PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 110th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

Vol. 154 WASHINGTON, WEDNESDAY, JULY 30, 2008 No. 128

House of Representatives

The House met at 10 a.m.

Rabbi Peter E. Hyman, Temple B'nai Israel, Easton, Maryland, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and merciful God, bless and protect the lawmakers and officials of our land as they carry out the sacred responsibilities entrusted to them by the people of our Nation.

Grant to the President, his counselors, advisers, and all who hold in their hands the destiny and well-being of our country a measure of Your wisdom and a portion of Your spirit.

Impart to those in positions of leadership the courage to temper justice with mercy. Strengthen those who engage in the give-and-take of democracy with passion alloyed with humility.

May those who stand here in righteous debate be ever mindful that Your divine image is reflected in the eyes of those they face; remembering that it is in Your likeness we are all created.

Shield and guard those who, responding to the call of duty and service, stand in harm's way.

Bless, O God, the work of those who labor here, and may the work they do be a blessing to us and to all the world.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House her approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM JOHNSON) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

WELCOMING RABBI PETER E. HYMAN

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SESTAK) is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. SESTAK. Madam Speaker, I want to talk about Rabbi Hyman who just gave the opening prayer.

There is a midrash, one of the many parables, that embellish upon the Torah. In this particular midrash, there is a man from the land of Israel, a businessman, who was in another country, and when he was there, he was accused of being a spy. He was then told by the judge that he would be executed. He asked for 30 days to go back to the land of Israel and while there finish up his business and come back. The judge initially laughed, but he turned to him and said, ''My friend will sit in a jail for me, and if I'm not back, he will be executed.''

The judge had to see this, and so the man went into jail. And the gentleman went back to the land of Israel and he finished his business. And he would have made it back in time, except there was a storm at sea.

And when he finally arrived there, the man, his friend, was about to be hung, executed. And he yelled out as he came closer, ''It is I who am to be executed, not him.'' But his friend said, ''No, you're too late; it is to be me.''

They caused such confusion and commotion that the two men were brought before the king who had to see this, and after listening to their stories, he said, ''I will forgive you and pardon you on one condition, that I become your third friend.''

There is nothing like a friend in life. You helped me at a hard time, at the beginning of my political career, Rabbi, but more than that, Temple Shalom in my district radiated that peace, that friendship, that loyalty to everyone, that interracial, ecumenical clergy association you headed, not just Anti-Defamation League, but anti-violence summit that you held.

Shalom. Thank you for being the friend you are, not just to me, but a dealer of hope to many in my district.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain up to 15 further 1-minute requests on each side of the aisle.

CONGRATULATING STATE SENATOR MIKE CONNOLLY

(Mr. BRALEY of Iowa asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BRALEY of Iowa. Madam Speaker, I rise today to thank and congratulate my friend and mentor, Iowa State Senator Mike Connolly. Mike has represented the City of Dubuque and Dubuque County in the Iowa General Assembly for the past 30 years. He has also served for 30 years in the Dubuque community schools as a teacher and as an administrator.

When Mike was getting started in the General Assembly, Iowa was facing tough economic times. The farm crisis was challenging the entire State, especially Dubuque, but Mike believed we could rebuild. He is an integral part of the leadership team that has guided the economic and cultural rebirth of Dubuque and Iowa. He has worked tirelessly to make Iowa schools among the best in the Nation, to make health care affordable and accessible, and create sustainable and good-paying jobs.

Madam Speaker, integrity and humility are two trades we could use a lot more of in American politics. Mike Connolly has always served with integrity and humility. He has sacrificed to make his community a better place and kept his actions consistent with his principles.

Senator Connolly, on behalf of all Iowans, I congratulate you on your legacy of service and wish you well in the future.

ENERGY SOLUTIONS

(Mr. WALBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALBERG. Madam Speaker, on Monday I had the opportunity to pump gas for some of my constituents in Battle Creek, Michigan. Experiences like these allow me to truly get a sense of what the good people of my district think about energy solutions.

The constituents I spoke with all wanted to know what Congress is doing to lower gas prices. Almost all of them want to see Congress work on an all-of-the-above energy policy.

High gas prices demand action. We need to put all energy options on the table: more drilling, more alternatives, more conservation. This Congress needs to get serious and work on a comprehensive plan that includes all of the above and ends our dependence on Middle East oil.

Sadly, House leadership refuses to allow any votes increasing American energy production. Last Friday, the Washington Post chided House leadership for stifling floor debate on offshore drilling.

Madam Speaker, it is time to engage in a forthright debate that gives the American people a chance to have their voices heard and, most importantly, solves America's energy crisis, ending our dependence on Middle East oil. Let's get it done.

DEMOCRATS ARE PROVIDING SOLUTIONS TO AMERICA'S ENERGY CRISIS

(Mr. STUPAK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STUPAK. Madam Speaker, while Americans suffer pain at the pump, Republicans and President Bush continue every day to spew the same rhetoric about drilling, a move that would produce minimal savings in 10 years.

Democrats, on the other hand, are providing short-term and long-term solutions to America's energy crisis. We have repealed subsidies to profit-rich Big Oil, cracked down on price gouging, and invested in clean and renewable energy.

We realize that Americans are hurting now, and they can't wait 10 years for relief. So 2 months ago, Democrats forced President Bush to stop filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Now we are urging the President to release oil from the Reserve, which would provide relief at the pump within 2 weeks.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, President Bush and House Republicans are more interested in doing the bidding of Big Oil than actually providing relief to the American consumer today. How else can you explain their fixation with giving Big Oil more land to drill on when they aren't using the 68 million acres they already have?

Democrats are taking our energy policy in a new direction, not one controlled by Big Oil.

DEFENDING ISRAEL AGAINST IRAN

(Mr. KIRK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KIRK. Madam Speaker, we all know there is a growing Iranian threat, focused mostly on the people of Israel.

Earlier this year, JANE HARMAN joined my bipartisan letter with 70 Members of Congress calling for the U.S. to extend our full ballistic missile defenses to protect Israel.

Last night, the United States announced that we would make this key commitment. Secretary Gates told Defense Minister Barak that the first step will happen soon. America's most powerful radar, the X-Band, will soon defend Israel.

This is a historic step that sends a powerful message to Iran: A future attack on Israel will likely fail. Our two democracies are sticking together to ensure the safety of free peoples, even in the Middle East.

Yesterday's decision by America's defenders makes deterrence, diplomacy, and peace a much more likely future for the people of Israel.

HOUSE PASSES COMPREHENSIVE HOUSING BILL THAT WILL STRENGTHEN HOUSING MARKET AND ECONOMY

(Mr. WILSON of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WILSON of Ohio. Madam Speaker, last week this House passed comprehensive legislation that will assist homeowners facing foreclosure and help strengthen the housing market and our overall economy.

This bill will help significant numbers of hardworking American families in danger of losing their home refinance into lower cost government-insured mortgages, and we can do this at no cost to the American taxpayer.

The bill also helps neighborhoods hardest hit by the foreclosure crisis by providing resources to allow cities and States to buy up and rehabilitate foreclosed properties. Today, these properties are driving down home prices, reducing State and local revenues, and destabilizing neighborhoods.

Madam Speaker, we simply cannot revitalize the economy without addressing our Nation's housing crisis. Last week, the Democratic Congress once again acted on the real challenges facing the American people.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF JOURNALISTS

(Mr. POE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. POE. Madam Speaker, journalists should be able to report the news without having to worry about getting arrested for not revealing their confidential sources. Our Nation needs a Federal shield law to further protect the freedom of speech and press.

Recently, several journalists have been arrested and jailed for not disclosing their anonymous sources. These arrests did not occur in foreign countries run by dictators but happened here in America. Putting journalists in jail for not confessing their sources tramples on the Nation's freedom of speech and freedom of the press. These freedoms in the first amendment are first because, without them, the rest are meaningless.

More than 30 States so far have passed laws that protect reporters from being required to testify and name confidential sources, but there is no Federal law.

The job of a journalist is to report the news and not be an arm of the government or controlled by our government. Law enforcement officials should not force journalists to gather information or find witnesses.

A free press means free and independent of government intrusion into the sources of reporters.

Madam Speaker, the country needs a Federal shield law because, instead of getting a reporter arrested, the truth should set them free.

TRIBUTE TO NICK DONOFRIO

(Mr. WELCH of Vermont asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELCH of Vermont. Madam Speaker, it is my great pleasure to pay tribute to Mr. Nick Donofrio who is retiring after 40 years of serving the IBM Corporation.

Nick has led many of IBM's major development and manufacturing teams, semiconductor and storage technologies, microprocessors, and personal computer servers. He's led the semiconductor development and manufacturing facility in Burlington, where he and his wife, Anita, raised two children, Nicole and Michael.

Throughout his career, Nick has focused sharply on advancing education, employment, and career opportunities for underrepresented minorities and women.

He served on boards in Vermont. He's received national awards, well-deserved, for his leadership. The National Education and Leadership Award from the Sons of Italy Foundation; the Mensforth International Gold Medal; Industry Week magazine's Technology Leader of the Year; the University of Arizona's Technical Executive of the Year; and the Rodney D. Chipp Memorial Award by the Society of Women Engineers for his outstanding contributions to the advancement of women in the engineering field. In 2005, Nick was elected a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Please join me in congratulating him on the beginning of his new career.

GAS PRICES

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Speaker, we have a responsibility to our children and our grandchildren to solve this energy crisis. This is about American energy for our American economy to create American jobs and a better American quality of life.

I have urged my constituents to call the Speaker of the House and relay their opinion that they believe Americans want, need and serve some answers on energy policy. I tell you as I told them: Call the Capitol Hill switchboard. That number is 202–225–3121.

I suggested that you make their voices heard that we all want to make America more energy self-sufficient while protecting America's homegrown energy resources.

Congress ought not leave town for 5 weeks without a vote on real energy solutions. Businesses don't shut down for 5 weeks without finishing the job. Congress ought not close up shop when there is still work to be done to preserve our Nation.

THREE YEARS OF GOP ENERGY PLAN AND AMERICANS STRUGGLE WITH $4 GASOLINE

(Mr. YARMUTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. YARMUTH. Madam Speaker, it's been 3 years since the Republican Congress passed energy legislation they claimed would bring down the cost of gasoline and end our dependence on foreign oil. The result? Gas prices have hit $4 a gallon and a barrel of crude oil has gone from $30 to $150 a barrel.

Still, Republicans continue to propose the same failed policies and continue to block Democratic efforts to invest in renewable energy and to release oil from the government stockpile.

Republicans say they want to drill, but they voted against a bill that would force Big Oil to drill on 311 million acres of land already open for energy production. Republicans say they want to help struggling drivers with gas prices, but they voted against repealing unnecessary tax breaks for profit-rich oil companies.

Madam Speaker, BP Oil experienced a 28 percent hike in their profits this quarter while American families can't afford to drive to work. When are Republicans going to start helping American families instead of Big Oil?

AMERICAN ENERGY ACT

(Mr. RADANOVICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. RADANOVICH. Madam Speaker, as Congress prepares to depart for the August recess, I'm expecting to see more constituents around my district this August than usual. It isn't because they're anxious to visit with me; it's because many of my constituents can't afford to take vacations this summer due to the skyrocketing price of gas.

My Republican colleagues and I have offered a comprehensive energy plan in the form of the American Energy Act, which seeks to reduce the price of gas through increasing American energy production, enhancing energy efficiencies, and promoting renewable and alternative energy technology. Yet the majority party refuses to bring this commonsense bill up for a vote before we leave for recess because they are afraid it will pass. I wish my Democrat colleagues would apply this same illogic to some of their pieces of legislation.

It's unconscionable to punish the majority of the American people for the appeasement of out-of-touch environmental constituents. The American people deserve lower gas prices, and they deserve an up or down vote on the American Energy Act.

STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE

(Mr. OLVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. OLVER. Madam Speaker, high gas prices are taking a huge toll. Republicans claim they want to reduce gas prices, but for a month they have voted against every bill that would do so.

Last week, Republicans blocked a bill to release 70 million barrels from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Much smaller releases by the last three Presidents have produced nearly immediate reductions in crude oil prices of up to one-third. That would translate to savings as high as $1 per gallon of gas. The Republican plan to lease more public land without requiring Big Oil to actually drill and produce oil gives exactly zero savings now.

Today, they will have a chance to vote against the speculation in oil futures. Experts have testified that rampant speculation accounts for roughly $30 of the price of a barrel of oil, or 70 cents per gallon of gas. Isn't it time Republicans voted for 70 cent savings on gas prices by stopping speculation and $1 savings by opening the Strategic Petroleum Reserve now?

ENERGY CRISIS

(Mr. KLINE of Minnesota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KLINE of Minnesota. Madam Speaker, day after day, we come to this floor to address the important issues facing our Nation. A quick review, however, of the last few weeks shows we have voted on new names for post offices and to congratulate our sports teams. But Congress has not taken any real steps to address the rapidly rising price of gasoline and ease American's pain at the pump. And apparently, House Democrats again are not going to let Members vote to ease that pain.

This month, I have been touring energy facilities in Minnesota's Second District that highlight a variety of new, clean and reliable sources of energy being produced right there in Minnesota. I visited a hydropower plant on the Mississippi River in Hastings, a nuclear power plant in Welch, an energy-from-waste in Red Wing, an oil refinery in Rosemont, a wind turbine in Northfield, and an electric-generating facility in Faribault.

Madam Speaker, I visited all of these energy producers to learn more and to illustrate that we need an ''all of the above'' energy plan and we need to enact it now. Congress should not adjourn for 5 weeks of vacation and politics without dealing with the number one issue in the minds of the American people, high energy prices.

GAS STAMPS

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Madam Speaker, a barrel of oil is still more than $120 and the price Americans are paying for a gallon of gas is $4.20 a gallon. Add that to the rising food prices and rising unemployment—especially long-term unemployment—and the economic climate feels more like the dead of winter than the middle of summer.

Too many Americans are still being forced to choose between food and fuel every day either to get to work or look for work. But we can help those at the bottom of the economic ladder survive by simply passing the Gas Stamps legislation I've introduced. It would provide modest assistance to people who need a helping hand to keep their head above water. It would provide temporary assistance over a relatively short time, a few months, like food stamps, and it would say to the American people that we, in Congress, know the first stimulus package was not enough and we're prepared to act again.

Providing those in need with a few hundred dollars a month for a few months is a small price to pay so that vulnerable Americans can continue to put food on the table and gas in their tank to go to work.

The American people need and deserve some additional help, and we ought to provide it with gas stamps, not the fraud of drilling on the coast.

CONGRESS MUST NOT ADJOURN BEFORE VOTING ON MORE ACCESS TO AMERICAN OIL RESERVES

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE. Madam Speaker, the American people deserve more access to American oil. And now that the President has lifted the ban on offshore drilling, Congress must not adjourn until the American people get a vote on more domestic drilling on the Outer Continental Shelf.

In a day when some in this body say it is their duty to ''save the planet,'' I prefer the words of Daniel Webster that are chiseled on the wall behind me. He said a century ago, ''Let us develop the resources of our land, call forth its powers.'' And so I add to my colleagues, let us develop the resources of our land. Let us give the American people more access to American oil.

