assure the Senator the committee will continue to work with him to address his concerns.

Mr. President, we have made significant progress in the State Department authorization bill. We have now completed debate on the Feingold amendment, and we have just, obviously, accepted the modified Wellstone amendment. We are making progress on the Sarbanes amendment, which is the only remaining amendment to be debated. I understand some Senators wish to come to the floor and speak on the bill in general, and I encourage them to do that now. This afternoon we will vote on the Feingold amendment and possibly the Sarbanes amendment, and then we will move to final passage.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent Kathleen O'Brien, a fellow, and Meagan Fitzsimmons, who is an intern, be granted the privilege of the floor today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 695

(Purpose: To increase the authorizations of appropriations for "Contributions for International Organizations" and "Contributions for International Peacekeeping Activities")

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I believe I have an amendment at the desk. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES] proposes an amendment numbered 695.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 116, strike "$940,000,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $940,000,000" and insert "$963,308,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $963,308,000".

On page 121, line 6, strike "$215,000,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $215,000,000" and insert "$235,000,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $235,000,000".

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I have been in discussions with the distinguished chairman of the committee. The committee is prepared to take the latter part of this amendment. I am prepared to withdraw the first part of the amendment, therefore obviating the need for a vote, although I would then like to speak about the bill and my general attitude toward it.

I make a parliamentary inquiry. If I were to ask for a division of the amendment and withdraw the first part of it, on page 116, would the next order then be to go to the second part of the amendment on page 121?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be the order.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask for a division on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so divided.

The amendment (No. 695), as divided, is as follows:

DIVISION I

On page 116, strike "$940,000,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $940,000,000" and insert "$963,308,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $963,308,000".

DIVISION II

On page 121, line 6, strike "$215,000,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $215,000,000" and insert "$235,000,000 for the fiscal year 2000 and $235,000,000".

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I withdraw the first part of the amendment, lines 1, 2, and 3, that read, "on page 116" down and through "$963,308,000".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I understand that now before us is the second part of the amendment, lines 4 and 5 on page 1 and lines 1 and 2 on page 2; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. There was originally a two-hour time agreement on the amendment, equally divided. I will cut my time back to half an hour, but I thought we would go ahead and adopt it, if that is acceptable to the chairman.

Mr. HELMS. I think that is what we should do, and I hope we will.

Mr. SARBANES. I ask unanimous consent that following the adoption of the amendment I have 30 minutes to speak on the bill, and that will be in lieu of the 1 hour that had been reserved for proponents of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SARBANES. I urge the adoption of the second part of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 695), as divided, was agreed to.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SARBANES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee.

I now will speak on the bill, which presents some difficult issues. Despite the chairman's accommodation—which is a step forward that I appreciate—I still plan to vote against the bill, as I did in the committee. I say to the chairman that this decision has been made more difficult for me because this bill is now being named after Admiral Nance.

I wish the substance of the bill were such that I could feel free to vote for it. Unfortunately, I do not. But I want to make it very clear that if I could have improved the substance enough, the fact that Admiral Nance's name is on this bill would have clearly moved me in the direction of voting for it. Hopefully, it will come back from conference in a somewhat better state, and I might be able to vote for it then.

I wanted to say this at the outset because I, like so many Members of this body, had enormous respect and affection for Admiral Bud Nance and for his commitment to our Nation, both in war and in peace. I saw that commitment every day after he joined the chairman in the workings of our committee. His contributions were widely recognized and he will be greatly missed.

This amendment, which we have now adjusted, was an effort to keep us from going further into arrears to the United Nations in the current year. Under the compromise, we will authorize the full amount this year for peacekeeping, but we still fall behind on the contributions to international organizations.

The bigger problem connected with the legislation is the proposed package to settle our past arrears to the United Nations, which unfortunately, has two major shortcomings. First of all, the total figure does not reach the level which our Government admits we owe, missing it by a little under $100 million if one includes debt relief. My second objection is that the money we do authorize has been heavily conditioned.

Let me just say at the outset that I believe important U.S. national interests are undermined by our continued failure to pay what we owe to the United Nations and its affiliated agencies. I know the chairman and the ranking member are trying to search for a solution to this problem. I respect their efforts. I just do not think they have gone far enough along this important path.

By refusing to meet our legal obligations while continually issuing new demands, we are wasting our own influence, damaging our credibility and international respect, engendering resistance to the reforms we seek, and complicating the U.N.'s ability to perform its duties in a timely and effective manner. In my view, we should pay our arrears promptly, in full, and without additional conditions.

Unfortunately, this legislation does not accomplish that objective. The United States acknowledges we owe $1.021 billion to the U.N. The U.N. says we owe $1.5 billion. This bill authorizes $819 million over 3 years, plus an additional $107 million in credit. Even the $819 million which is authorized will not be paid promptly and at once; it will be paid over a 3-year period. So we will still be almost $100 million short of our acknowledged obligations, far short of the U.N. figure, with no promise of ever paying it back.

Unfortunately, that puts us in the position of a permanent default, particularly when one realizes that the authorization for the current year falls short. The amendment we just adopted helps to correct that on the peacekeeping side, but it still leaves us $23 million short on regular dues to the United Nations.

Furthermore, the bill imposes a long list of arbitrary and burdensome conditions for paying even the reduced amount, to which I have just made reference. These conditions have not been negotiated with or agreed to by the United Nations. They are, in effect, unilaterally imposed by the United States. They are being imposed on past obligations, on money we had agreed to provide without such stipulations.

The consequence of these arrears is that the U.N. has been unable to reimburse other countries for sending their troops on peacekeeping missions that the United States encouraged and endorsed. Other countries have put the lives of their own citizens on the line in order to accomplish mutually agreed objectives. The U.S. responsibility in most of those instances was to provide money to cover the missions they were performing for us and the entire world. Those missions have been accomplished. The bill has not been paid.

In addition, despite my amendment, this legislation creates new arrearages to the U.N., so not only do we fail to pay all the money we owe in arrears, not only do we establish preconditions for this partial payment, but we begin to build up new debts by authorizing less than is needed.

The agreement that was reached on the amendment addressed this in part. It provided the $235 million needed for assessed peacekeeping operations. The bill had $215 million. It still does not provide the full amount needed for assessed U.N. dues, falling short by $23 million.

I must say, if any other country delinquent in its obligations showed up with the demands we have placed in this legislation, lacking the intention of paying its debts in full and short of its current dues, we would be extremely upset at what we would regard as its audacity. Surely our friends and allies will have the same reaction to our conduct.

This approach runs counter to that reflected in the exercise of American leadership at the end of World War II, an approach that I think should characterize our policy toward the United Nations today.

It is my strongly held view that the interests of the United States have been served by our Nation's active participation in the United Nations and the U.N. system. Especially now, with the end of the cold war, the U.N. has a genuine opportunity to function as it was intended at the end of World War II, without the constant Soviet veto in the Security Council that effectively neutralized it for so many years.

The task facing us today is to assist the United Nations to adapt to the end of the cold war and the challenges of the new century. The need for the United Nations remains clear, for as then-Ambassador to the U.N. Madeleine Albright commented:

The battle-hardened generation of Roosevelt, Churchill and de Gaulle viewed the U.N. as a practical response to an inherently contentious world; a necessity not because relations among States could ever be brought into perfect harmony, but because they cannot.

This sense of realism seems absent from many of the current discussions of the United Nations. There has been a misperception that the U.N. can somehow dictate policies to the United States and force us to undertake actions that do not serve U.S. interests. This is simply not the case. Those who labored in San Francisco and elsewhere to create the United Nations some half a century ago insisted that the United Nations organization recognize the reality of great powers by granting significant authority to the Security Council.

In the Council, the United States and other major powers were given the veto power, thereby ensuring that the U.N. could not undertake operations which the United States opposed. Every U.N. peacekeeping operation requires prior approval by the United States.

Actually, by failing to meet our financial obligations, we are abdicating the powers available to us within the U.N. system.

We are, for example, in danger of losing our vote in the General Assembly, a status generally reserved for the world's lawless and pariah states. Since the General Assembly works on the basis of consensus, we are depriving ourselves of the ability to press for needed reforms.

The influence we held in the past by our leadership, reflected in the large number of senior posts awarded to U.S. nationals, is being eroded and subjected to challenge.

As Ambassador Richardson explained in the course of his confirmation hearings to go to the U.N.—he, of course, is now Secretary of Energy—I quote him:

Growing resentment over our failure to pay our assessed dues and arrears has put our continued leadership and influence at risk. . . . [A]mong the members of the Geneva Group, composed of the U.N.'s largest contributors and a crucial source of support for U.N. reform, there is virtually no willingness to consider reductions in our dues for peacekeeping or the regular budget until we pay our arrears. If the United States fails to meet its financial commitments to the U.N. system, it will become increasingly difficult to set the U.N. priorities for the future and to ensure that qualified Americans serve in important U.N. posts.

Let me just talk a bit about how an effective U.N. serves U.S. interests. I believe, of course, that U.S. leadership is essential to an effective U.N.

Over the years, the U.N. has negotiated over 170 peaceful settlements across the globe—helping to end wars, uphold cease-fires, protect civilians, reintegrate refugees, oversee the conduct of free and fair elections, monitor troop withdrawals, and deter intercommunal violence.

From Iraq to Bosnia and Kosovo, assembling coalitions to repel aggression and keep peace would have been impossible without assistance and support from the United Nations.

In Haiti, the introduction of U.N. peacekeepers meant that U.S. troops could be extracted without condemning the country to chaos, while in Cyprus, the U.N. prevents an outbreak of hostilities that could lead to conflict between two NATO allies.

The U.N. has not been able to handle every situation. Unfortunately, it has attracted the most attention in those instances when it has not been able to provide a resolution. People then conclude that it is totally ineffective. I beg very strongly to disagree with that conclusion.

As I have indicated, there have been numerous instances in which the U.N. has negotiated peaceful settlements. As a matter of fact, the Nobel Peace Prize has been awarded five times to the United Nations and its organizations.

U.N. operations further serve U.S. interests by leveraging our resources and influence in order to achieve a much greater impact at lesser cost than we could unilaterally.

I think those who constantly talk about the burdensharing theme—and I think it is an important theme; I have talked about it myself—need to recognize the U.N. has been, and can be, an even more important mechanism for burdensharing.

One of the things that needs to be understood is that by working through the United Nations, we can often gain international endorsement for an American position. The U.S. position is then seen as representing the judgment of the entire international community and not solely the judgment of the United States. The mandate becomes a response by the entire international community and cannot be portrayed as the United States trying to impose its own point of view in the particular situation.

There are many examples of how the U.N. serves U.S. interests at a reduced cost and with great effectiveness. The International Atomic Energy Agency, with our small annual contribution, has helped prevent nuclear proliferation by inspecting and monitoring nuclear reactors in facilities in 90 countries, many of which would not allow access to the United States alone. The World Health Organization, working in concert with USAID and other bilateral agencies, led a 13-year effort resulting in the complete eradication of smallpox, saving an estimated $1 billion a year in vaccination and monitoring, and helped to wipe out polio from the Western Hemisphere.

Through its High Commissioner for Refugees, its Children's Fund, the Development Programme, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and the World Food Programme, the U.N. has saved millions from famine and provided food, shelter, medical aid, education, and repatriation assistance to refugees around the world.

The U.N. Environment Programme and the World Meteorological Organization have brought countries together to begin to address important environmental matters, to develop regional efforts to clean up pollution, and to predict and respond effectively to natural and manmade disasters.

Thanks to organizations such as the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunications Union, the International Civil Aviation Organization, and the International Maritime Organization—all agencies of the United Nations—there are procedures to ensure the safety and reliability of worldwide travel and communications.

By coordinating international sanctions against the apartheid regime in South Africa, the U.N. was instrumental in bringing an end to the apartheid system.

Through the efforts of the United Nations, over 300 international treaties have been enacted which set standards of conduct and enable cooperation in areas ranging from arms control to human rights and civil liberties, protection of copyrights and trademarks, determining maritime jurisdiction and navigation on the high seas, preventing discrimination against women, conserving biological diversity, and combating desertification.

Because of U.N. agencies, such as the International Labor Organization, and U.N.-brokered agreements, such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the American ideals of freedom, democracy, equality before the law, and the dignity of the individual have become internationally accepted, and the rights and protections that U.S. workers enjoy are being aggressively pursued in other countries.

International trade and commerce would be hamstrung without the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization, and the regional development banks, not to mention the many agreements negotiated under their auspices. All of these grew from the U.N. system.

I went on at some length about these matters because we do not often focus on them. A lot of the very positive work done by the U.N. is simply taken for granted, falling below the "radar screen" for most people. Many do not appreciate that it is the U.N. that is conducting all of these important activities, and they fail to understand how discomfited they would be in their lives if these activities were not carried out, which the United Nations has been doing, year in and year out.

The U.N. has been a favorite target of criticism. Certainly there are activities and practices of the U.N. that have been wasteful or ineffective and that require reform. But I think the strategy of unilaterally withholding funds until all our demands are met is counterproductive, particularly in the current circumstance.

Since his election in 1997, U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan—whose candidacy, of course, was strongly supported by the United States—has instituted a number of significant reforms, including a zero-growth budget, the cutting of administrative costs, the elimination of almost 1,000 positions, the creation of an independent inspector general, the consolidation of overlapping agencies, the establishment of more budget oversight, and tighter budget discipline.

I know some think he has not gone as far as he should go, that he has not fully implemented all of these reforms, and there is some truth to that. But the fact remains, he is trying to run an organization that operates by consensus. He has set out the proper direction and the proper goals. He is doing his very best to move the agency along the right path.

Frankly, I think the United States can be more helpful in the reform effort. We do this not by being the biggest delinquent in dues paying, which only brings resentment against our calls for change; we should pay our obligations in full so we can regain the credibility and respect needed to push for further reforms.

It is both ironic and unfortunate that a nation that holds itself and its citizens to the highest standards of law should find itself in default of its international obligations. Our democracy is founded on the primacy of respect for the rule of law. We urge other nations to follow our example.

It is often a tremendous challenge to get countries to respect the basic rights of their citizens and to act in accordance with international law. Yet we ourselves are not meeting those high standards as they relate to the United Nations. We undertook commitments under the U.N. Charter. We have a responsibility to make good on them if we want other countries to uphold their international agreements.

The United States is the great power in the world today, and with that role come important responsibilities in how we exercise that power. I think we are failing here, with respect to our commitments to the U.N., to exercise those responsibilities in a manner that will strengthen our position and serve our Nation in the international community. We have not only a legal and moral obligation to pay our dues, but a practical interest in doing so as well.

So while I respect the efforts that have been made in the committee, and while I recognize that I was a lonely voice for this position in the committee, I think that offering only a partial and a heavily conditioned repayment of the U.S. debt to the United Nations will not meet our obligations and will not enhance our interests.

Seven former Secretaries of State have written an open letter to the Congress urging the United States to honor its international commitments and pay its debt to the United Nations. I think their letter is a powerful statement about the importance of U.S. leadership and the risk that nonpayment of our debt to the U.N. will pose for U.S. security and international influence. That letter was signed by former Secretaries Kissinger, Haig, Baker, Christopher, Vance, Shultz, and Eagleburger—Democrats and Republicans alike.

I ask unanimous consent that their letter, which was sent to the Speaker of the House, the House minority leader, the Senate majority leader, and the Senate minority leader, be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, the arrears package in this bill is a significant step toward meeting our international obligations. But I am deeply troubled by its failure to authorize the full amount that United States itself admits we owe, let alone what the U.N. claims we owe.

Secondly, even making that money available, or any part of it, is very heavily conditioned in this legislation. In other words, we are saying to the U.N.: Yes, we are willing to pay some of what we owe, but in order to get any of this money, you will have to comply with a long list of conditions—several of which I think will be extremely difficult for them to meet. In any event, it is sort of a “take it or leave it” approach. This was not part of a negotiated agreement. We are going to approve the package and then present it to them. I think we may encounter a difficult reaction to this and see a continuing problem.

Third, as I indicated, even with the accommodation made on the amendment earlier, we still create new arrears. So it is not as though we are able to say to the U.N. that this is the package we propose for arrears and, in the future, we are not going to let this situation arise again. In other words, we aren't really on board here to meet our continuing obligations to the organization, which in substantial measure has been responsive to American interests. Instead, we are going to continue to go into arrears, extending the problem which has brought us to the impasse we now confront.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

U.S. SECRETARIES OF STATE TO CONGRESS: U.S. LEADERSHIP IS AT RISK

Hon. DENNIS J. HASTERT,
Speaker of the House.

Hon. TRENT LOTT,
Senate Majority Leader.

Hon. RICHARD J. GEPHARDT,
House Minority Leader.

Hon. THOMAS A. DASCHLE,
Senate Minority Leader.

MARCH 16, 1999.

DEAR CONGRESSIONAL LEADERS: As America's financial debt to the United Nations persists, we are deeply concerned that our great nation is squandering its moral authority, leadership, and influence in the world. It's simply unacceptable that the richest nation on earth is also the biggest debtor to the United Nations.

We are writing to urge all Members of Congress to support full funding of the outstanding and current U.S. legal obligations to the United Nations and to alert Congress to the serious consequences if we fail to do so. U.S. leadership is at risk. Our ability to achieve vital foreign policy and security objectives is compromised. Our priceless reputation as the pre-eminent country committed to the rule of law is compromised. And, the critical work of the United Nations is threatened.

As former Secretaries of State, we know first hand the importance of the United Nations and its agencies in securing global peace, stability and prosperity. And we appreciate that now more than ever, the U.S. must lead in the community of nations to turn back threats to peace and freedom, whether from war or hunger, terrorism or disease. We cannot lead if we ignore our basic international responsibilities.

There are historic consequences to our continued failure to meet our obligations. The United States, one of the founding members of the United Nations could lose its vote in the UN General Assembly.

Important reforms have occurred at the United Nations, many at America's urging: a no-growth budget from 1994-98 and an actual reduction of $123 million for 1998-99, creation of an office of inspector general which has identified more than $80 million in savings, more than 1,000 positions cut, and other cost-saving measures. Payment of U.S. arrears is critical to continuing this reform.

We urge you: honor our international commitments and pay America's debt to the United Nations. Great nations pay their bills.

Sincerely,

HENRY A. KISSINGER.

EAGLEBURGER.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, the pending bill fails to authorize the Administration's full request for funding for U.S. contributions to international organizations and for U.S. contributions to international peacekeeping activities. I am pleased to cosponsor the amendment offered by my colleague, the Senator from Maryland, because it at least partially rectifies this situation by bringing the authorization for one of these two accounts up to the Administration's full request for Fiscal year 2000.

The bill before us today makes significant strides in the on-going efforts of the Congress and the Administration to pay U.S. arrears to the United Nations and achieve much-needed reforms in that organization. I commend both the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator HELMS, and the ranking Democrat, Senator BIDEN, for this important accomplishment. Working closely together and working closely with the Administration, they have reached an agreement that will allow the United States to begin restoring its status as a member-in-good standing of the UN.

I believe many of my colleagues share my profound relief that, with this bill, the United States will take an important step toward paying what we owe to the United Nations. For the United States to fail to meet its treaty obligations as a founding member of the United Nations is, in my opinion, conduct unworthy of this great nation.

In our increasingly interconnected world, even a great nation—even the sole remaining superpower—can not protect and advance its national interests alone. We need not look any further than the last few weeks, as the United States and our NATO allies have worked to bring an end to the conflict in Kosovo, to see just how important the UN is to our ability to exert positive international leadership. For every day we have allowed U.S. dues to go unpaid and U.S. arrears to mount, our leadership in the UN has been subtly, but surely undermined. As we take the important step today of authorizing the payment of most of what we owe to the UN, we just as surely take a step toward reinforcing U.S. leadership around the world.

This bill does not, unfortunately, authorize payment of the full amount the State Department says we owe the UN. Of the $1.021 billion we acknowledge that we owe, this bill only authorizes payment of $819 million in direct payments and $107 million in debt forgiveness. We still fall $95 million short. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Committee to ensure that the full amount of U.S. arrears to the UN are paid.

The amendment offered by Senator SARBANES, by ensuring the authorization of full-funding for what the U.S. currently owes for peacekeeping is critical to continuing the hard-fought effort to restore U.S. standing in the United Nations. By cutting the level of our current contributions to the UN's regular budget and peacekeeping activities as this bill does, we run the risk of increasing our arrears in the very same bill where we are paying them down. The amendment offered by Senator SARBANES would ensure that we do not take one step forward and two steps back on paying what we owe to the United Nations. I strongly support this amendment.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maryland for his statement and cooperation. I thank the chairman for working out a compromise with the Senator on his amendment.

I must say, I would be more comfortable if I could be pure on this, because I happen to agree with the Senator from Maryland. I think we owe a total amount of probably $1.021. The U.N. says we owe $1.509. We do not, in my view. I would be more comfortable if we could have gotten all of that. Quite frankly, I would be more comfortable, as a matter of principle, if there were no conditions.

So I began this process 6 years ago exactly where the Senator is. The arrearages began to mount in larger numbers, really with UNPROFOR in Bosnia. I know the Senator knows that a significant amount of what the United States "owes" is for peacekeeping missions. It is owed to France, the U.K., Italy, Belgium, Netherlands, Canada, India, Pakistan, Russia, and Germany. It is not dues in the sense that we belong to a club, or a country club, and you have yearly dues. This is more like at the end of the year when they say we ran over X amount of dollars and you assess the members beyond their dues. That is what we owe, in large part.

I know the Senator knows this, and I thank him for his acknowledgment of our attempt to do the best we could. But I think, as I said, on principle, we should pay our obligations in full with no conditions.

We should negotiate conditions from this point on, if we want to, because I think the Senator would agree with me that the U.N. is a badly run outfit in terms of its management skill.

It has been the employer of first resort for a significant number of countries, understandably. It is a bloated bureaucracy, which has been worked upon positively by Kofi Annan, and there has been progress made. But it is not an institution that we had in mind when we signed on in San Francisco. We didn't expect it to turn out to be as inefficient as it has, understandably.

It has also done an incredible amount of very good work. I believe, as the President said with regard to the United States, the United States is the "essential nation." I believe it is the essential international organization. I am committed to it.

But, a friend of mine, when I used to serve on the county council in New Castle County, DE, a Republican named Henry Folsom came down to Washington—by the way, in the Reagan administration. Henry used to say, God bless his soul, "Joe, remember. Politics is the art of the practical."

Practically speaking, my pure stand of saying "no conditions and all the money" was rhetorically very appealing. But it didn't do a thing.

It was only, quite frankly, when the Senator from North Carolina—who has been a critic over the years of the United Nations—decided we had to fix this somehow; that we ended up over a period, I would say to the chairman, of probably 2 years of talk, negotiating, arguing, and compromising that we ended up where we are today. Where we are today is four-fifths or more of the way home.

Still, I for one do not like the conditions that precede us paying. I would rather say that these are conditions that we hope would be met, notwithstanding whether or not we would pay. But we are where we are.

So this is a process. This is a process.

I have spoken with all but two of the former Secretaries of State on this matter. When I put the question to them, as I did to Kofi Annan—All right, do you want this or do you want nothing?—every single person involved with the United Nations to whom I have posed that question said: No. No we will take this. We will take this.

The truth of the matter is there are choices. Our choices are this or nothing. All of us who are devoted to the United Nations, in terms of thinking it an essential body, have been unable to get a penny—a penny—toward these arrears. We have been noble, myself included, in our efforts. But we haven't gotten a penny for those "arrears."

Where we are today is with a decision. That is, is it partial, more than partial, is it the bulk of the arrearages to be paid, conditioned upon things which this Secretary of State says—by the way, the last piece of this was negotiated not by the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from North Carolina but by the Secretary of State speaking for the President of the United States and the chairman of the committee.

The administration has been candid. They said they are not sure they can get all of it done. They think they can. They are going to fight for it. But they think it is worth the fight—that it is worth the candlestick.

We are seized with a decision that I think is going to overwhelmingly pass, which is, do we keep these conditions that have been altered in light of the passage of 2 years of time to make them more likely to be able to be met, coupled with the $926 million paid out, as the bill calls for, much of it front-end loaded, or do we step back and say no, we are not going to?

I know the Senator from Maryland isn't suggesting this. But the other alternative is to step back and say unless we get it all, no conditions, all the arrears, we are not going to do anything, we will not be creating new arrears with this deal.

By the way, even though we are authorizing less than the administration requested for contributions to international organizations, we are about $43 million above what is needed in the first place.

I understand the State Department will soon announce a $28 million surplus in the fiscal year 1999 international organizations account. This would be applied to reduce the amount requested for fiscal 2000.

Also, because of exchange rate gains, the request is $20 million too high, as of April 30. $7 million is requested for war crimes commissions in Iraq and Cambodia. As much as I would like to see the commissions, neither looks likely in the very near future.

Finally, there is $8 million in the budget request to cover exchange rate fluctuations, but the committee bill already contains language that guards against adverse exchange rate variations. Section 801(f)(1) states:

... there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2000 and 2001 to offset adverse fluctuations in foreign currency exchange rates.

I am confident we have authorized enough funds to meet our current obligations to international organizations. I understand the Senator's concern and fear. But I do not believe when we pass this authorization bill, if it were appropriated as we suggest, that we are going to be further and further behind in this process.

It is true that we have not fully funded the administration's request for arrears payments to the United Nations and other international organizations. We are $95 million short of our request.

As I have said, in an ideal world I would like to pay our arrears to the United Nations in full, immediately, and without condition. But I have made a judgment, and I believe the correct one, a pragmatic judgment, because I know that such a proposal has no chance of passing—"no conditions, all the money."

In the last Congress, I asked the administration to give me a bottom line figure for arrears to the United Nations with which they could live. The administration responded with a memorandum to me which stated they were willing not to pay $68 million in arrears to UNIDO, an organization that we withdrew our membership from earlier in this decade.

Their judgment is that a total of $68 million in arrears is owed to an organization in which we are not a member, and to which we have no intention of paying membership dues.

They also told me they would apply an expected refund of $27 million from the U.N. to reduce our arrears. Unfortunately, that $27 million was used to reduce the fiscal year 1998 contributions because our bill got stalled in the House. Otherwise, we would have been in pretty good shape.

For those who are wondering how we came up with $926 million, if we added $68 million to the $27 million and subtract that from the total of $1.021 billion we owed, then we would arrive at our figure.

What we did was essentially pay the entirety of the arrearages that we thought were owed absent the $68 million they said they didn't want to pay to an organization we weren't a member of, and not contemplating the fact they have to use the $27 million because this bill got slowed up. It is true that $27 million U.N. refund has already been used and, thus, is not available for arrears. But I would note that this sum can be easily subtracted from arrears owed to the specialized U.N. agencies. Even with the $926 million provided in our plan, many of the specialized agencies will have to create or expand programs to absorb the arrears payments they are going to receive.

It sounds a bit counterintuitive that a plan which is supposed to control the size of the U.N. could actually end up expanding it temporarily. That will be the short-term effect for many of the specialized agencies, if they decide to devise ways to spend the extra money that is going to be flowing in.

Again, I personally would like to fully fund the administration request. I think I have outlined a solid political and substantive rationalization for providing the lower figure.

Finally, I emphasize again that there is $8 million in the budget request to cover exchange rate fluctuations. The committee bill, as I said, already contains language to guard against an adverse exchange rate. It is section 801(F)1. It states:

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary in each fiscal year 2000 and 2001 to offset the adverse fluctuations of foreign exchange currency rates.

I still agree with my friend from Maryland. That is, I believe the real hangup is the conditions. The truth of the matter is, we have basically paid all the arrears that we owe, that we say we owe. If you accept the administration's position that the $68 million owed to an organization we have been fighting with for 10 years, and we have been out of it for 3 or 4 years, that if we do not pay the $68 million owed—and had we not had the House stall with what Senator HELMS and I put together 2 years ago, we would be at the $1.021 billion. Again, it would be better if even that were done. I am not arguing that.

I almost hesitate to make the point, to be honest with my friend from Maryland, this is a fragile coalition we put together. I am not sure we would get all the Republican votes we need if we thought we were paying everything we owed. I don't want to go around making a big deal of the fact we are paying everything we think we owe, short of those two accounts, to be very blunt. I guess I shouldn't be so blunt. That is the truth of the matter, from my perspective, politically.

We have done a heck of a job. I don't know whether to praise my friend or not, because my praise on this issue is probably not very helpful to him, so I won't. But let me say there has been a very good-faith effort on the part of my friend from North Carolina. This is not nearly as draconian as it sounds.

Again, the single most significant thing my friend from North Carolina extracted in return for essentially paying off our arrears were the conditions that exist. The essence of the deal is, we basically paid all the arrears we say we owe, if this becomes law, if this is appropriated, in return for conditions to do things I don't disagree with my friend on, but I don't think we should have done it the way we did. I think we should have said, pay the arrears, and, by the way, from this point on, we are not going to unless these conditions persist.

However, politics is the art of compromise. The Senator from North Carolina has made a significant compromise here to get us to this point. Because of his standing on his side of the aisle and, quite frankly, his standing nationally, as one who is not about to be viewed as easily taken over by the U.N., I think the mere fact that he has done this adds a credibility to the process that exceeds by far and away the dollar value that would have been accomplished, had we gotten another $95 million or thereabouts in the account.

This is only the beginning of the fight. The Senator put his credibility on the line to get this done one time before. The House concluded that for reasons I will not take the time to go into now, that it would not do this.

The House committee, our comparable committee, has been good on this issue. But it is a different thing when it gets to the House floor. Although we are technically halfway there, if we pass this bill today, the truth of the matter is, we are probably only about 30 percent of the way there because there are other hurdles on the House side we have to overcome.

I truly appreciate the views of the Senator from Maryland, with whom I agree 100 percent. I also truly appreciate the statesmanship of my friend from North Carolina who has brought us to this point. Without him, quite frankly, this couldn't be done. That old expression we have overused, "Only Nixon can go to China," only HELMS could take us this far.

That is literally true. That is not an exaggeration. I thank him for that.

Hopefully, this is the beginning of a process that puts us in good stead, strengthens the United Nations, and makes it a more viable and tightly run organization.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENZI). The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, listening to my dear friend from Delaware, JOE BIDEN, I harken back to the days when there was very little working relationship between the two parties on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Today, I think the working relationship is very good. That is due to the efforts of Senator BIDEN and his desire to make things work.

Let me be candid. I am not in the mood to give away the store, and I haven't given it away regarding the United Nations yet. It remains to be seen whether the reforms both of us have been demanding will be in place early enough for this proposition, which I will discuss in just a minute, to take place. We will see.

I can't tell the Senate how many times my best friend—next to Dot Helms—Admiral Nance and I have talked about this very issue. Bud Nance is gone now, but I remember his counsel on this bill.

This measure is important to me because it bears the name of the Admiral James Wilson "Bud" Nance State Department Authorization bill. Bud is gone; he is at the Arlington National Cemetery, after a distinguished career. I miss him.

However, both Senator BIDEN and I are blessed with excellent staffs. I thank staff on both sides. For the minority, the Democrats, I especially thank the inimitable Ed Hall, Brian McKeon, Runeet Talwar, Diana Ohlbaum, Janice O'Connell, and Joan Woodward.

I am especially grateful to the Senate's legislative counsel, Art Rynearson, and, of course, the best part for me, the majority staff of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The staff was put together by Admiral Nance and me, but he became the chief of staff of the Foreign Relations Committee. Steve Biegun has succeeded Bud Nance. He has been very artful in his contribution to this measure. Patti McNerney, Garrett Grigsby, Marshall Billingslea, Michael Westphal, Beth Stewart, Roger Noriega—this Noriega was born in Kansas, by the way—Kirsten Madison, Marc Thiessen, Sherry Grandjean, Dany Pletka, who has just given birth to her second little girl—Richard Fontaine, Jim Doran, Natasha Watson, Christa Muratore, Laura Parker, Christa Bailey, Andrew Anderson and Susan Oursler. All of these young people on both sides have made a mighty contribution not only to the composition of the bill but the fact we were able to compose it at all.

We are working together now. I want to say to my friend, Senator BIDEN, I appreciate his friendship and his cooperation. I extend my congratulations to him.

Now then, this bill addresses several significant oversight and authorization issues that ought to be at least mentioned before we go to a vote.

No. 1, it proposes to strengthen and preserve the arms control verification functions of the U.S. Government while addressing other nonproliferation matters will.

No. 2, the bill authorizes a 5-year construction blueprint for upgrading U.S. embassies around the world to provide secure environments for America's personnel overseas. Unlike the funds provided more than a decade ago in the wake of a report by Admiral Inman calling for improved security of U.S. embassies, this bill would create a firewall for funding of other State Department expenditures. This, of course, would ensure that embassy funds are not raided again to pay for other State Department pet projects. I am just not going to stand for it, and this bill makes that very clear.

This bill makes some reforms to strengthen the Foreign Service and significantly, as Senator BIDEN has discussed at some length, the bill includes the United Nations reform package. This is not something we are going to lay on the table and say we are going to do someday. It is going to be done now. The United Nations is going to be reformed now or there is going to be trouble ahead. The reform agenda required by this bill, prior to payment of any U.S. taxpayers' dollars, has the full support of the Secretary of State and Senator BIDEN and me. These reforms were approved by the Senate during the 105th Congress by a vote of 90 to 5, with 5 Senators absent. But, of course, those reforms were vetoed by the President of the United States.

In conclusion, I want to pay my respects to all who have participated in the building of this legislation, those with whom I have disagreed as well as those with whom I have agreed. All in all, I think it is a very fine bill and I am glad to have had a very small part in it.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, we are going to debate H.R. 975. I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to perhaps speak for 5 minutes on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STEEL IMPORT LIMITATION

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I think I will come back to the floor, and depending on how many Senators are out here, I will speak more on this. But in this short period of time I want to try to deal with some of the arguments on this very important cloture vote on H.R. 975. There are three arguments I want to address in 4 or 5 minutes.

The first argument is that the steel crisis is over. That is what I hear from the White House. I say to my colleagues, I spent the weekend on the Iron Range in northeastern Minnesota, both in Duluth and on the Iron Range in Minnesota. If you were to speak to some of the 108 workers who have been laid off at EVTAC Mining, or talked to the workers at Minntac who had to make all sorts of concessions last fall to avoid layoffs, or if you were to talk to workers at LTV in Hoyt Lakes, you would find quite another reality. I think it would be hard for the administration or any Senator, Republican or Democrat, to go to the Iron Range in Minnesota, where we produce the iron ore for our steel, and tell these workers or their families that this crisis is over. This crisis is far from over.

To go to the flip side of the coin, but it is the same coin, I ask unanimous consent a letter dated June 18 from the CEOs of the major steel companies to Secretary Daley be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. WILLIAM M. DALEY,
Secretary of Commerce, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: We regret that your schedule required the cancellation of our meeting with you today. There are issues that are vital to our industry and to the Department's mission in trade law enforcement that require us to meet together as soon as you can do so.

We feel compelled, however, since we could not meet with you today, to convey to you immediately our emphatic disagreement with the comment attributed to you in this morning's Washington Post that "the steel crisis is over".

The steel crisis is still very much with us. Imports volumes are down from the disastrous levels of 1998 but are still very high by historic standards. While imports of hot-rolled steel are down dramatically due to your enforcement actions, the surge of imports in 1998 caused inventories to balloon to extremely high levels. These inventories have seriously depressed prices up until the present and will continue to do so until these stocks have been worked down. Moreover, cold-rolled imports are up dramatically through April of this year, 24% above the level of the first four months of last year. Imports of cut-to-length plate are up dramatically—25% year-to-year for this period. (If full year 1999 imports decline, it will only be because of the Department's prosecution of the cases against unfair trade that our companies recently filed.)

Prices remain extremely depressed. The producer price index for all steel mill products is down 9% (1999:Q2/1998:Q2). This is the largest decline in nearly 20 years. Prices for hot-rolled sheet, cold-rolled sheet and plate are down 11%, 9%, and 15%, respectively.

Operating rates have plunged from 93% to 80% between January and December 1998 and have remained at the depressed level through the first half of 1999. The decline in operating rates equates to about $2 billion in lost revenue in the second half of last year. On an annualized basis, a 10% change in operating rate equals about $5 billion in revenue. (Please see the attached charts addressing the facts set out above.)

The depressed prices and operating rates caused most American steel companies to post losses in the most recent quarter. Several steel companies have seen forced into bankruptcy. Thousands of those who were laid off due to unfairly traded imports are still out of work. Many thousands have seen their workweeks shortened and are still not back to full time.

For our industry, therefore, this crisis is far from over. It is very real, and very much with us.

We look forward to meeting with you soon. Your role in overseeing the Department's vigorous enforcement of the trade laws last fall was vital in preventing what is a continuing crisis from turning into an irreversible disaster. Your prompt action taken in initiating and prosecuting cases against dumping of hot-rolled steel from Japan, Russia and Brazil was essential to curtail the surge in these unfairly traded imports. The personal attention and energy which you have devoted to enforcing U.S. trade laws at the height of the import surge is deeply appreciated by all of us.

The Department is proceeding now to investigate other steel cases in cut-to-length plate and is due to make public its initiation decisions on the cold-rolled steel cases on Tuesday. These actions and decisions are vital to the future of the American steel industry.

Very truly yours,

Hank Barnette, Chairman & Chief Executive Officer, Bethlehem Steel Corporation; James DeClusin, Senior Executive Vice President, California Steel Industries; Don Daily, Vice President & General Manager, Gallatin Steel; Joseph Cannon, Chief Executive Officer & Chairman, Geneva Steel; Robert Schaal, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Gulf States Steel, Inc.; Roger Phillips, President and Chief Executive Officer, IPSCO Inc.; Dale E. Wiersbe, President and Chief Operating Officer, Ispat Inland Inc.; J. Peter Kelly, President & Chief Executive Officer, LTV Steel Company, Inc.; John Maczuzak, President & Chief Operating Officer, National Steel Corporation; Keith Busse, President & Chief Executive Officer, Steel Dynamics, Inc.; Paul Wilhelm, President, U.S. Steel Group, a Unit of USX Corporation; Richard Reiderer, President and Chief Executive Officer, Weirton Steel Corporation.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, they make it clear the crisis is far from over as well.

The global conditions at the root of the crisis have not gone away. Imports from the major foreign producers have declined, but other countries have taken their place and we see major producers shifting to different steel products to get around the dumping orders. We need this Rockefeller bill to plug the loopholes.

Dumping cases take time. In many cases the relief is too little too late, or it gets negotiated away in suspension agreements. I am afraid someday we are going to wake up and we are not going to have any steel industry at all.

In my State of Minnesota we were a part of what happened in the 1980s, when we lost 350,000 steelworker jobs and 28,000 people left the Iron Range for good. As a Senator, I do not want to let that happen again.

The second argument that is made by the administration is that we cannot go forward with this bill because this is quota relief, and the question is whether or not quota relief is WTO-legal.

I see here a bit of a double standard. When Mr. Carl Lindner from Chiquita

Bananas had a trade complaint, the administration did not hesitate to slap a 100-percent tariff on imports from Europe. But when our workers and working families ask for some relief under Section 201, which provides for quotas and is WTO-legal, then all of a sudden there is no relief forthcoming.

Finally, I make a point that this crisis is not the fault of steelworkers. They should not be the ones asked to pay the price. I am in complete agreement that we ought to care fiercely about what happens in Russia, Mexico, Thailand, Indonesia, Korea, and other countries as well, but again I see another double standard. When our financial interests, when a lot of our Wall Street interests, if you will, wanted to be able to invest capital in these countries and take capital out at a second's notice, when they wanted to put hot capital in and take hot capital out without any regulatory framework in place, they were pleased to do so as long as they were making huge profits. Then when they decided to pull their capital out, these countries were left in terrible trouble. When it came to whether or not there would be IMF bailouts and whether or not there would be any kind of public dollars to help these financial interests out, again we had an administration that was all for these Wall Street interests.

I come to the floor of the Senate today to say this administration ought to really put working families—steelworkers of the Iron Range, steelworkers all across the country—as high on its list of priorities as Wall Street investors. And not just those steelworkers but the communities where they work and the communities where they live.

This bill, H.R. 975, is a good place to start. I thank Senator ROCKEFELLER for his leadership. I am proud to be out here on the floor speaking on this legislation. I hope we not only get votes for cloture, but we get more than enough votes to override any Presidential veto. This is a critically important vote that is going to take place within the next hour.

I yield the floor.

FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2000 AND 2001

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, before we get into this traffic jam timewise, I want the Chair to state what the situation is with the time agreement so there will be no mistake about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At 11:35 a.m., we have a new time agreement that will begin with 40 minutes of debate equally divided between the two leaders, or their designees, on the cloture vote on the motion to proceed on H.R. 975.

Mr. HELMS. So there are 5 minutes remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 5 minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I did not know that was the situation before us. As I understand, at 11:35 a.m., under a previous unanimous consent, there will be 40 minutes of debate equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Preceding the vote at 12:15 p.m.; the Senator is correct.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BIDEN. I suggest the Senator start, and if no one is here to speak on the steel bill, while he is still speaking, we might be able to ask consent for him to continue. Otherwise, he can pick up afterward.

Mr. HARKIN. That makes sense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I thank the chairman and ranking member, the managers of the bill, for including the amendment I had offered in the managers' packet. I thank Senators WELLSTONE, KOHL, LAUTENBERG, KENNEDY, DODD, TORRICELLI, WYDEN, and FEINGOLD for cosponsoring this sense-of-the-Senate resolution regarding the recent adoption in Geneva by the International Labor Organization of the Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

June 17, 1999 marked a historic event in the battle to end the scourge of abusive and exploitative child labor. By a unanimous vote, the International Labor Organization's member states approved a new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

For the first time in history, the world spoke with one voice in opposition to abusive and exploitative child labor. Countries from across the political, economic, and religious spectrum—from Jewish to Muslim, from Buddhists to Christians—came together to proclaim unequivocally that "abusive and exploitative child labor is a practice which will not be tolerated and must be abolished."

Gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is an acceptable practice because of a country's economic circumstance. Gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is acceptable because of cultural traditions. And gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is a necessary evil on the road to economic development. The United States and the international community as a whole unanimously for the first time laid those arguments to rest and laid the groundwork to begin the process of ending the scourge of abusive and exploitative child labor.

Mr. President, for the better part of a decade, I have been in my own capacity working to do what I can to end abusive and exploitative child labor around the globe, including in the United States. The ILO estimates that there are about 250 million children worldwide, many as young as 6 or 7, who are working, economically active. These are not just part-time jobs. Many of them work in dangerous environments which are detrimental to their emotional, physical, and moral well-being.

Just last year, I traveled to Pakistan, India, Nepal, and Bangladesh where I witnessed the travesty of abusive and exploitative child labor firsthand.

This chart is a picture I took myself. This is in a small plant, a factory, to use the term loosely, hidden away on the outskirts of Katmandu. I was there on a Sunday, and Sunday evening I was accompanied by a young man who is a former child laborer. He took me to this place on the outskirts of the city where, because of friends working there who said the owner was gone and he knew the guard at the gate, we got in surreptitiously. In fact, the sign on the outside of the gate said no one under the age of 14 was permitted to work there. It was a big sign in both English and in Nepalese.

Once we got in, we saw kids as young as 6 and 7. This is just one of the many pictures I took depicting these kids working full time, and this was in the evening. This was probably about 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening on a Sunday.

In India, I met children who were liberated from hand-knotted carpet factories where they were chained—chained, Mr. President—to looms and forced to work as many as 12 hours a day, 7 days a week. These children were nothing more than slaves. They earned no money. They received no education. They had no hope for a future until they were freed by the South Asian Coalition Against Child Servitude, headed by Kailash Satyarthi. I can tell you that I myself have only glimpsed into the dark world of exploitative child labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has—

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator, how much time does he need?

Mr. HARKIN. I need probably 10, 15 minutes. I do not know if my colleagues are here to speak under the previous order. I will have to come back.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will ask that the Senator be able to proceed after we vote on the cloture motion to proceed to the steel bill during the party caucus recess.

Mr. HARKIN. As I understand, there will be 40 minutes of debate and then we will have a vote?

Mr. BIDEN. Correct.

Mr. HARKIN. Are we going to come back to this bill right after that vote?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes. What we do not want to do is hold up the Holbrooke hearing. We will ask unanimous consent that Senator DODD have 15 minutes and that the Senator from Iowa have possibly another 10, 15 minutes during the period of the party caucuses in order to meet the deadline of the Holbrooke hearing at 2:30 p.m., which we have been fighting to get for a year and a half. That is the objective.

Obviously, the regular order is to move to steel. Unless my steel colleagues are willing to yield the Senator from Iowa 15 minutes now, which he can request, I know of no other alternative. The Senator might ask.

Mr. HARKIN. If my colleagues are not going to speak on the steel bill, then I will add the time to continue my remarks.

REDUCTION IN VOLUME STEEL IMPORTS—MOTION TO PROCEED

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 11:35 a.m. having arrived, there will now be 40 minutes of debate equally divided between the two leaders, or their designees, prior to the cloture vote on the motion to proceed to H.R. 975, which the clerk will report.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to Calendar No. 66, H.R. 975, the steel import limitation bill:

Trent Lott, Rick Santorum, Mike DeWine, Jesse Helms, Ted Stevens, Harry Reid, Byron Dorgan, Orrin Hatch, Jay Rockefeller, Robert C. Byrd, Robert Torricelli, Fritz Hollings, Pat Roberts, Arlen Specter, Richard Shelby, and Craig Thomas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I control the time in favor of the cloture motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 886

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I have a unanimous consent request from the leader.

I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding rule XII, immediately following the 12:15 p.m. vote, Senator DODD be recognized to speak relative to the State Department authorization bill for up to 15 minutes. I further ask unanimous consent that following his remarks, the Senate stand in recess until 2:15 p.m. for the policy conferences. I also ask that at 2:15 p.m. today, there be 5 minutes equally divided for debate on the Feingold amendment, and following that debate, the Senate proceed to a vote on the Feingold amendment No. 692. I ask unanimous consent that following the vote, Senator HELMS be recognized to offer the managers' amendment and it be considered agreed to. Finally, I ask there be 5 minutes equally divided between the chairman and ranking member for closing remarks, that the bill then be read a third time, and the Senate proceed to a vote on passage of the bill, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BIDEN. Reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator to withhold that request. I know he was doing it as a favor. I appreciate it very much, but two things intervened in the last 5 minutes. I ask him to withhold that unanimous consent request for now.

Mr. SANTORUM. I withhold the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Holly Vineyard, a Finance Committee detailee from the Department of Commerce, be granted floor privileges during the pendency of H.R. 975.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the cloture motion on the motion to proceed to the issue of steel quotas.

Senator ROCKEFELLER, who is my counterpart on the Democratic side leading this debate, and I are not people who have come to the floor of the Senate in favor of quotas. In fact, we think we are driven to this point as people who believe in free and fair trade, to ask the Senate to consider imposing quotas on the dumping of steel in this country by foreign nations.

It is remarkable what has occurred. It is unprecedented what has occurred in the steel industry over the past 2½ years. We have seen the level of steel rise, as far as imports into this country, two, three, four, five times the amount from some countries in the past 2½ years—and it continues.

One of the mantras I hear from the administration, which is lobbying against this bill, is that the crisis is over. I can say that in the case of China, for example, the world's largest producer, just in the first 4 months of this year their dumping was up 80 percent—their imports were up 80 percent.

So if the crisis is over, why then was the largest steel manufacturer dumping more steel into our market in the first 4 months of this year?

We have a continuing problem. What Senator ROCKEFELLER and I, and others who have joined us in this cause, are suggesting is something, frankly, that is very modest. We are suggesting a quota for 3 years to stop this outrageous and, I might add, illegal dumping.

We have won or are winning every single dumping case in the international arena. Every single case we are winning because of the illegality of what is being done by our foreign competitors in the steel industry.

What we are asking is not to go to a low rate of imports; what we are asking is to go to a rate of import into this country, a share of imports in the domestic market equal to a level that has only been reached four times in the past 30 years. So arguably we are setting the bar very high.

We are not going in to protect an industry that is inefficient or that is uncompetitive. The steel industry today is the most productive, competitive, and efficient steel industry in the world. Yet they are being wiped out by subsidized, illegally dumped steel, costing us thousands of good-paying jobs and thousands of families not going home with paychecks to support their children.

I am very hopeful that we can get a bipartisan vote today to at least move to proceed to the bill. That is all this vote does. It says let's put this issue front and center in the Senate, let's point out to our competitors around the globe that the Senate is not going to step aside and allow this illegal dumping to continue, that we are going to debate it, that we take this issue very seriously, and that we are not going to allow this kind of illegal action to continue.

I know my 3 minutes are up. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise today to express my opposition to H.R. 975 and to urge my colleagues, in the strongest terms possible, to vote no on cloture. Let me explain why.

Our steel industry faces a serious challenge as a result of foreign competition. That challenge stems from the persistent overcapacity in the global steel industry that is the legacy of decades of foreign government interventionism.

The quota bill, however, does nothing to eliminate this overcapacity. What the quota bill does do is simply lock in a certain share of our market—the quota amount—for foreign imports at a vastly inflated price.

According to a study by the Institute for International Economics, this bill would raise steel import prices by about $29 a ton. This represents a windfall of $800 million to the lucky foreign producers who get their goods into the United States under the quota, with the price tag being paid by the American people.

While the bill does enrich certain foreign producers, it also poses a grave threat to our economy. For every 1 job in the steel industry, there are 40 jobs in the steel-using industries. These 40 workers manufacture autos, industrial machinery, kitchen appliances, and other products. All these jobs will be at risk as a result of the quota bill, because this legislation seeks arbitrary limits on the amount of steel coming into our country. And the quotas apply regardless of domestic demand and regardless of whether the type of steel is even produced in the United States.

To make matters worse, this measure would actually help foreign companies that compete against American steel-using industries both in the United States and abroad. For instance, U.S. automakers would be forced to pay higher prices for steel than their foreign competitors. This would disadvantage American companies in our market and in the foreign markets in which they compete. The impact on jobs and on the economy could be severe.

This bill would also put us at risk of retaliation by our trading partners. Our farmers are well aware of this risk. That is why 21 leading agriculture groups signed a letter last week stating their strong opposition to this legislation. These include the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, the National Association of Wheat Growers, the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, and others. As these groups understand all too well, passage of this legislation will threaten our access to foreign markets at a time when these markets are most needed for our businesses and our farmers.

If we decide to go down the path of quotas, we must also keep in mind that the price will ultimately be paid by the American consumer.

I yield myself 1 more minute.

By raising the average price of products made with steel, the quota constitutes an artificial tax on ordinary Americans regardless of wealth or income. Keep in mind that the tax will not be insignificant. According to the Institute of International Economics study, the bill will, at most, save 1,700 jobs in the steel industry but will do so at a cost to the economy of about $800,000 a job. For us to put such a burden on the American people is unconscionable.

With that said, let us not forget that the import surge the quotas are designed to address appears to be over. In fact, imports of all steel products for the first 4 months of this year were below the imports for the same period in 1997, well before the surge began.

I yield myself 30 seconds.

Let me address one last point.

For some of my colleagues, this may be seen as a free vote. I, like many, hope the President will have the courage to veto this legislation if it does pass. But we have to remember that the American people sent us to Congress to further their national interests. Let's not disappoint them.

I urge my colleagues to vote against cloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished junior Senator from West Virginia, who has been a tremendous leader on this issue.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania, who equally has been a distinguished leader on this issue.

Mr. President, the previous speaker, my esteemed chairman of the Finance Committee, talked about voting on a quota bill. We are not voting on a quota bill today. We are voting on a motion to proceed. This whole steel situation is very complex. Most States do not produce steel, and a lot of people do not know about some of the complexities.

We deserve debate on this. Traditionally, in the Senate we do that. That is what we are here for, to iron out issues in a rational way.

The steel crisis is not over. It is not over at all. You talk to any steel CEO. They know it is not over. I will just give one statistic. That is all I will give.

If you take the first 4 months of 1999, which brings us almost up to today, versus the first 4 months of 1998, which was the worst of the steel crisis, yes, the steel import crisis has abated a little bit, but only 5 percent from the all-time historic high in the dumping of subsidized steel. It has decreased by a total of 5 percent across the steel front.

So the crisis remains with us. It is a very serious matter. It disrupts and undoes communities, sections of States across this country, not just West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Utah, but the rest of them. I do not think we have done what we could have done to enforce our trade laws. They are very clear. The administration has not done what it could have done. But that day is past. So we have to do what we have to do, and that brings us to the quota bill. This is not the bill itself; this is the motion to proceed to discuss what we are going to do as a result of that vote.

I think we have a moral obligation to our steelworkers and to ourselves to honorably and fairly discuss something that is very complex and which needs our very closest attention.

I thank the Presiding Officer and yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise with a measure of respect for all the parties to this question before us but with one absolute conviction, which is that what is proposed with this legislation, what has passed the House of Representatives, is illegal under international law. That, sir, is a law we created as the one party that emerged from World War II with its economy intact and the lesson of the protectionism that began on this floor, sir, in 1930 with the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. It spread throughout the world. If you want a short list of the causes of the Second World War, that was one. The American leaders, during the 1930s, with Cordell Hull, began the trade agreements program; and then we had hoped to have an international trade organization as part of a triad with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. Again, it failed in the Finance Committee. But in Geneva, a temporary ad hoc arrangement was put together, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; it was temporary for about 45 years. But we acquired great respect for the rules, and 51 years ago, sir, article 11 of the General Agreement stated:

No prohibitions or restrictions, other than duties or other charges, can be made through import quotas, export licenses, or other measures. None shall be instituted or maintained by any contracting party on the importation of any product.

Now, sir, if we were to do this, there would be immediate retaliation. And it would be illegal. It is uncalled for. The law says you may not do what is being proposed, and other parties, as former Senator Baker would say, "having no dog in this fight," would find themselves retaliated against, as would the agricultural industry. I plead, let's abide by the laws we helped to create.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I yield to the senior Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD, is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Pennsylvania. I am one of the original cosponsors of the quota bill. I urge my colleagues to support cloture. I compliment my very able colleague, JAY ROCKEFELLER, for his diligent work on this matter. I also compliment Mr. SANTORUM, our colleague from Pennsylvania, for his equally good work.

The quota bill is a critical measure in addressing the steel import crisis that is confronting U.S. steel mills, and I am mystified by statements suggesting that the Emergency Steel Loan Guarantee Bill is a competing interest against the quota bill.

I am here to set the record straight.

As a result of global financial chaos, in 1998, a record level of 40 million tons of cheap and illegally dumped imported steel flooded the U.S. market. That represents an 83 percent increase over the 23 million tons average for the previous eight years! The result has been the loss of 10,000 steel jobs, and the bankruptcy of several U.S. steel mills.

While both bills are before the Senate because of the steel import crisis—one has been passed and the conferees thereon were appointed yesterday—the quota bill and the Emergency Steel Loan Guarantee Bill serve vastly different purposes, and both deserve support from every member in the Senate.

The quota bill is a long-term solution to the steel import crisis. The quota bill would cap steel imports at a level that equals the average amount of steel that came into U.S. markets in 1995, 1996, and the first half of 1997. The measure would take effect immediately and prohibit any country from sending more steel to the United States than it did in July of 1997. The quotas would terminate in three years. The President could achieve these import limits by imposing quotas, tariff surcharges, negotiated enforceable voluntary export restraint agreements, or other means.

The Emergency Steel Loan Guarantee Program which passed the Senate last week is a helping hand to U.S. steel mills that have been injured by the cheap and illegal imports. It is a short-term assistance program to aid U.S. steel mills during their hour of need. It does not address the underlying critical problem of both cheap and illegally dumped imported steel that continues to adversely impact U.S. steel mills. While essential to aiding thousands of hardworking Americans, the steel loan guarantee program is no substitute, nor was it intended to be, for the long-term solution that is offered by the quota bill.

The House of Representatives passed the quota bill by a vote of 289 yeas to 141 nays. Now it is the Senate's turn to send a vigorous message to our trading partners that this nation will not idly sit by while another American industry is shipped abroad.

Last week, I strongly urged my colleagues to support the Emergency Steel Loan Guarantee Program. It is a fair and important measure for the U.S. steel industry and thousands of hardworking Americans. Let there be no mistake: members can not hide behind one vote and claim to have solved the crisis in our domestic steel industry. The Senate must act to help the U.S. steel industry on a long-term basis as well. This Senate acted wisely in passing the Emergency Steel Loan Guarantee Program. It provides a cash flow for financially damaged steel companies and it will enable them to invest in further modernization. It will save jobs that are at risk from illegal imports. Likewise, this Senate should ensure that the need for the loan guarantee program is minimized by casting a vote that will stop the illegal dumping of foreign steel. The quota bill will stop the cheating and finally provide U.S. steel mills with an international playing field that is fair.

I thank the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SANTORUM, for his courtesy and kindness. I thank my colleague from West Virginia, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, for his leadership in this matter.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to Senator GRASSLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we are about to vote on a very major and very dangerous revision of U.S. trade policy, and we are going to do it without the benefit of a hearing and, quite frankly, we are doing it under great political pressure. That is not a very good environment.

If we give in to pressure to enact quota legislation, we will do great harm. I believe the proponents are all acting, of course, with the best of intentions. Yet we must not allow our desire to help a troubled industry in the short term do long-term damage to our economy.

Sixty-nine years ago, Congress passed the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, and they did it with the best of good intentions. Its aim was to help the American farmer, with a limited upward revision of tariffs on foreign produce. But it had the opposite effect. It strangled foreign trade. It deepened and widened the severity of the Great Depression.

Other countries faced with deficits and exports had to pay for their imports, and they responded by applying quotas and embargoes on American goods.

I think the history of the depth and the severity of the retaliation against U.S. agricultural products from that period is shocking, because our foreign buyers stopped buying our agricultural products in retaliation.

In 1930, the United States exported just over $1 billion worth of agricultural goods. By 1932 that amount had been cut in half. Almost every American export sector was hit by foreign retaliation but particularly agriculture.

As the United States agricultural exports fell in the face of foreign retaliation, farm prices fell sharply, weakening the solvency of our rural banks. Their weakened condition undermined deposit confidence leading to the runs on the banks and bank failures, and ultimately the contraction of money supply.

Farm prices for many agricultural products are already at rock bottom levels. Can we in good conscience put so much of our economy at risk with this legislation?

In 1998, the United States exported agricultural products worth $53 billion, accounting for one-third of America's total agricultural products, and nearly 1 million jobs. Agriculture is perhaps the most vulnerable sector of our economy to foreign retaliation, and our trading partners know it.

Retaliation is not a thing of the past. It is a hardball tactic that is frequently used as an instrument of national policy. Just look at the recent history. Japan threatened to retaliate when we took some action against them. In 1983, China temporarily stopped buying U.S. wheat in retaliation of another President's protectionist policies.

We have to learn from the past, and we have to say if it is bad for agriculture, it is bad for America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Pennsylvania.

I would like to address a question to the chairman of the committee to see if he would be willing to consider this question. It has to do with a bill which the good Senator from Delaware introduced to modify section 201 of the Trade Act of 1974 in order to strengthen the utility of that section.

I am wondering whether or not on this bill, which was ordered reported, I understand, by the Finance Committee last Wednesday—it is the chairman's intention to press for Senate consideration.

Mr. ROTH. I say to my distinguished colleague that is my intent. We think it is a valuable change. We hope to have it on the floor.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. May I say that the Senator from New York offered that legislation, and it was welcomed by the chairman. It is a bipartisan measure.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, imposing quotas on the importation of foreign steel to protect some U.S. steel producers will have several negative effects on the domestic and world economy.

The best way to combat illegal trade practices is to adopt trade laws that are compatible with World Trade Organization rules. We already have in place section 201, dealing with temporary import surges and section 301, regarding anti-dumping. They have both proven effective in recent months in altering the steel trade balance.

Steel imports are already subject to over 100 outstanding antidumping and countervailing duty orders. Congress should not judge the outcome of these investigations by imposing quotas on top of existing trade rules. Maintaining consistency in our trade policy is of utmost importance, given that the U.S. is the world's largest trading country. Furthermore, The United States will host the WTO ministerial meeting in Seattle later this year. The success of these ongoing international trade talks depends on our credibility and compliance with those rules.

We must recognize that imposing on steel imports may affect other important U.S. industries as well. In Mississippi there are wire producers, shipbuilders and manufacturers who provide thousands of jobs and whose products contribute to our strong U.S. economy. And, when retaliations occur as a result of our implementation of quotas, they will undoubtedly affect other sectors of our economy, including agriculture.

In Mississippi alone agriculture exports of cotton, soybeans, poultry, rice and meat account for $850 million and 13,900 jobs according to the USDA and Census Bureau. The American Farm Bureau reports that exports constitute more than one-third of all U.S. agricultural sales. More than 1 million Americans today have jobs dependent on U.S. agricultural exports, including farming, food processing and transportation.

The Coalition to Promote U.S. Agricultural Exports reports that every one billion dollars in exports helps create as many as 17,000 new jobs. In light of the market crises abroad in Asia, Russia, and the New Independent States of the former Soviet Union, it is more important than ever to assist the agricultural community by maintaining its access to the world's markets. This is the key to economic recovery of the farm sector.

U.S. agricultural and manufacturing exports totaled more than $680 billion last year. If Congress imposes quotas inconsistent with WTO rules, all U.S. industries may be targets for retaliation, putting at risk the revenues and jobs these industries and their exports produce. It is these very WTO agreements which enable our trading partners to retaliate against our exports.

This legislation's protection for the specialized steel industry will lead to protectionism. For the good of all U.S. industries—as well as agriculture—open markets, free, and fair trade, and a rules-based international trading system ought to be the principles on which we base our trade laws.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to express my opposition to the steel quota bill, H.R. 975. Simply put, steel quotas are wrong. The protectionist measures proposed in this legislation represent a failed trade policy that the United States abandoned long ago. For the last 50 years, the United States has been the world's leading advocate of open markets. At the same time, we have grown to be the strongest and most productive economy on earth. Now is not the time for this government to reverse an economic policy that has served it so well.

Steel quotas are wrong for the world's economy, and by definition America's economy. In this era of global business, open markets are essential to international prosperity. In the midst of the Asian economic crisis, American leadership in keeping markets open has prevented a global financial meltdown. The U.S. and its allies have spent years developing an international trading system. Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin was not exaggerating last week when he warned that the steel quota bill could set off a wave of market access restrictions that would undermine this system and threaten the world's financial health.

Steel quotas are also wrong for the American economy. There is no question that open markets present some difficult challenges for American companies. They lead to stiffer competition and force greater efficiency. But open markets also mean greater opportunities. As a nation, we are succeeding. The United States is the strongest and most prosperous nation on earth. We have the most skilled workforce, the most productive factories and the most innovative thinkers anywhere in the world. Our commitment to open markets has played a key role in this success.

In my home state of Alaska, for example, international trade is a vital part of the economy. Last year, Alaskan companies exported more than 750 million dollars worth of merchandise to foreign countries. And that was an off year in my state because of the Asian flue—in most years, our merchandise exports total nearly 1 billion dollars.

For many reasons, the quota bill will do more harm to the American economy than good. First, the steel quota bill will provoke foreign countries to retaliate against our exports. And the United States will be in no position to complain. The international trading system—the one that we played a leading role in creating—authorizes countries to retaliate against those who erect trade barriers such as quotas. This retaliation will be devastating to our farmers and factory workers. It will cost many more American jobs than it will save. As American companies lose sales abroad, they will be forced to cut jobs and close doors at home.

Second, the quota bill will deny American manufacturers the steel they need to make their products. Domestic steel companies are only able to meet about 75 percent of the demand for steel in this country. As a result, steel quotas could create dangerous steel shortages—shortages that hurt the oil industry in Alaska. In addition, the quota bill is completely insensitive to the types of steel that American companies need. There are many special types of steel that simply are not made in the U.S. Quotas could completely deny American companies access to those special types of steel, forcing them to reduce the quality of their products or move their production overseas.

Finally, by making a critical raw material more expensive, steel quotas will put many of our products at a world market disadvantage. Because American manufacturers will be forced to pay more for steel than their foreign competitors, their products will be more expensive. Again, the steel quota bill will result in lost sales abroad and lost jobs at home.

For all of these reasons, we must not pass the steel quota bill. It is wrong for the United States and wrong for the world's economy. As Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan recently warned, it will indeed be a great tragedy if we pass this legislation.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I will vote for cloture on the motion to proceed to H.R. 975 in order to bring this issue to the floor.

That is the best way, and perhaps the only way, to insure a debate on how to address the steel import crisis in a timely manner.

The motion to proceed isn't the end point. It is not final passage. Only if the motion to proceed is adopted can we debate how to act effectively and legally to avoid the kind of surges in steel imports which have illegally impacted our steel industry.

Ms. MUKULSKI. Mr. President, I am proud to cosponsor the Stop Illegal Steel Trade Act. This legislation will enable us to stand up for steel. It will create a level playing field for the American steel industry and our steel workers.

We must stand up for steel.

Today, our steel industry and steel workers are under attack by illegal and unfair trading practices. Brazil, Russia, and Japan have dumped cheap steel on the American market that has drastically impacted the price of steel. Over the last year and a half steel imports have increased by 47 percent. The producer price index for all steel mill products is down 9 percent. This is the largest decline in nearly 20 years. If this continues, American steel mills will simply not survive.

I have always been for free trade as long as it's fair trade. There has to be equal access and opportunity and a level playing field for American industry. But I cannot sit by and allow an industry that is fundamental to the American economy to be destroyed by what amounts to predatory trade practices. Our steel industry is ready and willing to compete—but they can't compete against unfair, illegal, predatory trade practices.

Steel is a part of our everyday life—we drive steel cars, work in steel buildings, and our national security is protected by steel aircraft carriers. We must do everything we can to preserve our steel industry.

That is why I am proud to be a cosponsor of the legislation we are considering today. This bill would place restrictions on steel imports for three years. It also authorizes the President to take steps to ensure that steel imports return to pre-crisis levels. The Secretaries of the Treasury and Commerce will enforce the regulations on steel imports. I think these are important steps to revitalize our steel industry.

We owe it our hardworking, dedicated steel workers. The work week of many at Bethlehem Steel has been shortened. This means less food on the table. This means late mortgages, rents, and car payments. And all this because foreign countries are desperately trying to stabilize their own economies on the backs of our steel workers.

These countries are not going to throw our steel industry a curve ball. With this legislation we will force Japan, Brazil, and Russia to play fair. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill and stand up in steel.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to speak relatively briefly on the steel import limitation bill.

Similar legislation passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 289-141. While this quota legislation is a very strong measure, it reflects the necessity that strong action be taken to enforce U.S. trade laws to stop an avalanche of dumping by foreign countries.

We have seen the decimation and disintegration of the American steel industry by unfair foreign imports. Twenty years ago, in 1979, approximately 453,000 steelworkers were employed. Today that figure is about 160,000. Some $50 billion has been invested by the American steel industry to modernize, but there is no way that the American steel industry can compete with dumped goods, the sale of goods in the United States at prices lower than the price at which such goods are being sold by the producing companies in their own country or in some other country. These goods come into the United States from a number of countries—from Russia, from Brazil, from Ukraine, from South Africa and from China—at prices less than the cost of production. This is the antithesis of fair trade.

This situation requires a change. Twelve executives from American steel companies sent a letter to the Secretary of Commerce Daley in response to his comment last week that the steel crisis is over—said Secretary Daley. This letter, dated June 18, 1999, says, in pertinent part, the following:

The steel industry started some seven actions for antidumping, and six of those were subjected to suspension agreements by the Department of Commerce, to the detriment of the steel companies.

