PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 107th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Vol. 148

WASHINGTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2002

No. 13

House of Representatives

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS
U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Washington, DC, February 13, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN ABNEY CULBERSON to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer: Out of the depths we cry to You, O Lord.

From the depths of Ground Zero, from the chasm in the Pentagon and from the seared field in Pennsylvania with bitter tears, the soul of this Nation was ripped open and we have cried, cried out to You, O Lord.

Lord, hear our prayer.

We have mourned. We have lamented. We have been robbed of illusions. The reality of evil we have faced.

Be attentive, Lord, to our plea for mercy.

Our frailty has been revealed; our mortality known. In our confrontation we reached out to one another and found some satisfaction. Our living resolve has been strong, but the threat of evil surrounds us. At times we sense the evil within.

Lord, show us Your mercy. Lord, be close to all the Members of Congress and the people they represent today and in the days ahead as we all continue to seek Your mercy.

Lift us out of our burdens for in You and You alone is the fullness of redemption now and forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 378, nays 40, not voting 16, as follows:

Mrs. CAPPS changed her vote from "nay" to "yea."
So the Journal was approved.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, if this is the most important bill to be sent to the floor by discharge petition by the minority, then why is it they call for adjournment on the day of the bill's presentation on the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). The gentleman from Florida is recognized for a proper parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, does the bill, as presented under the rule, comply with the dictates of the discharge petition, or are we operating under a substitute version?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is operating under the terms of House Resolution 344.

A motion to adjourn has been offered, and it is not debatable. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio changed her vote from "aye" to "no."
So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CULBERSON). Will the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. CANTOR) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. CANTOR led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 2356.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

BIPARTISAN CAMPAIGN REFORM ACT OF 2001

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 344, the House now resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2356.

□ 1048

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2356) to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to provide bipartisan campaign reform, with Mr. LAHOOD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY).

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This is going to be a long debate today, and tonight, and I do believe that is good. The legislation we are debating is extremely important. The last time this Congress passed significant campaign finance reform legislation was 27 years ago. We could be living with the consequences of any bill we pass today for decades to come. That is important, I think, for the challengers across this Nation, the men and women who want to aspire to be able to speak on the floor of this House. So what we are doing is important for our energetic give and take of public debate.

Today, as in any debate, a lot of claims are going to be made about the various bills and amendments. I think right at the outset, before we get under way, we ought to define our terms. We are going to hear a lot tonight about a ban—let me repeat that, a ban—on soft money. According to Webster's dictionary, to ban means to prohibit the use, performance or distribution of. In politics, we often contort language, but I would like to make it plain and clear, the bill under consideration today,

H.R. 2356, the Shays-Meehan bill, does not ban soft money under any definition or under any stretch of the imagination. I am certain that we will hear otherwise from some of our colleagues today, but the fact is anyone who tells you that this version, I believe this is the fourth version of what I call an altered state of a piece of legislation, that this version of Shays-Meehan bans soft money is simply not telling you the truth and is not being accurate.

It could be argued that previous versions of Shays-Meehan did ban soft money. H.R. 380, the bill the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) introduced last January, and the versions of Shays-Meehan approved by this House in years past, did ban soft money donations to political parties. I would argue that even those bills were not real, true soft money bans because they did nothing to restrict how unions, corporations and wealthy individuals spent soft money. Those bills did ban soft money donations, but not soft money expenditures. So whether or not earlier Shays-Meehan bills really banned soft money could be debated.

What cannot be debated, however, is the simple fact that this newest version of Shays-Meehan fails to ban soft money, again under any definition. It cannot even be seriously argued that H.R. 2356 bans soft money. Anyone who claims that it does is either deliberately misrepresenting the facts, or they just do not know what is in this new piece of legislation.

The difference between H.R. 2356 and the previous versions of Shays-Meehan is that H.R. 2356 now permits political parties to accept soft money donations. Even if this bill were to be adopted today, unions, corporations and wealthy individuals could still donate massive amounts of soft money to State and local political parties. These donations are permitted up to $10,000 and can be made to every State and local party in the country. With over 3,000 counties in the United States, this means that a corporation or a union, or Enron, because we have talked about that a lot in the last couple of weeks for emotional purposes, could donate up to $30 million to one political party provided they spread it around the country. If somebody wanted to give to both parties, they could give up to $60 million, provided they spread it around the country.

We are going to hear a lot of talk about Enron today and how the Enron debacle demonstrates the need for campaign finance reform. There are two things to say about that. Even if this bill had been law, it would not have prevented the Enron collapse. Unfortunately, I have had constituents that have called me up and said, is it true what I am hearing on TV, what is being insinuated, that people's money could have been saved from the terrible things that the corporate top of the ladder did to people? This bill, if passed, would not have changed that.

Let us not fool the American public to make them think that people could get their money back. All the money that Enron gave could still have been given even if this bill were law.

Some will say, well, they could not have given it to the national parties. Ask yourself, does it really matter? If a company wants to influence the political process by spreading a lot of money around, does it really matter if the money is given to a national party instead of a State party? Are we to believe that if a company was giving millions of dollars in contributions to a political party, its influence would somehow be diminished because it spread the money around to a lot of State parties instead of simply giving it to a national party? I do not think so. All this bill does is spread soft money around the country. It redirects it. It does not ban it.

This bill also imposes a number of serious restrictions of political speech. It prevents an organization from spending its own money promoting a message its members believe in if they happen to mention a candidate in the 60 days before an election. That is not America. That is not free speech. Whether it is the left, the middle or the right, people should not be gagged in this country, and they are gagged under this bill.

Supporters of the bill will argue that they do not restrict free speech at all, they simply require that it be funded with hard dollars. Let there be no mistake, this bill, the Shays-Meehan bill, burdens free expression and free speech. To claim that it is not a burden is to simply misrepresent the facts of this bill.

It has been said that to give people a right to unlimited freedom of expression while limiting the amount they can spend promoting their message is like telling someone they can drive as far as they want, but they can only spend a certain amount on gasoline to get them there. Well, telling people they can speak as much as they want so long as they use hard money is like telling people they can drive as far as they want, but they can only buy one gallon of gas at a time. Even worse, it is like telling them they cannot use their own money to buy the gas, but can only use money that they are able to raise from people they run into along the way. Could it really be argued that such burdens did not restrict travel? I do not think so. But proponents of the Shays-Meehan legislation want to put similar burdens on free speech and then claim they have not restricted free speech. It is obviously simply not accurate.

This is going to be a long debate today. I look forward to it. As we proceed, I hope Members will listen to the substance of the provisions being put forward. Shays-Meehan has retained the brand name, but the quality of the product has totally changed. Today we are going to have a good opportunity to debate and consider what this legislation would actually do. I look forward to that debate.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) may each control 7 minutes of the time allocated to me and that they may yield such time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I have great respect for my chairman, and great affection for him as well, but we disagree on this piece of legislation. On the one hand he says that Shays-Meehan does not do much. On the other hand his leader, the Speaker of the House, says that it is Armageddon for those who rely on soft money to perpetuate their power.

Mr. Chairman, the long road to victory on campaign finance reform has not been paved with ease. But as Woodrow Wilson once remarked, "Nothing is worthwhile that is not hard." And so it is today in this our third vote in 4 years on real, meaningful campaign finance reform.

We have passed virtually identical versions of this Shays-Meehan bill twice before by overwhelming bipartisan votes, 252-179 in 1998 and 252-177 in 1999. But today's vote, which comes only after a discharge petition, led by my friend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER), permitted this issue to come to the floor over the objections of the Republican leadership, this day is clearly the most important yet. Unlike in years past, the other body already has passed nearly identical legislation. Thus, the enactment of meaningful campaign finance reform is within our sights this day.

This issue, like the issue of election reform, which the Senate hopefully will soon take up, strikes at the very core of our participatory democracy. When the typical American, the man or woman who works hard every day, pays their taxes and raises their children, hears about campaign contributions and the tens of thousands or even hundreds of thousands of dollars, they cannot help but wonder, has democracy passed me by? Has democracy been reduced to a form of government of and by and for the most affluent?

Make no mistake, I reject the cynical and, I believe, false notion that contributions and policy decisions are inevitably linked. But none of us could be so naive as to reject the infrequent reality and the too frequent appearance of such a relationship. Every one of us recognizes that in public life, appearances are as important many times as reality. One five-letter word ought to crystallize the point for us. The chairman is right. Enron. None of us knows for certain whether that Texas energy company received any special treatment because of its enormous campaign contributions, from either party, but I am confident that congressional investigations and our regulatory and legal processes will get to the bottom of that.

But there is no denying these facts: When Enron began to implode, its calls to officials at the highest level of our national government did not go unanswered. And, when the Bush administration began to draft its energy policy, it rolled out the red carpet for Enron's participation.

In and of themselves, these facts mean little. But the American people have every reason and every right to wonder, did Enron receive special treatment because of its contributions? Even the Supreme Court of the United States has recognized that we cannot ignore appearances. In Buckley v. Valeo, it upheld campaign contribution limits because they serve the government's compelling interest in protecting the integrity of elections by preventing even the appearance of impropriety.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the appearance that something is fundamentally wrong with our campaign finance system has clearly reached the boiling point, and thus Shays-Meehan is not only necessary, it is essential. This legislation, in short, will ban so-called soft money contributions to the national political parties and prohibit soft money from being used for sham issue ads by third-party groups that most of us would agree are nothing more than campaign ads. While this legislation will clearly reorder the ways in which candidates and parties finance campaigns, it is a modest but crucial investment in our participatory democracy.

We are the role model for democracy in the world.

We have learned that we cannot take our democratic values for granted and we cannot be so naive as to believe that the appearances do not matter. As we seek to expand democracy's reach abroad, it is only fitting that we strengthen her foundation at home. That is precisely, precisely, what this legislation is intended to do.

Because it is so critical, I urge every one of my colleagues to support this legislation this day. Its time has come.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER), who has been such a leader in this effort.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Chairman, this House today has a historic opportunity to end the influence of big money on public policy making. Today we are going to have the opportunity to vote on a bill, the Shays-Meehan bill, H.R. 2356, that has been worked on for many months in an effort to try to craft a bill that not only will pass this House, but that will be acceptable to the United States Senate, where they have already passed a strong campaign finance reform bill under the leadership of Senator MCCAIN and Senator FEINGOLD.

Let there be no mistake about what is going on on this floor today: we have heard reference in the opening remarks to a bill that will be offered that will be purported and suggested to be "superior" to the Shays-Meehan proposal.

There should be no mistake about it: whether the bill is better or worse, the bill will never see the light of day, because the purpose of those who seek to amend or substitute the Shays-Meehan bill today, their purpose is to be sure that the bill they pass is not acceptable to the Senate, where it will be relegated to a conference committee, which will be a black hole of certain death to the bill because the Speaker of the House, who has designated this Shays-Meehan legislation as Armageddon, would have the authority to appoint the conferees to that conference committee. You can be well assured that the conferees that are appointed will be opposed to true campaign reform, and once again this Congress will have failed to return the power of this House to the people of this country and to get it out of the hands of the special interests.

We have passed campaign finance reform in this House before in the last Congress and the Senate failed to pass it. This year the Senate passed it first, and it is our job to pass it now.

Support true campaign reform today, the Shays-Meehan bill, and oppose these efforts to kill it.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT), the distinguished deputy chief whip.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time, and I look forward to this debate today. I think this debate will in all likelihood produce a result, whether that result is out of conference or from the floor today. Those who suggest that a conference would not work, I think, overlook the desire that the President has, that others have, to have campaign finance reform.

The idea that we would file a bill at 11 o'clock or so last night, that I think is substantially different from the bill that was filed a year ago, and we would be told on the floor today that really this cannot be improved, that any amendment is a killer amendment, or a conference is a bad thing, we take very important pieces of legislation to conference and usually they benefit from that conference. Certainly the White House can be more involved in a conference than they would ever be involved in debate on the floor.

This is a bill that for weeks and months now we have talked about a bill that would, I think, the phrase, the term of art, is ban unlimited soft money. The truth is, there are plenty of soft-money loopholes in this bill. Banning unlimited soft money sounds like you are really doing something, when maybe you are not doing that at all.

There is a loophole of about $60 million, where you could give money to all the political organizations in the country, the State parties, the county parties, the legislative district parties. This is a huge loophole in this bill where soft money is still involved. There is the ability to build buildings with soft money. There is the ability to do all kinds of things with soft money; and at the same time we hear that somehow soft money is corrupting.

Well, let us accept that premise as we debate today, for at least part of the debate. If soft money is bad, it is all bad. We all know that money can go from account to account. If soft money is corrupting, why would we want to have an exception so that the Democratic National Committee could build a building with soft money? We do not want them to have a building that has been corrupted by the influence of soft money.

If soft money is corrupting, why would we allow in the bill that was filed last night soft money to be used to pay off loans from this election cycle? Pages 78 and 79 of this bill, there is a huge problem in this bill, because it opens the door wide for soft money today. Not only does it not ban soft money in the future, but it opens the door absolutely for spending soft money in this election cycle we are in right now.

Maybe that was misdrafted. Maybe that is a mistake. I would like for somebody to come to the floor and explained what those pages mean, because when you read them, it appears they mean you can borrow hard money today, spend it for hard-money purposes, and, on November 6, pay off that loan with soft money.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLUNT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, no, you cannot do that. That is illegal under the present law, and it would be illegal if this bill passed. All this says is if there are bills that come in after the deadline, you can pay those bills in accordance with Federal law. So if there was a soft-money bill that could only be paid for with soft money, you could pay it before the January 1 date. The same is true for hard money.

But you could not borrow hard money and then pay it off with soft money. That would be illegal.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I know my friend from Massachusetts has worked hard on this bill. He has had a bill in the past on the floor that is much tougher than this bill, that did have a total ban on soft money. It had the ability to audit campaign accounts at random. It had some stiff criminal penalties. Those are gone from this bill.

What you intended to do and what you did may have been two different things. I am told they are two different things. On November 6, in fact, you could take the soft money you had on hand and pay off any past debts you had, no matter what purpose those past debts were incurred for.

To open the door totally to soft money in the cycle we are in is even worse than postponing the date to begin the bill. We cannot let that happen. We cannot talk about a soft-money ban for months and then bring a bill to the floor at midnight that does just the opposite. I am very concerned about that. I am sure it is going to be widely debated today.

The gentleman will have plenty of time to look at the specific language with his attorneys and respond to the problem that I think this bill that was filed last night creates in just being totally at odds with what we have said this bill would do or what proponents of the bill said it would do for over a year.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, so basically the gentleman is saying all of the Members who have opposed reform, abolishing soft money, now say they want it in effect right now right away? Is that what the gentleman is suggesting?

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Chairman, that is not what I am suggesting at all.

Mr. MEEHAN. If we are going to do a campaign finance bill, the people who have opposed reform now say, well, if we are really going to do it, let us put it in effect right away?

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, there will be an amendment that says that. There will be an amendment that says if there is bad, let us go ahead and eliminate it, and let us eliminate all of it. I will be voting for that amendment.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. FATTAH), a member of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the bipartisan Shays-Meehan campaign finance bill.

Against all odds, with the persistence and tenacity of the sponsors and with the skill of my ranking member, I believe that this House today is going to rise in a bipartisan fashion and pass this bill, oppose the amendments that would cause it to end up, as so many other attempts in the past have ended up, not coming to full fruition; and we are going to give President Bush, who promised on the campaign trail that he was a reformer with results, an opportunity to put the Presidential signature on a bill that would indeed ban unlimited soft money and move elections back to a democratic process, have elections be elections, rather than auctions.

Mr. Chairman, I think that in our country, the work of the Congress today is going to go a long way in terms of restoring confidence in our form of government.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Chairman, we are strong proponents of campaign finance reform. Do not let anybody say we are not. We want to dramatically enhance the opportunity for voters to be empowered so they can make the right decision. But I think it is important for us to go back to the founding.

In 1787, we saw three of our framers, James Madison, Alexander Hamilton and John Jay, write under a nom de plum, in fact, not full disclosure, under the name of Publius, the Federalist Papers, and they had a very interesting debate about what it is that generates the interests of people.

In Federalist No. 10, James Madison talked about political faction, how the opportunity for people to come together and demonstrate their interests is something that is a fact of life. In fact, he said in Federalist No. 10, "Faction is to governing like air is to fire."

So we have these attempts being made by some to impose extraordinarily onerous regulations on the American people, jeopardizing their opportunity to come together and pursue a political interest that they have, that a shared group has; and I believe that it is wrong. I believe it is wrong to impose those kinds of regulations.

I do believe also, Mr. Chairman, that we need to realize that we have a very important constitutional responsibility here, and that is to go through the process of lawmaking.

The way it works is the United States House of Representatives passes a bill, the United States Senate passes a bill; they go to a House-Senate conference to make sure that they can reconcile those differences. We have a bicameral legislature. The Senate has already passed this measure. The House should work its will, not marching in lockstep.

People have talked about how a conference would jeopardize this fragile coalition for reform. Well, what it does is if they try to simply go without a conference, they are jeopardizing the opportunity for the White House, the President of the United States, who wants to bring about meaningful reforms, to have his say; and it is jeopardizing the opportunity for us to work our legislative will.

Mr. Chairman, we need to do everything that we possibly can to ensure that we bring about true reform.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, if James Madison could see the $4 million in unregulated soft money that went from Enron to both political parties, if James Madison could see that 70 percent of the soft money from Enron since 1995 went to both political parties, if James Madison could see the $1.7 million in the last election cycle, he would be rolling over in his grave.

Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. RIVERS), who has been an advocate for finance campaign reform since she got to the House of Representatives.

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, the previous speaker mentioned the Constitution, and I think it is important that we collectively take a look at what constitutional case law tells us what Congress can do as it addresses campaign finance reform.

Congress can prohibit the use of corporate treasury funds and union dues money in Federal elections. Congress can limit contributions to candidates, parties and political committees. Congress can pass laws to combat actual corruption and the appearance of corruption. Congress can require disclosure of the source and size of certain kinds of spending and most contributions. Congress can regulate coordinated expenditures, though thwart attempts to circumvent existing election law.

In short, constitutionally Congress has many tools available to it to regulate campaign finance reform. The Supreme Court has spoken on this issue. Shays-Meehan does no more than what the Supreme Court has already endorsed as tools for Congress to use.

The Shays-Meehan bill is constitutional, and it is absolutely needed. I urge support.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), who has fought for democracy and voting rights probably more than anybody in this body.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Shays-Meehan bill. Now is the time for us to do what is right. It is time to remove the corrupting influence of soft money from the political process. It is time to open up the political process and let the average person come in and participate. It is time to let all of our citizens have an equal voice.

We must pass Shays-Meehan to lessen the people's growing cynicism. Soft money and big campaign contributions have polluted the political process. When people give $50,000 or $100,000 to candidates, they expect something, and, most of the time, they get something for it. We are sending the wrong message to the American people. It is time for us to enact real reform. It is time to restore the people's faith in their government.

This bill is good for America. It is not just good for the political parties, for Democrats and Republicans, it is good for our country.

There is too much money in politics. Political candidates should not be up for sale to the highest bidder. Too many of us spend too much of our time dialing for dollars. We should not be elected this way. This should not be the essence of our democracy.

I did not march across the bridge at Selma on March 7, 1965, and almost lose my life to become part of a political system so corrupt that it pollutes the very idea of what we marched for. That is not why President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act.

Mr. Chairman, there is a better way. Shays-Meehan is a better way. It is not a cure-all. It is not a panacea. But it is a significant and extraordinary step toward cleaning up the process and fixing this broken system.

We have a mandate. We have a mission. We have an obligation to do this on our watch, on our time. We must pass Shays-Meehan today.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), our whip.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, let me first say that I do not think there is one Member, Democrat, Republican, liberal, or conservative, that is corrupt in this House. I think what is corrupting in this House is the misinformation, especially the misinformation that we have heard over the last few weeks, incredible misinformation; misinformation, for instance, that we are in this bill banning soft money, we know that is not the truth; misinformation that it is not unconstitutional to stop people from exercising their right to be involved in the political process.

Let me just point this out: Those who want to ban soft money, I appreciate that and respect it; I do not agree with it. Those who want to regulate through government the participation in the political process, I respect them trying to do that; I disagree with it. We ought to let the voters decide through instant disclosure to be able to tell and see while people are collecting their money and spending it to decide. We should be empowering voters, not government bureaucrats.

But those that constantly say they are trying to ban soft money bring a bill to this floor that is seriously flawed and, in fact, creates new opportunities to raise soft money. It is misinformation like the previous speaker to say that hundreds of thousands of dollars are going straight to candidates. That is not the definition of soft money. Soft money is monies raised from corporations and others that go to political parties, and that is what they are attempting to do is to ban that money. But they are not doing it in this bill.

Let me just read the bill. In the bill they first move the effective date until after the election, so they do not want to ban it for this election, because they have a bunch of it in the bank and they want to spend it. But they move it until after the election. Then it says in the bill, "Prior to January 1, the committee may spend such funds to retire outstanding debts or obligations, both soft and hard money, that are incurred prior to such effective date, election date, so long as such debts and obligations were incurred solely in connection with an election held on or before November 5."

They want to be able to spend the soft money they already raised, and do we know how they do it? They want to be able to borrow hard money and soft money, and then after the election, between November 5 and January 1, there will be a huge stampede to raise all this corrupting soft money to pay off their loans. That is in the bill. That does not ban soft money. That creates a situation that requires more soft money and a huge move towards that soft money that they think is so corrupting.

For the first time, we will be paying off hard money with soft money. I repeat that. We are paying off hard money with soft money, completely changing the situation and the way that we are doing it.

Then, then they say that they want to limit the parties' participation in the election.

This bill does not contain real reform. Instead, this bill strips citizens of their political rights and unconstitutionally attempts to regulate political speech.

The primary protection of our first amendment is the right of average citizens to get together and to freely and fully criticize their government. Political speech is the key to political freedom, and Shays-Meehan would radically weaken our first amendment right by inappropriately and unwisely constraining the right to political speech. Shays-Meehan denies Americans, denies American citizens their fundamental right to criticize politicians for 2 months before the election.

Now, we all know that the last days before an election are a very crucial period of political dialogue. That is when voters are really paying attention, and that is the precise reason that this incumbent protection scheme that is in the bill will suppress political speech 60 days before Election Day. Shays-Meehan strengthens incumbents and makes it far harder for their constituents to hold them accountable.

This is a sham. It shuts down the system, Mr. Chairman. It shuts down political speech. It shuts down the opportunity to participate in elections. In a country the size of the United States, an individual citizen has very little chance of joining the political debate without banding together with others, so by blocking citizens' groups from participating in days leading up to an election, Shays-Meehan removes a very vital tool that citizens can use to hold elected officials accountable.

This is Swiss cheese. It is full of holes. It does not do what the authors want. It is like a fine wine that does not get better with age, it just rots.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute, and then I intend to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP).

Mr. Chairman, just to correct the inaccuracies of the previous speaker, we say 60 days to an election, you have to use hard money contributions. We limit no speech. We just say you cannot do it with corporate treasury money, union dues money, or unlimited money from individuals. The effective date begins November 6 because we are 16 months already into this election. We already have primaries in process, and our bill basically has a 30-day provision in primaries.

There is absolutely nothing in our bill, it is a red herring, that suggests one can use soft money to pay hard money obligations. It is against the law. We did not change that law.

So with all due respect to one who I think is really the best majority whip ever to be in this House, he is just dead wrong on all the issues he described.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP).

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

A lot of emotion in the House today, and there will be all through the day. This is the end of a long process, I believe, and the closer we get to finality, the higher the temperature gets. So let us try to stay calm and look at these issues.

A lot of discussion about Enron. I agree: Enron would not have changed, I do not think, even if our bill had been signed into law. It was an auditing, business scandal. There is no evidence it is a campaign finance scandal, but that does not mean that it should not point out the need for reform, because other corporations and large powerful groups in this country will try to use these large contributions to influence us, and they have, and they do, and they will, and it needs to stop. It is a loophole. This is the best effort in a generation to bring about change.

There is an old saying that the devil is in the details. It is a matter of history now that on this issue, because it affects the majorities, it affects the parties, and it affects our own reelection; it is not the devil in the details, it is death in the details, and that is why the only way to bring this about is to work through these debates and to keep some kind of bipartisan coalition together to do this.

Now, it is a weird marriage between certain people here in the House, but we need to transcend the divisions between the parties and put the voters, the taxpayers, and the people ahead of the parties.

There are about 250 people in this House that have now agreed over and over again on the principles that are in this bill. There is going to be a lot of noise about these details that we have worked through to bring us to this point. People who say that money is speech need to understand, if that is true, there are a lot of people in this country that cannot be heard. Money is not speech. We need to stand up for the first amendment and treat these groups and these people playing politics in elections the same as the candidates themselves. That is the underlying message, and that is what this legislation actually does. They can talk until they are blue in the face or wrap themselves in the first amendment all they want to. This bill is fair to everyone, and we need to consider it and pass it today.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in strong opposition to Shays-Meehan today, principally because of the oath of office that I took, flanked by my three small children a little over a year ago, right over there. That oath of office charged me with upholding and defending the Constitution of the United States of America.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts quoted James Madison. James Madison, the Father of the Constitution, wrote very simple words: The Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech. Now, last night I was involved in the debate on the rule, and I went back to our home in the Washington area, and my 10-year-old son, who had just finished his first unit on the Constitution of the United States, said, undoubtedly biased, Dad, you were right, because I just read that Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech.

Now, as much as that meant to me as a dad for my 10-year-old son to say that I was right, I truly believe I am right. The Supreme Court agrees with me and my 10-year-old son, saying recently that first amendment activity applies no less to independent expression by individuals or political committees than it does to political parties, and the truth is that Shays-Meehan bars individuals and organizations from their first amendment rights during 2 months prior to an election.

I suspect that my friends on my side and on the other side of the aisle know this may be found to be true, and that is why there has been strong opposition in this Chamber and the other to allowing a nonseverability provision to this measure.

Even though I will oppose this bill, Mr. Chairman, it is my hope that we can change it, that we can fix it, we can close those soft money loopholes. I will support an amendment to ban all soft money from the process, which Shays-Meehan does not do, and I will also vote to ban the use of soft money for building political party buildings or paying off debt this fall.

The truth is this bill is good for incumbents, bad for democracy; good for bureaucracy, bad for liberty. Vote "no" on Shays-Meehan.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

This bill does not prevent any individual, any individual or any groups of individuals, from speaking out 60 days before an election. They simply have to use hard money, and the public has a right to know where that money comes from under the Supreme Court decision and under the Constitution. There is no way it stops anyone.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO). She and I came to the Congress together in 1993, and she has been a forceful, eloquent spokesperson for campaign finance reform.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Chairman, first I would like to salute the authors of this bill for their courage, for their vision, and for their tenacity.

Today is the day in this House of Representatives. I think that the eyes of the Nation are really on us. They want to see if we are going to step over the line and say that we are going to do something for democracy. This is about democracy, and it is about respecting the voice of the people.

Every election both parties try to get people to go out and vote. We try to inspire them with our ideas for a better future, not only for themselves and our country but for our world. And fewer and fewer and fewer people are going out to vote. Why? Because they think their voice does not count.

Today's newspaper says that the voices in the Republican caucus that vote for the real Shays-Meehan bill are going to be punished. We cannot tolerate this. This is not good for democracy. Have the courage to vote for the best in America, for our system that is the bright shining light of the world. Vote for the only real meaningful campaign finance reform bill, Shays-Meehan, McCain-Feingold. Send it to the President. We will be ahead, America. And we will be judged for it.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

If my colleagues will read the New York Post, they adequately point out that the New York Times editorial asking people to call their Members of Congress would be illegal, illegal under Shays-Meehan if it were put into a radio or TV ad 60 days before the election. But you can use all the soft money in the world you want for newspaper print.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS).

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I was actually a little taken aback by my friend, the previous speaker, when she talked about the voice of the people not being heard because of all this soft money in politics. The fact of the matter is when you colate elections, you will find out that the more money that gets spent on campaigns, whether it is on the ground or on the air, it drives up the turnout, not lowers turnouts. We can show you election after election where you have bigger spending campaigns and it drives turnout and voter interest and you get better penetration with the electorate. So I think that issue does not wash.

This legislation is not about candidates. It really does not affect the way most individuals will run their own race or raise money as Members of Congress. What it does is affects political parties. If you believe as I do that political parties have been a very, very important part of the American political system, have, in fact, strengthened American democracy, a two party system in my judgement is something that has stabilized American democracy and keeps us much different from other countries.

This drives a lot of money away from the political parties and puts them out into the system to interest groups, basically the right and the left. Political parties tend to center the American political debate, which I think is a good thing.

For moderation, this legislation is the death knell because instead of candidates, independent members within each party being able to appeal to their political party, they have to appeal to interest groups to help make up funding gaps that may occur in these particular elections.

But what concerns me the most is the bait and switch we see in this legislation before us. Written under the dead of night, we see a new substitute, Shays-Meehan IV, V, VI, I do not know which number this is. I refer specifically to title IV, severability effective date, section 402 section B(1) where it says, "Prior to January 1, 2003 the committee," meaning the political party committees, NRCC, DCCC, "can spend funds for retiring outstanding debts or obligations incurred prior to such effective date, so long as the debts were incurred solely in connection with an election date on or before November 5, 2002."

What this means is under this legislation which displaces existing legislation pertaining to this, and there is no other language in this substitute that would replace the language in existing law, it means that political parties could borrow hard dollars in this year's election cycle and replace them with soft dollars that they could raise. So soft dollars can basically pay for hard-dollar borrowing.

This is exactly opposite of what this legislation is intended to do. I do not know if the authors understand what is written in this. We have counsel opinions that we will enter into the RECORD later.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, this legislation does not allow somebody to borrow hard money and then pay it back in soft money. In fact, no one can raise any soft money under this bill after the next election. So what the gentleman is saying just simply is not true.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Reclaiming my time, one could use their building fund which is specifically protected under this to collateralize a loan which is soft dollars, which can collateralize a loan and come back and pay it back. That is what we can do under this legislation. I will be happy to have further discussions with the gentleman. I hope it is his intent to say that hard dollars have to be replaced with hard dollars. And I hope that we can get additional statements on the record. But this language does not say that.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

I will explain to the gentleman that this bill was not written in the dead of night. It was introduced last year. It was brought before the House before 10 o'clock. And it is very clear what it does. It enforces the 1907 law and the 1947 law and the 1974 law, all of which are constitutional.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gracious gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, today the House of Representatives has a historic opportunity to take a stand, a strong stand against the corrupting influence of big money campaign contributions with passage of the Shays-Meehan Campaign Finance Reform Bill. I just really must applaud the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) for their tireless efforts for a more responsive and responsible campaign finance system.

The Senate has taken action. It is now up to this body to once again pass real reforming that will bring an end to the corruption and cynicism that surrounds public service because of the obscene amounts of money and soft money that have found its way into the political process.

Think about it. Soft money has been at the heart of every political or corporate scandal over the past decade. Enron is currently the poster child for campaign finance reform; but even before Enron became a household word, the need for reform was just as great. Political fund raising records were shattered during the 2000 elections and soft-money contributions rose to more than $450 million, nearly double the $231 million raised in the 1995-1996 cycle, more than five times raised in 1991-1992.

It invites corruption. It erodes confidence in government. Let us pass Shays-Meehan.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) has 6¼ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) has 6 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) has 2¾ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) has 4½ minutes remaining.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT).

(Mr. TIAHRT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of campaign reform and in opposition to Shays-Meehan. There is no doubt we do need to change some things about the campaign process. We should, number one, have full and complete reporting disclosure. There is no reason why it could not be on the Internet; whenever dollars are contributed within 24 hours, it would be reported. We should require that every dollar spent in the political process should be voluntarily spent, voluntarily contributed. Right now every dollar I raise is a check written by somebody who has contributed to my campaign. Yet there are millions of union workers who have to have their money, their contributions automatically withdrawn from their pay check and used to support candidates for which they do not vote for or support.

Thomas Jefferson said, "It is tyrannical and sinful to force a man to contribute to political views for which he disagrees."

Shays-Meehan does nothing to reform this tyranny. It also does do some reforms. It does reform the campaign laws. It forms campaign dollars into pork for special interests. Let me name one of them. This bill restricts soft money and third parties from using their monies for free speech through the broadcast media 60 days before election. No soft money for 60 days in television, radio or cable; but it does allow it in the print media.

Well, it is no wonder that the New York Times, U.S.A. Today, even the Winfield Courier, Winfield, Kansas, supports Shays-Meehan because it affects their bottom line. It is pork for papers, pork for newspapers. Well, that kind of reform is not what we need in the political process.

It also does not regulate gutter politics. In 1996 unregulated, unreported dollars were used in my campaign to make phone calls to women in the Fourth Congressional District in Kansas to say I allowed my daughter to pose for sexually provocative photos. My daughter was 14 years old at that time. She was crushed. She was devastated. She could not go to school. And there is nothing in this bill that you are proposing for reform to stop that kind of gutter politics.

It does not reform the campaign laws where you need to reform it. Instead, you come up with this pork for papers and other inequities and limits in free speech. So I think it is a very inadequate bill, Mr. Chairman. It merely shifts where the political dollars will be spent. It does not regulate completely, especially in the area of gutter politics. And it gives special interests, the newspapers, a financial benefit through the campaign process. Pork for newspapers.

I suggest that we vote against the Shays-Meehan bill, and I say we vote for the Arney substitute and bring true reform to the campaign process.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF).

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of Shays-Meehan Campaign Finance Reform.

This was the first bill I co-sponsored after emerging from the most expensive House race in the history of this institution. This bill basically comes down to a single question and a single proposition, and that is, do we wish to allow special interests to spend unlimited amounts of money anonymously right before an election, or do we believe the American people are entitled to know who is spending the money to influence the outcomes of elections right when the election is coming up?

That is what this all boils down to. There is no first amendment issue here. Everything is permitted. All speech is permitted under Shays-Meehan. The question is does it need to be disclosed who is paying the freight. And notwithstanding all the protests from the opposition that is making the arguments today this bill is too strong. It is too weak. It goes too far. It does not go far enough. Me thinks the opposition doth protest too much.

The fact of the matter is the opposition to Shays-Meehan like it the way it is. They want special interests to be able to spend what they will, when they will, and not disclose who they are. That is wrong and today we have the chance to change it. Support Shays-Meehan.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) for yielding me time.

We are told the purpose of this legislation is to lessen the influence of corporations on the political process.

We are told that James Madison would not recognize the system we have today. I would submit that James Madison would be appalled if he knew of the blatant inconsistencies we have in the bill.

Corporations cannot spend their treasury money in the last 60 days of an election. However, if you consider that the parent company of CNN spent $2 billion in soft money last year, yet they will be able to speak during the last 60 days of an election unabated. They have a media exemption. The parent company of ABC spent $1 million last year in soft money to both parties; NBC nearly a half million dollars; CBS, 23,000; Fox nearly 700,000. Yet these entities will be able to speak within the last 60 days like nobody else.

If you wonder why the big media corporations support this legislation it is because they will be the only one ones standing after this is passed. If that is not inconsistent, what is? Now, are the supporters of this legislation blind to this? I would submit they are not.

Just a few months ago supporters of this legislation were pushing for hearings on the fact that one of the parent companies of NBC tried to weigh in with NBC on when to call the election for one of the candidates in Florida. If that is not a conflict of interest, what is? We have got to recognize that you cannot treat one corporation differently than another.

This is just one of the problems with the bill, and I would urge a "no" vote.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

I just point out we are trying to enforce the 1907 law banning the corporate treasury money, the 1947 law banning union dues money, and the 1974 law which bans unlimited sums by one individual in a collective campaign and to enforce all three laws. You can still advertise 60 days prior to an election with hard money.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH).

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Shays-Meehan bill with some reluctance. It is too little, too late, too compromised. Nonetheless it represent a credible step to constraining one of the worst abuses in our current system, the rising tide of soft money.

At issue is the shape of American democracy; at issue also is the shape of our political parties. There is a question of balance of power between the parties, but shape matters too. Do we want our parties dependent on the big and powerful or the individual citizen?

The system needs reform; so do the parties. In a new-fangled world, what is needed is old-fashioned politics, old-fashioned political parties, old-fashioned people-oriented representation. The case for Shays-Meehan is imperfect, but it is also compelling.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS), who has been a leader on campaign finance reform since he first arrived in January 1997.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Shays-Meehan bipartisan campaign finance reform bill. There has been a lot of debate, a lot of speculation on the floor of the House today as to who benefits under the bill. Is it Republicans, Democrats, labor unions, corporations, the media? The truth of the matter is we really do not know how this law is going to be used in the endless contest between the parties and all the competing interest groups; but the one thing we do know about this bill is it will reduce the amount of money that has infected and taken over politics, and it will begin to shift control back to the people for whose benefit this institution was founded. It will give them more control over the outcome of elections.

This bill is not a panacea. It is not perfect. What it attempts to do is to close the two most gaping loopholes that exist in our campaign finance system today, the uncontrolled issue ads that are influencing the outcome of elections today and soft money.

The story that was just told I found incredibly offensive about the ad that was used against a Republican Member of Congress, making up blatant lies about a member of his family. One of the best things we could do to protect the voters against that kind of trash is to force people to put their names on these ads because right now there are people running ads in this country on every end of the political spectrum that refuse to put their names on their ads.

We had a hearing in which some of these groups said, if you force us to put our names on these political ads, we will not run the ads. Our response was what is wrong with that, if you are not willing to publicly associate yourself with the inflammatory and often deceitful content?

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Chairman, does the current Shays-Meehan bill require the signature or the identification of the sponsor?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the Shays-Meehan proposal subjects those people who attempt to influence the outcome of an election to the same requirements that congressional candidates face now when they spend money to influence the election. There will be meaningful full disclosure that will allow the voters to judge who is making the statement and I believe will force people to discontinue making these inflammatory, deceitful actions.

The second point that this bill addresses is incredible proliferation of soft money. I think it is fair to say there are thousands of people who are being forced or choosing to make campaign contributions of unlimited amounts to both political parties, and this is not for good government.

Soft money was created to support political parties to encourage people to get the vote out and that will continue under Shays-Meehan. It was not intended to take over control.

I just want to conclude by saying the amount of soft money was $86 million in 1992, $260 million in 1996; over half of a billion dollars in the year 2000, a half a billion dollars. We need to put a stop to that. We need to adopt this bill. It is for the good of the people. It is not for the good of a particular political party, and I urge my colleagues to adopt the Shays-Meehan bill.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 seconds to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER).

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS), who just spoke on his points. He made them all so equally well in committee. The question I asked is does this bill require that identification, and there is no evidence to me that it does.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT), a leader in campaign finance reform.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT) has declared that this bill represents "Armageddon", the "life or death" of the Republican Party and the loss of control of the House. But the strange thing is that last session I heard one Member of the Democratic leadership make essentially the same claim in reverse, that Democrats would be assured defeat by passage of such legislation. Both cannot be right. Indeed, both are wrong.

The truth is that a political party that cannot survive without unlimited amounts of unregulated contributions and hate ads does not deserve to govern. A vote for the bipartisan Shays-Meehan bill does not test loyalty to a party. It tests loyalty to meaningful democracy.

Did my colleagues hear the story about the lobbyist who gave a million dollars to a political party in soft money donations and demanded absolutely nothing in return? Well, neither has anyone else. To avoid government of, by, and for the highest bidder, accept no substitute. There is only one alternative, the Shays-Meehan bipartisan proposal.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE).

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) for yielding me the time, and I do rise in support of the Shays-Meehan legislation.

I rise in support of this because I have watched elections in this country for a long time now, and I have seen the evolution from individuals running for office with knowledge as to who their contributors were to advertisements which are being run by outside groups without any acknowledgment as to exactly who they are. There might be names on the ad, but that was the extent of it. Who contributed to it, exactly what it is they represent, all these nebulous figures out there, we cannot do anything about; and I think frankly we have to do it, and the best way to do it is to ban soft money.

I wish we were banning soft money entirely. We know we are not at the State level, but we are at the Federal level; and I think it is a step in the right direction and something we should do. I think that the hard money, so that we know who gave it, is limited as to how much it is, is the way to go as far as future elections are concerned.

I would also point out, and I have heard this question a lot, that this legislation does not ban voter guides in terms of how people voted and what the story may be with respect to that; and it also does not limit free speech. It only speaks to the source of money that pays for the speech.

For all these reasons, I would encourage everyone to support the Shays-Meehan legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would announce the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. NEY) has 1¾ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) has 2½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Connecticut (Mr.

SHAYS) has 30 seconds remaining. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

This is going to be a long day. I think it will be a good day. I think we will have disagreements, but I think we can do it with graciousness.

We are going to have three substitutes that come before us, the gentleman from Texas's (Mr. ARMEY) substitute, the gentleman from Ohio's (Mr. NEY) substitute, and the Shays-Meehan substitute. We are asking for a "no" vote on the first two substitutes and passage of the Shays-Meehan substitute; and then we will have 13 amendments brought before the House if, in fact, the Shays-Meehan substitute is the one that stands.

We are trying to enforce the 1907 law banning corporate treasury money, the 1947 money banning union dues money, and enforce the 1974 law banning unlimited sums of money. That is what our attempt is.

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

We have a historic opportunity today, a historic opportunity to pass real campaign finance reform; and I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT) for the hard work he has put into this and my partner, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), who has worked diligently over the years. There are so many Republicans, the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA), the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP) who did such a wonderful job on the floor. We are going to hear more from the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP) as this debate goes on. So many Democrats who have stood together for campaign finance reform, our colleagues in the other body.

What makes this unique is we understand campaign finance reform will die if we let this go to a conference committee. So we have preconferenced this bill over a period of the last year, making sure that Democrats and Republicans have equal footing, making sure that the Senate and the House negotiate in good faith so that we now have a wonderful opportunity to pass this bill and send it over to the Senate where it will still need 60 votes.

Then we are going to send it over to the President, and the President has made it very clear to the Republican leadership and anyone else in this House, do not count on me to veto this bill. Why is it the President made it clear? Because this President knows what we all know, that there is a cloud over the Capitol and the White House because of this Enron scandal, and the American people are demanding that that cloud be removed by removing this soft money system that has had such a corrupting influence on the decisions that we make day in and day out, making good people do bad things. They want this removed and the President wants this removed, I am sure. I am sure that is why he will sign this bill.

Let us join together today and have a good debate. But let everyone know, the other side that is trying to kill this bill does not have a philosophical perspective. They do not have a set of principles that are determining what amendments they offer. What they offer is anything they can think of to defeat this bill, anything that they can think of to send this bill to conference. It has gotten so wild over the other side that they are actually putting in a substitute that is a bill that we were working on a few years ago before we preconferenced.

We have a unique opportunity. Let us join together and pass Shays-Meehan.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry? Mr. Chairman, the Member says other Members have no principles. Is he not attacking them, and is that not grounds for having words taken down, by questioning the motivation of why Members vote?

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON) will read the quote, though, he will find that it was not—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) has expired.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, if a Member says or casts aspersions as to why other Members are voting, is that not a personal attack and, therefore, the words that we would have taken down ordinarily, by questioning their motivation?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not proper for a Member to arraign the motives of another Member.

The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) yield for that purpose?

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, no, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) is recognized.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 seconds to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) to respond to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON).

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Chairman, what I was referring to was the principles on the concept of campaign finance reform, the principles of the concept. That is what I referred to. That is what we are debating. It is not personal, it is substantive; and we are going to debate it till 3 a.m. if we need to, and we are going to win in the end.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield the balance of our time to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), the Democratic whip.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) for yielding me the time and for his leadership on this important campaign finance reform and on electoral reform as well. I commend the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN), my colleague, for his tremendous leadership and that of the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) for his, and the distinguished leadership of our leader, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), for bringing us to this very, very important and historic day.

Today, we have an opportunity to achieve a great victory for the American people, to bring democracy back to them. Every one of us who serves in the Congress takes an oath of office to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States from all enemies, foreign and domestic. The corrosive and corrupting effect of special interests' big money in the political process is indeed a danger to our participatory democracy.

This beautiful city in which we serve 200 years ago was built on a swamp and a swamp it is again today, a swamp of special interest money. Today we have the opportunity to drain that swamp. We have the opportunity to bring a more wholesome attitude to the Washington atmosphere, to Washington, D.C. We have an opportunity to create a new architecture of political fundraising in our country which devolves to the grassroots, to the people from which power comes and where it belongs.

We have an opportunity today to send a valentine to the American people; to tell them they are important to us; that what they think matters to us; that they should have faith in government and they should have hope that the issues that they care about will have a fair shake and not be eclipsed by the blizzard, by the blizzard of special interest money in Washington, D.C.

A vote for the bipartisan Shays-Meehan bill, the only real campaign finance reform bill, will end, will end the corrosive influence of special interest money and level the playing field so that all Americans can participate and be heard.

Mr. Chairman, imagine a situation where we clear the deck, where we make a clean sweep and we start fresh for the American people, where the money that is raised is at the grassroots level, and we train a cadre of young people interested in politics, interested in government, a more wholesome situation for our country. I urge a "yes" vote for Shays-Meehan and a "no" on all the poison pills.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time, and I want to thank my distinguished ranking member for giving me a few more minutes here.

Let me say this and say it in the right way. This is well-intentioned by individuals. And this is regardless of the last comment, because I do not think we need to be saying that because we do not support something, that there is something ethically challenged about an individual. So this is well-intentioned, it is just not well-crafted.

And we hear the words "vote your conscience," but of course the implication today that we have heard is that if we do not vote for Shays-Meehan, then there is something wrong with our conscience. And I do not believe that about the other side.

Let me just say that this bill does gag millions of union workers in this country. Soft money can be spent on newspaper ads, but the money of those workers, their hard-earned money, cannot be spent where they want to direct it, into radio or TV. It does gag people who work in business. It does gag the rights of free speech, unless of course, again, the money is spent on a newspaper ad. That is just not the American way.

The amendments we will see today are good-intentioned amendments. This is not the same bill. Enron could have spent $60 million under Shays-Meehan. We know that. They can pay off building funds under Shays-Meehan by using it as a collateral backup for hard money that can be paid off after the election.

And, by the way, why is this not effective immediately? Last year, before the Committee on House Administration, people banged their fist and said, we have to do the whole thing by May, or we need a discharge petition. We accommodated it and moved it to around the first of July. It had to be done right there on the spot. Now all of a sudden we can do it after the election.

Challengers in this country are going to have a hard time figuring this bill out. This is an incumbent protection bill. It is not crafted the right way. The amendments we will see today are good substantive amendments that will not kill this bill, but will make this bill acceptable.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2356, the Shays-Meehan Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Bill.

First, I congratulate our colleagues from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) and Massachusetts (Mr. MEEHAN) for their diligence and persistence on this issue over the years. I remind my colleagues that legislation very similar to the bill under consideration today has passed the House twice before.

I also applaud the courage of the 218 Members, particularly our 20 Republican friends, who signed the discharge petition that finally allows the House to work its will on campaign finance reform. It is an unusual procedure, but was necessary in this case.

The 2000 elections were the most expensive ever, coming in at almost $3 billion. This is appalling. The system is broken. The American people are justified in lacking confidence that their priorities are considered as seriously as those of the big donors.

The influence of money in American politics is a problem as old as the Nation. It is discouraging to remember that the broken campaign finance system that Shays-Meehan would replace was itself once seen as a reform, designed to limit undue influence by large unregulated and undisclosed campaign contributions, but that big money soon found its way around the reforms through soft money and "independent" advertising.

The principles behind any meaningful reform are clear:

National parties, congressional committees, and Federal candidates must get along without soliciting or spending soft money. Under the Shays-Meehan bill, limited soft money will remain available to state and local parties for necessary voter registration and get-out-the-vote activities, but not to support Federal candidates.

Campaign advertisements masquerading as issue advocacy must be regulated. Shays-Meehan will require that broadcast communications that mention a Federal candidate must be paid for with hard money—which includes corporate and union PAC funds—within 60 days of a general or 30 days of a primary election.

There are other important provisions, including enhanced disclosure of the financial sponsorship of electioneering communications, new FEC rules for coordinated communications, and limiting the cost of broadcast advertising by candidates to reduce the onerous cost of running for Federal office today.

But basically, Mr. Chairman, the Shays-Meehan bill will replace a badly broken system with one that will limit the influence of soft money and "issue" advertising in Federal campaigns and begin to restore the faith of the American people in our campaign system.

Under the rule, several "poison pill" amendments will be offered to defeat the Shays-Meehan bill, either by gutting it or by sending it to near certain death in conference. One of the most alarming is the amendment to ban campaign contributions by legal permanent residents of the United States. These are people who live, work, and pay taxes in this country, and making contributions to candidates and parties is the only way they can influence the makeup of the government and public policy until they achieve citizenship and the vote. They are committed to America and should not be silenced.

Shays-Meehan is a reform that is long overdue. I urge my colleagues to reject the "poison pills" and to vote for Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2356, the Shays-Meehan Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Act of 2001. This legislation provides desperately needed reform to our current campaign system. As a proud cosponsor, and one of the 218 Members to sign the discharge petition needed to force a vote on this bill, I believe we can finally remedy many of the ongoing concerns associated with hard and soft money in our political system.

In the past, proposed election law revisions raised First Amendment objections, created new loopholes in the current law, or negatively affected get-out-the-vote (GOTV) efforts and voter registration. I believe H.R. 2356 overcomes these concerns and gets at the heart of election reform—special interests in Washington. This legislation bans soft money to national parties, reins in campaign attack ads that masquerade as issue ads, and addresses

GOTV concerns. A strong consensus of my constituents on Long Island have consistently voiced their support for this important piece of legislation. Their disenchantment with the current system results in fewer Americans exercising their right to vote. Congress has the opportunity to address the concerns over the corrupting influence of money in politics and public policy and pass real campaign finance reform.

Shays-Meehan is the real campaign finance reform bill that closes loopholes in our current system. It's time to pass this legislation and reform a political system that is awash in money. I urge my colleagues to support this important measure.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my concerns with the campaign finance legislation introduced by Representatives SHAYS and MEEHAN. This legislation is derived from the same mindset that produced our current campaign finance laws that so-called reformers object to: money is bad, all politicians are corrupt, and the American people are not capable of hearing several points of view and making a rational decision.

The supporters of the Shays-Meehan bill would have you think that those of us with other ideas for reform do not really support reform. This claim is ridiculous. Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker, I support real reform with no loopholes and full disclosure—not just lip service to reform.

Attempting to avoid a conference with the Senate is not the path to true reform. A conference would provide the opportunity to work out the imperfections in this bill and ensure that the reforms are truly effective and constitutional.

While I respect and share the intentions of the sponsors of this bill, today's legislation suffers from numerous defects, not the least of which is that several parts are patently unconstitutional. And what happened with the 1970s-era campaign finance reform will happen with this bill—parts will be stricken by the courts, opening new loopholes and creating a greater mess.

This bill fails to effectively ban soft money as supporters claim by allowing up to $60 million in soft money per donor nationwide via the states. Plus, it is conveniently scheduled to go into effect the day after the November 2002 elections.

Furthermore, this legislation does nothing to protect union employees who do not want their dues used to support political causes they personally oppose.

I also have serious concerns that this bill restricts political speech at the time that voters are listening just before elections. It transfers the constitutional right to discuss issues from the people to the media. The media will decide who and what will be heard and who will hear it and when. It empowers the media and special interests to use independent expenditures to influence campaign while limiting average Americans.

When citizens send their resources to an issue-advocacy organization to promote a cause they believe in, they and the organization they are supporting are exercising both their right to free association and their right to free speech. Shays-Meehan seeks to curtail those rights by imposing these harsh restrictions on grassroots issue discussion. It is essential that all Americans, not only rich individuals and PACs have the right to advocate positions.

Mr. Chairman, let's pass real campaign finance reform that holds federal lawmakers accountable to their constituents by requiring full and frequent disclosure, decreasing the role of soft money, removing unrealistic contribution limits, and opening our political process to the many voices that exist in this country.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2356, the Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Act. Concerns over the corrupting influence of money on politics have long been an issue of national debate, centered on the enduring issues of high campaign costs and reliance on interest groups for needed campaign funds. I believe rising election costs have led to uncontrolled spending, with too much time spent raising funds and the appearance that elections and public policy are bought and sold. Debate has also focused on the role of interest groups in campaign funding, especially through political action committees. I believe one way to fix our campaign finance system is through more regulation with spending limits.

I have been pushing campaign finance reform since coming to Congress and introduced my own legislation H.R. 462, the Campaign Finance System Reform Act, during the 105th Congress. This legislation set voluntary spending limits at $600,000 per election cycle, banned public financing of campaigns through the use of matching funds, and required that 100 percent of funds raised must come from the congressional district in which the candidate is running.

In July 2001, the House Republican leadership initially scheduled a debate on campaign finance reform. However, the rule crafted was unfair because it broke the Shays-Meehan bill into 14 separate parts to be voted on individually. Following the defeat of this rule, the Republican leadership announced it would not bring the bill back to the floor for consideration. A discharge petition was circulated, forcing the bill back to the House floor for debate.

The Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Act is the only legislation before the House which effectively deals with the dual problems of soft money and sham issue advertisements. This bill would ban the massive use of soft money contributions to political parties, thus closing the soft money loophole and restoring public confidence in our system. These donations totaled nearly $500 million in the last election. Much of this money was used to fund negative commercials, called issue ads, that evade spending limits that apply to each candidate's official campaign.

Some opponents say this bill will inhibit voter participation. However, this bill seeks to increase voter turnout by allowing state parties to collect limited amounts of soft money to be used for voter participation and get-out-the-vote activities. Under the bill, state and local parties would have sufficient funds for get-out-the-vote activities, but could not divert this soft money into sham issue ads.

The Ney-Wynn substitute is an honest but not sufficient attempt at reform and is at this point solely a way for the Republican leadership to kill the Shays-Meehan and McCain-Feingold reform bills. This substitute does nothing to curb wealthy special interests on the political process by allowing unlimited soft money contributions to state and local parties creating a huge loophole that undermines reform. Furthermore, Ney-Wynn does nothing to halt issue ads.

Mr. Chairman, I have pushed for a fair vote on this important issue and have put forth legislation which will truly reform the system. I acknowledge this legislation is not perfect. However, this legislation is an opportunity to enact reforms that are critical at this time. For these reasons, I support this legislation and encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of meaningful campaign finance reform.

I strongly support serious reform of the campaign finance system. We must eliminate the corrupting influence of special interest money from our political system and restore the faith of the American people in our public institutions. Neither party can claim total innocence of Washington misdeeds, and I believe the people of North Carolina sent me to Congress to work in a bipartisan manner to serve the public interest. That is what I try to do every day as a United States Representative.

At the beginning of the 105th Congress, my freshman class agreed that we would work on a bipartisan basis to reform the way that campaigns for public office are funded in this country. Since then 5 years have passed and we have yet to see any campaign finance reform signed into law.

Today we have a chance to pass legislation sponsored by Representatives SHAYS and MEEHAN that is almost identical to Senate-passed legislation sponsored by Senators MCCAIN and FEINGOLD. If we are able to pass this legislation without too much change we can send this legislation directly to President Bush who has promised to sign it. I sincerely regret that the Republican Leadership is working to alter, weaken and undermine the responsible campaign finance reform legislation sponsored by my colleagues Representatives SHAYS and MEEHAN in order to send it to a Conference where it is sure to die yet again. The people of this country are discouraged by this type of cynical behavior from this Congress and will not be fooled by this attempt to bury campaign finance reform legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the American people deserve a campaign election system with integrity. I sincerely hope that meaningful campaign finance reform will be signed into law before the end of the 107th Congress.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2356, the Shays-Meehan Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2001. Campaign Finance reform is long overdue and I am very pleased, after such a long struggle with those who oppose reform, to see this bill on the floor today.

Money has become far too important to our campaigns and reform is certainly necessary. In my opinion, we should do away with our private campaign financing system altogether and publicly fund political campaigns. This would level the playing field so that anyone could participate in the political process.

Though the Shays-Meehan bill doesn't go that far, it certainly makes dramatic improvements. This bill has several important provisions to improve our campaign finance laws: it bans soft money from national parties; it reins in campaign advertisements which claim to be "issue advocacy" ads; it enhances disclosure of political expenses; and it provides the Federal Election Commission with stronger tools to enforce campaign finance laws.

By passing this bill today, we as leaders can finally recognize what the American public has known for years: there is too much money in politics. In the last election, the average winning House candidate raised $919,649 toward his or her election. The average winning Senate candidate raised $7,345,468. With this much money in politics, it is virtually impossible for elected officials to remain unaffected by the disproportionate influence of those who wield tremendous wealth. If only we were raising these millions of dollars to provide health insurance for our nation's children. Now that would be a worthy expenditure of funds.

If our government is truly to remain "of, by and for the people," then we must ensure that the people, not corporate donors, are responsible for electing their leaders. The Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2001 will go a long way toward ensuring this goal. I will vote for this very important bill and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Shays-Meehan substitute. This is historic legislation, one of the most important reform bills in a generation.

I also wish to thank Mr. SHAYS and Mr. MEEHAN for their hard work and dedication to ensuring that we have a fair process and the opportunity to make meaningful reforms to our campaign finance laws this year. I also congratulate Mr. Turner and the Blue Dogs on a successful discharge petition.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican and Democratic parties raised nearly half a billion dollars in soft money during the 1999–2000 election cycle. Of this amount, over 473 million was given by 147 individuals in amounts of $500,000 or more. This influx of unregulated soft money, no matter where it comes from, taints us all individually, and collectively works to increase the public's cynicism and destroy faith in Congress.

Today we have the opportunity to pass a complete ban on federal soft money and reign in sham issue ads. Shays-Meehan is the only bill before us today that will accomplish these goals. It is important to note that this bill also protects the ability of state and local parties to promote voter registration and get out the vote activities on election day, and assure the fullest possible participation in our democracy. I urge all Members to support Shays-Meehan and vote down all poison pill amendments.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Shays-Meehan Campaign Finance Reform Act and urge my colleagues to vote against all "poison pill" amendments that will be offered today. I am proud to cosponsor this bipartisan legislation, which represents the best, real opportunity to reform our broken campaign finance system.

The issue of campaign finance reform cuts to the essence of democracy. Our unique American political system will not survive without the participation of the average American citizen. Unfortunately, more and more Americans are dropping out—with each election, fewer Americans are voting. They are doing so because they no longer believe that their vote matters. As they see more and more money pouring into campaigns, they believe that their voice is being drowned out by wealthy special interests.

Despite the cynicism of the American public, Congress has failed to enact significant campaign finance reform legislation since 1974. In that year, in the wake of the Watergate Scandal, Congress imposed tough spending limits on direct, "hard money" contributions to candidates. Unfortunately, no at that time foresaw how two loopholes in the law would lead to a gross corruption of our political system.

The first loophole is "soft" money—the unregulated and unlimited contributions to the political parties from corporations, labor unions, or wealthy individuals. "Soft" money allows wealthy special interests to skirt around "hard" money limits and dump unlimited sums of money into a campaign.

The unfolding Enron scandal provides a clear example of the pernicious influence of soft money. In the 2000 election cycle, Enron executives contributed $1.7 million—70 percent of which came in the form of soft money. Most Americans see a clear link between these contributions and Enron's quest for special treatment by Congress. Clearly, the Enron scandal has eroded the public's confidence in their government.

Soft money is used to finance the second loophole in campaign finance law: sham issue advertisements. This loophole allows special interests to spend huge sums of money on campaign ads advocating either the defeat or election of a candidate. As long as these ads do not use the magic words "vote for" or "vote against," they are deemed "issue advocacy" under current law and therefore not subject to campaign spending limits or disclosure requirements.

During the 2000 elections, the television and radio airwaves were flooded with these sham issue ads—many of which were negative attack ads. Americans who see or hear these ads have no idea who pays for them because no disclosure is required. They drown out the voice of the average American citizen, and even sometimes of the candidates themselves. Without reform, we can certainly expect a huge increase in these sham issue ads.

The Shays-Meehan bill begins to restore public confidence in our electoral system by closing these two egregious loopholes. The bill bans all contributions of soft money to federal campaigns. Specifically, it bans national party committees from soliciting, receiving, directing or spending soft money.

Shays-Meehan also closes the "issue advocacy" loophole. It broadens the presently absurd definition of electioneering activity, or "express" advocacy, to include any communication that refers, in support or opposition, to a candidate. This would not prevent public organizations from running advertisements, but would ensure that ads clearly designed to influence an election are regulated under federal law. We have laws clearly designed to regulate and disclose campaign donations and expenditures, and no one should be allowed to evade them. Shays-Meehan would ensure that everyone involved in influencing elections plays by the same rules.

Opponents have argued that the Shays-Meehan bill undermines the First Amendment right of free speech. However, the Supreme Court has ruled that Congress has a broad ability to protect the political process from corruption and the appearance of corruption. It has upheld as constitutional the ability to limit contributions by individuals and political committees to candidates. The Supreme Court has also clearly permitted Congress to distinguish between issue advocacy on the one hand, and electioneering or "express advocacy" on the other.

The Meehan-Shays proposal will not cure our campaign finance system of all its evils—and I certainly support more far reaching restrictions on campaign contributions and expenditures. However, the bill will take a modest but significant first step toward restoring integrity in our political system. It will limit the influence of wealthy special interests and help to restore the voice of average American citizens in our political process. In short, enactment of this legislation is essential to the survival of American democracy.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, the Enron bankruptcy and the subsequent revelations regarding Enron's political influence have once again brought campaign finance to the forefront of the congressional agenda. Ironically, many of the strongest proponents of campaign finance reform are among those who receive the largest donations from special interests seeking state favors. In fact, some legislators who were involved in the government-created savings and loan scandal of the late eighties and early nineties today pose as born again advocates of "good government" via campaign finance reform!

Mr. Chairman, this so-called "reform" legislation is clearly unconstitutional. Many have pointed out that the First amendment unquestionably grants individuals and businesses the free and unfettered right to advertise, lobby, and contribute to politicians as they choose. Campaign reform legislation blows a huge hole in these First amendment protections by criminalizing criticism of elected officials. Thus, passage of this bill will import into American law the totalitarian concept that government officials should be able to use their power to silence their critics.

The case against this provision was best stated by Herb Titus, one of America's leading constitutional scholars, in his paper Campaign-Finance Reform: A Constitutional Analysis: "At the heart of the guarantee of the freedom of speech is the prohibition against any law designed to protect the reputation of the government to the end that the people have confidence in their current governors. As seditious libel laws protecting the reputation of the government unconstitutionally abridge the freedom of speech, so also do campaign-finance reform laws."

The damage this bill does to the First amendment is certainly a sufficient reason to oppose it. However, as Professor Titus demonstrates in his analysis of the bill, the most important reason to oppose this bill is that the Constitution does not grant Congress the power to regulate campaigns. In fact, article II expressly authorizes the regulation of elections, so the omission of campaigns is glaring.

This legislation thus represents an attempt by Congress to fix a problem created by excessive government intervention in the economy with another infringement on the people's constitutional liberties. The real problem is not that government lacks power to control campaign financing, but that the federal government has excessive power over our economy and lives.

It is the power of the welfare-regulatory state which creates a tremendous incentive to protect one's own interests by "investing" in politicians. Since the problem is not a lack of federal laws, or rules regulating campaign spending, more laws won't help. We hardly suffer from too much freedom. Any effort to solve the campaign finance problem with more laws will only make things worse by further undermining the principles of liberty and private property ownership.

Attempts to address the problems of special interest influence through new unconstitutional rules and regulations address only the symptoms while ignoring the root cause of the problem. Tough enforcement of spending rules will merely drive the influence underground, since the stakes are too high and much is to be gained by exerting influence over government—legally or not. The more open and legal campaign expenditures are, the easier it is for voters to know who's buying influence from whom.

There is a tremendous incentive for every special interest group to influence government. Every individual, bank, or corporation that does business with government invests plenty in influencing government. Lobbyists spend over a hundred million dollars per month trying to influence Congress. Taxpayer dollars are endlessly spent by bureaucrats in their effort to convince Congress to protect their own empires. Government has tremendous influence over the economy and financial markets through interest rate controls, contracts, regulations, loans, and grants. Corporations and others are "forced" to participate in the process out of greed as well as self-defense—since that's the way the system works. Equalizing competition and balancing power—such as between labor and business—is a common practice. As long as this system remains in place, the incentive to buy influence will continue.

Many reformers recognize this, and either like the system or believe that it's futile to bring about changes. They argue that curtailing influence is the only option left, even if it involves compromising freedom of political speech by regulating political money.