Americans won't get a vacation from high gas prices, so Congress should not take a vacation until we vote to lessen our dependence on foreign oil.

Madam Speaker, do not adjourn this Congress until we give the bipartisan, pro-drilling majority a vote on more access to our oil reserves.

THE TRUTH ABOUT OFFSHORE DRILLING

(Mr. MORAN of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Well, Madam Speaker, now we know the truth, that the television ad that the Republican Presidential candidate is using to impugn the patriotism of his Democratic opponent is a complete fabrication. So I guess we shouldn't be too surprised when the same camp is trying to convince the American people that offshore oil drilling is going to reduce the price of gas. Sure, it will—in more than a decade, by two to four cents. In fact, the Bush/Cheney administration's own Energy Information Administration has said that ending the Federal moratorium ''is certainly not going to make a difference in the next 10 years.''

In fact, the Big Oil companies already have access to more than 34 billion barrels of offshore oil they're not even drilling. All it's going to do is give more profits to these oil companies by being able to have publicly-owned reserves on their balance sheets, increasing the value of the oil shares.

The fact is, though, that lies and half truths say far more about the people uttering them than the people who are targeted by them.

GIVE ARKANSAS WHAT THEY DESERVE: A VOTE ON ENERGY

(Mr. BOOZMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOOZMAN. Madam Speaker, frustration is mounting in the Third District of Arkansas because of the high cost of gasoline. This stack of e-mails which I have with me is just a small portion of the comments my constituents have sent me. And several of them have offered their own ideas of what needs to be done to resolve this energy dilemma and help increase the American energy supply and provide relief at the pump.

The ideas they've proposed are ones we've heard before: We need to increase our production of American energy in a clean, efficient way through wind, solar and hydrogen, as well as tapping into the vast majority of natural resources we have available.

I agree with my constituents that we need to use an ''all of the above'' energy strategy. That's why I cosponsored the American Energy Act. This encompasses the ideas many of my constituents have been writing me about, increasing our American-made energy supply in an environmentally friendly way, encouraging energy conservation, and promoting renewable and alternative energy technology. We need to act.

WE NEED A BOLD ENERGY POLICY

(Mr. INSLEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INSLEE. Madam Speaker, I appreciate some of my Republican colleagues' discussion of some alternative energy, but it hasn't been an ''all of the above'' voting history for them; it has been a ''none of the above'' voting history when it comes to the vast sources of energy.

We know America is a bold country, not a timid country. But an energy policy that revolves around exclusively offshore drilling is a timid policy. The large swaths of energy we need are not off the coast, they are in the sunshine falling on our land, the wind blowing in the Midwest, the geothermal below our feet, the wave and tidal power; these are the vast swaths of energy.

Yesterday, right around this building, I drove a plug-in electric hybrid car. That is the future, using electricity driven by the sun. And I wish my Republican colleagues would just take a look at the USA Today newspaper yesterday that talked about the enormous strides being made in solar energy. We need a bold policy that can truly get us out of this pickle. That's one based on energy sources, not the timidity of the Republican Party.

H. RES. 1206, COMPREHENSIVE ENERGY REFORM PLAN

(Mr. LATTA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LATTA. Madam Speaker, it was a privilege to travel with Leader BOEHNER and my fellow Republican colleagues on the American Energy Tour to Colorado and Alaska.

Our mission encompassed the ''all of the above'' energy policy our constituents have demanded. We've expanded our knowledge of renewable and alternative energy in addition to getting the hard facts on domestic exploration and recovery of our natural resources.

After hosting multiple town hall meetings and speaking with constituents throughout my district, it is clear that they, along with the majority of the American public, support the House Republicans' ''all of the above'' plan.

This plan calls for nuclear, clean coal technology and a responsible effort to safely explore and recover our domestic natural resources while expanding wind, solar, hydrogen, ethanol and biofuels. This plan is similar to the resolution I introduced on May 15, House Resolution 1206, which is a five-point comprehensive energy reform plan.

We must enact comprehensive energy reform. And until Congress does, our constituents and the economy will continue to suffer.

IRAQIS CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF AMERICAN TROOPS IN 2010

(Mr. ARCURI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARCURI. Madam Speaker, congressional Democrats have repeatedly urged President Bush to bring our troops home from Iraq honorably, responsibly, safely, and soon.

After rejecting 18 months of attempts by the Democratic majority to adopt redeployment timetables, the President now proposes a vague general time horizon that falls far short of a commitment to ending involvement in Iraq. The Iraq Government was more direct. For the second time this month, Iraqi officials have indicated their support for the withdrawal of U.S. combat forces by the end of 2010.

Maybe these statements served as a wake-up call to the Bush administration. It appears they are finally getting the message that the war in Iraq cannot go on indefinitely. Perhaps President Bush should pass the message along to Senator MCCAIN, who continues to believe that our commitment in Iraq will last 50 to 100 years.

Madam Speaker, we need a new direction in Iraq that allows our troops to come home and allows us to focus on the war on terrorism in Afghanistan and around the world.

RED BIRCH CANOLA BIODIESEL PROJECT

(Mr. GOODE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOODE. Madam Speaker, high energy prices are a top concern of farmers, small businesses, and citizens across the Fifth District of Virginia. I wish the House would consider a comprehensive measure like the American Energy Act to increase the supply of American-made energy, improve conservation, and promote renewable and alternative energy technologies such as Red Birch Energy's Canola Biodiesel Project in Bassett Forks, Virginia.

Red Birch Energy converts the oil from crushed canola seeds grown by local farmers into a clean-burning, efficient biodiesel fuel that is less efficient than ordinary diesel fuel. Canola provides a great seed for biodiesel production, since the seed's 44 percent oil content is higher than that of soybeans and corn, yet not affecting food prices. The grand opening of their impressive new facility is scheduled for August 25.

I commend Red Birch Energy for their efforts to develop a clean alternative fuel that reduces America's dependence.

WELCOMING MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT FROM INDONESIA, KENYA, MACEDONIA, AND UKRAINE

(Ms. SCHWARTZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SCHWARTZ. Here in the gallery today are 23 members of Parliament from Indonesia, Kenya, Macedonia, and Ukraine. They are visiting the House of Representatives this week as guests of the House Democracy Assistance Commission. HDAC, chaired by Representative DAVID PRICE, partners with legislative bodies in 12 countries. They are each moving steadily towards democratic governance. The four countries represented here today are among the most promising participants in this important congressional initiative.

The MPs, many of whom are committee chairs, will work directly with Members of Congress to learn how we conduct committee business in the U.S. House. They will take this information back to their respective legislatures and use these concepts and procedures to strengthen their legislative process and, as a result, strengthen their democracy.

I ask that the House give these distinguished guests a warm welcome and offer our strong encouragement for the work that we are doing together. By building relationships with our fellow parliamentarians in emerging democracies and sharing their aspirations for their future, we can promote the safety and security of our own Nation and encourage stability around the world.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. TAUSCHER). Members are reminded to refrain from referring to people in the gallery.

GUILELESS MAN—A COMMITTED DEFENDER OF TRUTH

(Mr. AKIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. AKIN. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize Archbishop Raymond Burke who, for the last 4 years, has served as the head of the archdiocese in St. Louis. Recently, Archbishop Burke was appointed to the position of the Prefect of the Supreme Tribunal of the Apostolic Signatura in Rome.

During his short tenure in St. Louis, Archbishop Burke helped to revitalize the Catholic community. Under his leadership, the seminary has continued to flourish with respect to the enrollment of the archdiocesan seminarians. I have no doubt that any man with Archbishop Burke's firm convictions and leadership capabilities will flourish wherever he goes.

I congratulate Archbishop Burke on his recent appointment to the position of the Prefect of the Supreme Tribunal of the Apostolic Signatura. It's my hope that St. Louis will always be a place he can call home.

Those of us who know him personally know him as a guileless man and a committed defender of truth. Very best wishes, Archbishop Burke, in your new position.

HOUSE DEMOCRATS PROTECT CHILDREN AND CONSUMERS WITH NEW LEGISLATION SCHEDULED FOR TODAY

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. SOLIS. Madam Speaker, the Consumers Union dubbed 2007 the Year of the Recall. This year, product recalls are happening at an even swifter rate. After dangerous toys led to injuries and deaths, the Democratic Congress worked hard to protect our children and families.

This week, will be bringing a final bill to the floor that will strengthen the Consumer Product Safety Commission and ensure that families are protected from dangerous toys. The legislation bans lead beyond small amounts in products intended for children under the age of 12 and prohibits the use of dangerous materials in children's toys.

The bill bans industry-sponsored travel by the Consumer Safety Commissioners and staff in order to eliminate any conflicts of interest. It also provides a significant budget increase for the CPSC so that it has the resources to test more toys. No longer will there only be one tester per toy.

Madam Speaker, let's protect our children today by once again passing legislation with strong bipartisan support.

HAPPY 90TH BIRTHDAY TO COE HAMLING

(Mr. PRICE of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PRICE of Georgia. Madam Speaker, today, I rise to honor a dear friend and a special American on the occasion of his 90th birthday. Worthy Coe Hamling was born on August 5, 1918, on the plains of South Dakota. Armed with nothing more than the dogged determination, rugged individualism, and an unbending family loyalty, forged by a birth attended only by his mother and God, Coe embodies the greatest qualities of America.

It was at Hamlin University in Minnesota where he met his loving wife of 66 years, Betty. His embrace of freedom, family, and the sanctity of every human being is balanced by his unyielding sense of responsibility and self-reliance.

Living in Roswell, Georgia, Coe proudly anchors a family of five children, ten grandchildren, and eight great grandchildren.

Madam Speaker, I know the entire House of Representatives joins me in extending a hearty, happy 90th birthday to Coe Hamling, an American treasure.

DEMOCRATS CONTINUE EFFORTS TO LOWER PRICES AT THE PUMP

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. While Americans suffer pain at the pump, Republicans and President Bush insist on the same old energy policies that put us on this dangerous path to record high gas prices. Instead of looking towards the past, Democrats have been exploring both immediate and long-term solutions to America's energy crisis.

To help consumers suffering right now, this House has passed legislation cracking down on price fixing and price gouging by retailers. We also forced the President to suspend sending oil to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. This week, House Democrats will bring a bill to the floor that will end rampant speculation that is driving up gas prices by closing the Enron loophole. These are all solutions that should help lower prices today.

But we have also passed landmark legislation that will lead to more efficient vehicles when we enacted the first new vehicle fuel efficiency standards in 32 years. These new standards will help drivers with up to $1,000 a year in gas when it's fully enacted.

Madam Speaker, House Democrats are proposing both short- and long-term solutions to high gas prices, and it's time for congressional Republicans to join us in our efforts.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Record votes on postponed questions will be taken later.

PROVIDING FOR EXTENSIONS OF CERTAIN AUTHORITIES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 6456) to provide for extensions of certain authorities of the Department of State, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 6456

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY FOR REEMPLOYMENT OF FOREIGN SERVICE ANNUITANTS.

Section 824(g)(2) of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4064(g)(2)) is amended by striking ''2008'' each place it appears and inserting ''2009''.

SEC. 2. INCLUSION OF UNITED STATES TERRITORIES AS ELIGIBLE FOR REST AND RECUPERATION TRAVEL FOR MEMBERS OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE.

The Foreign Service Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) in section 901(6)(B) (22 U.S.C. 4081(6)(B)), by inserting after ''United States'' the following: ''or its territories, including American Samoa, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the United States Virgin Islands''; and

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The legislation before the House today extends certain expiring authorities of the Department of State. A couple of examples. The bill continues the Department's ability to hire experienced retired officer to fill positions in Iraq or Afghanistan. This bill extends two broadcasting authorities, Radio Free Asia for an additional year and the authority to hire personal service contractors in the United States for specialized language and other skills, and several other technical provisions involving those authorities.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 6456, which provides stopgap extensions of certain important State Department and broadcasting authorities until the Committee on Foreign Affairs can take them up as part of a comprehensive authorization during the 111th Congress.

In response to administration requests, this brief bill does a number of things. It extends for another year the State Department's authority to hire retired Foreign Service officers for difficult-to-staff posts in Iraq and Afghanistan, and to address visa and passport processing backlogs.

It also extends authorities for Radio Free Asia, and for emergency broadcasting needs in the International Broadcasting Bureau and the Voice of America. It also makes clear that the State Department may pay the hotel expenses of its special agents on protective details in situations where agents are required to remain with their protectees overnight, even when that duty occurs in the agent's home locale.

Finally, it incorporates the text of H.R. 3658, the House-passed bill introduced by the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. FORTUÑO) to allow U.S. Foreign Service officers to take their rest and recuperative travel in U.S. territories. I urge support for this measure.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, has the gentleman yielded back his time?

Mr. CHABOT. If the gentleman has no further speakers, we have no further speakers either, and we will yield back.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield back.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6456, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMEMORATING IRENA SENDLER

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 361) commemorating Irena Sendler, a woman whose bravery saved the lives of thousands during the Holocaust and remembering her legacy of courage, selflessness, and hope.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The text of the concurrent resolution is as follows:

H. CON. RES. 361

Whereas on May 12, 2008, Irena Sendler, a living example of social justice, died at the age of 98;

Whereas Irena Sendler repeatedly risked her own life to rescue over 2,500 Jewish children in Poland's Warsaw ghetto from Nazi extermination during the Holocaust;

Whereas inspired by her father, a physician who spent his career treating poor Jewish patients, Irena Sendler dedicated her life to others;

Whereas Irena Sendler became an early activist at the start of World War II, heading the clandestine group Zegota and driving an underground movement that provided safe passage for Jews from the Warsaw ghetto, who were facing disease, execution, or deportation to concentration camps;

Whereas Irena Sendler became one of Zegota's most successful workers, taking charge of the children's division and using her senior position with the city's welfare department to gain access to and from the ghetto and build a network of allies to help ferry Jewish children from the Warsaw ghetto;

Whereas Irena Sendler was arrested by the Gestapo on October 20, 1943, tortured, and sentenced to death by firing squad;

Whereas Irena Sendler never revealed details of her contacts, escaped from Pawiak prison, and continued her invaluable work with Zegota;

Whereas in 1965, Irena Sendler was recognized as ''Righteous Among the Nations'' by the Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial in Israel;

Whereas in 2006, Irena Sendler was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize;

Whereas Irena Sendler was awarded the Order of the White Eagle, Poland's highest civilian decoration;

Whereas Irena Sendler's life has been chronicled in the documentary film, ''Tzedek: The Righteous'' and ''Life in a Jar'', a play about her rescue efforts;

Whereas Irena Sendler, a woman who risked everything for the lives of others and whose bravery is unimaginable to many of us, expressed guilt for not being able to do more for the Jewish people; and

Whereas Americans, as well as the world community, are reminded not only of the horrible cruelty at the time of the Holocaust, but also the incredible difference one person can make by knowing Irena Sendler's story: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Congress—

(1) mourns the loss of Irena Sendler, a woman whose bravery and heroic efforts saved over 2,500 Jewish children during the Holocaust;

(2) pays its respect and extends its condolences to the Sendler family;

(3) honors her legacy of courage, selflessness, and hope; and

(4) remembers the life of Irena Sendler for her heroic efforts to save over 2,500 Jewish children during the Holocaust, and for her unwavering dedication to justice and human rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, this measure has been brought to us by our colleague, the gentlelady from Chicago (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY). It notes the loss of a true humanitarian last May, with the passing of Irena Sendler, a Polish Catholic social worker who rescued 2,500 Jewish children from near certain death in the Warsaw Ghetto.

