new explanations up the flagpole to see if anyone salutes them.

When I saw him yesterday, he dismissed the blunt ideological commitments in his application to the Meese Justice Department as simply part of the job application process, and told me, in essence, that it shouldn’t be taken seriously. But now he is applying for a job on the Supreme Court.

Should we take his assurances about ignoring ideology as a judge any more seriously now?

The American people have a right to better answers about the record of any nominee to the Nation’s highest Court. Certainly, in the hearings to come, Senators will learn a great deal more about whether Judge Alito has the basic commitment to core constitutional rights essential to our Nation, and I look forward to those hearings.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

PENSION SECURITY AND TRANSPARENCY ACT OF 2005

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of S. 1783 which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1783) to amend the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to reform the pension funding rules, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the managers’ amendment at the desk is agreed to. The bill will be considered original text for further amendment.

The amendment (No. 2581) was agreed to.

(The amendment is printed in today’s RECORD under “Text of Amendments.”

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, this is a very exciting day. We are here to debate the bill, and I will today be adding one more amendment that we have worked on this bill and worked cooperatively, both sides of the aisle. We have even had some conversations with the other end of the building in order to be able to get to this point at this time.

I particularly have to commend Senator KENNEDY and his staff and my staff. August is normally a time when we are all working our butts off, compacting the retirement of the people of this country, and they worked virtually around the clock during the entire month of August. Senator KENNEDY and I were on the phone several times working out some of the big issues and trying to keep the focus on the direction it needed to go.

I also have to specifically congratulate Senator ISAKSON. He has been our coordinator with airlines on this whole thing, and had the airlines not had a crisis, he would have been here today debating pensions. It was enough of a focal point, enough of an impetus that it got us on the track of solving all of the pension issues, in all of the aspects, and I think we have a very complete reform package.

Of course, I would be remiss if I did not mention Senator LOTTER and Senator COLEMAN, who also were strong advocates on getting a solution for airlines so we would stop seeing the airlines go into bankruptcy over their pension problem. We have a team of them here today to add one more amendment that will make sure we will have airlines and to make sure that airline employees will have a solvent retirement package.

I also have to thank Senator DeWINE and Senator MIKULSKI, the chairman and ranking member of the Subcommittees on Pensions on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions. They held a number of hearings that set up the data so we would actually have information on which to base this pension reform. They have done a tremendous job, not just with the committee but also representing particularly people in manufacturing across this country who also have some very special problems at this point in time.

I would also mention Senators Stabenow and Senator LEVIN, who have a majority of those manufacturing workers. In fact, they probably represent more manufacturing workers than there are people in the whole State of Wyoming. But the team of people worked together and put together a bill for the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee. Senator GRASSLEY and I, and the members of the Budget Committee, had an amendment in the budget bill that required that the HELP Committee and the Finance Committee merge a bill. I have to congratulate Senator GRASSLEY and Senator Baucus and travel their tremendous work with the Finance Committee to put together a separate bill that covered all the jurisdictional areas of the Finance Committee, and then their effort with us to merge a bill, which is the bill that is here today.

I have to tell you there were a lot of people that being, first, neither committee would be able to put the two bills out of committee and, secondly, that we would never be able to merge the two bills. It has a lot to do with Senator BAUCUS and Senator GRASSLEY and their staffs being extremely involved and working again in this great and many months. That is the reason we are here today and have a rather comprehensive bill, and it is one that people have been scrutinizing and working on through all of the months of this year.

I think it is a tribute to all of the people who have worked on it that we have limited debate on S. 1783. Only two amendments are being offered, and then we will have a final vote. That is a lot of agreement for this body of 100 people who usually have a lot of disagreement.

I have some other comments, but I will make them later and allow people to get on with describing the actual workings of this bill to the point where we can do a final vote.

I yield to my neighbor from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, first, I thank my colleague, Senator ENZI from Wyoming, the chairman of the HELP Committee. As he has indicated, his committee, along with Senator KENNEDY, the ranking member of that committee, Senator GRASSLEY, chairman of the Finance Committee, and myself, the four of us worked together to be where we are today. Clearly we are where we are today because a lot of employees, a lot of retirees are very worried about their pension benefits.

The critical way to deal with that current situation is to make sure these plans are more fully funded so as the promise is made, the promise is kept and, second, to make sure the backstop of the PBGC is also there when companies facing incredible pressures worldwide feel they have to no longer live up to their pension obligations and those obligations are passed on to the PBGC.

It is worldwide competitive pressures that big American companies and smaller American companies are facing as well as the Enron collapse which has forced us to take a good, hard look at this to try to find some good solutions. I thank Senator ENZI, Senator GRASSLEY, and Senator KENNEDY for their very good work.

It is important to say a little bit about this bill so Americans know what we are doing today. Millions of workers clearly have worked very hard over their lifetime. American workers, whether they are a few that are playing by the rules. They want to play by the rules and they want to do what is right. This bill, frankly, is about making sure that the retirement benefits are there when people need them, more likely to be there than a lot of people think.

As we start the debate, let’s remember why we are here. We are here to protect workers’ pension benefits, plain and simple. That is why we are here. This need was highlighted recently by cover stories in Time magazine and the New York Times Sunday magazine. Their titles were “The Broken Promise”—that was Time magazine—and “The End of Pensions” in the New York Times magazine. I highly recommend all Members of this body read these articles. I read them both. They are very thorough and very perceptive in stating the problems and some of the solutions to the problems Americans face in having retirement benefits.

The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, PBGC, was established to protect workers’ pensions, but there are limits on PBGC’s guarantees. Many pension plans have been promised benefits in excess of those guaranteed by the PBGC. When a company fails and the pension plan terminates with unfunded benefit promises, these workers and retirees pay severely for pension underfunding that is part of their own hard-earned retirement benefits.

For example, the PBGC—and that is the outfit that takes over failed plans—has estimated that almost 7,000 United Airlines workers will lose 50 percent or more of the benefits they had earned under their pension plans. Another 28,000 United Airlines workers will lose between a quarter and half of their benefits. Clearly, as a result, promises to those employees are not being kept. We are here to try to help make sure those promises are better kept, and this bill will help move in that direction.

The most basic building block of pension funding is the interest rate used to determine the present value of the benefits they are to receive in the future. This bill provides a permanent replacement for the 30-year Treasury rate which has been used basically for this purpose—that is, determining the interest rate—under current law.

Under this legislation, we will change that. It is true Congress did pass a temporary interest rate calculation. This bill would extend the current temporary interest rate—a corporate bond rate—for an additional year, and then begin phasing in a permanent solution known as a modified yield curve of interest rates. Using a yield curve to determine the value of future benefit payments is more accurate than using a single interest rate, because the yield curve recognizes that you get a different interest rate on a 5-year loan than on a 15-year loan, and that is relevant because clearly more people work longer than others, so their retirement is a different period of time.

This bill simplifies that yield curve by breaking it into three segments—re-taining the improved accuracy of a yield-curve measurement, while making it easier to apply the rates. There are other key changes to the funding rules.

Unfunded benefit liabilities would have to be paid off over a 7-year period. Ideally, every plan would be 100 percent funded every year, but with fluctuating asset values and interest rates, that is not practical.

Large companies could base cost calculations on their own mortality experience. Workers in some industries do not live as long as the general population. That affects the cost of providing lifetime pensions and should be reflected in an accurate measurement of funding obligations.

The increased utilization of early retirement subsidies that occurs when troubled companies start downsizing is reflected in a special at-risk liability calculation. This will ensure that companies begin funding for subsidized benefits before it is too late.

The at-risk calculation is not a penalty imposed on companies when they are down and out. It is a reflection of increased costs. Someone has to pay those costs. The question is who. Should other companies pay through increases in PBGC premiums? Should workers pay through lost retirement benefits? Or should we, as I believe, require the company that made the promise fund the promise?

Failure to recognize the real cost of benefits is one reason for the system’s funding problems. Another is that current law actually would have penalized many employers if they had contributed more to their pension plans. Employers after employer has told us that we need to allow companies to contribute and deduct more in good times to build a cushion for bad times. This bill does that. It allows companies to deduct contributions that would fund the next 70 percent of the cost of benefits already earned and allows employers to maintain a prefunding account with these extra contributions, which is sort of a rainy day fund, to help them meet contribution requirements when cash is a little tighter.

Our goal is retirement security, assuring that benefits that had been promised will be paid. There are two sides to keeping that promise—wringing those promises out of the company and also not promising more than a company can afford to pay.

This bill limits increases in a plan’s benefit formula if the plan is less than 80 percent funded. If a plan is less than 60 percent funded, then a more benefit fits can be earned until funding improves. Employers would have to fund up collective bargaining plans to keep these limitations from kicking in.

To make sure poorly funded plans do not become even more unfunded, this bill limits the portion of the benefits that can be paid in a lump sum if a plan is less than 60 percent funded. Lump sum payment of pension benefits can drain plan assets and hurt other workers. No benefits would be forfeited. The difference would be paid as an annuity. Retirement benefits are the largest asset of many workers, and they deserve timely, complete information on the state of their investment. Under this bill, most retirees will receive detailed funding information within 90 days after the end of the year. That is new.

There was a time when pension plans paid monthly benefits at normal retirement age. Today, many companies have moved to cash balance plans or other hybrid arrangements that are structured more similar to 401(k) plans, defined contribution plans. Benefits are earned more evenly over a worker’s career and are more portable—easier to move from one job to another—than the traditional pension benefit. There has been uncertainty surrounding these plans, and litigation is ongoing. If defined benefit plans are to be a viable, attractive option in the future—and there is a real question whether they can be, and we are trying to make sure we can be—we must bring some certainty to the rules governing these arrangements. That is cash balance and hybrids.

This bill lays down the rules for moving forward with these plans. It recognizes the legitimacy of the basic design. It also provides protections for older workers when a traditional plan that rewards a lifetime of hard work is converted to one of these hybrid arrangements that is designed for a more mobile workforce. I have done a good job of protecting participants without putting too onerous a burden on employers.

Let me emphasize that this is a prospective provision; it is not retroactive. We do not step into the legal questions that existed with regard to the past. I want to make it clear that this bill offers neither side an inference as to interpretation of existing rules.

Some of the provisions in this bill that provide participant protections were in a bill we introduced in the 107th Congress, a bill designed to help prevent another Enron.

We all remember Enron. Thousands of workers lost their jobs. Because their 401(k) accounts were heavily invested in company stock, those workers lost most of their retirement savings as well. In February 2002, “60 Minutes” did a segment called “Who Killed Montana Power?” about my own State’s experience with employers behaving badly and havoc wreaked on employees and their savings. The story reported one worker had lost $350,000 in his 401(k) plan because of the crash of employer stock. He certainly was not alone.

this stayed alive during the course of this session.

I thank Senator GRASSLEY and Senator BAUCUS for the efforts they made on pensions and particularly thank Senator COLEMAN and Senator LOTT for their untiring efforts to bring this to reality today.

I wish to go back to one thing Mr. COLEMAN said briefly by acknowledging what brings us to this point in terms of airline pensions. In the past 5 years, there have been five things that have happened, none of which would be in control of the aviation industry: the decline of the stock market early in this decade, the tragic events of 9/11 which grounded American aviation, the unprecedented historically and continuously low interest rates, the hurricanes that hit the United States and shut down refineries and petroleum and closed major airline markets for transportation, and the increase in the price of petroleum going to $70 a barrel and aviation fuel tripling in its cost.

If we take all of those and combine them with the constraints of the current formula on pensions, one can understand what the aviation industry has had the difficulties it has had and how employees of legacy airlines will lose their pension benefits unless we adopt reasonable and appropriate amendments such as the amendment we propose today.

Very simply, this amendment does a couple of things. One is for the aviation industry. It allows the amortization of the obligation over a 20-year period of time. What that is manageable, an amount that is doable, an amount that for all intents and purposes will ensure employees will get the pensions they have earned. Failure to adopt this amendment will almost guarantee that those employees, or airlines such as Delta, Northwest, and others will not ultimately get the pension benefits they have earned. The major consequence of that will be the tax payers of the United States of America, through the Finance Committee, the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, will have the additional liability those pensions will thrust upon the PBGC.

In this amendment, we have met the challenges the aviation industry has before it. We have looked responsibly at the right formula and the way in which to calculate that formula to ensure the benefits are paid. We have addressed the concerns of the industry and its individual airlines, all of which have similar unique but some different problems.

In particular, what we do is give hope for the employees to get their benefits. We cap the liability of the PBGC, and we cap the liability of the most important elements of the U.S. economy, the aviation industry, is not forced by laws that are out of sync to unfund, defund, or jettison their pension plans for the employees who have made those airlines fly throughout their careers and throughout their history.

We have some time remaining on our allocation for the amendment, to which Senator LOTT was to speak but was called away. I reserve the remainder of our time on the amendment for Senator LOTT upon his return.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I ask unanimous consent to speak up to 10 minutes under the time controlled on the Democratic side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I note that the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee has come to the Chamber, and I know he is eager to speak on the bill and has many demanding responsibilities.

I compliment both Senators ENZI and KENNEDY, as well as Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS, on the outstanding job they have been doing on this legislation and putting two bills together. Pension reform is one of the most important issues facing the American people, and Congress must rise to the challenge of passing legislation. Reform would protect workers' pensions, to protect good-guy businesses, and also to protect the American taxpayer, who often ends up being the safety net for so many pensions.

The bill before us today is generally a very good bill. Yes, I do see some yellow flashing lights about two provisions of the bill regarding the use of credit rating and something called smoothing. That is why Senator DEWINE and I had originally wanted to offer an amendment to avoid the unintended consequences that might push companies to drop their pension plans and leave workers in desperation.

In recent days, we have made a lot of progress. Senator DEWINE and I have had very constructive conversations with Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS. Senators ENZI and KENNEDY have been particularly helpful in brokering a resolution to some of the issues. The process seemed far less ominous when their wise heads and hands got involved in it. Their help was invaluable in ironing out some of the wrinkles. I believe we have a commitment to work together in conference to address our concerns because I truly believe that the Senate bill is in many ways a superior bill to the House. I am most eager to see this bill move ahead.

Throughout my career, everyone knows I have been fighting for the little guy. This is no different. Pensions are part of the American dream. People believe that if one works hard, they can get ahead. And if they work hard, they are going to have a pension. A pension has to serve as one of three elements of the U.S. economy, the aviation industry, is not forced by laws that are out of sync to unfund, defund, or jettison their pension plans for the employees who have made those airlines fly throughout their careers and throughout their history.

We have worked from the beginning on a bipartisan basis. Senator DEWINE and I are the chair and ranking member of the Subcommittee on Retirement Security and Aging in the Health, Education, Labor, and Pension Committee, of which Senator ENZI is the chair and Senator KENNEDY is ranking. We feel that this is a very important issue, and we were outstanding. I wish the American people could have seen them. They were content rich, and they were also characterized by civility, particularly among members. The hearings demonstrated the need for comprehensive reform. We addressed not just single-employer plans, but multi-employer plans and cash balance plans as well.

What I like about the bill is that we have a smart bill, we have a good bill, and we have a bipartisan bill. When we looked at it, part of our bipartisan framework was to let us do no harm either to the people who need pensions or to the people who provide the jobs and the business. We need to make sure workers do not lose their pensions. We had to look out for good-guy businesses that are doing everything they can to fund their pensions. We also had to protect the taxpayer and ensure that the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation was solvent. It was used as a dumping ground for those companies that want to walk away from their pensions even though there was no need to. I believe we accomplished so much in those principles: do no harm, protect the worker, protect good-guy businesses, and look out for our taxpayers.

When the HELP bill was merged into the finance bill, many improvements were made, but there were several provisions that, as I said, had yellow flashing lights. One is the issue of credit rating and the other is the issue of smoothing.

There are those within the HELP Committee—and my colleague, Senator DEDEN and Congresswoman HARRIS, and some of them—who are concerned that a company's credit rating is being used as an indicator of its pension plan's health. Companies with bad credit ratings could be forced to put in extra payments, even if they had been responsible in making regular payments to their generally well-funded plans.

Credit rating is a blunt instrument. Data from Moody's, one of the Nation’s leading credit rating companies, should have caused us to listen to those who are concerned about this. Moody's looked at companies that were sub-investment grade and followed them for a full 20 years. After these 20 years, a majority of the companies had not defaulted on their bonds. This tells us that the companies had not gone bankrupt.

Some people are worried that weak companies will go into bankruptcy and dump their pension plans. The facts say otherwise: a majority of companies in junk-bond status won't go bankrupt. Forcing struggling companies to make unprecedented payments could end up pushing many companies to terminate their plans or enter bankruptcy. We have to take that into consideration.

November 16, 2005

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

S12887
This means in fact this language would bring about exactly what it is designed to protect against. Auto manufacturers and tech companies, many of whom are just now regaining their financial stability, could be among the hardest hit by this provision. We should encourage these viable businesses to continue making contributions to their plans, not push them into bankruptcy.

Such an unintended consequence could well cost many Americans their jobs and their pensions. Senator DeWine and I wanted to make a targeted change to the bill to help prevent this, substituting the actual measure of a plan’s health in place of credit ratings.

The other issue that concerned me is limitations on smoothing. Smoothing is the process of averaging estimates of assets and liabilities and is used because pensions are by nature long-term investments. Smoothing improves predictability and makes it easier for companies to plan their budgets around their pension contributions.

Under current law, companies can average estimates of assets and liabilities over 4 or 5 years to smooth fluctuations in the stock market and in interest rates. Senator DeWine and I wanted to tighten this to 3 years, which is more restrictive than current law but more effective than the merged bill’s one year. Numerous experts have said that one year is just not enough. I also want to highlight a key transparency provision in the merged bill that requires companies to issue a snapshot, unsmoothed picture of their assets and liabilities each year to participants and the PBGC. This new disclosure addresses the criticism that smoothing can hide problems in plan funding for several years. Now, many problems should be apparent just 90 days after the end of the plan year.

Last Wednesday, the House Ways and Means committee passed Chairman Thomas’ bill. Like the HELP bill and like Chairman Boehner’s bill, the Ways and Means Committee didn’t include credit rating and allowed 3 years of smoothing.

I continue to feel strongly about the need to make changes to the legislation before us today. I also believe it is imperative to continue moving through the legislative process so we can pass this bipartisan reform. The Ways and Means Committee has acted, and we now know that the House of Representatives is sure to have a good position on these issues. There are too many other good provisions in this bill that we must pass.

I am not going to go into all the details of the bill. I note that the chair of the Finance Committee wishes to speak. We want to move this legislation. I want to pass this bill so we can get on conference. We want to pass the House. Sometimes think the Senate is the body that talks more than it gets done. We challenge the House to pass this bill before they leave the way the Senate is going to do it and to do it the way we did it—working on a bipartisan basis.

I cannot say enough about the appreciation I have for Senator DeWine of Ohio, who was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, and for why they should support this legislation before us today then guarantees the vitality of all Americans. It will improve Americans’ retirement years in many different ways. Much of the public focus on this legislation has been on the comprehensive pension funding reforms that are in the legislation. Those reforms are very important, but before I talk about those, I wish to spend a couple of minutes talking about other important provisions in the bill.

No, 1, the bill represents a completion of the post-Enron retirement plan reform that I have worked out with my good friend Senator Baucus, Democrat ranking member. We all remember that when Enron spiraled into bankruptcy and the value of that company’s stock evaporated, many employees had 401(k) plans locked in Enron stock. They had no chance of diversifying their 401(k) portfolios, and they were blocked from selling Enron stock at the time top executives were cashing their stock out with them. This bill would say that Enron practice is unacceptable for any company in the future. Employees should not be forced to stuff their 401(k) plans with company stock. Diversification is the most fundamental principle of sound investment strategy. The bipartisan legislation before us today guarantees that employees have the right to diversify their 401(k) accounts.

This bipartisan bill also seeks to increase savings by adopting new rules to promote automatic enrollment in 401(k) plans. Very often, I am afraid, the hardest dollar to save is that first dollar. Once people begin to save, it can become a habit that lasts a lifetime. Automatic enrollment means that saving that first dollar will be easier, less red tape, and it means that millions of Americans then will be saving many times more than what they save today. Obviously, every month we save a dollar and yet that say Americans are almost, throughout the entire globe, the ones who save the least.
The bipartisan bill before us today also simplifies retirement plan rules, making it easier and less burdensome for employers to give retirement plans to their employees. These types of changes will be particularly helpful to small businesses which are often discouraged from sponsoring a retirement plan because of the costs, administrative costs particularly, and the redtape burdens. The bipartisan bill before us today would allow small businesses to combine defined benefit plans with a 401(k) plan, and they would do this into one simple plan called DB(k). This type of combined plan will give employees the best of both worlds at the same time.

Speaking of combining the best of both worlds, the bipartisan bill we are considering today provides long-needed clarifications that cash balance and other types of hybrid pension plans are not inherently age discriminatory. Hybrid plans combine positive features of both the traditional pension plan and the defined contribution plans. These plans have long provided meaningful retirement benefits to employees. Today we will help to lift the cloud of legal uncertainty over these plans. At the same time, we also ensure that the rights of participants are protected and that the plans truly do meet the needs of today’s mobile workforce by requiring faster vesting of employees’ benefits in those particular plans.

Finally, then, I will refer to the pension funding changes in this bill, those things that really have gotten the most attention and maybe are somewhat controversial. This bill honors a promise that we made way back in 1974, before I came to Congress, when I was a pension manager to set up to provide the insurance; let’s say in a sense like the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation does, for savers in bank accounts. These companies have essentially said we cannot pay our obligations, and we are going to have to pay them for us. That is the PBGC.

Unfortunately, the people they want to pay are other employers who have done the right thing and have guaranteed their employees the pensions they promised for the future on all those promises. Those employers who are honest and upright get stuck with the bill, in the form of higher premiums to the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation. I think we all agree that is not fair, and it is no way to run a pension system. Even more unfair is the concept of a taxpayer bailout of the PBGC. One thing that I am for in this legislation is the attempt to make sure this does not happen, that the taxpayers are not laid bare for this obligation. This is the corporation ought to pay, but that goes back to the irresponsible actions of a few bad apples who do not fund their pensions adequately. I do not think we can have a responsible situation like we had in the late 1980s coming out of bad policy in the PBGC.

As we have watched the financial condition of this Government corporation deteriorate rapidly in recent years, the prospects of such a bailout become increasingly real—in other words, a taxpayer bailout, a savings-and-loan-type bailout that we do not want to let happen. In other words, we ought to show that we have learned a lesson, and hopefully this bill is a good start in the right direction.

The bipartisan bill we have before us today will reverse the decline over time by improving pension funding and bringing additional premium revenues into the corporation, the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation. This bipartisan bill represents a huge leap forward for retirement security.