It's naive to believe stricter rules will make a difference. If members of Congress resisted the temptation to support unconstitutional legislation to benefit special interests, this whole discussion would be unnecessary. Because members do yield to the pressure, the reformers believe that more rules regulating political speech will solve the problem.

The reformers argue that it's only the fault of those trying to influence government and not the fault of the members of Congress who yield to the pressure, or the system that generates the abuse. This allows members to avoid assuming responsibility for their own acts, and instead places the blame on those who exert pressure on Congress through the political process—which is a basic right bestowed on all Americans. The reformer's argument is "Stop us before we succumb to the special interest groups."

Politicians unable to accept this responsibility clamor for a system that diminishes the need for them to persuade individuals and groups to donate money to their campaigns. Instead of persuasion, they endorse coercing taxpayers to finance campaigns.

This only changes the special interest groups that control government policy. Instead of voluntary groups making their own decisions with their own money, politicians and bureaucrats dictate how political campaigns will be financed. Not only will politicians and bureaucrats gain influence over elections, other non-deserving people will benefit. Clearly, incumbents will greatly benefit by more controls over campaign spending—a benefit to which the reformers will never admit.

Mr. Chairman, the freedoms of the American people should not be restricted because some politicians cannot control themselves. We need to get money out of government. Only then will money not be important in politics. Campaign finance laws, such as those before us today, will not make politicians more ethical, but they will make it harder for average Americans to influence Washington. The case against this bill was eloquently made by Herb Titus in the paper referenced above: "Campaign-finance reform is truly a wolf in sheep's clothing. Promising reform, it hides incumbent perquisites. Promising competition, it favors monopoly. Promising integrity, it fosters corruption. Real campaign-finance reform calls for a return to America's original constitutional principles of limited and decentralized government power, thereby preserving the power of the people."

I urge my colleagues to listen to Professor Titus and reject this unconstitutional proposal. Instead, I hope my colleagues will work to reduce special interest influence in Washington and restore integrity to politics by reducing the federal government to its constitutional limits.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Chairman, big money is a cancer on our political system that must be removed or we risk devolving into an oligarchy like so many other republics before us. It is the constant money chase and submission to the special interests that corrupts our system and makes our constituents lose faith in their government. It's why there is such disinterest in politics back home and such low voter turnout. Our constituents don't think we care about them. They think we only care about raising money. They believe that their participation, their voices, cannot count against the power of big money, and recent experience says they are right.

Once upon a time, when someone wanted to run for office, the first question we used to ask was what kind of political support can you generate. Now the first question we ask is how much money can you raise. Better yet, we find a rich candidate who'll finance his or her own campaign. It's impossible to run on good ideas alone anymore, you need millions of dollars to go with them. With this system we risk electing candidates less attuned to their communities than to their big contributors.

This is not a perfect bill, but it is a good first step. If we do not take this 1st step today, the history books may eventually say that like the Roman Republic, the United States had a good 200 to 250-year run at democracy, and then it degenerated into an oligarchy like all the rest. Don't let that happen. Pass Shays-Meehan and begin to restore integrity to our political process.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, today we are being asked to vote for a campaign finance reform bill. And, like most in this body, I see that we are currently at a place where special interest money is threatening our democracy. Votes should not and cannot be influenced by money. But in our fervor to achieve reform, let us not blindly support any piece of legislation that dons a reform mask. Rather, we owe it to our constituents to strip away the disguises and pass legislation that will actually accomplish the ends that it claims to achieve.

While I applaud the ends of the Shays-Meehan legislation—to get special interest money out of politics—I cannot support the means. What good is closing one loophole only to create 50 more in the process? Today, I implore my colleagues to look at the facts and take a moment to understand what this legislation does. Please, look past the smoke and mirrors and understand the many problems with the Shays-Meehan bill.

Good intentions do not equal good legislation and passing bad legislation does not fix a problem—it merely creates more problems. Americans deserve better than the pretense of reform and I would hate to see this bill pass the House today, only to revisit the issue next year after we wake up to realize the monster we have created.

The Shays-Meehan legislation does not remove soft money from politics. Rather, it bans this contribution at the federal level, only to allow a union or a corporation to give up to $10,000 at the county and state level. This means that a single union or corporation will be able to give more than $30 million per election. In my estimation, not only does this not help the problem, it actually makes it worse. Instead of having a single national party collecting soft money, we will have 50 state parties collecting it. Their offices will line the streets of DC with union and corporate lobbyists throwing a parade with $10,000 checks raining down like tickertape for every state party. Is this closing a loophole or making a mockery of our system?

Accountability is the key to reform. The problem with soft money is that it is hard to know where it is spent. When voters cannot discern where elected officials are getting the money to finance their campaign efforts, there is no accountability. By restricting the way that unions and corporations can participate in the political process openly, these interest groups will resort to issue advocacy and independent expenditures, activities that do not fall under any laws. Unlimited and unregulated resources can be devoted to these types of expenditures. With the passage of Shays-Meehan, accountability is out the window. We will push campaign-related activities made on behalf of candidates by outside groups into an abyss of unregulated anonymous money.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot in good conscience vote for a bill that is going to put more loopholes in a campaign finance system that has enough problems on its own. We need good legislation that still allows for political participation and that demands accountability. It is for this reason that I support the Ney-Wynn substitute. This legislation does not prohibit participation or force disclosure into oblivion. Rather, it sets reasonable caps on soft money contributions to national parties. Ney-Wynn allows national parties to perform one of their key functions of get-out-the-vote efforts and voter registration drives. These are efforts that are financed by soft money. Ney-Wynn allows soft money to national parties, but only to be used for these purposes. Furthermore, it regulates the types of independent expenditures that can be made by unions and corporations, specifically limiting television ads for longer than the mere 60 days as mandated under Shays-Meehan.

Ney-Wynn reforms our system of financing campaigns without loopholes but with sound policy. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to closely examine these two pieces of legislation. Bad legislation with a nice name is still bad legislation. The Ney-Wynn substitute contains real reform and real reform is what we need.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Chairman, since taking office, I have been a dedicated supporter of campaign finance reform, and I commend my friends—Representatives SHAYS and MEEHAN—for their persistence on this issue. During my first term, every day the House was in session, I gave a statement on the floor in support of campaign finance reform. I hope that the House will have the courage to pass true reform measures today.

Without question, there is too much money in our current political system. Running for office has become increasingly expensive, forcing candidates to spend unacceptable amounts of time fundraising, and discouraging qualified challengers from running for office because they cannot afford the price of admission. What should be a competition of ideas has become a battle of wealth.

In 2000, the national party committees raised $495 million in unregulated soft money, almost twice the amount raised in 1996. At this rate, it will not be long before billion dollar campaigns are commonplace. Though opponents of reform say the public does not care about this issue, the residents of Wisconsin's Third District tell me otherwise. They see where our system is headed and demand reform from Congress. Shays-Meehan heeds their mandate by banning soft money donations to the national parties, and imposing tight limits on the collection and use of soft money by State and local parties.

Unfortunately, those of us that would like to see genuine changes in the campaign finance system must contend with the false reform legislation supported by the House leadership. This legislation does not truly change the current system and does nothing to stem the rising tide of soft money that circumvents and erodes it. For example, under the Ney-Wynn substitute, Enron and its executives would still have been able to give 76 percent of the money they gave in 2000 to national parties.

Right now we stand on the brink of historic reform. Reform that will put the power of democracy back in the hands of ordinary Americans. Reform that will force politicians and political parties to get back to the grassroots level. Mr. Chairman, the American people have waited long enough. Now is the time for positive bipartisan action on this bill.

This bill is not the panacea to what ails our political system; it is not perfect, but it is a significant step in the right direction by banning the largest political contributions that ordinary citizens cannot give. A vote for Shays-Meehan today is a vote to better empower the American people and to begin to level the playing field of access in our political system.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I rise today in the strongest possible support of the Shays-Meehan campaign finance reform bill to ban "soft money."

Individual rights are the hallmark of our country.

As nations across the globe struggle to end oppressive dictatorships, our political system shines as a beacon of equality. Every person, regardless of race, income, or religion is afforded a vote and every vote is equal.

Unfortunately, the bedrock of our democracy is compromised by the constant assault of financial contributions to the political system. Instead of one person, one vote, campaign contributions are taking our system towards a one dollar, one vote system.

Every aspect of our life is impacted by the influence big contributions are having over elected officials.

Enron is a case study in how huge corporate contributions undermine the public's confidence in our democracy.

The shadow of doubt grows each day that Vice President CHENEY refuses to release meeting records related to the development of the Bush administration's energy policy. We need to reform campaign finance law to ensure that corporations and special interest groups are not able to purchase political influence, turning Congress and the Presidency into a "cash and carry" operation.

A recent article in the Washington Post tells a story which should send a chill down the spine of every American who cherishes our democratic system. According to the February 10, 2002, Washington Post article, "Hard Money, Strong Arms and 'Matrix': How Enron Dealt with Congress, Bureaucracy," Enron turned campaign finance contributions into a science. According to the article,

With each proposed change in federal regulations, lobbyists punch details into a computer, allowing Enron economists in Houston to calculate just how much a rule change would cost. If the final figure was too high, executives used it as the cue to stoke their vast influence machine, mobilizing lobbyists and dialing up politicians who had accepted some of Enron's million in campaign contributions.

To raise campaign cash, Enron relied not just on individual contribution but also on a well-funded political action committee that distributed money to candidates of both parties . . . Since 1990, Enron's political committees have given federal candidates and parties more than $1 million.

Mr. Chairman, campaign finance reform comes down to just one, very important thing—protecting our democracy.

Because of large, unregulated contributions, known as "soft money," special interests and corporations often get special representation by elected officials, special representation that often is in conflict with the larger public interest.

Critical issues in our society are directly affected by the undo influence of narrow special interests, particularly when there is money at stake. Energy companies, for example, can negotiate a $30 billion tax cut while the Bush Administration submits a budget to Congress that actually cuts the total level of funding for the historic education reforms that just one month ago he signed into law.

Pick any issue that you care about. Campaign finance reform is needed to allow those issues to have their day in Congress and the White House. Issues such as health care, making child care affordable and of high quality, protecting the environment, protecting Social Security or providing a real prescription drug benefit through Medicare and care for Seniors.

Instead of a system that gives the greatest deference to those in greatest need, the voices of narrow special interests use large unregulated political contributions to drown out the voices of our average citizens. Things have got to change.

Today, the House of Representatives will again take up legislation to significantly reform our campaign finance laws.

Last year, the Republican leadership resorted to parliamentary tricks to water down bipartisan campaign finance reform legislation which had passed the Senate. However, supporters of clean campaigns were not deterred. It took 218 Members of the House, including me, to sign a "discharge petition" that forced the Republican leadership to bring this important matter before the entire Congress again for a vote.

While we are assured a vote today, opponents of reform, including the Republican leadership of this House, are working hard to once again use parliamentary tricks to block or weaken meaningful campaign finance reform.

My hope is that the collapse of Enron is the straw that will break the back of opposition to real campaign finance reform. We need reform that will shine the light on the shadows of doubt left by the Enron scandal.

We need to pass the Shays-Meehan soft money ban today so that tomorrow our children can have a brighter future.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today as a principal sponsor of the campaign finance legislation before the House. I want to explain what this legislation seeks to accomplish and why banning soft money is critical for our democracy. Last year, the Senate courageously passed the McCain-Feingold bill. It is now time for this House to take a similar stand and finally put an end to the deluge of soft money contributions that weakens our democracy.

Our system is awash in soft money, and everyone is degraded as a result. Not surprisingly, in poll after poll, voters express their cynicism about politics and their dismay with the current campaign finance system. Disgusted with the overriding influence of money in Washington, citizens, in ever-increasing numbers, are not exercising their precious right to vote in federal elections.

Our flawed campaign finance system is also taking its toll on qualified and principled candidates for political office. Since soft money contributions are essentially limitless, we and other elected officials are under unrelenting pressure to raise more and more money, thus increasing the potential for actual and apparent corruption. In increasing numbers, good people decide not to run, or drop out of public life, because they cannot stomach the hunt for huge donations and all that comes with it. Those elected officials who stay spend far too much time fundraising and not enough time listening to their constituents and doing their jobs.

The reform legislation we introduce today strengthens First Amendment values. It will ensure that elected officials are more responsive to the voices of their constituents and do not appear beholden only to big money. As your own constituents would surely tell you, stemming the tide of soft money would improve their access to government—and enhance their First Amendment rights—by allowing them to participate in the process. And it will keep good people interested in serving in Government. Neither the First Amendment nor or Nation is served by large soft money donations that drive citizens away from voting in elections and candidates away from running in them. So, this is not only a campaign finance reform bill, it is a democracy revitalization bill.

Let's look at the growth of soft money in our campaigns. According to Common Cause, in 1988, the two parties raised a total of $45 million in soft money. In 1992, the figure rose dramatically to $84.4 million. In 1996, soft money contributions ballooned to $235.9 million—almost a quarter of a billion dollars. In this past presidential election, the total amount of soft money raised by both parties climbed still further to a staggering $463.1 million—nearly double the soft money contributions of the previous presidential election and ten times the amount raised only a decade ago.

These vast amounts could not have been raised directly for a candidate's campaign under current law, which subjects individual contributions to an aggregate $25,000 annual limit and a $1,000 per candidate per election limit. Despite these clear caps on legal contributions, individuals are contributing up to $100,000 and $250,000. Moreover, unions and corporations—entities that are barred from giving directly to candidates from their general treasuries—are responsible for many of these contributions.

Opponents of reform argue that this flood of soft money does not corrupt our politicians and does not even appear to corrupt the political process. They argue that soft money contributions are technically made to political parties, and not to candidates, and thus any exchange of favors for contributions is unlikely. Soft money may not be used to advocate expressly for a candidate, they argue, so there is less chance that soft money donors will actually influence candidates, or at least appear to influence them.

That argument elevates form over the substance most Americans ruefully see. First, even though the money often goes to parties, it's the candidates themselves and their surrogates who solicit soft money. The candidates know who makes these huge contributions and what these contributors expect. Candidates not only solicit these funds themselves, they meet with big donors who have important issues pending before the government; and sometimes, the candidates' or the party's position appear to change after such meetings. Additionally, the soft money candidates raise for their political parties is often directed back into their campaigns. This creates the appearance of corruption that pervades politics today—on both sides of the aisle. Let me discuss some powerful reminders of this distressing fact about our democracy.

Let's take the already infamous Enron story as an example: in the 1999/2000 election cycle Enron contributed over $2 million in soft money to the national parties—$1.4 million to the Republicans, and $600,000 to the Democrats. These large soft money gifts have cost a pall of doubt over the many elected federal officials who raised or received Enron's money. The Enron example proves that the appearance of impropriety has the same corrosive effect as actual impropriety. Federal officeholders, knowing that their reputations are being tainted and their good character being questioned by receipt of Enron contributions are rushing headlong to return contributions they were only too willing to accept before the scandal broke. The actions and motives of government officials who did deal with, or could have dealt with Enron, are being called into question. For example, The New Yorker asks whether Administration officials, who might have taken actions that would have cushioned the impact of Enron's fall on employees and the economy, declined to act precisely because they were afraid the public would conclude their actions were motivated by the large soft money contributions Enron gave to the Republican Party. The Washington Post asks whether the policy views of a Senator as esteemed for probity as Senator LIEBERMAN are subject to question because of his receipt of contributions. Even in the investigations into Enron do not yield convincing proof of a particular quid pro quo, the Enron contributions have brought leaders of both parties into disrepute in the eyes of the public.

Let's also recall the Hudson Casino story. A few years ago, three bands of Wisconsin Indian tribes wanted to open a casino in Hudson, WI, near the Minnesota border. A neighboring set of Minnesota tribes opposed the plan, because the Wisconsin casino would compete with their profitable casino. These Minnesota tribes gave large sums of soft money to the Democratic National Committee. This gave them instant access to the Chairman of the DNC, who promised to get the Administration to help. He immediately called a high-ranking White House official, who in turn contacted the Department of the Interior—immediately after the Minnesota tribes had made substantial contributions to the DNC. This chain of events, and Interior's rejection of the Wisconsin application, created the strong appearance of impropriety even though Interior career staff had decided the case on the merits. This led to an independent counsel investigation and two debilitating congressional investigations into whether the government was for sale.

The tobacco industry provides another example. As the Thompson Committee Minority Report makes clear, in the 1996 election cycle, the tobacco industry gave roughly $10.1 million in political contributions, of which $6.8 million was soft money. In previous election cycles, the industry divided its campaign contributions equally between the parties, but in 1996 over 80 percent went to the Republicans. The GOP collected $5.8 million in soft money from tobacco interests and tobacco PACs. A study published in the Journal of the American Medical Association noted that "House members receiving the most tobacco money were 14.4 times as likely to vote with the industry as members receiving the least; in the Senate the number was 42.2. In the 104th Congress, the Republican majority defeated legislation that would have raised taxes on tobacco and preserved millions of dollars in subsidies for the industry. Again the appearance of improper influence is overwhelming.

Finally, we have Roger Tamraz. He served as a Republican Eagle in the 1980s during Republican Administrations and a Democratic Trustee in the 1990s during a Democratic Administration. In 1996, Tamraz has already contributed $200,000 to the Democratic National Committee, and made it clear he was considering donating an additional $400,000. These promises enabled him to hold six private meetings with the President to discuss Mr. Tamraz's proposed oil pipeline project in the Caucasus. Although the National Security Council, which strongly opposed this plan, ultimately prevailed, a series of calls were made to employees of the Department of Energy and the National Security Council making it very clear that a change in policy would mean "a lot of money for the DNC." Tamraz unabashedly explained why he gave—to gain access to officials in power. At the Thompson Committee hearings Tamraz spoke plainly—"I think next time I'll give $600,000. . . . [Y]ou set the rules, and we are following the rules. . . . This is politics as usual. What is new?"

Sadly, there are other blockbuster stories like these. But, as Representative Eric Fingerhut wisely reminded us a few years ago, people often focus just on "the grand-slam example of the influence of these interests. But you can [also] find a million singles . . . regulator change, banking committee legislation . . . a change in when you get audited. . . . Think of the committee and you can think of the interest group or the company that will have an interest. . . ." Let's all be honest with ourselves: we have all been in situations where we would rather fit in an appointment with a contributor than risk losing his or her donation. When, as a result of a Member's efforts, someone makes a significant donation to the party, and then the donor calls the Member a month later and wants to meet, it's very difficult to say no, and few of us do say no.

A majority of the Supreme Court correctly observed in its Colorado Republican II decision, which upheld limits on the coordinated expenditures of political parties, that the parties "act as agents for spending on behalf of those who seek to produce obligated officeholders." The Supreme Court quoted former Senator Paul Simon, who explained: "I believe people contribute to party committees on both sides of the aisle for the same reason that Federal Express [and other industries do], because they want favors." The former Senator also recounted a debate over a bill favored by Federal Express during which a colleague exclaimed "we've got to pay attention to who is buttering our bread." The Supreme Court concluded in Colorado Republican II that it would be myopic to refuse "to see how the power of money actually works in the political structure."

Mr. Chairman, the massive soft money loophole that has eviscerated the campaign finance laws is having an insidious effect on the health of our democracy. Our democracy is dependent for its vitality on citizen participation and engagement—citizens who care, citizens who vote, citizens who run for and serve in office. But look what is happening.

The current system has turned voters off—they are increasingly cynical about politics and politicians, and fewer are exercising their right to vote. In poll after poll, voters express their cynicism about politics and the campaign finance system. A recent Time magazine poll found that in 1961, 76 percent of Americans said they trusted the government; in 2001, only 19 percent expressed the same trust. A 1997 New York Times poll found that 89 percent of Americans believe the country's campaign finance system is in need of fundamental changes, 75 percent polled believe that their public officials make or change policy decisions as a result of money received from major contributors. A Fox News poll from May 2001 found that over 80 percent of the public believes that big companies and PACs have too much control in Washington.

As former Senator George Mitchell has said: "The public has come to believe that members of Congress are not responsive to their constituents, but rather are responsive to those who contribute the funds that help members of Congress get elected. It is a corrupting view, in that it corrupts the trust and confidence that people must have in a democratic society. . . ." Former Senator Wyche Fowler echoed these views: "The public has now lost confidence in [Congress]. Because the public now thinks that it is money—and only money—that makes the decisions."

This general distrust has discouraged our future leaders—the young generation—from going to the polls. In 1972, the first time 18-year-olds could vote, 50 percent of 18–24 year-olds cast a vote. By 1996, that number had fallen to 32 percent. There is much evidence—and our own experience with our constituents confirms—that one of the major reasons citizens increasingly fail to vote is their perception that their vote makes no difference because of the role of money in politics and the influence of special interest groups. In one survey asking young people why they do not vote, a plurality said “they don’t think their vote makes a difference”; 64 percent agreed that “government is run by a few big interests looking out for themselves, not for the benefit of all.” In another recent poll, 57 percent expressed dissatisfaction with the political system. Many emphasized that politicians can’t be trusted, that money plays too large a role in politics, and that special interest groups disproportionately influence policy.

It is vital to the continued health of our democracy that the citizenry remain alert and involved and participate by, among other things, voting in federal elections. The need to reverse the lack of confidence voters feel in their elected officials and their resulting lack of engagement in the political process is a compelling justification for banning soft money contributions. The Supreme Court would seem to agree. In its recent Shrink Missouri decision it said: “[l]eave the perception of impropriety unanswered, and the cynical assumption that large donors call the tune could jeopardize the willingness of voters to take part in democratic governance.” Our Supreme Court has consistently held that view for over 25 years. In Buckley, the Court observed that even where the influence of money does not rise to the level of bribery, it can work subtly to erode public confidence in the system to the detriment of our democracy.

It is also important to the health of our democracy that qualified people come forward to run in elections and to serve as elected representatives. Having the best candidates is good not only in and of itself for obvious reasons but will increase citizen participation in elections. Unfortunately, in recent years, some of our finest legislators across the nation—such as Senator Nunn—have left public service, bemoaning our system of financing campaigns. The average senator has to raise $11,600 every week during his or her six years in office in order to be reelected. Former Senator DeConcini of Arizona put it: “You walk around on eggshells. One of the reasons I got out of the race was that I didn’t want to raise the money.” As Thomas Mann of the Brookings Institution has explained: “The threat to the health of the American democracy stems rather from what candidates and their supporters must do to raise the sums needed to complete successfully. The cost of mounting a major campaign is a huge disincentive to candidacy for people of ordinary means who lack the stomach for nonstop fund raising.”

The soft-money ban that forms the core of this legislation aims to restore public faith in our democracy. By enacting this legislation, we will, in Senator McCain’s words, “change the public’s widespread belief that politicians have no greater purpose than [their] own reelection.” We have a historic opportunity here not only to end the appearance of corruption, but to reinvigorate our democracy by making individual citizens’ votes count, and by encouraging the most qualified candidates to run for election.

Mr. Chairman, since the 1971 passage of the Federal Election Campaign Act and the Buckley decision, there have been strict limits on contributions given by individuals and political action committees to federal candidates. But, as many have recognized, the soft-money loophole undermines these curbs. As the Washington Post put it: “The national party organizations are used to raise and spend on behalf of their candidates funds that the candidates are forbidden to raise and spend themselves. It’s a fictional distinction.” Although FECA provides clear contribution limits, candidates and parties easily circumvent FECA’s hard money restrictions by raising soft money. In its most recent decision on campaign finance, the Supreme Court observed that our political parties are “in a position to be used to circumvent contribution limits that apply to individuals and PACs, and thereby to exacerbate the threat of corruption and apparent corruption that those contribution limits are aimed at reducing.” In a recent memorandum of Soft Money Rulemaking, the Federal Election Commission’s General Counsel found that “national party committees rely in large part on the access they can provide to federal officials, or on the more direct influence of federal officeholders and candidates, to solicit large sums from corporations, labor unions, and other donors that provide most of their soft money.”

Mr. Chairman, it is vital for our democracy that we act today to ban soft money. Soft money has reintroduced into the Federal campaign finance system the very kinds of contributions that the federal laws intended to exclude—namely donations from corporations, unions, as well as large individual contributions. Soft money is not just a loophole, it is the loophole that ate the law. Let’s send a clear message today that our democracy—and our integrity—is not for sale.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Chairman, this evening’s legislation is near and dear to my heart. I began my political career in college working on election reform. Two years later, I was the author of Oregon’s legislation establishing campaign spending limits. It was my proposal that prohibited the insidious practice of holding legislation hostage until individuals and interest groups in effect paid “ransom” to legislative barons. So, in recent years, I have been saddened that narrow and, I think inappropriate, readings of the Oregon and U.S. Constitution have restricted the ability of the political process to police itself.

Our current campaign financing system is doubly troubling for me because it symbolizes not only what is wrong with campaigns but also what is wrong with the decision-making process in Congress. It is appalling the lengths to which the political process has been twisted and the huge sums of money that are spent opposing reasonable legislation and moderate candidates. The extreme, hard-edged and too-often hidden opponents of the public interest which are financed by soft money and anonymous contributions create a situation where the sheer volume of expenditure drowns out rational discourse.

A campaign finance system where large contributors and special interest groups have the loudest voice threatens the foundation of our democracy. It calls into question the integrity of our elections and of our government. We have a responsibility to strengthen our democracy by eliminating the influence of soft money. Large soft-money donations and anonymous political attack ads have a corrosive influence on the political process. Soft money is bad for the people who give it, bad for the people who receive it and bad for the American people.

I have supported the Shays-Meehan legislation since I came to Congress. We need to reduce the amount of time that is taken away from legislative business in order to pursue the mad chase for campaign dollars. The legislation before us is the best way to start. Keeping an open and accountable campaign finance system in this country is an ongoing struggle which too seldom commands the attention of either the Congress or the public in ways that it should. Today we’ve broken through that barrier.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Chairman, for ten years, I have supported every meaningful bill on campaign finance reform. Today, the House has a chance to make history by passing a bill that can become law.

Many say this bill does not go far enough—and they are right. But it is a bill the Senate has passed—and passing it today avoids a conference, which could well become a graveyard.

I say, let’s take this important step.

I have experienced the impact of soft money ads designed to distort my record. Approximately $4 million worth of these ads targeted me in the 2000 election cycle. This practice drives good people out of politics and discourages voters. Indeed, the whole point is to depress voting.

I say enough.

Shays-Meehan can pass today. The time has come.

Ms. LEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2356, the bipartisan Shays-Meehan campaign finance reform legislation. It is time that we take the soft money out of our political system.

In fact, not only do I support eliminating soft money, but I support full public financing for campaigns. I am hopeful that once Shays-Meehan passes and is signed into law that we can focus our efforts on passing legislation to provide for public financing.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of Shays-Meehan and a signer of the discharge petition to bring this important legislation to the floor today. I want to thank the sponsors of this legislation especially for committing to voter registration and get-out-the-vote activities, which are essential for the election of minority candidates.

The Enron scandal has shown us once again the importance of passing meaningful campaign finance reform. While Enron and Arthur Andersen executives and the corporations donated over $11 million to political campaigns since 1989, workers at Enron lost their jobs and their life savings. This is an outrage and once again shows the need for corporate responsibility and of course for passage of Shays-Meehan.

Let’s get the money out of politics. That’s what campaign finance reform is all about. That means banning soft money and certainly not increasing hard money. Let’s defeat these amendments that take us in the wrong direction, those that take us away from real reform.

I urge my colleagues to vote for a clean Shays-Meehan bill and to defeat all poison pill amendments.

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act as presented by my distinguished colleagues Mr. MEEHAN and Mr. SHAYS. This bill represents a watershed in our democracy. Today, we can remove from campaigns the shadow of special interests and move toward an electoral system in which every American will have an equal voice in our democratic process.

For too long, our nation's campaigns have been tainted by soft money sleight-of-hand, campaigns in which large amounts of money are solicited from a few contributors and mysteriously distributed.

For too long, we have winked as soft money came in by the truckload for "party-enhancing activities" when it was common knowledge that it really was used for "issue ads" that came uncomfortably close to supporting candidates.

Many took advantage of the soft money loophole to gain inordinate access to our country's leaders and lowered our nation's political parties to little more than middlemen for moving soft money for corporations and wealthy individuals.

In the past few weeks, in my capacity on the Energy and Commerce Committee's Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, I have had the opportunity to observe how some corporations have attempted to escape scrutiny in part by taking advantage of the loopholes in our campaign system. I have seen how the company's dealings have raised questions in the minds of Americans about how soft money can be used to gain access, influence, and power.

Our democracy cannot operate at its best without openness. This legislation will shine light onto the campaign finance process, bringing disclosure, structure, and accountability. This legislation disarms both political parties, limiting soft money from both corporations and unions. It increases the amount of hard money that can be contributed and allows adequate funds for our state parties to conduct vital get out the vote activities.

I would like to commend my colleagues for their persistence and perseverance in their effort to get their bill passed. They have compromised on important measures in order to gain bi-partisan support. Their efforts to move this legislation forward are a tribute to those who have fought and died for a free and just nation, to those who have struggled for an open and honest political system. I urge my colleagues to not let this moment pass us by, to vote for the Shays/Meehan bill and for a reformed campaign finance system that will clean up our campaigns and give our political process back to the people.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Chairman, as one who has consistently supported the Shays-Meehan Campaign Finance Reform bill (H.R. 2356) and who signed its discharge petition, I rise in strong support of this critical reform legislation. I also would like to recognize the leadership of CHRIS SHAYS and MARTY MEEHAN, as well as my Texas colleague, JIM TURNER, on this issue.

Mr. Chairman, our campaign finance laws must be reformed to reduce the influence of money in politics and restore the balance originally achieved by the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1974 (FECA). Since coming to Congress in 1995, I have come to believe that our political process faces the very real risk of being hijacked by the prevalence of "soft money" contributions. In the last election cycle alone, the two major parties took in nearly $500 million in soft money. Certainly, such huge, unregulated "soft money" contributions to political parties threaten to corrupt the integrity of our political process. Mr. Chairman, Shays-Meehan represents an extraordinary opportunity to give voice to citizens whose individual voices are increasingly being drowned out by unregulated issue ads that purport to provide voter education but are actually not-so-veiled efforts at influencing the public's views of a certain political candidate.

H.R. 2356 strikes a critical balance between the need to protect our rights to free speech, guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution, and the need to make meaningful reforms to our political system. Shays-Meehan would ban the raising of soft money by national parties and federal candidates that is currently outside the restrictions and prohibitions of the federal regulatory framework. H.R. 2356 would, however, allow State and local parties to accept annual donations of $10,000 per individual for get-out-the-vote and voter-registration efforts in federal elections, so long as such efforts do not mention a federal candidate. Additionally, Shays-Meehan places new limits on aggregate individual contributions to national political parties and candidates for president and Congress at $95,000. Of that, no more than $57,500 of that could be given to party organizations, and $37,500 to candidates. I am also pleased that H.R. 2356 requires greater FEC disclosure requirements for independent expenditures of more than $1,000 made within 20 days of an election. I do not believe disclosure, in and of itself, stifles Free Speech.

Though I support Shays-Meehan, I recognize that it is not perfect. One troubling aspect is how it raises the hard money limit on contributions to Senate candidates to $2,000 but maintains the $1,000 for hard money limit contributions to House candidates. The last time we were slated to consider Shays-Meehan in the House, I submitted an amendment to the House Rules Committee to maintain the hard money limit of $1,000 for all candidates for Federal elective offices. Though I strongly believe that my amendment would have enhanced Shays-Meehan, it was blocked by the Republican leadership. Alternatively, the Republicans will propose raising the level of hard dollars that House candidates can raise to $2,000 per cycle. While I strongly oppose the disparity between the House and Senate, I do not support raising hard money limits to $2,000, as proposed in the Wamp amendment. I cannot see how injecting more hard money into our political system advances the goals of the underlying bill, Mr. Chairman, be assured that once Shays-Meehan clears the House, I will continue to work at having the disparity in hard money limits to be fully addressed.

Additionally, I would note that I have some concerns over how the measure restricts independent advertisements within 60 days of an election by unions, corporations and nonprofits but allows political action committees (PACs) associated with unions and corporations to donate soft money for such ads so long as the ads do not expressly advocate support or opposition for a candidate. Though I believe that a blanket prohibition on direct expenditures by unions, corporations and nonprofits may raise some constitutional questions, I support this provision because it will create greater transparency in the crucial days before an election.

Finally, in recent days, I have heard from a number of local Texas broadcasters who voiced serious concerns about how Shays-Meehan's lowest unit charge (LUC) provision will impact their abilities to sell broadcast ads. Under Shays-Meehan, stations would be compelled to sell air time to Federal candidates at the best advertising rate of last 180 days. Having campaigned in a major media market, I appreciate the goal of this provision—to ensure that candidates are not priced out of television, a powerful medium to reach voters. That being said, I am concerned that extending special treatment exclusively to federal candidates would result in state and local candidates, and for that matter local small businesses, becoming priced out of the market. For this reason, I am supporting an amendment offered by my colleague, GENE GREEN, to maintain the current LUC rules which qualify political candidates to the same rate as the broadcaster's most favored commercial advertiser.

Mr. Chairman, despite my concerns about individual provisions, the train has left the station on this issue, leaving members with two choices. They can hop aboard or get out of the way. Mr. Chairman, at this time it is critical that this body beat back the efforts of those among us who would try to derail the process, by offering amendments that are sure to divide the fragile coalition for reform. While Shays-Meehan may not be perfect, it does represent our best chance at instituting the broadest reform of our Nation's campaign finance laws in a quarter century. Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to get behind this effort and approve Shays-Meehan.

Mr. WU. Mr. Chairman, I absolutely support H.R. 2356, the Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Act.

Our current campaign finance system contributes now to a culture of cynicism. It hurts our institutions, it hurts our government, and it is an attack on the integrity of our political process.

Our Congress must be unbought and unbossed.

That's why I want to stop the flood of unregulated and unreported money in campaigns. I want to eliminate the undue influence of special interests in elections. I want to encourage strong grassroots participation. And I would like to return power to where it belongs—with the people.

The Shays-Meehan bill does this: It bans soft money raised by national parties and by candidates for Federal office. It ends issue ads, which are really attack ads under the guise of "issues." And, it clarifies what election activities non-profits can do on behalf of our candidates for Federal office.

We must ban soft money. It is nothing more than a backdoor way to avoid the contribution limits that are now placed on candidates. Soft money is influencing our process almost as much as direct contributions to candidates do. In fact, Republicans and Democrats raised over $460 million in 2000 in soft money. And let's face it, special interest groups that contribute large sums of this soft money have an influence on the political process.

This is why we need to pass Shays-Meehan.

In 2000, we spent $3 billion on election activities. That is too much time and too much money spent on fundraising when it could be spent on doing what is important—passing legislation to improve our health care, our education system, and our economic stability.

We must do more to address the fact that the largest voting block in America is the no-shows. Campaign Finance Reform can deal with this cynicism.

I urge my colleagues in the strongest way to pass Shays-Meehan. It will be one of the best things we can do for democracy.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Shays-Meehan Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Bill. We must take action now to clean our political financing system, eliminate corrupting special interests, and enhance accountability. As we have seen in years past, the role of soft money on our campaign system extends far beyond our nation's borders. Not only are corporations and unions able to pump exorbitant amounts of soft money into Federal campaigns under current law, but so too are foreign nationals across the globe.

In the last ten years, China has stood out as the most infamous contributor of soft money funds, particularly during the 1996 election cycle. Beginning in 1995, reports indicate that Chinese officials planned on channeling more than $2 million in to U.S. presidential and congressional campaigns. By supporting Shays-Meehan, we have a genuine opportunity to shut down this source of funds that has become synonymous with the 1996 Presidential election. Foreign nationals in China took advantage of the massive soft money loophole to funnel illegal funds into Federal political campaigns through campaign committees, and as current law states, nothing will stop them from repeating these practices. Because there are no current disclosure requirements for the funding sources of issue ads, foreign governments could finance advertising efforts with complete anonymity.

We must pass comprehensive legislation that eliminates this soft money loophole and the growing potential influence of nations such as China. The Shays-Meehan bill will completely ban soft money fund-raising for national parties. If the Shays-Meehan bill had been in effect in 1996, China's negative role in influencing campaigns could have been avoided.

In the wake of September 11, global security is one of the highest priorities for the United States. We must not undermine our nation's federal election process by leaving a gaping loophole for foreign nationals to exert their potentially harmful influence. The sooner we pass the Shays-Meehan campaign finance bill, the sooner we will be able to eliminate the negative influence of governments on our nation's democratic process.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this will be one of the most important votes of the year—in fact, it likely will be one of the most important for years to come.

The legislation before us addresses one of the most serious threats to the continued health of our democracy—the perception that the national government is for sale to the highest bidder.

I say perception, because I think all of us are motivated by a sincere desire to make decisions that are in the best interests of our country and that are based on the best information available. I know that my judgment is not for sale, and I am confident that goes for every one of our colleagues as well.

But I also understand why many people think otherwise.

They know that since 1988 both parties have increasingly used funds that are supposed to go for party-building—so-called “soft money”—to instead support or oppose candidates through the unsubtle subterfuge of so-called “issue ads” and similar devices. And they know that past attempts to stop that subterfuge have been stopped by a veto or by obstruction

So, it is not surprising that many people think that money talks so loudly that they cannot be heard.

All too often, that is the perception—and as we all know, when it comes to public opinion perception is reality. I want to change that perception by changing its cause—the “soft money” loopholes in current law. I believe we need to get rid of unlimited “soft money” contributions and act to open the election process to all.

This is not a new position for me. Starting with my first year as a Member of Congress, I have been a cosponsor of the Shays-Meehan campaign finance legislation. I have consistently voted in support of similar legislation since 1999. I signed the discharge petition that has brought the bill to the floor today.

And I supported the Shays-Meehan substitute and opposed amendments to it because I want the House to pass a bill as similar as possible to the McCain-Feingold bill that has already passed the Senate. I think that was essential because otherwise there would have been too great a risk that the bill will die in conference.

I am well aware that this legislation is not perfect. But no legislation is perfect, and this bill makes crucial improvements in campaign-finance laws. It deserves and needs to be enacted.

And so now, as we come to the time for a final decision, I urge all our colleagues to join me in voting for passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 107th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Vol. 148

WASHINGTON, WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 2002

No. 13

Senate

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JON S. CORZINE, a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Blessed God, our Father, You have shown us that there is great spiritual power in praise. When we praise You, our minds and hearts are opened to Your Spirit, burdens are lifted, problems are resolved, and strength is released. So we join our voices with the Psalmist: "I will tell of all Your marvelous works. I will be glad and rejoice in You; I will sing praise to Your name, O Most High."—Psalm 9:1-2.

We confess that often it is difficult to praise You in troublesome times and with frustrating people. And yet it is when we deliberately praise You for them that we receive fresh inspiration. Help us remember what You have taught us: Praising You for the most challenging situations and contentious people transforms us and our attitudes as well as them.

Give us greater confidence in Your inner working in people and Your unseen, but powerful, presence in every situation. Again we join the Psalmist, "Because Your lovingkindness is better than life, our lips shall praise You. Thus I will bless You while I live."—Psalm 63:3-4a. This is a day to praise You, O Lord! Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JON S. CORZINE led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Who yields time? The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, if the Chair would alert me when I have used 4 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will do so.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, the Conrad amendment states the following:

Since both political parties have pledged not to use Social Security surplus funds by spending them for other purposes, and since under the administration's fiscal year 2003 budget the Federal Government is projected to spend Social Security surplus funds for other purposes in each of the next 10 years, and since permanent extension of the inheritance tax repeal would cost, according to the administration's own estimate, approximately $104 billion over the next 10 years, all of which would further reduce the Social Security surplus, therefore, it is the sense of the Senate that no Social Security surplus funds should be used to pay to make currently scheduled tax cuts permanent or for wasteful spending.

Here is where we are. There are no surpluses left. This chart shows, from 1992 to 2012, the fiscal condition of the country. It shows that, while we were able to avoid using Social Security funds or most of the Social Security funds for 4 years, we have now gone back to the old, bad ways of taking every dime of Social Security funds for other purposes—for the President's tax cuts and for other spending priorities.

This is something we all pledged not to do. It is not just in the context of the economic downturn and the war. It is a condition that will confront us the entire rest of this decade, as this chart shows.

Where did the money go? The Congressional Budget Office tells us over the 10-year period 42 percent of the reason for the return to deficits is the tax cut the President proposed and pushed through Congress last year; 23 percent is a result of the economic downturn; 18 percent results from the additional defense and homeland security costs necessitated by our response to the attack on our country; 17 percent came about as a result of technical changes, largely underestimations of the cost of Medicare and Medicaid.

Last year we were told we would have $2.7 trillion of non-trust-fund surpluses over the next decade. That is where the President's tax came from. Now that entire projected surplus is gone, and what we are left with is deficits of $2.2 trillion—every dime of it being financed by the Social Security and Medicare trust funds under the President's proposal.

Last year we were told we would be paying down $2 trillion of debt in the next 10 years. Now the administration informs us that will be only $521 billion.

The consequence of more debt is that we will be paying $1 trillion more in interest costs than we were told last year. That means $1 trillion not available to improve the defense of the country or to strengthen homeland security or to pay down the debt.

Now the Senator from Arizona comes and says we ought to dig the hole deeper. The Senator from Arizona says: We ought to make permanent the estate tax elimination that was part of the tax bill last year. That would cost $104 billion for the rest of this decade, and over the next decade it would cost $800 billion, right at the time the baby boomers begin retiring in large numbers.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, this is where we are headed. In 2016, the Social Security trust funds turn cash negative. Then these surpluses that are being used to pay for tax cuts and other expenses of Government are going to vanish, and instead we will have massive deficits.

I urge my colleagues to support the Conrad amendment, to say no to making permanent tax cuts that would be financed out of the Social Security trust funds. Every Member, virtually every Member, has pledged not to do that. This is the time to reaffirm that commitment to the integrity of the trust funds.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time? The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, the problem with the argument of the Senator from North Dakota is that there is not one shred of truth to it. It is absolutely false to contend that we are going to be spending Social Security surplus funds on "permanentizing" the repeal of the death tax. It is simply false.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the budget estimates from President Bush's 2003 budget submission which demonstrates this fact.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUDGET ESTIMATES—PRESIDENT BUSH'S 2003 BUDGET SUBMISSION
(In billions of dollars)

	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2003-2012
Baseline non-social security surplus	17	51	99	199	395	463
Effect of extending death tax repeal	-3	-3	-4	-25	-61	-104

Source: President's 2003 budget, OMB.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, what this shows is that during the period of time we are talking about, we are going to have a non-Social Security surplus of almost a half trillion dollars, $463 billion to be exact.

The Senator from North Dakota can't have it both ways. In his resolution he uses these statistics to calculate how much a permanent repeal of the death tax is going to cost and says it is $104 billion over 10 years. That is what the budget says. But you can't use that statistic and then ignore the other half of the equation, which is that during the same period of time we will have a surplus of $463 billion. That doesn't count any of the Social Security surplus.

If you subtract 104 from 463, you are not even close to getting to the Social Security surplus. You still have a significant $359 billion surplus, plus Social Security.

I ask my colleague this: I would be happy to support his resolution if he would be willing to drop the clause that says it is going to cost $104 billion over the next 10 years, all of which would further reduce the Social Security surplus, since that is a false statement, and also if he would drop the sentence "Under the administration's fiscal budget, the Federal Government is projected to spend the Social Security surplus for other purposes in each of the next 10 years," because that also is demonstrably false under the President's budget submission. Would the Senator from North Dakota be willing to drop those provisions of his amendment, in which case I would be happy to support it and urge my colleagues to do the same?

Mr. CONRAD. I have no intention of dropping those statements which accurately reflect precisely what the President's budget—

Mr. KYL. If the Senator from North Dakota is not willing to amend his resolution, then I will have to urge my colleagues not only to oppose his resolution, because it is simply false in its recitations and is an inaccurate portrayal of what we are going to be doing, but, secondly, it totally misrepresents the effect of our resolution, our sense of the Senate which is very straightforward.

It says: We voted to repeal the death tax. Let's make that permanent. Let's not try to play games with the American people and say we did something which we all know is only going to be in effect for 1 year after which it sunsets.

I defer to my colleague from Oklahoma.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. How much time remains?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. On the other side?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eight seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the Kyl-Nickles-Gramm-Sessions amendment to make the death tax repeal permanent. To say we are going to reduce the death tax for the next 9 years, have it go to zero in the year 2010, and then in the year 2011 we are going to have a big increase and go back to death tax rates of 50 or 60 percent is absurd. We need to make it permanent.

This is a sense of the Senate that says it should be permanent. I believe there is a competing resolution offered by my colleague that says: Wait a minute. This is going to take Social Security money. That is not correct. My colleague is entitled to his own opinion. He is not entitled to his own facts. The facts are projected by OMB. The administration's estimate by OMB is that we are going to have a $99 billion surplus in the year 2010, $199 billion in the year 2011, and $395 billion in 2012. That is not counting Social Security. That is over and above Social Security. Those are the administration's estimates. So we ought to be factual. I don't mind the "therefore, it is the sense of the Senate that the Social Security surplus funds should not be used to make currently scheduled tax cuts permanent or for wasteful spending." Who is for wasteful spending? The part of this that says the $110 billion would be used to reduce Social Security is not factual.

You should not be using a death tax to pay for Social Security in the first place. But it is not in this resolution or in the amendment offered by my friend and colleague from Arizona.

I urge my colleagues, let's do something for agriculture that would be positive and repeal the death tax. Talk to your farmers and ranchers and small businesspeople. Is there something you can do to help them? Yes, repeal the death tax. The Government should not take one-half of somebody's property just because they die. Let's make the death tax repeal permanent.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, Senator KYL talks about the budget baseline. He is not talking about the President's budget. I submit the President's budget that shows clearly it will be raiding the Social Security trust fund by $1.6 trillion over the next 10 years, and add to it, if we pass the Kyl amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 2851, AS MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be 2 minutes debate prior to a vote in relation to the Domenici amendment, No. 2851, as modified. Who yields time?

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute in favor of the amendment to myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, the Domenici amendment is a straightforward and simple amendment. It says, if we are going to have a dairy support program in the country, it should be fair and equitable for all dairymen. Currently, the bill provides for $2 billion, split 25 percent for New England, although New England provides only 18 percent of the milk. There are other inequities throughout. The Domenici amendment simply says treat everybody the same throughout the country.

It likewise does away with a lot of bureaucratic, complex maneuvers in terms of trying to compute this formula, changing it to a straightforward, once-a-year payment, the same for every dairyman. Because of the equity of the amendment and its simplicity, I commend the amendment to Senators and ask for their vote.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, the Domenici amendment is a reflection of failed policies. What it basically says is you pay dairy farmers when markets are good. But when the markets are bad, as Senator LANDRIEU has pointed out time and time again, there is too little help for our dairy farmers. That makes absolutely no sense.

Second, we have a balanced dairy program in the bill, carefully crafted, so that no parts of the country are discriminated against. What the Domenici amendment does is it upsets that. It will foster regional fights again and again and again in the future. We do not want that. We have it carefully crafted in this bill.

Third, we just overwhelmingly voted for payment limitations, but in the Domenici amendment, no matter how big you are, you can get more and more payments. There is no payment limitation whatsoever, no matter the size of the dairy operation.

For those three reasons, I believe the Senate should turn down the Domenici amendment and keep the underlying bill that is fair to the whole country.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the dairy amendment by my friend and colleague, Senator DOMENICI. I do believe this amendment is an improvement to the dairy provision in the Daschle/Harkin substitute the Senate is now considering. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I believe a market-oriented approach is the right approach for national dairy policy. The existing price support program and the federal milk marketing orders have served the producers and consumers for many years and I am pleased the farm bill extends the price support program until 2006.

The Daschle-Harkin substitute creates a new $2 billion federal dairy payment scheme. Mr. President, the independent Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute has analyzed the dairy provisions in the substitute. The analysis shows that during the five years of this farm bill, the new federal payments will encourage overproduction and drive down market prices. For the first two years of the farm bill, producer income is up because of the federal payments. But by the third year, the federal payments drop off dramatically and producers are actually worse off for the final two years of the farm bill. Moreover, the market prices for milk used for cheese, butter, and powdered milk are lower every year.

I don't believe the nation will be well served by the new dairy payment scheme in the Daschle/Harkin substitute. That's why I proposed an amendment last month with Senator CRAPO to eliminate the new dairy payment program. Our amendment failed on a vote of 51 to 47.

Though I do not support creating any new dairy payment program, I support this modest amendment because it recognizes the fact that the dairy industry in America has become one national market. Today, milk and milk products are transported long distances economically to meet the needs of consumers in every state. Mr. President, competition encourages efficiency and consumers benefit from national markets.

Unfortunately, the bill as it now is divides the country into two markets. One for 12 Northeast States where producers receive one federal payment for their milk and another one for producers in the other States with a different federal payment. No other agricultural commodity is treated this way in this farm bill. Producers in the 12 States will receive 25 percent of the federal payments, though they produce less than 18 percent of the nation's milk. Moreover, farmers in the 12 States are guaranteed a payment of nearly $17 dollars per hundredweight, while payments elsewhere are based on a fraction of the market rates and undoubtedly will be substantially lower. This amendment combines the two regions and treats producers in every State equally.

Another concern I have with the underlying language is that it is not fair to all farmers. Federal payments would be capped at 8 million pounds, which will put producers in New Mexico at a serious disadvantage in marketing their milk. Because of the cap, producers in New Mexico would receive an average of less than 20 cents per hundredweight for their milk—48th out of the 50 States. Only farmers in Arizona and Wyoming would do worse than New Mexico. Under our amendment, all producers are paid at the same rate.

Finally, we have not fully considered the boundary effects of the new dairy payment scheme. What's going to happen to producers in States like Ohio and Virginia, which border the 12-State region? Will the higher federal payment to producers inside the region hurt the producers just outside the region? Under our amendment, there are no boundary effects because there is only a single, nation-wide payment rate.

New Mexico has one of the nation's fastest growing dairy industries, more than tripling in the past 10 years. In 2001, New Mexico moved up from the tenth to the eighth largest dairy producing State. More recently New Mexico has moved into seventh place. A recent study by Dr. Michael Loooper of New Mexico State University showed the dairy industry payroll in New Mexico in 2000 was $25 million per year and the total annual economic impact in the State was $1.6 billion. In Chavez County alone, the economic impact of milk production was a whopping $527 million per year. Dairy is now a critical element of my State's economy, especially in rural areas. I cannot support any new federal program that could endanger New Mexico's vibrant dairy industry.

New Mexico tends to have large, efficient dairies, which are the big losers under the current dairy proposal. These are family-owned dairies in rural areas—just like in the other States. They are bigger because New Mexico has the land and resources to support larger dairies. This amendment is good for the dairy farmers in New Mexico and a positive improvement to the underlying bill because it treats farmers in every State equally.

I believe we should work toward a balanced national dairy policy that is fair to all farmers, not one that pits one State against another and large dairies against small producers.

I hope the Senate will soon complete work on this farm bill and I look forward to working with Chairman HARKIN to further improve the dairy programs as the bill moves to conference. I do believe this amendment is a step in the right direction

I commend Senator DOMENICI for his amendment and urge my colleagues to support it.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I spoke on the floor in December about how devastating the original farm bill would have been to the California dairy industry. And I have said California cannot be left out of any dairy equation.

California is the largest dairy State in the nation. Last year, California dairy farmers produced 32.2 billion pounds of milk—over 19 percent of the nation's supply. With over 2,100 dairy farms in the state, California leads the Nation in total number of milk cows at approximately 1.5 million. The original bill agreed to in the Agriculture Committee would have cost California dairy farmers $1.5 billion over 9 years and driven up prices for consumers by $1.5 billion over 9 years.

The bill on the floor, however, will hold California harmless. While it is difficult to project exactly how much income California dairy farmers will receive, I believe that by supporting the dairy language in the farm bill, an even better result can be achieved for California's dairy farmers. I wish to thank a number of Senators for working together to find a way that the California dairy industry can be held harmless by the dairy provisions in the farm bill.

While the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico might seem like a better deal for California than what has been agreed to in the farm bill, I believe the California dairy industry will be better off in the long run if I continue to support the careful balance achieved during the farm bill debate in December. In theory, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico would be good for California because there are no caps, or limitations, on the size of the dairies that will qualify for payments.

However, the California dairy industry is at the point where they believe, like many other farm groups, that we need to get a farm bill passed in the Senate and get to conference. Voting against the Domenici amendment will allow us to pass a bill. A vote for the amendment will bring it down. I will keep a close eye on the conference negotiations and expect California to continue to be held harmless, or made better off.

I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 2852

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be 2 minutes of debate prior to a vote in relation to the Kerry-Snowe amendment No. 2852.

Who yields time?

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I am delighted to cosponsor Senator KERRY's important amendment which would provide necessary assistance to a collapsing commercial groundfish fishery. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

This amendment addresses a very serious problem facing the Northeast, a collapse of its groundfish fishery. This fishery provided over 80 million pounds of food for our Nation last year. This collapse is comparable to a crop failure and is equally deserving of our assistance.

The Federal Government has issued three times the number of permits as the fishery can sustain. The fishermen are now being held accountable for the government's actions and subjected to draconian management measures as a result. We need to help them permanently remove some of this extra capacity.

In particular, the fishermen who rely on catching cod and other groundfish are in need of assistance. This amendment provides $10 million in disaster assistance for these commercial fisherman. It will bring much needed help to those fishermen who need and more importantly want help.

As a voluntary program, this amendment will extend a helping hand to those fishermen who wish to make a transition and permanently exit the multispecies groundfish fishery in the Northeast by giving the Federal Government the means to provide assistance. Additionally, I have worked with Senator KERRY to develop language that ensure the equitable and efficient distribution of this aid.

In my home State of Maine, fishing is an integral part of our livelihood, a common thread that runs along our coast and throughout the State. Unfortunately, we are at a time where fisheries in Maine are in trouble and in need of help. This amendment would provide the needed help.

It is not often that we are presented with a win-win situation, like we are here. Not only will this amendment provide the funding and flexibility needed to help fisherman, but it will promote conservation of the fishery.

I am pleased to support an amendment that will provide the necessary funding and framework to meet one of the many challenges facing our fisherman. Again, I would like to thank Senator KERRY for sponsoring this amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the Kerry-Snowe amendment, and thank Senator KERRY and Senator SNOWE for their leadership in bringing this important proposal before the United States Senate.

The Atlantic Northeast Multispecies Fishermen Permit Buyback Program established under this amendment would allow hard-working New England fishermen to retire from this economically stressed industry with dignity, while the work continues to rebuild our fish stocks to sustainable levels.

This fishermen's permit buyback will help end the cycle of boom and bust that plagues our fisheries and assist in developing a long-term sustainable fishery in New England.

Fishing has been an important industry in the United States. In my own state of Massachusetts, as in other states, it is a trade that is rich in tradition. Generation after generation of families has passed on their knowledge of this trade to their children. So it is not just a key part of our economy. It is also as much a part of our heritage as the family farm.

Many port cities across the country rely on fishing as their main industry. This is particularly true in Massachusetts. The city of New Bedford, Massachusetts is the second biggest fishing port in the United States. And we have in our state more than 10,000 fishermen who rely on the sea to earn a living and care for their families.

Over the past few years, we have taken a number of steps to help these hardworking families and this important industry.

The fishermen in Massachusetts did not have health insurance until the State and Federal Government intervened. In fact, even though this is one of the most dangerous occupations in the world, our fishermen did not have health insurance until 1998. Today, as a result of our efforts, 800 fishermen and their families now have health care.

Fishermen have also suffered because of Federal regulations. As a result of federal actions over the past decade, fishing has declined, and the incomes of these families has plummeted as a result.

In recent times, the National Marine Fishing Service has taken steps to help rebuild the fish stocks. The fishing season has been shortened from twelve months to six months and there are catch limits to prevent overfishing of fragile stocks.

At the same time, fishermen have adapted to the changes and working with scientists at the National Marine Fishing Service to help both the fishermen and the government to better understand the steps necessary to protect fishing stocks, while protecting fishing jobs.

For example, in 1999, the scallop industry off George's Bank was set to be closed because it was believed that the scallop stocks were depleted. Scientists and the fishermen worked with NASA to obtain satellite photographs of scallop beds of George's Bank. They were able to get accurate pictures of the scallop beds and found that stocks were full.

This past year the scallop industry logged a record year, with profits over $350 million. This is an example of how science has helped the fishing industry, and is the kind of cooperation that should be supported.

The fishermen have also made changes to their equipment to minimize damage to the environment and fishing stocks.

Preserving this historic industry will be an ongoing challenge. And the Kerry-Snowe amendment moves us ahead in meeting that challenge.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, we have examined this amendment on our side, and we have no objection to this amendment. We are willing to accept this amendment to help the fisheries in the northeastern part of the United States.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, we are prepared to accept this amendment. We are hopeful that the fisheries that will be helped by it will move toward a healthier situation generally for fishing in New England.

We have consulted with our Senators from New England. This is a very important issue for them and to others in the industry. For these reasons, we are prepared to support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2852.

The amendment (No. 2852) was agreed to.

Mr. HARKIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LUGAR. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUGAR. Madam President, during these moments while we are attempting to work out the managers' amendment, I would like to take a few minutes to thank the distinguished chairman of the committee, Senator HARKIN, and his staff for their remarkable work and cooperation with members of our staff as we have worked in the Agriculture Committee. I thank also the leaders, Senator DASCHLE and Senator LOTT, Senator NICKLES, and particularly Senator REID, who has guided this process with great persuasion and effectiveness.

I wanted to mention by name each of the members of the Agriculture Committee minority staff to whom I am greatly indebted for their expertise, their faithfulness, and their patience. I commend Katie Boots, Danny Spellacy, Andy Morton, Carol Dubard, Chris Salisbury, Beth Bechdol, Dave Johnson, Erin Shaw, Michael Knipe, Walt Lukken, Terri Nintemann, Jeff Burnam, Andy Fisher, Mark Tyndall, and Keith Luse, who has headed this effort so ably.

We have also had detailees to the committee. From GAO, we had Pat Sweeney, and from USDA, Carol Olander, Dave White, and Benjamin Young. I thank them all, as I know my colleagues do, for their remarkable work.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I apologize to my colleagues for holding up the proceedings of the Senate on this very important legislation, but at some point someone has to say "enough."

When I first came to the Senate, which was not as long ago as a number of the other Members, a package of technical amendments was sometimes two, three, four, five amendments that were purely technical in nature. We now have a new Senate record. This package of technical amendments, the managers' package which has been subject to neither debate nor discussion by any Member of this body, is now 396 pages long. It has 137 amendments. Billions of dollars are in the managers' package.

I want to repeat, it is longer than the original House bill. There are authorizations from nutrient reduction pilot programs to a technical correction to the wildlife incentive program changes from $350,000 to $50 million a year in fiscal year 2007. None of these has been debated and discussed, that I know of.

I have selected three that are particularly egregious, on which we will have votes. I would like to say I am familiar with the details of these three amendments on which I am seeking votes, but I am not, because they are technical amendments in a package. In fact, I am interested to see the Senator from Wisconsin in the Chamber because he has sort of been a triggering mechanism to what I am doing right now.

When we had an appropriations bill and I said, "Who has seen the managers' package?" no one said a word, and because it was late at night, I let it go. There were 15 amendments in a managers' package which was millions of dollars earmarked for specific States. I said I would not let that happen again.

Now we have a bill, as I say, a managers' package, which is 396 pages long with 137 amendments. We have been working on this bill for months, as the majority leader pointed out to me. We saw 100 of the amendments last night. We did not see the additional 30 technical amendments until 10 minutes before we were supposed to vote. We cannot operate this way. We cannot operate this way with the taxpayers' money.

If anyone has ever seen a package of technical amendments that exceeds this, I would like to hear from them. I do know what a managers' package is supposed to be, and that is some technical amendments that make technical corrections, not amendments such as No. 127, which adds a section authorizing a technical assistance program for geographically disadvantaged farmers. Do you have that? This is a technical assistance program for geographically disadvantaged farmers, $10 million a year between 2002 and 2006. This is in a managers' package. There are Delta regional economic development grants, additional nutrition technology in the delta region, of $7 million a year. And a pilot program for the Chesapeake Bay until 2006, $70 million.

I am sure these may be good programs. They may be very beneficial. Particularly in the case of the Chesapeake Bay, they may be very important. What is it doing in a managers' package? What is it doing with 130 other amendments in a managers' package?

I will ask for votes on these three amendments. They will, I am sure, be resoundingly carried. I tell my colleagues, the next time we do this, we will have extended debate and discussion and second-degree amendments. It has to stop. My constituents deserve the right to know what is in these amendments. When they are talking about $10, $20, $70 million in an amendment, they should not be in a so-called managers' package.

I don't want to impede the progress of the Senate too long, but I cannot allow this practice to continue. The Senator from Kansas is here. He was the manager of major legislation. I ask if the Senator from Kansas has ever seen a bill with this kind of a managers' package in it? I ask unanimous consent for the Senator from Kansas to respond.

Mr. ROBERTS. I am happy to respond to the distinguished Senator from Arizona. The answer is: No.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I will be glad to address the first amendment. We will have short debate and discussion. As I said, I would like to debate it at length, but I don't know anything about it. That is the reason I am forcing a vote. Maybe we will know something about these various amendments.

I say again to my colleagues, this is not the right way to do the people's business. It is not the right way to do the people's business, a 396-page package of managers' amendments that are supposed to be technical in nature. I am glad to vote on whichever amendment the distinguished managers choose to bring forward.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I think the Senator from Arizona has an excellent point. I know people are working hard to try to get the bill completed. There are things in the bill that I think are very good and there are things in the bill I do not agree with at all. There are some amendments that a number of people are concerned about that are important, that are legitimate.

I don't think in the effort of expediency we should be throwing everything in this package. I would hope to have a much more deliberative process in this bill and future bills on something so important to my State, so important to many of the States.

I realize the managers are pressed to get a bill through in a timely fashion. That is important. But on such an extensive bill I don't think we are serving the people's business well to move through it so rapidly. Maybe we have to go longer in the evenings, voting at night, to get some of these amendments done. This is important legislation. It should not be rushed.

Regarding this bill, there is some of it with which I agree; much of it I do not. I hope we do not follow this procedure when we move forward with future pieces of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Madam President, I defer for a moment before I propound a unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I will respond to the Senator from Arizona on the issue he has raised.

I agree fully with the necessity of openness and providing an opportunity for review, and we have certainly sought to do that to make this amendment available. At the same time, we cannot operate as the Senate unless we have an element of trust in those who have been appointed or elected to lead our committees on both the majority and the minority side. That is why we as a Senate delegate to committees both the authority and the responsibility to develop legislation, to have hearings, to come up with the bills and to bring them on the floor.

I ask any Senator, how could we ever operate as a Senate if every line, every paragraph, every little item in every bill had to be fully debated and discussed and if every Senator is obliged to sit down and go through and debate every item on the floor? It is impossible. That is why we have built up a system involving openness but also trust. That is why when we receive a request for an amendment, if a senator comes from one side and says, he or she wants to put this amendment in the bill, in the managers' amendment, I look at it to make my judgment and then go to Senator LUGAR, the Ranking Member on the other side. I say: Someone on our side is suggesting they want to do this; would you take a look at it, talk to your staff, go to whomever you want to on your side and look it over. I go to Senators on my side and see if there are any objections. If no one raises any objections, and it is good policy we put it in the managers' amendment.

We also are careful that items added through the managers to the bill are not of such major importance that they substantially affect the underlying legislation. That is true of the amendments in here.

The Senator spoke about billions of dollars being in the managers' amendment. That is simply not so. We have kept within the budget allocation. Nothing in the managers' amendment goes beyond our budget allocation. I asked my staff to add up the total in the managers' amendment, all of the items in there. That is, what additional cost is in the managers' amendment that is not in the pending legislation already? It adds up to only about $38 million more over 10 years in mandatory spending than is already in the underlying bill. It is not billions of dollars: $38 million over 10 years. These are items that are not large. There are some technical changes, adjustments and so forth. But it is a very small amount of money when you consider we are talking about a $73.5 billion bill.

I say to my friend from Arizona, we must operate on a system of trust around here. Obviously, with trust there has to be sunshine. The underlying bill and earlier versions of the managers' amendment have been out there for quite some time. Additional amendments were recently added in order to wrap up the bill. These were available for anyone to see. In addition to the checking I described earlier, any Senate staff or any Senator who wants to come see what is in the managers' package can at any time. They just need to ask. There is no secrecy. That is the way we operate.