I ask unanimous consent that this chart on steel imports and suspension agreement be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPECTER. Steel import limitations, or quotas, provide for a drastic remedy. Along with the steel industry, other industries in the United States have been victimized by the failure to enforce U.S. trade laws.

I have, for the past 15 years, proposed legislation which would authorize equitable relief to provide for enforcement of the U.S. trade laws. At the present time, if complaints are filed with the International Trade Commission, it takes up to a year—or more—to have those matters resolved. An equitable action, a court of equity, would result in having these matters resolved in the course of a few weeks.

Until that is done, it appears to be necessary for some very decisive action. This is why I cosponsored the steel import limitation bill.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to the cloture motion to proceed to H.R. 975, the Steel Import bill. I do so for three reasons. First, I think that this legislation is protectionist and invites retaliation under the World Trade Organization; second, I believe that it may endanger the health and stability of the international economy; and, third, I believe that it may endanger the health and stability of the U.S. economy, including the steel industry it is intended to protect.

I understand the appeal of this legislation for those who support it, and believe that they are well intentioned in wishing to see legislation passed which protects the U.S. steel industry.

As supporters of this legislation have pointed out, there was an undeniable surge in steel imports into the United States last year. Over the past three years, economic instability in East Asia, Russia, and Latin America have resulted in a weakening of the world steel market. According to the Congressional Research Service, between August 1997 and August 1998, imports surged almost 80%.

But today, it is important to note, steel imports have returned to their pre-crisis levels, down roughly 44% in April 1999 since last August's peak, according to the office of the United States Trade Representative.

Where I disagree with supporters of this legislation, then, is that although I too believe that some complaints about unfair competition and unfair trade practices are, of course, warranted, the solution to those complaints found in this bill—the imposition of unyielding import quotas—is an approach which I believe to be counterproductive and even potentially harmful to the health of the U.S. economy.

First, the protectionism sought by this bill would put the United States in violation of world trade rules, and would invite retaliation against U.S. producers of a range of goods in overseas markets, jeopardizing jobs at home.

The World Trade Organization permits the application of "safeguard measures" such as quotas only in very specific circumstances, and never unilaterally. In the absence of a determination that the product in question is being imported in such increased quantities as to cause or threaten to cause serious injury to the domestic industry, unilateral measures such as those included in this bill are not permitted. And if a nation takes such a unilateral measure, the countries affected are allowed to take retaliatory measures.

Thus, if this legislation is enacted, the United States would face the real possibility of retaliation by the world's steel exporting countries. Under the WTO rules, other countries will have the right to retaliate against our exports. They could put at risk our most competitive sectors—such as agriculture, high-tech, or pharmaceuticals.

In fact, a June 18 letter signed by the American Farm Bureau Federation, the International Dairy Foods Association, and the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, among others, states that:

At a time when U.S. farmers are facing severe financial hardships, continued access to global markets is critical to preserve farm income . . . since growth for the U.S. agricultural sector hinges on access to world markets, passing legislation that violates the WTO threatens economic growth in the farm sector.

In addition, there could also be retaliation against U.S. products that use steel, such as automobiles, heavy machinery, or construction. For example, according to a letter I received from Boeing:

In 1999 we expect to deliver approximately $18 billion in airplanes to international customers, many of whom are struggling to purchase these planes as a result of the Asian financial crisis. A number of these airplane deliveries could be at risk if new limits on imported steel are imposed.

The unilateral protectionism embodied in this bill would undermine the international trading system and the institutions, rules, and regulations to safeguard the international economy that the United States has worked so hard to put into place over the past fifty years. As we have seen in numerous cases, these institutions and rules have helped the U.S. gain market access when other nations sought to prevent it, and have helped the U.S. economy to grow and created numerous jobs here in the United States.

As the world's largest trading nation, U.S. interests are best served by supporting—not undermining—the rules-based international economic and trading system.

This leads me to my second point, and the second reason I am opposed to this legislation: I believe that this legislation threatens to undermine the health and stability of the international economy, and with it the base for much of America's current economic prosperity. Free trade has been a prime ingredient in the eight year U.S. economic boom.

Moreover, in the past year we have begun to turn the corner on a global economic crisis. Maintaining open world markets is vital to global recovery in Asia, Russia, Brazil, and elsewhere. These countries have not closed their markets to U.S. products despite the economic pressures they have faced in the past several years. If the U.S. takes a significant step towards protectionism, it will set off a global chain-reaction.

Indeed, according to a May 25 letter I received from Raymond Chretien, the Canadian Ambassador to the United States, passage of this legislation:

... would set a protectionist precedent that would encourage other industries, in the U.S. and other countries, to seek unilateral relief outside of legitimate, established, trade remedies. The world economy, and workers in affected countries, can ill afford the turmoil that could ensue in international commerce.

According to Brookings Analyst Robert Crandall, HR 975 is "one of the most blatantly protectionist pieces of legislation since the 1930s". I do not believe that a single member of this body wants the United States, or the international economy, to risk a return to those days of global depression.

Finally, although the quotas might have some marginal palliative effect for some of the old-line steel factories, they would have a far larger effect on the overall health and well-being of the U.S. economy, and threaten to harm countless other U.S. workers and consumers.

This is the third reason I oppose this bill: I believe that it is bad for the U.S. economy, including the steel industry.

To take one example, steel import quotas would increase the price of steel used by the automobile industry, harming the auto industry and auto workers, and would in turn show up in higher auto sticker prices, harming U.S. consumers hoping to be able to purchase reasonably priced cars.

In short, steel import quotas will undermine U.S. manufacturing competitiveness in a range of industries and business that rely on steel, from metal fabrication to transport to industrial machinery to construction; industries that in toto employ over 8 million workers.

For example, I received a letter from the Aggressive Engineering Corporation, a small California company that serves military and commercial industry in their metal stamping needs. According to this letter:

Our company relies on steel from domestic producers. However, U.S. steel producers are able to supply only about 75% of the demand for steel, leaving a yearly shortfall of 30 million tons. In order to maintain our operations in the United States, we depend on foreign steel. . . While we all agree that it is important to maintain U.S. jobs and job growth, steel is no less important than other sectors. Please remember that steel-using industries employ more than 40 American workers for every worker in the steel industry. Quotas do not work. They will harm consumers and steel-consuming industries to a much greater extent than they could ever help steel producers or steelworkers.

It is also important to keep in mind that although many of the old-line steel mills face serious difficulties, that is not the same as saying that overall the U.S. steel industry is in trouble. In fact, many of the problems faced by old-line steel mills stem less from import problems than from decades-old mills that are unable to compete with the efficient new mini-mills located right here in the United States. Even as the U.S. faced the "import surge" last year, U.S. mills rolled out 102 million tons of steel in 1998, the second highest total in the past two decades.

In addition, The Wall Street Journal has reported that 25% of the steel entering the United States last year was bought by American steelmakers, who otherwise could not have met the demands of their customers.

In other words, while seeking to protect the steel industry, this legislation could in fact harm the industry by protecting the least efficient producers at the expense of the more efficient, and by preventing American steelmakers from getting access to the steel they need to meet customer demand.

In response to this surge in imports last year, earlier this year the Administration put in place an aggressive Steel Action Plan to strictly enforce the trade laws already on the books; enter into new bilateral agreements with Japan, Russia, and Korea regarding their steel imports to the United States; create new sources of early import data and an active monitoring of safeguards; and lend support for the Section 201 safeguard law.

In addition, the Department of Commerce determination on the import surge this February, recently supported by a finding of the International Trade Commission, has paved the way for the Administration to slap duties on Japanese and Brazilian steel and forced Russia to restrict its imports.

I believe that the Administration's response has been tough but fair. And I believe that the proof of the effectiveness of this response is in the pudding: By all accounts the steel import crisis is over, with imports having receded back to pre-crisis levels.

Under these circumstances—passing potentially harmful quota legislation after the crisis has passed—is the wrong way to approach this issue, and I hope my colleagues will join me in opposing the cloture motion to proceed to this bill.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, today, the Senate will cast a very important vote on whether we will stand up and honor our commitments to United States trade policies, or enact protectionist trade measures on steel imports that will have little or no favorable effect on the steel industry, yet will ultimately harm many segments of our nation's economy.

Let me first stipulate one point—I am now, and I always have been, a strong supporter of Ohio's steel industry. In fact, I believe my actions prove that I have been "standing up for steel" for two decades.

My support for Ohio's steel industry goes back to the days when I was Mayor of Cleveland.

In the early 1980s, when steel imports peaked at nearly 27% and U.S. steelmakers were losing billions of dollars in revenue, I lobbied President Reagan for Voluntary Restraint Agreements (VRAs) in order to give the domestic industry five years of breathing room to modernize and restructure. I rallied with the steelworkers in Cleveland's Public Square to tell America about how our steel industry was being dumped on.

A year before the VRA program was set to expire, I began lobbying then-Vice President Bush for a temporary extension, to give the steel industry some protection while the Administration attempted to negotiate a multilateral steel agreement aimed at eliminating unfair foreign practices.

All throughout 1988, I fought for the VRA extension. My efforts were successful, because in 1989, President Bush agreed to extend the VRAs two and a half years.

And two years later, after I was elected Governor, I was back to lobby the Bush Administration to ensure that all of our trade laws would be vigorously enforced after the extended VRAs finally expired in 1992.

In 1991, I was the first Governor in the United States to set up a Steel Industry Advisory Commission—a public-private partnership designed to strengthen ties among the steel industry, the state of Ohio, and its citizens.

I also worked to bring steel companies, such as North Star Steel, to Ohio in order to create more, good-paying jobs. I have been there to lead the fight—to make sure that the federal government did not run roughshod over our steel industry.

In May 1992, I attended the opening of the U.S. Steel/Kobe Blast Furnace in Lorain, Ohio—a $100 million investment with 2,800 jobs that almost didn't happen. The EPA was going to halt the project, but I went straight to the White House and let them know that what the EPA was proposing in Ohio was ridiculous.

Ohio is now the largest steel-producing state in the country, a development I'm proud to say occurred during my tenure as Governor.

Last year, a building where state agencies were going to be located was built, and foreign steel was used in place of domestic steel in violation of state law. State law called for a fine of $3,000, but I insisted that the entity responsible for building this facility pay $50,000. I doubt there are very few other public officials in the country who would enforce an existing law so vigorously.

When imports of steel shot up last year, and Ohio steel producers started to suffer, I was one of the first elected officials to speak out. I wrote the President several times, twice on my own and once with other governors, urging him to take all appropriate action under our trade laws to combat steel dumping. I also supported a resolution in the Ohio legislature urging the President to take action.

My support for the steel industry has been long-standing, and I dare say it is matched by few individuals. That's why I look seriously upon any proposal that purports to help this important industry.

The bill that is before the Senate today would impose a monthly limit on steel imports for the next 3 years. The quotas would apply to all steel mill products from all countries, regardless of whether they have engaged in dumping or not.

I have given this legislation much thought and careful consideration, and on its merits, I cannot vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. President, I have dedicated my entire 33-year public career to serving the people of Ohio. I am the last person who would want to see the Ohio steel industry and good-paying jobs dry up and go away. I would not vote against this Quota Bill if I believed it was a productive solution that would save jobs in my state.

It is because I care about Ohio's workers that I must oppose the Quota Bill today. I wish I could tell Ohio's and our nation's steelworkers that the Quota Bill would save steel jobs. I cannot. I wish I could tell them that the Quota Bill would give the industry a quick fix. It will not.

Not only is the Quota Bill bad policy, but voting for it today would be an exercise in futility, because we already know that the President will veto it.

In addition, I am concerned that too much emphasis has been placed on this legislation as being some sort of panacea that will help address all of the steel industry's problems. The fact of the matter is, if this legislation becomes law, it will only serve to compound the industry's problems.

Passage of this bill will provide a false sense of relief, when what we should really be doing is concentrating our efforts on a long-term solution—one that will make a difference in addressing the viability of our nation's steel industry within the framework of existing law.

I have often said that in Ohio, we are no longer the "Rust Belt" we are the "Jobs and Productivity Belt." We made this transition thanks in part to the efforts of the steel industry to modernize and become more efficient and competitive.

And, it's easy to do when you have good labor-management relations which promotes empowerment, when you have businesses willing to invest in training and advanced manufacturing technology, and when you have partnerships with government and education. It's amazing what you can get.

It's what has helped contribute to the importance and significance of steel in Ohio.

Overall, the American steel industry is succeeding. It produced record levels of steel in 1997 and 1998, and is now more efficient than it ever has been. It is strong. Its workers are strong. And it can compete in the world marketplace, if the playing field is level.

That is why it is so important that we continue to work to get other countries to follow the American example: to open their markets to American goods, to stop subsidizing their national steel industries and to stop dumping steel on our market at unfair prices.

We need all of Ohio's 35,400 steelworkers fighting for this approach, and applying the appropriate pressure to get other nations to change their protectionist ways.

However, the minute we succumb to the sort of trade practices that we so vehemently oppose, we lose all credibility in the international community.

Most every trade expert will attest that this Quota Bill violates World Trade Organization (WTO) rules—rules that are treaty-based and to which the United States is bound. Even supporters of this legislation must acknowledge that fact.

Since the bill does violate international trade rules, it would invite our largest trading partners to launch major trade cases against us, cases that, based on our treaty obligations, we would most surely lose.

This would give our trading partners the right to take retaliatory trade actions against us. They could slap high tariffs on all manner of American-made products in order to limit our access to their markets or kick us out altogether. Such actions would result in job losses in American industries that rely heavily on exports, such as agriculture, technology and telecommunications and a host of others.

One industry that would be particularly hard-hit by a trade war is agriculture. America's farmers grow and export more food than any other farmers in the world. They would be dealt a devastating blow by retaliatory action taken against them—probably the most affected segment regarding American jobs. In my state of Ohio that's crucial because we have some 80,000 farmers.

It's also important to farmers across the rest of the country. In fact, just yesterday, I received a letter from 20 major agriculture associations, including American Farm Bureau, outlining their opposition to the Quota Bill.

Moreover, for nearly 60 years the United States has been the primary advocate of a free—and, rules-based—system of international trade. The United States is constantly urging other countries to respect international trade agreements and to comply with WTO decisions.

The United States has set the example of being the one nation that consistently complies with the WTO. Indeed, the United States has won 19 of the 21 trade cases it has brought to the WTO for dispute resolution, such as the recently settled banana case the U.S. brought against the European Union.

How can we expect other countries to abide by international trade rules if the United States, the main advocate of those rules, flagrantly disregards them itself? If we want a rules-based system of international trade to work, so that we can have a level playing field across the board on all goods, America must continue to lead by example.

Proponents have argued that even if the Quota Bill violates WTO rules, it would take years for any cases filed against us at the WTO to run their full course. In the meantime, quotas on steel products would give the domestic steel industry some temporary relief from imports in order to recover from last year's import surge.

There are two flaws in that logic. First, imports have dropped off dramatically, and are now below the levels that the proponents of the Quota Bill seek to establish.

Second, analysts are predicting that the U.S. will actually have steel shortages this summer. This means that the industries that need steel to make their products—like the automakers—will not have enough steel to build new cars in order to meet consumer demand.

At the moment, the domestic steel industry can only make enough steel to meet 75% of the domestic demand. Not too many people realize that the remaining 25% must now be imported from overseas, and of that amount, the steel industry imports 25% for its own capacity.

In fact, there are steel products that many Ohio manufacturers need that aren't even made in the United States.

In short, regardless of what is said, the United States must import steel right now in order to meet domestic demand.

So, what happens under the Quota Bill, when there are steel shortages in the United States, while an oversupply of cheap steel remains in the rest of the world? It means that America's manufacturers will have to pay a comparatively higher price for the steel they need to make their finished products, such as cars, machine tools and dish washers.

As a result, the cost of American-made finished products will be higher, while the prices for the same goods made overseas will remain low.

So what will consumers in the United States and around the world do? They will do the logical thing: buy cheap, foreign-made goods, and at the end of the day, America's manufacturers and workers will lose out, and we will be right back at square one. Except this time, even more American jobs in a variety of other job sectors will be on the line, especially in Ohio.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, there are 465,000 Ohio workers in downstream industries that use steel. This means that for every Ohioan employed in the steel industry, there are 12 other Ohioans who work in steel-using industries and whose jobs would be directly jeopardized by the Quota Bill.

I cannot, in good conscience, vote in favor of a piece of legislation that would have the effect of jeopardizing the jobs of more than half-a-million Ohioans—including 80,000 farmers I previously mentioned—for a Quota bill that will have no long-term positive benefits.

All in all, this bill could have extremely serious consequences for jobs in Ohio.

When I was Governor of Ohio, one of my four economic development initiatives was exports. Because of our actions in the state, Ohio's exports increased by more than 62% during the time that I was Governor. And as most Americans know, as exports increase, so do jobs.

Our economy is intertwined with the international marketplace, and it becomes even more so on a daily basis.

As one who has argued vigorously to have others take down their trade barriers so we could get our goods into their countries, how can I talk about closing down our borders and keeping other products out?

We have also increased investment in Ohio by foreign companies. According to Site Selection magazine, from 1991-1997, Ohio had more growth in non-U.S. owned firms than any other state—some 300 new manufacturing facilities and plant expansions.

For me to come out in favor of quotas and trade barriers in today's marketplace would be detrimental to the economic well-being and growth of Ohio as well as jeopardize jobs in my state.

What we ought to do is improve the situation that we already have within the framework of current law and WTO rules.

I don't think anyone will deny the fact that the steel industry was affected by last year's surge in imports, and this surge was partly the result of a series of financial crises in Asia and Russia that precipitated a collapse in global demand for steel.

Naturally, imports were drawn to the United States, where the economy and demand for steel remained strong in comparison to the rest of the world. Unfortunately, the collapse in global demand was exacerbated last summer by the 54-day strike at General Motors, the largest consumer of American-made steel.

However, the oversupply of steel on world markets is not a new problem facing the U.S. steel industry. It has been a persistent problem that has plagued American steel producers for decades, and it is the legacy of 60 years of foreign government intervention in domestic steel industries.

Since the 1930s, other countries have undertaken policies to expand their domestic steel-making capacity and employment, regardless of market conditions. These policies have included tariffs, quotas, heavy government subsidies, state ownership, and government toleration of cartel-like behavior.

The end result has been that foreign steel manufacturers are able to produce and sell steel under circumstances that would drive a U.S. steel manufacturer out of business.

Quotas will do nothing to address this fundamental problem. We learned from our experience with voluntary restraint agreements (VRAs) in the 1980s that restricting steel imports—be it through VRAs or quotas—will do little to discourage other countries from subsidizing their industries or engaging in other market-distorting practices.

That's why we ended the VRA's. After trying to match our competitors step for step, the United States determined that only through sound economic and trade policies would we ever overcome the protectionist tendencies of other steel producing nations. That's why we continue to press for fair competition before the WTO and why we continue to win our cases.

A good majority of our American steel industry has modernized, restructured, and become more efficient in order to compete in the global marketplace. They are to be commended for making the decisions that make them the best steel industry and the most productive workers in the world. As I have said earlier, smart business decisions have made Ohio the number one steel state in the nation.

What we need to do now is level the playing field by going after the unfair, market-distorting practices that have insulated foreign steel producers from the same market pressures our American steel producers face. We need to win our fights in the proper venues and with the facts on our side.

If it is our intention to pass legislation in the Senate, we should look at solutions that will truly address problems that exist and that will not provoke an all-out "trade war."

To that end, I have been working with the Chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator ROTH, to develop a legislative solution to deal with the global overcapacity of steel that we believe will more reasonably address the concerns of America's steel industry.

I believe the legislation will get to the root of the steel import problem, and is the type of solution we should be pursuing, not this Quota Bill.

The Roth bill, the Steel Trade Enforcement Act, would direct the U.S. Trade Representative to start an investigation of the unfair practices that have protected foreign steel manufacturers from the capital market pressures that the American steel industry faces and have protected them from true competition.

Once we identify those countries and practices, the proposal would then require the Administration to develop a comprehensive, government-wide strategy to eliminate those practices. There is a follow-up mechanism to make sure that action is taken.

The Roth bill would also establish a monitoring program to facilitate the timely release of data on steel imports. This monitoring program could serve as an early warning system for future steel import surges, giving industry and the Administration more time to respond. It will also put our competitors on notice that the United States is watching.

The Roth bill also would require the U.S. representatives to the international financial institutions—such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund—to oppose any financing to steel industries abroad. It's not fair to use U.S. taxpayer dollars to subsidize the steel industries of our foreign competitors.

Finally, the Roth bill has a provision dealing with so-called "suspension agreements."

Under current law, when an anti-dumping or countervailing duty case is under way, the Administration has the authority to go out and negotiate a "suspension agreement" with the offending country. If the Administration is able to reach such an agreement, the pending antidumping or countervailing duty case is suspended.

Many steel companies and workers feel like they have been undercut by the recent suspension agreements that the Administration has negotiated with Brazil and Russia on hot-rolled steel imports. The industry would have much preferred that the pending anti-dumping cases be taken to their full conclusion so that the full anti-dumping duties could be imposed.

The suspension agreement provision would require that the Administration get the support of at least 50% of the industry before finalizing any future suspension agreements. I am particularly pleased that this provision was added to the bill.

Mr. President, I believe that Senator ROTH's legislation is a rational approach to the dumping that the United States has been subjected to over the years and is our best bet to effectively deal with those nations that subsidize their steel industries.

However, passage of this quota bill before us today will do nothing to assist our domestic steel industry—it will be ruled GATT illegal, which will draw retaliatory actions from other nations. In addition, it will not prevent future job losses in the steel industry and, in fact, could cause job losses in other employment sectors—some with no ties to steel whatsoever such as agriculture.

We must do all that we can to ensure continued economic growth in our nation. This legislation does not. Therefore, I cannot support this bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, in the midst of the best economy our country has ever seen, while we have understandably focused on the good news, there has been another story that has only recently begun to get the attention it deserves.

Thanks to the leadership of Senator ROCKEFELLER, Senator BYRD, and many of our other colleagues from our country's leading steel producing states, the story of American steel workers has been heard. Like so many other workers in America's core manufacturing industries, steel workers have been struggling with restructuring and modernization that has made them among the most productive in the world. But on top of the sacrifices—in jobs and job security, in pay, in benefits—they have been hit by the one-two punch of the international financial crisis over the last couple of years.

On top of the lost sales overseas, where once booming developing nations are no longer able to purchase steel from the U.S., our steel workers have watched as those same developing countries have dumped their own steel products here, often below the cost of production, literally stealing American markets out from under them. So, with lost sales at home and abroad, steel workers are losing their jobs as our mills cut production and even shut down.

For the tens of thousands of American workers whose jobs have been lost, whose families have been strained to the breaking point, whose communities have crumbled, this is not some abstract economic question about free trade and open markets. The question is what shall we do to help the people who, despite their hard work and sacrifice, are paying the ultimate price as the rest of us enjoy the many benefits of the new economy.

The question before us today, is how to deal with the kind of economic disruption that has come from a global economy with wide-open capital markets and instantaneous communication. The current crisis in our domestic steel industry is, at its roots, a crisis of overcapacity in the steel industry on a global scale. Too many developing countries built too many new steel mills, with less concern about the long term economic sense and more interest in the kickbacks and quick bucks to be made in the short run.

I believe that we have been right to respond to the recent international financial crisis by providing the IMF and the World Bank and other entities with the funds they need to put the international financial system back on its feet. But one unfortunate aspect of that process, in my mind, is that too many investors who were throwing money at ill-prepared and even corrupt developing economies will benefit from our attempts to prevent a collapse in the world economy.

Today, instead of high-rolling international investors, we are asked to consider help for those American workers and their families who are victims of that international economic crisis, for which they are completely blameless. We will be adding insult to that injury if we fail to act to help them.

But while I will vote for the motion to proceed to this bill, Mr. President, I could not vote for passage in its current form.

We already have many anti-dumping actions underway, a time-consuming and sometimes frustrating process to be sure, but a process designed to guarantee that we hit what we are shooting at—it requires evidence of who is dumping what kind of steel, and what the real economic damage is. We should continue to pursue those actions as quickly and as relentlessly as the law allows.

Just last week, the Senate passed legislation, brought before us by Senator BYRD, that provides $1 billion for the steel industry in loan guarantees to help them deal with the current crisis.

These actions are significant steps in the right direction, and they don't have the unintended consequences that the bill before us brings with it. Quotas on imported steel violate one of our oldest and most basic commitments to the international trading system we have worked so long to create. That system, for the most part, has been a key part of our current economic success.

If we impose unilateral quotas on other countries' steel exports—without showing any specific illegal practices or any direct economic damages—we will seriously weaken our leadership in international trade when we are fighting so hard to open other markets to our products. Chief among those products are our agricultural products, Mr. President, but virtually all of our exports are exposed to a trade war with other countries if we respond to the very real problems of our domestic steel industry by unilaterally imposing quotas.

That does not mean we cannot and should not do more to protect American steel mills and steel workers from the unfair and illegal trade practices of other countries. But I hope if we can proceed to a real debate on this issue that we can formulate a more effective way to right the wrong that has been done to them.

Finally, I ask unanimous consent that there be 5 minutes equally divided between the chairman and the ranking member for closing remarks, the bill be read a third time, the Senate proceed to vote on passage of the bill, with no intervening action or debate; further, that Senator HARKIN be recognized after the vote to speak for 20 minutes regarding the State Department reauthorization bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I now ask the manager of the bill for 3 minutes to speak on the steel quota bill.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to vote no on the so-called steel quota bill. I think it would be a mistake. I think the bill would do more harm than good; I mean more harm than good to our entire economy, and I believe also to the steel industry and to the steelworkers. I think it would be a serious mistake.

One would have to figure what happens if we enacted these arbitrary quota restraints. Senator MOYNIHAN just mentioned it would be a violation of our trading laws. If we do that, that will hurt the steel industry indirectly, because we export a lot of steel products. We export a lot of tractors, we export a lot of heavy equipment, and we export a lot of cars, all of which use steel.

If we establish arbitrary quotas on what we are going to import, many other countries are going to retaliate, and they have the right to do so under the WTO. We are going to be violating the trade laws that we have agreed to, and there is going to be a response.

Senator GRASSLEY just mentioned that the biggest response is going to be against agriculture. It is kind of the easiest thing to hit. Agriculture is very competitive in the export market.

Farmers all across the country are going to be faced with a loss of exports, and they are going to say: Wait a minute. Congress just imposed a restriction on steel imports, and, therefore, they are going to put restrictions on the amount of wheat, or the amount of grain they will import. It would be a serious mistake.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article in today's Washington Times by William Daley, Secretary of Commerce.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, June 22, 1999]

WHY TRADE QUOTAS DON'T WORK

(By William M. Daley)

The steel quota legislation now being considered in Congress is a misguided attempt to deal with a problem that is already beginning to go away. Last year, when steel imports, particularly from Japan, Russia, and Brazil, surged by 33 percent over 1997, layoffs mounted and plant closings loomed, the demand for quota legislation to protect businesses and workers was understandable. Today, however, we are beginning to turn the corner on steel imports. And while calls for quota legislation continue, it is clear that this bill is not in the nation's economic interest—nor in the long-term interest of the U.S. steel industry or American steelworkers.

Make no mistake about it: last year's steel crisis was real and demanded a strong response. The administration acted, adopting a two-prong strategy combining swift and vigorous enforcement of our trade laws with bilateral pressure on our trading partners to reduce their steel exports to the United States. Forty-two antidumping and countervailing duty steel investigations are currently being conducted or have been completed since January. These include investigations on hot-rolled steel, carbon steel plate, and three types of stainless steel. In a number of these cases, the Commerce Department provided swifter relief by making early determinations or conducting the case on an expedited schedule. At the same time, senior government officials, including the president himself, have exerted strong bilateral pressure on our trading partners to reduce their steel exports to the United States.

This strategy is working. Since it was put in place last November, steel imports have fallen dramatically. Total steel imports in April were down 39 percent from last year, with imports of hot-rolled steel, the product covered by cases brought against Japan, Russia and Brazil, down 73 percent. Imports overall are returning to pre-crisis levels. April 1999 imports of all steel were 22 percent below April 1998 levels, and six percent below April 1997.

Steel imports during the first four months of 1999 were down 5 percent compared to the first four months of 1998 and 4 percent compared to the first four months of 1997. Despite this significant progress, there is a strong effort under way that ignores the success we've seen to date and seeks to impose across-the-board quotas on steel imports.

Steel quotas, however, will backfire; in the end they will not ensure long-term job security for American steel workers. As a nation, we have a great deal to lose from quotas. The United States is the world's largest exporter—and steel is a significant part of many of these exports. Approximately 20 percent of the steel consumed in the United States last year went into products that were later exported, such as heavy machinery, trucks, food processing equipment and so on. The quota bill, however, would violate our international obligations under the World Trade Organization (WTO) and give other steel exporting countries the right to retaliate, perhaps by barring those U.S. exports that use American steel as a way of striking back.

That would put our domestic steel industry in the middle of a trade war. Many industries depend on both domestic steel and steel imports to stay competitive. In fact, a number of U.S. steel producers themselves import substantial quantities of semifinished steel products. Imposing quotas at legislatively mandated levels could cause layoffs and idled production in a number of steel consuming industries due to shortages of specific steel inputs. Other U.S. industries may also pay a price from a steel quota bill, especially sectors that depend on exports, such as technology, pharmaceuticals and above all, agriculture.

No one has more to lose from quotas than America's farmers, who grow more and export more than any farmers in the world. More broadly, the repercussions could be serious, for both our economy as a whole and the economies of other countries just now beginning to recover from last year's financial crisis. In fact, by weakening rather than strengthening the international economy, the quota bill will make future import surges, in steel and other industry, more, not less, likely. An international economic recovery, on the other hand, will not only help avoid import surges in other industries, it will also help revive worldwide demand for steel.

The quota bill is not in our nation's economic interest, and it is not even in the interest of our steel industry and its workers. We have laws that permit us to protect ourselves from unfair competition. We have the will to use them. And we have a strong and effective policy that is working. We should not consider trading all that for an approach that will hurt us in so many different ways.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I will read a couple of lines from his article. He says:

No one has more to lose from quotas than America's farmers who grow more and export more than any farmers in the world.

He also says:

The quota bill is not in our Nation's economic interest, and it is not even in the interest of our steel industry and its workers.

He is exactly right. This bill would be a serious mistake.

The Commerce Department has already taken action against Russia, against Brazil, and against Japan. They can impose tariffs up to 28 percent on Japan for dumping, up to 86 percent on Brazil for dumping, and up to 200 percent on Russia for dumping. Already there are remedies.

Incidentally, I might mention that the problem is not near as grave as some people have indicated. Steel imports have gone down 72 percent from last November, which was an all-time high.

Again, I don't think the facts warrant passage of this bill. I clearly think if people look at the long-term ramifications of passing it, agriculture will lose, the American economy will lose, and I really think, frankly, the steel industry will lose as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Ohio, a great champion of this legislation, 3½ minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, this bill has great significance to my home State of Ohio. Ohio produces and processes more steel than any other State in the Nation. Ohio steel companies—115 of them at last count—produced and processed steel valued at $5.3 billion in 1996. Ohio is second only to Pennsylvania in the number of employed steelworkers. At last count we had 35,400 steelworkers in the State of Ohio.

We are here today because foreign steel producers have illegally dumped millions and millions of tons of steel into the United States. In 1998, 41 million tons were dumped. That represents on average an 83-percent increase.

Ohio steel production from the first quarter of 1999 was down significantly. Ohio steel shipments during the first quarter of 1999 were also down nearly 16 percent from the same period in the previous year.

Members of the Senate, all of this is no accident. All of this was the result of illegal dumping of steel into the United States.

Our steel industry, despite being a highly efficient and globally competitive industry, is in trouble. I have heard from and I have talked directly to steelworkers and their families about this issue. It is estimated that 10,000 steelworkers have already lost their jobs. The Independent Steelworkers predict job losses of as many as 165,000 if steel dumping is not stopped.

It is time for the Senate to take action. All eyes are on us.

The question is, Will we respond to this crisis?

Adopting this bill tells our steel industry, our steelworkers, and the world that we support our industry, we support trade laws, and we will simply not tolerate dumping or subsidization.

The bill is tough. It directs the President to impose quotas, tariff surcharges, or negotiate enforceable voluntary export restraint agreements in order to ensure that the volume of imported steel products during any month does not exceed the average volume imported from the 3-month period preceding July 1997.

I am a free trader. I believe free trade, though, does not exist without fair trade. Free trade does not mean free to dump, free to subsidize, free to distort the market. However, that is exactly what is happening today.

A strong and healthy domestic steel industry is vital to our Nation and vital to our national defense. Let us resolve today to debate and then pass H.R. 975. The House has already done so. I believe it is in our interest and the interest of the country to do so.

I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania, Senator SANTORUM, for his leadership, as well as Senator ROCKEFELLER and the other Members who have worked so hard on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, over the past 18 months there has been a surge of steel imports. That surge has severely and adversely impacted the U.S. steel industry.

This crisis needs to be addressed and the effects of illegal dumping dealt with in a fair and equitable way.

I think the administration deserves credit for the series of steps, including bilateral agreements and vigorous enforcement of existing trade laws, that have greatly improved the steel situation in this country. Imports, as a result, are now down to below precrisis levels.

I support strong action to enforce our trade laws. I believe that trade policy should be by rule of law, not by anarchy, and that with such strong rule of law enforcement we will be able to assure U.S. workers that they are not hurt by illegal import surges.

However, I oppose this legislation because it has the potential of doing great damage to our economy and to the international trading system. It would violate our WTO commitments, thereby putting at risk many of the gains we have made in our economy in recent years. It would focus on a specific problem of the past but do nothing to deal with the next challenge to the rule of law in our trade policy.

I believe that the most at-risk sector of our economy would be agriculture. Agriculture today enjoys the biggest trade surplus of any sector of our economy. Other countries will see this as an opportunity to retaliate against U.S. industry, wiping out export markets that our agriculture producers have achieved.

We must address the problems of the steel industry in a way that does not violate our international agreements. I believe this can best be accomplished by making adjustments to section 201 of the Trade Act of 1974, which is designed to deal with import surges.

Last week, the Senate Finance Committee passed out legislation which modifies section 201 so that it is more responsive to import surges. This legislation is a good first step, but more can be done.

The specific problems of perishable agriculture should be addressed so that seasonality can be taken into account when determining injury to a domestic industry.

We must ensure that U.S. industry has recourse to affective and timely relief when they are injured due to illegal import surges. If we cannot do this, our entire system of international trade, and the health of our domestic economy will be at risk.

For this reason, I will oppose cloture at this time and ask my colleagues to do the same.

I urge we deal with this problem by making our trade enforcement laws more effective, more able to respond to the challenges of the future, and not succumb to a violation of our trade agreements.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I want to vote for this bill but I can't. I want to because I think part of the steel industry has a legitimate case. But I can't because voting for this bill would make it worse than the relief they seek.

We have GATT. We have WTO. We have NAFTA. We have access to accountability. However, the administration is not allowing that to go forward. We have to stay within the system. We have to play by the rules.

The reason we are debating this is because we haven't had the administration firmly coming forward and saying the steel industry has a legitimate gripe. They do.

I support the Finance Committee approach to it which says we are going to stick by the rules, and we need to enforce them vigorously.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, my understanding is we have 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 57 seconds remaining.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I ask unanimous consent 3 minutes be added to each side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished senior Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, in the last 12 months, America has created 1,950,000 new permanent, productive, tax-paying jobs for the future. We have created 7,500 jobs in every working day for the last 12 months.

If we want to continue to benefit from being the world's greatest trading nation, we have to have politicians that are willing to stand up and fight for those principles by saying no on bills such as the bill before the Senate.

Though the bill before the Senate may be well intended, the bill before the Senate is a job killer, a trade war starter, and it is a bill that will destroy 40 jobs in steel-using industries for every one job it saves in steel producing.

Last year, we exported $222 billion worth of products that used steel; 40 jobs were created in those industries for every one job in steel. It is estimated that the passage of this bill would save about 1,700 steel jobs at a cost of about $800,000 a job for the American consumer. But that is not counting the jobs we would lose in steel-using industries. It is not counting the jobs we would lose because of retaliation from our unfair trade practice.

If we want to create 7,500 jobs a day, we have to have the courage to stand up and defend the system that creates those jobs.

I urge my colleagues to resist the siren song of well-organized groups that have their special interests and look at the general interest of America. When we are creating more jobs than the rest of the world combined, more jobs than in all of Europe, Japan, China, and every developing country in the world combined, why should we be attacking the very system that created those jobs?

I urge my colleagues to reject this bill.

Mr. ROTH. How much time remains? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute 46 seconds.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield the remaining time to Senator BOND.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I point out that over the last 6 years prior to 1998, the steel industry experienced 6 straight years of growth in domestic steel shipments.

In 1998, there is a downturn. There is a downturn because of the collapse in the Asian economy, because of the General Motors strike. That is unfortunate. We don't want to see those jobs lost.

When you talk about illegal dumping, there are laws against illegal dumping. They are being enforced and they are being enforced effectively.

What we are being asked to do in this bill is to put at risk the 20 production jobs for every one steel job; 20 production jobs depending on using steel for the one job in the steel industry.

That could be a disaster for our economy.

The chairman has already pointed out the cost to the taxpayers, to the consumers. In my State of Missouri, workers in agriculture, in the airplane industry, and small businesses would suffer a loss of jobs and a loss of opportunity if we adopted this measure.

I join with the chairman and the ranking member in urging we oppose this measure.

Mr. President, I offer a few other points on top of the excellent arguments laid out by my colleagues as to why this bill is a bad idea.

The reasons for the surge in steel imports and the decrease in employment in the steel industry are the result of numerous factors and complex conditions. There are a number of forces at work, but the difficult times faced by the steel industry are largely due to economic cycles and conditions. I believe that the industry is asking Congress to take action on its behalf to rectify a status caused by unfavorable conditions. We have a large and diverse economy, with many factors dependent on one another. Taking legislative action on behalf of one industry could have wide and profound ripple effects on many industries that are not for the better and would be a very unwise precedent. The reaction to this legislation could destroy jobs in Missouri industries from agriculture to airplanes and many others.

These conditions have not been receiving the level of attention that they deserve in the discussion as to whether erecting trade barriers is the proper approach, if there is an approach, to reducing the increase in steel imports.

The largest consumers of steel are automobile manufacturers and construction—two industries whose health is directly related to the health of the economy. We all are aware of the economic conditions facing the Asian nations, particularly facing Japan and the Southeast Asian Nations. This was a very sudden and dramatic turn of economic fortunes. Previously, those economies had a voracious appetite for steel in the years preceding their economic problems. The skylines of the Asian business capitals have been transformed from those of small towns into cosmopolitan metropolises rivaling many American cities. But today, the streets of Bangkok are littered with dozens of highrise construction projects that have ground to a halt. Demand for steel overseas has collapsed.

Prior to that collapse, U.S. steel manufactures were enjoying good times. Indeed, a decline in domestic steel shipments was witnessed in 1998, but the decline, which was slight, came on the heels of six straight years of growth. The industry enjoyed good times, they benefited from the growth in demand, from the construction boom here and abroad. But economic upheaval abroad has had a major affect on demand, prices, productivity and profit. Capacity was moving along only to face an almost instantaneous drop in demand. Those factors as having contributed to the drop in demand have been minimized. Another factor, the labor stoppage at General Motors last summer, has barely been mentioned.

Businesses endure business cycles. I have all the confidence that the industry will take the steps necessary to remain competitive, but taking this legislative action to address the conditions of one industry is unwise. Those factors have been minimized as contributing to the decline in demand around the world. Another factor, the labor stoppage at General Motors last summer, cannot be underestimated for its impact on demand and prices.

We are being asked to take legislative action to protect a single industry from conditions that are largely the result of the economy and their business decisions and planning. An act such as this cannot be taken without having severe and far reaching consequences for many other industries. As we have heard on the floor of the Senate, and their own business decisions taking legislative action that will benefit a single industry is a purely protectionist act.

Mr. President, we have made a commitment in this country to advancing freer trade and open borders. I believe it is in the best interest of our country and in the best interests of future generations. Trade has many benefits. The competition has led to dramatic improvement in the efficiency and the profitability of the domestic auto industry. It has led to improvements in the efficient and profitability of the domestic steel industry. Prior to the year 1998, shipments of steel increased for six straight years. I believe that growth will return. The benefits are seen all around us in the form of more efficient industries, cheaper products and better made products.

Trade also advances our standard of living. As we enjoy the benefits of this communications revolution, open markets will permit it to be prolonged. If other countries close down their markets, the avenues to continue to sell these products will begin to evaporate. There is no dispute the types of jobs that have been created because of this revolutions—they are high paying and highly skilled jobs, the type of jobs that have contributed to the continuing escalating standard of living in the United States.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield me 15 seconds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. The pain is real, the need is real, but the answer is wrong. We are not voting up and down on this bill. We are voting to proceed. I am going to vote to proceed in the hope that between now and the time we vote on this bill, the administration and others understand there is a need for an answer. This is not the answer. I would vote against the bill, but I will vote to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, has all time been consumed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; 4 minutes 25 seconds remain.

Mr. LOTT. At the appropriate time, I will use leader time to wrap up debate on this issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the junior Senator from West Virginia for his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I will not even take that amount of time. Senator GRAMM and Senator NICKLES and others, have said vote against this bill. You will have a chance to vote against this bill. That is not what we are about today. We are voting on the motion to proceed to discuss an extraordinarily complex issue, the ramifications of which a lot of people do not know. It has been pointed out we are in violation of WTO. It has not been pointed out we are trying to follow our Trade Act, which we ourselves passed in the Congress and which was signed by a previous President.

Please, this is the motion to proceed. We traditionally are fair about these things. This is a complex subject. Steel is only produced in 16 States in a major way. A lot of people have a lot to learn.

We are not voting on the quota bill. We are voting on the motion to proceed to simply talk about it. We have had a very high barrier to reach.

Finally, I say the crisis is not over. I repeat that. The first 4 months of this year compared to the first 4 months of last year—last year being the worst year in history in terms of imports—steel imports were only down by 5 percent. The crisis lives. The time to vote for an honest discussion of the issue is now. We can do that by voting yes on the motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I want to pick up where the Senator from West Virginia left off, and that is to make very clear what we are voting on today. We are not voting on a steel quota bill. We are voting simply to bring the issue to the floor of the Senate for open debate and discussion and amendment. I do not think anyone in this Chamber can say what has gone on in the steel industry has been good for America. I have heard from some of the speakers—incredibly so—that somehow or another this was good for American jobs; we create American jobs when people illegally, against our trade laws, being subsidized by foreign governments, dump product into this country—that somehow that is good for America.

I do not think it is good for America. We have laws that are in place to stop that because we think it is unfair. We think that is illegal. So when I hear these arguments that we have to let the marketplace work, the fact is the marketplace is not working. The administration is not working in enforcing our laws. So what we are saying is, the Congress needs to get to work. Congress needs to get to work, to talk about how we can put this together.

The Senator from Michigan talked about the bill that came out of the Finance Committee. That could be an amendment to this bill. It could be a substitute to this bill. If you want a vehicle to have a fair and honest debate about what our steel policy should be, what our trade policy should be, this is the vehicle to do it. Let's vote on the motion to proceed. Let's bring up this matter. It is an important matter, as the Senator from West Virginia said, to at least 16 States. It has impacted tens of thousands of workers across this country. It is a very serious, desperate situation for many major companies in the United States. All we are asking for out of this vote is to let us be heard on the floor of the Senate. If you do not like the solution, as the Senator from Delaware said—the junior Senator from Delaware said he does not like the solution—fine. Bring up another measure. Bring up an alternative. We will have a debate on that. We will have a vote on that, and we will work our will in the Senate to address an issue that needs to be addressed. That is all we are saying.

Please, let the folks back in Akron, OH, in Pittsburgh, PA, and Weirton, WV, the people in the Senate care about what is going on in their lives. Let them know we are not deaf to the pain they are going through in losing their jobs. Let them know by just giving us a chance to debate this bill and do something about the crisis in the steel industry in this country.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I would like to use some of my leader time now to close debate on this issue. First, I yield a minute to the Senator from Idaho to comment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I thank the leader for yielding.

This is not an issue about steel. This is an issue about trade. The United States will be hosting the World Trade Organization's ministerial meeting in Seattle later this year. If this Senate voted out a quota bill at a time when we were expecting to engage the rest of the world in further discussion about knocking down trade barriers to give agriculture and other trade entities greater opportunity in the world market, this Senate and this Government would be sending the wrong message.

I am not going to argue with the Senator from Pennsylvania. There is no question the steel industry has been hurt. Agriculture is being hurt as we speak, but we do not close our borders and turn our lights out. We work to build a stronger and more fair trade organization around the world.

Furthermore, this act would violate our international obligations under the World Trade Organization and General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs. By closing the U.S. Steel market, we would encourage other countries to follow our lead and undermine the system that the United States has worked so hard to establish. If we are to expect other countries to honor their obligations under these agreements, we must do the same.

Mr. President, raising barriers against steel imports will only provide the steel industry temporary benefits while the American consumers suffer long-term consequences. Products that are made from steel, such as cars, homes, and appliances, will cost more to produce and will become more expensive to consumers. For example, large U.S. companies, such as Cargill and Hewlett Packard, that have substantial business in Idaho would be adversely affected. This situation will cause American consumers to purchase less and put millions of American jobs at risk. These consequences far exceed the risks the steel industry is facing.

I yield the time.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SANTORUM, and others, we are going to have this vote today. They made the point this was an important issue to them. They thought there should be some discussion about it and asked for an opportunity to have some debate and a vote. Little did I know at the time it was going to be a weekly event.

Last week it was the revolving fund loan for steel. This week it is the quota bill. Next week it will be something else. In fact, the Finance Committee has reported out something, and it is probably, of the three options, the only one we should be considering. But do not fool yourselves; this is not an inconsequential vote. Don't be saying we can vote for this on the motion to proceed and then we can vote against it later on. In order to go forward, the proponents have to get 60 votes today but only 51 tomorrow.

So I urge my colleagues, do not say, I'll give them a procedural vote. What you may be giving them is something that would be very dangerous, because we then could be voting on the substance itself. I think the consequences of such a vote that would befall America's economy and our trade policy would be dire, indeed. Not only would it increase the burden on our consumers, it would also run counter to our international trade agreements, and it would adversely affect our businesses and farmers that depend upon access to these international markets. There is no question this bill would undercut the economic growth we enjoy today. It would be starting down an extremely dangerous path.

We all struggle with similar issues in our own States in one area or another—perhaps agriculture here, textiles there, something else elsewhere. But free trade has been proven, time and time again, to benefit America, to benefit American consumers. It is the right thing to do, and we should not start down the trail of passing quotas here, there, or somewhere else.

I urge my colleagues, vote against cloture.

I yield the floor.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee just made this remark to me. He is too modest, perhaps, to say it himself. He suggested that we have just taken what will likely be the most important vote of this session of the Congress. It was the first such vote we have had, I know, in my 23 years on the Committee on Finance—a solid affirmation of a half century, and more, of American trade policy.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, first of all, I want to just thank my distinguished colleague, Senator MOYNIHAN, for his invaluable assistance on this most important matter. I think the two of us believe very strongly that there will be no more important a vote than the one we just took. It is important from the standpoint of our national economy; it is important from the point of view of our steel industry; it is important from the standpoint of our workers. I know it was a very difficult vote for many people, but I want to express my public appreciation for their assistance.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I voted to invoke cloture. It was a difficult vote. The chairman of the Finance Committee and the Senator from New York deserve a great deal of credit for bringing this up the way they did. I regret we didn't get cloture. I think the bill would have needed work, I must say, before it reached final passage, had cloture been invoked.

FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2000 AND 2001

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, if I may, I ask what the pending business is in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, up to 15 minutes is allotted to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, it is my understanding that the managers of the pending bill graciously agreed to include one of two of the amendments I had proposed to offer in the managers' package that will be adopted later today. I extend my thanks to Senator BIDEN and Senator HELMS.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it is true; we have accepted it. It is a very good amendment and we are delighted to do that.

Mr. DODD. I thank the Senator from Delaware. Let me briefly describe what that amendment is, and then I am also going to propose a second amendment, which, again, the chairman of the committee and the ranking member are familiar with. My intent is not to force a vote on that amendment but to raise the issue included in the amendment. The amendment that will be adopted later today would direct the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of State "to make every reasonable effort to ensure that each person named in a report of investigation by that office be afforded an opportunity to refute allegations or assertions that may be contained in such report about him or her."

In the interest of accuracy and thoroughness, the amendment would also require the inspector general to include exculpatory information about an individual that is discovered in the course of the investigation to be included in the final report produced by the inspector general.

I am not going to take a great deal of the Senate's time on the specific details of this amendment because I know the managers very much wish to complete action on this bill. But it seems what I have said about this amendment is common sense. One would assume that what I have said would be the case already. If allegations involving a criminal matter would be raised about any citizen of this country, under due process that citizen would have the right to know about those allegations and an opportunity to respond to those allegations, and any exculpatory information would be included in the determination of whether or not to go forward. We would assume that to be the case.

Candidly, I must tell you, when investigations are done by the inspector general at the State Department—and, regrettably, other agencies—that is not the case. So this amendment on this bill is designed to correct the problem at the State Department. It doesn't go any further than that.

I want to thank Senator HELMS and Senator BIDEN for their assistance with this amendment and mention, in particular, that Senator HELMS and I will be including a colloquy for the RECORD that clarifies technical matters with respect to the intent and scope of this amendment. I have proposed this amendment because I truly believe that it will improve the functioning and work product of the Office of the Inspector General in carrying out her investigations.

I also have another motive as well. It is a matter of fundamental fairness, in my view.

Many of the investigations that the IG deals with in the course of her duties would be improved, in my view, were the individuals involved given an opportunity to comment about the information developed in the course of the investigation as it relates to those individuals. Sadly, this is not the general practice of the inspector general, although it does happen in some cases at the discretion of the inspector general. In most cases, a report gets finalized from the inspector general, and the individual never gets a chance to correct what may be factual inaccuracies before a decision is taken to refer the matter to the Justice Department, or to the Director General of the State Department for possible criminal prosecution or for disciplinary action.

I think it is only fair to allow an individual to be provided that information prior to some disciplinary action being recommended, because, frankly, even though there is a grievance process, there is a tendency in the Congress to assume that the inspector general has accurately stated the case and the individual's promotion prospects are put into jeopardy.

The chairman and ranking member know that I propose this amendment in part because I know firsthand that had the inspector general checked out some of the information her investigators erroneously included in one of their reports related to this Senator, that information would never have been part of the report.

In fact, I ask unanimous consent at this point to have printed in the RECORD some correspondence between myself and the inspector general.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, March 6, 1996.

Hon. JACQUELYN L. WILLIAMS-BRIDGERS,
Inspector General, Department of State, Washington, DC.

DEAR MS. WILLIAMS-BRIDGERS: I am writing to you with respect to a report produced by your office late last year concerning an investigation conducted about matters related to the U.S. Embassy in Dublin and the U.S. Ambassador Jean Kennedy Smith—"Special Inquiry, Embassy Dublin, Republic of Ireland, Jean Kennedy Smith, Ambassador, Dennis A. Sandberg, Deputy Chief of Mission, December 29, 1995."

I am shocked and angered by the cavalier manner in which your office saw fit to include my name in this report eight times, purporting to represent my conversations, comments or intentions with respect to individuals employed at the U.S. Embassy in Dublin, without ever making any effort to contact me or my office for comment. Had you done so, I would have told you in the strongest terms that there was absolutely no truth to the suggestion made in the report that I took or sought to take retribution against individuals in the Embassy because of some policy or personality differences that they may have with Ambassador Smith.

I am certain anyone who reads this report will be shocked to discover that never once was I contacted by your "investigators." It would seem to me that a very basic element of any credible and professional investigation is that anyone who might be able to shed light on the matter under investigation be contacted, particularly when you intend to include that individual's name in the final report. I wonder how many other individuals whose names are mentioned in this report were never contacted or interviewed by your office? Frankly, the clear misrepresentations contained in the report as it relates to me seriously call into question the quality and integrity of the report in its entirety.

I believe that simple fairness and professionalism dictate that I receive an apology from your office for such unprofessional behavior.

Sincerely yours,

CHRISTOPHER J. DODD,
U.S. Senator.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
THE INSPECTOR GENERAL,
Washington, DC, March 8, 1996.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER J. DODD,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: I am writing in response to your letter of March 6, 1996, and as a followup to our telephone conversation last night concerning our December 29, 1995, Special Inquiry of Embassy Dublin.

Let me begin by stating emphatically that this office is in possession of no information whatever which would suggest that you "took or sought to take retribution against individuals in the Embassy because of some policy or personality differences they may have had with Ambassador Smith." Our intention in the Dublin report was merely to convey the fear that was engendered in the minds of career employees by the clear misuse of your name and position by an individual who purported to speak for the Ambassador. Indeed, while Ambassador Smith confirmed that she told you about the dissent cable, she emphatically denied that she provided you or anyone else with the names of the dissenters. We have no reason to believe that she did. Moreover, Ambassador Smith herself never suggested to us that you made the critical comments attributed to you by her assistant and, again, we have no reason to believe that you did. Because we believed that your name and title was banded about without your knowledge or authorization in what amounted to a brazen fear campaign, we never attempted to interview you concerning the matter. That was a clear mistake on our part.

In retrospect, at a minimum, we should have made it absolutely clear in our report that we had no reason to believe the assertions made about you, either with respect to your purported reaction upon being told of the conduct of the Dublin dissenter or with regard to your alleged intention to personally discuss the matter with the affected employees. While we repeatedly used modifiers such as "reportedly" when discussing anything relating to what you were alleged to have said, I now realize that we should have provided you with an opportunity to comment. The Boston Herald article of March 5, 1996, clearly demonstrated how mischief could be made of your name in this matter. I apologize for not being more sensitive to how our language could be misconstrued. I intend to use this error constructively to ensure that such a problem does not recur.

The Privacy Act compels us in the normal circumstances to redact names, titles, and identifying information from sensitive reports prior to their public release. Had this report been requested through the Freedom of Information Act or the Privacy Act, we most certainly would have redacted your name and title from the report. We are required, however, to provide, unredacted reports to relevant oversight committees at the Chairman's request.

In accordance with the mandate of the Inspector General Act to keep the Congress fully informed of matters within its jurisdiction, I provided, upon request, copies of the unredacted Dublin Special Inquiry to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Wednesday, February 28, 1996. My transmittal letter reiterated that this report had not been reviewed in accordance with the Freedom of Information Act or the Privacy Act for release to the public and that any improper release of information from this report would seriously undermine my statutory responsibilities in the Department.

While I am certain that this is of little consolation to you, I firmly believe that the reason we did not attempt to interview you is that we felt that you had done nothing wrong. I recognize that our subjective judgment in that regard is not necessarily clear from an objective reading of the report. Again, for that I apologize.

Sincerely,

JACQUELYN L. WILLIAMS-BRIDGERS.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I was never asked about the allegations, nor apparently was anyone else in this report conducted by the inspector general. The report alleged that I had tried to punish or to harm in some way two State Department employees for using the dissent channel by blocking their promotions internally. When I questioned the IG about the matter, she admitted that her investigators had not done a very professional job. There was not a shred of evidence within the Department to indicate that I had done anything with regard to this matter. I didn't even know who these people were, nor did anyone on my staff.

Had I been given access to those portions of the report as they related to me, I think this mistake would have been caught and it would never have been included in the final report. The inspector general did subsequently apologize to me both personally and in writing. I am grateful to her for that; however, I am not sure that ordinary Foreign Service officers or political appointees would have been given similar treatment, and the damage to their careers and reputations would have already occurred in any event.

That is why I believe this amendment is very important. I thank again Senator HELMS and Senator BIDEN and their staffs for helping put this matter together. This way it would at least allow for people who are charged with these matters to have an opportunity to respond, to know what they are being charged with so that corrections can be made.

Again, I emphasize that if you are not a well-known individual, you might not get the kind of apology and the corrections that I think ought to be made. That is why I believe this amendment is important.

Let me turn, if I can, to a second amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment before he turns to the second amendment, I can't emphasize how important I think the change is that the Senator suggests and the enthusiasm with which we accept the amendment.

I happen to like the Senator's second amendment that he is going to withdraw. I hope that will happen in the remainder of this year. If we can't get it done this year, I hope we can next year. I hope the committee will take a look at the entire functioning of the inspector general's office. Quite frankly, a similar thing came up in my other committee, the Judiciary Committee.

Quite frankly, I think we initiated reforms that were needed a decade or more ago to provide for these inspector generals, and they are throughout the Government, which is a good thing. It is not a bad thing. But what we haven't done, in my opinion, is we haven't given the same kind of scrutiny and oversight into how the offices function as we have, for example, the Attorney General's office, or the overall functioning of the State Department.

I hope this is the beginning of not any kind of witch hunt but just a serious, thoughtful oversight about whether or not the inspector general's authority puts it in a position where it has sort of incrementally involved itself in a way that the rights of individuals who are being looked at or who are caught up in a net are, quite frankly, not treated the way we would expect, for example, the U.S. Attorney's Office to proceed.

I thank the Senator. As I said, I like the second amendment which he is going to be withdrawing. Hopefully, we will have an opportunity, with his leadership, to revisit that on another piece of legislation, or on the floor independently.

Mr. DODD. I thank my colleague from Delaware.

AMENDMENT NO. 690

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 690.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows: The Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD) proposes an amendment numbered 690.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following new section—

SEC. . TRANSFER OF AUTHORITY FOR CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS FROM STATE DEPARTMENT INSPECTOR GENERAL TO DIPLOMATIC SECURITY SERVICE.

(a) Section 37(a)(1) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2709(a)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) conduct investigations—

"(A) concerning illegal passport or visa issuance or use; and

"(B) concerning potential violations of Federal criminal law by employees of the Department of State or the Broadcasting Board of Governors."

(b) Section 209(c)(3) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 3929(c)(3)) is amended by adding the following—

"In such cases, the Inspector General shall immediately notify the Director of the Diplomatic Security Service, who, unless otherwise directed by the Attorney General, shall assume the responsibility for the investigation."

(b) The amendment made by this section shall take effect October 1, 2000.

(c) Not later than February 1, 2000, the Secretary of State and the State Department Inspector General shall report to the appropriate congressional committees on—

(1) the budget transfer required from the Inspector General to the Diplomatic Security Service to carry out the provisions of this section;

(2) other budgetary resources necessary to carry out the provisions of this section;

(3) any other matters relevant to the implementation of this section.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, this amendment would transfer the authority for criminal investigations from the State Department Office of Inspector General to the Office of Diplomatic Security in cases of passport fraud and to the Attorney General in cases of other potential criminal offenses.

Let me say at the very outset that I realize this is a very controversial amendment. But I would like to take this opportunity to explain to my colleagues why I have decided to discuss this matter today.

Based upon a number of inspector general investigations I have reviewed, I question whether the inspector general, who is not a lawyer, should be supervising criminal investigations at all. The original mission of the inspector general was to perform routine audits both to examine financial records and to review the operations of various programs.

The inspector general also is charged with inspecting overseas diplomatic missions and domestic bureaus to ensure that the State Department is performing with maximum efficiency and using resources appropriately. Certainly the inspector general can, and should, continue to concentrate in these areas. But criminal investigations are far more complex and sensitive than routine audits and inspections.

I think many of my colleagues would be surprised at the type and scope of investigations that the State Department inspector general undertakes, and, frankly, at the number of matters that get referred to the Justice Department for further action which the Justice Department declines to take up.

The inspector general currently decides when and who to investigate. There are virtually no checks—none—on the office once it has commenced a criminal investigation.

While the State Department inspector general's office is supposed to be a neutral finder of fact, experience shows that historically that office has acted in a highly adversarial manner trying to establish cases that can be referred to the Justice Department.

I happen to believe, as an aside, that the inspector general's handling of matters relating to Ambassador Richard Holbrooke unnecessarily delayed the consideration of his nomination to the Senate and at additional taxpayer cost.

Let me, however, commend the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee for the very thorough but expeditious manner in which he has guided the Foreign Relations Committee deliberations of that particular nomination.

I would also like to call to the attention of the Members the final report of the independent counsel appointed to investigate the so-called "Clinton passport matter," which arose in the course of the 1992 Presidential elections. Joseph diGenova, the independent counsel in that case, took the State Department Office of the Inspector General to task for the sloppiness and lack of professionalism with which it conducted the initial investigation of this matter. He concluded by saying that this matter should never have been referred for criminal prosecution, nor should an independent counsel have been appointed.

It is not my intention to push this amendment to a final vote. I know the managers of the bill and the members of the Governmental Affairs Committee have some questions about this amendment as it is currently drafted. I respect their judgment tremendously. At the very least, however, I believe there is a need for an independent agency, the General Accounting Office, to take a long and hard and serious look at the practices of the inspector general's office with respect to criminal investigations and assess whether these offices are the appropriate places for criminal matters to be looked at.

These offices were set up to conduct and perform certain valuable and important functions. In my view, as with so many other offices, once they get started they go off into areas they lack expertise in and conduct investigations which are questionable, at best. This has happened, with little or no checks and balances.

Even under the independent counsel law, I point out, a person is entitled to know what they are charged with and given a chance to respond to the allegations raised. Under the Inspector General's investigations, a person is not given those rights.

Fundamental due process would seem to insist everyone be given the opportunity to respond to charges leveled against them.

I think this is a serious matter. I am hopeful the matter can be corrected without having to go through a legislative route. I think it can be done administratively. I urge the State Department, the Secretary of State, and others to make these corrections. If not, I will come back with this amendment next year. I will offer it in committee and I will offer it on the floor to legislatively deal with this issue.

I am anxious to hear other thoughts and ideas on how to correct this problem. I take it seriously when the careers of individuals can be ruined and destroyed by opening up one of these investigations without providing that individual with an opportunity to respond to those charges.

I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment I offered a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 1:11 p.m., recessed until 2:16 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. INHOFE].

AMENDMENT NO. 692

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, how many minutes are assigned to the distinguished Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the Feingold amendment, 5 minutes equally divided—amendment No. 692.

Mr. HELMS. And Senator LUGAR has some time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is 5 minutes equally divided. Senator LUGAR would have 2½ minutes.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

I see both Senators on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Anne Alexander, a fellow in my office, be accorded the privilege of the floor during the remainder of the debate on the State Department authorization bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, before my time begins, I ask unanimous consent to add the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. DORGAN, as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, my amendment does not kill the National Endowment for Democracy, nor does it cut off one penny from its budget. Rather, this amendment reforms the grant-making process of the NED.

The NED seeks to promote democracy around the world. I believe it is only just and fair that its grant-making process be open and competitive on a level playing field for all applicants. Mr. President, 65 percent of NED's grant money is automatically allocated to four so-called "core grantees," while everyone else has to compete for the remaining 35 percent of the budget. I really do not think this is fair.

The core grantees have done good work in promoting democracy abroad, but are the programs sponsored by the core grantees so superior to all the other programs we have that we must assume they should automatically get the full 65 percent while everyone else has to compete for a much smaller piece of the pie?

My amendment does not cut funding for the NED or even necessarily for these four grantee groups. It just phases out, over a 5-year period, the automatic bonanza these groups get every year. This amendment will simply level the playing field so these groups have to compete for funding like everybody else.

So I urge my colleagues to understand this does not cut a penny. It does not change the basic mission. It just says we have reached the point, with these taxpayers' dollars, where it really should be phased down to the point where everything is done on a competitive basis.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin.

The National Endowment for Democracy for the last 18 years has made grants to organizations all over the world to boost democracy in the most critical areas. It came about during the Reagan administration, in which the genius of the plan, of pulling together representatives of the Republican Party, the Democratic Party, the National Chamber of Commerce, and AFL-CIO, brought checks and balances within our own political spectrum but outside the State Department, outside the Government. For the last 18 years, these grants have not been politicized. As a matter of fact, as there are areas of concern that come to the board of the National Endowment, each of the four groups is asked to meet the challenge, to offer alternatives competitively for peer review, and then review by staff, and finally votes by members.

I have been privileged to serve for the last 8 years on the board of the National Endowment for Democracy. At each meeting I have examined over 100 of these grants. They come, each time, with really superior effort by four entities we can count on, the two party institutes in the Chamber and the labor people of this country.

I see no need to amend that process. It is a process that has worked well. It is a process that has not been politicized. It has a good track record. If the Senator's amendment is adopted, we will inevitably have a fairly large bureaucracy of people sifting through grants from all sources.

Grants do come from some 250 different entities and formulate at least a third of the grants that are awarded by the board. Some of these are worthy and some are not so worthy, but we can count upon quality of response, and I think that is important. It is a situation of trying to fix something that is not broke, and I hope Senators will resist that impulse. There is not a compelling need for change. The amendment did not have any type of airing in a hearing for examination and for testimony by witnesses on either or all sides.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for 5 seconds?

Mr. LUGAR. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I agree with the Senator from Indiana and suggest it has the added benefit of taking four groups on different ideological ends of the spectrum and having them cooperate, work together. It has a salutary impact on how they function relative to one another overall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the Feingold amendment to the State Department authorization bill would have the effect of diminishing the standing enjoyed by the four principal grantees—and partners—of the National Endowment for Democracy.

When the Endowment was established in 1983, the Congress envisioned that four core grantees would be established along with the NED to carry out its mission—the National Democratic Institute (NDI), the International Republican Institute (IRI), the Center for International Private Enterprise (CIPE) affiliated with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the AFL-CIO's Solidarity Center. The reason for this decentralized approach was a belief—shared by leading Democrats and Republicans alike—that the promotion of democracy is an enduring American interest and that representatives of American civil society would be better able than government officials to help their counterparts—political parties, labor movements, business associations and civic groups—that are struggling to build democratic systems in their own countries. Private organizations doing private work in the public interest ought to be supported and expanded by federal funding.

The National Endowment for Democracy has been debated on this floor on numerous occasions, most recently at some length in 1997, after which the Senate voted 72 to 27 to reaffirm its support for the Endowment and its programs. Along with successive Administrations—including those of Presidents Reagan, Bush and Clinton alike—this body has consistently voiced its support for the mission and unique contribution to the spread of democracy by this organization.

The Feingold amendment would eliminate the concept of the "core grantees" of the Endowment which is the heart of the operational premise that the NED embodies. While the amendment purports to make the Endowment more efficient and effective by making all NED grants competitive, it would actually have the opposite effect. If passed, the amendment's unintended consequence would be to create a centralized, bureaucratic structure that would severely weaken the NED, and slow the responsiveness of the core grantees. It would also oblige the Republican and Democratic institutes to compete with one another for the same funding, so instead of working in tandem to promote American ideals abroad, they would be set at odds with each other. The same would happen with the institutes for business and labor: conflict, rather than comity. The harmonious package of programs would be dissolved—for no apparent reason.

The Endowment is a cost effective initiative that works. Anyone who has taken the time to examine the activities of the Endowment's core grantees or talked with the beneficiaries of their work in places like Northern Ireland, Nigeria, Indonesia, Cuba and Bosnia, would agree.

The NED should be encouraged to continue this mission, which reflects the noblest American political tradition and serves the strategic interests of the United States. It should not be hamstrung by the new and unwarranted restrictions that are proposed in this amendment.

It was the decision by the Congress that there should be four principal grantees of the Endowment because they each have a unique contribution to make in promoting democracy. This was a correct decision, and the core grantees should continue to be seen as different from other grantees and an integral part of the Endowment. If we should now change the Endowment's fundamental premise, the ability of these core grantees to respond quickly to democratic openings will be undermined.