Let me say I am cognizant of the fact that we in Congress are saying that it is a huge leap forward. I think it ought to be known to all of my colleagues that the President and his staff, who were interested in this legislation, would say it is not good enough in this direction and maybe there are opportunities, hopefully along the way, for improvement.

I think, once again, in closing, I need to give thanks, as I have already given. I start with Senator Baucus for his dedication in this legislation. He has been a great partner to work with me to advance this bill to where it is now. I also thank Chairman Enzi and Senator Kennedy. I think we have had a partnership working together as two committees on legislation because we shared the dedication. I have to commend their dedication to important reforms that they put in their bill. They have been tireless in their efforts to get us to this point. I look forward to working closely with them and all my colleagues in the Senate as we continue to work towards the goal of getting this bipartisan legislation to the President for his signature.

I yield the floor.

Mr. Isakson. Mr. President, I would like to turn the Senator back on our time allotted to the Isakson amendment and yield that time to the Senator from Mississippi and, in so doing, repeat my acknowledgment of my thanks to Senators Grassley, Baucus, Enzi, and Kennedy for their hard work in following this amendment of the aviation portion of the pension bill to come before the Senate today, and the distinguished Senator from Mississippi for his untiring effort to bring us to this point today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. Lott. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Georgia yielding me that time. Might I inquire, what is the time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 7 minutes.

Mr. Lott. Mr. President, first of all, I point out this is a classic example of how we can work together to get an amendment and get it out of Committee and on the floor. There has been a lot of glitches along the way, but there has been persistence by the Finance Committee and by the HELP Committee to report out the legislation, to have hearings, to listen to the arguments from the administration, from the private sector, from those who are experts in this field of the PBGC. I am very proud of the work that was done by the chairman of the Finance Committee, working hand in hand with the ranking member, Senator Baucus, to get the legislation passed and to allow an amendment in which I was very interested dealing with the airline pension situation. They could have said "no" to it or we will do it later," but they allowed the process to work its way through.

Then, also, I have to give tremendous credit to the chairman of the HELP Committee, Senator Enzi. He did not give up on it. He was dogged and he was determined to get this unanimous consent agreement on how we consider this legislation, and our leadership on both sides of the aisle were able to come together. There were a lot of people who had amendments they wanted. They had objections, there were holds here, holds there, yet here we are. So I hope we can look at this and see if we cannot do this again in the future.

There is no question we need reform in this area. There is real exposure across the board. American workers all over this country, and management, and the leadership in the administration and in the PBGC are very worried about where we are headed with these pensions. Are we going to keep our commitment to the workers and to the people involved in these pensions? We have an exposure, according to an article this morning in the newspaper, this PBGC organization, of approximately $26 billion.

Where are we heading in this regard? Part of the problem with regard to pensions is the requirements that the law places on them are inverted. If you get into trouble, you are losing altitude; your payments to the agency, PBGC, go up, making it more likely you are going to continue to plunge into the ground. Conversely, if you are doing well, you pay less. How did we ever get into a situation where you pay more if you are going to go down, or less if you are going to get in some cases even less than they should be getting?

We can debate whether or not these pensions have been too inflated, but we have to transition. I personally think we have to get away from these defined benefit pensions. Are we going to continue to plunge into the ground? Conversely, if you are going to continue to plunge into the ground, this legislation is needed. Reform clearly is needed. If we ever allow the law to get into that shape? Reform clearly is needed. If we ever allow the law to get into that shape?

I want to make it clear for the future and for the record and for the conference that this amendment is going to be handled in the way it is going to be handled because of the overwhelming support I could get. It could have a lot more resistance to it by the leadership, but they continue to be reasonable in their handling of this legislation.

I support the Isakson amendment. I certainly believe it will be accepted by an overwhelming indication of support in the Senate, and that is the way it should be.

I believe, as a result of this legislation, that companies—particularly airline companies—will have the most reasonably, most importantly, most importantly, the U.S. taxpayer will be better off. This bill is not perfect. It will probably be better as we go along through the conference, but it will never be perfect. If for some board and for some one we should be proud of. It is not the kind of thing you will read about in the local newspaper, congratulations, you did a good job, unless you are the hub of an airline. It is not something you would read about in most places in Wyoming. But this is the right thing to do, and the exposure is cataclysmic if we don’t deal with it.

I am delighted to support the legislation and the Isakson amendment.

I yield any remaining time at this point. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am very pleased that this amendment has the support of Delta, Northwest, Continental, and American airlines. This amendment does not pick winners or losers within the airline industry. It maintains the current defined benefit pension promises, and any airline that offers defined benefit plans would be able to benefit from this relief.

I understand the skepticism of Senator Coleman is slightly broader than that, broader than the base bill and agreements for their pensions are going to get less than they thought they would get or in some cases even less than they should be getting.

We can debate whether or not these pensions have been too inflated, but we have to transition. I personally think we have to get away from these defined benefit plans. We have to go to the defined contribution plans. But I think this legislation is a good compromise. We need the money and we certainly should get it done before we complete this session of Congress.

I also congratulate Senator COLEMAN from Minnesota for working on the aviation provisions, and especially Senator ISAKSON, the great Senator from Georgia, for his efforts to stay behind this legislation and to offer the amendment that is going to be voted on before we complete the legislation.

The language in the bill says airlines that are frozen benefit plans and airlines that are underfunded can amortize any funding shortfalls over a 14-year period. That was a compromise agreement. The chairman had some concerns about what that number would be. The language we have from Senator ISAKSON is slightly broader than that, broader than the base bill. It allows airlines that freeze their plans and airlines that prefund their plans 20 years over which to amortize their funding shortfalls. I think that is the right number. I would like to have seen it more than 14. I support this amendment. I must say that I know it is critical to some of our airlines that we have this language. I have worked on the language in the pension reform package on airlines. I have worked on supporting this amendment, and I have worked on checking the votes. I want the RECORD to show, in case there is a voice vote, that I believe there are probably going to be significant amendments in the Senate that would be for this amendment.

I want to make it clear for the future and for the RECORD and for the conference that this amendment is going to be handled in the way it is going to be handled because of the overwhelming support I could get. It could have a lot more resistance to it by the leadership, but they continue to be reasonable in their handling of this legislation.

I am delighted to support the legislation and the Isakson amendment.

I yield any remaining time at this point. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am very pleased to offer an amendment with my colleagues: Senator ISAKSON and Senator LOFT. Our amendment provides important pension relief to the airline industry, which has struggled financially as a result of the September 11 terrorist attacks and dramatically higher fuel costs. In the last few years, we have seen United Airlines and US Airways terminate their pension plans and turn over their liabilities to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. Our amendment is designed to avoid this unhappy outcome for airlines that are still struggling with large pension debts.

Throughout the work on this legislation, my goal has been to protect the employees and retirees who have worked hard to earn retirement benefits. Whenever underfunded pension plans are dumped on the PBGC, everyone loses. Employees and retirees lose benefits that they deserve. Companies struggle with sour employee relations. And the PBGC and ultimately, perhaps someday the taxpayers—gets stuck with a bill for the portion of the pension obligations that is guaranteed but not funded.

I am very appreciative of the cooperation that we have had from the bipartisan leadership of both the Finance Committee and the HELP Committee. The legislation we are considering today would allow struggling airlines to pay off old pension debts over a 14-year period using reasonable interest rate assumptions. Unfortunately, some workers going through the need to attract bankruptcy financing, the relief provided in this bill is insufficient to help Delta Airlines. That is why the Isakson-Rockefeller-Lott amendment, which extends the repayment period to 20 years, is so important. The amendment would also allow airlines, such as American and Continental, to benefit from relief without terminating their pension plans, as long as any new obligations were fully funded.

I am very pleased that this amendment has the support of Delta, Northwest, Continental, and American airlines. This amendment does not pick winners or losers within the airline industry. It maintains the current defined benefit pension promises, and any airline that offers defined benefit plans would be able to benefit from this relief.

I understand the skepticism of Senator Coleman is slightly broader than that, broader than the base bill and agreements for their pensions are going to get less than they thought they would get or in some cases even less than they should be getting.

The retirement security of millions of Americans participating in single employer defined benefit pension plans depends on employers keeping their pension promise. Unfortunately, in recent years those promises have not been kept. Defaults of pension plans in the airline, steel and auto-parts industries have raised concerns about the health of existing plans and the possibility of a taxpayer bailout of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, PBGC.

The current system does not ensure that pension plans are adequately funded. When under-funded plans terminate, as several have done recently, they place an increasing strain on the pension insurance system. As of September 30, 2005 the PBGC showed a deficit of $22.8 billion for pension plans sponsored by a single employer. While the PBGC will be able to pay benefits for years, the solvency of the pension insurance system is in jeopardy. It is estimated that the PBGC will run out of cash within the next 20 years.

The airline industry in particular has been faced with its own specific set of economic challenges. The attacks on September 11, 2001 coupled with a stock market decline and record oil prices have placed a significant burden on the airline industry, forcing them to make tough choices. The unfortunate reality of our current economic climate is that some businesses, particularly the airlines, are taking devastating financial losses as a result of unforeseen circumstances.

As many of my colleagues know, Delta Airlines is headquartered in my home State of Georgia. Delta has a longstanding history of service to airline passengers throughout the world and has been a great corporate citizen for the State of Georgia. Delta’s some 31,000 employees, like many other hard-working Americans, have devoted years to working for companies like Delta. We need to ensure that they receive the pension benefits they were promised and deserve.

The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that this amendment would raise $14 million over the period 2006-2010 and $30 million in Federal revenues over the period 2006-2015. Changing the amortization period for airline plans such as Delta’s, from 14 years to 20 years would take the burden off the PBGC while ensuring that the thousands of workers employed by the airline industry would receive the benefits that they have earned.

The common sense amendment, of which I am a cosponsor, will not relieve the airlines of pension liability, nor will it prohibit airlines from meeting pension obligations sooner than 20 years. It discourages airlines from relying on the PBGC and the taxpayers’ dollars by allowing them time to fulfill their pension obligations. This amendment complements the purpose of the overall pension reform bill by taking the necessary steps to ensure that American workers receive every penny they have earned, while holding companies accountable and simultaneously reducing the burden on the PBGC.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I understand the majority manager favors the Isakson amendment. I control time on this bill, as well as the Senator from Georgia. I support the amendment. Given all of that and the support on both sides, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of time we have on this amendment so we can then prepare to vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded.

Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2582) was agreed to.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DEWINE. Madam President, first, let me congratulate my colleague from Georgia for this amendment, as well as my colleague from Mississippi. I also commend the chairman of the Finance and the HELP Committees and ranking members Senators GRASSLEY, BAUCUS, ENZI, and KENNEDY for their hard work on the legislation that is before us today, for their hard work in forging the compromise pension reform bill.

While I appreciate all of the hard work that went into this legislation that is before us today, I would like to discuss some grave concerns that I have with this bill. Historically, a defined benefit pension has been the cornerstone of a worker’s retirement, along with personal savings and Social Security. However, with the movement away from defined benefit plans and personal savings, many Americans are relying mainly on Social Security for their post-retirement income.

That is a very disturbing trend. This is an alarming trend. The defined benefit pension system is an important part of a worker’s retirement, but unfortunately it is not alone. The number of defined benefit plans has decreased from over 114,000 in 1985 to just over 28,800 in 2004. Since 2001, almost a quarter of Fortune 500 companies have frozen or considered freezing their defined benefit plans.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Retirement Security and Aging, along with my good friend and colleague from Maryland, Senator MURKOWSKI, I chaired a hearing to examine the issue of PBGC funding and the effect that reforms to shore up the PBGC may have on the defined benefit system, which is the financial backbone of many workers’ retirement. At that hearing, we heard testimony acknowledging the need to strengthen pension funding rules, but we were warned that going too far would force employers to leave the defined benefit system through freezes and terminations of plans, and in the worst case, could force a company into bankruptcy.

There is no question that something must be done to maintain the solvency of the PBGC. The agency has estimated that its deficit is $22.8 billion and CBO projects a much larger deficit than that over the next 10 years. A taxpayer bailout of the PBGC is a terrible option. But, I also do not believe it is a good option to drive companies out of the defined benefit system. It is important that we balance rules to improve funding of plans without going too far and forcing plan sponsors to abandon their plans or declare bankruptcy.

I believe that the bill that we passed out of the HELP Committee in September by an 18 to 2 vote struck such a balance. The Defined Benefit Security Act amended the funding rules so that companies would continue with their plans, while at the same time increase the premiums that companies pay to the PBGC to better fund the pension insurance system.

Unfortunately, I believe the bill that we passed before the Senate today is a step backwards from the HELP Committee bill. While I commend Chairmen ENZI and GRASSLEY and ranking members KENNEDY and BAUCUS for their efforts to reach a compromise on two very different bills, I am concerned about the impact several of the provisions of the compromise bill will have on plan sponsors and participants. I am concerned about the impact it will have on job creation in the future and on job creation.

First, I am concerned about the 3-year transition to the new funding rules, including the new 100 percent funding standard. For many companies this will result in a significant increase in pension funding in a short amount of time. I also have concerns about decreasing the amortization period from 10 years to 7 years. My biggest concerns, however, are credit rating smoothing and using credit ratings to determine plan funding. Senator MIKULSKI and I proposed an amendment that would replace S. 1783’s provisions on credit rating and smoothing with the provisions of the HELP bill.

Using credit ratings to determine plan funding would result in a loss of jobs. It is a simple calculation. Using a company’s credit rating will put additional pressure on a company
Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I see that the ranking member of the HELP Committee is now on the floor and also the Senator from Hawaii, Mr. AKAKA. I would be happy to welcome him to the floor to address the Senate. He is the ranking member to speak, and then we could be at a point to bring up the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii.

Under the unanimous consent agreement, I believe we have about 30-some minutes remaining. I yield as much time as the Senator from Massachusetts desires. When the Senator finishes, I urge the Presiding Officer to recognize the Senator from Hawaii for an amendment which he has to offer.

Mr. KENNEDY. If the Senator will withhold, my friend is ready to go and make his presentation. After that presentation, if I could then have a chance perhaps to talk about the importance of this legislation, the history and development of it, that would be agreeable with me.

Mr. BAUCUS. Whatever works out for the two Senators.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is fine. I thank the Senator from Montana for his typical courtesies, and I welcome the opportunity to hear the Senator from Hawaii.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. AKAKA. Madam President, I call up my amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Hawaii, Mr. AKAKA, for himself and Mr. Specter, proposes an amendment consisting of:

Mr. AKAKA. I ask unanimous consent the consent of the standing Senate to dispense with the PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 1. AGE REQUIREMENT FOR EMPLOYERS.

(a) SINGLE EMPLOYER BENEFITS GUARANTEED.—Section 4022(b) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1322(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following: “If, at the time of termination of a plan under this title, regulations prescribed by the Federal Aviation Administration require an individual to separate from service as a commercial airline pilot after attaining any age before age 65, this subsection shall be applied to an individual who is a participant in the plan by reason of such service by substituting such age for age 65.”

(b) MULTIEmployer PLAN BENEFITS GUARAN TED.—Section 4222(b) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1322(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following: “If, at the time of termination of a plan under this title, regulations prescribed by the Federal Aviation Administration require an individual to separate from service as a commercial airline pilot after attaining any age before age 65, this subsection shall be applied to an individual who is a participant in the plan by reason of such service by substituting such age for age 65.”

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to benefits payable on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. AKAKA. Madam President, I rise today to offer my amendment to the pension bill to correct an injustice. I want to thank my colleagues, Senators Specter, Feinstein, Salazar, and Inouye, for working with me on this amendment. I also want to thank the cosponsors of my stand-alone bill S. 685, which include Senators Isakson, Harkin, Akaka, Durbin, Salazar, and Feinstein.

The Federal Aviation Administration, FAA, requires commercial airline pilots to retire when they reach the age of 60. Pilots are therefore denied their maximum pension benefits administered by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, PBGC, because they are required to retire before the age of 65. This significant reduction in benefits puts pilots in a difficult position. With only a pension to live on and a prohibition on reentering the piloting profession because of age, many pilots are subjected to undue hardship. For plans terminated in 2005, the maximum benefit for someone that retires at 65 is $45,614 a year. For those who retire at 60, the maximum is $29,649.

While I believe that Congress needs to address the issue of underfunded pension plans, I believe that it is also important for us to address this injustice put on pilots by the PBGC by waiving the age-of-60 retirement rule.

In conclusion, while the changes that the DeWine-Mikulski amendment sought to make were not incorporated in the bill before us today, both Senator Mikulski and I will be conferees and have the opportunity to help shape the final bill in a way that can be beneficial for participants, plan sponsors, and the PBGC. And, I look forward to working with my colleagues on the conference to work on these issues.

Quite frankly, what is at stake is the future of businesses—real companies. What is at stake are future jobs in our home States, whether it be Maryland, whether it be Ohio or the other States in the Union. What is at stake is job creation in the future. What is at stake is job retention now.

The issues that Senator Mikulski and I have brought before the American people and before the Senate will have to be addressed in conference because the issues are simply about jobs.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I see that the ranking member of the HELP Committee is now on the floor and also the Senator from Hawaii, Mr. AKAKA. I would be happy to welcome him to the floor to address the Senate. He is the ranking member to speak, and then we could be at a point to bring up the amendment of the Senator from Hawaii.
addition to other legacy carriers whose pensions were absorbed by the PBGC. In my home State of Hawaii, I have 91 United and US Airways pilots in the Air Line Pilots Association data base. I also have 305 active or retired Aloha Airlines pilots in Hawaii. Aloha Airlines is now in jeopardy to terminate its pension plan. Other States, such as North Carolina and Virginia have 1,064 and 1,014 United and US Airways pilots respectively. As I look at the financial difficulties confronting Delta Airlines and Northwest Airlines, I am troubled by the prospect of even more pilots losing their plans and being subjected to this unfair penalty.

I ask unanimous consent a letter of support from the Air Line Pilots Association to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AIR LINE PILOTS ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONAL
Hon. DANIEL K. AKAKA,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR AKAKA: On behalf of the 64,000 members of the Air Line Pilots Association, I am writing to express our strong support for your legislation, S. 685, The Pilots Equitable Treatment Act, which would put airline pilots on an equal footing with non-pilots with respect to guaranteed benefits payable from the PBGC if a defined benefit pension plan is terminated. I also understand that you plan to offer the language of S. 685 as a floor amendment to pension overhaul legislation that is expected to be considered by the Senate in the next few days. We heartily support and endorse that action as well.

As you know, your legislation would change the PBGC rules so that airline pilots, who by FAA regulation must stop flying at age 60, are protected from having their pension benefits actuarially reduced by the PBGC if their defined benefit retirement plan is terminated. S. 685 is bold and innovative legislation that would put airline pilots on an equal footing with non-pilots with respect to guaranteed benefits payable from the PBGC if a defined benefit pension plan is terminated. Under S. 685, the PBGC would have to be notified to our colleagues when we are likely to have a vote. It is agreeable with the Senator from Hawaii that we have this vote just prior to the time we have the final passage. I certainly yield to my friend and colleague.

Mr. ENZI. I understand this has been cleared on both sides. I ask unanimous consent when all time is used or yielded back on the amendments and the underlying bill, the measure be temporarily set aside; provided further that at 2:30 today the Senate proceed to a vote on the amendment, to be followed by a vote on a passage of the bill, as amended, to be followed by a vote on the adoption of the conference report to accompany the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I yield such time as I might use.

At the outset, I thank our Senate leadership, Senator Frist and Senator Reid, for arranging the Senate schedule so we would have an opportunity to consider this extremely important legislation. I thank my colleague and friend Senator Grassley, for his commitment to getting good legislation passed at a very important time in the entire history of the evolution of the pension system in our country. This is a very important piece of legislation. This committee, to detail, and persuasiveness has permitted the Senate to move this legislation forward in a timely way. I am very grateful to him for all of his good leadership.

I thank our friends on the Committee on Finance, Senator Baucus and Senator Grassley. We have worked together at other times on the pension legislation. We did work closely together over a year ago and received the overwhelming support of the Senate in that bipartisan way. We worked very closely with the members of the Committee on Finance. As a result of both committees working, we have a stronger legislation. This is a bipartisan effort in a very important area of public policy. I am grateful to all who brought the Senate to where we are at this time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, the retirement security of millions of hard-working Americans is at risk. Millions of citizens have worked hard all of their lives, played by the rules. They have been dedicated and loyal workers only to find their promised pensions disappear when they retire. They worked faithfully, assuming their retirements would be theirgolden years. But suddenly it all disappears. The pension plan is in financial trouble and their retirement dreams are being wiped away. This is exactly what has happened to millions of loyal American workers.

In the past 5 years, 70 of the largest pension plans have gone into crisis, and millions of workers have lost $8 billion in pension benefits that they had been promised. It is a crisis. We see it with our airline workers. We see it with our workers in manufacturing industries. We see it with our construction workers and sales clerks at the store and so many of our neighbors. It is a crisis, and this bill responds to it by saving their pensions.

Large numbers of Americans are increasingly concerned about their retirement security and rightfully so. Each leg of the three-legged stool of retirement—private pensions, private savings, and Social Security—is in jeopardy.

Many Americans find they are unable to save anything toward their retirement. In fact, the personal savings rate has now fallen below zero. Americans are spending more than they earn. It is no wonder when wages are stagnant and costs are soaring for basic necessities such as energy, housing, health care, and education.

The Bush administration continues to propose to privatize Social Security, which would put the reliability of future benefits in that landmark and highly successful program in jeopardy.

Many workers have no private pension at all. Only half of American private sector workers have a pension today and less than half of those workers who do have a pension through their job. And 2.7 million fewer private sector workers have a pension today than in 2000. Listen to that: 2.7 million fewer private sector workers have a pension today than in 2000. Most of the workers who do not have a pension today have only a 401(k) account as their pension, but many have nothing saved in these accounts. Even those who are saving do not have enough to live on in retirement. More than half of the workers approaching retirement have less than $33,000 in their 401(k), and workers who rely on these accounts face the constant risk of investments that perform poorly.

These problems make pensions with defined benefits more valuable than ever because they are secure. They provide a known monthly benefit for life. They are ensured by the Federal Government. But they are becoming much rarer today, as businesses shift away from them.

In the early 1980s, almost 40 percent of American workers were covered by secure pensions. Today, that number is only 20 percent. Yet, while workers’ pensions are being cut, executives’ pensions are increasingly getting bigger. A recent study found that 25 percent of the CEOs of 500 large companies had been promised retirement benefits of more than $1 million a year. Why should Ken Lay of Enron or Bernie Ebbers of WorldCom walk away with millions of dollars in a pension plan after driving their employees’ pensions into the ground?