I hope the Senator from Arizona is not saying from now on, no matter how available and open we make the process, we will not trust anyone. We cannot trust Senator LUGAR; we cannot trust Senator KOHL; we cannot trust Senator ROBERTS. Everything has to be brought onto the Senate floor for every Senator to debate and vote on the most minute detail. We would never get anything done in this Chamber.

This managers' amendment has been carefully drafted. It has been vetted. It has been fully aired and exposed to the sunshine. It has been out there for people to see as it has been drafted. I did not go to the Senator from Arizona and—

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARKIN. I am delighted to yield for a question.

Mr. MCCAIN. The fact is, we didn't see 30 of these amendments until 10 minutes before the vote. So how can the Senator say they are out there when we did not see them? We have asked to see them. We have told him we want to see them. It is well known we want to see them. How in the world can the Senator from Iowa say they have been out there when we didn't see them until this morning, and we didn't see the other hundred until last night? The Senator from Iowa is simply not stating the facts as they are.

Mr. HARKIN. I say to my friend from Arizona that my staff tells me that as they have developed the managers' amendment over the last few months, staff has made available the various versions. That they have been e-mailed out constantly to the staff of Agriculture Committee members, so that any one who wanted to, at any point in time, could have seen what was being requested and considered as an amendment. As for the later amendments, we have done the best we can to make them available as soon as possible. Again, both Senator LUGAR and I have signed off on them and worked with members on our respective sides. Finally, the amendment and a summary of it is available for review. We are operating under a consensus approach to this managers' amendment. If there is an objection to putting something in the managers' amendment it does not go in. That is exactly the process that applied to the Kerry-Snowe fisheries amendment. It was our understanding that the Senator from Arizona did not want that amendment in the managers' amendment so we have dealt with it separately on the floor this morning.

Mr. MCCAIN. If the Senator will yield further, we did not see 30 of the amendments until this morning. They were not available to anyone. It is a fact. Just as no one had seen the 15 amendments that were earmarked in the appropriations bill I complained about. No one had seen them. It is a fact.

Mr. HARKIN. I do not agree with the characterization by the Senator from Arizona. There were not 30 amendments to the managers' amendment dropped on the Senate just this morning—that is a fact. Some additional work on the managers' amendment occurred last evening. That is the nature of putting together such a substantial bill as this legislation is. But any modifications were signed off on and accepted by the minority staff. They have been available for review. And I am told that most of them, were e-mailed out at around 6 o'clock last night.

Mr. MCCAIN. One hundred were mailed out last night at 6 o'clock, and then 30 more came in this morning. That is a little bit different version of the facts.

Mr. HARKIN. I say to the Senator, I have checked again with my staff. There were no where near 30 amendments of a substantial nature that came in this morning.

Mr. MCCAIN. I will be glad to get a list of those we were given this morning. There are 30 that we were given shortly before the vote, the final vote on the bill that we were apprised of that we had asked for.

Mr. HARKIN. I am not certain what that is all about. I am told there may have been some after 6 p.m. But, again, I say to the Senator from Arizona, these were cleared on both sides. We never kept any from Senator LUGAR. He never kept any from us—not on either side. We have had our staffs look at them. We have checked with other members. That is what I am talking about—openness and availability but also trust and trusting whether or not committee chairmen and their staffs are sensitive enough, and ranking members are sensitive enough, to say: We don't need to burden the entire Senate with this. We can make a judgment, check as appropriate and make the amendment available.

I also say to my friend from Arizona, even though these are in the managers' package—first of all, it is not billions, it is $38 million, I say to my friend.

Mr. MCCAIN. I will be glad to discuss that with the Senator from Iowa. No. 18 is changed from $375,000 to $355 million, and change $50,000 to $50 million. That is just amendment No. 18.

Mr. HARKIN. This was a clear technical amendment. If you look at the underlying bill you will see that previous fiscal year funding was all in the millions. The fact that the latter years were in thousands is obviously a typographical mistake. This did not add any money to the managers' package because it already was scored by CBO as being in the millions.

I say further to my friend—

Mr. McCAIN. I ask unanimous consent to engage in a dialog with the Senator, if that is agreeable? I just want to make sure we observe the rules of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to engage in a dialog with the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. I am not sure what you would like to debate here.

Mr. McCAIN. It says technical correction in the Wildlife Habitat Incentive Program, technical correction, mandatory funding language, change it from $375,000 to $355 million, in fiscal year 2006; and change $50,000 to $50 million in fiscal year 2007.

Obviously, this is a technical change. Obviously, it is a change of many millions of dollars.

Mr. HARKIN. May I respond? I asked my staff about that. At a cursory reading, as the Senator has done, he says: My gosh, we are going from $375,000 to $355 million in a managers' amendment.

Here is what that is about. In the underlying substitute, there was either a typographical error or a mistake made. It was listed in the legislative language as $375,000, but it was known by everyone to be $375 million, as it was scored by CBO as the correct amount. As I pointed out earlier, if you look at all the funding for WHIP in context it makes sense. There was just a mistake made. So we are correcting the mistake in the underlying bill. A shift was also made of $20 million from WHIP in the managers' amendment, but that did not add to the score in the managers' amendment.

I say to my friend from Arizona, it has already been scored.

Mr. McCAIN. You are still correcting in the underlying bill some $400 million.

Mr. HARKIN. No, there is $375 million already in the underlying bill that has been scored by CBO.

Mr. McCAIN. Plus $50 million. I don't care if it has been scored by CBO or not, it is not in the underlying bill.

Mr. HARKIN. It is in the underlying bill as fully understood. The managers' amendment is only a technical correction to conform to the clear understanding.

Mr. McCAIN. Then you don't need the technical correction. I ask unanimous consent to eliminate technical amendment No. 18.

Mr. HARKIN. I object. Because it is clearly a technical correction that you have taken out of context. What you contend is that real money has been added in the managers' amendment and that is not true. What CBO scores does matter because CBO recognized the typo and we fixed it in the managers' amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HARKIN. In the underlying bill, the amount of money for the Wildlife Habitat Incentive Program funding language was scored by CBO at $375 million. It was a printing error that was made in the text of the bill, it is mistakenly listed as $375,000 in the underlying bill. Look at all the previous funding levels—they are all in the millions. The technical correction here is to make the underlying bill comport with what CBO has already scored. That is what technical corrections are for.

So I say to my friend from Arizona, if this is illustrative of the problems he has with managers' amendments, I say again, that is why you have to have some trust in the ranking member and in the chairman and our respective staffs, that we are operating above board with openness but also that we are only proposing technical corrections and matters that are acceptable to both sides and not objected to by any member.

Mr. McCAIN. Let me repeat. It's a technical amendment that adds some $400 million.

Here is another one, authorized to be appropriated, $7 million for each of the fiscal years 2000 through 2006. That is another "technical amendment."

But the larger issue here is—the larger issue is why do we need 396 pages of technical corrections to a bill which is larger than the entire House bill and has 130-some technical corrections? There is something wrong here. There is something fundamentally wrong.

I say to the Senator from Iowa, I have been here almost as long as he has—not as long. I have never seen bills that required trust of 396 pages and 130 technical amendments. I have never seen any other farm bill that did, nor has the Senator from Kansas, who used to shepherd these bills through the House.

I am supposed to trust a managers' amendment of 396 pages? I am glad to trust, but in the words of a former President of the United States, "trust but verify" because time after time after time, I have seen amendments put in that are earmarks, specifically for specific areas, specific States, specific congressional districts. I have seen them time after time. It is not only me who is objecting to that. The Citizens Against Government Waste and the Taxpayers Union and every other watchdog organization condemn this practice, and so do I.

I say to the Senator from Iowa, again, I don't know what is done with Agriculture Committee members or Agriculture Committee staff. I know I have had a longstanding request to see any amendments, and particularly any technical amendments. Either the Senator from Iowa or his staff did not show us those amendments until last night. And there were a number of amendments that were added as short a time as a half hour before the final vote.

Your staff can deny it, but it is a fact. So I will not sit still for that kind of procedure. That is why we will have these votes. I am sorry the Senator does not like the fact that I don't trust 130-some amendments I have never seen that cover 396 pages. I think my constituents deserve better than me "trusting"—particularly given all the earmarking and pork-barreling I have seen going on, on the increase over the past several years.

I cannot debate these amendments very well because, as I said, I have not seen them because they were not shown to me or other Members of the Senate. That is pretty much the situation. I am sure many of them are virtuous, but the fact is there is all kinds of money and programs in here.

There are interesting things in here. There is one, No. 110: Adds "gender" to the list of socially disadvantaged groups covered by section 2501, the outreach program for socially disadvantaged farmers.

Could the Senator, just out of curiosity, tell me what a socially disadvantaged farmer is?

Madam President, will the Senator from Iowa yield for a question? What is a "socially disadvantaged farmer"?

Mr. HARKIN. I know the Senator is being a little provocative to make his point. That is OK. There is an existing program to help farmers, including minority farmers, who because of circumstances have a harder time getting credit and making a go of it in farming. While the socially disadvantaged program covers minority farmers, there was not a mention of gender, at least for all of the USDA programs involved. It came to the attention of a member—not me, but someone who wanted us to do this—that women were not adequately covered in existing law. This was just a correction to put in that program the definition that gender is a basis on which someone may qualify for assistance under the socially disadvantaged program. That way, along with other disadvantaged groups the law would include gender so women in agriculture would receive fair treatment and opportunity. It seems to me to be a very harmless type of provision to put in there. Again, I don't understand why that should be such a big item. We cleared it on both sides.

I hope the Senator is not saying that every time—maybe he is saying this but I do not know—an amendment comes to the managers' package that has been cleared on both sides and is mailed out that we have to send a message to his office specifically asking him to look at it. The process is open. If the Senator wants to have his staff come over at any time, the door is open. They can look at any amendment they want.

Mr. REID. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. Without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. REID. If I may correct something, I listened to this. I had a heart-to-heart discussion with the Senator from Arizona earlier today. I think that maybe I am partially to blame for what has gone on. I say that because I have been here with the two managers of the bill for several weeks. The Senator from Arizona is right. I do not know which bill it was, but it was one of the last bills we had before the new year. The Senator asked me if I would in the future when there was a managers' package notify him or his staff. He did ask me that. There is no question about that. Last night I should have done that, and I didn't do that. It is not Senator HARKIN's fault or Senator LUGAR's fault. But the Senator from Arizona did come to me the last time we had this problem and I told him I would do that. I didn't do it. It is certainly nothing that is deceptive. I simply didn't do it. I forgot. One of the reasons is that I have such great confidence in the two managers of the bill. I do not know on the minority side if there is a Senator who I have such great respect for than Senator LUGAR. This man is top of the line. He has worked very closely with us on this bill, as my friend, Senator HARKIN, has spoken about many times.

I don't think we need to discuss it here today. I think the Senator from Arizona has a right to be concerned, but his concern should be directed towards me, because, in fact, the last time he indicated he, in the future, was going to raise objections to the managers' amendment. I should have brought this to his attention.

When we talked earlier today, he indicated he wanted to offer amendments to each one of these. I indicated that the unanimous consent agreement wouldn't allow that.

Certainly the Senator from Arizona can do whatever he wishes, but I think we can get to the heart of this if he makes a motion to strike each of these three things about which he is concerned. I think his points will be very well taken.

When this happens again, I will do my best to make sure that he or his staff are aware of the managers' package. I don't want the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Indiana to be blamed for any of this. I should have on my own brought this to the attention of the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, if I might reclaim my time, I thank the Senator from Nevada for that. I harbor no ill will at all. I have great respect for the Senator from Arizona. He knows that. I am just trying to be as open as possible. We all know that legislative matters and requests for changes do come up throughout the process of putting a bill together. Some do come in late, but that is the right of senators to request modifications.

However, nobody is trying to ram anything through that people don't know about.

I will say to my friend from Arizona that this managers's amendment has been scrubbed and checked carefully, but there is another stopgap within this process just in case something gets through inadvertently that may not have been obvious or to which someone had a serious objection but had not raised it for some reason. We have to go to conference. Everything in this bill and managers' amendment is out there in that conference. Everything is out there for everybody to see. I say to my friend that there is another level which we are going through. This amendment and this bill are not the final word.

That is the only point I am trying to make.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator from Nevada. I appreciate his comments on this issue. I say to the Senator from Iowa that I would like to trust everything that goes through this body. I can tell you too many stories of things that went through without my knowledge that cost the taxpayers a whole lot of money. I will tell you about one.

Put into an appropriations bill was a provision that two ships would be built in Pascagoula, MS, in return for which there would be exclusive rights for those ships to sail to the Hawaiian Islands. I never saw that amendment until after it was done. Associated with that was over $1 billion in loan guarantees from the Maritime Administration. I never saw the amendment. The outfit just went bankrupt. The taxpayers have already spent some $300 million-plus which they lost from those loan guarantees, and they stand to lose over $1 billion. I am sure it was a well-meant and a well-intentioned amendment to help both Mississippi and the Hawaiian Islands. I knew it would fail because I know enough about shipbuilding in the United States of America.

Those are the kinds of things that happen time after time—maybe not of that magnitude—because of amendments, which are well-intentioned and probably good in many respects but don't undergo the scrutiny and the hearings and the authorizations necessary to prevent that from happening put into these pieces of legislation.

That proposal I told you about would have never cleared either the Commerce Committee or the Armed Services Committee. It never would have gotten through. It was stuck in an appropriations bill, which we do time after time. The night I was here, I asked: Does anybody know what is in the managers' package? No. It was late at night. So I said: OK. I don't object. There were 15 earmarks of millions of dollars for specific States. That is my taxpayers' money, too.

I say to the Senator that this system is broken. We are now up to 8,000 earmarks on appropriations bills. That is up from less than 2,000 3 years ago. It is wrong. It is just wrong. It is wrong from the standpoint of fiscal discipline and budgetary reasons, but it is also wrong in the respect that these matters need to go through the proper authorizing and appropriations process. At least this is an authorization bill.

I thank the Senator from Nevada for his comments. I am very grateful for the courtesy that he has shown me, not only now but for many years.

I withdraw my requirement to object and to seek to strike these three amendments, and I will agree to go to final passage.

But I say to the Senator from Iowa one more time that this is unprecedented with 396 pages of technical amendments in the managers' package. It is wrong and 1,130-plus technical amendments is wrong. It is not the right way for us to do business. I hope we can do better in the future.

I yield the floor. I am prepared to move to final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The Senator from Iowa.

AMENDMENT NO. 2859

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I call up the amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], for himself and Mr. LUGAR, proposes an amendment numbered 2859.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in the RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2859.

The amendment (No. 2859) was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HARKIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the substitute amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 2471), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am pleased the Senate is about to complete action on this farm bill. While the bill has some positive and helpful provisions, particularly with respect to conservation, rural development, research, and nutrition, I plan to vote against the bill.

One of the primary objectives of farm legislation should be to improve the predictability and effectiveness of the financial safety net available to farmers. However, the payment limitation amendment that was adopted by the Senate will reduce the level of price support and shred the safety-net that our farmers need. According to the Congressional Research Service, cotton farmers would be able to receive benefits on approximately 880 acres, and rice farmers would be able to receive benefits on about 490 acres. Any additional acreage planted to these commodities would not be eligible for any government assistance.

Since 1985, the marketing loan program has been the centerpiece of our Nation's farm policy. The marketing loan program provides reliable and predictable income support for farmers while allowing U.S. commodities to be competitive in the global market. This legislation will make the marketing loan program completely useless.

Considering the bleak forecast for the farm economy, it does not stand to reason that Congress should pass legislation that imposes new rules and regulations which will restrict government assistance so drastically.

I hope we can resolve the differences we have over this bill in conference with the House and bring back a truly beneficial farm bill. I pledge my best efforts to achieve that result.

PRESERVATION OF LAND FOR JOHN OGWONSKI

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I commend Senator HARKIN for his effective work on this legislation. I particularly commend Senator HARKIN for his leadership in including programs in this farm bill that will help farmers across the Nation, including those in the Northeast.

I would like to take a few moments to speak about John Ogonowski, the courageous pilot of American Airlines Flight 11, which was hijacked by terrorists on September 11th and which crashed into the first tower of the World Trade Center that day. At the time of his tragic death, John Ogonowski had been working tirelessly to preserve 33 acres of land that had once been part of the Ogonowski farm in Dracut, MA. The Farmland Protection Program serves as a vehicle to help preserve farmland, and I hope that the funds from that program can be used to preserve the land that John cared so much about. I hope that we can make John's dream come true.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I will be honored to work with the Senator to try to preserve the land in memory of John Ogonowski who was a proud farmer and a brave man. The land in Dracut, MA would stand as a fitting memorial to him. I will work, as the bill progresses, to encourage the use of Farmland Protection Program funds for this important cause.

Mr. KENNEDY. The land in Dracut is along a road that is traveled by many families, commuters, and tourists. All those who pass by the land will know of John Ogonowski's life and his family's love of farming.

John farmed these fields for many years as a young man and was often seen riding on his John Deere tractor with a wave and a smile for those he passed. His family continues to maintain substantial farmland in the community, but John was deeply concerned about this portion that had been sold recently. To John, the original Ogonowski farm was one of the wonders of the world, and John had worked skillfully and tirelessly to create the Dracut Land Trust to preserve it. Now, in a well-deserved tribute to John Ogonowski, we will work to help the Dracut Land Trust preserve these 33 beautiful acres.

CHESAPEAKE BAY NUTRIENT REDUCTION PILOT PROGRAM

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I would like to clarify that it is the intent of this provision to encourage the development of innovative solutions to the nutrient pollution problem in the Chesapeake Bay. The principal focus of the program, as envisioned by Bay-area scientists and organizations, is to create new incentives for farmers to reduce the application of nitrogen by at least 15 percent below what is normally considered best practice and to provide financial protection in the event of reduced yields. In order to implement the provision, it is my expectation that the Risk Management Agency will make available the Nutrient BMP Insurance Endorsement that was approved by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation on December 12, 2001 in the states of the Chesapeake Bay region, with such modifications as necessary to effectuate the purposes of this section.

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator is correct. The purpose of this provision is to support the development of new and innovative solutions to the Chesapeake Bay's nutrient over-enrichment problem. It provides $70 million for States in the Chesapeake Bay watershed to test new practices that could provide major reductions in nutrient pollution. It will clearly require an underlying risk management instrument and we would expect the Risk Management Agency to make its programs available to implement the yield insurance aspect of this provision. I will be happy to work with the Senator from Maryland in Conference to ensure that the mechanisms to carry out this provision are created or made available.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Chairman of the Committee. This provision is a win-win situation for the Bay and farmers. It will reduce nutrient inputs to the Bay and it will enable farmers to lower their operating costs by avoiding the cost of unneeded fertilizer, without risking loss of a portion of their crops. Experience gained in this pilot program will allow better understanding of risks and benefits of this practice.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROVIDERS

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the section on certification of third party technical providers allows the Secretary to certify providers. The legislative language, regarding the certifying programs run by the United States Department of Agriculture is designed so that the USDA does not run the programs in a manner that directly or indirectly undermines the ability of private, long-standing, and highly regarded certification programs like those operated by the Certified Crop Advisors and National Alliance of Independent Crop Consultants.

The intention of the conservation title, and especially this section, as I understand it, ensures that the Nation's farmers and ranchers will be able to continue to receive high quality conservation technical assistance, and that there will be enough technical assistance to allow the complete and proper delivery of the conservation programs funded in the farm bill.

In addition, it is my understanding that the Secretary of Agriculture will consult with and be advised by representatives from federal, state, and local agencies as well as representatives from the private and non-profit sectors on an Advisory Council. It is expected that in selecting representatives, the Secretary shall appoint representatives from the following groups: Natural Resources Conservation Service, Forest Service and Farm Service Agency, the National Association of Conservation Districts, the Certified Crop Advisors, the National Association of State Foresters, the National Alliance of Independent Crop Consultants and the American Society of Agricultural Engineers. Together with other appointed members of the Advisory Council, these representatives will advise the Secretary of the management of certification programs for the provision of technical assistance by third party providers.

Mr. LUGAR. I agree with Senator ROBERTS that those are the intentions of the language regarding non-federal technical assistance providers.

Mr. HARKIN. I also agree with Senator ROBERTS and Senator LUGAR and thank them for working with me on the important work of expanding and enhancing conservation technical assistance. I am a strong supporter of the work done by private third parties including the Certified Crop Advisors and the National Alliance of Independent Crop Consultants. Our bill will allow them to prosper while enhancing technical assistance nation-wide.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. President, I commend the chairman and ranking member of the Senate Agriculture Committee for accepting my amendment to provide mandatory funding for the Biodiesel Fuel Education Program.

Biodiesel is a home-grown renewable fuel. Even as world oil prices are tightening, America's farmers are producing record crops of soybeans. Unfortunately, U.S. soybean prices are now at record lows. Building demand for biodiesel will help increase these commodity prices while enhancing our Nation's energy security. In Minnesota, soybeans are the number one cash crop, grown on about 7 million acres. As we increase demand for soybeans, thus boosting market prices, we are also investing in the economic well-being of farmers and rural communities across our country.

Minnesota has been a long-time leader in the production of renewable fuels such as ethanol, wind-generated electricity, biomass, and solar energy. As Minnesota's Commissioner of Energy and Economic Development during the 1980's, I know firsthand the important role that federal and state programs play in developing these industries during their infancies. So I strongly support legislation that promotes the use of renewable energy and programs that educate the public in order to create demand.

Last June, I, along with Senator TIM HUTCHINSON of Arkansas, introduced legislation to provide tax incentives for increased use of biodiesel, a renewable fuel made from soybean and other vegetable oils. The biodiesel bill provides a Federal excise tax credit similar to the excise tax credit for ethanol-blended gasoline. The U.S. Department of Agriculture estimates that the resulting increase in biodiesel sales will increase soybean prices by at least 25 percent per bushel. As market prices go higher, the cost of government price supports become lower. The savings realized by the Commodity Credit Corporation, and the American taxpayer, would then be used to cover the cost of the tax credit. My bill directs the savings to the Commodity Credit Corporation to reimburse the Federal Highway Trust Fund for its lost revenues.

Over the past year I have been working with the Senate Finance Committee to include the biodiesel tax credit in the energy tax package that is scheduled to be marked up by the committee this afternoon. I wish to commend the Senator from Arkansas, Mrs. LINCOLN, for her help in this effort. If we are successful in passing this tax credit, an effective education program to educate the public on the benefits of biodiesel fuel will be essential as biodiesel makes the transition from research and development to commercialization.

During the markup of the energy title of the farm bill, the Senate Agriculture Committee passed my amendment to authorize $25 million over the next five years for the Biodiesel Fuel Education Program. My amendment, which passed the committee unanimously, increased the amount available from $1 million to $5 million annually through 2006 for grants to educate Americans about biodiesel. The passage of this amendment was a critical step toward encouraging the production and use of biodiesel.

I am pleased to report that the chairman and ranking member of the Senate Agriculture Committee have now accepted my floor amendment that will provide mandatory funding for the Biodiesel Fuel Education Program. My amendment will avoid the need to go through the annual appropriations process by providing $5 million in mandatory funding annually in fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

The biodiesel tax credit, together with the Biodiesel Fuel Education Program, provides a comprehensive approach to facilitate the entry of biodiesel fuels into the marketplace. Working in tandem, these legislative initiatives will educate the public, increase demand for biodiesel, bring higher prices for farmers, lower government outlays, improve the environment, and lower our dependence on foreign oil.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to comment Senator HARKIN for including in the farm bill a provision that is crucial to the Great Plains region of our Nation. The provision addresses the alarming decline in groundwater in the Southern Ogallala Aquifer, which extends under four States: Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Kansas.

A reliable source of groundwater is essential to the well-being and livelihoods of people in the Great Plains region. Local towns and rural areas are dependent on the use of ground water for drinking water, ranching, farming, and other commercial uses. Yet many areas overlying the Ogallala Aquifer have experienced a dramatic depletion of this groundwater resource. Some areas have seen a decline of over 100 feet in aquifer levels during the last half of the twentieth century.

This provision would establish a voluntary 4-year groundwater conservation incentives program for the Southern High Plains Aquifer region. Incentive payments would be made for voluntary land management practices, which may include changes from irrigated to dryland agriculture, changes in cropping patterns to utilize water conserving crops, and other conservation measures that results in significant savings in groundwater use. Cost-share payments will be made for structural practices that will conserve groundwater resources of the High Plains Aquifer, which may include improvement of irrigation systems and purchase of new equipment.

The provision also requires the Secretary of Agriculture to undertake groundwater education efforts in the southern High Plains Aquifer area, cooperating in these efforts by working with the southern High Plains Aquifer states, the land grant colleges and universities in the area and their state cooperative extension services, other educational institutions, and private organizations, as appropriate.

This provision brings focus to an issue that concerns the long-term economic viability of communities in much of America's heartland. This is farm country, and the cornerstone of its economy is its groundwater supply, the Ogallala Aquifer, which allows for irrigated agriculture. The Department of Agriculture estimates that there are over 6 million acres of irrigated agriculture overlying just the southern portion of the Ogallala. These farms use between 6 and 9 million acre feet of water per year. The problem we are confronting is that the aquifer is not sustainable, and it is being depleted rapidly. This threatens the way of life of all who live on the High Plains. This provision will take significant steps to address this serious problem.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment, cosponsored by my colleagues from North and South Carolina and Virginia, that will provide temporary relief to flue-cured tobacco growers in our States. I express my appreciation to the chairman and ranking member for accepting our amendment into the manager's package.

Flue-cured tobacco is produced under a system of acreage allotments and marketing quotas. This system involves both the amount of land on which the tobacco may be grown and the amount of tobacco harvested or the yield from that land. Hence, the allotment refers to acreage, while the quota refers to the right to market or sell the poundage produced on the allotted acreage. Usually to simplify discussion of this system, reference is only made to the term "quota".

Originally quota was owned by the producers as a tangible asset that could be passed down through inheritance from the owner to his spouse, his children, his grandchildren, or other heirs. Over time as people left the farm, we now find quota owners who no longer have any connection with Flue-cured tobacco production other than that they derive income from the leasing of their quota to Flue-cured tobacco producers.

In the late 1970s and early 1980s, there was a view that the competition for flue-cured tobacco leases was driving up the cost of production. As a result, in 1983 Congress passed Public Law 98-180. Section 205 of that act stated that flue-cured tobacco growers would not be permitted to lease their allotments and transfer their quotas for 1987 and subsequent crops. The rationale was that if tobacco growers could not lease tobacco quota and transfer it to their farms, then it was presumed that tobacco growers would buy the flue-cured tobacco quota from the quota owners. Conversely, if quota owners could not lease and transfer their quotas, they would be forced to sell them. For whatever reasons, this provision of law has never been enforced by the Secretary of Agriculture. Therefore, quota owners did not sell their quotas to producers. However, since growers could no longer lease and transfer quota, they began to rent the land to which the quota belongs. Through a United States Department of Agriculture, USDA, administrative procedure known as reconstitution, growers combined the quota owners' farms into their own.

Now, the Secretary has determined that USDA will, commencing with the 2002 Flue-cured tobacco crop, began enforcing this 1983 law by a strict interpretation of the rules that define a farm and govern farm reconstitutions. This action by the Secretary is causing considerable confusion and concern among flue-cured tobacco producers and quota owners. Incomes and balance sheets are at risk.

This current effort to enforce the 1983 law to force the sales of flue-cured tobacco quota is most ill times. Current conditions make quota too expensive for the tobacco producers to buy. There are two main reasons for this. First, quota owners are receiving "tobacco quota payments" as a result of the National Tobacco Grower Settlement Trust Agreement, also known as the Phase II settlement. Second, The President's Commission on Improving Economic Opportunity in Communities Dependent upon Tobacco Production While Protecting Public Health has recommended a tobacco quota buyout. Given the current and the potential income streams to tobacco quota owners over and above the quota's value to tobacco growers, few if any tobacco producers could now afford to buy flue-cured tobacco quota. Moreover, the ultimate objective of the recommendations of The President's Commission is to completely do away with the system of tobacco quotas. With the uncertainty surrounding the Federal tobacco program, it is very doubtful that any financial institution would even be willing to lend money to producers to purchasing quota.

My amendment suspends the enforcement of this provision of law for one year, for the 2002 flue-cured tobacco crop. Additionally, it addresses a problem whereby certain local USDA offices are requiring flue-cured tobacco farm combinations to follow the rules governing reconstitutions of production flexibility contract farms rather than the specific rules that control reconstitutions of flue-cured tobacco farms. It also directs the Secretary of Agriculture to study the issue and report back to the Congress within 90 days of enactment of this bill.

Finally, I would note that while flue-cured tobacco is also grown in Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, my amendment, as a result of a particular set of circumstances, will not have any effect on flue-cured tobacco production in those three States nor on any other type of tobacco production. We shall be doing our Carolina and Virginia flue-cured tobacco farmers and quota owners a great service by adopting this amendment in order to give the Secretary time to review the belated, unintended impact of this 1983 legislation and to allow time for a thoughtful, deliberate implementation or consideration of repeal of the provision.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, let me first express my appreciation and respect for the work of the Chairman, Senator HARKIN, and the ranking member, Senator LUGAR, for their dedication to address the challenging issues facing American farmers. In addition to funding commodity programs, this farm bill addresses the country's trade policy commitments, goals to improve farming practices through conservation measures, establishes energy and forestry initiatives, and reauthorizes food and nutrition programs.

Every few years we debate a new farm policy, attempting to reach that elusive goal of economic sustainability in the agriculture sector. Yet little seems to change from farm bill to farm bill except the title of the bill. We're always taking one step forward and two steps back. Payments are more generous, new subsidies are created, and the Federal Government's role is expanding, not shrinking, hurting small farmers, compromising agricultural exports, and penalizing American consumers and taxpayers.

In 1996, we passed a farm bill that was intended to implement a more market-oriented farm policy and wean farmers off government assistance. Instead, five years later, farm subsidies have ballooned by 400 percent. In the year 2000 alone, farm subsidies reached a record level of $22 billion.

Just a few days ago, the Senate approved an amendment to implement a stricter limit on payments to farmers. While certainly laudable, I was disappointed that this amendment does not save the taxpayers any money—the savings are simply redistributed to other federal programs.

Even with this change, it's quite obvious that farm spending is still undeniably generous, with an additional $73.4 billion dedicated to commodity and other farm programs over the next ten years, which is new spending over and above the CBO baseline. Although the Senate bill includes a five-year authorization, and the House bill proposes ten years, both bills propose to spend, in one way or another, the full $73.5 billion in additional spending included in last year's budget resolution. That means, irregardless of a five-year or ten-year bill, the budget commitment for taxpayers could still tab up to $170 billion in total to pay for current programs and cover the costs for new ones proposed in this farm bill.

That is an enormous federal commitment. Just this past December, the Administration proposed to spend $26 billion for its new education bill, a relatively meager amount to be spent on school programs in comparison to farm programs. What is more incredible is that we are asking American taxpayers to foot this $170 billion bill when other compelling priorities remain backlogged or unfunded.

For example:

Indian schools on Native American reservations, suffering from the worst dilapidated school conditions in the country, need $1.2 billion to fix the deferred maintenance backlog at 185 schools.

The Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, which has never been fully funded, would require $10 billion.

And, about $5–6 million a year for Special Subsistence Allowance payments to military households would help get service members off food stamps.

Unfortunately, these will remain low priorities and underfunded as long as farm spending increasingly consumes the federal treasury.

Yesterday, the Senate also voted to suspend budget rules to include an additional $2.4 billion in crop and livestock disaster assistance for 2001 crops in this farm bill. This $2.4 billion is, of course, not subject to budget limitations. This is spending in addition to the $5.5 billion already allocated by the Congress for 2001 crops and $33 billion in ad-hoc or emergency farm assistance provided over the last four years. So, that makes a grand total of $35.4 billion in additional farm spending over and above the $70 billion authorized in the 1996 farm bill.

Where's the reform? Where does this unlimited spending end?

Unfortunately, at the end of the debate, special interests win once again. Let's take a look at the grab-bag for special interests in this farm bill:

This bill restores counter-cyclical target price payments that were eliminated in the 1996 farm bill, potentially spending up to $70 billion for commodity programs for the life of this bill.

A new direct payment program is created for dairy farmers at a cost of $2 billion over a 3–4 year period, with one-quarter of these funds earmarked to the northeast States.

Establishment of a new peanut direct payment program, costing $2.6 billion over 5 years.

Honey, and wool and mohair subsidy programs are reinstated, programs which were either phased out or eliminated in the 1996 farm bill.

Higher loan rates are provided for specific crops such as wheat, corn, cotton, and others.

The Federal sugar subsidy program receives additional props in this bill, not only penalizing consumers with artificially high sugar prices but costing taxpayers $254 million to support the program.

New authorization for payments and loans available to producers of dry peas, lentils, and large and small chickpeas.

Addition of new benefits for soybeans and minor oilseeds farmers.

Mandatory country-of-origin labeling requirements for wild fish—a provision that has not been debated or reviewed, but simply included in the manager's package.

$100 million in emergency assistance for apple producers.

Farm spending has gone unchecked for decades. Only until the GAO and other independent taxpayer groups singled out the disparity of farm payments has some light been shed on this unlimited spending.

The GAO's report, which highlighted the egregious disparity in farm benefits, demonstrated that over 80 percent of farm payments have been distributed to large and medium sized farms, leaving small farmers in the cold.

Even with changes in this bill for payment limitations, there simply is nothing to prevent farm groups from seeking future disaster relief and emergency spending when their commodity payments are limited as proposed in this Senate bill. It would be nothing short of miraculous if this payment limitation provision survived conference negotiations given the expected resistance from entrenched farm interests. The bottom line is that taxpayers face the threat of a return to basic status quo farm policy, lavishing government payouts to large farming operations and conglomerates.

We had an opportunity to implement a real reform proposal, as presented by my distinguished colleague, Senator LUGAR, and I applaud him for his efforts. Senator LUGAR fought a brave fight to force the Senate to debate a more sensible reform of farm policies, fighting against a tide of pressure from his colleagues, the distinguished chairman, and many agriculture groups.

He offered a proposal to substantially reduce federal farm payments and focus assistance on a needs-based approach. He boldly proposed to phase out cherished sugar, peanuts and dairy subsidies. He also suggested that federal assistance is more appropriately focused to those farmers that genuinely need assistance. Sadly, his proposal will never see the light of day beyond this chamber because too many are willing to adhere to the status quo rather than accept progressive policies.

This bill is a great disappointment.

While not all of my colleagues are equally budget conscious when passing such comprehensive legislation, more than a few should be concerned about how this bill could potentially impact U.S. trade commitments.

Today, agricultural exports account for approximately one-fourth of U.S. farm income. Because of this, removing trader barriers to U.S. agricultural goods is more important now than ever. But as we travel around the world, championing the cause of free trade, we must practice what we preach. We cannot possibly expect foreign governments to reduce barriers to entry for U.S. agricultural products, while the United States Congress continues to build up greater barriers domestically, to reduce competition from foreign products.

I am a supporter of free trade. I want American farmers to be able to sell their goods around the world. This bill continues protectionist policies that raise barriers to foreign goods. These efforts will jeopardize the ability of America's farmers to continue to export goods abroad and profit from expanded exports. Passage of this legislation could very well lead to violations of international trade rules and will no doubt complicate the position of the United States in future trade negotiations.

For example, a current one-year ban on catfish imports in effect right now because of a last-minute rider to the agriculture appropriations bill we passed last year. I opposed this ban, but, unfortunately, special interests have also secured a ten-year ban on catfish imports in the House farm bill.

Also included in the managers' package of amendments is a provision that requires country of origin labeling for "wild fish." Not many of my colleagues realize how difficult this provision will be to implement because so many different fish from different sources are often processed within the same fish processing plant. Fish processors will have to completely change the way they operate their business in order to comply with this protectionist measure. Other such trade distorting programs such as dairy and sugar price support programs remain a constant in farm bills.

Farm policy is among the most volatile and complicated matters we deal with in the Congress. But what seems clear to me is that the farm economy seems unable to operate unless the Congress infuses billions of dollars in the form of direct federal payments, mandates government fixed prices, and imposes distorted quotas.

We continue to spend and spend on farm subsidies, despite the projections from CBO, which indicate that if current tax and spending policies remain in place, the total unified budget will show a deficit of $21 billion in 2002 and $14 billion in 2003, and net surpluses every year thereafter through 2012.

According to CBO, the on-budget accounts are projected to post deficits of $181 billion in 2002, $193 billion in 2003, and declining amounts through 2009. On-budget surpluses do not appear again until 2010. And, let's face it, medium- and long-term budget projections are worth little more than the paper they're printed on.

At this time of economic uncertainty, this farm bill is an appalling breach of our federal spending responsibility and our national integrity, while continuing the heavy burden long placed on taxpayers.

I regret that I cannot support this bill. I realize that many agricultural producers in Arizona have relied on some of these farm subsidies and other agriculture programs, particularly from rural development initiatives. Unfortunately, this farm bill, like most other farm bills in years past, tilts benefits toward the bigger farm producing States while Arizona, like many other States, will lose out over the long term.

Sadly this bill fails by all accounts to provide a sound and defensible national farm policy.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I oppose this legislation, and I wanted to take a few moments of my colleagues' time to explain why.

Let me begin by commending the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee, Senator HARKIN, for his outstanding leadership on agricultural issues and his strong commitment to farmers. There is no more passionate advocate on these issues in the Senate.

Let me also say that I grew up on a farm—a 120 acre family farm. I understand what it means to wake up early and put in the long, hard hours that go along with family farming. I have tremendous respect for the men and women who put food on our nation's table. And I represent a state, the Garden State, with an important agricultural history, although one less dominant today.

But, in my view, the legislation before us is the wrong way to support America's farmers. It perpetuates an outdated system of subsidies that distorts the market, unfairly benefits a limited number of producers, and, most importantly, imposes excessive costs on all consumers. It distributes these subsidies in a manner that leaves farmers in states like New Jersey with little assistance. And, while this bill does more than other farm bills in recent history, it will use Social Security surpluses for unrelated spending, just when we should be saving to prepare for the baby boomers' retirement.

If we were starting from scratch, no rational person would design the system of agricultural policies that we now have in place, a system begun during the Great Depression. This system provides that most of the federal assistance goes to four crops: wheat, corn, cotton and rice.

If we were starting from scratch, the first question would be: why? What is it about wheat, for example, that justifies giving its producers large subsidies?

The answer is that there is little reason. We have done it in the past. But there is no good reason to give wheat, or any of the other program crops, special treatment that is not provided to other producers.

When Government chooses arbitrarily to favor some products with subsidies, it creates distortions in the market. Farmers might ordinarily be inclined to grow vegetables, soybeans, apples, or other fruits. That may be what consumers want and might make sense economically. But if those fruits do not enjoy government subsidies, many farmers will choose instead to plant more wheat. That reduces the supply of fruit, which raises its price. At the same time, it increases the supply of wheat, which lowers its price.

Under the farm program, moreover, a reduction in the price of wheat then triggers even more Government subsidies. In other words, Government subsidies lead to more government subsidies, as the market gets increasingly distorted. The end result is often higher prices for consumers and, eventually, higher taxes for everybody.

Let me focus on this last point. This bill calls for a dramatic increase in overall spending on agriculture: as reported by committee, a total of $73 billion over baseline levels in the next decade. Note that baseline levels already incorporate the effects of inflation. So a $73 billion increase is a huge amount of money. And the fact is, we cannot afford it.

In large measure because of the tax cuts enacted last year, we already are looking at deficits for years to come. President Bush's budget calls for raiding Social Security surpluses of $1.5 trillion over the next 10 years. And I am afraid that this bill will mean that Social Security surpluses are diverted to pay for farm subsidies. That, in my view, is wrong.

Our Nation faces a huge demographic bubble, as the baby boom generation moves toward retirement. We simply must save more to prepare for that. This is the wrong time to be calling for huge increases in agriculture subsidies.

I also would point out that this bill, like the existing system of farm subsidies, is fundamentally unfair to my State of New Jersey. The overwhelming bulk of the subsidies in this bill will go for commodities that, by and large, are not produced in the Garden State.

In New Jersey, our farmers grow large amounts of specialty crops, such as blueberries, eggplant and asparagus. In fact, New Jersey ranks second in the nation for blueberry production, and fourth in the nation for eggplant and asparagus production. Yet, though New Jersey's farmers meet much of the nation's needs for these crops, none of our blueberry, eggplant or asparagus farmers receive support under the existing commodity programs. That is one reason, Mr. President, that New Jersey got less than one-twentieth of one percent of the total commodity assistance provided by the Federal Government in fiscal year 2001. Less than one-twentieth of one percent!

The people of my State get one of the worst returns on their tax dollar of any State in the nation. This Congress can be generous when it comes to rural areas in other parts of the country. But our State has very different needs. And, when it comes to supporting urban areas, like Newark, Camden or Trenton, we tend to come up short. Yes, HUD helps some. Yes, there are some subsidies for transit. But, overall, the Federal government is not treating my State equitably. We are continuously the 49th of the 50 States in our return on the Federal dollar. That bothers a lot of New Jerseyans. And it bothers me.

Having said that, I recognize that if you simply compare this bill to existing law, there are a few provisions that represent improvements. I do support most of the conservation and nutrition provisions. And I acknowledge the hard work of Senators LEAHY and TORRICELLI in pushing for more fairness for specialty crops.

Yet at the end of the day, the existing system of farm subsidies essentially remains intact in this bill, and the subsidies for favored crops are only increased. That means we will continue to subsidize a limited number of producers. We will continue to distort the market. We will continue to impose higher costs on consumers and taxpayers. We will continue to invade the Social Security Trust Fund. And we will continue to treat my State of New Jersey unfairly.

For these reasons, I cannot in good conscience support this legislation. And I hope that, in time, we can revisit a failed farm policy and achieve real, needed reform.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I rise today to commend my colleagues and the Senate leadership for bringing this legislation, the new federal farm bill, to the floor so early in the year. I think the priority this bill received on the calendar reflects its priority to the Nation, our economy, and especially our rural and agricultural regions.

In my home state of Nebraska, 55,000 families earn their living on the farm. In total, one in four jobs in Nebraska is connected to agriculture. To say the farm bill and Federal farm programs are important to my state is an understatement.

Which is why I was part of a group of sensible, concerned Senators that pushed this body to consider, and pass, a new farm bill last year. We knew that we had to act fast to remedy the problems associated with Freedom to Farm. I know first hand, serving as governor of a rural state during the implementation of that program, that it was a failure and needed to be fixed.

We wanted to get it done last year for two reasons. First, we wanted to give farmers and their lenders as much time as possible to plan for a new federal program. Second, time was running short on the Federal budget clock and in order to maintain an acceptable level of funding for the farm bill, we needed get it done before the budget authority expired for $73.5 billion in new farm bill funds we had secured.

But, that didn't happen. We had an administration that thought we should wait, and a merry band of Senators agreed. So, for reasons still unclear to me, the farm bill was defeated last year, and the only people who suffered were the farmers all across the country who depend on these programs to thrive.

Now, we are here on the precipice of progress. We have addressed the concerns that were raised last year and we may actually pass a new farm bill this week. I must say it's been an interesting process. As the debate on the farm bill was underway last December, simultaneous debates on how best to boost the nation's economy out of a recession were being conducted.

I was part of the economic stimulus discussions, and a part of the farm bill proceedings in the Agriculture Committee. I couldn't help but notice the parallel goals of both bills: to stimulate the economy and to stimulate the agriculture economy.

An argument might be made that the best economic boost for my state, Nebraska, is something to generate activity in the agriculture economic sector. Anything that improves the agricultural economy stirs the overall economy in my state. That is why I am here now. I am here to say that this farm bill represents the best economic hope for rural, agriculture-based, states like Nebraska.

Commodity prices for crops remain at historic lows for the fourth straight year. Livestock producers—the largest sector of agriculture in my State—are facing costly new environmental regulations with frightfully few federal resources to help share the burden.

This farm bill addresses these concerns and will have a positive impact on the rural economy. This farm bill is the right thing to do, even if it's a few weeks late.

We have made great strides with this bill. I am proud to say we have nearly doubled conservation spending—encouraging agriculture to improve resource management and for the first time providing incentives for conservation on land in production.

This farm bill promotes trade, promotes conservation and competition. It breathes new life into our commodity programs.

For example, it reauthorizes the programs for sugar beet growers, which are so critical to the 550 sugar beet families in western Nebraska. It also provides nutrition programs for hungry children and adults, supports our international food donation and trade efforts, and protects millions of acres of environmentally sensitive land, among other important priorities.

The farm bill before us makes a real commitment—both in programs and funding—to rural development. This farm bill removes barriers to the school lunch program for military families by eliminating an accounting glitch that uses their housing allowance to prohibit their participation.

I am pleased that despite the obstacles laid down before us, the Senate is about to do the right thing and pass this needed and important legislation. I urge my colleagues to support the people who feed our nation and the nations around the world, our farmers and ranchers, by supporting the new farm bill.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, today I opposed the sense-of-the-Senate amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona. Senator KYL's amendment called for the removal of the sunset date for the estate tax changes made in last year's tax cut package. I opposed it because the proposal was both unfair and unaffordable.

The Senator's proposal was unfair because only a tiny number of Americans pay the estate tax under current law. In fact, in 1999 only 636 Minnesotans paid any estate tax whatsoever. This is simply not a burden that falls on many families. That does not mean that I don't support raising the estate tax exemption to a higher level to shield smaller estates—particularly the few small business owners and farmers who end up being affected by the tax. I would support raising the exemption immediately to $4-5 million, with perhaps higher exemptions for small businesses and farms.

The current law, as amended last summer, provides for much slower and uneven estate tax relief. It has made the estate tax process much more complicated—not less. And when full repeal phases in in 2010, it will shield the wealthiest estates in America—worth hundreds of millions and even billions of dollars—from any tax liability. That's what the Kyl amendment proposed we make permanent and I think it would be terrible policy.

And it is made all the more terrible because it is so expensive. The Kyl proposal would cost $104 billion over the next 10 years—literally to protect a few thousand ultra-wealthy families. Even worse, from 2013-2022 it would cost other taxpayers over $800 billion to provide this “relief.” Most of this cost would be financed out of the Social Security surplus and at precisely the moment that the baby boomers start to retire in large numbers.

I will not jeopardize Social Security—which tens of millions of Americans rely upon for their retirement—to grant tax breaks to the heirs of multimillionaires and billionaires. For that reason I opposed the amendment.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 1731, the 2002 farm bill. This legislation makes much needed changes to the failed farm policies adopted under the 1996 Freedom to Farm Act and charts a course that promises a better future for all of America's family farmers.

The 2002 farm bill takes significant steps in ensuring that the family farmers throughout my State and across the Nation are able to carry on in the face of a rural economy that has continued to lag behind the general economy for two decades. Over the past several years, the Congress has repeatedly had to intervene with a series of ad hoc disaster relief measures in an attempt to remedy the failed farm policy instituted under the so-called “Freedom to Farm Act.” The 2002 farm bill takes significant steps toward ensuring that Federal support is provided to those farmers who are most in need. The legislation seeks to reform the farm system by reinstating an income safety net to provide more support in difficult years and less during good years. It contains provisions to help ensure that commodity payments that individual farmers can receive reach those who need them most: our small and medium sized farmers.

Agriculture plays a vital role in Maryland. It remains the State's largest commercial industry, providing over $17.5 billion in annual revenue. In all, agriculture and related industry employs about 350,000 residents, including those who own and operate Maryland's 12,400 farms. And 2.1 million acres, or 33 percent of the total area of my State, is used for farming. This represents the largest single land use in Maryland.

The commodity title of the farm bill contains a number of provisions that are of particular importance to Maryland's agricultural economy. I would like to just touch upon two, those concerning our dairy producers and our specialty crop farmers.

First, our Nation's dairy policy has been amended to reflect the unique needs of dairy farmers in the Northeast, including Maryland. The 1997 Census of Maryland Agriculture indicates that there are 1,091 dairy farms in the State, a number that is about 600 below 1987, and one which I fear will be significantly lower upon the completion of this year's census. If these small dairy farmers are to succeed, it is essential that they be able to compete on a level playing field. This legislation creates a new counter-cyclical payment system for northeastern states when minimum fluid prices fall below $16.94 per hundredweight.

The farm bill also includes provisions that address the needs of specialty crop producers, crops such as fruits and vegetables that do not benefit from traditional commodity support programs, which are making up an increasingly important part of Maryland's agricultural economy. The legislation includes several provisions concerning specialty crops, including a provision authorizing funds from USDA's Commodity Credit Corporation to be used to purchase these specialty crops over the next 5 years. Further, using savings incurred as a part of the payment limitations amendment, USDA's Risk Management Agency has been directed to develop cost-of-production insurance for a variety of specialty crops to cover documented costs of production in the event of low prices.

The farm bill also includes a significant increase in funding for vital conservation programs, devoting over $21 billion in new spending to conservation efforts over the next 10 years. This figure is double the current baseline spending and marks the largest increase in conservation spending ever in a farm bill. These additional funds mean increased funding for programs of great interest to the State of Maryland, including: wetland restoration, wildlife habitat incentive programs, and above all farmland and grassland protection, critical to helping farmers resist the pressures of sprawl.

The legislation authorizes two new programs targeted specifically at restoring the health of the Chesapeake Bay. First, it authorizes a $70 million nutrient reduction pilot program to encourage the development of innovative solutions to the nutrient pollution problem in the Chesapeake Bay.

Nutrient over-enrichment from agricultural operations and other non-point sources is one of the most serious problems facing the Chesapeake Bay. In 1987, the Chesapeake Bay Program established a goal of a 40 percent reduction of controllable loads of nitrogen and phosphorus entering the bay by 2000—a goal that was unprecedented in this country. Over the past 15 years, farmers in the six-state Bay watershed, with assistance from the Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program or so-called CREP and other USDA conservation programs, have made substantial progress in reducing nutrient inputs. From 1985 to 2000, total nitrogen loads to the bay were reduced by 51 million pounds, with the largest percentage of this reduction coming from agriculture. Unfortunately, we continue to fall short of the nitrogen goal. If we are to remove nutrient impairments to the bay, additional reductions from agricultural sources must be made and that will only be accomplished with new and innovative programs.

A recent summit of leading agricultural and marine scientists from across the Nation convened in Maryland concluded that the most effective means to reducing nitrogen losses from agricultural lands is to reduce the over-application of nitrogen that the crops do not use. Because some agricultural crops are relatively inefficient nitrogen users at high yields, the last pound of nitrogen applied to a crop is the least helpful to a farmer's yield, but the most likely to run off into our nation's waters. By providing incentives and financial protections for farmers to accept slightly reduced yields in some years, the Nutrient Reduction Pilot Program will reduce farmers' risks, lower their operational costs, and at the same time substantially decrease nitrogen losses to the environment.

The principal focus of the Nutrient Reduction Pilot Program, as conceived by bay-area scientists and organizations, is to create new incentives for farmers to reduce the application of nitrogen by at least 15 percent below what is normally considered best practice and to provide financial protection in the event of reduced yields. The way the program is envisioned, farmers in an area would bid in and say how much money they would demand for each pound of nitrogen reduced so long as the 15 percent threshold is met. Farmers do not have to agree to farm in any particular way; the only question is have they reduced their nitrogen applications at least 15 percent below recommended levels. The program allows for flexibility in achieving nutrient retention targets through such methods as cover crops, constructed wetlands, stream buffers, and switch grass. The program would be monitored based on actual performance by comparing how much nitrogen is applied to how much is removed in crops. It would also provide rewards based on each increment of superior performance. The program goal is to increase enrollment annually and have one million acres of cropland enrolled in year four. Five to 10 percent of the funding will be used to support promotion and education as well as monitoring and evaluation of program impacts.

I anticipate that in implementing this program, the Department of Agriculture will work with States and the private sector to create the mechanisms to carry out this provision. Specifically, I would anticipate that the Department would work to achieve the following in implementing the program: Target investments in nutrient reductions where they are most cost effective through competitive selection processes and through a bidding process to establish incentive rates; reward producers for each incremental level of nutrient reduction and possibly increasing incentive rates for each incremental level; test a variety of reduction techniques including both decreasing nitrogen inputs by at least 15 percent below land grant university recommended rates and increasing nitrogen removal from agricultural runoff; encourage alternative land use practices that reduce nutrient runoff while still producing income; and develop a complementary nutrient insurance program to provide financial protection to farmers who experience reduced yields due to reductions in nutrient applications.

This is a very important provision that will use market incentives to reduce nitrogen discharge into our Nation's largest estuary. This pilot program is a cutting-edge approach that allows watershed scale testing of a new practice that could provide major reductions in nutrient pollution throughout the Chesapeake Bay watershed while maintaining or enhancing farm viability.

Second, the managers' amendment authorizes the Chesapeake Bay Watershed Forestry Program. Forest loss and fragmentation are occurring rapidly in the Chesapeake Bay region and are among the most important issues facing the Bay and forest management today. According to the National Resources Inventory, the States closest to the Bay lost 350,000 acres of forest between 1987–1997 or almost 100 acres per day. More and more rural areas are being converted to suburban developments resulting in smaller contiguous forest tracts. These trends are leading to a regional forest land base that is more vulnerable to conversion, less likely to be economically viable in the future, and is losing its capacity to protect watershed health and other ecological benefits, such as controlling storm water runoff, erosion and air pollution—all critical to the bay clean-up effort.

Since 1990, the U.S. Forest Service has been an important part of the Chesapeake Bay Program. Administered through the Northeastern Area, State and Private Forestry, this program has worked closely with Federal, State and local partners in the six-State Chesapeake Bay region to demonstrate how forest protection, restoration and stewardship activities, can contribute to achieving the bay restoration goals. Over the past 11 years, it has provided modest levels of technical and financial assistance, averaging approximately $300,000 a year, to develop collaborative watershed projects that address watershed forest conservation, restoration and stewardship. With the signing of the Chesapeake 2000 Agreement, the role of the USDA Forest Service has become more important than ever. Among other provisions, this agreement requires the signatories to conserve existing forests along all streams and shoreline; promote the expansion and connection of contiguous forests; assess the bay's forest lands; and provide technical and financial assistance to local governments to plan for or revise plans, ordinances and subdivision regulations to provide for the conservation and sustainable use of the forest and agricultural lands. To address these goals, the U.S. Forest Service must have additional resources and authority, and that is what this provision seeks to provide.

Specifically, the provision codifies the roles and responsibilities of the USDA Forest Service to the bay restoration effort. It strengthens existing coordination, technical assistance, forest resource assessment, and planning efforts. It authorizes a small grants program to support local agencies, watershed associations and citizen groups in conducting on-the-ground conservation projects. It also establishes a regional applied urban forestry research and training program to enhance urban forests in the watershed. Finally it authorizes $3.5 million for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006—a modest increase in view of the six-State, 64,000 square mile watershed.

The 2002 farm bill, also authorizes a number of critical programs which will be of great benefit to the people of my State and all Americans. The legislation includes provisions to address the development needs of America's rural communities, including infrastructure funds for businesses and communities to promote genuine revitalization. It doubles the amount proposed by the administration for nutrition programs, in an effort to ensure that no Americans go to bed hungry.

Finally, I am pleased that the legislation strikes an ill-conceived provision proposed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to dispose of land at the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center. As you know, Beltsville Agricultural Research Center is the Nation's premier agricultural research facility. The research undertaken at Beltsville has helped ensure the eradication of certain plant and animal diseases and the production of high-quality agricultural products so that our farmers and agribusinesses can compete in the global marketplace. And the work at Beltsville has led to products and production methods that are safer for both consumers and the environment. Parceling out this property would most certainly be a step in the wrong direction. Beltsville Agricultural Research Center is a national asset which has served as a much needed buffer in the midst of an otherwise highly developed area. In my view, the Federal Government would not realize proceeds from the sale of this property sufficient to compensate for Beltsville Agricultural Research Center's great value to the Department of Agriculture and to the American public. This sale would be extremely short sighted and ultimately regretted.

In closing, I want to congratulate the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, Senator HARKIN, who has done a terrific job in ensuring that this legislation reflects the needs of America's family farmers and our nation's rural communities. And I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting its passage.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, for several months now, the attention of the Senate has been focused on the condition of farming in America. While this is a rite of some regularity every few years when we consider again the many hundreds of Federal programs that affect American agriculture, it is a subject of ongoing interest for those of us whose States rely disproportionately on farming. As Kansas' Secretary of Agriculture I had a unique opportunity to see all aspects of farming in our state and I rise today to briefly discuss the important priorities for Kansas in this farm bill.

Despite my concerns about many other provisions in this farm bill—I am very pleased to see that our carbon sequestration provisions are included. This portion could help build a new market for farmers—one that pays them for how they produce, not just what they produce.

The Wyden-Brownback amendment builds on this promise and expands it to help us explore how carbon trading might work by using our cooperatives.

Carbon sequestration is a largely untapped resource that can buy us the one thing we need most in this debate: time. The Department of Energy estimates that over the next 50 to 100 years, agricultural lands alone could have the potential to remove anywhere from 40 to 80 billion metric tons of carbon from the atmosphere. If we expand this to include forests, the number will be far greater—indicating there is a real difference that could be made by encouraging a carbon sink approach.

Carbon sequestration alone can not solve the climate change dilemma, but as we search for technological advancements that allow us to create energy with less pollution, and as we continue to research the cause and potential effects of climate change, it only makes sense that we enhance a natural process we already know has the benefit of reducing existing concentrations of greenhouse gases—particularly when this process also improves water quality, soil fertility and wildlife habitat. This is a no-regrets policy—much like taking out insurance on your house or car. We should do no less for the protection of the planet.

In addition to this carbon sequestration provision, I am also pleased that we will be able to address another pressing environmental issue facing our country and particularly Kansas. Water, so essential to cultivation, is a top priority for Kansas farmers and I am pleased to say that this Farm Bill can help in this vital area as well.

The Kansas Water Authority has been considering ways to extend the usable life of the Ogallala Aquifer and assure ground water will be available to meet the needs of future generations. The long term sustainability of ground water supplies is a concern of mine and I am pleased with the portion of the farm bill that creates the Southern High Plains Aquifer Groundwater Conservation Program. This legislation takes the necessary first step to protect and conserve this valuable resource. A reliable source of groundwater is essential to the economy of Kansas. There have been dramatic declines in water table levels in the last half of this century. It is projected that if no action is taken the aquifer could in some portions be completely dry in 100 years. Kansas is one of the States where this decline is especially pronounced.

Through this new program in the farm bill, farmers will be given incentive payments for improving irrigation systems, changing from high-water intensity crops to low-water intensity crops, as well as converting from irrigation to dryland farming. Payments will be made as result of a true savings in groundwater resources. I am pleased to have worked with my colleague, Senator JEFF BINGAMAN, in supporting this portion of the farm bill and hope that the rest of our colleagues will see how important this program is to saving the usable life of the Ogallala Aquifer.

The farm bill currently under consideration is not the bill that I would have drafted, independent of the deliberations of this body. However, this effort is an initiative that is desperately needed by America's farm families. I am hopeful that, working with our colleagues in the other body, we will craft a compromise that protects our priorities. We need a farm bill that can provide a safety net for farmers, but that will not create negative incentives to overproduce and depress crop prices. We need a bill that supports expanding trade opportunities and respects our international commitments. We need a bill that will, in the President's words, "offer producers a reliable safety net that protects them from the financial events and circumstances beyond their control, while enabling them to better manage their individual financial situation." I remain very hopeful that we will be able to speed help to American agriculture and remove the cloud of uncertainty that presently shrouds the prairie farms in Kansas and America's agriculture economy generally.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, today, the Senate voted 98 to 0, recorded vote No.

27, in support of Senate amendment No. 2857 to S. 1731, the Agriculture, Conservation, and Rural Enhancement Act of 2001.

This amendment contained sense-of-the-Senate language that "no Social Security surplus should be used to pay to make [sic] currently scheduled tax cuts permanent or for wasteful spending." I voted aye because I knew that a vote against it would be construed wrongly as a statement in favor of dipping into the Social Security trust fund.

Factual inaccuracies in the amendment deserve to be noted. It states that "permanent extension of the inheritance tax repeal would cost, according to the administration's estimate, approximately $104 billion over the next 10 years, all of which would further reduce the Social Security surplus."

This statement is factually incorrect. In fact, the confiscatory inheritance—or more accurately, the estate or death tax—will be repealed for 1 year in 2010. In 2011, the death tax is resurrected and at the potency of 2001 rates. I support making permanent the repeal of the death tax. This would in no way endanger the payment of future Social Security benefits.

Over the next 10 years, from 2003 through 2012, the President's budget projects a baseline surplus of $463 billion. That amount does not include any Social Security funds. A permanent death tax repeal is estimated to reduce Federal revenues by $104 billion over that time period. The resulting surplus, made up entirely of non-Social Security funds, would be $359 billion.

To further illustrate the inaccuracy of the contention that permanent repeal would reduce the Social Security surplus by $104 billion, it is useful to look at the effect of permanence in 2011 and 2012.

In 2011, the Federal Government is projected to generate a $199 billion surplus—a surplus that does not include any Social Security funds. Permanently repealing the death tax would reduce Federal revenues by $25 billion in 2011, which is 12.5 percent of the projected surplus for that year.

In 2012, the Federal Government is projected to generate a $395 billion surplus—a surplus that does not include any Social Security funds. Permanently repealing the death tax would reduce federal revenues by $61 billion in 2012, which is 15.4 percent of the projected surplus for that year.

The facts are clear. Making the death tax permanent will not deplete the Social Security surplus. Supporters of the continued existence death tax have long underestimated the depth of moral opposition to this "virtue tax" on our American families, small businesses, family farmers, and ranchers. Unfortunately, the death-tax supporters are now resorting to outright misstatements about the ramifications of permanent repeal. They are attempting to convince the country that making the repeal of this tax permanent will jeopardize our seniors' Social Security benefits. Not true.

That is shameful and false, and a bipartisan majority of the Senate acknowledged so—in approving, right after amendment 2857, my amendment to make repeal of the death tax permanent.

By a vote of 56 to 42, the Senate memorialized its support for the following statement:

"Therefore, it is the Sense of the Senate that the repeal of the estate tax should be made permanent by eliminating the sunset provision's applicability to the estate tax."

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President: I rise today in support of the farm bill and look forward to the House and Senate conferees working quickly to ensure that it is in place for the 2002 crop year. I also rise to explain my opposition to the amendment offered unsuccessfully earlier today by Senator DOMENICI regarding the dairy program included in the Senate version of the farm bill. This amendment would have replaced the dairy program that exists in the farm bill with a program that pays producers regardless of the actual market price of milk. Furthermore, the amendment failed to place a cap on the level of production eligible for a payment.

The Senate version of the farm bill restores a much needed safety-net for farmers and ranchers throughout the country. This bill rewrites the 1996 farm bill which has left farmers vulnerable to the continued downward spiral of prices. Because of the 1996 bill's deficiencies, Congress has had to approve billions of dollars in emergency assistance every year. This is not an effective or responsible or fair way to set the farm policy for our Nation, and I am pleased that the Senate has stepped up to the task of providing needed and honest reform. The Senate bill also provides significant new spending for conservation and nutrition programs. And it targets assistance where it is needed, the small family farm, by limiting Federal payments to $275,000 a year. All in all, the Senate bill is a comprehensive measure that will help farmers in Wisconsin successfully weather volatile price fluctuations and other risks associated with farming.

Of particular interest to my State is the dairy title of this bill. It is counter-cyclical creating a price safety-net for dairy producers when milk prices fall below the 5-year all-milk price or a $16.94 class I price. The Domenici amendment would have made payments to producers regardless of market conditions. I cannot support that. We should provide adequate relief to producers when prices decline, not simply pay farmers to over-produce and depress prices.

Another key component of the dairy program currently in the Senate version of the farm bill is the limitations on payments. I worked with Senator DASCHLE and Senator HARKIN to make sure payments under our dairy program were capped so that benefits would not flow primarily to huge farms. We limit payments to 8 million pounds of production or the amount of milk produced in a year by approximately 400 cows. Given that the average herd size in Wisconsin is 65, I would have preferred a much lower cap. However, the final number was a compromise capable of winning the support of a majority of the States. Unfortunately, the Domenici amendment would undo this fragile coalition by removing any limit on the payment a producer can receive. This uncapping of the benefits would have shifted the level of assistance from the small and medium size producers, who need the help the most, to the larger operators. And while that may be popular out west, where dairy herds routinely run to the thousands, it is unfair to the Midwest and Northeast where smaller family farms predominate.