When it became clear to her that the Nazis planned to exterminate Poland's 1,000-year-old Jewish community, Ms. Sendler joined Zegota, the Council for Aid to Jews, an organization run by the Polish underground, committed to providing assistance and safe haven to the country's Jewish population.

Ms. Sendler became head of Zegota's children's department. Using her contacts from her days as a social worker, she placed thousands of Jewish children smuggled from the Warsaw Ghetto, often under Christianized names, in convents and orphanages to shelter them throughout the war.

These convents and orphanages were intended as temporary refuges, as Ms. Sendler recorded the actual names of these children on tissue paper. She stored those records in jars, buried them in her garden, in the hope that after the war, they would be reunited with their families.

In 1965, she was given the honor of being named Righteous Among the Nations by Israel's Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial. Her legacy of courage and hope until then was little known in Poland.

In 2003, Irena Sendler finally received the widespread recognition she so greatly deserved when she was awarded the Order of the White Eagle, Poland's highest civilian decoration, and in 2006, she was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize.

We all pay our respects and extend our condolences to the Sendler family.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The Holocaust was filled with unconscionable inhumanity and horrors and revealed the tremendous cruelty some human beings are capable of imposing on others. But there were exceptions. Within the darkness of the Holocaust, the story of Irena Sendler, who repeatedly risked her own life to rescue thousands of Jewish children in Poland from being murdered by the Nazis serves as an inspirational example of human bravery and selflessness and compassion.

House Concurrent Resolution 361 commemorates Irena Sendler, who passed away in May of this year. The resolution, among other things, notes that the United States Congress mourns the loss of this heroine and remembers her for saving the lives of thousands of Jewish children and for her courageous dedication to justice and human rights.

I support this resolution, and I want to thank the gentleman for his inspirational words. I urge my colleagues to do so as well.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield such time as she may consume to the author of the resolution, the gentlelady from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY).

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 361, a resolution I introduced commemorating Irena Sendler, a woman whose bravery saved the lives of thousands of children during the Holocaust, and remembering her legacy of courage, selflessness and hope. I want to thank Chairman BERMAN for his leadership in bringing this to the floor, and also Senator OBAMA for offering similar legislation in the Senate.

Irena Sendler lived her life by the standards of humanity that she learned from her parents. She once stated, ''I was taught that if you see a person drowning, you must jump into the water to save them, whether you can swim or not.''

Sendler was a 29-year-old Catholic employed by the City of Warsaw when the German invasion of Poland ushered in one of the darkest chapters in human history. Disguised as an infection-control nurse, she was able to enter the Warsaw Jewish ghetto to distribute supplies. In 1942, Sendler joined the newly formed underground organization Zegota, working to assist thousands of Jews who had survived mass deportations and were living in hiding.

Utilizing her contacts with orphanages, Sendler organized the rescue of Jewish children, smuggling some out in boxes and suitcases, leading others through secret passages and sewers. Children were hidden in Roman Catholic orphanages and convents, as well as private homes, under false identities. Sendler buried a jar with the true name of every child in a friend's garden in hopes of reuniting the children with their families after the war.

After she was arrested in October of 1943, Sendler refused to provide the list of names or the identity of her collaborators, even when she was tortured and sentenced to death. She was spared execution only because underground activists managed to bribe officials. After her release, Sendler was forced into hiding but she continued to work to rescue Jewish children. It is estimated that she rescued over 2,500 children.

She passed away in May of 2008 at the age of 98. I introduced this resolution with the hope that her legacy will inspire people to fight for human rights. Her heroic story reminds us that the actions of one person can make a real difference in this world.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution, pay tribute to Irena Sendler, and remind all of us to stand up against oppression and fight for those without a voice.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 361, a resolution I introduced commemorating Irena Sendler, a woman whose bravery saved the lives of thousands of children during the Holocaust, and remembering her legacy of courage, selflessness, and hope.

I would like to thank the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Congressman BERMAN, for his leadership in bringing this legislation to the floor today. I would also like to thank Senator OBAMA for offering similar legislation in the Senate.

Irena Sendler lived her life by the standards of compassion and humanity that she learned from her parents. She once stated, ''I was taught that if you see a person drowning, you must jump into the water to save them, whether you can swim or not.''

Sendler was a 29-year-old Polish Catholic, employed by the city of Warsaw as a social worker, when the German invasion of Poland ushered in one of the darkest chapters in human history. Jews were rounded up and crowded into the Warsaw ghetto, where poor hygiene and a lack of food and medical supplies led to the outbreak of disease. Sendler managed to pass herself off as an infection-control nurse, enabling her to enter the ghetto and distribute supplies, and she began to smuggle Jews out of the ghetto and into hiding. In 1942, the underground organization Council for the Aid of Jews, known as Zegota, was established following the deportation of 280,000 Jews from Warsaw to Treblinka. Sendler joined the organization, working to assist thousands of Jews who had survived the deportations and were living in hiding.

Working with Zegota, Sendler utilized her contacts with orphanages to rescue Jewish children. Young children were smuggled out in boxes and suitcases; older children were led through secret passages and sewers. Many of the children were sent to Roman Catholic orphanages and convents, while others were hidden in private homes. All were given false identities and non-Jewish names. Sendler buried a jar with the true names of every child in a friend's garden, in hopes of reuniting the children with their families after the war.

A mother herself, Sendler later recalled that the most difficult part of her work was to convince parents to give their children into her care. They would ask her if she could guarantee their survival, and she would respond that she could not, but she could guarantee that they would likely die if they stayed.

Irena Sendler was arrested by the Nazis in October 1943. She managed to hide critical information, including the addresses of the hidden children, before her capture. Although she endured torture and was sentenced to death, she refused to provide the location of the lists of names or the identity of her collaborators. She was spared execution only because other underground activists managed to bribe officials.

After her release, Sendler was forced to go into hiding, but she nevertheless continued to work to rescue Jewish children. Although the exact number of children she saved is unknown, it is widely estimated to be over 2,500. After the war, she unearthed the hidden lists and worked to reunite the children with their families. A large majority of the children had no surviving family members, and many were adopted by Polish families, while others were sent to Israel.

Irena Sendler's remarkable story garnered little attention after the war. She was recognized as Righteous Among the Nations by Israel's Yad Vashem on October 19, 1965, but her story was not widely known until 1999, when four high school students in Kansas wrote a play, Life in a Jar, based on her life. The play has since been performed across the United States, Canada, and Europe. In 2003, she was awarded the Order of the White Eagle, Poland's highest civilian decoration, and in 2007 she was honored by the Polish parliament, which unanimously approved a resolution honoring her for organizing the rescue of Jewish children. She was nominated for the 2007 Nobel Peace Prize.

Irena Sendler passed away in May 2008 at the age of 98. Even though her actions saved countless innocent children from a horrific death, she said that she always regretted being unable to do more.

In speaking about those non-Jews, like Irena Sendler, who risked their lives to save Jews during the Holocaust, Elie Weisel stated, ''In those times there was darkness everywhere. In heaven and on earth, all the gates of compassion seemed to have been closed. The killer killed and the Jews died and the outside world adopted an attitude either of complicity or of indifference. Only a few had the courage to care. These few men and women were vulnerable, afraid, helpless—what made them different from their fellow citizens? . . . Why were there so few?''

I introduced this resolution with the hope that Irena Sendler's legacy would help inspire people to fight for human rights and social justice. Her heroic story reminds us that the actions of one person can make a real difference in this world. As the Talmud teaches, ''whoever saves a life, it is considered as if he saved an entire world.'' There is no higher act of selflessness than to protect people who cannot defend themselves.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution, to pay tribute to Irena Sendler and to remind all of us to stand up against oppression and fight for those without a voice.

Mr. CHABOT. We will yield back the balance of our time.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 361.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

(7) affirms the statement in that declaration that any decision with respect to the membership of countries in NATO will be made through consensus, by members of NATO, and no country outside of NATO has a vote or veto with respect to such decisions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to support this resolution, which was introduced by my good friend, the ranking member of the Europe Subcommittee, ELTON GALLEGLY, the gentleman from California, a resolution that congratulates Albania and Croatia on receiving an invitation to begin accession talks with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and expresses support for further expansion of the alliance.

At the NATO summit held in Bucharest this past April, the alliance made notable progress on integrating the Balkans into this important Euro-Atlantic institution. Most significantly, NATO invited Albania and Croatia to begin accession talks. I was pleased to see that accession protocols were signed with both countries on July 9th.

These two countries, Albania and Croatia, have made remarkable progress in reforming their political institutions and strengthening their military capabilities in recent years. They will make important contributions to international security, as well as to the stability of Southeastern Europe.

NATO has also recognized the hard work and commitment demonstrated by other countries in the region. The alliance responded positively to a request from Montenegro and Bosnia and Herzegovina to intensify their engagement. Both countries have been active participants in NATO's Partnership for Peace program for the last 18 months and will begin an intensive dialogue with NATO on a wide range of political, military and financial issues.

NATO leaders also extended a hand of friendship to Serbia, inviting the country to similarly upgrade its engagement to Intensified Dialogue, even though Belgrade has yet to indicate its interest in enhanced cooperation at this stage.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 1266 congratulates the countries of Albania and Croatia on their recent invitation to join the NATO Alliance. Both countries have struggled to implement significant democratic and economic reforms over the past two decades. The invitations for these countries to join NATO are recognition of the progress that they have both made in spite of such obstacles.

This resolution also recognizes the importance of continued expansion of the NATO Alliance to include other European countries that may meet NATO's membership standards. The expansion of the alliance and the finalization of Membership Action Plans with countries that have not yet been invited to join NATO is a necessary next step for countries like Georgia and Ukraine, for example, that have not yet been invited to join NATO.

As this resolution notes, NATO's continued enlargement will strengthen security in the Euro-Atlantic region.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL).

Mr. PASCRELL. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 1266, a resolution congratulating Albania and Croatia on being invited to begin accession talks with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. I support this continuing enlargement of the alliance.

These nations have been preparing for NATO for 8 years and are undergoing a historic process. They have made important improvements in the areas of ethnic diversity, human rights, free market economic principles and the promotion of good neighborly relations. Their unique geo-strategic position will be an asset to NATO. I commend the governments of these deserving nations for this historic achievement.

However, it bears mentioning there were three nations being considered for NATO membership this year, Croatia, Albania, and Macedonia. Unfortunately, Macedonia's bid for NATO accession was blocked due to an ongoing dispute with another NATO member.

It is a shame that Macedonia, our steadfast ally who just this year committed to doubling its troop level in Iraq and has military serving in Afghanistan, was treated in this manner. I remember Macedonia took over 35,000 refugees, I was there at the time, as Milosevic tried to wipe out Kosovo.

Macedonia's strong and sincere commitment to transforming their country into one dedicated to the principles of free market economics, pluralistic democracy and the rule of law cannot be denied. The exclusion of Macedonia from NATO will only serve to diminish regional stability, which I think is what we want, and will discourage other developing democracies from making needed political, economic and military reforms.

Its omission was purely political. As a Member with both Macedonian and Greek constituents in my district, the 8th District of New Jersey, I have been involved in this dispute for a long time. I strongly belief we should be bringing nations together, not keeping them apart.

We are talking about objecting because of what Macedonia calls itself. Thomas Friedman has written about this time and time again. This is the 21st century. What are we doing to ourselves? This nation has responded every time the United States has asked, and yet we have accepted the denial. And the State Department agrees with my position.

Madam Speaker, I offer my sincere congratulations to Albania and Croatia on their achievement.

And I will tell you how far this went, Madam Speaker: The denial on the floor of the Senate, holding up the U.S. Ambassador to Macedonia, Philip Reeker, apparently because he was not talking enough ''pro-Greece.''

I am pro-Greece. I am pro-Macedonia. We cannot afford to have this happen, because we stand for the little guy, remember, the United States of America. Macedonia is a very small country, less than 2.5 million people. It doesn't have a great standing army.

I ask us not only to congratulate Croatia and Albania, but do everything in our power to make sure Macedonia sits at the table.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. GALLEGLY), the author of this resolution and also the ranking member and former chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on Europe.

(Mr. GALLEGLY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GALLEGLY. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res. 1266, a resolution I introduced that congratulates Albania and Croatia for the decision by NATO to invite these two countries to become full members of the alliance.

On April 3rd of this year, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization at its summit meeting in Bucharest invited Albania and Croatia to begin accession talks to join the organization. This decision was in recognition of wide-ranging political, economic and military reforms undertaken by these two aspiring members.

Both Albania and Croatia have made significant progress in establishing civilian control in their armed forces and ensuring those forces are closely integrated with the militaries of NATO members. Both have made substantial progress in holding free and fair elections, establishing democratic institutions and building their free market economies.

Regarding Albania, I want to single out the assistance of their military in three areas of operation: Albania's participation in the NATO-led peacekeeping mission in Bosnia; its contribution of 140 men to the NATO operations in Afghanistan; and the participation of Albanian Special Forces as part of the U.S.-led coalition in Iraq.

With respect to Croatia, it has been and continues to be a significant contributor to peacekeeping missions in Bosnia and Kosovo. In Afghanistan, Croatia has been a supporter of the NATO-led mission and in the past year has sharply increased their military forces in that country. In addition, Croatia has strongly backed international efforts in the areas of nonproliferation and the fight against illegal trafficking of weapons, drugs and persons.

I have traveled to Croatia on numerous occasions and can attest to the fact that the Croatians and Americans enjoy a close friendship based on common interests and common values. Today we enjoy the closest bilateral relationship with Croatia since the country achieved its independence in 1992.

Madam Speaker, Albania and Croatia are two strong allies that have shown that they are ready, willing and able to become full members of NATO. I urge the passage of H. Res. 1266, and also urge the Senate to move quickly to ratify amendments to the NATO treaty that would allow these two nations to join our most important international alliance.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Chicago (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY).

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 1266. I have a strong relationship with the Croatian-American community in my district, and I strongly support it.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. RADANOVICH), who is also the cochairman of the House Croatian Caucus.

Mr. RADANOVICH. I thank the gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from California, and also Mr. GALLEGLY for introducing this important statement in support of Croatia and Albania.

Over the last 17 years, we have seen the bilateral relationship between Croatia and the United States grow to the point where today Croatia stands as a steady and reliable friend in Southeast Europe and the Balkans. Exemplified by President Bush's successful trip there in April of this year, Croatia has become a true partner on a global scale. The U.S. and Croatia share joint efforts in the war against global terrorism, proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, and international organized crime, which represent the most dangerous threats to national and international security.

As an active contributor to NATO-led operations in Afghanistan, Croatia has already demonstrated itself willing and capable to assume responsibilities of NATO membership, and will prove to be an effective contributor to the collective defense and overall alliance mission. In total, Croatia currently participates in 17 international peacekeeping missions and is a current nonpermanent member of the United Nations Security Council.