On this chart, we see this rather dramatic decline in terms of what is happening to workers, particularly in defined benefit programs. We find that the CEOs are being well taken care of. Here is Ken Lay. Enron required the employees to invest in the company

"Sincerely,"

DUANE E. WOERTH,
President.

Mr. AKAKA. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment so pilots are not unfairly penalized for having to retire at age 60 by FAA regulation. I call for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. As I understand it, it has been the request of our leaders we give notification to our colleagues with whom we are likely to have a vote. It is agreeable with the Senator from Hawaii that we have this vote just prior to the time we have the final passage. I certainly yield to my friend and colleague.
stock and then lied to the workers, lied about the state of the company’s finances. As stock prices plunged on the news of the corporate mismanagement, employees were blocked from selling their stock. This is an area we have dealt with quite effectively in our reforms. And 11,000 employees lost $1 billion in retirement savings during that period of time. We have the example of the WorldCom CEO. Bernie Ebbers was given a $1.5 million-a-year pension, and he was convicted of accounting fraud. Thirty percent of the employees’ 401(k) money was invested in the company stock. When WorldCom stock plunged in value, 93,000 workers and retirees with WorldCom 401(k) accounts lost hundreds of millions of dollars in their retirement savings. These are issues that are enormously important. I think when we were getting started, in terms of the debate on pension plans, most Americans were wondering what the Congress was going to do about these issues. They were less aware of the fact that the defined benefit programs have been gradually in decline, the kind of pension plans that provides the best kind of security to American workers. And they were not familiar with other factors: the drop in the savings accounts, the fact that so many of the 401(k)s have been buffeted around by the stock market and have not been enough to provide for a secure income.

But they are increasingly aware now. I think as the debate took place earlier this spring about the solvency of Social Security, we focused on the solvency of Social Security and have also thought about their retirement. When they think about their retirement, obviously, they are concerned about their pensions. But it has also been seen that workers have lost dramatically over the period of these past several years. In the last 5 years, workers have lost $8 billion. That is $8 billion workers have lost in the last 5 years. For those pensions, workers have seen a decrease in their pay, they give up maybe a reduction in the amount of hours they have to work, they give up other kinds of benefits. That is in order to put something aside in terms of pensions they are allegedly going to be guaranteed at the time they finish working for their company. And still, we have seen that amount of money—$8 billion—that has been relied on by American workers effectively wiped out and disappeared.

That is why the legislation we have is so important.

When a major pension plan fails, it places a strain on the entire system. The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, which insures these sorts of plans, has moved from a surplus in 2001 to a deficit of $23 billion today. Our pension insurance system protects the retirement earnings of over $3 million Americans, and we must do what it takes to see that it is there for the years to come.

These are serious problems that require immediate action by Congress.

The pending bill adopts a broad approach, with stronger rules for funding, expanded disclosure, so workers are going to know the stability and the financial security they have with their pension. It includes other new protections. One new headline is that many companies are using bankruptcy courts to abandon their pension plans. Hundreds of thousands of workers and retirees at companies such as United Airlines, US Airways, Bethlehem Steel, and LTV Steel are now without the pensions they worked so hard to earn.

The bill also contains specific provisions to save airline pensions by offering companies a specialized payment program. And I know that has been reviewed earlier in the debate.

In addition, our legislation addresses the needs of nearly 10 million workers and retirees who receive pensions through multiemployer plans. These are the workers who clean our office buildings and hotel rooms, sell us our cars, build our schools and highways and deliver goods across the country. Many of them are in industries where they have to move from job to job and would not be able to earn a pension at all without these multiemployer plans. We also recognize that particularly small businesses, could not afford to offer a pension plan of their own.

The majority of these plans are in strong financial shape. But the recent declines in the stock market have put some of these plans in financial difficulties similar to those facing single-employer plans. We owe it to these employees to protect their pensions now, instead of acting only when they are about to fail.

Hybrid pension plans, including cash balance plans, have a growing role in our retirement system. They have a number of advantages. They provide secured, guaranteed pensions. They are attractive to younger workers and those such as parents caring for children. But older workers can lose out when their companies switch to these plans because they lose a large portion of the benefits they were promised. Our legislation requires companies that are going to switch to these plans to protect the benefits that workers have already earned. That is enormously important.

I want to highlight another very important area and that is the legislation also includes very important provisions from the Women’s Pension Protection Act that I introduced with Senator Snowe. Retirement security is essential for all Americans, but too often we fail to meet the needs of women on this basic issue. Women live longer than men, but they continue to earn far less in wages over their lifetimes. They are also much less likely to earn a pension. These factors translate into seriously inadequate retirement income for vast numbers of women.

The realities of this injustice are grim. According to the most recent data, only 28 percent of women age 65... and over are receiving private pension income, and for those who do, the average is only $3,800 per year, compared to $8,100 for men. Minority women are in even more desperate straits. Only 20 percent of African-American women and 9 percent of Hispanic women receive pension benefits—another major reason why nearly one in five elderly single women lives in poverty.

Our legislation gives them much greater retirement security. Widows will receive more generous survivor benefits. Divorced women will have a greater ability to receive a share of their former husband’s pension after divorce. These are long-overdue improvements in the private pension system so retirement savings programs will be more responsive to the realities of women’s lives and careers.

American workers and their families rightly expect Congress to protect their hard-earned pensions. This legislation is an important start to meeting this challenge. Madam President, I want to quickly re-

Note the Senator from Pennsylvania is this balance. Madam President, I provide it in a timely and accurate manner. Many times it takes months or even years to get that timely information. This legislation will provide it in a timely and accurate way, which is enormously important for workers.

It protects the workers and businesses in single-employer pensions. We have the single pensions, as we mentioned, and now also in the multiem-ployer pensions they face different issues. But we have strengthened and provided and followed a number of recommendations that were made from the business community and the worker community to strengthen those programs.

It protects older workers in cash balance plan conversions. I have outlined the areas where cash balance plan to younger workers, but to older workers it can work disadvantageously. This legislation provides a very important way of protecting those who have been reliant on existing programs rather than a cash balance plan. That is enormous—by granting flexibility and negotiation. It gives workers timely and ac-urate information on pension plan finances. That does not exist today. Well, it exists but not in an efficient or effective manner. Many times it takes months or even years to get that timely information. This legislation will provide it in a timely and accurate way, which is enormously important for workers.

It adopts the post-Enron worker pension protections. It stops corporate excutives from lining their pockets when workers’ pensions suffer. This is to deal with the issue I mentioned briefly before, where the corporate excutives can make out while the workers are losing.

It provides greater retirement security for widows and former spouses. This is enormously important because of the injustice with regard to women and the pension system, which is ex-raceptably biased against women. I have been working for a number of years to try to address that. I am grateful to our chairman, Mr. Enzi, for reviewing these matters in great detail and including these provisions. This is enormously important.

This is an important piece of legislation. It doesn’t solve all of the problems, but it will certainly do a great deal in terms of ensuring workers in the future of the security of their pensions. We are very hopeful, with the strong bipartisan support we have been able to develop in the Senate, that we can carry these very important protections for workers, for companies, for women, for the single employer pensions, for multiemployer pensions, through and have them enacted into law.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SANTORUM. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his comments and the outstanding way he summarized the principles we have been working on. It is a very good job, considering that this is a 730-page bill. He got into significant details. It has been the details that have been holding it up for literally years. You notice that nobody is speaking in opposition to this bill, so that means the bipartisan effort has paid off.

I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Madam President, I thank the chairman of the HELP Committee, as well as the ranking member, for the excellent work they have done on this legislation and for the tremendous cooperation they have shown me, as well as Senator BAUCUS, and my chairman Senator GRASSLEY, on the issue of multiemployer pensions, which is my number one priority in this legislation. It is a very important issue—

And I will lay out here—it is critically important that we make sure these plans survive. Because unlike the single-employer plans, the backstop, the insurance for a plan that gets dumped into the PBGC is actually less than one-third of what a single-employer plan would be. It is even more important for us to have healthy multiem-ployer plans from the standpoint of the beneficiary than it is to have healthy single-employer plans.

Again, I thank the chairmen and ranking members of both committees. They have made the case and I have listened to some of the debate—that the need for reform in both these areas is clear. I come from the State of Pennsylvania, which unfortunately has seen its share of plans being dissolved and thrown into the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. We have a lot of stelennium. We have an airline that has done that. We have, unfortunately, tens of thousands of retirees who are now receiving their benefits through the PBGC and have promised more generous benefits under their contracts with the steel companies and the airline, who are now living, in many cases, very much hand to mouth. We need to do a better job for future workers and retirees. We need to address this problem in a climate where increasingly we are seeing concern about not only the dumping of these plans onto the PBGC, and the transfer of defined benefit plans to defined contribution plans, we are increasingly seeing that transactions. I believe there is a place for defined benefit plans and that we need to have a structure in place to make sure they are adequately funded and safe for pensioners to rely upon as they enter into their retirement years.

Again, I don’t want to repeat all that has been said about the state of play of how bad the system is as far as the deficits and the problems with the single-employer plans. I want to focus on the multiemployer plans. There is an area on which I have been active in trying to make sure it was included in this bill and that many of the reforms I put in place in the legislation I introduced with Senator STABENOW a few weeks ago were included in the mark. Again, I thank the chairmen of both committees and the ranking members for working with us to see that happen.

The importance of making sure multi-employer plans are safe is because the maximum guarantee for a multi-employer participant with 30 years of service is less than $13,000 a year. That means if you worked for the IBEW and you were a tradesman, an electrician, and you built some of the greatest buildings in Philadelphia, for example, if the IBEW pension plan goes belly up, the maximum benefit you would receive would be less than $13,000 a year. That is a horrific end for many people from the standpoint of what they have worked all their lives to provide for their self and their family under their covered plan. Contrast that with a retiree covered by a single employer plan with the same record. They are looking at about $45,000 and in some cases up over $100,000. So the fallback, if these plans should fail, is substantially lower in the multiemployer world. That is why it is vitally important that we have remedies and things to improve the overall picture. There are plans that are in bad shape. We have plans that are funded as low as 50 percent. One plan is $20 billion underfunded. We have problems out there. The consequences if a single-employer plan fails is in comparison to the devastation to pensioners if multiemployer plans fail.

I have worked hard with a coalition to try to put together a piece of legislation that I mentioned before, S. 1825. Senator STABENOW has worked hard on this issue. Many of the reforms we put in place are included in this mark. We worked together with a coalition of management and labor and met over a period of months to come up with a bipartisan agreement. We are on opposite sides of the bargaining table. We have had everybody here—from the building trades, the Teamsters, the food and commercial workers union, the IAM, to the grocery manufacturers, a host of freight companies, UPS, contractors, etcetera—and have worked together over a period of months to come up with a bill that, as Chairman ENZI mentioned, has strong bipartisan support. We have been able to move forward.

We haven’t gotten everything, candidly, we wanted in this legislation. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the list of folks supporting this multiemployer bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator Santorum worked with the Multiemployer Pension Plan Coalition to develop S. 1825, the Multi-Employer Plan Funding and Deduction Reform Act of 2005. The coalition members are:

- Albion; American Federation of Musicians; American Federation of Television and Radio Artists; American Trucking Associations; Associated General Contractors of America; Bechtel Construction Company; The Building and Construction Trades Department, AFL-CIO; Carhull; Food Marketing Institute; Finishing Contractors Association; International Association of Machinists; International Brotherhood of Teamsters; International Council of Employers of Bricklayers & Allied Craftworkers; Kroger; Mechanical Contractors Association of America; Motion Picture Association of America; Motor Freight Carriers; National Electrical Contractors Association; National Coordinating Committee for Multiemployer Plans; Recording Industry Association of America; Safeway; Sheet Metal & Air Conditioning Contractors' National Association; Supervisors; United Association of Plumbers; United Food & Commercial Workers Union; UPS; U.S. Chamber of Commerce; and Yellow Roadway Corporation.

Mr. SANTORUM. I have worked with my constituents. I have had I don’t know how many meetings with members of labor unions across Pennsylvania to talk about this issue and get their input as to how we can deal with the problem of multiemployer plans to make sure we improve their solvency and increase the reliability of those plans for our pensioners. It was an unprecedented effort. I thank Jen Vesey from my staff for the work she has done. I think in particular the folks from the Pennsylvania Building Trades, the Teamsters, and Teamsters who have been terrific in trying to work through some of these very tough issues to get a consensus bill that I am hopeful we can not only pass here in the Senate, obviously in the House as well, but also get something passed permanently by the end of the year.

One of the key concepts folks were concerned about was the concept of an early warning system for multiemployer plans. Under current law, too often we don’t know about economic conditions of these plans until they are facing extreme financial pressure. As we have said, sometimes the remedies are too late to solve the problem, and we end up with people not having sufficient retirement. In this bill, we do address this problem. However, I have heard from labor and management representatives of the multiemployer plans. They have expressed concerns about the approach to this taken in S. 1783.

It is important that we keep in mind in a multiemployer world, these pension plans typically operate in tandem with health plans. There is a concern that changes that could go to maintain important health benefits may be unnecessarily diverted to pensions because of overly stringent performance benchmarks. I have heard about those benchmarks. I have heard about those concerns. We will continue to work on this. It is important that we continue to work toward a solution that imposes discipline, which is what this legislation does, without imposing undue burdens on the plans, particularly how they might affect health benefits.

I am pleased my colleagues have accepted most of the changes we proposed and certainly remain committed to working on these important issues to strengthen multiemployer pensions to protect these folks.

This is an important piece of legislation. This is a great victory for working men and women across the country that the Senate is about to act on. We head into the holidays, where you want to deal with the situation of people’s financial security, if we are able to get this accomplished by the end of this year, we will provide a whole host of people across America a better feeling about not just their holiday plans but the security of future holidays after they have finished their working years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Wyoming for his diligent effort, particularly in the multiemployer area. He checked with us and gave suggestions several times a month during the process when we were putting together the HELP bill. That was extremely helpful, particularly since he was also on the Finance Committee which had some jurisdiction in this area. His coordination between the two committees was invaluable. His knowledge on that issue were particularly helpful. I thank him for his efforts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to mention in particular my colleague and friend on this side of the aisle, Senator BARBARA MIKULSKI, who is ranking member on the Retirement and Aging Subcommittee on the HELP Committee and has attended all of the hearings in the subcommittee and in our full committee and has been a tireless advocate on this issue. I have learned a great deal from her. I am enormously grateful to her for all of her efforts. She has been a great ally. I also thank my friend TOM HARKIN. This is one in a range of issues in which he has been involved and about which he cares deeply.

He is enormously knowledgeable about and he is very committed in terms of the defined benefit programs and how we can strengthen those, concerned about the relationship between the cash balance and the defined benefit programs, whether there is going to be a benefit to workers, which he has been involved and about which he cares deeply.

This legislation is strongly bipartisan. We don’t have final legislation over in the House of Representatives. I hope our colleagues and friends in the House of Representatives would at least take some inspiration from what we have been able to achieve over here working in a bipartisan way under Republican Chairs to come up with a product which is going to move through the Senate at 2:30 or 3 o’clock this afternoon, which will make a major difference in terms of protecting workers and also be sensitive to some of the economic challenges. We have not had a finished product over in the House and I am concerned it has been rather fractured over there in terms of the nature of the debate and discussion.

I hope the leadership over there will take a page from the Enzi and Grassley book about how to work their committees in ways to develop bipartisanship on the committees and also between those committees as it is enormously important.

Finally, Mr. President, why this is important: We see that our Social Security bedrock of retirement is now is being reviewed; some believe under attack. We have private pensions. Only 50 percent of our workers have pension
Mr. ENZI. I was reserving in that time for the Senator from Alaska to speak.

Mr. STEVENS. If that is agreed to, I won't object to the time until that time being allocated to the Senator from New York in order to give the common defense. So when we hear things such as the fact there was only one FEMA employee in the entire city of New Orleans from August 27 through 30, we see e-mails from the FEMA Director that he was wrangling over his wardrobe when people were drowning in their own homes, waiting for rescue from the roofs of those homes, and the national response plan that is supposed to guide our national response was basically totally ignored, we have to ask ourselves how could we be so unprepared especially after September 11?

Because I believe the victims of Hurricane Katrina and, indeed, all Americans really need. Over 800 of these questions and a way forward that merits the confidence and trust of the American people, I introduced legislation co-sponsored by my friend and colleague from Colorado to establish a Katrina Commission. The 9/11 Commission, intended to be non-partisan, independent, designed to study the Federal, State, and local response to Hurricane Katrina.

We have 17 cosponsors of this legislation, and I am, frankly, outraged we cannot get an up-or-down vote on it. The cameras may have left the area of destruction but the devastation and the devastated lives remain. We owe it to the thousands of the displaced, who lost loved ones, who are still finding bodies in homes that people are returning to, to understand what went wrong, what needs to be fixed, and where the responsibility resides. Only if the American people believe a Katrina commission is the right and necessary thing to do. Yet the Republican leadership of the Congress is afraid to allow an up-or-down vote. Why? Because they know that I know what I know; I know that the Republicans will vote for this. They were equally dismayed. They saw the same television pictures. They worry about what might happen next with an earthquake, a forest fire, massive tornadoes like just whipped through the central southern part of our country. But even more significantly, the reason this is important is because of the potential of a terrorist attack that could happen again. And I have to say it appeared that the Federal response based on Katrina is nowhere near ready. We cannot accept the status quo. We must fix FEMA and the Department of Homeland Security.

My friend from Colorado is a co-sponsor of that legislation, and I ask him does he believe a Katrina commission is still needed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SALAZAR. I thank my colleague from New York for her leadership on this very important issue for our Nation. I deeply share her belief that a Katrina commission is, in fact, needed and that we ought not to wait.

The headline on the New Orleans Times Picayune editorial page this Sunday was “Forgotten Already.” “Forgotten Already.” It is about how Washington has forgotten how bad Katrina was and that Katrina is still an ongoing crisis. It is a shame that Washington has such a short attention span.

In the days following the storm, Congress moved quickly to pass a $76 billion emergency relief bill. We held hearings and grilled the officials from FEMA. However, because the storm waters had receded, many politicians in Washington feel they can roll their sleeves back down and declare the job is done, the mission is accomplished.

That is not the case. Tell the 1,154 children who are missing or who are looking for their parents that our job in Katrina is done. Tell the 129,000 Louisiana residents, 129,000 Louisiana residents, that they do not have electricity or have electricians. Let us know that the Federal Government task is done. Tell the 196,000 Katrina evacuees who are currently unemployed, who do not have jobs, that our mission is accomplished.

Our job is far from done. We need to do much more to ensure that the individuals and communities along the gulf coast recover, and we have to do a lot more to plug the homeland security vulnerabilities that Hurricane Katrina exposed.

What Senator Clinton’s legislation would do is establish a Hurricane Katrina commission, similar to the 9/11 Commission. The commission would investigate what went wrong in the Government’s response to Katrina and what steps we need to take to make things better.

I remember a number of years ago meeting with President Bush and then-Homeland Security Adviser Ridge at the White House shortly after 9/11. We held a meeting with the attorneys general from States around the country. At that time, the President was opposed to the creation of a department of homeland security. Later, the President relented, taking the position that in the post-9/11 world, a department of homeland security was necessary for us as a nation to make homeland security a greater priority to protect America.

A few years later, I came to Washington as a U.S. Senator to help on that agenda. I want to make protecting our Nation and our homeland a greater priority. Yet 4 years after 9/11, Katrina slapped the Nation with reality. We are not prepared to protect our homeland, even when we have days of warning that American citizens are in the path of thegravest danger. That reality is a shame on the efforts of the last 4 years, but it would be an even greater shame for our Nation not to learn from our failure in the preparation and response to Katrina. We need to learn from those lessons.

My colleague’s proposed bipartisan commission would help us make sure we prevent failures in homeland security in the future. Therefore, I am proud to stand here with Senator Clinton and 16 other cosponsors in demanding accountability from the Federal Government. I am proud to stand with them for an independent Katrina commission, is the way to proceed. The PRESIDING OFFICER, The Senator from New York.

Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. President, I thank my friend for his support. He knows a lot about what he is speaking of today in his capacity as the Attorney General. He had law enforcement responsibilities. He knew how essential it was to coordinate services throughout the State of Colorado. I am very grateful for his support and his eloquence on behalf of this bipartisan commission and his vigilance in working toward the establishment of a Katrina commission. I have said before that I agree that our established congressional committees should conduct their own oversight roles, but an independent commission is absolutely necessary to get this right.

The Katrina commission would be made up of individuals with the expertise and credentials to do the work; namely, people who have experience with emergency response, mitigation, and catalytic planning. The commission would build upon previous investigations and issues we know exist. For example, on 9/11, one of the problems our emergency response systems faced was the lack of interoperable communications; namely, the police radios couldn’t talk to the fire department radios, couldn’t talk with people coming from other parts of New York or even outside New York to be helpful at the site of Ground Zero where the Towers collapsed. Yet 4 years later, we find people responding to Katrina faced the same problems. We have not yet solved the problem of interoperable communications.

How far are we going to let this go on? When the 9/11 Commission issued its report, the majority leader applauded the Commission for its tremendous act of public service and patriotism and looked forward to a time when we could work together to ensure America grew stronger and better prepared. Let’s ask ourselves, Are we stronger today and better prepared? Although I applaud my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who are concerned about the answers for the victims of Hurricane Katrina commission investigation, because what Katrina taught us, the answers for the victims of Hurricane Katrina commission investigation, because what Katrina taught us, the answers for the victims of Hurricane Katrina is an ongoing crisis. It is a shame that Washington has such a short attention span. To Katrina is an ongoing crisis. It is a shame that Washington has such a short attention span. Katrina is still an ongoing crisis. It is a shame that Washington has such a short attention span. The Katrina commission would help us make sure we prevent failures in homeland security in the future. Therefore, I am proud to stand here with Senator CLINTON and 16 other cosponsors in demanding accountability from the Federal Government. I am proud to stand with them for an independent Katrina commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 220, S. 1748, a bill to establish the Katrina commission investigation, that the bill be read a third time and passed, and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. President, there we have it. We are once again hearing objections. The status quo wins the day. FEMA will not change. The Department of Homeland Security will not change. We will never get to the bottom of what happened and what we need to do to fix the obvious flaws unless we have this independent commission.

I ask my friend from Colorado if he agrees that the only way we will get the answers we need is through an independent commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, I agree with my friend and colleague from New York. The Republican leadership should allow this Senate to have a vote on whether we establish an independent Katrina commission. This ought not be a partisan issue. This is not about Republicans and Democrats and Independents. This is not about assigning blame. It is about learning from our mistakes and building a stronger Nation.