The dairy program in the Senate bill is not ideal for me nor any other Senator in this body. Yet it represents a significant improvement over previous policies, such as regional price-fixing compacts, and represents a delicate balance between previously warring regions. I am pleased that the Senate rejected the Domenici amendment and agreed to preserve the dairy program we worked out, perhaps the only dairy assistance plan that can garner majority support. Furthermore, I urge the conference committee to consider carefully the enormous effort behind and enormous fragility of the dairy section of this bill. I plead with the committee not to return to the days of bitter regional wars over compacts and other special dairy deals. Let this farm bill be remembered as the legislation that marked the beginning of national and fair dairy policy in this country.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, it is with great regret that I vote against the farm bill today. As a member of the Agriculture Committee, I have worked extensively on this bill at the committee level and on the floor. I appreciate Chairman HARKIN and his staff, who have been tireless in their efforts to work with me on behalf of Arkansas farmers. The bill we passed out of the Agriculture Committee was a strong bill that was carefully balanced to represent both the diversity of our various regions and the different elements of our rural economy. But passage of the Dorgan-Grassley amendment on payment limitations last week as well as prohibition on packer ownership of livestock make it untenable for me to support this bill.

I won't go into great detail on the effect of the Dorgan-Grassley payment limitations on Arkansas farmers. Instead, I refer my colleagues to the February 7th CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the extensive remarks I made during debate on the amendment. In addition, I would like to submit for the RECORD an article from today's Arkansas Democrat-Gazette, which outlines the effect this amendment will have on Arkansas farmers. This article refers to a Congressional Research Service study which finds that a single farmer growing rice will hit his limit at only 487 acres. As I told my colleagues during debate on the Dorgan-Grassley amendment, many farmers in Arkansas have had to extend their farms to over one thousand acres in order to break even because their input costs are so high.

Last week, I cautioned my colleagues that the information they had seen in the press and on websites about plutocrats getting rich off farms payments was misleading. I said that the Environmental Working Group, which was lobbying heavily in favor of payment limitations, did not represent the family farmer. Now it seems that at least one editorial writer agrees with me. I quote from the February 11th Washington Times: "Make no mistake. The agenda of the Environmental Working Group and its financial backers is not simply to eliminate unfair public subsidies to agribusiness, but to cripple agribusiness altogether. . ."

Freedom to Farm demanded that farmers engage the volatile and subsidized global marketplace and learn how to become more competitive. Now, with passage of these terribly unfair provisions, the Senate would attempt to penalize America's farmers and ranchers for taking the very measures they need to complete in that same global marketplace.

Although I sadly vote against the farm bill today, I look forward to working with Chairman HARKIN and members of the conference committee to modify this version of the farm bill so that I might support a more balanced and fair farm bill conference report.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorials to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BEHIND THE GREEN CURTAIN

(By Michelle Malkin)

Among the political chattering classes, there's a big buzz over a tiny activist organization called the Environmental Working Group.

Both liberals and conservatives, including the left-leaning New York Times editorial page and the right-leaning Wall Street Journal editorial page, have praised the group's farm subsidy database. The National Journal notes that the research vaulted the group "into the big leagues and, according to many observers, profoundly shaped the congressional debate over pending farm legislation." Hundreds of stories from The Washington Post on down have cited the group's findings over the past month.

Posted on the Internet, the Environmental Working Group database documents $71 billion in federal agricultural handouts from 1996-2000. Some of the money has gone to truly undeserving and ridiculous recipients, including prosperous companies, members of Congress, and part-time celebrity "farmers" such as professional basketball star Scottie Pippen, banking giant David Rockefeller, media mogul Ted Turner and ABC news personality Sam Donaldson.

As a longtime critic of government pork, I agree that the group's database is a commendable public service. But conservative opponents of farm subsidies should perhaps be a little warier of jumping into bed with these radical greens. The Environmental Working Group is not just a humble "non-profit research outfit," as it is being described by the mainstream press. It is a savvy political animal funded by deep-pocketed foundations with a big-government agenda of their own. And it is engaged in aggressive eco-lobbying that belies its image as an innocuous public charity dedicated to "education" citizens.

The Environmental Working Group's main claim to fame is its anti-chemical fear-mongering. It scares pregnant women about the nondangers of chlorinated water and says even one bite of some fruit sprayed with pesticides could cause "dizziness, nausea and blurred vision." The group has also declared war on nail polish, hairspray, playgrounds, portable classrooms and ABC News correspondent John Stossel.

The Environmental Working Group, a non-profit, 501(c)(3) charity, thrives on funding from an array of extremely liberal foundations. One of its leading benefactors was the W. Alton Jones Foundation—which failed miserably a few years ago in its widely publicized attempt to scare people out of using plastic sandwich bags by claiming they contained endocrine-disrupting chemicals. The group continues to tout the foundation's efforts and plug its alarmist junk science book, "Our Stolen Future," on the group's Web site.

In 2000, the Environment Working Group received a $1.62 million grant over three years from The Joyce Foundation. On its Web site, the eco-advocacy foundation describes the grant's purpose in a political terms as supporting "a concentrated program of agriculture policy reform." But in the foundation's tax filings, the purpose of the Environmental Working Group grant is stated in more explicit detail: "For work on 2002 Farm Bill."

Under federal tax laws, public charities can engage in limited political activities—but the Environmental Working Group's zealous legislative lobbying raises questions about its status as a public charity. In a complaint to be filed this Friday with IRS Commissioner Charles Rossotti, the Bellevue, Wash.-based Center for the Defense of Free Enterprise charges that the Environmental Working Group's "excessive lobbying and politicking" activities are "clearly illegal and should (at a minimum) result in revocation of the organization's tax-exempt status."

The complaint charges that the group hid its lobbying political expenditures, failed to register as a lobbyist in California, submitted false or misleading reports with the IRS, and acted as a political action organization in violation of 501(c)(3) rules. Ron Arnold, executive vice president of the Center for the Defense of Free Enterprise, warns: "The Environmental Working Group is not what it seems. Its goal is not protecting the environment. Its goal is power—political power."

Make no mistake. The agenda of the Environmental Working Group and its financial backers is not simply to eliminate unfair public subsidies to agribusiness, but to cripple agribusiness altogether in favor of "organic" alternatives, increased regulation of manufacturers and tax-supported environmental conservation programs.

Sometimes the enemies of enemies don't always make the best of friends.

SUBSIDY CUTS TO WOUND RICE, COTTON FARMS
(By Kevin Fréking)

WASHINGTON.—A report from the Congressional Research Service confirms that the lower federal subsidy limits approved by the Senate last week would be felt mostly by the nation's rice and cotton farmers. That means Arkansas, the nation's largest rice producer, would be hit particularly hard.

The nonpartisan agency projected the acreage that subsidy recipients could farm before they reach the proposed $275,000 limit. The limit for rice farms would be reached at 731 acres; the limit for cotton farms, at 1,321 acres.

"For cotton and rice, those are not large farms," said Andy Miller, assistant director of governmental affairs for the Arkansas Farm Bureau. "We have many folks with farms larger than that."

How many? It's hard to say at this point, but the number will reach into the thousands, agriculture experts say.

The average farm in Arkansas is slightly more than 300 acres, but most rice and cotton farms are far larger. Census statistics from 1997 show that nearly 1,000 rice farms in Arkansas covered at least 500 acres. And about 500 cotton farms covered 1,000 acres or more.

But even those numbers are conservative, experts said. Arkansas has experienced continued consolidation of farms in the past five years; there are fewer small farms, but the number of large farms has grown.

Also, Arkansas farmers who are not married will be ineligible for a spouse allowance. Their limit would be $225,000 in subsidies, so they could plant even fewer acres. For example, a rice farmer who does qualify for the allowance would hit his limit at only 487 acres, according to the Congressional Research Service.

The limit is part of the farm bill the Senate continued to debate Tuesday. It was supported by many rural lawmakers from the Midwest, and the report shows that farmers in that region will not be affected by a $275,000 limit. For example, a wheat farm will cover nearly 6,000 acres before it reaches the maximum subsidy payment.

The House has already passed its version of the bill, which will set the nation's farm policy for the next five to 10 years. Its bill set a $550,000 limit on subsidies, up from $460,000 under current law.

HOUSE, SENATE VERSIONS

The Senate could bring its bill to a final vote as early as today. If the bill passes as expected, it will be sent to a conference committee in which negotiators would work out the differences between the House and the Senate versions of the bill.

Miller said the Arkansas Farm Bureau has little choice but to oppose the bill before the Senate. "What we're hoping for at this point, if it does come out of the Senate with all these onerous measures for Southern agriculture, that some of this can be worked on in the conference committee," Miller said.

Congressional staff members said it was unclear whether any Arkansans would be named to the committee. The state has two senators, Republican Tim Hutchinson and Democrat Blanche Lincoln, and two congressmen, Democrats Marion Berry and Mike Ross, on agriculture committees.

One rumor expanded upon in a Wall Street Journal editorial Tuesday is that a trade is in the offing. Three senators from the Northeast—Jim Jeffords and Pat Leahy of Vermont, and Jack Reed of Rhode Island—voted against the $275,000 limit when most observers expected them to vote for it.

Leahy and Reed are Democrats; Jeffords is the independent whose switch from the Republican Party put the Democrats in control of the Senate.

Leahy, almost sure to be named to the conference committee, could back a higher subsidy cap in exchange for Southern support for the resurrection of a dairy compact that guarantees New England dairy farmers a higher price for their products.

"Nobody will be surprised if [Republican Sen. Thad] Cochran [of Mississippi] suddenly likes the idea of a milk compact. So New Englanders will vote to subsidize rich farmers in Mississippi in return for Southerners voting to soak milk drinkers everywhere," the Journal said.

LIVESTOCK OWNERSHIP

One of the Senate farm-bill votes Tuesday kept a ban on meatpacker ownership of livestock. That's an important issue to Tyson Foods Inc. Tyson recently bought IBP to make the Springdale-based company the largest meat producer in the world.

A bid to kill the ban, backed by both Hutchinson and Lincoln, failed 53-46. IDP officials released a written statement expressing disappointment with the vote.

"IBP depends upon independent livestock operations of all sizes to supply our plants," company officials said in a press release. "While we have no interest in becoming a big player in the livestock feeding business, we believe more government regulation, such as those in the proposed ban, will produce unintended consequences and be detrimental to the livestock industry."

The bill would ban packing companies from owning or having control of cattle, hogs or sheep within two weeks of their slaughter.

The provision is wildly popular in the Midwest, where livestock producers fear they are losing their independence and market power as packing houses gain control over livestock production, much as they have already done with the growing of chickens. Poultry was exempt from the Senate legislation.

IBP officials said that without some degree of packer participation in livestock production, some plants may have to close.

The provision is not part of the House-passed farm bill and so would present another issue for the conference committee to settle.

An amendment offered Monday by Hutchinson and Lincoln will not make it to the floor. A Hutchinson spokesman said managers of the bill declined to offer an amendment that deals with double-crested cormorants.

The large, fish-eating birds are causing havoc for many fish farmers in Arkansas. The senators proposed to let farmers apply to the Agriculture Department for permits to rid their farms of the birds. Now those permits must continue to come from the Fish and Wildlife Service.

The Senate voted to add $2.4 billion in disaster assistance to compensate farmers in Montana and other states who lost crops to drought last year. The Bush administration has already said the bill costs too much, but the disaster aid was approved 69-30.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my support for final passage of the farm bill. I want to thank Chairman HARKIN for his hard work and strong leadership in getting this bill through the Senate.

Not a day goes by that a North Carolina farmer doesn't call my office and tell me that he or she can't get credit with a local bank and can't make planting decisions. And you can't really fault the banks; they are reluctant to make decisions while some here try to play partisan games with farm programs. We must get this bill passed and to the conference committee. We must send a signal to our farmers and our farm lenders that their Government will provide them a safety net.

But while I recognize the importance of moving this process along, I still have serious reservations about this measure and the effect the stringent payment limitations enacted here on this floor will have on my farmers. The Grassley-Dorgan amendment, which I did not support, could quite literally mean the end for many of North Carolina's farmers.

Those who supported this amendment did so in an effort to rid the farm subsidy system of abuses and that's an important goal. I don't think there is a person, myself included, who would argue against ensuring millionaires aren't profiting from Government payments. So I don't question the good faith of those who offered this amendment. But if this amendment remains in the final conference report, it won't rid the system of abuses. In fact, his amendment would hurt those hard-working men and women who are trying to make a decent living on family farms.

Some people like to call this amendment the "Scottie Pippen amendment" after the basketball player who reportedly received farm subsidies. I am sure we have all heard other stories about millionaires supposedly profiting off of this system. But I want to tell you a story about the real impact of this amendment.

Kenneth is a cotton farmer in North Carolina. It costs about $475 an acre to grow cotton in North Carolina, and this year the price was roughly 36 cents per pound. For Kenneth, that meant he lost about $150 an acre—and he would be the first to tell you last year was a good year.

So he got by with subsidies and his Loan Deficiency Payments. Kenneth poured almost every cent of that money back in to that farm. And if this amendment remains in the final bill, Kenneth will no longer be eligible for most of the Government's assistance programs and I suspect he wouldn't be able to survive 1 year.

And if you think he should just hang it up, then what should he do for the other families who partner with him to work that farm? What do you suggest Kenneth do for the farm hands—all with families to support—who will be out of work? And let me tell you, eastern North Carolina is struggling and employment opportunities are few and far between.

I am sure if you asked him, Kenneth would tell you he doesn't like receiving Government payments. I don't want him to have to give up his farm because we here passed an amendment with unintentional consequences.

Talk to my farmers. Talk to the dozens of people who are calling my office every hour scared to death that if this amendment remains in the final conference report, they'll be put out of business. They will tell you the reality. And not a single one of them is a rich, corporate farmer. They are the salt of the earth, hardworking men and women who want to make a decent living on their land.

None of us wants wealthy people to profit from farm subsidies. But payment limitations and gross income caps don't prevent millionaire athletes from profiting from farm subsidies; they punish families with massive debt and not a penny of cash flow, no matter what they are worth on paper.

I urge the conferees to remove this amendment. I trust the conferees will address this problem before they send their report to the full Senate.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, water laws are always an issue of great concern. However, they are of even greater concern in this day and age—especially in the West. This was so evident late last night and this morning when a deal was struck that relieves much of the West from participating in the Reid-Bingaman Water Conservation Program, but effectively sends New Mexico water down the river.

All Western Senators, whose States are in much the same situation as New Mexico, opposed the Reid-Bingaman amendment. I came to the floor today and learned that in an attempt to keep this ill-conceived program alive, all Western States with the exception of five—Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, California, and Washington—were exempted. This was an attempt to get most of the Western Senators who oppose this program from voting against it in its entirety.

I was not consulted about New Mexico being allowed to drop out like other Western States because apparently Senator Bingaman wanted to keep New Mexico in the program—a program that is vehemently opposed by the New Mexico Cattle Growers, the New Mexico Farm and Livestock Bureau, the New Mexico Wool Growers, Inc., the New Mexico Public Lands Council, the Dairy Producers of New Mexico, the Arizona and New Mexico Coalition of Counties, the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, the Elephant Butte Irrigation District, and the Carlsbad Irrigation District.

Major policy changes with regard to State water issues should be considered carefully. The Reid-Bingaman proposal has never been the subject of a hearing. My staff has been given at least six drafts of this language—a sign that this should be introduced as legislation, referred to committee, and then brought to the Senate with the benefit of committee review.

The Reid-Bingaman proposal is a State program only in appearance—especially for those Western States who are reclamation States, such as New Mexico. There are many questions left unanswered when it comes to reconciling the Reid-Bingaman program with Federal Reclamation law. For example, does the entity that holds water rights in a reclamation project mean the Secretary of the Interior, the irrigation district or the individual landowner who receives the water under contract with the irrigation district? Is this relationship altered if the land is under a management contract or is leased in accordance with reclamation law? Do all of these parties have to agree? If one landowner enters into an agreement, what happens to the repayment obligations of the irrigation district? Can the irrigation district be forced to transfer water outside district boundaries by the landowner?

Another problem with the Reid-Bingaman program is that it allows the Secretary or a State to use condemnation powers under other authority to further the purposes of this program. I see nothing in this language that prevents either the Federal Government or a State from extorting compliance and eligibility. It is evident from the comments spoken on the floor of the U.S. Senate that the clear objective of this program is to take water from farmers for urban needs by laundering water for conservation.

The Reid-Bingaman program requires that States have a program to protect in stream flows. New Mexico does not have such a program and states that do have a program may not have as comprehensive a program as the sponsors of this amendment want. The New Mexico legislature has previously defeated legislation that would create any type of water bank or similar program.

State water laws—especially in the West—are all different. Yet, the thrust of this program seems to be forcing states to conform their water laws into some Federal mold.

Additionally, the Reid-Bingaman amendment allows for the transfer of water to a “designee of the State.” That could be a third party. Presumably, one could be ordered to transfer rights to an urban area or private group or individual. It is not completely clear, but it seems that state water law, especially as it applies to junior appropriators is being preempted.

The “savings” clause in this amendment is too limited. It does not preserve any limitations under other Federal law, nor does it clearly preserve interstate compacts, treaties and the myriad of regulations that define interstate streams.

Finally, I have heard many claim that this program is strictly voluntary. It is voluntary on its face only. The language is drafted to read that anyone who participates is “willing.” That is part of what is wrong in the West. We don't have enough water and people do not want to give up what little of this resource they have. If there were willing sellers out in New Mexico, all of the groups I mentioned above would not oppose the Reid-Bingaman program.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today as we debate the farm bill to remind my colleagues of the vulnerability of American agriculture to acts of biological terrorism directed against livestock and crops, commonly known as “agroterrorism.” In December, I addressed the need for new technologies to detect biological agents that could be used in malicious attacks against our Nation's agricultural industry.

The hard-working men and women who provide our meat, poultry, and dairy products, our fruits and vegetables, and our lumber and fibers now have a renewed sense of urgency when they consider potential threats to American agriculture. Responding to diseases in plants and animals has always been a fact of life for American farmers and ranchers. Now they are confronted with the possibility of intentional acts to release biological agents that cause disease in crops and livestock.

The impact of an animal or crop disease outbreak could be swift and devastating to the U.S. economy. Although the threat to our Nation's food supply is a serious concern when discussing agroterrorism, we must remember that the primary purpose of agroterrorism is to inflict economic damage. The combined annual sales from the U.S. agricultural sector exceed $100 billion. American agriculture accounts for 13 percent of the gross domestic product and nearly 17 percent of domestic employment. The U.S. accounts for about 15 percent of all global agricultural exports.

The impact of agroterrorism is not a just concern for rural America alone. All of America benefits from a healthy agriculture sector. Therefore, all of America must share in protecting our critical agricultural resources.

Agricultural security for American farmers and protection from the intentional release of biological agents that cause disease in crops and livestock are essential features of the agroterrorism legislation I am drafting. My legislation will help American farmers and ranchers protect their investments and livelihood by providing grants or loans for security measures on their farms and ranches.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on International Security, Proliferation, and Federal Services I have held hearings on the need for enhanced coordination of the Federal agencies that respond to acts of conventional bioterrorism. The same is true for agroterrorism. By strengthening agency coordination and emergency response planning, we will also be preparing the American agricultural sector to deal with both intentional and natural crop and livestock disease outbreaks when they occur.

Many of the diseases that potentially threaten American crops and livestock have been virtually eliminated within the U.S. borders, or have never appeared on American soil. For this reason, a crucial element of agricultural security will involve the surveillance of plant and animal disease outbreaks in foreign countries. The U.S. Department of Agriculture Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, APHIS, already serves as an agricultural disease watchdog at our borders and around our farms. We must support ongoing APHIS efforts to detect and eradicate diseases at home by establishing stronger connections to the international community of agencies and organizations that monitor plant and animal disease outbreaks.

A critical component of this legislation will involve establishing a legal framework for agroterrorism, including penalties for those who perpetrate destructive acts against crops and livestock. Indeed, acts of biological terrorism are not limited to the intentional release of disease agents to harm humans, livestock or crops. Deliberate and destructive acts against agricultural and forestry research programs are also routinely perpetrated by extremists who oppose biotechnology. These acts of domestic terrorism do not involve the direct use of biological agents, but they can be just as destructive as the intentional release of disease-causing agents.

Recently, States from Washington to Maine have experienced destructive attacks on agricultural research projects. Reports of these acts of vandalism are often suppressed to avoid drawing further attention to the vulnerabilities of Federal and private agricultural research projects. Quite frequently, these attacks fail to destroy biotechnology experiments. Instead, the hard work accomplished by researchers who use traditional crop breeding methods is wiped out in these senseless and illegal activities.

In closing, I would strongly urge my colleagues to lend their attention and support to legislative efforts that will benefit all segments of the U.S. agriculture economy. American farmers, Federal, State and local emergency managers, law enforcement officers, agriculture researchers, and consumers require our help in addressing concerns about the intentional or inadvertent spread of exotic and emerging agricultural diseases and the economic security of the United States' agriculture industry.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, nothing the Senate does this session will be more important than passing a good farm bill that provides a strong safety net and some certainty for our Nation's farmers.

I believe that Chairman HARKIN has put forward a sincere effort to accomplish these goals. However, I find that much to my regret, I must vote against this legislation. There are a number of provisions in the bill that lead me to this conclusion, but chief among them is that it puts at risk our system of water rights in the West. I refuse to compromise Utah's water rights.

Under this bill, farmers would be required to sell or lease their water rights to the Federal Government if they choose to participate in a specific conservation program. This sets a terrible precedent. I strongly oppose using Federal dollars to encourage farmers to give up their water rights. The Federal Government has enormous financial resources with which it could purchase unlimited acre-feet of precious water in the West. I cannot support a large incentive aimed at stripping our farmers of the resource that makes our way of life possible in the West.

The water conservation program I am referring to would also create an unprecedented link between the Endangered Species Act and farm programs. I have no doubt that this will lead to conflicts between the goals of the act and the livelihood of our farmers. From what I have seen, when such a conflict arises the farmer always loses. Our farm families struggle enough. We shouldn't add to this burden.

From a broader perspective, I disagree with the overall approach of this farm bill. I believe it is a return to the outdated, socialistic farm policies of the past. As it is written it, 60 percent of farmers will not benefit from the programs in this bill. The bill provides many billions of dollars on subsidies for overproduced commodity crops such as wheat, cotton, and corn. These crops are important, but what about the many crops being grown by other farmers? In my opinion, the Harkin farm bill does too little for farmers of minor crops, who face just as many difficulties as the farmers of the main commodities.

Still, it is very difficult for me to vote against the farm bill today, because there are provisions in it that Utah's farmers desperately need. I was particularly pleased that the Wool Marketing Loan Deficiency Payment Program for our struggling wool growers was included. This was one of my top priorities. Also important, was the passage of the Baucus amendment, which I supported, that would give needed emergency financial assistance to livestock producers and apple growers who have suffered losses due to drought conditions. Finally, I was able to add a provision that would begin the process of creating a free market for state inspected meat products. Of course, I will fight to keep these provisions in the bill as it goes through the conference committee.

These and other aspects of the farm bill are worthy of my support. However, I do not believe we should benefit farmers on one hand, and threaten their livelihoods and water rights on the other. That is not what a Farm Bill should do, and for that reason I oppose it.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise to make a few remarks concerning my amendment No. 2852 to the farm bill, S. 1731. As chairman of the Oceans, Atmosphere and Fisheries Subcommittee I am pleased to be joined by my ranking member, Senator SNOWE, in offering this amendment. In addition, I am pleased to be joined by Senators KENNEDY and COLLINS, two other New England Senators, who know all too well the problems that our fishermen face in New England.

This amendment will permanently revoke Northeast multi-species fishing permits using a "reverse auction," a measure that has been developed to ensure we remove the maximum amount of capacity from the fishery at the lowest possible price to the taxpayers. We have more than 1,600 permits in New England. Approximately two-thirds of these permits allow fishermen to fish for only 88 days each year. The remaining fishermen can fish, on average, 130 days a year based on historical days-at-sea usage. As a result of a similar provision we secured in July of 2000, the National Marine Fisheries Service has begun the process of reducing latent capacity in this fishery, but recent events have indicated the need to expand the program further.

While the New England stocks are slowly recovering after years of substantial restrictions, additional limits are coming. The most recent scientific advice suggests that we need to cut days-at-sea by 65 percent in order to meet our 10-year rebuilding targets for Gulf of Maine cod. Basically, two-thirds of New England fishermen could be down to 31 days a year of fishing, from the 88 days they are allotted today. Obviously working families would be severely affected by such cuts. We also desperately need to reduce capacity so that the size of the fishery is in proportion to the available resource. The current latent permit capacity reduction program will help tremendously, but I am convinced a second round is needed to build a sustainable fishery.

To add pressure to this already difficult situation, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia will shortly be issuing its determination on additional management measures that must be taken in this fishery to meet Federal legal requirements as the result of a lawsuit filed by a number of conservation groups against the National Marine Fisheries Service. The plaintiffs have already prevailed in that case, in which the court found unequivocally that the Federal Government, which has the authority to approve or disapprove plans developed by the New England Fishery Management Council, had not ensured that these plans included rebuilding measures required under the management plan nor measures to limit the bycatch of fish. In this fishery, bycatch largely results from vessel-specific mortality controls called "trip limits." I must agree, as does every fisherman I know, the idea of throwing fish overboard in order to meet management goals designed to increase fish abundance is both counterintuitive and wasteful. In order to fix the problem we need to increase the trip limits for our fishermen so they no longer have to waste good fish in order to make a day's pay. However, we cannot increase these trip limits until we have reduced the number of permits available for this fishery.

This is unfortunately a long-term problem for many traditional fishing communities in New England. This money will allow some fishermen to retire with dignity, others no doubt will seek job retraining and enter another profession. I am grateful to the managers of this bill, Senators HARKIN and LUGAR, for agreeing to a voice vote on this amendment. I am confident that this money will allow us to build both sustainable fisheries and sustainable fishing communities in New England in the years to come.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for their cooperation and for working through this bill. It has taken a good while. But I believe, all in all, we have come out with a well-balanced bill. It is a comprehensive bill, and it does reflect a great deal of bipartisan cooperation.

I especially commend and thank my ranking member, Senator LUGAR, the former chairman of this committee, for all of his help and his support, his guidance, his suggestions, his very close working relationship to get this bill through. We had an excellent working relationship in the committee. We did that expeditiously.

I knew we were going to have to have votes on the floor. As it turned out, we did have quite a few on different parts of the bill. But I believe, all in all, the relationship has been a great relationship. I thank Senator LUGAR and his staff for that.

I also thank Senator REID for all of his help in pulling people together and getting the votes structured and making sure that we had an orderly process on the floor.

I thank our majority leader, Senator DASCHLE, also a member of the Agriculture Committee, for all of his guidance and leadership in bringing this bill to its final conclusion.

I thank Senator LOTT on the other side for working with us. There were numerous times when I went to Senator LOTT, and we discussed what we were going to do. I can say, without any hesitation, at no time was he less than most helpful in moving this process along. So I thank Senator LOTT for that.

We have had some disagreements, of course. That is the crucible of democracy that we have. We have had our votes. But what may not have been fully reflected on the floor is the extraordinary degree, I believe, of bipartisan cooperation and collaboration we have had throughout the bill.

As I mentioned a number of times, all titles that we reported out of the Committee were reported on bipartisan votes. We have a demonstrated bipartisan majority for this bill on the Senate floor.

So, as I say, the bill is comprehensive. It is balanced. It is the economic recovery vehicle and jobs bill for rural America. We have met our responsibilities to farm families, rural communities, consumers, and the environment. We have done so while fully complying with our budget limitations.

I believe the highlights of the bill are the following:

First, we restore and rebuild the farm income safety net that has been missing for the last 6 years.

Second, we have doubled our commitment to conservation. There are more resources devoted to conservation in this bill than any farm bill that has ever come to the Senate. We are proud of that. We have a new conservation program—the Conservation Security Program—that will move us in a new direction in this country, that will expand conservation to every part of America. Whether it is a corn or soybean field in Iowa, an orchard in Michigan, a citrus orchard in Florida, a vegetable farm in New Jersey, or an almond farm in California, this Conservation Security Program is going to promote conservation throughout the country.

Third, on rural development, we include substantial new funding for a variety of rural community development activities. We also create and fund new rural development initiatives, including new programs for rural equity capital investments in rural America. Senator LUGAR and his staff, and my staff, have worked closely together to develop this consensus rural development title. I believe it is going to provide for crucial new investment in rural America.

Fourth, we have a new title in the farm bill that has never been in any farm bill, a renewable energy title, with $550 million mandatory spending over 5 years for things such as ethanol and soy diesel, and for biomass, wind energy, and hydrogen energy. If nothing else, we learned from September 11, I think, that we have to address our dependence on foreign oil. This bill will start to do that by developing the renewable energy resources in our country.

Fifth, nutrition. In our bill we now over twice what the administration proposed. The administration proposed $4.2 billion in increased nutrition spending over the next 10 years. We have $8.9 billion in this bill. So we can be proud of the fact that we make this great effort to make sure no one goes to bed hungry in America, to make sure we have an adequate system of nutrition assistance through food stamps, emergency food assistance and commodity distribution, in addition to school breakfast and school lunch and other programs.

Lastly, on credit, agricultural trade, agricultural research—all of these titles make substantial improvements to what we have done in the past.

So, in conclusion, I thank Senator LUGAR. I thank all of the staff. I thank the staff on our side. I want to thank all of them by name: Vershawn Perkins, Frank Newkirk, and Bob Sturm. I especially thank Bob because all of the time we were out of our office in the Hart Building, we crowded into his space. I really thank Bob Sturm for all of his help in working out the situation of taking care of our staff.

I thank Terri Roney, Lloyd Ritter, Charlie Rawls, Erin Peterson, Doug O'Brien, Stephanie Mercier, Mary Langowski, Jay Klug, Susan Keith, Eric Juzenas, Sara Hopper, Amy Fredregill, Alison Fox, Kevin Brown, Seth Boffeli, Karil Bialostosky, Rich Bender, and, of course, our outstanding staff director, Mark Halverson.

I cannot say enough good things about Mark and all of the long hours he has put in. I do not know if he has slept in the last 4 months. I do not know if he has or not, but I think he deserves a break now. He has performed superlatively in, guiding, directing, and working with our staffs.

On the other side I will not mention all of the minority staff. I know Senator LUGAR already did. But I do want to mention Keith Luse, the minority staff director, formerly the majority staff director. Again, I thank Keith Luse for all of his wonderful working relationships with me personally, with Mark Halverson, Charlie Rawls, and all the people on our staff. It has just been outstanding. I just cannot thank you enough for all the kindness and generosity you have given to me and to our staff throughout this process.

So, Mr. President, this is a bill that we can go to conference with that we can be proud of. It had strong bipartisan support as we came out of committee. We worked our problems out on the floor, and I think we have a bill that will revitalize and renew rural America.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on final passage of H.R. 2646 occur at 12:30 p.m. today with rule XII, paragraph 4, waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, we are moving to final passage of the farm bill shortly. I would like to make a couple of comments prior to the time we have the vote.

First, I commend our chairman for the extraordinary job he has done. He has been remarkable over a long period of time. His leadership and his cooperation and the tremendous effort he has put forth are to be commended.

Again, one of the most able ranking members we have in the Senate is the ranking member of the Senate Agriculture Committee, Senator LUGAR. I admire him immensely for his intellect and for his ability to work with people on all sides and all philosophies. Once again, he demonstrated his ability, his leadership, and the kind of person he is each and every day he came to the floor. I commend him as well.

Let me also commend, as Senator HARKIN and Senator LUGAR did, the staff. We are very dependent upon our staff on all pieces of legislation; in particular, on the complexities of agricultural policy. I must say for the record and emphatically remind my colleagues of the work that they do, especially the staff I am fortunate to have in my office. I am very grateful to them for their work, for their persistence, for their ability to come up with compromises oftentimes when we really had not thought there was one. I thank them publicly and thank them especially today as we bring this debate to a close.

This has been the longest debate on a farm bill in over 30 years. Sometimes it has felt that way. Thanks to the work done in the committee and on the floor, we now have a farm bill and a farm policy that is improved in many ways, providing certainty for producers and increased commitment to conservation, expanded nutrition, provisions making farmers and ranchers more competitive, and needed assistance for rural development.

I know we have had disagreements over the time period in which we needed to get this farm bill moving. In the end, though, this is a good bill. It will do a lot for rural America that is hurting right now, a rural America that is hurting in large part due to the failure of our current farm policy. Now we need to take the final step and pass it.

Agriculture and the farm economy provide roughly $1.3 trillion to our economy and account for 24 million jobs. Rural America comprises 80 percent of our Nation's landmass and 20 percent of our population.

Our Nation literally cannot afford to leave rural America behind. Yet rural America is hurting as never before. Farmers have already seen prices drop every single year since the current farm bill was approved. They are getting roughly half the prices they were receiving in 1996. The record price drops farmers have seen in recent months and the warnings from USDA that farm income could drop another 20 percent add a level of urgency to this debate.

A recent study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that farmers and ranchers are expected to lose 238,000 jobs over the next 10 years. That is more than any sector of the U.S. economy. That is nearly the population of St. Louis or Pittsburgh or Minneapolis.

We just cannot let that happen. Unless we pass this bill now and get a new law soon, USDA will not be able to implement it for this crop year. Instead, we would leave farm families to rely on a law so flawed that we have needed to grant emergency assistance for each of the last 4 years. Make no mistake, passage of this bill is essential for the survival of rural America.

This fall, I was in my State and met a ranch couple named Hight. When disaster struck on September 11, Don and Adeline Hight of Murdo sold 100 calves and donated the proceeds, about $40,000, to help victims of the attack.

The manager of the local livestock association called their donation "an act of true Americanism."

Rural families have always sacrificed for our country. They have been facing a disaster now for years. With this bill, we have a chance to provide certainty to producers, fix our failed farm safety net, and help address the challenges we face in rural America.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill so we can move immediately to conference with the House and then present the bill to the President for his signature as well.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I understand the distinguished Senator from Maine would like to address us. I invite her to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I am very pleased that legislation I authored has been included in the final version of the farm bill. The legislation, known as the Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative Act, would help to combat the threat of suburban sprawl which has already consumed tens of thousands of acres of forest land in the southern part of my home State.

I very much appreciate the assistance of Senator LUGAR and Senator HARKIN, as well as Senators JACK REED and MIKE CRAPO, who have worked with me to put together this initiative.

Sprawl occurs because the economic value of forest or farmland cannot compete with the value of developed land. In my home State, the problem is particularly acute in southern Maine where over a 100-percent increase in urbanized land over the past two decades has resulted in Greater Portland being labeled as the "sprawl capital of the Northeast."

I am alarmed by the amount of working forest land and open space that has given way to strip malls and cul-de-sacs. Our State is trying hard to respond to this challenge. The people of Maine have approved a bond issue to preserve land through the Land for Maine's Future board, and they continue to use scarce local funds and contribute their time and money to preserve special lands and to support our State's 88 land trusts.

Of course, the problem of sprawl is not limited just to Maine or to the Northeast. Rapid, unmanageable growth affects many States and poses a significant threat to forest land across the United States.

The effects of sprawl were highlighted by a study conducted by the U.S. Forest Service last year. It examined forests in 13 southern States and found that 12 million acres of southern forest land could be lost to sprawl by the year 2020.

In Maine and elsewhere, communities are working hard to come up with new strategies to protect our working forests and to safeguard our communities from the effects of sprawl. I think it is time for the Federal Government to lend a hand to these efforts.

My legislation, which was drafted with the advice of landowners, conservation groups, and forestry experts, would establish a $50 million grant program within the Forest Service to support locally driven projects that preserve working forests. State and local governments as well as nonprofit organizations could compete for funds to purchase land or conservation easements to keep forest lands in their traditional uses.

The $50 million that would be authorized by my legislation would help achieve a number of stewardship objectives. First, it would help prevent forest fragmentation and preserve working forests, helping to maintain the supply of timber that fuels Maine's most significant industries. Second, the resources made available would be a valuable tool for communities that are struggling to properly manage growth and prevent sprawl. Currently, if a community were to turn to the Federal Government for assistance, none would be found.

My bill will change that by making the Federal Government an active partner in preserving forest land and managing sprawl, while leaving decisionmaking to States and communities.

Mr. President, by enacting this legislation, Congress will provide a much needed boost to local conservation initiatives and will help sustain the vitality of our natural-resource-based communities.

I ask unanimous consent that letters of endorsement from the Maine Nature Conservancy, the Maine Audubon Society, and the National Association of State Foresters be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE FORESTERS,

Washington, DC, December 5, 2002.

Hon. SUSAN M. COLLINS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: On behalf of the National Association of State Foresters, I would like to thank you for your efforts to reduce the impacts of urban and suburban sprawl on our nation's forest lands. Your proposed amendment, the Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative, to Chairman Harkin's Farm Bill (S. 1731) demonstrates your commitment to minimizing conversion of suburban forest lands to non forest uses.

We support the overall concepts of the legislation. NASF does not currently have a position on whether easements or title to land purchased with federal funds should be expanded from state to non-profit entities. However, maintaining working forested lands in suburban environments is consistent with NASF's goals.

As the Southern Forest Resource Assessment recently released by the U.S. Forest Service clearly demonstrates, one of the major threats to forest land is urban sprawl.

The provisions in the Forestry Title of S. 1731 provide important tools to enable landowners to keep their land in trees and sustain the public benefits their forests provide. Your amendment is another tool to address this critical concern.

Thank you for your commitment to sustainable forest management and to reducing suburban sprawl.

Sincerely,

LARRY A. KOTCHMAN,
President.

MAINE AUDUBON SOCIETY,
Falmouth, ME, November 2, 2001.

Senator SUSAN COLLINS,
*Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: We are pleased to be able to offer our support of your proposed Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative Act of 2001, which would expand opportunities for conserving forestland under the Cooperative Forestry Assistance program. This Act offers a new opportunity to protect some of the remaining actively managed forestlands that provide habitat for many of our native species, and encourages those lands to be managed sustainably, with input and use from the local community. This Act comes at a time when pressure to develop small woodlands in southern Maine is ever increasing, interest in conserving those woodlands is also increasing, but funds for forest conservation are still limited.

Southern and Coastal Maine has the highest level of woody plant and wildlife species diversity in the state. Unfortunately, this area is one of the most desirable for development and increasing development pressures are creating a checkerboard of non-contiguous habitat for wildlife. Although the overall population is relatively stable in southern Maine, residents of larger towns and cities are moving to surrounding rural communities, with residential development, both permanent and seasonal homes, spreading into large expanses of formerly agricultural and forested open space.

In its final report dated January 1996, the Maine Environmental Priorities Project (MEPP) concluded that "patterns of development throughout southern and coastal Maine and in riparian zones statewide seriously threatened some species and some rare and critical habitats as well as the overall productivity of Maine's terrestrial ecosystems." Protecting forest land throughout southern Maine wildlife.

During the past two years Maine Audubon, in concert with several other state and federal agencies and nonprofit conservation organizations, has been conducting outreach to municipalities and land trusts to encourage the conservation of forestland, including large blocks of undeveloped and unfragmented forestland that provide habitat for a wide variety of Maine's native plants and animals. We are providing local citizens with information about the high value habitats in their community, and many of those we have spoken with are interested in acting to conserve forest land but have few choices for funding land protection. If the bill passes, we will be able to suggest a new source of funds for their hard work.

Thank you for taking the initiative to help conserve Maine's forest landscape and all the public benefits they provide amidst the threat of sprawl. We look forward to working with you on passage of the bill and on the subsequent rule-making which will speak out just have the bill would be implemented.

Sincerely,

SALLY STOCKWELL,
Director of Conservation.

THE TRUST FOR PUBLIC LAND,
Portland, ME, November 2, 2001.

Hon. SUSAN M. COLLINS,
*U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: On behalf of the Trust for Public Land, I am pleased to express our support for the Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative Act of 2001. This proposal will provide a much-needed focus on working forests that provide important resources in and around Maine's towns and cities that are facing significant development pressures. We applaud your foresight in addressing this issue.

As the Trust for Public Land pursues its mission of protecting land for people in Maine, we are acutely aware of the difficult choices many landowners face as land values rise and development pressures intensify. In addition, the forest lands that lie in the path of development are incredibly important to local residents for a variety of resources, including recreation, wildlife habitat, water quality and open space. Your legislation will allow these critical lands to remain intact as community assets by focusing federal assistance to landowners in areas affected by suburban sprawl. This is a much-needed addition to the resource conservation efforts that states, localities and non-governmental partners are already undertaking and will provide the extra funding leverage needed to successfully meet the challenges of the future.

Our work with willing sellers across the state leads us to believe that the Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative Act of 2001 will make a difference in many Maine communities and will leave them in good shape for future generations. Maine's forest resources are absolutely critical to the quality of life that attracts residents and visitors alike, and proposals like this one will ensure that we address the conservation of those resources wisely.

Thank you for your leadership on this and many other issues affecting Maine. We look forward to working with you.

Sincerely,

JENNIFER MELVILLE,
Maine Field Office.

THE NATURE CONSERVANCY,
Brunswick, ME, November 2, 2001.

Hon. SUSAN COLLINS,
*U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: On behalf of the Trustees and 13,000 members of The Nature Conservancy of Maine, I am writing to you in support of your recently filed Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative Act of 2001.

From the St. John project in Northern Maine to the Machias River downeast to Mt. Agamenticus in the South, the Nature Conservancy is working in partnership with local communities, the state, and federal governments to protect the best remaining natural place in our state. As population continues to increase in southern Maine, it is becoming increasingly clear that growth and development could overtake and destroy some of southern Maine's most outstanding forests and natural areas. Your legislation could play an important role in forever protecting these places. Two key sites, in particular, come to mind as projects that could benefit from Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative funds:

Leavitt Plantation Project, Parsonsfield: Encompassing 8,600 contiguous acres, Leavitt Plantation represents the largest remaining block of forestland in one ownership south of Sebago Lake. Threatened by sprawl and development, this forest includes identified deer wintering and waterfowl/wading bird habitat, and populations of seventeen rare plants. The Leavitt Plantation Forest was to be cut up into as many as 13 parcels early last year. The land's fate as wildlife habitat, hunting and fishing grounds, hiking and snowmobiling destination, and as an economic resource for the region hung in the balance. Today, thanks to the cooperative approach of a forest investment company, a conservation group, the State, a small Maine town, area citizens and more, this land is slated to be protected forever. But additional funds are needed to complete the conservation of this project.

Mt. Agamenticus, York, South Berwick, Elliot, Wells, Ogunquit: Mt. Agamenticus, located in rapidly developing York County, is the largest block of unfragmented, undeveloped land near the coast between Baltimore and Portland. This vast area is rich in native plants and wildlife, and home to important and rare species. The forest also provides an economic boost to the region. Mt. Agamenticus is also one of the largest remaining recreational open spaces in southern coastal Maine, the area is popular with birders, hikers, bikers, and hunters, and a "Mecca" for mountain biking in New England and the area consistently draws visitors from all over the country to experience the mountain. In this rapidly growing area of southern Maine, large, vast areas of open space are becoming very scarce. The remaining forested lands of Mt. Agamenticus area are threatened by sprawl and development. However, if funded, a plan is in place to protect this area for the benefit of the citizens of Maine and future generations.

The Nature Conservancy supports your efforts to bring additional federal funds to projects like these in Southern Maine and throughout the state. Conservation of these great places requires a commitment from the private sector as well as from government, we appreciate your willingness to provide leadership on such a vital issue to the people of Maine.

Sincerely,

KENT WOMMACK,
Executive Director/Vice President.

FRIENDS OF ACADIA,
Bar Harbor, ME, October 16, 2001.

Hon. SUSAN M. COLLINS,
*U.S. Senator, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SUSAN: Friends of Acadia offers its full support for the anti-sprawl bill you have initiated. It will have utility across Maine.

Your proposal is of special interest in our region. It offers a real hope of dealing with the sprawl that is consuming so much of the Route 3 gateway landscape on the mainland just above Mount Desert Island and Acadia National Park.

Please let me know how we can help you advance this important legislation.

Thank you for your leadership.

Yours sincerely,

W. KENT OLSON,
President.

MAINE COAST HERITAGE TRUST,
Topsham ME, October 26, 2001.

Re Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative Act of 2001.

Senator SUSAN M. COLLINS,
*U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: It is with great enthusiasm that I write to express Maine Coast Heritage Trust's support for your far-sighted Suburban and Community Forestry and Open Space Initiative.

Maine's rural and suburban lands are changing fast as more people move into Maine or move out of Maine's urban areas and into the rural countryside. This pattern of development is altering the character of our state by diminishing both its traditional villages and surrounding open farms and forests. It also has a significant impact on local and state budgets as expensive new schools and roads are built to service these new neighborhoods.

Your initiative would provide important federal funds to be matched by state and private dollars. As you know, Maine voters showed their strong support for conserving open land when they overwhelmingly endorsed the $50 million Land for Maine's Future bond in 1999. Furthermore, the success of Maine's 88 land trusts (perhaps the highest number of trusts per capita in the nation) is a testament to Mainers' commitment to maintaining the rural character of the state. Your proposal would help leverage hard-won public and private dollars.

I was particularly pleased to learn that your proposal would complement the Forest Legacy Program. Forest Legacy has been a critically important source of federal funds for conserving large tracts of Maine's northwoods. Its continuation is vital.

Thank you ever so much for your creative leadership and hard work on behalf of land conservation efforts in Maine and across America.

Sincerely,

JAMES J. ESPY,
President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business until 2:30 p.m. today, with 60 minutes under the control of Senator BYRD and the remaining time controlled equally between Senators BROWNBACK and TORRICELLI or their designees, and that at 2:30 p.m. today the Senate begin consideration of Calendar No. 239, S. 565, the election reform bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Jersey.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, the Congress may now be closer to comprehensive campaign finance reform than at any time in 30 years. It holds the promise of restoring public confidence by reducing the amount of money flowing into American politics while simultaneously reducing the costs of campaigns themselves. It gives a fair chance to challengers, an opportunity for people to bring different ideas and a broader national debate because we end the dominance of special interests money.

This can be an extraordinary, even historic week in the life of the Congress. But the well-crafted balance reached in the Senate is now in jeopardy. Campaign finance reform has meant a change in various institutions within our political culture. One of those institutions is resisting the change. I am speaking of the network broadcast industry. Just as political candidates would be challenged under the law to raise less money under stricter limits, and the political parties would operate under different rules, and the American people would operate under more restrictions to assure that money did not dominate the process, the broadcast industry, operating under Federal license in the use of the public airways, would be challenged to reduce the costs of advertising for Federal campaigns.

The Congress could have insisted on free air time. We could have insisted that time be made available for public debate as in many of the great democracies of Western Europe. Our request was much more modest. Indeed, our request was to put into law that which we believe we had done 30 years ago anyway. In 1971, Congress required that the networks provide advertising rates at the lowest unit rate. Through evasion, by finding loopholes in the law, the television networks have evaded their responsibility under the law.

Senators CORZINE, DURBIN, ENZI, and many of my colleagues offered an amendment on the floor of the Senate, adopted 69 to 31, on a bipartisan basis, requiring once again that the networks provide television advertising at the lowest unit rate in the period immediately before a primary and general election. We did this because a 1990 audit by the FCC found that 80 percent of network television affiliates were failing to make time available as required by law at the lowest unit rate, meaning that a typical candidate ad sold for 65 percent more than what should have been charged—65 percent higher costs than should have been required had the law been followed.

If in this debate on campaign finance reform we lower the amount of money raised without lowering the costs of the campaigns themselves, we will have achieved very little. The best funded incumbents will always find the resources to advertise. The question is, What about those candidates for Federal office who do not represent popular ideas or powerful interests? And what of the challengers who would challenge the status quo, represent new ideas or sometimes unpopular ideas? They will never have the resources to enter into the national political debate.

The goal of campaign finance reform is not to lessen the national debate. It is not to bring less political discussion to the country. It is to have a more vibrant debate, of more varied ideas, less represented by the requirement of political fundraising.

If, indeed, the national broadcasters, represented by millions of dollars' worth of lobbying—and, ironically, the use of their own political contributions—succeed in removing this provision from campaign finance reform, not only have we achieved very little but we add a new distortion to the national political debate.

In the New York metropolitan area, it is not uncommon to charge $30,000, $40,000, and $50,000 for a 30-second ad. How will these ads be purchased? This applies in Chicago or Los Angeles or Miami or Boston. We have eliminated soft money; we are adding restrictions to reduce the amount of money. The simple truth is, most candidates will not be able to afford them at all.

The costs have not stopped rising. Since 1996, the cost of political advertising in some jurisdictions has increased another 30 percent, and it will keep rising as candidates compete not with each other for time but with General Motors or Ford or General Foods or Procter & Gamble.

What have we done to our political system when candidates have to raise money in obscene amounts, from hundreds of thousands of Americans, to buy the public air time on federally licensed stations, air time that belongs to the American people, in order to communicate in the middle of a Federal campaign public policy issues? There is no other Western democracy that has such a system because no one else would tolerate it—and neither should we.

How is it that American politics has deteriorated into this endless spiral of campaign finance, where candidates should be spending their time thinking of new ideas, challenging each other for the Nation's future, where Members of Congress should spend their time legislating, spend time with the American people who have problems—not just the American people who have money?

How did we get here? How did it happen? It is not by chance. In the average Senate campaign, 85 percent of the money raised is going to the television networks. Every year, it is a larger percentage; every year, a higher bill. Yet the broadcasters are arguing that this is unconstitutional—we are taking their property.

For 30 years there has been a requirement that they make the lowest unit rate available. If it was constitutional then, it is constitutional now. They just evaded the law. Every one of them, when they got a Federal license to broadcast, agreed to comply with Federal law and to serve a public purpose. This is no taking. They still will be able to charge exorbitant fees, just the same fees they are charging other corporate customers at different times of the year. We have a right to do it. There is a precedent to do it. And it is fair to put these restrictions on broadcasters.

Second, they say this will lead to perpetual campaigns, reducing the cost of advertising so there is nothing but campaigns, year to year, year after year, all year. The legislation passed by the Senate only makes the lowest unit rate available 45 days before a primary and 60 days before a general election. There are no perpetual campaigns. The time limits are actually quite strict.

Then the broadcasters argue that this is such an onerous burden that they can financially not survive, they can't deal with the cost of making the lowest unit rate available. They are charging political candidates $1 billion to advertise. It is estimated that this will be a reduction of $250 million. I believe the networks, still collecting three-quarters of a billion dollars in political advertising, are doing quite well by this system.

Indeed, the reduction from making the lowest unit rate available would equal less than 1 percent of the $41 billion in ad revenue. If every other segment of our society can deal with change in order to restore integrity in this political process—the political parties forego soft money, Federal candidates eliminate soft money, the American people live with these restrictions, American business accepts these restrictions—can the broadcasters themselves under Federal license, challenged to use the airwaves for the public good, not accept a 1-percent reduction in ad revenue?

It is an extraordinary irony that the media, having rightfully challenged the Congress to change the political fundraising system, having put so much scrutiny on campaign fundraising, has played a vital role in bringing us to this historic moment. But what an irony. While the network anchors rail against the campaign finance system, challenging the Congress to change it, their corporate executives pay millions of dollars in lobbying fees, as we speak, to lobbyists who line the Halls of the House of Representatives, and PAC directors who use the leverage of their political contributions to attempt to intimidate the Congress into eliminating them from this process of change.

I hope this provision of campaign finance reform remains intact. But, if it fails, this Senate will face a difficult moment: The specter of a new campaign finance system in which the amount of money raised will be dramatically reduced, but the cost of the campaigns themselves will continue to dramatically rise.

I recognize that most Members of this Senate can adjust to the new system. Powerful incumbents will find the means to raise the money. But what of the young man or woman who has different ideas, one who represents no powerful interests, who may not live in a State of great wealth or come from a wealthy family? They, too, would like to serve in the Senate. They, too, have contributions to make to our political system. They, too, believe in our country. There is a chance that by the reforms that we passed they will be silenced; for who among them, in raising campaigns funded only by hard money, with access to no other resources, can pay their share of the $1 billion in advertising costs that are the modern equivalent of a gold soap box that the Founding Fathers would have had as a restriction to the exercise of free speech?

What free speech is there, what kind of open political system do we have, if the only means of running for public office is purchasing the gold soap box of our time, a $1 billion price of entry to the network television affiliates? Indeed, that is no free speech at all. That is not an open, competitive political process.

So the next great hurdle of campaign finance reform is now. Do we hold firm, those 69 of us on a bipartisan basis who insisted that as fundraising is controlled, so, too, must be the costs?

I ask my colleagues to remain committed, not for themselves or their interests but for those who would follow us and for those who believe this political system is open and fair to all those who wish to serve their country in the years to come.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia.

WAR ON TERRORISM

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in his State of the Union address on January 29, President Bush reminded the nation, at great length and in great detail, that we are a nation at war, and that we will stop at nothing to rid the world of terrorism.

His words were stirring, his message sweeping.

The war on terror, he said, has only begun:

Tens of thousands of trained terrorists are still at large. These enemies view the entire world as a battlefield, and we must pursue them wherever they are.

Strong words—strong words indeed.

The President outlined an ambitious agenda for the war against terrorism: first, to shut down terrorist camps, disrupt terrorist plans, and bring terrorists to justice. Second, to prevent terrorists and regimes that seek chemical, biological or nuclear weapons from threatening the United States or the world. The President singled out three such regimes—Iran, Iraq, and North Korea—describing them as an “axis of evil” that is posing a grave and growing danger to the world.

The President's speech laid out a sweeping plan for the U.S. response to global terrorism. It is a manifesto that he has stated many times to many different audiences in the days following that address. At Eglin Air Force Base in Florida last week—Feb. 4—the President told cheering troops that “We’re absolutely resolved to find terrorists where they hide and to root them out one by one. . . . History has called us into action, and we will not stop until the threat of global terrorism has been destroyed.” Strong words—strong words, indeed.

Less there be any doubt as to where I stand, I have been a hawk on defense issues for all of my 50 years in Congress.

When I came to Congress 50 years ago this year, I was strongly opposed to the entry of Red China into the United Nations. I supported the war in Vietnam and the budgetary requests that President Johnson made. I supported down to the last penny his budgetary requests for defense.

When I came to this body 44 years ago, I went on the Appropriations Committee at the beginning of my service in this body, and I have been on the Appropriations Committee 44 years this year.

I spoke highly of President Bush last Friday in my reference to his speech at the National Prayer Breakfast. His expressions concerning faith I complimented on the floor.

But when it comes to national defense, let nobody have any doubts as to where I stand. I was supporting national defense and appropriations for national defense in Congress when our President, Mr. Bush, was in knee pants. On two committees, I served with the late Senator Richard Russell of Georgia. He was chairman of the Armed Services Committee. He was chairman of the Appropriations Committee. He held both positions—not at the same time but at different times when I was on his committees. I was on the Appropriations Committee and I was on the Armed Services Committee. I supported Senator Stennis of Mississippi, who was one of the giants of the Senate. So I need no one to stand beside me and bear witness to my support for national defense.

During the war in Vietnam, I was majority whip in the Senate during part of the war. I was also secretary of the Democratic Conference during part of that war. There was pretty much solid, undivided support almost at first. Then there developed a divisiveness among Senators on the war in Vietnam.

The late Senator Mike Mansfield was majority leader of the Senate. I became his assistant in 1967 as secretary of the Democratic Conference. I sat on this floor practically every hour of every day and was always at Mike Mansfield’s elbow. Then I became the whip. I carried out his wishes on this floor and watched the floor, worked the floor, learned the rules, and Mr. Mansfield pretty much left the floor work to me as his whip.

There came a time in that war when the Vietcong were striking at American soldiers from across the Cambodian and South Vietnamese border. I offered an amendment during a debate in which the late Senator Church, the late Senator Cooper on the other side of the aisle, and others were joined on the matter. I offered an amendment expressing support for the President, who at that time was Richard Nixon, in his efforts to bomb the Vietcong who were, as I say, working from enclaves in Cambodia across the border from South Vietnam.

The Vietcong would go across the border and kill American soldiers. I offered an amendment during that debate, in essence, saying that the President of the United States has a duty to do whatever it takes to protect American boys, who perhaps didn’t ask to go to a foreign battlefield. But they were sent into battle and a President has a responsibility to do whatever it takes to protect those men from attack. So I offered that amendment and it was defeated. I lost on the amendment.

I need no one to attest to my credentials when it comes to supporting defense, particularly from an appropriations standpoint—my having been on that committee now for 44 years, as I say, this year.

I have been a hawk on defense issues for all of my 50 years in Congress.

I fully support the President’s resolve to strike back at the terrorists who caused such devastation, destruction, and carnage here in our country on September 11, 5 months and 2 days ago today. But I also understand, having lived through several wars and studied the history of many more, that war cannot be fought or won by rhetoric, that true victory is tangible victory, that words do have meaning, that words do have consequences, and that a rhetorical declaration of global war may well precipitate real global conflict, involving horrific loss of life.

It is crucial that we all realize that the war on terrorism is not just a war of hot words. This war, like any war, must have tangible and achievable goals and objectives. There must be benchmarks by which to measure progress in attaining those objectives. And the American people must clearly understand what sacrifices must be made and what constitutes victory. These essential elements must be more clearly defined than they have been thus far. We cannot be left to guess as to what is meant.

I had the opportunity to discuss the war on terror with Defense Secretary Rumsfeld a few days ago when he appeared before the Senate Armed Services Committee. I think it was on February 5. The Secretary appeared before the Committee to explain and defend the President’s $379 billion defense budget request for Fiscal Year 2003.

Socrates would say, “Define your Terms.” I asked Secretary Rumsfeld to define the parameters of our war on terrorism. What are our goals? What are our objectives? What are the standards by which we should measure success in this war? How will we know when we do achieve victory?

Much has been said about bringing terrorists to justice. We have bombed the Afghanistan mountains into rubble. We have struck deeply at the caves. We have already spent $7 billion in Afghanistan. Where is Osama bin Laden? How will we know when we do achieve victory?

Secretary Rumsfeld is an outstanding Secretary of Defense. I have seen a good many Secretaries of Defense in my time here, and I have a great respect for Secretary Rumsfeld. He has been around a long time, too. I have watched and listened to many of Secretary Rumsfeld’s briefings on the war in Afghanistan, and he has impressed me. He is candid, straightforward, and to the point. If he cannot answer a question, generally he says he cannot answer the question.

Unfortunately, Secretary Rumsfeld could not answer my questions, although he certainly was candid. I think he basically told the committee that it is difficult to say how we will know when we have won the war on terrorism.

Although he has said the war on terror has just begun, President Bush has also said on numerous occasions that we are winning the war in Afghanistan. Perhaps it was to our good fortune that there was, one might say, a ready-made military force on the ground there opposing the Taliban.

The President is correct, if winning means routing the Taliban from the Government of Afghanistan. But if winning this war means destroying the al-Qaida terrorist network, or if winning means bringing to justice Osama bin Laden, and Mullah Omar, and the rest of the al-Qaida leadership, then we may have jumped the gun in such expressions. By those standards—standards the President himself has set—we still have a way to go in Afghanistan. In fact, many of the former Taliban forces are still in that country. They have simply switched sides for now. Should circumstances change, they may very well switch back again. Those are the realities of Afghanistan.

The President said in his State of the Union Address: “I will not wait on events, while dangers gather. I will not stand by, as peril draws closer and closer. The United States of America will not permit the world’s most dangerous regimes to threaten us with the world’s most destructive weapons.”

Mr. President, facts matter. Standards matter. Words matter. Words have consequences. When the President described Iran, Iraq, and North Korea as an “axis of evil,” and pledged that the United States will not permit those nations to threaten the world with weapons of mass destruction his florid words were cause for alarm to many of our allies. What did the President mean? Was he signaling a plan to attack one or more of these three nations?

I asked Secretary Powell that question during his appearance yesterday before the committee. Secretary Powell answered: There is no plan.

He was very careful in the way he responded to my questions. He said: There is no plan. There is no such recommendation on the President's desk today.

I will put the entire transcript of Secretary Powell's responses, and my questions, in the RECORD at the close of my remarks. But what did the President mean? Was he signaling a plan to attack one or more of these three nations?

Secretary Powell, as I said, was very careful in his responses. Secretary Powell has been around a long time. I remember working with then-National Security Adviser Colin Powell when I was majority leader of the Senate in 1987, 1988.

I remember the INF Treaty, I withstood great pressure from the then-Reagan administration, to bring up that INF Treaty. I withstood that pressure and said: I will not be stampeded into calling up the INF Treaty until we have answers to our questions, until Sam Nunn, who is chairman of the Armed Services Committee, has answers to his questions about futuristic weapons and other very key and important questions. I just will not bring up this treaty. Say what you will, I will not bring it up.

I remember quoting the words from, I believe it was Scott's "The Lady of the Lake":

Come one, come all! this rock shall fly
From its firm base as soon as I.

I said: I will not call up this treaty until we have the answers to Sam Nunn's questions, not until we have the answers to David Boren's questions—David Boren was chairman of the Intelligence Committee—not until we have the answers to the questions of Senator Pell. He was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

I said: We have to have these answers before I will call this treaty up. And I did not call it up until we had the answers.

At that time, Colin Powell was National Security Adviser. He scampered across the ocean to Europe to help get those answers. Colin Powell, as I say, at that time, who was the National Security Adviser, complimented the Senate, and complimented me as leader at that time of the Senate, the majority leader, on staying the course, on standing our ground against being pushed into a premature consideration of that INF Treaty. Mr. Powell, himself, said, the Senate rendered a service. And he complimented me personally.

I have had a long experience here with Mr. Colin Powell. He is now Secretary of State, and I have a great deal of confidence in him. He has had the experience. He was a soldier for 35 years, National Security Adviser, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs. He has led men into battle. He has made command decisions. Here is not a man who blew in by the winds from a cyclone that came from far away. He has been around here a long time. He has the experience that gives him the independence of thought.

Secretary Powell was very careful as to how he answered my questions, leaving me to believe that, indeed, the administration is certainly considering, as an option—this is a conclusion I have drawn from what he said and from what newspaper stories have reported—the administration, indeed, has under consideration, as an option—this is my reading, but it would be pretty hard, I think, for others not to reach the same conclusion—that the administration is, indeed, considering, as one of its options in dealing with Iraq and Iran, maybe North Korea—certainly as an option—an attack upon one or more of these states. That is a conclusion I have drawn.

As I said to Secretary of State Powell, does the President have some new evidence of complicity in the September 11 attacks by these three nations? Those are very strong words. The President seems to be saying that we will attack any nation we consider to be a threat. Perhaps I am reading something into the matter that is not there.

The question is, How do we back up that message if Iran, Iraq, and North Korea do not change their behavior? Does the President intend to invade or strike one or more of these nations? Why has he included North Korea in that list? It is certainly not clear to me that North Korea was in any way involved in the September 11 attacks on our Nation. Perhaps I am overlooking something.

A Nation's leaders have a responsibility to think beyond the stirring rhetoric of war, particularly in the case of what could be a long, costly, global conflict which could very well unleash forces most of us only dimly understand and which could cause great loss of life. This Nation's leaders also have a responsibility to obtain the support of the people's elected representatives in Congress before undertaking endeavors which may claim the lives of the Nation's sons and daughters.

The U.S. Constitution. I have a copy of it in my pocket—a copy of the U.S. Constitution. May I say to the distinguished Senator who today sits in the chair and presides over this deliberative body with dignity and skill, may I say that his two representatives from the State of Georgia who signed this Constitution were William Few and Abraham Baldwin. This Constitution still lives. That is the mast which will hold us always to the ship of state—the Constitution.

I hope this administration remembers that there is still a Constitution. I hope that we in this body still remember there is a Constitution to guide us.

This Constitution does not mention "consultations" with Congress. This Constitution does not reference the United Nations and what the United Nations may want or not want. But this Constitution, in section 8 of article I, says that Congress shall have the power to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and so on. So let us in this body remember that there is still a Constitution. It has served us well, and it will always serve us well.