As cochair of the Croatian Caucus, it has long been a goal of ours to see Croatia receive an invitation to join NATO, and I was pleased when the invitation to begin accession discussions came earlier this year. The government and the people of Croatia have worked very hard, and NATO has taken notice of their political, social, and military reforms. All Croatians and Croatian Americans deserve to feel true national pride in this accomplishment. I know that I speak for myself, my cochair Mr. VISCLOSKY, and other members of the Croatian Caucus when I say that we look forward to continuing to work with Croatia and their very capable embassy here in the United States on a variety of issues of mutual concern.

This is truly a great accomplishment for the nation of Croatia, and it is very appropriate that as a Congress we stand together to honor the accomplishments of our friend and ally. I thank all the Members who cosponsored this resolution and helped to bring it to the floor, and encourage my colleagues to join me today in honoring Croatia and Albania.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. POMEROY).

Mr. POMEROY. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of this resolution.

I am very pleased that Albania and Croatia were invited to join the alliance at the Bucharest summit in April of this year. Enlarging NATO has been hugely successful in advancing stability and cooperation among NATO's member states, and this invitation to Albania and Croatia to join the alliance is very welcome news.

Unfortunately, another friend and important ally, the Republic of Macedonia, was blocked from joining NATO at the Bucharest summit due to the objection of a single nation, Greece, over the official name of Macedonia. This is very disappointing.

Macedonia has made significant economic and political reforms. They have made a strong contribution to U.S.-led military missions. They have been deemed to be fully qualified to become a member of the alliance.

Greece is our long-time friend, our valued ally, but their refusal to allow Macedonia into NATO over a bilateral name dispute represents, to my belief, the first time NATO membership has been denied any country due to a bilateral dispute unrelated to strategic defense considerations of the alliance. This is a very troubling precedent. It sets the stage for what could be a pattern, where member states leverage their advantage to nonmember states seeking to get into NATO and try and extract any measure of bilateral concession, all occurring at the expense of the alliance.

I strongly support a quick and expedient resolution to the name dispute between Greece and Macedonia so that Macedonia can join Albania and Croatia in signing accession protocols with NATO. I commend the United States diplomat that has led the efforts to resolve this issue. Both Greece and Macedonia have expressed their resolution to continue to work on getting a breakthrough. I encourage their efforts and I urge them, these great countries, these important friends of ours, to rise above the temptation to exploit nationalist themes for domestic political advantage in each of their respective countries. Put that aside, rise above that for the good of the alliance. Resolve this issue and let Macedonia in.

The resolution before us commends Albania and commends Croatia for the beginning of the accession process. They deserve this commendation. Please support this resolution.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) for putting forward a very important resolution which celebrates the 40th anniversary of the Special Olympics and recognizes the lifelong achievements of one of America's great champions of compassion, Eunice Kennedy Shriver.

Mrs. Shriver's leadership in the worldwide effort to improve and enrich the lives of people with intellectual disabilities is unparalleled. Her work led to the creation of the Presidential Committee on Mental Retardation in the Kennedy administration. She also organized the first International Special Olympics Summer Games on July 20, 1968 in Chicago's Soldier Field. Since that day, Mrs. Shriver has built the Special Olympics into an organization with global reach which has enriched the lives of 2,500,000 athletes with intellectual disabilities in over 180 countries.

The Special World Games, like the Summer and Winter Olympics, are held every 4 years. And since 1988, they have been officially recognized by the International Olympic Committee. They are dedicated to empowering individuals with intellectual disabilities. These contests allow Special Olympians to enjoy the thrill of competition, to develop sportsmanship, self-esteem, and fellowship.

The oath of the Special Olympians is, ''Let me win. But if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt.'' The Special Olympians are indeed brave. I urge my colleagues to support this important resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would first like to also commend the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) for his leadership and his offering this particular resolution, and I also rise to support this resolution, H. Res. 1279, which recognizes the Special Olympics on its 40th anniversary.

On July 20, 1968, as was mentioned, Eunice Kennedy Shriver organized the first Special Olympic Summer Games, which took place at Soldier Field in Chicago. Since then, the Special Olympics has become one of the most prominent and celebrated sporting programs in the entire world. The Special Olympics today serves more than 2½ million people with intellectual disabilities.

These inspirational athletes work with more than 1 million volunteers and coaches worldwide, training year round for competition in both Summer and Winter Games. In more than 200 countries, the Special Olympics has shown that intellectual disabilities are no impediment to fun and healthy athletic competition. These athletes are supported by more than 18,000 dedicated volunteers.

In my own State, Special Olympics Ohio has approximately 200 local member organizations and over 18,000 athletes who are in training and competition. These organizations originate from county boards of MR/DD, public schools, developmental centers, parks and recreation departments, churches, and parent and community groups.

For the past 40 years, these games have empowered individuals with intellectual disabilities to become physically fit and have fun while engaging in sports training and competition.

As was indicated by the gentleman from California, and I think the quote again warrants stating, that like the gladiators of ancient Rome, Special Olympics athletes pledge, ''Let me win, but if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt.''

On this 40th anniversary, we congratulate these courageous athletes and wish the program many more years of continued success.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY), who is the author of this particular resolution. As I indicated before, he is also a member of the powerful Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. TERRY. I want to first say thank you to the chairman and ranking member for allowing this to come to the House floor in such a rapid manner. It is my pleasure to have authored this resolution in working with Special Olympics on their 40th anniversary.

In those 40 years since Mrs. Eunice Shriver dreamed of helping those with intellectual disabilities by having them compete as a part of letting them know that they can achieve and as part of their therapies, in those 40 years since her vision came to be, we have seen many with intellectual disabilities win and let them be better in that competition. I am also pleased that my community is hosting the International Special Olympics competition in 2010 between Omaha and Lincoln.

As my colleagues have stated, Special Olympics is an international nonprofit organization dedicated to the great cause of empowering individuals with intellectual disabilities to become physically fit, productive, and respected members of society through sports training and competition. Participation in Special Olympics' yearround sports training and athletic competition is open to anyone with intellectual disabilities ages 8 and older.

Currently there are 700,000 volunteers and 500,000 coaches worldwide that serve over 2.5 million people with intellectual disabilities by helping them participate in over 200 programs in 180 countries. It is important to note that Special Olympics would not exist today and could not have been created without the time, energy, commitment, and enthusiasm of many of its volunteers. As a grassroots organization, Special Olympics relies on volunteers at all levels of the movement to ensure that every athlete is offered a quality sports training and competition experience.

The athletes have choices of just about any sport you can think of, from winter sports, aquatics, badminton, basketball, track and field, snowboarding, sailing, table tennis, handball, racquetball, volleyball. It goes on and on and on.

The Special Olympics oath is inspirational to all and was originally spoken by gladiators entering the arena in ancient Rome: ''Let me win. But if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt.''

Madam Speaker, as a Member of Congress, I strive every day to live up to these words. Again, I am proud to be associated with this resolution and Special Olympics and urge its passage on the floor today. Again, I thank Mr. BERMAN and Mr. CHABOT for making sure that this arrived on the floor in such a rapid manner.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I have no other speakers and so I reserve my time.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 1279 to recognize and congratulate Special Olympics for 40 years of extraordinary service to individuals with intellectual disabilities.

Beyond giving 2.5 million athletes a chance to compete, it gives their families a way to involve their sons, daughters, brothers and sisters. A chance for them to cheer. A chance to coach. A chance to connect in a special way. A chance to see their family member be accepted and respected in their communities.

After 40 years, there are now millions of stories of courage in the Special Olympics, but one athlete who has taken the oath and that embodies this year's theme is LP Esquibel from Dodge City, Kansas. He is more than a fan of courage. He is courageous and because of his courage he was awarded the Most Inspirational Athlete award at the Summer Games this year. Cerebral Palsy kept him from walking until he was 5 years old, but it hasn't kept him from becoming a 13-year veteran of the Special Olympics. It also hasn't kept a smile from his face. From all accounts, LP is more than a great athlete in his events of basketball, shot put, and the 100-yard walk, he is an encouragement to his fellow teammates and helps them on the court.

It is stories like LP's that has sold me on the power and benefits of the Special Olympics. Since 2007, I have served as the Honorary Chairman for the Kansas Law Enforcement Torch Run. The Torch Run covers hundreds of miles throughout Kansas and raises thousands of dollars in support of Special Olympics programs. This year-round fundraiser and awareness initiative was implemented by former Wichita Police Chief Richard LaMunyon in 1981. It became an international event 3 years later in 1984 when Chief LaMunyon presented it to the International Association of Chiefs of Police. The Law Enforcement Torch Run is now the largest grass-roots fundraiser and public awareness vehicle for Special Olympics around the world.

It was an honor to help raise money this past summer to help send Kansas athletes to compete in China at the World Olympics. I enjoyed meeting them and hearing of their success.

Special Olympics does remarkable work, both in the State of Kansas and across the globe. I would like to commend the leaders and volunteers of Special Olympics for 40 years of outstanding service and wish them continued success in the future.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Madam Speaker, this year marks the 40th anniversary of the Special Olympics—an organization dedicated to providing individuals with intellectual disabilities an opportunity to train and compete in athletic events. Over 2.5 million individuals from across 180 countries participate in events held year-round.

As the world gathers in Beijing, China for this year's Summer Olympic Games, we should remember the 2007 Special Olympics World Summer Games that were held in Shanghai, China, in October 2007. This was only the second time the games have been held outside the United States and attracted over 7,000 athletes. From my home State of South Carolina, Special Olympics South Carolina sent four athletes—Diana Poiletman of Columbia, Eric Brown of Columbia, Jason Morrow of Spartanburg County, and Darlene Wycuff of Spartanburg County—who brought home an impressive total of 9 medals. These strong individuals embody the best of the human spirit and truly represent the words of the Special Olympics' motto: ''Let me win. But if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt.''

I wish to congratulate the millions of individuals who compete and participate in the Special Olympics. In particular, I want to recognize Anne Burke and Eunice Kennedy Shriver who founded the organization in 1968. Their dedication and tireless efforts on behalf of intellectually disabled men, women, and children around the world are truly remarkable. In South Carolina, Barry S. Coats, President and CEO of Special Olympics South Carolina and all his staff and volunteers should be commended for their wonderful work.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Madam Speaker, I wish to take a moment to recognize the 40th anniversary of the Special Olympics and, in particular, Chicago's role in the wonderful program. As some of you may know, the first Special Olympics were held in my congressional district, the 7th Congressional District in Illinois on Chicago's Soldier Field on July 20, 1968. The idea for this event originated in 1967 when Anne Burke, a recreation teacher from the Chicago Park District, proposed holding a citywide track meet for people with disabilities, modeled after the Olympics. She was encouraged to hand in the proposal to Eunice Kennedy Shriver at the Kennedy Foundation; she did. It was at Chicago's Soldier Field that Eunice Kennedy Shriver announced the formation of the Special Olympics. One thousand athletes attended the first games from 26 States and Canada. The inaugural ceremony started with the quote, ''Let me win, but if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt.'' These words came from the lips of the gladiators in ancient Rome and were wisely chosen by Kennedy Shriver to represent the goal of the Special Olympics.

Before the Special Olympics were started Eunice Shriver had already tried once to organize a camp that would help disabled children. This organization which started out with 35 boys was called Camp Shriver. It is amazing that something that started out with only 35 children has developed into the Special Olympics which now holds programs in more than 180 countries with more than 2.5 million athletes and counting. The Special Olympics is a program that allows people from all over the world, or most of it, to interact with one another. It is astonishing what can be achieved when someone has an idea. One idea can inspire people to do great things.

Congratulations to Special Olympics with its 40th anniversary. You have proven that great ideas give great outcomes. Thank you for making a difference and continue to inspire everyone.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, we have no further speakers and we yield back our time.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield back my time, Madam Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 1279.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

CALLING ON CHINA TO END HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES PRIOR TO THE OLYMPICS

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 1370) calling on the Government of the People's Republic of China to immediately end abuses of the human rights of its citizens, to cease repression of Tibetan and Uighur citizens, and to end its support for the Governments of Sudan and Burma to ensure that the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games take place in an atmosphere that honors the Olympic traditions of freedom and openness, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 1370

Whereas the relationship between the United States and the People's Republic of China is one of the most important and complex in global affairs;

Whereas in the context of this complex relationship, the promotion of human rights and political freedoms in the People's Republic of China is a central goal of United States foreign policy towards China;

Whereas increased protection and stronger guarantees of human rights and political freedoms in the People's Republic of China would improve the relationship between the United States and the People's Republic of China;

Whereas the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games will be held from August 8, 2008, through August 24, 2008;

Whereas the United States should continue to advance its policy goal of improved human rights and political freedoms in the People's Republic of China in the context of the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games;

Whereas all Olympic athletes deserve to participate in a competition that takes place in an atmosphere that honors the Olympic traditions of freedom and openness;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China committed to protect human rights, religious freedom, freedom of movement, and freedom of the press as part of its conditions for being named to host the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China issued temporary regulations promising foreign media representatives covering the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games that they could travel freely, with the exception of in the Tibet Autonomous Region, and did not require advance permission before interviewing Chinese citizens during the period of January 1, 2007, to October 18, 2008;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China has failed to abide by many provisions of those regulations and has restricted foreign media by—

(1) detaining 15 journalists in 2007 for activities permitted by the new regulations;

(2) refusing to allow foreign media representatives access to Tibetan areas of China, including those areas outside of the Tibet Autonomous Region covered by the pledge of free access, to report on the March 2008 protests and the Government of the People's Republic of China's violent crackdown against Tibetans in those areas; and

(3) interfering with foreign media representatives and their Chinese employees who were hired within China, such that 40 percent of foreign correspondents have reported government interference with their attempts to cover the news in China;

Whereas in advance of the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games, there are widespread reports that the Government of the People's Republic of China has refused to grant visas or entry to individuals because of their political views, beliefs, writings, association, religion, and ethnicity;

Whereas Chinese citizens and foreign visitors in China for the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games will not have free access to information if the Government of the People's Republic of China continues to engage in blocking of overseas websites and other forms of Internet filtering and censorship;

Whereas the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games will not take place in an atmosphere of freedom if the Government of the People's Republic of China continues to limit the freedoms of speech, press, religion, movement, association, and assembly of its citizens and visitors, including political dissidents, protesters, petitioners, the disabled, religious activists, minorities, the homeless, and other people it considers undesirable;

Whereas despite the Government of the People's Republic of China's repeated pledges to the international community that the prevention and treatment of HIV/AIDS are a national priority, HIV/AIDS activists and their organizations remain targets for repression and harassment by Chinese authorities;

Whereas in the period preceding the Olympics Games, Chinese security forces have detained, threatened, and harassed HIV/AIDS and hepatitis advocates; shut down conferences and meetings of Chinese and foreign HIV/AIDS experts; and closed AIDS organizations;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China continues to ignore its international commitments to refugee protection, as evidenced by film footage recording the shooting death of a Tibetan nun by Chinese border guards in October of 2006 and human rights groups' reports citing increased bounties offered for turning in North

Korean refugees in 2008 to discourage border-crossing prior to the Olympic Games;