I hope that President Bush, Senator Frist, and Speaker Hastert will join us and move forward in developing this independent Katrina commission so we can make our homeland even more secure, because what Katrina taught us, without a doubt, is that we as a nation as a nation are not prepared. Every day we go without this commission is a day lost. It puts us a day further from finding answers for the victims of Hurricane Katrina, a day further from identifying the gaps in homeland security, day further from a safer America.

I want to say that I, too, have been involved as an attorney general looking at difficult issues that have occurred in my state. I walked through the orphanage of Columbine High School, the bloodiest school shooting in America. And so many years later, the answers we sought about why that happened and how it could have been prevented, how we could have improved on internal communications, those lessons have not yet been placed on the table.

I daresay that without the efforts of the 9/11 Commission, the lessons learned from that most horrific attack on America on 9/11 would not have been learned. In the same way, as we move forward to determine whether we have a Department of Homeland Security that is up to the job of protecting Americans, protecting the homeland, protecting our citizens, it is a major mistake on the part of the United States of America not to undertake this independent review which has been presented in a bill by my colleague from New York.

If the Senator CLINTON again for her advocacy for this legislation. I vow to work with her and to try again and again with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle. I do not believe we can adjourn this Congress without finishing the job on a Katrina commission.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mrs. CLINTON. May I finish, Mr. President?

Mr. STEVENS. I misunderstood the time sequence, and the Parliamentarian tells me the Senator has until 2:30 p.m.?

Mrs. CLINTON. No, 1:30 p.m.

Mr. STEVENS. I remove my previous objection. The Senator should continue to have time till 1:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Alaska. I will wrap this up.

I wish to serve notice to my colleagues in the Senate that my good friend from Colorado and I will be back again and again and again, as we were with the 9/11 Commission. He was not in the Senate at that time. He was serving in Colorado from a position of trust and responsibility as attorney general, but he watched from afar, understood the tragedy that befall us, and, like so many of us who are given the public trust of public office, wanted answers. He came to this body to help find those answers.

When Katrina struck and it became so apparent that we were not yet prepared, the Senator from Colorado was among the very first to say we need those answers and we need them yesterday because no place is prepared, no place is ready if the Federal Government is not in a position to provide the assistance and the assets and the support that is needed in the face of a large manmade or natural disaster.

We will be back again and again, as we were with the 9/11 Commission, until this commission is established. It is the right thing to do. The country deserves to have it and, most of all, the people along the gulf coast deserve the answers and deserve to know what did occur to them, what could have been prevented, and then the rest of us should act on that information to make sure our Nation is prepared in the future.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, how much time remains for the minority at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if no one seeks that time, I ask that I be permitted to start the majority time at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAUCUS. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alaska.

POINT OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have sought the floor now to speak on what I consider to be a matter of personal privilege. It has been brought to my attention that the Senator from Illinois apparently takes exception to the fact that witnesses who appeared voluntarily before the Joint Senate Commerce and Energy Committees last week were not sworn in. I would like to set the record straight about the events of that day.

The request by Senator CANTWELL to swear in the witnesses was delivered to my office at 8:10 a.m. on the morning of the hearing. It was leaked to the press before it was ever delivered to me. As a matter of fact, the Seattle press that morning had reported that I had already rejected the request before I had even received it or read it.

While I have accomplished many things in my 37 years in the Senate, the ability to see into the future or read into the minds of other Members is not one of them. Had the Senator from Illinois read the transcript of that hearing, he would have a better understanding of why I took the actions I did as the chairman opening that hearing.

I made this opening statement:

I remind the witnesses as well as the Members of the committee that any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or representation shall be fined under this title or be imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

I continued my statement at that time:

Having reviewed the rules of the Senate and the rules of the Commerce and Energy Committees and the relevant provisions of title II of United States Code, there is nothing there that stands in the way of the rule or the Senate which requires witnesses to be sworn. The statute has the position that everyone appearing before the Congress is in fact under oath. These witnesses accepted an invitation to appear before our committees voluntarily. They are aware that making false statements and testifying is a violation of Federal law whether or not an oath has been administered. I shall not administer an oath today.

Earlier, Senator DURBIN of Illinois came to the Chamber and said—and I quote from the Record that has been provided to me:

You probably heard about the hearing before the Senate Committee. Senator Maria Cantwell of Washington insisted that the oil company executives be sworn in, testify under oath, just as the third base company executives were a few years ago. But Senator Stevens, the chairman of the committee, refused to allow them to be sworn in. Why? So they couldn’t be held accountable if they didn’t tell the truth.

Mr. President, I believe Senator DURBIN’s comments are a direct violation of rule XIX. I did not swear in witnesses who appeared before our committee because they are required to tell the truth under law.

Those are the rules of the Senate, the rules of our committees. To suggest I did not administer an oath to these witnesses to help them lie to Members of Congress is false, inexcusable, and in violation of rule XIX, the longstanding practice of Senatorial courtesy, and I expect an apology from the Senator from Illinois.

What is the status of the time now in terms of control of time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time until 2:30 is controlled by the majority.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, under the conditions that if the Senator from Montana would yield to our colleagues on this side if they come to make a statement on the bill, I yield to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Montana is recognized.

COMMERCE-JUSTICE-SCIENCE CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, first, I thank my friend from Alaska for his courtesy in working out this accommodation.

I rise to speak on the Commerce-Justice-Science appropriations bill conference report that might be coming before us later on and ask for a vote.

I must say I am outraged. This bill makes further cuts to critical programs that help local law enforcement... fight methamphetamine nationwide. These cuts—and they are dramatic—have a particularly damaging impact on my State of Montana. Why? Because we are a rural State. We have very limited resources.

When I was Montana law enforcement officers what is the No. 1 law enforcement problem they are facing, an open-ended question, they all come back with the same answer: methamphetamine. That is the biggest problem Montana law enforcement officers have.

The Byrne grant program and similar programs support most of the proactive drug enforcement in the 56 counties of my State, and I dare say that is true for a majority of States in this Nation. Why is Byrne grant money so important? Again, it is because we are spread so thin across a vast area in Montana, a small population with an international border. An adequately funded Byrne program, particularly when combined with high-intensity drug trafficking area, or HIDTA program, is essential. These programs are critical to help us maintain our seven multi-jurisdictional regional drug task forces, which have been a huge boon to successfully battle the drug traffickers in Montana to fight methamphetamine.

Let me give an example. In eastern Montana, we have what is called the Eastern Montana Drug Task Force that is based in Miles City, MT. We also have the Tri-Agency Drug Task Force in Havre that is near the Canadian border. We have a third drug task force in our State, and that is the Big Money Drug Task Force based outside of Wolf Point. They all rely entirely on Byrne funding. These task forces also happen to cover some of the most open, most rural areas in my State where meth enforcement is particularly challenging.

This Commerce report that is soon to be before the Senate eviscerates the Federal Government’s commitment to State and local law enforcement. It funds the Byrne grant program at just $416 million for this next fiscal year. That $416 million may sound like a lot of money, but it represents a nearly 35 percent cut over current year funding. We are cutting this law enforcement program by 35 percent.

Is that bad? That is terrible. But it is even worse because that 35 percent cut is on top of a 26 percent cut in funding in real dollars of local law enforcement resources that occurred in 2005. First we had a 26 percent cut last year. Now this is a 35 percent cut on top of the 26 percent cut.

This bill cuts the Community Oriented Policing Services, otherwise known as COPS. That is cut by one-third and provides no funding for communities to hire additional police officers.

According to the president of the Montana Association of Chiefs of Police, COPS funding is necessary to maintain an adequate number of police in the field to protect our communities. One law enforcement officer back home told me that without COPS funding, the number of crimes, especially violent crimes, begins to rise again. Currently, there is no other alternative to the COPS Program. He tells me that the COPS Program is one of those programs that works, one of those programs that is directly responsible for protecting our communities and for getting officers out on the street to protect us all. COPS works. We all know that COPS has worked, particularly for us in rural States.

So I ask, where are our priorities? The Senate did its job. We sent over a bill to the House that the Montana Association of Chiefs of Police and the Montana Narcotics Officers Association has told me that if the House version of the CJS bill is passed, this would gut Montana’s meth enforcement abilities, especially in rural areas. They told me this would result in an elimination or a dramatic reduction in services provided by Montana’s regional drug task forces.

The 26 percent cut in Byrne funding in this last fiscal year resulted in nearly a 50 percent cut in Byrne funding for the entire State of Montana, and that is because of a block grant allocation which has that result. I frankly cannot believe we are being asked to support a conference report that has cut law enforcement, especially in the areas to fight methamphetamine enforcement, as much as we are asked to.

I am also very disappointed that this conference does not support what I think is a very bad idea. What did they do? They did not accept the Senate-passed combat meth bill. What was that? That bill would put certain methamphetamine ingredients behind pharmacy counters nationwide. We all know that the precursors of methamphetamine over the counter in drugstores are a big inducement for meth manufacturers to take these ingredients and go to local labs out in rural Montana to manufacture methamphetamine. It only makes sense that these methamphetamine precursors not be sold over the counter but only sold by prescription or at least behind the counter so there is much more control over the use of these ingredients. We passed that in the Senate. What did the conference do? No, they did not adopt it.

Let us look at what this conference report says with respect to rural States that are trying to fight methamphetamine. I might say it is not just rural States; it is most States trying to fight methamphetamine.

First, it did not take up and agree to the combat meth bill. The precursor provisions are not in here anymore. Willy-nilly, they are out of there. It also dramatically cut the Byrne grant money, which is so important. We made a good part of our job in the Senate devoted to fighting methamphetamine. I have gone to a lot of these drug task force meetings. I go to many assemblies in Montana with high school and middle school students. I put on these programs that show how bad methamphetamine is. We have law enforcement officers there during these sessions with middle school and high school students. I have counselors there. We go over what has to be done to fight methamphetamine.

Again, a reminder, methamphetamine is the No. 1 law enforcement problem in the State of Montana, and I am sure that is true in a lot of other States as well.

I ask for a show of hands at these assemblies. These are schoolwide assemblies. I ask: How many of you here know of somebody who is on meth or recently on meth? Fifty to 70 percent of the students’ hands go up. It is such an outrage. We talk about pandemics and we talk about the Asian flu. I think we certainly have an epidemic with methamphetamine. In a certain sense it may be a pandemic. It is a huge problem.

We are going to fight it—and I hear in my State of Montana, and I am sure the President of the Senate—He said, “The 26 percent cut in Byrne funding this year is not acceptable.” The Montana Narcotics Officers Association has told me that if the House version of the CJS bill is passed, this would gut Montana’s meth enforcement abilities, especially in rural areas. They told me this would result in an elimination or a dramatic reduction in services provided by Montana’s regional drug task forces.

The 26 percent cut in Byrne funding in this last fiscal year resulted in nearly a 50 percent cut in Byrne funding for the entire State of Montana, and that is because of a block grant allocation which has that result. be gutted and to be diluted and cut back and ask us to vote for that conference report I think is an outrage. For that reason, I strongly oppose this conference report. It is a bad idea. It is going to allow more methamphetamine in our country, one of the biggest problems we have with drug abuse.

This is a victory for the drug dealers. It is a big victory for drug dealers. They know where there is law enforcement and where there is not. When we start to cut back money—not status quo but cut back law enforcement dollars—that is going to be a huge problem. I very much hope this Congress finds a way to redress this imbalance, to deal with this problem so we can adequately fight methamphetamine.

I have all kinds of PSAs running in Montana, public service ads, against methamphetamine. I have been working in schools to get rid of methamphetamine. There are other people in Montana paying a lot of dollars out of their own pockets, with very effective antimethamphetamine ads. Part of the solution is to make sure we have adequate law enforcement. I strongly urge my colleagues to not let this conference report until this problem is solved.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the National Sheriffs’ Association be printed in the RECORD.

The bearing of the letter, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. TED COCHRAN, Chairman, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the National Sheriffs’ Association (NSA) and our 23,000 members, I am writing to express our extreme disappointment and concern over the lack of funding for the Edward Byrne Memorial Assistance Grant program (JAG) in H.R. 2862, the Science, State, Justice, Commerce, and Related Agencies Appropriations Bill.

The JAG program, which was formed by consolidating the Edward Byrne Memorial Grant program and the Local Law Enforcement Block Grant program, is one of the primary Federal assistance programs for State, tribal and local law enforcement agencies. State and local law enforcement agencies, including the 3,087 sheriffs’ offices across the country, rely heavily on JAG funds for critical operational activities. JAG funds support many of our counter-drug activities, particularly for the field task forces. Without these funds, our sheriffs will not be able to sustain the task forces or even fight the war on drugs.

Local law enforcement agencies from all across the country are already out-manned and out-gunned by the drug cartels and street gangs in our communities. Over the last several years we have been forced to deal with the loss of personnel, because of budget cuts to the COPS program. Now the COPS Universal Hiring Program has been zeroed out of the budget, thus abandoning an effective program, and the JAG Funds are being cut as well. These cuts will put an end to any progress that has been made and destroy the will of our forces. We have to win the war on drugs or ridding our communities of methamphetamine!

For more than a decade, the resources provided under the JAG program have allowed law enforcement agencies to expand their capabilities and make great strides in reducing the incidence of methamphetamine across the nation. It is our belief that the lack of Federal support for local law enforcement will surely result in increased crime and drug abuse.

The conference agreement would provide just $146 million for the Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grants, of which only $251 million is available for local law enforcement assistance. This represents a cut of more than $217 million or 34 percent, from FY 2005 levels. We find this level of funding to be unacceptable. The conference is failing to adequately recognize the mission of law enforcement!

Cuts of this magnitude seriously inhibit law enforcement’s abilities and endanger the safety and well being of our communities! In order to keep communities safe from crime and free of drugs, law enforcement agencies must be given the resources they need! The FY06 SSJC appropriations bill does not provide for those resources.

At a time where law enforcement and securing the homeland should be of the highest priority, Congress has chosen to completely dismiss them as a priority! With the rise of terrorism, the use of methamphetamine and abuse has risen to epidemic proportions. Congress should embrace law enforcement, support the JAG program and COPS hiring program, and increase their funding, not cut their funding!

Sincerely,

THOMAS N. FAUST, Executive Director and Retired Sheriff, Arlington County, VA.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators CARPER, SALAZAR, and NELSON be added as cosponsors to the Isakson amendment on the pension bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ISAKSON. I yield the floor.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman. I appreciate very much the chairman bringing this pension reform bill to the floor. As a Senator from a State that has several major airlines, three headquartered in my home State of Texas, I know this is very important for them. It has been worked on for a long time. I appreciate the efforts of the distinguished chairman in this regard.

JUDGE ALITO

I also want to take this opportunity to answer some of the things that have been said in the Chamber today, particularly about Judge Alito, who is the President’s nominee to the Supreme Court of the United States. It has been implied in the Chamber today that maybe he doesn’t deserve an up-or-down vote. After all, Harriet Miers didn’t get one.

I am the perfect person to say I think Harriet Miers had a very good chance to be nominated. I do believe Harriet Miers was qualified for the Supreme Court. If she had been allowed to open her mouth and say what she believed and talk about her experience, she would have been confirmed, and she would have been a superb Justice.

However, Harriet Miers didn’t get an up-or-down vote because she withdrew her nomination. She withdrew it voluntarily. It was her decision. I was sorry she did. I didn’t want her to make that decision. But to imply that all of a sudden now we have a new standard, that Judge Alito does not deserve an up-or-down vote, is absolutely wrong and it must be refuted. Judge Alito does deserve an up-or-down vote just as every nominee for the Supreme Court of the United States who has gone through this committee and come out deserves an up-or-down vote. The idea that seems to be creeping in here is that, maybe for the first time in the history of the United States, there might be a filibuster, a partisan filibuster of a nominee for the Supreme Court of the United States. That would be a terrible thing for the United States of America, for the President, and for the Senate of the United States. It would harm everyone concerned. It would set a precedent that I believe would cause partisanship in this body to escalate to a degree that we do not want to see happen.

Partisanship has already escalated in the Senate. I am sorry that it has. But I think there are many instances where we work in a bipartisan way in the Senate, and we accomplish a great deal when we do. So I think the idea of throwing a bomb into the Senate and breaking all tradition and all precedent and filibustering on a partisan basis is unacceptable for the Senate, and we accomplish a great deal when we do. So I think the idea of doing this now is wrong.

I hope the Chairman is going to help avoid this. When he has his hearings and he has them, he should talk about Judge Alito and not talk about Judge Breyer or any other nominees. Judge Alito is a nominee for the Supreme Court of the United States who has gone through this committee and come out and deserves an up-or-down vote. The idea that seems to be creeping in here is that, maybe for the first time in the history of the United States, there might be a filibuster, a partisan filibuster of a nominee for the Supreme Court of the United States. That would be a terrible thing for the United States of America, for the President, and for the Senate of the United States. It would harm everyone concerned. It would set a precedent that I believe would cause partisanship in this body to escalate to a degree that we do not want to see happen.

Partisanship has already escalated in the Senate. I am sorry that it has. But I think there are many instances where we work in a bipartisan way in the Senate, and we accomplish a great deal when we do. So I think the idea of throwing a bomb into the Senate and breaking all tradition and all precedent and filibustering on a partisan basis is unacceptable for the Supreme Court who is reported out of committee is wrong, and I hope the hints of that happening are wrong. I just don’t think they are right.
been a statement on the floor today saying that this was a rebuff of the President's policies. The rebuff was to the amendment that was put forward that would set a timetable for a withdrawal, that would call on the President to say on a date certain we are going to withdraw troops from Iraq.

I have been one in the past who has said we should have a game plan. We should have an exit strategy. I have said that when we were in Bosnia. I said that when we were in Afghanistan. It is a legitimate role for the U.S. Congress to say: Mr. President, give us an update on where we are and give us what we can expect to see. That is exactly what happened. It was not unusual.

When we are in a conflict overseas with our troops on the ground, it is not unusual that the Congress would ask for a report on the status of the conflict. Most certainly it is fair to ask for a report. The President welcomed that because he knows the role of Congress, just as we do. Those who would characterize that as a rebuff are wrong. The President knows how tough this situation is. All of us do. Every one of us grieves when we lose one American life. But those who would not. I would be the proudest person in the world if I was as proud as I am of our Armed Forces, our men and women who are fighting for our freedom today as we speak in this Chamber, because those with boots on the ground know that if we set a time when we would exit, we would embolden the enemy they are facing today. We would say to the enemy: Have at it. No matter what happens, we are out of here on a date certain.

Do you think that puts the lives of those troops who are on the ground right now in jeopardy? The idea that we would do something like that is appalling. The Senate didn't do it. The Senate voted down an amendment. The Senate, as the President understands that and actually said he was very pleased that the Congress did that and that he would, of course, do that type of report as he has been doing on a regular basis in various ways, through the Secretary of Defense, through the Joint Chiefs, the Chairman, and the Ambassador to Iraq from the United States. We have had reports from all of these people on the status. We have seen the votes that have been taken in Iraq. We have seen the progress.

I think it is important that we set the record straight. On this floor this morning, I think there have been some statements that needed to be refuted, and that is what I have attempted to do.

I thank the chairman of the committee for allowing me this time and thank him for bringing this pension bill up to the Senate floor. It is an important bill. It will mean a lot to the employees in my State and the employees throughout our country in airlines that are struggling right now. This is an industry we need to protect.

Mr. ENZI. I yield myself such time as I might consume. I thank the Senator from Texas for coming to the Chamber and making the comments on pensions, and I appreciate all the work she has done, particularly in the airline area. I don't think there is a single airline that doesn't fly into Texas. I appreciate all the concern she has shown over all the various issues. There are certainly a lot of them in this 730-page bill.

I also thank her for the comments on the other topics because, while the time today was supposed to be for debating the pension bill, I guess the disadvantage of having one that is as big as this is, the concern to all the employees and businesses of this country is that we didn't have that much opposition today. So people came in with other topics.

I want to address one of those that came to me that disturb me a little bit, and that is the comments about a Katrina Commission.

The Katrina disaster and the others that followed it were bigger than anything we had ever had in this country. I have to tell you that I think there is enough blame to go around on it. If people want to point fingers, it goes the whole circle. The biggest problem with it was we had never seen that many displaced people in one single disaster. There were a million people displaced in that disaster, and 200,000 was the previous record—not that those are the kinds of records we like to keep.

A couple of weeks before Katrina, there was a tornado in Wright, WY. 38 miles south of my hometown. I happened to be there at the time. I spent a lot of time in Wright seeing how the recovery went and seeing what FEMA did. I didn't have much of an idea what FEMA was supposed to do. It was kind of astounding to me. They are the group who comes in after the disaster. They are not the prevention group. They are the after-disaster folks. They come in and register all of the victims of the disaster. Then they help those victims to get coordination to find their sources of help they possibly can.

This disaster was a lot different than any of the ones before. A lot of times, when there is a disaster in one town and people are displaced from that town, they can move to their friends and relatives in the next town. But in this one, not only did their town get wiped out but the towns of their friends and neighbors and relations got wiped out as well; and so did the next town and the next town. They wound up moving to completely different States.

You can't see those boundaries of States being in unfamiliar territory. There is usually a sign that says "Welcome to Wyoming" or Louisiana, whatever State it is. There isn't any physical line that is drawn, but in everybody's mind there is a tremendous mental barrier of crossing a State line and being in unfamiliar territory.

That happened in this instance, and States are saying those are residents of another State that we are supposed to take care of; people from another State are saying, I am not real comfortable being here, but I am here. What can you do to help me? It was even hard to locate people.

The size of the disaster was tremendous. I think I am in a position to complain about anybody complaining about how it all was because I am from the committee that proposed legislation and actually moved it through the Senate floor. I think the only legislation that has dealt with the Katrina disaster is student displacement, which is one of the deficiencies. We have a health package we are working on, and we hope to be able to move it as well.

There are unprecedented problems with this. We have the opportunity for some unprecedented solutions. They are not the best solutions, but they are the best we can come up with on short notice.

Rather than trying to figure out whose fault it was, I think the whole country has a big problem with this "whose fault is it." We have gotten to the point where, if we fall down, we wonder who caused that and who should pay. We want some kind of retribution for it. What we are doing with this bill is trying to put up the deficit. We have in the deficit, for instance, a billion dollars for the Katrina Commission. We have, for instance, a billion dollars for FEMA is supposed to do. It was kind of astounding to me. They are the group who comes in after the disaster. They are not the prevention group. They are the after-disaster folks. They come in and register all of the victims of the disaster. Then they help those victims to get coordination to find their sources of help they possibly can.

That is what the pension bill is working to do. Bring people together so they can have a secure future, so they can know what is going to happen with their savings and their pensions and how it all comes together. This bill does do that.

It is extremely complicated, with many moving parts. It is hard to have unanimous agreement on anything, but this is pretty close to that. It is because it solves a huge problem. Here again we could talk about what the blame is for the problem.