I am going to follow that Constitution as closely and as nearly as I can follow it in the days to come; in perilous times, if they come, I will support a Commander in Chief when I think he is right. I will not support any Commander in Chief, be he Democrat or Republican, if I think he is making a mistake in such a very serious matter.

The U.S. Constitution declares the President to be the Commander in Chief. But see what the Constitution says about the Commander in Chief. One can almost count the sentences that are enumerated in this Constitution with reference to the Commander in Chief's powers as the number of fingers on one's hand. But there are many sentences, one will find enumerated in this Constitution, with respect to the Congress—many sentences. Let us keep an eye on this Constitution.

The President would do well to obtain the support of the people's elected representatives in Congress before undertaking endeavors which may claim the lives of our Nation's sons and daughters. The Constitution declares the President to be the Commander in Chief, but it is Congress that has the constitutional authority to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to declare war.

It is no accident that the Constitution, in assigning these powers to Congress, includes both the common defense and the general welfare of the Nation on this list. The structure, the scope, and the cost of the Nation's defense have an enormous impact on the general welfare of the people. It is Congress, and specifically the Appropriations Committees of the Congress, that has the responsibility for appropriating the money to fight the war on terrorism.

The President has said that this war is costing American taxpayers over $1 billion a month. We have already spent over $7 billion waging war in Afghanistan. The President's 2003 defense budget amounts to an expenditure of $379 billion, over $1 billion a day. The President is forecasting continued increases in the defense budget.

I will insert into the RECORD the amounts that are being considered and questioned by the administration over the next 10 years for national defense, and the total over that period, I think we will find, will be nearly $5 trillion.

That is serious money. It is made more serious by the fact that we are returning to budget deficits. We are borrowing to support this huge defense budget, and that means we are paying interest on that money that is borrowed, interest on that debt.

How long—we have heard that phrase before—how long, how long can this Nation afford to spend $1 billion a day? We will find that that $1 billion a day will increase substantially over the next 10 years—more than $1 billion a day on defense.

Exactly what level of national security are we buying with that investment of money? What nondefense needs are we forfeiting? As President Bush said in a 1999 speech at the Citadel:

We must be selective in the use of our military, precisely because America has other great responsibilities that cannot be slighted or compromised.

I agree with every word of that statement by now-President Bush.

We must not allow a bloated defense budget to eat away at our ability to fund other important priorities such as Social Security, Medicare, health care, and education, to name just a few priorities.

Clearly, the budget that was presented to Congress on February 4 sacrifices a great deal for defense. While domestic discretionary spending increases by only 2 percent, and is essentially flat in some areas, the President has asked for an additional $48 billion in military spending, 15 percent above last year's defense budget, which was itself 10 percent above the previous funding level for 2001. The size of the requested increase alone is greater than the military spending of many, if not all, of our NATO allies.

Moreover, such a colossal defense budget increase must be justified. It must be approved by Congress. Both Congress and the American people must understand how this money is to be spent and whether it will really enhance our national security.

Let me repeat: Look, again, at my record of support for appropriations for national defense over a period of 50 years. There is no equivocation in that record.

Congress must also understand much, much more about the proposed $10 billion defense reserve fund that is in this budget, including the plans for its use.

The President's huge defense budget does make minimal cuts in a few outdated weapons systems, but it also increases spending on the big-ticket ships and airplanes that account for a good portion of the U.S. defense procurement funds. Do these types of weapons fit into a national security strategy in today's world, where asymmetrical warfare and the existence of terrorist cells in more than 60 countries, including the United States, seem to constitute the most serious threat to our national security? Are these big-ticket items that we are purchasing moving us toward a 21st century military, or are they squandering tax dollars by continuing a cold war military structure?

May I remind ourselves that there has been on the books a law which requires appointments and agencies to audit and to be able to come up with clear audits of their expenses. The Constitution itself requires a clear accounting of the moneys that are appropriated by Congress. I believe it was last year that I raised this question with Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld. The Defense Department could not identify $3.5 trillion in its more than $7.6 trillion in defense accounts—in accounting entries. Now, if the Defense Department cannot, after a law's having been passed and put on the books requiring Departments to be able to come up with audits, if the Defense Department cannot account for $3.5 trillion in its accounts—it doesn't know what the weapons are, what is on hand, what spare parts are on hand, what spare parts it really needs, what moneys have and have not been spent—how can the American people have confidence enough to support an additional $48 billion for defense this year? Who can account for this money? How are we going to account for it? Where are we going? And we are denying other needs. The President said in his speech to the Citadel some time ago that we must not overlook other very important priorities. How can we do it? Where are we going with all of these expenses?

Are these big-ticket weapons we are purchasing moving us toward a 21st century military, or are we squandering taxpayers' dollars by continuing a cold war military structure? Are these weapons the best ones with which to wage a global war on terrorism, or are they intended to attack the "axis of evil," as the President called Iran, Iraq, and North Korea? Could they be meant to counter the threat of a rising world power such as China? How about China?

No one has explained. These are critical questions for which we have yet to hear clear, concise answers. Congress needs to be given those answers. The American defense budget should not be a cookie jar with goodies for every defense contractor lucky enough to afford a hefty lobbying budget. This Nation is again in deficit status, and we have to guard against committing huge sums for weapons that are not needed, which will only drive us deeper into debt and sap our overall economic strength.

The patriotism that runs deep in the veins of Americans, and the horrors of September 11, have aroused our emotions and galvanized our support for the fight against terror. But that support could wane, both at home and abroad, if the administration does not carefully weigh its use of broad threats, undefined objectives, and the murky consequences of shackling both our domestic and foreign policies to a militaristic fervor which may or may not reflect realistic possibilities or sound choices.

We would do far better to hear clear explanations of our goals in the war on terrorism, and detailed justifications of our defense budget that use cold logic, rather than a hot head. We are a powerful country. There has never been one so powerful. We cannot hope to eliminate terrorism from the world without other nations on our side. A recognition of our limitations in that regard is critical. We are a rich country—so rich that if the Queen of Sheba were today alive, she would come to this country and forget about Solomon in all of his glory. We are a rich country, but we can never, never spend our way into perfect national security—I say perfect national security. Our resources are finite and choices have to be made, and there will always be forces and circumstances in the world that are unpredictable and beyond our control. There always have been and always will be. But we can strive to be a wise nation—one that avoids bombast in favor of methodical analysis, one that understands its extraordinary possibilities as well as its very real limitations on the global stage.

I do not know what these words by President Bush may portend for our future. Are they meant to convey the chilling possibility that Mr. Bush may be contemplating an invasion of Iraq, or Iran, or North Korea? I don't know. Just looking at the words themselves, I cannot understand. Are they meant to be the harbinger of an attack on one or more of these nations? When Secretary Powell testified before the Budget Committee yesterday, he could only give weak assurances that the President "has no plan on his desk" to start a war with one of these countries. It has yet to be seen whether the President's strong words will mean some future action against Iran, Iraq, or North Korea, or whether they are just considered as a rhetorical flourish to a war-time speech.

What is for certain is that other countries have reacted to the use of bellicose terms.

Our European allies are now wondering if the United States will soon call upon them to support military action against one of those three countries.

Hasn't Russian leader Putin raised a question, has he not expressed concern about our intentions toward Iraq? Only yesterday I believe, or the day before, I read in the newspaper about his cautionary words. Russia has issued a strong warning against a possible U.S. attack on Iraq. Alliances between nations can be fractured and broken because of rash or insulting statements.

Iranians who voted for moderate candidates in last year's elections joined with hardliners in taking to the streets of Tehran on Monday, February 11, to protest the categorization of their country as "evil."

I read from the New York Times of the day before yesterday:

Millions of Iranians galvanized by President Bush's branding of their nation as part of an "axis of evil" marched in a nationwide pep rally today that harkened back to the early days of the Islamic revolution, with the American flag burned for the first time in recent memory.

The story goes on to say:

Ever since Mr. Bush designated Iran part of an international terrorist network open to American attack, conservatives in Iran have been greatly buoyed, trying to use a resurgence of disgust with America to quash reform at home, daily denouncing Washington and exhorting Iranians to follow suit. This has made it difficult for President Khatami to preserve his reformist agenda of promoting democracy and rooting out corruption an agenda he emphasized today before he, too, criticized American foreign policy.

I ask unanimous consent that this article in its entirety be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. STABENOW). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I also ask unanimous consent that at the close of my remarks there be printed a transcript of the questions that I asked of Secretary Colin Powell and his answers when he appeared before the Senate Budget Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, will my friend from West Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield to the distinguished senior Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam President, I thank my colleague. Before I ask my question, I wish to thank the Senator from West Virginia for taking to the floor on such an important and timely issue because we are in a grave new world.

No one can doubt the Senator's fidelity as a patriot and somebody who cares about a strong America, an America that defends itself. I followed his career long before I ever came to the Congress in 1980. It was true then and it is every bit as true, even more true today.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHUMER. Only he could give such a speech with the strength that is needed. I wish to ask the Senator a question, given his knowledge of the Constitution and our history.

Senator BYRD has focused on two issues: the ability to declare war and the ability to spend funds in execution of that war. It is my understanding that if there were ever a part where the Founding Fathers wanted the checks and balances of our system—the consultation of the executive branch with the Congress, the legislative branch—it would be in these two areas.

I wonder if the Senator might address that issue briefly because I think it ties his knowledge of history with the very appropriate and apt words of today.

Mr. BYRD. I thank my friend, the senior Senator from New York, whose State experienced the greatest sacrifice in blood and human lives that has ever been brought to this country by terrorists in its entire history, brought in 1 day in the course of a few hours, and is still suffering from the losses that were visited upon New York City by these men who, indeed, were evil men.

The Founding Fathers were very suspicious of a strong Executive. The Framers of our Constitution were not strong devotees of "democracy." They believed in a strong legislative branch. They believed in checks upon an Executive. And so they were rather sparse in the language that they used when it came to enumerating the powers of the Chief Executive, the Chief Magistrate of the country.

Some of the Framers had a concern that a legislature might impinge upon the powers of a Chief Executive; that the vortex of the legislative branch was ever seeking more power. I think in these regards, the Founding Fathers would find that their concerns about a Chief Executive were perhaps well-founded, especially in time of war.

In a time of war, powers and authorities seem to gravitate toward the Chief Magistrate as Commander in Chief. They felt that they had adequately protected against that by virtue of the many powers that are enumerated in the Constitution and vested in the Congress, the most powerful of which, the most important of which is the power of the purse which we find vested in the Congress. We find it in section 9 of the first article of the Constitution.

Yes, they were concerned about an overweening Executive, so they included adequate safeguards. They vested this power to send the Nation's sons and daughters into war in the hands of Congress when they said, in section 8, the Congress shall have the power "To declare war."

This was a safeguard that the Framers wisely put into the hands of the elected representatives in the people's branch—that first branch, mentioned in the very first sentence of the Constitution. There is where the power to make law resides. These are people who are directly elected by the people.

The Framers were not at all enamored with the idea of having an all-powerful Chief Executive.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Senator. His speech, which I have heard thus far, is a marvelous one. I commend it to my colleagues and will read the rest of it myself. I apologize; I must go chair a hearing, but it is one of the reasons I am glad to be in the Senate, to hear brave and important words such as these. I thank the Senator and yield back to him.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator from New York, Mr. SCHUMER, for his words and his confidence. I thank him also for his reference to the Constitution.

We need to retire into the inner sanctums of our minds and ponder the Constitution every once in awhile.

I also ask unanimous consent that a chart regarding defense budget expenditures be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 3).

Mr. BYRD. How lately have we read the Constitution?

When we send a signal to the rest of the world, we should pay more attention to the content of our message than to creating a sound bite. It seems that a new front has opened in our public relations war against terrorism, and the world wants to know what kind of action we may be contemplating to back up those words.

I am reminded of the words of Gaius Sallustius Crispus. Gaius Sallustius Crispus was a Roman historian. He lived between the years 86 and 34 B.C. If one wants to read a good account of the Catilinian conspiracy, one ought to read Sallustius' account of the conspiracy of Catiline. One ought to read Sallustius' account of the Jugurthine War which occurred perhaps between the years 112 and 106 B.C. It was Sallustius Crispus who said, "It is always easy to begin a war but very difficult to stop one, since its beginning and end are not under the control of the same man."

The country is behind the President's efforts thus far to trace the whereabouts and to bring to justice—to use Mr. Bush's words—Osama bin Laden and other terrorist leaders. But if, indeed, the President is contemplating an attack on a sovereign nation, the President should contemplate seeking a declaration of war by Congress in advance. I may very well vote for such a declaration, depending upon the circumstances at the time. I would not rule that out.

As Edmund Burke so well stated, "War never leaves where it found a nation."

The President would be well advised to have the people of the Nation, acting through their elected representatives in Congress, behind him in the event that he seriously contemplates an attack on any one or more of the nations which he included in his "axis of evil" about which he spoke during his State of the Union Address.

Going to war with Iraq or North Korea would be a very—and the same can be said with reference to Iran—serious undertaking. Given the right cause, I would say let's go. Given the right cause and the right circumstances, yes, but let us be cautious and prudent.

North Korea is estimated to have the fourth largest military in the world. Iraq has had 11 years since the Gulf War to rebuild what was once touted as the world's third largest military. Going to war against well-armed foes such as these will require the serious and sustained support of the American people.

The President should not misinterpret the support which he enjoys in poll after poll throughout the Nation to mean that he can throw the weight of the Nation's full military power at any one of these three nations and expect this Nation and its elected representatives to follow down that road without their elected representatives also having had an opportunity to pass some judgments in committing the Nation's blood and the Nation's treasure to the task. In the words of Aeschylus, "the people's voice is a mighty power."

All of us have supported the President in his actions thus far, but there are some things that are worthy of pause. I do not offer my words today in criticism. I merely offer my words as cautionary.

I have heard much saber rattling, much jingoism. It is one thing to track down terrorists, to chase them into the holes and caves, and to vow they shall not hide and we will "get 'em." It is quite another to consider going to war—if that indeed is being weighed as an option in high places—without a declaration of war by Congress, as set forth in the Constitution.

Let me say again, I will leave no doubt about it, I am not saying that a declaration of war on a certain nation at a given time cannot be justified. As to Iraq, for example, there may arguably be a sufficient justification to make a solid case, given our past experiences with that country and the leader of that country. I might very well be one Senator who would support such a declaration at a given time, based upon compelling facts. But as someone once said, "A wise man should try everything before resorting to arms."

There is an old English proverb that says, "He that preaches war is the devil's chaplain." I do not believe that there is any such thing as an inevitable war. Given the history of our relations with Saddam Hussein, it may be that such a conflict one day must take place or shall take place. Our military might is overwhelming, but as Cicero is reported to have said, "An Army is of little value in the field unless there are wise counsels at home." Then, let us have wise counsels, not just consultations. Cato the Elder used to close every speech, every letter, with the words, "Carthage must be destroyed!" Eventually, in the year 146 B.C., Carthage was destroyed. There must be careful counsels, and let us vote when the time comes.

I hope and pray that the President will think and pray carefully as all options are being considered. He will do well to heed, and to read again and again, the records of history. In particular, he must not forget the lessons we learned in the war with Vietnam. We did not lack a mighty military in the field in that war. However, the unstinting, unflagging dedication to the prolonged waging of that contest was lacking among the people back home. It is a lesson worth remembering.

Scriptures say that a strong man armed keepeth his palace. I have supported defense budgets now for 50 years, to keep our "palace," our Ship of State, our country strong. I expect to continue to do so. But there need to be questions asked. It will require a lot of questions and a lot of answers. And they should be asked.

Let us remember the Constitution. It will keep us bound to the mast of our Ship of State.

MILLIONS IN IRAN RALLY AGAINST U.S.

(By Neil MacFarquhar)

TEHRAN, Feb. 11.—Millions of Iranians galvanized by President Bush's branding of their nation as part of an "axis of evil" marched in a nationwide pep rally today that harkened back to the early days of the Islamic revolution, with the American flag burned for the first time in recent memory.

Amid the dirgelike chants of "Death to America!" marking the revolution's 23rd anniversary, President Mohammad Khatami tried to display Iran's milder face, stressing his government's interest in détente.

Ever since Mr. Bush designated Iran part of an international terrorist network open to American attack, conservatives in Iran have been greatly buoyed, trying to use a resurgence of disgust with America to quash reform at home, daily denouncing Washington and exhorting Iranians to follow suit. This has made it difficult for President Khatami to preserve his reformist agenda of promoting democracy and rooting out corruption an agenda he emphasized today before he, too, criticized American foreign policy.

"Our policy is a policy of détente, Mr. Khatami told the throng clogging all avenues to Freedom Square in Tehran. "We intend to have ties and peaceful relations with all nations in the world," except Israel.

Although less strident than his old guard foes, Mr. Khatami suggested that the United States was partly to blame for the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. "The American people," he said, "should ask today how much of the awful and terrifying incidents of Sept. 11 were due to terrorist acts, and how much of it was due to the foreign policy adopted by American officials."

The threat to Iran "originates from the fact that America, or at least some of its officials, see themselves as masters of the world," Mr. Khatami said. "Since they have power, they want to force the world to obey them and exert pressure on countries that disobey. Your revolution threatened America's illegitimate interests in the region, so it is obvious that you are the target of its animosity."

After each important line, the orderly crowd burst into another round of "Death to America!" and waved a variety of signs, including one in English quoting the late revolutionary patriarch, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, saying, "The U.S. cannot do a damn thing."

The chanting switched occasionally to "Death to Bush!" One man wrapped his white donkey in a hand-painted American flag with "Bush" written on the side, while a truck carried a hug poster mounted with five large close-up photographs of the American president next to five similarly sized pictures of an ape.

In his State of the Union address on Jan. 29, Mr. Bush singled out Iran for trying to develop weapons of mass destruction and for its support for groups like Hezbollah that the United States labels terrorist. In addition, Washington has recently accused Iran of sending weapons to the Palestinians, of trying to undermine the effort to build a stable central government in Afghanistan and of helping Al Qaeda members to escape.

In suggesting that the United States review its own foreign policy rather than cast aspersions, Mr. Khatami specifically cited what he depicted as the plight of Palestinians denied human rights because of American support for Israel.

The threats expressed by Mr. Bush and other administration officials over the last two weeks surprised many in Iran. In some ways, they have united the reformists and the old guard here in criticism of the United States; in other ways, they have strengthened the hand of the conservatives.

Any time we face international problems, democracy stops," said Ali Reza Haghighi, a political science professor. "Now all the discourse must be against the Americans."

Mr. Khatami worked to keep his reformist agenda alive.

Some people must not object that we are talking so much about democracy, religious democracy," he said. "The stress on democracy is the soul of the Islamic revolution."

Mr. Khatami's supporters had envisioned the efforts to rebuild Afghanistan as a kind of side door to re-establishing ties with Washington, a prospect that alarmed the hard-liners who still control many of the levers of power here.

Mr. Bush's remarks thus delighted the old guard, which gleefully presented them as evidence that the American attitude toward Tehran remained unchanged, no matter that Iran helped in toppling the Taliban.

The reformists, while critical of America, have tried to suggest that the actions Mr. Bush criticized were the work of shadowy groups within the Iranian elite who want to keep the country isolated and autocratic.

Possibly reflecting uncertainty over how to deal with an American-backed government in Kabul, Afghanistan was barely mentioned at the rally. "The Taliban were a major bête noire," said one western diplomat. "But now they see a U.S. colony with bases developing in their backyard and they don't know how to handle it."

At the rally, Iranians were generally polite to the few Western reporters in their midst, saying things like "Welcome to Iran." But there were occasional outbursts of animosity. "Garbage!" "Pigs!" "Get out of here!" shouted one woman, while a man veered close to say, "I would like to punch America right in the mouth!" at which point the crowd edged in, bellowing "Death to America!"

While the size of the Tehran crowd was impossible to estimate authoritatively, the wide avenues and highways leading to Freedom Square in Tehran were jammed with hundreds of thousands of people. Iranian television suggested that millions turned out across the country, showing pictures of jammed streets in every city. Marchers said they were more galvanized than in years past because they felt maligned by President Bush.

The turnout also reflected the daily exhortations to attend that accompanied every news bulletin since Mr. Bush's speech. Employees at various government ministries said they had been told to go.

The calls to attend did not move everyone. In affluent north Tehran, where one occasionally hears support for the idea that Mr. Bush should carry through with his threat to bomb, cars laden with skis headed out of town toward the slopes.

As marchers headed toward the rally, periodically one would step out of the crowd to offer spontaneous thoughts about the day. "As long as our revolution is against America, we support it," said one man, wagging his finger. "The day there is peace between this country and America, the revolution is over."

After 23 years, though, the sense of brooding menace that pervaded marches of the past had mellowed. This one felt more like a carnival, complete with a gold coin on offer for the best Uncle Sam effigy.

A yellow banner painted with giant letters in Persian was stretched across one over pass. In the early days of the Islamic Republic it would have been read as "America Is the Greatest Satan." But today the lettering helpfully included its own English translation, reading, "America Is Extremely Naughty."

BUDGET COMMITTEE HEARING WITH SECRETARY OF STATE COLIN POWELL, FEBRUARY 12, 2002

Senator BYRD. I think the secretary, and I regret that we have scheduled our votes in such a way that we overlooked the importance of these committees and the importance of the questions and the answers that may result in our attendance here and the imposition on the time of witnesses like Secretary Powell.

Let me begin by saying that I join in the commendations that have been expressed by our chairman. I've had a long service with Secretary Powell. When we debated the INF treaty, 1988, I believe it was, I was majority leader for the second time, and Secretary Powell at that time I believe was the national security adviser to the president.

Secretary Powell complimented the Senate on the work that the Senate did on that treaty. I refused to be pushed and pressed and stamped into a scheduling for debate of that treaty until we had resolved some very, very important questions raised by the then chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Senator Nunn, the then chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senator Boren, the then chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Pell. And I recall that we waited until we got the answers, and the secretary of state—now secretary of state, at the time complimented the Senate on taking the time to resolve these important questions. And Mr. Powell at that time I think engaged himself and was active in helping to resolve some of these very important questions.

So he is a man who has made command decisions, he has led men in war. I think he speaks independently. He has the kind of experience that affords him that view, that independence of thought. He doesn't have to just listen to what somebody else says and reports, he has analyzed many of these questions. And I compliment him on his great service to this country.

Our time is limited. There are two questions I would like to ask. Let me premise the first one by what you have said with respect to the president has no plan to attack, there are no recommendations on his desk at this moment. Now, those are very carefully worded responses to the questions by the chairman, and those of us who have been around here anytime at all recognize that they're not direct answers, and I can understand the secretary.

The president, let me say, though, has made some very bold statements about prosecuting those responsible for the September 11 attacks. The president said that the terrorists are on the run and that they will find no safe haven, there's no cave that's deep enough. He said in the State of the Union address that the terrorists will not escape the justice of this country. I am with the president 100 percent when it comes to punishing the individual terrorists, those who are still living—some of them died on September 11, which was five months ago yesterday—when it comes to punishing those terrorists for the acts of September 11.

But the president has gone further in naming three states that comprise an axis of evil, and you have used that term, Mr. Secretary, already. Iran, Iraq and North Korea, the president has said, "are arming to threaten the peace of the world," and he "will not stand by as peril grows closer and closer. The United States of America will not permit the world's most dangerous regimes to threaten us with the world's most destructive weapons."

Those statements have left me wondering, is the president signaling that we will attack one or more of these countries? Congress passed a resolution on September 14 to authorize the president to use force against those who carried out, assisted or gave safe harbor to those responsible for the attack of September 11. Iran, Iraq and North Korea are not named in that resolution. I've heard no evidence that this axis of evil was responsible for or complicit in the September 11 attacks.

Now, if the president seeks to extend this war on terrorism, a case must be made before Congress and the American people that Iran, Iraq or North Korea are a clear and present danger to our country, and I, for one, am willing to listen to that case. But to carry out the war, the president will need the sustained support of the American people. We saw in Vietnam what the lack of support, sustained support for that war, resulted in. If the president wants to crystallize the support of the American people, he would be well advised to seek from Congress a declaration of war.

After all, we're not talking about using our military against terrorist cabals. We're talking about war against one or more sovereign states. Now, reading many of the news stories about this subject, I have come to a conclusion that while there is no plan perhaps, while there is no recommendation upon the president's desk today perhaps, these matters are evidently being pursued, they're being discussed, they're being considered as options.

Now, when it comes to making war, let's say on Iraq, having been here when you helped to direct the war on Iraq. I possibly could be convinced that we ought to vote—I would vote for a declaration of war. But we're not dealing with Afghanistan if we deal with Iraq. With respect to Iraq and North Korea, we're dealing with countries that have powerful military forces on the ground.

And I would hope, Mr. Secretary, that before we venture into an attack or an invasion or whatever against any one or more of these countries, the help, the support, the sustained support of the American people would be carefully sought through their elected representatives. We ought not to go around shooting from the hip. And I think that some of the statements that have emanated from the administration have alarmed other countries and they're alarming a lot of people in this country.

Now, is the president signaling that we will attack one or more of these countries? If he is considering such an attack as a possible course of action, do you believe, Mr. Secretary, that the president should seek a declaration of war from Congress before unleashing our military might on any one of these sovereign states?

Now, I can understand the inherent powers of the commander in chief. If there's an attack about to occur against this country, he has the inherent power to act. But we have time here to discuss these matters, to discuss the case, to debate pro and con. And I personally believe that the president, before he takes such a step, if that's being considered as an option, we'd better be very careful to bring the American people in on making the case, and we'd better seek a declaration of war from Congress in such a case. That's going to be a very costly venture, if it occurs, it's going to be costly in treasure and in blood, and you know that as well, perhaps more so than I do. And unless he has that support, that sustained support, we'll be engaged in another very costly, dreadful, Vietnam-like venture where the support of the American people vanished. That's one question.

Let me give you one other question to conserve my time, and then you can answer them as you see fit. My other question—well, perhaps you'd better try that one first. [Laughter]

Secretary POWELL. First of all, Senator Byrd, I could not even begin to answer this question without commenting on your opening remarks about the INF treaty. It is one of the more vivid experiences of my career, to have been, shall I say, taught by you about the Senate's prerogatives with respect to treaties. And I'll never forget the meeting you, I and Howard Baker had in your chambers one day, where you made it clear that the Senate had to give its advice and consent in a measured way, only with full information, and I went off to Geneva the very next day to get that full information.

And if I may, I'll never forget you looking at me and say, "We will not be hurried by any summit meeting that you all have scheduled or anything else of that nature, we will do our job." And the Senate did do its job, and I thank you for that guidance and that support at that time.

To get directly to your questions, the president's words in the State of the Union speak for itself. He did not declare war on anyone, nor was he saying he was getting ready to declare war on anyone. In fact, since the State of the Union he has repeated what he had said two times before the State of the Union with respect to Iraq: Let the inspectors in, let the U.N. inspectors in to determine whether or not you were doing the things we are accusing you of, and if you can establish that you are not doing these things, then the world will be a safer place, and you will have dealt with the U.N. We still think we would be better off with someone other than Saddam Hussein running the country.

So the president has made no decisions—to repeat myself—and no recommendations on his desk, even though, as a matter of prudence, we should be examining options with respect to all of these countries. But the first instance is looking at diplomatic and political means.

We have been eyeball to eyeball with North Korea for the last almost 50 years now, and trying to make sure that they are contained, this regime that is a despotic regime. And so I can assure you that the president is very sensitive, first, to the feelings and the views and the perspective of the American people, and he is very appreciative of the role that Congress plays in such matters.

And I'm sure that if he believes some action is taken, or some action is required, he will consult with the Congress, and as a result of consultation will make a judgment as to how Congress should be involved in whatever actions are taken, whether it is by declaration of war or a resolution of the Congress supporting an action that is taken pursuant to some United Nations resolution or through the president's inherent right as commander in chief to engage the armed forces of the United States. You'll recall what we did at the time of the Gulf War, Senator, where with a resolution we then got a resolution from both houses. So I'm sure the president would consult at an appropriate time and determine what he would ask Congress to do, and Congress has, of course, its own inherent power and right to do what it chooses to do.

Senator BYRD. Mr. Secretary, I thank you for that response. Of course, you and I know that the Constitution does not speak about consultations, nor does it refer to U.N. resolutions. Those are things that have developed over later time. But the Constitution still says that Congress shall have the power to declare war.

And I believe, as I said earlier, that if the president is contemplating attacking one or more of these countries, I would urge that he not just seek consultation, but he seek a declaration of war. And I might very well vote for that, depending on the case that is made at the time.

My second question, I may miss this vote—I'd do that with regret—but I'm very appreciative of this opportunity to visit with you across the table that's here and to ask these questions. By the way, I've cast more roll call votes than any senator in the history of this republic, and this is not a democracy, this is a republic. But I've cast more votes than any other senator in its long history, and so I don't pass up a vote easily, but I will in this case if I have to.

My second question is this. The president's FY 2003 foreign operations budget requests reflect business as usual when it comes to U.S. aid to Egypt and Israel. But despite providing roughly $5 billion a year—my, how the Appropriations Committee would like to use that $5 billion a year to help some of the states in this country and the people throughout this country with some of their problems—$5 billion a year in economic and military assistance to the Middle East, the conflict between the Israelis and the Palestinians continues to worsen.

It seems to me that our foreign aid dollars to the Middle East, which have no strings attached that I know about, and are not conditioned on any progress being made in the peace process, are being squandered in pursuit of an increasingly elusive peace. Now, this subject, this question isn't often laid on the table as plainly as we're doing right now, but I think it ought to be.

Every year we appropriate roughly $5 billion countries with virtually no questions asked, and they look upon it, I think, as an entitlement, almost as an entitlement. They, I'm sure, from what I've read and learned, that they include it in their budgets at the beginning of the budget process because, as I said, they look upon it virtually as an entitlement. They can be pretty sure of it. I think it's time for questions to be asked.

As a result of the current escalation of violence between the Palestinians and the Israelis, the U.S. seems to be increasing its historic tilt toward Israel and abandoning attempts to negotiate with Yasser Arafat. Given the continuing terrorist attacks by the Palestinians, it is understandable that we're fed up with Arafat. But I've read in the media that even some Israeli reserve soldiers are refusing to serve any longer in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, citing the dehumanizing impact of the occupation.

Do you have any concern that the perception of a greater U.S. tilt toward Israel could prove and is proving to be counterproductive by increasing anti-American and anti-Israeli sentiment in the region by emboldening hardline Israelis who are opposed to the peace process and by precluding the U.S. from fulfilling the role of honest broker in the peace process?

I think, Mr. Secretary, that it is time to put some strings on our foreign assistance in the Middle East and to condition our assistance, to condition our assistance on evidence of progress in the peace process. I think that would be the axis of my questions.

I think it's time to condition our assistance on evidence of progress in the peace process. We have a tool here. We don't seem to use it. Both sides are able to count on a continuation of this money every year, it seems to me. It isn't being used as leverage, as it should be, in the pursuit of the peace process, which would be of the greatest benefit to both of those countries and to our own country and to world peace. Yasser Arafat may be unwilling or unable to act on his own, but I have to believe that Egypt and Jordan, and hopefully other Arab nations, would apply considerably more pressure on the Palestinians if their foreign assistance dollars were at stake.

And I have to believe that Israel might be more willing to discuss the issue of Israeli settlements, which are a real bone of contention, in disputed areas if their foreign assistance dollars were at stake. Mr. Secretary, this is my question: Why shouldn't we condition our assistance to the Middle East, why shouldn't we use this leverage on both sides to get them to the peace table and to make them understand that this money is just not going to be had there for the asking, that they have to produce some evidence, they have to show a willingness, they have to act in pursuit of that willingness? That's my question.

Secretary POWELL. Thank you, Senator Byrd. On the first question, as you know, the roughly $4.6 or close to $5 billion that is spent every year for Egypt and Israeli in FMF and ESF funding is a result of decisions that were made many years ago, after the Camp David accord, and there's been a balance between those two, and as a result we did have a peace agreement between Egypt and Israel.

And as part of that, this funding was appropriate to let both sides develop and let both sides feel strong as a result of defensive FMF funding, which allows them to maintain their military. With respect to the situation with the Palestinians and the Israelis, I must say that Egypt has been enormously supportive of our efforts, and Egypt has been applying pressure on Chairman Arafat to get the violence under control so that both sides can move forward to achieve the kind of peace that you talk about.

With respect to should we use Egypt's money to pressure them, they're doing what we ask of them now with respect to this, they're putting pressure on Mr. Arafat. They are one of our strongest interlocutors with respect to how we deal with Mr. Arafat. We have not cut Mr. Arafat off. I am in touch with his closest associates, and I spoke to him about 10 days ago.

With respect to the Israelis, they are under attack from terrorist organizations that are linked to the Palestinian Authority. We saw the ship come in with 50 tons of military equipment that escalated the situation or would have if it arrived. And to say to them, "We're going to cut your funds while you are under these kinds of terrorist attacks unless you do something to reward these terrorist attacks," is not a strategy that I think will be successful. The strategy we are trying right now and applying right now is to remain committed to a vision of these two states living side by side, remain committed to the Mitchell plan, which provides a path to get there, and committed to the Tenet work plan, which gets us into the Mitchell plan by getting a cease-fire, by getting the violence down.

And in recent days I have been in touch once again with the closest aids to Mr. Arafat talking about the specific things that need to be done so that we can get the violence down and then see an Israeli response, because they now are confident of moving forward into the Mitchell plan. The Mitchell plan talks about settlement activities stopping. The Mitchell plan talks about opening closures. The Mitchell plan has everything we need to get the negotiations, negotiations which under appropriate U.N. resolutions 242 and 338 can lead to a settlement of this crisis and a peace between these two sides.

But until Mr. Arafat really is able to crack down, if he can—and I think he still can, I still think he has that authority, people want to push him aside as a leader, but he's still the leader of the Palestinian people, they see him as such and he's the elected leader of the Palestinian Authority. And so I think he has to use his moral authority and his political authority to get the violence down, as which point we can get into a cease-fire and move toward the Mitchell plan.

We are constantly reviewing the level of funding for both Egypt and Israel and the determination of how it should be allocated between FMF and ESF, and we believe they both make solid cases to us every year that justifies the allocation that we have made to them, and that is the case again this year. But we have not walked away from this, and we are always looking for a means by which we can encourage both sides to show restraint, both sides to do everything that is possible to get toward a cease-fire and progress into the Mitchell plan.

Senator BYRD. Mr. Chairman I have signaled to the floor leadership that I'm willing to give up that vote in order to have been here to ask these questions, Secretary Powell, and I gave it up very reluctantly. My attendance record over a period of 44 years, my roll call attendance record is 98.7 percent of the time. I wouldn't have done that for many secretaries.

Secretary POWELL. I'm honored.

Senator BYRD. I thank you for your response to the question. I hope that there will be increased consideration given to my suggestions here as to the use of this assistance. The American taxpayers give up a lot, they give $5 billion a year to these countries, and there needs to be a return to the taxpayers' investment, I believe to use your words, in the Middle East. So I hope that there will be increased consideration of using this leverage.

And also, Mr. Secretary, I hope you'll convey to the president that we need to use our words with care. Words mean something, especially in this context. We cannot shoot from the hip if we're contemplating as one of the options going into one of these countries or attacking them. This would be a very sobering, somber, serious matter, and I would appreciate it if you would tell the president about this.

And I'm not out to pick on the president, I spoke on the Senate floor one Friday about the president, about his speech to the National Prayer Breakfast, and I have many good things I can say about the president. But this is very sobering, and some of the words that have appeared to come from the hip from this administration have caused considerable alarm. I don't have to tell you that, you sense that, I'm sure.

Secretary POWELL, Senator Byrd, thank you. And I've been through several crisis with the president in our year together, some big, some small. There was the Soviet spy crisis of the early days of the administration, then the Chinese reconnaissance plane, and then what we've done since September 11, and I have been through many crises in my career with several presidents.

And this president does not shoot from the hip and he does not act from the hip. He handles each one of these with a clarity of purpose, with patience, with prudence, listens to all the advisers that he has in his administration and gathers the support of the American people and his coalition partners as he moves forward. And I'm sure that as new challenges arise in the future, particularly if they arise with these three countries or other countries, he will act in a similar manner.

Senator BYRD. I hope so, Thank you.

COMMENDING PRESIDENT
MUSHARRAF OF PAKISTAN

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I appreciate the comments from my colleague from West Virginia and his thoughts. We have some important decisions to make.

I speak on an event taking place currently in the Capitol, the welcoming of the President of Pakistan. Yesterday, we passed a resolution welcoming President Musharraf of Pakistan to the United States. He arrived in Washington last night. He will be here for a couple of days.

I rise to call attention to this visit of President Musharraf and praise his courageous leadership in standing by the United States in its war on terrorism. President Musharraf has taken action within his own country to align with the international community to reject terrorism. It has been a very difficult task for him. Pakistan has been in a great deal of turmoil. President Musharraf has worked to bring calm and peace to that region. But when we went forward with our efforts in Afghanistan, which to date have been quite successful, this was a very trying time in Pakistan.

President Musharraf stood by his commitment to end terrorism, stood by his commitment to work with the United States. That has been a help in our efforts in that region of the world and for the future of Pakistan and relationships with the United States.

In a speech last month, President Musharraf set Pakistan on a new course with his version of a moderate, dynamic, Muslim nation. He reminded the Pakistani people that charity begins at home. It was time to fight the root causes of extremism: poverty, and illiteracy. He has done this at great risk to himself on behalf of a peaceful and prosperous future for Pakistan. He has opened the way to eventual true peace with India. It is an important message for Pakistan, for South Asia, and for the whole world.

President Bush also made note of President Musharraf's important leadership in the State of the Union Address. The President said: Pakistan is now cracking down on terror, and I admire the strong leadership of President Musharraf.

Pakistan's support remains essential to our fight against terrorism. We are grateful to President Musharraf for his leadership. Without it, Operation Enduring Freedom could not have been accomplished and could not have received its accomplishments or made the accomplishments that it has to date. We owe much to the Pakistani people. However, the fight is not yet over and risks still remain. Violent extremists could still undermine peace and security in the region. As we isolate our enemies, so, too, must we aid and draw closer to our friends.

Pakistan's bold stand against terror alongside the United States is not made in a vacuum. There are real economic and social consequences in Pakistan for assisting the United States in our war effort. It would be a failure of U.S. foreign policy not to pursue the means of assisting our ally in its time of need. We must provide assistance to Pakistan in all the areas that will help keep it on track with President Musharraf's vision for a prosperous, strong, independent, modern Islamic state, a democracy of capital markets.

As we have all seen, a small yet very focused and vocal Islamic minority within Pakistan has spoken out against the Pakistani Government and the assistance it received from the United States. The small minority has called for and implemented damaging labor strikes and encouraged countless numbers of young Pakistanis to cross the border into Afghanistan to fight alongside the Taliban. This is a strong vocal minority in Pakistan. A further weakened economy and increased unemployment in Pakistan, the clear results of some weakened markets that have taken place because of the war on terrorism, only add to the influence of fundamentalists in Pakistan by strengthening social and economic unrest on which extremists prey.

This is why it is crucial that the United States now provide assistance and support to Pakistan. It is time to make sure that our policies of all sorts—economic, social policies, geopolitical policies—reflect what is best for America, not only in terms of our economy but also for our future security. Helping Pakistan through this difficult and necessary transition is in the direct interests of the United States. We must support those willing to take on the fight for freedom if we are to see our values flourish around the world.

I am delighted President Musharraf is visiting the United States at this time. I know he will receive a strong, positive welcome from the United States.

PHILIPPINES

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I will draw the Senate's attention to a second matter. In the Philippines we have troops performing training exercises with the Philippine military. This is very important in helping to subdue a terrorist group called Abu Sayyaf. They have a couple of my constituents. They are being held by the Abu Sayyaf terrorists. We are hopeful this exercise in the Philippines that the Filipino troops are carrying out and the training exercise the United States is doing with the Philippines will result in that group, the Abu Sayyaf, being subdued; the Americans being freed safely and being returned home to their families. They have been held since May of last year and have been on the move constantly in the jungle.

I am appreciative of the administration for stepping forward.

IRAQ

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, as Senator BYRD mentioned, we have serious issues to contemplate concerning Iraq. This is a country we have had conflict with before, a country that has weapons of mass destruction. Iraq has been at war with itself and its neighbors for 22 of the 23 years that Saddam Hussein has ruled that country. The people of Iraq have not known peace under Saddam Hussein.

History reveals repression at home is often the breeding ground for outside aggression. Iraq is certainly a case in point. There has been no peace in Iraq since Saddam Hussein came to power more than two decades ago. First, he declared war on Iran, a war that lasted nearly a decade. He then declared war on the Iraq Kurdish population in the north. He even used chemical weapons against them in his pursuit of total and absolute control of Iraq.

After the war with the Kurds, he declared war on Kuwait, calling Kuwait an integral part of Iraq. Since his defeat at the hands of the U.S.-led coalition, Saddam has spent the past decade defying the United Nations and the United Nations imposed agreements and building weapons of mass destruction to use against his next victims.

History has also shown that authoritarian dictators do not successfully become integrated into civilized society. On the contrary, they seek any and all means to pursue their goals and perceive any positive overtures towards them as acts of weakness on the part of their adversaries. It has been the policy of the U.S. Government to seek the overthrow of Saddam Hussein since the passage of the 1997 Iraq Liberation Act. This policy is strongly supported—it was then and is now—by both Houses of Congress and both parties. It was also embraced by President Bush in the Republican Party platform.

This is going to be a key issue as we continue to look at what we are going to do to remove Saddam Hussein from power. We are not safe. That region of the world is not safe as long as Saddam Hussein rules in Iraq. This situation is not tenable over the long term. I am hopeful we can move forward to see some stability established in the region without Saddam Hussein in power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to be recognized for 5 minutes to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FARM POLICY

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, earlier this afternoon, an hour or so ago on this floor, we adopted a new farm policy for our country. In Delaware, in Michigan, even in Connecticut and Kansas, farmers are struggling to try to make a go of it.

Some of the woes that our agricultural communities face are laid at the foot of the agricultural policy which was adopted by the Congress, I believe, in 1996. I would just observe that some of the problems our farmers face may be fairly attributable to that national farm policy. But not all of the woes of agricultural communities can be traced back to the legislation adopted some 6 years ago.

In my own view, the bigger problem is overproduction. In my own view, the bigger problem is we have too much commodity and not enough demand for that commodity, whether the commodity is corn or soybeans, the commodity is milk or rice or cotton or beef—even chicken. We have too much commodity and not enough demand, too much commodity produced in this country and around the world.

The bill we have just passed provides subsidies to support those who are raising major crops, including corn, soybeans, rice, and cotton. Those supports—loan prices—are important. But the answer to what ails our farms and our agricultural communities is not merely more subsidies or greater subsidies. The answer, I believe, ultimately is better alignment of supply and demand.

Let me mention a few ways we can do that. One is through biomass. At a time when our country is importing about 60 percent of the oil we use, we also live in an age where you can take soybean oil and mix it with diesel fuel and provide a perfectly good fuel for diesel vehicles. We can do a similar thing with corn for ethanol vehicles.

We are learning how to transform plants into factories. We can now raise plants that will create an enzyme that is otherwise created in a chemical factory. The plants literally enable you to produce the same enzyme 40 percent cheaper than might be produced with a chemical factory, with fewer negative environmental consequences.

We learned how to infect or inject a virus into a product or crop such as soybeans or even tobacco, and the plant then creates a vaccine which can be used, among other things, to fight cancer.

The folks at DuPont have recently perfected a soybean seed that grows a soybean that produces soy milk that is almost impossible to distinguish from regular milk with respect to its taste.

Those are just some of the things we can do to create more demand, untraditional demand for the enormous amount of commodities, farm commodities we are producing in this country and in other places.

I add to those, we found out in Delaware, as we clean out our chicken houses, we can take some of the chicken litter and, instead of spreading it on our farm fields, we can burn it and derive a Btu value for electricity, and do so in an environmentally clean way. We can take the chicken litter out of chicken houses and treat it under high temperature and make a high nitrogen/high phosphorus fertilizer and ship it across the country and across the world and provide a source of cash revenue for farmers from what was previously a waste product of which we had too much.

One of the aspects I especially like about the bill we passed is it supplements and supports the efforts of States such as Delaware and perhaps others here to preserve agricultural land through conservation. In my State, we have invested tens of millions of dollars, State dollars in recent years, to purchase agricultural development rights, providing money for farmers for farm equipment, irrigation systems, and other ways to support their farming operation by agreeing to put their farms in perpetuity in farmland. It is going to continue to be a farm forever. This legislation we passed here today provides Federal support for what many of us have done at the State level.

The last thing is companies such as DuPont and Syngenta and others in our country have developed ways to create seeds and to grow plants that are more drought resistant than otherwise would be, plants and seeds that are resistant to a particular kind of insect, plants that need fewer fertilizers, less fertilizer, less insecticides, less pesticides. We have the ability, through that kind of research and the application of that research, to build a better mousetrap—if not a better mousetrap, a better soybean plant, and to enable us to have a leg up on the competition in other parts of the world. Those are some of the things, some of the factors that will enable us to help revive our agricultural industry in this country.

There are a lot of good things in that farm bill that we passed. Part of the solution, part of the way out of the duress in which farmers find themselves, is in that legislation. But a good deal is not. I wanted to share some of my thoughts today, and I thank the Chair for indulging me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, before we move to the business which has been agreed to, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THANKING SENATOR ROBERT C. BYRD

Mr. DODD. Before I came to the floor, I had the opportunity to listen to the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia give some remarks on terrorism. Watching him, listening to him, I am sure all of our colleagues—whether or not you agreed with everything Senator BYRD had to say—felt the deeper growing sense of appreciation in this Chamber that I have for his valued participation. His voice, his sense of warning about matters that this Nation needs to be cognizant of, are extremely helpful and worthwhile. There is no better person, in my view, to express those words of restraint and caution than someone who embodies, I think for all of us, this institution at its very best.

I wanted to take a moment to thank Senator BYRD once again for taking time out to express his views about the concerns of our budget and the priorities of the Nation in these difficult times. I hope those in positions of authority and responsibility will listen carefully to what he has to say.

There is no finer patriot, in my view, than Senator ROBERT C. BYRD. His words of caution about fiscal matters ought to be listened to very carefully. I thank him for his comments.

Madam President, I suggest the absence a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF VOTING RIGHTS ACT OF 2001

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report S. 565 by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 565) to establish the Commission on Voting Rights and Procedures to study and make recommendations regarding election technology, voting, and election administration, to establish a grant program under which the Office of Justice Programs and the Civil Rights Division of the Department of Justice shall provide assistance to States and localities in improving election technology and the administration of Federal elections, to require States to meet uniform and nondiscriminatory election technology and administration requirements for the 2004 Federal elections, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2688

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I call up amendment No. 2688.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], for himself, Mr. McCONNELL, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. BOND, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. McCAIN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. DAYTON, Mr. BAYH, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. BREAUX, proposes an amendment numbered 2688.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, some four decades ago, Dr. Martin Luther King said:

The history of our nation is the history of a long and tireless effort to broaden and to increase the franchise of American citizens.

This afternoon, we are gathered to consider the election reform bill which will live up, in my view, to the words Dr. Martin Luther King uttered 40 years ago; that is, to broaden the franchise of American citizens.

It is a great honor and privilege to bring this bill to the floor, the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act, with a bipartisan compromise that will be substituted for the committee-reported text of the bill when we get to that point.

As Thomas Paine once said:

The right to vote is the primary right upon which all other rights are based.

Therefore, there is no greater challenge facing this body than restoring Americans' faith in our electoral process.

Fourteen months ago yesterday, the American public decided—the country decided—who would be the 43rd President of the United States. What we are engaged in today, and will be over the next day or so, is not any discussion or debate about the past. George W. Bush is the President of the United States and has been since January 20 of last year. This bill is about the future, what we can do to try to make our election systems more fair, bring them up to date, to make it possible for people to cast votes more easily, and to see to it that those who may want to corrupt the system somehow will find their job far more difficult.

I consider this to be landmark legislation. It will help to ensure that our voting procedures are uniform and non-discriminatory, and that Americans can have faith in the integrity of our election results.

While we should not underestimate the significance of this action, we should be cautious not to overstate the Federal role in the administration of Federal elections. This legislation does not replace, nor would I tolerate it replacing, the historic role of State and local election officials, nor does it create a one-size-fits-all approach to balloting in America.

We, by no means, intend to supplant the traditional role that State and local governments have played administering elections for Federal office. But, for the first time, with this legislation, the Congress—the Federal Government—will set basic minimum requirements and provide critical resources for Federal elections.

This bipartisan compromise ensures that the most fundamental right in any democracy—the right to vote and have that vote counted—will be secure. But it also allows States to meet the legislation's broad requirements in a way best suited for their voting jurisdictions.

Notwithstanding this flexible approach, the primary objectives of this compromise remain expanding the franchise, protecting our Federal elections system from corruption, and providing the ongoing leadership that is required of a Federal partner.

Let me be clear from the outset, this legislation is not about one State or one election. While the problems that took place in Florida a year ago last November brought the flaws in our election system to the Nation's attention, these are systemic problems that have existed in many States for many years.

In fact, the General Accounting Office found that 57 percent of voting jurisdictions nationwide experienced major problems conducting the November 2000 elections. Meanwhile, the Caltech/MIT Voting Technology Project found there have been approximately 2 million uncounted, unmarked, or spoiled ballots in each of the last four Presidential elections.

Luckily, unlike many other issues that are presented to the Congress, the vast majority of the flaws in our election system are eminently fixable.

As the National Commission on Federal Election Reform, led by former Presidents Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford, found:

The weaknesses in election administration are, to a very great degree, problems that Government can actually solve.

We have the opportunity today to take an incremental step forward toward solving our election problems as we begin debate on the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act.

This bill also represents a major step forward for the United States Congress. For the very first time, the Federal Government will become a real partner with State and local governments in the administration of Federal elections.

This legislation has been 15 months in the making. In the wake of the November 2000 elections, then-chairman of the Rules Committee, and my good friend, MITCH McCONNELL, first pledged that our committee would conduct a series of hearings on election reform. Under his leadership, the committee held the initial hearing on March 14 of the year 2001.

When I assumed the committee chairmanship in June, I pledged to continue to make election reform the top legislative priority of the Senate Rules Committee. Toward that end, we held an additional 3 days of hearings on election reform last summer, including the committee's field hearing in Atlanta, GA.

Recognizing that comprehensive election reform legislation could not be a partisan endeavor, we brought together last fall a bipartisan team of Senators devoted to this issue.

Our election reform working group included, of course, Senator MITCH McCONNELL of Kentucky, who deserves tremendous accolades for initially focusing the Rules Committee on this important issue and for being a great partner in trying to resolve the many difficult issues we resolved in presenting this piece of legislation to our colleagues; our Republican colleague from Missouri, KIT BOND, who was a passionate advocate for including provisions to ensure the integrity of Federal elections; and my fellow Rules Committee members, New York Senator CHUCK SCHUMER and New Jersey Senator BOB TORRICELLI, who were among the very first Members of this body to forcefully push for bipartisan election reform legislation.

I am grateful to all of these Senators for their tireless work and that of their staffs who put in literally hundreds of hours to bring us to this point of considering a proposal on election reform.

All of us worked many months to develop legislation that would try to meet one central goal; that was to make it easier to vote in America and much harder to corrupt our Federal election system.

On December 19 of last year, we introduced the compromise legislation as a Senate substitute amendment No. 2688, an amendment to S. 565, the election reform bill reported out of the Rules Committee on August 2. Today, Majority Leader DASCHLE acted on his commitment to make this bill one of the first items on the Senate agenda during the 2nd session of the 107th Congress and I mark himself his considerable efforts.

Our legislation simply establishes three basic minimum Federal requirements that support our principle of making it easier to vote but harder to corrupt the system: One, voting system standards so that every eligible blind or disabled person and every language minority can cast a vote privately and independently; two, provisional voting so that an eligible voter in America will never be turned away from the voting booth and voting information posted at the polls so that voters are informed of their rights; and three, statewide voter registration lists and verification for first-time voters who register by mail so that all eligible voters who choose to vote will be able to do so and those who are not eligible cannot.

Our bill offers not just goals but some guarantees as well. We ensure that these reforms will be implemented by authorizing the Attorney General to bring civil action against jurisdictions that fail to comply with these requirements. The compromise also establishes a new Federal agency with four bipartisan commissioners. They will be appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, and each will serve a single 6-year term. Our colleague, Senator MITCH MCCONNELL, deserves great credit for originating this idea which I think is going to bring great value in years later, as other Congresses meet to consider ways to achieve the goal of making it easier to vote and harder to corrupt the system. That commission, which we will establish with this bill, will serve a very valuable purpose, where election officials from across the country can get unbiased advice and counseling as to what is the best equipment and material to have in order to improve the election system.

The Election Administration Commission will eventually administer the minimum requirements and grant programs to fund them. It will also serve as a national clearinghouse and resource for information on election administration.

Finally, our legislation provides Federal funding to States and localities. For the very first time, again, the Congress and the Federal Government will start paying their fair share of the cost of administering elections for Federal office. I don't believe in having Federal minimum requirements, as logical and as sensible as they are, and not coming up with the resources to our States and localities to pay for them. We do that.

The Senate bill authorizes a total of $3.5 billion towards this end: $3 billion with no matching requirement over 4 years for the purpose of funding the requirements; $400 million in this fiscal year for an incentive grant program to allow States and localities to immediately fund improvements to their voting systems and election administration procedures, including education programs and other such provisions that States may see as being in their interest.

We also authorize $100 million for an accessibility grant program to help make polling places physically accessible to the blind and disabled in this country.

This generous commitment of Federal resources underscores the fact that nothing in this bill establishes an unfunded mandate on States or localities. We give States and localities the resources as well as the flexibility they need to get the job done. We recognize that State and local election officials are uniquely qualified to determine what voting systems and procedures are most appropriate for their individual States and communities.

Importantly, in passing this bill, Congress will also meet the first civil rights challenge of the 21st century. During our hearings on election reform, our committee heard repeated testimony regarding the disproportionate treatment minorities received at the polls in the 2000 elections: African-American men asked about felony convictions; Arab Americans forced to produce citizenship papers or to take a loyalty oath; Hispanic Americans failing to receive language assistance required by the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The committee also received disturbing testimony regarding the disenfranchisement of Americans with disabilities.

There are 21 million Americans with disabilities who did not vote in the last election. This makes the disabled community, persons with disabilities, the single largest demographic group of nonvoters in the United States of America, 21 million. We hope that with the provisions I have already mentioned in this bill, we will see that number, if not disappear entirely, certainly be reduced considerably.

The General Accounting Office found that only 16 percent of all polling places in the contiguous United States are physically accessible from the parking area to the voting room. Not one of the 496 polling places visited by the General Accounting Office on election day 2000 had special ballots or voting equipment adapted for blind voters.

Certain voters and communities are disproportionately affected by the inadequacies in our voting systems and election administration policies and procedures. As evidenced by testimony received by the Rules Committee and numerous commission reports and studies, racial and ethnic minorities, language minorities, disabled voters, overseas and military voters, and poor communities all encountered unique and disproportionate problems with the November 2000 elections—and elections before then, I might add—even after accounting for the effects of income, education, and poor ballot design.

For example, the General Accounting Office found that both a jurisdiction's voting equipment and its demographic makeup had a statistically significant effect on the percentage of uncounted votes. The General Accounting Office found that counties with higher percentages of minority voters had higher rates of uncounted votes.

The GAO also reported that percentages of uncounted Presidential votes were higher in minority areas than others, regardless of voting equipment.

These findings underscore the importance of instituting minimum Federal requirements that will ensure that all voters have an equal opportunity to vote and have their vote counted.

By passing this bipartisan election reform bill, the Senate will help ensure that every single eligible American has the equal opportunity to both cast a vote and, of course, have their vote counted.

Let me be as clear as I can: Nothing in this bill or in this debate is intended to call into question the results of the November 2000 Presidential election. This legislation is not about the past, it is about the future of our democracy. I hope my colleagues will agree that this bill, while not a perfect piece of legislation—it does not deal with every imaginable election reform proposal—is a solid bill. It is a good bill. It is a bill that took a lot of hours and a lot of compromise between people committed to seeing to it that we improve a system that is so fundamental to the workings of our democracy.

The House has already enacted comprehensive election reform. I commend Congressman STENY HOYER and Congressman NEY, who worked very hard to put together a bill that they could pass, and we will have to meet with them and resolve differences if we are able to ultimately pass the bill that Senator MCCONNELL and I present to the Senate today.

Certainly the President also deserves a great deal of credit. He could have sat back and not included anything in his budget and said: Let's wait and see what you do up there, if you can get something done, and then talk to me. But the President included $1.2 billion in the budget he submitted several weeks ago for election reform. I thank him in this Chamber; I have done so elsewhere. It is not all the resources we will need, but it is a major commitment by the President of the United States to this issue. Our hope is that we can get our job done and get a bill passed and then take advantage of the offer made by the President in his budget proposal.

Finally, we believe this compromise is constitutionally sound. The compromise is squarely within the broad grant of congressional authority to legislate in the subject area of the administration of Federal elections. The GAO concluded that with regard to the administration of Federal elections, Congress has constitutional authority over both congressional and Presidential elections.

Again, I thank my colleagues who labored so hard. I thank TOM DASCHLE and TRENT LOTT, our respective leaders, for allowing this bill to come to the floor; our staffs, for their tireless work; and again, my colleagues, MITCH MCCONNELL, KIT BOND, CHUCK SCHUMER, BOB TORRICELLI, and many others who have expressed their views and thoughts on this legislation.

I thank the witnesses who testified before our committee.

Finally, a very special thanks is reserved for my friend, JOHN CONYERS, the ranking Democrat on the House Judiciary Committee and my coauthor in the House of the original election reform legislation. His commitment to this issue is unparalleled.

With that, I conclude with the words I opened with of Dr. Martin Luther King:

The history of our Nation is the history of a long and tireless effort to broaden and to increase the franchise of American citizens.

Today, when we gather to discuss this reform measure, we are fulfilling the commitment Martin Luther King suggested in his words 40 years ago—to broaden and increase that franchise.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON). The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, in the context of human history, it was not so long ago that the mere concept of having the right to vote was scarcely imaginable for most people. Even in America, the world's greatest democracy, half our citizenry was denied the right to vote until the 19th amendment was ratified early in the 20th century.

At the outset of the 21st century, we still have work to do to ensure that all Americans who are eligible to vote, who have the right to vote, do indeed have their votes counted on election day—counted, I hasten to add, within an election system in which the integrity of the process is not in question, so voters can know their right to vote is not diminished through fraud committed by others, nor diminished through error, poor procedures, or faulty equipment.

This is the mission that Senator DODD, Senator BOND, Senator SCHUMER, Senator TORRICELLI, and I tasked ourselves with in crafting the bipartisan legislation before the Senate today. We sought to make American election systems more accurate, more accessible, and more honest. And we worked to achieve these ambitious goals within the framework of legislation which both sides of the aisle could support and which would not financially crush the states who will be changed with its implementation.

None of us got everything we wanted in this bill, not even close. There are things in this bill that one or more of us are not big fans of. But that was the price for putting this bipartisan bill together.

The Dodd-McConnell bill is a comprehensive compromise. In other words, it is a target-rich environment for amendments—legitimate, germane, relevant, even laudable efforts to make the bill better, or worse, depending on one's perspective. I myself could easily come up with a couple dozen amendments. My staff already has, just in case. If the Senate passed them all we would, in my view, have crafted the perfect election reform bill.

Regrettably, we all have different notions of what comprises perfection in this realm. So in the interest of advancing a pretty darn good election reform bill, I will not be offering my two dozen meticulously-crafted, well-intentioned amendments to make the bill absolutely perfect.

Senator BOND, who has done tremendous work in making sure that the effort to make voting easier is balanced with provisions to make vote fraud harder, could certainly offer up some excellent amendments to go further in that direction. I think the Senate should do more to reduce vote fraud but, realistically, we are not going to get everything we want in that regard through this Senate. The Dodd-McConnell bill does a lot which is worthwhile, overdue and, significantly, is doable.

This quest for election reform has its roots in the photofinish 2000 presidential election that culminated in the protracted battle over Florida's electoral votes. While that saga was playing out, some of us in the Senate began formulating reform legislation to make a recurrence less likely in the future and to make improvements in the system that election officials in the states have long known needed to be made but for a variety of reasons, primarily financial, were not done. Over a year ago, Senator TORRICELLI and I proposed a comprehensive election reform bill. Last May, Senator TORRICELLI and I joined with Senator SCHUMER to put together yet another bill. The McConnell-Schumer-Torricelli bill garnered even more bipartisan support with a remarkable cosponsorship list of 71 cosponsors, a solid roster fairly even between Republicans and Democrats. Senator DODD, meanwhile, headed up an effort that had much in common with the McConnell-Schumer-Torricelli approach, but was distinct in important ways, and gathered all the Democrats behind it. Between our bills and others introduced in the past year, we come into this floor debate with over 90 Senators having cosponsored some version of election reform. That is a ringing, approaching unanimous, endorsement for serious election reform.

All of my colleagues who have worked to advance election reform and get us to this point deserve thanks. Most especially, Senator DODD, the Chairman of the Rules Committee, whose dogged determination to put together a consensus these past few months has paid off. He was so focused in pursuit of a bill that as the weeks were going by in December without an agreement, it occurred to me that he would never let up and I might have to spend Christmas around his conference table. Fortunately, there is a Santa Claus and his present to me was a ticket home to Kentucky for Christmas, a bipartisan election reform bill in the can, and CHRIS DODD off my back. I say that, of course, with humor and only the greatest respect for the chairman's tireless effort.

The Dodd-McConnell bill is legislation that the entire Senate can be proud of supporting, and pass knowing that it would significantly improve America's election systems. Americans should also take note that the chairman is a champion in promoting accessibility in elections, a real hero to America's disabled community for whom the right to vote can be difficult to exercise. This bill reflects his commitment in this respect as well. The Dodd-McConnell bill before the Senate incorporates three key principles contained within the original McConnell-Torricelli bill put together over a year ago.

No. 1, Respect for the primary role of the States and localities in election administration. The Constitution's 10th amendment too often get short-shrift around here, but we tried mightily in this compromise to respect it. I will say this bill treads more than I would like on state prerogative but it does so a good deal less than with some of the interest groups out there would like and which some other bills have proposed.

No. 2, Establishment of an independent, bipartisan commission—comprised of two Democrats and two Republicans appointed by the President—to provide ongoing election assistance to the states, in the form of grants and as a clearinghouse for information on new technologies and effective election procedures.

The point to this, in my view, was to have one place in the country, a repository of objective advice, where State and local officials, who are constantly confronted by vendors trying to sell them one election system or another, could go for objective advice. Nobody is selling anything at this commission—just giving objective advice about what kind of upgrade, if any, is necessary to improve the election system in a particular State.

As Chairman DODD can attest, I fervently believe that for long-term reform of election systems, we need a permanent repository for the best, unbiased, objective information that states can tap into the future. At present, the typical county-level or State official is besieged by commercial vendors who want to sell their product, balloting machines and the other implements of election administration. The new commission in the Dodd-McConnell bill will provide objective, state-of-the-art information that can be weighed against whatever sales pitch is coming from vendors.

No. 3, Strong anti-fraud provisions to clean-up voter rolls and ensure integrity in American elections.

We want eligible people to vote. Dogs, cats and cadavers are making far too many appearances in American elections, even though a constitutional amendment giving them a right to vote has not been enacted.

As good as the Dodd-McConnell bill is, and as high as my hopes are that it will result in much better election systems in America, we should temper somewhat the expectations it may raise. We cannot legislate perfection in this arena. Voters are imperfect people whose ballots are counted by imperfect people and tabulated by machines created and maintained by imperfect people. If in the future another presidential election comes down to the wire, with an electorate comprised of hundreds of millions of people virtually evenly split in their candidate preference, then there could well be some controversy in arriving at a conclusion.

In the meantime, the Dodd-McConnell bill would go a long way in making elections better, more accessible, more accurate and more honest. And it would prevent some of the chaos in close, competitive elections. If we can do that, I would call that a pretty good day's work in the Senate.

Again, I compliment Chairman DODD for his persistence in getting us to the point we are, and I thank particularly Senator BOND, Senator SCHUMER, and Senator TORRICELLI.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the compromise amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 565, the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act of 2001. I am proud to join Senators DODD, McCONNELL, SCHUMER, BOND, and TORRICELLI in co-sponsoring this historic piece of legislation designed to improve our Nation's voting practices and procedures. I am glad that we are addressing this issue now, and hope that legislation is enacted soon. In many states, voters will go to the polls this year using much of the same equipment as was used in 2000, which will result in many of the same problems. Our purpose here today is to prevent the problems of the Year 2000 election from occurring in the future.