It has been suggested that under the current arrangement the work of the core grantees is not subject to adequate scrutiny because the Endowment each year sets aside a modest allocation of funding for each of their programs. This allocation—of 4.1 million for each institute's global array of programs—does not mean that they get a free ride or a blank check. It is important to note that every single one of the over 200 grants awarded annually by the Endowment is strictly reviewed by program and financial staff and by a distinguished bipartisan Board of Directors currently chaired by the distinguished former congressman from Indiana, Dr. John Brademas. This is true regardless of whether the grantee is one of the four core grantees or not. The core grantees are covered by the same reporting and evaluation requirements that effect all grantees. Let us leave the decision-making for the allocation of funding in the very able hands of the Endowment's Board of Directors, which includes some of the most accomplished international affairs strategists and democrats in the United States.

This body frequently earmarks organizations that it believes should receive public support. There is nothing wrong nor nefarious in this approach. I hope the Senate will take this opportunity to reaffirm its strong support for the work of the four institutes associated with the Endowment—the republican and democratic party institutes, and those associated with the labor movement and the business community—by voting No on the Feingold amendment.

This amendment seeks to fix something that is not broken. The amendment will not improve the Endowment, but to weaken its unique capacity to be flexible, responsive and effective. The last thing we should do is to hastily tinker with the internal workings of this important institution without any serious examination of the supposed problems this amendment is meant to address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 692. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

AMENDMENT NO. 712

(Purpose: Relating to the development of an automated entry-exit control system for the United States)

At the end of title VII of the bill, insert the following:

Subtitle C—United States Entry-Exit Controls
SEC. 732. AMENDMENT OF THE ILLEGAL IMMIGRATION REFORM AND IMMIGRANT RESPONSIBILITY ACT OF 1996.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 110(a) of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (8 U.S.C. 1221 note) is amended to read as follows:

“(a) SYSTEM.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall develop an automated entry and exit control system that will—

“(A) collect a record of departure for every alien departing the United States and match the record of departure with the record of the alien’s arrival in the United States; and

“(B) enable the Attorney General to identify, through online searching procedures, lawfully admitted nonimmigrants who remain in the United States beyond the period authorized by the Attorney General.

“(2) EXCEPTION.—The system under paragraph (1) shall not collect a record of arrival or departure—

“(A) at a land border or seaport of the United States for any alien; or

“(B) for any alien for whom the documentary requirements in section 212(a)(7)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act have been waived by the Attorney General and the Secretary of State under section 212(d)(4)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect as if included in the enactment of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (division C of Public Law 104-208; 110 Stat. 3009-546).

SEC. 733. REPORT ON AUTOMATED ENTRY-EXIT CONTROL SYSTEM.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall submit a report to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives on the feasibility of developing and implementing an automated entry-exit control system that would collect a record of departure for every alien departing the United States and match the record of departure with the record of the alien’s arrival in the United States, including departures and arrivals at the land borders and seaports of the United States.

(b) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—Such report shall—

(1) assess the costs and feasibility of various means of operating such an automated entry-exit control system, including exploring—

(A) how, if the automated entry-exit control system were limited to certain aliens ar-iving at airports, departure records of those aliens could be collected when they depart through a land border or seaport; and

(B) the feasibility of the Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State, negotiating reciprocal agreements with the governments of contiguous countries to collect such information on behalf of the United States and share it in an acceptable automated format;

(2) consider the various means of developing such a system, including the use of pilot projects if appropriate, and assess which means would be most appropriate in which geographical regions;

(3) evaluate how such a system could be implemented without increasing border traffic congestion and border crossing delays and, if any such system would increase border crossing delays, evaluate to what extent such congestion or delays would increase; and

(4) estimate the length of time that would be required for any such system to be developed and implemented.

SEC. 734. ANNUAL REPORTS ON ENTRY-EXIT CONTROL AND USE OF ENTRY-EXIT CONTROL DATA.

(a) ANNUAL REPORTS ON IMPLEMENTATION OF ENTRY-EXIT CONTROL AT AIRPORTS.—Not later than 30 days after the end of each fiscal year until the fiscal year in which the Attorney General certifies to Congress that the entry-exit control system required by section 110(a) of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, as amended by section 732 of this Act, has been developed, the Attorney General shall submit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report that—

(1) provides an accurate assessment of the status of the development of the entry-exit control system;

(2) includes a specific schedule for the development of the entry-exit control system that the Attorney General anticipates will be met; and

(3) includes a detailed estimate of the funding, if any, needed for the development of the entry-exit control system.

(b) ANNUAL REPORTS ON VISA OVERSTAYS IDENTIFIED THROUGH THE ENTRY-EXIT CONTROL SYSTEM.—Not later than June 30 of each year, the Attorney General shall submit to the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report that sets forth—

(1) the number of arrival records of aliens and the number of departure records of aliens that were collected during the preceding fiscal year under the entry-exit control system under section 110(a) of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, as so amended, with a separate accounting of such numbers by country of nationality;

(2) the number of departure records of aliens that were successfully matched to records of such aliens’ prior arrival in the United States, with a separate accounting of such numbers by country of nationality and by classification as immigrant or non-immigrant; and

(3) the number of aliens who arrived as nonimmigrants, or as visitors under the visa waiver program under section 217 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, for whom no matching departure record has been obtained through the system, or through other means, as of the end of such aliens’ authorized period of stay, with an accounting by country of nationality and approximate date of arrival in the United States.

(c) INCORPORATION INTO OTHER DATABASES.—Information regarding aliens who have remained in the United States beyond their authorized period of stay that is identified through the system referred to in subsection (a) shall be integrated into appropriate databases of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Department of State, including those used at ports-of-entry and at consular offices.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to thank Senator HELMS and Senator BIDEN for accepting as part of S. 886, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, my amendment to remove the requirement that an automated entry-exit program be established at land and sea ports and replace that with a required feasibility study to be completed within 1 year. This amendment would correct a significant error made in the 1996 Immigration Act that if left uncorrected will cause a significant loss of U.S. jobs in export and tourist industries, and would also significantly harm our relations with Canada and Mexico.

This amendment is the same as legislation that passed the Senate in two forms last year, with the sole exception of provisions related to the U.S. Customs Service, which were removed at the request of the Finance Committee because it has scheduled a series of oversight hearings on the Customs Service, which is also up for reauthorization this year, and the removal of authorizations for the INS. Last year, the legislation passed the Senate first by unanimous consent as a stand alone bill (S. 1360) and second, as part of the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill.

Section 110 of the 1996 Immigration Act mandated that an automated system be established to record the entry and exit of all aliens as a means to provide more information on individuals who “over stay” their visas. However, this well-intentioned government program, if implemented, would be quite disastrous. Today, when INS or Customs officials inspect people at land borders, they examine papers as necessary and make quick determinations, using their discretion on when to inspect further or solicit more information. If every single passenger of every single vehicle was required to provide potentially voluminous information and be entered into a computer—even assuming an incredibly quick 30 seconds per individual—the traffic delays would exceed 20 hours in numerous jurisdictions at both the northern and southern borders. This would create a human, economic, and even environmental nightmare in both directions. Last year, Congress delayed implementation of this program until March 30, 2001. But after that date, the crisis will begin.

In 1996, the House version of the omnibus immigration bill contained a measure simply to establish pilot projects to collect entry and departure records at fewer than a handful of airports. The Senate bill contained a general provision to require an automated entry-exit system—but also only at airports. Then, in conference, without any debate, a mandatory entry-exit system to capture the records of "every alien" was added.

Representative SMITH and Senator Simpson, to their credit, conceded in a letter to the Canadian Ambassador that it was not the intent of the 1996 Act to cover, for example, Canadians at the northern border. However, because of the term "every alien," the INS has interpreted the law to require this program to be implemented at all land borders, in addition to air and sea ports of entry. To the credit of the INS, it concedes that it cannot implement such a system and the agency questions what it will do if it is forced to do so.

The Congress itself never considered such a system. That the legislative proposal was changed fundamentally in conference is clear. As Judiciary Committee Chair ORRIN HATCH has stated, "I think that we have all come to realize that section 110 of the 1996 Act [was] inserted in conference with little or no record, [and] no consideration or debate. It was well intended, there is no question, but I think poorly constructed."

I would like to thank Senators KENNEDY, GRAMS, LEAHY, BURNS, MCCAIN, GORTON, CRAIG, MURKOWSKI, MURRAY, JEFFORDS, SNOWE, SMITH of Oregon, DORGAN, LEVIN, MOYNIHAN, SCHUMER, MACK, DURBIN, and HAGEL for cosponsoring this amendment and for their support along the way on this battle to prevent the major disruptions that Section 110 would cause to our economy and our international relations. I would particularly like to express my appreciation for the leadership on this amendment displayed by Senator GRAMS and his staff, who are trying to save jobs for the people of Minnesota that would be lost if this automated entry-exit system came into effect at the northern border. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 713

(Purpose: To require reports with respect to the holding of a referendum on Western Sahara)

On page 115, after line 18, add the following new section:

SEC. . REPORTS WITH RESPECT TO A REFERENDUM ON WESTERN SAHARA.

(a) REPORTS REQUIRED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than each of the dates specified in paragraph (2), the Secretary of State shall submit a report to the appropriate congressional committees describing specific steps being taken by the Government of Morocco and by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Saguia el-Hamra and Rio de Oro (POLISARIO) to ensure that a free, fair, and transparent referendum in which the people of the Western Sahara will choose between independence and integration with Morocco will be held by July 2000.

(2) DEADLINES FOR SUBMISSION OF REPORTS.—The dates referred to in paragraph (1) are January 1, 2000, and June 1, 2000.

(b) REPORT ELEMENTS.—The report shall include—

(1) a description of preparations for the referendum; including the extent to which free access to the territory for independent international organizations, including election servers and international media, will be guaranteed.

(2) a description of current efforts by the Department of State to ensure that a referendum will be held by July 2000;

(3) an assessment of the likelihood that the July 2000 date will be met;

(4) a description of obstacles, if any, to the voter-registration process and other preparations for the referendum, and efforts being made by the parties and the United States Government to overcome those obstacles; and

(5) an assessment of progress being made in the repatriation process.

WESTERN SAHARA

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I'm delighted that the managers' amendment includes the provision Senator GORDON SMITH, Senator LEAHY, and I sponsored to require the State Department to report on progress on the July 2000 referendum in the Western Sahara, and I commend Senators HELMS and BIDEN for including this provision in the managers' amendment.

Since 1988, the United Nations has sought to organize a free, fair, and open referendum on self-determination for the people of the Western Sahara, the former Spanish colony that Morocco has illegally occupied since 1975.

The International Court of Justice, the Organization of African Unity, the United States, and many other nations throughout the world have not recognized Morocco's claim to the area. However, Morocco's occupation continues. Tens of thousands of the Sahrawi people languish in refugee camps in southern Algeria and have been denied the opportunity to determine their own future.

A U.N. referendum was originally scheduled for 1992. It has since been delayed many times, primarily due to the resistance of the Government of Morocco.

In the 1997 Houston Accords, achieved under the leadership of former Secretary of State James Baker, and in a U.N. plan last December, the international community called for the conclusion of the voter registration process and a referendum. Morocco subsequently agreed to allow the referendum to occur by July 2000.

I know the Administration shares our interest in resolving this long-standing dispute. The State Department should make it clear to both parties to this dispute that our government expects the people of the Western Sahara to be allowed to exercise their right to self-determination in a free, fair, and open referendum by July 2000.

Morocco has been a faithful ally of the United States for more than 200 years, but its refusal to allow the people of the Western Sahara to determine their own political future undercuts America's efforts to promote democratic principles worldwide.

The United States can play a constructive role in promoting a resolution of this dispute. To promote that objective, the provision included in the managers' amendment would require the State Department to report on January 1, 2000 and again on June 1, 2000 on specific steps being taken by the Government of Morocco and by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Saguia el-Hamra and Rio de Oro (POLISARIO) to ensure that a free, fair, and open referendum in which the people of the Western Sahara will choose between independence and integration with Morocco will be held by July 2000.

The reports will include a description of preparations for the referendum, including the extent to which free access to the territory for independent and international organizations, including election observers and international media, will be guaranteed. Human rights organizations and other international organizations must be allowed to observe the referendum.

The reports will also include a description of current efforts by the Department of State to ensure that a referendum will be held by July 2000 and an assessment of the likelihood that the July 2000 date will be met.

They will also include a description of obstacles, if any, to the voter registration process and other preparations for the referendum, and efforts being made by the parties and the United States Government to overcome those obstacles. Finally, the reports will include an assessment of progress being made in the repatriation process.

A solution to the conflict over the Western Sahara will enhance security and stability in Northern Africa. After more than ten years of delay, the people of the Western Sahara should be permitted to determine for themselves who will govern them. I look forward to that day, and I commend my colleagues for including this provision in the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 714

(Purpose: To require the designation of a senior-level State Department official for Northeastern Europe)

On page 35, between lines 7 and 8, insert the following new section:

SEC. 302. STATE DEPARTMENT OFFICIAL FOR NORTHEASTERN EUROPE.

The Secretary of State shall designate an existing senior-level official of the Department of State with responsibility for promoting regional cooperation in and coordinating United States policy toward Northeastern Europe.

POLICY COORDINATOR FOR NORTHEASTERN EUROPE

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, the State Department has been working to promote regional cooperation in Northeastern Europe. The idea behind this policy is more fully to integrate the Baltic countries into Europe and overcome cold war divisions to promote stability in the region. I support this approach, and I want to see it institutionalized at the State Department by designating a senior-level official with responsibility for coordinating policy toward Northeastern Europe.

This policy of integration also reduces tensions, since regional cooperation that includes Russia's northwestern regions gives Russia a stake in regional stability. The policy will also show Russia that it need not feel threatened by the integration of the Baltic States into European institutions. The Baltic countries have increased their ties with the northwestern Russian regions, much the way Canada has ties with the border states of the United States. The Baltic States benefit as well from regional cooperation with the Nordic countries, further cementing the Baltic nations as part of Europe.

It is mutually beneficial for the all the Northeastern European countries to address regional problems, such as environmental problems caused by the former Soviet Union, or burgeoning crime and drug smuggling from the Russian mafia.

The Northern European Initiative announced in 1997 is just one example of this policy. It fosters regional cooperation and cross-border ties, relying on the private sector and nongovernmental organizations, as well as governments, in the areas of trade and investment, institution building, law enforcement, nuclear waste control, and the development of civil society, among others. Another positive step was the signing of the Baltic Charter in 1998 that strengthens Baltic bilateral ties and ties with the United States and addresses Baltic security concerns. Regional organizations have been set up, including BALTSEA, to coordinate military assistance, as well as several joint Baltic efforts at defense cooperation.

The State Department has set out on an ambitious agenda that I think is going in a very positive direction. However, I am afraid other crises and problems, for instance the many issues that will come up in Southeastern Europe following the crisis in Kosovo, will divert the Department's attention from this policy and cause it to lose steam. Therefore, I am offering this amendment to direct the Secretary to designate an existing senior-level State Department official with responsibility for coordinating policy toward Northeastern Europe. The way this assignment of responsibility would fit in the State Department's structure is up to the Secretary.

I also want to make clear that I mean no criticism of the Assistant Secretary for European Affairs by proposing this amendment. On the contrary, I think he has done an extraordinarily good job in pursuing the integration of Northeastern Europe. But with all of Europe on his mind, I think it would only further the aims of the bureau to be sure that a senior-level official is designated to coordinate and promote this policy.

I appreciate the support of Senator HELMS and Senator BIDEN, and understand that this amendment has been added to the manager's package.

AMENDMENT NO. 715

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SELF-DETERMINATION IN EAST TIMOR

SEC. . (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) On May 5, 1999 the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal signed an agreement that provides for an August 8, 1999 ballot organized by the United Nations on East Timor's political status;

(2) On June 22, 1999 the ballot was rescheduled for August 21 or 22 due to concerns that the conditions necessary for a free and fair vote could not be established prior to August 8;

(3) On January 27, 1999, President Habibie expressed a willingness to consider independence for East Timor if a majority of the East Timorese reject autonomy in the August ballot;

(4) Under the May 5th agreement the Government of Indonesia is responsible for ensuring that the August ballot is carried out in a fair and peaceful way in an atmosphere free of intimidation, violence or interference;

(5) The inclusion of anti-independence militia members in Indonesian forces responsible for establishing security in East Timor violates the May 5th agreement which states that the absolute neutrality of the military and police is essential for holding a free and fair ballot;

(6) The arming of anti-independence militias by members of the Indonesian military for the purpose of sabotaging the August ballot has resulted in hundreds of civilians killed, injured or disappeared in separate attacks by these militias who continue to act without restraint;

(7) The United Nations Secretary General has received credible reports of political violence, including intimidation and killings, by armed anti-independence militias against unarmed pro-independence civilians;

(8) There have been killings of opponents of independence, including civilians and militia members;

(9) The killings in East Timor should be fully investigated and the individuals responsible brought to justice;

(10) Access to East Timor by international human rights monitors and humanitarian organizations is limited, and members of the press have been threatened;

(11) The presence of members of the United Nations Assistance Mission in East Timor has already resulted in an improved security environment in the East Timorese capital of Dili;

(12) A robust international observer mission and police force throughout East Timor is critical to creating a stable and secure environment necessary for a free and fair ballot;

(13) The Administration should be commended for its support for the United Nations Assistance Mission in East Timor which will provide monitoring and support for the ballot and include international civilian police, military liaison officers and election monitors;

(b) POLICY.—(1) The President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of the Treasury (acting through the United States executive directors to international financial institutions) should immediately intensify their efforts to prevail upon the Indonesian Government and military to—

(A) disarm and disband anti-independence militias;

(B) grant full access to East Timor by international human rights monitors, humanitarian organizations, and the press;

(C) allow Timorese who have been living in exile to return to East Timor to participate in the ballot; and

(2) the President should submit a report to the Congress not later than 21 days after passage of this Act, containing a description of the Administration's efforts and his assessment of steps taken by the Indonesian Government and military to ensure a stable and secure environment in East Timor, including those steps described in paragraph (1).

SELF-DETERMINATION IN EAST TIMOR

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today I am offering an amendment in support of a peaceful process of self-determination in East Timor. I am pleased that Senators FEINGOLD, REED, MCCONNELL, HARKIN, MOYNIHAN, CHAFEE, KOHL, JEFFORDS, KENNEDY, KERRY, FEINSTEIN, MURRAY, SCHUMER, BOXER, DURBIN, WELLSTONE, and WYDEN are cosponsoring this amendment. Many of them have worked hard on this issue for as long as they have been in the United States Senate.

I understand the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. President, today, the Indonesian Government has an historic opportunity to resolve a conflict that has been the cause of suffering and instability for 23 years. It has made a commitment to vote on August 21 or 22, on East Timor's future, and recognized its responsibility to ensure that the vote is free and fair.

On May 5th, when I introduced a similar resolution, I remarked on Indonesia's accomplishments in the past year: President Suharto relinquished power; the Indonesian Government endorsed a ballot on autonomy; and the United Nations, Portugal and Indonesia signed an agreement on the procedures for that vote.

There has been more progress in the past month. Democratic elections have been held and the first members of an international observer mission and police force arrived in East Timor.

The amendment that we are offering today recognizes many of the positive steps that have been taken. A year ago few people would have predicted that a settlement of East Timor's future would be in sight.

But it also expresses our deep concern that August 21st is quickly approaching, and current conditions in East Timor are far from conducive to holding a free and fair ballot.

Hundreds of civilians have been killed, injured or disappeared in ongoing violence by anti-independence militias armed by members of the Indonesian military for the purpose of sabotaging the vote.

The inclusion of anti-independence members in Indonesian forces responsible for establishing security in East Timor threatens the neutrality of the military and police, and violates the terms of the May 5th agreement.

International human rights monitors and humanitarian organizations continue to face problems gaining access to the island, and members of the press have been threatened.

This amendment calls on the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of the Treasury—acting through U.S. executive directors to international financial institutions—to immediately intensify their efforts to prevail upon the Indonesian Government to disarm and disband the anti-independence militias.

We should be prepared to use all the resources at our disposal, including our voice and vote at the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank and other international financial institutions, to convince the Indonesians to stop the violence. This is not only their responsibility, it is in their best interests. If the Indonesian military succeeds in sabotaging the vote, Indonesia will face international condemnation.

On June 11th, I and other Members of Congress sent a letter to World Bank President James Wolfensohn about the need for the World Bank to use its leverage with the Indonesian Government. I ask unanimous consent that the text of that letter be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. (See exhibit 1.)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the international community has recognized the urgency of this situation. An international monitoring and police presence throughout East Timor is critical to creating a secure environment.

The Administration is shouldering its share of the costs of the UN monitors and police, and its members who arrived in East Timor several weeks ago already report some progress in stemming the violence.

But far more needs to be done. It is time for the Indonesian Government and military to do their part—to act decisively to ensure that a free and fair vote can occur.

This amendment reinforces what others have said and what the Indonesian Government has already committed to do. I thank the managers of the bill for accepting the amendment.

WASHINGTON, DC,
June 11, 1999.

Hon. JAMES WOLFENSOHN,
President, The World Bank,
Washington, DC.

DEAR JIM: For many years, we have consistently raised concerns about the failure of the Indonesian Government to respect the human rights of the people of East Timor and to allow them an opportunity to express their right of self-determination. We are writing to convey our deep concern about the escalating violence in East Timor, which has put in doubt the August 8th ballot on East Timor's political future.

We have called on the Indonesian Government to stop military and paramilitary violence which threatens to undermine the vote, yet the threats and killings continue unabated. United Nations officials, East Timorese leaders, and members of the Catholic Church, including Bishop Belo, blame the Indonesian military for intentionally seeking to sabotage the vote. We have called on our own Administration to work urgently to pressure Jakarta to take the steps necessary for a free and fair vote.

We believe it is now imperative that the international financial institutions (IFIs), most importantly the World Bank, make clear to the Indonesian Government that if the August ballot is not free and fair, continued large scale investment by the IFIs will be in jeopardy. Jakarta must be convinced of what is at stake. If it fails to act decisively to permit a free and fair vote, it will risk becoming a pariah state. The government and army must abide by the May 5th UN-sponsored tripartite accord, most specifically by stopping and disarming the anti-independence militias that are using the weapons supplied to them by the Indonesian military to intimidate and attack East Timorese civilians.

We appeal to you to personally press the Indonesian Government to create a secure environment for the August vote and to prevent any efforts to restrict aid to East Timorese who have been displaced by the militia violence.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for a peaceful process of self-determination in East Timor. These are both exciting and troubling times in Indonesia as a whole, and the future of East Timor may be resolved in the coming months. President Habibie himself indicated that he would work toward resolution of East Timor's status by the end of the year.

The recent Parliamentary elections in Indonesia proceeded peacefully, and virtually without incident. It appears as if a democratic transition will be forthcoming, and I am hopeful that the people of Indonesia remain committed to free and fair elections. While we have supported these elections, and encouraged a fair process, we simultaneously receive reports of increased social unrest. Clashes between Muslims and Christians in Ambon are only one indication of the tensions which underlie relations between different ethnic groups.

The situation in East Timor has historically divided sympathies over an acceptable solution, and violent attacks in the region have become more prevalent since the beginning of the year. Evidence has indicated that anti-independence militias have been supported and armed by some members of the Indonesian military. The end result of such support can only be an increase in the political tensions and violence in East Timor. The militias have committed scores of human rights abuses against the ethnic East Timorese in an effort to suppress any movement towards full independence in East Timor.

It is as yet unclear how East Timor's status will ultimately be resolved. Solutions from greater autonomy within Indonesia to full independence are only two of the proposals that have been brought forward. The international community has sought to encourage an open decision process by the people of East Timor as to what their future status should hold, but the increased strength of the anti-independence militias threatens to undermine the process. In order for a free ballot to be held in the coming months, the United States must make an effort to ensure that the process is fair.

I co-sponsored a resolution offered by Senator LEAHY to encourage an open ballot on the question of East Timor, but this resolution also urges full access by international human rights monitors and the disbanding of the militias. Such steps are critical to the fair determination of East Timor's future, and I hope that this Congress will continue to show its support for the ballot process.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for Senator LEAHY's amendment promoting peaceful self determination for the peoples of East Timor and bringing the attention of the United States to the long and difficult climb of the East Timorese towards democracy. I am pleased to join Senator FEINGOLD as a cosponsor of this amendment which underscores the importance of the historic opportunity which the East Timorese face, and our duty to support them in their struggle for peace and self determination. The upcoming August vote, or consultation, on East Timorese autonomy is crucial, not only for the East Timorese people, but for America and for every nation that supports democracy and stands against the rule of terror and violence which has shaped twenty years of East Timorese history.

The past year has witnessed extraordinary progress. The efforts of Portugal, the United Nations, the global community and the East Timorese leaders have been impressive. Combined with the willingness of the Indonesian government, these efforts have at last resulted in a plan for the peaceful and democratic determination of East Timor's political destiny. I would like to recognize all those whose courage and commitment have led us towards the August consultation, a consultation which will allow the East Timorese, at long last, to decide for themselves how they are to be governed.

Nevertheless, much remains to be done. As great an achievement as the promised consultation may be, the future is far from certain. East Timor, already troubled by years of bloodshed, has seen even greater escalations in human rights abuses in recent months. Although it has already buried 200,000 people who have died violently since the 1975 Indonesian invasion, East Timor continues to be riven by conflict. Organized campaigns of terror and intimidation have been aimed at East Timorese leaders and journalists who favor autonomy. Some international observers have reported that East Timorese have been systematically herded into camps in efforts to provide large blocs of pro-Indonesian votes in the August consultation. Militia activity, violence, and destruction continue unabated.

If the violence in East Timor is to cease, the militias must be stripped of their weapons and disbanded. International observers will play a critical role, both in the course of the consultation and in the implementation of the results that follow. Only subjecting this process to the harsh light of international scrutiny can we hope to prevent East Timor's violent past from serving as prologue to an equally violent future. Without our active participation and support, the hope of a lasting peace in East Timor is in danger of being lost.

Mr. President, this historic opportunity for peace must not be allowed to slip away. The United States has a proud tradition of championing those who seek freedom and democracy across the world. It is my hope that this amendment will encourage the United States to intensify efforts to ensure that the people of East Timor find peace at last.

AMENDMENT NO. 724

At the appropriate place, insert:

The Senate finds that:

Ten percent of the citizens of the Islamic Republic of Iran are members of religious minority groups;

According to the State Department and internationally recognized human rights organizations, such as Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, religious minorities in the Islamic Republic of Iran—including Sunni Muslims, Baha'is, Christians, and Jews—have been the victims of human rights violations solely because of their status as religious minorities;

The 55th session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights passed Resolution 1999/13, which expresses the concern of the international community over continued discrimination against the religious minorities in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and calls on that country to moderate its policy on religious minorities until they are completely emancipated;

More than half the Jews in Iran have been forced to flee that country since the Islamic Revolution of 1979 because of religious persecution, and many of them now reside in the United States;

The Iranian Jewish community, with a 2,500-year history and currently numbering some 30,000 people, is the oldest Jewish community living in the Diaspora;

Five Jews have been executed by the Iranian government in the past five years without having been tried;

There has been a noticeable increase recently in anti-Semitic propaganda in the government-controlled Iranian press;

On the eve of the Jewish holiday of Passover 1999, thirteen or more Jews, including community and religious leaders in the city of Shiraz, were arrested by the authorities of the Islamic Republic of Iran; and

In keeping with its dismal record on providing accused prisoners with due process and fair treatment, the Islamic Republic of Iran failed to charge the detained Jews with any specific crime or allow visitation by relatives of the detained for more than months: Now, therefore, it is the sense of the Congress that the United States should—

Continue to work through the United Nations to assure that the Islamic Republic of Iran implements the recommendations of Resolution 1999/13.

(2) Condemn, in the strongest possible terms, the recent arrest of members of Iran's Jewish minority and urge their immediate release;

(3) Urge all nations having relations with the Islamic Republic of Iran to condemn the treatment of religious minorities in Iran and call for the release of all prisoners held on the basis of their religious beliefs; and

(4) Maintain the current United States policy toward the Islamic Republic of Iran unless and until that country moderates its treatment of religious minorities.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to cases opened on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I rise to express serious concerns which I have about the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut regarding investigation procedures at the Office of Inspector General for the Department of State. These concerns are not mine alone, but have been brought to the attention of the Governmental Affairs Committee by a number of inspectors general. The amendment requires the Inspector General for the Department of State to provide each individual mentioned in a report an opportunity to refute any allegation or assertion made regarding that person's activities. While I understand the Senator from Connecticut's concerns, I fear that the amendment as written could have serious repercussions for law enforcement. For example, providing allegations and assertions to each individual mentioned in a criminal investigation prior to a referral, no matter how tangentially involved, could compromise a subsequent investigation by the Department of Justice. In addition, it could reveal sources of information and subject those sources to reprisals and chill future cooperation from potential witnesses. Second, the amendment could create rights that witnesses and targets of other investigations do not have. It is unclear what litigation or grievances could result from a failure to follow the amendment. Third, there are a number of unsettled issues in the amendment such as what constitutes "exculpatory material" and whether a subject, witness, or an individual with only marginal relevance to the investigation is entitled to review the actual report. Fourth, I understand the State Department Inspector General is concerned that the reporting requirement could be used to second-guess discretion that she uses in her investigations. Finally, by using the ambiguous term "assertions," the amendment puts an unnecessary burden on the Inspector General after the report is complete to seek out each person named and allow them to comment on even the most innocuous assertions relating to them. This will unduly delay the investigative process and put a strain on the office's resources.

In addition to these concerns about the amendment itself, I am also concerned that it is being offered without any hearings at all or consideration by the Governmental Affairs Committee. As the Chairman is aware, the Governmental Affairs Committee has jurisdiction over the Inspector General Act. If there are in fact legitimate concerns that the amendment is intended to address, then perhaps it should apply to all inspectors general rather than singling out this particular one.

Despite these reservations, I understand the Foreign Relations Committee has worked hard to craft this amendment. Therefore, I will not object to its consideration at this time if the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee will agree to work with me in conference to address the concerns that I have raised.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee for his comments. I know that he has a strong interest in the inspectors general as well as in properly conducted investigations. I appreciate his willingness to work with me in conference to address the issues he has raised and I look forward to doing so.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the Chairman for his work on this bill and I look forward to working with him in conference.

OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I want to thank the Chairman of the Committee, Senator HELMS, for accepting my amendment as it relates to individuals named in reports of investigations prepared by the Office of the Inspector General at the State Department. This amendment would provide these individuals with an opportunity to comment on information contained in the report as it relates to them and to provide explanatory or exculpatory information that may be relevant to the investigation.

Mr. HELMS. It is my understanding that it is not the intention of the Senator from Connecticut to override key provisions of the Foreign Service Act, the Inspector General Act of 1978, the Privacy Act of 1974 or whistleblower protections with this amendment.

Mr. DODD. That is correct, Mr. President. As you will note from the way the amendment has been drafted, I in no way intend to undermine the ability of the Inspector General to carry out her duties. Subsection (c) of my amendment makes it clear that I do not seek to override or call into question existing provisions of law that govern the investigative practices of the Inspector General or statutory protections of individuals such as those contained in the Privacy Act of 1974 or provisions of section 2303(b)(8) of title 5 (relating to whistleblower protection.)

I have offered this amendment because I believe that both fundamental fairness and good government dictate that an individual mentioned in a report of investigation be given an opportunity to provide information as it relates to him, so that the fullest picture is set forth in the final report of investigation of the Office of the Inspector General.

Mr. HELMS. Am I correct in saying that it is not the intention of the Senator from Connecticut that the full report of investigation be turned over to each and every person named in a report, but rather that an individual be advised of allegations regarding him?

Mr. DODD. The Senator is correct. I do not seek to have the report made available to every named individual, simply be shown or briefed orally on the substance of those portions, that bear directly on that individual, consistent with appropriate privacy and whistleblower protections.

Nor do I seek with this amendment to grant individuals access to the investigative files, notes, or interim memos that may have been developed during the course of the investigation by the Office of the Inspector General.

I also do not want to overburden the Inspector General in cases where an investigation results in nothing of any significance and the case is simply closed. Certainly in such instances the Office of the Inspector General need not go through the process of providing information to any individual who might have been named in the course of an investigation.

Finally I recognize that there may be certain instances where an ongoing criminal investigation would be compromised if information were made available to an individual. That is why I chose the words "shall make every reasonable effort" to provide a measure of flexibility to the Inspector General. She may determine under certain circumstances that it is inadvisable to make information available. If she does so, she must simply inform the Committees of jurisdiction of the instances in which she has not made information available to an individual, as part of her reports to Congress, including the rationale for doing so. This information may be provided on a classified basis if necessary.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I believe this clarifies any questions with respect to this amendment and I believe that the managers are prepared to accept this amendment.

Mr. DODD. I thank the managers for their assistance with this matter.

AMENDMENT NO. 729

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that the United States should ratify the ILO Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, and for other purposes)

On page 115, after line 18, insert the following new section:

SEC. 730. SENSE OF SENATE REGARDING CHILD LABOR.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate makes the following findings:

(1) The International Labor Organization (in this resolution referred to as the "ILO") estimates that at least 250,000,000 children under the age of 15 are working around the world, many of them in dangerous jobs that prevent them from pursuing an education and damage their physical and moral well-being.

(2) Children are the most vulnerable element of society and are often abused physically and mentally in the work place.

(3) Making children work endangers their education, health, and normal development.

(4) UNICEF estimates that by the year 2000, over 1,000,000,000 adults will be unable to read or write on even a basic level because they had to work as children and were not educated.

(5) Nearly 41 percent of the children in Africa, 22 percent in Asia, and 17 percent in Latin America go to work without ever having seen the inside of a classroom.

(6) The President, in his State of the Union address, called abusive child labor "the most intolerable labor practice of all," and called upon other countries to join in the fight against abusive and exploitative child labor.

(7) The Department of Labor has conducted 5 detailed studies that document the growing trend of child labor in the global economy, including a study that shows children as young as 4 are making assorted products that are traded in the global marketplace.

(8) The prevalence of child labor in many developing countries is rooted in widespread poverty that is attributable to unemployment and underemployment among adults, low living standards, and insufficient education and training opportunities among adult workers and children.

(9) The ILO has unanimously reported a new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

(10) The United States negotiators played a leading role in the negotiations leading up to the successful conclusion of the new ILO Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

(11) On September 23, 1993, the United States Senate unanimously adopted a resolution stating its opposition to the importation of products made by abusive and exploitative child labor and the exploitation of children for commercial gain.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) abusive and exploitative child labor should not be tolerated anywhere it occurs;

(2) ILO member States should be commended for their efforts in negotiating this historic convention;

(3) it should be the policy of the United States to continue to work with all foreign nations and international organizations to promote an end to abusive and exploitative child labor; and

(4) the Senate looks forward to the prompt submission by the President of the new ILO Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

AMENDMENT NO. 730

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds as follows:

(1) The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) was established to prosecute individuals responsible for genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda;

(2) A separate tribunal, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY), was created with a similar purpose for crimes committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

(3) The acts of genocide and crimes against humanity that have been perpetrated against civilians in the Great Lakes region of Africa equal in horror the acts committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

(4) The ICTR has succeeded in issuing at least 28 indictments against 48 individuals, and currently has in custody 38 individuals presumed to have led and directed the 1994 genocide;

(5) The ICTR issued the first conviction ever by an international court for the crime of genocide against Jean-Paul Akayesu, the former mayor of Taba, who was sentenced to life in prison;

(6) The mandate of the ICTR is limited to acts committed only during calendar year 1994, yet the mandate of the ICTY covers serious violations of international humanitarian law since 1991 through the present;

(7) There has been well substantiated allegations of major crimes against humanity and war crimes that have taken place in the Great Lakes region of Africa that fall outside of the current mandate of the Tribunal in terms of either the dates when, or geographical areas where, such crimes took place;

(8) The attention accorded the ICTY and the indictments that have been made as a result of the ICTY's broad mandate continue to play an important role in current U.S. policy in the Balkans;

(9) The international community must send an unmistakable signal that genocide and other crimes against humanity cannot be committed with impunity;

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that,—

The President should instruct the United States U.N. Representative to advocate to the Security Council to direct the Office for Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) to re-evaluate the conduct and operation of the ICTR. Particularly, the OIOS should assess the progress made by the Tribunal in implementing the recommendations of the Report of the U.N. Secretary-General on the Activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, A/52/784, of 6 February, 1998. The OIOS should also include an evaluation of the potential impact of expanding the original mandate of the ICTR.

(c) REPORT.—90 days after enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall report to Congress on the effectiveness and progress of the ICTR. The report shall include an assessment of the ICTR's ability to meet its current mandate and an evaluation of the potential impact of expanding that mandate to include crimes committed after calendar year 1994.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr President, I rise today to join my distinguished colleague from Vermont, Senator LEAHY, in offering an amendment to encourage a peaceful process of self-determination in East Timor. This amendment closely mirrors what he and I and several other Senators express in S. Res. 96, introduced last month. We are offering this as an amendment to highlight the significance of the process underway in East Timor that will once and for all determine its political status.

As we all know, Indonesian President Habibie announced on January 27 that the government of Indonesia was finally willing to seek to learn and respect the wishes of the people in that territory. On May 5, the Governments of Indonesia and Portugal signed an agreement to hold a United Nations-supervised "consultation" on August 8 to determine East Timor's future political status.

Despite this positive development, excitement and tension over the possibility of gaining independence have in recent months led to a gross deterioration of the security situation. Militias, comprised of individuals determined to intimidate the East Timorese people into support for continued integration with Indonesia and widely believed to be supported by the Indonesian military, are responsible for a sharp increase in violence.

Let me recount some of the horror stories I have heard coming out of East Timor recently. To cite just a few examples, pro-government militias, backed by Indonesian troops, reportedly shot and killed 17 supporters of independence on April 5. Shortly thereafter, pro-independence groups reported clashes, arrests and deaths, as well as civilians fleeing violence in six cities. One of those cities was Liquica where at least 25 people were brutally murdered by pro-government militias when up to 2000 civilians sought shelter in the local Catholic church. Later, on April 17, hundreds of East Timorese fled the capital of Dili as knife-wielding militias attacked anyone suspected of supporting independence. At least 30 were killed in this incident as Indonesian troops made little effort to stop the violence. The perpetrators have not all been on the government side. Over the years there have been atrocities on the pro-independence side as well. In recent months, however, the overwhelming majority of the violence has come from army elements and militias under their effective control. Overall, hundreds of civilians have been killed, wounded or "disappeared" in separate militia attacks.

Unfortunately, the possibility exists that tension and violence could still terrorize the island between now and the ballot, although I hope that is not the case. Pro-integration militia leaders announced on April 29 that they reject the concept of the upcoming ballot, or anything that could be considered a referendum. They have further stated that if a ballot leads to independence, they are prepared to fight a guerrilla war for decades if necessary to defend Indonesian rule of the territory. Independent observers fear that neither side will accept a loss in the ballot, thus setting the stage for a prolonged conflict in East Timor. This type of rhetoric does not reassure us about the prospects for a successful transition for the people of East Timor, regardless of which form of government they choose. The climate in East Timor today, sadly, may have become too violent for a legitimate poll to take place. Worse yet, the agreement on the ballot process will be rendered meaningless if people must fear for their lives when they dare to participate in the process.

In the May 5 agreement, the Government of Indonesia agreed to take responsibility for ensuring that the ballot is carried out in a fair and peaceful way. Unfortunately, it is unclear that they are implementing this aspect of the agreement. Quite the opposite. Whether Indonesian troops have actually participated in some of these incidents or not, the authorities certainly must accept the blame for allowing, and in some cases encouraging, the bloody tactics of the pro-integration militias. The continuation of this violence is a threat to the very sanctity and legitimacy of the process that is underway. Thus, the Leahy-Feingold amendment specifically calls on Jakarta to do all it can to seek a peaceful process and a fair resolution to the situation in East Timor.

I am encouraged by the calm manner in which the people of Indonesia went to the polls earlier this month to elect a new government. While the election was not perfect, it is a step in the right direction for the people of that nation, and demonstrates an openness not seen in decades there.

I believe the United States has a responsibility—an obligation—to put as much pressure as possible on the Indonesian government to help encourage an environment conducive to a free, fair, peaceful ballot process for the people of East Timor. I am pleased that we have taken a leadership role in offering technical, financial, and diplomatic support to the recently authorized U.N. Assistance Mission in East Timor, known as UNAMET.

Our amendment recognizes the very significant progress that has been made so far, in particular the calming impact the very presence of U.N. official has appeared to have on the security situation in the capital, Dili. Nevertheless, problems still remain, so the amendment also highlights the increase in violence and human rights abuses by anti-independence militias and urges the Habibie government to curtail Indonesian military support to the militias. The amendment also encourages the Government of Indonesia to grant full access to all areas of East Timor by international human rights monitors, humanitarian organizations and the press, and to allow all Timorese who now live in exile the ability to return to East Timor to participate in this important ballot.

It is not in our power to guarantee the free, fair exercise of the rights of the people of East Timor to determine their future. It is, however, in our interest to do all that we can to work with the United Nations, other concerned countries, the government of Indonesia and the people of East Timor to create an opportunity for a successful ballot process. We cannot forget that the Timorese have been living with violence and oppression for more than 23 years. These many years have not dulled the desire of the East Timorese for freedom, or quieted their demands to have a role in the determination of East Timor's status.

We have to do all we can to support an environment that can produce a fair ballot in East Timor now and throughout the rest of this process.

AMENDMENT NO. 731

(Purpose: To require a report on the worldwide circulation of small arms and light weapons)

On page 115, after line 18, add the following new section:

SEC. ____ REPORTING REQUIREMENT ON WORLD-WIDE CIRCULATION OF SMALL ARMS AND LIGHT WEAPONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In numerous regional conflicts, the presence of vast numbers of small arms and light weapons has prolonged and exacerbated conflict and frustrated attempts by the international community to secure lasting peace. The sheer volume of available weaponry has been a major factor in the devastation witnessed in recent conflicts in Angola, Cambodia, Liberia, Mozambique, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, and Afghanistan, among others, and has contributed to the violence endemic to narco-trafficking in Colombia and Mexico.

(2) Increased access by terrorists, guerrilla groups, criminals, and others to small arms and light weapons poses a real threat to United States participants in peacekeeping operations and United States forces based overseas, as well as to United States citizens traveling overseas.

(3) In accordance with the reorganization of the Department of State made by the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998, effective March 28, 1999, all functions and authorities of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency were transferred to the Secretary of State. One of the stated goals of that Act is to integrate the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency into the Department of State "to give new emphasis to a broad range of efforts to curb proliferation of dangerous weapons and delivery systems".

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report containing—

(1) an assessment of whether the export of small arms poses any proliferation problems including—

(A) estimates of the numbers and sources of licit and illicit small arms and light arms in circulation and their origins;

(B) the challenges associated with monitoring small arms; and

(C) the political, economic, and security dimensions of this issue, and the threats posed, if any, by these weapons to United States interests, including national security interests;

(2) an assessment of whether the export of small arms of the type sold commercially in the United States should be considered a foreign policy or proliferation issue;

(3) a description of current Department of State activities to monitor and, to the extent possible ensure adequate control of, both the licit and illicit manufacture, transfer, and proliferation of small arms and light weapons, including efforts to survey and assess this matter with respect to Africa and to survey and assess the scope and scale of the issue, including stockpile security and destruction of excess inventory, in NATO and Partnership for Peace countries;

(4) a description of the impact of the reorganization of the Department of State made by the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 on the transfer of functions relating to monitoring, licensing, analysis, and policy on small arms and light weapons, including—

(A) the integration of and the functions relating to small arms and light weapons of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency with those of the Department of State;

(B) the functions of the Bureau of Arms Control, the Bureau of Nonproliferation, the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs, the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement, regional bureaus, and any other relevant bureau or office of the Department of State, including the allocation of personnel and funds, as they pertain to small arms and light weapons;

(C) the functions of the regional bureaus of the Department of State in providing information and policy coordination in bilateral and multilateral settings on small arms and light weapons;

(D) the functions of the Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security pertaining to small arms and light weapons; and

(E) the functions of the scientific and policy advisory board on arms control, nonproliferation, and disarmament pertaining to small arms and light weapons; and

(5) an assessment of whether foreign governments are enforcing their own laws concerning small arms and light weapons import and sale, including commitments under the Inter-American Convention Against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials or other relevant international agreements.

GLOBAL PROLIFERATION OF SMALL ARMS AND LIGHT WEAPONS

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, my amendment calls upon the Department of State to provide Congress with a report on the global proliferation of small arms and light weapons, and State Department activities to address this issue.

For fifty years we have been used to thinking about arms control in terms of nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles. But, to my mind, the widespread proliferation of small arms and light weapons has now emerged as an equally pressing issue on the international arms control agenda.

Let me try to sketch out the scope and dimension of this problem, and why I think it is critical that this issue be included in the first-rank of U.S. arms control and security policy:

An estimated 500 million illicit small arms and light weapons are in circulation around the globe.

In the past decade, an estimated 4 million people have been killed in civil war and bloody fighting. Nine out of ten of these deaths are attributed to small arms and light weapons, and, according to the International Committee of the Red Cross, more than 50% of those killed are believed to be civilians.

The sheer volume of available weaponry has been a major factor in the devastation witnessed in recent conflicts in Angola, Cambodia, Liberia, Mozambique, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, and Afghanistan, among others, as well as the sort of violence endemic to narco-trafficking in Colombia and Mexico.

According to a report last year by ABC News, at least seven million illicit small arms and light weapons are in circulation in West Africa.

According to Human Rights Watch, a variety of small arms and light weapons were readily available on the black market in Rwanda prior to the civil war and genocide in that country:

In 1994 an AK-47 could be purchased in Rwanda for $250;

a grenade for $20; and, a 60mm Mortar Bomb for $85.

More than 50 million AK-47s have been manufactured in the last 40 years, far more than are accounted for in government stockpiles or registries. During the past decade it is estimated that more than 1 million Uzis and 10 million Uzi copies have gone into circulation.

According to the South African Institute for Security Studies, an estimated 30,000 stolen firearms enter the illegal marketplace annually in South Africa. Mozambique, a country whose total population is 15 million, has more than 10 million small arms in circulation.

Although there are no reliable statistics available, numerous analysts and press reports have noted that in recent years various actors in the Russian military, government, and mafia have been active in selling large quantities of Russian military equipment on the black market.

The United Nations and the Red Cross estimate that there are that more than 10 million small arms are in circulation in Afghanistan, where the terrorist organization of Osama Bin Laden is based.

Over 1 million small arms—ranging from pistols to AK-47s to hand grenades—are readily available in arms bazaars on the Pakistani side of the Afghan border. Many of these weapons are believed to flow to the Kashmir, where they contribute to the instability and tension between India and Pakistan, who both now possess nuclear weapons.

The United Nations estimated that over 650,000 weapons disappeared from government depots in Albania in the three years leading up to the outbreak of violence in the Balkans, including 20,000 tons of explosives. The NATO peacekeepers who are now moving into Kosovo may be under threat and danger from these weapons.

In fact, the increased access by terrorists, guerilla groups, criminals, and others to small arms and light weapons poses a real threat to U.S. participants in peacekeeping operations and U.S. forces based overseas.

Although it is my belief that the United States is not the biggest contributor to the problem of the global proliferation of small arms and light weapons—the United Nations has found that almost 300 companies in 50 countries now manufacture small arms and related equipment, a 25% increase in production since 1984—in 1996 the U.S. licensed for export more than $527 million in light military weapons. With the average price of $100–300 per weapon, this represents a huge volume of weapons.

Most troubling, there is increased incidence of U.S. manufactured weapons flowing in the international black market. In 1998, at the request of foreign governments, the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms conducted 15,199 traces of weapons used in crimes.

In 1994, Mexico reported 3,376 illegally acquired U.S.-origin firearms. Many of these weapons were originally sold legally to legitimate buyers but then transferred illegally, many to the Mexican drug cartels, once they left the United States: Between 1989 and 1993, the State Department approved 108 licenses for the export of $34 million in small arms to Mexico, but it performed only three follow-up inspections to ensure that the weapons were delivered to and stayed in the hands of the intended users.

Other countries have equally porous arms sales and licensing regulations: In the United Kingdom, only 24 of 2,181 arms export licenses to 35 countries were refused last year.

Clearly this is a huge problem, with profound implications for U.S. security interests. As Secretary Albright noted in her speech to the International Rescue Committee last year: “The world is awash in small arms and light weapons.”

The purpose of this amendment is very simple. It calls for a Report by the Department of State to provide Congress with an assessment of the dimension of the problem, the threats posed by these weapons to U.S. interests, and the activities of the Department regarding the proliferation of small arms and light weapons.

It is my hope that this information will provide policymakers with a better understanding of this issue, whether sufficient resources are being devoted to addressing the threats posed to U.S. interests, and if additional resources will need to be directed towards this issue in the future.

I understand that the Managers have cleared and will accept this Amendment for inclusion in the State Department Authorization bill. As a former member of the Foreign Relations Committee it was a pleasure to be able to work again with my former Chairman and Ranking Member, and I would like to thank them for working with me on this Amendment. I look forward to the opportunity to continue to work with them on this important issue.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss an amendment to the State Department authorization bill. For 75 years academic freedom was squelched in the Soviet Union and the tools to build a democratic society were lost to its successor states. Thankfully, that is now passed. The Russians have the right to claim that they freed their own country from the horrors of a decayed Marxist-Leninist dictatorship. The Russian people and their leaders have something about which to be proud.

I rise in that spirit to discuss an amendment that is simple in both premise and purpose: build democratic leaders of the NIS for the future through education. This modest amendment will partially fund doctoral graduate study in the social sciences for students from the NIS during the next two years. The benefits of education and exposure to the United States will be long lasting.

We want to give these students from the NIS a chance to see American democracy and learn the tools to improve their own society. Indeed, for many it will be their first chance to visit the world's oldest democracy; to see the promise that democracy offers; and to judge its fruits for themselves. As one of our most famous visitors, Alexis de Tocqueville, wrote:

Let us look to America, not in order to make a servile copy of the institutions that she has established, but to gain a clearer view of the polity that will be the best for us; let us look there less to find examples than instruction; let us borrow from her the principles, rather than the details, of her laws . . . the principles on which the American constitutions rest, those principles of order, of the balance of powers, of true liberty, of deep and sincere respect for right, are indispensable to all republics . . .

In 1948 the United States instituted the now famous Marshall Plan which included among its many provisions a fund for technical assistance. Part of this fund included the "productivity campaign" which was designed to bring European businessmen and labor representatives here to learn American methods of production. During the Plan's three years, over 6,000 Europeans came to the United States to study U.S. production. Though the funding for this part of the plan was less than one-half of one percent of all the Marshall Plan aid, its impact was far greater. The impact of this amendment may also be great.

We must note here the current state of Russia's affairs: it is deplorable. Despite this situation, last spring the United States Senate voted to expand the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Throughout the elements of the Russian political system NATO expansion was viewed as a hostile act they will have to defend against; and they have said if they have to defend their territory, they will do so with nuclear weapons; that is all they have left.

The distrust born from NATO expansion will not fade quickly. Let us hope that this amendment will provide individuals from Russia and the other NIS the opportunity to see that we Americans do not hope for Russia's demise and isolation. Perhaps we can dispel the betrayal they may feel as a result of NATO enlargement, and give them the tools to further develop their own democracies.

Beyond that, the importance of training the next generation of social scientists in the NIS is immeasurable. It is this generation that will revitalize the universities, teaching the next generation economics, political science, sociology and other disciplines. It is this generation of social scientists who will be prepared to enter their Governments armed with new ideas and new ways of thinking different from the status quo; they will bring their new knowledge and standards, their linkages to the United States back to their own countries, and they will have the best opportunity to influence change there.

Mr. BIDEN. The managers amendment which I am pleased to cosponsor with the chairman amends this legislation to name it the "Admiral James W. Nance Foreign Relations Act, Fiscal years 2000 and 2001."

Admiral "Bud" Nance was a dear friend of the chairman and a close friend of many of us in the Senate.

He served his country with extraordinary distinction, and in the final years of his life served as Staff Director to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. One of Bud Nance's objectives, which he shared with the chairman, was to see this particular legislation become law.

The Senate's approval today will be a major step to that end. When this legislation becomes law we will have authorized the payment of most of the United States arrearages to the United Nations and encouraged significant reforms in that body.

In addition, the Congress will have authorized the funding of our activities overseas for the years 2000 and 2001.

I look at those dates and can't help but think that in many ways, this being but just one, your friend, our friend, Bud Nance, will indeed be with us as we enter the new millennium.

I would like to thank the majority staff for their work in helping put this bill together—particularly Steve Biegun who assumed the role of staff director after our friend Bud Nance passed away.

Patti McNerney has been tireless as majority counsel in leading the complex staff negotiations that helped make this bill possible.

I would also like to thank Brian McKeon, our minority counsel for his hard work and the rest of the minority staff, including Jennifer Park and our Pearson Fellow, Joan Wadleton who put many long hours in with the rest of the majority and minority staff. We would not be looking at final passage today without all their dedicated efforts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the amendments are agreed to.

The amendments (Nos. 705 through 731), en bloc, were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there are five minutes equally divided.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I want to, in the minute or so I have left, congratulate the chairman of the committee for a job very well done. The managers' amendment, which he sent to the desk, I might point out, amends the legislation to name this legislation the Admiral James W. Nance Foreign Relations Act, Fiscal Years 2000 and 2001.

Bud Nance was a man who was a dear, close friend to the chairman, and a close friend of many of us in the Senate. He served this country with extraordinary distinction in the final years of his life. He served as staff director of the Foreign Relations Committee.

One of Bud Nance's objectives, which he shared with the chairman, was that this particular legislation become law, and he began to reestablish the relevance of and the bipartisan nature of the committee. He deserves great credit for that. I think the idea of naming this legislation after him is very fitting and appropriate.

I thank the chairman again for his cooperation, for his willingness to listen, and for his help. He is a lucky man to have had such a close friend.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in behalf of the Nance family, I express my appreciation not only to Senator BIDEN but to all of the other Senators who signed the statement of authenticity with reference to that. And personally, ladies and gentlemen, I am grateful to them. Thank you so much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. McCAIN) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 98, nays 1, as follows:

CHILD LABOR

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I was talking this morning about a very significant event that transpired last week in Geneva on June 17. It was a historic event in the battle to end the scourge of abusive and exploitative child labor. By a unanimous vote, the International Labor Organization's member states, including the United States, approved a new convention banning the worst forms of child labor.

For the first time in history, the world spoke with one voice in opposition to abusive and exploitative child labor. Countries from across the political, economic, and religious spectrum—from Jewish to Muslim, from Buddhists to Christians—came together to proclaim unequivocally that "abusive and exploitative child labor is a practice which will not be tolerated and must be abolished."

Gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is an acceptable practice because of a country's economic circumstances. Gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is acceptable because of cultural traditions. And gone is the argument that abusive and exploitative child labor is a necessary evil on the road to economic development. The United States and the international community as a whole unanimously for the first time laid those arguments to rest and laid the groundwork to begin the process of ending the scourge of abusive and exploitative child labor.

Mr. President, for the better part of a decade, I have been in my own capacity working to do what I can to end abusive and exploitative child labor around the globe, including in the United States. The ILO estimates that there are about 250 million children worldwide, many as young as 6 or 7, who are working. These are not just part-time jobs. Many of them work in dangerous environments which are detrimental to their emotional, physical, and moral well-being.

Last year, I traveled with my staff to Katmandu, Nepal, and also to Pakistan, India, and Bangladesh. We were able to witness firsthand the abuse of child labor.

This chart shows a plant we went to in Katmandu. It was on a Sunday. I was taken there by a young man who had previously been a child laborer. On the outside of the gate there was this sign in both Nepalese and English: Child labour under the age of 14 is strictly prohibited.

I actually took this picture. Because we had information that the owner was gone and this young man I was with knew the guard at the gate, we were let in. When we were let in, I started taking pictures. This is one of many pictures I have of some of the young children working in that plant. We determined their ages to be somewhere in the neighborhood of 7 or 8 years. This was about 7 or 8 o'clock on a Sunday night. These kids were working in very dusty, dirty conditions, and this shows them as virtual slaves, unable to leave, unable to do anything but work at the rug plant.

This gives a little idea of the child labor I was able to glimpse on my trip. Had they known we were coming to that plant, they would have taken the children out the back door and we would not have seen any children there. They would have said: See, we don't have any child labor.

That is why it took a surreptitious action on my part to get in and take the pictures, so that I could get proof of the child labor and the deplorable conditions which occur not just in Nepal, but all over the world.

In India, I met children who were liberated from hand-knotted carpet factories where they were chained—chained, Mr. President—to looms and forced to work as many as 12 hours a day, 7 days a week. These children were nothing more than slaves. They earned no money. They received no education. They had no hope for a future until they were freed by the South Asian Coalition Against Child Servitude, headed by Kailash Satyarthi.

I have a chart prepared with ILO data. We see Latin America and the Caribbean have about 17 million children working; Africa, 80 million; Asia, 153 million; and about half a million in Oceania. That comes down to a total of about 250 million children worldwide.

Again, I want to be clear that we are not just talking about kids working after school, working part-time. That is not it at all. The convention that the ILO adopted deals with children who are chained to looms, handle dangerous chemicals, ingest metal dust, are forced to sell illegal drugs, forced into prostitution, forced into armed conflict, some of whom work in glass factories where furnace temperatures exceed 1,500 degrees. These children are forced to work with no protective equipment. They work only for the economic gains of others. This is in sharp contrast to any kind of a part-time job for some spending money for the latest CD.

In this picture, taken in the Sialkot region of Pakistan, 8-year-old Mohammad Ashraf Irfan is making surgical equipment. He is 8 years old working around hot metal and sharp instruments. He has no protective clothing on at all, not even for his eyes. This is his lot in life at the ripe old age of 8. This is what the convention, adopted in Geneva last week, will start preventing.

Mr. President, as you and many of my colleagues know, President Clinton traveled to Geneva, Switzerland, last week to address the International Labor Organization's conference. He is the first President in U.S. history to address the ILO in its 80-year history. Imagine that. I was privileged to be asked to accompany the President for this historic event.

In his address to the ILO, President Clinton spoke eloquently of the crying need to protect all children from abusive and exploitative labor. The President said, in part:

There are some things we cannot and will not tolerate. We will not tolerate children being used in pornography and prostitution. We will not tolerate children in slavery or bondage. We will not tolerate children being forcibly recruited to serve in armed conflicts. We will not tolerate young children risking their health and breaking their bodies in hazardous and dangerous working conditions for hours unconscionably long—regardless of country, regardless of circumstance.

I cannot agree more. I was very proud of President Clinton—proud that he was the first U.S. President in history to address the ILO, proud that he focused his remarks on the issue of child labor and on his support for this convention.

I will briefly describe the new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the convention be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. (See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HARKIN. The convention defines the worst forms as being all forms of slavery, debt bondage, forced or compulsory labor, the sale and trafficking of children, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict, child prostitution, children producing and trafficking in narcotic drugs, or any other work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, the safety, or morals of children. It also defines a child as any person under the age of 18.

Mr. President, this is what we are talking about. Look at this young girl in this photograph. We do not know her age, but from all accounts, people who know this area say she is probably less than 9 years old. She and her two friends have straps around their heads, and she is carrying what looks like seven big blocks or bricks on her back which are much too heavy for such a small child and are doing permanent damage to her spine and neck. She is barefoot and hunched over. As you can see, her friends of an equal age are carrying a similar load.

These are the worst forms of child labor. That is what this convention is all about. The convention calls on the ILO member states to take immediate and effective actions to prohibit and eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

I am looking at a chart, which is a photo of another young girl in India carrying construction material on her head. One can see her arms are straight, her face is dirty and sweaty, and she should be in school rather than having all this construction material, about 30 or 40 pounds piled on the top of her head. She is also doing permanent damage to her neck and spine. This is the sort of gross labor abuse the convention seeks to end.

As I said, the convention defines a child for these purposes as any child under the age of 18. It calls on member states to implement action plans to move children from the workplace to the classroom. UNICEF reports that over 1 billion adults will be functionally illiterate on the eve of the new millennium because they worked as children and were denied an education.

That is why I am especially pleased about the importance the convention placed on education as a principal means for reducing instances of abusive and exploitative child labor. I believe very strongly that these child laborers must go from exploitation to education.

This chart shows a list of what the convention abolishes: Child slavery, child bondage, child prostitution, children in pornography, trafficking in children, forced recruitment of children for armed conflict, recruitment of children in the production or sale of narcotics, and hazardous work by children.

But, let me come back to the forced recruitment of children for armed conflict for just a moment. We do not have forced recruitment in the United States for children. But I am aware our Armed Forces are able to recruit children who are 17 years of age. Quite frankly, we need a debate in this body about whether or not we ought to allow that to continue. I, for one, believe that the armed services ought to be held in abeyance from recruiting and signing up young people in the armed services until they at least reach the age of 18. But that is a debate for another time.

As I stated earlier, I believe that children should go from exploitation to education. We visited a very important milestone in this effort in Dacca, Bangladesh, last year when we found almost 10,000 young children, mostly girls—about 90 percent—who had been working in the garment factories. After an historic agreement with the help of the ILO and the Bangladeshi Garment Manufacturers Export Association, these children were moved out of the garment factories and into about 353 schools established in Dacca for this sole purpose.

We visited a couple of those schools, and I will just tell you, looking at these young girls, who maybe a year before could not read or write, now were standing up and reciting whole passages from books, being able to write, and you could see in their eyes they are not going to go back to exploitation.

The people in Bangladesh, in the government and in industry, said it is probably one of the best things that has happened to them, because they are going to have a more highly educated workforce, a more productive workforce, and that means their whole standard of living is going to increase.

The convention adopted last week also calls on all member nations to identify and reach out to children at special risk and to take into account the special situation of girls with regard to education. And I am also very pleased about that provision.

There are many other important elements contained in the convention which I have not mentioned. I encourage all of my colleagues to read this document thoroughly.

I would also mention another historic fact about this convention.

For the first time in its history, the U.S. tripartite group to the ILO, which consists of representatives from government, business and labor, went to Geneva to negotiate on this important convention, and they unanimously agreed on the final version.

So I commend Secretary of Labor Alexis Herman and the other members of the U.S. delegation, including Mr. John Sweeney, the president of the AFL-CIO, and Ed Potter, from the U.S. Council on International Business, for their leadership on this convention.

With the adoption of the new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, the ILO has written an important new chapter in our effort to honor our values and protect our children.

Today, in recognition of this effort, I offered a sense-of-the-Senate resolution regarding the International Labor Organization's new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor which was accepted as part of the managers' package. This amendment calls upon the President to promptly submit to the Senate the new convention. It commends the ILO member states for their negotiating efforts and states that it should be the policy of the United States to work with all foreign nations and international organizations to promote an end to abusive and exploitative child labor.

Again, it is my understanding that very shortly President Clinton will be transmitting this convention to the Senate for our consideration. I am hopeful that the Committee on Foreign Relations will take up the convention, have hearings on it, and report it out as soon as possible.

Again, with the unanimous support of labor, government and business, I see no reason why the United States should not be one of the first countries to ratify this new convention. So I am hopeful that before this session of the Congress ends that the Senate will act on it and ratify the Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

Once again, I thank Senators WELLSTONE, KOHL, LAUTENBERG, KENNEDY, DODD, TORRICELLI, WYDEN, and FEINGOLD for cosponsoring this important amendment.

Such programs should aim at, inter alia:

(3) Relevant data concerning violations of national provisions for the prohibition and immediate elimination of the worst forms of child labour should be compiled and kept up to date.

6. The compilation and processing of the information and data referred to in Paragraph 5 above should be carried out with due regard for the right to privacy.

7. The information compiled under Paragraph 5 should be communicated to the International Labour Office on a regular basis.

8. Members should establish or designate appropriate national mechanisms to monitor the implementation of national provisions for the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations.

9. Members should ensure that the competent authorities which have responsibilities for implementing national provisions for the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour cooperate with each other and coordinate their activities.

10. National laws or regulations or the competent authority should determine the persons to be held responsible in the event of non-compliance with national provisions for the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour.

11. Members should, in so far as it is compatible with national law, cooperate with international efforts aimed at the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency by:

(a) gathering and exchanging information concerning criminal offences, including those involving international networks;

(b) detecting and prosecuting those involved in the sale and trafficking of children, or in the use, procuring or offering of children for illicit activities, for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances;

(c) registering perpetrators of such offences.

12. Members should provide that the following worst forms of child labour are criminal offences:

(a) all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom and forced or compulsory labour, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;

(b) the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances; and

(c) the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties, or for activities which involve the unlawful carrying or use of firearms or other weapons.

13. Members should ensure that penalties including, where appropriate, criminal penalties are applied for violations of the national provisions for the prohibition and elimination of any type of work referred to in Article 3(d) of the Convention.

14. Members should also provide, as a matter of urgency, for other criminal, civil or administrative remedies, where appropriate, to ensure the effective enforcement of national provisions for the prohibition and immediate elimination of the worst forms of child labour, such as special supervision of enterprises which have used the worst forms of child labour, and, in cases of persistent violation, consideration of temporary or permanent revoking of permits to operate.

15. Other measures aimed at the prohibition and immediate elimination of the worst forms of child labour might include the following:

(a) informing, sensitizing and mobilizing the general public, including national and local political leaders, parliamentarians and the judiciary.

(c) providing appropriate training for government officials concerned, especially inspectors and law enforcement officials, and for other relevant professionals;

(d) providing for the prosecution in their own country of the Member's nationals who commit offences under its national provisions for the prohibition and immediate elimination of the worst forms of child labour even when these offences are committed in another country;

(e) simplifying legal and administrative procedures and ensuring that they are appropriate and prompt;

(f) encouraging the development of policies by undertakings to promote the aims of the Convention;

(g) monitoring and giving publicity to best practices on the elimination of child labour;

(h) giving publicity to legal or other provisions on child labour in the different languages or dialects;

(i) establishing special complaints procedures and making provisions to protect from discrimination and reprisals those who legitimately expose violations of the provisions of the Convention, as well as establishing help lines or points of contact and ombudspersons;

(j) adopting appropriate measures to improve the educational infrastructure and the training of teachers to meet the needs of boys and girls;

(k) as far as possible, taking into account in national programs of action the need for job creation and vocational training for the parents and adults in the families of the children working in the conditions covered by the Convention and the need for sensitizing parents on the problem of children working in such conditions.

16. Enhanced international cooperation and/or assistance among Members for the prohibition and effective elimination of the worst forms of child labour should complement national efforts and may, as appropriate, be developed and implemented in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations. Such international cooperation and/or assistance should include:

(a) mobilizing resources for national or international programmes;

(b) mutual legal assistance;

(c) technical assistance including the exchange of information;

(d) support for social and economic development, poverty eradication programmes and universal education.

ILO CONVENTION

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, as my good friend from Delaware is aware, last week the International Labor Organization (ILO) unanimously adopted a new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. This Convention calls on ILO Member States to take immediately and effective actions to prohibit and eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Convention also defines the worst forms of child labor as: all forms of slavery, debt bondage, forced or compulsory labor, or the sale and trafficking of children, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict; child prostitution; children producing and trafficking of narcotic drugs; or any other work which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children. It also defines a child as any person under the age of 18.

I was privileged to travel with the President to the ILO where he addressed the delegates on child labor and affirmed the United States Government support of this important Convention.