I actually want to talk a little bit about how we got to the point where there was a problem with pensions. I am not going to go into some of the things mentioned before about how the negotiations went and drove up the amount of benefits people were receiving. Instead, I want to talk a little bit more about the core problem we have; that is, after September 11, 2001, the economic market went down. Usually, when interest rates go down, the stock market goes up and people take their money out of the low-interest mechanisms and put it into the stock market which grows faster because there is more money coming in there, which is driving up the price of the stock. But after 2001, both the interest rates and stocks went down. There was no possibility of taking the money from the pension and hedging it anywhere, of moving it so they would have more income. So the income dropped drastically and investments dropped drastically. That put the companies in a position where those who had fully funded plans no longer had fully funded plans because they stopped putting money in or taking money out. It was because it didn't grow at the rate that had been anticipated before. That created a lot of problems. That is not to say there weren't some problems with the problems coming from the stock market and the interest rates dropping at the same time. The good news is that interest rates, as far as pension plans—and some senior citizens' savings and other people's savings—the good news is the interest rate has been going up. That has not been a help to the stock market, but that has been a help to those people who have money in savings accounts. It has been a help to pensions because the annual statement that just came out by the PBGC over 2001. Usually, the annual results show they actually had a net gain of almost $5 billion for last year. That isn't because the PBGC was better. That is because firms were able to generate more revenue for their pension funds. There are a lot of things at work in this.

Another thing that was mentioned this morning that I want to clear up a little was a relationship people draw—the relationship between the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation and loan-debacle. We have two different ways of paying out here. They are dramatically different. For one thing, when people have money that is ensured by the FDIC and a bank fails, people take their money now. It is an immediate crisis—to the total value of their secured deposits. With the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, they are guaranteeing that people will get a portion with a cap of what they have coming in pension at the time they leave or when they leave the term. It isn't an immediate disbursement of whatever money they have in that account. It is a disbursement over time at the rate at which they would have received the pension, which would be the rest of their lifetime, as opposed to an immediate withdrawal like savings and loans.

We have another problem that is connected with it. That is what is called the stock market and the interest rates both went down, they created a crisis. It was not a crisis of bad management as much as this difficulty with the stock market. Recognizing that we might have legislation. But it was temporary legislation to allow for some recovery of the economy and the market and that sort of thing, to get things back in balance. That temporary piece of legislation runs out December 31 of this year. We need to have in place something that will continue to encourage the companies to put more into their pension funds, to add to the solvency of their pension funds, to bring them up to the level they are supposed to be, without putting them out of business. We need something that will fill in for these temporary rules that are running out, something that does the job, I hope, better.

We have had some time to review the whole situation and come up with this bipartisan solution. One of the difficulties during this discussion was over an item called "credit rating." There is a provision in the bill that calls for companies to have to put in a credit rating on money they get a bad credit rating. I am counting on that being something we work on in conference committee. We all operated on a principle, and the principle we operated on was we want to know when a company is having difficulty, and we want to know it early. We want to have them make sure their pension for their employees is protected at the time the business starts to go bad.

That was the principle from the White House, that was the principle of the HELP Committee, that was the principle of the Finance Committee, and we tried to arrange a way to do that. One of the things on the surface that looked like a good idea was credit rating. When they get a bad credit rating, it forces them to bring more solvency into their fund. The idea is once they get a bad credit rating, they cannot put more money in the fund. They are in a very bad situation now. They are listed as a junk bond situation already. In fact, one of the difficulties with the credit rating is it is not done by people in the company or people in the Government. It is done by some other experts who look at what they have access to and make decisions about the company. Sometimes they probably get it extremely right, and sometimes they can get it wrong. But that doesn't matter. What matters is if a company gets rated at a junk bond status, they can virtually lose it all. Why can't they get out of it? One reason is the person who analyzed the thing and who may have replaced a new employee is a little bit reluctant to sign his name to say this company is OK. It is the "protect yourself" kind of attitude. So you don't let them out of the junk bond status, which forces them to make the payments perhaps longer than they ought to have to at that rate. So it is in fact the junk bond status. It is a kind of cart-and-the-horse sort of situation—they keep getting one in front of the other and impeding the progress toward what we don't want.

What I am hoping we can do in the conference committee is to find another way that is not the credit rating way but a way that the company will realize and start to correct on this point where they were starting to go downhill, and then also be able to know when they have recovered so we don't force them into bankruptcy. We are asking people for solutions, and we have had a number of them suggested. Again, I thank Senator DeWine for his efforts in this area. Senator DeWine and some of the folks—particularly some manufacturing companies that are involved in this kind of a situation, where some of them even have 100-percent funded plans, but they are in junk bond status. Even currently, even though their funds have a lot of funds, they get different requirements that will escalate the problem and not provide a solution.

That is one of the things particularly I am hoping we will take a look at when we get in conference committee. I think there is a way for all of us to come up with a solution that will work and meet that basic principle of locating companies when they begin to have trouble and make sure that as much solvency is put into the pension plans as possible.

I also will mention that in the deficit reduction bill we passed last week, there was a section that dealt with the PBGC and I want to ensure everybody that there is the clause in the deficit reduction bill that says if we pass the full pension bill—that means the House and the Senate actually conferring and coming to an agreement and getting a full pension bill signed—that what is in there will modify the pension.

Under deficit reduction, our hands were kind of tied on the options we have to meet the requirements of reconciliation. Under those requirements, we would like to see something that is considerably higher than we would have had to, had we some of the tools which we have under the full pension bill.

Now, there may still have to be some numbers tweaked out that to meet the requirement that we set for ourselves. We set in the budget a requirement we need to have a $6.6 billion deficit reduction on the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. We needed to reduce potential outlays by the corporation so they would not be solvent or moved toward solvency.

I mentioned this tale that there is on pensions so there was not a need to come up with $22 billion this year. It can be done over a period of years. In that deficit reduction bill, there is a paragraph that says if we pass a full bill, the full bill takes precedence over the deficit reduction package, so it will not be nearly as much of an increase for the company using that as if we went with the deficit reduction.

I thank everyone for the cooperation we had on the deficit reduction part and in coming up with that.

I want to add my words to Senators Kennedy and Mikulski as they challenge the House to get their bill done. Getting our bill done by itself does not complete the process. It requires that the Senate and the House pass a bill that is the same which means they have to hurry and pass one; we have to conference it and, hopefully, have this done when we come back shortly in December. If not, very quickly after the first of the year, of both—I mentioned, December 31st is the expiration of the previous formulas.

I need to thank and commend a few people. This has been a lot more complicated and more difficult than the discussion today might seem to indicate. The reason we have had as little discussion and as little opposition today is because people put in a lot of hours to understand what was going on and the way the options play so we could arrive at a solution for pensions. I commend the work of the staff on this bill. Particularly, I commend my HELP Committee staff. Katherine McGuire is the director of the committee and did an outstanding job of juggling multiple priorities, my committee had 21 of them on the same side working to both mend the work of the staff on this bill. Katherine McGuire is the director of the committee and did an outstanding job of juggling these priorities, my committee had 21 of them.

I congratulate Gregg Dean, who brings the banking knowledge to the debate, and Amy Angelier, who brings the budget expertise to it. Ilyse Schuman does an outstanding job with the legal work we have to do on the bill. I also commend Portia Wu, Holly Fehrman of Senator Kennedy’s staff; John O’Neill of Senator Grassley’s Committee on Finance staff; Judy Miller and Stuart Sirkin from Senator Baucus’s staff. We have all over our thanks to Jim Fransen and Tracy Lynch’s Office, who drafted numerous versions of this bill and all of its predecessors.

A very special thank you is owed to the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation for their advice and guidance. The staff of the Joint Tax Committee includes Carolyn Smith, Patricia McDermott, Nikole Flax, and Allison Wieloboh. Last, but not least, I thank Karla Carpenter of Senator DeWine’s subcommittee for her diligence and Ellen-Marie Whelan and Ben Olinsky of Senator McCaskill’s office, who drafted numerous versions of this bill and all of its predecessors. A very special thank you is owed to the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation for their advice and guidance.

The way we have our subcommittees set up is pretty much along the lines of the title of our bill. We have some spectacular subcommittee chairmen and ranking members who are out there working on projects. That is the only reason we are able to produce as many bills with as much bipartisanship as we have.

I also thank Glee Smith, Mike Quiello, and Ed Egee of Senator Akaka’s staff for their fine work on this bill. We are about at the point where we will vote on the amendment. I express my opposition to the amendment because I don’t think it is fair to the other people who would be getting pensions. I appreciate Senator Akaka’s tremendous effort to try and find a solution for pilots. But as we find the solution, we are finding the solution for everyone. I ask Members to vote against this amendment and for the pension bill as a whole.

I have some remaining time, and I am happy to yield some to the Senator from Massachusetts, who has been absolutely wonderful to work with on this issue. He has tremendous institutional memory on this and has worked on parts of this problem for years. I have seen numerous times I went to him and asked: What would you do in this situation? And he told me. I think we found that the shortest distance between two points is a straight answer. We have been able to come up with some answers together and I appreciate that cooperation.

I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have no amendments. We will be voting soon. This is a reflection of a legislative process working and working well. We have been fortunate in our committee with Senator Enzi, at the beginning of this whole process, examining the pension issues which have not been dealt with seriously since 1994, at the time of the GATT agreements. So much has changed since then. There had an openness and a process that has worked through the Committee on Finance in a similar kind of way, Republicans and Democrats working alike. And now, in a short period of time, we are going to pass legislation this evening that is going to give millions and millions and hundreds of thousands of companies a real sense of hope about their retirement future.

I certainly hope the House of Representatives recognizes the strong bipartisan support we have had for this proposal and follow a similar path.

Finally, we know that workers have enormous insecurity today. They are concerned about the increased costs of gasoline, their health care costs, their job security, the education security of their children, and the security of their retirement.

This legislation is the backbone to providing help and assistance and assurances to workers about the safety of their retirement programs. It provides innovative and creative ways to deal with the challenges women have presented in terms of the workplace, a much greater sense of equity, much greater protection and information for workers so they can make the appropriate decisions, help and assistance so the good companies can meet their responsibilities to their workers.

We are very much in debt to all of those on our committee—the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Oregon, the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Tennessee, and our Republican colleagues. I again thank our chairman of this committee. It is a very important piece of legislation that will make a big difference. I thank him and I thank the chair of the Committee on Finance, Senator Grassley, and my friend, Senator Baucus, as well. We have been able to work together.

It is difficult enough around here to get people in your own party to agree on anything. I find, and then to get both parties to agree and then two committees to agree on something is remarkable.

All Members understood the importance to American families in this country, they are being challenged about their retirement security. It brought out the best in the membership. I strongly support this legislation. I thank my chairman for all he has done.

It is now very quickly, this requires the companies to fund all of their pensions. It gives the workers timely and accurate information on the pension plan.
It protects older workers in cash balance plan conversions. That is enormously important. It gives independent investment advice so workers can have information to make solid judgments. It guards against the exploitations we have seen too many instances, where the CEO's have in a nonpartisan way.

We have in about 2 minutes.

I am looking forward to the vote. I thank Senator BAUCUS for the outstanding work the committee, and Senator KENNEDY. They have been working for years.

This is a balanced, well-formulated program that is addressed to meet the needs. I urge my colleagues to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. I yield myself a couple of minutes. I thank Senator KENNEDY for his outstanding charts and summary of what we are about to do. I thank Senator BAUCUS for the outstanding work he has put into dealing with this issue this morning and on the Committee on Finance. I thank Senator GRASSLEY. It has been great teamwork to get to this point. I am looking forward to the vote we will have in about 2 minutes.

I yield a minute to Senator BAUCUS and then a minute to Senator AKAKA so he can summarize his amendment.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I reinforce a theme that has been in the Senate, and in this chamber, for many years. I have thought I am one of the luckiest Senators here because the chairman is Senator GRASSLEY, a great Senator to work with. We work very closely together. That is not rhetoric. That is true. That is accurate.

The same is also true with Senator ENZI, the chairman of the HELP Committee, and Senator KENNEDY. They work very closely together. Not only do they work well together, here are two committees working well together. A lot of Americans think there is a lot of partisanship in Washington. There is. There is too much. But there are also pockets of cooperation. We are witnessing today one of those pockets, one of those times when we are working together. I take my hat off to the chairman of the HELP Committee, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, Senator KENNEDY, and the staffs. This is an effort to solve a problem in a nonpartisan way.

I thank the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

AMENDMENT NO. 283

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, my amendment corrects a wrong. Pilots have their promised pensions significantly reduced when the PBGC takes it over. The FAA mandates that the commercial pilots retire at 60. We must take the steps necessary to ensure that the PBGC will have resources to be able to help pilots through their retirement. The PBGC is in a nonpartisan way.

My legislation only affects pilots. Pilot plans have been some of the largest pension plan terminations in history. Agency estimates show that they retire at 60 and the PBGC's early retirement penalty occurs because they cannot continue to fly past age 60 commercially. My amendment will bring about much needed relief for United Airline, TWA, Eastern Airlines, and Braniff pilots. It is important to note that pilots are the only private sector employees required to retire at the age of 60. I urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

I thank my cosponsors, Senators SPECTER, FEINSTEIN, SALAZAR, and INOUYE, for working with me on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I allot myself some time in opposition to the amendment. I appreciate Senator AKAKA proposing the amendment, but I have to rise in opposition to it for a combination of reasons. The most obvious is the amendment changes how the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation calculates benefits for any one class of workers, which would be airline pilots. It is unfortunate that so many airlines have gone into Chapter 11 bankruptcy in recent years. I am concerned pilots have seen reductions in their pensions. Flight attendants and ground workers also deserve our attention, not just pilots. This carveout for pilots, who are some of the most highly paid professionals in our country, is unfair to other workers who also retire early but happen to have devoted their work lives to other positions in the industry.

Pilots are not the only workers who have expectations of subsidized early retirements. Retiree machinists, steelworkers, and autoworkers have early retirement benefits which are reduced under the ERISA guarantee. A retiree from any one of these industries has the same complaint as a pilot when his or her company goes bankrupt and dumps its pension plan on the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. The steelworker or the auto parts maker has less notice that a problem could arise if the company went broke. Pilots know, when they start their careers, that they will not work past age 60 and pilots can plan accordingly.

The shortfall confronting pilots of bankrupt companies is not the result of a change in law. The limit on the PBGC guarantee has been on the books for years. Commercial airline pilots who are universally unionized have negotiated over these benefits with their airlines. The fact they retire at age 60 is factored into the structure of their plans. Pilots know they will likely stop flying before reaching normal retirement age of 65. That is why they negotiate rich retirement benefits on top of their high salaries.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I made a grave error. I mentioned the tremendous juggling job that Katherine McGuire, my committee director, has done, but I failed to mention Michael Myers, who is the staff director for Senator KENNEDY, who has been part of the juggling act on all of these bills as well and has done a fantastic job. I apologize for that grave oversight and do want to thank him for his efforts.

I yield the floor and yield back any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 2:30 having arrived, the vote occurs on the Akaka amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The clerk will call the roll. The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.
Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CORZINE) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINEZ). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CORZINE) announces—a yeas and nays, nays 41, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Corzine

The amendment (No. 2583) was agreed to.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BURR. Mr. Chairman, the proposed Treasury regulation “safe harbor” in the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005 states:

The accrued benefit determined under this subparagraph shall be determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary which are consistent with the purposes of this paragraph and which require a plan to provide a credit of additional amounts or increases in additional account balances in amounts substantially equivalent to the benefits that would be required to be provided to meet the requirements of subparagraphs (B) or (C).

Mr. Chairman, am I correct in my understanding that the intention of this provision authorizing Treasury regulations is that the Secretary be given the widest latitude possible to approve cash balance conversions falling within the spirit of the conversion requirements?

Mr. GRASSLEY. The gentleman from North Carolina is correct in his understanding of the provision, that Congress intended for Treasury to have wide latitude and flexibility in determining which plans could qualify for safe harbor protection.

Mr. BURR. Mr. Chairman, do you agree that the provision is intended to allow Treasury to consider for purposes of the regulatory safe harbor cash balance plan conversions that are announced 5 or more years in advance, allowing employees to continue to accrue benefits under the old formula until the conversion date and thereafter provide full protection for previously accrued benefits as well as the opportunity to “grow into” early retirement subsidies under the old formula; and that the balance plan accruals after conversion without wear away?

Mr. GRASSLEY. The cash balance plan conversion described by the distinguished gentleman would indeed be within the scope of the authority intended for the regulatory safe harbor.

Mr. BURR. I thank the distinguished chairman for this important clarification and for his hard work in developing this important legislation.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I appreciate that this is a tough, complex bill. I know that the HELP and Finance Committees have worked hard to make this a bipartisan measure and worked to include important provisions to help multiemployer plans, single employer pensions, and I appreciate those efforts. There are some very useful provisions, here, that will help employers to fund pension plans predictably and fully—and to do so when times are good, so we avoid crash landings when times are bad.

I rise to address the provisions in the bill on an issue very close to my heart: protecting workers in conversions to cash balance plans. I am pleased that we were able to reach a general consensus in this legislation on the cash balance issue. Of course, this compromise is not 100 percent of what I wanted, nor is it 100 percent of what my colleagues on the other side of this measure believe is a solid, strong bipartisan compromise. I am coming to the floor, today, to state why I strongly support the provisions in the bill before us, and to explain why I will do everything in my power to oppose any effort to weaken this legislation by giving retroactive approval to cash balance plans that have already been adopted, no matter how badly workers were treated in the conversion.

This is not a hypothetical conversation. The erosion of benefits that has occurred: literally millions of employees have seen their traditional defined benefit plans converted into cash balance plans. And, in the process, many have seen their benefits significantly eroded. This erosion of benefits falls primarily on the backs of older workers, who can have their benefits reduced by many thousands of dollars.

The HELP-Finance compromise measure would fix this problem by requiring that, in the future, all cash balance plans must have a strong basic structure that provides some predictable level of wage replacement for workers, and by prohibiting companies from “wearing-away” or eroding the value of the benefits of their older workers, including early retirement benefits. Furthermore, the HELP-Finance compromise recognizes the problem workers face when they find the pension plan they had long counted on has been replaced by the new plan, and gives people a grace period to continue to accrue benefits in the old plan while they make decisions for the future.

I should back up here, and describe this very complicated issue. In the early 1990s, a groundswell of companies started changing from traditional defined-benefit pension plans to “cash balance” pension plans. A cash balance plan is a hybrid between a defined benefit and defined contribution plan. Like a defined benefit plan, it is insured by the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation, and an employer automatically contributes some percentage of an employee’s pay to a hypothetical account for the worker. This account then earns interest. Most defined benefit plans, however, calculate your benefit at retirement as some percent of your final average pay multiplied by the number of years you were employed by the company.

Cash balance plans are different: in a cash balance plan an employer contributes a certain percentage of your pay to a check to an account and then credits that account with interest. In that respect, cash balances are a lot more like your typical 401(k) plan, since you have a hypothetical account that you can watch grow over time.

As I noted earlier, during the 1990s, many companies began moving away from traditional defined benefit plans, and toward cash balance plans, for a variety of reasons. Many companies said cash balance plans would be easier for benefits managers to calculate, and easier for workers to understand. We thought the plans would better serve our nation’s new, mobile workforce.

Unfortunately, many workers found there was often a different motivation for the conversions: to cut benefits. Older, retiring workers covered by these conversions learned, too late, that their retirement benefit was far less than they had expected.

The pension conversions eroded the benefits employees thought they had already earned. One type of benefit erosion was to base benefits on a career average instead of highest years of pay average. It throws pay from when an employee was younger and earning less money into the average used for the pension. The motivation here is obvious. This will reduce the benefits that workers can expect to get toward the end of their lives. Then, it will “wear away” the benefits that workers already earned.

What is wear-away? Right now, under pension law, an employer cannot take away money an employee has already earned. If I leave a company tomorrow, I’ll get the full value of everything it promised me up to that point. But in a cash balance conversion, as some employers have done, the shift from a defined benefit plan to a cash balance plan, they have set up the new account balance at a lower level than the worker earned or participated in under the old defined benefit account. Wear away happens when no new pension funds are added to what was already accrued until the value of the old pension is worn away to reach the level it would have been under the new cash balance plan. The effect? An older worker effectively earns nothing towards their pension for years, while younger workers do.

The length of time it takes for an employee to make up what has been lost is a long time because the wear-away is so significant. Here is a helpful chart from the GAO. This chart shows in the first column, a hypothetical 45-year-old worker retires in the middle. Now, look where she started out under the cash balance formula. It takes her all these years to finally catch up to what she had in the first place. All I am saying is we should have ensured that in the new plan at the same place she left off in the old plan. Her 30-year-old coworker is getting money added to his account. Why shouldn’t she?

The other problem in converting from a traditional plan to a cash balance plan is a complete reversal of the plan formula—so people lose a big chunk of their expected benefits. This is how benefits are accrued under a cash balance plan versus a regular plan. Can you honestly look at these rates of accrual and say that no one thought that there might be a problem for older workers who get caught in the middle, here, and get the downside of this back-loaded plan, and the back end of a front-loaded plan. Maybe these CFOs are just really bad at math—went to Wharton Business School, but still can’t add. I don’t know.

Embodying these problems is the claim that these are great plans for workers. Sure, they are better than plan termination. But, only if you don’t wear away currently accruing benefits, and only if you allow the freeze to be done right, without any wear-away in the old plan for 5 years after the conversion. Now this legislation did not go quite as far as my bill, but it did firmly state that wear away is unacceptable. And the reason it also acknowledges that conversions result in a serious loss of expected benefits, and some transition period is necessary to help older workers.

Prior to Treasury Secretary John Snow’s confirmation vote, Senator DURBIN and I asked him to come to the Senate and talk with us about his intentions on cash balance. He said that fairness and equity would guide the transition. He said that in a grace period during which older and longer-service participants earn no additional benefits.

It said: “Federal law should continue to prohibit pension plan participants from being discriminated against on the basis of age in the provision of pension benefits.”

The Senate agreed, in 2000, that: “It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that pension plan participants whose plans are changed to cause older or longer-service workers to earn less retirement income, including conversions to ‘cash balance plans,’ should receive additional protection than what is currently provided, and Congress should act this year to address this important issue. In particular, at a minimum: (1) all pension plan participants should receive adequate, accurate, and timely notice of any change to a plan that will cause participants to lose retirement income in the future; and (2) pension plans that are changed to a cash balance or other hybrid formula should not be permitted to ‘wear away’ participants’ benefits in such a manner that older or long-service participants earn no additional pension benefits for a period of time after the change.