Whereas workers in the People's Republic of China are often exposed to exploitative and unsafe working conditions, including excessive exposure to dangerous machinery and chemicals;

Whereas according to Amnesty International, some Chinese companies withhold wages from workers for months while retaining their ID cards to prevent them from securing other work and, in the city of Shenzhen alone, an average of 13 factory workers a day lose a finger or an arm, and every 4½ days a worker dies in a workplace accident;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China has increased its persecution of the Falun Gong prior to the Olympic Games;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China remains unwilling to invite His Holiness the Dalai Lama to China to hold direct talks on a resolution on the issue of Tibet, despite calls from the international community to do so before the Olympic Games;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China has had discussions with the representatives of the Dalai Lama, but has been unwilling to engage in substantive discussions on the future of Tibet and Tibetans in China;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China's continued economic and political support for foreign governments that commit gross human rights violations, including those of Sudan and Burma, contradicts the spirit of freedom and openness of the Olympic Games;

Whereas it is the desire of the House of Representatives that the People's Republic of China take the specific actions set forth herein so that the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games are successful and reflect positively on its host country;

Whereas the Chinese Government limits most women to having one child and strictly controls the reproductive lives of Chinese citizens by systematic means that include mandatory monitoring of women's reproductive cycles, mandatory contraception or sterilization, mandatory birth permits, coercive fines for failure to comply, forced abortion, and involuntary sterilization, and this coercive policy adversely affects Chinese women and has led to widespread sex-selective abortion; and

Whereas on June 26, 2008, the Congressional-Executive Commission on China published on its Web site a well-documented list of 734 political prisoners detained by the Government of China for exercising rights pertaining to peaceful assembly, freedom of religion, freedom of association, and free expression, which are rights guaranteed to them by China's law and Constitution, or by international law, or both: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to immediately end abuses of the human rights of its citizens, to cease repression of Tibetan and Uighur people, and to end its support for the Governments of Sudan and Burma to ensure that the Beijing 2008 Olympic Games take place in an atmosphere that honors the Olympic traditions of freedom and openness;

(2) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to immediately release all those imprisoned or detained for nonviolently exercising their political and religious rights and their right to free expression, such as Hu Jia, who have been imprisoned, detained, or harassed for seeking to hold China accountable to commitments to improve human rights conditions announced when bidding to host the Olympic Games, embodied in China's own laws and regulations, and in international agreements;

(5) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to guarantee freedom of movement within China during the period surrounding the Olympics for all visitors, participants, and journalists visiting China for the Olympics, and such freedom of movement should include the freedom to visit Tibet, Xinjiang, China's border regions, and all other areas of China without restriction and without special permits or advance notice;

(6) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to guarantee access to information by Chinese citizens and foreign visitors, including full access to domestic and overseas broadcasts, print media, and websites that in the past may have been excluded, censored, jammed, or blocked;

(8) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to end the exploitative and dangerous conditions faced by Chinese workers in many state enterprises and other commercial entities;

(9) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to begin earnest negotiations, without preconditions, directly with His Holiness the Dalai Lama or his representatives, on the future of Tibet to provide for a mutually agreeable solution that addresses the legitimate grievances of, and provides genuine autonomy for, the Tibetan people;

(10) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to end its political, economic, and military support for the Government of Sudan until the violent attacks in Darfur have ceased and the Sudanese Government has allowed for the full deployment of the United Nations-African Union Mission peacekeeping force in Darfur;

(11) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to end its political, economic, and military support for the Government of Burma until democracy is restored in Burma, human rights abuses have ceased, and Aung San Suu Kyi and other political prisoners of conscience are released;

(12) calls on the President to make a strong public statement on China's human rights situation prior to his departure to Beijing for the Olympic Games, to make a similar statement in Beijing and meet with the families of jailed prisoners of conscience, and to seek to visit Tibet and Xinjiang while in China to attend the Olympic Games;

(13) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to abandon its coercive population control policy which includes forced abortion and involuntary sterilization; and

(14) calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to review the political prisoner list published by the Congressional-Executive Commission on China with a view to releasing ill and aged prisoners on humanitarian grounds, and to releasing those imprisoned in violation of Chinese law or international human rights law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution and I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, despite commitments by Beijing to improve human and political rights in the run-up to the 2008 Summer Olympics, the situation has not improved and in some cases has become far worse. Likewise in the past few months, China's international behavior with respect to despicable regimes in Sudan and Burma has improved marginally at best. Beijing remains these countries' strongest supporter.

Because of China's failure to improve its record on supporting human rights at home and abroad, now is the time to call on China to take immediate, substantial and serious action if there is to be any hope that the Olympic games will take place in an atmosphere that honors the Olympic spirit of freedom and openness.

This resolution does just that. It is a direct call to China by the House of Representatives to end human rights abuses, honor its commitments for freedom of the press and freedom of movement ahead of the Olympics, permit peaceful political activities during the games, enter into direct discussions with the Dalai Lama over the future of Tibet, and end its political and economic support of the regimes in Sudan and Burma.

President Bush has decided to go to the Olympics opening ceremony. Whether one agrees or disagrees with his decision, it is clear that the President should not pass up this opportunity to make a strong statement in support of human rights, one of our central policy goals. This resolution calls on the President to make such a statement before and during his trip to Beijing for the games. It is important for the House of Representatives to speak with one voice on the issue of human rights and political freedoms in China ahead of the Olympics. I strongly support this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution which underscores Beijing's broken promise to the International Olympic Committee and the international community. When Beijing was awarded the 2008 Summer Olympics, China's leaders committed themselves to using this historic event as a catalyst to improve human rights for the citizens of the world's most populous nation. By all credible accounts, however, the human rights situation in China has not improved on the eve of the games. The Olympics has led China's draconian security forces to further crack down on dissidents and increase repression of minority groups. The glimmer of gold from Olympic medals in Beijing cannot conceal a tarnished record of Chinese official sponsorship of dictatorial regimes in Sudan, Burma and North Korea. The shine of silver cannot blind us to the fact that the Beijing regime continues its bloody suppression of minority groups, including the Tibetans. The brilliance of bronze cannot block out the repression of Falun Gong practitioners, Internet journalists, underground church believers and other political prisoners left to languish in the laogai forced labor camps and the vast prison system.

In a report issued just yesterday, Amnesty International affirmed that in the last year alone, thousands of dissidents, reformers and other independent voices were arrested as part of a campaign by Chinese authorities to ''clean up'' Beijing before the start of the Olympic games. According to the report, human rights activists have been targeted in other parts of the country as well, with many of those arrested and sentenced to manual labor without trial. Amnesty's report cites the case of one activist who was arrested earlier this month on charges of possessing state secrets, although it is believed that the arrest was prompted by his efforts to help the families of children killed in May's earthquake bring a legal case against local authorities.

Amnesty's deputy director in Asia said: ''By continuing to persecute and punish those who speak out for human rights, the Chinese authorities have lost sight of the promises they made when they were granted the games 7 years ago. The Chinese authorities are tarnishing the legacy of the games.'' I agree with what he said.

When it comes to the pursuit of democratic values and human rights, we remain a world divided with a dream unfulfilled for many in China and elsewhere. I urge my colleagues to join in sending the Chinese leadership a strong message.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to my colleague from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Speaker, I would like to thank Chairman BERMAN and Ranking Member CHABOT for the time and for their leadership on human rights issues as well as Ranking Member ROS-LEHTINEN. I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 1370.

In about a week, all eyes will turn to China. Athletes from around the world will converge on Beijing, except, it appears, seven of the 10 Iraqi athletes who are not allowed into the country for some reason. Many world leaders—such as British Prime Minister Gordon Brown and German Chancellor Angela Merkel—are taking a very bold step next week by boycotting the opening ceremonies. I am still hoping that our President will reconsider his decision to attend in light of China's poor human rights record. It's no secret, Madam Speaker, that China has long sought to sweep its human rights violations under the rug. With the help of western companies, the Chinese government blocks or scrubs Web sites that it deems as troublemakers. Sites like CNN and certain Google searches are being censored. Try looking up Tiananmen Square while in China. No pictures of the 1989 student protest, certainly not the iconic picture of one man facing down a tank. In fact today many students at Beijing University couldn't even identify the photo.

Madam Speaker, as Chair of the Workforce Protections Subcommittee, I'm especially concerned about the treatment of Chinese workers. We have learned that reeducation labor camps and dire working conditions are the norm, not the exception, in China. This year's Olympics offered China the opportunity to turn a corner, but instead China turned backward.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution and call on the President to stand up for human rights in China.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Africa and Global Health and a long-standing champion of human rights in China and around the world.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank my good friend for yielding. I thank the chairman for bringing this important resolution to the floor and thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) for his fine leadership and that of Ranking Member ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN.

A few years ago, Madam Speaker, Liu Jingmin, vice president of the Beijing Olympic bid committee, famously asserted that ''by allowing Beijing to host the games, you will help the development of human rights.'' At the time, the argument seemed plausible, at least to the naive, but in the long run-up to the Olympics the reality has been numbingly disappointing and yet another wake-up call concerning bogus promises made for political and financial gain by the Beijing dictatorship. The pre-Olympic crackdown on political dissidents and religious believers and the crushing of cyber-dissidents is yet another antithetical manifestation to everything that is sane, compassionate or just.

In recent months, the Chinese government has been filling its jails, house arresting, surveilling and warning all known dissidents. These men and women are persecuted simply because they seek to exercise fundamental human freedoms guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and ironically by the Chinese constitution itself. Tragically but predictably, the Olympics have been the occasion of a massive crackdown designed to silence and put beyond reach all those Chinese whose views differ from the government line. For so many brave Chinese men and women, for the Tibetans, many of them Buddhist monks and nuns, for members of Falun Gong, Chinese Christians, Uighur Muslims, democracy and labor activists and others, this has been a terrible summer, not in spite of but precisely because of the Olympic games. The fact is this is a reproach to the International Olympic Committee and to all those who believe in fundamental human rights.

As we meet here, right now in HC–7 several key human rights leaders, including the great Harry Wu and Wei Jingsheng, are speaking out against the atrocities committed with impunity by the government of China. I would note parenthetically that Wei was let out of prison—Wei, father of the Democracy Wall movement—simply to try to garner Olympics 2000. When the government didn't get that from the Olympic committee, they rearrested Wei Jingsheng and tortured him almost to death. That is the reality of the people we're dealing with.

In fact, let me just point out to my colleagues that any number of the Chinese government's human rights violations should have been a deal-stopper for the International Olympic Committee. Take the one-child-per-couple policy, Madam Speaker, with its attendant evils of forced abortion and rampant sex-selective abortion. In effect since 1979, the one-child-per-couple policy constitutes one of the gravest crimes against women and children in all of human history, and our resolution before us today has appropriate language condemning that atrocity.

The Chinese government massively violates Chinese women with a state policy of mandatory monitoring of all Chinese women's reproductive cycles, mandatory birth permits, mandatory contraception or sterilization, and ruinous fines up to 10 times the annual salary of both husband and wife if they don't comply with the one-child-per-couple policy. This policy has imposed unspeakable pain, violence, humiliation and degradation on hundreds of millions of Chinese women, many of whom suffer life-long depression as a direct consequence. It is no wonder more women commit suicide in China than anywhere else in the world.

As a direct result of this egregious human rights violation, tens of millions of girls are missing today, dead, due to sex-selective abortions, creating a huge gender disparity, a new dark manifestation of genocide which is perhaps more appropriately called gendercide.

The lost girls of China, and the estimates are between 50 to 100 million lost girls, murdered simply because they were girls.

Madam Speaker, 3 weeks ago, FRANK WOLF and I visited Beijing in order to press for respect of fundamental human rights. The Chinese Secret Police threatened eight human rights lawyers with whom we had planned to meet for dinner in a public restaurant and placed several of them under house arrest.

We did, let me conclude with this, present the Chinese government with a list of people, 734 prisoners, a short list by Chinese standards, of people who are advocating for democracy and freedom. And with the Olympics now underway, we ask again, let those people and all like-minded human rights activists who languish and are tortured in prison, please let them go.

The resolution is a great one, and deserves everyone's support.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I would like to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from the great State of Indiana (Mr. PENCE) who is the ranking member of the Subcommittee on the Middle East and South Asia.

Mr. PENCE. I thank the gentleman for yielding; thank him for his strong moral leadership on this issue. And I want to commend the ranking member and the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee for having the moral courage to bring this resolution to the House before Congress adjourns.

It is important that we speak truth to power. And with the 2008 Olympics in Beijing about to begin, it is important that the people of the United States be heard on our ideals, as athletes from around the globe and global media descend on China.

It is important that we say, as the late Tom Lantos, chairman of this committee, said in a hearing last year, a few months before his death, ''China is a police state.''

I personally believe that the selection of China as the site of the 2008 Olympic Games was a historic error. The Olympics is a symbol of the human spirit, and in that regard, a symbol of human freedom. And this police state, therefore, is precisely the wrong venue for a celebration of human dignity and the human spirit.

And so I commend to my colleagues support for H. Res. 1370. I am particularly grateful for the call on the government of the People's Republic of China to end abuses of human rights, to release those imprisoned for political and religious expression, and also challenging China to honor its commitment to freedom of the press of foreign reporters.

But I must say, while there is much talk in the media today about the crowd of smog hanging over Beijing as these games approach, let me say from my heart, the real cloud over the Beijing Olympics is the horror of forced abortion. And therefore, I am especially grateful to Congressman CHRIS SMITH, from whom we just heard, for adding an important amendment to this resolution noting that, whereas the Chinese government limits most women to having one child and strictly controls the reproductive lives of Chinese citizens by systematic means that include mandatory monitoring of women's reproductive cycles, mandatory sterilization and contraception, mandatory birth permits, coercive fines for failure to comply and the like, that this legislation will call on Congress to—excuse me—call on the People's Republic of China to immediately end the practice of forced abortion.

And make no mistake about it, China's policy requires that unpermitted babies be aborted. Article 25 of the Henan Province Population and Family Planning Regulations reads: ''Under any of the following conditions, necessary remedial measures shall be taken and pregnancy terminated under the guidance of family planning technical service workers: Pregnancy out of wedlock, pregnancy without a certificate, or where the party already has one child.''

In the committee, Madam Speaker, we heard the most horrific stories of these so-called family planning technical service workers literally breaking into homes, dragging women in their ninth month of pregnancies off to clinics, forcing abortions on them and, in one case after another, going to horrific means to ensure that the newly born child's life had been completely snuffed out. There is not time in this debate to recount those instances, but they are legion in China, and they are the result of heartbreak among tens of millions of that country of good and decent people.

And so I commend the chairman of this committee, Mr. BERMAN, for his leadership. I commend Mr. CHABOT for his leadership, and especially the gentleman from New Jersey, a leading voice for the sanctity of life in the United States of America, for ensuring that this legislation, this resolution comes before the Olympics, that we speak truth to power to the People's Republic of China; that here in the United States of America, the people of this country will say, with one voice, we believe in freedom and we believe in life, and we reject the policy of forced abortion in China, and urge them to do likewise at this time.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas, a former judge, Mr. POE, an esteemed member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the author of China-related resolutions, part of which were incorporated into this measure.