While we all remember the "butterfly ballots" and "hanging chads" of Florida, we must also consider the facts that show the problems of Election 2000 were nationwide. In Chicago and Cook County, Illinois, nearly 123,000 presidential votes went uncounted, and in Fulton County, Georgia, one of every 16 ballots for president was invalidated. The General Accounting Office found that 57 percent of jurisdictions nationwide had major problems in Election 2000. The MIT/Caltech Voting Project estimates that 4 to 6 million votes were lost. During two hearings by the Senate Commerce Committee, our witnesses testified that many of these problems were caused by outdated and inaccurate lever and punch card voting machines, distinct inadequacies in poll worker and voter education, and confusion over election administration and voting registration procedures. I believe that the mandatory standards and federal grant programs found in the compromise amendment I am cosponsoring will play an important role in resolving these problems in the future.

However, I am concerned that this bill will not address the concerns of disabled voters, who time and again confront physical barriers when they attempt to vote. Disabled voters should not be forced to bring their own ramps to polling places, go through alternative entrances, and put up with numerous other barriers and humiliations when they attempt to vote. According to a 2001 General Accounting Office report, 84 percent of all polling places in the contiguous United States have one or more potential impediments to disabled voters. While many of these polling places use curbside voting, many disabled voters complain that curbside voting infringes on their privacy, when they cast a ballot. So instead of voting, many disabled Americans simply stay home. According to the National Organization on Disability, 21 million voting age citizens with disabilities did not vote. President Alan Reich of the National Organization on Disability summed it up best, when he stated that "there is great irony that a person in a wheelchair can't get into some polling places, whereas a person using a guide dog can get inside, only to find out there is no accessible voting machine." I intend to offer a minor technical amendment to this legislation that I hope will resolve many of these concerns. I urge my colleagues to join me in addressing this issue.

I look forward to working with my colleagues on this historic legislation. This legislation should be addressed in a timely manner by the Senate, and I hope that the conference with the House can also be resolved soon, so that we can send a bill to the President for his signature. I am afraid that it is already too late to do much to help voters for the 2002 election, but we can and must make sure that the problems of Election 2000 are not repeated in 2004.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this title, each effective date otherwise provided under this title shall take effect 1 day after such effective date.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I am pleased to join with the Senator from Colorado in sponsoring this important amendment to reserve voting rights for our service men and women.

I yield the floor to the sponsor.

Mr. DODD. Is the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire the same amendment as the amendment of the Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is addressing the matter of election reform. Like carpenters tending to their tools or fishermen working on their nets, this Nation's government must constantly maintain and improve the voting rights of American citizens, the very basis of our democracy.

I am pleased with the work of Senators MCCONNELL and DODD and others on the bill before us. Nobody who has ever participated in an election in any serious way, running, campaigning, judging, and so on, would believe that our system is perfect. It is based on a sound framework, but the devil in the details requires constant exorcism.

Today we are moving to address in this body various problems that have come to our attention, some of them alarmingly so in the November 2000 elections.

I have been in contact with the Colorado Secretary of State, and local election officials, and I know that there are problems on a federal level, on the state level, and the local level. Everybody from county clerks to Senate Rules Committee chairmen have recognized the faults that currently call for correction.

As a Member of the Senate Armed Services, I paid special attention to the complaints I heard from our uniformed services men and women. Without undue politicalization, I believe it is appropriate to at least allude to the spectacle of campaign lawyers hovering over election officials with preprinted military absentee ballot challenge forms. I understand that in an election every opportunity available will be utilized. I think, however, that this body should undertake efforts to ensure that military service men and women are given all due chances to exercise their right to vote.

Now, this body has tried to do so. Last year, during consideration of the Defense Authorization, the Senate passed a bipartisan amendment strongly supported by Chairman DODD and Senator MCCONNELL that significantly improved the voting rights of military service members. I was pleased at this passage, and so were the various military support groups, veterans organizations, and others who contacted me with their notes of encouragement and support.

Unfortunately, in conference the House refused to accept two of the provisions. I believe their position on this matter was not the correct one. I think they were seriously wrong. And so we must try again.

My current amendment, cosponsored by Senators BOB SMITH, PHIL GRAMM, ALLEN, ROBERTS, COCHRAN, COLLINS, and LUGAR, is another attempt to legislate protection for our military voter's franchise.

The first section prohibits a State from disqualifying a ballot based upon lack of notarization, postmark, address, witness signature, lack of proper postmark, or on the basis of comparison of envelope, ballot and registration signatures alone, these were the basis for most absentee ballot challenges.

There has been report after report of ballots mailed, for instance from deployed ships or other distant postings, without the benefit of postmarking facilities. Sometimes mail is bundled, and the whole group gets one postmark, which could invalidate them all under current law. Further, military "voting officers" are usually junior ranks, quickly trained, and facing numerous other responsibilities.

We can not punish our service personnel for the good faith mistakes of others.

The second section addresses a certain group of voters who can slip through the cracks. Military voters who are discharged and move before an election but after the residency deadline cannot vote through the military absentee ballot system, and sometimes are not able to fulfill deadlines to establish residency in a State.

This language allows them to register absentee and vote in person at their new polling place. This brings military voters into their new community quicker.

The third section contains language denying States the ability to deny a military ballot because it is mailed in too early. There are very good administrative reasons why early ballots are prohibited in some cases, but there are better reasons why we should offer uniform voters—who are subject to rapid deployments, temporary duties, and unexpected assignment changes, the option to secure their vote by mailing their ballot when they can, even if it is early.

Finally, given all the changes considered and passed by the Congress in various vehicles, I have included language directing the DoD to mail a copy of current military voter laws to every state to be distributed to each voting jurisdiction. I think it would be a good idea to assist State Secretaries of States in their duties and clarify Congressional intent by codifying all the modifications.

Given the current deployment schedule of our armed forces, I can conceive of no time more urgent than the present to let our men and women in uniform know that the government of the United States will not tolerate any appearance of a challenge to their voting rights. I urge acceptance of this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of Senator ALLARD's efforts to protect the voting rights of our military men and women. It would be a pretty empty debate on election reform if the Senate ignored the discrimination that military voters suffered in the last Presidential election and, indeed, I would say probably have suffered in the past, in prior elections.

I visited Afghanistan just a month or so ago and saw the circumstances that those men and women were under out there. Had that been at election time, I can imagine how difficult it might have been to make all the arrangements to get ballots to these people, get these ballots out, get them back, and have them counted on time. I think it is important to understand it is the spirit and intent that matters. If a person is trying to get his or her ballot in and it gets in a day or so late but it is in time to be counted, then we ought to err on the side of caution for the military person who is out there putting his or her life on the line for us every day.

I can speak from firsthand experience. I was aboard a ship during the Vietnam war. Although that was not an election time at the time I was out at sea, there were periods of time when we were out at sea for 3 weeks, sometimes longer, with no access to any mail or the opportunity to get any mail off the ship. So had I been in a situation where the Presidential election or any other election was going on during that time, there may have been a time when I might not have been able to get a ballot off the ship. So I think we have to err on the side of caution and make absolutely certain we go out of our way to make sure these ballots are counted.

That is what the Allard-Smith amendment is. I am proud to support it and proud to have my second-degree amendment to be sure we get a vote on this very important measure.

The uniformed services election reform amendment is a comprehensive package for all of our military voters. Section 401 of the amendment provides, for example, that a State may not disqualify a military absentee ballot for some technical reason.

Stop to think about it. Maybe somebody didn't put his name on right or something—some technical reason. Think about the circumstances where, for a smudge, for example, or something might be a technical violation, that ballot could have come out of the mud of Afghanistan, making its way perhaps through rain or sleet or snow or some other way to get to a vehicle, perhaps to a helicopter and then out of there and over to some other location where it can eventually make its way back to Florida or Colorado or New Hampshire or wherever the votes are supposed to be counted. That is a long trek through some very difficult conditions sometimes.

I think it is sad that this new provision of law is necessary. Really, reasonable people ought to make reasonable efforts to count the ballots of our military. We saw, unfortunately, that didn't happen. In Florida, military voters were systematically disenfranchised and there was an organized effort even to refuse to count these ballots. I find that outrageous. There is some irony that all this effort took place in Florida, to disenfranchise military voters, and now look what happened just 9 months later, 9-11. I wonder what some of those same people who refused to count military ballots and were looking for excuses not to count them might be saying right now.

There are no allegations of military voter fraud. That is not the issue. There is a difference between fraud and trying to disqualify ballots for every technical reason that comes down the pipe. Yet military votes were disqualified in the last Presidential election.

If, for example, someone was out at sea and the mail call was missed by an hour and because the mail call was missed by an hour a ballot may not get to the returning ship for another week or so, or perhaps even—whatever, a couple of days or weeks or whatever, and because they missed that one mail call, that means they can't get that ballot in. If it comes in a day late or an hour late or whatever, is it the intent, is it the right thing to do to count that person's ballot? Of course the answer is yes.

Section 402 provides new protections to recently separated uniformed service voters as well. It protects the rights of military voters to register to vote and request absentee ballots. It provides that the Secretary of Defense provide to the States new laws on military voting.

On April 6, I introduced a bill entitled the "Armed Forces Voting Rights Protection Act of 2001." This bill provides an amendment to the Voting Rights Act of 1965, to protect against a discriminated class of voter—the military voter. Isn't it somewhat tragic and ironic that the military voter is discriminated against?

Senator ALLARD'S amendment is more comprehensive than mine, and I am more than pleased to support his comprehensive effort to protect the voting rights of the military. The reason why the pending amendment is needed is because current law failed members of the Armed Forces in the last Federal election.

We are not making allegations against anybody about fraud. It needs to be tightened up so we can make it work so the military folks get the benefit of the doubt.

Federal law allowed military voters to be disenfranchised in the State of Florida. The pending amendment would stop discrimination against our military men and women.

Over time, the Federal Government has increased protection of the voting rights of military personnel who serve overseas. Several Federal laws have been enacted since 1942 to enable those in the military and U.S. citizens who live abroad to vote in Federal elections.

The Soldier Voting Act of 1942 was the first attempt to guarantee Federal voting rights for members of the armed services, and that law only applied during wartime. But members of the armed services were provided the use of a postage free, Federal postcard application to request that absentee ballot.

Again, when the request comes in, when you send that request out, are you in a position to get that ballot and mail it out promptly? Not if you are out on some bivouac for a week someplace or you are out in a combat zone somewhere for a month and you don't get back. It may not be convenient for you to get it back that quickly. So we need to get them out there promptly so they can get these ballots filled in and sent back. That expired at the end of World War II.

In 1986 President Reagan signed the Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Voting Act, which required the United States to permit uniformed services voters, their spouses and dependents, and overseas voters who no longer maintain a residence in the U.S., to register absentee and vote by absentee ballot for all elections for Federal office.

These Federal laws were insufficient to protect our men and women in the last election because many of these military voters were disenfranchised by canvassing boards throughout the State of Florida.

Anyway, the pending amendment fixes Federal law to prevent this discrimination. Whether it is accidental or intentional, it does discriminate against military voters stationed overseas. This law would fix that law.

Over 1,500 overseas ballots were challenged in the State of Florida during the election in 2000.

Think about that: 1,500 military ballots changed most of the time on technicalities, and many of those military men and women who served our country in some hostile environment were disenfranchised.

In Tallahassee in November of 2000, Robert Ingram, who was awarded a medal for heroism as a Navy corpsman serving in the Marines in Vietnam, said the following about Florida elections boards:

They need to count the votes for service people abroad.

It seems to me that to even allow one military ballot to be disqualified on a technical reason is really outrageous.

According to the Miami Herald of November 26, 2000:

Many canvassing boards have said, however, they followed State law to the letter in disqualifying overseas ballots with no signature, no witness, incorrect address, no postmark or date and a variety of other problems.

Let me focus on one from my own personal experience. When I was aboard ship, you would give a letter to the so-called mailperson on the ship. If he didn't take that down and postmark it that particular day, he might carry it around for a couple or 3 days. Why? Because the mail is not picked up from off the ship. It doesn't happen until you enter port. If you are not going to enter port for 3 days, why postmark it the day it was picked up from you as the person who is mailing the letter?

That is what could happen. That is one example of why the postmark should not be a criteria for why we take a person's right to vote. The pending amendment would fix that law.

The Miami Herald did not cite actual fraud to disqualify 1,500 votes, mere technicalities in the State law.

The pending amendment repairs this problem with Federal law and does not allow a ballot to be disqualified without "evidence of fraud."

If there is evidence of fraud, absolutely the ballots would be disqualified. I think if there is any suggestion, or any indication, or any evidence whatsoever that there was fraud committed, disqualify them. Fraud applies to everybody—military or nonmilitary. If you commit fraud, your ballot shouldn't be counted.

There is evidence that there was a coordinated effort to disenfranchise our military voters, I am sad to say.

Former Montana Governor Mark Racicot said last fall:

In an effort to win at any cost, the Vice President's lawyers launched a State-wide effort to throw out as many military ballots as they can.

Forty percent of the 3,500 overseas ballots in Florida were thrown out in November of 2000 for technical reasons.

You can go on and on. There is plenty of indication. We don't need to go through all of it.

Felon convictions ranged from murder to rape and drunk driving. What crime did our military personnel commit? I can understand why you wouldn't put a ballot in the hands of a rapist or a murderer or a drunk so he could vote. But no such crimes were committed by our military.

It is not a crime to volunteer to serve in the military. Every vote must count including our military votes.

Basically, the ballots in Florida were disqualified for two reasons: The requirement that ballots must be postmarked by election day, and failure to either have a proper signature or date on the actual ballot. Neither of these issues are currently addressed in the Federal law. So this changes that. Federal law leaves details to the State, such as postmark requirements and authentication of ballots.

In conclusion, I ask that voting rights be restored to our military voters.

This is not something that anybody should oppose. It is not controversial, in my view. I think the Senator from Colorado has a good amendment. It is the least we can do. The statute did not cover it. People got a little bit excited in the heat of a political campaign and were trying to disqualify ballots, or qualify ballots, whatever the case may have been and on whichever side you were on, and the military was caught in the middle. That is not right. We owe it to our service men and women to at least allow them to participate in this great Republic that they sacrifice so much to defend.

I am pleased to support the Allard amendment.

If it is appropriate, I will ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment at this point.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I am proud to co-sponsor this amendment with my friend and colleague Senator ALLARD, who has been involved deeply in this issue from the first whispers of improprieties following the 2000 election.

Like him and many Americans, my conscience was struck by the failure of our voting system as a whole. The inadequacies exposed in Florida may well have been found in any election district in any county in any state in the Union. While my state of Indiana has been hard at work remedying its own shortfalls, it is essential that coupled with important changes we made as part of the FY 2002 Defense Authorization bill, we take the steps outlined in this amendment to improve the lot of the military voter.

We live in the 21st Century. We are used to instantaneous information and communication and data exchanges. We hold ourselves up as an example to the world in the area of free and fair elections. Everyone can vote, we say. Register, show up at the polls. Or, if you are not going to be in your home state, you can get a paper ballot through the mail and send it in. Simple.

Unfortunately, the reality has been much more complicated. In fact, as recent history has indicated and any military member deployed overseas can tell you, it's not simple. Depending on the election year, DoD goes to varying lengths to get the word out to the individual service members, however, there is no real oversight and many times the Sailor, Soldier, Airman or Marine in the weeks leading up to the election is far away from a polling place without the materials he or she needs to register or vote.

For the overseas military voter, registering and voting is a multi-step process that can take months: first, a member must register to vote; second, a member must request an absentee ballot for each election and its primary; third, the ballot must be received from the local voting jurisdiction; fourth, a member must complete that ballot and get it in to his or her election Board in the allotted time; and last, the ballot is subject to a myriad of state and local election board requirements.

With mail delays, remote deployments and other very real circumstances, it can take literally months to complete the multi-step process. And, in the end, a military voter has no idea whether that ballot was received and counted, or disqualified because of some obscure state standard for those ballots. Some jurisdictions, as we saw in Florida, execute a stringent checklist on each ballot to ensure that it meets exacting standards, unbeknownst to the servicemember.

To say the least, military voters need to plan ahead, especially when they are going to be deployed during an election. Certainly, the right to vote implies some level of responsibility for the member, but even such matters as the proximate scheduling of primary and general elections in some states renders obsolete even the most prudent planning. This is further complicated by run-offs and local ballot issues, making even a 45-day turnaround, the recommended standard, challenging.

This amendment, coupled with the changes we made in the fall, will help alleviate this situation for the 2.7 million military members and their families who may at some time in their careers be sent overseas.

The Government Accounting Office, the Reserve Officers Association, the Carter-Ford Commission and others discuss each of the shortfalls we seek to correct. And, as my colleague from Colorado has stated, we are looking for very modest changes.

Among the provisions we are advocating, Senator ALLARD's amendment clarifies the standards that states must follow when processing the ballots for our military personnel, and in maintaining their registrations following discharge or release from active duty. All states should use the same checklist when evaluating a ballot in a federal election, and it should not be promulgated only during recount proceedings.

Fairness and simplification is important. But even as we tout its merits and strive for simplification, we must maintain a cautious eye on ensuring an accurate list of qualified voters. Fraud happens. As we watch the trend toward more permissive absentee voting, the opportunities to commit fraud could very well expand. The Allard amendment is thoughtful about balancing procedural simplification and standardization with the imperative to prevent fraud.

I strongly encourage my colleagues, on behalf of the men and women in uniform who are serving overseas today and those who will be in the remote corners of the globe in future election seasons, to support this amendment.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I don't know of any reason why we can't accept the amendment. I commend both my colleagues. I know this was offered earlier in the Armed Services Committee, and for reasons that the Senator from Colorado may be more aware of as a member of the committee, getting rid of what they considered to be extraneous amendments may have been the rationale.

But I think our colleagues pointed out good rationale as to why it is worthwhile. In fact, the basic thrust of this bill that Senator MCCONNELL and I are trying to address is why the two friends offered this amendment; that it ought to be easier to cast the ballots. Too often I think these places can be less than user friendly when it comes to exercising one's franchise. Rejection on minor technicalities and discarding someone's effort to express a choice in an election is something we need to minimize, to put it mildly.

I support the amendment. I am happy to accept it, if the Senator wants to do it that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were requested.

Is there a sufficient second?

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I didn't formally request it. I said if it is appropriate, I would do it. I withdraw my request.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I am certainly pleased to hear the chairman of the committee, Senator DODD, indicate that he is willing to accept the amendment.

I congratulate the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New Hampshire. When this amendment was offered last year, there was a significant effort to derail it. I think that as a result of the hard work of the Senator from Colorado—I see the Senator from Kansas who is deeply interested in this issue is in the Chamber. They were all chagrined, as I recall, that it was lost in conference on the DOD authorization bill. I think as a result of their perseverance and coming back here today and pressing forward, it seems as if we are on the verge of having it accepted.

I think it is a tribute to the Senators from Colorado, Kansas, and New Hampshire. I thank all three of them.

I see the Senator from Kansas. He might want to address this issue before we wrap it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. I thank the Chair, and I thank my distinguished friend from Colorado. Addressing this issue is certainly long overdue. If we are going to have an election reform bill, the very definition of election reform begins with the intent of my friend's legislation.

As most marines know, there are no ex-marines. There are only former marines. As a veteran and as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I recalled what happened in our last election to military personnel.

We witnessed a travesty. Election officials in some areas of the country failed to count thousands of military absentee ballots. This is a slap in the face to the men and women who serve in the armed forces protecting American interests.

We must respect the constitutional rights of all citizens—especially those in uniform defending our country. It seem to me that a very basic Constitutional right was abrogated. This amendment achieves the goal of giving military personnel the confidence that their vote matters.

It ensures that military personnel have the right to cast votes in local, state and federal elections, and makes certain those votes are counted. It extends voter registration, absentee ballot protections, and requires that states prove fraud before disqualifying votes in federal elections.

Until recently, we took for granted the sacrifices our military made on a daily basis. The supreme purpose of the federal government is defense of our homeland. Give those who defend our homeland the same rights and privileges ordinary citizens enjoy.

Consider a 1952 letter written by a former member of this body, which pertains to this issue:

Many of those in uniform are serving overseas, or in parts of the country distant from their homes. They are unable to return to their states either to register or to vote. Those risking their lives deserve to exercise the right to vote. The least we can do at home is make sure they can enjoy the rights they are preserving.

President Harry Truman penned those words. His support of the military vote was so strong that he signed the Federal Voting Assistance Act into law in 1955. That legislation laid the groundwork for the 1975 Overseas Citizens Voting Rights Act, and it is now being improved the Senator from Colorado and others who are cosponsoring this bill.

Voting is the cornerstone of democracy. Before passing any piece of this legislation, we must first show our appreciation to service men and women by letting them know that their vote is a right, not a privilege.

So again, I credit the distinguished Senator from Colorado, and all those involved—Senator SMITH, Senator MCCONNELL, and the distinguished chairman, who I know is also very supportive.

I am very proud to have my name as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Florida). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kansas for his gracious remarks and really appreciate him working with us on this particular issue. I also thank the Senator from New Hampshire for all his help. I particularly thank the chairman for his support, and the ranking Republican Senator, Mr. MCCONNELL, for his help in relation to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. If I could have the indulgence of the leader, I would like to share a personal anecdote that does not relate to voting but relates to smudges and things that may occur from time to time.

For military personnel, as you know, some of the ballots were disqualified because of a smudge mark or something not clearly readable.

In 1945, when my father was killed at the end of the Second World War in a plane crash in the Chesapeake Bay—serving in all of his combat missions, he was killed in a military aircraft that went down in the Chesapeake Bay—his body was recovered 2 days later. Of course, in the recovery of his body, they recovered his wallet.

My mother—who was then a young widow with two boys—had to follow the limousine from Virginia back to the funeral parlor in Trenton, NJ, where my father was buried. She had no money for gasoline because we could not use it then; you had to use stamps. The only stamps she had were the stamps from my father's wallet.

After filling up with gas, when she went into the gas station to present those stamps, the attendant would not take the stamps because he said he could not read them; they were smudged.

My mother never forgot that story. Until almost the day she died, she talked about it, about how much that hurt her, that no matter how much pressure was put on that attendant, he refused to accept those stamps.

So I think we have to err on the side of caution for our military. They go through a lot. There is a lot of sacrifice. That story was not about a ballot, but it was about a document, if you will.

So I really appreciate the support of Senator DODD and Senator MCCONNELL and Senator ALLARD and others for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, if there is no further debate, I ask that we vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2861.

The amendment (No. 2861) was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the Allard amendment No. 2858, as modified.

The amendment (No. 2858), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today to talk about the measure that is before us. I have had the pleasure of coming to this Chamber on several occasions to talk about it as we prepared to move forward.

I think it is vitally important that we have taken up this extremely important measure so early in this session. It is not the first bill to be considered, but it is probably the first new one to be considered after the others that have carried over.

I offer my very special thanks to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Kentucky for the great work and effort they have put in on this legislation. We have also worked with the Senator from New York, Mr. SCHUMER, and the Senator from New Jersey, Mr. TORRICELLI, because we are all concerned about assuring that we safeguard the most important right that a citizen in a democracy such as ours has; and that is the right to select the leadership, the right to select those who represent them.

Today, together, we are in the process of delivering on the promise that for all Americans we want to make it easier to vote and harder to cheat. I think that is what the American people want: Every American citizen—appropriate age, appropriate qualifications, properly registered—ought to be able to cast a ballot without difficulty. They also ought to be able to do that only once. That is the other part. We should, and we will in this bill, make it very hard for people to cheat. We know that every fraudulent vote cast dilutes the rights of those who cast lawful ballots.

The Missouri Court of Appeals, on election day in November 2000, was presented with a case where an order was entered in St. Louis City Circuit Court to keep the polls open. The court of appeals was very clear. They expressed what higher courts in this land have expressed previously; that is, if you permit people to vote more than once, to vote in the name of a dead person, a nonexistent person, or even a dog, as we have talked about previously in this Chamber, you are diluting and, thus, devaluing the vote of those who cast their vote legally, who have a right to vote, who have a right to have their voice counted, and counted once.

I think we have accomplished this goal. We have worked long and hard. As we know, there has already been one amendment offered that has been acceptable to both sides to improve this bill. So we are not saying that this has dealt with every area. I know there will be several other questions and concerns raised. But I think we have a very good foundation which will move the process forward.

I am not a member of the Rules Committee, nor prior to the year 2000 did I consider myself an expert on election reform.

I first saw the corrosive effects of potential fraud in the 1972 election, when I was running for Governor of Missouri. My opponent engineered an effort to keep the polls open late in St. Louis.

We thought we were doing well, but they kept voting in the city of St. Louis, which runs about 70 percent or more Democratic. We were concerned. The polls stayed open until, as I recall, late in the evening. It finally appeared that there had been enough of a margin in the votes that rolled up out in the State that there were not, even laughably, enough votes in St. Louis to turn it around. So they finally shut it down.

I was elected. I went on to say we were going to clean up the State of Missouri. When I had the power to appoint the election board, as I did in the city of St. Louis, the county of St. Louis, Kansas City, Jackson County—I appointed good, solid Republicans for the Republican positions, and I took the nominations of Democratic members of the Missouri General Assembly to appoint good, solid Democrats.

One of the best protections we have in the voting process is to have good, solid Republicans and good, solid Democrats watching each other, making sure that neither side cheats. That is important.

I am pleased to say that during the 8 years I served as Governor, I thought Missouri ran elections pretty well.

Let's fast forward 28 years: Same State, same city, same play called from the same vote fraud playbook.

I saw firsthand an effort to influence an election illegally. On election day, we heard, in advance, there was going to be a lawsuit filed, as reports circulated throughout the day that they expected there would be voting "irregularities." And sure enough, they went into court.

It was the Gore-Lieberman team that went into court in St. Louis. Fourteen minutes later they filed an almost identical suit in the city of Kansas City, again an overwhelmingly Democratic area. The suit was thrown out in Kansas City.

In St. Louis, they entered an order keeping the polls open. Surprisingly enough, they had recorded messages from Rev. Jesse Jackson being played on the radio saying you can vote until 10 or you can vote down at the election board until midnight. It seems they planned this in advance. The contention they took to the judge was that the Democratically appointed election board in the city of St. Louis was conspiring to prevent the overwhelmingly Democratic voters of St. Louis from voting for the Democratic ticket and therefore they needed to keep the polls open so they could continue to vote.

If you are going to cheat in an election, you don't go into an area where you have an overwhelming number of your votes and have your people conspire to keep your voters from voting for your candidates. Nevertheless, they introduced the measure, and it was ultimately—very shortly, fortunately—overturned by the Missouri Court of Appeals.

This was truly extraordinary. But, frankly, it underscored for me the fact that vote fraud is not merely something to be studied in the history books. You have all heard that joke in various parts of the country—I have used it in some areas in Missouri—I am so committed to politics, when I die I want to be buried in a certain county or even in a certain State because I want to be able to continue voting from the grave.

That is a joke that, unfortunately, was alive and well in St. Louis.

Here is what happened. The day before the 2000 election, there was a prediction that there would be so much confusion on election day that a lawsuit would be necessary to keep the polls open. This candidate for office said: If it requires keeping the polls open a little longer, we are going to get a court order to do it.

Sure enough, as predicted, on election day there was much confusion, some of it from people bussed in. A lawsuit was filed to keep the polls open late. This is where it really gets interesting.

The plaintiff in the case was a man named Robert D. Odom. His lawyer claimed that Robert D. Odom could not vote because of the long lines and feared his client would be unable to vote unless the polls were kept open late. But what we discovered was that Mr. Robert D. Odom's real problem was not that he faced long lines at the polling place. That was not his problem. The main reason that Robert D. Odom was unable to vote had to do with the fact that he had been dead for a year and a half.

Long after the court case was thrown out, when confronted with the uncomfortable fact of the death of Robert D. Odom, Mr. Odom's attorney admitted the mistake, one he never bothered to share with the presiding judge or the court to correct the record. The plaintiff seeking relief, according to that lawyer, wasn't Robert D. Odom. The attorney claimed it was actually Mr. Robert M. Odom, also known in local political circles as Mark Odum, a political operative for a candidate Lacy Clay, who was successful as Democratic candidate for Congress in that election. The plaintiff's identity only raised more troubling questions. The more we dug, the more we found.

In the case of Mark Odom, the Congressman today, we found, despite his plea to the courts for relief from the lines that were too long at the local polling places, the evidence showed that Mr. Odom had in fact already voted earlier that day. The evidence is his own signature on a signature card retrieved from his own polling place.

Certainly we hope he was not trying to vote a second time. What we witnessed in St. Louis was a premeditated effort to keep the polls open late in St. Louis, an overwhelmingly Democratically controlled city, because an aide to a Democratic candidate for Congress feared he would be unable to vote even though he had already voted that day. It sounds incredible, but that is the record. It is right there in the record, and we have the court transcript and the documents to prove it. The judge approved the scheme. The polls were kept open late, until the effort was overturned in the evening.

The effort to keep the polls open late in St. Louis was not the only "irregularity" we saw on election day. Elsewhere in town, a panel of city judges was rubber-stamping court orders to allow unregistered people to vote. The Missouri Constitution says you have to be registered. So they went in, and the secretary of state's office reviewed the applications filed by 1,233 St. Louis city and county residents who were allowed to vote, even though they were not registered to do so.

Here are some of the reasons given to judges for people who failed to register before the deadline passed and were the bases for circuit judges in St. Louis ordering them to be allowed to vote:

I want a Dem President.

I did not know it was required.

I was a felon. I was released on November 1999, and I didn't know that I had to register again to vote.

Parenthetically, you are not permitted to vote if you are a convicted felon unless you have been pardoned.

I was late registering due to me were going through a mental disorder.

Do you know what the city judges did? They rubber-stamped these requests, even though they failed to meet the clear standards under State law for court orders to vote. Only 35 of the 1,268 court orders to vote met the legal standard set by Missouri law.

All of the evidence gathered by Missouri's Secretary of State indicates it was no accident that hundreds, if not thousands, of unregistered people showed up in front of judges willing to rubber-stamp these requests. No accident, indeed. The evidence indicates that there was a premeditated effort to organize the delivery of these illegal voters to the polls, where they would be welcomed by judges all too willing to disregard the law and grant them illegal court orders.

That wasn't the extent of it. The investigation of the secretary of state turned up some truly amazing things: 62 Federal felons voted in that election, along with 52 State felons, people who are not legally entitled to vote; 68 people voted twice; 14 dead people cast votes—I have heard of people with an undying commitment to politics, but that is carrying it a little too far—79 people registered to vacant lots in the city of St. Louis voted in the election; 45 of the city's election judges were not registered to vote as they are required to do in order lawfully to hold the position of election judge; the discovery of 250 addresses that are not identified as apartments from which 8 or more individuals are registered to vote. A random sampling of 54 of these locations indicates that 14 of them might have been used as drop sites for multiple false voter registrations.

All this is only what we know from the press and the public reports. There may be more. There is an ongoing Federal investigation. We don't know what the results of that will be. We can't say. Frankly, we had a very active and alert press corps that began to dig out some of these things and helped bring to the attention of the secretary of state and others what was going on.

Sadly, this vote fraud was not a one-time occurrence in November of 2000. The specter of vote fraud returned to St. Louis as the flowers in the spring. Just before the daffodils were coming up, probably the crocuses, we saw suspect voter mail-in registrations to vote. On the very last day to register to vote before the mayoral primary, someone dropped off 3,000 voter registration cards, most for purported would-be voters in the third and fifth wards north of St. Louis, on 2 specific streets, most written with identical handwriting. And as it turns out, almost every single one of them was fraudulent.

The brazenness of that vote fraud is stunning. One of the fraudulent voter registration cards belonged to what was purported to be a reregistration of the late city alderman, Alberto "Red" Villa. It might have been about the 10th anniversary of his death—certainly, a theologically significant date, but not significant in terms of qualifying for registration. There was a registration card belonging to the deceased mother of another city alderman also found among the 3,000 dropped off on the last day of voter registration.

Yes, even in this day and age, just because you die is not grounds to disqualify you from voting in St. Louis, because everybody knows how you would have voted if you had been there.

Now, it seems that in some places nobody gets stirred up by vote fraud during general elections between Democrats and Republicans. But watch out if it happens during a Democratic primary for mayor because that is real jobs and patronage at stake.

After the shocking attempts to steal the mayoral primary race in St. Louis, the local press reported that the FBI had subpoenaed all of the records at the city election board for both the general election and the mayoral primary.

While we await the results of that Federal investigation, it has already provided quite an education. Some days, I feel as if my staff and I are in a graduate program at the St. Louis school of election fraud. The more we dug into the issue, the more we were able to see the size of the problem in St. Louis.

We found, for example, that the number of registered voters in the city of St. Louis threatens to outnumber the voting-age population. A total of 247,135 St. Louis residents, dead, alive, or even canine, are listed as registered voters, compared to the city's voting-age population of 258,532. That translates to a whopping 96 percent registration rate. Were that they were all legitimate registrations, that would be a tremendous mark of civic involvement and participation in St. Louis. But I am from Missouri; you have to show me that those were all one person, one registration, one vote.

Lest you think I am only talking about St. Louis, according to the Associated Press, there are 18 municipalities in Allegheny County, PA, with more registered voters than voting-age adults. Upper St. Clair has 15,361 registered voters, but, unfortunately, they only have 14,369 residents of voting age.

Back to St. Louis. About one-quarter of registered voters in that city are on the inactive voter list, meaning that the U.S. Postal Service has failed to verify that 70,000 people are actually still living at the addresses from which they registered, or even whether they are still alive.

But it gets worse. More than 23,000 people registered to vote in the city of St. Louis are also registered somewhere else in the State. That means 1 out of 10 St. Louis City voters are double registered. We saw some who were triple registered. Some were even quadruple registered.

In a review of the voter registrations, we found five Missouri voters registered at four different places in the State—certainly among our most active civic volunteers, with four different voting locations. Of course, there is my favorite case of Ritzy Mekler, a loyal St. Louis registered voter, and loyal mixed-breed canine. Yes, a dog is registered to vote in St. Louis. I have respect for the dearly departed such as Red Villa, and I like dogs, but I really don't think either one of them ought to be able to vote.

About the only thing we have not seen in St. Louis is the actual election of a dog or a dead person to political office.

Voting canines is not only a St. Louis problem. There was also the case of Cocoa Fernandez in West Palm Beach, FL. Cocoa's owner registered the dog to shed light on the "failings in our voter registration system."

Some of these cases are humorous. Others are deadly serious. For example, a Saudi man detained by Federal authorities in Denver, CO, for questioning about the September 11 terrorist attacks was found to have registered to vote at the local department of motor vehicles even though he was not a citizen. Worse yet, the records show that he actually voted in last year's Presidential election.

In Greensboro, NC, a Pakistani citizen with links to two of the September 11 hijackers was indicted by a Federal grand jury for having illegally registered to vote.

It is really quite sad that in the 21st century, in the world's greatest democracy, we still tolerate woefully tangled and fouled up voter registration systems that all but invite vote fraud.

I have recounted in the last few minutes some of the stories that formed my education in vote fraud. So while many wanted to talk about Florida after the last election, I wanted to make sure we learned additional lessons from vote fraud in St. Louis and elsewhere. This is not merely a local story. The root cause of what is so terribly wrong with St. Louis elections lies in the Federal law.

More specifically, it lies within the loopholes in the Federal law. For example, Federal law actually makes it very difficult for cities such as St. Louis to maintain accurate voter registration lists. It blocks States from authenticating mail-in registration cards—the first line of defense in preventing vote fraud.

In order to prevent this kind of election scandal from occurring again in St. Louis or elsewhere, I knew we had to fight to close the election law loopholes. I had to share with my Senate colleagues what I had learned. So I testified before the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs. That brought me to tell my story of the St. Louis problems to CHRIS DODD, chairman of the Rules Committee. I told him how important the topic of election reform was to me. I told him that election reform without protections against vote fraud could not earn my support. He listened, and we talked a great deal and agreed on a formula that we believed could attract bipartisan support. We agreed to write a bill, along with Senator MCCONNELL particularly, and others, to make it easier to vote and much harder to cheat.

I think we have done that. I thank Senator DODD and Senator MCCONNELL for listening to the concerns of Missourians who were outraged by what we saw in the November 2000 elections in St. Louis. We worked closely together for several months to close loopholes while taking every precaution to protect the rights of legal voters. That is what I think we have done.

One of the most important things we did was to agree to make it easier to vote and tougher to cheat. We ought to have statewide registration systems to eliminate the patchwork overlapping of county and city voter registration lists that have resulted in the kinds of multiple registrations and the kind of confusion that certainly bedevils some legitimate voters in St. Louis and elsewhere. No longer are we going to see people registered in four, five different places in any State. We need to find out where they are living and legally registered, and get the others off the rolls so those who are entitled to vote can vote and those who are not entitled to cannot.

Registration cards will now require prospective voters to declare under penalty of perjury that they are U.S. citizens—a very simple but very important affirmation. And individuals who register by mail will be required to provide identification when they vote the first time.

Mr. President, will this stop all vote fraud in St. Louis and all American cities? Of course not. But these changes in Federal law will put power back into State and local law enforcement officials so that they can clean up their rolls.

These are commonsense measures that will strengthen safeguards that protect the ballot box. To any of my colleagues who question the need to strengthen safeguards, just look at what happened in St. Louis. Why is it acceptable to require a photo ID to board an airplane, buy cigarettes, or alcohol, but to not require some kind of identification to carry out the most important of all of our civic responsibilities?

We have a responsibility to ensure that all legally cast votes are counted and an equal responsibility to ensure that legally cast votes are not diluted, downgraded, or nullified by illegal votes. We must strengthen confidence in our voting system. People must know that their votes are actually going to be counted and not discounted.

In the wake of the St. Louis vote fraud scandal, the Missouri Court of Appeals for the Eastern District issued its ruling on the lawsuit to keep the polls open late in St. Louis. As I mentioned earlier, the court's opinion accurately characterized the task now before the Senate, each of us. I quote:

(C)ommendable zeal to protect voting rights must be tempered by the corresponding duty to protect the integrity of the voting process . . . (E)qual vigilance is required to ensure that only those entitled to vote are allowed to cast a ballot. Otherwise, the rights of those lawfully entitled to vote are inevitably diluted.

That is what we are about today. We are here to see that everybody has an opportunity to vote. We need to clean up the underbrush.

The distinguished Senator from Connecticut has taken a very strong position to ensure that those with special needs are accommodated, and this is landmark legislation to ensure that those who need special assistance or equipment can vote and can participate fully in our system.

Clearly, the steps that we are taking to regularize the registration system are going to go a long way to empower local election officials and State election officials to ensure that everybody who is entitled to vote has a chance to vote but to vote only once.

I look forward to working with my colleagues on the other important measures that will be brought before this body. I thank my colleagues who have worked so long and hard on crafting the bill that is before us, and I trust that we will wind up presenting, not only from this body but from conference with the House, a measure that will go to the President that will be signed into law to ensure that it is easier to vote and tougher to cheat.

I thank the Chair. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, in a moment, I am going to share with my colleagues some endorsements of the underlying substitute bill, the Dodd-McConnell bill, along with others who are cosponsors of the substitute. There are numerous cosponsors of this bill, and I will submit momentarily the list of all those among our colleagues who are cosponsoring this legislation.

Secondly, I will submit a list of various organizations such as the NAACP, the AFL-CIO, Public Citizen, and a lot of other groups that are endorsing the bill as well, and I will submit for the RECORD letters that these organizations have offered on behalf of this legislation. The National Civil Rights Coalition is listing this as their No. 1 legislative priority this session of Congress.

I will not read them all, but the following organizations have endorsed the Dodd-McConnell bipartisan compromise on election reform and urge the Senate to act on it: AFL-CIO, the NAACP, the Carter-Ford Commission, Public Citizen, American Association of People with Disabilities, National Federation of the Blind, the United States Cerebral Palsy Associations, People for the American Way, the League of Women Voters, the National Coalition of Black Civic Participation, the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, Laborers' International Union of North America, U.S. Public Interest Research Group, Common Cause, and a variety of Secretaries of State, both Democrats and Republicans, not all of them but some have specifically sent letters endorsing the legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that some letters expressing why they think this bill is worthy of their support be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON BUREAU, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE,

Washington, DC, February 8, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER DODD,

Chair, Senate Rules and Administration Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DODD: The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the nation's oldest, largest and most widely recognized grassroots civil rights organization, strongly supports the Dodd/McConnell/Schumer/Bond substitute to S. 565, the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act.

The NAACP is well known for being a long and steadfast champion of the American promise of the right to vote. As such, I urge you, on behalf of the more than 500,000 NAACP members across the nation, to move as quickly as possible to pass this important legislation. The sooner comprehensive election reform legislation is enacted, the more assured we can be that every eligible American who wants to vote can, and that his or her vote will be counted.

The NAACP's support of the Dodd/McConnell substitute is based on the fact that it is a balanced, comprehensive response to the problems that have plagued our national electoral system for too long. As we saw in the most recent Presidential election, states and municipalities throughout our nation need to reform their election procedures. The Dodd/McConnell substitute would require that by the year 2006 all voting machines across the nation allow the voter to verify their choices and correct errors before the ballot is cast. The legislation would further require that, by the beginning of the year 2004, all states and local jurisdictions have provisional balloting, which would allow an individual whose eligibility is in question to vote and have the vote set aside pending verification. The legislation would also require states, by January, 2004, to keep computerized voting rolls to help ensure that a state-wide list of eligible voters is readily available on election day and to help cut down on fraud or abuse.

Furthermore, the Dodd/McConnell substitute contains provisions which would dramatically increase access to the voting booths for language minority and disabled Americans. While we do have a few lingering concerns regarding specific provisions currently in the Dodd/McConnell substitute, most specifically the provision requiring that first time voters who registered by mail provide a photo identification, we are committed to working with the you and the bill's other sponsors, as well as the rest of the Senate, to improve them and build upon the bill's obvious merits as we move forward.

While the NAACP applauds and appreciates the fact that the House has already acted on election reform legislation, the final version of the bill (H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act), falls short of fixing our electoral problems and, in some instances, represents a step backwards for civil rights laws. Furthermore, H.R. 3295 does not contain any provisions to address election fraud. Due to the fundamental flaws in H.R. 3295, the NAACP was forced to join dozens of other national civil, voting, consumer and disability rights organizations, as well as major national labor and religious organizations in opposing the legislation.

I urge you again, on behalf of the NAACP and every American who is concerned about the protection of our basic democratic right to vote, to pass the strongest election reform legislation possible. The Dodd/McConnell substitute is an aggressive, comprehensive solution to many of the problems that continue to plague our nation, and I hope that you will do all you can to see that it is enacted quickly.

Thank you in advance for your attention to this matter. Please let me know if you have any questions or if there is anything more I can do for you on this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

HILARY O. SHELTON,
Director.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,

Washington DC, January 18, 2002.

DEAR SENATOR: The AFL-CIO strongly urges you to cosponsor the Dodd-McConnell substitute to S. 565, the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act, which was also sponsored by Senator Schumer, Bond, Torricelli, McCain, and Durbin.

The bipartisan substitute to S. 565 would help strengthen our democracy by requiring all states to meet three new minimum federal standards over the next few years. More specifically, this legislation would require states to create statewide voter registration lists and allow registered voters whose names do not appear on these lists to cast provisional ballots by 2004. It would also require States to use voting technology by 2006 that informs voters if they have voted for too many candidates, and allows all voters, including the disabled and language minorities, to verify their votes before casting them. In addition, this legislation would authorize federal funds to help states meet these new minimum standards and create a new commission to study various election reform issues, oversee federal elections, and disburse the new federal election reform funds.

Since the House recently passed an election reform bill (H.R. 3295) that does not include the minimum standards necessary to fundamentally improve our nation's election system, the 107th Congress will only be able to pass comprehensive election reform before the 2002 elections if the Senate acts quickly on the substitute to S. 565. While we have concerns with some of the language currently in this legislation, we are committed to working with the bill's sponsors to improve this proposal as if moves forward.

Last Election Day, countless citizens in Florida and throughout the country were denied their Constitutional right to vote by flawed voting equipment, erroneous voter registration records, and confusing ballots. While many lawfully registered voters were disenfranchised outright, others cast votes that ultimately were not counted. Now that the 2000 elections are over, we have a responsibility to use what we learned from this bitter experience to enact comprehensive election reform before the 2002 elections.

For all of these reasons, we strongly urge you to cosponsor the bipartisan Dodd-McConnell substitute to S. 565.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM SAMUEL,
Director, Department of Legislation.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES,
Washington, DC, February 11, 2002.

MEMBERS OF THE U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: The American Association of People with Disabilities (AAPD), the largest national membership organization dedicated to promoting the economic and political empowerment of all people with disabilities, strongly supports the Dodd/McConnell/Schumer/Bond substitute to S.565, the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act. On behalf of the nearly 30,000 nation-wide members of AAPD, I urge you to support this important legislation and see that it is brought before the full Senate and passed without any weakening amendments. Our support for moving this legislation to the Senate floor is conditional upon being certain that the photo i.d. requirement will have added to it an attestation allowing voters with disabilities and others who lack a photo i.d. or utility bill to confirm the validity of their registration. We feel that this important addition makes it easy to vote and hard to steal an election.

AAPD has worked to ensure that all members of the disability community cast their votes and have their votes counted. The 2000 presidential election exposed many problems in the nation's electoral system. Millions of votes were either unable to cast their votes or have their votes counted. The sooner comprehensive election reform is passed, the sooner more voters with disabilities will be able to cast their vote with the confidence that their vote was cast to their wishes and that their vote will indeed be counted.

To protect the millions of voters with disabilities and others, the substitute provides for minimum national standards in three essential, but limited areas. Including provisional ballots, statewide voter registration lists, and standards that require voting machines to inform the voter of an error and give the voter the opportunity to correct it. Such standards would also protect against high voting machine error rates.

We are particularly pleased that the substitute's standards offer millions of voters with disabilities the opportunity to cast a secret and independent ballot for the first time and that the legislation provides the states and counties with the necessary funding to make this happen. We are also pleased that the definition of disability, in the substitute bill, includes people with physical, sensory, and mental disabilities.

While AAPD is pleased that election reform has already been addressed in the House, the final version of H.R. 3295, the Help America Vote Act, falls short in fixing electoral problems for voters with disabilities. Due to the fundamental flaws in H.R. 3295, AAPD was forced to join with other national disability, civil rights, and voting groups to oppose this legislation.

I urge you on behalf of the 56 million Americans with disabilities to pass the strongest election reform bill possible. The Dodd/McConnell substitute is that bill and I hope you will do all that you can to see that it is enacted quickly.

Thank you, in advance, for your attention to this matter. Please let me know if you have any questions, or if there is anything more I can do for you on this matter.

Sincerely,

ANDREW J. IMPARATO,
President & CEO.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF THE BLIND,
Baltimore, MD, February 12, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER DODD,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to express the strong support of the National Federation of the Blind (NFB) for the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act of 2001 (S. 565), including language we requested to address the needs of people who are blind. Thanks to your efforts and understanding, this legislation points the way for blind people to vote privately and independently at each polling place throughout the United States.

While the 2000 election demonstrated significant problems with our electoral system, consensus regarding the solution has been much more difficult to find. Nonetheless, it is clear that installation of up-to-date technology will occur throughout the United States. This means that voting technology will change, and devices purchased now will set the pattern for decades to come. Therefore, requirements for nonvisual access must be an essential component of the new design. S. 565 will make this happen.

With more than 50,000 members representing every state, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico, the NFB is the largest organization of blind people in the United States. As such we know about blindness from our own experience. The right to vote and cast a truly secret ballot is one of our highest priorities, and modern technology can now support this goal. For that reason, we strongly support S. 565 now pending in the Senate.

Sincerely,

JAMES GASHEL,
Director of Governmental Affairs.

PEOPLE FOR THE AMERICAN WAY,
Washington, DC, February 12, 2002.
Hon. CHRISTOPHER J. DODD,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: On behalf of the more than 500,000 members and supporters of People For the American Way (PFAW), we write to express our strong support for the Dodd/

McConnell/Schumer/Bond substitute to S. 565, the Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act.

PFAW is especially pleased with the strong provisions of this bill which would require each state to meet a set of minimum standards when it comes to voting equipment, the training of poll workers, language minority assistance, provisional ballots, and accessibility for the disabled. We are also pleased that S. 565 contains strong language providing for provisional voting, for the posting of critical election information at polling places on Election Day and for enforcement by the Department of Justice.

We are committed to working with you, and other members of the Senate, to strengthen the bill. Specifically, we want to ensure that first time voters who have registered by mail have the maximum numbers of options available to properly identify themselves to election officials. We would especially support efforts to allow these first time voters to attest to their identity should they not have any other form of identification.

We applaud you for your tireless work in moving election reform to the top of the Congressional agenda, and your leadership and vision of this bipartisan legislation that would facilitate a full democratic participation in elections. We especially want to thank you for your commitment to work with PFAW and our allies in the civil rights, voting rights, labor, and disability communities to make necessary improvements to achieve the full potential of this legislation. We look forward to working with you throughout the legislative process to ensure that comprehensive election reform legislation is enacted.

Sincerely,

RALPH G. NEAS,
President.

STEPHANIE FOSTER,
Director of Public Policy.

UNITED CEREBRAL
PALS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, February 12, 2002.

Senator CHRISTOPHER J. DODD,
Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: On behalf of UCP, our more than 100 affiliates in over 40 States and millions of voters with disabilities, I want to congratulate you on your historic leadership in crafting the Senate bipartisan agreement on election reform.

We are deeply appreciative of your efforts to ensure that—by enacting this legislation—Americans with disabilities will have equal access to the polling place and the voting booth for the first time in history. We are proud and pleased, therefore, to lend our full support of the bipartisan substitute amendment to S. 565, which, it is our understanding, you will bring to the floor as soon as possible so that it can be debated and approved by the full Senate. We believe swift passage of this legislation is essential to strengthening the basic tools of our democracy at a time when the attacks of September 11th remind us all of how vigilant we must be in safeguarding our most basic freedoms.

The Senate bipartisan measure sets vitally needed national minimum voting rights standards. They will let every voter know that regardless of where they live neither their ethnicity nor disability will prevent them from entering their polling place and casting their ballot in privacy knowing it will be counted fairly and accurately. The provisions requiring that new voting systems be accessible and the $100 million grant program to make polling places accessible will go far to realize the full promise of the ADA to make Americans with disabilities first class citizens of our democracy. This is a critical civic lesson for America and the rest of the world as well.

We believe, however, some changes are needed in the substitute amendment to ensure that election reform goes forward in as fair and effective a manner as possible. The first of these relates to the role, which the Access Board will play in providing policy direction to the newly created federal election accessibility grant program. As drafted, the substitute amendment provides that the Attorney General will carry out the grant program consistent with policies and criteria for the approval of funding applications set forth by the Access Board. Responsibility for administering this grant program—as with the other election reform grants established by this bill—will transfer from the U.S. Justice Department to the new Election Administration Commission once it is fully functional. For clarity and continuity sake, we believe that language needs to be added to the bill to make clear that the policies and criteria set by the Access Board for the election grant program shall guide its implementation both at DOJ and the Election Administration Commission.

We also believe that changes need to be made to the provision in the substitute that would require first time voters who register by mail to produce a photo identification card when they show up at the polls or to send a copy of one or other verification of their identity by mail if they vote by secret ballot. While we recognize that this provision is meant to prevent voter fraud, we believe it would prove largely unworkable and therefore, ineffective in doing so. Moreover, we are extremely fearful that this provision would have a significant chilling effect on potential voters, including those with disabilities as well as language and ethnic minorities. Those with disabilities and others often lack formal identification cards through no fault of their own. They must not be denied their fundamental right to vote. Over half the States ensure the accuracy of the balloting process by having each voter sign a statement attesting—under penalty of law—to both their identity and eligibility to vote. This is a far more straightforward and fairer way to ensure the sanctity of elections. We urge you to support the inclusion of the same procedure in the substitute amendment.

As with any living document we believe that there may be changes that could be made to it that either significantly strengthen or undermine its basic intent. We want to urge you as its chief author and all others in the Senate to consider each amendment that may be offered very much in this light and we will keep you informed of our views on all such proposed changes as the Senate debate proceeds.

Thank you once again for your extraordinary leadership.

Sincerely,

KIRSTEN A. NYROP,
Executive Director.

THE NATIONAL COMMISSION ON FEDERAL ELECTION REFORM,
February 12, 2002.

Senator CHRIS DODD,
*U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

Senator MITCH MCCONNELL,
*U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR CHRIS AND MITCH: In 2000 the American electoral system was tested by a political ordeal unlike any in living memory. The American political system proved its resilience. But we must think about the future. We all saw that the ordinary institutions of election administration in the United States just could not readily cope with an extremely close election and had many other weaknesses.

That is why we agreed to lead the foundation-funded National Commission on Federal Election Reform. We issued our report last year and the results have been gratifying. President Bush welcomed the report and endorsed our approach. He has allocated money for election reform in his FY 2003 budget proposal. State and local officials around the country, including many conscientious election administrators, have been galvanized to action. Two months ago the House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed a bipartisan bill on election reform sponsored by Bob Ney and Steny Hoyer.

The fate of federal election reform now rests with you and your colleagues in the Senate.

We were glad to learn that both of you have worked with some of your colleagues to fashion a truly bipartisan bill for the Senate. Your staffs have asked us to comment on the relation of this effort to the Commission's goals.

Naturally your bill was a compromise. Naturally interest groups on both sides of the political spectrum find some things in it they dislike. If we had been writing the bill, we might have made some different choices too, but on the whole it is a good bill and a real improvement over the status quo.

Your bill is clearly a reasonable bipartisan vehicle for moving the legislative process forward. Its core is sound. It addresses the right issues, such as statewide voter rolls and provisional balloting. If it passes the Senate it will go to conference with the Ney-Hoyer bill. There are some aspects of Ney-Hoyer we like better. But there are also some aspects of Dodd-McConnell that have improved on the House approach. So, starting from good foundations on both sides, a conference committee should be well positioned to bring a strong bill back to each House for final approval.

The critical issue now is to get this bipartisan bill to the floor of the Senate as soon as possible. All over the country, state legislatures and county administrators are aware that federal action may be imminent. The states should continue to have the primary responsibility for administering elections, but do so in a national framework. Many of these legislators and officials are now understandably frozen about what they should be doing.

If the 107th Congress passes a bill founded on the current House and Senate bipartisan approaches, you will have achieved a landmark accomplishment. Such a law will touch every county in America—and for the good. With the exception of the civil rights laws of the 1960s, such a law could provide the most important improvements in the democratic election system in our lifetimes.

Sincerely,

GERALD R. FORD,

PUBLIC CITIZEN,
Washington, DC, January 18, 2002.

Senator CHRISTOPHER DODD,
Chairman, Senate Rules and Administration Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington DC.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: On behalf of Public Citizen, I am writing to express our strong support for taking up your election reform bill, S. 565 (substitute amendment) as quickly as possible after the Senate reconvenes next week. This bipartisan legislation, which you have done so much to forge, constitutes a major advance on the road to full democratic participation in elections. It is vastly superior to H.R. 3295, the House-passed bill because it establishes strong national voting standards, promotes coherent state and local planning for voting improvements, and includes necessary federal monitoring and enforcement.

As we work with you and the other sponsors of the bill, we are gratified by your commitment to us and other members of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights coalition to work together on the Senate floor to pass a few needed improvements in the legislation. Such changes will remove unnecessary ambiguity, ensure that the bill's goals are fully achieved, and strengthen the political position of the bill as it heads for Conference.

Thank you Senator once again for your dedication to this fundamental legislation for our democracy.

Sincerely,

JOAN CLAYBROOK,

President.

FRANK CLEMENTE,

Director, Congress Watch.

STATEMENT OF REBEKAH HARRIMAN—EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR—COMMON CAUSE/CONNECTICUT

Common Cause in Connecticut is a non-partisan citizen's lobby dedicated to ensuring that government clean, open, and accountable. Central to this mission is our belief that our democracy is participatory and inclusive to all Americans. It is entirely fitting that we come together on this day, the day the country observes the remembrance of the great Reverend Martin Luther King Jr., to show our strong support for The Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act, sponsored by Senator Dodd.

Over forty years ago, thousands of Americans dedicated and gave their lives to a movement that fought to end discrimination and ensure that every American was afforded the opportunity to vote without prejudice. Just over one year ago, hundreds of thousands of Americans were unjustly turned away from the polls or were otherwise locked out of our democracy when their votes were not counted due to faulty voting procedures. We must make every effort to ensure that this injustice does not occur again in America. The Equal Protection Voting Rights Act is strong legislation that will help ensure that every American's vote counts.

Common Cause/CT supports The Equal Protection Voting Rights Act because it would require that each state meet a set of minimum standards when it comes to voting equipment, the training of poll workers, absentee and bilingual ballots, provisional ballots, overseas voters, and accessibility for the disabled.

This legislation would be essential in Connecticut, where our voting equipment must be evaluated. In the year 2000, thousands of votes were invalidated in the presidential election because many of our states' voting systems are outdated, inconsistent, and inaccurate. Common Cause/CT believes it is essential to replace our nearly extinct voting machines and that we strive to have a uniform mechanism for voting in every precinct in Connecticut.

Another important facet of the legislation is the mandate that states compile a statewide voter list. Without a statewide centralized voter registration system that allows for the accurate and timely exchange and updating of information, too many eligible voters are turned away from the polls each election because their name was either failed to be placed on their precinct list by election day or was purged from the rolls in a careless attempt to clean up an inefficiently maintained list. The technology and the administrative know-how already exist in the state and mandating that all jurisdictions participate in the system would greatly reduce the number of Connecticut voters disenfranchised in this way.

The Equal Protection Voting Rights Act also sets an important standard by requiring states to implement provisional balloting. This would ensure that no registered voter in Connecticut is ever turned away from the voting booth.

We believe that every possible step must be taken to ensure that the election process is fair, accurate, and accessible to every voter in the country. We believe that every option must be looked at to afford the most citizens possible the ability to vote with ease and precision. The Equal Protection Voting Rights Act is the type of election reform that is essential to this process and we commend Senator Dodd for his leadership in this crucial fight for justice and equality.

THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, February 11, 2002.

Re Election Reform

MEMBERS OF THE U.S. SENATE: The League of Women Voters urges you to support the bipartisan election reform bill developed by Senators Dodd, McConnell, Bond and Schumer. The legislation will be offered as a substitute to S. 565. While the substitute is not perfect, it contains the key elements needed to improve our nation's election systems.

The 2000 election demonstrated that basic reforms are needed at the federal, state and local levels to protect voters and to improve election administration. It is also clear that it is time for the federal government to pay its fair share of the costs of administering federal elections.

The Dodd-McConnell substitute provides for basic national standards in vital, but limited, areas. It provides substantial federal funds for election reform efforts. And it provides a blueprint on which federal, state and local efforts can be built.

To protect voters and improve administration, the substitute provides for minimum national standards in three areas. First, voting systems standards will assure that voters can verify and correct their ballots, as well as be notified of overvotes. These standards also protect against high voting machine error rates and enhance access for persons with disabilities. Second, a national standard will assure that voters can receive provisional ballots. This fail-safe system means that if a voter's name is not found on the registration list at the polls, or if other problems occur, the voter can still cast a ballot that will be counted if the voter's eligibility is confirmed. Third, statewide computerized voter registration lists will be required. This facilitates removal of duplicate registrations across jurisdictions, provides greater assurance that names will be on the rolls, and streamlines administration while combating possible fraud.

The substitute provides funding through state grants programs that will be developed with public involvement. Funds are provided not only for meeting standards, but also for other vital areas of election administration, including poll worker training and providing access to the polls for persons with disabilities. The substitute sets up a new federal commission that can provide effective guidance, while Justice Department enforcement of voter protection laws, such as the Voting Rights Act, is maintained.

While the substitute is a strong bill, it contains a photo ID requirement that will result in discrimination and create real administrative problems at polling places. Though the requirement is described as an anti-fraud device, effective alternatives exist to meet anti-fraud objectives that will not undermine voter participation through absentee balloting by persons with disabilities, seniors and others. We strongly urge you to correct this provision. We are also concerned that the so-called "safe harbor" provisions of the bill will have unintended, deleterious consequences.

The League of Women Voters believes that the Senate must act expeditiously on this important topic. We urge you to move ahead with the Dodd-McConnell substitute, which is clearly preferable to the House-passed bill in setting a workable structure for reform and creating an effective election commission.

America deserves an election system that will protect the most basic and precious right of all citizens in a democracy—the right to vote. Each citizen's right to vote, and to have that vote fairly counted, is at stake.

CAROLYN JEFFERSON-JENKINS,
President.

SECRETARY OF THE STATE,
STATE CAPITOL,
Hartford, CT, January 7, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER J. DODD,
U.S. Senate, Russell Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: Thank you for your leadership in the area of election reform and for all of your hard work in developing your bi-partisan compromise on election reform. I have reviewed the language in S. 565 and I am extremely pleased with its contents, particularly with the statewide voter registration system and voting machine requirements. The federal funding provided for those and other purposes will greatly benefit Connecticut and all the states.

At the close of the 2001 legislative session, the Connecticut Legislature established a Voting Technology Alternatives Commission to study and make recommendations regarding voting technology issues. The federal guidelines and assistance provided for in S. 565 will help shape both the Commission's final recommendations and any state legislative action in this area. As a member of this Commission, I have already provided all the members of the Commission a copy of S. 565 for their review.

In addition, I will be attending the National Association of Secretaries of the State winter meeting in Washington D.C. from February 7-10 and hope to have the opportunity to meet with you. My Office will contact your staff with more details. I look forward to working with you on the important issue of election reform and I wish you well in securing its passage.

Sincerely,
SUSAN BYSIEWICZ.

SECRETARY OF STATE,
STATE CAPITOL,
Atlanta, GA, January 18, 2001.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER DODD,
Chairman, Committee on Rules and Administration, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DODD: I am pleased to write to express my support for S. 565 and for your efforts, and that of Senators McConnell, Schumer, Bond and Torricelli, to craft strong, effective and bipartisan election reform legislation.

As you are aware, Georgia has moved to the forefront among states in the drive to acquire and deploy election systems that are more accurate, more convenient and more accessible and disabled voters. With the passage of our own SB 213 last year, Georgia became the first state in the nation to mandate a modern, uniform voting system for every county and every community. This year, Governor Roy Barnes has endorsed our ambitious plan to acquire and deploy new generation electronic voting equipment (DRE) in every Georgia county in time for the November 2002 general election.

While Georgia election officials and policymakers are strongly united behind our initiative to improve voting equipment, critical to our efforts is the expectation that the federal government will be a helpful partner in advancing this goal, and will make available substantial funding to help pay for these improvements. In that regard, we were heartened by House passage of the Ney-Hoyer election reform package, and were then extremely pleased to learn that you, ranking member McConnell and others had reached bipartisan agreement on S. 565.

I believe your legislation provides an excellent platform and roadmap for election reform which, as you know, must primarily be executed at the state and local level. The funding provisions of S. 565 are outstanding, and would enable states to make much needed investments in new voting and registration systems. I also strongly support your emphasis on assuring that blind and disabled voters have a full opportunity to cast their ballots independently and without assistance. The bill's emphasis on assuring that each state has procedures under which a provisional ballot can be cast is also welcome.

While there are areas of the bill where I would prefer some modifications, (as would be the case with nearly any legislation of such magnitude and scope) it is my belief that S. 565 represents a giant step forward towards reaching our goal of designing and deploying election systems that assure that the electoral choice of each and every voter will be accurately counted.

Thank you for your steadfast leadership in moving election reform legislation forward in the United States Senate and I look forward to continuing to work with you to achieve our common goals.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,
CATHY COX.

OFFICE OF THE
Carson City, NV, January 25, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER DODD,
Chairman, Committee on Rules and Administration, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DODD: On behalf of the citizens of Nevada, I would like to express my support for Senate Bill 565, which I feel is an important step in the election reform process. I am especially impressed with the bipartisan support the bill has received, and believe wholeheartedly in many of the provisions called for in S. 565, particularly its focus on civil rights and accessibility issues. Moreover, S. 565 includes an impressive financial commitment from the federal government that will help meet the mandates outlined in the bill, thereby allowing Nevada counties to update antiquated equipment with the latest technology without bearing the enormous cost of undertaking such a project on their own.