Would the Senator from Delaware agree that this important and historic Convention should be considered as a high priority item and considered in a timely fashion after submission to the Senate by the President?

Mr. BIDEN. My friend from Iowa is correct. This is an important Convention and I assure you that from my point of view this new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor should be a high priority. I am aware that this Convention pertains to abolishing child slavery, child prostitution and other hazardous work endangering a child's well-being. Therefore, I will work with the Chairman of the Committee to try to bring this treaty before the Committee as soon as practical after it is submitted by the President.

THE PATIENTS' BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I will make a few comments about the importance of managed care reform and the importance of passing a strong Patients' Bill of Rights in this Congress.

The bill that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle want us to consider, I believe, is fundamentally flawed. First, it fails to cover two-thirds of privately insured Americans. Secondly, it fails to prevent insurers from arbitrarily interfering with the decisions of a patient's treating physician. And, third, it is weak in giving consumers the right to sue their insurance companies for faulty decisions to withhold care.

Today, I want to focus on a few issues that have critical importance to me: access to specialty care, network adequacy, and genetic discrimination.

When we marked up the bill in the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, I offered an amendment to ensure that patients have access to the specialty care they need. I intend to offer it again if we ever allowed a full and fair debate on this bill.

This is a critical issue for people with disabilities, women with breast cancer, and others with chronic health conditions. But it is important for all Americans. The inability to access specialists is the number-one reason people give when they leave a health plan, and it is a top issue they want Congress to address.

The Republican bill is deficient in this area. Aside from two minor provisions regarding access to OB/GYNs and pediatricians—access that almost all health plans already provide—there is nothing in the Republican bill that guarantees access to specialty care such as that provided by neurologists, pediatric oncologists, rehabilitation physicians, and others.

We need to ensure that people can see specialists outside of their HMO's network at no additional cost if specialists in the plan's network cannot meet their needs. We need to allow a specialist to be the primary care coordinator for patients with disabilities or life-threatening or degenerative conditions. And we need to provide for standing referrals for people who need ongoing specialty care, which enables them to go straight to the specialist instead of jumping through hoops with primary care doctors or insurance companies.

These provisions would not create onerous new burdens on plans. In fact, many plans already allow specialists to be primary care coordinators, and they let people have standing referrals. Most importantly, they address the tragic cases we have heard about that stem from delay or denial of access to specialists.

Finally, helping people get timely access to specialty care is not just smart and compassionate policy; it will also help minimize the need for litigation that results from a failure to have access.

Another amendment I have been working on ensures that each insurance plan has sufficient providers in its network to deliver the care that is promised. Again, this is an area where the Republican bill is, I think, very inadequate. There is no provision in the Republican bill to ensure network adequacy. This is a very important issue in my State of Iowa.

My amendment ensures that every network plan has a sufficient number and mix of providers to deliver the covered services.

It also requires plans to incorporate a primary care physician in their network who is within 30 minutes or 30 driving miles of a patient's home. If the plan cannot include patients within that distance, patients need to be allowed to go "out-of-network" to obtain the care they need. In other words, no one should have to drive more than 30 miles or 30 minutes to see a primary care physician.

It is important to understand what is happening now. Many managed care companies now contract only with urban-based providers. Not only does this require patients to travel considerable distances to receive basic health care, but these urban-based networks also weaken the rural health infrastructure by shutting local doctors and local clinics out of the network. This is wrong and must be stopped.

I have been working also on the genetic issues of this since the early 1990s when I introduced an amendment to the HIPAA that prohibited genetic discrimination by group health plans. As ranking member of the Labor-HHS appropriations subcommittee, I have also been and continue to be a strong supporter of the Human Genome Project. In the HELP Committee, the authorizing committee, I worked with Senators DODD and KENNEDY on a genetic discrimination amendment. I intend to continue working on this issue when and if we get a Patients' Bill of Rights on the floor.

We have all discussed at length the importance of prohibiting discrimination on the basis of all predictive genetic information in all health insurance markets. I am pleased that the Republican bill recognized that we need to prohibit discrimination in the group and in the individual markets, and that we need to prohibit discrimination not only on the basis of genetic tests but on the basis of a person's family history.

Still, the Republican bill failed to address several other equally critical issues in this area. The bottom line is that we must prohibit discrimination by insurers and employers.

To prohibit discrimination in one context only invites discrimination in the other. For example, if we only prohibit discrimination in the insurance context, employers who are worried about future increased medical costs will simply not hire individuals who have a genetic predisposition to a particular disease.

Similarly, we must prohibit health insurance companies from disclosing genetic discrimination to other insurance companies, to industry-wide data banks, and employers. If we really want to prevent discrimination, we should not let genetic information get into the wrong hands in the first place.

Finally, if we really want a prohibition of genetic discrimination to have teeth, we have to have strong remedies and penalties. The $100-a-day fine against health insurers that my colleagues across the aisle have proposed will do little to prevent health insurers from discriminating, and it does nothing to compensate a victim of such discrimination. We must do better than this.

Mr. President, let me say that we must not pass up this chance to make true and significant reforms to managed care programs. This is the issue that the American people have said they most want the Congress to address. And they are watching us carefully to see if we will enact real reform or a series of meaningless sound bites.

If we take strong action that allows clear-cut access to specialty care, ensures network adequacy, and prohibits genetic discrimination, we will have gone a long way to providing real reform and providing for a meaningful Patients' Bill of Rights.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak for up to 10 minutes on a subject involving landmines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

KOSOVO'S MINEFIELDS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, as thousands of Kosovar Albanians flood across the Macedonian and Albanian borders, we are getting the first reports of refugee landmine victims. Last week, two refugees were killed and another seriously injured as they hurried to return to their homes in Kosovo.

Just put this in perspective. Some 25 people have been injured or killed by mines in Kosovo since the refugees began returning. It is a senseless loss of life and it is tragic, but it is predictable. It is predictable because tens of thousands of landmines were left behind by Serb forces. Others were put there by the KLA. They litter fields, roads, and bridges, and they have even been left in houses. They have been left in booby traps. As sad as anything, there are mass graves marking the atrocities that have occurred there. And as family members go back to try to find out if their loved ones are in those graves, even some of the graves have been booby-trapped by landmines.

These landmines are the greatest threat to people on the ground, including NATO forces, and the number of innocent victims—children playing, farmers plowing their fields, women walking along the roads—will continue to rise.

It is one thing to conduct an air war with the latest laser-guided technology and, thankfully, there were no NATO casualties, but it is another thing to face an invisible enemy on the ground. In Bosnia, most U.S. casualties were from landmines. In Kosovo, too, mines are the invisible enemy. They can't distinguish between friend or foe, soldier or civilian, adult or child.

A June 15 article in the Los Angeles Times entitled, "A Strategy on Land Mines is Needed Now," described the problems mines pose in Kosovo, and they called on the international community to develop a comprehensive strategy for clearing the mines and aiding the victims.

Such a strategy is critical to promoting peace and moving forward with reconstruction and economic development. The United States, as the leader of NATO, will play a key role in designing and financing that strategy.

But the article neglects to address another key part of the problem—the continued use of mines. It is a bit similar to trying to keep garbage out of a river. You can clean up the garbage, but if people keep dumping it into the river, you haven't solved the problem. You need to stop garbage from being dumped. We need to stigmatize antipersonnel mines so they are not put into the ground in the first place by anybody, by any country, by any combatant, by anyone anywhere.

That is what most countries are trying to do. Now, 135 countries have signed the Ottawa Convention that bans the use of antipersonnel mines, and 81 countries have ratified it. That convention sets a new international norm outlawing a weapon that has caused enormous suffering of innocent people in some 70 countries.

Like booby traps, which are also outlawed, mines are triggered by the victim. They are inherently indiscriminate and the casualties are usually noncombatants.

Unfortunately, the most powerful Nation on earth, the United States, has not joined the convention. So despite the leading role the United States has taken in demining and helping victims, we, like Russia, China, and some other countries that manufacture mines, are standing in the way of the effort to outlaw this weapon.

Ironically, every member of NATO, except the United States and Turkey, has signed the Ottawa Convention. We not only weaken the convention by our absence, we also complicate joint military operations with our NATO allies.

Now, the United States can send deminers, those who remove the mines. We can give millions of dollars in aid to mine victims. The Leahy War Victims Fund does that every year in the sum of many millions of dollars. We can sit down with other nations to rebuild as many countries as there are conflicts. But the truth is, the only effective strategy to stop the carnage caused by landmines has three parts: Demining, victims assistance, and most importantly, banning their use today, tomorrow, and forever. That is what the Ottawa Convention does. Unless countries such as the United States, Russia, Pakistan, India, and China join, they invite others to keep using mines. It is in Kosovo today but somewhere else tomorrow.

The United States is not causing the landmine problem, but the United States is blocking a total solution because, without us, there is no solution.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Los Angeles Times article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, June 15, 1999]
A STRATEGY ON LAND MINES IS NEEDED NOW
(By Robert Oakley, Lori Helene Gronich, Ted Sahlin)

Tens of thousands of land mines will be left behind as Serb forces withdraw from Kosovo, and nobody has a long-term plan for removing them. The international community must begin work together now to develop an integrated approach or prospects for peace and economic recovery in Kosovo will be thwarted.

Knowledge about the relationship between land mine problems, peace settlements and rebuilding shattered communities is scarce. Operation Provide Comfort in Iraq and the stabilization of affairs in Bosnia are experiences that can help shape effective planning for Kosovo. In northern Iraq, there were recognizable phases to the refugee operation. First, the military entered and secured the area. Mines were removed from refugee reception zones and core transportation routes. Then, international relief organizations came forward and restarted their local operations.

But the next step—taking these mines out of the ground—did not take place. Despite the valuable mine location information provided by area residents and some international relief workers, land mines were treated as an acceptable, if pernicious, danger to the population. Wise planners will include the accounts of local residents and international aid workers in Kosovo.

Large-scale mine removal normally occurs when the threat of violence has receded, armed forces have departed, and local governance has been restored. National and international organizations then work with local leaders to develop long-term aid plans and mine-removal programs.

In Bosnia, soldiers and civilians alike were aware of the land mine threat. Allied military forces, after several fatalities and traumatic injuries, made land mine awareness among the troops a high priority. These troops, however, primarily removed mines when it was necessary for force protection. International companies, local contractors and local forces tackled the larger mine problem, and they are still at work today. Not only do they compete for funding, they influence priorities as well. This is not a comprehensive master plan.

All five components of mine action—awareness; surveying, mapping and marking; removal; destruction; and victim assistance—should be an integral part of any comprehensive international operation. First, all minefield information must be given immediately to allied leaders. Should any of the combatants have only incomplete or inaccurate mine records, their soldiers should show the entering forces just where the mines have been placed. This will save lives. It was not done in Bosnia, and it exacted a high price. Human suffering remains, and economic output is still less than half of what it was in 1990.

In the initial phase of the Kosovo peace, international military forces will clear mines to protect themselves and allow for the necessary freedom of movement to accomplish their mission. This mine-clearing effort should also support the rapid return of refugees and the swift resumption of local commerce. Military mine-clearing and mine-awareness training should be supplemented by mine-awareness education for refugees and internally displaced persons. Assuring adequate medical supplies and attention for mine casualties should be a high priority.

Once the initial phase of a Kosovo deployment is completed, the international protection force is likely to limit and then stop its mine-clearance work. Civilian groups must then take over. International experts often are brought in to help training local residents in mine safety and removal. Local security forces can also be trained and equipped to participate. Despite the widespread belief that mine clearance is an integral part of post-conflict peace-building, economic revitalization and sustainable development, there is no agreed model for addressing or even coordinating these different needs and roles.

If the work in Kosovo is to be effective, international planners must develop a comprehensive strategy now. Otherwise, the fighting may cease, but the casualties will go on.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I will close with this, as I have many other times. In the use of any weapons, there always will be questions as to who is right and who is wrong. But I have to think the use of landmines raises beyond a strategic question, raises the real moral question, and because the victims of landmines are so disproportionately civilian, we do get into moral questions. As the most powerful Nation on earth, and also the Nation most blessed with resources and advantages of any nation in history, I think we fail a moral duty if we don't do more to ban the use of antipersonnel landmines.

It is a child walking to school. It is a mother going to a stream to get water. It is a parent tilling what little fields they have. It is somebody trying to help out with medical care. It is a missionary. It is so many others—all on peaceful, proper pursuits of their lives. They are the ones who step on these landmines and are killed or maimed. The child who sees a shiny toy in the field and loses his arm and his face. It is the person who tries to save the child who steps on the mine itself. It is the refugee family trying to go back to the country that they were expelled from who are dying from them. We have to do more.

I wish there would be a day when there would never be another war. There will not be. We can't stop that. But we can take steps to stop the day that landmines will ever be used again.

I yield the floor.

AGRICULTURE, RURAL DEVELOPMENT, FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now resume consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill, S. 1233, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1233) making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Dorgan (for Daschle) amendment No. 702, to amend the Public Health Services Act, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to protect consumers in managed care plans and other health coverage.

Lott amendment No. 703 (to Amendment No. 702), to improve the access and choice of patients to quality, affordable health care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, what is the business before the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is currently considering S. 1233, the agriculture appropriations bill and the pending amendment is amendment No. 703.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, now we are back to where we were yesterday just about 24 hours ago. At the request of the Democratic leader, the amendment on the Patients' Bill of Rights was submitted to the Senate as an amendment on the appropriations bill yesterday afternoon. The majority leader then offered an amendment to that amendment, which was effectively the legislation that was passed out of the Health and Education committee some 3 months ago and the tax provisions from the Senate Republican leadership proposal. That is an amendment to Senator DASCHLE's proposal.

We have this measure now before the Senate. Many of us over the last 2 years have tried to gain the opportunity to debate what we call the Patients' Bill of Rights. The underlying concept of the Patients' Bill of Rights is very simple and very straightforward. Our legislation has the strong and compelling support of over 200 organizations all across this country. Medical decisions that affect the members of our families ought to be made by doctors—by professional, trained medical personnel—and the patients. They ought to be the ones that make the decisions that are going to affect our lives and the lives of our families, our grandparents, and our children. Those decisions should not be made by an insurance agent, or by an HMO official.

This is a very basic and fundamental concept, and all of the basic measures—the proposals—that are advanced in our Patients' Bill of Rights, which was introduced by Senator DASCHLE, reflect this concept. The Republican proposal does not address this critically important concept. I call the Republican proposal the "patients' bill of wrongs." They use the right words in their title, but that's it. Their bill doesn't guarantee that these decisions are going to be made by the doctors and nurses and by the trained medical professionals.

The Members of this body do not have to take what I say on this interpretation of the Republican proposal. The fact remains that we have been waiting and waiting and waiting for well over a year, or for close to 2 years, to hear from our Republican friends about the medical associations or the medical professionals that support their proposal. Let's be clear, we don't advance this proposal because we are Democrats. We advance it because it will protect consumers and families in this country.

It isn't that I say it, or that Senator DASCHLE says it, or that any of our colleagues say it. It is because the doctors in this country say it. The American Medical Association says it. The American Nurses Associations says it. The consumer organizations that have been dedicated to protecting patients have said it.

If you look over the list of those various groups that are supporting our particular proposal, you will find that virtually every organization that represents women's health care support our legislation, and for very good reasons, which we will outline today. Virtually every leading group that has dedicated itself to protecting the well-being of children in our society and the health care of children are supporting our proposal. Why? For very good reasons, which have been outlined before by Senator DASCHLE, Senator REED and those of us who support helping children. You will find that virtually every organization in this country that is concerned about the needs of the disabled in our society is supporting our program. Virtually every group that is concerned about cancer and cancer research is supporting our particular proposal. And virtually none are supporting the opposition's proposal.

This is something that the American consumers ought to understand. This is something the American consumers ought to realize.

I see our leader on the floor at this time. I think all of us are looking forward to listening to his presentation.

I yield the floor at this time and will come back and address the Senate.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, he was talking earlier about the amazing array of groups in support of our bill. I think I heard the Senator say it really represents virtually the entire universe of health care provider organizations that we know in this country. Certainly they are not all necessarily Democratic groups or progressive groups.

Would the Senator comment on the diversity of the groups supporting our proposal? I think this is a point that is sometimes lost—the breadth of organizations that say this is a top priority as a legislative issue.

Mr. KENNEDY. As the Senator knows full well, we can take one example. There are many, and we will come back to those later in the afternoon. But the Senator has been a strong supporter in terms of increasing the NIH research budget and has followed the various recommendations so that hopefully we are going to double the NIH research budget. Our Republican colleagues have supported this proposal. Senator MACK and Senator SPECTER have been leaders. Senator HARKIN has been one of the important leaders. Many other Members have supported that proposal. Why? Because it is universally accepted that we are in the early morning sunrise period of major scientific breakthroughs on many of the kinds of diseases that affect millions of our fellow citizens.

This year, more than 563,000 will die from cancer, and 1.2 million will be diagnosed. We have these enormous potential breakthroughs that can mean the difference between life and death. These breakthrough treatments allow individuals some degree of hope of being freed from Alzheimer's or Parkinson's disease or cancer. Every medical researcher understands that. That is why they support the access to clinical trials piece in our proposal. When they have the breakthrough in the laboratory, they want to get it to the bedside. The way that is done is through clinical trials.

Under the Daschle proposal, we would continue the traditional support for clinical trials so that we can move these breakthroughs that are coming in the laboratory to the patients, to the mothers, and to the daughters, and to others.

Mr. DASCHLE. Will the Senator explain the term "clinical trials?" The Senator has made such an important point about this issue. There are so many differences between the Republican and Democratic bills. One of the myriad of differences has to do with the so-called "clinical trial" provision. The Senator has spoken on the floor so patiently and eloquently about the concept of clinical trials and access to them. When we talk about clinical trials, are we talking about innovative techniques to respond to health problems that take full advantage of research and the opportunities of medicine that this country provides? Are we talking about giving people access to that medicine and cutting-edge technology just as soon as it is available?

Isn't that really what we are talking about?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is absolutely correct.

If I could add to what the Senator has said, we have made great progress in dealing with cancer, especially children's cancers, over the last 10 years. The principal reason for this progress is the large number of clinical trials. We should take the time to spell out what has actually happened in the clinical trials and why that is an important provision of the leader's Patients' Bill of Rights.

Mr. DASCHLE. We should talk about clinical trials and how critical they are.

I ask the Senator if he could inform Members what impact it would have on an individual were he or she able to have access to clinical trials today under this bill?

Mr. KENNEDY. Senator, I will speak from a personal point of view. My son was 12 years old when he was diagnosed with osteosarcoma, bone cancer. Chances of survival were 15 percent; the mortality rate was 85 percent. We were able to enroll my son in a National Institutes of Health clinical trial, which only 22 children had gone through successfully. He was in that program for 2 years. By the time he finished, they had more than 400 children taking part in that program who survived osteosarcoma, with a breakthrough new treatment for osteosarcoma. Seven thousand children are affected every single year. At that time, the loss of a leg was a matter of course; it is not at the present time.

There is no question that not only my son but many of the other children would not likely have survived had they not participated in the clinical trial. That treatment for osteosarcoma is now the standard treatment and is saving countless children's lives.

There are many other examples. Our greatest progress in cancer research and in treating cancer has been a direct result of clinical trials.

Mr. DASCHLE. If the Senator would yield for a clarification, is the Senator saying that in many cases today insurance companies and managed care organizations are refusing to allow a patient access to the very kind of treatment that you say your son received? Is that what is going on?

Mr. KENNEDY. Not only am I saying that, but most important is that the directors of the Lombardi Cancer Research Center, located here in Washington, DC, one of the major centers in the country in cancer research programs and clinical trials, is saying that as well. The director says they employ eight professionals who work 18 hours a day combating health maintenance organizations to help enroll women in breast cancer clinical trials. Doctors have recommended patients for clinical trials, with treatment that can probably save their lives, but due to resistance and denials by the health maintenance organizations, those women are effectively denied treatment that may save their lives. That is happening today.

As the Senator knows, all we are trying to do with this particular proposal is follow sound medical guidelines, the medical guidelines that your doctor—who may be an oncologist acting on behalf of a victim of breast cancer—believes, given the clinical trials taking place, providing you a real chance of surviving if we enlist you in the clinical trial; this is in your medical best interest.

Your bill says your physician's medical determination is going to be the controlling judgment. It isn't going to be an accountant in the HMO who says: We don't believe that treatment is justified and we are not prepared to pay for it; I am making the medical judgment—even though I am trained as an accountant.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DORGAN. The Senator is talking now about specifics, and Senator DASCHLE was asking about clinical trials.

Let me ask another specific. Regarding emergency room treatment. Senator KENNEDY makes the point there is the Patients' Bill of Rights on this side and the Patients' Bill of Rights on that side. But they are not the same. There is a big difference.

Let me give an example regarding emergency room care. I told the story of a case of a woman named Jacqueline the other day. Jacqueline is a real person. She was hiking in the Shenandoah. While hiking in the Shenandoah, she slipped and fell down a 40-foot cliff. She fractured three bones in her body, including her pelvis. She was unconscious. She was medivac'ed by helicopter, taken to a hospital emergency room, and treated. She survived.

The HMO said: We don't intend to pay for your emergency room treatment because you didn't have prior approval to go to the emergency room.

This is a woman who was unconscious.

The Patients' Bill of Rights that the AMA and so many other groups have endorsed—they have written in support—is different from the bill the majority party offers in the emergency room treatment in the sense that we require not only the "prudent" layperson standard in emergency care and emergency room, but we require also the poststability care that is necessary after you have been to an emergency room, and their bill does not do it.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is absolutely correct. We have had constant examples of abuses that have taken place. Senators have printed in the RECORD these human tragedies.

The Senator understands fully that this is not only something from last year or something from last month. The situation the Senator has outlined is happening today. It has happened this morning; it has happened this afternoon; it will happen tomorrow. It will continue to happen unless and until we pass this legislation.

Mr. DORGAN. I just described a case of a woman being hauled into the hospital unconscious and being told: We can't pay your bill because you didn't get prior approval for emergency room treatment.

That is absurd. That is the kind of horror story that requires all Americans to believe we must pass a Patients' Bill of Rights that has teeth and works to solve real problems.

Isn't it the case, with respect to emergency room care, that we in this Congress have already given all senior citizens in the Medicare program exactly what is proposed in our bill with respect to emergency room treatment and poststability care? Isn't it the case that every Member of the Senate has already voted for that in Medicare, saying yes, that is the right thing to do; but when it comes to the Patients' Bill of Rights they say: We want to have a Patients' Bill of Rights, but on our emergency room care, we don't intend to offer that protection on not only emergency room care but also poststability care in a hospital after you get out of the emergency room; we don't intend to offer that, even though we have already done that and voted for it for Medicare patients.

I don't understand the contradiction; does the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator has correctly stated the current situation. It isn't only Medicare. It is also in Medicaid, as well as the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program. Every Senator has these protections.

The interesting question I ask the Senator, if these protections were such burdens on the delivery system, doesn't the Senator think he would have heard? These protections are available today, for those who are covered with Medicaid or Medicare. The other side in opposition to the Daschle proposal is always saying these protections are burdening the system, and we can't protect all Americans because it will burden the system?

The Senator has made the correct point. We do it today in Medicaid. We do it in Medicare. We do it for Federal employees. Most of the good HMOs do it. It is the bad apples that are threatening the well-being and the health of many of the citizens in our States whose procedures we need to address.

Mr. DORGAN. I will respond, if the Senator will yield to me further, with the story I told on the floor of the Senate, about the woman who was also injured, whose brain was swelling and who was in an ambulance being taken to a hospital and who said to the ambulance driver, I do not want to go to X hospital. She named the hospital. I want to go to Y hospital farther down the road. This woman lying in the back of an ambulance with a brain injury said: I want to go to the hospital farther away. Why did she say that? Because she read that the hospital that was closest had made decisions about patients' care that were more a function of corporate profit and loss than they were about health care, and she did not want, with a brain injury, to be wheeled into the emergency room with the notion somebody was going to look at her and make a dollar-and-cents decision about her health care.

Mr. DASCHLE. If the Senator will yield on that point, I would like to comment. I think what he has noted is exactly another reason why it is so important for us to have a debate about access to emergency rooms and other necessary care.

I would note that just the opposite of what the Senator describes oftentimes occurs. A managed care company, or an HMO, actually will make you drive past the nearest hospital to go to a hospital farther away, where they have a contract.

Sometimes a patient will choose not to use the nearest hospital, for a lot of reasons—better care, preferred specialists, different services. A patient may want to go farther away. But, in many cases, maybe a preponderance of cases, they actually have to drive past hospitals to go to the hospital the HMO has chosen, rather than the one they would choose for themselves.

Again, I think the Senator makes a very good point.

Mr. KENNEDY. May I just make this point? Access to emergency care, which is carefully protected in the leader's legislation, does the leader know that the provisions in his legislation were almost unanimously supported in the President's Commission on Quality Care? The one exception is the President's Commission did not make the recommendation that it be put in law, although they said every quality health maintenance organization ought to have it.

Second, the American Association of Health Plans has recommended it.

They do not mandate it, but they recommend it, saying it is essential in providing care.

The National Association of Insurance Commissioners—not a Democratic group, the majority of Insurance Commissioners are probably Republicans—has recommended it for the States. They say, in the States, as a matter of good quality health care, they ought to have the provisions which are in our Patients' Bill of Rights. As the Senators have pointed out, it has been included in Medicare.

So this proposal, which was offered and defeated in the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, should be a matter where we have an opportunity to present it and let the Senate make a judgment. As I mentioned, it has been recommended by the non-partisan commission. It has been recommended by the independent insurance commissioners. It is in Medicare. We would like to hear on the floor of the Senate those individuals who are opposed, those individuals who say no to this particular protection. That is the kind of protection that is included in the Daschle proposal, which is of such importance.

Mr. President, I see others want to speak on this proposal.

In looking down this list of protections, you can ask yourselves: Where do these protections really come from? As I mentioned, the protections we have put into the Daschle proposal are effectively the ones supported by the President's commission, the American Association for Health Plans, and the Insurance Commissioners. It is in Medicare. It is working, and it is working effectively. We do not have examples that protecting those under Medicare is a burden, and I do not think those who are opposed to that particular proposal can make an effective case in opposition to this provision.

I will take the time later to mention two or three more protections. Virtually every one of these protections is either part of a recommendation from the President's commission, part of the recommendations of the American Association of Health Plans, recommended by the state Insurance Commissioners, or is being implemented and protecting persons covered under Medicare.

These are commonsense proposals. They are not protections we have suddenly grabbed from some way-out organization or group. They are fundamentally rooted in sound health care practices. That is the case we want to bring to the floor of the Senate.

I see my colleague and friend on the floor now, wishing to speak. I will be back to address the Senate shortly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Massachusetts. First, on this issue of the Patients' Bill of Rights, I ran for the Senate in part so I could address this issue, which is of critical importance to the people of North Carolina and the people of America, in a completely non-partisan way. I am not interested in engaging in partisan politics between Democrats and Republicans. What I am interested in is a real discussion about an issue that is absolutely critically important to the people of this country and the people of North Carolina. Let me talk briefly about one aspect of the Patients' Bill of Rights that I think is so important.

Imagine there is a 29-year-old woman who lives in the Research Triangle of North Carolina which is between Raleigh-Durham and Chapel Hill, between Duke University Medical School and the University of North Carolina Medical School. Let's assume she is the mother of two children, having recently had a young child, born 6 months ago. She goes in for a postpartum checkup after the birth of her child, and the doctor looks at a mole on her back that seems suspicious. After some further testing, it is confirmed that her and her family's worst nightmare is true; she has a melanoma.

After they do further investigation, they determine there are clinical trials going on at Duke University Medical Center, just down the road from where she and her family live, which could provide lifesaving treatment for her condition. So she goes to her HMO and says: I want to be part of this; I want to make sure I have access to the best health care available. Literally, her life is at stake. She finds out from her HMO, unfortunately, that Duke is not part of the network of her HMO. So, as a result, treatment for her melanoma, which is so critically needed, is not available.

Here we have a situation where a simple thing is true. An HMO system, a health insurance system, a health insurance company, should not be able to stand between this woman and the lifesaving medical treatment she so badly needs and her family so badly needs for her. A real Patients' Bill of Rights would ensure that someone in her condition would have access to the best specialty care available, whether or not that care is within or without her HMO network. It would ensure, in my example, that she could, in fact, go 15 miles down the road to Duke University Medical Center and get the treatment that may well save her life—the life of a mother and a wife.

This is the kind of thing we need to be doing something about in the Patients' Bill of Rights. She should not be confronted with an obstacle course in order to get the treatment she needs and deserves. She needs to have ready, direct access to the care she obviously needs under these circumstances. That was an illustration.

I want to talk, secondly, about a real-life example. We received a phone call in my office from a young man who lives in Cary, NC, which is just outside of Raleigh. His name is Steve Grissom. Fifteen years ago, Steve Grissom was diagnosed with leukemia. The truth is, for most people, that would be an extraordinary life-altering and devastating thing to have occur. Unfortunately, that is not the end of the problem for Steve Grissom.

In 1985, because of his leukemia, he was required to have a blood transfusion. Most folks who are listening to this story probably know where it is headed. As a result of this blood transfusion, which he had to get because of his leukemia, he now has AIDS. He got AIDS as a result of the blood transfusion.

With the onset of AIDS, he had multiple medical problems. Included among those medical problems was the development of something called pulmonary hypertension which made it very difficult for him to breathe. The doctors who treated him prescribed oxygen 24 hours a day, 7 days a week to help him maintain his oxygen level. This prescription was made by a pulmonary specialist at Duke University, something that was clearly needed to save his life.

He was doing fine. Then his employer changed health care companies, unbeknownst to him. When the new HMO took over, they cut off payment for the oxygen that Steve had been dependent on for a long time now—24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Let me tell you how that decision was made. It was not made by some medical doctor who examined Steve and decided he did not need this treatment. It was not made by a specialist who had a different opinion than the pulmonary specialist at Duke University. Instead it was made by a clerical/bureaucratic person at the HMO sitting behind a desk looking at papers. The conclusion that person came to was that his oxygen saturation levels were not sufficiently low under their criteria to justify him receiving oxygen 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, even though the most highly trained medical specialist in the area at Duke University Hospital had prescribed this oxygen for him. He said it was lifesaving, absolutely critical.

The result of all this was basically an insurance company bureaucrat sitting behind a desk overrode a doctor who has spent his life in this area, who had become one of the best known pulmonary specialists in the country at Duke University, who had prescribed this oxygen therapy for Steve. Here is a man who has been confronted with extraordinary setbacks in his life, the kinds of things that would put most of us under the ground.

Here is the extraordinary thing about Steve Grissom. He has continued to fight. Even though his health insurance company now says they will not pay for the care he needs, he has managed to pay out of his own pocket for as much of this care as he can get.

He has called my office and said: I want to come to Washington. I want to testify. I want to talk to Members of the Senate, Members of the Congress. I want to tell them about the problem I am having getting any continuity of care which I so desperately need.

The truth of the matter is, what Steve Grissom is doing is he is fighting in every way he knows how to cease being a statistic, to stop being a name and a number on a piece of paper on somebody's desk sitting in an insurance company office.

He is an extraordinary example of heroism. He is the kind of person whom I think most of us would hold up to our children and members of our family as what we hope they will be when confronted with extraordinary, difficult setbacks.

He fought back. He got the blood transfusion he needed in 1985. When he was then confronted with something that would absolutely overcome most people, which is AIDS as a result of the blood transfusion, he continued to do everything in his power to get the treatment he needed and go forward with his life.

When he was on oxygen 24 hours a day, 7 days a week just to stay alive and his employer changed HMOs and they cut off payment for the treatment that kept him alive, he continued to fight. Here is the most extraordinary thing about it. Not only has he continued to fight, not only has he expressed a willingness to come and talk to Members of the Senate, to testify before this Congress about what he has been confronted with, there is absolutely no bitterness in this man. He has been kind and gracious. He has said: I want to do everything I can to ensure that what has happened to me does not happen to other Americans, does not happen to other North Carolinians. I want to explain to Members of Congress why it is so critically important that we pass a meaningful Patients' Bill of Rights, one that will protect people who are confronted with the kind of situation with which I am confronted.

The truth of the matter is, it is extraordinary that he is still alive. He continues to be a huge part of his family's life. He is, by any measure, a hero. But to the insurance company, Steve Grissom is a liability. He is somebody who costs $515 a month to pay for the oxygen that is needed to keep him alive.

The reality is that they made the decision about Steve Grissom for the same reason that HMOs and health insurance companies make these decisions all across the country, affecting children and adults and families all over this country every day. They did it based on the bottom line—profits. They had established an arbitrary criteria for what was necessary for somebody in Steve's situation to get oxygen therapy and treatment that he needed. Regardless of his individual situation, regardless of the fact that the doctors who were responsible for treating him, who are highly trained, highly specialized experts at Duke University Medical Center, had said he needs this treatment, they rejected it. They made the decision that no longer would he receive this oxygen, and they would not pay for it anymore.

I cannot help but believe the majority of Americans think that what has been done to Steve Grissom is wrong; that the courage he has shown in the face of extraordinary adversity is something that should be admired and looked up to. He is absolutely entitled to the benefit of the doubt, to the extent there is any doubt, that a specialist at Duke University has determined that he is entitled to this treatment that he so desperately needs.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Given that this patient is denied the treatment that can make all the difference in restoring his health or well-being, and given that we have heard examples where, as a result of denying that treatment, a decision made by the health maintenance organization despite the recommendations of the medical professional—can the Senator tell me the remedies available? What remedies are available to a family whose loved one dies or whose loved one sustains a permanent injury because a judgment was made by the insurance company or the HMO, in conflict with the recommendation by the treating doctor. What remedy is available to that family that loses its breadwinner or has to care for an individual who is permanently injured for the rest of their life? What remedy is available for the family who loses a loved one due to the negligence or the clear malfeasance of the insurance company or the HMO?

Mr. EDWARDS. The Senator's question highlights an enormous problem in existing law and a problem that we are trying to desperately cure in this Patients' Bill of Rights.

Under the circumstance I have just described, if something happens to Steve Grissom, i.e., he suffers more serious injury or dies as a result of an arbitrary decision made by an insurance company bureaucrat, if that occurs, first of all, under the existing law, that HMO and that bureaucrat cannot in any way be held responsible. They are totally immune to responsibility, unlike every other American—you, I, any other American—who could be held accountable in court for that decision. They are totally immune from responsibility. They are protected.

As a result, they only have one incentive for what they do, and that incentive is the green dollar bill, the profit, the bottom line. It is the only thing that matters to them. That is the basis on which these decisions are made.

Not only that, not only can they not be held accountable in court, I say to the Senator, there is not even an independent review board that can look at this decision that has been made and determine whether it is unfair, whether it is unjust, and whether it is medically unsound.

So basically, Steve Grissom and his family, in this life-threatening situation, are confronted with a circumstance where they have no remedy at all. They can do absolutely nothing.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. KENNEDY. Further, is the Senator suggesting that this is the only area in civil law that a remedy is really being denied on the basis of real negligence, malfeasance? Are these the only companies in America that have this sort of privileged position of being free from what I think most Americans would understand as accountability? Is that what the Senator is suggesting?

Mr. EDWARDS. That is exactly what I am suggesting, I say to the Senator.

I add, anecdotally, one of the things that the Senator knows, I have come from 20 years of having represented folks in court cases. One of the questions we always ask jurors in the process of jury selection is: Do you believe everyone should be treated exactly the same in this courtroom? Universally, the answer is yes. Because the American people are fairminded. They believe everyone should be treated equally, everyone should be treated the same. They believe in both personal and corporate responsibility, that everybody ought to be held accountable for what they do or do not do—the very same way we teach our children they should be held accountable for what they do or do not do.

Instead, under existing law in this country, we have decided HMOs and health insurance companies are privileged characters. They get treated in a way that no other American business is treated, that no other American citizen—the people who are listening to this debate—is treated. They are held responsible for what they do.

But for some reason, under the law, unless and until we are able to change it, HMOs and health insurance companies are treated in a very privileged way. They cannot be held responsible for what they do. Unfortunately, that has enormous consequences for people, for families, and for children. The consequence is they have no reason to do anything other than the profit motivation, and the bottom line, which is the dollar. That is one of the problems we are working desperately to cure in our Patients' Bill of Rights.

Mr. KENNEDY. Finally—because I see others on the floor; and this issue is going to be addressed in the Daschle proposal—I am wondering whether the Senator would agree with Justice William Young, a Federal judge on the Federal bench in Massachusetts, who was appointed by President Ronald Reagan, who said, after a very tragic case—and I will not review all of the facts here, but it was quite clear that there was responsibility by the insurance companies; and it will be self-evident in his quote; and there was a real injustice done—this is what Judge William Young, appointed by President Reagan, who prior to the time he served on the bench was a Republican, said:

Disturbing to this Court is the failure of Congress to amend a statute that, due to the changing realities of the modern health care system, has gone conspicuously awry from its original intent. This Court has no choice but to pluck the case out of State court . . . and then, at the behest of Travelers [Insurance Company]—

That is effectively the culprit—slam the courthouse door in [the wife's] face and leave her without any remedy. ERISA has evolved into a shield of immunity that protects health insurers . . . from potential liability for the consequences of their wrongful denial of health benefits.

That is the statement from the bench of a distinguished Federal judge who came down and eventually effectively testified about the injustice of this provision. As I understand it, the Daschle proposal addresses that inequity and unfairness, which the Senator has outlined.

Mr. EDWARDS. May I respond to that briefly, I say to Senator KENNEDY?

I would ask for a comment from you on this issue. In terms of talking to your constituents in Massachusetts, can you tell me what response you have gotten, including from health care providers, on the issue of whether it is important to them, No. 1, that there be an independent review board so when folks' claims are denied, they have some ready process to use to get relief, and, secondly, whether they believe it is fair for HMOs and health insurance companies to be treated completely differently than every other segment of American society?

Mr. KENNEDY. As the Senator knows, they have independent review. We have it under the Medicare proposal. It works. It works very effectively. It works pretty well. It is somewhat different in scope than was included in the Daschle proposal. I favor this one here, but there is an independent review. But not only in that measure, we have some 23 million Americans who are working for State and local governments that have the kind of protection that is favored in the Daschle proposal, and it is working very effectively.

One of the very important programs that has the kind of protections the Senator has favored and that I favor is what they call the Calpurse Program in the State of California, which has well over a million individuals who are part of that program with the kind of protections that are supported by the Senator.

What they have found out—we will have a chance to get into this, hopefully, at the time we get a debate on it—is that the cost of that whole program has not increased as much as the increase in health insurance nationwide, or even in the programs in California that do not have that protection.

Do you want to know why, Senator, I believe that is so? For the same reason we had the expert witnesses who appeared before Senator SPECTER's Appropriations Committee; and that is, because the HMOs take more time and attention to make sure the patients are going to get better kinds of health care and health care coverage. That basically means they are able to get a better handle on the cost.

So it makes a major difference in terms of the quality of health care, and it makes a major difference in terms of the protections of individuals.

I thank the Senator for his response.

Mr. SCHUMER. Would the Senator from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Senator.

I have been very impressed with what he has said. As the Senator knows, I have been advocating the Patients' Bill of Rights for quite a while. Just this week I had traveled to different parts of my State—to Long Island, to New York City, to Syracuse, to Rochester. Everywhere I went, I found an amazing thing: The providers, the doctors, including the medical society, the AMA, the nurses, the hospitals are allied with the patients. Usually they are at loggerheads. But they were allied together in asking for a real Patients' Bill of Rights, not a Patients' Bill of Rights in name only.

We do not want to go through putting something on the floor that says: Patients' Bill of Rights, and does not protect patients. We are worried about that.

The reason I think we want an open debate and not just: Well, here is your version; we will vote for it. Here is our version; we will vote it down. We are finished with the Patients' Bill of Rights—we do not want that because we do not want to be able to just go home and say we passed something and then 3 months from now the very same doctors, and others, will say: It doesn't do any good. You didn't do anything.

We went through this on guns. We were going to pass something in this body that did absolutely nothing. Then the very same people who say the gun laws do not work, or who tried to cripple and emasculate the provisions we passed, said the laws do not work.

So the question I ask is—here are some examples of inequities that I have come across. I just would like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he thinks the Patients' Bill of Rights would help in these instances; and they are just amazing.

One, an HMO denies high-dose chemotherapy for a man with lung and brain cancer, stating it is experimental. What was the HMO's solution? The claim agent told his family to get in touch with organizations that have fundraisers for patients denied HMO coverage. Can you imagine the gall of that? A man is dying of cancer. They find a solution that might work. There is finally some hope in the family. Not only does the HMO say, no, we won't pay for it, but at the same time they say go have some fundraisers while the person has cancer. How about this one—

Mr. DURBIN. I ask, if I might, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for the purpose of a unanimous consent request?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining 65 minutes of debate before the vote at 5:45 on the motion to table be divided as follows: 40 minutes under the control of Senator NICKLES on the Republican side and 25 minutes under the control of Senator KENNEDY on the Democratic side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 5 more minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EDWARDS. I thank the Senator. I will conclude my remarks. The point I make is so important, which is that this is not a partisan debate. This is not a debate and should not be a debate between Democrats and Republicans. I didn't come to the Senate to fight with my Republican colleagues. I came to the Senate to represent the people of North Carolina—Republicans, Democrats, Independents, whatever their politics. We desperately need to talk about the specific provisions of a real, substantive, meaningful Patients' Bill of Rights. That is what needs to happen. That is the reason we are on the floor today talking about this amendment. It is the reason this amendment has been attached to the agriculture appropriations bill.

We need desperately to talk about these issues because they are so critically important to the people of my State—all of the people of my State—and they are important to all Americans. We have to make sure that folks have direct access to specialty care. It does absolutely no good for us to have the most advanced medical care and treatment and research in the world in this country if folks can't get to it. Folks have to be able to have access to the high-quality medical care that is constantly advancing on a daily basis in medical centers throughout this country, including medical centers in my home State, including Duke University Medical Center, University of North Carolina, Bowman Grey, and East Carolina University.

We have great medical centers in North Carolina. But those folks and the care they can provide do no good whatsoever if they can't provide the treatment to the patients. That is where health insurance companies, HMOs, stand as a roadblock between the doctors and the health care providers who are spending their lives developing these lifesaving treatments and the patients who so desperately need them.

Steve Grissom, the gentlemen I described with leukemia and AIDS, is a perfect example. There are heroes all over this country, all over North Carolina, who are standing up and fighting battles against health problems that are critical to them and their families. We have to give them direct access to the treatment and care that can save their lives and change the lives of their families.

It is very simple. The bottom line is this: Patients, not profits, should be the bottom line in health care. That is what this Patients' Bill of Rights is about. We simply want an opportunity to talk about it to our colleagues, whom we respect, on the floor of the Senate, to talk about it to the American people. And I am telling you, the American people in their gut know that this is something that needs to be passed, needs to be done, and that health insurance companies and HMOs absolutely should not stand between children and families and the health care that, in many cases, can save their lives.

With that, I yield the floor.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I appreciate the accommodation and cooperation by my friend and colleague, Senator DURBIN from Illinois. There are several on this side who wish to speak on this issue as well. We have been wanting to speak for about the last hour.

I yield to the Senator from Vermont for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, this is an important time for America to listen to this debate because the lives and health of individuals throughout this Nation are at stake. It is interesting to note, looking back to last year when the Democratic proposal came forward, at first they wanted it to be voted on immediately. Then we worked together on this side of the aisle and worked up a bill that we find is superior to theirs in many respects, which I will talk about later, and all of a sudden they didn't want to bring it up without 100 amendments. We could not get a time agreement to get to the bill. Even though some of the things sound quite dramatic and wonderful, when we analyze them, we find that in many respects we believe the majority's bill is superior.

First of all, the Patients' Bill of Rights Act addresses those areas of health care quality on which there is a broad consensus. It is solid legislation that will result in a greatly improved health care system for all Americans.

The Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions has been long dedicated to action in order to improve the quality of health care. Our commitment to developing appropriate managed care standards has been demonstrated by the 17 additional hearings related to health care quality. And Senator FRIST's Public Health and Safety Subcommittee held three hearings on the work of the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research (AHCPR).

Each of these hearings helped us in developing the separate pieces of legislation that are reflected in our Patients' Bill of Rights Act.

People need to know what their plan will cover and how they will get their health care. The Patients' Bill of Rights requires full disclosure by an employer about the health plans it offers to employees.

Patients also need to know how adverse decisions by a plan can be appealed, both internally and externally, to an independent medical reviewer. That is a critical difference. We emphasize good health care. Under our bill the reviewer's decision will be binding on the health plan. However, the patient will maintain his or her current rights to go to court. Timely utilization decisions and a defined process for appealing such decisions are the keys to restoring trust in the health care system.

Our legislation also provides Americans covered by health insurance with new rights to prevent discrimination based on predictive genetic information.

It ensures that medical decisions are made by physicians in consultation with their patients and are based on the best scientific evidence. And it provides a stronger emphasis on quality improvement in our health care system with a refocused role for AHCPR.

The other bill uses the generally accepted practice in the area which can deviate very strongly from best medicine. We give you best medicine.

Some believe that the answer to improving our nation's health care quality is to allow greater access to the tort system. However, you simply cannot sue your way to better health. We believe that patients must get the care they need when they need it, not just after they go to court in a lawsuit to repair the damage.

In the "Patients' Bill of Rights," we make sure each patient is afforded every opportunity to have the right treatment decision made by health care professionals. In the event that does occur, patients have the recourse of pursuing an outside appeal. Prevention, not litigation, is the best medicine.

Our bill creates new, enforceable Federal health care standards to cover those 48 million of the 124 million Americans covered by employer-sponsored plans. These are the very same people that the States, through their regulation of private health insurance companies, cannot protect.

What are these standards? They include: a prudent layperson standard for emergency care; a mandatory point of service option; direct access to OB/GYNs and pediatricians; continuity of care; a prohibition on gag rules; access to Medication; access to Specialists; and self-pay for behavioral health.

It would be inappropriate to set Federal health insurance standards that duplicate the responsibility of the 50 State insurance departments. As the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, put it: "(w)e do not want States to be preempted by Congressional or administrative actions. . . . Congress should focus attention on those consumers who have no protections in self-funded ERISA plans."

Senator KENNEDY's approach would set health insurance standards that duplicate the responsibility of the 50 State insurance departments. Worse yet, it would mandate that the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) enforce them if a State decides not to adopt them.

Those of us who have been involved with this know what happened during the recent past when the HIPAA bill was passed on to HCFA. It was a mess. Almost nothing was getting done.

HCFA cannot even keep up with its current responsibilities. This past recess Senator LEAHY and I held a meeting in Vermont to let New England home health providers meet with HCFA. It was a packed and angry house, with providers traveling from New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut.

It is in no one's best interest to build a dual system of overlapping State and Federal health insurance regulation.

Increasing health insurance premiums causes significant losses in coverage.

This is the main difference. You can promise a lot of things when you try to do them. But if the result of what you do is that up to 1 million people lose coverage because of the increased cost, that is not the way we ought to go.

The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) pegged the cost of the Democratic bill at six times higher than S. 326. Based on our best estimates, passage of the Democratic bill would result in a loss of coverage for over 1.5 million working Americans and their families. To put this in perspective, this would mean that would have their family's coverage canceled under the Democratic bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. JEFFORDS. On the Senator's time?

Mr. KENNEDY. On my time.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator has referred to the loss in terms of coverage by the General Accounting Office. Will the Senator share that letter which allegedly reached that conclusion? Will the Senator put that in the RECORD at this time so we have a full statement of the General Accounting Office rather than just using the figure that the Senator used? Will the Senator make that whole letter a part of the RECORD?

Mr. JEFFORDS. I would be happy to make that a part of the RECORD, yes.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. JEFFORDS. Let me repeat that. Adoption of the Democratic approach would cancel the insurance policies of almost a million and half Americans. I cannot support legislation that would result in the loss of health insurance coverage for a population the size covered in the combined states of Vermont, Delaware, South Dakota, and Wyoming.

Fortunately, we can provide the key protections that consumers want at a minimal cost and without disruption of coverage—if we apply these protections responsibly and where they are needed.

In sharp contrast to the Democratic alternative, our bill would actually increase coverage. With the additional of the Tax Code provisions to S. 326, the Patients' Bill of Rights Act, our bill allows for the full deduction of health insurance for the self-employed, the full availability of medical savings accounts and the carryover of unused benefits from flexible spending accounts. With the new Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act we provide Americans with greater choice to more affordable health insurance.

S. 326, the Patients' Bill of Rights Act, provides necessary consumer protections without adding significant new costs; without increasing litigation; and without micro-managing health plans.

I also point out that under the law a doctor is still open to suit. Although they are prescribed health plans, the doctors are liable.

Our goal is to give Americans the protections they want and need in a package that they can afford and that we can enact.

This is why I hope the Patients' Bill of Rights that we are offering today will be enacted and signed into law by the President.

I believe very strongly that the advantages we get, especially that we require, the standard of best medicine, and not just the medicine that is generally used in the area is by far a much better protection for the people we are trying to protect—the patients—than the Democrat's Patient's Bill of Rights.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
HEALTH, EDUCATION AND HUMAN SERVICES DIVISION,

Washington, DC, July 7, 1998.

Subject: Private Health Insurance: Impact of Premium Increases on the Number of Covered Individuals Is Uncertain

Hon. JAMES M. JEFFORDS,

Chairman, Committee on Labor and Human Resources, U.S. Senate.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Almost 150 million individuals obtained health insurance through the workplace in 1996, either through their own employment or the employment of a family member. During the last several years, an increasing number of individuals with employer-sponsored insurance have enrolled in some form of managed care rather than in fee-for-service plans. Recently, concerns have grown regarding the ways in which some managed care plans operate and the adequacy of information shared between each plan, its providers, and its members.

In response to these concerns, several legislative proposals have been made to require health insurance plans to adopt specified operational practices. The proposals apply to all types of plans, but would likely have their greatest impact on health maintenance organizations (HMO). Other types of plans, such as preferred provider organizations (PPO) and indemnity, or fee-for-service, plans, will likely be affected to a lesser degree. Included in various proposals are requirements, for example, to disclose certain information,<sup>1</sup> guarantee patient access to emergency and specialty services, implement internal and external grievance policies, guarantee freedom of communication between providers and patients, and eliminate the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) restrictions on health plan liability.

However, some lawmakers are concerned that these types of mandates could increase the cost of health insurance and have the unintended consequence of reducing the number of individuals covered by private health insurance.

This letter responds to your request for information on the relationship between the amount charged for private health insurance and the number of insured individuals. You also asked us to analyze the basis for a widely cited statistic from the Lewin Group, a private research and consulting organization, that the number of insured individuals would fall by 400,000 for every 1-percent increase in health insurance premiums. Specifically, we (1) examined the trends in employers' decisions to offer insurance and employees' decisions to purchase it, (2) assessed the methodology used by the Lewin Group to support its 400,000 coverage loss estimate, (3) assessed the methodology used by the Lewin Group to produce its most recent estimates, and (4) evaluated conditions or factors that could affect the impact of premium increases on insurance coverage. To conduct our study, we reviewed relevant published research. We also evaluated the applicability of the Lewin Group's estimates given the data, methods, and assumptions it used to produce its estimates. We performed our work between May 1998 and June 1998 in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.

In summary, during a period of rising health insurance premiums, the proportion of employees offered coverage rose, while the share that accepted insurance fell. Between 1988 and 1996, health insurance premiums increased, on average, by approximately 8 percent per year.<sup>2</sup> During roughly the same period, 1987 to 1996, the proportion of workers who were offered insurance by their employers rose from 72.4 percent to 75.4 percent, according to one recent study.<sup>3</sup> The same study found that the proportion of workers who accepted coverage, however, fell from 88.3 percent to 80.1 percent. This may be because employers required employees to pay a larger share of the premiums.<sup>4</sup> In 1988, employees in small firms (fewer than 200 workers) paid an average of 12 percent of single-coverage premiums. Employees in large firms paid about 13 percent.<sup>5</sup> By 1996, the employee share had risen to 33 percent in small firms and 22 percent in large firms. Other factors, such as decreases in some workers' real incomes, Medicaid-eligibility expansions, and changes in benefit generosity, also may have contributed to the fall in the acceptance rate.

In November, 1997, the Lewin Group used published studies to estimate that 400,000 fewer individuals would have health insurance coverage for every 1 percent increase in insurance premiums.<sup>6</sup> Several of these studies had sought to quantify the impact of subsidized insurance premiums on the increase in the number of employers offering insurance. The Lewin Group concluded from these studies that a 1-percent decrease in premiums would likely induce an additional 0.4 percent of employers to offer insurance. It then assumed that an increase in premiums might cause a similar percentage of firms to drop health insurance coverage and cause 400,000 individuals to be without coverage. The findings of more recent studies, however, call into question the basis for the Lewin Group's estimate. Although these studies did not quantify the relationship between premium increases and changes in the number of employees with coverage, they clearly show that employers generally continued to offer insurance during a period of rising premiums but that fewer employees decided to purchase coverage. The estimate also assumes equal premium increases for all types of insurance products. If new federal mandates primarily affect HMO premiums, some employees may switch to other types of insurance—especially insurance with different benefit packages—instead of dropping coverage entirely. Thus, the Lewin Group's estimate may not be a good predictor of the coverage loss that might be caused by new federal mandates.

In January 1998, the Lewin Group lowered its estimate of potential coverage losses by about 25 percent.<sup>7</sup> It now estimates that a 1-percent premium increase could result in approximately 300,000 fewer individuals being covered by private insurance. The new estimate is based on the Lewin Group's statistical analysis of the relationship between how much employees pay for insurance and the probability that they, their spouses, and their dependent children have employer-sponsored health insurance. However, it is unclear how accurately the Lewin Group was able to measure the price paid by the individuals in its sample. Moreover, the new estimate applies to situations in which premiums for all insurance types increase, on average, by 1 percent. If premiums increase by 1 percent only for some insurance types (for example, HMOs), then the coverage loss predicted by the Lewin Group would be less than 300,000.

Because many factors can affect the number of individuals covered by private insurance, it is difficult to predict the impact of an increase in insurance premiums. For example, new mandates may increase premiums but may also change individuals' willingness to purchase insurance. Individuals may not mind paying higher premiums if they like the changes brought about by the mandates. The extent to which employers pass on premium increases to employees also can affect coverage by influencing employees' purchasing decisions. Another important determinant is the extent to which employees switch from plans with high premium increases to plans with no or low premium increases, or to less expensive plans with more limited benefits. Finally, changes in other economic factors, such as income, or changes in public insurance program eligibility requirements can affect the number of individuals with private health insurance.

BACKGROUND

Between 1995 and 1997, real health insurance premiums (adjusted for inflation) remained nearly constant or fell slightly across all plan types. (See table 1.) This represents a sharp decline from the previous 5 years, in which inflation-adjusted growth was as high as 11.6 percent for indemnity plans and 10.6 percent for HMO plans in 1990.

Sources: GAO calculations based on data from KPMG Peat Marwick (1991–97); Health Insurance Association of America (1990), and Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index. Includes employer and employee shares of premiums for workers in private firms with at least 200 employees.

About 70 percent of the population under age 65 was covered by health insurance purchased through an employer or union, or purchased privately as an individual in 1996, according to Current Population Survey (CPS) data. About 12 percent was covered by Medicare, Medicaid, or the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS), and about 18 percent was uninsured. From 1989 to 1996, the percentage of the population covered by employer-sponsored, union-sponsored, or individual insurance<sup>8</sup> decreased slightly, but these options still remained a dominant source of coverage for people under age 65. (See fig. 1.) During the same period, the proportion of the population covered by Medicaid and the proportion without insurance both increased.

MORE WORKERS WERE OFFERED INSURANCE, BUT FEWER ACCEPTED COVERAGE AS PREMIUMS INCREASED

Recent studies suggest that employers typically do not stop offering health insurance when premiums increase. Between 1988 and 1996, health insurance premiums—unadjusted for inflation—increased by about 8 percent per year, on average. During approximately the same time period, one study<sup>9</sup> found that the fraction of workers offered insurance by their employers grew slightly, from 72.4 percent to 75.4 percent. The proportion of workers who had access to employer-sponsored insurance, either through their own job or the job of a family member, remained essentially constant at about 82 percent. Another study<sup>10</sup> reported that the fraction of small firms (those with fewer than 200 employees) offering insurance coverage grew from 46 percent in 1989 to 49 percent in 1996. The study also found that 99 percent of large firms offered insurance in 1996.

Fewer workers, however, are choosing to accept employer-sponsored coverage for themselves or their dependents. In 1987, 88.3 percent of workers accepted coverage when their employers offered it. In 1996, only 80.1 percent of workers accepted coverage. The fall in the acceptance rate was relatively large for workers under age 25 (from 86.5 percent to 70.1 percent) and those making $7 per hour or less (from 79.7 percent to 63.2 percent). The fraction of workers who accepted employer-sponsored insurance either through their own job or that of a family member also declined, from 93.2 percent to 89.1 percent. Consequently, even though a greater percentage of employers offered insurance, the acceptance rate fell to such an extent that a smaller proportion of workers was covered by employer-sponsored insurance in 1996 compared with 1997.

The fall in the acceptance rate may be attributable partly to required increases in employees' insurance premium contributions. One study found that employees in small firms paid an average of 12 percent of single coverage premiums in 1988 and employees in large firms paid 13 percent.<sup>11</sup> In 1996, the employee share had risen to 33 percent in small firms and 22 percent in large firms. According to the Lewin Group, the combined effect of the increase in premiums and the increase in the employees' share of those premiums resulted in workers paying 189 percent more in real terms for single coverage and 85 percent more in real terms for family coverage in 1996 compared with 1988.

Other factors also may have contributed to the drop in the acceptance rate. A decline in real wages for some workers may have made coverage less affordable. Expansions in Medicaid eligibility provided a coverage alternative for some families and may have decreased workers' willingness to accept employer-sponsored insurance. Furthermore, possible changes in benefit packages may have made coverage less desirable.

LEWIN ESTIMATE OF 400,000 COVERAGE LOSS BASED ON OUTDATED STUDIES

In November 1997,<sup>12</sup> the Lewin Group estimated that 400,000 fewer people might be covered by health insurance if new legislation caused premiums to rise by 1 percent. Its estimate was largely based on studies of the effects of insurance premium subsidies on employers' decisions to offer insurance. However, recent research casts doubt on the applicability of these findings to other situations. Furthermore, according to the Barents Group, a research and consulting firm, the Lewin Group's coverage loss estimate may be too high because some individuals may switch to other types of health plans if new legislation causes HMO premiums to rise.

Few studies have analyzed the relationship between the cost of insurance and the number of individuals covered. The studies available to Lewin in November 1997 primarily focused on employers' decisions to offer insurance. These studies varied widely both in their research questions and their findings. Several studies<sup>13</sup> examined the effects of programs designed to increase coverage by subsidizing the premiums paid by employers—particularly small ones. The estimates from this group of studies varied, with one suggesting that between 0.07 percent and 0.33 percent of small firms might begin to offer insurance if premiums were reduced by about 1 percent. Some older studies, using data from 1971 and before, found that between 0.6 percent and 2 percent of firms might stop offering health insurance coverage if premiums increased by 1 percent.

The Lewin Group selected a range of estimates, from what it judged to be the best available, to predict that between 0.2 percent and 0.6 percent of firms would stop offering coverage if insurance premiums increased by 1 percent. It then selected the midpoint of this range (0.4 percent) as its best estimate. To calculate the potential impact on coverage, the Lewin Group multiplied 150 million—the number of workers and their dependents covered by employer-sponsored health plans in 1996—by 0.004—the percentage of firms expected to drop coverage.<sup>14</sup> This calculation suggested that 600,000 individuals would lose employer-sponsored health insurance if premiums increased by 1 percent. However, on the basis of its analysis of CPS data, the Lewin Group assumed that about one-third (or 200,000) of these 600,000 workers would obtain insurance either through the policies of working family members, the individual insurance market, or public insurance programs.<sup>15</sup> Consequently, it estimated that a 1-percent premium increase might result in a drop in coverage of about 400,000 individuals.

The Lewin Group's estimated potential coverage loss does not consider the possibility that employers or employees might switch to different types of insurance products if one type becomes relatively more expensive. This is important in the current context because many of the proposed federal mandates are expected primarily to affect HMOs and have little or no impact on PPOs and indemnity plans. The Barents Group, a private research and consulting organization, recently reported on the potential coverage loss that proposed mandates could cause.<sup>16</sup> The Barents Group used the Lewin coverage loss estimate but reduced it by 25 percent to allow for the possibility that some employees might switch from HMOs to other types of insurance plans instead of dropping coverage altogether.

CURRENT LEWIN GROUP COVERAGE LOSS ESTIMATE LOWER BY 25 PERCENT

Recent data analysis by the Lewin Group led it to revise its estimate of potential coverage loss. The Lewin Group now projects a loss of employer-sponsored coverage of approximately 300,000 people for every one percent increase in premiums. This estimate, reported in January 1998, is approximately 25 percent lower than its November 1997 estimate. The new estimate is based on the Lewin Group's statistical analysis of the relationship between what employees pay for insurance and the probability that they, their spouses, and their dependent children have employer-sponsored health insurance.<sup>17</sup>

A key variable in the January 1998 Lewin Group study is the price of insurance, but because of data limitations, this was measured imperfectly. The study primarily used CPS data from 1989 to 1996. CPS data, however, do not contain information on health insurance premium amounts. Lewin, therefore, used three data sources to impute the amount employees paid for insurance:<sup>18</sup> the 1987 National Medical Expenditure Surveys (NMES), the KPMG Peat Merwick employer surveys for 1991 through 1996, and the Health Insurance Association of America (HIAA) employer surveys for 1988 through 1990. The authors of the Lewis report acknowledged that these surveys were not strictly comparable, and that the information used to measure the employee share of health insurance may have been different for 1988 through 1990 than for 1991 through 1996. Another potential shortcoming related to premium amounts is that the analysis did not allow for the possibility that some workers may decline coverage from their own employers when they can obtain it through a family members' employer-based coverage.

The Lewin Group's estimate is of the coverage decline that would result from an overall average premium increase of 1 percent. Yet, the proposed federal mandates are expected primarily to affect HMOs. If HMOs' premiums rise by 1 percent, then premiums for other types of insurance would probably not increase as much. HMO enrollees, therefore, would be affected most by the premium increases. Under these circumstances, the Lewin Group's estimate could overstate the coverage decline.

The Lewin Group explicitly assumed that all observed coverage changes were due to employees' decisions.<sup>19</sup> Consequently, it used the imputed employee contribution as the relevant cost of insurance. This assumption is broadly supported by the recent literature. However, if some employees lost access to insurance because of their employers' decisions to no longer offer it, the Lewin Group's estimate may incorrectly predict employees' reactions to changes in premiums.

POTENTIAL COVERAGE LOSS UNCERTAIN, DEPENDS ON MANY FACTORS

Insufficient information is currently available to predict accurately the coverage loss that may result from health insurance premium increases associated with new federal mandates. One problem is that the potential cost of the mandates and their impact on premiums is not yet known. However, even if the premium increase was known with certainty, previous research and economic theory suggest that the impact on coverage depends on a number of conditions. Coverage changes will depend on the extent to which premiums rise for employees and whether they can switch to insurance plans less affected by the mandates. The specific policy adopted also can affect how employees respond to resulting premium increases. Finally, changes in many economic and other factors can cause coverage changes that mask or exaggerate the impact of premium increases. The following list describes several conditions that could affect observed changes in health insurance coverage if new federal mandates increase insurance costs.

1. The percentage of premiums paid by employees and the amount of any premium increase the employers pass on to employees. If, as recent evidence suggests, employees' decisions largely affect the extent of coverage, then the relevant price increase is the percentage increase in their contribution. For example, about two-thirds of employees in small firms had to contribute toward premium costs in 1996. Those employees paid about 50 percent of the total premium. If total premiums rise by 1 percent and employers pass on the full increase to employees, then the employees' contribution would rise by 2 percent.

2. The extent to which additional benefits are valued by consumers. If higher insurance premiums are the result of additional benefits that consumers value, then any coverage loss will be less than the coverage loss that might occur if premiums increased but benefits stayed the same (or the additional benefits had little consumer value). In its November 1997 letter, the Lewin Group notes that its "estimates of the number of persons losing coverage will differ depending upon the health policy being analyzed." The Lewin Group goes on to suggest that "some proposals that increase premium costs are often associated with other provisions that may either lessen or intensify incentives for individuals to drop coverage."

3. The extent to which some types of plans have no or low premium increases and employees can switch to them. Proposed new federal mandates are expected primarily to increase costs of HMOs. Faced with a rise in HMO premiums, some employees may switch to PPOs or indemnity insurance rather than drop coverage entirely. The Barents Group assumed this switching behavior might lower the Lewin Group's coverage loss estimate by 25 percent.

4. Changes in other insurance benefits. Instead of raising premiums in response to new mandated benefits, insurance companies and employers may find ways to reduce other parts of the insurance package to keep premiums constant. It is unknown how employees might respond to such changes in their insurance plans.

5. Changes in real wages and other factors. Changes in economic conditions or eligibility for public insurance programs can also affect private insurance coverage. For example, the Lewin Group estimated that a 1-percent rise in real incomes could increase private insurance coverage by nearly 0.37 percent (about 550,000 workers and dependents). Likewise, expansions in Medicaid eligibility could cause some workers to substitute public insurance for employer-sponsored family coverage.

<sup>14</sup>The studies' findings applied to the percentage of firms that might change their behavior. The Lewin Group, however, applied this percentage to individuals. This implicitly assumes that all sizes of firms would react similarly. If large firms are less responsive to premium increases than small firms, then the percentage of workers affected by a 1-percent increase in premiums could be less than 0.4 percent.

<sup>17</sup>Lewin used complex statistical models to estimate the proportion of the population covered by employer-sponsored insurance grouped by a number of demographic characteristics, including race, age, income, full-time/part-time status, occupation, industry, firm size, and the imputed employee share of the premium costs, among others.

<sup>18</sup>Lewin focused on the employee share of the insurance premium as the most appropriate cost affecting the employee decision to participate in employer-sponsored health plans.

<sup>19</sup>The data used in the Lewin study do not indicate whether observed coverage losses are the result of employers' decisions not to offer insurance or employees' decisions not to accept it.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, the GAO report examines two reports done by the Lewin Group on the impact of premium increases on coverage.

A 1997 report by Lewin indicates that a 1% increase will result in 400,000 losing coverage.

A 1998 report by Lewin for the AFL/CIO indicates that a 1% increase will result in 300,000 Americans losing coverage. It is this lower number that I used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will just take a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, with regard to just one fact that the Senator has mentioned, I have the GAO report to which the Senator refers. The fact that the Senator refers and is talking about is on page 4 of the report. It says:

If premiums increase by 1 percent only for some insurance types (for example, HMOs), then the coverage loss predicted by the Lewin Group to . . .

Not the GAO, it is the Lewin Group that makes the estimate referred to in the GAO letter.

To the contrary, if you read on, GAO says:

Because many factors can affect the number of individuals covered by private insurance, it is difficult to predict the impact of an increase in insurance premiums. For example, new mandates may increase premiums but may also change individuals' willingness to purchase insurance.

Therefore, there might be more people covered.

This is the kind of thing we ought to be debating out here. This is just the type of thing we ought to be debating. We have a lot of distortions and misrepresentations. The insurance companies themselves have spent $100 million in distorting our proposal. What we want to do is to try to clarify the RECORD on this.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. If I could just mention one other point, the Senator talked about what we wanted to do last year with regard to the Patients' Bill of Rights.