Mr. POE. Madam Speaker, I rise in total support of this resolution today. And I want to thank the chairman for including language from one of my proposals regarding worker exploitation to the bill being considered today.

Having been to China, I have seen firsthand how the Chinese government runs roughshod over its people and abuses their basic rights.

Earlier this year, Madam Speaker, I introduced a resolution condemning the government of China for not only its inhumane working conditions, but also for the exportation of unsafe goods like lead toys and pet food to the United States, and for the poor environmental policy that affects the entire globe. I hope the committee will soon consider the Chinese policy of exporting harmful products to the United States and other parts of the world.

However, the Olympic Games begin next week, and I believe it is critical to remind the government of China that it is a member of the world community, and the world is watching how China treats its citizens. China has a social and moral responsibility to provide basic rights to all of its citizens, especially in the workplace.

In June of 2007, it was discovered that hundreds of people, including women and small children, were forced to work in hot brick-making factories, suffering from brutal beatings and confinement equal to imprisonment.

According to Amnesty International, there are instances where Chinese companies withhold wages from the workers for months at a time, refuse to give them ID cards. Without an ID card, it prevents that worker from securing work someplace else.

In the city of Shenzhen alone, in an average day, 13 factory workers lose an arm or some other body member, and every 4 days a worker dies in a workplace accident. And Madam Speaker, this is just in one city in China.

I stand with the Chinese people who have been subjected to inhumane working conditions, and call on the government to end the dangerous conditions faced by these workers. If China expects to gain the respect of the global community, China must earn that respect from its own citizens first, and that requires reforming their inhumane working conditions and respecting basic human rights of their own people.

And once again, I want to thank the chairman for bringing this to the House floor.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield to the Speaker of the House, who came up with the idea for having this resolution at this particular time, our Speaker, NANCY PELOSI, for 1 minute.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments. I thank him for bringing this legislation, salute him and the ranking member of the committee, Congresswoman

ROS-LEHTINEN, for her ongoing persistent advocacy for human rights throughout the world. I thank you for you leadership as well, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. Chairman.

I rise today in strong support of this resolution calling on the Chinese government to end its human rights abuses in China and Tibet so that the Olympic Games can take place in an atmosphere that honors the Olympic traditions of freedom and openness.

I thank Chairman BERMAN again and Ranking Member ROS-LEHTINEN for bringing the resolution to the floor. With passage of this resolution, the House will speak with one voice about the conditions in China and Tibet on the eve of the Olympic Games.

Madam Speaker, the Olympic charter states that the Olympics should promote ''a peaceful society concerned with the preservation of human dignity.'' The reality is that human rights abuses committed by Chinese authorities are worsening in the weeks and months before the Olympics.

In exchange for the privilege of hosting the Olympic Games, the Chinese government made commitments on freedom of the press, human rights and on the environment. Many of these commitments have been violated repeatedly and blatantly. Both foreign and domestic journalists have been harassed, threatened and detained. Human rights defenders and activists have been arrested and imprisoned at an alarming rate in recent months.

The dialog between the Chinese government and the representatives of His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, have gone nowhere. Thousands of peaceful Tibetans still languish in prisons in the aftermath of the protest that began in March. Chinese authorities have stepped up the so-called ''patriotic education'' campaigns that require Tibetan Buddhists, regardless of their true thoughts, to publicly denounce the Dalai Lama.

The violations of human rights do not end on China's borders. On the international front, the Chinese government continues to support the genocidal regime in Sudan and the military junta in Burma. Their actions run counter to our interests of promoting peace, stability and morality in the world. The situation in the Sudan would change drastically if the Chinese government would cooperate at the U.N. and send that message to the Sudanese government.

It is in this context that President Bush is traveling to China to attend the Olympic Games. To my knowledge, a sitting President of the United States has never attended an Olympics on foreign soil. That gives the President tremendous leverage with the Chinese government as he gives them tremendous face by attending the opening ceremonies of the Olympics.

I have no objection to the President attending the Olympic Games. I do hope, though, that with all of the face, for lack of a better word, that the Chinese government will receive by his participation in the opening ceremony, that he will take the opportunity to use his leverage to speak very forcefully to the Chinese regime, not only about human rights in China and Tibet, of course that is a top priority, but also about the barriers to U.S. products going into China, about the dangers that are foisted upon our children and the American people by the lack of safety and the production of food.

It is important for the body to know, and I am sure others have made the point, that the President recently met with some advocates for human rights in China and Tibet. I was very proud that they had the opportunity to meet with the President in the White House, and I thank the President for doing that.

But shortly after the President had the meeting, two of these people were detained on the way to a meeting with our colleagues, Congressman SMITH and Congressman WOLF, FRANK WOLF of Virginia.

So the message has to be, I think, clear to the Chinese government. We have concerns about jobs. We have concerns about U.S. jobs fleeing to China without opening of their markets to our products. We have concerns about human rights in China and Tibet. We want to work with the Chinese government to fight global warming. There are areas where we can have a level of cooperation.

But if we give them that level of respect by having the President of the United States be at the opening ceremony of the Olympic Games, it is important for the President, when he is there, to deliver a strong message of concerns that we have in our country.

I hope that we can have a brilliant future with China. Mr. SMITH and Mr. WOLF and I have been trying for over 20 years, haven't we, been making this fight on human rights, as well as others in this body, and our dear friend, Mr. Lantos, as well.

They told us 19 years ago, at the time of Tiananmen Square, if only we would engage economically with China, then human rights would improve there, democratization would take place, markets would be open to our products. But that just really hasn't happened.

Here we are 19 years later. The Olympic Committee honored China by giving them the opportunity to host these Olympic Games. The President of the United States is honoring them by attending the opening ceremonies. It is very important that the opportunity afforded to China be met with responsible behavior on their part in terms of human rights in China and Tibet.

So I hope that the President will not miss the opportunity, that historic, that has wide-ranging consequences, and which will be viewed with such favorability should he deliver the message when he is there.

The President is well known for his support of freedom of religion. That is a commitment that he has made throughout the world, and it is one that I hope that he will carry with him to China as well.

With that, again, I thank the gentleman and Congresswoman ROS-LEHTINEN for bringing this to the floor.

I am very thrilled that the Congress of the United States will speak with one voice on this important subject. I know the struggle for human rights is a long one, but we did not expect the Olympics to result in a situation where they were worsened in China instead of improved, as was the promise.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I appreciate the Speaker's words relative to China. The Speaker has a very tough job, and with that job goes praise and criticism. I know many of us, including myself, have been critical of the Speaker for not allowing, for example, a vote on ANWR on the floor of this House and we certainly think that we ought to have that vote.

But I want to praise the Speaker on her speaking out when she was on a trip in India on a codel and she spoke out when the crackdown on Tibet was occurring, the scandalous, outrageous crackdown on Tibet was occurring. The Speaker spoke out, and I issued a press release and also a personal letter thanking her for speaking out on behalf of our country. I think it was the right thing for her to do, and I think it took a lot of courage for the Speaker of the House to actually speak out on behalf of Tibetans who are undergoing considerable civil rights, human rights abuses.

The fact is, there are still, according to a recent article, at least 1,000 Tibetans that are unaccounted for because of this crackdown by the PRC, by Communist China. This is a very serious issue, and I'm glad that we're taking up this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I continue to reserve my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I would like to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) who is the cochair of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus and who recently traveled to China.

Mr. WOLF. I thank the gentleman. I thank him for yielding.

I want to thank Mr. BERMAN and Congresswoman ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN and Mr. CHABOT for bringing the bill up.

I also want to thank President Bush for meeting yesterday with the dissidents, and I know they were probably passionate with him to explain how important it is to speak out.

I also want to second what Mr. CHABOT said about the Speaker. I appreciate Speaker PELOSI raising this issue on human rights and religious freedom in China. There is tremendous persecution. Catholic bishops are in jail. A large number of house church leaders are still in jail. As Mr. SMITH said, there is a list of 730 dissidents that we should advocate publicly for.

In the days during the Reagan administration, President Reagan would advocate publicly for names. That is very important. We know what they've done in Tibet in the Drapchi prison in the persecution of Tibetan monks and nuns. We know the Uighurs, Rebiya Kadeer, whose children have been arrested and are in jail as we now speak. They're plundering, beating the Falun Gong. And even in Flushing, New York, we believe—and the FBI is investigating—that the Chinese embassy was involved in a counter-demonstration beating of the Falun Gong in Flushing, New York. Not in Flushing, China, but in Flushing, New York.

We know of the labor camps, the laogais. We know what Harry Wu has told us of the labor camps that are still operating, and there are more labor camps in China today than there were gulags in the Soviet Union.

We know when the Speaker said, very accurately, the genocide in Darfur, the Chinese government is the number one supporter of the genocidal government in Khartoum. And as Mr. SMITH and Mr. PENCE said on the one-child policy on forced abortion, we know what they're doing.

What I would urge the administration to do and the President to do—I want to make sure we don't violate the rules and I speak to the Speaker—is to give a speech the way that President Reagan gave a speech at the Danilov Monastery. It was a very powerful speech. As Natan Sharansky said, when Ronald Reagan gave the speech in Orlando, Florida, where he called the Soviet Union the Evil Empire, it sent a message through the Perm. The prisoners in the Perm knew of what President Reagan was publicly speaking out and advocating for, and the people in the Perm and the people in jail knew when President Reagan gave the Danilov Monastery speech that he was speaking out.

So I would urge the President to give a Danilov Monastery/Evil Empire speech in China. Select a Catholic church or a house church or a university and boldly speak out. Keep in mind Reagan boldly spoke out and called the Soviet Union the Evil Empire, boldly spoke out in the Danilov Monastery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. CHABOT. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WOLF. I thank the gentleman.

Ronald Reagan spoke out both times very boldly. If you recall, at President Reagan's funeral, Gorbachev came and attended the funeral. You can do it in that way. So I urge the President.

I would also urge the committee to bring up Congressman SMITH's Global Online Freedom bill so we can send a message, because when we were there, we saw that sometimes some American companies are cooperating with the Chinese government using American technology to cooperate.

My closing comment, Madam Speaker, is that we urge the President to give a Ronald Reagan Danilov Monastery-type speech so that when he leaves China, it is clear to the dissidents who are in prison—because they will hear him—it is clear to the family members of those dissidents—because they will hear him—and it will be doubly clear, triply clear to the Chinese government that America and the President of the United States stands for freedom, and that must be done publicly.

Mr. PAUL. Madam Speaker, I rise in opposition to this resolution, which is yet another meaningless but provocative condemnation of China. It is this kind of jingoism that has led to such a low opinion of the United States abroad. Certainly I do not condone human rights abuses, wherever they may occur, but as Members of the U.S. House of Representatives we have no authority over the Chinese government. It is our constitutional responsibility to deal with abuses in our own country or those created abroad by our own foreign policies. Yet we are not debating a bill to close Guantanamo, where abuses have been documented. We are not debating a bill to withdraw from Iraq, where scores of innocents have been killed, injured, and abused due to our unprovoked attack on that country. We are not debating a bill to reverse the odious FISA bill passed recently which will result in extreme abuses of Americans by gutting the Fourth Amendment.

Instead of addressing these and scores of other pressing issues over which we do have authority, we prefer to spend our time criticizing a foreign government over which we have no authority and foreign domestic problems about which we have very little accurate information.

I do find it ironic that this resolution "calls on the Government of the People's Republic of China to begin earnest negotiations, without preconditions, directly with His Holiness the Dalai Lama or his representatives." For years U.S. policy has been that no meeting or negotiation could take place with Iran until certain preconditions are met by Iran. Among these is a demand that Iran cease uranium enrichment, which Iran has the right to do under the terms of the Non-Proliferation Treaty. It is little wonder why some claim that resolutions like this are hypocritical.

Instead of lecturing China, where I have no doubt there are problems as there are everywhere, I would suggest that we turn our attention to the very real threats in a United States where our civil liberties and human rights are being eroded on a steady basis. The Bible cautions against pointing out the speck in a neighbor's eye while ignoring the log in one's own. I suggest we contemplate this sound advice before bringing up such ill-conceived resolutions in the future.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time and urge strong support for this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 1370, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

EXPRESSING SUPPORT FOR THE UNITED NATIONS AFRICAN UNION MISSION IN DARFUR (UNAMID)

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 1351) expressing support for the United Nations African Union Mission in Darfur (UNAMID) and calling upon United Nations Member States and the international community to contribute the resources necessary to ensure the success of UNAMID, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 1351

Whereas on July 8, 2008, 7 peacekeepers serving under the United Nations/African Union Hybrid operation in Darfur (UNAMID) were killed and another 22 wounded, including 7 critically, while carrying out UNAMID operations in Sudan in an effort to bring stability and security to the region;

Whereas the attacks on July 8, 2008, were the latest, and most severe, in a string of attacks on UNAMID peacekeepers, which include an attack on June 30, 2008, when 38 peacekeepers were taken hostage by rebels and on April 9, 2008, when a UNAMID police officer was beaten and UNAMID vehicles hijacked;

Whereas on June 25, 2008, the United Nations announced that UNAMID lacked critical resources, including troops, police officers, and air transport, hindering UNAMID's effectiveness;

Whereas the United Nations announcement on June 25, 2008, restated concerns recognized in October 2007, that the shortage of resources could ''jeopardize its efforts to stabilize a region'';

Whereas on July 31, 2007, the United Nations Security Council unanimously adopted Resolution 1769 authorizing the deployment of 26,000 peacekeeping troops to the region;

Whereas on December 31, 2007, UNAMID formally assumed control of peacekeeping operations in Darfur, but did so with only approximately 9,000 troops and police on the ground, far short of the necessary levels;

Whereas since that time UNAMID efforts have been thwarted by the Sudanese regime and rebels, including by Khartoum's refusal to cooperate on issues such as the force composition, the authorization of night flights, communications, land access, and visas for staff, as well as its recent threats to force the complete withdrawal of the UNAMID mission;

Whereas government forces, militias, rebels, bandits, and others continue to prey upon the people of Darfur and humanitarian workers, increasing the urgency of both deploying the full complement of peacekeepers and police and reaching a lasting political settlement;

Whereas following attacks on its supply trucks, the World Food Program announced a 50 percent cut in urgently needed food rations in Darfur, despite a United Nations assessment that revealed that acute malnutrition in Darfur increased in 2007, exceeding emergency levels in some regions;

Whereas UNAMID has been hampered not only by obstruction on the part of the regime in Khartoum, but also by the failure of the international community to commit the resources, equipment, aviation and transportation assets, and personnel needed to carry out the peacekeeping mission;

Whereas UNAMID requires the 26,000 troops authorized by United Nations Security Council Resolution 1769 and at least 18 utility helicopters and 6 tactical helicopters and crews, among other critical mobility needs that have not been met;

Whereas in a report to the Security Council dated December 24, 2007, the Secretary-General said these helicopters were indispensable and necessary for large distances and rough terrain, and stated, ''Without the missing helicopters, this mobility—a fundamental requirement for the implementation of the UNAMID mandate—will not be possible'';

Whereas a large number of countries possess the military assets that could help to fulfill this requirement;

Whereas the United States continues to lead the world in its contributions to efforts to end the genocide in Darfur, including by providing more than $4.5 billion of assistance since 2004 in response to the Darfur crisis;

Whereas continued failure on the part of the international community to take all steps necessary to generate, deploy, and maintain an effective United Nations and African Union joint peacekeeping force will contribute to the continued loss of life and further degradation of humanitarian infrastructure in Darfur; and

Whereas the success of the mission is dependant upon the support and contributions of Member States and the international community, including by providing the helicopters needed to meet UNAMID's critical mobility capabilities, as well as the will of the parties to the conflict to find a lasting, inclusive, political solution to the crisis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) condemns in the strongest terms the attack on the United Nations/African Union Hybrid operation in Darfur (UNAMID) peacekeepers and expresses its condolences to the people of Rwanda, Ghana, and Uganda, and to the families and friends of those killed and wounded;

(2) calls for the parties responsible for these heinous attacks to be brought to justice;

(3) expresses its commitment to the Darfuri people;

(4) expresses support for UNAMID and the UNAMID peacekeepers;

(5) deplores the efforts of the regime in Khartoum to manipulate and obstruct the deployment of a credible peacekeeping force, including the recent threats by Khartoum to force the complete withdrawal of the mission;

(6) urges the President to continue to personally intervene by contacting other heads of government and asking them to contribute the aircraft and crews for the Darfur mission;

(7) urges the Department of State to organize a special meeting of the United Nations Security Council, the Friends of UNAMID working group, and the United Nations Department of Peacekeeping Operations to resolve outstanding force resource and equipment issues;

(8) urges the members of the international community, including the United States, to contribute the resources necessary to ensure the success of UNAMID, including tactical and utility helicopters; and

(9) calls upon the parties to the conflict in Darfur to immediately commit to and respect a binding cessations of hostilities agreement and seize upon the opportunity that has been afforded by the deployment of UNAMID to find a political solution to the crisis in Darfur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I first want to thank Congressman STEVE CHABOT for introducing this resolution which expresses the outrage of Congress towards recent attacks on the peacekeeping forces in Darfur and for the shameful lack of resources still experienced by these brave shoulders trying to protect innocent civilians.