In 2003, the House and Senate both passed an amendment to the Treasury-Transportation Appropriations measure to block Treasury from promulgating a proposed rule that would have blessed these plans, because they left room for age discrimination. That provision was changed in conference to instead direct the appropriate legislation that would help workers caught up in these conversions, and Treasury did so. Treasury sent up a bill that said you can convert to a cash balance plan, but only if you don’t wear away currently accruing benefits, and only if you allow people to accrue benefits in the old plan. It says that, because cash balance plans weren’t in fact as portable as advertised, we need to make them vest faster so that they actually do provide the benefits to younger workers that have been advertised.

This compromise is very similar to the legislation proposed by the Treasury Department that I outlined above. It is the exact same language as the Bressler-Baucus-Lott amendment in the Finance Committee’s pension markup. It is an excellent example of finding common ground, which is exactly what we should do on this issue. This is not a partisan issue. Retirement security matters to everyone. Keeping promises to workers is critical to our workplace climate. Likewise, it is important for workers to be loyal to their employers. Preserving this tradition is critical to maintaining a skilled, productive workforce.

Turning to another issue, I am pleased that the managers of this bill have decided not to accept any proposals that would amend the fiduciary standards in ERISA to allow pensions to invest in riskier, investments, and engender conflicts of interest for pension fund managers. These proposals will expose the retirement income of millions of pension plan participants and beneficiaries to the risk of loss from dealing, self-dealing and other abuses that have been prevented by ERISA for the last 30 years. Under current regulations, if 25 percent or more of a hedge fund’s assets come from employee benefit plans, including private-sector, public-sector and foreign benefit plans, the investment manager must comply with ERISA. The hedge fund industry would like to weaken that standard greatly by no longer counting public and foreign plan assets and increasing the threshold to at least 50 percent—and as much as 75 percent in some cases.

Part of the reason Congress enacted ERISA in the first place were numerous and increasing cases of pension fund mismanagement. We put fiduciary standards in place to prevent exactly these kinds of conflicts of interests and dangerous financial dealings. I can’t understand why at a time when we clearly need to tighten those standards how anyone could work to loosen them.

For too long, pension funds have been seen as a cash cow for CFOs to play... with to help bolster the bottom line. Questionable enough when times are good, these methods can be disastrous when investment schemes don’t pan out.

I would like to call my colleagues’ attention to an excellent article in the Congressional Quarterly from September 3, 2005. This article really lays out the basis for much of the so called “perfect storm” we are facing today with pension funding. For the past few years, there have been numerous reports and evaporation of pension plans. According to those reports, pension funds were being depleted through no fault of those who managed them, but simply because liabilities were increasing exponentially because of the sinking 30-year Treasury rate and the drop in the stock market.

What these stories left out, however, is the fact that decisions made by pension managers contributed significantly to the problem. Beginning in the early 1990s, stocks began to make up a much bigger share of plan assets than they ever had in the past. Stocks went from making up 44 percent of pension plan investments in 1980 to 62 percent in 2004.

What shift? According to Bradley Belt at PBGC, interest rates in the 90s were generating 25 percent to 30 percent returns to plans—in other words, investing in stocks were generating so much revenue that on paper, these plans would have looked like a cost to the company, but instead appeared to be generating profits.

But as we all know, what goes up must often come down. This gamble with the pension security of millions of Americans resulted in massive losses when stocks fell. The PBGC is now in crisis in large measure because of these investment decisions—which is why we are here on the floor trying to figure out how to shore it up.

Why do I bring this all up? Some of my colleagues are talking about making it even easier to invest in even riskier investment vehicles. The irony of pushing a proposal backed by the hedge funds onto a bill to rescue a drowning PBGC and revive a struggling defined benefit pension system is beyond comprehension.

This is absolutely not the time to weaken requirements on pension asset investments. It’s no secret that we are in the position we are in because of lax standards that got us here. Loosening them in the future will be absolutely disastrous.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, today, I come to the floor of the Senate to briefly state my thoughts about a component of the bill under consideration, the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005. I commend both the Senate Finance and HELP Committees for their hard work, and tireless efforts to work towards a bill that we all can support.

A variety of Colorado companies, including Arch Coal, IBM, Gates Rubber, and Qwest Communications, have been carefully following the debate on pension reform. These companies are significant employers in Colorado, and they contribute to the State’s economy in countless measures. Many companies, including these, have been affected by the recent ruling in Cooper v. IBM, and in turn I have been paying particular attention to the development and treatment of so-called hybrid pension plans. Hybrid pension plans, a combination of a defined benefit and defined contribution plan, were created by Congress in 1986 in response to the ever-growing gap between participants and their promised benefits. Hybrid pension plans allow participants to receive benefits in any of several ways, in clear contrast to what happened in the 1990s, when wage and income gains were strong for all income and earnings groups.

At the same time that earnings are stagnating, the average worker’s retirement prospects are more uncertain than ever. Twenty years ago, most workers with a pension plan could expect to retire with a defined benefit based on years of service and salary. Today, defined contribution plans—which shift most of the investment risk and responsibility onto workers—have become the dominant form of pension plans. As a result, this increased risk and responsibility, average workers may end up with inadequate retirement savings.

Despite the shift away from traditional pensions, defined benefit plans remain the critical source of retirement support, with 44 million workers and retirees relying on such plans as a source of stable retirement income. However, as we have seen by the recent pension terminations in the airline industry, the real risk of defined benefit plan defaults further exacerbates workers’ uncertainty and concern about their retirement prospects.

The Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation estimates that total underfunding in PBGC-insured defined benefit plans is about $450 billion, more than $100 billion of which is in plans sponsored by financially weak companies and at reasonable risk of default.

What can we do to ensure that defined benefit plans remain a critical source of retirement support? One way is to pass the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005. As I have pointed out, this bill would.

Pension security and defined benefit pensions are the cornerstone of retirement security for millions of American workers. The Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005 is about $450 billion, more than $100 billion of which is in plans sponsored by financially weak companies and at reasonable risk of default.

What can we do to ensure that defined benefit plans remain a critical source of retirement support? One way is to pass the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005. As I have pointed out, this bill would.
The Congressional Budget Office estimates that PBGC’s cumulative deficit will increase to $87 billion over the next 10 years, and suggests that there is a significant likelihood that all of PBGC’s assets will be exhausted within 25 years.

The increased number of pension defaults means lost benefits for participants whose earned benefits exceed the statutory maximum benefit guarantee; premium increases for healthy plan sponsors remaining in the system; and ultimately the risk of a taxpayer bailout of the PBGC.

Clearly, the private pension funding system needs reform and the bill before us today, S. 1783, the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005, is movement in the right direction. I know that Chairman Enzi, Ranking Member Kennedy, Chairman Grassley, Ranking Member Baucus, and their staffs have worked long hours to get to this point.

The bill tightens the funding rules to ensure the defined benefit plans are adequately funded. Limiting the use of credit balances to prevent companies with unfunded plans from avoiding plan contributions and requiring an accurate accounting of each plan’s true financial condition are important steps.

But we must also avoid imposing unnecessarily burdensome funding requirements on plan sponsors that are paying by the rules. An asset valuation approach that doesn’t allow the short-term fluctuations in the stock market will only exacerbate the inherent volatility in pension plan funding and increase funding burdens during economic downturns when companies can least afford them.

The bill also requires truth-in-funding disclosures for companies with underfunded plans so participants and other stakeholders can learn the true financial condition of their pension plans. The potential loss of benefits if the plan terminates. This is an especially important safeguard for workers whose pension benefits exceed the PBGC’s maximum benefit guarantee limit.

In order for the PBGC to remain a viable insurance program that continues to protect workers and retirees, its current funding gap must be closed. Recognizing this, the bill increases PBGC premiums to $30, while ensuring that plan sponsors continue to pay the greatest insurance risk actually pay the additional premium for that risk.

S. 1783 would also prohibit companies from funding nonqualified plans under certain circumstances, including bankruptcy, significant underfunding, regular pension plans, or the termination of an underfunded regular pension plan. This is a positive development in addressing inequities of what has become a two-tiered pension system. Too often, the beneficiaries of those companies that default on their pension obligations are left holding the bag. Companies that underfund or default on their regular pension obligations should be prohibited from funding and paying out benefits from special executive pension plans.

Finally, as new types of defined benefit plans are created that older workers are protected and don’t lose the benefits they have been promised.

The Pension Security and Transparency Act makes positive strides toward ensuring that workers will receive the pension benefits they have earned. While the bill reflects difficult compromises, it is important that we act now to preserve the financial health of defined benefit pensions. I urge my colleagues to not stop here. We must continue work to improve our pension system to ensure that Americans who work their entire lives have the financial security they deserve and worked so hard for when they retire.

Mr. Gregg. Mr. President, we must get serious about the nation’s problem about across-the-board retirement reform. It is time every American worker has a sense of ownership over his or her retirement income and the promises that have been made.

To do so, plan sponsors are required to provide valid information about the security of his or her future retirement income, and current and relevant information to be able to make smart choices when options are available.

Beneficiaries must be timely notified when their retirement income is in jeopardy; workers must be assured that the law doesn’t allow and even encourage hollow promises. Employers and union leaders should be prohibited from offering rank-and-file members benefit increases that cannot be paid for, particularly when a company is below investment grade.

The law must place a tangible price on all plan underfunding to limit the liability of shifting risk to beneficiaries, the PBGC, and other companies paying premiums. Accounting schemes that paper-over massive funding shortfalls must be outlawed, and interest rate policies should be straightforward to administer and consistent with each plan’s liability payout schedule.

Continuing the underlying 30-year-old pension law is not an option. It is a law without transparency where union bosses and irresponsible management are allowed to go into bankruptcy plans and make promises they know cannot be kept.

If we continue the status quo, we will move ever closer to the precipice of the slippery slope to a taxpayer bailout of the pension insurance system.

Those who make and then break their promises have now pushed us to the edge of a raid on the U.S. Treasury. The Budget Committee held a hearing in June where we heard testimony from the Congressional Budget Office, CBO, and the administration that confirmed the Nation is already in the midst of a retirement crisis. I am not speaking of the crisis in Social Security but of private pension plans and the program that insures benefits when sponsors default on their promises.

Since then, the CBO has prepared two additional reports analyzing the current and future health of defined benefit pension plans and the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation the Government insurance agency that insures them. Employer groups, think tanks, and the financial press have also widely reported on the poor health of America’s single-employer defined benefit pension system. The consensus is indisputable that we have a crisis on our hands if we will.

The PBGC already has a serious deficit and a cash crisis looming with a clock that will toll 20 or 30 years sooner than what we expect in the Social Security system. While many criticized the PBGC over the last year as being overly pessimistic in projecting a $23 billion deficit, we learned just yesterday that not only was the PBGC surprisingly accurate—posting a deficit of $22.8 billion, if recent events that occurred right after the end of the fiscal year had been included, the deficit in the single-employer plan alone would have been posted at $25.7 billion—a 10 percent increase.

Furthermore, because accounting standards require the PBGC to disclose additional information on the change in its net position, we learned that PBGC’s exposure to losses from plans sponsored by weak employers has risen to $108 billion from $96 billion just a year ago—that is an increase of 13 percent in a year when sponsors would have had us believe things are not as bad as they seem.

Just last year, there were 120 defaults requiring the PBGC to assume responsibility for pension benefits of an additional 232,000 workers and retirees. In just 3 short years, the PBGC has taken on more workers’ retirement responsibilities than the previous 27 years combined.

We are obviously in a crisis and something must be done. Unfortunately, the bill before us today is only a very modest and incomplete step toward addressing the issue.

With regard to the PBGC’s health, modification to premium levels fall $1.7 billion short over 5 years from what was reported just last month by the HELP Committee in its meeting its budget reconciliation instruction, comparatively lowering the level of resources available to the PBGC to take on the responsibilities of plan defaults.

With regard to the health of pension plans themselves, the administration has analyzed the funding rules in the bill and reports that its provisions do not improve the underlying funding requirements for plan sponsors over current law.

With regard to innovative retirement programs offered by employers, I continue to have serious reservations about the measure before us today and its failure to provide comprehensive clarification of the law applicable to cash balance and hybrid pension plans.

The Congress should be able to enact legislation stating unequivocally that providing interest on employees' pensions, including important benefit protection and is now and never has been age discriminatory, and that Federal law does not and never has required any type of pension plan to pay out lump sum benefits that are much larger for younger employees than for identically situated older employees.

At best, the bill half heartedly recognizes these principles only as to the future and then only subject to numerous qualifications and benefit mandates—apparently trying to dance around the concerns of some who would try to repeal laws of mathematics, specifically the effect of compound interest.

The failure to acknowledge the legitimate status of plans already in place leaves companies that provided generous benefits set to their employees, many of them with favorable determination letters from the IRS, facing hundred of billions of dollars in potential liabilities and continues a legal landscape for frivolous lawsuits and attempts by the plaintiff bar to extract unreasonable settlement agreements.

The numerous qualifications and benefit mandates in the bill applying to hybrid plans are more likely to discourage companies from continuing innovative pension plans. Indeed, the only parties that clearly benefit from these provisions as currently drafted are trial lawyers who will gladly file frivolous lawsuits and extract settlement agreements with no basis in underlying Federal law.

On the plus side, the bill does improve transparency and more timeliness notification to participants regarding their retirement plan's health—a significant improvement from continuing innovative pension plans. Indeed, the only parties that clearly benefit from these provisions as currently drafted are trial lawyers who will gladly file frivolous lawsuits and extract settlement agreements with no basis in underlying Federal law.

Fortunately, PBGC payments are generally not made on a lump sum basis unlike withdrawals on a savings & loan. Nevertheless, the pension insurance fund will first run short on cash in just under 5 years. It will take roughly another 15 years to liquidate its remaining assets to pay claims but then these resources are gone. If Congress allows shortcomings in current law to remain, more defined benefit pension plan terminations will happen, and millions of workers will receive only a fraction of the retirement they were promised. Consider that in 1986 there were over 170,000 defined benefit pension plans. That number has dropped to roughly 56,000. Just since 1999, 7,500 defined benefit plans were terminated— a drop of 19 percent in just 3 years. Continuing a broken system and the uncertainty about promising opportunities to preserve creative defined benefit approaches to retirement plans such as cash balance plans will only increase this trend.

Specifically, absent stronger funding rules, clarifying the legitimacy of innovative plans, improved transparency and due diligence procedures for employees will have little incentive to restore faltering pension plans to financial stability, and the PBGC deficit will continue to grow, posing an ever greater risk that taxpayers will be asked to step in and bail out the private defined benefit systems before social security goes in the red.

To be very clear, we are very close to the slippery slope of no return from a default crisis of a magnitude that cannot be handled alone by premium increases on employers to shore up the PBGC.

I am disappointed that the measure we have before us today does not solve the defined benefit pension crisis and at best only postpones a political fight about the advisability of a taxpayer bailout of pension promises made by American companies to American workers. But we must move the legislative process forward.

If Congress doesn't act, the PBGC will need to charge even higher premiums for companies that remain in the system, significant economic losses affecting beneficiaries and investors will result, and pressure for a taxpayer bailout will be seen as a commonplace solution, resulting in the likely demise of defined benefit pension plans altogether.

While I commend the chairman and ranking member for a significant amount of hard work and progress on these challenging issues, there are still important areas that I believe require a great deal of work. I strongly encourage the chairman to ensure that the shortcomings in this bill that I have identified today be corrected as it moves through the remainder of the legislative process.

An incomplete fix to these issues will have a devastating effect on companies, current workers, and retirees. I understand that this bill is a work in progress and my concerns will continue to be addressed as this legislation proceeds through the legislative process. For the retirement security of millions of American workers and taxpayers, I hope so.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today we are debating the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005 which is the culmination of the efforts of the Finance Committee and Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee to improve the funding of both single and multi-employer defined benefit plans. I commend Senators Grassley, Baucus, Enzi, and Kennedy for their efforts in reaching bipartisan compromise legislation. We all agree that defined benefit plans are underfunded and that this issue needs to be addressed.

At the end of fiscal year 2005, the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation had $22.8 billion in underfunding in its single employer program. The PBGC's liabilities for fiscal year 2006 are expected to be much higher. If other liabilities that the PBGC assumed after the end of the fiscal year were counted, the deficit would have been $25.7 billion.

We cannot allow the underfunding of pensions to continue. This legislation takes the right approach by striking appropriate balance to protect employees, but we do not want to make defined benefit plans so restrictive that employers will not offer them.

The focus of the Pension Security and Transparency Act is to improve the funding of pension plans and to provide more disclosure, but this legislation does address other important pension issues. The Senate Finance Committee has reported out pension legislation in past years, but this bill was not addressed by the full Senate. The first reiteration of Senate Finance pension legislation focused on defined contribution issues that arose in light of the collapse of Enron. Along with Senator Snowe, I introduced legislation which strengthened defined contribution plans by requiring diversification and disclosure. Many of the provisions from this bill were incorporated into the Finance bill.

Even though the collapse of Enron is behind us, the lessons learned remain. It is important for defined contribution plans to be required to allow workers to diversify their contributions out of company stock. The rank and file employees of Enron do not want anyone else to have the same experience that they had. These provisions are overdue. Other lessons can be learned from the Enron debacle. Back in 2001, we were all repulsed by the stories of corporate greed and how executives crafted elaborate schemes to falsify the true financial status of the companies. Enron reminded us about the problems with excessive executive compensation.

Unfortunately, excessive executive compensation remains an issue today. Due to the work of the Finance Committee on executive compensation an end has been put to some abusive practices, but some still remain. One in particular that I find troubling is the funding of non-qualified deferred executive compensation prior to the funding of the corporation's pension plan.

In recent years, a number of large companies set aside billions of dollars to fund the pensions of top executives, but they do not bother to fund their pension plans. Companies that chose to do this were not violating laws by doing so, but this legislation will change that. Under this legislation, for the first time the funding of non-qualified deferred executive compensation will be linked to the funding of pension plans.

Executive of financially weak companies will no longer be able to take care of themselves. We repeatedly hear about executives that negotiate deferred compensation to ensure that they have a lucrative nest egg, even if the company is struggling or about to go bankrupt. We cannot stand for this any longer.

This legislation includes a provision which I worked to have included in the Finance Committee bill. Financially weak companies will no longer be able to fund executive compensation unless their pension plan is 80 percent funded. Initially, the Finance Committee restricted the funding of deferred executive compensation for companies with plans that are funded at 60 percent or less. I thought 60 percent was too low because a plan is already in trouble at this point. In addition, no benefit increases will be allowed if a plan is funded at 80 percent or less. There is no valid reason why deferred executive compensation should be funded if a pension plan is funded at a level at which benefit increases are restricted.

Employers have a responsibility to fund pension plans. They should not make changes to their employees and fall to keep them, while they are taking care of their own retirement.

The bill before us today does the right thing by restricting the funding of deferred executive compensation for financially troubled companies that have pension plans funded at 80 percent or less and for all companies that have pension plans funded at 60 percent or less.

In June, the PGBC released data on the unfunded pension plans with more than $50 million in unfunded pension liabilities. This data shows that these plans have an average unfunded ratio of 69 percent. Back in 2000, the average funding ratio was 82.8 percent.

While pension funding has been on the decline, deferred executive compensation is increasing. We need to send a message to corporate executives that they need to fund the pension plans of their workers before they restructure themselves with extremely generous benefits for life. I see this not as punitive, but as meeting our responsibility to demand better performance from the executives who can do the most to put pension funding on track. Ultimately, this proposal will protect the taxpayer.

The Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005 includes provisions which make slight modifications to the funding obligations of multiemployer pension plans. I worked to have these provisions included in the Finance Committee bill. These provisions address a unique situation in which the average age of the participant of the plan is much older than participants in other plans. Congress has addressed this issue before on a temporary basis and the provision in the chairman’s modifications would make this relief permanent. It will help retirees in my home state of Massachusetts, and it is an equitable outcome.

Not only does this legislation address single employer plans, it strengthens multiemployer plans. The Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005 includes important provisions which strengthen the funding rules for multiemployer pension plans. Multiemployer pension plans play a vital role in our pension system. Multiemployer pension plans are collectively bargained for employees who are members of a union and a group of employers in a particular trade or industry. These plans provide a way for workers in industries where job changes are frequent to save for retirement. Pension coverage continues on new employers, or if the new employer is with a participating employer.

The Pension Security and Transparency Act would require troubled plans to improve their finance condition and severely underfunded pension plans would be required to adopt a ten-year rehabilitation plan. This legislation requires the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Executive Director of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation to issue a study on the state of multiemployer funding in five years.

I proposed an amendment which was added to the bill. This provision requires the study to look at the effects that the new funding rules have on smaller employers and their issues that they face, including the impact of withdrawal liability. Employers that wish to discontinue their cosponsorship of a multi employer plan are required to pay a withdrawal liability, which represents the amount that the employer was not required to pay.

Recently, I heard from a small business owner in Massachusetts who contributes to a multiemployer plan and he explained how his withdrawal liability has increased rapidly over the last few years. Some of this is due to corrections in the stock market, but part of it is due to a decrease in companies paying into plans. This small business described withdrawal liability as a ‘violation of trust’ and employers and employees are out of business or otherwise withdraw from the pension fund, withdrawal for the remaining employers rise.

This provision would require the impact of withdrawal liability on the financial status of small employers to be studied. In addition, the study would look at the role of the multi employer pension plan system in helping small employers to offer pension benefits.

The pension system serves an important role in our pension system and we do not want to make these plans a burden for small businesses. If withdrawal liability continues its vicious spiral, it will be difficult for multi employer plans to attract new employers and existing employers could be faced with a situation in which their withdrawal liability exceeds their assets.

In addition, the Pension Security and Transparency Act would incorporate provisions from the Employee Retirement Act of 2005 which I have co-sponsored. These provisions will encourage workers to participate in retirement plans by providing innovative incentives for employers to modify their existing plans to add provisions that will increase savings. Employers will be able to automatically enroll their employees in 401(k)s upon being hired unless the employee notifies the employer that he or she does not want to participate. Studies have shown that this simple change will dramatically increase participation rates. This is a simple improvement that should increase our drastically low national savings rate.

We might not all agree with every single provision in this bill, but overall it reflects a balanced approach to a problem that needs to be addressed. Plans need to be adequately funded. The rules cannot be draconian and lead to the termination of pension plans by employers.

Pensions are a central part of our retirement system and we need to ensure continued participation by employers. The pension system has three components: personal savings, employer provided pensions, and Social Security.

All three components are necessary for a sound retirement system that is able to provide for most of America’s retirees.

Our current pension laws are inadequate. Employers have not properly funded their pension plans, workers have been promised more than their pension plans can possibly deliver, and the PBGC can no longer be expected to cover the difference. At the same time, the financial burden of employer-provided pensions is real, and it threatens some of our major companies and the jobs they provide today.