I have in my hand the majority leader's unanimous consent request. Here it is. This is an offer from last June 18, a little over a year ago, when we were trying to bring this legislation up.

I ask unanimous consent that prior to the August recess . . .

Isn't that interesting? June of last year; they are saying "prior to the August recess."

. . . the majority leader after notifying the minority leader shall turn to the consideration of the bill to be introduced by the majority leader . . .

It doesn't tell us what that is going to be.

. . . or his designee regarding health care. I further ask that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

And following the report by the clerk that Senator DASCHLE be recognized to offer as a substitute the text of S. 1891, which really wasn't the all-inclusive legislation, the majority leader is trying to tell the Democratic leader which bill he ought to put in.

I further ask that during the consideration of the health care legislation it be in order for Members to offer health care amendments in the first and second degree. I further ask consent that the Chair not enter a motion to adjourn or recess for the August recess prior to a vote or in relation to the majority leader's bill and the minority leader's amendment, and following those votes it be in order for the majority leader return to the legislation to the calendar.

To the calendar—not send it over to the House of Representatives—to the calendar.

Let's be clear about who is serious about bringing this up. Here is their consent request. They are going to return it to the calendar. Even if we win the vote, under their proposal, that could be the end of it.

Then it says:

Finally, I ask consent that it not be in order to offer any legislation, motion, or amendment relative to health care prior to the initiation of this agreement and following the execution of the agreement.

Therefore, you can't offer a health care measure for the rest of the Congress.

If the Senator from Vermont can say with a straight face that it is the Democrats who are trying to lock this thing up when the Senator has his own leader making a proposal like this, he is defying any kind of rational understanding of what a unanimous consent rule is.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I would be glad to yield for a question.

Mr. DURBIN. I am going to ask a very brief question. Is it not true that at 5:45—in 45 minutes—there will be a motion by the Republicans to table the Democratic version of the Patients' Bill of Rights without further debate, without further amendment, and to bring to an end this debate about whether families across America will have the stronger voice in terms of their health insurance protection?

I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who has been here for a few months, to respond, if he will. Why is it that the Republican majority is so concerned about or afraid of the idea of actually debating or deliberating something which is so important to American families, their health care?

Mr. KENNEDY. We will have to listen to the explanation coming from the other side. We know what the spokesman for the health insurance industry has said. We know what their answer has been, and that is to virtually instruct the Republican leadership just to say no. We know what the leadership on the other side has said about this: We are not going to get a chance to debate this issue.

People can draw their own conclusions. They have indicated this will not be permitted to come up, even though it is the people's business.

I see the Senator from Rhode Island on the floor. I yield 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Oregon). The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as I look at the Republican proposals, they are deficient in many ways. Of particular concern to me is the way this proposal mistreats children.

The Democratic proposal, the proposal we would like to not only debate but also to vote on, emphasizes the need to protect the children of America. I hope we all can agree that at the end of this Congress at least we can provide adequate protections in managed care for children.

Don't just take my word for it. Take the word of organizations including the American Academy of Pediatrics, the American Association of Children's Residential Centers, the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, the Children's Defense Fund, the Child Welfare League of America. All of these organizations support unequivocally the Democratic Patients' Bill of Rights. This is the legislation we know and they know will protect the children of America.

There are three key points that are terribly important with respect to the differences between the Republican proposal and the Democratic proposal.

First, our legislation will assure access to pediatric specialists. In the world of medicine today, it is not just sufficient to visit an oncologist if you have cancer and you are a child, because pediatric oncology is a particular specialty that is necessary for children who have serious cancers.

Second, our legislation provides clearly expedited review procedures if child development is threatened—not just their life but their development.

This is a critical issue that is virtually unique to children. This is something we have to protect and ensure.

Third, we also have provisions within our legislation that will measure outcomes in terms of children, so that when parents are trying to determine what plan is best for their child, they can actually look at measured results: How well this particular plan did—not with a large population of adults, but particularly with respect to children.

The Republican plan has some fuzzy language regarding pediatricians and specialists.

Clearly and unequivocally, there is language in the Democratic legislation that guarantees children access to providers who are trained to take care of them, access to pediatric specialists, expedited review procedures in the case of developmental difficulties for children, and also outcome measures that actually take children into consideration. These are critical issues that have to be included in any managed care legislation we pass on the floor of the Senate.

What did the American people think about that? I have listed August organizations like the American Academy of Pediatrics in support of this measure. Let me tell Members what the American people think.

In February of 1999, a survey by Lake Sosin Snell Perry and Associates and the Tarrance Group—one a Democratic polling firm, the other a Republican polling firm—revealed 86 percent of voters surveyed favored having Congress require health plans to provide children with access to pediatric specialists and hospitals that specialize in treating children.

That is an overwhelming example of what the American people are asking: Protect their children, and give them access to pediatric specialists. Let them choose, as mothers and fathers, pediatricians to be primary care providers for their sons and daughters.

Not only do the American people demand these provisions, they will also pay for them. Seventy-six percent of the voters surveyed said they would pay for these protections, "even if it increased health insurance costs for families with children by $100 a year."

They want these protections. Only the Democratic version gives them these protections.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield myself a couple of minutes, and then I will yield to my colleague from Maine.

Our colleague from Massachusetts said there was a unanimous consent request last year; we were talking about doing this last June and July. That is correct. We offered several unanimous consent requests, from June 18, July 15, and July 25, to bring this bill up to allow both sides to have a chance to vote on their proposals. We offered a number of amendments before the August break. Those were not agreed upon.

Everyone has had a chance to offer their bill and to have it voted on. We would have a package, we would have a bill, before the Senate that possibly could pass. That was not agreed upon last year. I don't know if it will be agreed upon this year. I told the Democratic sponsors we are willing to come to some time agreement, some limit on amendments, but we are not just going to have the bill on the floor for an unlimited number of amendments with unlimited debate.

Somebody asked, Why haven't we done this?

The Kennedy bill increased health care costs a lot. It is estimated that health care costs will increase 4.8 percent in addition to whatever health care increases are already scheduled. Increases are scheduled to be 7 to 9 percent. Take the average of that, 8 percent, and add 4.8 percent. That is a 13-percent increase in health care costs. That will increase the number of uninsured by at least 1.5 million.

I am going to work energetically to see we don't pass any bill that increases people's health care costs by 13 percent in 1 year. Certainly, I will work energetically to see we don't pass a health care bill that increases the number of uninsured by 1.5 million. That would be a serious mistake.

Whatever the Senate does, it should do no harm. If we increase health care costs in double digits and increase the number of uninsured by over a million, we have done a lot of harm. Some Members will not do that.

We should make some needed reforms. One of my colleagues worked energetically to put together a good package that makes needed reforms.

I yield 7 minutes to our colleague from Maine, Senator COLLINS.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, there is growing unease across this Nation about the changes in how we receive our health care, which has prompted the current debate on managed care. People worry, if they or their loved ones become ill, that their HMO may deny them coverage and force them to accept either inadequate care or financial ruin—or perhaps even both. They believe vital decisions affecting their lives will be made not by a supportive family doctor but by an unfeeling bureaucracy.

All Members agree that medically necessary patient care should never be sacrificed to the bottom line and that health care decisions should be in the hands of medical professionals, not in the hands of insurance accountants.

We do, however, face an extremely delicate balancing act as we attempt to respond to concerns without resorting to unduly burdensome Federal controls and mandates that will further drive up the costs of health insurance and cause some people to lose their coverage altogether. That is the crux of this entire debate.

I am very alarmed by recent reports that American employers everywhere, from giant multinational corporations to the small corner store, are facing huge hikes in their medical insurance coverage for their employees, averaging over 8 percent, and sometimes soaring to 20 percent or more. This is a remarkable contrast to the past few years when premiums rose less than 3 percent, if at all.

We know for a fact that increasing health insurance premiums cause significant losses in coverage. That is the primary reason why I am so opposed to the approach offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. Even if we discard CBO's previous estimate that the Kennedy bill would increase premiums by 6.1 percent and accept the newly revised estimate of 4.8 percent, the fact is the CBO score for the Democratic bill is six times higher than the cost for the bill we are proposing.

Moreover, the Lewin Associates, in a study for the AFL-CIO, has estimated that for every 1-percent increase in premiums, we are jeopardizing the insurance coverage of as many as 300,000 Americans. Based on these projections, the passage of the Kennedy legislation could result in the loss of coverage for more than 1.4 million Americans. That is more than the population of the entire State of Maine. This is a significant cost.

If you look at the CBO estimate of the revised Kennedy bill, CBO estimates it will impose additional costs to the private sector of nearly $41 billion over the next 5 years. That is a cost that is going to cause employers to drop insurance altogether or employees to be unable to pay their share of the premium. At a time when the number of uninsured Americans, unfortunately, is increasing with every year, we should be acting to decrease the number of uninsured Americans, not impose costly new burdens that are going to cause some of the most vulnerable working Americans to lose their coverage altogether.

Our approach, on the other hand, provides the key protections that consumers need and want without causing costs to soar. It applies these protections responsibly, where they are needed. Our legislation does not preempt, but rather builds upon the good work the States have done in the area of patients' rights and protections. States have had the primary responsibility for the regulation of health insurance since the 1940s. As someone who has worked in State government for 5 years overseeing a Bureau of Insurance, I know State regulators and State legislators have done an excellent job of responding to the needs and concerns of their citizens.

Let me give you just a few examples. Mr. President, 47 States have already passed laws prohibiting gag clauses that restrict communications between patients and their doctors; 40 States have requirements for emergency care; all 50 States have requirements for grievance procedures; 36 require direct access to an obstetrician or a gynecologist.

The States have acted, without any prod or mandate from Washington, to protect health care consumers. That is why the National Association of Insurance Commissioners supports the approach we have taken in our bill.

In a March letter to the chairman of the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, the NAIC pointed out:

It is our belief that states should and will continue the efforts to develop creative, flexible, market-sensitive protections for health consumers in fully insured plans, and Congress should focus attention on those consumers who have no protections in self-funded ERISA plans.

That is exactly the approach we have taken. Currently, Federal law prohibits States from regulating the self-funded, employer-sponsored health plans that cover 48 million Americans. Our legislation is intended to protect the unprotected. We would extend many of the same rights and protections to these consumers and their families that those in State-regulated plans already enjoy.

For the first time they will be guaranteed the right to talk freely and openly with their doctors about their treatment options. We would ban the gag clauses. They will be guaranteed coverage for emergency room care that a "prudent layperson" would deem medically necessary without prior authorization. They will be able to see a pediatrician or an OB/GYN without a referral from their plan's "gatekeeper." They will have the option of seeing a doctor who is not part of the HMO's network. They will be guaranteed access to nonformulary drugs when it is medically necessary. They will have an assurance of continuity of care if their health plan terminates its contract with their doctor or hospital.

The opponents of our legislation contend that the Federal Government should simply preempt the States' patient protection laws unless they are virtually identical to what the Federal Government would require. But the States' approaches to these patient protections vary widely. For example, States may have emergency requirements, but not exactly the same standard that the Democrats in Senator KENNEDY's bill would impose on everyone. States that have already acted in this area would have to make extensive changes to their laws, if they are forced to comply with the one-size-fits-all model.

Moreover, what if the State has made an affirmative decision not to act in one of these areas? What if the bill failed in the legislature or was vetoed by the Governor? Let me give you a recent example from my State. Maine law requires plans to allow direct access to ob/gyn care—without a referral from the primary care physician—but only for an annual visit. Maine also requires plans to allow ob/gyns to serve as the primary care provider. Our State Legislature recently decided that the current provisions provide sufficient protection and rejected a bill that would have expanded the direct access provision, primarily out of concern that it would drive up premium costs. I would note that this decision was made by a legislature controlled by the Democratic Party. In cases like these, the Kennedy proposal for a one-size-fits-all model would be a clear pre-emption of State authority.

Other provisions of our bill provide new protections for millions more Americans. A key provision of our bill builds upon the existing regulatory framework under ERISA to give all 124 million Americans in employer-sponsored plans assurance that they will get the care that they need when they need it. The legislation will enhance current ERISA information disclosure requirements and penalties and strengthen existing requirements for coverage determinations, grievances and appeals, including the addition of a new requirement for independent, external review.

All 124 million Americans in employer-sponsored plans will be entitled to clear and complete information about their health plan—about what it covers and does not cover, about any cost-sharing requirements, and about the plan's providers. Helping patients understand their coverage before they need to use it will help to avoid coverage disputes later.

The goal of any patients' rights legislation should be to resolve disputes about coverage up front, when the care is needed, not months or even years later in a court room.

Our bill would accomplish this goal by creating a strong internal and an independent external review process. First, patients or doctors who are unhappy with an HMO's decision could appeal it internally through a review conducted by individuals with "appropriate expertise" who were not involved in the initial decision. Moreover, this review would have to be conducted by a physician if the denial is based on a determination that the service is not medically necessary or is an experimental treatment. Patients could expect results from this review within 30 days, or 72 hours in cases when delay poses a serious risk to the patient's life or health.

Patients turned down by this internal review would then have the right to a free, external review by medical experts who are completely independent of the health plan. This review must be completed within 30 days—and even faster in a medical emergency or when the delay would be detrimental to the patient's health. Moreover, the decision of these outside reviewers is binding on the health plan, but not on the patient. If the patient is not satisfied, he or she retains the right to sue in federal or state court for attorneys' fees, court costs, the value of the benefit and injunctive relief.

Our bill places treatment decisions in the hands of doctors, not lawyers. If your HMO denies you treatment that your doctor believes is medically necessary, you should not have to resort to a costly and lengthy court battle to get the care you need. You should not have to hire a lawyer and file an expensive lawsuit to get the treatment.

Our approach contrasts with the approach taken in the measure offered by Senators DASCHLE and KENNEDY that would encourage patients to sue health plans. I do not support Senator KENNEDY's approach. You just can't sue your way to quality health care.

We would solve problems up front, when the care is needed, not months or even years later after the harm has occurred. According to the GAO, it takes an average of 33 months to resolve malpractice cases. This does nothing to ensure a patient's right to timely and appropriate care. Moreover, patients only receive 43 cents out of every dollar awarded in malpractice cases. The rest winds up in the pockets of trial lawyers and administrators of the court and insurance systems.

I met with a group of Maine employers who expressed their serious concerns about the Kennedy proposal to expand liability for health plans and employers. The Assistant Director for Human Resources at Bowdoin College talked about how moving to a self-funded, ERISA plan enabled them to continue to offer affordable coverage to Bowdoin employees when premiums for their fully-insured plan skyrocketed in the late 1980s. Since they self-funded, they have actually been able to lower premiums for their employees, while, at the same time, enhance their benefit package with such features as well-baby care, free annual physicals, and prescription drug cards with low copayments. They told me that the Democrats' proposal to expand liability seriously jeopardizes their ability to offer affordable coverage for their employees. Similar concerns were expressed by the Maine Municipal Association, L.L. Bean, Bath Iron Works, and other responsible Maine employers.

And finally, our amendment will make health insurance more affordable by allowing self-employed individuals to deduct the full amount of their health care premiums. Establishing parity in the tax treatment of health insurance costs between the self-employed and those working for large businesses is a matter of basic equity, and it will also help to reduce the number of uninsured, but working, Americans. It will make health insurance more affordable for the 82,000 people in Maine who are self-employed. They include our lobstermen, our hairdressers, our electricians, our plumbers, and the many owners of mom-and-pop stores that dot communities throughout my state.

Mr. President, I believe that this amendments strikes the right balance as we effectively address concerns about quality and choice without resorting to unduly burdensome federal controls and mandates that will further drive up costs and cause some Americans to lose their health insurance altogether, and I urge all of my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time remains to both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 19 minutes and the Senator from Massachusetts has 9.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield my colleague from Tennessee 8 minutes.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, there has been a lot of misinformation and I am sure a lot of confusion on the part of many because of allegations that have gone back and forth because of the rhetoric, so I think I will use my few minutes to outline what is in the Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act; that is, the Republican leadership bill we have been discussing for the last several days.

I am very proud of the bill we have put forward. I am proud of it as a physician, as a member of the task force that helped put this bill together, and as a Senator, because I believe with passage of this bill we can do what I think everybody in the body wants to do, and that is to improve the quality of care for individuals across this country, their children, and on into the next generation.

The bill we put forward has really six major components with three objectives. The three objectives are to enhance health care quality, to enhance access, and to provide consumer protections. We do that through six components.

First, as the Senator from Maine has just gone through, strong consumer protection standards. The second way of achieving that is that we offer good, comparative information among plans, at a time when it is very confusing to the beneficiary, to the individual patient, what plan offers what, and what benefits are covered.

Third—and I am proud of this—we have a strong internal, and even more important, I believe, external appeals process establishing these rights for 124 million people. We are talking about scope in a lot of these discussions, but let's remember this applies to 124 million Americans who are covered both by the self-insured and fully insured group health plans.

Fourth, we have in our bill a ban on the use of genetic information by insurance companies for underwriting purposes. It is very important, as we look at the human genome project, which is producing 2 billion bits of information, all of which can be to the benefit of mankind if it is used appropriately.

Fifth, we have a quality focus in our bill which is lacking in other bills and other proposals. We have expanded quality research activities through the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research. We address issues of access. This is in contrast to the bill on the other side, because we have a major problem in this country today of about 41 million people who are uninsured. You are not going to find this Senator voting for a bill that drives people to the ranks of the uninsured and expands that 41 million to 42 million.

As my colleague from Maine just pointed out, every 1-percent increase in premiums drives about 300,000 people to the ranks of the uninsured. I doubt one will find very many Senators on our side in favor of increasing that number of uninsured.

We addressed the issue of access through two means: No. 1 is medical savings accounts expansion, and No. 2 is to have availability of a full deduction for health insurance benefits for the self-employed.

As the Senator from Maine pointed out, States already regulate insured health plans. Thus, our bill addresses the unprotected with the protections. We do it through emergency care. A prudent layperson, somebody in a restaurant has some chest pain—is it indigestion or a heart attack? You go to the emergency room and are reimbursed, because a prudent layperson standard is used and, therefore, that service is covered.

Choice of plans: In our bill, we make sure those plans that offer network-only plans are required to offer what is called point-of-service options.

Consumer protections: Obstetricians, gynecologists, pediatricians—we have heard these words used a lot. Who are these physicians? Do you have access? Under our bill, health plans would be required to allow direct access to obstetricians, to gynecologists, and to pediatricians for routine care without referrals, without gatekeepers.

Continuity of care: Under our bill, plans that terminate or nonrenew doctors or providers from their networks would allow continued use of the provider for up to 90 days or, if someone is pregnant, up through the postpartum period.

Access to medication: We all know that formularies are used increasingly by people broadly because of the cost of prescription drugs. In our plan, we make sure physicians and providers and people with clinical experience are on those boards that put together these formularies. In our bill, we make sure that nonformulary alternatives are available when medically necessary and when appropriate. Physicians, pharmacists, not just bureaucrats, will be putting these formularies together.

Access to specialists: I am a heart and lung transplant surgeon. I have had the opportunity to transplant hundreds of hearts and lungs and do hundreds of heart operations, and I know the importance of access to a specialist. Under our bill, health plans would be required to ensure that patients have access to covered specialty care within the network or, if necessary, provide that access through contractual relationships if heart surgeon BILL FRIST happens not to be inside that network.

Gag rules: We all know that physicians should not have gags placed on them when they talk to patients. We have a strong gag rule prohibition in our bill. No more gag rules.

A second approach is that we require comparative information be given to individuals so they can compare one plan to another so they will know what services are covered and what services are not.

I mentioned grievance and appeals. All group health plans would be required to have written grievance procedures and have both an internal appeals process as well as an external appeals process if there is some disagreement as to what is covered and what is not covered.

Timeframes—we address it in our bill. Expedited requests for care, if there is any question of jeopardizing the patient's health, is allowed.

Qualification of reviewers: This is a significant improvement in our bill compared to last year. We make absolutely sure that an appropriately qualified external reviewer; that is, a provider who has expertise in the field where there is some question. If it is a question about heart surgery, you have a heart surgeon, somebody familiar to heart surgery as the reviewer. The external appeals process is, I believe, greatly strengthened by having this independent—and those are the words we use—"external medical reviewer where necessary."

We allow in those cases where a treatment is considered experimental that that also can be handled in this external review process. We require that external reviewer to have "relevant expertise."

My time is just about out. There are three other issues.

Genetic information: Our bill recognizes that "predictive genetic information" can be used against you by an insurance company, either raising premiums or denying coverage. We prohibit it.

Our bill focuses on quality improvement by taking the Agency for Health Care Research and Quality and focusing on health service delivery and training scientists, providing information systems to improve quality, and, lastly, our bill invests in the infrastructure necessary to measure quality.

Medical savings accounts and full health insurance deduction for the self-employed are a part of our bill.

That is our bill in a nutshell. It looks at consumer standards. It looks at improved quality, it looks at improved access. It is a bill of which I am proud. It is a bill I know all of us can support. It is a bill that will improve health care in the United States of America.

Mr. President, I yield back my time.

Mr. SCHUMER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. I have been yielded 4 minutes by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Chair, and I thank the Senator from Massachusetts not only for yielding but for his leadership over many years on this issue. Let me make a couple of points.

First of all, the Senator from Tennessee has outlined his bill, and it is a different approach. I ask Americans to ask: Why do all of the leading doctors' groups, including the American Medical Association, why do the leading consumer groups up and down the line, support our approach? If the bill on the other side is so good for consumers and so good for physicians and providers, then why are they all supporting this bill? And if, as the Senator from Tennessee believes, all of these are worthy goals—specialists, appeals processes, et cetera—then why not go all the way? Why not do it right? Why not do it in a way that the AMA and all the consumer groups and all of those that both sides are talking about protecting choose? The bill they choose is our bill.

Second, on cost, because I know the Senator from Maine mentioned cost, the most recent estimates by CBO said that the Daschle-Kennedy bill, at the end of 5 years, would cost $2 extra a month a person. Ask Americans: Would they pay that to have access to specialists, to have emergency room treatment, to have the kinds of things we have been talking about? You bet. They would pay it in a New York minute. So if cost is the concern, it is not much, and you get a lot. If helping providers and consumers is the concern, our bill prevails.

What we are going to do tonight is table any proposal. That is not adequate, nor is it even adequate, at least from my point of view as a freshman Senator, to try to deal with this issue and just push it away. We believe passionately that patients need help, that consumers need help, that physicians and nurses and hospitals need help.

We believe the HMOs have swung too far in their ability to police the basic patient-doctor relationship. We do not think that a quick "let's get rid of this, let's have a quick vote and say it is over" serves the American people.

What we will be doing on this side is continuing to fight until we can get a full and open debate. I want to debate the Senator from Tennessee on whether the Daschle bill or his bill really gives access to specialists. I want to debate the Senator from Tennessee on whether the appeals process in our bill or in his bill is the most open.

I want to debate the Senator from Tennessee on every one of the issues that has been mentioned. The process that we are going through now does not allow that debate. I do not know where it will come out. My guess is it may come out similar to the last debate we had where a number of people, in a bipartisan way, come together for a stronger bill. But that may not happen.

But at the very least, in conclusion, we should have a full and open debate. And a motion to table and a vote on one bill and then the other to get rid of this is not fair to the American people.

Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eleven minutes for the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. On the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes 46 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield the Senator from Pennsylvania 5 minutes.

Ms. SANTORUM. Thank you, Mr. President.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for yielding me time. I congratulate him and the entire working group on the Republican side of the aisle—Senators JEFFORDS, COLLINS, FRIST, and GRAMM for putting together what I believe is a bill that this Senate should embrace. I think America, if they were given the choice between what is being offered on the Democratic side and what is being offered on the Republican side, would quickly embrace this plan for many reasons.

No. 1, it is a much more comprehensive plan. This is the Patients' Bill of Rights Plus. It is not just some consumer protection measures which Democrats have put forward—and we have, to some degree, done the same—but it goes much farther. By looking at the health care picture in America, on a comprehensive basis, we took a step back and said, what can we do to improve quality, to improve access, to reduce costs—not responding to hot button poll issues?

It seems to be the popular move around here—when something polls well, we rush out here and try, with legislative fixes, to pass something that sounds good to the American public.

We did not take that approach. We took the approach of how, from a public policy point of view, we are going to solve real problems in America—not real problems that maybe poll well but real problems that solve structural problems, structural problems in the health care system, which will end up benefiting millions of people.

One such area is that of access. Much has been talked about in relation to patients' rights. We have not heard a lot of talk on the other side about access to insurance. There are a couple of components to that.

No. 1, keep the costs down. We have heard a lot of talk about how the other bill, the Kennedy bill, dramatically increases costs. Our bill does not do that. So in that respect, we already, by virtue of not driving up health care costs, improve access. But we do more than that.

We do two specific things in the tax portion of this bill. First, we increase the deductibility of insurance for the self-employed up to 100 percent. So we put them on an even playing field with those who have employer-provided health care. We give 100 percent deductibility, thereby increasing the desirability of owning health care insurance, of buying that insurance for yourself as a self-employed individual, thereby getting more people into the health care system, which is something everybody believes is necessary and desirable.

Second, we provide for medical savings accounts. Medical savings accounts have gotten, from a public policy perspective, a little bit of a bad rap based on what was passed here a few years ago. What was passed here a few years ago was a program that was designed to fail. Those who designed it got exactly what was predicted—failure.

It is a program that is very limited. Very few taxpayers can participate in it. It is time limited. It does not allow you to carry contributions from year to year. It is a program that has very little in the way of a design that would be attractive. In fact, what would attract people to MSAs is the ability to control their own health care costs, which is the ability to profit personally—instead of the insurance companies managing your health care, doing things that keep you healthy. Those are some of the attractions of MSAs that are the control element, all of which are forfeited under the existing MSA proposal.

The bill that we are offering removes all these restrictions—artificial—to dampen the enthusiasm for the program, to make it less attractive and less workable, and allows a full-blown medical savings account proposal to go forward and to put it into the mix of health care delivery options, insurance options, again, creating more choices, creating, in this case, a high deductible insurance option that is very attractive to people who we have a very difficult time bringing into the insurance system but are very important to get in there, and those are younger workers, in particular.

We have a very difficult time convincing younger uninsured people that it is maybe worthwhile to go out and buy insurance coverage. Most young people think they are infallible, that they cannot be hurt, that they do not need insurance. What we do is create a savings component to health insurance which is a very attractive thing, particularly for younger people and yet, at the same time, very useful for everyone—once people understand how the dynamics of medical savings accounts work.

So it has the dual components of attracting those very desirable people into the insurance pool—younger workers who have, in fact, less health care costs—and at the same time provides the kinds of choices and quality and the proper incentives to the rest of the population in the health care system through these medical savings accounts.

So I am very excited that what we have been able to accomplish in this bill is not just to provide some hot button issues with regard to HMOs which poll well—and I understand that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SANTORUM. We have provided a comprehensive approach to health care reform and one that I think we can all be very proud of.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for yielding me time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senate for yielding.

You know what this reminds me of? This reminds me of the Senate. Imagine, both sides of the aisle—Republican and Democrat—on the floor discussing and debating an issue which counts with American families—health insurance.

Is it going to be there when we need it? Will it be affordable? Can we trust our doctors not to be overruled by insurance company bureaucrats?

I like this debate. That is why I ran for the Senate. But in 10 minutes there will be a vote on a Republican motion to table to end this debate, to stop it, to say that there is going to be no further debate, no future amendments—it is over.

I do not think that makes sense. Weren't we sent here to enter into this debate? To face these issues on an up-or-down vote? I am prepared to do that.

I know that some of the votes on these amendments will not be easy, but I think we have an excellent bill in the Democratic Patients' Bill of Rights, a bill that has been endorsed by every major health organization, children's advocacy groups, and labor-business across the board.

I am prepared to stand and defend this bill, offer amendments that give to families the assurance they are going to get quality health care. But the Republican side does not want this debate. They do not want to vote on these amendments. They called it "health care-plus." It is "health care-minus." Every day they are taking away from American families their power to choose a doctor, their power to have the right specialist, their willingness, I guess, to sit down with their doctor and realize they are getting an honest answer.

It is a shame that in 10 minutes this motion to table is going to come before us. This really resembles the Senate—deliberation on an issue that counts. I hope the motion to table is defeated. Let's have the real debate on this issue.

I yield back my time.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to today to ask my colleagues to consider several intriguing questions. What would we do if I told you that Americans were deliberately being denied access to our country's greatest technologies and developments? What if I told you that there is a business in this country that is permitted to make any kind of business decision they want and potentially adversely effect millions of consumers' lives and not be held accountable? What if I told you that Congress has had the answer to these questions and, most importantly, the solutions to these problems but because of a few people and a great deal of money from one special interest group, the American people have been denied a substantially better quality of life? Well, unfortunately, all this is true.

Over 200 organizations representing doctors, nurses, patients' right advocates, consumer organizations and labor groups and American people everywhere have all spoken loud and long: The time is now to pass a meaningful patient's bill of rights. My Democratic colleagues stand ready, once again, to engage in a discussion with our Republican colleagues so that we can finally put the American people's interest before health insurance company profits.

Over 100 million workers who labor hard and pay health insurance are being denied critical medical services. We are led to believe by some that the health care system under managed care is working just fine. In our own circles of friends and family, we know that this is simply not true. The numbers are staggering. I have a chart here that will not surprise anyone.

In 1998, 115 million Americans either had a problem or knew someone who had a problem with managed care and that number is dramatically on the rise. Let me say that again. At least, 115 million people in this country are experiencing difficulties obtaining medical services for which they pay for every month. The issue is clear. Managed health care reform is long overdue.

First and foremost, we need a managed health care system that is inclusive, providing the best health care for everyone that spends their hard earned dollars on health insurance. The Republican managed care bill leaves out over 100 million Americans: two-thirds of those that have private health insurance. Let me be even more specific using my own State, New Mexico, as an example of what I am referring to.

There are approximately 900,000 privately insured patients in the State of New Mexico. Without passage of the Democratic Patients' Bill of Rights, look at the list of major patient protections that over 900,000 New Mexicans will not have.

Under the Republican bill, almost 700,000 New Mexicans will not have substantive protections and 350,000 will not be covered at all if the Republicans pass their bill. The Democratic Patients' Bill of Rights will assure that 900,000 New Mexicans will receive all these protections that I have listed on this chart.

These numbers represent real people with real health concerns. These numbers represent people who expect Congress to put the health interests of Americans first.

Let me address just a few of the basic protections that I believe a managed care system should provide and that, in fact, the Democratic Patient's Bill of Rights includes.

We need a managed care health system that does not financially penalize health care professionals who try to provide the best care for their patients. We can no longer permit managed care companies to fire providers who report quality concerns or who speak up on behalf of their patients and assist their patients when their HMO denies care.

We need a managed care health system that does not allow HMO's to operate with few providers and long waiting periods for appointments, and that force patients to drive long hours to get needed care, even if there are qualified providers nearby. Where you live in our country should not be reason enough to exclude you from the best medical care available. In a state such as New Mexico this is a critical concern.

We need a managed care health system that does not prohibit health plans from excluding non-physician providers such as nurse practitioners, psychologists, and social workers from their networks. Under the Republican bill, patients, especially those in rural and other areas without an adequate supply of physicians, could be left out in the cold. Once again, in the State of New Mexico these are critical concerns.

Simply put, we need a managed health care system that puts patient protections first before insurance company profits.

Let me also address one other issue. I have heard concerns from some of my Republican colleagues regarding the impact that reforming health insurance might have on small businesses. I too have long been concerned with the effect of federal policy on this part of the business sector. New Mexico relies significantly on the innovation and hard work of the small businessperson and I have consistently worked to protect their interests. But instead of trying to scare small businesses with inadequate information that seemingly threatens their livelihoods as some might do, let's take a look at the facts.

In a recent study by the Small Business Alliance and the Kaiser Family Foundation, the overwhelming majority of small businesses would continue to provide health insurance after managed care reform and the majority of these business endorsed key elements of the Democratic Patient's Bill of Rights including real independent appeals, access to speciality care, and direct access to OB/GYN services, as well as the patient's right to hold insurance companies accountable for their decisions.

I began my comments asking several fundamental questions about consumer rights. I would like to conclude by encouraging all of my colleagues to consider the issues which I have raised and I look forward to substantive debate on these critical matters that have such a profound effect on the health of this Nation.

We have an opportunity to stand up for American families, protect American children and respond to the needs of American workers. I urge all of my colleagues to stand together with the overwhelming majority of the American people and begin a discussion that will ultimately lead to the passage of a meaningful patient's bill of rights for all Americans. The American people have waited long enough.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President. I would like to clarify my position on these procedural votes regarding managed care reform legislation.

I think Senators on both sides of the aisle are familiar with my position on the need for managed care reform legislation to ensure that health care consumers are treated fairly by their HMOs and other managed care plans.

Indeed, I have authored bipartisan legislation—both in this Congress and the last—to provide a basic floor of federal protections for all privately insured Americans. And, I am pleased to be joined in that endeavor by Senators BOB GRAHAM, JOE LIEBERMAN, ARLEN SPECTER, MAX BAUCUS, CHUCK ROBB and EVAN BAYH.

Though I will vote not to table the Republican bill, I want to make clear, I do not think this bill goes far enough in protecting consumers. Nor am I entirely comfortable with the Democratic bill. Let me cite just a few examples.

In the Chafee-Graham-Lieberman bill, our patient protections would extend to all privately insured Americans—not just to the self-funded component of the ERISA population, as is the case with most of the patient protections in the Republican bill.

A credible enforcement mechanism is also critical to ensuring that any patient protections we adopt here in the Senate are taken seriously by managed care plans. The Chafee-Graham-Lieberman bill contains a strong enforcement mechanism which would permit injured parties to seek redress in federal court. Here the Democratic bill goes too far in exposing health plans to state tort liability, while the strengthened ERISA remedy contained in the Republican bill does not go far enough.

Our bipartisan bill also contains very strong internal and external appeals provisions to ensure that patients get their appeals heard in an expeditious and equitable manner. I am not convinced the Republican bill does enough in this area.

Regardless of our legitimate differences, I am not in favor of trying to force the debate on managed care in this manner. I respectfully urge both sides to work in good faith to arrive at a reasonable time agreement to facilitate an orderly debate as soon as practicable on this very important legislation.

In that regard, I do not think 40 amendments on either side is realistic given all of the other matters competing for the Senate's attention; nor, for that matter, do I think 3 amendments would give the Senate the opportunity to fully debate these issues.

If we are serious about Senate consideration of managed care legislation—as I believe both sides are—I see no reason why we cannot come to an agreement on a date certain for taking up this legislation, and a date certain for completing it. I believe the Senate could complete consideration of this legislation within a period of five or six days.

So, let us proceed in a timely manner to debate these differences and to vote to resolve them. That is our task, and I am willing to help in whatever ways I can to ensure a full and meaningful debate.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise today to express my frustration and outrage with the inability of the Republican leadership to allow a fair and open debate on a real Patients' Bill of Rights. I do not like the idea of tying up must do appropriations bills to try and force a fair and open debate on access to health care services. However, due to the inability to find a reasonable compromise on the number of amendments, we have been forced to bring this issue to every possible vehicle.

There are many things we do here that simply do not have the impact we seem to think they do. We spend more time debating a constitutional amendment to balance the budget instead of simply doing the hard work to balance the budget. We proved that despite weeks of debate all we needed to do was make the tough choices and balance the budget. Yet when it comes to something like access to emergency room treatment or access to experimental life saving treatments, we can't find three days on the Senate floor. This is the kind of legislation that really does impact American working families. I would argue that it deserves a full and open debate on the Senate floor.

The pending amendment before us is not, and let me repeat, is not a Patient Bill of Rights. Oddly enough it excludes most insured Americans and in many cases, simply reiterates current insurance policy. It does not provide the kind of protections and guarantees that will ensure that when you need your insurance it is there for you and your families. Let's face it, most people do not even think about their health insurance until they become sick. Certainly insurance companies do not notify them every week or month when collecting their premiums that there are many services and benefits that they do not have access to. It is amazing how accurate insurance companies can be in collecting premiums, but when it comes time to access benefits it becomes a huge bureaucracy with little or no accountability.

The Republican leadership bill is inadequate in many areas. Let me point out one major hole in this legislation. During markup of this amendment in the HELP Committee I offered a very short and simple amendment to prohibit so-called "drive through mastectomies." My amendment would have prohibited insurance companies from requiring doctors to perform major breast cancer surgery in an outpatient setting and discharging the woman within hours. We saw this happen when insurance companies decided that there was no medical necessity for a woman to stay more than 12 hours in a hospital following the birth of a child. They said there was no need for follow up for the newborn infant beyond 12 hours. There was no understanding of the effects of child birth on a woman and no role for the woman or physician to determine what is medically necessary for both the new mother and new born infant.

I offered the drive through mastectomy prohibition amendment only because an amendment offered earlier in the markup would continue the practice of allowing insurance personnel to determine what was medically necessary. Not doctors or patients, but insurance company bean counters. I offered my amendment to ensure that no insurance company would be allowed to engage in drive through mastectomies. My amendment did not require a mandatory hospital stay. It did not set the number of days or hours. It simply said that only the doctor and patient would be able to determine if a hospital stay was medically necessary. The woman who suffered the shock of the diagnosis of breast cancer; the woman who was told a mastectomy was the only choice; the woman who faced this life altering surgery. She decides.

Unfortunately, my colleagues on the other side did not feel comfortable giving the decision to the woman and her doctor. They did not like legislating by body part. Neither do I. But I could not sit by and be silent on this issue. Defeating the medically necessary amendment offered prior to my amendment, forced me to legislate by body part. I would do it again to ensure that women facing a mastectomy are not sent home to deal with the physical and emotional after shocks.

For many years I have listened to many of my colleagues talk about breast cancer and breast cancer research or a breast cancer stamp. When it sometimes to really helping breast cancer survivors, some of my Republican colleagues vote "no." I hope we are able to correct this and give all of my colleagues, not just those on the HELP Committee the chance to vote "yes."

I also want to remind many of my colleagues who support doubling research at NIH, that we are facing a situation where we have all this great research and yet we allow insurance companies to deny access. Today we heard testimony at the Labor, HHS Subcommittee hearing about juvenile diabetes. It was an inspiring hearing with over 100 children and several celebrities. Yet as I sat there listening to testimony from NIH about the need to increase funding and how close we are to finding a cure, I was struck by the fact that the Republican leadership bill would allow the continued practice of denying access to clinical trials, access to new experimental drugs and treatments, access to specialities and access to speciality care provided at NIH cancer centers.

It does little good to increase research or to find a cure for diabetes or Parkinsons disease if very few can afford the cure or are denied access to the cure. We need to continue our focus on research, but cannot simply ignore the issue of access.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting a real Patient's Bill of Rights that puts the decision on health care back into the hands of the consumer and the physician. It does not dismantle managed care. But it ensures that insurance companies managed care, not profits.

I do not want to increase the cost of health care costs, I simply want to make sure that people get what they pay for. That they have the same access to cure that we as Members of the Senate enjoy as we participate in the Federal Employees Health Benefit Plan. The President has made sure that we have patient protections. Our constituents deserve no less.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am voting against tabling both competing versions of the Patient's Bill of Rights because I believe both should be considered by the Senate. I oppose any proposal to limit amendments on either bill and then have just an up or down vote on each Bill.

I believe a bill should be considered in regular order in the usual manner subject to the Senate rules which would permit amendments and debate under our rules without a unanimous consent agreement limiting amendments or debate.

My own preference for the Patient's Bill of Rights is the bipartisan proposal S. 374 sponsored by Senators CHAFEE, GRAHAM, LIEBERMAN, BAUCUS, and myself.

If any bill is called up subject to regular order, the various provisions could be considered and voted upon and the Senate would work its will on the competing provisions.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes 50 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Two minutes 50 seconds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to reserve the last 20 seconds, Mr. President.

Mr. President, to listen to my friends on the other side, you would think that you were hearing the talking points written by the insurance industry: It costs too much.

Here is the CBO report: 4.8 percent for average premiums for employer-sponsored health insurance over 5 years. For the sake of this exercise, call it 5 percent. Say a families' premium is $5,000. That is $250 over 5 years. Allocate that in terms of employer-employee, and you will find that the cost paid by an employee is around the cost of a Big Mac each month. This is a buy to ensure that you are going to have the protections in our legislation.

We hear about all the things that their program is doing. But the one thing that Senator FRIST left out is that they are only covering a third of all of Americans. They are leaving out more than 110 million Americans. If this plan is so good, why not include everyone?

For those that are so concerned about the cost, I hope they are going to explain where they are getting the money that the Joint Tax Committee says their proposal will cost. Their medical savings accounts alone—which are little more than a tax shelter for the rich—are $4.2 billion over the next 7 years. But they don't say how they will pay for it in their proposal.

They are concerned about cost? Why are they expanding that tax loophole? Why aren't they at least jawboning the insurance companies to hold down the 6 to 10 percent increase that we see in the insurance premiums every year just to increase profits?

Every single provision of the Republican bill is riddled with loopholes. It is a bill that only an insurance company accountant could like. As this debate proceeds, we will expose those loopholes.

Mr. President, one of the ways you know a person is by who their friends are. Our friends in this debate are the 200 groups that represent the doctors and nurses—the health delivery professionals—and consumers. Not a single organization supports the opposition.

If our amendment is tabled, it is a vote against children, a vote against families, a vote against women; it is a vote against every individual with a serious health problem, and it is a vote in favor of mismanaged care and a vote in favor of placing insurance company profits ahead of patient care. I hope the motion to table Senator DASCHLE's amendment is defeated.

I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority has 5 minutes 4 seconds, and Senator KENNEDY has 20 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I thank the assistant majority leader.

The goal of any patients' rights legislation should be to resolve disputes about coverage, about access to treatment upfront when the care is needed, not months or even years later in a courtroom. That is a fundamental difference between the bill supported by Senator KENNEDY and the proposal that we have advanced.

Our legislation would accomplish this goal by creating a strong internal and external review process. If a patient or a physician is unhappy with an HMO's decision, the patient or the provider can appeal it internally for a review. If they are unhappy with the review decision, the internal review, they have the right for a free and quick review by an external panel. The goal of our legislation is to ensure that people get the treatment they have been promised.

Moreover, the decision of the outside reviewers is binding on the health plan but not on the patient. If the patient is still not satisfied, he or she retains the right to sue in Federal or State court for attorneys' fees, court costs, value of the benefit, and injunctive relief.

Our bill places treatment decisions in the hands of physicians, not trial lawyers. If your HMO denies you the treatment your doctor believes is medically necessary, you should not have to resort to a costly and lengthy court battle to get the care you need. You should not have to hire a lawyer and file an expensive lawsuit to get treatment.

Our approach contrasts with the approach taken in the measure offered by Senator KENNEDY. Their approach, which I do not support, would encourage patients to sue health care plans. You just can't sue your way to quality health care. We want to solve the problems upfront, when the care is needed, not months or even years later, after the harm has occurred.

According to the GAO, it takes an average of 33 months to resolve medical malpractice cases. This does nothing to ensure a patient's right to timely and appropriate care. Moreover, patients only receive 43 cents out of every dollar awarded in malpractice cases. The rest winds up in the pockets of trial lawyers and the administrators of trial and insurance systems.

Suing is not the answer. The answer is having a fair, free, and prompt appeals process that gets patients the care they need, the care they were promised before harm can be done.

I recently met with a group of Maine employers who expressed their very serious concerns about the Kennedy proposal to expand liability for health plans and employers. One of these employers was Bowdoin College in Brunswick, ME. I want to talk briefly about Bowdoin's experience.

They moved to a self-funded plan in order to improve the coverage provided to their employees. They now provide an annual physical, low-cost prescription coverage, and well-baby care. But they told me that if the Democrats' proposal to expand liability goes through, it would seriously jeopardize their ability to offer affordable coverage for their employees. They would return to the insurance market and to a plan less favorable to their employees.

I thank the assistant majority leader for yielding the additional minute. I yield back my time to the assistant majority leader.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute 12 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. I will reserve 12 seconds.

In a moment there will be a motion to table the Republican substitute. I hope our colleagues will vote against that motion to table and then, hopefully, after that is not tabled, I will move to table the Kennedy amendment.

Mr. President, I will do so for a couple of reasons. One, it doesn't belong on the agriculture bill. I told my colleagues we are willing to come up with a reasonable time agreement and a limited number of amendments to debate this issue. It doesn't belong on the agriculture appropriations bill.

There are other reasons to table the underlying Kennedy amendment. If you want to increase health care costs, that is what this bill does. It will increase health care costs 5 percent, in addition to the 6, 7, 8, 9 percent of health care inflation. You are going to have a 13 or 14-percent increase in health care costs, which is going to increase the number of uninsured probably by 1.5 million, maybe more. We should not be passing legislation to put 1.5 million people into the uninsured category. That would be a serious mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the issue that is before us with the proposal that Senator DASCHLE has advanced is a very basic and fundamental one: Who ought to be making the decisions on your health care?

The whole concept behind the Daschle proposal is that we should let the medical professional guide that judgment—the doctor, nurse and patient together. That ought to be the basis of the judgment—not an accountant, not an insurance company official. That is really at the heart of this whole legislation. Our legislation protects that and preserves it.

The other legislation that is reported out of our committee fails to do it. That is why we have the support of the health care professionals and they do not. I hope we will have the opportunity to at least debate these various issues in an orderly way. That is what this battle is about. I hope that we will be able to continue with a reasonable procedure to permit the Senate to make a judgment.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am afraid my colleague from Massachusetts didn't hear my colleague from Tennessee state that we do have internal appeals that are decided by physicians. We also have external appeals that are decided by experts in the medical community. So if his statement is correct, he should vote for our proposal. I encourage him to do so.

Mr. LOTT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, has all time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I move to table amendment No. 703 and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

STEEL IMPORT LIMITATION ACT

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, unfortunately I was unable to vote on the cloture petition on the motion to proceed to H.R. 975, the Steel Import Limitation Act. If I was able, I would have voted against cloture. This legislation will not achieve its desired purpose and will only hurt American workers and consumers.

Some supporters of this legislation have asserted that this bill is necessary to support the steel industry. I am willing to do my part to ensure that America continues to have the most efficient and competitive steel industry in the world. The domestic steel industry plays an important role in protecting our national security by ensuring that we will have enough steel to build ships, tanks, planes, and missiles to protect the United States. Additionally, steel remains an important input in large sectors of our economy, including transportation equipment, fabricated metal products, industrial machinery and construction.

However, this legislation is not written to save domestic steel jobs, but instead will jeopardize American jobs. For every 1 job that produces steel, 40 jobs in the downstream industries use steel. If Congress passes this quota legislation, it will cause a shortage and drastic increase in the price of steel that will threaten the jobs of the 8 million employees in steel-using industries. For example, Caterpillar, Inc. uses a heavy special-section steel for bulldozer track-shoes. This steel is not produced in the United States, so Caterpillar imports it from overseas as its American plants. If we pass this quota legislation, Caterpillar will not be able to import the steel it requires, which will threaten the jobs of Caterpillar's 40,261 workers in the U.S.

I also do not think that this quota legislation will help the steel industry. According to the Wall Street Journal, American steelmakers buy up to 25% of the steel coming into the United States. The steel companies need to buy this steel to reach their highest capacity of steel production. Weirton imports close to 400,000 tons of slab a year. Bethlehem Steel imported at least 416,000 tons of steel last year. If we shut off the necessary imports of foreign steel to these companies, how can they keep American steel product workers employed?

While I know that the steel industry has been affected by the dumping of foreign steel in the U.S. market, I believe that the proper steps have been taken to deal with this crisis. Since January, 1999, 42 antidumping and countervailing duty steel investigations have been initiated or completed. As a result of just one of these antidumping cases, duties of between 67.14% and 17.86% will be imposed on select Japanese firms. These duties will ensure that U.S. companies will have a better chance to compete.

That the existing process for handling anti-dumping cases is working is proven by the recent statistics on steel imports. Total steel imports dropped 42% from August, 1998, to April, 1999. In fact, April, 1999, imports are actually 6% below steel imports in April, 1997. Imports of hot-rolled steel, which account for 25 percent of all steel imports, fell 72% since the peak levels of November, 1998. Hot-rolled steel imports from Japan, Russia, and Brazil fell almost 100% from November to April. It is no wonder that Secretary Daley said in the Friday, June 18, Washington Post that "the steel crisis of '98, in my opinion, is over." Given the decline in recent imports, there seems to be no need for this legislation. These results, under existing law, were attained in a manner fully consistent with our obligations under the World Trade Organization.

This leads me to a more important point. We should not look at this legislation in only the narrow view of what it will do for the steel industry. Instead, we should see what it will do to the world economy.

The past two years have been devastating for many of our trading partners. Most of Asia is slowly turning the corner back from the disaster of the Asian economic crisis. Just recently, Japan announced a positive growth rate of 1.9% after six successive quarters of contraction. Both Brazil and Argentina have suffered from economic turmoil. In Europe, the Russian economy remains a basket case. Germany, the former European economic powerhouse, grew a mere 0.4% in real terms, and is on the verge of recession.

The United States must be careful not to do anything that will plunge the world into recession. If we were to pass this non-WTO compliant legislation, the likely result is that other countries will respond by limiting our products from their markets. The resulting trade wars could affect millions of workers and lead to economic and political turmoil. While some view such a result as extreme, we all should remember that the Smoot-Hawley tariff legislation started a similar series of trade wars in the early 1930s that directly corresponded to the rise of Hitler and the origins of World War II.

Some would urge us to pass this legislation with the hopes that it will emasculate the WTO. I can only tell you how much I regret this short-sighted view. The United States, more than any other country, created today's trading system based on the principles of free trade. It was developed after witnessing how the trade wars of the 1930s led to the worldwide calamity of World War II. The United States has pursued a trade policy based on open markets for more than 50 years under both Republican and Democratic leadership. We should not allow misguided politics to destroy all of the gains that we fought so hard to achieve, precisely when we are reaping the benefits of these policies.

Instead, the United States, which has the strongest economy in the world, should try to use its leverage to continue to open markets. We should open the November WTO Ministerial as the champions of competition and open markets, not hiding behind a wall of quotas and tariffs. We in Congress should do our part to ensure that the United States remains in its position of world leadership. Instead of debating this ill-advised quota bill, we should be passing fast track authority for the President. The President needs this authority to continue to make agreements to knock down foreign barriers to American goods. Additionally, we should pass legislation to grant NAFTA parity to our Caribbean allies and to give trade incentives to help Africa grow and prosper. My hope is that after we reject this current legislation, we can start debating real progress in trade policy and how we can eliminate barriers to foreign goods to ensure that our citizens continue to prosper into the 21st Century.

In conclusion, I congratulate my colleagues who voted against cloture on the motion to proceed to this legislation. We will now begin the next global century not hiding behind barriers, but continuing the fight for open markets and prosperity.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I would like to take a few brief moments to comment on the cloture vote that just occurred regarding H.R. 975, the Steel Import Limitation bill.

As has been noted by several of my colleagues this afternoon, this was a difficult vote. There exist compelling interests on both sides of the steel quota issue that were only touched upon earlier. Without question, this legislation is critically important to those men and women involved in the steel industry who have suffered financially due to alleged steel dumping practices. At the same time, this bill could also have a profound effect on this country's trade policy and countless other American industries' relationships with our foreign trading partners.

Understanding that these are cursory assessments of the deeper substance of this bill, I present them simply to underscore the need to discuss the bill at greater length, to emphasize the importance of allowing Senators the opportunity to articulate their specific concerns and positions on this legislation. This was not a vote on final passage or a vote to support this bill in its current form. Rather, it was a vote to move forward and fully consider this legislation and amendments to it. Regardless of one's opinion on the impact of this legislation, it deserved the chance to be considered and debated completely and fairly.

THE GOVERNMENT OF BOLIVIA'S COUNTERNARCOTICS PROGRAM

Mr. LOTT. As the Senate moves toward consideration of the Foreign Operations Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 2000, I want to note the significant efforts being made by the Government of Bolivia in its counternarcotics program. Since taking office in August, 1997, the government of Hugo Banzer has reduced Bolivia's cocaine production potential by a remarkable 40 percent. This is historic progress, which I hope will be emulated by other nations in the region. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter I received from the Vice President of Bolivia, Mr. Jorge Quiroga Ramirez, which discusses the Bolivian Government's plans and seeks continued American assistance in its counternarcotics efforts.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESIDENCIA DEL CONGRESO NACIONAL, VICEPRESIDENCIA-DE LA
REPUBLICA,

La Paz, May 24, 1999.

Hon. TRENT LOTT,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.
DEAR SIR: I am writing to ask your help in addressing Bolivia's counter-narcotics needs in the coming Fiscal Year. As you are aware the government of President Banzer has embarked on an ambitious program (the Dignity Plan) to end our country's involvement in the illegal drug trade by the time we leave office in 2002. To date, the Dignity Plan has produced impressive results. In just twenty—one months we have successfully eradicated close to 40% of coca crops that go into making cocaine, and we are on target to meet our goal of a drug-free Bolivia by 2002. Our success thus far has been achieved through a combination of national political will and assistance from the international donor community.

We are at a critical juncture in the development of the Dignity Plan. Having gained broad based domestic support for our policies, we now have to show our people that we can provide more legitimate commercial ventures as alternatives to coca in order to keep them from returning to coca planting in the future. It would be a profound tragedy for Bolivia and for the consumer nations if, after such successful eradication, we were unable to hold the progress gained. The Bolivian people are willing to leave the illegal narcotics circuit if we can show them that feasible commercial alternatives exist. Where we have accomplished this, re-planting rates are at historical lows and our system of community-based compensation (as opposed to individual compensation) provides the best incentives for keeping our farmers in legitimate agricultural enterprises.

Proud as we are of our record, we know that the most difficult work lies ahead. We must maintain historic levels of eradication while dramatically enhancing our Alternative Development efforts to ensure that this eradication holds. For these reasons we are turning to the international donor community, and especially to the United States. I must be candid in stating, however, that the levels of counter-narcotics and alternative development funding which have recently been proposed for Bolivia, will fall well short of our needs.

In February of this year I visited Washington to present a comprehensive budget for the last years of our Dignity Plan. This figure of $384 million from the United States (coupled with our own contributions and those from Europe) across four years represents our best estimates of what will be required to move our country out of the international narcotics circuit. As a former Finance Minister I understand and respect the need for fiscal discipline and I know that the United States Congress is struggling with its own budget priorities for the coming years. I would point out, however, that we have a once-in-a generation opportunity to completely win a battle, in Bolivia, in the worldwide war against drugs. If we fail to meet this challenge it may take us decades to arrive at this point again as the credibility of counter narcotics programs will suffer.

I would like to again ask your help and support in locating the resources needed for complete funding of the Dignity Plan request. With the proper levels of assistance we can soon celebrate with the United States the day when my country is out of the drug circuit entirely and Bolivian based cocaine no longer plagues the streets of our countries. The war on drugs needs its first victory. With your help Bolivia can be that victory.

Thank you for your support and consideration.

Sincerely,

JORGE F. QUIROGA R.,
Vicepresident of the Republic of Bolivia,
President of the National Congress.

RETIREMENT OF GENERAL CHARLES KRULAK

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, today I would like to recognize the outstanding service to our nation of General Charles Krulak, Commandant of the Marine Corps who is about to retire. General Krulak is completing 35 years of active service in the Marine Corps since he graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1964. During his service, the General obtained a Masters Degree in Labor Relations from George Washington University. He is also a graduate of the Amphibious Warfare School, the Army Command and General Staff College, and the prestigious National War College.

General Krulak's illustrious career included command of a platoon and two rifle companies during two tours of duty in the Vietnam conflict. He has been a battalion commander, Commanding General of a Marine Expeditionary Brigade, and the Assistant Division Commander of the 2nd Marine Division located at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina. He later was assigned duties as the Commanding General of the 6th Marine Expeditionary Group and Commanding General of the 2nd Force Service Support Group. He served as the Commanding General of this Force Service Support Group during Operation Desert Storm in the Persian Gulf. In addition to these command assignments, General Krulak's professional career has included a wide variety of other command and staff assignments including a tour of duty in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and the White House.

In June 1989, General Krulak received his first star and, three years later, he was promoted to Major General and assigned to the Marine Corps Combat Development Command at Quantico, Virginia. One year later, he was promoted to Lieutenant General. This was followed by a transfer to Hawaii and assignment as Commander, Marine Forces Pacific. It was in this role that I became personally acquainted with this Marine's remarkably high degree of professionalism. Four years ago, General Krulak became the 31st Commandant of the Marine Corps, during which he led our Marines admirably and set a high degree of professionalism not only in basic training, but also throughout the entire Marine Corps. He established, demanded and obtained a high degree of moral conduct from his Marines as a direct result of his exemplary leadership. However, the General's positive attributes do not stop there. He has demonstrated a remarkable ability to visualize and plan for the weapons, equipment, doctrine, tactics, and techniques the Marine Corps will be using for decades ahead.

It is an honor for me to recognize the high quality of leadership this General has given our Marines these past four years. Our nation has been fortunate in having him as Commandant of the Marine Corps.

I know the members of the Senate will join me in paying tribute to General Krulak and wishing him and his lovely wife, Zandi well in their retirement. We will sorely miss them.

In addition to expressing our fond farewell to General Krulak, I want to take this opportunity to welcome the 32nd Commandant of the Marine Corps, General James L. Jones. General Jones is no stranger to the U.S. Senate. He served here in the U.S. Marine Corps Liaison office from August 1979 until July 1984. I am confident General Jones will serve our nation as Commandant in a comparable manner as his predecessor. Welcome aboard General Jones.

KOSOVO

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, today I rise to speak about a resolution related to Kosovo which was brought before the Senate late last Thursday evening and adopted by unanimous consent.

This concurrent resolution commends the President and the Armed Forces for the "success" of Operation

Allied Force. I had reservations in supporting this resolution, but ultimately decided to do so because it provided an opportunity to honor the men and women in uniform who put their lives on the line for this dangerous cause.

However, to term this operation a success, either now or in the foreseeable future, is an unconscionable stretch of the truth, at best. This mission represented a complete failure of the Clinton administration's foreign policy. This resolution also implies that the book has been closed on Kosovo, and peace will reign in the Balkans. I do not think it is necessary to remind the Senate of the bloody and tumultuous history of the region, or the uncertainty of the future. And it certainly is not appropriate to mislabel this foreign policy mishap as a success.

The failure of the administration's policy was apparent from the negotiations at Rambouillet. It was one-sided from the beginning and Secretary Albright made no secret where the administration's loyalties lay: "If the Serbs are the cause of the breakdown, we're going to go forward with the NATO decision to carry out air strikes," she threatened. It was NATO's way, or no way. It is little wonder an agreement was not reached. The arrangement provided no preservation of national sovereignty for Yugoslavia. NATO troops would have been authorized "free and unrestricted passage and unimpeded access throughout the FRY [Federal Republic of Yugoslavia]." There was also no guarantee, and indeed evidence to the contrary, that Yugoslavia's sovereignty and territorial integrity would remain intact after NATO troops rolled into the country. The United States took sides in the negotiations, and then wondered why the Serbs refused to sign the proposed agreement.

Equally harmful to the peace process was the lack of historical understanding with which the administration engaged in the negotiations. Kosovo is the site of key historical and religious monuments for the Serbs. However, the President and Secretary failed to recognize this fundamental fact. It was both arrogance and shortsightedness which allowed the administration to proceed on this flawed course to disaster. I do not claim to be a scholar of the region myself; however, I am not arrogant enough to believe one can solve centuries-old conflicts with three nights of an air campaign, as the administration originally anticipated.

The administration "policy" was nothing more than a policy du jour. At first, the goal of the air strikes was to bring Milosevic to the negotiating table. Next, the strikes were to harm Serb military might. Then strikes were to force a complete Serb withdrawal from Kosovo. Regardless of what the strikes were supposed to do, they were never part of a methodical, strategic plan. Instead, they were a knee-jerk reaction to daily events.

Perhaps most disconcerting is the potential damage the operation may have inflicted on the NATO alliance. This mission marked the first time in the 50 years of the alliance's history that it was involved in an operation that had nothing to do with defending the territorial integrity of one of its members. The operation should be proof positive about the dangers of a "new strategic concept" that would expand NATO's missions beyond territorial self-defense to peacekeeping arenas outside its borders. NATO maintains a hefty burden in protecting members from an unstable Russian and Korean Peninsula, and the growing proliferation threat around the world without the burden of regional peace-keeping, or other humanitarian missions which have nothing to do with preserving the territorial integrity of members.

I point out these facts not to lessen the impact of the human tragedy that occurred in Yugoslavia before the bombing began, or to lessen the responsibility of Milosevic's role in that tragedy. However, I feel compelled to raise this issue in the Senate today because it is premature to hail the Kosovo agreement as a success. Today, the Balkans are far less stable than when the operation began on March 24. The lesson to be learned from this operation should not be that good intentions are good reasons for foreign policy whims, particularly when those whims risk the lives of our men and women in uniform.

The brave men and women of the Armed Forces deserve the praise and thanks of a grateful nation for serving with distinction and honor. I wholeheartedly join the Senate in thanking the members of the Armed Forces who served in the campaign in the Balkans. However, I am not ready to endorse this ill-conceived mission as a victory for the United States or NATO. Instead, this mission ought to go down in the history books as a lesson in what foreign policy blunders should be avoided in the future.

To recover from this blunder, the President must provide a comprehensive post-war plan for the region. Bringing true peace to Kosovo will depend on the development of a stable balance of power on the ground. Whatever course of action is pursued by the administration, it must be one that ultimately would help the United States and its NATO allies to reduce their military commitments in the Balkans, and avoid entangling the United States and the Alliance in another Kosovo in the future.

U.S. CITIZENS KILLED IN ACTS OF TERRORISM

Mr. ASHCROFT. The defense of American citizens is the highest duty of our government. That duty is fulfilled not only by protecting Americans at home, but U.S. citizens when they are abroad. This nation is a city on a hill, and our stand against oppression often has made us a target for those dark forces of violence and tyranny in the world. Terrorism is and will continue to be a principal weapon of those who would seek to threaten the United States and all for which our country stands.

The Middle East is the region of the world with the greatest amount of terrorist activity. Five of the seven state sponsors of terrorism are located in or border on the region the State Department defines as the Near East. Our close ally Israel is often the target of terrorist groups operating in the Middle East, and the deaths of Americans due to terrorist attacks in Israel has been of particular concern to me.

My amendment to the State Department Authorization bill simply requires the State Department to compile a report on U.S. citizens who have been killed in terrorist attacks in Israel or in territory controlled by the Palestinian Authority. The report will include a list of terrorist attacks in which U.S. citizens were killed and information on the groups of individuals responsible for the attack. The whereabouts of suspects implicated in the attacks, whether each suspect has been incarcerated or incarcerated and released, the status of each case pending against each suspect, whether the State Department has offered any reward for these terrorist suspects, and an overview of U.S. efforts to investigate and apprehend these suspects are particular points of concern my amendment addresses.

Since the signing of Oslo in 1993, at least 12 American citizens have been killed in terrorist attacks in Israel or territory controlled by the Palestinian Authority: Nachson Wachsmann, Joan Davenny, Leah Stern, Yael Botwin, Yaron Unger, Sara Duker, Matthew Eisenfeld, Ira Weinstein, Alisa Flatow, David Boim, Daniel Frei, and Yitzchak Weinstock.

Responsibility for almost all of these murders has been claimed by Hamas or Palestinian Islamic Jihad, two terrorist groups supported by Iran and Syria and dedicated to the destruction of Israel.

Terrorism's toll on Israel has been high as well. Since the beginning of the Oslo process in 1993, Israel has lost more than 280 of its citizens to terrorist violence in over 1,000 terrorist attacks (a portion of the Israeli population comparable to 15,000 Americans).

Jean-Claude Niddam of the Israeli Ministry of Justice testified before the Senate Appropriations Foreign Operations Subcommittee on March 25, 1999, and gave an overview of the difficulties related to prosecuting suspects implicated in the murder of U.S. citizens.

First, Mr. Niddam notes that terrorists suspected of killing Americans have found shelter in the Palestinian Authority. For the last 4 years, Israel has submitted almost 40 official requests to the Palestinian Authority to transfer suspects implicated in terrorism against Israelis and Americans, but has yet to receive a reply. Out of 38 requests to arrest and transfer terrorist suspects, only 12 suspects are currently under arrest and 7 are serving or served until recently in the Palestinian police force.

Mr. Niddam's testimony focused on eight terrorist suspects involved in terrorist attacks against Americans. Three of these suspects have been detained by the Palestinian Authority. One of those imprisoned, Imjad Hinawi, confessed in a Palestinian court to the murder of David Boim. The confession was witnessed by a U.S. embassy official present at the trial. If there is a good reason why the Administration has not indicted Mr. Hinawi, it is the time for a clear explanation.

Another suspect, Ibrahim Ghanimat, linked to the shooting deaths of Yaron Unger and his wife Efrat, spends his nights in prison but is free to come and go during the day. Adnan al-Ghul, Yusuf Samiri, and Mohammad Dief, three other suspects involved in the killings of Americans, are all at large. Nafez Sabi'h was implicated in a bombing that killed three Americans, but was believed to be serving in the Palestinian police force until several months ago.

In recent years, other suspects implicated in the murder of American citizens have served in the Palestinian police force. In July 1998, the Israeli Government released a report stating that four terrorist suspects involved in the February 1996 Jerusalem bus bombing, in which three American citizens were killed, were serving in Palestinian security forces.

A climate conducive to terrorism is the most serious threat to a lasting peace settlement in the Middle East. When Abul Abbas, the hijacker of the Achille Lauro, lives freely in Gaza and is a close associate of Yasser Arafat; when the Palestinian Authority's official media arm, the Palestinian Broadcasting Corporation, airs programming which teaches Palestinian children to hate Israelis; when terrorist suspects are given positions in the Palestinian security forces—genuine peace is undermined and U.S. interests endangered in the Middle East.

It is time for the United States to get serious about defending its own. President Clinton promised that no quarter would be given to terrorists who killed 12 Americans in the Africa embassy bombings in August 1998. But I fear this administration has not been pursuing aggressively terrorist suspects implicated in the murder of a similar number of Americans in Israel.

Recent testimony by top administration officials does not indicate that our resolve to prosecute these cases is strengthening. Martin Indyk, Assistant Secretary of State for the Near East, was called to testify before the Senate Appropriations Committee last March on terrorism against U.S. citizens, but his written testimony did not even discuss these cases or what the State Department is doing to resolve them.

George Washington once said that if we desire to avoid insult, we must be able to repel it. A credible defense deters aggression and war, and a similar principle is at work in meeting the threat of terrorism today. If terrorists know they will suffer for attacking Americans, they will be less likely to engage in such violence. President Reagan's response to Libyan terrorism quieted that government for over a decade.

While we cannot prevent violence against every American abroad, we can ensure that terrorists who attack U.S. citizens are pursued relentlessly. I call on the administration to wage a more aggressive campaign against terrorists who have killed Americans, and this report will give Congress the ability to review the administration's efforts more effectively. I thank Senator HELMS and Senator BIDEN for their assistance with this amendment.

COPYRIGHT ACT TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am pleased to rise, along with the ranking minority Member on the Judiciary Committee, Senator LEAHY, to introduce a series of intellectual property related "high-tech" measures designed to promote the continued growth of these vital sectors of the American economy and to protect the interests and investment of the entrepreneurs, authors, and innovators who fuel their growth.