On July 8, just 3 weeks ago, seven peacekeepers serving under the United Nations African Union Mission in Darfur were killed and another 22 wounded while carrying out UNAMID operations in Sudan. These operations are designed to bring stability and security to the region. One week later, a Nigerian peacekeeper was shot and killed by militiamen while on patrol in Western Darfur.

This recent violence sponsored by the Sudanese Government and targeting UNAMID forces is one more justification for the recent indictment of Sudanese President Al-Bashir as commander-in-chief of his armed forces.

A shameful part of Darfur's unrelenting nightmare has been the failure of the international community to make available to UNAMID the resources, equipment, aviation, and transportation assets and personnel needed to carry out the peacekeeping mission. UNAMID requires the 26,000 troops authorized by the U.N. Security Council and at least 18 utility helicopters and six tactical helicopters and crews. These needs have not been met.

Years ago, Congress and the President declared the crisis in Darfur a genocide. As a result, we have a moral duty to commit sufficient resources to protect civilians in Darfur. The President and the Secretary of Defense must marshal U.S. Defense Department assets, including helicopters, and immediately deploy them to UNAMID.

Madam Speaker, I strongly support this measure.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong support of this resolution, H. Res. 1351. I would like to also thank the distinguished gentleman from California, the chair of the Foreign Affairs Committee, for his support and his leadership on this, as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CAPUANO) for his leadership and their hard work in making this resolution possible. I also want to thank Ranking Member ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN from Florida for her support.

Each day that passes without the full support of the international community for the U.N.'s peacekeeping mission in Darfur is another day that these innocent people, and now the peacekeepers assigned to protect them, have to live in fear.

Last year I had the opportunity to travel to Darfur with Congresswoman SHEILA JACKSON-LEE of Texas and Congressman ADRIAN SMITH of Nebraska to witness firsthand the devastation of this region. The refugees with whom we met, mostly women and children in the refugee camps, described harrowing experiences of escape from the Janjaweed and the Sudanese Government. They're descriptions that I will never forget. Many of these women had been raped. Many of their husbands, brothers, sons, and fathers had been brutally murdered.

We met with them in refugee camps in Darfur just weeks following the unanimous decision by the United Nations Security Council to deploy 26,000 peacekeepers to the region. Yet progress in Darfur has been jeopardized, as H. Res. 1351 points out. Almost a year since Security Resolution 1769 passed, the mission lacks more than 16,000 troops and police officers as well as essential communications equipment and helicopters. That's one of the things that they need the most, all of which are critical to the mission's success.

The skeleton mission has been met with continued roadblocks from the Sudanese government which has thwarted it at every step, refusing to cooperate on the composition of the hybrid force, refusing to authorize night flights, refusing to issue visas for necessary staff, or to provide access to certain areas.

The lack of international support for the mission and the opposition that it faces in the region has and continues to compromise the ability of UNAMID peacekeepers to secure the region—not only leaving the Darfuri people vulnerable to continued attacks but now the peacekeepers assigned to protect them.

As the chairman indicated, back on July 8 of this year, this month, a couple of weeks ago, the world witnessed the deadliest attacks yet on our peacekeeping mission which resulted in seven deaths and 22 wounded. On July 16, another peacekeeper from Nigeria was attacked and killed. These attacks come on the heels of pleas from the U.N. that shortages of resources could ''jeopardize its efforts to stabilize the region.'' U.N. member nations and the rest of the international community must not sit idly by and watch the mission in Darfur fail at the expense of the millions of innocent people who have already survived one genocide.

I think it is important to note that while the United States is often criticized for not doing enough, $4 billion or 72 percent—let me repeat that, 72 percent—of the cost of peacekeeping, development, reconstruction, and humanitarian efforts in Darfur have been paid for by the United States. So 72 percent is being funded by the American taxpayers. It is past time for our European allies, and especially the wealthy Arab countries, to assist in this effort.

If we're paying 72 percent, I think you have to consider that we're sending literally hundreds of billions of dollars now to the Middle East, the wealthy oil countries there. And most of the people that have suffered in the Darfur region are Muslims, and the Arab countries have done little or nothing, many of them, despite the fact that we have hundreds of millions of dollars going over there for their oil revenues.

And so, rather than building another expensive hotel or buying another yacht or some other luxury item, some of these dollars ought to be diverted to the poor people in Darfur, perhaps to buy some helicopters so that we can get the U.N. troops in to help these people that have, as I indicated, already survived one genocide and are essentially in the middle of another if the world doesn't act.

So, for those who criticize the United States for doing enough—and yes, we always should do more—remember, we're supporting 72 percent of the effort there. The rest of the world is providing the other 28 percent. And let's urge, to the extent that we're able, those wealthy Arab oil countries to foot a fair portion of the bill to help out in this effort.

And I urge my colleagues to support this critical mission by supporting H. Res. 1351.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to acknowledge the contribution not only of Mr. CHABOT in offering this resolution but of our colleague Mr. CAPUANO, the gentleman from Massachusetts, whose own resolution, a great deal of the language in that was incorporated into this resolution. And it is truly a collaborative effort, and I wanted to thank him as well.

I have no further speakers at this time, and so I reserve the balance of our time.

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), who's the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Africa and Global Health. He's been a long-time, strong advocate for the people of Darfur and somebody that I consulted with, along with Mr. WOLF, before I went over there to get advice from people that had been there and knew the best way to spend our time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to thank Mr. CHABOT for authoring this very important and very timely resolution.

I rise in support of H. Res. 1351, which condemns the July 8, 2008, attack on UNAMID peacekeepers deployed in Darfur, Sudan, and expresses the support of Congress for this critical mission. According to the United Nations, seven peacekeepers were killed and an additional 22 were wounded when their patrol was ambushed by unidentified assailants utilizing 40 vehicles mounted with heavy machine guns and anti-aircraft weapons.

This is the worst attack against the A.U. mission since it first deployed in July of 2004. Unfortunately, it does not appear to be the last.

Given continued deterioration of security in Darfur and the upsurge in deliberate attacks against humanitarian and peacekeeping operations, it is now more critical than ever to ensure that the U.N. peacekeeping mission is properly equipped.

I would note parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, that I've been to Darfur. I've met with the A.U., African Union, troops before it came under the blue helmet auspices, and I was shocked and dismayed during my visit there how underpaid, how they lacked needed materiel, the command-and-control equipment was lacking even then. And now, regrettably, to discover or to find out that there are huge gaps in their capabilities because that has not been provided by the international community is unconscionable. They lack critical air assets, armored personnel carriers, and even the pilots to fly the helicopters.

Anyone who has been in Darfur knows how hard it is to move across that terrain. There are huge gaping potholes. They are not even potholes—it looks like craters on the moon—moving from one place to the next. And if there's a torrential rain, bridges and roads are often completely washed out.

And obviously, it is very difficult to get the critical resources to the camps—and I've been to two of those camps, Mr. Speaker, Mukjar and the Kalma camp. And again, if it wasn't for the U.S., as Mr. CHABOT pointed out, it is the U.S. and the generosity of the U.S. taxpayers that contribute most of the food and most of the medicine that is utilized by those beleaguered refugees.

I, again, want to thank him for his leadership in bringing this newest concern which needs to be reiterated over and over again. We have to make sure that those troops have the capability, have the wherewithal to carry on this battle with those who would subjugate and hurt and kill the Darfurians.

Responsible nations must come together and do everything we can to end the violence and restore peace to Darfur. You know, just because it's not on the front burner and it's not in the news media the way it was for a while doesn't mean that the issue has gone away. If anything, it has actually gotten worse in many aspects.

Finally, I'm one of those Members of Congress who actually met with General Bashir, the dictator to Sudan, in Khartoum. We had a very contentious meeting. He was denying that these kinds of atrocities are actually going on, and all he wanted to do was lift the embargo that the United States Government, through the work of Congress in a bipartisan way, had imposed upon Sudan. That's all he wanted to talk about. I wanted to talk about the atrocities and the ending of those atrocities.

Well, now we know the chief prosecutor of the War Crimes Tribunal at the Hague has asked for an indictment against Bashir. So he will join, in a very similar fashion, Joseph Coney and Charles Taylor, who is being held to account by the tribunal in Sierra Leon, for the crimes that he and like-minded individuals have committed.

We've got to send the message unmistakably by backing this U.N. force and by doing everything humanly possible to bring the perpetrators of these crimes to justice that ''never again'' will mean never again. We keep saying that, and genocide just keeps going from one part of the world to another. And certainly, the Darfurians are suffering genocide today.

In line with what we just discussed about the Olympics resolution, the Chinese Government, Mr. Speaker—and it's not necessarily in this resolution but it's germane to the issue—the Chinese Government has enabled the dictatorship in Sudan to carry on the atrocities in Darfur by providing the materiel so that the Government and the troops have the guns and the helicopters to strafe and kill and maim in Darfur.

Let's not forget, 2 million people died in southern Sudan with the full complicity of the Chinese dictatorship, and now upwards of 450,000—the high estimate, some put it at a lower number—have been killed and over 2 million made homeless in Darfur as a direct result of the Chinese enabling and facilitation of this terrible series of atrocities.

Again, at the minimum, the African Union troops that have put their lives on the line need to have the support, they need to have the guns, the ammunition and the air lift capabilities and all the other assets in order to carry on their mission.

Again, I thank Mr. CHABOT.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and so I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) who's been a long-time leader in world human rights issues over his career.

Mr. SHAYS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleagues for introducing this resolution.

It is a pretty stunning to think that the United States, with all its obligations around the world, has to step into the void and provide 70 percent of all the funding, in spite of the fact that Europe has a gross domestic product basically equal to the United States and a population greater than the United States.

Given that Europe isn't doing the heavy lifting it needs to do in Afghanistan and wants nothing to do with Iraq, you would think at least in Darfur Europe would say we should provide far more assistance.

And what about wealthy Middle East countries that would have the capacity in a heartbeat to provide all the money necessary, why aren't they stepping in as well?

In my only visit to Darfur, I get down on my knees in gratitude to the nongovernment organizations that are there to distribute the food, paid for in large measure by the United States; providing education to young people so when they can eventually go back to their homes they will not have lost 3, 4, or 5 years.

This is genocide in Darfur. Europe doesn't want to acknowledge it. The United Nations wants to be silent about it, but this is the wiping out of people.

We need to be there providing the assistance for domestic help, the financial aid that needs to be provided for not just food and education but for the troops who are trying to maintain security. I appreciate that Africa is waking up to this need, willing to send more troops, but they need the equipment to make sure that they can do the job they have to do.

This is a human tragedy of gigantic proportions. I appreciate those in the United States, particularly in our universities, that have been pushing this issue, and frankly, many in the Jewish community who have stepped up and said ''never again'' applies to what happens in Africa.

The world community needs to wake up and do more. The United States can't do everything.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 1351, a resolution expressing support for the United Nations African Union Mission in Darfur, UNAMID, and calling upon United Nations Member States and the international community to contribute the resources necessary to ensure the success of UNAMID.

The attack on the UNAMID peacekeepers is deplorable and I want to express my condolences to the family and friends of those killed and wounded.

Resolving the crisis in Darfur must be one of our Nation's highest priorities.

The world collectively agreed to ''never again'' allow genocide after the 1994 mass murders in Rwanda.

Tragically, genocide is again taking place.

I believe the United States must take all reasonable steps to end the killing, including pressuring others in the international community to do more.

The security, human rights and humanitarian situation in Darfur has continued to deteriorate since the Darfur Peace Agreement was signed in May 2006.

We must do a better job supporting the mission of the UNAMID who, despite being critically under-funded and under-equipped, are serving an important role in protecting.

It is also hugely important we continue to provide humanitarian assistance to the Darfuri people.

I will continue to advocate for tough sanctions, humanitarian aid, and for an international peacekeeping force that can effectively stop the violence.

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to wrap up. I will be brief.

One of the previous resolutions that we had talked about China and the human rights abuses that have occurred, and they're just having the Olympics coming up. And the fact is, it hasn't been mentioned yet in this particular debate, but China has played a particularly unhelpful role, quite frankly, in Darfur and Sudan. They have been very much involved behind the scenes, particularly with respect to oil interests in Darfur and have made it possible for the government in Darfur to continue to flaunt world opinion, who basically has been indicating to the Sudanese Government you need to cooperate here. This is an embarrassment to the whole world, how people in Darfur are being treated. It makes you, the Sudanese Government, look bad; why don't you get with the program, reform, cooperate, and help these people.

Unfortunately, again, China who has considerable influence that it could act upon if it chose to do so, has, in some minor instances, been somewhat helpful but for the most part has failed to step up to the plate and actually put pressure on the Sudanese Government to do something finally about Darfur.

So I would strongly urge, once again, that China, in this particular instance, do the right thing, put pressure on the Sudanese Government to do something to relieve the terrible conditions that the people of Darfur have suffered under, whether it's genocide, whether it's literally starvation in some instances. China, do what's right and help the people of Darfur.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of this measure, I rise in support of H. Res. 1351. In 2004, I led the first congressional delegation to Darfur with Senator SAM BROWNBACK, and witnessed the nightmare there first hand.