I would like to personally thank you for asking for my opinion and thoughts on the legislation. I believe very strongly that as secretaries of state, it is important for us to work as closely as possible with members of Congress as they seek to enact real and meaningful federal voter protections and reform. I hope that as deliberations progress in the House and Senate, secretaries of state will continue to be asked by Congress to add their important voices and experience to the discussions.

The bipartisan leadership demonstrated by you and Senators McConnell, Schumers, Bond and Torricelli and other members of the U.S. Senate in crafting a package that would be a positive step in the election reform process is very encouraging. The principles outlined in the "Equal Protection of Voting Rights Act" are certainly a step in the right direction, and I recognize S. 565 as important legislation that will better ensure the integrity of the election process.

I have long been an advocate of election reform. In each of the past three sessions of the Nevada State Legislature, I have promoted legislation that would create a statewide system of voter registration. This statewide system would allow the Secretary of State's office to act as a central repository for voter registration rolls, and ease the process of clearing those rolls of duplicate names, deceased persons and others who are ineligible to vote. Although this proposal would have dramatically reduced the potential for voter fraud, it has failed in every legislative session in which it was introduced. Likewise, my calls to improve the absentee balloting process, especially for our overseas military personnel, have faced strong resistance from state legislators. Senate Bill 565 parallels many of my efforts and may motivate Nevada lawmakers to pursue election reform for the Silver State.

Again, thank you for your leadership and efforts in bringing this important legislation to the forefront of deliberations in the U.S. Senate. I look forward to continuing to work closely with you and your colleagues to achieve our common goal of election reform measures that will truly enhance the voting process for all Americans

Respectfully,

DEAN HELLER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. DODD. I know there are discussions going on regarding a couple of proposals to try and work out some things, but I invite my colleagues, who may be engaged in other activities in their respective offices, if nothing particularly important is happening, and if they have a proposal they would like to have heard on on this bill, to come on over. We are open for business on amendments. We will consider them on either side. I do not know of many we have, but there may be some. I have talked to some colleagues who have some questions about the bill. If they do have questions, I invite them to come to the Chamber, and I will try to address them in colloquies to either alleviate their concerns—or heighten them, I suppose, depending upon my answer to their question.

We would like to get this bill done. I know there are other matters. The leader, I know, wants to bring up the energy bill. I think that is the next item on the agenda. Given the amount of work we have put into election reform—and, again, I thank immensely my colleagues from Kentucky, Senator McConnell; Missouri, Senator Bond; New York, Senator Schumers; New Jersey, Senator Torricelli; Trent Lott, and Tom Daschle, the majority leader. A lot of work and a tremendous amount of effort has gone into this effort over many hours. Obviously, we are not there yet. We still have to go to a conference with the House. Our fervent hope is to get this done as soon as we can.

With the $3.5 billion that we provide in this bill and the $1.2 billion the President has already put in his budget, there is every reason to believe we could actually get resources back to our States and our localities to improve the election systems for the elections this fall.

There are a lot of other provisions in this bill that do not become effective for several years down the road, but for our Secretaries of State and our registrars of voters across the country who are anxious to get some financial help on these matters, if we get this bill done, get the conference report done, and then get a Presidential signature, which I think we can get if we work out this legislation, then there is every good reason to believe those resources could begin flowing to our States even this year.

I do not need to remind anyone in this Chamber, or anyone in the other body, that the events of September 11 and ensuing events have overwhelmed, obviously, our attention, but it was only 14 months ago that this Nation was fixated on one of the worst election debacles in the history of the country. It is not in any way to question the outcome. We all support the outcome unconditionally. Certainly, watching day after day, week after week—and for the Presiding Officer, this was not just an intellectual exercise.

As the distinguished junior Senator from the State of Florida, he knows painfully how long and how difficult this process was for his own constituents, as not only the Nation but the world was fixated on his State. I have said in this Chamber on numerous occasions, it was an unfair fixation. There were plenty of other places around the country where the problems were identical to the problems that the people of Florida went through, but because of the nature of the electoral college, the attention was focused on Florida.

I think the American public—in fact, every survey I have seen—believes our election system is in desperate need of repair. We lecture a good part of the world about how to conduct elections, how important it is to vote, how important democratic institutions are. We realized what happened last year. According to nonpartisan analyses from Caltech, MIT, the General Accounting Office, the Carter-Ford Commission, along with many other groups around the country who analyzed the elections nationwide, our system is broken. It is in serious shape and it needs repair. That is not an adverse reflection on the thousands and thousands of people all across the country who worked very hard, under very difficult circumstances, to see to it that people had the right to vote and their votes counted. We also painfully know that when it comes to allocating resources at the State level, this is a very difficult budget item; that there are always other items that seem to have more public support than the issue of better voting machines or better equipment or training for poll watchers and the like.

So painfully, despite all of the notoriety about the 2000 election last year, only three States have acted, the State that the Presiding Officer represents so ably, the State of Florida, and the State of Georgia—and a great tribute should go to Cathy Cox, by the way, the Secretary of the State of Georgia. And I want to thank our two colleagues from Georgia, MAX CLELAND and ZELL MILLER, who hosted the Rules Committee's field hearing in Atlanta, GA. Also, the Governor could not have been more gracious. To their great credit, they really stepped up to the plate. Georgia, Maryland and Florida are leading the country today in some of the most innovative ideas on election reform.

Unfortunately, other States did not. There is one other State that did, but after all the events of last year those are all the States that rose to the occasion.

So, again, I invite my colleagues to come on over. We would like to finish this bill. I am not suggesting we go to third reading in the next few minutes, but I invite Members who have amendments to come and give us a chance to consider them, accept what we can of various proposals, debate others, vote on them, if necessary, but move the process along.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use my leader time to make a statement at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

(The remarks of Mr. DASCHLE are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

Mr. DASCHLE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for up to 15 minutes as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. SPECTER are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the majority leader has asked that I announce there will be no more rollcall votes today. Senator DODD and Senator MCCONNELL have, I will not say begged but they sure have asked people to come over and offer amendments. We need to finish this bill. We have so much more that needs to be done. This is an extremely important bill, one of the most important bills to have come through this body in a long time. These two men have spent not hours or days but weeks and weeks of their time trying to get the bill here. We need to get the bill finished tomorrow.

Those with amendments need to bring them over. We are going to start early in the morning. If they do not, I will join with the managers of the bill to go to third reading. It is not fair to everyone with so much to do to have to wait around for amendments.

There will be no more rollcall votes tonight.

The managers have indicated they will try to clear some amendments tonight that will require no more rollcall votes. These are two of the most experienced managers we could have in the Senate, but they need something to manage. Right now there is a lot of talk about offering amendments, but nothing is happening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

AMENDMENT NO. 2688

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate amendment No. 2688, the bipartisan substitute, be agreed to; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that the bill as thus amended be considered as original text for the purpose of further amendment, and provide further that no points of order are waived by this agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 2688) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2874

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished Senators from Washington, Ms. CANTWELL and Mrs. MURRAY, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], for Ms. CANTWELL, for herself, Mrs. MURRAY, and Mr. DODD, proposes an amendment numbered 2874.

Mr. DODD. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To treat absentee ballots and mail-in ballots in the same manner as other paper ballot voting systems under the voting systems standards and to ensure that voters are informed how to correct voting errors before a ballot is cast and counted)

On page 5, strike lines 4 through 14, and insert the following:

(B) A State or locality that uses a paper ballot voting system, a punchcard voting system, or a central count voting system (including mail-in absentee ballots or mail-in ballots), may meet the requirement of subparagraph (A) by—

(i) establishing a voter education program specific to that voting system that notifies each voter of the effect of casting multiple votes for an office; and

(ii) providing the voter with instructions on how to correct the ballot before it is cast and counted (including instructions on how to correct the error through the issuance of a replacement ballot if the voter was otherwise unable to change the ballot or correct any error).

Mr. DODD. I will defer to my colleague from Washington to take a few minutes, if she would like, and describe what this amendment is and what it does. I am informed by my friend from Kentucky that this is an amendment to which we can agree. The staffs have worked on this amendment. But why doesn't the Senator from Washington take a few minutes. I am glad we could work this out with her and others in her State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I appreciate Senator DODD's strong commitment to this legislation. Together with Senator MURRAY I also appreciate his efforts here today to work with us on language that preserves the ability of States like ours, that have high volumes of absentee and mail-in voters, to continue to use those mail in systems.

This amendment adds to the voting system standards section of the legislation to make sure that the ability of voters to vote by mail-in and absentee ballot is not limited by our efforts to improve the ability of other voters to cast accurate ballots in the polling place.

This system is very important. The voters of my State are proud of this system and extremely committed to seeing it continue. In addition, I believe the voting by mail adequately protects against the types of problems encountered in Florida because in these elections voters take their time in casting their votes and are able to consult instructions and other ballot information.

Voters in my State have made it clear that they are willing to work with the system but want to make sure mail-in ballots and absentee ballots are preserved. This amendment preserves the ability to vote by mail while also setting forth new safeguards that will better inform voters how to correctly fill out their ballot and ensure their votes are counted.

I thank the leaders of this legislation for their support for this amendment. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. The amendment of the Senator from Washington is agreed to on this side of the aisle. I am aware of no opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2874) is agreed to.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DODD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, the Senator from New York is about to be heard. As the majority whip pointed out, there will be no further rollcall votes tonight, but Senator SCHUMER has an opening statement he would like to make. There is an effort right now to reach agreement on two or three amendments by the Senator from New York. During his remarks on the bill, my hope is we might clear these other three amendments. I think that would be it for the evening, if we can do that.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I say to my friend, we are looking at the amendments now and hope we can achieve that goal shortly.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I rise to speak on this legislation with which, as many of my colleagues know, I have been long involved. The legislation we consider today is one of the most important pieces of legislation we will consider all year. Congress has a responsibility to ensure that every eligible American who goes to vote gets to vote and that every vote cast counts.

What we have learned from the 2000 elections is that as strong as our democracy is, we have been lax in the upkeep of the actual mechanism that drives it, our voting systems. That is why we have come together across party lines to pass this election reform legislation.

I thank our chairman, Senator DODD, for his leadership in bringing this critical legislation to the floor. He has been tireless in his devotion to getting it done.

I also commend the ranking member of the committee, Senator MCCONNELL, for his commitment to improving our Nation's election systems as well. Senator MCCONNELL and I had introduced a bill that in many ways is part of this ultimate bill. I am proud to be part of the effort, along with Senators DODD and BOND and TORRICELLI and MCCAIN and DURBIN, to make this happen.

The right to vote, as we all know, is at the very heart of our democracy. It is a right that, throughout our history, brave men and women have risked their well-being, their very lives, to exercise. It was for the right to vote that American patriots fired the shots heard around the world at Lexington and Concord, thereby initiating the Revolutionary War in 1775. It was for the right to vote that Susan B. Anthony bore arrest, trial, and conviction after she challenged laws barring women from the polls by casting a ballot in Rochester, NY, in 1872.

It was for the right to vote that Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and other civil rights activists—including my former colleague in the House, Congressman JOHN LEWIS—marched from Selma to Montgomery, AL, in 1965.

Blood continues to be spilled over our democratic ideals. The core reason for the September 11 attacks that so devastated this Nation, and particularly my home State and city, is that terrorists hate our democracy: a democracy where all Americans—regardless of religion, gender, race, economic status, physical ability—have a say in how our Government is run; a democracy where every person is equal, and because some people are in some high theoretical or political position, they don't have any more right to determine the outcome of an election than our average person.

We in the United States have a special obligation, a duty, to ensure the right to vote—not only to honor those who sacrificed so we have this right but to ensure that Americans today and in the future will be fully able to exercise it.

First and foremost, we must have voting machines and systems that are accessible to people, that are easy to use and that work. To my mind, the most important provisions in this bill are the grant provisions that will provide $3.5 billion to states and localities to meet federal standards and to update and modernize their voting systems. Federal funds for the improvement of old voting machines is something that I have been talking about ever since the 2000 election, and was something that I included in my election reform bill last year that Senator MCCONNELL and I sponsored.

I first voted in 1969, and I sued the same type of machine when I voted in 2000 in spite of all the technological changes in the intervening years. Just because we are the world's oldest democracy does not mean we have to use the world's oldest technology that is simple.

The problem does not end with the machines, although in my State that is a big problem. Throughout this nation there are inadequately maintained registration lists, confusingly designed ballots, and phone lines that were so busy that voters could not get through to conform their registration status.

In my home state of New York, in November 2000, people waited in line for hours to vote. Many voters—those who could not afford to be late for work or that had to get home to their children—waited in line and ultimately left the polling place without being able to participate in one of the most critical and closest elections of our time.

You should have seen the look on the faces of these people, some of them voting for the first time, doing good for the country, many of them in their work clothes, and the look of disappointment as they waited and waited and then could not vote.

Others waited and waited only to be confronted with the cruel reality that the voting machines in their precinct were broken or that the polling place had run out of emergency ballots. Again, the looks on their faces had a lasting impression on me.

Voting should be accessible, accurate and speedy—in all places, all the time. You cannot say, well, it is good most of the time because the right to vote is so precious. The grant programs included in this bill will allow states and localities to do just that.

This bill also includes standards for the states and localities—which I believe will be a great improvement in the ability of people to vote across this nation.

To Wit:

The bill sets voting system standards that will allow voters to check their ballots and correct errors, that will make voting more accessible for the disabled and non-English speakers, and that requires voting systems to meet the error rate set by the FEC;

The bill establishes provisional voting in every state, which will insure that every person who goes to the polls has the opportunity to cast a ballot;

The bill establishes important anti-fraud provisions, including a statewide computerized voter registration database that will allow poll workers to have the information that they need in front of them on election day.

I think that these provisions make a lot of sense. They will help people to have greater access to the polls while at the same time decreasing fraud in our voting systems.

The final critical piece of this legislation is the establishment of an independent election agency. This is something that I have supported, and that I included in the election reform bill that I introduced with my colleague from Kentucky, Senator MCCONNELL.

The bipartisan four-person Commission will oversee the grants programs and the implementation of the federal standards, will provide information to the states and to the public about federal elections, and will keep a watchful eye on our voting systems so that we are continuously updating them. With the Commission in place, hopefully we will never face the situation that we faced in the 2000 elections again.

Like most bipartisan legislation, this bill is a compromise—but I believe that it is a good compromise that is based on core principles that we all share. It will allow us to improve our voting systems and make our election process better.

The right to vote is a sacred trust—a covenant—between the government and the people. I urge all of my colleagues to vote for this bipartisan election reform legislation, so that we can give the American people the election system that they and our grand democracy deserve.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 2871 AND 2873, EN BLOC

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I have two amendments which I would like to be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] proposes amendments numbered 2871 and 2873, en bloc.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 2871

(Purpose: To specify how lever voting systems may meet the multilingual voting materials requirement)

On page 8, strike lines 5 through 18, and insert the following:

(B) EXCEPTIONS.—

(i) If a State meets the criteria of item (aa) of subparagraph (A)(i)(I) with respect to a language, a jurisdiction of that State shall not be required to provide alternative language accessibility under this paragraph with respect to that language if—

(I) less than 5 percent of the total number of voting-age citizens who reside in that jurisdiction speak that language as their first language and are limited-English proficient; and

(II) the jurisdiction does not meet the criteria of item (bb) of such subparagraph with respect to that language.

(ii) A State or locality that uses a lever voting system and that would be required to provide alternative language accessibility under the preceding provisions of this paragraph with respect to an additional language that was not included in the voting system of the State or locality before the date of enactment of this Act may meet the requirements of this paragraph with respect to such additional language by providing alternative language accessibility through the voting systems used to meet the requirement of paragraph (3)(B) if—

(I) it is not practicable to add the alternative language to the lever voting system or the addition of the language would cause the voting system to become more confusing or difficult to read for other voters;

(II) the State or locality has filed a request for a waiver with the Office of Election Administration of the Federal Election Commission or, after the transition date (as defined in section 316(a)(2)), with the Election Administration Commission, that describes the need for the waiver and how the voting system under paragraph (3)(B) would provide alternative language accessibility; and

(III) the Office of Election Administration or the Election Administration Commission (as appropriate) has approved the request filed under subclause (II).

AMENDMENT NO. 2873

(Purpose: To require States and localities to mail a voter registration form to individuals who cast provisional ballots that were not counted)

On page 13, strike line 22, and insert the following: "is not counted (such notice shall include the State's voter registration form); and".

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, these two amendments—both technical in nature, and I believe have been agreed to by the Senators from Connecticut and Kentucky, the majority and minority managers on this bill—deal with two issues. One deals with those States with lever issues, which my State of New York has, and what it allows a State or locality with lever machines to do is apply to DOJ for an exemption that will allow it to meet the linguistic accents requirement in title I. The exemption allows the State or locality to place any new languages that it is required to provide under this act under the DREs, instead of on the lever machines, to place them on the new machines if the State or locality shows that it would be impractical to add the new language to the lever machine or adding it would cause the voting system to become more confusing or difficult to read for other voters, and DOJ certifies this is the case.

The reason is simple. Unlike other machines, the lever machines have limited space. If too many languages were required to be on the machines, it would become confusing and you couldn't really put a ballot together. This gives anybody who speaks those languages an ability to vote on the new machines that will be placed in every voting place that is used for the disabled and others without bollixing up the lever machine.

The second amendment—since we are doing them en bloc, I would like to address both—requires that the notice sent to people whose provisional ballots were not counted includes a voter registration form, obvious for its purpose. If your ballot was not counted, there is probably something wrong with the way you registered or you were not registered, whatever.

By giving these folks a voter registration form, they can reregister quickly and easily. I thank the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Kentucky for helping me refine these amendments and, as I mentioned before while they were off the floor, for their fabulous leadership on this bill.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from New York. He has been a great help on this bill, generally speaking. These amendments not only will be important for New York but, as he has talked about them, there are other States as well that will appreciate the contribution the Senator from New York has made in these two proposals.

I am in favor of both of these amendments. I just mention this to the Senator from New York. We are going to be looking at what the cost effect is of slipping in that reregistration form. It may not be much at all. I know the Senator from New York would probably want to know the answer to that as well.

In the meantime, I will accept the amendment and take a look at that. I congratulate him on the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I, too, commend the Senator from New York, who has been a collaborator with several of us on this issue going back over the last year, for his extremely important contribution to this bill and thank him for his great work.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank my leader collaborator, coconspirators from Kentucky and Connecticut, and urge adoption of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to amendments Nos. 2871 and 2873, en bloc.

The amendments (Nos. 2871 and 2873), en bloc, were agreed to.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MCCONNELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, that will be the business for this evening. Actually, we completed some work. We had about five amendments adopted in the last 4½ hours. I thank, again, the Senator from New York.

Tomorrow morning, we may get to the bill around 10:15. I have been told that if we can get some agreement, maybe tomorrow, on final passage at a decent hour late tomorrow afternoon, early tomorrow evening—I don't know if that is possible or not—it may be possible for us to complete the business of the Senate by tomorrow. That is obviously subject to the work of the two leaders. At least there is a good possibility. I know that will be warm news to those who would like to get back to their respective States earlier rather than later. I can't help but note the smile of the Presiding Officer with that news.

I thank my colleague from Kentucky for his help today in working through this. There will be a series of other amendments, people coming forward with ideas. We want to accommodate everybody we can, realizing that, as we said at the outset, this is new ground we are breaking in many areas. We are very sensitive and conscious of the State and local involvement in this process. We want to accommodate States and localities to the maximum extent possible as we try to become a better partner in the conduct of elections. We are trying to do work that is sometimes a little confusing, but I think we have done a pretty good job so far. I am hopeful tomorrow we can resolve these other amendments.

My final plea is to Members: Please, there are more and more amendments. Some of them, I am told, are just colloquies. Some Members just want to offer the amendment and withdraw it and discuss their idea. I urge Members, please, if you are interested in doing that, come over first thing in the morning so we can get to the amendments that may require votes because we can't resolve them. We will have to just leave them up to the Members to decide whether or not they want to include them in the bill or not. I urge Members to come over.

Mr. SCHUMER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DODD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. SCHUMER. We have an amendment we would just like to file this evening as to the signature forms so that people could take a look at it, and signature attestation, I believe, on behalf of myself and perhaps the Senator from Washington, Ms. CANTWELL.

I ask unanimous consent that we be allowed to file that amendment tonight.

Mr. DODD. No problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. I thank a lot of people for their work. I note the presence of the Presiding Officer. Cathy Cox, who is Secretary of State of Georgia, I want the Presiding Officer to know, has been incredibly helpful in this process. She is a remarkable person. I know the Senator from Georgia appreciates that extremely. I want to let him and others know how helpful she has been in helping us see through ideas that would be productive and constructive.

With that, I yield the floor.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, let me add that I, too, would like to see this bill wrapped up early evening tomorrow. I am hopeful, I say to my friend from Connecticut, that we will get the cooperation on this side of the aisle to achieve that goal.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I rise today to support my amendment specifying that Election Reform Incentive Grant Program funds may go to States wishing to establish toll-free telephone hotlines to be used by voters reporting possible voting fraud and voting rights abuses.

The election of 2000 reminded us that elections can be close and that public confidence in the outcome of elections depends on the accuracy, fairness, and legality of election procedures. Obtaining accurate results requires ensuring that fraudulent votes not dilute the votes cast by eligible voters and that all eligible citizens have poll access.

Officials from a State's or locality's relevant investigating and enforcing agencies may not have the resources to oversee every polling location. Citizens who witness voting fraud or voting rights abuses may not know where to report a possible violation of law. A toll-free hotline would give citizens a means to help prevent voting fraud and voting rights abuses and would give States the information they need to prosecute violations and implement procedures to prevent further violations.

The Indiana Bipartisan Task Force on Election Integrity recently issued a report developed through months of research and with the input of election officials, voter advocates, and citizens of the State. While the State of Indiana already has implemented many measures that will enhance the integrity of elections, the Task Force recommended additional reforms for that purpose, including the development of a toll-free telephone hotline to be used by voters who believe they have witnessed a voting irregularity or voting rights abuse.

I believe that other States may wish to establish such hotlines, and I believe the hotlines could be an important tool in improving election accuracy, fairness, and legality. For these reasons, I ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business and that Senators be recognized to speak for a time not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CELEBRATING BLACK HISTORY MONTH 2002 BY COMMEMORATING AND CONTINUING THE WORK OF GREAT AFRICAN-AMERICANS

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, Willie Morris was one of the great under-recognized American writers of the 20th century. He grew up in Yazoo City, MS—population 12,000—where he learned to tell stories by listening to old Black men who sat in the shade and whittled. He said their eye for detail helped him to see things he otherwise would have missed. At 34, Willie Morris became the youngest-ever editor of America's oldest magazine, "Harper's Weekly." He wrote candidly about race long before most other white writers.

Three years ago, Willie Morris died at the age of 64, leaving behind 19 books, many of them best-sellers. Like all great writers, a part of Willie Morris continues to live on in his words. But there is another part of him that lives on as well. You see, before he died, Willie Morris decided to donate his eyes in order to give someone else a chance to see. As it turned out, his corneas went to two different men, neither of whom he had ever met. One was black, one was white. His friends say he would have loved the irony of his gift: that a man who helped us see the world a little more clearly during his life is still helping people see after his death.

America has changed since Willie Morris was a boy listening to the stories of those old men. We no longer accept legal discrimination. We no longer permit poll taxes to bar African-Americans from voting. We no longer tolerate "separate but equal" schools or water fountains or lunch counters. We have made considerable progress—due, in large part, to courageous African-American leaders including Martin Luther King, Rosa Parks, Thurgood Marshall, and John Lewis. During Black History Month, we honor those leaders and all of the other extraordinary African-Americans who have contributed so greatly to our nation—heroes like Crispus Attucks, who died at the Boston Massacre; Salem Poor, who fought at Bunker Hill and survived that brutal winter at Valley Forge; Harriet Tubman, the Underground Railroad "conductor" who rescued hundreds of people from slavery, served during the Civil War as a Union cook, spy, scout and nurse and was buried with full military honors.

We honor the Tuskegee Airmen, the first African-Americans ever to fly combat aircraft and one of the most decorated fighter squadrons in our nation's history, who fought Nazism in Europe—and racism when they returned home; and Secretary of State Colin Powell, the first African-American to serve as Chairman of America's Joint Chiefs of Staff.

We honor great scientists, including George Washington Carver and Benjamin Banneker, the mathematician and astronomer and the first African-American to receive a Presidential appointment—from Thomas Jefferson. We also honor great orators and champions of human rights, including Frederick Douglass, Sojourner Truth and Barbara Jordan; great educators, such as Mary McLeod Bethune and Booker T. Washington; and great artists, including Marian Anderson, the first African-American soloist to sing with the Metropolitan Opera in New York, Zora Neale Hurston, the novelist and Langston Hughes, "the poet laureate of Harlem."

This month, as the world watches the Olympic Games in Salt Lake City, we also honor extraordinary earlier Olympians like Jesse Owens, who shattered the myth of Aryan supremacy by winning four gold medals at the 1936 Olympics in Berlin; and Wilma Rudolph, the first African-American woman to win three Olympic gold medals, in 1960. We also honor other great athletes including Jackie Robinson, the first African-American to play Major League baseball; and Arthur Ashe, champion of tennis and human rights.

We remember exceptional leaders such as W.E.B. DuBois, one of the founders of the NAACP; A. Philip Randolph, the former vice president of the AFL-CIO and founder of the first African-American trade union; and Ralph Bunche, diplomat, Under Secretary General of the U.N., and the first Black person from any nation ever to win the Nobel Peace Prize. And we honor the countless other African-Americans who changed our nation for the better simply by having the courage to say no to indignity and injustice in their own lives.

The stories of African Americans are the missing chapter in America's history books. If we don't know them, we cannot truly know ourselves.

But it's not enough just to celebrate their work. Especially this year, we must continue their work.

To the terrorists who attacked us on September 11, the America Martin Luther King described—an America built on equality, justice, freedom and human dignity for every person—is not a dream. It is a nightmare. By attacking us, the terrorists thought they could destroy our dream. But they were wrong. Instead of turning on each other in the wake of the attacks, as the terrorists had expected, Americans turned to each other. We came together in ways that most of us had never seen in our lifetimes. We were truly one people, indivisible.

Those of us who work in this building, and people all over the world who look to this Capitol as a symbol of democracy, are incredibly fortunate that another chapter in African-American history was written last fall. Just five days before September 11, former Army Major General Al Lenhardt became this Senate's Sergeant at Arms, the first African-American ever to serve as an elected officer in either the House or the Senate. I know I speak for all of us when I say how grateful we are to him for seeing us safely through September 11 and the anthrax attack.

We are also proud of our men and women in uniform, who are now bringing justice to the killers of September 11. What they are doing is right and necessary. But it is not the only way we can honor the nearly 3,000 innocents who died in New York, at the Pentagon and in western Pennsylvania. We can defy the killers right here at home—by keeping Martin Luther King's dream alive, and strengthening the democracy the terrorists sought to destroy.

We can start this month by strengthening our election system so that we never again experience an election like we did in 2000, when millions of votes went uncounted, especially those of African-Americans. We have an extraordinary opportunity. Senators DODD, MCCONNELL and BOND have given us a good, truly bipartisan election reform bill that requires states to meet uniform, nondiscriminatory voting standards, and provides the resources they need to do so. That bill is on the Senate floor now. I hope we will pass it this week with overwhelming support. If we are a democracy in fact as well as in name, the right to vote and to have that vote count must not be compromised.

The income gap between Blacks and whites in America is narrower today than it has ever been. But it is still too wide. We can do better. Last week, we voted to provide an additional 13 weeks of benefits to laid-off workers who have exhausted their unemployment benefits.

I hope we can still find a way to expand unemployment insurance coverage to part-time workers and recent hires—a disproportionate number of whom are African-American—and to help all laid-off workers maintain their health benefits.

Let's also raise the minimum wage. It's been five years since the last increase. The purchasing power of the minimum wage is now the lowest it's been in more than 30 years. And a full-time minimum wage income won't get you over the poverty line. We can do better.

Nothing has more power than education to move us from separate to equal. Yet today, nearly half-a-century after Brown v. Board of Education, most minority students still attend schools that are predominantly minority. Their class sizes, on average, are larger, their books are older, their lessons are less challenging and their teachers have less training in the subjects they teach. Last year, we passed a promising, bipartisan school reform act. This year, let's work together to make sure that "Leave No Child Behind" is a promise kept, not a dream deferred. Our goal should be to make sure that every child in America comes to school ready to learn and leaves school ready to succeed.

If we learned anything from the terrible ordeal of September 11, it is that we cannot tolerate acts of hatred and discrimination. Make no mistake about it: Chaining a man to the back of a pickup truck and dragging him to his death for no reason other than the color of his skin is an act of terrorism. And while James' Byrd's death may be the best-known racially motivated hate crime in recent years, it is not the only such crime. A hate crime scars this country every hour and 10 minutes of every day, 365 days a year. In the last Congress, the Senate passed a bipartisan bill strengthening federal protections against hate crimes only to see it die in conference with the House. We need to pass it again this year. And this time, let's make sure it becomes law. We came together on September 11. If we are to stay together, we must stand against every form of bigotry and hatred.

Finally, we know that protecting rights in law is only half the battle. We also need a judiciary that protects our rights in court. As Senators, we have a special obligation to ensure that the men and women who are nominated for lifetime positions on the federal bench or the Supreme Court will protect the basic rights for which so many Americans, from Crispus Attucks on down through the years, have given their lives. Let us honor that obligation this month and every month we are privileged to be here.

We don't need Willie Morris' eyes to see how far America has come on civil rights since he was a boy. We also don't need Willie Morris' eyes to see that there is still a gap between the America we are and the America we can be. We all see those things. Our challenge today is to envision ways to close that gap, and then to transform that vision into law. In doing that, we will honor African-Americans and every American of every race and creed who died on September 11.

I yield the floor.

IMPRESSIVE STEPS TAKEN AGAINST THE WAR ON TERRORISM

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to comment about our war against terrorism and about the recent statements made by Administration officials concerning possible actions toward Iraq.

At the outset, I compliment President Bush and the Administration for the very effective steps taken on the war against terrorism. We have seen the response to the disastrous, tragic, horrendous events of September 11, with the military moving in, doing in Afghanistan what the Soviets could not do, and doing what the British could not do much earlier. We are well on our way, having defeated the Taliban and al-Qaida; very impressive steps taken in the war against terrorism. The President has done an outstanding job on leadership on this critical issue.

There have been comments recently about the possibility of action against Iraq, and that may well be warranted. On this state of the record, it is my thinking there are quite a number of serious questions which have to be answered. We need to know, with some greater precision, the threat posed by Saddam Hussein with respect to weapons of mass destruction. There is solid evidence about Saddam Hussein having chemical weapons, substantial evidence on biological weapons, and some questions about nuclear weapons. However, there really ought to be a comprehensive analysis as to the precise nature of Saddam Hussein's threat.

Iraq is on the record as having supported terrorism, and it seems to me there ought to be an elaboration as to the terrorist activities which are attributable to Iraq. If there is to be military action, we ought to have a full statement as to Iraq's violations of UN inspections. We know that the UN inspectors have been ousted, but here again, this is an issue where more information is necessary for the Congress and, in my view, for the American people. There also has to be an analysis of what the costs would be, some appraisal in terms of casualties, depending upon the nature of the contemplated action.

Then there is the issue as to what happens after Saddam Hussein is toppled. There is no doubt about the desirability of toppling Saddam Hussein. By twenty-twenty hindsight, perhaps it is regrettable the United States and its allies did not move on Baghdad in 1991. That, obviously, is water over the dam. There were many factors to be considered including the unwillingness of our allies at that time to move. The U.S. had success against Iraq in 1991, but toppling Saddam Hussein was an action that was obviously not taken.

There have been statements by the President in identifying the axis of evil as Iran, Iraq, and North Korea. The President has stated if we do not have the cooperation of our allies we will act alone, and I think there is a solid basis for the President to say that and for the President to give serious consideration to acting alone.

We know there were many danger signals as to Osama bin Laden and al-Qaida. We know that bin Laden was under indictment for murdering Americans in Mogadishu in 1993. He was under indictment for murdering Americans and others in the embassy attacks in 1998. He was implicated in the terrorism against the USS Cole. He pledged a worldwide "jihad" against the United States. There was substantial authority under international law for what had transpired for the United States to act.

What we have seen in modern times is in effect a non-determination of guilt and action against terrorism as a matter of self-defense recognized under international law. When President Reagan acted against Muammar Qadhafi in April of 1986, that was in effect a non-determination of guilt, and we moved in self-defense against Qadhafi. When President Clinton dispatched missiles to Afghanistan in August of 1998—again, a non-judicial determination of guilt. There would have been total justification for the United States moving against al-Qaida and Osama bin Laden in advance of September 11. That experience suggests we have to make a careful analysis, a calculated analysis of the risks.

It may well be justified as a matter of self-defense to act, and act against Saddam Hussein and Iraq. As we know by twenty-twenty hindsight, the vision is very clear. We know in twenty-twenty hindsight that it would have been wise to have acted against Osama bin Laden and al-Qaida before September 11.

The statements reported from Secretary Colin Powell yesterday, in testifying before the Senate Budget Committee, are worth noting with particularity. Secretary Powell was quoted as saying: "With respect to Iraq, it has long been for several years now a policy of the U.S. Government that regime change would be in the best interests of the region, the best interests of the Iraqi people." Secretary Powell also said: "With respect to Iran and with respect to North Korea, there is no plan to start a war with these nations."

By the grammatical negative pregnant pause, the implication is pretty clear that when the Secretary of State says in formal testimony before the Senate committee that there is no plan to "start a war with these nations," referring to Iran and North Korea, there is a different plan with respect to Iraq. As I say, it may well be justified.

If there is to be a use of force and if there is to be war, under our Constitution it is the responsibility and it is the authority of the Congress of the United States to make the determination to declare war. That constitutional provision is there for a very good reason. We in the Senate and those in the House of Representatives represent the American people, and we speak for the American people. We have seen the bitter lesson from Vietnam that we cannot prosecute a war without the public support. If there is to be the authorization for the use of force or declaration of war, that is a matter that ought to come before the Congress.

These are views I have held for a very long time. In college I studied political science and international relations and served stateside during the period of the Korean war. At that time I wondered about being engaged in a war which was not a matter of congressional determination. That may be a somewhat personal aspect, having been called to service, and I was glad to spend two years in the U.S. Air Force. I served stateside. However, the question in my mind at that time, having studied international relations and knowing the constitutional provision, was why a war was not declared.

Since coming to the Senate, I have been engaged in debates in this Chamber on this subject on many occasions. In 1983 when there was military action in Lebanon, I had an extensive colloquy with Senator Percy, then Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and asked him if, in fact, Korea was not a war. He said, "yes, it was a war." I asked about Vietnam, "was it a war?" "Yes, it was a war." However, on neither occasion was the declaration determined by the Congress.

On the hearings for nominees for the Supreme Court, that was a question I posed with some frequency to nominees, illustrative of which was the confirmation of Justice David Souter. I recalled on Friday asking him, "was Korea a war?" I wanted to know. I had framed litigation which I took to Senator Baker for determination as to the War Powers Act and constitutionality, thinking there would be an appropriate judicial determination on that subject. Not unexpectedly, Justice Souter said he had not thought about it. So I said, take some time, and over the weekend we had an adjournment and came back on Monday. I said, "you have had time to think about it. Was Korea a war?" He said, "I do not know"—which is not a bad answer. If you do not know, you do not know. There is not much you can say by questioning beyond that. I see Justice Souter from time to time, and that colloquy is something about which he comments from time to time.

When this body took up the resolution for the use of force in 1991, I have a clear recollection that President Bush did not want the resolution put before the Senate and before the House. I think he was concerned whether it would be approved. There was historic debate here in January of 1991. The Senate approved the resolution for the use of force by a vote of 52 to 47. The comments at that time went to the effect that it was a historic event. However, when President Bush had the resolution by the House and by the Senate, it was a much stronger approach.

His reluctance to come before Congress is typical of the tension which exists between the executive and legislative branches, with the Presidents traditionally saying they do not need congressional authorization to act because they have the constitutional authority as Commander in Chief, and the response institutionally from many in the Congress has been, "no, the Congress has the sole authority to involve the United States in war by our sole constitutional authority."

The history of the War Powers Act is a very significant development. The executive branch, the President, while complying with it, traditionally says it is not constitutional; he is not really bound to do so.

We had the issue raised again when President Clinton sent missiles into Baghdad. I took the floor on a number of occasions in 1998 arguing that with the imminence of the likelihood of action by the President on missiles in Baghdad, the House of Representatives and Senate ought to stand up and make that determination. Candidly, the Congress is never very anxious to make that determination. It is easier to let the President make the decision. If he is wrong, he gets the blame. If he is right, then the issue passes.

We did have the debate on the bombing of Yugoslavia. It passed this body. It came to a tie vote, 213-to-213, in the House of Representatives. Therefore, Congress had not authorized that attack. It takes, obviously, a resolution on both sides. However, the bombing went ahead.

We are facing a very serious situation with Iraq. Iraq is a real menace. There is no doubt about that. I think there are very strong United States national interests to topple Saddam Hussein, and I think it is very much in the interests of the people of the region that he be toppled and also very much in the interests of the people of Iraq that he be toppled.

However, I do believe that, constitutionally, it is a judgment which ought to come before the Congress of the United States. I believe there ought to be hearings by the appropriate committees of the Congress to take up these questions as to the specific threats which Saddam Hussein poses and Iraq's specific activities on terrorism—a good bit of it, doubtless, might have to be conducted in closed session. However, some of it could be conducted in an open session: what the costs would be, the casualties, and what happens afterwards.

However, the American people need to know much more of the details, and I believe the Congress needs to know much more of the details than what has been conveyed so far by the Administration. It is my hope that this issue will attract the attention of the Congress of the United States with statements such as this one, with hearings, and with our deliberative process, recognizing the seriousness of the issue and recognizing also our constitutional responsibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. I yield the floor.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred August 13, 1994 in Sioux City, IA. Two gay men were stabbed and beaten by two attackers because of the victims' sexual orientation. The assailants, Charles Samuel Thomas, 18, and Dennis Evans Smith, 23, were charged with multiple felonies, including two hate crime charges, in connection with the incident.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation, we can change hearts and minds as well.

TRIBUTE TO ROSS POWERS

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, it came to me as no surprise that again today I have the pleasure to rise and recognize the gold medal effort of a Vermonter on the halfpipe yesterday in Park City, UT at the 2002 Winter Olympics. Ross Powers, who hails from South Londonderry, VT, won the men's snowboarding halfpipe event, a sport that traces its roots back to Vermont, riding a Burton snowboard, which was built in Vermont.

Ross, who led the American sweep of a Winter Olympic event in 46 years, turned 23 on Sunday but is no novice at high competition. In Nagano, Japan 4 years ago, Ross brought home a bronze medal for his country. But his performance yesterday was truly special: it earned him a first-place finish and led the way for Danny Kass and J.J. Thomas to win the silver and bronze medals, respectively. Three Americans stood atop the podium, and Americans watching everywhere cheered them on.

On behalf of all Vermonters, and all Americans, Ross, congratulations, good luck, and thank you for giving your best yesterday in Utah.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. SPECTER (for himself and Mr. DURBIN):

S. 1937. A bill to set forth certain requirements for trials and sentencing by military commissions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to introduce, on behalf of Senator DURBIN and myself, legislation entitled the "Military Commission Procedures Act of 2002."

The President issued an order establishing generalized procedures for trying members of al-Qaida and the Taliban. It is my view and Senator DURBIN's view that Congress ought to consider what are the appropriate procedures pursuant to our authority under the Constitution, article I, section 8, which gives to the Congress the responsibility and authority "To define and punish . . . Offenses against the Law of Nations."

We have already legislated in part, delegating to the President the authority to establish military tribunals "by regulations which shall, so far as he considers practicable, apply the principles of law and the rules of evidence generally recognized in the trial of criminal cases in the United States district courts, but which may not be contrary to or inconsistent with this chapter."

The President promulgated his order without consultation with Congress. This legislation is a starting point for what we believe ought to be consideration by the Judiciary Committee.

In the President's order, there was a provision that there could be no appeal from any order of the military tribunal. But that, on its face, was inconsistent with the Constitution, which preserves the right of habeas corpus unless there is rebellion or invasion, neither of which had occurred here.

The President's order also allowed for conviction of a capital offense by a two-thirds vote, but that is inconsistent with the Uniform Code of Military Justice, and the law does not allow a regulation to be inconsistent with that law.

So Senator DURBIN and I have provided the modifications that two-thirds is acceptable generally. But if the sentence carries 10 years or more, it requires a three-fourths vote. And for the death penalty, it would require a unanimous vote.

This legislation further provides for right to counsel consistent with the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which would be either military counsel or could be private counsel. But that right is preserved.

On one provision, we have provided that there would be no "Miranda" rights for suspects who are interrogated. I candidly concede that in abrogating "Miranda" rights, that will be a source of some contention, which can be the subject of hearings. But it is our view that we should not give al-Qaida or Taliban prisoners access to counsel before they are questioned, first, for the safety of the soldiers who are doing the questioning, and, second, because of the importance, potentially, that eliciting information would stop further terrorist attacks.

Of course, we could provide no "Miranda" warnings in advance but not allow admissions to be used at trial, but it is our view, subject to hearings and further consideration, that "Miranda" rights ought not to be required.

We have provided for an open trial unless there is classified information; and, if classified information is used, we have incorporated the provisions of the Anti-Terrorism Act of 1996—a compromise worked out by Senator Simon and myself on the floor—which provides for a summary to be given to the defendant and the commission, to be reviewed by the commission, to see if it is adequate to protect sources and methods of classified information and also adequate to inform the defendant of the evidence so that the defendant would have substantially the same ability to make his defense as he would if the classified information was disclosed.

We have not provided any restrictions on rules of evidence, since it is the custom of Congress not to do so. But we think this legislation is an important first step. We now know there is a large contingent of those captive in Guantanamo Bay.

I believe the President made a sound decision in saying that al-Qaida members were not prisoners of war, not subject to the Geneva Convention because they are terrorists, murdering innocent civilians. The President did accord Taliban members the protections of the Geneva Convention.

But these trials will soon start. It is very important that our country and our Government proceed with accepted norms for criminal trials. To have a death penalty imposed on a two-thirds vote, as is in the Presidential order, would not be consistent with our generalized standards. To provide for no appeal is not consistent with the constitutional provisions.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SPECTER. I ask unanimous consent for 30 seconds to finish my sentence, Mr. President.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. We believe this is a starting point. We urge early hearings so we can establish the parameters, so when we deal with these treacherous terrorists, we will, in accordance with American standards, give them basic due process—no more, but basic due process.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, on November 13, 2001, President Bush issued a military order authorizing the use of military commissions to prosecute individuals who may be engaged in activities related to the subject of our campaign against terrorism.

The initial public reaction to the White House action was one of surprise and skepticism: Surprise that the order was issued without any advance notice, and skepticism as to whether the decision is based on sound legal or policy grounds. Many commentators also raised legitimate concerns that the Administration's use of military tribunals could potentially undermine our long-held foreign policy of criticizing other nations' reliance on such tribunals.

My reaction, which, I believe, was echoed by many of my colleagues in Congress, was one of disappointment, in addition to the surprise and skepticism. I was disappointed that Congress was excluded from deliberating a policy as important as this one before the White House announced the order.

I have said repeatedly since September 11 that I fully support the President in his efforts to combat terrorism both here and abroad. In response to September 11, Congress worked hand in hand with the administration on a host of items in a truly cooperative and bipartisan manner, from the passage of a joint resolution authorizing the President to use all necessary force, to the passage of the sweeping anti-terrorism bill.

Yet on the drafting of this military order, Congress was left completely in the dark. The Constitution provides executive powers to the President, not exclusive powers. Our Nation remains strong only if the co-equal branches of government work together.

Any proceeding that takes place under President Bush's order will have to withstand the test of legal scrutiny for years to come. But more importantly, it will also have to pass the scrutiny of our citizens at home and of our friends and enemies abroad who are watching to see how the greatest democracy in history carries out justice.

At the Judiciary Committee hearing held in early December, Senator SPECTER and I both questioned the administration's witness to ascertain the precise constitutional authority upon which the administration was relying in creating this tribunal. We did not receive a satisfactory answer.

We also wanted to know the precise scope and reach of the order in terms of who will be brought before such a tribunal, what procedural and evidentiary standards are to be applied, and what due process safeguards, including appeals, will be in place. We did not receive many details here either.

Instead, the administration asked us to wait for the regulations implementing the order that the Defense Department was preparing.

It has been over 3 months since the President's order was issued, and we have not seen the Defense Department regulations. So I believe it is appropriate for Congress to act now to provide the constitutional authority and guidance on procedures before the first military commission is empaneled under the President's order.

I am introducing the "Military Commission Procedures Act of 2002" with Senator SPECTER. I believe this bill will provide the executive branch with the legal authority to prosecute potential terrorists captured in the current military campaign abroad.

Our bill is designed to ensure that military commissions are used in the most narrow and necessary circumstances while protecting the basic rights of defendants. The bill limits the jurisdiction of military commissions to try defendants only for violations of the law of war, and not any domestic laws.

The defendants would be entitled to representation by counsel in the same manner as military service members under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. The prosecution would need to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt, and the death penalty could not be imposed without a unanimous vote as to guilt and to the sentence.

Furthermore, in order to keep the proceedings as open as possible, our bill provides for classified information procedures where the defendant would receive a summary of such evidence while the commission considers the actual evidence in camera and ex parte. The bill also authorizes convicted defendants to petition the U.S. Supreme Court for certiorari.

In short, Senator SPECTER and I believe this bill includes the details that the President's military order of November 13 should have included. More importantly, the bill provides the full force of the congressional and constitutional support behind the President's continuing efforts to wage a war against terrorism.

I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this legislation.

By Mr. REID (for himself, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. ENSIGN):

S. 1939. A bill to establish the Great Basin National Heritage Area, Nevada and Utah; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today for myself, Senator ENSIGN, Senator HATCH, and Senator BENNETT to introduce this bill, which will establish a National Heritage Area in eastern Nevada and western Utah.

National Heritage Areas are regions in which residents, businesses, as well as local and tribal governments have joined together in partnership to conserve and celebrate cultural heritage and special landscapes. For Nevada, these include such nationally significant historic areas as the Pony Express and Overland Stage Route, Mormon and other pioneer settlements, historic mining camps and ghost towns, as well as Native American cultural resources such as the Fremont Culture archeological sites.

The bill will also highlight some of Nevada's natural riches. The Great Basin contains great natural diversity, including forests of bristlecone pine, which are renowned for their ability to survive for thousands of years. The Great Basin National Heritage Area includes White Pine County and the Duckwater Reservation in Nevada and Millard County, UT. The Heritage Area will also ensure the preservation of key educational and inspirational opportunities in perpetuity without compromising traditional local control over—and use of—the landscape. Finally, the Great Basin National Heritage Area will provide a framework for celebrating Nevada's and Utah's rich historic, archeological, cultural, and natural resources for both visitors and residents.

The bill will establish a board of directors to manage the area. Consisting of local officials from both counties and tribes, the board will have the authority to receive and spend federal funds and develop a management plan within five years of the bill's passage. The bill mandates the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Board of Directors for the management of the resources of the heritage area. The bill also authorizes up to $10 million to carry out the Act but limits Federal funding to no more than fifty percent of the project's costs. The bill allows the Secretary to provide assistance until September 20, 2020.

This bill benefits not just Nevada and Utah, but citizens of all States. It highlights some areas of outstanding cultural and natural value and brings people together to celebrate values that they can be proud of.

By Mr. LEVIN (for himself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. DURBIN, and Mr. DAYTON):

S. 1940. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide that corporate tax benefits from stock option compensation expenses are allowed only to the extent such expenses are included in a corporation's financial statements; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce Ending the Double Standard for Stock Options Act along with my colleagues Senator MCCAIN, Senator FITZGERALD and Senator DURBIN.

As another lesson learned from the Enron debacle, this bill addresses a costly and dangerous double standard that allows a company to take a tax deduction for stock option compensation as a business expense while not showing it as a business expense on its financial statement.

Stock options were a driving force behind management decisions at Enron that focused on increasing Enron's stock price rather than the solid growth of the company.

Stock options are opportunities given to certain employees, usually top executives, to purchase a company's stock at a set price for a specified period of time, such as 5 or 10 years. When the stock price increases, the potential profit to the executive rises, and the more stock options an executive has, the smaller the increase needed to realize significant gain.

Stock options are a stealth form of compensation, because they do not, under current accounting rules, have to be shown as an expense on the corporate books. In fact they're the only form of compensation that doesn't have to be treated as an expense at any time. But, like other forms of compensation, option expenses are allowed as a tax deduction for a corporation. It doesn't make sense, but that's the way it is. And this long-standing mismatch between U.S. accounting and tax rules was exploited by Enron to the hilt. The result was both misleading financial statements and an incentive to push accounting rules to the limit in order to artificially raise stock prices so as to make the stock options more valuable.

A New York Times article from last October 21, reports that, "Since 1993, studies from Wall Street to Washington have shown that pushing [stock option] expenses off the income statement has inflated corporate earnings and misled investors about profits, particularly at technology concerns. Options are also a titanic but stealthy transfer of wealth from shareholders to corporate management."

Let's look at how it worked at Enron. We've all heard about the many ways that Enron inflated its earnings and hid its debts by keeping various partnerships off the company books. Well, Enron did the same thing with stock options.

For five years, from 1996 until the year 2000, Enron told its shareholders that it was rolling in revenues. One analysis by Citizens for Tax Justice, using Enron's public filings, reports that Enron claimed a total 5-year income of $1.8 billion. This figure apparently included, however, a number of accounting gimmicks, one of which was Enron's decision to relegate all stock option compensation it had provided to a footnote and to exclude such compensation from its total expenses, even though, according to the same study, the stock option pay over five years had reached almost $600 million. That $600 million, by the way, represented one-third of all the income reported by Enron over a 5-year period.

Yet all $600 million was, legally, kept off-the-books, away from Enron's bottom line. That's because existing U.S. accounting rules allow U.S. companies to omit employee stock option compensation as a charge to earnings on their financial statements. That is a unique rule. Stock option compensation is the only kind of employee compensation that a U.S. company never has to record on its financial statements at any time as an expense. That means Enron could give its executives, directors and other employees $600 million in stock options and never show one penny of that pay on its books. It could dole out stock options like candy and never reduce by one penny its alleged income of $1.8 billion.

The result was that Enron was able to provide extravagant compensation, without ever having to account for that extravagance on its bottom line where stockholders and the public might take notice.

But Enron's misleading financial statements are not the end of the story. The backside of the story is that, at the same time Enron was touting its skyrocketing revenues and providing extravagant pay to insiders, it was apparently telling Uncle Sam that its expenses exceeded its income and its tax liability was little or nothing. The study by Citizens for Tax Justice, after reviewing Enron's public filings, has calculated that, despite claiming a 5-year revenue total of $1.8 billion, Enron apparently failed to pay any U.S. tax in 4 out of the last 5 years. How did a company with $1.8 billion in revenue apparently pay so little in taxes? The same study calculated that with a 35 percent corporate tax rate, Enron should have paid about $625 million over five years. But, apparently, according to the study, the principal way Enron avoided paying these taxes was by claiming that its income had been wiped out by nearly $600 million in stock option expenses, the same $600 million that Enron chose not to put on its financial statements as an expense. While these numbers are based on public filings and not based on a review of the actual tax returns, the significance of Enron's actions is the same, avoiding tax liability through the use of stock options.

As I noted earlier, Enron was not acting illegally here, nor were its actions unique. It took advantage of the tax provisions which we hope to change in our bill which allow a company to claim a stock option expense on its tax return even if the company never lists that expense on the company books. These tax provisions incomprehensibly and indefensibly allow companies to tell Uncle Sam one thing and their stockholders something else.

And to add insult to injury, last year the IRS issued Revenue Ruling 2001-1 which determined that companies whose tax liability was erased through stock option expenses are not subject to the corporate Alternative Minimum Tax. That revenue ruling means that our most successful publicly traded companies, if they dole out enough stock options to insiders, can arrange their affairs to escape paying any taxes. That absurd result leaves the average taxpayer feeling like a chump for paying his fair share when a company like Enron can use its success in the stock market to apparently end up tax free.

Now you may have noticed that, in discussing Enron's tax returns, I have been using the words "appears to" and "apparently." That is because, despite a pending request from Senators BAUCUS and GRASSLEY of the Senate Finance Committee, Enron has yet to release its tax returns to either Congress or the public.

The lack of direct access to Enron's tax returns requires Congress and the public to have to continue making educated guesses about Enron's tax conduct, without having the actual facts. It is much too late and much too serious for Enron to be asking everyone to play this guessing game. Enron is in bankruptcy; it has brought economic loss to individuals and financial institutions across this country; its management claims to have done nothing wrong, and the company professes to be cooperating with investigators.

Enron should immediately release to the public the last five years of its tax returns. Then we'll know with certainty if Enron paid no taxes in 4 out of the last 5 years and why. Then we'll know with certainty if Enron eliminated its taxes primarily through stock option deductions, or whether it used other tax provisions to avoid payment of tax such as diverting income through offshore tax havens. The public and the Congress have a right to know what really happened at Enron.

It is also important to realize that most companies treat stock options the same way Enron did. A recent USA Today article reports that out of the S&P 500 companies, only Boeing and Winn-Dixie currently record stock option expenses on both their financial statements and tax returns. The other 498 companies apparently do not. The article says that had stock option expense been recognized on their earnings statements, the S&P 500's revenues would have fallen by 9 percent, another measure of how much off-the-books stock option pay is out there.

Even more troubling, and something that needs more investigation and attention is the claim in the article that "half a dozen academic studies have concluded that companies time the release of good or bad news near the date that executives are issued their options, orchestrating a potential wind-fall." In other words, some believe that executives are timing the release of company information around the dates they are to receive their stock options, thereby artificially inflating the value of their options.

The future promises more of the same. A February 3rd New York Times article entitled, "Even Last Year, Option Spigot Was Wide Open," reports that companies are providing more stock options than ever to their executives, even in the face of poor company performance and diluted stockholder earnings. "It's a great time to give options," one expert is quoted as saying. "They're cheap because they involve no change to earnings, and that's important at a time when profits are down."

Ten years ago, some of us tried to end corporate stock option abuses by urging the Board that issues generally accepted accounting principles, the Financial Accounting Standards Board or FASB, to require stock option expenses to be shown on company books. We were not successful. Corporate America fought back tooth and nail. Intense pressure was brought to bear on FASB. Arthur Levitt told the Governmental Affairs Committee last month that he spent 50 percent of his first four months at the SEC talking to corporate executives who wanted to keep their stock option pay off the books. On one day during the height of the campaign, 100 CEOs flew into Washington to lobby Members of Congress on this issue. In 1994, in the midst of this intense lobbying, the Senate voted 88-9 to recommend against putting stock option pay on the books.

Arthur Levitt testified before our committee that one of his greatest regrets from his days at the SEC was that he didn't work harder to get stock options treated as an expense on a company's financial statement. Several accounting firms, including Andersen and Deloitte, now support expensing options. They are joined by more than 80 percent of U.S. financial analysts, as reported in a September 2001 survey conducted by the leading financial research organization, the Association for Investment Management and Research.

In addition, the newly re-constituted International Accounting Standards Board in London, the international equivalent of our FASB, has announced that one of its first projects will be to propose international standards requiring stock options to be expensed on company books. But in a repeat of what happened here in the United States, corporate lobbyists are already organizing to oppose this project. An Enron document uncovered by my Subcommittee casts light on how this battle may be fought.

The document is an email dated February 23, 2001, from David Duncan, the lead auditor of Enron at Andersen, to several Andersen colleagues, describing Enron's reaction to a request that it consider donating funds to the new International Accounting Standards Board.

Today [Enron Chief Accountant] Rick Causey called to say that Paul Volker had called Ken Lay (Enron Chairman) and asked Enron to make a 5 year, 100k per year commitment to fund the Trust Fund of 'the FASB's International equivalent' While I believe Rick is inclined to do this given Enron's desire to increase their exposure and influence in rulemaking broadly, he is interested in knowing whether these type of commitments will add any formal or informal access to this process (i.e., would these type commitments present opportunities to meet with the Trustees of these groups or other benefits). I think any information along this front or further information on the current strategic importance of supporting these groups for the good of consistent rulemaking would help Enron with its decision to be supportive.

First, let me be clear that I'm not suggesting in any way that Paul Volker's request of Enron for a contribution to FASB's international equivalent was in any way improper. It wasn't. That is exactly how these accounting standards boards get funded. And the response by Enron is not really surprising, it's something we've all known but we've never had written confirmation of it. Contributions to the accounting standards boards affect the boards' independence, and that's bad news for reliable accounting.

No one was mincing any words here. Enron wanted to know whether its money would buy access and influence at the new accounting standards board, and its auditor didn't bat an eye at this inquiry but asked his colleagues for "any information along this front."

The bill we are introducing today does not require that stock options be charged to earnings. That is a decision for the accounting standards boards to make. And many of us in Congress will be working on legislation to make the accounting standards board more independent and less vulnerable to pressures from its contributors. The legislation we are offering today would simply state, in essence, that companies can take a tax deduction or tax credit for stock option expenses only to the extent that the company actually recognizes the same stock option expenses in the company books.

The bill does not get into the accounting side of the issue. It does not, for example, tell companies that they have to expense stock options. It does not tell them when to take a stock option expense or how to book that expense. It focuses solely on the income tax deduction and states, in essence, that any tax deduction must mirror the company books. If a company declares a stock option expense on its books, then the company can deduct the expense on its tax return. If there is no stock option expense on the company books, there can be no expense on the company tax return.

That's tax honesty. That will end the stock option double standard.

The stock option double standard has been a long festering problem in corporate America. It has been one of the driving engines of stretching accounting rules to increase the value of a company's stock. Enron has put a face on this faceless problem and shown the cost of off-the-books stock option pay. Like other accounting gimmicks, off-the-books stock option pay coupled with a large tax deduction doesn't pass the smell test, because we all know that "off-the-books" means stealth compensation that is harder to track and easier for insiders to abuse. Add to the stealth factor and the insider abuse factor, a government policy of giving large corporate tax deductions which can completely eliminate a company's tax liability, and you've set the stage for just the type of stock option results we saw at Enron.

It is time to end the stock option double standard, and I urge all of my colleagues to support enactment of this legislation this year.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, a bill summary, a section-by-section analysis, and the following materials: "Less than Zero Enron's Corporate Income Tax Payments, 1996-2000" (Citizens for Tax Justice, January 17, 2002); Duncan email (2/23/01); "Enron's fall fuels push for stock option law" (USA Today, 2/8/02); "Even Last Year, Option Spigot Was Wide Open" (New York Times, 2/3/02); "Stock Option Madness" (Washington Post, 1/30/02); "Enron's Way: Pay Packages Foster Spin, Not Results" (New York Times, 1/27/02); and stock option survey results by Association for Investment Management Research, as posted on the AIMR website on 2/8/02.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Citizens for Tax Justice, Jan. 17, 2002]
LESS THAN ZERO: ENRON'S CORPORATE INCOME TAX PAYMENTS, 1996-2000

A January 17, analysis of Enron's financial documents by Citizens for Tax Justice finds that Enron paid no corporate income taxes in four of the last five years—although the company was profitable in each of those years.

Over the five-year period from 1996 to 2000, Enron received a net tax rebate of $381 million. This includes a $278 million tax rebate in 2000 alone.

Over the same period, the company's profit before federal income taxes totaled $1.785 billion. In none of these years was the company's profit less than $87 million.

LESS THAN ZERO: CORPORATE INCOME TAX PAYMENTS BY ENRON, 1996 TO 2000

(Dollars in millions)

	2000	1999	1998	1997	1996	96-00
U.S. profits before federal income taxes	$618	$351	$189	$87	$540	$1,785
Tax at 35% corporate rate would be	216	123	66	30	189	625
Less tax benefits from stock options	-390	-134	-43	-12	-19	-597
Less tax savings from other loopholes, etc.	-104	-94	-36	-1	-173	-409
Federal income taxes paid (+) or rebated (-)	-278	-105	-13	17	-3	-381

At the 35 percent tax rate, Enron's tax on profits in the past five years would have been $625 million, but the company was able to use tax benefits from stock options and other loopholes to reduce its five-year tax total to substantially less than zero.

Among the loopholes used to reduce the company's tax liability was the creation of more than 800 subsidiaries in "tax havens" such as the Cayman Islands.

SUMMARY OF LEVIN-McCain-FITZGERALD-DURBIN ENDING THE DOUBLE STANDARD FOR STOCK OPTIONS ACT, FEBRUARY 13, 2002

The Enron fiasco has brought to light a long-festering problem in how some U.S. corporations use stock options to avoid paying U.S. taxes while overstating earnings. According to one recent analysis reported in the New York Times, Enron apparently failed to pay any U.S. tax in four out of last five years, despite skyrocketing revenues and an alleged five-year pre-tax income from 1996 to 2000, of $1.8 billion. To sidestep paying about $625 million in taxes on its $1.8 billion in income, Enron apparently claimed stock option tax deductions totaling almost $600 million. At the same time, Enron never reported this $600 million as an expense on its financial statements—an expense which, had it been reported, would have reduced Enron's income by one-third.

Enron was able to employ this stock option double standard, because of accounting rules that allow stock option compensation to be kept off a company's books. Right now, many U.S. companies routinely give their executives large numbers of stock options as part of their compensation. When an executive exercises those options, the company can claim a corresponding compensation expense on its tax return, while at the same time employ accounting rules to omit reporting any expense at all on its books. The company can tell Uncle Sam one thing and its shareholders the opposite. That's just what Enron did—it lowered its tax bill by claiming stock option expenses on its tax returns, while overstating its earnings by leaving stock option expenses off its financial statements.

The stock option loophole Enron used makes no sense, but when the Financial Accounting Standards Board—the board that issues accounting standards—tried to change the rules ten years ago, corporations and audit firms fought the Board tooth and nail. They demanded that companies be allowed to continue to keep stock option compensation off the books. In the end, the best the Board could get was a footnote noting the earning charge that should be taken on a company's books. But that stock option footnote—like so many Enron footnotes—doesn't tell the true financial story of a company.

It's time to end the stock option double standard. The Levin-McCain-Fitzgerald-Durbin bill would not legislate accounting standards for stock options or directly require companies to expense stock option pay, but it would require companies to treat stock options on their tax returns the exact same way they treat them on their financial statements. In other words, a company's stock option tax deduction would have to mirror the stock option expense shown on the company's books. If there is no stock option expense on the company books, there can be no expense on the company tax return. If a company declares a stock option expense on its books, then the company can deduct exactly the same amount in the same year on its tax return. The bill would require companies to tell Uncle Sam and their stockholders the same thing—whether employee stock options are an expense and, if so, how much of an expense against company earnings. Enron has already shown how much damage, if not corrected, that the existing stock option double standard can inflict on company bookkeeping, investor confidence, and tax fairness.

The bill cosponsors are Senators Levin, McCain, Fitzgerald and Durbin, and the bill is expected to be referred to the Senate Committee on Finance.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF ENDING THE DOUBLE STANDARD FOR STOCK OPTIONS ACT

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. The short title of the bill is "Ending the Double Standard for Stock Options Act."

SECTION 2. STOCK OPTION DEDUCTIONS AND TAX CREDITS. This section of the bill would amend two Internal Revenue Code sections to address stock options compensation. The first tax code section, 26 U.S.C. 83(h), addresses employer deductions for employee wages paid for by a stock option transfer. The second tax code section, 26 U.S.C. 41(b)(2)(D), addresses employer tax credits for research expenses, including employee wages.

Subsection (a) of this section of the bill would add a new paragraph (2) to the end of 26 U.S.C. 83(h) that would restrict the compensation deduction that a company could claim for the exercise of a stock option by limiting the stock option deduction to the amount that the company has claimed as an expense on its financial statement. This section would also make it clear that the deduction may not be taken prior to the year in which the employee declares the stock option income. In addition, a new subparagraph (2)(B) would require the Treasury Secretary to promulgate rules to apply the new restriction to cases where a parent corporation might issue stock options to the employees of a subsidiary corporation or vice versa.