It is no secret that high technology is the driving force in the American economy today. American technology is setting new standards for the global economy, from computer chip technology and computer hardware, to personal and business software applications, to Internet, multimedia and telecommunications technology, and even cutting-edge pharmaceuticals and genetic research. In my own state of Utah, these information technology industries contribute in excess of $7 billion each year to the State's economy and pay wages that average 66 percent higher than the state average. Their performance has placed Utah among the world's top ten technology centers according to Newsweek Magazine. Where Wired is a Way of Life, Newsweek, November 9, 1998, at 44. Similar success is seen across the country, with seven of the world's top ten technology centers located in the United States, and with American creative industries now surpassing all other export sectors in foreign sales and exports.

Underlying all of these technologies are the intangible property rights—copyrights, trademarks, patents, and trade secrets—that serve to promote creativity and innovation by safeguarding the investment, effort, and goodwill of those who venture into these fast-paced and volatile fields. Providing adequate protections for these intellectual property rights in the global high-tech environment is critical, particularly in the digital environment where electronic piracy is so easy, so cheap, and yet so potentially devastating to intellectual property owners—many of which are small entrepreneurial enterprises. In Utah, 65 percent of the information technology companies have fewer than 25 employees, and a majority have annual revenues of less than $1 million. Over half of Utah's information technology companies have been in business for less than 10 years, with nearly a quarter having opened their doors since 1995. Intellectual property is the lifeblood of these companies and others similarly situated throughout the country, and even a single instance of piracy may be enough to drive them out of business. What's more, without adequate international protection, these companies would simply be unable to compete in the global marketplace.

That is why in the last Congress we enacted a number of measures to provide enhanced protection for intellectual property in the new global, high-tech environment. For example, last year Congress ratified two new landmark World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) treaties to update international copyright standards to respond to the challenges of the global economy and the digital, networked environment. In enacting the Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA), Congress implemented these treaties in the United States by bringing our own copyright laws into the digital age and set the standard internationally for other nations to follow in amending their own laws to meet the requirements of the new WIPO treaties. In addition, as a part of that bill, we paved the way for new growth in online commerce by creating greater security for copyright owners and for the Internet service providers who transmit and store copyrighted works online. We also addressed new technologies, such as webcasting and satellite radio, to provide a copyright framework in which these new platforms can flourish.

This year, Senator LEAHY and I are continuing to focus our attention, and that of the Judiciary Committee, on important high-tech and intellectual property legislation. Already this year the Judiciary Committee has reported, and the Senate has enacted, legislation to extend the Satellite Home Viewer Act, which will enable the satellite industry to use new and emerging technology to provide competition in the multichannel video marketplace and allow satellite subscribers to receive local network stations by way of their satellite dishes for the first time.

Today we are introducing a number of additional measures relating to technology and intellectual property to strengthen our laws further in order to provide both incentives to creativity and deterrents against infringement. Included among these are legislation that builds upon existing protections, including last year's measures to deter digital piracy, by raising the Copyright Act's limit on statutory damages, thereby making it more costly to engage in cyber-piracy and copyright theft. Also included is a measure to make technical "clean-up" amendments to the Digital Millennium Copyright Act in order to make its provisions clearer and more user-friendly. On the trademark side, Senator LEAHY and I are introducing a bill to make the protection of famous marks easier and more efficient and to provide recourse for trademark owners against the federal government for trademark infringement. Finally, we are introducing Patent and Trademark Office reauthorization legislation to allow the PTO to better serve its customers—America's innovators and trademark owners—through the collection and retention of patent and trademark fees.

It is our intention to turn to these bills in the Judiciary Committee prior to the July 4th recess at a Committee markup session dedicated solely to the consideration of intellectual property legislation. I expect these measures to be noncontroversial, and I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Senate as we bring these bills to the floor.

THE COPYRIGHT DAMAGES IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1999

The Copyright Damages Improvement Act will provide strengthened protections for copyright owners and added deterrence against infringement by making it more costly to engage in digital piracy and copyright theft. In an age where electronic piracy costs next to nothing and where the distribution of pirated goods to locations around the world is as easy as the click of a button, we are faced with the danger that the costs of engaging in piracy will pale in comparison with the anticipated rewards. Last year we strengthened the Copyright Act's substantive protections to deter digital piracy in this global networked environment. The bill we are introducing today will make it more costly to infringe these and the Copyright Act's other substantive protections by raising the limit on statutory damages by 50 percent.

Section 504(c) of the Copyright Act provides for the award of statutory damages at the plaintiff's election in order to provide greater security for copyright owners, who often find it difficult to prove actual damages in infringement cases—particularly in the electronic environment—and to provide greater deterrence for would-be infringers. The current provision caps statutory damages at $20,000 ($100,000 in cases of willful infringement), which reflects figures set in statute in 1988 when the United States joined the Berne Convention. The combination of more than a decade of inflation and revolutionary changes in technology have rendered those figures largely inadequate to achieve their aims. The Copyright Damages Improvement Act updates the statutory damage provisions to account for both these factors.

Under the bill, the cap on statutory damages is increased by 50 percent, from $20,000 to $30,000, and the minimum is similarly increased from $500 to $750. For cases of willful infringement, the cap is raised to $150,000. In addition, the bill creates a new tier of statutory damages targeted at bad actors who engage in a repeated pattern or practice of infringement. In these cases, the court is authorized to award statutory damages up to $250,000.

This will not mean that a court must impose the full amount of damages in any given case, or even that it will be more likely to do so. In most cases, courts attempt to do justice by fixing the statutory damages at a level that approximates actual damages and defendant's profits. What this bill does is give courts wider discretion to award damages that are commensurate with the harm caused and the gravity of the offense. At the same time, the bill preserves provisions of the current law allowing the court to reduce the award of statutory damages to as little as $200 in cases of innocent infringement and requiring the court to remit damages in certain cases involving nonprofit educational institutions, libraries, archives, or public broadcasting entities.

COPYRIGHT ACT TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS

Senator LEAHY and I are also introducing a general clean-up measure as a follow-up to the Digital Millennium Copyright Act and the Sonny Bono Copyright Term Extension Act, which were enacted at the end of the last Congress. This bill improves these bills to make them more user-friendly for copyright owners and those who make use of their works in accordance with the provisions of the Copyright Act.

THE TRADEMARK AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1999

The Trademark Amendments Act will provide stronger and more efficient protection for trademark owners and consumers by making it possible to prevent trademark dilution before it occurs, by clarifying the remedies available under the federal trademark dilution statute when it does occur, by providing recourse against the federal government for its infringement of others' trademarks, and by creating greater certainty and uniformity in the area of trade dress protection.

In 1995, Senator LEAHY and I sponsored the Federal Trademark Dilution Act to provide a uniform federal cause of action for trademark dilution—the commercial use in commerce of a mark that dilutes, or "whittles away," the distinctive quality of a famous trademark. Under this legislation, now codified as section 43(c) of the Lanham Act, the owner of a famous mark is able to protect the investment and consumer goodwill associated with his mark by preventing others from using the same or similar marks in ways that tarnish or blur the distinctiveness of his mark, even where such uses do not directly compete with the goods or services of the trademark owner. This new federal cause of action has been used increasingly in the high-tech, online environment as a means of combating cyberpirates and shady dealers who register famous marks as Internet domain names, seeking to sell them at a huge profit to the legitimate trademark owners or to reap where they have not sown, trading on the goodwill of others by confusing consumers about their relationships to famous brand-names. This problem is particularly acute in the Internet context where the only assurance of quality or sponsorship may be the information found on a web page and the IP address that leads consumers there.

On the whole, the Federal Trademark Dilution Act has been effective in achieving better protection for trademark owners and national uniformity in this area of the law. There are a number of areas, however, in which we can improve implementation of the law and its ability to protect both trademark owners and consumers. The Trademark Amendments Act of 1999 is designed to do just that.

First, it authorizes the Trademark Trial and Appeals Board (TTAB) to consider dilution as grounds for refusal to register a mark or for cancellation of a registered mark. In Babson Bros. Co. v. Surge Power Corp., 39 USPQ 2d 1953 (TTAB 1996), the TTAB held that it was not authorized by the Federal Trademark Dilution Act to consider dilution as grounds for opposition or cancellation of a registration. Thus, under current law a trademark owner may seek relief under the federal dilution statute only after dilution of the mark has occurred. And at least one circuit has held that likelihood of dilution is not enough, the trademark owner must prove actual dilution. The result is that the owner of a famous mark must stand idly by throughout the registration process and await recourse through costly litigation in federal court only after he has suffered harm to his mark. By specifically allowing the trademark owner to oppose registration or to petition for cancellation of a diluting mark, the bill we are introducing today will prevent needless harm to the goodwill and distinctiveness of many trademarks and will make enforcing the federal dilution statute less costly and time consuming for all involved.

Second, the bill clarifies the trademark remedies available in dilution cases, including injunctive relief, defendant's profits, damages, costs, and, in exceptional cases, reasonable attorney fees, and the destruction of articles containing the diluting mark.

In addition, our bill will amend the Lanham Act to subject the federal government to suit for trademark infringement and dilution. The federal government increasingly participates in the marketplace as a provider of goods and services in competition with private entities. In fact, the federal government owns a substantial number of trademarks registered with the Patent and Trademark Office (PTO), and the Lanham Act even allows the PTO Commissioner to waive the registration fees for federal agencies. As a trademark owner, the federal government enjoys the full panoply of rights under the Lanham Act, including the right to sue private citizens and businesses to enforce its rights under the Act. In contrast, in Preferred Risk Mutual Insurance Co. v. United States, 39 F3d 789 (8th Cir. 1996), the Eighth Circuit held that the federal government is immune from suit for trademark infringement absent an explicit waiver of sovereign immunity.

Limited waivers of sovereign immunity exist for patent and copyright cases, as well as for cases involving protected plant varieties and semiconductor chip mask works. Congress has also explicitly abrogated state immunity from suit under the 11th Amendment for cases involving trademark, copyright, and patent infringement. Our bill will extend these same policies to the federal government, making it subject to suit for trademark infringement and dilution on the same terms and conditions as states under the Lanham Act.

The bill we are introducing will also promote greater uniformity and certainty in the area of trade dress protection by requiring plaintiffs to demonstrate that an unregistered mark is not functional. While trade dress may be afforded protection and registered on the Principal Register if it serves as a trademark or service mark, protection under the Lanham Act does not extend to functional trade dress features—those that are essential to compete in a given market—which are properly the subject of patent law. Where the plaintiff has demonstrated through the examination process that the trade dress is eligible for registration, the federal registration serves as prima facie evidence of the validity of the mark and the registration, and in effect as prima facie evidence of nonfunctionality. For those cases where the plaintiff asserting trade dress protection has not demonstrated eligibility for registration through the trademark examination process, a majority of courts require the plaintiff to prove nonfunctionality. A minority of courts, however, have held that functionality is an affirmative defense which must be proved by the defendant.

Our bill creates uniformity by adopting the majority view, requiring the plaintiff to demonstrate nonfunctionality, either in the examination process or as an element of his case in seeking to enforce trade dress rights in litigation. This is consistent with the principles of federal trademark law and the common law, which requires plaintiffs to prove the essential elements of their case. Moreover, it will promote both certainty and competitive fairness by encouraging trade dress owners to register eligible designs and to seek patent protection for those that are ineligible due to functionality.

Finally, this bill makes a number of technical "clean-up" amendments relating to the Trademark Law Treaty Implementation Act, which was enacted at the end of the last Congress.

THE UNITED STATES PATENT AND TRADEMARK OFFICE REAUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEAR 2000

The fourth bill we are introducing today is designed to allow the PTO to better serve American innovators and trademark owners through the collection and retention of patent and trademark fees. Last year we enacted legislation to provide the PTO with the resources it needs to meet the demands of its workload and to limit the ability of Congress and the Administration to divert money from the PTO to unrelated federal programs—all while providing for an overall decrease in patent fees. The bill we are introducing today continues those policies by allowing the PTO to generate the revenue it needs to operate as a fully fee-funded agency and to retain those fees for use in its patent and trademark operations, without fee diversions or the creation of new surcharges.

In the past, a substantial portion of patent fees revenues have been diverted in the budget process to pay for unrelated federal programs. The result has been substantial backlogs in patent pendency and a general inability to provide the type of service our nation's inventors pay for. I, along with several of my colleagues, have vigorously opposed this practice. The legislation we enacted last year went a long way to ensure that this practice would not continue. The legislation we are introducing today will continue this assurance by authorizing the PTO to raise just the revenues it needs to meet its program goals and retain those fees for use in its patent and trademark operations. The bill also makes available $116 million in fees from previous years, which the Administration has sought to withhold, and prohibits the imposition of unprecedented new surcharge fees sought by the Administration's budget to subsidize federal health and life insurance benefits for PTO employees. In the end, this legislation will promote a stronger, more efficient patent office and will mean, quite simply, that America's innovators and trademark owners will get what they pay for.

Mr. President, I look forward to working with my colleagues to promote the progress of innovation in this country and the continued growth of the high-tech industrial base that has put our nation at the forefront of the global economy. Each of the bills we are introducing today will help to do that, and I urge my colleagues' support.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in introducing four bills to reauthorize the Patent and Trademark Office, update the statutory damages available under the Copyright Act, make technical corrections to two new copyright laws enacted last year, and prevent trademark dilution. As the Chairman and I have already indicated in our June 11 joint statement, we hope that the Senate Judiciary Committee reports these bills promptly and that the Senate considers the bills without delay.

The introduction of these bills is a good start, but we must not lose sight of the other copyright and patent issues requiring our attention before the end of this Congress. The Senate Judiciary Committee has a full slate of intellectual property matters to consider and I am pleased to work on a bipartisan basis with the Chairman on an agenda to provide the creators and inventors of copyrighted and patented works with the protection they may need in our global economy, while at the same time providing libraries, educational institutions and other users with the clarity they need as to what constitutes a fair use of such works.

Among the other important intellectual property matters for us to consider are the following:

Distance Education. The Senate Judiciary Committee held a hearing last month on the Copyright Office's thorough and balanced report on copyright and digital distance education. We need to address the legislative recommendations outlined in that report to ensure that our laws permit the appropriate use of copyrighted works in valid distance learning activities.

Patent Reform. A critical matter on the intellectual property agenda, important to the nation's economic future, is reform of our patent laws. I worked on a bipartisan basis in the last Congress to get the Omnibus Patent Act, S. 507, reported by the Judiciary Committee to the Senate by a vote of 177 to one, and then tried to have this bill considered and passed by the Senate. Unfortunately, the bill became stalled due to resistance by some in the majority. We should consider and pass this important legislation.

Madrid Protocol Implementation Act. I introduced this legislation, S. 671, to help American businesses, and especially small and medium-sized companies, protect their trademarks as they expand into international markets by conforming American trademark application procedures to the terms of the Protocol in anticipation of the U.S.'s eventual ratification of the treaty. Ratification by the United States of this treaty would help create a "one stop" international trademark registration process, which would be an enormous benefit for American businesses.

Database Protection. I noted upon passage of the Digital Millennium

Copyright Act last year that there was not enough time before the end of that Congress to give due consideration to the issue of database protection, and that I hoped the Senate Judiciary Committee would hold hearings and consider database protection legislation in this Congress, with a commitment to make more progress. I support legal protection against commercial misappropriation of collections of information, but am sensitive to the concerns raised by the Administration, the libraries, certain educational institutions, and the scientific community. This is a complex and important matter that I look forward to considering in this Congress.

Tampering with Product Identification Codes. Product identification codes provide a means for manufacturers to track their goods, which can be important to protect consumers in cases of defective, tainted or harmful products and to implement product recalls. Defacing, removing or tampering with product identification codes can thwart these tracking efforts, with potential safety consequences for American consumers. We should examine the scope of, and legislative solutions to remedy, this problem.

Online Trademark Protection or "Cybersquatting." I have long been concerned with protection online of registered trademarks. Indeed, when the Congress passed the Federal Trademark Dilution Act of 1995, I noted that:

[A]lthough no one else has yet considered this application, it is my hope that this antidilution statute can help stem the use of deceptive Internet addresses taken by those who are choosing marks that are associated with the products and reputations of others. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, December 29, 1995, page S19312).

Last year, my amendment authorizing a study by the National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences of the effects on trademark holders of adding new top-level domain names and requesting recommendations on related dispute resolution procedures, was enacted as part of the Next Generation Internet Research Act. We have not yet seen the results of that study, and I understand that the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (I-CANN) and World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) are considering mechanisms for resolving trademark and other disputes over assignments of domain names in an expeditious and inexpensive manner.

This is an important issue both for trademark holders and for the future of the global Internet. While I share the concern of trademark holders over what WIPO has characterized as "predatory and parasitical practices by a minority of domain registrants acting in bad faith" to register famous or well-known marks of others—which can lead to consumer confusion or downright fraud—the Congress should tread carefully to ensure that any remedies do not impede or stifle the free flow of information on the Internet.

THE PATENT FEE INTEGRITY AND INNOVATION PROTECTION ACT OF 1999

We are introducing today the Patent Fee Integrity and Innovation Protection Act to reauthorize the Patent and Trademark Office for fiscal year 2000, on terms that ensure the fees collected from users will be used to operate the Patent and Trademark Office and not diverted to other uses.

The PTO is fully funded and operated through the payment of application and user fees. Indeed, taxpayer support for the operations of the PTO was eliminated in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, which imposed a large fee increase (referred to as a "surcharge") on those who use the PTO, namely businesses and inventors applying for or seeking to protect patents on trademarks.

The fees accumulated from the surcharge were held in a surcharge account, for use by the PTO to support the patent and trademark systems. Unfortunately, however, the funds in the surcharge account were also diverted to fund other, unrelated government programs. By fiscal year 1997, almost $54 million from the surcharge account was diverted from PTO operations.

Last year, Congress responded to this diversion of PTO fees by enacting H.R. 3723/S. 507, which the Chairman and I had introduced on March 20, 1997. That legislation authorized a schedule of fees to fund the PTO, but no other government program, and resulted in the first decrease in patent application fees in at least 50 years.

This PTO reauthorization bill would make $116,000,000 available to the Patent and Trademark Office, a self-sustaining agency, to pay for salaries and necessary expenses in FY 2000. This money reflects the amount in carry-over funds from FY99 that PTO expects to receive from fees collected, pursuant to the Patent Act and the Trademark Act. By authorizing the money to go to PTO, the bill would avoid diversion of these fees to other government agencies and programs. Inventors and the business community who rely on the patent and trademark systems do not want the fees they pay to be diverted but would rather see this money spent on PTO upgraded equipment, additional examiners and expert personnel or other items to make the systems more efficient. I agree.

COPYRIGHT ACT TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS ACT

In the last Congress, Senator HATCH and I worked together for passage of the Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA) and the Sonny Bono Copyright Term Extension Act. This significant legislation is intended to encourage copyright owners to make their works available online by updating the copyright laws with additional protections for digital works, and conforming copyright terms available to American authors to those available overseas. We are now introducing legislation that will make certain technical corrections to those bills.

Specifically, this bill (1) renumbers the section number for the liability limits for online service providers; (2) renumbers paragraphs in the section on "ephemeral recordings" which are used solely for transmitting or archiving a performance or audiovisual display; (3) clarifies that the Commissioner of Patents is to be paid at level III of the executive schedule rather than level V, consistent with a provision in the DMCA; and (4) changes from one to two years the time for seeking design protection after a design is made public by the designer or, in other words, forfeits protection if an application for registration is not made within 2 years of the design being made public.

I remain hopeful that as this bill moves forward we can also address another item inadvertently omitted from the DMCA. Specifically, to include public broadcasting entities in the liability limitation provisions granted under the DMCA to nonprofit libraries, archives and educational institutions.

The House of Representatives passed its version of this legislation, H.R. 1189, on April 13, 1999, and I urge prompt Senate action on this Hatch-Leahy bill.

THE DIGITAL THEFT DETERRENCE AND
COPYRIGHT DAMAGES IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1999

I have long been concerned about reducing the levels of software piracy in this country and around the world. The theft of digital copyrighted works and, in particular, of software results in lost jobs to American workers, lost taxes to Federal and State governments, and lost revenue to American companies. A report released last week by the Business Software Alliance estimates that worldwide theft of copyrighted software in 1998 amounted to nearly $11 billion. According to the report, if this "pirated software has instead been legally purchased, the industry would have been able to employ 32,700 more people. In 2008, if software piracy remains at its current rate, 52,700 jobs will be lost in the core software industry." This theft also reflects losses of $991 million in tax revenue in the United States.

These statistics about the harm done to our economy by the theft of copyrighted software alone, prompted me to introduce the "Criminal Copyright Improvement Act" in both the 104th and 105th Congresses, and work over those two Congresses for passage of this legislation, which was finally enacted as the "No Electronic Theft Act." The current rates of software piracy show that we need to do better to combat this theft, both with enforcement of our current copyright laws and with strengthened copyright laws to deter potential infringers.

I am, therefore, pleased to join Senator HATCH in introducing the Digital Theft Deterrence and Copyright Damages Improvement Act. The bill would amend the Copyright Act, 17 U.S.C. §504(c), by increasing the amounts of statutory damages recoverable for copyright infringements. These amounts were last increased in 1988 when the United States acceded to the Berne Convention. Specifically, the bill would increase the cap on statutory damages by 50 percent, raising the minimum from $500 to $750 and raising the maximum from $20,000 to $30,000. In addition, the bill would raise from $100,000 to $150,000 the amount of statutory damages for willful infringements.

Courts determining the amount of statutory damages in any given case would have discretion to impose damages within these statutory ranges at just and appropriate levels, depending on the harm caused, ill-gotten profits obtained and the gravity of the offense. The bill preserves provisions of the current law allowing the court to reduce the award of statutory damages to as little as $200 in cases of innocent infringement and requiring the court to remit damages in certain cases involving nonprofit educational institutions, libraries, archives, or public broadcasting entities.

In addition, the bill would create a new tier of statutory damages allowing a court to award damages in the amount of $250,000 per infringed work where the infringement is part of a willful and repeated pattern of practice of infringement.

I note that the House version of this legislation, H.R. 1761, omits any scienter requirement for the new proposed enhanced penalty for infringers who engage in a repeated pattern of infringement. I share the concerns raised by the Copyright Office that this provision, absent a willfulness scienter requirement, would permit imposition of the enhanced penalty even against person who negligently, albeit repeatedly, engaged in acts of infringement. The Hatch-Leahy bill avoids casting such a wide net, which could chill legitimate fair uses of copyrighted works.

THE TRADEMARK AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1999

Finally, I am pleased to join Senator HATCH in introducing the Trademark Amendments Act to enhance protection for trademark owners and consumers by making it possible to prevent trademark dilution before it occurs, by clarifying the remedies available under the Federal trademark dilution statute when it does occur, by providing recourse against the Federal Government for its infringement of others' trademarks, and by creating greater certainty and uniformity in the area of trade dress protection.

Current law provides for injunctive relief after an identical or similar mark has been in use and has caused actual dilution of a famous mark, but provides no means to oppose an application for a mark or to cancel a registered mark that will result in dilution of the holder's famous mark. In Babson Bros. Co. v. Surge Power Corp., 39 USPQ 2d. 1953 (TTAB 1996), the Trademark Trial and Appeals Board (TTAB) held that it was not authorized by the "Federal Trademark Dilution Act" to consider dilution as grounds for opposition or cancellation of a registration. The bill remedies this situation by authorizing the TTAB to consider dilution as grounds for refusal to register a mark or for cancellation of a registered mark. This would permit the trademark owner to oppose registration or to petition for cancellation of a diluting mark, and thereby prevent needless harm to the goodwill and distinctiveness of many trademarks and make enforcing the Federal dilution statute less costly and time consuming for all involved.

Second, the bill clarifies the trademark remedies available in dilution cases, including injunctive relief, defendant's profits, damages, costs, and, in exceptional cases, reasonable attorney fees, and the destruction of articles containing the diluting mark.

Third, the bill amends the Lanham Act to allow for private citizens and corporate entities to sue the Federal Government for trademark infringement and dilution. Currently, the Federal Government may not be sued for trademark infringement, even though the Federal Government competes in some areas with private business and may sue others for infringement. This bill will level the playing field, and make the Federal Government subject to suit for trademark infringement and dilution on the same terms and conditions as States under the Lanham Act.

Fourth, the bill provides a limited amendment to the Lanham Act to provide that in an action for trade dress infringement, where the matter sought to be protected is not registered with the PTO, the plaintiff has the burden of proving that the trade dress is not functional. This will help promote fair competition and provide an incentive for registration.

Finally, this bill makes a number of technical "clean-up" amendments relating to the Trademark Law Treaty Implementation Act, which was enacted at the end of the last Congress.

These bills represent a good start on the work before the Senate Judiciary Committee to update American intellectual property law to ensure that it serves to advance and protect American interests both here and abroad. I began this statement, however, with the list of copyright, patent and trademark issues that we should also address. We have a lot more work to do.

By Mr. DODD:

S. 1261. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to issue a certificate of documentation with appropriate endorsement for employment in the coastwise trade for the vessel Yankee; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

CERTIFICATE OF DOCUMENTATION FOR THE VESSEL "YANKEE"

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to waive the 1920 Merchant Marine Act, commonly known as the Jones Act, to allow Yankee Sailing, LLC to operate the 1959 Holland-built vessel YANKEE.

Yankee Sailing LLC is a family-owned business based out of New London, Connecticut that intends to provide 2-4 hour day sails out of the New London and Mystic areas in the summer months. In an effort to provide year-round sailing opportunities, Yankee Sailing LLC also hopes to offer 1-2 week sail training trips along the coast in the fall and winter. The YANKEE is equipped to carry 25-35 daytime passengers and 8-10 overnight passengers, and does not pose any threat to larger U.S. shipping interests.

The YANKEE is a vessel of considerable historical significance having been designed by and built for one of New England's most famous contemporary sailors, the late Irving Johnson. The YANKEE shares a well-established relationship with the Mystic Seaport Museum where the Johnson Collection is housed, and it was also the centerpiece for an Irving Johnson reunion held at the Seaport this past October.

The owners request the waiver because while the vessel was originally documented in the United States with a home port of Mystic, CT, it was built in Holland and is, therefore, excluded from coastal trade by the Jones Act. The owners were aware of the Jones Act's restrictions, however, they were unclear as to its applicability with regard to a vessel's size. Their understanding was that the act only pertained to vessels 65 feet in length or greater carrying over six passengers. Yankee Sailing LLC hoped to operate with six passengers to generate revenue until they could receive full certification allowing for larger sailing trips. Due to this confusion regarding the law, Yankee Sailing LLC is unable to provide these small sailing trips and suffers financially as a consequence.

Yankee Sailing LLC wishes to provide residents of southeastern Connecticut the opportunity to experience the excitement of sailing and did not willfully violate the Jones Act. The presence of its services will help stimulate the local economy and tourism in a region attempting to promote an economic renaissance.

Based upon all of the combined facts, I believe a waiver should be granted for the YANKEE. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1261

SECTION 1. CERTIFICATE OF DOCUMENTATION.

Notwithstanding section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (46 U.S.C. App. 883), section 8 of the Act of June 19, 1886 (24 Stat. 81, chapter 421; 46 U.S.C. App. 289), and sections 12106 and 12108 of title 46, United States Code, the Secretary of Transportation may issue a certificate of documentation with appropriate endorsement for employment in the coastwise trade for the vessel YANKEE, United States official number 1076210.

By Mr. REED (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr.

DASCHLE, Mr. REID, and Mrs. MURRAY):

S. 1262. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to provide up-to-date school library medial resources and well-trained, professionally certified school library media specialists for elementary schools and secondary schools, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

THE ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL LIBRARY MEDIA RESOURCES, TRAINING, AND ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY ACT

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to support and strengthen America's school libraries.

The school library plays a vital role in the education of students. It is where reading skills are reinforced; the laboratory where ideas taught in class are explored and tested; the arena in which children explore new ideas and learn on their own; and a vital bridge to the remarkable and growing resources of the information age.

Research shows that well-equipped and well-staffed school libraries are essential to promoting learning and achievement. Indeed, a 1992 study found that students in schools with well-equipped libraries and professional library media specialists perform better on achievement tests for reading comprehension and basic research skills.

This finding was echoed in a 1994 U.S. Department of Education report on the impact of school library media centers which noted that the highest achieving students tend to come from schools with strong libraries and library programs.

And, a 1993 review of research studies concluded that free voluntary reading is the foundation for good grammar, writing, and reading comprehension abilities. For the average American student, the school library is the single most available source of reading material.

Mr. President, with our ever-changing global economy, access to information and the skills to use it are vital to ensuring that young Americans are competitive and informed citizens of the world. That is why the school library is so important in supplementing what is learned in the classroom; promoting better learning, including reading, research, library use, and electronic database skills; and providing the foundation for independent learning that allows students to achieve throughout their educational careers and their lives.

While the promise of a well-equipped school library is limitless, and its importance greater than ever, the condition of libraries today does not live up to that potential. As Linda Wood, a school library media specialist from South Kingstown High School in Rhode Island, recently noted during a Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee hearing, school library collections are outdated and sparse. Indeed, schools across the nation are dependent on collections purchased in the mid-1960s under the original Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

As a result, many books in our school libraries predate the landing of manned spacecraft on the moon, the breakup of the Soviet Union, the end of Apartheid, the growth of the Internet, and advances in DNA research. In a rapidly changing world, our students are placed at a major disadvantage if the only scientific, historical, and geographical materials they have access to reflect times long gone by.

In sum, school library funding is grossly inadequate to the task of improving and supplementing collections. Library spending per student today is a small fraction of the cost of a new book. Indeed, while the average school library book costs $16, the average spending per student for books is $6.73 in elementary schools; $7.30 in middle schools; and $6.27 in high schools.

Consequently, many outdated books that should be removed from shelves cannot be, since there is no money to replace them. One case in point is California which in response to its fourth-graders being ranked second to last among 39 states on last year's National Assessment of Educational Progress has begun an effort to restock school library shelves in order to weed out old and inaccurate books, including those rife with racial stereotypes and those which proclaim "one day, man might go to the moon". For a long time, according to a recent Los Angeles Times article, California school librarians could not afford to take such a step because there would be no books left on the shelves. Too few states, however, are taking similar steps to improve school libraries.

My home state of Rhode Island is working on an innovative effort to ensure that students gain access to materials not available in their own school libraries. RILINK (the Rhode Island Library Information Network for Kids) gives students and teachers 24-hour Internet access to a statewide catalog of school library holdings, complete with information about the book's status on the shelf. RILINK also allows for on-line request of materials via interlibrary loan, with rapid delivery through a statewide courier system, and provides links from book information records to related Internet research sites, allowing a single book request to serve as a point of departure for a galaxy of information sources.

Unfortunately, such innovations, which could benefit schoolchildren across the nation, cannot be expanded without adequate library funding. Indeed, the only federal funding that is currently available to school libraries is the Title VI block grant, which allows expenditure for school library and instructional materials as one of seven choices for local uses of funds. This program is slated for elimination under the Administration's fiscal year 2000 budget and Elementary and Secondary Education Act reauthorization proposal.

Mr. President, well-trained school library media specialists are also essential to helping students unlock their potential. These individuals are at the heart of guiding students in their work, providing research training, maintaining and developing collections, and ensuring that a library fulfills its potential. In addition, they have the skills to guide students in the use of the broad variety of advanced technological education resources now available.

Unfortunately, only 68% of schools have state certified library media specialists, according to Department of Education figures, and, on average, there is only one specialist for every 591 students. This shortage means that many school libraries are staffed by volunteers and are open only a few days a week.

Mr. President, the bipartisan bill I am introducing today, along with Senators COCHRAN, SARBANES, WELLSTONE, KENNEDY, DASCHLE, REID, and MURRAY, would restore the funding that is critical to improving school libraries. The Elementary And Secondary School Library Media Resources, Training, And Advanced Technology Act directs funding to schools with the greatest need and would ensure that students have access to the informational tools they need to learn and achieve at the highest levels by providing funds to update library media resources, such as books and advanced technology, train school library media specialists, facilitate resource-sharing among school libraries, and improve collaboration between school library media specialists and teachers.

The bill also establishes the School Library Access Program to provide students with access to school libraries during non-school hours, including before and after school, weekends, and summers.

Providing access to the most up-to-date school library collections is an essential part of increasing student achievement, improving literacy skills, fostering a love of reading, and helping students become lifelong learners. The Elementary and Secondary School Library Media Resources, Training, and Advanced Technology Act, which is strongly supported by the American Library Association, will help accomplish these essential goals. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation and work for its inclusion in the upcoming reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this legislation and a letter of support written by the American Library Association be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN LIBRARY ASSOCIATION,

Washington, DC, June 21, 1999.

Hon. Jack Reed,

U.S. Senate,

Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR REED: I would like to take this opportunity to thank you and Senator Thad Cochran for your bi-partisan support of school libraries as you introduce the Elementary and Secondary School Library Media Resources, Training, and Advanced Technology Assistance Act of 1999. This bill would provide assistance to the nation's school libraries and school library media specialists at a time when they are laboring mightily to cope with the challenges of increasing school enrollment, new technology and the lack of funding for school library resources.

As a school librarian myself in Juneau, Alaska, I know personally how this legislation will contribute to effective learning by our school children. Many of the nation's school libraries have collections that are old, inaccurate and out of date. How can we encourage children to read and continue to be life-long learners if the material we have available for them is inadequate?

Your legislation proposes to upgrade collections, encourage and train school librarians, effect greater cooperation between school professionals directly involved in teaching children—school library media specialists, teachers and administrators, and encourages the sharing of resources electronically. This critical legislation should be included in the reauthorization process now going forward in the Senate. The school children of today deserve the best resources we have to give them.

On behalf of the 57,000 school, public, academic and special librarians, library trustees, friends of libraries and library supporters, I thank you for your efforts to improve the resources in school libraries. We offer the support of our members in working towards passage of the legislation.

Sincerely,

ANN K. SYMONS,

President.

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. GORTON):

S. 1263. A bill to amend the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 to limit the reductions in medicare payments under the prospective payment system for hospital outpatient department services; to the Committee on Finance.

HOSPITAL OUTPATIENT PRESERVATION ACT OF

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I am introducing today, with Senators HATCH and GORTON, the Hospital Outpatient Preservation Act of 1999.

The Congress passed landmark legislation in 1997, the Balanced Budget Act. The BBA has played an important role in ensuring the integrity of the Medicare program, but our good intentions to rein in costs went too far, too fast in some areas. In fact, I fear that our zeal may result in decreased access to care and lower quality of care for Medicare beneficiaries if we do not act to soften the impact of BBA implementation on health care providers.

I am particularly concerned about the consequences of payment cuts under BBA for Vermont's hospitals and health systems. Norman Wright, President of the Vermont Hospital and Health Systems Association, has said, "It is clear that the outpatient prospective payment system being implemented from Washington poses a real threat to the continuation of quality services being provided by Vermont hospital outpatient departments."

Through the Hospital Outpatient Preservation Act of 1999, we are seeking to address concerns about outpatient reimbursement cuts for hospitals. The BBA requires the implementation of a prospective payment system (PPS) for the reimbursement of Medicare hospital outpatient department services to control rising costs in that area, as the provision of care has shifted from inpatient to less costly outpatient services. Our proposed legislation would amend BBA '97 by temporarily limiting the reduction in payments under the new outpatient PPS for outpatient department services to give hospitals a period to adjust to the reimbursement cuts.

Medicare outpatient margins, already negative in 1999, are estimated to drop to a negative 28.8 percent if costs increase at a historical rate of growth, and to a negative 20.3 percent if costs increase more slowly. The Health Care Financing Administration's analysis of its proposed rule on the implementation of outpatient PPS found that average reductions in outpatient department services reimbursement for all hospitals would be 4 percent, but that the reimbursement to low-volume hospitals would decline by an average of 17 percent. For example, Southwestern Vermont Medical Center in Bennington, Vermont, is estimated to experience a 16 percent decline in payment. The Chief Executive Officer of Mt. Ascutney Hospital in Ascutney, Vermont, stated, "The new outpatient prospective payment methodology would cut our reimbursement to the point that our operating margin would be in jeopardy. This coming on the heels of other cuts has an additive negative effect."

If vulnerable rural hospitals are not provided a gradual transition period to reorganize operations, such a large decline in reimbursement could spell financial disaster. Teaching hospitals are also projected to sustain a greater than average loss under the new methodology. I am concerned that financial cutbacks of this magnitude could impact the access to care and the quality of care provided to Medicare beneficiaries by hospitals that are already ailing under payment cuts for Medicare inpatient services and from managed organization payment cuts.

The "Hospital Outpatient Preservation Act of 1999" would limit a hospital's losses for covered outpatient department services furnished prior to and during the first full calendar year of outpatient PPS implementation to 5 percent, so that a hospital would receive no less than 95 percent of what the hospital would have been paid under the current reimbursement mechanism. In the second year, the maximum payment loss would be 10 percent, and in the third year, 15 percent. There would be no limit after the third year.

The BBA went too far, too fast in cutting costs, and now it's time to find the right balance by swinging the pendulum back toward quality. The Hospital Outpatient Preservation Act of 1999 would address one area of concern by providing a phased implementation period of three years to allow hospitals, particularly the hardest hit rural and major teaching hospitals, time to adjust to the cuts in reimbursement. Through such legislation, we can maintain the financial integrity of the Medicare program, while guaranteeing access to high-quality health care services for Medicare beneficiaries.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself and Mr. KENNEDY):

S. 1264. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 and the National Education Statistics Act of 1994 to ensure that elementary and secondary schools prepare girls to compete in the 21st century, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

EDUCATING AMERICA'S GIRLS ACT

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague, Senator TED

KENNEDY, to introduce legislation that will play a critical role in the advancement of education as we prepare for the demands of the 21st Century. Specifically, the "Educating America's Girls Act of 1999" will ensure that our nation's children—and young women in particular—will be prepared for the job market of the coming millenium, while also ensuring that the unique needs of girls are properly addressed in our nation's schools and classrooms.

Given the critical role of education in preparing our children for the future, it is understandable that there is heightened interest in ensuring that the highest academic standards and best practices are incorporated in our nation's schools and classrooms. As Congress undertakes the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) of 1965, the provisions of the "Educating America's Girls Act" will ensure that the varying educational needs of all students, and young girls in particular, are recognized and addressed—and ultimately ensure that our efforts to reform and improve education are realized.

Mr. President, due to the changes adopted in 1994, gender equity is a major theme throughout the ESEA. Specifically, the needs of girls are addressed in current law by requiring professional development activities to meet the needs of diverse students, including girls; encouraging professional development and recruitment activities to increase the numbers of women math and science teachers; including sexual harassment and abuse as a focus of the Safe and Drug-Free Schools Act; broadening dropout prevention activities to address the needs of pregnant and parenting teens; and reauthorizing the Women's Educational Equity Act (WEEA), which funds research and programs to achieve educational equity for women.

During the ESEA reauthorization process, we should not only work to maintain the important gender equity provisions that were included in the 1994 law, but also to prepare girls for the future by adding the following provisions: ensure education technology programs are targeted in a manner that addresses the unique needs of all students, including girls; provide schools with resources to combat sexual harassment and abuse; collect data on high school athletic participation by girls; keep pregnant and parenting teens in school; and reauthorize WEEA.

Accordingly, the "Educating America's Girls Act" contains provisions that will address all of these needs, so I urge that my colleagues support this legislation and these additions during the upcoming reauthorization of the ESEA.

Mr. President, with the growing demand for technological skills in the workplace—including six out of 10 jobs requiring technological skills—the need to incorporate technology in the classroom cannot be understated. Accordingly, the utilization of education technology in the classroom is an arena in which we must ensure that all students, including girls, are not put at a disadvantage.

Of note, a 1998 report by the American Association of University Women, Gender Gaps: Where Our Schools Still Fail Our Children, found that girls, when compared to boys, are at a significant disadvantage as technology is increasingly incorporated into the classroom. Specifically, girls tend to come to the classroom with less exposure to computers and other technology, and girls believe that they are less adept at using technology than boys. As a result, girls tend to have a more "circumscribed, limited, and cautious" interaction with technology than boys, as highlighted in the report.

Schools can assist girls in developing a confident relationship to technology by integrating digital tools into the curriculum so girls can pursue their own interests. Unfortunately, current law lacks assurances that federal education programs will compensate for girls' different learning styles and different exposures to technology.

Accordingly, provisions in the "Educating America's Girls Act" will ensure that the different learning styles of girls and other students will be taken into consideration when monies are awarded for a variety of existing K-12 programs. Furthermore, it also includes the "High Technology for Girls Act" (High-Tech Girls), legislation I have already introduced that will ensure young girls are encouraged to pursue degrees and demanding careers in math, science, engineering, and technology—fields that are critical in the increasingly technologically-driven workplace.

Mr. President, as we seek to ensure that the unique technological needs of girls are addressed in the classroom, we also cannot ignore that sexual harassment and abuse is another issue of importance as we seek to educate our nation's children.

While comprehensive research should be done on the pervasiveness of sexual harassment in schools—and "Educating America's Girls Act" will ensure that such a study is completed—various studies have found that the vast majority of secondary school students experience some form of sexual harassment during their school lives.

For instance, the AAUW Educational Foundation's 1993 survey of 8th through 11th grade students on sexual harassment in schools, Hostile Hallways: The AAUW Survey on Sexual Harassment in America's Schools, found that the vast majority of secondary school students experienced some form of sexual harassment and that girls are disproportionately affected.

While data on the incidence of sexual harassment is scant, Hostile Hallways found that 85 percent of girls experienced some form of sexual harassment; 65 percent of girls who have been harassed were harassed in the classroom; and 73 percent of girls who have been harassed were harassed in the hallway of their school; a student's first experience of sexual harassment is most likely to occur in the middle school/junior high years of 6th to 9th grade; and 81 percent of girls who have been harassed do not report it to adults.

A 1996 University of Michigan study showed that sexual harassment can result in academic problems such as paying less attention in class and Hostile Hallways found that 32 percent of girls do not want to talk as much in class after experiencing harassment. Furthermore, thirty-three percent of girls do not want to go to school at all due to the stress and anxiety they suffered as a result of the sexual harassment, and nearly one in four girls say that harassment caused them to stay home from school or cut a class.

We know little else about the extent of sexual harassment or even the nature and extent of more serious sexual crimes in schools. The Safe and Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act (SDFSCA) requires the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) to collect data on violence in elementary and secondary schools in the United States. However, these reports provide only a very limited picture of sexual offenses in schools because they only capture data on rape or sexual battery reported to police. Further, school crime victimization surveys do not include questions on threats or abuse that are sexual in nature.

Sexual harassment in schools is illegal, a form of sexual discrimination banned under Title IX of the Education Amendment of 1972. Unfortunately, on the 25th anniversary of Title IX, a report by the National Coalition for Women and Girls in Education (NCWGE) found that less progress was made in the area of sexual harassment than in any other gender equity issue in education. NCWGE concluded that few schools have sexual harassment policies, or effectively enforce them. Therefore, in addition to calling for more intensified Office of Civil Rights enforcement, NCWGE called on schools to adopt comprehensive policies and programs addressing sexual harassment.

The reauthorization of the ESEA gives us an opportunity to greatly reduce the incidence of sexual harassment by gathering data on these often hidden offenses and providing programs to prevent sexual harassment and abuse. Accordingly, the "Educating America's Girls Act" ensures that this data will be compiled and that schools are provided with resources to combat sexual harassment. Of importance, because the definition of sexual harassment in elementary and secondary schools can be contentious, the legislation ensures that local schools will have the sole authority to define the forms of sexual harassment that will be addressed, and the sole authority to determine the types of programs that will be undertaken to address it.

Mr. President, equal access to education for girls also means equal access to opportunities for athletic participation in our schools, particularly our high schools. Unfortunately, nationwide data measuring the participation of girls in physical education and high school athletics programs is very limited.

Participation in high school athletic programs is important for girls because research has shown that it improves girls' physical and mental health. For instance, a study by the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports recently found that girls playing sports have better physical and emotional health than those who do not. The study also found that higher rates of athletic participation were associated with lower rates of sexual activity and pregnancy. Other studies link physical activity to lower rates of heart disease, breast cancer, and osteoporosis in later life. Sports build girls' confidence, sense of physical empowerment, and social recognition within the school and community.

In addition, many girls who participate in high school athletics programs receive college scholarships. Therefore, by participating in high school athletics programs, girls increase their chances at receiving a college scholarship—which may be the only way that some young women will be able to pursue a higher education.

Because of the lack of data on girls' participation in physical education and athletics during grades K-12, the "Educating America's Girls Act" will ensure that this data is collected and reported. Ultimately, this assembling of information will allow us to determine if girls are fully participating in these activities, and if further steps should be taken to increase their involvement.

Mr. President, education is ultimately the means for all girls, including pregnant and parenting teens, to achieve economic self-sufficiency. Yet despite our strides to make education accessible to girls, dropping out of school remains a serious problem that should be addressed in the reauthorization of the ESEA.

Five out of every 100 young adults enrolled in high school in 1996 left school without successfully completing a high school program. In October of 1997, 3.6 million young adults, or 11 percent of young adults between the ages of 16 and 24 in the United States, were neither enrolled in a high school program nor had they completed high school. Of note, girls who drop out are less likely than boys to return and complete school.

Twenty-five years after the enactment of Title IX, pregnancy and parenting are still the most commonly cited reasons why girls drop out of school, and the United States has the highest teen pregnancy rate of any industrialized nation. In fact, almost one million teenagers become pregnant each year and 80 percent of these pregnancies are unintended.

Pregnancy and parenting account for half the female dropout rate and one fourth of the dropout rate for all students. Two-thirds of girls who give birth before age 18 will not complete high school, and the younger the adolescent is when she becomes pregnant, the more likely it is that she will not complete high school.

The last reauthorization of ESEA broadened the dropout prevention program to address the needs of pregnant and parenting teens. Because this problem remains so pervasive, the "Educating America's Girls Act" contains provisions to strengthen the ESEA's support for programs that keep pregnant and parenting teens in school, including the utilization of mentoring programs.

Finally, Mr. President, the Women's Educational Equity Act (WEEA) represents the federal commitment to helping schools eradicate sex discrimination from their programs and practices and to ensuring that girls' future choices and success are determined not by their gender, but by their own interests, aspirations, and abilities. Since the program's inception in 1974, the WEEA has funded research, development, and dissemination of curricular materials; training programs; guidance and testing activities; and other projects to combat inequitable educational practices.

Because of the important role that the WEEA has played in addressing sex discrimination over the past 25 years, the "Educating America's Girls Act" reauthorizes the WEEA so that it can continue to address the needs of women for many years to come.

Mr. President, the bottom line is that the reauthorization of the ESEA provides us with a unique opportunity to address the numerous needs of our nation's students as we prepare for the 21st Century. I believe that the provisions of the "Educating America's Girls Act" will address a variety of these needs—and the unique needs of girls in particular—and urge that my colleagues support this legislation accordingly during the months ahead.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in recent decades, the nation's schools have made great progress in ensuring that young girls receive an equitable education. Gender gaps in math and science performance have narrowed. More girls are taking algebra, geometry, pre-calculus, trigonometry, and calculus than ever before. More girls are taking honors and advanced placement level courses in calculus and chemistry.

Schools are making progress in other areas as well. More and more schools are instituting programs to address the problems of sexual harassment and abuse. Increasing numbers of girls are participating in high school athletics and receiving college athletic scholarships.

While these improvements are commendable, they are not enough. Continued progress is necessary. The Educating America's Girls Act addresses some of the most pressing issues in educational equity: access to technology, school safety, high school athletics, and dropout rates.

Technology education is particularly important for all students, but girls' needs are particularly acute. While gaps between boys and girls in math and science are narrowing, the gender gap in technology is growing.

Girls tend to come to the classroom with less exposure to computers and other technology than boys. Girls often believe that they are less adept at using technology than boys are. They tend to be more cautious than boys in the ways that they interact with technology.

Girls are also dramatically underrepresented in advanced computer science courses, making them less eligible than boys for high wage, high-tech jobs. The fact that girls are less likely than boys to take advanced computer science courses actually helps perpetuate a cycle of disadvantage in educational technology. Because fewer girls will have the skills to enter high-tech fields, fewer women will be developers of educational software and fewer role models will be available for young girls.

For girls to have equal access to the growing job market in the computer field, immediate steps must be taken to close the technology gap between boys and girls. The Educating America's Girls Act addresses problems with girls' access to technology by providing professional development to assist teachers in dealing more effectively with the technology needs of girls. It gives local and state governments and private and public schools and institutions of higher education the opportunity to meet their needs in their applications for federal grants. Finally, the Act states that the Title III provisions authorizing support for development of education technology must give special consideration to programs incorporating the technology learning needs of girls.

School safety is another concern for America's girls. Recent studies reveal that 85 percent of girls have experienced some form of sexual harassment. Sixty-five percent of girls who have been harassed were harassed in the classroom, and 73 percent were harassed in school hallways. Eighty-one percent of girls who have been harassed do not report the harassment to an adult. Thirty-three percent of girls report not wanting to go to school because of anxiety and stress caused by harassment. Nearly one quarter of girls report staying home from school or cutting classes because of harassment.

These numbers are clearly unacceptable. It is imperative that our schools do a better job of recognizing and eradicating sexual harassment in schools. As the recent Supreme Court ruling in Davis v. Monroe County Board of Education makes clear, school districts may now be sued for damages if they fail to respond to student sexual harassment of other students.

The Educating America's Girl's Act provides $10 million for district level programs to train teachers and administrators in identifying and preventing sexual harassment. In addition, the Act makes high rates of sexual harassment in schools a consideration in determining the distribution of state grants for violence prevention programs. It also requires that sexual harassment and abuse prevention be among the activities included in a school's comprehensive drug and violence program. Finally, the Act requires the National Center for Educational Statistics to collect data on sexual harassment and abuse in schools as a means of identifying and addressing the problem more effectively.

The Act supports girls' participation in high school athletics. Since the passage of Title IX over a quarter century ago, increasing numbers of girls are participating in organized sports, although boys continue to participate at higher rates.

Studies show that girls who do so are emotionally and physically healthier than girls who do not. Involvement in sports can also lead to higher self-esteem and confidence, more positive attitudes toward school, an improved sense of physical well-being, social recognition in the school and community, and a reduction in destructive behavior.

In addition, higher rates of athletic participation for girls are associated with lower rates of sexual activity and pregnancy. Girls who participate in sports are also less likely to drop out of school and less likely to smoke cigarettes. Girls who engage in physical activity in high school are less likely to suffer from heart disease, breast cancer, and osteoporosis in late life.

Participation in sports also has a positive effect on students' academic performance. Students involved in sports and other extracurricular activities perform better on assessments in reading and mathematics. In addition, for many girls, high school athletic opportunities translate into college scholarships.

Although there is ample evidence that physical activity and athletics are beneficial to girls, they are less physically active and less involved in high school athletics than boys are. In order to determine in what ways girls are affected by athletic participation, it is vital that accurate data on girls' participation in physical education and high school athletics be collected and made available. Unfortunately, current nationwide data is limited, making it difficult to determine progress toward equity in athletics, as required by Title IX. The Act helps ensure that girls' interests are being met by requiring data collection on the participation of high school students, by gender, in physical education and athletics.

The Act also addresses concerns about the dropout rate among pregnant teenagers. Almost one million girls in America become pregnant each year, and 80 percent of these pregnancies are unintended. Education is the means for all girls, including pregnant and parenting teens, to achieve economic success. Yet girls who become pregnant as teenagers are most likely to drop out of school, jeopardizing not only their own economic security but that of their children as well. The younger a girl is when she becomes pregnant, the more likely she is to drop out. Two-thirds of girls who become pregnant before age 18 will not complete school. Girls who drop out of school are less likely to return than boys. While teenage pregnancy rates have declined in recent years, they are still too high and a reason for grave concern.

The Act focuses on the needs of pregnant and parenting teens by supporting mentoring and support programs that encourage girls who are pregnant or have children to stay in school.

It is also important that the Women's Educational Equity Act be reauthorized. WEEA stands for the federal commitment to help schools eradicate sex discrimination and ensure that girls' futures are not limited by their gender, but are determined by their interests, aspirations, and abilities. Since its enactment in 1974, it has provided critical support in combating inequitable educational practices.

It provides resources for teachers, administrators, and parents seeking proven methods to ensure equity in schools and communities. It provides materials and tools to help schools comply with Title IX. It provides research and model programs to back up Title IX's promise to students of a non-discriminatory education.

It helps girls become confident, educated, and self-sufficient women through projects to prevent teen pregnancy; to keep girls in school; to guide them toward careers in math, science, and technology; and to provide them with mentors. It has funded over 700 programs since 1974, including programs on math and science education and careers, sexual harassment, gender-biased teaching practices, and women's history.

The Educating America's Girls Act will continue all this vital work on behalf of girls and young women by reauthorizing the Women's Educational Equity Act.

Significant strides have been made in securing more equitable education for the nation's young women and girls, but we cannot afford to be complacent. We must keep moving forward to guarantee that girls are full participants in the economic and social development of our country. Measures to assure gender equity in education are a key means of accomplishing this goal. Passage of the Educating America's Girls Act is a vital next step for increasing gender equity in education.

By Mr. GORTON (for himself, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. GREGG, Mr. COVERDELL, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. ASHCROFT, Mr. HELMS, and Mr. VOINOVICH):

S. 1266. A bill to allow a State to combine certain funds to improve the academic achievement of all its students; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

THE STRAIGHT A'S ACT

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Academic Achievement for All Act. As a parent and grandparent I know that there is no more important issue than our children's education. Education unlocks the door to a lifetime of learning; prepares us to participate in our democracy; helps our children lead productive, independent lives and ensures that our country is economically competitive. Education is a vital issue before the Senate as we consider the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act—the heart of Washington D.C.'s role in K-12 education.

Over the last several years I have talked with countless teachers, principals, parents, and school board members about our educational system. I consistently hear that Washington, D.C. interferes with local efforts to help students achieve high standards. I hear about bureaucratic hurdles, reams of paperwork and one-size-fits-all programs. Based on that input, Congressman GOODLING and I have written a bill that will refocus federal education programs on children and learning instead of process and paperwork. It is based on a fundamental trust that parents, teachers, local educators and states will make the best decisions regarding our children's education, rather than bureaucrats 3,000 miles away in Washington, DC. Its only common sense.

For too long Washington's programs have been driven by an obsession to comply with rules and regulations. In our state, 50 percent of all the paperwork an educator deals with is the result of federal programs. Yet the average school district receives only six percent of its budget from the federal government. On a nationwide basis, federal paperwork eats up 48 million people hours per year. That's 25,000 employees working full time on paper, not on helping our students learn. Is our educators' time spent filling out forms or teaching children how to read?

Former Secretary of Education Bill Bennett put it succinctly in a recent statement: "... our students have fallen further and further behind students in other countries. American 12th graders now rank 19th out of 21 nation in mathematics achievement; 16th of 21 in science; 15th out of 16 in advanced math; and 16th out of 16 nations in advanced physics. And this competition does not include Singapore, Korea, Japan and Hong Kong—which is rather like finishing last in a professional hockey league that does not include Canadians."

The good news is that we have before us an opportunity to restructure the way the federal government interacts with states and local communities in terms of education policy. We must not continue to support a system that has stifled creativity in states and local communities—the very place real education reform happens.

While freedom and flexibility are important, our schools should also be accountable for results—not to Washington, DC but to the standards each state and community has been working on to ensure its students are prepared for the 21st Century. We can't forget that our schools are ultimately accountable to the voters in each community who elect the local school boards and the parents who send their children to our schools.

My proposal, the Straight A's Act, will give parents, educators, school districts and states more decision-making authority over the way in which federal education funding is used. It means our children's teachers will spend less time filling out paperwork and more time in classrooms. And, equally important, it means that more federal education dollars will find their way into our children's schools, where they belong. Right now, as little as 65 cents of every dollar the nation's taxpayers invest in education makes it into the classroom.

Straight A's relies on a simple formula:

Freedom+Accountability=Results.

States would have the option of submitting a proposal to the Secretary of Education that would set specific, measurable performance goals to be reached in five years. States would be allowed maximum flexibility with the use of most of their Federal K-12 formula program funds for state education priorities and programs in exchange for being held accountable for meeting the goals set in their proposal. This would allow States the freedom to address more effectively the needs of students in their state. Alternatively, states would be free to continue to administer Federal education programs the old way. Straight A's does not eliminate any program—it's the state's choice to choose its approach.

What this means for states and school districts is that they can use federal funds for any initiative that improves performance of students in their state. Those states that choose to participate can focus more funds on disadvantaged students, increase efforts to improve teacher quality, reduce class size or even hook up all their classes to the Internet. The one string is that these efforts must increase the achievement of all students—including the lowest performing students—over the course of five years.

If states do not substantially meet those goals, they would lose their flexibility and revert to the categorical, regulated approach under current law. If states do well and significantly reduce achievement gaps between high and low performing students, they may be rewarded with additional funds.

Finally, it should also be noted that participating states and school districts would not lose any Title I funding. If Title I, Part A is included by a state, each school district in that state would be assured of receiving at least as much money as they received in the fiscal year preceding the year of the agreements enactment.

This proposal will allow educators to do what they do best—teach kids. We should focus on students learning and achieving, not process and paperwork.

My colleagues should also know that I did not develop this concept in a vacuum. As I mentioned earlier over the course of the past few years I have heard from literally hundreds of parents and educators about the challenges they face trying to provide the best possible education for their children. In particular, during the last congressional recess period I traveled to several schools around Washington state and had a chance to talk to many educators about my legislation. They've since responded with enthusiastic support for my proposal—I'd like to share some of their comments with you now:

We need more control at the local level not more rules and regulations from the federal government.—Dennis Birr, President of the Association of Washington School Principals.

Senator Gorton's Straight A's proposal is well-conceived with great flexibility for states and districts. It would help to focus federal resources where they are most needed.—Janet Barry, Issaquah Superintendent and 1996 National Superintendent of the Year.

I believe that the choice is very clear. Would I trade the present government restrictions and stifling paperwork for flexibility and higher accountability? The answer is absolutely yes!—Dr. Richard Semler, Superintendent of the Richland School District.

The Straight A's Act would release a tremendous amount of badly needed education dollars and give school districts the flexibility they desperately need.—State Senator Don Benton (R-17th) and State Representative Marc Boldt (R-17th).

I believe so strongly in the fundamental principal that local people make the best decisions about our children's education that each week I've come to the Senate floor to recognize individuals, schools, and educational programs in Washington state that demonstrate innovation and excellence in education.

My first award went to the Tukwila School District which had its ethnic diversity grow by more than 1,000 percent in the last seven years. I had the opportunity to visit this district earlier this year, and I found that 20% of the district's students are enrolled in bilingual education, and all told, they speak about 30 different languages. To meet the challenge of integrating this immigrant population into the school system and the community, the Tukwila School District, the City of Tukwila, and the local Rotary Club created "New Friends & Families"—a program designed to engage these hard-to-reach immigrant and refugee students and their families to make them aware of community services and to encourage parental involvement in their children's education. It is programs like "New Friends & Families" that illustrate the local innovation and local partnerships working to ensure all of their students achieve.

I also had the pleasure over this last break to stop by Chris Luther's 3rd grade class at Beachwood Elementary School. This class did not miss a spelling word on their weekly spelling tests for the entire school year. This is a classroom of average kids, all with different backgrounds and abilities. Yet, Mr. Luther has found a way to encourage and tutor these students so they are all accomplishing equally praiseworthy work. The key has not been some magical formula rather, the success of these students comes from a concerted effort by Mr. Luther to boost their self-esteem, to enhance their memory skills, and to impress upon every child in the classroom that learning is important. Those strategies combined with the individual effort of each of his students has clearly paid off. Those students may not remember how to spell each of the words they learned this year, but they will remember their third grade teacher for the rest of their lives.

Then there's Karen Mikolasy, Washington state's teacher of the year, who has taught for 28 years at Shorecrest High School with passion for her students and for her work. She emphasizes consistency and standards. In Mrs. Mikolasy's class homework is handed in on time and papers are rewritten until each student earns at least a B. That consistency in expectations also carries over to consistent positive reinforcement to her students—she tells them daily that it is a privilege to be their teacher. She says that in 28 years, not one day has gone by which she hasn't wanted to be in the classroom with her students. She was also recently recognized as the Washington State Teacher of the Year. In the few minutes I met with her, I understood why she won this honor. Her passion and commitment to educating and inspiring young people was clear.

I hope these examples clearly illustrate why it is important that we return to our states and local communities the right to set priorities that reflect the unique needs of their students and allow more districts to have the ability to innovate like the Tukwila School District, and more teachers to spend more time with their students and hopefully emulate the examples set by Chris Luther and Karen Mikolasy.

In each of the last two years the Senate has voted to send more money to our classrooms, but the President has threatened a veto. I will try again this year. I'm going to keep fighting for a shift from programs focused on procedures and paperwork to a system that puts student learning and academic achievement first—a system that lets those closest to our children—their parents, teachers, and principals and school board members decide what's best for our children.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1266

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Academic Achievement for All Act (Straight A's Act)".

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to create options for States and communities—

(1) to improve the academic achievement of all students, and to focus the resources of the Federal Government upon such achievement;

(2) to give States and communities maximum freedom in determining how to boost academic achievement and implement education reforms;

(3) to hold States and communities accountable for boosting the academic achievement of all students, especially disadvantaged children; and

(4) to narrow achievement gaps between the lowest and highest performing groups of students so that no child is left behind.

SEC. 3. PERFORMANCE AGREEMENT.

profiles required by section 1116(a)(3) of such Act; or

(ii) developed and implemented a system to measure the degree of change from 1 school year to the next in student performance on such assessments;

(B) established a system under which assessment information is disaggregated by race, ethnicity, sex, English proficiency status, and socioeconomic status for the State, each local educational agency, and each school, except that such disaggregation shall not be required in cases in which the number of students in any such group is insufficient to yield statistically reliable information or would reveal the identity of an individual student;

(C) established specific, measurable, numerical performance objectives for student achievement, including—

(i) a definition of performance considered to be satisfactory by the State on the assessment instruments described under subparagraphs (A) and (B) with performance objectives established for all students and for specific student groups, including groups for which data is disaggregated under subparagraph (B); and

(ii) the objective of improving the performance of all groups and narrowing gaps in performance between those groups; and

(A) STUDENT ACHIEVEMENT DATA.—Each State shall establish student performance goals for the 5-year term of the performance agreement that, at a minimum—

(i) establish a single high standard of performance for all students;

(ii) take into account the progress of students from every local educational agency and school in the State;

(iii) measure changes in the percentages of students at selected grade levels meeting specified proficiency levels of achievement (established by the State) in the final year of the performance agreement, compared to such percentages in the baseline year (as described in subparagraph (C));

(iv) set numerical goals to attain by the end of the term of the performance agreement to—

(I) improve the performance of the groups specified in paragraph (5)(B); and

(II) reduce achievement gaps between the highest and lowest performing groups of students by raising the achievement levels of the lowest performing students in mathematics and reading, at a minimum; and

(v) require all students in the State to make substantial gains in achievement.

(B) ADDITIONAL INDICATORS OF PERFORMANCE.—A State may identify in the performance agreement any additional indicators of performance such as graduation, dropout, or attendance rates.

(C) BASELINE PERFORMANCE DATA.—To determine student achievement levels for the baseline year, the State shall use its most recent achievement data when executing the performance agreement.

(D) CONSISTENCY OF PERFORMANCE MEASURES.—A State shall maintain, at a minimum, the same challenging State student performance standards and assessments throughout the term of the performance agreement.

(B) a detailed description of how the State has used Federal funds to improve student performance and reduce achievement gaps to meet the terms of the performance agreement.

(d) SPECIAL RULE.—If a State does not include part A of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 in its performance agreement, the State shall—

(1) certify that it has developed a system to measure the academic performance of all students; and

(2) establish performance goals in accordance with subsection (c)(6) for such other programs.

(e) AMENDMENT TO PERFORMANCE AGREEMENT.—A State may submit an amendment to the performance agreement to the Secretary under the following circumstances:

(1) REDUCE SCOPE OF PERFORMANCE AGREEMENT.—Not later than 1 year after the execution of the performance agreement, a State may amend the performance agreement through a request to withdraw a program from such agreement. If the Secretary approves the amendment, the requirements of existing law shall apply for any program withdrawn from the performance agreement.

SEC. 618. PRESERVATION OF THE START TREATY VERIFICATION REGIME.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate makes the following findings:

(1) Paragraph 6 of Article XI of the START Treaty states the following: “Each Party shall have the right to conduct reentry vehicle inspections of deployed ICBMs and SLBMs to confirm that such ballistic missiles contain no more reentry vehicles than the number of warheads attributed to them.”.

(2) Paragraph 1 of Section IX of the Inspections Protocol to the START Treaty states that each Party “shall have the right to conduct a total of ten reentry vehicle inspections each year”.

(3) Paragraph 4 of Section XVIII of the Inspections Protocol to the START Treaty states that the Parties “shall, when possible, clarify ambiguities regarding factual information contained in the inspection report” that each inspection team must provide at the end of an inspection, pursuant to paragraph 1 of Section XVIII of that Protocol.

(4) Paragraph 12 of Annex 3 to the Inspections Protocol to the START Treaty states that, once a missile has been selected and prepared for reentry vehicle inspection, the inspectors shall be given “a clear, unobstructed view of the front section [of the missile], to ascertain that the front section contains no more reentry vehicles than the number of warheads attributed to missiles of that type”.

(5) Paragraph 13 of Annex 3 to the Inspections Protocol to the START Treaty states the following: “If a member of the in-country escort declares that an object contained in the front section is not a reentry vehicle, the inspected Party shall demonstrate to the satisfaction of the inspectors that this object is not a reentry vehicle.”.

(6) Section II of Annex 8 to the Inspections Protocol to the START Treaty provides that radiation detection equipment may be used during reentry vehicle inspections.

(7) Paragraph F.1 of Section VI of Annex 8 to the Inspections Protocol to the START Treaty states the following: “Radiation detection equipment shall be used to measure nuclear radiation levels in order to demonstrate that objects declared to be non-nuclear are non-nuclear.”.

(8) While the use of radiation detection equipment may help to determine whether an object that “a member of the in-country escort declares. is not a reentry vehicle” is a reentry vehicle with a nuclear warhead, it cannot help to determine whether that object is a reentry vehicle with a non-nuclear warhead.