This issue is not going away. The PBGC estimates that its shortfall could approach $100 billion dollars based on the underfunding of plans which have been classified as reasonably possible of termination. This would avoid a subsidy or bailout with general revenues. The PBGC operates with no taxpayer assistance today and it was designed to be financially independent of the Federal Government. We should maintain that.

Passing the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005 is a step in the right direction to preserving our defined benefit pension system.

Mr. Roberts, Mr. President, I commend my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for crafting this comprehensive pension reform measure to strengthen the defined benefit pension system and ensure the solvency of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

One provision that I am pleased we were able to find bipartisan agreement on and include in S. 1783 is language that recognizes the special nature of multi-employer defined benefit plans. These multiple-employer plans are sponsored by rural electric, rural telephone, and agriculture-related cooperatives. Nationally, 1,700 cooperatives participate in a multiple-employer plan, providing benefits for over 109,000 workers and retirees. In Kansas, more than 160 cooperatives will benefit from the multiple-employer provisions in this bill.

These cooperatives are not-for-profit, and provide at-cost services to their consumer owners. Multiple-employer defined benefit plans allow cooperatives to pool experience and expenses by maintaining a single plan as opposed to single-employer defined benefit plans that cover just one company's employees.

For cooperatives that sponsor a single-employer plan, if that company goes out of business, the pension plan terminates, and if underfunded, creates risk to the PBGC. Multiple-employer cooperative plans are different because the pension plan continues to operate even if some cooperatives go out of business. Most importantly, no liabilities shift to the PBGC. These cooperative plans are ongoing plans that can outlive many of their participating employers, and are treated as such under this bill.

The Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee, of which I am a member, and the Finance Committee, both recognized the special nature of multiple-employer cooperative plans, and lack of risk to the PBGC, in their respective pension bills. During consideration of the HELP Committee's pension bill, the Defined Benefit Security Act, an amendment I offered to clarify the treatment of multiple-employer cooperative plans was approved by unanimous consent. The Finance Committee adopted a different approach to recognize the unique nature of multiple-employer plans.

As the committees worked to bring a bill to the Senate floor, I, along with several of my colleagues, shared our concerns about the need to include multiple-employer cooperative language in a final bill, and the chairmen and ranking members of the HELP and Finance Committees.

While different from the provisions of both the HELP and Finance Committee bills, the multiple-employer provisions in S. 1783 allow for the pooling of experience, and provide a 10-year delayed effective date for these rural cooperative plans, continues to exempt these plans from the bill's at-risk rules, and provides special funding and premium rules during this 10-year period. With regard to funding, these plans will use the four year weighted average of the third segment rate of the corporate bond yield curve created in this bill. For purposes of the premium rules, these plans will use a spot version of the third segment rate.

Mr. President, I urge the inclusion of the multiple-employer rural cooperative provisions contained in S. 1783 when we reform benefit plans, in deference to the President for his signature. These provisions have bipartisan support, recognize the special nature of rural cooperatives, and provide an important benefit for over 109,000 employees and retirees across the country.

I ask unanimous consent to print the letter to which I referred in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. Michael B. Enzi, Chairman, Hon. Edward M. Kennedy, Ranking Member, Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. Charles Grassley, Chairman, Hon. Max Baucus, Ranking Member, Committee on Finance, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Dear Chairmen Enzi, Grassley, and Members of the HELP and Finance Committees:

We write to urge you to continue recognizing the special nature of rural cooperative "multiple-employer" defined benefit plans sponsored by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, the National Telecommunications Cooperative Association, and the United Benefits Group (agriculture-related cooperatives), as you work toward an agreement on comprehensive pension reform. By design, these rural cooperative plans are different because they would continue to operate even if some cooperatives go out of business. Most importantly, no liabilities shift to the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation (PBGC).

Both the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee and the Finance Committee have recognized the special nature of "multiple-employer" defined benefit plans of these rural cooperatives. We believe that any bill sent to the floor for consideration should include both Committee-proposed provisions.

These rural cooperatives are not-for-profit, and provide at-cost services to their consumer-owners. Their defined-benefit plans permit them to pool experience and expenses by maintaining a single plan for hundreds of employers, as opposed to single-employer plans that cover only one company's employees. We have concerns that unless these specific cooperative provisions are included, these entities may be forced to either reduce benefits to their employees or pass along substantially increased costs to their members.

For companies that sponsor a single-employer plan, if that company goes out of business, the pension plan terminates, and if underfunded, creates risk to the PBGC. Again, these rural cooperative plans are different because the pension plan continues to operate in a similar way. To go out of business, and no liabilities shift to the PBGC. In fact, none of the liabilities of these rural cooperative "multiple-employer" plans have ever been shifted to the PBGC.

These rural cooperative plans are ongoing plans that can outlive many of their participating employers, and they should be treated as such under any bill that goes to the floor. Again, we urge you to include both Committees' provisions in any bill sent to the floor to recognize the special nature of rural cooperative plans, their ongoing nature, and their lack of risk to the PBGC.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the issues addressed in this pension bill are complex. We are treading into a swamp of technical terms and complicated plans. It is not always easy to ensure that the concepts and language reflect what the plans are doing. We want to make sure that the plans work as well as we want them to, and provide fair treatment of those who depend on this type of defined benefit plan.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

About half of all private sector workers participate in one of two general types of employer-sponsored retirement plans: a defined-contribution plan or a defined-benefit plan.

Defined-contribution plans, such as a 401(k) plan, are much like individual savings accounts into which employers and employees contribute. These funds are invested usually in stocks and bonds with the hope that the investment will grow as the worker approaches retirement.

Defined-benefit pensions, by contrast, guarantee an employee a certain amount of retirement benefits, typically based on years of service and salary level. To pay these promised benefits, the employer sets aside money in a pension or benefit plan, which is then invested. The employer decides how that fund is invested and retains control over the funds until dispersed to the retiree.

This second category, defined-benefit pensions, that are facing a crisis today. Due to swings in the stock market, complex funding rules, changes in the business climate, or unforeseen developments, companies' defined-benefit pension plans are under-funded. Some companies have declared bankruptcy to get out of their pension obligations, and there is reason to worry that this disturbing trend will continue.

When a company sloughs off its pension obligations in bankruptcy, the Federal pension insurance agency, the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC), steps in to ensure retirees receive benefits, up to a maximum of $31,700 per year for those retirees who retire at age 65. The PBGC is self-funded through insurance premiums and fees paid by companies with defined-benefit plans. With the PBGC taking on more companies' pension obligations, there is less money coming into the PBGC and more money going out. The PBGC announced just yesterday that it is running a deficit of $22.8 billion.

Ultimately, if the long-term health of the PBGC continues to decline, many people are concerned that only a taxpayer-financed bailout would allow retirees to receive the benefits they were promised.

We need to strengthen the defined-benefit system so that that does not happen. We must encourage the recovery, rather than the termination, of underfunded and vulnerable pension plans. If we can shore up these plans with supplemental funding under the companies, the concerns about PBGC's fiscal problems will be addressed.

To do so, companies should be required to adequately back up the promises they have made to their workers. And changes in Federal pension policy should help them. For example, we need to reduce uncertainties for employers making a good faith effort to meet their obligations. We also need to ensure that we do not give incentives to employers who offer hybrid pension plans to either jettison their retirement plans entirely or offer only defined-contribution plans.

In my estimation, it is possible to improve retirement security while also reducing the long-term exposure of the PBGC.

However, I have serious concerns that the bill before us today will do some significant harm in the effort to do positive things.

One provision of particular concern would require the pension plans of companies with plans that are less than 93 percent funded who also have declining credit ratings to be considered “at-risk.” Once considered “at-risk,” companies must use different actuarial assumptions that require them to sock away significantly more money into their plans. This provision alone could require companies to put unnecessarily high amounts of additional dollars into their pension plans. These are dollars that could otherwise be used to boost research and development or help fund other activities that could create jobs.

Another provision of concern deals with an actuarial method known as “smoothing.” Under current law, how much money companies have to put into their plans is determined by using a 4-year weighted average of the values of pension assets and/or liabilities. It is generally recognized that 4-year smoothing has led plans to become underfunded by masking the diminished current fair market value of a plan’s assets.

The original bill from the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee would have shortened smoothing to 3 years. The House Ways and Means Committee and House Education and Workforce Committee bills also allow 3 years. The HELP/Finance Committee compromise, however, takes a 12-month average. Three years is a long time that would tighten the current law but still allow some necessary cushion against volatility for employers; twelve months would significantly increase the volatility and unpredictability for employers. This shorter time frame would unwise add significant volatility for companies when they are determining how much money they need to set aside for the pension plans.

Four months. Senators MIKULSKI and DEWINE have been urging an amendment that would have addressed these two problems. The amendment they wanted to offer, which I co-sponsored, would have adopted the HELP Committee’s 3-year position on smoothing. Their amendment also would have replaced the use of credit ratings in determining whether a company has to abide by “at-risk” funding requirements and would instead measure “at-risk” by how well-funded the pension plan is.

I am disappointed that we were not able to vote on the DeWine-Mikulski amendment. I am hopeful, however, that these problems with the Senate bill will be adequately addressed in conference. I hope the conferees will come back with what the House committees adopted on those issues.

I am also concerned about the overall effect that the bill will have on the defined-benefit plan system. Some of the actuarial changes that may be appropriate on their own may become problematic when packaged together. The changes required by the bill would require companies to fund their long-term pension obligations somewhat too quickly, and would make the amounts of their required contributions fluctuate unpredictably. The short-term financial impact might push companies with underfunded plans to terminate the plans, rather than working to bring their funding levels up. A survey of chief investment officers for large pension plans found that 60 percent thought significant and rapid changes, such as those in the House or Senate bills, would lead to benefit reductions or plan termination.

I also hope that in the final conference report the Senate’s position on credit balances prevails over the House’s position on the definition of a plan’s assets. The Senate provision would ensure that pre-funded plans, by making additional, non-required contributions, to subtract these pre-funded amounts from the calculations of their plans’ assets. If this change is made, financial penalties for the companies and would deter future pre-funding, which we should encourage, not discourage.

On a positive note, I am pleased that this bill will give airlines extra time to fund their plans. In the wake of Northwest and Delta airlines declaring bankruptcy, Congress must help companies do the right thing and keep their plans intact when they emerge from bankruptcy, rather than turning their obligations over to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation.

Also, I am pleased that Senator STABENOW’s work to address problems with the multiemployer pension plan system is reflected in this bill. These multiemployer plans provide millions of employees of small firms with the opportunity to be covered by a defined benefit plan.

Finally, I am pleased that this bill protects older workers in cash balance plan conversions, and that it gives companies some period of time to stabilize their financial condition. Under this bill, the period to determine whether a company has been at-risk is 12 months instead of the current 24 months.

The retirement security of Michigan workers and workers across the country would be significantly weakened if we drive guaranteed benefit pension plans out of business, and that is what I am concerned that this bill could do. I will vote no on this bill, because on behalf of those who do not and do not want to offer pensions, underfunded plans striving to do the right thing are not unfairly penalized and because workers in those companies must also receive the retirement benefits they were promised. I truly hope the final conference report the committee will repair the defects I have identified.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, the calculation of lump sum distributions has been hotly debated. Some have been worried that the bill would shortchange participants in their lump-sum distributions. That is not the case. In fact, this bill has been very careful to avoid the problems that occurred after the enactment of the pension reforms on the GATT in 1993.

Under S. 1733, it is intended that plans may use different assumptions—that is, interest rates and/or mortality tables—to determine lump sum distribution amounts so long as the plan provides that a participant’s lump sum distribution amount is no less than the present value determined in accordance with the requirements of the bill.

Mr. BURR. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on the pension reform legislation we have been working on for months. Many have said that the policy goal of any major reform to the current pension system is to ensure that the defined benefit system remains a viable option for companies and that employers keep the retirement promises they have made to their employees. In these discussions, one often hears about the proposed new rules and mandates concerning funding rules or asset and liability valuations. Given that the pension statute has not received a major overhaul since the 1970s, new rules are certainly necessary to ensure that past and present employees and the American taxpayer are protected from financial loss.

Nevertheless, what is often left unsaid in our discussions is the fact that the defined benefit system is a voluntary, not a mandatory, system. While rules and mandates exist for companies that choose to participate in the defined benefit system, such rules or mandates exist requiring companies to participate. Thus, if strengthening the defined benefit system is the basic premise behind this proposed legislation, it is critical that we ask ourselves if the proposed rules and mandates might have the unintended consequence of driving companies out of the voluntary defined benefit system once and for all.

Alternatives to the voluntary defined benefit system do exist. For many companies and employees, they are good alternatives, such as the defined contribution system and its 401(k)s. However, the personal savings rate of Americans remains one of the lowest among the industrialized nations, and the average balances in 401(k) accounts are quite modest. There is no question that without defined benefit plans, fewer Americans would be able to retire comfortably. Further, the very appearance of defined benefit plans, including hybrid defined benefit plans, could very well result in increased pressure on Federal entitlement and income maintenance programs, not to mention an increase in old-age poverty.

Given these troubling facts, the value of defined benefit plans to many American families is clear. Sadly, we have seen a decline in defined benefit plan sponsorship, and these are perilous times for the defined benefit system.

Employers are leaving the system for many reasons. Among these are uncertainty about how future pension liabilities will be measured, new pension funding rules that are complicated and unpredictable, the worry over new and more onerous pension funding and premium requirements, upcoming changes to the pension accounting rules, and, of course, legal questions regarding hybrid pension plans.

I applaud the efforts of my Senate colleagues to craft meaningful defined benefit pension reform legislation. The proposed legislation, however, will have the unintended consequence of driving away companies from outdated and underfunded pension plans. Faced with current law, the very prospect of becoming involved in defined benefit pension plans, in fact, could be frozen, other benefits could be frozen, costs of goods and services could increase, and jobs could be lost as a result. The 3-year phase-in of the new law target is insufficient to avoid harmful consequences to American workers and the economy.

Another very troubling provision of the proposed legislation relates to the new interest rate. The credit rating, determined by private ratings agencies and not the Federal Government, should not determine a pension plan’s liability. The credit rating of a company does not determine the funding of a defined benefit pension plan. An employer can have a below investment grade credit rating and pose absolutely no risk to the PBGC. It serves no policy goal to impose new liabilities on a company because it is financially weak. That will simply make it more difficult for a company to recover, leading to potentially lower credit ratings, and could result in death-spirals and plan terminations that the legislation seeks to avoid. Furthermore, the credit rating provision would introduce a whole new concept of company risk that is foreign to the PBGC. If an at-risk liability is to be imposed, it should be based solely on the funded status of the plan.

A final concern I wish to raise relates to one of the most urgent crises in retirement security—clarifying the outstanding issues regarding hybrid pension plans. Hybrid defined benefit pension plans such as cash balance and pension equity plans, into doubt. Three other courts have found to the contrary, that hybrid pension plans do not violate the age and sex discrimination law. Yet it is this one single decision on which opponents of the hybrid pension plan hang their arguments. To preserve the retirement security of millions of Americans, it is essential that Congress comprehensively clarify for existing and future plans that the design of hybrid pension plans is not age discriminatory.

In Cooper v. IBM—274 F. Supp. 2d 1010, S.D. Ill. 2002 the District Court judicially went in the face of legal authority to the contrary, that cash balance and pension equity plans are age discriminatory. This decision was based on the fact that younger workers have more time to earn compound interest on their pension accumulations than older workers. Compound interest is a feature of all defined contribution plans and all savings plans. The logic behind declaring compound interest age discriminatory in defined benefit plans is to decide that the older you are, the more you will have. The disparity would nullify many longstanding defined benefit pension plan designs, including contributory defined benefit plans common in... the Federal, State, and local government sectors.

As a result of the Cooper decision, every hybrid pension plan sponsor today finds itself in potential financial and legal jeopardy. It is a pity that we have reached this point. I say this because policymakers should be working to create an environment that promotes hybrid plans—not subjects them to greater risk. I had hoped that Congress would have responded to the Cooper case by providing legislative certainty and clarity for hybrid pension plans, both retrospectively and prospectively, to prevent widespread abandonment of these programs by employers.

I do not want my colleagues to think that I have not heard the critics of hybrid plans. I have. However, I believe that the majority of the criticisms of the plans are unfair. Let me review some of these criticisms and rebut them.

Some critics of hybrid plans have claimed that the plans are discriminatory on the basis of age. It is true that there has been one single court case that found that compound interest is age discriminatory in the hybrid plan context; however, these other critics have found to the contrary, yet critics give credence to this odd case. Hybrid plans provide the same or greater wage and interest credits for older participants than for young participants. Because under these plans these benefits are treated the same as or better than similarly situated younger workers, the plans cannot possibly be in violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, ADEA.

number of very large employers in my state.

Pension equity plan sponsors and participants face the same risks and are in need of the same legislative clarification as cash balance plans—that their plans are qualified and do, in fact, satisfy our age discrimination rules. To achieve this objective, the legislative provision clarifying the age discrimination rules for hybrid plans must specifically refer to pension equity plans in the statutory language. The legislation before us does not do this. Rather, it leaves the issue of whether pension equity plans receive the same beneficial clarification as cash balance plans up to the Treasury Department in later administrative guidance. This will simply prolong the legal uncertainty that is driving many employers to consider ending their pension equity plans altogether. I believe this must be remedied—that we must give pension equity plans the same explicit statutory treatment as cash balance plans. I hope that, along with applying the clarification of the hybrid designs to existing plans under current law, we can explicitly address pension equity plans as we move toward conference on this pension bill.

I likewise hope that we can make several other refinements to the bill’s hybrid provisions so that these provisions more appropriately address some of the unique differences surrounding pension equity plans. For example, the bill currently has a requirement that hybrid plans pay certain minimum interest rates. Yet, unlike in cash balance plans, the benefits in pension equity plans grow with pay increases, as traditional defined benefit plans do, rather than with interest, so this requirement really does not make sense in the pension equity context. In addition, conversions to pension equity plans are typically handled differently than conversions to cash balance plans, and this needs to be acknowledged in the legislation. Finally, just as there are unique differences between cash-balance and pension equity hybrid plans that we must acknowledge, we must also recognize and support unique differences among cash-balance and pension equity plans respectively. No two plans are identical, nor should they be. Congress should not be so overly prescriptive in the rules for hybrid pension plans that it fails to recognize the different characteristics that give rise to unique features that may better serve their employees in retirement. I hope that during the conference on this bill, for example, we can recognize that there are cash balance plans that have returns based on equity indices. Such plans may provide returns that do not fall within the interest rate corridor established in this bill because their returns may be greater or lesser than required under this bill for the plan to be considered a qualified cash balance plan. While I do believe for these plans to have a principal protection feature, to ensure workers are guaranteed upon retirement to receive the investment credits they have earned, I also believe that we should not discourage plans which provide participants the opportunity to receive higher returns that are attainable through the equity markets.

In addition, I would like to finish my statement by thanking the chairman and ranking members for their work on the prospective hybrid language. While the bill does not address existing plans, serious discussions have begun to do so. It is imperative that these discussions continue so that we can clarify the validity of the hybrid pension designs, both cash-balance and pension equity, under current law.

Hybrid defined benefit plans play an invaluable role in delivering retirement security to millions of Americans and their families. To prevent total abandonment of hybrid plans by employers and the resulting harm to employees, I hope Congress will quickly analyze legislative certainty and clarity for existing cash balance and other hybrid pension plans such as pension equity plans. Waiting for the Cooper case to be resolved on appeal is not the answer; as time goes by, more companies are reacting to the uncertainty surrounding the liability by freezing or terminating their plans. At the same time, more and more companies are being dragged into copycat litigation. The losers in this terrible failure to act are my constituents in North Carolina, and workers and former workers who will lose the opportunity to be covered by an employer-provided pension plan.

Failure to resolve the status of hybrid defined benefit plans comprehensively is a betrayal of employers who are trying to do the right thing by their employees and the millions of workers who are counting on a pension for their retirement.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for S. 1783, the Pension Security and Transparency Act. This bill will make much needed reforms to our pension security system. It takes important steps to address the deteriorating financial condition of the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation, PBGC, to ultimately protect the defined benefit plans of millions of American workers. My purpose in coming to the floor today is to make note of a number of provisions in this bill that I believe are particularly important because of their impact on retirement security, and I am pleased that this bill incorporates these provisions.

First, the bill includes measures to encourage companies to implement so-called auto-enroll 401(k) plans. In plain English, this will accomplish a relatively simple, but tremendously effective change to ensure that more Americans are saving for their retirement. Currently, under most retirement plans, employees must take affirmative steps to join a company’s 401(k) plan. It is impossible in our current benefit enrollment system, new employees would automatically be included in an employer’s 401(k) plan, and would have to take affirmative steps to withdraw from the plan. In essence, the choice of whether to participate in a retirement plan is still entirely with the worker, however, the default would be participation in the plan: workers could “opt out,” rather than having to “opt in” to be covered.

Many studies have indicated that automatic enrollment is remarkably effective in raising participation rates among eligible workers, particularly for lower income workers. One study, for example, found that automatic enrollment increased participation from 13 percent to 80 percent for workers making under $20,000 a year. The fact is that without automatic enrollment, many workers don’t take advantage of the savings opportunities available through 401(k)s. Sometimes it is because of inertia, or because of the more immediate demands of work and family, or because the options appear intimidating and confusing. The automatic 401(k) is a relatively simple concept that has the power to enhance retirement savings for millions of American workers. Earlier this year, I joined Senator BINGAMAN in introducing S. 675, the Save More for Retirement Act, to encourage such auto-enrollment plans. Our bill also included provisions to encourage plans to add a feature whereby employees’ contributions would automatically increase each year until certain thresholds were met. We hope that the bill will ensure that many who do participate in company plans don’t take full advantage of the savings opportunities and therefore may be ill-prepared for retirement. I am pleased that the bill before us includes both the automatic enrollment and automatic increase provisions.

I am also pleased that the bill includes a number of provisions often referred to as the “post-Enron” measures. We on the Governmental Affairs Committee have heard testimony of how thousands of Enron workers saw their retirement savings plummet over the course of several weeks. The bill today seeks to address these concerns by ensuring that workers do not lose all their eggs in one basket. It encourages diversification of pension investments from employer stock. It also calls for workers and retirees to get regular statements showing the market value of pension investments. In addition, it encourages employers to provide workers with access to unbiased investment advice as to how to invest their pension retirement accounts. There are many much needed reforms in this bill to ensure that defined benefit plans are adequately funded and that the PBGC remains solvent. It is not perfect, but it represents an effective compromise on a complex matter. I anticipate that additional modifications will be made in conference. I rise here today, however, to make note of the progress that I believe will encourage and protect retirement savings for millions of Americans.
Mr. BOND. Mr. President, thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on the floor today. First, I thank Chairmen GRASSLEY and ENZI and Ranking Members BAUCUS and KENNEDY in crafting this important legislation. The issues we address today are notoriously complex and could have a significant financial impact on both American families and American businesses. The leaders of the committees have done an impressive job to reach agreement and I congratulate them on their efforts.