Subsection (b) of this section of the bill would add a new clause (iv) to the end of 26 U.S.C. 41(b)(2)(D). This new clause would restrict the research tax credit that a company could claim for employee wages paid for by the transfer of property in connection with a stock option by saying that the amount of the credit shall not exceed the amount of the corresponding stock option deduction allowed under 26 U.S.C. 83(h).

The purpose of both new statutory provisions is to ensure that any stock option deduction or credit claimed on a taxpayer's return will mirror, and not exceed, the corresponding stock option expense shown on the taxpayer's financial statement. If no stock option expense is shown on the taxpayer's financial records, there can be no expense taken as a deduction or credit on the taxpayer's return. If a taxpayer declares a stock option expense on its financial statement, then the taxpayer is permitted to claim a corresponding deduction or credit on its return in the same taxable year for exactly the same amount of expense.

Subsection (c) of the bill provides that the amendments made by the Act apply only to wages and property transferred on or after the date of enactment of the Act.

Subject: Enron Funding of FASB Trust

Attachments:

I recently asked Enron to consider funding the FASB Trust pursuant to a Steve Samek request.

Today, Rick Causey called to say that Paul Volker had called Ken Lay (Enron Chairman) and asked Enron to make a 5 year, 100k per year commitment to fund the Trust Fund of "the FASB's International equivalent" (best Rick could remember). Lay is asking Causey if this is something that they should do.

While I believe Rick is inclined to do this given Enron's desire to increase their exposure and influence in rulemaking broadly, he is interested in knowing whether these type of commitments will add any formal or informal access to this process (i.e., would these type commitments present opportunities to meet with the Trustees of these groups or other benefits). I think any information along this front or further information on the current strategic importance of supporting these groups for the good of consistent rulemaking would help Enron with its decision to be supportive.

Could any of you guys help me out with more information or point me to someone who could? Thanks.

ENRON'S FALL FUELS PUSH FOR STOCK OPTION LAW

(Matt Krantz and Del Jones)

The Enron implosion has breathed life into legislation that business leaders thought they had killed in the mid-1990s.

In a highly controversial move, at least three senators want to end the legal tax deductions companies take for stock options they issue to executives and workers unless they subtract the same expense from their earnings.

As it is, almost every company takes a tax deduction for options, but ignores them when it comes to reporting their profits. Among the S&P 500, only Boeing and Winn-Dixie follow the advice of the Financial Accounting Standards Board in recording the cost of options on both ledgers, says David Zion, analyst with Bear Stearns. The rest are like Enron, which took a $625 million tax deduction for options from 1996 to 2000, yet legally included the $625 million on its earnings.

If stock options were treated as an expense, the earnings reported by firms in the S&P 500 would have been 9% lower in 2000, Zion says. Technology companies, more likely to use options for rank-and-file compensation, would be harder hit. Fourteen companies, including Yahoo and Citrix Systems, would have posted losses in 2000, rather than gains. Microsoft and Cisco take large tax deductions for options.

Options are contracts that allow the purchase of stock, usually within five years, at today's price. If the stock rises, the stock can be bought at a discount.

Conventional wisdom has long held that options align the goals of executives and workers with those of the shareholders. Enron has given pause to that thinking because its executives artificially boosted the stock price at the risk of shareholders.

Outright frauds is rare, but at least a half-dozen academic studies have concluded that companies time the release of good or bad news near the date that executives are issued their options, orchestrating a potential windfall.

Sens. Carl Levin, D-Mich., John McCain, R-Ariz., and Peter Fitzgerald, R-Ill., are dusting off the tax-deduction proposal that was defeated by a vote of 88-9 in 1994. At the time, Home Depot founder and CEO Bernard Marcus said he had "never been more strongly opposed to anything."

Citigroup CEO Sanford Weill was quick out of the chute Thursday, warning on CNBC's Squawk Box not to get into an Enron frenzy and hurry through bad legislation.

But Matt Ward, CEO of WestWard Pay Strategies, an options consulting firm in San Francisco, says he fears the legislation stands a better chance of passing this time because of what he calls the "Enron thieves" and because technology companies have been weakened by the economy and don't have the resources or energy to influence Washington.

Ward says a law change would result only in rank-and-file employees losing their stock options. CEOs would continue to get theirs, he says.

"Noises are coming from Washington because some oil company guys have been greedy," Ward says.

David Yermack, associate professor of finance at New York University's Stern School of Business, says he doubts if stock options could have pushed Enron executives into hiding millions of dollars of losses in off-book partnerships. That said, there is no reason options should not count against earnings just as cash compensation does.

"If Enron has made them reconsider this horrible position, there is silver lining to this debacle," Yermack says.

More than 80% of financial analysts and portfolio managers agree with Yermack, according to a survey by the Association for Investment Management and Research.

"I'm dissatisfied with using fuzzy numbers in doing accounting," says Dick Wagner, president of the Strategic Compensation Research Associates.

EVEN LAST YEAR, OPTION SPIGOT WAS WIDE OPEN

(By Stephanie Strom)

Surprise, surprise. Early reports suggest that top executives across America got a bigger dollop of stock options last year as part of their pay.

As corporate earnings and cash flow have ebbed and stock prices have fallen, boards have been doling out options as a cheap, balance-sheet-friendly way of compensating managers. The annual proxy season, when companies reveal compensation, is just starting. If the disclosures show the trend toward larger option grants holding after a year that most companies would lie to forget, it would seem to make a mockery of the concept of pay for performance. That was the reason options grew so popular in the first place. Yet while some companies are trying to make options better reflect their fortunes, most other simply contend that options are primarily a motivational tool and have never been a reward for performance.

With stock prices stalled, options may not seem attractive now. But executives who receive them can usually count on rich rewards eventually, even if a company does only marginally better. The increase in options, however imposes additional costs on shareholders; the more options granted, the lower the return for investors, since their holdings are, one way or the other, diluted.

But the options keep coming. Chief executives who received more of them last year, even as their companies suffered, include

Daniel A. Carp of Eastman Kodak, John T. Chambers of Cisco Systems, Scott G. McNealy of Sun Microsystems and Harvey R. Blau of Aeroflex

And Henry B. Schacht, returning to the helm of troubled Lucent, received annual options grants almost five times the size of those his predecessor received—and more than 17 times the size of the last grant he received the year he retired. "Fiscal 2001 was rather challenging for Lucent, so the grants were made to ensure Henry had management stability through the turnaround," said Mary Lou Ambrus, a Lucent spokeswoman, in explanation.

Changes are, many chief executives received bigger options awards, as proxy statements, filed each March and April by most companies, are expected to show, experts say. Some were no doubt issued to make up for previous grants that had been rendered worthless by tumbling stock prices.

At the same time, the market's recovery has revived hopes that old option grants will not be worthless. "Options typically run for 10 years, and already many of the ones issued in the last year are back in the money," said John N. Lauer, chief executive of Oglebay Norton, a shipping company. "If the economy recovers, those issued in previous years will also regain value."

Mr. Lauer has gained notoriety in corporate circles for his insistence on being paid entirely in options priced well above Oglebay's stock price. Though Oglebay's performance has improved somewhat, options he received five years ago are still worth nothing.

"In a social setting where I'm in a room with other C.E.O.'s, someone will teasingly suggest that they pass the hat for me because I'm not making any money," he said. "I think they figure I'm loony or something."

Mr. Lauer is not the only executive to have high performance goals, but it is safe to say that most executives keep drawing large salaries, plus more and more options. According to a survey done in the third quarter of last year by Pearl Meyer & Partners, a human resources consulting firm in New York, the number of options granted by 50 major companies that will report their 2001 compensation this spring was up an average of 12 percent from 2000.

Consultants expect that trend to continue as companies report 2001 compensation practices this spring. "It's a great time to give options," said Pearl Meyer, president of the firm. "They're cheap because they involve no charge to earnings, and that's important at a time when profits are down and boards are trying to make up for the fact that salaries and bonuses are both down."

But Ms. Meyer and many others in the field—as well as, they say, the members of corporate compensation committees—are not happy to see the increase in options grants. Their expressions of concern are striking because of compensation consultants have been among the biggest champions of the use of options as performance incentives.

The consultants are worried, in part, about the option "overhang"—options outstanding, plus those shares that investors have authorized but that have yet to be granted. More fundamentally, they suggest that the links between a manager's pay and a company's performance—as measured by, say, profitability, market-share growth and smart acquisition strategies—have become more tenuous.

Ms. Meyer suggests that the at-risk components of executive pay be viewed as the legs of a stool; the legs reflecting stock performance has grown longer and longer, while those reflecting business and financial performance have become shorter.

"We have overdosed on options and the stock market," she said. "We're dependent on the stock market for executive compensation, pension payments, directors' compensation, 401(k) plans—our whole economy, practically, is dependent on the market's performance."

That reliance has produced an overhang that dangles like a sword of Damocles over investors. Eventually, their stakes will be diluted—either when companies issue vast quantities of new shares to make good on options grants, or when they undertake share-repurchase programs that eat up cash they might use for operations.

According to a study by Watson Wyatt Worldwide, a human resource consulting company, the average options overhang of the companies in the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index was 14.6 percent of outstanding shares in 2000, up from 13 percent a year earlier.

This spring's numbers will probably show another rise. The overhang "is definitely going to be up" by a percentage point or more in 2001, said Ira T. Kay, a consultant at Watson Wyatt Worldwide, "because people aren't exercising their options the way they were when the stock market was booming."

Mr. Kay predicted that the slowdown in the exercising of options would work to curb the issuing of new ones this year and next, although he anticipates a slow increase over the long term. "I've been in meetings of five boards that were very reluctant to go to shareholders to ask for more shares to underwrite options grants," he said, "They don't think they can justify it."

Companies are losing out on another salutary benefit of options compensation as well—their ability to reduce corporate taxes. Employers get a deduction when employees exercise options, but as Mr. Kay and other compensation consultants note, these days few are cashing them in.

Oddly, shareholder advocates and institutional investors, who stand to lose the most from an option glut, seem sanguine thus far. Some note that while option awards have increased, the value of the awards has collapsed. Pearl Meyer's research shows that the value of option grants fell 7 percent in the first eight months of 2001 after rising steadily for several years.

Some shareholder advocates say that will also help curb future grants, as long as stocks are sluggish.

"We've had a 20 percent drop in the Standard & Poor's index," said Patrick S. McGurn, of Institutional Shareholder Services, a consulting business in Rockville, MD. "And the standard valuation method for options would tell that you'd have to double or triple grants just to get to the level where you were the previous year. Most boards are going to balk at those numbers, particularly when corporate performance has been so poor."

But that may be wishful thinking. Last year, Eastman Kodak took $659 million in restructuring charges that, combined with falling sales and market share, pushed its earnings down 95 percent. In November it awarded its chief executive, Mr. Carp, options for 250,000 shares at an exercise price of $29.31, Kodak's stock price at the time. All Mr. Carp must do to gain is keep Kodak's stock level.

That grant came on top of the 100,000 options he received in January 2001 at a strike price of $40.97. So Mr. Carp received three and a half times as many options in 2001 as he did in 2000—at markedly lower strike prices. Sandra R. Feil, director for worldwide total compensation at Kodak, said Mr. Carp received two awards last year because the company had changed the time of its grants, to November from January.

As for the increase, Ms. Feil said Kodak had worked with Frederic W. Cook & Company, a compensation consultant, which found that Mr. Carp was in the lowest 25 percent of executives receiving options. "What we've done," she said, "is taken a step, and even a conservative step at that, in getting him out of the lowest quartile."

But what about Kodak's dismal performance last year? "We look at stock options as a long-term incentive that's forward-looking," Ms. Feil said. "We don't look at them as a reward for past performance."

To understand just how easy it is to get richer and richer on options, consider the case of Lawrence J. Ellison, chairman, chief executive and co-founder of the Oracle Compensation, the software maker. In January, with Oracle's stock trading just above $30, near its yearly high of $34, Ellison exercised option grants for about 23 million shares at an average price of 23 cents, for a paper profit of more than $700 million.

It was the biggest options bonanza on record—and Mr. Ellison holds options to buy an additional 47.9 million shares. "He could end up taking $3 billion out of the company," said Judith Fischer, managing director of Executive Compensation Advisory Services, a consulting firm.

Investors are often forgiving of founders like Mr. Ellison, many of whom staked personal assets and invested buckets of sweat equity to get companies off the ground. His paper profit has shrunk to $378 million as Oracle's stock has sagged.

But investors were still piqued by Mr. Ellison's timing. He exercised his options a month before Oracle issued an earnings warning. The options expired on Aug. 1; he was under no pressure to sell them in January.

To protect shareholders from dilutions from options, Oracle routinely buys shares in the market. Other big corporate users of options, like Microsoft and Dell Computer, do, too, contending that it not only protects shareholders, but offers them tax advantages.

But repurchase programs can also have a huge impact on a company's cash flow. Oracle started the fiscal year that began June 1, 2000, with $7.4 billion in cash, then spent $4.3 billion to repurchase shares largely for use in its options program.

At the end of the fiscal year, the company's overhang stood at 28 percent of total outstanding shares. Microsoft has a similarly large overhang, but it also has more cash.

For years, shareholders have pushed companies to make chief executives earn their keep, and they initially applauded the use of options to accomplish that goal. But companies found ways to make sure the options were worth something regardless of performance, by repricing worthless options or replacing them with fistfuls of new ones.

The outcry over those practices, however, may be pushing some companies to make changes.

In the spring of 1999, the Longview Collective Investment Fund, which manages some A.F.L.-C.I.O. pension money, submitted a shareholder proposal to the Chubb Corporation, the insurer, asking it to grant options that would more closely align compensation with performance.

The proposal was defeated. But when Beth W. Young, an independent consultant who advises the A.F.L.-C.I.O. and other pension fund managers, called Chubb the next spring to resubmit the proposal, she was told that Chubb had already incorporated into its incentive plan options that could be exercised only if the stock price rose significantly.

Roughly half the options handed out to Chubb's senior management in 2000 and 2001 have an exercise price 25 percent higher than the stock price on the day they were granted. But only 2 percent to 4 percent of large companies use such "premium priced" options, consultants say.

"The executives who were granted these options will, at least in theory, have a much stronger incentive to take steps to increase the stock price," said Donald B. Lawson, the Chubb senior vice president who manages compensation and benefits.

Chubb also uses "performance shares," which can typically be redeemed only after three years and only if the company clears specific hurdles. In 2000, for example, the performance shares it handed out in 1998 were worthless because the company did not hit those targets.

For Dean R. O'Hare, Chubb's chief executive, that meant his total compensation fell by $448,508 from the previous year. He did get more options, but those largely replaced restricted shares—those that cannot be sold right away—after the company decided not to use them to reward executives, Mr. Lawson said.

Performance shares held by C. Michael Armstrong, the chief executive of AT&T, have proved to be worthless for three years as the company has fallen short of the board's goals for increases in total return to shareholders.

An options award for 419,200 shares granted to Mr. Armstrong at the end of 2000 was also tied to better performance. The options can be exercised only if AT&T produces a $145 billion pretax gain for shareholders in the year that started March 31. On the other hand, another twist on options accelerates the vesting period if a company's shares reach a certain target. In 2000, the Williams Companies granted options with the condition that if, on certain days, the stock traded at 1.4 times the price at the beginning of the year, the options could be exercised immediately rather than over three years.

Other companies are working to get more plain-vanilla stock, not options, into executives' hands—stock they must buy. When Beazer Homes USA, a home builder, went public in 1994, it adopted a management stock purchase program to increase managers' stakes. At the beginning of each year, some 80 executives can choose to give up a percentage of their bonuses to buy stock at a 20 percent discount on the year-end closing price. The stock cannot be sold for three years.

Executives now own roughly 8 percent of the company, said David S. Weiss, Beazer's chief financial officer. "We think it's a good idea to have them put real money at risk, as opposed to just receiving a reward," he said. "Options feel like a gift from the company that the market, through its whims, will reward or not. Shares reflect the company's performance, whether good or bad."

Mr. Kay, at Watson Wyatt, said such pure stock subsidies were gaining popularity. More companies, he said, plan to use contingent options like those at Chubb and AT&T, which try to reflect financial and business performance.

Investors expect the BellSouth Corporation and the Eaton Corporation, for example, to disclose such adjustments in their new proxy statements. A spokesman for Eaton said he was unaware of such a move, and a spokesman for BellSouth declined to comment until the proxy is released in March.

But other boards are already finding ways to limit the risks that performance shares, premium-priced options, performance-accelerated options and other performance-linked tools pose.

Until last April, Archie W. Dunham, chief executive of Conoco, had options giving him the right to buy 700,000 shares. But he could exercise them only if Conoco's shares traded about $35 on each of the five days before Aug. 17 of this year.

Before Conoco bought Gulf Canada Resources in July, however, its board granted a two-year extension to Mr. Dunham and at least six other executives holding those options. "The board thought the climate was right this year for some kind of an acquisition but that it could have an adverse effect on the stock price," John McLemore, a Conoco spokesman, said. "They thought it wouldn't be really fair for those people who held these options to be punished for something that might make it harder for them to meet the conditions."

That means the board rewarded Mr. Dunham and his colleagues for an acquisition that it knew was likely to hurt Conoco's shares, at least temporarily—a courtesy not extended to shareholders.

STOCK OPTION MADNESS

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

As the Enron scandal broadens, we may miss the forest for the trees. The multiplying investigations have created a massive whodunit. Who destroyed documents? Who misled investors? Who twisted or broke accounting rules? The answers may explain what happened at Enron but necessarily why. We need to search for deeper causes, beginning with stock options. Here's a good idea gone bad—stock options foster a corrosive climate that tempts many executives, and not just those at Enron, to play fast and loose when reporting profits.

As everyone knows, stock options exploded in the last 1980s and the 1990s. The theory was simple. If you made top executives and managers into owners, they would act in shareholders' interests. Executives' pay packages became increasingly skewed toward options. In 2000, the typical chief executive officer of one of the country's 350 major companies earned about $5.2 million, with almost half of that reflecting stock options, according to William M. Mercer Inc., a consulting firm. About half of those companies also had stock-option programs for at least half their employees. Up to a point, the theory worked. Twenty years ago, America's corporate managers were widely criticized. Japanese and German companies seemed on a roll. By contrast, their American rivals seemed stodgy, complacent and bureaucratic. Stock options, were one tool in a managerial upheaval that refocused attention away from corporate empire-building and toward improved profitability and efficiency.

All this contributed to the 1990s' economic revival. By holding down costs, companies restrained inflation. By aggressively promoting new products and technologies, companies boosted production and employment. But slowly, stock options became corrupted by carelessness, overuse and greed. As more executives developed big personal stakes in options, the task of keeping the stock price rising became separate from improving the business and its profitability. This is what seems to have happened at Enron.

The company adored stock options. About 60 percent of employees received an annual award of options, equal to 5 percent of their base salary. Executives and top managers got more. At year-end 2000, all Enron managers and workers had options, that could be exercised for nearly 47 million shares. Under a typical plan, a recipient gets an options to buy a given number of shares at the market price on the day the option is issued. This is called "the strike price." But the option usually cannot be exercised for a few years. If the stock's price rises in that time, the option can yield a tidy profit. The lucky recipient buys at the strike price and sells at the market price. On the 47 million Enron options, the average "strike price was about $30 and at the end of 2000, the market price was $83. The potential profit was nearly $2.5 billion.

Given the huge reward, it would have been astonishing if Enron's managers had not become obsessed with the company's stock price and—to the extent possible—tried to influence it. And while Enron's stock soared, why would anyone complain about accounting shenanigans? Whatever the resulting abuses, the pressures are not unique to Enron. It takes a naive view of human nature to think that many executives won't strive to maximize their personal wealth.

This is an invitation to abuse. To influence stock prices, executives can issue optimistic profit projections. They can delay some spending, such as research and development (this temporarily helps profits). They can engage in stock buybacks (these raise per-share earnings, because fewer shares are outstanding). And, of course, they can exploit accounting rules. Even temporary blips in stock prices can create opportunities to unload profitable options.

The point is that the growth of stock options has created huge conflicts of interest that executives will be hard-pressed to avoid. Indeed, many executives will coax as many options as possible from their compensation committees, typically composed of "outside" directors. But because "directors are [manipulated] by management, sympathetic to them, or simply ineffectual," the amounts may well be excessive, argue Harvard law professors Lucian Arye Bebchuk and Jesse Fried and attorney David Walker in a recent study.

Stock options are not evil, but unless we curb the present madness, we are courting continual trouble. Here are three ways to check the overuse of options:

(1) Change the accounting—count options as a cost. Amazingly, when companies issue stock options, they do not have to make a deduction to profits. This encourages companies to create new options. By one common accounting technique, Enron's options would have required deductions of almost $2.4 billion from 1998 through 2000. That would have virtually eliminated the company's profits.

(2) Index stock options to the market. If a company's shares rise in tandem with the overall stock market, the gains don't reflect any management contribution—and yet, most options still increase in value. Executives get a windfall. Options should reward only for gains above the market.

(3) Don't reprice options if the stock falls. Some corporate boards of directors issue new options at lower prices if the company's stock falls. What's the point? Options are supposed to prod executives to improve the company's profits and stock price. Why protect them if they fail?

Within limits, stock options represent a useful reward for management. But we lost those limits, and options became a kind of free money sprinkled about by uncritical corporate directors. The unintended result was a morally lax, get-rich-quick mentality. Unless companies restore limits—prodded, if need be, by new government regulations—one large lesson of the Enron scandal will have been lost.

ECONOMIC VIEW; ENRON'S WAY: PAY PACKAGES FOSTER SPIN, NOT RESULTS

(By David Leonhardt)

As the stock plummeted, investors and employees alike were left with big losses. But one group of shareholders came out ahead—management. Many board members and top executives managed to sell millions of dollars of shares before the big fall and still have something to show for the stock's once-lofty price.

This is the story of Enron, of course, but it hardly ends there. Over the last two years, as the stock market has fallen about 30 percent from its peak, the description fits dozens of other companies as well. For example, Roger G. Ackerman, the former chairman of Corning, sold $14 million of the company's stock last year, mostly when it was trading at about $57 a share, or seven times its current price. Donald R. Scifres, the co-chairman of JDS Uniphase, made $23 million selling company shares last year; the stock has lost nearly 90 percent of its value since January 2001. David R. Alvarez sold $14 million worth of stock in Provident Financial, where he is vice chairman, last year before the company acknowledged that its balance sheet wasn't quite what it was cracked up to be. The stock, which traded at $60 a share last summer, now trades at around $4.

Some of the biggest paydays have come at obscure companies that were once market darlings, John J. Moores, better known as the owner of the San Diego Padres baseball team, made $101 million last year selling shares of Peregrine Systems, on whose board he serves, before its shares fell by more than two-thirds. Richard Aube, a director at Capstone Turbine, made $51 million selling its stock last year, according to Thomson Financial. If you bought when we sold at around $30 a share, your investment would be showing an 80 percent loss now.

The contrast is obviously cringe-inducing. But it is more than that. Even when executives simply fail to live up to their own predictions—rather than break the law, as some people suspect that Enron managers did—the big insider paydays offer a good lesson in how economic incentives are askew in corporate America.

Corporate spin aside, executives do not always prosper most by making their companies great. They can often profit more from creating unrealistic expectations than from delivering consistently impressive results.

Consider two companies. One has a stock price that has appreciated slowly, starting at $20 five years ago and gaining $2 a year, to $30 today. The second company's stock also started at $20 five years ago, then zoomed to $100 after a few years but has since fallen back to $20.

By any reasonable measure, the leaders of the first company have done a better job. Their share price has grown 50 percent, and they have avoided making grandiose predictions that cause Wall Street analysts to set silly targets. The second company has a stock that has underperformed a savings account over the long run, and scores of workers and investors have been burned by false hopes.

Yet if the top executives of both companies had received similar amounts of stock and both sold their shares on a regular schedule, the executives of the second company would actually be ahead. They would have made so much money selling the stock when it was trading near $100 that they would be multimillionaires despite the humbling decline.

This is the Enron model of pay for performance, and it has become common. Executives receive enormous grants of stock or options, saying they are simply aligning their own interests with those of their shareholders. But the packages are so generous that even a temporary rise in the share price, accompanied by the sale of a portion of an executive's stock, can leave him set for life. The appeal of overly aggressive accounting methods and manipulated earnings becomes obvious.

"You're providing C.E.O.'s with a perverse incentive," said Nell Minow, the editor of the Corporate Library, a research firm in Washington. "You're rewarding them for a goal that is not in the interest of long-term shareholders."

The executives who have made millions of dollars selling once-expensive shares say they have done nothing wrong. They simply followed a regular, legal schedule of selling stock, they say, and would be far richer if the stock price had not dropped.

All of that is usually true. But it is also true that when an economic system richly rewards certain behavior, no one should be surprised when that behavior becomes the norm. If you want to change it, you have to change the incentives. The Enron mess has the potential to focus people's attention on the complicated task of doing precisely that.

EMPLOYEE STOCK OPTIONS SHOULD BE EXPENSED ON INCOME STATEMENTS, SURVEY SHOWS

In September 2001, AIMR surveyed more than 18,000 members to gauge their responses to a proposed agenda topic of the International Accounting Standards Board (IASB) that could require companies to report the fair value of stock options granted—including those to employees—as an expense on the income statement, reducing earnings. Although share-based payments to employees and others are increasing worldwide, few countries currently have national standards on the topic.

Do you consider share-based (or stock option) plans to be compensation to the parties receiving the benefits of these plans?

Answer. Yes, 88%; no, 6%; it depends, 6%.

Do firms you evaluate and monitor have shared-based (or stock option) plans that grant shares of the firm's stock?

Answer. Yes, 85%; no, 6%; not sure, 9%.

Do you use the information and data that companies provide on share-based plans in your evaluation of the firm's performance and determination of its value?

Answer. Yes, only when it is recognized as a compensation in the income statement; 15%; yes, regardless of whether it is recognized in the income statement, 66%; no, 19%.

Survey results are based on a random poll of more than 18,000 AIMR members, with a 10% response rate.

Do the current accounting requirements for share-based payments need improving, in particular, for those plans covering employees?

Answer. Yes, 74%; no, 26%.

Should the accounting method for all share-based payment transactions (including employee stock option plans) require recognition of an expense in the income statement?

Answer. Total response: Yes, 83%; no, 17%.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation with Senators LEVIN, FITZGERALD, and DURBIN, entitled Ending the Double Standard for Stock Options Act. This legislation requires companies to treat stock options for employees as an expense for bookkeeping purposes if they want to claim this expense as a deduction for tax purposes. We introduced similar legislation in 1997 during the 105th Congress but unfortunately, the special interest with a vested stake in the status quo prevented this legislation from seeing the light of day.

Currently, corporations can hide these multimillion-dollar compensation plans from their stockholders or other investors because these plans are not counted as an expense when calculating company earnings. Even the Federal Accounting Standards Board, FASB, recognized that stock options should be treated as an expense for accounting purposes. Accounting disclosure rules issued by FASB require that companies include in their annual reports a footnote disclosing what the company's net earnings would have been if stock option plans were treated as an expense.

The latest scandals involving the collapse of Enron highlight the problem of misleading annual statements and financial statements. According to a recent analysis, from 1996 to 2000, Enron issued nearly $600 million in stock options, collecting tax deductions which allowed the corporation to severely reduce their payment in taxes. Whether or not Enron took advantage of current disclosure rules to hide their financial problems remains a question. The fact remains that current rules allow companies such as Enron to discuss as little as possible. And this prevents investors, Wall Street analyst, corporate executives, and auditors from properly understanding the bottom line of corporations.

One might reasonably ask how an arcane accounting rule could have such a large impact on the bottom line of corporations. The answer lies in the growth and value of stock options as a means of executive compensation.

We have heard the reports of executives making multimillion-dollar salaries, while average worker salaries stagnate or fall. According to one recent report, almost half of the earnings of the typical chief executive officer of a top company reflects stock options. Why shouldn't the value of this compensation package be included in calculating a company's earnings? How can stockowners evaluate the true value of employee compensation if the value is just buried in a footnote somewhere the annual report?

No other type of compensation gets treated as an expense for tax purposes, without also being treated as an expense on the company books. This double standard is exactly the kind of inequitable corporate benefit that makes the American people irate and must be eliminated. If companies do not want to fully disclose on their books how much they are compensating their employees, then they should not be able to claim a tax benefit for it.

This legislation does not require a particular accounting treatment; the accounting decision is left to the company. This legislation simply requires companies to treat stock options the same way for both accounting and tax purposes.

I hope my colleagues will join us in cosponsoring this important legislation that will end the double standard for stock option compensation.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself and Mr. DURBIN):

S. 1941. A bill to authorize the President to establish military tribunals to try the terrorists responsible for the September 11, 2001 attacks against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, on November 13, 2001, President Bush signed a military order authorizing the use of military commissions to try suspected terrorists. This order stimulated an important national debate and led to a series of Judiciary Committee hearings with the Attorney General and others to discuss the many legal, constitutional, and policy questions raised by the use of such tribunals. Our hearings, and the continued public discourse, helped to clarify the scope of the President's order and better define the terms of the debate.

For example, the Judiciary Committee held a hearing on November 28, 2001, at which several legal experts challenged the validity of the military order. Philip Heymann of Harvard Law School, a former Deputy Attorney General, testified that the order was so broad that it amounted to a dangerous claim of executive power. In his view, the order improperly bypassed congressional review, undermined confidence in our civil justice system, and jeopardized relationships with our allies abroad. Retired Air Force Colonel Scott Silliman who is now at Duke Law School, questioned the President's authority to use military commissions with respect to the September 11 attacks absent authorizing legislation by Congress. Professor Silliman also echoed the comments of Professor Heymann, arguing that tribunals convened under the order could adversely impact our international credibility as a Nation under the rule of law.

On December 4, 2001, Senator Schumer chaired another important hearing on the issue of military commissions. Harvard Law Professor Laurence Tribe testified at that hearing that "Congress alone can avoid the constitutional infirmities that plague the Military Tribunal Order of November 13." Professor Tribe argued for the establishment of procedural guidelines to ensure the protection of defendants' due process rights, and called for Congress to set limits in consultation with the President. He cautioned that if the Administration acted on its own—under authority that Professor Tribe believed was constitutionally infirm, any convictions could later be overturned by the courts, with the result that dangerous individuals could be set free. By contrast, convictions obtained by military tribunals constituted under the authority of the Congress and the President acting together would more likely be shielded from constitutional challenge on appeal.

At the same December 4 hearing, Cass Sunstein of the University of Chicago Law School testified that "from the standpoint of both constitutional law and democratic legitimacy, it is far better if the President and Congress act in concert," adding that "the executive branch stands on the firmest ground if it acts pursuant to clear congressional authorization." Professor Sunstein suggested that Congress limit the scope of military tribunals by allowing the use of military tribunals "only on certain essential occasions."

Finally, on December 6, the Judiciary Committee heard from Attorney General Ashcroft on military commissions and a number of other unilateral actions taken by the Administration last fall. I believe that we had a constructive conversation that day, despite our disagreements on substantive points. The Attorney General took issue with anyone who dared question the thinking of the executive branch on such topics, charging them with "fearmongering" and aiding the terrorists. I would note, however, that several members of the Committee, including some of my colleagues from the other side of the aisle, suggested to the Attorney General that if military tribunals were used, they should provide a number of basic due process guarantees. Suggestions like these, coming from both Republicans and Democrats, are not intended to bait the Administration. Rather, constructive criticism can be, should be and has been useful in developing sound policy that can better protect Americans and American soldiers, particularly when they are serving abroad.

The Attorney General testified at our hearing on December 6 that the President does not need the sanction of Congress to convene military commission, but I disagree. Military tribunals may be appropriate under certain circumstances, but only if they are backed by specific congressional authorization. At a minimum, as the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania stated on this floor on November 15, "the executive will be immeasurably strengthened if the Congress backs the President." Clearly, our government is at its strongest when the executive and legislative branches of government act in concert.

We demonstrated this unified strength in negotiating the USA Patriot Act last fall. The Congress, the White House and the Department of Justice worked intensively for seven weeks to craft a bill that provided law enforcement agencies with the tools they said were needed to fight terrorism while preserving American values and democratic principles.

In that same spirit, and with my friend, the senior Senator from Illinois, I am today introducing the Military Tribunal Authorization Act. This legislation would provide the executive branch with the specific authorization it now lacks to use extraordinary tribunals to try members of the al Qaeda terrorist network and those who cooperated with them.

Specifically, this legislation authorizes the use of "extraordinary tribunals" for al Qaeda members, and for persons aiding and abetting al Qaeda in terrorist activities against the United States, who are apprehended in, or fleeing from, Afghanistan. It also authorizes the use of tribunals for those al Qaeda members and abettors who are captured in any other place where there is armed conflict involving the U.S. Armed Forces.

Like the November 13 order, the Military Tribunal Authorization Act exempts U.S. citizens from the jurisdiction of the tribunals, as well as those individuals determined to be prisoners of war under the Geneva Convention. The bill also exempts individuals arrested while present in the United States, since our civilian court system is well-equipped to handle such cases. These exemptions are consistent with the Administration's treatment of Zacharias Moussaoui, the suspected 20th hijacker in the September 11 attacks, who is awaiting trial in Federal district court. A second terrorist suspect, Richard Reid, the so-called "shoe bomber," is also being tried in Federal district court. In fact, one of the nine charges against Reid, "attempted wrecking of a mass transportation vehicle," is a new anti-terrorism offense that was created by the USA Patriot Act. Finally, the Administration has decided to bring Federal criminal charges against John Walker Lindh, who allegedly took up arms against Americans to fight with al Qaeda and the Taliban in Afghanistan.

A significant question raised about the November 13 order is that it vests the President with plenary and unreviewable discretion to determine who is subject to trial by military tribunal. The President's order also implied that those who were arrested under its terms could be held indefinitely. Detainees were to receive a "full and fair trial," but no explanation of the terms "full" and "fair" is offered. While the Administration has deferred providing any explanation to the development of regulations by the Secretary of Defense, requests for an opportunity to review and be consulted about the draft regulations have been denied. This leaves introduction of legislation showing how military tribunals may be constituted to comport with constitutional mandates and values as one of the few avenues to inform the process in development of regulations.

The Military Tribunal Authorization act defines the jurisdiction and procedure of tribunals in a way that ensures a "full and fair" trial for anyone detained. Under the bill, the Secretary of Defense is charged with elaborating on the procedures that the tribunals must follow and publishing any draft regulations in the Federal Register.

First, the bill makes clear that tribunals may adjudicate violations of the law of war, including international laws of armed conflict and crimes against humanity, targeted against U.S. persons. Wars have rules, as defined by the Geneva Conventions and other international agreements. These rules protect civilians from harm and define how captured soldiers must be treated. Under the bill, individuals who violated those rules by targeting innocent American civilians can face trial in a military tribunal. In addition, individuals who committed crimes against humanity, such as murder, torture, or other inhumane acts, may face charges in a tribunal.

Second, on the length of detention, the bill authorizes detention of individuals subject to military tribunals for as long as the President certifies that the United States is in armed conflict with al Qaeda or Taliban forces in Afghanistan or elsewhere, or that an investigation, prosecution or post-trial proceeding against the detainee is ongoing. The certification must be made every six months.

Third, on the conditions of confinement, the bill requires that detainees be "treated humanely," which is consistent with the Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment, a resolution adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1988. This includes adequate food, water, shelter, clothing and medical treatment, hygienic conditions, the necessary means of personal hygiene, and the free exercise of religion. Detention determinations and the conditions of detention are subject to review by the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Fourth, the bill incorporates basic due process guarantees, including the right to independent counsel. In imposing this requirement, I am not suggesting that suspected terrorists deserve special treatment. Rather, the bill follows well-established standards for indigent defense. In the first of its "Ten Commandments" of public defense programs, the Department of Justice calls for full independence of defense counsel and judicial functions. The department's "Ten Commandments" also require that counsel's ability, training, and experience must be matched to the complexity of the case. Providing independent counsel and judicial review is critical to ensuring that any convictions are free from political influence. An independent process with experienced counsel will also safeguard against otherwise valid convictions being overturned for violations of due process or incompetent counsel.

Under the terms of this bill, tribunals would be required to apply reasonable rules of evidence to ensure that material admitted at trial was of probative value. Defendants would be presumed innocent until proven guilty, and proof of guilt must be established beyond a reasonable doubt. Defendants may not be compelled to testify against themselves. Finally, defendants could appeal their convictions and sentences to a higher tribunal, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.

These procedures do not, as some have claimed, provide greater protections to suspected terrorists than we offer our own soldiers. These are, rather, the very basic guarantees provided under various sources of international law, including the Geneva Conventions, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for former Yugoslavia, among others. Several of the procedural protections are also drawn from the U.S. Rules of Courts-Martial and the Military Rules of Evidence. In addition, the trial procedure statute of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which is cited in the President's military order, recommends that the President apply to military commissions the principles of law and rules of evidence that are generally recognized by the federal district courts.

I submit for the record a list the international conventions that serve as sources for the eighteen procedural protections included in my bill. As the ABA resolution urges, in establishing military tribunals, we should "give full consideration to the impact . . . as precedents in . . . the use of international legal norms in shaping other nations' responses to future acts of terrorism." Respecting those international legal norms, will redound to the benefit of Americans.

It is important to note that last week the President reevaluated his position on a related issue. He decided to apply the Geneva Conventions to Taliban captives. This decision sends a signal to the world that the United States respects the Geneva Conventions and expects them to be applied to American soldiers captured overseas. I commend Secretary Powell, who supported this application of the Geneva Conventions. I also commend Secretary Rumsfeld, whose draft rules on military commissions contained a number of important procedural protections. Both Secretaries Powell and Rumsfeld have worked to bring the original military order and subsequent decisions over detention within the framework of international law. I urge the Administration to follow this example of flexibility and inclusiveness by working with Congress to establish tribunals that are authorized by statute and consistent with international law.

Finally, the bill comes down squarely on the side of transparency in government by providing that tribunal proceedings should be open and public, and include public availability of the transcripts of the trial and the pronouncement of judgment. The only exceptions are for demonstrable reasons of national security or the necessity to secure the safety of observers, witnesses, tribunal judges, counsel or other persons.

In sum, the Military Tribunal Authorization Act establishes a legal framework for proceedings that are truly "full and fair." The provisions of this bill track very closely with recommendations arrived at independently by the American Bar Association and issued on February 4, 2002. The ABA calls on the executive branch to provide due process guarantees similar to those used in courts-martial, including a number of rights included in this bill. It also urged the Administration to work with Congress in defining the rules for military commissions.

Passage of authorizing legislation would ensure the constitutionality of military tribunals and protect any convictions they might yield, while at the same time showing the world that we will fight terrorists without sacrificing our principles. We can also show by example how we expect our soldiers and nationals to be treated if they are swept into foreign courts or tribunals.

Our government is at its strongest when its executive and legislative branches act in concert. I provided earlier drafts of this legislation to the Attorney General and Secretary of Defense, but received no response. With the introduction of this bill, I again invite the Administration's cooperation and comment.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and the sectional analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1941

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Military Tribunal Authorization Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The al Qaeda terrorist organization and its leaders have committed unlawful attacks against the United States, including the August 7, 1998 bombings of the United States embassies in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, the October 12, 2000 attack on the USS Cole and the September 11, 2001 attacks on the United States.

(2) The al Qaeda terrorist organization and its leaders have threatened renewed attacks on the United States and have threatened the use of weapons of mass destruction.

(3) In violation of the resolutions of the United Nations, the Taliban of Afghanistan provided a safe haven to the al Qaeda terrorist organization and its leaders and allowed the territory of that country to be used as a base from which to sponsor international terrorist operations.

(4) The United Nations Security Council, in Resolution 1267, declared in 1999 that the actions of the Taliban constitute a threat to international peace and security.

(5) The United Nations Security Council, in Resolutions 1368 and 1373, declared in September 2001 that the September 11 attacks against the United States constitute a threat to international peace and security.

(6) The United States is justified in exercising its right of self-defense pursuant to international law and the United Nations Charter.

(7) Congress authorized the President on September 18, 2001, to use all necessary and appropriate force against those nations, organizations, or persons that he determines to have planned, authorized, committed, or aided the September 11 terrorist attacks or harbored such organizations or persons, in order to prevent any future acts of international terrorism against the United States, within the meaning of section 5(b) of the War Powers Resolution.

(8) The United States and its allies are engaged in armed conflict with al Qaeda and the Taliban.

(9) Military trials of the terrorists may be appropriate to protect the safety of the public and those involved in the investigation and prosecution, to facilitate the use of classified information as evidence without compromising intelligence or military efforts, and otherwise to protect national security interests.

(10) Military trials that provide basic procedural guarantees of fairness, consistent with the international law of armed conflict and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (opened for signature December 16, 1966), would garner the support of the community of nations.

(11) Article I, section 8, of the Constitution provides that the Congress, not the President, has the power to "constitute Tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court; ... define and punish ... Offenses against the Law of Nations; ... make Rules concerning Captures on Land and Water; ... make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof."

(12) Congressional authorization is necessary for the establishment of extraordinary tribunals to adjudicate and punish offenses arising from the September 11, 2001 attacks against the United States and to provide a clear and unambiguous legal foundation for such trials.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF EXTRAORDINARY TRIBUNALS.

(1) are not United States persons;

(2) are members of al Qaeda or members of other terrorist organizations knowingly cooperating with members of al Qaeda in planning, authorizing, committing, or aiding in the September 11, 2001 attacks against the United States, or, although not members of any such organization, knowingly aided and abetted members of al Qaeda in such terrorist activities against the United States;

(3) are apprehended in Afghanistan, fleeing from Afghanistan, or in or fleeing from any other place outside the United States where there is armed conflict involving the Armed Forces of the United States; and

(b) IMPOSITION OF THE DEATH PENALTY.—The requirements of the Uniform Code of Military Justice for the imposition of the death penalty shall apply in any case in which a tribunal established under section 3 is requested to adjudge the death penalty.

(c) PUBLIC PROCEEDINGS.—Any proceedings conducted by a tribunal established under section 3, and the proceedings on any appeal of an action of the tribunal, shall be accessible to the public consistent with any demonstrable necessity to secure the safety of observers, witnesses, tribunal judges, counsel, or other persons.

(d) CONFIDENTIALITY OF EVIDENCE.—Evidence available from an agency of the Federal Government that is offered in a trial by a tribunal established under section 3 may be kept secret from the public only when the head of the agency personally certifies in writing that disclosure will cause—

(1) identifiable harm to the prosecution of military objectives or interfere with the capture of members of al Qaeda anywhere;

(2) significant, identifiable harm to intelligence sources or methods; or

(3) substantial risk that such evidence could be used for planning future terrorist attacks.

(e) REVIEW.—

(1) PROCEDURES REQUIRED.—The Secretary of Defense shall provide for prompt review of convictions by tribunals established under section 3 to ensure that the procedural requirements of a full and fair hearing have been met and that the evidence reasonably supports the convictions.

(3) SUPREME COURT.—The decisions of the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces regarding proceedings of tribunals established under section 3 shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari.

SEC. 5. DETENTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President may direct the Secretary of Defense to detain any person who is subject to a tribunal established under section 3 pursuant to rules and regulations that are promulgated by the Secretary and are consistent with the rules of international law.

(b) DURATION OF DETENTION.—

(1) LIMITATION.—A person may be detained under subsection (a) only while—

(A) there is in effect for the purposes of this section a certification by the President that the United States Armed Forces are engaged in a state of armed conflict with al Qaeda or Taliban forces in the region of Afghanistan or with al Qaeda forces elsewhere; or

(B) an investigation with a view toward prosecution, a prosecution, or a post-trial proceeding in the case of such person, pursuant to the provisions of this Act, is ongoing.

(2) CERTIFICATION AND RECERTIFICATION.—A certification of circumstances made under paragraph (1) shall be effective for 180 days. The President may make successive certifications of the circumstances.

(c) DISCLOSURE OF EVIDENCE.—Evidence that may establish that an accused is not a person described in subsection (a) shall be disclosed to the accused and his counsel, except that a summary of such evidence shall be provided to the accused and his counsel when the Attorney General personally certifies that disclosure of the evidence would cause identifiable harm to the prosecution of military objectives in Afghanistan, to the capture of other persons who are subject to this Act or reside outside the United States, or to the prevention of future terrorist acts directed against Americans. A summary of evidence shall be as complete as is possible in order to provide the accused with an evidentiary basis to seek release from detention.

(d) DETENTION REVIEW.—The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit shall have exclusive jurisdiction to review any determination under this section that the requirements of this section for detaining an accused are satisfied.

(e) CONDITIONS OF DETENTION.—A person detained under this section shall be—

(4) sheltered under hygienic conditions and provided necessary means of personal hygiene; and

(5) allowed the free exercise of religion consistent with the requirements of such detention.

SEC. 6. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of Congress that the President should seek the cooperation of United States allies and other nations in conducting the investigations and prosecutions, including extraditions, of the persons who are responsible for the September 11, 2001 attacks on the United States, and use to the fullest extent possible multilateral institutions and mechanisms for carrying out such investigations and prosecutions.

SEC. 7. DEFINITIONS.

(1) SEPTEMBER 11, 2001 ATTACKS ON THE UNITED STATES.—The term “September 11, 2001 attacks on the United States” means the attacks on the Pentagon in the metropolitan area of Washington, District of Columbia, and the World Trade Center, New York, New York, on September 11, 2001, and includes the hijackings of American Airlines flights 77 and 11 and United Airlines flights 175 and 93 on that date.

(2) UNITED STATES PERSON.—The term “United States person” has the meaning given that term in section 101(i) of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978 (50 U.S.C. 1801(i)).

SEC. 8. TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.

The authority under this Act shall terminate at the end of December 31, 2005.

MILITARY TRIBUNAL AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2002—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Sec. 1. Short Title. The Military Tribunal Authorization Act of 2002.

Sec. 2. Findings. This section outlines twelve findings, including that the al Qaeda terrorist organization and its leaders committed unlawful acts against the United States on September 11, 2001 and on prior occasions; the U.S. is justified in exercising its right to self-defense under international law and the U.N. Charter; the Congress authorized the President to use all necessary force against those who committed, aided or abetted the September 11 attacks in order to prevent future attacks, within the meaning of the War Powers Resolution; military trials may be appropriate to protect public safety, to protect classified information used as evidence, and to protect national security interests; Article I, section 8 of the Constitution provides that the Congress, not the President, has the power to constitute tribunals and to define and punish offenses against the law of nations; and congressional authority is necessary to establish extraordinary tribunals to adjudicate offenses arising from the September 11 attacks.

Sec. 3. Establishment of Extraordinary Tribunals. The President is authorized to establish tribunals to try non-U.S. persons who are al Qaeda member (and persons aiding and abetting al Qaeda in terrorist activities against the United States); are apprehended in Afghanistan, apprehended fleeing from Afghanistan, or apprehended in or fleeing from any other place where there is armed conflict involving the U.S. Armed Forces; and are not prisoners of war, as defined by the Geneva Conventions. Tribunals may adjudicate violations of the laws of war targeted against U.S. persons. The Secretary of Defense is charged with promulgating rules of evidence and procedure for the tribunals.

Sec. 4. Procedural Requirements. Rules for tribunals shall require (1) an independent and impartial proceeding; (2) that the accused be informed of the charges against him; (3) that proceedings be conducted with simultaneous translation for non-English speakers; (4) that the accused be shown the evidence against him; (5) that the accused be present at trial if he so chooses; (6) that the accused have the right to be represented by counsel; (7) that the accused have the right to respond to the evidence, and to obtain exculpatory evidence from the prosecution; (8) that the accused have the right to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses, and to offer witnesses; (9) an expeditious trial and disposition; (10) that the rules of evidence admit only reliable information of probative value; (11) that the accused be afforded all necessary means of defense; (12) that convictions be based only upon proof of individual responsibility; (13) that a conviction may not be based on an act, offense, or omission that was not an offense under law when committed; (14) that the penalty for conviction not be greater than it was when the offense was committed; (15) that the accused is presumed innocent until proven guilty, and that proof of guilt be established beyond a reasonable doubt; (16) that the accused may not be compelled to confess guilt or testify against himself; (17) that trials be open and public and include public access to transcripts and pronouncement of judgment, with the exceptions described below; and (18) that convicted persons be informed of available remedies and appeals. The bill follows the Uniform Code of Military Justice in requiring a unanimous vote for imposition of the death penalty.

Trial proceedings will generally be accessible to the public with limited exceptions for demonstrable public safety concerns. The bill allows for evidence to be kept secret from the public where disclosure may compromise national security or intelligence sources.

Convictions may be appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. Any decisions of that court regarding proceedings of tribunals are subject to review by the U.S. Supreme Court by writ of certiorari.

Sec. 5. Detention. This section authorizes detention of individuals who are subject to a tribunal under section 3. In order to detain an individual under the authority of this section, the President must certify that the U.S. is in armed conflict with al Qaeda or Taliban forces in Afghanistan or elsewhere, or that an investigation, prosecution or post-trial proceeding against the detainee is ongoing. This certification must be made every 6 months.

Evidence that may establish that an accused is not subject to detention under this section shall be disclosed to the accused, except that a summary of such evidence will be provided if the Attorney General certifies that disclosure would cause certain identifiable harms. Detentions under this section may be appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

This section also defines the conditions of detention, requiring that detainees be treated humanely. Humane treatment includes adequate food, water, shelter, clothing and medical treatment, hygienic conditions, the necessary means of personal hygiene, and the free exercise of religion. Detention determinations and the conditions of detention are subject to review by the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

Sec. 6. Sense of the Congress. This section calls for the President to seek the cooperation of U.S. allies and other nations in the investigations and prosecutions of those responsible for the September 11 attacks. It also calls for the President to use multilateral institutions to the fullest extent possible in carrying out such investigations and prosecutions.

Sec. 7. Definitions. This section defines the terms, “September 11, 2001 attacks on the U.S.,” and “U.S. person.” The latter takes its meaning from the definition of the term “U.S. person” in the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act of 1978, and includes a citizen of the United States or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

Sec. 8. Termination of Authority. Authority under the act terminates on December 31, 2005.

By Mr. CAMPBELL:

S. 1944. A bill to revise the boundary of the Black Canyon of the Gunnison

National Park and Gunnison Gorge National Conservation Area in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, today I introduce the Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park and Gunnison Gorge National Conservation Area Boundary Revision Act of 2002. This bill improves upon my earlier efforts designating the initial park and conservation area.

The Black Canyon of the Gunnison Gorge is a national treasure to be enjoyed by all. The park's combination of geological wonders and diverse wildlife make it one of the most unique natural areas in North America.

The first person to survey the canyon, Abraham Lincoln Fellows, noted in 1901, "our surroundings were of the wildest possible description. The roar of the water . . . was constantly in our ears, and the walls of the canyon, towering half mile in height about us, were seemingly vertical." Similarly, today, visitors can enjoy hiking the deep gorge to the Gunnison River raging below, or look overhead to marvel at eagles and peregrine falcons soaring in the sky.

This bill modifies the legislative boundary of the Gunnison Gorge National Conservation Area allowing even greater access to the park's many recreational opportunities including boating, fishing, and hiking.

This important legislation would expand the National Park by 2,725 acres, for a total of 33,025 acres. The Conservation area will be increased by 5,700 acres, for a total of 63,425 acres. In total this bill adds 7,296 acres to provide habitat for several listed, threatened, endangered and BLM sensitive species including, the Bald Eagle, the River Otter, Delta Lomation, Clay-Loving Buckwheat.

This legislation helps preserve a unique national resource and a source of national pride.

I urge quick passage of this important bill. I ask that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENTS ON SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 208—COMMENDING STUDENTS WHO PARTICIPATED IN THE UNITED STATES SENATE YOUTH PROGRAM BETWEEN 1962 AND 2002

Ms. COLLINS (for herself, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mrs. HUTCHISON) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 208

Whereas the students who have participated in the United States Senate Youth Program (referred to in this resolution as the "Senate Youth Program") over the past 40 years were chosen for their exceptional merit and interest in the political process;

Whereas the students demonstrated outstanding leadership abilities and a strong commitment to community service and have ranked academically in the top 1 percent of their States;

Whereas the Senate Youth Program alumni have continued to achieve unparalleled success in their education and careers and have demonstrated a strong commitment to public service on the local, State, national, and global levels;

Whereas the Senate Youth Program alumni have reflected excellent qualities of citizenship and have contributed to the Nation's constitutional democracy, be it in either professional or volunteer capacities, and have made an indelible impression on their communities;

Whereas the chief State school officers, on behalf of the State Departments of Education, have selected outstanding participants for the Senate Youth Program;

Whereas the Department of Defense, Department of State, and other Federal Departments, as well as Congress, have offered support and provided top level speakers who have inspired and educated the students of the Senate Youth Program; and

Whereas the directors of the William Randolph Hearst Foundation have continually made the Senate Youth Program available for outstanding young students and exposed them to the varied aspects of public service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate congratulates, honors, and pays tribute to the more than 4,000 exemplary students who have been selected, on their merit, to participate in the United States Senate Youth Program between 1962 and 2002.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a resolution to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the William Randolph Hearst U.S. Senate Youth Program. I am pleased to be joined by Senator BREAUX, who serves with me as a co-chair of the 40th anniversary program, as well as Senators HUTCHISON, DOMENICI, LUGAR, and LEVIN, who all serve on the advisory committee. As the first graduate of the program to become a U.S. Senator, I can honestly say that the week I spent in Washington in 1971, as one of two delegates from Maine, profoundly influenced my life and career.

Even though my family has a long and proud tradition of public service, my great grandfather, my grandfather and my father all served in the State legislature, and both of my parents served as mayor of Caribou, ME, it was the week I spent in Washington with the Senate Youth Program that caused me to seriously consider a career in the public sector.

For the past 40 years, the Senate Youth Program has selected two of the brightest and most active students in each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Department of Defense schools abroad to spend a week learning about our Nation's government first-hand. Over the years, over 4,000 such students have participated in the program and gone on to serve our Nation in various capacities, having seen first-hand what it means to serve in what has been called the world's greatest deliberative body.

The continued generosity of the William Randolph Hearst Foundation enables students to come to the District of Columbia and see a side of government that few Americans see in their lifetime. Each year the delegates meet with top members of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches.

I remember how fascinated I was as a delegate to listen to Senators BYRD and THURMOND speak to us about the history of the Senate and the issues of the day.

But the highlight of my week was the time I spent talking with my home State Senator, Margaret Chase Smith. I went to Senator Smith's office hoping to shake her hand; instead, she took me into her private office and spent 2 hours talking with me about the importance of public service and the difference one person can make. When I left her office, I remember feeling so proud that she was my Senator and that I could do anything I set my mind to.

So, today it is my pleasure to sponsor this resolution paying tribute to the more than 4,000 delegates who have participated in the Senate Youth Program over the past 40 years, some of whom we may see here in the Congress, at the Supreme Court, or even in the White House in years to come. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this measure.

Whereas unborn children benefit from quality prenatal health care;

Whereas the levels of infant mortality, premature delivery, and low birth weight are exceedingly high in the United States as compared with other developed countries;

Whereas new medical advances, together with early diagnosis, can treat children with a wide range of disorders, including spina bifida, HIV/AIDS, fetal distress, and anemia;

Whereas fetal surgery is now able to correct many life-threatening congenital disorders;

Whereas pregnant women benefit from quality health care, including physician care, hospital care, and prescription medications;

Whereas the State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP), created under title XXI of the Social Security Act, expands health coverage to uninsured children whose families earn too much for Medicaid but too little to afford private coverage; and

Whereas, on January 31, 2002, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Tommy Thompson, proposed a regulation to allow States to include coverage for children from conception to age 19, which would allow low-income pregnant mothers to receive prenatal and delivery care: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) commends Secretary of Health and Human Services, Tommy Thompson, for moving to immediately make SCHIP resources available to States to care for unborn children and pregnant mothers; and

SEC. 3. REPORT ON USE OF PERISHABLE COMMODITIES.

Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall develop and submit to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate a report on deficiencies in transportation and storage infrastructure and deficiencies in funding that have limited the use, and expansion of use, of highly perishable and semiperishable commodities in international food aid programs of the Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. SENSE OF SENATE CONCERNING FOREIGN ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the international community faces a continuing epidemic of ethnic, sectarian, and criminal violence;

(2) poverty, hunger, political uncertainty, and social instability are the principal causes of violence and conflict around the world;

(3) broad-based, equitable economic growth and agriculture development facilitates political stability, food security, democracy, and the rule of law;

(4) democratic governments are more likely to advocate and observe international laws, protect civil and human rights, pursue free market economies, and avoid external conflicts;

(5) the United States Agency for International Development has provided critical democracy and governance assistance to a majority of the nations that successfully made the transition to democratic governments during the past 2 decades;

(6) 43 of the top 50 consumer nations of American agricultural products were once United States foreign aid recipients;

(7) in the past 50 years, infant child death rates in the developing world have been reduced by 50 percent, and health conditions around the world have improved more during this period than in any other period;

(8) the United States Agency for International Development child survival programs have significantly contributed to a 10 percent reduction in infant mortality rates worldwide in just the past 8 years;

(9) in providing assistance by the United States and other donors in better seeds and teaching more efficient agricultural techniques over the past 2 decades have helped make it possible to feed an additional 1,000,000,000 people in the world;

(10) despite this progress, approximately 1,200,000,000 people, one-quarter of the world's population, live on less than $1 per day, and approximately 3,000,000,000 people live on only $2 per day;

(11) 95 percent of new births occur in developing countries, including the world's poorest countries; and

(12) only ½ percent of the Federal budget is dedicated to international economic and humanitarian assistance.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) United States foreign assistance programs should play an increased role in the global fight against terrorism to complement the national security objectives of the United States;

(2) the United States should lead coordinated international efforts to provide increased financial assistance to countries with impoverished and disadvantaged populations that are the breeding grounds for terrorism; and

(3) the United States Agency for International Development and the Department of Agriculture should substantially increase humanitarian, economic development, and agricultural assistance to foster international peace and stability and the promotion of human rights.

SEC. 4. REPORT ON CONVERSION OF WIC PROGRAM INTO AN INDIVIDUAL ENTITLEMENT PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that the special supplemental nutrition program for woman, infants, and children established by section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 (42 U.S.C. 1786) (referred to in this section as the ‘WIC program’)—

(1) safeguards the health of low-income pregnant, postpartum, and breast-feeding women, infants, and children up to 5 years of age who are at nutritional risk through the delivery of individualized food packages, nutrition education, and health referrals;

(2) is associated with a variety of desirable outcomes, including lower incidence of infant mortality, reduced prevalence of very low birth weights, improved nutrient intake among children, improved cognitive development among children, and lower Medicaid costs for women who participate;

(3) is recognized generally as a leading national health and nutrition program;

(4) as a discretionary program, can have inappropriate funding because funding levels must be determined early in the year by the President and the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate (referred to in this subsection as the ‘Committees’);

(5) can have funding shortfalls in some years because the economy worsens between the time that funding levels are established and the fiscal year is underway;

(6) may have to deny service or reduce benefits to eligible women, infants, and children in some States as a result of these funding shortfalls;

(7) may be provided with more funding than is required in those years in which the economy improves between the time that funding levels are established and the fiscal year is underway, with the result that the President and the Committees will have committed funds to the WIC program that could have been devoted to other priorities; and

(8) would not have this funding uncertainty if the WIC program were an entitlement program that provided benefits to every eligible woman, infant, and child seeking benefits.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than December 31, 2002, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to the Committee on Education and the Workforce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry of the Senate a report that analyzes the conversion of the WIC program from a discretionary program into an individual entitlement program.

(c) CONTENTS.—The report shall—

(1) analyze the conversion of the WIC program into an individual entitlement program, rather than a capped entitlement program for States;

(2) analyze the conversion using at least 3 separate scenarios, including—

(A) 1 scenario under which the costs to the Federal Government approximate current projected funding levels;

(B) 1 scenario under which the costs to the Federal Government approximate current projected funding levels plus 5 percent; and

(C) 1 scenario under which the costs to the Federal Government approximate current projected funding levels plus 7 percent; and

(3) address—

(A) the levels at which, and manner by which, States will be reimbursed for food package costs and administrative costs;

(B) how current cost containment savings will be preserved;

(C) how reimbursement rates will be adjusted annually to reflect inflation or other factors affecting food prices;

(D) how program benefits and services will be affected by the conversion to an individual entitlement program; and

(E) any other issues that arise from converting the WIC program to an individual entitlement program, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture.

(d) CONSULTATION.—In preparing the report, the Secretary of Agriculture shall consult with—

(1) the Committee on Education and the Workforce of the House of Representatives;

(2) the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry of the Senate;

(3) membership organizations representing State directors and local agencies administering the WIC program;

(4) Governors and other State officials;

(5) research and policy organizations that have a history of carrying out activities on issues affecting the WIC program; and

(6) advocacy organizations representing the needs of the population that is eligible to participate in the WIC program.

(e) FUNDING.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall carry out this section using funds made available for necessary expenses to carry out the WIC program.

SEC. 8. ADAPTIVE ECOSYSTEM RESTORATION OF ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO FORESTS AND WOODLANDS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) fire suppression, logging, and overgrazing have degraded the ecological conditions of forests and woodlands in Arizona and New Mexico;

(2) some of those forests and woodlands contain unnaturally high quantities of biomass that are subject to large, high intensity wildfires that endanger human lives and livelihoods and ecological sustainability;

(3) degraded forests and woodlands have led to—

(A) declining biodiversity;

(B) decreased stream and spring flows;

(C) impaired watershed values;

(D) increased susceptibility to insects and diseases;

(E) increases in mortality in the oldest trees; and

(F) degraded habitats for wildlife and humans;

(4) healthy forest and woodland ecosystems—

(A) minimize the threat of unnatural wildfire;

(B) improve wildlife habitat;

(C) increase tree, grass, forb, and shrub productivity;

(D) enhance watershed values; and

(E) provide a basis for economically and environmentally sustainable uses;

(5) forest and woodland treatments intended to restore degraded ecosystems should be developed using the best available scientific knowledge;

(6) treatments not supported by sound science may fail to achieve long-term ecosystem health and resource restoration objectives;

(7)(A) scientific research must be integrated with ongoing land management activities; and

(B) restoration techniques must be continually reevaluated and adapted to reflect new knowledge and to meet the practical needs of land managers and communities developing and implementing restoration treatments; and

(8) scientific knowledge must be translated and transferred to land managers, resource specialists, communities, and stakeholders that collaborate in the development and implementation of those treatments.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this section are—

(1) to—

(A) improve the ecological health, resource values, and sustainability of forest and woodland ecosystems in Arizona and New Mexico; and

(B) reduce the threat of unnatural wildfire, disease, and insect infestations in those States;

(2) to restore ecosystem structure and function so that ecosystems will—

(A) support biodiversity;

(B) enhance watershed values;

(C) increase water flow to seeps and springs; and

(D) increase tree, grass, forb, and shrub vigor and growth to provide sustainable economic activities for current and future generations;

(3) to develop the scientific knowledge to inform the design of adaptive ecosystem management restoration treatments that will restore long-term ecological health to forests and woodlands in the States; and

(4) to encourage collaboration among land management agencies, communities, and interest groups in developing, implementing, and monitoring adaptive ecosystem management restoration treatments that are ecologically sound, economically viable, and socially responsible.

“As part of a school pest management plan, _____ (insert school name) may use pesticides to control pests. EPA continues to examine registered pesticides to determine that use of the pesticides in accordance with instructions printed on the label does not pose unreasonable risks to human health and the environment. Nevertheless, EPA cannot guarantee that registered pesticides do not pose risks, and unnecessary exposure to pesticides should be avoided. Based in part on recommendations of a 1993 study by the National Academy of Sciences that reviewed registered pesticides and their potential to cause unreasonable adverse effects on human health, particularly on the health of pregnant women, infants, and children, Congress enacted the Food Quality Protection Act of 1996. That law requires EPA to reevaluate all registered pesticides and new pesticides to measure their safety, taking into account the unique exposures and sensitivity that pregnant women, infants, and children may have to pesticides. EPA review under that law is ongoing. You may request to be notified at least 24 hours in advance of pesticide applications to be made and receive information about the applications by registering with the school. Certain pesticides used by the school (including baits, pastes, and gels) are exempt from notification requirements. If you would like more information concerning any pesticide application or any product used at the school, contact _____ (insert name and phone number of contact person).”