(9) Article XV of the START Treaty provides for a Joint Compliance and Inspection Commission that shall meet to “resolve questions relating to compliance with the obligations assumed”.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the United States should assert and, to the maximum extent possible, exercise the right for reentry vehicle inspectors to obtain a clear, unobstructed view of the front section of a deployed SS-18 ICBM selected for reentry vehicle inspection pursuant to paragraph 6 of Article XI of the START Treaty;

(2) the United States should assert and, to the maximum extent possible, obtain Russian compliance with the obligation of the host Party, pursuant to paragraph 13 of Annex 3 to the Inspections Protocol to the START Treaty, to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the inspectors that an object which is declared not to be a reentry vehicle is not a reentry vehicle;

(3) if a member of the in-country escort declares that an object contained in the front section of a deployed SS-18 ICBM selected for reentry vehicle inspection pursuant to paragraph 6 of Article XI of the START Treaty is not a reentry vehicle, but the inspected Party does not demonstrate to the satisfaction of the inspectors that this object is not a reentry vehicle, the United States inspection team should record this fact in the official inspection report as an ambiguity and the United States should raise this matter in the Joint Compliance and Inspection Commission as a concern relating to compliance of Russia with the obligations assumed under the Treaty;

(4) the United States should not agree to any arrangement whereby the use of radiation detection equipment in a reentry vehicle inspection, or a combination of the use of such equipment and Russian assurances regarding SS-18 ICBMs, would suffice to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the inspectors that an object which is declared not to be a reentry vehicle is not a reentry vehicle; and

SCHUMER (AND BROWNBAC) AMENDMENT NO. 724

Mr. HELMS (for Mr. SCHUMER (for himself and Mr. BROWNBAC)) proposed an amendment to the bill, S. 886, supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert:

It is the sense of the Congress that:

Ten percent of the citizens of the Islamic Republic of Iran are members of religious minority groups;

According to the State Department and internationally recognized human rights organizations, such as Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, religious minorities in the Islamic Republic of Iran—including Sunni Muslims, Baha'is, Christians, and Jews—have been the victims of human rights violations solely because of their status as religious minorities;

The 55th session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights passed Resolution 1999/13, which expresses the concern of the international community over ‘continued discrimination against religious minorities’ in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and calls on that country to moderate its policy on religious minorities until they are ‘completely emancipated’;

More than half the Jews in Iran have been forced to flee that country since the Islamic Revolution of 1979 because of religious persecution, and many of them now reside in the United States;

The Iranian Jewish community, with a 2,500-year history and currently numbering some 30,000 people, is the oldest Jewish community living in the Diaspora;

Five Jews have been executed by the Iranian government in the past five years without having been tried;

There has been a noticeable increase recently in anti-Semitic propaganda in the government-controlled Iranian press;

On the eve of the Jewish holiday of Passover 1999, thirteen or more Jews, including community and religious leaders in the city of Shiraz, were arrested by the authorities of the Islamic Republic of Iran; and

In keeping with its dismal record on providing accused prisoners with due process and fair treatment, the Islamic Republic of Iran failed to charge the detained Jews with any specific crime or allow visitation by relatives of the detained for more than two months: Now, therefore, it is the sense of the Congress that the United States should—

(1) continue to work through the United Nations to assure that the Islamic Republic of Iran implements the recommendations of Resolution 1999/13;

(2) condemn, in the strongest possible terms, the recent arrest of members of Iran's Jewish minority and urge their immediate release;

(3) urge all nations having relations with the Islamic Republic of Iran to condemn the treatment of religious minorities in Iran and call for the release of all prisoners held on the basis of their religious beliefs; and

(4) maintain the current United States policy toward the Islamic Republic of Iran unless and until that country moderates its treatment of religious minorities.

SEC. 730. SENSE OF SENATE REGARDING CHILD LABOR.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate makes the following findings:

(1) The International Labor Organization (in this resolution referred to as the "ILO") estimates that at least 250,000,000 children under the age of 15 are working around the world, many of them in dangerous jobs that prevent them from pursuing an education and damage their physical and moral well-being.

(2) Children are the most vulnerable element of society and are often abused physically and mentally in the work place.

(3) Making children work endangers their education, health, and normal development.

(4) UNICEF estimates that by the year 2000, over 1,000,000,000 adults will be unable to read or write on even a basic level because they had to work as children and were not educated.

(5) Nearly 41 percent of the children in Africa, 22 percent in Asia, and 17 percent in Latin America go to work without ever having seen the inside of a classroom.

(6) The President, in his State of the Union address, called abusive child labor "the most intolerable labor practice of all," and called upon other countries to join in the fight against abusive and exploitative child labor.

(7) The Department of Labor has conducted 5 detailed studies that document the growing trend of child labor in the global economy, including a study that shows children as young as 4 are making assorted products that are traded in the global marketplace.

(8) The prevalence of child labor in many developing countries is rooted in widespread poverty that is attributable to unemployment and underemployment among adults, low living standards, and insufficient education and training opportunities among adult workers and children.

(9) The ILO has unanimously reported a new Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

(10) The United States negotiators played a leading role in the negotiations leading up to the successful conclusion of the new ILO Convention on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

(11) On September 23, 1993, the United States Senate unanimously adopted a resolution stating its opposition to the importation of products made by abusive and exploitative child labor and the exploitation of children for commercial gain.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) abusive and exploitative child labor should not be tolerated anywhere it occurs;

(2) ILO member States should be commended for their efforts in negotiating this historic convention;

(3) it should be the policy of the United States to continue to work with all foreign nations and international organizations to promote an end to abusive and exploitative child labor; and

(4) the Senate looks forward to the prompt submission by the President of the new ILO convention on the worst forms of child labor.

The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) was established to prosecute individuals responsible for genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda;

(2) A separate tribunal, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY), was created with a similar purpose for crimes committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

(3) The acts of genocide and crimes against humanity that have been perpetrated against civilians in the Great Lake region of Africa equal in horror the acts committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia;

(4) The ICTR has succeeded in issuing at least 28 indictments against 48 individuals, and currently has in custody 38 individuals presumed to have led and directed the 1994 genocide;

(5) The ICTR issued the first conviction ever by an international court for the crime of genocide against Jean-Paul Akayesu, the former mayor of Taba, who was sentenced to life in prison;

(6) The mandate of the ICTR is limited to acts committed only during calendar year 1994, yet the mandate of the ICTY covers serious violations of international humanitarian law since 1991 through the present;

(7) There has been well substantial allegations of major crimes against humanity and war crimes that have taken place in the Great Lakes region of Africa that fall outside of the current mandate of the Tribunal in terms of either the dates when, or geographical areas where, such crimes took place;

(8) The attention accorded the ICTY and the indictments that have been made as a result of the ICTY's broad mandate continue to play an important role in current U.S. policy in the Balkans;

The International community must send an unmistakable signal that genocide and other crimes against humanity cannot be committed with impunity;

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that, The President should instruct the United States U.N. Representative to advocate to the Security Council to direct the Office of Internal Oversight Services (OIOS) to re-evaluate the conduct and operation of the ICTR. Particularly, the OIOS should assess the progress made by the Tribunal in implementing the recommendations of the Report of the U.N. Secretary-General on the Activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, A/52/784, of 6 February, 1998. The OIOS should also include an evaluation of the potential impact of expanding the original mandate of the ICTR.

(c) REPORT.—90 days after enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall report to Congress on the effectiveness and progress of the ICTR. The report shall include an assessment of the ICTR's ability to meet its current mandate and an evaluation of the potential impact of expanding that mandate to include crimes committed after calendar year 1994.

AMENDMENT NO. 731

On page 115, after line 18, add the following new section:

SEC. ____ REPORTING REQUIREMENT ON WORLD-WIDE CIRCULATION OF SMALL ARMS AND LIGHT WEAPONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In numerous regional conflicts, the presence of vast numbers of small arms and light weapons has prolonged and exacerbated conflict and frustrated attempts by the international community to secure lasting peace. The sheer volume of available weaponry has been a major factor in the devastation witnessed in recent conflicts in Angola, Cambodia, Liberia, Mozambique, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, and Afghanistan, among others, and has contributed to the violence endemic to narcotrafficking in Colombia and Mexico.

(2) Increased access by terrorists, guerrilla groups, criminals, and others to small arms and light weapons poses a real threat to United States participants in peacekeeping operations and United States forces based overseas, as well as to United States citizens traveling overseas.

(3) In accordance with the reorganization of the Department of State made by the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998, effective March 28, 1999, all functions and authorities of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency were transferred to the Secretary of State. One of the stated goals of that Act is to integrate the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency into the Department of State "to give new emphasis to a broad range of efforts to curb proliferation of dangerous weapons and delivery systems".

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of State shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report containing—

(1) an assessment of whether the export of small arms poses any proliferation problems including—

(A) estimates of the numbers and sources of licit and illicit small arms and light arms in circulation and their origins;

(B) the challenges associated with monitoring small arms; and

(C) the political, economic, and security dimensions of this issue, and the threats posed, if any, by these weapons to United States interests, including national security interests;

(2) an assessment of whether the export of small arms of the type sold commercially in the United States should be considered a foreign policy or proliferation issue;

(3) a description of current Department of State activities to monitor and, to the extent possible ensure adequate control of, both the licit and illicit manufacture, transfer, and proliferation of small arms and light weapons, including efforts to survey and assess this matter with respect to Africa and to survey and assess the scope and scale of the issue, including stockpile security and destruction of excess inventory, in NATO and Partnership for Peace countries;

(4) a description of the impact of the reorganization of the Department of State made by the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 on the transfer of functions relating to monitoring, licensing, analysis, and policy on small arms and light weapons, including—

(A) the integration of and the functions relating to small arms and light weapons of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency with those of the Department of State;

(B) the functions of the Bureau of Arms Control, the Bureau of Nonproliferation, the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs, the Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement, regional bureaus, and any other relevant bureau or office of the Department of State, including the allocation of personnel and funds, as they pertain to small arms and light weapons;

(C) the functions of the regional bureaus of the Department of State in providing information and policy coordination in bilateral and multilateral settings on small arms and light weapons;

(D) the functions of the Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security pertaining to small arms and light weapons; and

(E) the functions of the scientific and policy advisory board on arms control, non-proliferation, and disarmament pertaining to small arms and light weapons; and

(5) an assessment of whether foreign governments are enforcing their own laws concerning small arms and light weapons import and sale, including commitments under the Inter-American Convention Against the Illicit Manufacturing of and Trafficking in Firearms, Ammunition, Explosives, and Other Related Materials or other relevant international agreements.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO MARY ELIZABETH MONTAGUE

• Mr. DODD. Mr. President, sadly, on January 24th of this year, the state of Connecticut lost a resident of upstanding character who had dedicated her career to public service. Mary Elizabeth Montague led an accomplished life for 87 years and our state owes her many thanks for all of her extraordinary contributions.

Born in Middletown, Connecticut, Mary Elizabeth established a distinguished record as a public servant. While in Middletown, she worked as a social service investigator for the Family Welfare Association and went on to become the first woman president of the local Parent-Teachers Association. She eventually became the PTA's state district director.

Mary Elizabeth's diverse accomplishments led to her appointment as a congressional liaison to the Small Business Administration during the Kennedy Administration.

Then, in 1965, she joined Vice President Hubert Humphrey's Capitol Hill staff handling such issues as cities, the arts, and the economy.

Upon leaving Vice President Humphrey's office, Mary Elizabeth launched her own public relations firm in 1968. She published numerous editions of "A Woman's Guide to Washington, D.C." and created and published "On the Hill," a monthly magazine about Capitol Hill that was distributed to all congressional offices.

In March of 1998, Mary Elizabeth was presented with the Key to Norwalk, Connecticut, her most recent home, for her 30 years of service as a communications consultant. This was only one of the 14 different keys she had received from cities and towns around the state. In addition, Mary Elizabeth was awarded numerous commendations and citations for her dedicated community service.

My Connecticut office shared a relationship with Mary Elizabeth for the past 6 years as she tirelessly continued to better the lives of those around her. Her life and work were committed to serving the public good and are testaments to how one person can touch so many people in a positive way.

Mary Elizabeth Montague is survived by her three children, Louis, William, and Miriam, four grandchildren, and one great-granddaughter. I offer each of them my heartfelt condolences.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD the full text of the eulogy offered by Mary Elizabeth's daughter, Miriam. I believe her words have truly captured the remarkable spirit of her mother and the outstanding life that she led.

The eulogy follows:

THE PASSING OF A GREAT COMMUNICATOR AND A GREAT CONTRIBUTOR TO LIFE—MARY ELIZABETH MONTAGUE

Her life was and is a story, each chapter better than the next. She was the central figure in many lives—a daughter, a mother, an advisor, a friend, teacher, a companion, a politician, a writer and a coordinator of events that surrounded her life and all those she touched. She was a woman ahead of her time managing political campaigns, speaking out for the rights of children, concerned for the people instituted by the system, promoting reading and literacy, all in the 50's when women were supposed to be quiet—she spoke. Never shy to give her opinion or back down from her beliefs, she taught us to be strong, independent, and to think for ourselves.

As a single parent, she sacrificed and made choices to improve her children's lives and off to Washington we went. There she continued her political endeavors as an administrator, coordinator, and writer. Along the way, she showed us that richness comes in the quality of life you live and in the people you meet along the way. And, oh, the people we met—Presidents, Congressmen, Congresswomen, Senators, Ambassadors, Governors, key figures in national and international politics, actors and actresses, writers and so many more. But all the while, she showed us that even these people were all the same, some with more power or wealth, but none better than the man next door.

Most of all, she wanted us to believe in ourselves—that God gave us talents, personality, wit and a mind to grow and share. She taught us laughter and wit with a twinkle in her eye and laughter in her heart.

Mary Elizabeth's story has not ended for she will remain in our hearts, our lives, and our souls forever. •

• Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, just a few short weeks ago, on the anniversary of the filing of the government's antitrust suit against Microsoft, I took to the floor of the U.S. Senate to detail the rapidly changing nature of the information technology industry over that twelve-month period of time. I noted that, just one year ago that day, AOL and Netscape were two large successful companies. A year later, they were a gigantic conglomerate, teamed with Sun and ready to compete in the next frontier of the information technology industry. MCI Communications and WorldCom were two separate companies, as were Excite and @Home. Yahoo hadn't yet bought GeoCities and Broadcast.com. AT&T was a long distance company. A year later, AT&T could have influence over 60% of cable systems in the United States. The stock market had risen dramatically over that year, fueling our unprecedented economic boom.

What difference a year makes, I said at that time.

Now, last week, we were joined by some of the most brilliant and visionary minds in the world as they testified before the Joint Economic Committee High-Technology Summit. Two of the most brilliant, even among that gathering, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan and Microsoft Chairman Bill Gates, reinforced the notion of an extraordinarily dynamic industry, and painted a future promising more dramatic change than we have already seen.

As the two men who arguably have had more to do with our extended economic expansion than any other in the world—one for his contributions in creating the high-tech boom that has driven the economy, the other for judiciously guiding that economy—we would do well to listen to Mr. Gates and Mr. Greenspan when they offer their thoughts about America's next century. I was struck by the similarity of their views this week as they testified on the future of the information-technology industry, the profound benefits it has bestowed on the U.S. and world economies, and the role government has and should continue to play in sustaining this dynamic and literally world-changing force.

To begin with, both Mr. Gates and Chairman Greenspan point to the momentous changes in the way the world operates as a result of this industry's influence. Its innovations are not confined merely to IT products, but to the repercussions of how those products are used. According to Chairman Greenspan, "innovations in information technology so-called IT have begun to alter the manner in which we do business and create value, often in ways that were not readily foreseeable even five years ago. As this century comes to an end, that defining characteristic of the current wave of technology is the role of information."

Mr. Gates underscored that sentiment and gave us a glimpse of an even more information-defined vision of the future in which, "there will be a proliferation of smart, connected devices, from palm-sized digital assistants and tablet personal computers to smart TVs and Web-enabled cell phones. All of your files," he told us, "schedule, address book and everything else you will need will automatically be available on each of these. When you're traveling you'll be able to call up your itinerary, book an appointment or view your stock portfolio using the device you have in hand. It will know the information you need, and when and where you need it. Wherever you are, you'll be able to access your own digital dashboard—your personal portal to your own secure office desktop on any PC."

Where will this information revolution lead us? If the past five years are any indication of the future, it looks bright, indeed.

According to Mr. Gates, "The continuing rapid growth in the Internet will help power this information revolution, just as the proliferation of new devices will help make the Internet more useful and accessible to everyone. Five years ago, who would have imagined that people would now be shopping for automobiles, home loans, airline tickets or clothing on the Web? Electronic commerce has increased tenfold in the last few years, making it convenient for people to purchase almost anything, anytime, from anywhere. By 2002, nearly 50 million Americans will be shopping online, spending almost half a trillion dollars on the Web. There is endless speculation about which companies will be successful. The big winner will be consumers. They will see better prices, more choice, more opportunities to do the things they want to do."

Chairman Greenspan agreed with Mr. Gates' sentiment that consumers have been, and will continue to be, the main beneficiaries of the IT revolution. "Every new innovation," he told us, "has suggested further possibilities to profitably meet increasingly sophisticated consumer demands. Many ventures fail. But the few that prosper enhance consumer choice."

Both men pointed to the enormous economic benefit that has accrued from the IT industry's success.

"The unexpectedly strong economic growth this country is experiencing can, in large measure," noted Mr. Gates, "be traced to the vibrant, competitive and fast-growing computer technology industry. This sector has created more new jobs than any other part of the economy. In fact, we can predict today that by the year 2000, the software industry's contribution to the U.S. economy will be greater than the contribution of any other manufacturing industry in America, an extraordinary achievement for an industry that is less than 30 years old."

Chairman Greenspan underscored just how strong that contribution has been already by stating flatly that, "An economy that twenty years ago seemed to have seen its better days, is displaying a remarkable run of economic growth that appears to have its roots in ongoing advances in technology. Nor, have the benefits been limited to just our country. All else equal, the enhanced competition in tradable goods enables excess capacity previously bottled up in one country to augment worldwide supply and exert restraint on prices in all countries' markets."

Chairman Greenspan offered a note of caution, though, as it is his job to do, and as he has done so brilliantly to our economic benefit in the last few years. "The rate of growth of productivity cannot increase indefinitely," he warned us, adding, "experience advises caution."

We would do well to heed the Chairman's admonition, Mr. President. The IT industry has indeed been a vibrant enterprise, but as Mr. Gates accurately noted, "the incredible success of this industry in the United States owes a lot to the light hand of government in the technology area, the fact that people can take incredible risks and if they're successful they can have incredible rewards."

Mr. President, Alan Greenspan and Bill Gates are precisely correct. We must not take for granted the unprecedented success of this industry and the bounty it has conferred upon our country and, indeed, upon the rest of the world.

The United States government must refrain from yielding to the temptation to pick winners and losers in the marketplace according to arcane and discredited economic theories that are rooted in "what if" wishes rather than "what is" actualities. The freedom to innovate and provide quality products that will continue to improve lives is only possible when government does not dictate how young, vibrant, entrepreneurial companies can compete.

Again, Chairman Greenspan stated the case lucidly: "at this stage," he told us, "one lesson seems reasonably clear. As we contemplate the appropriate public policies for an economy experiencing rapid technological advancement, we should strive to maintain the flexibility of our labor and capital markets that has spurred the continuous replacement of capital facilities embodying older technologies with facilities reflecting the newest innovations. Further reducing regulatory impediments to competition, will, of course, add to this process. The newer technologies have widened the potential for economic well-being. Governments should seek to foster that potential."

Mr. President, I could not agree more. We should be fostering the growth of the dynamic Information Technology industry, not engineering its deterioration into the bureaucratic morass that is government's specialty.

Unfortunately, there are some in the Clinton administration who do not share this view. They short-sightedly seek to impose the heavy hand of government on the IT industry to ensure that certain competitors, not consumers, are the ultimate beneficiaries of this economic revolution. Their current project is the break-up of the most dynamic and successful company of the last 25 years—perhaps in U.S. history—the Microsoft Corporation.

As I pointed out those few weeks ago, in the presence of a company exerting real monopoly power, competitors would be stifled, prices would rise, choices would be curtailed, consumers would be harmed. In fact, in the last twelve months the real world for consumers has improved by all of these measures. Competition in the technology industry is alive and well and nipping at the heels of Microsoft. Prices are down, choices are up, innovation is rampant—all great news for consumers.

And, as these two luminaries of the current golden economic firmament told us this week, the free-market conditions that will allow this great news to continue must prevail: government must keep its hands off of this industry.

I would ask that copies of both Chairman Greenspan's and Mr. Gates' testimony be printed in their entirety in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I would urge my colleagues to read and study their remarks, and then to join me in pursuing policies that will ensure that the Gates and Greenspan view of a future IT industry be allowed to unfold, unimpeded by government's misdirected and deleterious hectoring.

The material follows:

PREPARED TESTIMONY FROM ALAN GREENSPAN, CHAIRMAN, BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE—JUNE 14, 1999

Something special has happened to the American economy in recent years.

An economy that twenty years ago seemed to have seen its better days, is displaying a remarkable run of economic growth that appears to have its roots in ongoing advances in technology.

I have hypothesized on a number of occasions that the synergies that have developed, especially among the microprocessor, the laser, fiber-optics, and satellite technologies, have dramatically raised the potential rates of return on all types of equipment that embody or utilize these newer technologies. But beyond that, innovations in information technology—so called IT—have begun to alter the manner in which we do business and create value, often in ways that were not readily foreseeable even five years ago. As this century comes to an end, the defining characteristic of the current wave of technology is the role of information. Prior to this IT revolution most of twentieth century business decisionmaking had been hampered by limited information. Owing to the paucity of timely knowledge of customers' needs and of the location of inventories and materials flows throughout complex production systems, businesses required substantial programmed redundancies to function effectively.

Doubling up on materials and people was essential as backup to the inevitable misjudgments of the real-time state of play in a company. Decisions were made from information that was hours, days, or even weeks old. Accordingly, production planning required costly inventory safety stocks and backup teams of people to maintain quality control and to respond to the unanticipated and the misjudged. Large remnants of information void, of course, still persist, and forecasts of future events on which all business decisions ultimately depend are still unavoidably uncertain. But the recent years' remarkable surge in the availability of real-time information has enabled business management to remove large swaths of inventory safety stocks and worker redundancies, and has armed firms with detailed data to fine-tune product specifications to most individual customer needs.

Moreover, information access in real-time—resulting, for example, from such processes as checkout counter bar code scanning and satellite location of trucks—has fostered marked reductions in delivery lead-times on all sorts of goods, from books to capital equipment. This, in turn, has reduced the relative size of the overall capital structure required to turn out our goods and services.

Intermediate production and distribution processes, so essential when information and quality control were poor, are being bypassed and eventually eliminated. The increasing ubiquitousness of Internet web sites is promising to significantly alter the way large parts of our distribution system are managed.

The process of innovation goes beyond the factory floor or distribution channels. Design times have fallen dramatically as computer modeling has eliminated the need, for example, of the large staff of architectural specification drafters previously required for building projects. Medical diagnoses are more thorough, accurate, and far faster, with access to heretofore unavailable information. Treatment is accordingly hastened, and hours of procedures eliminated. In addition, the dramatic advances in biotechnology are significantly increasing a broad range of productivity-expanding efforts in areas from agriculture to medicine.

Economists endeavor to describe the influence of technological change on activity by matching economic output against measurable economic inputs: quality adjusted labor and all forms of capital. They attribute the fact that economic growth has persistently outpaced the contributions to growth from labor and capital inputs to such things as technological innovation and increased efficiencies of organizations that are made possible through newer technologies. For example, since 1995 output per labor workhour in the nonfarm business sector—our standard measure of productivity—has grown at an annual rate of about 2 percent. Approximately one-third of that expansion appears to be attributable to output growth in excess of the combined growth of inputs.

Of course, it often takes time before a specific innovation manifests itself as an increase in measured productivity. Although some new technologies can be implemented quickly and have an immediate payoff, others may take years or even decades before achieving their full influence on productivity as new capital is put in place that can take advantage of these creations and their spillovers. Hence, the productivity growth seen in recent years likely represents the benefits of the ongoing diffusion and implementation of a succession of technological advances; likewise, the innovative breakthroughs of today will continue to bear fruit in the future.

The evident acceleration of the process of “creative destruction,” which has accompanied these expanding innovations and which has been reflected in the shifting of capital from failing technologies into those technologies at the cutting edge, has been remarkable. Owing to advancing information capabilities and the resulting emergence of more accurate price signals and less costly price discovery, market participants have been able to detect and to respond to finely calibrated nuances in consumer demand. The process of capital reallocation has been assisted through a significant unbundling of risks made possible by the development of innovative financial products, not previously available. Every new innovation has suggested further possibilities to profitably meet increasingly sophisticated consumer demands. Many ventures fail. But the few that prosper enhance consumer choice.

The newer technologies, as I indicated earlier, have facilitated a dramatic foreshortening of the lead-times on the delivery of capital equipment over the past decade. When lead times for capital equipment are long, firms must undertake capital spending that is adequate to deal with the plausible range of business needs likely to occur after these goods are delivered and installed. In essence, those capital investments must be sufficient to provide insurance against uncertain future demands. As lead times have declined, a consequence of newer technologies, firms' forecasts of future requirements have become somewhat less clouded, and the desired amount of lead-time insurance in the form of a reserve stock of capital has been reduced.

In addition to shortening lead-times, technology has increased the flexibility of capital goods and production processes to meet changes in the demand for product characteristics and the composition of output.

This flexibility allows firms to deal more effectively with evolving market conditions with less physical capital than had been necessary in the past.

Taken together, reductions in the amount of spare capital and increases in capital flexibility result in a saving of resources that, in the aggregate, is reflected in higher levels of productivity. The newer technologies and foreshortened lead-times have, thus, apparently made capital investment distinctly more profitable, enabling firms to substitute capital for labor and other inputs far more productively than they could have a decade or two ago. Capital, as economists like to say, has deepened significantly since 1995.

The surge in investment not only has restrained costs, it has also increased industrial capacity faster than the rise in factory output. The resulting slack in product markets has put greater competitive pressure on businesses to hold down prices.

Technology is also damping upward price pressures through its effect on international trade, where technological developments and a move to a less constrained world trading order have progressively broken down barriers to cross-border trade. All else equal, the enhanced competition in tradeable goods enables excess capacity previously bottled up in one country to augment worldwide supply and exert restraint on prices in all countries' markets.

Because neither business firms nor their competitors can currently count any longer on a general inflationary tendency to validate decisions to raise their own prices, each company feels compelled to concentrate on efforts to hold down costs. The availability of new technology to each company and its rivals affords both the opportunity and the competitive necessity of taking steps to boost productivity. This contrasts with our experiences through the 1970s and 1980s, when firms apparently found it easier and more profitable to seek relief from rising nominal labor costs through price increases than through cost-reducing capital investments.

The rate of growth of productivity cannot increase indefinitely. While there appears to be considerable expectation in the business community, and possibly Wall Street, that the productivity acceleration has not yet peaked, experience advises caution. As I have noted in previous testimony, history is strewn with projections of technology that have fallen wide of the mark. With the innumerable potential permutations and combinations of various synergies, forecasting technology has been a daunting exercise. There is little reason to believe that we are going to be any better at this in the future than in the past. Hence, despite the remarkable progress witnessed to date, we have to be quite modest about our ability to project the future of technology and its implications for productivity growth and for the broader economy.

A key question that we need to answer in order to appropriately evaluate the connection between technological innovations and productivity growth is why have not the same available technologies allowed productivity in Europe and Japan to catch up to U.S. levels. While productivity in some foreign industrial countries appears to have accelerated in recent years, a significant gap between U.S. productivity and that abroad persists.

One hypothesis is that a necessary condition for information technology to increase output per hour is a willingness to discharge or retrain workers that the newer technologies have rendered redundant. Countries with less flexible labor markets than the United States enjoys may have been inhibited in this regard.

Another hypothesis is that regulations, systems of corporate governance, trade restrictions, and government subsidies have prevented competition from being sufficiently keen to induce firms in Europe and Japan to take full advantage of the efficiencies offered by the latest advances in information technology and other innovations.

Further investigation will be necessary to evaluate the importance of these possible influences. But at this stage, one lesson seems reasonably clear. As we contemplate the appropriate public policies for an economy experiencing rapid technology advancement, we should strive to maintain the flexibility of our labor and capital markets that has spurred the continuous replacement of capital facilities embodying older technologies with facilities reflecting the newest innovations. Further reducing regulatory impediments to competition, will, of course, add to this process. The newer technologies have widened the potential for economic well-being. Governments should seek to foster that potential.

PREPARED TESTIMONY FROM BILL GATES OF MICROSOFT

(Testimony from June 15, 1999)

Thank you Mr. Chairman and Members of Congress. It is an honor to be here. Mr. Chairman, I know that we are joined today by a number of students. I'd like to extend my greetings to them—and also to note how different things are today than when I was in school. Today, students have access to powerful personal computing devices and a sea of information through the Internet that I could only dream of when I was a teenager. We truly live in an amazing time. The information age is an era of new possibilities for us, for our children, and for the entire nation.

It is the greatest time of innovation and change in history. In less than 25 years we have seen the personal computer evolve from a hobbyists' toy to a tool many Americans can't imagine being without. We have seen its power double every 18 months, its price fall and its importance grow at home, at school and in every office. I know that many of you on this Committee are technology enthusiasts and appreciate this significance of this change.

As we learn more about how the information age is affecting us, the more we understand its central role in creating the remarkable new prosperity in this country today, and in accelerating economic development throughout the world. We are creating a new digital economy for this new information age.

Mr. Chairman, I know that yesterday Chairman Greenspan appeared before this Committee. Last month, he made a very important observation that I'd like to read very briefly. He said: "The newest innovations, which we label information technologies, have begun to alter the manner in which we do business and create value, often in ways not readily foreseeable even five years ago . . . The breadth of technological advance and its application has engendered a major upward reevaluation of business assets, both real and intangible."

I'd like to reinforce Chairman Greenspan's points by telling you about the findings of a major new study of the digital economy carried out by the Business Software Alliance, an organization representing most of the nation's largest software developers. The study will be released tomorrow, and I will ask that, when it is released, its entire contents be entered into the record of this committee.

The results of the BSA study once again confirm that the unexpectedly strong economic growth this country is experiencing can, in large measure, be traced to the vibrant, competitive and fast-growing computer technology industry. This sector has created more new jobs than any other part of the economy. In fact, we can predict today that by the year 2000, the software industry's contribution to the U.S. economy will be greater than the contribution of any other manufacturing industry in America—an extraordinary achievement for an industry that is less than 30 years old.

Today, America not only sells more cars than Japan. We also lead the world—by a wide margin—in software development. Last year this sector grew more than 15%, and is growing at nearly four times the rate of the economy as a whole. The software industry contributed more than a $13 billion surplus to the U.S. balance of trade, and this will rise to roughly $20 billion next year. A strong technology sector has spurred the renewal of industries old and new across America.

Moreover, new technology companies are being created every day, and are generating incredible valuations overnight. The slew of recent mergers reminds us just how quickly the landscape of the high tech marketplace is changing. That change will continue. In this industry in particular, the free market is working, and working well.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that in Washington, DC., there is a term for people who are incredibly interested in public policy. They are known as policy wonks. Well, in my industry, these people are called computer geeks, and I'd have to say that I am one. If you will indulge me for a few moments longer, I'd like to share some of my enthusiasm for what technology will mean for us in the future. I am very optimistic about what computer technology will mean for all of us—and for the students who are joining us to day via satellite.

As technologies change, so does our mission at Microsoft. For the past 20 years our vision was of a PC on every desktop and in every home—a toll that anyone could use to get things done. And today, a majority of American businesses and more than half of U.S. households have a PC. Now we are moving into a new era. The merging of telecommunications, computer technologies and consumer electronics with the world of the Internet will create a new universe of intelligent PCs and complimentary devices that will deliver the power of the information age to anyone, anywhere, and anytime.

What this means is that there will be a proliferation of smart, connected devices, from palm-sized digital assistants and "tablet" personal computers to smart TVs and Web-enabled cellphones. All of your files, schedule, address book and everything else you need will automatically be available on each of these. When you're traveling you'll be able to call up your itinerary, book an appointment or view your stock portfolio using the device you have in hand. It will know the information you need, and when and where you need it. Wherever you are, you'll be able to access your own "digital dashboard"—your personal portal to your own secure office desktop—on any PC.

We are working hard to develop software that makes computers even easier to use—next year we aim to spend some $3 billion on research and development. And one day in the not too distant future, computers will be able to see, listen and speak. At home or in the office, you'll be able to control your PC by talking to it. It will automatically back up your information, update its own software and synchronize itself with your devices on your home network. You'll even have a notepad on your refrigerator that will be up to date and allow you to coordinate with other information at home, at your office or at your children's school.

When Congress is in session, a wireless network will keep you in touch with your office. I don't need to tell the members of this committee how important mobility is as you move between your state or district and the nation's capital. As technology becomes more flexible and more powerful, it can be a tremendous tool in terms of creating efficiency and instant communication.

The PC also holds the potential to make government more efficient and more responsive. We already see the beginning of this with government web sites that offer people a wealth of information and resources. As government increasingly incorporates technology into its operations it will make information flow even more open and efficient. At Microsoft, our use of technology has all but eliminated paper flow, and I can tell you from first-hand experience that's a wonderful thing. Technology also offers an opportunity to get the public more involved and, some day, perhaps, to engage people in a two-way dialogue on the important issues and challenges we face. The continuing rapid growth in the Internet will help power this information revolution, just as the proliferation of new devices will help make the Internet more useful and accessible to everyone.

Five years ago, who would have imagined that people would now be shopping for automobiles, home loans, airline tickets or clothing on the Web? Electronic commerce has increased tenfold in the last few years, making it convenient for people to purchase almost anything, anytime, from anywhere. By 2002, nearly 50 million Americans will be shopping online, spending almost half a trillion dollars on the Web. There is endless speculation about which companies will be successful. The big winner will be consumers.

They will see better prices, more choices, more opportunities to do the things they want to do. As Chairman Greenspan made clear, companies have already seen enormous benefits from computer technology—benefits that are now being multiplied by online commerce. But there is much more to be done. Like helping companies integrate their computing systems and create digital processes to perceive and react to competitive challenges and consumer needs. By doing this, they will be able to extend the gains in productivity that are helping fuel our economic strength today.

But turning this vision of the future into a reality will take another important investment in America investment in education. We cannot fill all of the jobs being created if we don't make technology a key part of every child's education.

Education in the digital age will offer tremendous promise. Learning will be more student-centered. Teachers, parents and students will work collaboratively, and students will be prepared for a technology workplace with the opportunity to engage in lifelong learning. At Microsoft we call this approach the Connected Learning Community. Taking education into the digital age is a challenge for all of us. Government at all levels, public-private partnerships and philanthropic institutions will play critical roles in preparing today's students for tomorrow's workplace.

Only 14% of teachers currently use the Internet as part of their instruction. We need to make much more progress here. At first, people believed that the Internet was suitable only for quizzes or just learning about technology itself. Today, the educational community knows that the Internet can be a resource for allowing curious minds to learn in new ways—about math, physics, philosophy, in fact about anything. A New York school superintendent attending one of educational conferences we hold at Microsoft recently explained that the PC and the Internet are encouraging students to do more writing, more reading and less TV watching. As a result, "I don't know" is fast becoming "I don't know yet."

Exciting projects are underway to give students the latest tools for learning. At Microsoft, we are working on a pilot project at 500 schools to provide laptops to each student. The results to date have been amazing in terms of increased learning. Many other companies and organizations are involved in similar efforts, whether providing the latest technology for learning or providing scholarships for math and science excellence.

I've had an opportunity to learn a little about how Birmingham Seaholm High School and Pittsburgh Super Computing Center College are using PC technology. Juniors at Birmingham Seaholm are using computers in a very entrepreneurial fashion—they have built a cookie factory and next year plan to develop a micro robot that will take cookies off the cooling rack. Students in Pittsburgh are doing great work on improving high speed networking performance and capabilities. These schools are to be commended for the work they've done to use technology as an important tool in improving education. I look forward to talking with some of the students who have been working with PCs. Unlike their parents, most of whom learned about computers in adulthood, the information age is the only age these students have known. Their success will depend on how well we teach them.

When you look at the phenomenal economic growth produced by technology, and the huge increase in demand for highly skilled knowledge workers, it is clear that our ability to continue benefiting from technology will largely depend on how well we educate the next generation to take advantage of this new era.

In closing, let sum up why I'm excited to be here today and to be part of this hi-tech summit. At Microsoft we make software. We make software for a simple reason—we want to provide tools to make people's lives better. At Microsoft we're excited about the future—we're excited about the tremendous economic benefits of our industry, but we're more excited about helping every individual—in business, in schools and in the home—lead more productive lives. Thank you.●

KATHERINE DUNHAM CELEBRATES HER NINETIETH BIRTHDAY

● Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today to share with my colleagues a story about a most remarkable woman who is celebrating her ninetieth birthday. Her heroic existence embodies every element of a true American.

Katherine Dunham is a studied anthropologist, a brilliant social worker, an inspiring dancer and a historic activist. She started her first dance school in Chicago in 1931, and later became dance director for the Works Progress Administration's Chicago theater project. In 1967 she founded a performing arts center for inner-city youths in East St. Louis, Ill.

One of her many accomplishments came on the night of January 15, 1979, when she was presented with the Albert Schweitzer Music Award at New York's Carnegie Hall. The significance of this award was underscored as three generations of Katherine Dunham dancers and musicians offered spectacular renditions of her marvelous work. The dance and music roared, peppered with the rich flavor of American dance mixed with the anthropological roots of African American heritage.

This kind and brave woman forged a path for less fortunate children, offering the arts as an outlet to their misfortunes. She gave of herself everything and asked little in return. Katherine Dunham was and remains a stellar addition to our rich American heritage.

I hope you will join me in wishing Ms. Dunham a very happy birthday.●

A TRIBUTE TO FORREST "WOODY" WEBER

● Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise to you today to pay tribute to one of Wisconsin's finest educators, Forrest "Woody" Weber. Woody recently retired after a distinguished career spanning 36 years. Focusing his talents in elementary schools, Woody proved instrumental in developing the young lives of his students.

Woody served children and their families as a guidance counselor for 21 consistent years, during which time he specialized in classroom and small group counseling. One of his most substantial accomplishments during this time was addressing the needs of students with cerebral palsy. Since many of these students use "bliss boards" to communicate, Woody developed a unit to be used by other students so they could understand this communication device. This act of kindness earned Woody many public accolades, leading up to his 1993 nomination for "Educator of the Year."

Woody's service and volunteerism permeated every aspect of his long career. Between organizing an annual slide show for graduating sixth-graders, serving on both the Menasha school board as well as the City Council, sitting on numerous other community boards, coaching local athletics, and volunteering for the Salvation Army, he served his community well. Woody's wife, Dale, worries that his new retirement will keep him away from home even more because it will allow him more time to volunteer.

Though his daily presence as an educator will be missed, we wish Woody all the best in his retirement.●

ENTRY-EXIT CONTROL SYSTEM AT CANADIAN BORDER

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, as an original cosponsor of legislation to repeal Section 110 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility of 1996, I am pleased that this bill contains language to prevent traffic delays at the Canadian border.

Section 110, which was scheduled to go into effect on September 30, 1998, would have required the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) to document every alien's arrival in and departure from the United States through an automated entry-exit control system. The Omnibus appropriations act for FY1999 included a compromise provision I cosponsored to delay Section 110 for 30 months. I stated then that Section 110 should not be just delayed, but repealed, because the cost of any such entry-exit system would far exceed its benefits. The vote today replaces the requirements of Section 110 with a feasibility study to determine whether any such system could be developed without increasing congestion or border crossing delays.

Section 110, if applied to Canadian nationals would place an unnecessary burden on the hundreds of thousands of motorists who cross the border daily. In 1996, over 116 million U.S. and Canadian border crossers traveled by land to the United States. Instituting a check for each one of these border crossers would create enormous delays at the 250 points of entry, and would have an especially damaging impact on the businesses, trade, and tourism in Michigan and other northern border states. U.S. trade with Canada, our largest trading partner, generates approximately $1 billion of commerce and tourism daily. Any loss of this revenue would be devastating to my State.

This provision to repeal the Section 110 requirements at land border and sea ports is vital for Michigan communities and businesses, and I am very pleased that the Senate is addressing this important issue.●

IN RECOGNITION OF MR. FRANK M. WADE

● Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of Frank M. Wade as he celebrates his retirement as the Executive Director of the New Jersey State Building and Construction Trades Council. Frank has served in this capacity for the past ten years, and he has a long history of commitment to labor organizations in the State of New Jersey. In fact, Frank has been a cornerstone for labor rights in New Jersey. It is a pleasure for me to be able to honor his accomplishments.

Since he started as a member of the Iron Workers Local #480 in 1954, through his election as Executive Director in 1989, Frank has fought hard to protect the rights of working men and women in New Jersey. His dedication to the New Jersey State Building and Construction Trades Council, and to labor causes in general, is widely known and admired throughout the State of New Jersey.

In addition to his position with the New Jersey Building and Construction Trades Council, Frank has played a very active role in strengthening the political and economic life of New Jersey. He has served on a number of civic organizations including the New Jersey Society for Environmental, Economic Development (NJSEED), the New Jersey Employment Security Council, and on the Advisory Committee on the Prevailing Wage Act.

Frank has never lost sight of the need to serve his community. Despite his responsibilities he has still found the time for charitable causes. Deborah Hospital Foundation is just one of the organizations that has benefitted from Frank's involvement.

So it gives me great pleasure to recognize a leader of great stature in New Jersey's labor community, but also a great friend. Through all our years together, fighting for the cause of working men and women, I have always known Frank to stand on principle, loyalty, and hard work. While he may be leaving this post, I know I can always rely on him to hold true to that standard in every endeavor he undertakes.●

IN RECOGNITION OF DR. LIONEL SWAN

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise to honor a legendary figure in the civil rights movement in Michigan, Dr. Lionel Swan. Dr. Swan died last Wednesday at the age of 93, leaving behind a reputation as an extraordinarily effective leader in the struggle for civil rights.

Dr. Swan was a living example of the great things that can be accomplished when you combine determination, courage and dignity. Dr. Swan put himself through college and medical school by working during the day. He often related a story of an incident which strengthened his resolve to continue on this hard path to his goal of becoming a doctor. One day, a white man called Dr. Swan "boy" and threw a cigarette butt on a floor he had just finished mopping. Dr. Swan is said to have responded, "Mister, I want to thank you. I've been debating whether I should leave this job for college and you just convinced me I've got to do it so the next time I see somebody like you, he can't call me boy."

Dr. Swan was able to ignore ugly slights and concentrate on what is most important in life. Dr. Swan went on to graduate from Howard University Medical School and practice medicine in Detroit. He was elected President of the National Medical Association and the Detroit Medical Society, where he led the effort to allow African-American physicians to practice medicine at the former Harper and Grace hospitals. Dr. Swan was also a longtime, active member of the NAACP, helping found the Detroit NAACP's Freedom Fund Dinner which raises money annually for its many worthwhile goals and is one of the largest gatherings in the country.

Mr. President, Dr. Swan was always firm in principle and gentle in demeanor. He let his actions serve as an example to others in the fight for equality and civil rights. I was a great personal fan of his. I know my Senate colleagues join me in honoring Dr. Swan on his life's many outstanding achievements. ●

APPOINTMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 276h-276k, as amended, appoints the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SESSIONS) as a member of the Senate Delegation to the Mexico-U.S. Interparliamentary Group Meeting during the First Session of the 106th Congress, to be held in Savannah, Georgia, June 25-27, 1999.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1999

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, June 23. I further ask that on Wednesday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed to have expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate immediately resume consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I won't object, I had an amendment that I was prepared to offer. Could I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized at 9:30 for the purpose of offering an amendment; if we could get agreement on that perhaps?

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I think we would be right back in the position in the morning where we are now on the agriculture appropriations bill. There will be discussions between now and then to see if there is any other way we could approach this issue. If we do not get something worked out, I believe the Senator would be entitled to get recognition to offer an amendment. I have the impression that it would be difficult for us to do that at this time.

Mr. President, so we can talk this through, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, the distinguished majority leader has responded to my unanimous consent request. He and I have been consulting about how to proceed over the last hour. He has indicated to me that he is working with a number of his colleagues and with staff to attempt to fashion a way with which we might proceed on the Patients' Bill of Rights. He has indicated they will be continuing those discussions tonight.

In the interest of moving that process along and with some hope that we could reach some agreement, I will withdraw my unanimous consent request to be recognized. We will be on the bill, and we will certainly be inclined to be as supportive of reaching agreement as we can. Short of that, we may want to offer additional amendments to the agriculture appropriations bill tomorrow. We will have that discussion at another date.

In the interest of time and comity and accommodation, I will certainly defer any additional request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the majority leader's request is agreed to.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the Chair. I thank Senator DASCHLE for that approach. We will be working, and we will talk in a few minutes.

---

PROGRAM

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, the Senate will convene at 9:30 a.m. and immediately resume consideration of the agriculture appropriations bill. It is the hope of the majority leader that the Senate can consider agriculture-related amendments during Wednesday's session of the Senate. All Senators can, therefore, expect rollcall votes throughout the session tomorrow as the Senate makes further progress on the agriculture appropriations bill. Once that is completed, of course, other issues may be considered, but we could consult with both sides of the aisle before we move to the next bill.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, if the majority leader will yield on just another question, today the Summers nomination was reported out of the Finance Committee unanimously. There appears to be very strong bipartisan support. Is there any intention on the part of the majority leader to address that nomination sometime in the near future?

Mr. LOTT. The Finance Committee did report it out today. I did vote, along with everybody else, for the nomination. It will be on the calendar tomorrow.

I had indicated I assumed that before we went out for the Fourth of July recess, which is a week from Friday, that would be taken up. It very well could be taken up before then. But we have not gotten it on the calendar, and we have not made a definite determination as to when we will call it up.

I assume other nominations will be on the calendar tomorrow from other committees, and I hope we have the same approach as we have had this year—including three nominations last week—to move these nominations through pretty quickly after reaching the calendar, barring complications that do sometimes come up, of course.

---

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:50 p.m., adjourned until Wednesday, June 23, 1999, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

DRUG COVERAGE MEANS EXTRA COST

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member highly commends this June 11, 1999 editorial from the Norfolk Daily News regarding President Clinton's plan for including prescription drug coverage under Medicare.

DRUG COVERAGE MEANS EXTRA COST

PRESIDENT HAS A PLAN FOR INCLUDING PRESCRIPTIONS UNDER MEDICARE PROGRAM

President Clinton believes he has a plan for including prescription drugs under Medicare coverage that is superior to the one suggested by the co-chairmen of his 17-member advisory commission. The latter plan advanced by Sen. John Breaux, D-La., and Rep. Bill Thomas, R-Calif., would provide the elderly participants under Medicare with a fixed amount for purchasing either a public or private health plan, which could include expenses for prescription drugs.

That had the advantage of simplicity, but a political disadvantage of not providing opportunity for presidents and members of Congress to get credit for periodic improvement of all kinds of health care benefits.

The Clinton plan, promised to be presented in detail later this month, proposes drug coverage for Medicare beneficiaries through the payment of an extra premium. It was predicted as being as low as $10 a month and certainly less than $25 a month.

In either event, it would be relatively cheap coverage, and appealing to those now covered by this government program where-by Social Security beneficiaries pay a $45.50 premium for health insurance. Inclusion of drugs in the program will boost costs, though White House advisers claim they will be offset by reducing hospital admissions and nursing homes, and reduce the need for home health care. The question is: Who will pay?

Today's wage-earners should not be saddled with extra payroll taxes to provide this new coverage; neither should employers who are partners in paying the payroll taxes.

The problems with future solvency for the systems that provide Social Security retirement and Medicare arise from a political inability to fix benefit limits. Any expansion of benefits—especially for prescription drugs—must be accompanied by a sound program by which those who are served share the extra expense.

Using a federal surplus—which accumulates because Americans are already taxed too heavily—to expand government benefits is a politically devious way to resolve solvency problems of a program already destined for insolvency on its present path.

Better coverage will cost more; and those costs ought to be paid largely through realistic premiums for those who wish and can afford the extras.

COMMENDING TAIWAN'S EFFORTS TO ASSIST KOSOVAR REFUGEES

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the United States Department of State said on June 7 that it welcomes Taiwan's plan to offer the United States $300 million to help Kosovar refugees and for reconstruction of Kosovo. I think Taiwan is most praiseworthy in its willingness to assist other nations. As a major economic power in the Far East, Taiwan feels that it must not shirk its responsibilities to help other countries in need. Taiwan hopes to set a good example for other wealthy nations in the world to extend a helping hand to all those displaced Kosovar refugees.

As a matter of fact, even though Taiwan is not a member of the United Nations, Taiwan has always committed itself to help other countries in the Far East and Africa. Taiwan's willingness to be a donor nation deeply reflects its people's firm commitment to protect and promote human rights and their humanitarian concern for the Kosovar refugees living in exile as well as for the war-torn areas in dire need of reconstruction.

I applaud Taiwan's people for their assistance to the Kosovar refugees and their President.

HONORING THE 1999 DUNBAR HIGH SCHOOL BOYS 4X100-METER RELAY TEAM

HON. MARTIN FROST

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 1999 Dunbar High School Boys 4x100-meter relay team for bringing the gold home to Fort Worth. With a championship time of 40.30 seconds at the University Interscholastic League in Austin, the Flying Wildcats electrified the crowd with blazing speed and power.

But the path to glory didn't end in Austin for the Wildcats. Instead of hanging up their spikes for the summer they took their show on the road to the Foot Locker National Championship at North Carolina State University in Raleigh. The Wildcats were eager to show the nation what everyone in North Texas already knew: the Wildcats from Stop Six, Ft. Worth couldn't be stopped in Austin and weren't about to be slowed down in Raleigh.

At the National Championship last week, the Wildcats took their stellar performance to North Carolina State University and won the 4x100 and 4x200-meter relays. The winning effort showed the whole country what Texas and Ft. Worth already knew: Fort Worth is "Speed City."

Once again congratulations to Coach Tom Allen and the Dunbar Boy sprinters: Jerome Braziel, Jerrod Braziel, James Hall, and James Shaw.

RECOGNIZING ALAN EMORY

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in recognition of Alan Emory. On June 7, Mr. Emory began his 53rd year with the Watertown Daily Times. He has spent more than 47 of those years reporting and analyzing news in Washington. A year ago he became the paper's senior correspondent, reporting on politics and Canadian-United States relations, in addition to writing two columns a week, one Op-ed in midweek, one in the Times' Sunday Opinion Weekly Section.

Mr. Emory's most recent work includes breaking stories on: the dispute over the John Kennedy assassination film between the Zapruder family and the government, the assassination review board's failure in its last report to end the theories of how the President died, the continued federal secrecy surrounding the late physicist Glenn Seaborg's diaries, the significance of the Supreme Court's ruling that a sitting President must answer civil suit charges involving pre-White House activities, the fact that the House of Representatives has never censured a sitting President, the saga of the Navy crew making the most daring air-sea rescue in World War II's Pacific fighting and the service high command's refusal to give the crewmen the medals they had been promised 54 years ago, and the word that the only New York City mayor ever to ascend to a higher political office in the state was named Clinton (DeWitt).

Two years ago President Clinton and Vice President GORE saluted Mr. Emory's 50 years with The Times, and last year my colleagues JOHN MCHUGH, Jerry Solomon, JIM WALSH and TOM DAVIS commended him on the House floor. Today I would like to echo their praise and thanks to Alan for his good work, and wish him well as he continues as the Johnson Newspaper Corp.'s (Watertown's) senior correspondent and Washington columnist.

THE HIGH COST OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS: THE STORY OF LUCILLE BRUCE

HON. RONNIE SHOWS

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. SHOWS. Mr. Speaker, I stand before you and the American people today to address the high cost of prescription drugs. Over the last several weeks, I have had the opportunity to visit with many of my constituents to address this burdensome problem.

• This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

As a matter of fact, I conducted a study, which conclusively proves that senior citizens in Mississippi pay outrageous amounts of money for much needed prescription drugs. Let me illustrate this by highlighting the story of one of my constituents—Ms. Lucille Bruce.

Ms. Bruce lived in Federation Towers in Clinton, Mississippi. She enjoyed all the freedoms and dignities that should come with being a senior citizen. That is until the cost of her prescription medicine forced her to move in with her daughter. She pays $200 a month for prescription medicine and has a fixed income. Ms. Bruce told me that without her daughter she would have no money to stay healthy. She wonders how many senior Americans there are that don't have the family support she receives. She often feels she is a burden on her daughter, and recent hospital visits may result in more prescribed medicine and costs.

Mr. Speaker, I can think of no other issue that deserves being addressed more than the cost of medicine our senior citizens have to pay. That is why I cosponsored the Prescription Drug Fairness for Seniors Act. It is time to do right by our seniors and make them favored customers just like the large HMO's and Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, schedule this crucial issue today for floor debate and a vote. Folks like Ms. Bruce need us.

ON THE OCCASION OF THE FAREWELL RECEPTION HONORING CHARLES N. DUNCAN

HON. EVA M. CLAYTON

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, friends, family and co-workers will gather in the Indian Treaty Room at the White House to honor a Son of the South, a Native North Carolinian, Mr. Charles N. Duncan.

Charles is leaving his position as Special Assistant to the President and Associate Director of Presidential Personnel. He will be greatly missed.

Since graduating from Howard University some two and a half decades ago, he has devoted his life to a career in public service and politics. Yet, Charles is more than a public servant. He is more than a political consultant as his resume presents him. He is an ordinary person who is special, and a special person who is ordinary. He has worked with those on the lowest rungs of the ladder. He has sat with Presidents and served the homeless. More than anything else, Charles cares.

Mr. Speaker, Public service and politics requires the best and brightest, the most dedicated and committed, the cream of the crop, the pick of the pack, the faithful, the loyal, the steadfast. Charles Duncan has reflected those qualities in all that he has done, over the years. It is hard to imagine a Democratic Administration or a Democratic political campaign, without Charles in the picture.

He represents what is good about North Carolina and our Nation. He understands that little happens when one stands alone. He works to ensure that the families and children of America have a future that is worthy of our past. In his deeds, Charles has always made the right choice. The right choice between communities that are average and those that are exceptional. The right choice between individual comfort and functioning families.

Charles has taken his tasks and won them well, no matter how large or small. And while unselfishly giving of his time and energy, he has never neglected those things most important—family and church. It is rare these days, indeed, when we find a person of talent and humility, one who is capable and modest, common yet exceptional. The White House is losing a person with a ready smile, a friendly disposition, a concern for all. I do not know what Charles Duncan will do next, but if he returns home, the Nation's loss will be North Carolina's gain.

TRIBUTE TO LAURIE A. GOMER

HON. ED WHITFIELD

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to congratulate Laurie A. Gomer, the Kentucky winner of the National 1999 Voice of Democracy Broadcast Scriptwriting Contest.

Each year the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and its Ladies Auxiliary conduct the contest. The theme this year was "My Service to America." Ms. Gomer's winning essay creatively depicts a flight attendant describing different aspect of American patriotism to passengers during a flight into America's future. Ms. Gomer succinctly describes four different citizen forums dealing with education, community activism, participation in elections and the exhibition of national pride.

Ms. Gomer is the daughter of Larry and Mary Ann Gomer of Franklin, Kentucky. She is a senior at Franklin-Simpson High School, who has been highly involved within numerous student organizations. This well-rounded young lady will be attending either Center College, Emory University, Vanderbilt University or Georgetown University in the fall with hopes of pursuing a career in Pediatrics.

The VFW's Voice of Democracy Program is a National Audio/Essay Competition designed to give high school students the opportunity to voice their opinion on their responsibility to our country. The VFW and its Ladies Auxiliary became involved in assisting the National Association of Broadcasters in the 1950's and took over primary sponsorship in 1961.

The National Finals take place in Washington, D.C. when the finals judges listen to the fifty-four tapes representing winners from each of our fifty states, the District of Columbia, Pacific Areas, Latin America/Caribbean and Europe. This year's program involved more than 6,700 schools and 80,000 students participated while over 4,200 VFW Posts and over 3,400 Auxiliaries sponsored the program.

The VFW provides fifty-six fully-funded scholarships totaling $132,000. The overall first-place winner receives a $20,000 scholarship and all national finalists receive at least a $1,000 scholarship. The total monetary value of scholarships, bonds, and awards provided by VFW Posts, Auxiliaries, Districts, County Councils, Departments and National amount to over $2.6 million this past year. Ms. Gomer is a recipient of the $1,000 scholarship.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate Ms. Gomer for her impressive achievement and wish her the best of luck in the future.

CENTRAL NEW JERSEY RECOGNIZES EDUCATOR JEAN G. LARSON

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Dr. Jean G. Larson, Ed.D., a member of the Freehold Township Schools' Child Study Team. Dr. Larson will be retiring this month after serving our public school system for 30 years as a teacher and learning consultant.

Dr. Larson's colleagues describe her as a "constant and tireless advocate for the children and for good, effective teachers and teaching methods." She began her career as a reading teacher, and went on to work primarily with elementary school children who have learning and/or other disabilities. In addition, Dr. Larson assisted in curriculum development as a consultant to other teachers within the district.

For the last 27 years, Dr. Larson has been on staff at Freehold Township School District in several capacities. During that time, she received her doctorate in education from Fairleigh Dickinson University. Her commitment to the district and to her students has been complete and unwavering.

Teachers are our nation's greatest commodities because of their instrumental role in shaping the future of America. Skilled and dedicated educators like Dr. Larson make it possible for students to succeed and become productive, knowledgeable citizens.

I urge all of my colleagues to join me in honoring Dr. Larson for her many achievements and for her contribution to the education of our children. I wish her well in future endeavors.

RECOGNIZING SANDRA SOPAK

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize a constituent of mine, Sandra Sopak. Sandy is the County Clerk for Chautauqua County, New York and recently won the National Genealogical Society's Award of Merit. It reads:

Sandra Sopak receives the NGS Award of Merit for her willingness to cooperate with the Chautauqua County Genealogical Society in order to make records more available to the public. Her latest efforts include arranging to have photocopies made of all county tax lists, many of which date from 1850 and before, so the Society's publications committee can extract, index, and ultimately publish this valuable historical information. The Society, in turn, donated a set of their genealogical indexes to aid the county clerk when she is asked for vital record information. This is a fine example of record-keepers and record-seekers working together for the benefit of both.

This is the first time that this award has been given to a County Clerk—and a popular County Clerk at that. Sandy was elected in 1993, and was re-elected in 1997 overwhelmingly. In praise of her contribution, a friend and coworker of Sandra writes, "She is a thoughtful leader within Chautauqua County government, a former town supervisor, a former hospital nurse, as well as a dedicated mother and wife. Her example should be recognized by Americans from not only New York but from all across America."

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to spread that recognition across America. Thank you, Sandy, for your hard work.

COMMENDING TAIWANESE AMERICANS

HON. BOB SCHAFFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, last month I joined people throughout Colorado and across the nation in celebrating Pacific American Heritage Month. The Pacific American community represents an important foundation of America's future and I commend their proud celebration of heritage and community.

Taiwanese American Heritage Week of Pacific American Heritage Month celebrates the unique and diverse contributions of the more than 500,000 Taiwanese Americans in the United States. This portion of the population has made countless significant achievements in this country and their accomplishments can be found in every facet of American life. For instance, Taiwanese Americans have succeeded as successful and notable artists, Nobel Laureate scientists, researchers, human rights activists, and business leaders.

In addition to recognizing these contributions, this is an excellent opportunity to celebrate the success of democracy on the island of Taiwan. Since 1987, the Taiwanese people have possessed the rights to select their own leaders, practice the religion of their choice, and express their thoughts openly and freely. Taiwan is a vibrant and democratic participant in the family of nations.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, Taiwanese American Heritage Week recognizes the long-standing friendship between the United States and Taiwan. Earlier this year, I joined my Congressional colleagues in proudly celebrating the 20th Anniversary of the signing of the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA) into law. The TRA is an important reminder of the strong bond of friendship between our two nations.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the great accomplishments and contributions of the Taiwanese American community.

MANDATORY GUN SHOW BACKGROUND CHECK ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 17, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2122) to require background checks at gun shows, and for other purposes:

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong opposition to this amendment. Many of us here in Congress are working to keep guns out of the hands of criminals. But if this amendment is approved, it will do just the opposite because it will give law enforcement officials less time to complete background checks at gun shows. It is a step backward.

This amendment is ineffective and is riddled with loopholes. It would weaken existing laws and put the safety of law enforcement officials and every person in this nation at risk. It is no coincidence that the gun lobby supports this measure.

It would be a sad commentary on the state of Congress if the gun lobby is successful in strong-arming members of Congress to support this measure. Should this amendment pass, American families will soon find out that the gun lobby, with its deep pockets, calls the shots in the U.S. House of Representatives.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment and support the McCarthy/Roukema/Blagojevich amendment and other measures that will be offered during this debate. We must put the safety and security of our children ahead of the interests of the gun lobby.

These measures include the sale of child-safety locks with each handgun, instant background checks at gun shows, and the importation ban of ammunition magazines with a capacity of ten or more rounds of ammunition.

This is what a majority of our constituents want and it is the duty of Congress to respond to their outcry.

THE STANLEY CUP CHAMPION DALLAS STARS

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, instead of being relegated to a long and cold life in Buffalo, the Stanley Cup will be deep in the warm heart of Texas, specifically the great city of Dallas.

We have the Dallas Stars to thank for bringing the cup to us after coming close to winning the cup in the semifinals last year. However, we cannot say we thank our lucky stars, for they defeated Buffalo with skill, determination and hard work. That was not luck.

This determination was exemplified by the play of Dallas Stars goaltender Eddie Belfour, who made 53 saves in the winning game of the Stanley Cup series.

The result of their defeating the Buffalo Sabers means more than a Stanley Cup coming to the best city in the world. The victory by the Dallas Stars has made a proud city even more proud.

Mr. Speaker, this was evident yesterday morning in Dallas as thousands of her citizens and Stars fans joined the team in downtown Dallas to honor our Stanley Cup champions.

Mr. Speaker, the Stars truly shine bright "deep in the heart of Texas." Green and black are the colors of the National Hockey League and, I will wager that next year, they will shine even brighter.

Mr. Speaker, what makes this victory even sweeter is the fact that for 3 years, the Stars have won the President's trophy that goes to the team with the best record in the National Hockey League. At the same time, the Stanley Cup was out of the reach of such a deserving team during those years.

Mr. Speaker, I join the constituents of the 30th Congressional District and the residents of Dallas who are Stars fans in congratulating the 1999 Stanley Cup Champions, the Dallas Stars. Thank you for bringing the cup home to our proud city.

HUNGER RELIEF IS CONFLICT PREVENTION

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call my colleagues' attention to an OpEd by President Jimmy Carter ("First Step Toward Peace is Eradicating Hunger," International Herald Tribune, June 17, 1999). I ask that the text of this article be entered into the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to heed its wise message: that where there is mass hunger and poverty there is fertile ground for tyranny, civil strife, internal displacement, and social upheaval. Our own economic and security interests are threatened by the fact that one-fifth of the world's people lives in extreme poverty, struggling to survive on incomes equivalent to less than a dollar a day. And we know that an ounce of crisis prevention through well-spent poverty relief is worth of pound of cure, in the form of massive humanitarian operations, military intervention, and post-war reconstruction.

A study by the Congressional Budget Office itself found a "striking correlation between economic malaise on the one hand, and domestic unrest on the other."

For impoverished countries that are serious about raising standards of living, there can be no substitute for good governance and sound economic policies. But even the best trade and investment-led strategies will fail if they leave the poor behind. And, as President Carter points out, agriculture is the economic backbone of most of the world's poorest countries, and the primary source of livelihoods for the poor, rural majority.

The United States took a significant step in the right direction last year by passing and enacting into law the "Africa Seeds of Hope Act," (H.R. 4283, now Public Law: 105-385). This measure was designed to better focus existing programs of assistance to Africa on the needs of rural producers who represent a majority of Africans, yet have the lowest incomes and suffer from the worst food shortages in the world. By focusing resources on farmers, the measure works to ensure the long-term political stability and economic growth of the world's most famine-prone region. Congress should closely follow its implementation, but next steps must include payment of arrears to the United Nations, passage of debt relief legislation, and a reversal in the decline of our foreign aid budget. These are our cheapest and surest lines of defense against costly and destabilizing wars and crippling constraints to our own economic growth and expansion.

[From the Paris International Herald Tribune, June 17, 1999]

FIRST STEP TOWARD PEACE IS ERADICATING HUNGER

(By Jimmy Carter)

WASHINGTON—When the Cold War ended 10 years ago, we expected an era of peace. What we got instead was a decade of war.

The conflict in Kosovo is only the latest to embroil the international community. Conflicts have raged in Latin America, Europe, Africa and Asia in the 1990s, often involving the entire international community in costly relief operations and peacekeeping missions, frequently under hostile conditions. These conflicts—mostly civil wars—have been extraordinarily brutal, with most victims being children, women and the elderly.

Why has peace been so elusive? A recent report sponsored by Future Harvest and generated by the International Peace Research Institute in Oslo examines conflicts around the world and finds that—unlike that in Kosovo—most of today's wars are fueled by poverty, not by ideology.

The devastation occurs primarily in countries whose economies depend on agriculture but lack the means to make their farmland productive. These are developing countries such as Sudan, Congo, Colombia, Liberia, Peru, Sierra Leone and Sri Lanka—places with poor rural areas where malnutrition and hunger are widespread. The report found that poorly functioning agriculture in these countries heightens poverty, which in turn sparks conflict.

This suggests an obvious but often overlooked path to peace: Raise the standard of living of the millions of rural people who live in poverty by increasing agricultural productivity. Not only does agriculture put food on the table, but it also provides jobs, both on and off the farm, that raise incomes. Thriving agriculture is the engine that fuels broader economic growth and development, thus paving the way for prosperity and peace.

The economies of Europe, the United States, Canada and Japan were built on strong agriculture. But many developing countries have shifted their priorities away from farming in favor of urbanization, or they have reduced investments in agriculture because of budget shortages. At the same time, industrialized countries continue to cut their foreign aid budgets, which fund vital scientific research and extension work to improve farming in developing countries.

Unfortunately, much of the farming technology developed in industrialized nations does not transfer to the climates and soils of developing nations. It is not a priority for agricultural giants in affluent nations to focus on the poor regions of the world or to share basic research advances with scientists from poor nations.

This neglect should end. Leaders of developing nations must make food security a priority. In the name of peace, it is critical that both developed and developing countries support cultural research and improved farming practices, particularly in nations often hit with drought and famine.

For example, the report finds that India, one of the world's largest and poorest nations, has managed to escape widespread violence in large measure because the Indian government made food security a priority.

Beginning in the 1960s, farmers in India were given the means to increase their agricultural output with technology packages that included improved seeds, fertilizers, irrigation and training. Today India no longer experiences famines as it did in the first half of this century. India's food security contributes to its relative political stability.

While food is taken for granted in industrialized countries, many parts of the world—sub-Saharan Africa and large parts of Asia, for example—suffer serious food shortages. Today, per capita food production in sub-Saharan Africa is less than it was at the end of the 1950s. The report concludes that new wars will erupt if the underlying conditions that cause them are not improved.

The message is clear: There can be no peace until people have enough to eat. Hungry people are not peaceful people. The Future Harvest report is a reminder that investments in agricultural research today can cultivate peace tomorrow.

Former President Carter is chairman of the nonprofit Carter Center, which seeks to advance peace and health around the world. He contributed this comment to the International Herald Tribune.

OUTSTANDING YOUNG KENTUCKIANS FROM OHIO COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL IN HARTFORD, KENTUCKY, WIN THE "WE THE PEOPLE . . . THE CITIZEN AND THE CONSTITUTION"

HON. ED WHITFIELD

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to recognize 15 talented and patriotic young scholars from my district who competed in the national finals of the "We the People . . . The Citizen and the Constitution" competition earlier this month.

I am pleased to recognize the class from Ohio County High School in Hartford, Kentucky who represented our Commonwealth in this national competition including teams from every state and the District of Columbia.

These outstanding young Kentuckians are: Kyle Autry, Josh Benton, Hollie Bratcher, Jacqueline Bryant, Keara Daughtery, Jarrod Frizzell, Hillary Grant, Ashley Hale, Emily Harris, Erika Hawley, Michelle Jarvis, Nakayah Myers, Meredith Shrewsbury and Alex Taylor. They are coached by John Stofer, a teacher at Ohio County High School.