One of the issues we address in this legislation is the validity of the so-called hybrid plans. Hybrid plans—whether cash balance or pension equity—are a modern form of defined benefit plan that combines the best features of defined contribution plans, such as 401(k)s, with the best features of traditional defined benefit plans. Hybrid plans keep defined benefit plans relevant for workers in our contemporary, mobile economy. Indeed, these hybrid plans have been popular with both employers and employees, and today there are 8.5 million workers earning secure retirement benefits through these plans.

For the past several years, these hybrid plans have been called into question. These turn of events came about when one of our Federal district court judges determined in the infamous Cooper v. IBM decision that the hybrid plan designs are illegal because they pay compound interest. Somehow, this judge believes that it is age discrimination and that the IRS and all those other pension equity plans receive the same statutory language. The reason for this need is in the statutory language. The reason for this need is that the Cooper v. IBM decision deemed not only cash balance plans to be illegal, but pension equity plans as well.

The legislation before us does not address pension equity plans, specifically. Rather, it leaves the issue of whether pension equity plans receive the same benefit as cash balance plans up to the Treasury Department in later administrative guidance. This will simply prolong the legal uncertainty that is driving many employers to consider ending their pension equity plans altogether. This leading variety of hybrid plans—the pension equity plan—is in equal need of the same congressional attention as cash balance plans.

Mr. President, it is my sincere hope that as this important bill moves forward to working with Chairmen GRASSLEY and ENZI and the HELP Committee, to address the wide spectrum of pension issues in the bipartisan bill that is before the Senate today. Their tremendous hard work and conscientious approach to this legislation—and that of their staffs—is commendable. These have had to balance many factors.

Enhancing the retirement security of Americans is one of my priorities in the Senate. Retirement security is, simply put, one of the most important challenges facing our country. Multi-employer and multiemployer pension plans play an essential role in providing retirement security for so many New Yorkers and millions of Americans around the Nation.

In addition, clarifying the age discrimination rules for hybrid plans prospectively and retroactively, it is my hope that the future conferees of this legislation will consider making specific reference to pension equity plans—a type of hybrid plan other than cash balance plans—in the statutory language. The reason for this need is that the Cooper v. IBM decision deemed not only cash balance plans to be illegal, but pension equity plans as well.

Mr. President, it is my sincere hope that as this important bill moves through the legislative process we can address the hybrid design issue in a comprehensive way. We must do so in order to remedy the significant harms to workers and employers that will result if we only address the issue prospectively. In addition, we must give equal consideration to both cash balance and hybrid plans as two legal regimes of hybrid plans. I look forward to working with Chairmen GRASSLEY and ENZI, Ranking Members BAUCUS and KENNEDY, and the future conferees on this bill to ensure a solution that will enhance rather than endanger the retirement security of American families.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I would like to begin by expressing my gratitude to Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee Chairman ENZI and the HELP Committee’s ranking member, Senator KENNEDY, for working together, and with our colleagues on the Finance Committee, to address the wide spectrum of pension issues in the bipartisan bill that is before the Senate today. Their tremendous hard work and conscientious approach to this legislation—and that of their staffs—is commendable. These have had to balance many factors.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I would like to begin by expressing my gratitude to Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee Chair-
A look at the finances of the PBGC provides a snapshot of the aftermath of these trends. According to the PBGC, in 2004 it insured more than 34 million single-employer plan participants and more than 9.8 million multiemployer plan participants. The PBGC reported that its single-employer multiemployer program deficit had swung from a surplus of $87.9 billion in 2000 to a $23.3 billion deficit in 2004, and that its multiemployer program showed a deficit of $236 million in 2004. Yesterday, the PBGC reported its financial results for fiscal year 2005. According to the PBGC, the single-employer program deficit as of September 30, 2005, was $22.8 billion, and the multiemployer program deficit had grown to $335 million. While at this time it appears the PBGC will be able to pay benefits for some time to come, it is incumbent upon us, as elected representatives, to take meaningful steps to address these challenges to the survival of the defined benefit system and the dangers these challenges pose for workers, retirees, and their families who are depending upon the viability of that system.

A central goal of that effort should be ensuring that employers offering single-employer pension plans pension promises and have incentives to remain in the defined benefit system to provide good pensions to their employees. Additional goals include protecting older, longer term employees from unilateral hard freezes in their pension plan, enhancing financial transparency, and shoring up the PBGC. It is also important to work to maintain and strengthen the multiemployer pension system.

The Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005 takes important steps towards these goals, including: transitioning to a full funding target; offering incentives for companies to contribute more in good times to help plan solvency; changing the economics of challenging times; tools for the government to use in an effort to help preserve pension plans facing financial challenges; rules intended to help airlines preserve their pension plans; reforms intended to improve multiemployer plan funding; prospective-only rules for cash balance pension plan conversions, with protections for older and longer serving workers; and enhanced disclosure of pension plan finances.

In addition, the defined contribution autoenrollment provisions included in the bill are an important first step in ensuring that employees start saving today. It has widespread support among employers and employees, and is a commonsense provision that I will work to ensure is included in the final conference agreement.

As is usually the case with new legislation of this scope, I believe there is room for improvement and refinement, particularly with respect to “at risk” funding. I hope that in conference the legislation may be brought in line with the approach to “at risk” funding taken in the legislation approved by the Senate HELP Committee in September. We should support efforts of companies that are acting responsibly to preserve their defined benefit pension plans and fund them adequately, in the face of financial distress or cyclical challenges. I do strive to avoid actions that may, however unintentionally, have the opposite effect of that intended.

Working men and women are counting on the benefits they earn through their pensions. Some of the most important decisions of their lives depend on these benefits being there for them when they need them. I am glad that the Senate is acting today on comprehensive pension reform legislation and addressing a wide variety of challenges facing the defined benefit pension system. I will continue to work with my colleagues to enact legislation designed to maintain and strengthen the defined benefit pension system for generations to come.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering long-delayed legislation to reform our defined benefit pension system. While reforms are certainly needed, I must say that I am disappointed with how watered down this legislation has become since we passed it out of the Finance Committee earlier this year.

Obviously, the current system is in dire strait with the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation, the Federal corporation that insures traditional pension plans, running a $22.8 billion deficit for fiscal year 2005. Moreover, the PBGC said that if events that occurred just after the fiscal year’s end had occurred a few weeks earlier, the deficit would have been $25.7 billion. If the Government is going to continue to operate a pension-plan insurance program, we must make sure that employers stick to their promises appropriately so that taxpayers are not asked to bail out the PBGC.

This legislation makes a first step toward requiring more realistic funding of pension promises, and it tries to assess more accurately which companies are in such financial difficulty that they are likely to declare bankruptcy and shed their pension plans as part of their reorganization, leaving it to the PBGC to cover their remaining obligations. When these provisions were approved by the Finance Committee were stronger and more responsible, I understand that compromises had to be made as the Finance bill was combined with the bill reported out by the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee. I hope these provisions will be retained and rejuvenated when this legislation is reconciled with the House pension-reform bill.

My primary concern about this legislation has to do with the special provisions for legacy airlines. The bill reported out of the Finance Committee allows certain airlines to freeze their existing defined benefit pension plans so that no new participants can be added and benefits will not increase in any way. Then it allows these companies an additional 14 years to pay off what they owe on these frozen plans. I agree that it makes sense to allow the airlines to freeze their pension plans so that their liabilities do not get any worse. Further, if giving the airlines extra time to pay their obligations will keep them from shifting the debts to the PBGC, then I believe we are acting responsibly to protect the American taxpayers. I must say, however, that this special treatment is unfair to those airlines that have been responsible about funding their pension liabilities or that have different, and more affordable, retirement savings plans for their employees.

Nor is that all we are apparently going to do to provide special relief for the legacy airlines. On the floor, an amendment will be offered, and will likely pass, that will lengthen the amortization period for the so-called “hard-freeze” provision to 20 years and to provide separate funding relief to certain other legacy airlines that will not be taking advantage of the “hard freeze.” This so-called “soft-freeze” provision will allow these particular airlines an extended period to pay their pension obligations, but will not require the airlines to freeze completely their pension plans. Rather, this so-called “soft-freeze” provision would not allow new participants, but would allow benefit accruals if the company funds those accruals. This is terrible policy; if the airlines have the resources to fund benefit accruals, they should fund their existing obligations on a timely basis instead of taking on new obligations. Congress should not grant any company the ability to amortize its obligations over a longer period of time without requiring it to freeze its pension plan completely. Further, increasing the 14-year amortization period to 20 years is an inequitable and provides a one-size-fits-all plan for two legacy airlines that have very different financial situations. I am pleased that Chairman Grassley will oppose this amendment.

Finally, with respect to the Akaka amendment, I opposed this measure because it would exacerbate the already terrible fiscal problems facing the PBGC. Unfortunately, Federal regulations dictate that individuals age 60 and older may not serve as airline pilots. I am one of 20 Members of this Chamber who have cosponsored Senator Inhoffe’s bill to remove this blanket prohibition, a stricture which I have concluded cannot be justified as a safety measure. I am heartened that the Senate Commerce Committee will have the opportunity at their next markup to rectify the inequitable treatment of older pilots the right way—by removing the arbitrary mandatory retirement age. Unfortunately, the Senate Commerce Committee has proceeded the wrong way—by swelling the PBGC’s deficits by raising the ceiling on allowable benefits.
Overall, this legislation moves forward the process of reforming our badly broken defined benefit pension-plan funding system, and for that reason I will support it even though I am very opposed to its special funding relief for certain legacy air lines. Having served as the conference committee members to work out a final version, that the conference will work for the best possible funding requirements for all companies that participate in the system; that they be made kind of a benchmark to identify struggling companies; and that they will keep the legacy airline relief as responsible as possible.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the pension reform bill which is before the Senate. The product of a great deal of work by members of both the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions. As a member of both of these committees, I congratulate my colleagues and particularly the Democratic members for their leadership and hard work. It is not often that Senate committees share jurisdiction of an issue the way that the Finance and HELP Committees share the jurisdiction of pensions. Bringing the bill to this point required an unusual procedure where the separate bills approved by the two committees, which were quite different in many respects, were combined into one bill for floor consideration.

The resulting bill, which is before us today, is complex, controversial, and imperfect. It is also very much needed. Traditional pension plans, also known as defined benefit pension plans, are facing problems. The number of defined benefit pensions is in decline. In 1980, about 40 percent of private sector jobs offered pensions to their employees. Today, only 20 percent do.

Since 1985, the number of defined benefit plans backed by the PBGC has declined from 114,500 to fewer than 32,000. Clearly, our economy, and the retirement options for our workforce, are undergoing rapid evolution. This is due to a number of complex factors, but primarily is the rising expense of starting and maintaining these plans, and the uncertainty and volatility of funding them. The rules governing defined benefit pension plans are among the most complex of all U.S. laws.

Another factor in the debate about pensions is that the American workforce is changing in a fundamental way. No longer is the idea of going to work for one employer and remaining with that company for one's entire career considered the norm. Increasingly, workers are mobile and find themselves changing companies and even careers several times over the course of their work lives. For these workers, the traditional pension plan is not necessarily the ideal. For many such workers, and for most companies in younger industries, hybrid pension plans are more beneficial.

Unfortunately, these hybrid pension plans are not legal and a legislative cloud today. So what could be a pretty good answer in today's world to the problems of cost, complexity, and inflexibility of a defined benefit plan has legal challenges and by political controversy over how to best clarify the status of hybrid plans.

One of the biggest concerns, however, is that the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation (PBGC) is under increasing financial strain as more and more companies with defined benefit plans have defaulted on their pension obligations and left this agency to carry the load. Just yesterday, the PBGC released in its annual report that it had only $56.5 billion in assets to cover $79.2 billion in liabilities. In addition, the report showed the PBGC's exposure to losses from pension plans sponsored by financially weak employers rose to $108 billion from $96 billion the year before.

What may be the most challenging bill is complex, controversial, and imperfect; it is because, to be effective, the bill must walk the very narrow path between two important public policy objectives. On the one hand, we need to ensure that the employees who have been in an employer's pension plan for many years report to their employers. Failure to do so does great harm to the millions of employees and their families who depend on those pensions for a secure retirement.

It also does harm to our economy, and it puts the PBGC, and possibly the American taxpayer, at great risk.

On the other hand, we must not forget that employers have no legal obligation to offer such pension plans to their employees. These benefits are voluntary, and they must stay so. The Congress has an obligation to ensure that the pension laws provide rational and sensible rules that encourage employers to offer these benefits to their employees. This means they should be understandable, predictable, and easy to administer. If we place unreasonable or overly aggressive requirements on employers, many or most will simply terminate them. This means leaving employees without the benefits they might have had.

I believe we must be careful to ensure that pension plans that are currently fully funded and are sponsored by employers are not weakened inadvertently by the reforms in this legislation. However, this is not as easy to accomplish at it may sound.

I believe the bill before us goes a long way toward accomplishing the goals of strengthening the pension system, shoring up the PBGC, and not discouraging employers from staying in the system. However, it has certain provisions that, in my view, may not lead us in the direction we need to go. I hope that as the bill goes to conference that it can be further improved.

More specifically, I remain concerned about the provision in the bill that would require certain plan sponsors with credit ratings that have fallen below investment grade to fund their plans faster than they would otherwise have to do. While this provision has improved from its first version in the Finance Committee, I believe it is still too onerous.

I am also very concerned about the impact of this bill on the struggling airline industry. We simply must provide relief to the airlines in funding their pension obligations or many will have to turn their obligations over to the PBGC. Therefore, I am supporting the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, Mr. ISAKSON, and I hope our colleagues will also support it.

I am more inclined to say in favor of this combined bill. I am very pleased to see that many of the defined contribution provisions that the Finance Committee has long worked on getting enacted have made their way into this bill. I am also glad that certain protections for employee pensions plans that are very important to many of the electrical and telephone cooperatives that are common in many rural States, including my home State of Utah.

I am also pleased to see that the managers' substitute amendment also includes a provision on which I have been working for several years now with the chairman and ranking Democrat of the Finance Committee. This provision, which is important to many associations around the Nation, including the Utah Auto Dealers Association, ensures that they will not unfairly have to give up their health plans, upon which many employers and their families now rely.

And I am happy that we have finally included language that makes it much easier for firms to enroll automatically new employees into a firm's 401(k) plans. One thing we know about human behavior is that inertia is a powerful force—change of any sort can be difficult for even the best of us. The beauty of automatic enrollment is that it uses this inertia to our advantage. The firms that have used automatic enrollment far have reaped vastly higher savings rates, and employees have been quite pleased with the result.

While nearly everyone on both sides of the aisle supports making automatic enrollment easier for firms, we differ on just how much easier we should make it. There have been a number of proposals that would have made it much easier for firms that offer automatic enrollment of new employees to meet the convoluted pension distribution requirements for many smaller firms from even offering 401(k) plans. Unfortunately, the version currently embodied in this bill does not, in

is that we address this uncertainty in

Although the defined benefit pension system has helped generations of Americans achieve retirement secu-we have witnessed a decline in these plans during the last several years, as I mentioned. While the modern workforce remains interested in the security of employer funding and Federal insurance guarantees, it also demands portability and a greater level of control regarding retirement benefits. Given these diverse criteria it is easy to see why so-called hybrid pen-plans have become so popular. These cash-balance and pension equity plans, which close to 9 million Americans currently participate, incorporate the attractive features of a defined contribution plan while offering much of the security associated with traditional defined benefit plans.
Hybrid pension plans are nothing new. In 1991 the Treasury issued reguations that described a safe harbor testing method for cash balance pension plans under nondiscrimination rules. Five years later, the IRS issued Notice 96-8 describing the structure and operation of cash balance pension plans as well as citing the previous safe harbor rule. This notice and prior regulation stood as the official authority from Treasury and IRS on how a cash balance plan should be designed and operated. Many plan sponsors even received favorable determination letters from the IRS that their converted cash balance pension plans met all requirements to be qualified to preferred tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code, including all relvant nondiscrimination requirements.
More recently, in 2002 the Treasury issued proposed regulations that clearly-established hybrid pension plans and plan conversion provisions, it also

Although many courts have ruled that these plans do not discriminate based on age, they continue to come under attack. The bill we are currently considering does a good job of establishing the principles for evaluating whether post-effective date conversions of a traditional defined benefit pension plan to a hybrid pension plan are permissible. However, the bill does not clarify that employers who previously adopted hybrid pension plans in good faith, based on generally accepted legal principles and in reliance on guidance issued by the Internal Revenue Service, should not be disadvantaged compared to employers who adopt hybrid pension plans in the future.
If Congress does not clarify the legality of pre-effective date hybrid pension plans and plan conversions, it is likely that these plans will be abandoned in favor of programs that shift investment risk for retirement savings back to participants. This would
The uncertain climate for hybrid pension plans has already had a profound adverse effect on defined benefit plan formation and continuation. I hope that in conference we can consider some moderate and fair retroactive provisions in order to give some legal clarity to these plans.
This bill should not be considered the final word on this issue. It represents good progress, and I am encouraged that the agencies on whose consideration have agreed to release them. By approving this legislation, we can move into conference where I believe we can improve the bill even further.
Again, I thank those who have worked so hard on this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it today.
Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would like to commend Chairman GRASSLEY and Senator Baucus on their leadership in passing the Pension Security and Transparency Act of 2005. It accomplishes a great deal in reinforcing the security and financial viability of the defined benefit pension system.
Americans have worked very hard to earn their pension benefits, and this bill does a lot to ensure that their retirements will be secure.
A number of important reforms will also improve the defined contribution system. I am proud that a number of these defined contribution reforms were taken from the retirement package that Senator Conrad and I introduced earlier this year.
S. 1783 included a key piece of our legislation promoting automatic enrollment in 401(k) plans. Automatic enrollment has been shown to increase participation rates in these retirement plans significantly—especially among low and moderate income individuals.
S. 1783 also provides mandatory fiduciary erules with respect to defined contribution plans and annuities. Today, very few employers offer annuity distribution options in their defined contribution plans partly due to confusion surrounding the appropriate fiduciary standards. I believe we need to provide retirees with the option to turn a portion of a lump sum into a guaranteed stream of income so that we can ensure they do not outlive their savings as they enter the increasingly long retirement phase of their lives.
On this front, I believe that there is much more we can do to encourage individuals to provide themselves with a guaranteed stream of income for life by providing tax incentives for Annuitalization.
In particular, we need to provide incentives for retirees without employer provided retirement plans to save. Because many workers benefited from employer provided retirement plans, they may have little saved for retirement. Aside from Social Security, almost one-half of all Americans have only their personal savings to fall back on in retirement. Therefore, I believe we should offer additional incentive for these retirees to choose retirement income that is guaranteed to last as long as they live, and will not decrease based on their investment results.
I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure that all Americans have a secure retirement.
Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the Senate is finally taking action on much needed pension reforms. As I work today, there are more than 44 million Americans working hard to earn traditional pension benefits. Steelworkers, coal miners, flight attendants, autoworkers, carpenters, grocery store employees, Steelworkers, coal miners, flight attendants, autoworkers, carpenters, grocery store employees, will continue to play an important role as Federal safety net for failed pension plans.

The bill also makes some important improvements to the defined contribution pension system. As Enron collapsed, many workers lost their retirement savings because they had heavily invested in their company’s stock. I am pleased that Congress is finally acting to better protect employees by giving them more information about their investment options and more rights to diversify those investments.

I am also pleased that the legislation includes a provision to enable the UMWA Construction Workers Pension Plan to excess assets to cover health care costs for retirees, just as many single-employer private pension plans already do. The Construction Workers Pension Plan currently has more than twice the assets needed to cover pension benefits, while retirees have been forced to pay large premiums for health coverage. With this change, the resources set aside to benefit retired construction workers can be used to best advantage—including helping to cover health care costs.

Yet while I believe there are many positive provisions in this bill, it is not a perfect bill. The bill calls for very difficult compromises. Companies are concerned that the funding rules will be difficult to live by. Workers are concerned that benefits may be limited if employers do not adequately fund the pension plans. I appreciate these concerns. And I am interested in improving this bill.

I had hoped to have the opportunity to support an amendment by Senators DeWine and Mikulski to ease some of the funding requirements imposed on employers. Without fundamentally upsetting the balance struck in this bill, the amendment would have made pension plans easier to maintain. Because a company’s credit rating is an imperfect indicator of whether the pension plan is sound, I do not believe that we should impose strict new funding requirements on companies with lower credit ratings. I believe that the managers of this legislation have already crafted so many important improvements to the funding rules that the payments associated with low credit ratings are not necessary to guarantee appropriate pension contributions. Rather, the credit ratings rules may limit employers’ willingness to offer such benefits.

The reforms contained in this legislation will dramatically improve the health of the Nation’s pension system. Improved pension funding rules are necessary to protect the many workers who have been promised pension benefits, and to shore up the Federal pension insurer. As the final legislation is worked out with the House, I will be working with my colleagues to improve this bill even further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on passage of the bill.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two votes be limited to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question is on passage of the bill.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

DEPARTMENTS AND COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND SCIENCE, AND RELATED AGENCIES FOR FISCAL YEAR 2006—CONFERENCE REPORT—Returned

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the conference report to accompany H.R. 2862, the Commerce, Justice, Science Appropriations Act. While I will be voting for this conference report, I have grave concerns regarding the cuts in the Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grants Program.

The Byrne/JAG program is the primary Federal assistance program for State and local law enforcement’s counter-drug activities. This program is critical to fighting the domestic war on drugs. In my State of Iowa, this grant program funds highly successful drug task forces. I fear that without these grants, many of these task forces will disappear and the threat from methamphetamine will only grow larger.

I have a letter from Sheriff Thomas Faust, the executive director of the National Sheriff’s Association. His letter raises many of the concerns I have already highlighted with regard to the JAG program. Sheriff Faust’s letter warns that, “Cuts of this magnitude seriously inhibit law enforcement’s abilities and endanger the safety and well being of our communities! In order to keep communities safe from crime and free of drugs, law enforcement must be given the resources they need! The fiscal year 2006 CJS appropriations bill does not provide for those resources.”

I have fears that these cuts in the JAG program will have grave results, because the conference report funds other critical programs. I will vote in support of the conference report.

I ask unanimous consent to print the above-referenced letter in the RECORD.