"We the People . . . The Citizen and the Constitution" is the nation's most extensive program dedicated to educating young people about our Constitution and the Bill of Rights. The three-day national competition simulates a Congressional hearing in which students defend positions on historical and contemporary constitutional issues. This format provides students an opportunity to demonstrate their knowledge and understanding of constitutional principles while providing teachers with an excellent means of assessing performance.

This year's competition involved 1,500 schools and provided literature and course-related materials on the history and principles of constitutional democracy in the United States to more than 75,000 teachers and 24 million students.

High school competition begins at the congressional district level with teams from each school vying for the district championship. District winners go on to compete at a statewide hearing and state champions travel to Washington, D.C. in the spring to represent their state in the national finals.

I am proud of this Ohio County team because this is the first time a school from my district has represented Kentucky in the national event. In a time when public cynicism and apathy are high, it is reassuring to know that this program is instilling a sense of civic duty and understanding in our future leaders.

RECOGNIZING THE LADIES AUXILIARY OF THE WEST TRENTON VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENT

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of the 50th anniversary of the Ladies Auxiliary of the West Trenton Volunteer Fire Department. Over the last half-century, the women of this organization have made a tremendous contribution to their community by lending both financial and moral support to the members of the Fire Department.

Founded on June 8, 1949, the Ladies Auxiliary focused from the very beginning on innovative and creative fundraising ventures. The first year, members assisted the firemen with a Block Dance by volunteering as food stand operators and Bingo judges. They also threw a Halloween Party in the fall. By December 1949, the Auxiliary was able to present the Fire Department with a check for $200.

In the years since, the Auxiliary's yearly donations have grown. The first $5000 check was presented in 1972, followed by a record $17,600 check in 1976. Fundraisers including organized trips to dinner shows, pasta dinners, and flea markets have continued to garner large sums in recent years, and the annual Dinner-Dance has become a township tradition. The funds collected over the years have helped ensure that the West Trenton Fire Department can serve the community effectively.

The Ladies Auxiliary has had a long and rich history on the county and state levels. They have marched in the State Fair and at July 4th parades, are a part of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Mercer County Firemen's Association, and have several Life Members who have joined the State Auxiliary. At their 50th Anniversary Dinner-Dance on June 19, they honored three still-active original charter members: Kitty Canulli, Edith Guadagno, and Grace Diesel Wilwol.

I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing the past and present members of the Ladies Auxiliary to the West Trenton Fire Department on their 50th anniversary. Their dedication to the community is to be commended, and I send them my warmest wishes for another successful 50 years.

TRIBUTE TO WESTHILL MUSIC DEPARTMENT

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, on April 9, 1999, 220 student performers and chaperones of the Westhill High School Music Department from Syracuse, New York, came to the Washington D.C. area for the "Festivals of Music." This event was sponsored by local corporations to bring schools from around the nation to the District of Columbia. Westhill was one of seven schools to give band and chorus performances in front of three judges. These college professor judges evaluated the groups in writing and listened closely and repeatedly to taped sessions. The Westhill group gave an outstanding performance that day, putting Westhill's Music Department among the best in the country. Thomas Lindemann, Department Leader, said the chorus and band received an "excellent" and "superior" rating, respectively, in both concert performances and the music reading exam. Out of the seven schools, the band came in second. The Westhill chorus came in third. These high marks signify how well these group of students performed based on these national standards.

The Westhill Music Department held their spring band concert on May 25th and the final choral concert on June 2nd.

I am very proud of these young people, who have exhibited discipline, sensitivity, and love of music while representing their school in the very finest Westhill tradition. I am equally proud of the Westhill Music Department, the parents, and administrators who are so supportive of this outstanding group.

MANDATORY GUN SHOW
BACKGROUND CHECK ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. DANNY K. DAVIS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 18, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2122) to require background checks at gun shows, and for other purposes;

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Conyers' Democratic Substitute Amendment to H.R. 2122, the Mandatory Gun Show Background Check Act. Today, in this sacred chamber, we have an opportunity to address this nation's most pressing problem, gun violence, in a meaningful and effective fashion. We have a mandate from the people to take action that stems the tide of violence that is sweeping across our nation from Washington, DC to Chicago and LA. The biggest victim of this tide of violence is our children. From Chicago's west side to Colorado and over to Georgia, we have felt the pain of lost precious lives. Now, before we lose another precious life, we must take meaningful action.

Today, we have the opportunity to put in place meaningful gun control legislation, a task that we failed to complete last nite. Lets close the gun show loophole, lets ban the importation of large ammunition clips, lets raise the age to possess a handgun and semi-automatic weapon, lets make sure that every gun is sold with a safety device, lets adopt the Conyers' substitute. Why do we need these protections. Well I'll tell you why, in Chicago we have a gun problem, our children are shooting children. In 1997 firearms were used in over ¾ of the murders committed in Chicago. What makes this statistic so disturbing is that over half of the persons committing murder were under the age of 21. In 1997 Chicago had 246 murders of people under the age of 21 and there were 290 people under the age of 21 charged with committing murder. Chicago contributes more than its fair share of children to a terrible statistical category: children killed too soon by hand guns, and it must stop. How can we in good conscious let this situation go on. Did you know that since 1969 that firearms are the leading cause of death among African-American youths? For thirty years handguns have been killing African-American youth and we still debate whether or not we need this common sense gun legislation. When will we take this necessary action?

Now is not the time for loopholes in the bill that's trying to close loopholes. No one here is saying that someone can't own a gun, all they are saying is you have to wait, that your background must be checked out, and that children should not have guns. These are simple, straight forward, common sense proposals. Lets do it and make America safer and better. Lets not fail America's children again, lets take this opportunity to the right thing and pass meaningful gun reform.

MANDATORY GUN SHOW
BACKGROUND CHECK ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. JANICE D. SCHAKOWSKY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 17, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2122) to require background checks at gun shows, and for other purposes:

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the McCarthy/Roukema/Blagojevich amendment. Common sense dictates that we, as representatives of the American people, support this measure.

This amendment is not about taking rights away from law abiding citizens. It is about closing a loophole in the law that gives criminals a free pass at gunshows. This amendment would provide law enforcement officials with the same three business days to conduct background checks at gunshows that they are now given when guns are bought in stores. This amendment would go a long way in ensuring that guns stay out of the hands of criminals.

The American people demand action from this House of Representatives. Mothers and fathers are demanding action to protect the most vulnerable among us, our children, from the onslaught of gun violence that is taking the lives of 13 of them each day. They are telling us that "It's the guns—stupid."

How many more children will be lost before Congress gets the message? How many more mothers will have to suffer before we act?

The American people are watching. We cannot shy away from our responsibility. We must rise to the occasion and pass meaningful gun safety legislation that will help end the cycle of violence.

CELEBRATING THE 96TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ST. PAUL AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

HON. LOIS CAPPS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of my colleagues an extraordinary church that is celebrating 96 years of service to the community of Santa Barbara—the St. Paul African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The St. Paul African Methodist Episcopal Church was founded in 1903 by Reverend J.P. Wright. The following year, the first church was established on the corner of Haley and Canal Streets. In September of 1913, during the pastorate of Reverend J.A. Duncan, the present building was completed. From the first organization of only one actual member in 1903, the membership has grown to approximately 175 worshippers in 1999.

Mr. Speaker, I am inspired by the A.M.E. Church's service and dedication to the city of Santa Barbara. The congregation has been an integral partner in the creation and success of local programs that fight racism and violence, programs such as Beyond Tolerance, the Pro-Youth Coalition and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. celebrations. The church has shown a commitment and vision that continues to be a beacon of hope to our community.

Mr. Speaker, I was honored to join the A.M.E. Church this past weekend in celebrating 96 years of fellowship. I thank the congregation for all that it has done through the years and wish many more years of success to the St. Paul African Methodist Episcopal Church.

HONORING ERVIN'S ALL-AMERICAN YOUTH CLUB, INC. OF CLEARWATER

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and honor Ervin's All-American Youth Club, Inc., an organization which is having a positive influence on hundreds of Ninth District residents in the North Greenwood neighborhood of Clearwater.

Ervin's All-American Youth Club, Inc. has been changing lives since 1981, when Mr. Ervin Ajamu Babalola realized that something had to be done to help the next generation of children in Clearwater. With only his backyard and plenty of energy and ideas, Mr. Babalola began to develop positive programs for at-risk youth to prevent them from becoming involved in negative behavior. The club has grown tremendously and is now housed at Ervin's Community Enrichment Center.

On June 26, Ervin's All-American Youth Club, Inc. will celebrate its 18th year of focusing on solutions to the problems in its community rather than on the problems. Ervin's quality services encourage self-sufficiency and self-empowerment for the many African American youth and families in the community. Mr. Babalola's achievements have been recognized by the City of Clearwater, the Clearwater Times, and our local Fox television affiliate. In addition, the Florida Department of Corrections presented Mr. Babalola and Ervin's All-American Youth Club, Inc. with Harry K. Singletary, Jr. Crime Prevention Awards.

Ervin's All-American Youth Club, Inc. offers a wide variety of important and valuable programs to the community including:

A community food pantry, which distributes food to community residents through its Community-Unity Food Pantry.

The Generations Program, which is an adopt-a-grandparent program to enable seniors to participate in community service with youth.

A youth employment program during the summer for children ages 10-15.

An After School Enrichment Program, which provides homework and tutoring assistance provided by Pinellas County School volunteers, tutors, staff and certified teachers. A computer center is available along with other resources to help develop healthy attitudes and build self-esteem.

The Dream Builders Academy, which incorporates the Rites of Passage program, develops family bonding, educational experiences and self-image enhancement.

The Youth Empowerment Project, a youth leadership program that motivates at-risk youth and adults to develop their vocational and entrepreneurial skills in business.

Camp Nguzo Saba, a camp for children ages 5-13 designed to develop learning, bonding and contributing in youth.

The SANKOFA Community Theater, which promotes the development and growth of amateur theater and the amateur performing arts in the North Greenwood community.

The Youth Academy of Entrepreneurship, a partnership program which introduces and fosters the entrepreneurial development of youth ages 8-18 from all social, racial, ethnic and national backgrounds.

In addition to all of these worthy initiatives, Ervin's All-American Youth Club, Inc. provides: assistance and referral services for individual and family needs, positive role models who share their experiences and wisdom with youth, field trips, supervised recreation, and participation in the National African American Male Collaboration, an innovative grass roots effort to help men and boys reach their fullest potential.

Ervin's All-American Youth Club, Inc. deserves to be recognized for fulfilling its goal of providing a clean and wholesome environment for the youth and families of Pinellas County, so they may grow and become more productive citizens of the community. Indeed, Mr. Babalola's organization has had such a positive impact that many area youth have gone on to college, joined the work force or elected to serve in the Armed Forces of the United States.

I want to publicly commend Mr. Babalola and the members of his family for their dedicated service on behalf of the youth of North Greenwood and for their outreach programs which have helped provide direction and positive growth for many in the Clearwater community.

JOY OF BEING A FATHER

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, Father's Day brought lots of memories and warm thoughts to all of us. One very special person I know named Philip H. Corboy had a bittersweet Father's Day which was beautifully acknowledged by Steve Neal of the Chicago Sun-Times on Friday, June 18th. Phil and I went all through school together, from grammar and high school through Law school, and have remained close friends ever since.

Steve Neal is a highly respected political analyst and journalist who shares my admiration and respect for Phil Corboy.

I suggest my colleagues read Mr. Neal's column about this extraordinary man.

JOY OF BEING A FATHER SUMMED UP IN EULOGY

He has made a career out of rising to the challenge.

Philip H. Corboy, one of the nation's more accomplished trial lawyers, has effectively represented seriously injured people for a half century. His law firm has won hundreds of settlements or verdicts worth more than $1 million each. He once negotiated a $25 million settlement for plaintiffs in a case involving the crash of a DC-10. Corboy is former chairman of the American Bar Association's litigation unit and a former president of the Chicago Bar Association. He is among President Clinton's staunchest political allies and is the former general counsel of the Illinois Democratic Party.

But for all his achievements, the snow-haired Corboy takes more pride in the accomplishments of his children. He was dealt a most devastating blow in 1976 when his 12-year-old son Robert was killed in an automobile accident. Then last winter, tragedy struck again. Circuit Judge Joan Marie Corboy, the lawyer's only daughter, died in another accident.

There is nothing more painful or difficult for any parent to endure. But Corboy responded to this challenge with a deeply moving tribute to his daughter. On this Father's Day weekend, Corboy's eulogy carries special significance and reminds us that parenthood is the greatest gift.

"She was outspoken, intelligent and fun," Corboy told more than 1,500 people at Joan Marie's memorial service in Northwestern University's law school auditorium. "As a young girl, she held her own in a house full of boys. The truth of the matter is, she ruled the roost

"Joan was not one to mince words. Whenever I had the opportunity, and it was often, I would tell her that a lawyer who appeared before her had told me what a good judge she was, how fair, how smart, how judicious. Ever the practicalist, she would reply, 'Well, Dad, if he—and it was most times as he—thought I was an inept horse's rear, do you think he would have told you that?'

"Once when she was a prosecutor, a judge convened his call by asking Joan, 'Are you ready, sweetie?' To which Joan replied, 'Only if you are, Judge.'

"Joan was true to herself and she was full of self-confidence. Some time after Joan and Jim married, she was asked why she kept her father's name. To which she replied, 'I didn't keep my father's name, I kept my name.'

In dealing with the most haunting question of why she died, Corboy said, 'I gently and reverently suggest that tragic accidents are not God's plan. There is no intentional taking of young people from their husband and children, their parents and siblings.'

Corboy then talked about the meaning of his daughter's life. "What has she taught us in 46 years? That's an easy one. She taught us to respect others, and she taught us how to love. Let me remind you, my sons, that many millions of people have never had a sister. Many millions of fathers and mothers have never had a daughter . . . many millions of people have never had children. . . . We have been fortunate in having the loving, beautiful, smart, strong Joan Marie Corboy with us for the better part of our lives."

He concluded: "Do not think of Joan Marie Corboy as a memory. Think of her spirit and carry her spirit and her love of life in your hearts forever."

In his loss, Corboy has something in common with famed Kansas editor William Allen White, whose only daughter, Mary Katherine, was killed in a 1921 horseback riding accident. Like Joan Corboy, Mary White had a passion for life and a democratic spirit. White wrote a wonderful tribute that was widely reprinted. "I cannot help feeling that her life has reached out and touched other lives through this article, and I hope it has touched them for good," White wrote in a letter to an old college friend.

"Mary was a joyous child. We can't think of her for five minutes consecutively without breaking into a laugh," White went on. "And you can't go around weeping your eyes out and laughing at the same time. We have to laugh if we think of Mary, and we love to think of Mary."

Joan Corboy will be long remembered for the same reasons. When students once asked how she got her job, she replied, "I'm a judge because my father has a lot of clout." But she also was highly qualified and had special grace.

IN HONOR OF EARL H. SIEGMAN
FOR HIS DEDICATED COMMUNITY SERVICE

HON. JIM SAXTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, in honor of Mr. Earl H. Siegman for his remarkable dedication and efforts toward the improvement of the Southern New Jersey community at large, I would like to commend him for his extensive involvement with a myriad of volunteer organizations. Mr. Siegman is the recipient of the Southern New Jersey Development Council's Chairman's Award for expanding development in the Southern New Jersey region. As an accomplished businessman, Mr. Siegman uses his professional talents in assisting many service organizations.

Mr. Siegman served as treasurer and helped to start the 200 Club of Burlington County. The Club provides scholarships and assistance to widows and their families through the collection of donations from businesses and individuals. He has volunteered with the fire fighting community with enormous dedication for many years and continues to do so. His involvements include 22 years of service with the Evesham Board of Fire Commissioners, the Kettle Run Volunteer Fire Company where he once served as Chief Fire Fighter, and the New Jersey State Fire Relief Association where he was treasurer. Mr. Siegman has additionally enjoyed 24 years of faithful service as a member of local and regional school boards. The Lenape Regional High School district has had the benefit of having Mr. Siegman participate in policy discussions which have helped to make the school system one of the best in the region. Its programs have encouraged many students to continue with great success at premier learning institutions throughout the country. Indeed, Earl Siegman has spent his entire adult life serving as a role model to the young people who have had the privilege of knowing him.

As a steadfast leader, Mr. Siegman has served as President of the Southern New Jersey Development Council, where he continues to play an active role in the organization's endeavors to make the Southern New Jersey region a more conducive, as well as lucrative, place for doing business. His 25 years of service to this organization have helped it become a very unique public/private partnership where business leaders and legislators continually strive to improve this often-forgotten area of New Jersey.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Siegman represents the type of leader who is a tremendous source of inspiration for volunteers and the organizations that they assist. His endless enthusiasm, boundless energy and dedicated interest in improving the communities that he serves comprise a compendium of qualities for which we should all strive.

I personally have known Earl Siegman for over 20 years and have witnessed first-hand his sincere devotion to the public good. Earl deserves a great deal of our gratitude and admiration for his tireless service. We congratulate you, Earl H. Siegman, on this well-deserved award.

IN RECOGNITION OF MAL KELLEY

HON. JAMES P. MCGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Mal Kelley, who is stepping down this year as Head Football Coach at Wachusett Regional High School.

Mal Kelley started his coaching career at Millbury High School, spent time at Holy Name High School and in 1985 joined the staff at Wachusett. In 1987 he took over head coaching duties, where he spent over a decade coaching and teaching young men.

In fact, many of Mal Kelley's players have gone on to find success, not only on the field but in other endeavors. Several have earned distinction at top colleges and our military academies. Their success is a tribute to Mal Kelley's dedication and commitment to his players and his community.

Career opportunities in Mal Kelley's chosen field, elementary education, have led him to relinquish his coaching duties. He was recently named principal at the Nelson Place Elementary School in Worcester, MA.

Mr. Speaker, Mal Kelley may not be spending much time on the football field in the future, but I'm quite certain he will continue to improve the lives of young people. I know the rest of the House joins me in paying tribute to Mal Kelley for a job very well done, and wishing him the best of luck in the future.

COST OF GOVERNMENT DAY

HON. RON PACKARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, today is Cost of Government Day. June 22 marks the first day this year when the average family can keep their paycheck, not send it to the government.

The Cost of Government Day symbolizes the total cost of government, not just the cost of taxes. In other words, so far this year, Americans have worked 173 days to have every penny of earnings sent to Washington to pay for our government's oversized financial burden.

Americans already pay more for taxes than for food, clothing, shelter and transportation combined! After today, our families can finally spend their paycheck as they see fit, rather than on regulatory costs and government programs.

Mr. Speaker, let's take this opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to lower taxes and cut government spending. It is time we put a stop to this absurd abuse of taxpayer money and start providing needed tax relief for American families.

ACCLAMATION OF THE CHARETTE HEALTH CARE CENTER

HON. OWEN B. PICKETT

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, I offer for inclusion into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this statement describing the extraordinary capabilities of the Charette Health Care Center at Naval Medical Center Portsmouth and the favorable impact this military treatment facility will have on members of the Armed Services in the Hampton Roads Area of Virginia.

Since its opening on March 15, 1999, the Charette Health Care Center at Naval Medical Center Portsmouth has proved to be an invaluable asset and a visible quality of life improvement for active duty service members and other beneficiaries in and around Tidewater, VA.

The Navy's newest, largest and most modern hospital includes over one million square feet of floor space, housing over 300 clinical/exam rooms and over 140 special treatment rooms. The technology incorporated in this new facility is state-of-the-art, and includes two MRIs, two CT scanners, two angiography suites, two linear accelerators, two mammography rooms, three dedicated ultrasound rooms, radiographic head and chest units, and twenty-two dental exam rooms. Two hyperbaric chambers, used in the treatment of wounds and compression illnesses are scheduled to be installed in January of 2000. The additional services being made available to our uniformed men and women are of the highest quality and the latest state-of-the-art technology.

Other advanced technology that will enhance the quality of care and improve the efficiency of service includes a digital imaging picture archive system which replaces conventional x-rays; a computerized tube system to transfer prescriptions, samples, and test results; and a high speed data transfer system which powers the hospital's integrated computer network system and training data base.

The most significant and dramatic technology improvements can be found in the hospital's OB/GYN and Labor and Delivery departments. To meet the evolving needs of a military force comprised of a growing number of women, as well as continue to meet the requirements of female family members, the Charette Health Care Center offers a comprehensive in-hospital birthing center. Ten birthing rooms allow patients to progress from the onset of labor to delivery and recovery in the same room. If complications arise during labor, four critical care labor rooms are easily accessible, as well as a state-of-the-art neonatal intensive care unit that is second to none anywhere either in the military or civilian medical community. Moving the labor and delivery service from the historic 1830 hospital building to the new Charette Health Care Center has allowed the Navy to increase capacity and easily accommodate a significant number of additional patients who previously received care elsewhere due to facility restrictions.

Naval Medical Center Portsmouth is one of the Navy's premier locations for graduate medical education. The opening of the Charette Health Care Center will help make an outstanding Graduate Medical Education even better, by providing fellows, residents and interns a hands-on milieu where state-of-the-art technology can be paired with a world class teaching experience. More specifically, there are 11 Medical and Surgical Residencies and 1 Fellowship which account for 137 Residents and Fellows. Also, there are 5 Categorical Internships and 1 Transitional Internship which account for 72 Interns. Additionally, Naval Medical Center Portsmouth is a medical education partner on both a regional and national level as evidenced by the numerous training Memoranda of Understanding that are established and maintained with a myriad of other health care facilities.

The most impressive feature of Naval Medical Center Portsmouth is the caring environment provided by an outstanding team of military and civilian medical professionals. This fantastic staff accounts for the seamless transition into the Charette Health Care Center, in just five months, when the industry standard to relocate a hospital of this magnitude is typically longer than twelve months. The staff at Naval Medical Center Portsmouth continue to find innovative ways to make quality patient care accessible and have developed numerous patient-friendly amenities in the Charette Health Care Center. The opening of the Charette Health Care Center provides this dedicated team of medical professionals with the tools required to set a new and superior standard for healthcare delivery to the over 400,000 military beneficiaries in the Hampton Roads Area.

TRIBUTE TO BRUCE HARRIS

HON. MARION BERRY

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a bittersweet note. One of the most valuable people on my staff will leave soon to pursue further professional goals and ideals. During my time as a Member of Congress, I have had the great pleasure of working with an extremely dedicated Chief of Staff, Bruce Harris. Bruce has been extremely loyal to me personally, and I am most grateful for that. More importantly, he has been loyal and devoted to the people of the First Congressional District of Arkansas.

Bruce will soon leave the office of the 1st Congressional District to go back to his home state of Arkansas and will be leaving huge shoes to fill. But he also leaves behind an outstanding record of achievement for the people of the 1st Congressional District of Arkansas, who have come to know, respect, and love him for his administrative talents, legislative skill, and his warm and caring personality.

Bruce is a native Arkansan. He has served the people of Arkansas first, as an aide to then-Representative Blanche Lincoln and then as chief of staff since 1997 when I came to office. He is remembered fairly and fondly by the many people with whom he has worked.

Bruce Harris is the kind of person who commands not only the respect and admiration of the staff, but also earns their fondness and loyalty as well. In short, he is a leader.

His personal style and professionalism will be missed, yet I know he will serve well in his new endeavor. It has been my extreme pleasure to have watched him develop and grow in running my operation, and although we will miss him, it is with great pride and admiration that I watch him take on this new and deserved challenge.

Mr. Speaker, my wife Carolyn and I, along with the entire 1st District staff, wish Bruce the very best in the future, and though we are said to lose such talent, we know we have in him the very best kind of friend, for life.

INTRODUCTION OF THE PROTECTION FOR TEMPORARIES IN THE WORKPLACE LEGISLATIVE PACKAGE

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to introduce "Protection for Temporaries in the Workplace," legislation designed to address the lack of equity and economic security so prevalent among today's temporary workforce.

Our strong economy has yielded more jobs for Americans than at any other time in recent history. Indeed, joblessness is now far below what many economists thought could be sustained in a modern economy. Yet, the changes in the labor market over the past generation has raised concerns with job security, workplace protection and employee benefits. Once secure, a growing sector of today's workforce no longer has the luxury of working for the same employer until retirement.

Today, many full-time permanent jobs are being replaced by temporary positions as "flexibility" becomes a driving force sustaining our economic expansion. According to the National Association of Temporary Staffing Services, over 10 percent of today's workforce is temporary. These temporary jobs rarely offer adequate health or pension benefits. Additionally, many employees are misclassified as "temporary" when they are in fact, full-time employees. Many employment law protections are antiquated and often leave temporary workers no recourse against abusive employer practices. This is not only bad for the employees, but also bad for employers who do the "right thing" by taking responsibility for their workers by putting them at a competitive disadvantage with companies who skirt the law.

The temporary work industry is flourishing in large part because employers are turning to these work arrangements to cut costs and raise revenues because they can exclude employees from benefit plans and deny them protection under labor laws. This is creating a new working underclass and lowering our national living standard.

Although temporary work provides flexibility and independence for some Americans, others resort to "temping" only because they have not been able to secure permanent, full-time jobs. According to a report by Dr. Helene Jorgensen of the 2030 Center, temporary employees lack many of the benefits and protections that are standard with permanent employment. According to the report, only 5 percent of temporary workers age 25-34 have health insurance through their employer, whereas 50.5 percent of the general population is covered. In addition, these temporary employees earn on average 16.5 percent less than they would have earned working in a regular job.

More alarming are the instances in which companies regularly hire "temporary" employees for extended periods and continually exclude them from any benefit plans that they offer their "permanent" employees. In many cases, temporaries are performing the same work alongside a "permanent" employee, yet are taking home lower pay and have no access to health, vacation, or pension benefits. Employers regularly use this practice of hiring "Permatemps" to keep the costs of their benefit plans at a minimum.

My legislative package will remedy these situations, and prohibit employers from evading their legal and moral responsibilities to their employees, without placing a mandate on America's businesses. Businesses are not required to provide benefits for temporary employees, but are prohibited from using underhanded tactics to exclude full-time employees who would be otherwise eligible to participate in a benefit plan.

The ERISA Clarification Act, amends the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) to prevent employers from misdesignating employees as "temporary", who are otherwise eligible for health, pension and other employee benefits.

Specifically, the bill defines "Year of Service" in ERISA to include all service for the employer as an employee under the common law, regardless of how or where the worker is paid—through an employment agency, payroll agency, temporary help agency or staffing firm.

The Equity for Temporary Workers Act, provides additional protection in the workplace for temporary employees by prohibiting discrimination in benefit plans that are not governed by ERISA, requiring temporary employees to receive equal pay for equal work and amending OSHA to ensure that employers are responsible for the health and safety of all employees at the worksite—not just those who are "permanent."

TRIBUTE TO GORDON BYNUM

HON. MARSHALL "MARK" SANFORD

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to pay tribute to, and say good-bye to, a dear friend. Gordon you will be missed, but not forgotten. Gordon Bynum was the living definition of the word, "friend." This spring, on what turned out to be his last trip down to Coosaw, he called my wife, Jenny, ahead of time to say he wanted to come early to get things ready for the party. He was there and helped. This was part of a well worn pattern in the way he lived his life. Getting there early, staying later—going the extra mile—was what he thought normal. If I had ever found myself in real trouble with the option of only one call, it would have been to Gordon.

In his 44 years he did not spectate on life, he lived it. When Atlanta was still sleeping, I remember leaving town in the early morning hours to go on one of his crazy mountain canoe trips. Exotic locations, atlases, wilderness maps were part of Gordon's world; Jenny and I still have at the house National Geographic books he had sent after our wedding. In fact, his birthday card to me, this year, one I received two days after his death, had penned at the bottom, "Adventure soon?"

Finally, he lived a life that towers as an example to each of my four boys. At dinner on Tuesday upon hearing the story of Gordon's death, a friend asked, "Was he a Christian?" I said, "Absolutely." Whereupon he asked, "How do you know?" I said, "Because Matthew 5:16 says let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in Heaven." He had the light, you could see it in his eyes and in his actions. One of those actions was his work at the Sheppard Clinic. He loved the patients and they loved him, despite the fact volunteerism is a trait lost on most bachelors. In short, he didn't spend his time talking about his faith, he lived it. Love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, gentleness, faithfulness, and self-control are what the Bible calls the fruit—the byproduct—of the spirit. He had it in abundance. He would have given love and more generously to Marilee, who he was to have married two weeks after his death. Love was the easiest word to describe him, and I suppose what I will most miss. Good-bye.

IN HONOR OF JUAN CARLOS RUIZ, OF MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN

HON. THOMAS M. BARRETT

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk today about a remarkable, courageous man who has dedicated himself to improving the lives of those around him. Mr. Juan Carlos Ruiz is a fine member of my home community of Milwaukee, Wisconsin and I am proud to announce that he has been recognized for his good work with the nation's most distinguished citation for community health leadership: the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation's Community Health Leadership Award.

Mr. Ruiz has been committed to social justice since he was politically active in his home country of Peru. Fourteen years ago, Mr. Ruiz discovered that his life may be in danger because of some work he was doing in opposition to "Shining Path" and was forced to flee his homeland. Four years later, he arrived in the United States where he secured political asylum. Mr. Ruiz quickly returned to community activism and leadership, helping develop a community nursing center at Riverwest Elementary School while working at the East Side Housing Action Coalition (ESHAC). He also coordinated a crime prevention campaign to identify and close down 50 suspected drug houses, as well as mobilize over 300 city residents behind a liquor license reform.

And, in his spare time, Mr. Ruiz helped to create and continue to run a neighborhood group, the Cleaning Out Riverwest Committee (CROC). CROC has redeveloped Gordon Park and provides recreational activities to youth.

For the past several years, Juan Carlos Ruiz has led the fight against childhood lead poisoning in inner-city Milwaukee. Ruiz is a community organizer for the Wisconsin Citizen Action Fund's Community Lead-Safe Zones project. He directs the Parents Against Lead Task Force (PAL) which focuses on inner-city low-income neighborhoods where over one-half the children tested have elevated levels of lead in their blood and lead poisoning rates are estimated at five times the national average. PAL recruits parents, and trains individuals to become community organizers and provide door-to-door and community-wide education forums. There are now over 50 active PAL members working in partnership with federal, state and local health departments, schools, churches, health centers, and parents to fight childhood lead poisoning in Milwaukee.

Mr. Ruiz has coined a rallying cry for parents and others concerned about childhood lead poisoning: "Stop Using Our Children as Lead Detectors." Under this banner, Ruiz scored a major victory for children when his group pushed an ordinance through City Hall that will make rental properties lead-safe homes for children. The program he championed also provides financing to help landlords in targeted neighborhoods assess and eliminate the problem. This initiative is the result of years of work, and Juan Carlos Ruiz built an effective partnership to get the job done. He worked with the Milwaukee Health Department and key members of the Milwaukee Common Council to build public awareness of childhood lead poisoning and support for the ordinance. He also helped me to get involved in the effort to help secure HUD funding that the City will use to implement the ordinance.

Juan Carlos Ruiz is a dedicated community servant, activist, and leader. He was selected as one of ten out of more than 300 nominated for this honor. Juan Carlos Ruiz is a credit to Milwaukee, and through his tireless work, my home town has become a better place to live and a safe place to grow up. I am proud to join his family, his colleagues and the Community Health Leadership Program in congratulating Juan Carlos Ruiz on a job well done.

HELP US TO PRESERVE THE HISTORY OF THE HOUSE

HON. JOHN B. LARSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. LARSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform my colleagues about legislation I am introducing today to help preserve the history of the House.

Every time we pass through Statuary Hall, which is the old House chamber, we are reminded by the statue of Clio that our actions as members of the House should be recorded for the benefit of future generations. Unfortunately, however, we do not have an updated narrative history of the House of Representatives, especially one arranged chronologically. Moreover, it seems that the only time we take stock of the history of the individual members of the House is either when they retire, such as the recent tribute to Representative Robert L. Livingston, or when they die, such as the recent memorial service for Representative Mo Udall. These events, however, are fleeting snapshots of the rich portrait that is the House and its members, which is why we need a more comprehensive history.

My bill, the History of the House Awareness and Preservation Act, would authorize the Library of Congress to commission eminent historians to assemble a written history of the House. The history is intended for Members, staff, and the general public. Copies will be provided to each Member and will also be sold to the general public by the Library of Congress. It is expected that there will be no cost to the federal government for this book. The bill lets the experts at the Library decide whether the cost of this book should be paid for by selling it or through the raising of private funds.

The bill would also allow the Library to update and expand the collection of oral histories of members given to the Library by the Association of Former Members of Congress, and it is hoped that the oral histories will be made available in digital format so they can be downloaded from the Library's Internet Web Page. Additionally, the bill contains two sense of the Congress provisions, which state that orientation programs for freshman members of the House should contain a seminar on the history of the House, and that the Speaker of the House should conduct a series of fora on the history of the House.

I am introducing this bill with over 240 original co-sponsors, including the Speaker of the House, the Honorable J. DENNIS HASTERT, and the Democratic Leader, the Honorable RICHARD A. GEPHARDT. I sincerely appreciate their endorsement and encouragement.

I am including a copy of a letter in support of this bill from the Librarian of Congress, Dr. James H. Billington, for which I am very grateful. I would like to urge the rest of my colleagues to support this bi-partisan effort in order to ensure that we do our best to preserve the history of this great body in which we serve.

THE LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS

HON. JOHN B. LARSON,

U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. LARSON: I very much appreciate the opportunity to review the final version of your draft bill authorizing the Library of Congress to oversee the preparation of a written history of the House of Representatives. I believe the legislation you have developed allows the Library to bring together a number of necessary elements to produce an authoritative publication that will fill a void in the annals of the Congress, and I support both the bill's goal and substance.

Your legislation will allow the Library's publishing office and curatorial staff to work together to develop the project, identify primary source material in our collections, and explore various options for its publication. As I indicated in my comments on an earlier draft of the legislation, I envisage appointing a scholarly advisory board, including historians as well as current and former Members of Congress, to assist in the selection of one or more historians to provide the text of the book, and to continue to be involved through the publication stage. The legislation provides sufficient discretion for the Library to work out the details of funding, publication, marketing and distribution in a manner consistent with the best interests of the House of Representatives.

The legislation also reflects the appropriate roles of the Library of Congress and the U.S. Association of Former Members of Congress in the collection and preservation of oral histories of the Congress. These will undoubtedly prove invaluable to some future historian in continuing the narrative begun by your legislation.

I would like to extend again my offer to hold a lecture series on the history of the House of Representatives in the Members' Room, as a way of both stimulating interest in the published history and drawing together Members, former Members, historians and the Library's incomparable collections for the enjoyment and enlightenment of all.

Sincerely,

JAMES H. BILLINGTON,

The Librarian of Congress.

TRIBUTE TO FRANK D. STELLA

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 28, 1999, a large group of people from a wide variety of walks of life will gather to spend some time with, and pay tribute to, a distinguished citizen of Michigan—Frank D. Stella. In many cases, those in attendance will be meeting one another for the first time. They may have little in common in terms of their occupations or their political affiliations and they will come from virtually all ethnic and religious backgrounds.

What they will have most in common is their friend, Frank Stella, the warmth of his friendship, and the depth of his humanity that each has witnessed over the years.

Frank Stella has been involved in a unique breadth of community activities, incessantly finding time from his highly successful entrepreneurship as Chairman and CEO of F.D. Stella Products, which he founded after his return from service in World War II. The following are just a sample of his activities over four decades: Board of Trustees at the University of Detroit-Mercy; Chairman, Merger Committee, Mt. Carmel Mercy Hospital and Samaritan Hospital; Chairman, Wayne State University Advisory Board; Board of Directors and Board of Trustees, Michigan Cancer Foundation; Board of Directors, Hispanics Organized to Promote Entrepreneurs (H.O.P.E., Inc.); Board of Directors, Detroit Renaissance; Board of Directors, New Detroit, Inc.; Board of Trustees of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, Washington, DC; National Committee for the Vatican Judaica Exhibition; Chairman, Board of Directors and Executive Committee, Save Orchestra Hall, Inc.; Board of Directors, Michigan Opera Theatre; Board of Directors of the Detroit Round Table (Christians and Jews); Board of Trustees, WTVS/Channel 56—Detroit Public Television; and Member of the Board and Executive Committee, Detroit Symphony Orchestra Hall.

I have been particularly privileged to work with Frank Stella in an arena that embodies his love of life—music. He was instrumental in the efforts to save Orchestra Hall. That magnificent and historic amphitheater for the sound of music was threatened by a wrecker's ball. Frank Stella jumped into action with others and today its unique acoustics spread the joy of classical and other music, instead of being replaced by a proposed fast food establishment. He also has been instrumental in the development of the Michigan Opera Theater.

Frank Stella's life has been a testament to the American truth. Diversity is a source of strength. Pride in one's heritage empowers our nation, especially when it is blended with an appreciation for the heritage of all others.

On June 28, hundreds of friends will gather—in Frank Stella's style—with informality, no long speeches, no pretenses, some good food and exuberant cheer. Proceeds from the dinner will not go for fancy personal gifts but to help others, the next generation, through the F.D. Stella Scholarship Fund at the National Italian American Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise today to enter these words into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is so fitting they be placed in the proceedings of this institution, which embodies Frank Stella's faith in American democracy and is built on the kind of political activity in which he has participated but which in the end can rise above all partisanship.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JAMES E. ROGAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. ROGAN. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 242, I was present, but inadvertently failed to be recorded as voting. I should have been recorded as an "aye" vote.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE
BARBARA BOUDREAU

HON. MAXINE WATERS

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. DIXON and I, rise today to pay tribute to the Honorable Barbara M. Boudreaux, a dedicated public servant who is ending her service today as a member and Vice President of the Board of Education for the Los Angeles Unified School District. We are proud to join her many friends and colleagues today in honoring and celebrating her many years of exemplary service.

Barbara's remarkable record includes not only eight years as a member of the Board of Education, but more than thirty years of service as a highly respected career educator. During the span of her career she has been a teacher, a training teacher, a vice-principal, and a principal.

She also has served the district as a mentor for teachers, as a leader of the district's Academy for Administrators, and as an assessor of promotional examinations for principals. She was also an evaluator of textbooks, and assisted in development of the district's handbook on preventing and controlling anti-social behavior among our youth.

Barbara always understood that the health of our educational institutions is closely linked to the health of our communities. She has been, and continues to be, heavily involved in the life of our community.

In 1991, Barbara was elected to represent District 1, on the Board of Education. During her tenure, the Board was faced with some of its most difficult challenges. One of the most pressing of these were the problems of infrastructure and the need to modernize older facilities, and build new campuses in underserved communities.

Barbara realized that these barriers to learning had to be removed. Under her leadership, the Board placed a school bond initiative, Proposition BB, on the ballot which would address the district's infrastructure needs. More important, she reached out to the larger community and invested the hard work and persuasive power required to obtain the unprecedented two-thirds voter margin required for passage.

Armed with resources from the bond measure, the Board has set out to repair and renovate older schools, build new schools and reduce overcrowding. As a result of her tireless efforts, classrooms that were once too hot, have been retrofitted with air conditioners creating a more conducive learning environment for the school children.

Barbara understood, however, that more than cooling the classrooms would have to be done to help our children succeed. So she marshaled the needed funds that will ultimately put computers in all of our classrooms. And, when the district's under-achieving schools were identified, she made sure that there was a special intervention of resources and talent that has resulted in higher test scores.

As Barbara prepares to leave the Board of Education, she can take great satisfaction in knowing that she leaves the district in better shape than when she was first elected, and that the foundation for a successful future has been built.

Mr. Speaker, Barbara Boudreaux has made an important difference for our children in Los Angeles. We appreciate this opportunity to honor the exceptional legacy she leaves, and to salute her distinguished contributions to the Los Angeles community. We know our colleagues join us in wishing her and her husband Albert and their family a future that is full of good health and prosperity.

SAN PIETRO APOSTOLO PAYS TRIBUTE TO ANGELINE BONFORTE

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, June 26, the Saint Peter Society (San Pietro Apostolo) of Long Branch, NJ, will pay tribute to one of our leading citizens, Mrs. Angeline Bonforte. It is a great honor for me to join in recognition and raise of someone who has contributed so much to our community.

Angie Bonforte's motto is "never stop." Seeing all that she has accomplished, and continues to do, makes it clear that these are the words she lives by. The daughter of Dominick and Florence Pingitore, Angeline was born in Little Falls, NY. The family moved to Long Branch, and Angeline graduated from Long Branch Senior High School. She went on to earn a B.S. degree from Trenton State Teachers College, and then pursued a distinguished career as an elementary school teacher at Star of the Sea School in Long Branch for 25 years. In addition to being a teacher, she also became a real estate agent.

Angeline married Rocco Bonforte and they have two daughters, Mary Ann and Carol Lynn. Mr. Bonforte is also one of Long Branch's best known and most celebrated citizens, having served as Police Commissioner of our City. While steadfastly supporting her husband's political endeavors, Angeline Bonforte has been a leader in her own right. He served as President of the Women's Auxiliary of the Amerigo Vespucci Society, President of the Women's Democratic Club of Long Branch and the Women's Democratic Club of Monmouth County. She has also served as a Trustee of the Long Branch Public Library and has been associated with several civil and local clubs and activities.

While Angeline is "officially" in retirement now, she is still extremely active, including her involvement on a daily basis in Carol Lynn and Don Chetkin Art Gallery in Red Bank, NJ. When here in the nation's capital, she is at work in her granddaughter's business.

Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to include in the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some of the achievements of Angeline Bonforte on the occasion of her being honored by San Pietro Apostolo.

TRIBUTE TO GENERAL DENNIS J. REIMER

HON. FLOYD SPENCE

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the outstanding service to our Nation of General Dennis J. Reimer, the United States Army's 33rd Chief of Staff, who retired on June 21, 1999. General Reimer's career has spanned over 36 years, during which time he has distinguished himself as a soldier, a leader, and a trusted advisor to both the President and the United States Congress.

As Chief of Staff, General Reimer has prepared our Nation's Army well for the challenges of the 21st Century. He leaves the Army trained and ready, a superbly disciplined force that supports our Country and its interests in 81 countries around the globe. In a period fraught with leadership challenges, General Reimer has defined and inculcated the Army's values of "Loyalty, Duty, Respect, Selfless Service, Honor, Integrity and Personal Courage" throughout the total force. As a result of his efforts, he has created a seamless force which maximizes the unique and complementary capabilities of its three components—Active, Army Reserve, and National Guard, creating a "Total Army." He can take great pride in the Army's accomplishments, under his leadership, as well as its current state of preparedness.

General Reimer has created the vision and set the stage for the Army of the 21st Century, a strategically responsive force. Throughout his career, General Reimer has distinguished himself in numerous command and staff positions with American Forces stationed both overseas and in the continental United States. In Asia, he served two tours of duty in Vietnam and a tour in Korea. In Europe, his assignments included serving at the Commander, Division Artillery and the Chief of Staff of the 8th Infantry Division.

General Reimer's stateside assignments have included serving as the Commanding General, 4th Infantry Division, at Fort Carson, Colorado, and as the Commanding General, Forces Command, at Fort McPherson, Georgia. Since June 1995 General Reimer has served in his present assignment at the 33rd United States Army Chief of Staff. He has served with great distinction. I would like to offer my congratulations to General Reimer on a job well done, and to wish him and his wife, Mary Jo, much continued success in their future endeavors.

IN THE INTRODUCTION OF V.I. LEGISLATURE REDUCTION ACT

HON. DONNA MC CHRISTENSEN

OF VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Ms. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill which was submitted to me, by the members of the Legislature of my Congressional District, to make it possible for the Virgin Islands Legislature to reduce its size. This proposal was also introduced in the previous Congress but was not acted upon in time to become law.

Mr. Speaker, the Virgin Islands and the other U.S. Territories continue to strive for full local self-government. While we have achieved local self-government in many ways already, from time to time, those of us that have not yet adopted a local constitution, have to petition Congress to make changes in the general law, or Organic Act, which governs us. This bill is one of those times.

In a resolution petitioning the Congress to reduce the number of Virgin Islands Senators, it stated that the people of the Virgin Islands is represented by a 15 member Legislature which is among the highest ratio of legislators to constituents currently existing in any U.S. jurisdiction. The bill that I introduce today does not proscribe what the number of Virgin Islands Senators will be but leaves it up to the legislature and people of the Virgin Islands to decide.

I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

AVIATION INVESTMENT AND REFORM ACT FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

SPEECH OF

HON. LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 15, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1000) to amend title 49, United States Code, to reauthorize programs of the Federal Aviation Administration, and for other purposes:

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Chairman, I regretfully rise in opposition to H.R. 1000. Our country's aviation system is integral to our nation's transportation system and there's no question we need to continue to invest in America's aviation infrastructure.

The problem is that this bill takes the Aviation Trust Fund "off-budget" which means aviation taxes cannot be used for any other purpose, creating what's called a firewall around billions of dollars in aviation taxes. As a former member of the Budget Committee and a current member of the Appropriations Committee, I can safely say this makes a mockery of the budget process and threatens our surplus.

Supporters of the bill argue that since the money in the aviation trust fund comes from aviation taxes, it should all be spent for aviation purposes. As a matter of tax fairness, federal taxes should be spent for their intended purposes.

But this is simply a red-herring argument to justify placing aviation spending at the absolute head of the line in competition for federal funds. Furthermore, taking the trust fund off-budget means that there would be no budgetary constraints to control aviation spending.

This is troubling for two reasons.

First, why are we exempting aviation programs from the normal budget scrutiny that all other programs must endure? Do we really want to place aviation funding ahead of all other federal priorities such as education, health care, Medicare, or national defense?

Second, taking the trust fund off-budget means we jeopardize our surplus. AIR-21 will spend $14.3 billion more over five years on airport construction, busting the budget caps. This additional funding, since it's not subject to the normal budget rules which require offsets, will be paid out of the surplus. While Republicans may be confused as to what their priorities are, Democrats are unified that any budget surplus should be dedicated to shoring up Social Security and Medicare.

Let's be clear. This bill is nothing more than an attempt to put one small part of the budget ahead of the other. At the same time, it busts our spending caps, eviscerates any notion of reasonable fiscal discipline and handicaps our ability to preserve the surplus.

If Congress feels we should increase the nation's investment in aviation, let's do that. But let's not permanently put one category of spending ahead of another. In the spirit of budget discipline and fairness, I urge my colleagues to vote against this bill.

RESOLVING THE CONFLICT IN SRI LANKA

HON. MICHAEL E. CAPUANO

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit the following article from The Boston Globe on December 4, 1998 for the RECORD. The conflict in Sri Lanka has existed for over 16 years without any solution. We must encourage the parties involved to stop the terror and to accept a third party mediation to end the war.

[From the Boston Globe, December 4, 1998]

A CHANCE FOR PEACE IN SRI LANKA

For the first time in four years, there is a glimmer of hope for peace talks to end one of the world's bloodiest conflicts, the war between the government of Sri Lanka and that country's Tamil minority. Terrible suffering on both sides has induced a war-weariness that may become the prelude to peace-making.

A call for negotiations last Friday from the leader of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam drew a wary but welcoming response from Sri Lanka's main opposition party. "This is a major move by the Tigers, and it is a very positive one to which the government must respond," said the leader of the United National Party. This response is promising because for too long the opposition and the governing People's Alliance of President Chandrika Kumaratunga have competed to appear the more inflexible foe of dialogue with the Tamils.

Because Washington maintains warm relations with the Sri Lankan government, even providing training and arms sales to its armed forces, and since the Tiger leader Velupillai Prabhakaran called for third-party mediation in his offer of negotiations, the United States could play a crucial role in ending Sri Lanka's long nightmare.

The State Department has been reluctant to become involved in the conflict because neither side had been willing to accept the premise of a negotiated solution, as the antagonistic parties did for the Oslo accords in the Middle East and the peace talks that George Mitchell guided in Northern Ireland. Even now the State Department does not want to rush ahead of events.

Nevertheless, Tamil intermediaries are sending exploratory messages to the Tiger leadership asking about the chances for a cease-fire. If the Tigers want to shed their well deserved reputation as incorrigible terrorists, they will accept the idea of a cease-fire. In return, the Chandrika government should agree to withdraw its troops from the northeast province. If these gestures of good will are made by the belligerents, the United States would do well to take on the role of third-party mediator in peace talks.

TRIBUTE TO COLONEL GILPIN RAY
FEGLEY, UNITED STATES ARMY,
ON THE OCCASION OF THIS RE-TIREMENT

HON. GENE TAYLOR

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Colonel Gilpin R. Fegley as he prepares to culminate his active duty career in the United States Army. Gil is the epitome of an outstanding officer and leader.

Colonel Fegley began his career more than 25 years ago when he was commissioned as a second lieutenant, and first served as an Assistant Staff Judge Advocate Trial Counsel in Grafonver, Germany. A graduate of the Dickinson School of Law in Carlisle, Pennsylvania and the Command and General Staff College, Gil Fegley has met the many challenges of military service as an Army Officer, and has faithfully served his country in a variety of command staff assignments in the Continental United States, Hawaii, and Germany. Gil also deployed in support of Operation Desert Storm as the Deputy Staff Judge Advocate.

Gil has served in the Army Legislative Liaison Investigation and Legislative Division as the Chief, Legislative Counsel. During his tenure in the Legislative Liaison Office, Gil worked hard to represent the interests of the Army to Members of Congress. He presented a positive and impressive image of the Army during the course of his duties there.

He concludes his career as the Special Assistant for Installations and Legal Issues in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs. Always thorough and precise in applying his legal skills, Gil was also very generous with colleagues, both senior and subordinate, who sought out his advice on legislative matters. Senior Defense officials depended on Gil for his studious approach to matters and Congressional Members and staff looked to him for his honesty and professional assessment of any given situation.

Mr. Speaker, serve and dedication to duty have been the hallmarks of Colonel Fegley's career. He has served our nation and the Army well during his years of service, and we are indebted for his many contributions and sacrifices in the defense of the United States. I am sure that everyone who has worked with Gil joins me in wishing him and his wife, Marion, health, happiness, and success in the years to come.

NATIONAL JUNETEENTH CELEBRATION

HON. ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the Juneteenth National Museum, located in my home district of Baltimore, Md., and in observance of the National Juneteenth Celebration.

On Saturday, June 19, 1999, the Juneteenth National Museum held its 11th annual "Juneteenth" celebration commemorating the Emancipation Proclamation. Juneteenth is generally celebrated on June 19, which is considered as the day of emancipation from slavery of African-Americans in Texas. It was this day in 1866 that Union Major General Gordon Granger read General Order #3 to the people of Galveston, Texas, informing them of their new status as free men. Since then, Juneteenth was celebrated in Texas, and quickly spread to other southern states, such as Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and eventually the rest of the country. In addition to a festival, the celebration included the purchase of lands or "emancipation grounds" by freed slaves in honor of the celebration. On January 1, 1980, under the provisions of House Bill No. 1016, the 66th Congress of the United States declared June 19th "Emancipation Day in Texas," making Juneteenth a legal state holiday.

"Ring the Bell of Freedom" was the Juneteenth National Museum's festival theme for 1999. Juneteenth is an important event in Baltimore that celebrates American history and historical figures. The annual occurrence of Juneteenth attracts people from across the state to downtown Baltimore in observance of this event.

Among the various festivities, the celebration included lectures on important historical figures, spoken word readings, musical attractions, and food venues that satisfied every taste imaginable. There were shopping opportunities for antique buffs, and a vast array of arts and crafts available for purchase. In keeping with this year's theme, the celebration featured an emotionally stirring re-enactment of a slave auction. Still, along with the painful images that accompany an event like a slave auction, came the sweet and pleasant visions of liberation and freedom. There was also a walk through a historical exhibit on Paul Robeson, along with a lecture from Dr. Beryl Williams, Dean Emeritus of Morgan State University.

Further, the Juneteenth festival featured both a tap and step dance exhibition, along with a family tent with activity and game tables for children and adults. It concluded with a performance by the New Baltimore Hand Dancers at the dance pavilion. The Juneteenth Festival has grown to be a vitally important part of not only Baltimore, but African-American culture as well. True to tradition, this year's celebration proved to be as exciting as ever.

I congratulate Juneteenth National Museum on a successful Juneteenth celebration.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF SUSAN YOACHUM—POLITICS WITH PAS-SION

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, sadly I rise to remind my colleagues that today marks the first anniversary of the passing of Susan Yoachum, one of the most respected political writers in California.

Born on May 12, 1955 in Dallas, Texas, Susan Gail Yoachum graduated in 1975 from Southern Methodist University in Dallas with bachelors' degrees in journalism and political science. She was a reporter for the Dallas Morning News, the Independent Journal in Marin County and the San Jose Mercury-News, where she was part of the news team that won a 1990 Pulitzer Prize for coverage of the Loma Prieta earthquake.

At the Mercury-News she exposed chemical contamination of drinking water in South San Jose, disclosed unsatisfactory medical care for the indigent, and wrote about industrial espionage. She joined the San Francisco Chronicle in 1990. She wrote some of the biggest political stories of the 80's and 90's. She covered national, state, and local politics for the Chronicle. Her assignments included the 1992 presidential campaign, the governor's race in 1990 and 1994, the 1991 San Francisco Mayoral race and the 1992 U.S. Senate race. She also wrote in-depth about issues, from affirmative action to abortion, from tobacco tax to the hazards of toxic chemicals. Susan was promoted to political editor in 1994.

Her love of language surfaced at an early age: She became the National Spelling Bee Champion in 1969, winning her title by correctly spelling the word, "interlocutory." Susan was renowned for her wonderful wit and sense of humor.

In 1992, she was the first to call Democratic Senate candidates Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer the "Thelma and Louise of American politics."

She had a passion for politics—the drama, the intrigue and, most important, the effect on the lives of ordinary citizens. She brought an unusual combination of idealism, pragmatism, and skepticism to her work.

Last year, when the candidates for California's governorship debated, Susan wrote one last memorable piece of political analysis.

"What I was hoping for, while I've been sidelined by illness, was a discussion of issues and what difference it would make who ends up being elected governor in a time of prosperity," she wrote. "I wanted to see the candidates discuss their plans for schools instead of acting like school bullies in their 30-second ads."

Susan brought to her fight against breast cancer the same indomitable spirit, tenacity, passion, and humor that served her so well as a political writer.

She was called a "real life Murphy Brown" for her courage in sharing her personal battle with cancer with hundreds of thousands of readers. But Susan was more than that. Her work has been a lighthouse beam through the fog of local and national politics," wrote the Wall Street Journal's Marilyn Chase. "She stands as a model of professionalism and courage in the workplace. The lesson for colleagues of cancer survivors: Professionalism doesn't disappear with a diagnosis."

Susan wrote movingly about the 180,000 women who get breast cancer each year. "I have metastatic breast cancer," she wrote last September. "It's a tough word to spell and an even harder one to say, but its meaning is rather simple. It means a runaway strain is careening through my body. I want there to be a face that goes with these statistics. It certainly doesn't have to be my face: it can be the face of someone you surely know and love who has had her life torn apart by this disease. This carnage has to stop. I wrote to plead for more and better research, for more and better treatment. Like too many women before me, I wrote to plead: Find something to save my life. To save all of our lives."

We can best remember Susan by working to ensure that America's families are spared the suffering she experienced.

MANDATORY GUN SHOW BACKGROUND CHECK ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. TERRY EVERETT

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 18, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2122) to require background checks at gun shows, and for other purposes;

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, during last week's consideration of the Gun Show Protection Act (H.R. 2122), my vote in support of the Rogan amendment to prohibit individuals who have committed "violent acts of juvenile delinquency" from possessing firearms as adults was not tallied by the electronic voting machine.

Although I opposed the underlying bill because the focus was on penalizing law-abiding citizens rather than criminals, I support the intent of the Rogan amendment to toughen penalties for violent criminals.

SPACE POLICY

HON. BOB SCHAFFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the important topic of America's space policy in the post-Cold War world. One of America's leading experts on this subject, Mr. James H. Hughes of Englewood, Colorado, has written many articles concerning this topic. I would like to submit Mr. Hughes' latest article entitled "Space Policy" for the RECORD.

The end of the Cold War brought with it the dissolution of the Soviet Union, and a euphoric victory, more completely realized after the 1991 Persian Gulf War. The U.S.

sought to convert its "peace dividend" from winning the Cold War, into a new social order, rather than understanding the Cold War and seeking a responsible victory, much like the Marshall Plan after World War II.

Aided by a minor downturn in the economy and third party candidate Ross Perot who split the vote with George Bush, Bill Clinton won the 1992 presidential election, and utilized the "peace dividend" for an agenda of cutting spending for defense, and funding social programs. Accelerated spending of the "peace dividend" became a prominent theme in Bill Clinton's first term of office (1993-1997).

The Cold War victory of the U.S. was recognized by some as an incomplete victory. The Cold War—communism—had cost the Soviet Union dearly. The U.S. and Western Europe had won. The Soviet Union and Eastern Bloc were in transition, coming out of their socialist state economies and dictatorships. While time has shown that the Eastern Bloc is becoming westernized with the introduction of freedom, democracy, and private enterprise (for example, East and West Germany have become unified), Russia and many of the former members of the U.S.S.R. remain in transition, ten years later.

Today, Russia is vacillating between forces for democracy and economic reform, versus a crime dominated underground economy run by gangs and mafia, many of whom served in the former communist government. In a sense, many of Russia's economic woes derive from its unfamiliarity with free enterprise, the market economy, and a very primitive infrastructure, not the "failure" of reform.

The Soviet Union collapsed because its economy had collapsed. No country can devote itself to war forever, even Sparta failed. In addition, communism in Russia had led to the economically inefficient—the wasteful development—of the Soviet economy. Stories were rampant about how a Sears Catalogue was viewed as subversive propaganda because it would show the Russian people how a free society lived.

The Soviet Union was a world power, a superpower, because of its warships, fighters, nuclear weapons, and ballistic missiles. It was not a superpower because of any intrinsic feature of its communist society. Only its vast mineral, oil, and gas resources, and the very high degree of technical training given to its scientists and engineers enabled the Soviet Union to produce nuclear arms and ballistic missiles, cloaking itself with military strength as a world superpower.

To pursue its agenda of world communism, the Soviet Union supported a defense establishment absorbing, toward the end of the Cold War, upwards of 30-40% of its GNP, and most of its industrial and scientific talent. In contrast, even at the height of President Reagan's buildup, the Cold War absorbed only 6% of U.S. GNP, and that within the context of a sophisticated research and development program and free enterprise economy. Thus, the failure of communism left the Soviet Union with its legacy of an industrial base designed for the inefficient production of weapons, rather than a thriving economy as in the U.S.

Leaders in Congress, recognizing the tremendous investment the Soviet Union made in the production of nuclear weapons, including the training of thousands of nuclear missile scientists and engineers, sought to avert the sale of this talent and its stockpile of nuclear weapons by means such as the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction Program. Nunn-Lugar sought to find ways to gainfully employ talented Soviet engineers and scientists outside the production of nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles. Without such steps, it was feared, and correctly so as events proved out in, for example, Iran, that other nations hostile to the U.S. would siphon off Russia's scientists, using them for their own weapons production programs.

The broader context of the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction Program needs to be addressed. It was developed within the context of defending U.S. national security interests. A broader viewpoint should look at the role of Nunn-Lugar in U.S. foreign policy toward Russia, and U.S. defense and immigration policy.

1991 PERSIAN GULF WAR

The 1991 Persian Gulf War deserves some understanding. For it was after this war the U.S. felt itself vindicated in its application of advanced technology for defense (our high-tech weapons worked in the Gulf War), and in the development of war-fighting doctrine and training that reflected the lessons of Vietnam. The leaders of the Persian Gulf War, General Colin Powell, General Norman Schwarzkopf, and others of their generation, had served their time in Vietnam. They were dedicated to reforming the U.S. military from the inside, and did not wish to repeat Vietnam.

Our victory in the Persian Gulf War came through the coalition building efforts of President George Bush and Secretary of State Jim Baker, and the defense buildup initiated by President Reagan in the 1980s.

It is no small matter to realize we won the Persian Gulf War on the shoulders of the military force we had built to fight the Cold War against the Soviet Union. Bush had already begun the process of spending the "peace dividend" without respect to learning the main lesson of President Reagan's defense strategy—the importance of developing advanced technology with commercial applications, and the importance of ballistic missile defense to warfighting.

In this respect, the Iran/Iraq war of the 1980s passed largely unnoticed and unstudied by the West. The Iran/Iraq war featured carnage and attrition. It also featured the use of ballistic missiles—Scuds—to attack each other cities in a war of terror. Thus, the Iran/Iraq war was a precursor, a warning, to Iraq's heavy of ballistic missiles during the 1991 Persian Gulf War.

Congress responded to our vulnerability to ballistic missiles seen in the Gulf War (videos of incoming Scuds made an impression) by passing the 1991 Missile Defense Act. But this act, by itself, was not enough to prompt the U.S. to build a national missile defense, even though the warning bells were already being sounded over the proliferation of long range ballistic missiles, such as China's sale of intermediate range ballistic missiles to Saudi Arabia.

It does little good to criticize the past, but three lessons do stand out from the Gulf War that we need to absorb. First, U.S. military strength needs to be rebuilt. We have been in decline and decay for over a decade. Second, U.S. military strength needs to be redeveloped in the research and development of advanced technology. We need to fund new initiatives for advanced technology. Third, the U.S. needs to complete the plan of the Strategic Defense Initiative by deploying ballistic missile defenses in space.

We have yet to fully appreciate the role of space in our defense. It has been said the 1991 Persian Gulf War was a one-sided space war where the U.S. was able to freely use its satellites in space to give it leveraging over Iraq, in intelligence, communications, weather, and navigation. It is not as clearly recognized the Gulf War was also a one-sided space war from Iraq's side, where Iraq was able to launch its Scud ballistic missiles traveling through space. While the Air Force was successful in suppressing Iraq's use of Scuds, once a Scud was launched, the U.S. had no means to stop the Scud except for the short-range Patriot. Iraq was able to effectively use space for its ballistic missiles as the U.S. had no ballistic missile defenses in space.

HEAVY LIFT BOOSTER

The U.S. has needed a heavy lift booster capability for decades. While the Space Shuttle comes close to meeting this need, its payload has been cutback for safety considerations. Lockheed Martin's Titan IV-B is still proving itself, and lacks the capability for launching large, very heavy payloads such as a laser for missile defense.

The opening of the international space launch market to international consortiums has resulted in the development of heavy lift booster capability by Russia, China, and Europe's Ariane. Free trade issues would call for laissez-faire. In some respects, the application of Nunn-Lugar to the Proton launch vehicle has blurred free trade and defense issues for the goal of softening Russia's economic collapse.

Concern over the transfer of critical ballistic missile and satellite technology to Russia can be tempered with the knowledge that Russia has developed sophisticated ballistic missile technology. U.S. policy, however, needs to take on broader view.

1. We need to clarify our foreign policy goals with Russia. The support of free enterprise and democracy must continue in this country in transition.

2. We need to develop a U.S. heavy lift booster, if only because we will not be able to rely on international consortiums in time of war.

The class of heavy lift booster we need should be capable of putting into orbit a payload of the same size and weight as a chemical Space Based Laser. This would call for a payload bay capable of supporting an 8 meter diameter mirror (possibly larger), and a payload weight of nearly 80,000 pounds. Furthermore, this heavy lift booster will need to be capable of launching this payload into Medium Earth Orbit, at altitudes of about 600-750 miles.

SPACE POLICY

Space is a medium for the projection of global power, a theater for deploying ballistic missile defenses, and a frontier for development. German rocket scientists in World War II recognized the potential of space for world-wide domination, developing the German V-2 as a precursor to building intercontinental ballistic missiles, and developing plans for a large solar lens and spaceplanes such as the Sanger glide bomber that would use the upper atmosphere to coast to targets around the world.

The threat of long range ballistic missiles armed with nuclear weapons became obvious to defense leaders and scientists in the 1950s. They wanted to use space for intercepting and destroying long range ballistic missiles. The 1958 "Argus" experiment, exploding small nuclear warheads in space to energize electrically charged particles, was an attempt to devise a global approach to ballistic missile defense using space. On another track, Project Defender anticipated the use of space for deploying interceptors to defend against long range ballistic missiles.

Development of a U.S. heavy lift booster is essential for the U.S. to realize its future in space. Space is essential for deploying ballistic missile defenses, especially high energy lasers that can take advantage of the long lines of sight found in space, and offer a boost phase defense capability with their speed of light operation.

Space is at the edge of being developed as a medium for the projection of global power, a theater for operating defenses against intermediate and long range ballistic missiles, and an economic frontier, especially with the discovery of water on the moon.

How we develop space is critical. We will need to deploy ballistic missile defenses in space, and we will need to defend our investment in space against the encroaching programs of China and Russia. Space also offers itself as a medium for applying and developing advanced technology, and can restore our leadership in defense and advanced technology.

It will do very little good for the U.S. to deny itself the use of the Russian Proton heavy lift booster, especially when the Clinton administration has not taken the lead in creating a U.S. heavy lift booster. For the sake of its future in space and its defense, the U.S. needs to build its own heavy lift booster.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hughes has provided insightful considerations and recommendations for the development of future U.S. space policy. Such informed and practical forward-thinking by American men and women is what made our nation the world's economic, political, military, and industrial superpower.

ELLIS ISLAND MEDALS OF HONOR AWARDS CEREMONY

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 22, 1999

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following:

ELLIS ISLAND MEDALS OF HONOR AWARDS CEREMONY—NECO CHAIRMAN WILLIAM DENIS FUGAZY LEADS DRAMATIC CEREMONY

ELLIS ISLAND, NY, May 8.—Standing on the hallowed grounds of Ellis Island—the portal through which 17 million immigrants entered the United States—a cast of ethnic Americans who have made significant contributions to the life of this nation were presented with the coveted Ellis Island Medal of Honor at an emotionally uplifting ceremony.

NECO's annual medal ceremony and reception on Ellis Island in New York Harbor is the Nation's largest celebration of ethnic pride. Representing a rainbow of ethnic origins, this year's recipients received their award in the shadow of the historic Great Hall, where the first footsteps were taken by the millions of immigrants who entered the U.S. in the latter part of the nineteenth century. "Today we honor great ethnic Americans who, through their achievements and contributions, and in the spirit of their ethnic origins, have enriched this country and have become role models for future generations," said NECO Chairman William Denis Fugazy. "In addition, we honor the immigrant experience—those who passed through this Great Hall decades ago, and the new immigrants who arrive on American soil seeking opportunity."

Mr. Fugazy added, "It doesn't matter how you got here or if you already were here. Ellis Island is a symbol of the freedom, diversity and opportunity—ingredients inherent in the fabric of this nation. Although many recipients have no familial ties to Ellis Island, their ancestors share similar histories of struggle and hope for a better life here.

Established in 1986 by NECO, the Ellis Island Medals of Honor pay tribute to the ancestry groups that comprise America's unique cultural mosaic. To date, approximately 1,100 ethnic American citizens have received medals.

NECO is the largest organization of its kind in the U.S. serving as an umbrella group for over 250 ethnic organizations and whose mandate is to preserve ethnic diversity, promote ethnic and religious equality, tolerance and harmony, and to combat injustice, hatred and bigotry. NECO has a new goal in its humanitarian mission: saving the lives of children with life-threatening medical conditions. NECO has founded The Children of the World Foundation which brings children from developing nations needing life-saving surgery to the United States for treatment. This year alone, NECO's efforts have helped save the lives of six infants from around the world.

Ellis Island Medal of Honor recipients are selected each year through a national nomination process. Screening committees from NECO's member organizations select the final nominees, who are then considered by the Board of Directors.