In July 2007 the United Nations' Security Council passed resolution 1769 which authorized a joint African Union/United Nations Hybrid operation in Darfur to take necessary actions to support the Darfur Peace Agreement and to protect its personnel and civilians. However, to date, only 10,000 of the 26,000 peacekeeping troops authorized by resolution 1769 have been deployed. They are in desperate need of proper equipment and air transportation and have increasingly become subject to attack by various rebel groups.

It has been widely acknowledged in the international community that these troops do not have the necessary resources to effectively carry out their mandate. On July 8, seven UNAMID peacekeepers were killed and 22 were wounded in a rebel ambush in the northern region of Darfur. The peacekeepers on the ground in Darfur have become demoralized by the impossible conditions on the ground.

I am pleased to support H. Res. 1351 and reaffirm the commitment of the United States of America to the people of Darfur and the peacekeepers who are putting their lives on the line to protect them.

Mr. CHABOT. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SERRANO). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 1351, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: ''Resolution expressing support for the United Nations/African Union Hybrid operation in Darfur (UNAMID) and calling upon United Nations Member States and the international community to contribute the resources necessary to ensure the success of UNAMID, including troops and essential tactical and utility helicopters.''.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONDEMNING THE PERSECUTION OF BAHA'IS IN IRAN

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 1008) condemning the persecution of Baha'is in Iran, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows:

H. RES. 1008

Whereas in 1982, 1984, 1988, 1990, 1992, 1994, 1996, 2000, and 2006, Congress declared that it deplored the religious persecution by the Government of Iran of the Bahá'í community and would hold the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all Iranian nationals, including members of the Bahá'í faith;

Whereas on March 20, 2006, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, Asma Jahangir, revealed the existence of a confidential letter dated October 29, 2005, from the chairman of the command headquarters of Iran's Armed Forces to the Ministry of Information, the Revolutionary Guard, and the police force, stating the Supreme Leader, Ayatollah Khamenei, instructed the command headquarters to identify members of the Bahá'í faith in Iran and monitor their activities;

Whereas the United Nations Special Rapporteur expressed ''grave concern and apprehension'' about the implications of this letter for the safety of the Bahá'í community;

Whereas in May 2006, 54 Bahá'ís were arrested in Shiraz and held for several days without trial in the largest roundup of Bahá'ís since the 1980s;

Whereas in August 2006, the Iranian Ministry of the Interior ordered provincial officials to ''cautiously and carefully monitor and manage'' all Bahá'í social activities;

Whereas in 2006, the Central Security Office of Iran's Ministry of Science, Research, and Technology ordered 81 Iranian universities to expel any student discovered to be a Bahá'í;

Whereas in November 2006, a letter issued by Payame Noor University stated that it is Iranian policy to prevent Bahá'ís from enrolling in universities and to expel Bahá'í upon discovery;

Whereas in 2007, more than two-thirds of the Bahá'ís enrolled in universities were expelled upon identification as a Bahá'í;

Whereas in February 2007, police in Tehran and surrounding towns entered Bahá'í homes and businesses to collect details on family members;

Whereas in April 2007, the Iranian Public Intelligence and Security Force ordered 25 industries to deny business licences to Bahá'ís;

Whereas in 2006 and 2007, the Iranian Ministry of Information pressured employers to fire Bahá'í employees and instructed banks to refuse to provide loans to Bahá'í-owned businesses;

Whereas in July 2007, a Bahá'í cemetery was destroyed by earthmoving equipment in Yazd, and in September 2007, a Bahá'í cemetery was bulldozed outside of Najafabad, erasing the memory of those Iranian citizens;

Whereas in November 2007, the Iranian Ministry of Information in Shiraz detained Bahá'ís Ms. Raha Sabet, 33; Mr. Sasan Taqva, 32; and Ms. Haleh Roohi, 29, for educating underprivileged children;

Whereas Mr. Taqva reportedly was detained while suffering from an injured leg which required medical attention;

Whereas on January 23, 2008, the State Department released a statement urging the Iranian regime to release all individuals held without due process and a fair trial, including the 3 young Bahá'ís being held in an Iranian Ministry of Intelligence detention center in Shiraz;

Whereas in March and May of 2008, Iranian intelligence officials in Mashhad and Tehran arrested and imprisoned Mrs. Fariba Kamalabadi, Mr. Jamaloddin Khanjani, Mr. Afif Naeimi, Mr. Saeid Rezaie, Mr. Behrouz Tavakkoli, Mrs. Mahvash Sabet, and Mr. Vahid Tizfahm, the members of the coordinating group for the Bahá'í community in Iran;

Whereas those seven individuals remain imprisoned without charge;

Whereas the Government of Iran is party to the International Covenants on Human Rights; and

Whereas in December 2007, the Iranian Parliament published a draft Islamic penal code, which violates Iran's commitment under the International Covenants on Human Rights by requiring the death penalty for ''apostates'', a term applied to Bahá'ís and any convert from Islam: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) condemns the Government of Iran for its state-sponsored persecution of Bahá'ís, calls on the Government of Iran to immediately cease activities aimed at the repression of the Iranian Bahá'í community, and continues to hold the Government of Iran responsible for upholding all the rights of its nationals, including members of the Bahá'í community;

(2) condemns the Government of Iran's continued imprisonment of individuals without due process and a fair trial;

(3) calls on the Government of Iran to immediately release 10 Bahá'ís: Ms. Raha Sabet, Mr. Sasan Taqva, Ms. Haleh Roohi, Mrs. Fariba Kamalabadi, Mr. Jamaloddin Khanjani, Mr. Afif Naeimi, Mr. Saeid Rezaie, Mr. Behrouz Tavakkoli, Mrs. Mahvash Sabet, and Mr. Vahid Tizfahm; and

(4) calls on the Government of Iran and the Iranian Parliament to reject a draft Islamic penal code, which violates Iran's commitments under the International Covenants on Human Rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first let me thank our colleague, MARK KIRK, for introducing this important resolution.

The Baha'i community in Iran certainly is no stranger to severe government persecution. But as a result of arrests in March and May of 2008, the entire national leadership of the Iranian Baha'i community is now being held incommunicado.

The May arrests are the most direct action taken against Baha'i leadership in Iran since the early 1980s, when the Iranian Government abducted and executed the entire leadership of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is. In 1983, all formal Baha'i administrative institutions were outlawed.

In the past 4 years, 166 Baha'is have been arrested in Iran. Among the charges brought against them is ''creating anxiety in the minds of the public and those of the Iranian officials.''

Conditions for the Baha'i in Iran are deteriorating, including an upsurge in violent attacks, the destruction of property, the demolition of homes, and arson. Ministry of Intelligence officers and agents continue to summon, arbitrarily detain, and interrogate Baha'is about all aspects of their lives and about any Muslims who may participate in Baha'i activities.

The resolution before the House calls on the Government of Iran to immediately and unconditionally release Baha'is imprisoned as a result of their religion, and to cease its systematic persecution of the Baha'i community. It sends a strong signal that Congress will continue to watch closely the treatment of the Baha'i people in Iran.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 1008, which condemns the Iranian Government's continuing persecution of members of the Baha'i faith, calls on Iran's Parliament to reject a proposed Islamic penal code, and calls on the Iranian regime to immediately release 10 imprisoned Baha'is.

Mr. Speaker, Tehran's notoriously cruel regime, which denies religious freedoms to its citizens, has made a special example of the Iranian Baha'is. In addition to seizing Baha'i communal property, the Iranian Government prohibits the community from officially assembling, bans them from practicing or teaching their religion, excludes them from the national pension system and from public universities, prevents them from inheriting property, and jails them on account of their faith or on trumped-up charges of espionage.

Recently, Iranian Baha'is have also reported a string of arson attacks against their homes and vehicles. Disturbingly, this persecution continues to the grave. In 2007, two Baha'i cemeteries in Iran were destroyed or bulldozed, wiping away the memory of these innocent Iranians.

Mr. Speaker, oppression of Baha'is comes from the very top of the Iranian regime. The U.N.'s Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief has revealed that in 2005, the chairman of the command headquarters of Iran's Armed Forces wrote a letter stating that Iran's so-called ''supreme leader'' had ordered the headquarters to identify and monitor Iranian members of the Baha'i faith.

This was no idle request. In March and May of 2008, the Government of Iran arrested and imprisoned seven senior leaders of the Baha'i community in Iran. And today, those leaders, along with three other Baha'is, remain imprisoned without charge.

Now Iran's Parliament may aggravate repression of religious freedom by enacting a draft Islamic penal code that would punish so-called ''apostates,'' including all Baha'is and converts from Islam, with death. Iran's regime continues to demonstrate that it is ready and willing to execute innocent people.

Mr. Speaker, totalitarian regimes everywhere, hiding behind the false excuse of state sovereignty, are eager to combat any progress in human rights and freedoms and to expand their hegemony and repression as far as others allow them to do. Therefore, the United States must continue to make clear, in both word and deed, that the spread of religious freedom and human rights worldwide is not merely an ideal, but an imperative.

I thank my distinguished colleague and friend from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) for introducing this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK), who is the author of this resolution. He is also a member of the powerful Appropriations Committee.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, I co-authored this resolution with ROB ANDREWS as a call to action for the safety of the Baha'i faithful.

Never have followers of a more peaceful or gentle creed faced a more cruel and unjust tormenter. Founded in the mid-19th century in Persia, the Baha'i faith now extends to every country, including our own, but its faithful are most numerous in the place of its origin, now the modern day Iran.

The European Parliament has spoken out on this issue, and so we now add our voice as supporters of international human rights and the home of many Baha'i faithful here in America.

We have looked at a terrible situation unfolding in Iran. While Iranian Baha'is have suffered for many decades, their repression has grown significantly in the past few years. In 2006, Iran's Armed Forces Command headquarters ordered their Ministry of Information and the Revolutionary Guard and the police to identify all members of the Baha'i faith in Iran and to begin to monitor their activities.

In that same year, we saw the largest round-up of Baha'is. The Iranian Interior Ministry ordered provincial officials to cautiously and carefully monitor and then begin to manage all Baha'i activities. The Central Security Office of Iran's Ministry of Science, Research and Technology ordered 81 Iranian universities to expel any student discovered of being a Baha'i.

In 2007, the situation worsened. More than two-thirds of Baha'is enrolled in universities were expelled once they were identified. Police entered Baha'i homes and businesses to collect details on family members. Twenty-five industries were ordered to deny licenses to Baha'is, employers were pressured to fire Baha'i employees, and banks were told to refuse loans to Baha'i-owned businesses. As we heard before, Baha'i cemeteries were also destroyed.

In November of 2007, three Baha'i youths, Ms. Raha Sabet, Mr. Sasan Taqva and Ms. Haleh Roohi, were all detained for educating underprivileged children. They were later sentenced to 4 years in prison for this offense. The following month, the Iranian Parliament published a draft Islamic penal code requiring the death penalty for all apostates, a term that strictly applies to Baha'is and anyone who converts away from rigid Islam.

On May 14, 2008, seven members of the National Baha'i Coordinating Group were arrested. This is reminiscent of a mass disappearance and assumed murder of all members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is in Iran back in August of 1980. The seven arrested in May are still being held without any charge or access to attorneys. And in just the last 2 weeks, a number of Baha'i families were targeted with acts of arson.

This is government-sponsored persecution. And we in the Congress should not be silent as Iran sets up the mechanism to ethnically cleanse its Baha'i minority, totaling over 250,000 human beings.

This bipartisan resolution, which I introduced with Congressman ANDREWS, condemns the Government of Iran for its persistent repression of Baha'is and lack of due process afforded to this minority. Our resolution calls upon Iran to immediately release three Baha'i youths and to reject the draft Islamic penal code requiring the death penalty for all apostates.

Mr. Speaker, my district is also home to the headquarters of the North American Assembly of Baha'is. The son of the faith's founder laid the cornerstone on the Baha'i Temple in Wilmette, Illinois—now basically a de facto symbol of the North Shore and our commitment to diversity and tolerance. Would that this view be shared by the Iranian Government.

For the life of me, I do not understand why they attack Baha'is. The Baha'i faith teaches that Moses and Jesus and Mohammed are all respected teachers who added to the faith of our times. The Baha'is embody acceptance and tolerance and accommodation. They have a faith which renders them incapable of being a threat to a government, so it is up to us to speak for them. It's up to us to hold up a mirror to the Iranian Government to show it as a vicious and cruel state.

We have seen this movie before, but they have worn other uniforms in other countries. It is my hope that we can make this call to action to join with the European Parliament. We can help change the ending of this flick so that hundreds of thousands of Baha'is may one day be able to sleep well in future days knowing that the great democracies from across the seas in Europe and America watch over them.

I urge the adoption of this Kirk-Andrews resolution and mightily thank the chairman of the committee, Mr. BERMAN, Ranking Member Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN, and the ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. CHABOT, for helping to bring this before America's Parliament and calling real attention to help avert what could be a new crime of the century.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Res, 1008, condemning the persecution of the Baha'is in Iran. The Baha'is are Iran's largest non-Muslim minority and have faced severe and often brutal persecution since the Iranian government banned all formal Baha'i activity in 1983. Incidents of violence and persecution targeting members of the Baha'i community have increased under the current regime of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

On July 18, the house of the Shaaker family in Kerman was torched only weeks after their car went up in flames. Officials investigating the scene attributed the incidents to electrical problems despite a series of threatening phone calls received by the family in the days leading up to the incident. This is one of over a dozen cases in a string of arson targeting Baha'is over the past 15 months.

These attacks follow the arrest and detention of the seven members of Iran's national Baha'i coordinating group in May. All of these individuals remain isolated in the notorious Evin Prison in Tehran without access to legal representation and are prohibited from contacting their families. At this time, no formal charges have been brought against these seven individuals.

I am pleased to join a bipartisan group of my colleagues as a cosponsor of this important resolution, and I hope its passage will send a strong message to the Iranian government that the United States Congress will always stand in solidarity with the persecuted people of the world.

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 1008, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds being in the affirmative, the ayes have it.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS UNDER THE HIGHER EDUCATION ACT OF 1965

Mr. BISHOP of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill (S. 3352) to temporarily extend the programs under the Higher Education Act of 1965.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The text of the Senate bill is as follows:

S. 3352

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF HIGHER EDUCATION PROGRAMS.

(a) EXTENSION OF PROGRAMS.—Section 2(a) of the Higher Education Extension Act of 2005 (Public Law 109–81; 20 U.S.C. 1001 note) is amended by striking ''July 31, 2008'' and inserting ''August 15, 2008''.

(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section, or in the Higher Education Extension Act of 2005 as amended by this Act, shall be construed to limit or otherwise alter the authorizations of appropriations for, or the durations of, programs contained in the amendments made by the Higher Education Reconciliation Act of 2005 (Public Law 109–171), by the College Cost Reduction and Access Act (Public Law 110–84), or by the Ensuring Continued Access to Student Loans Act of 2008 (Public Law 110–227) to the provisions of the Higher Education Act of 1965 and the Taxpayer-Teacher Protection Act of 2004.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect as if enacted on July 31, 2008.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BISHOP) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BISHOP of New York. Mr. Speaker, I request 5 legislative days during which Members may revise and extend and insert extraneous material on S. 3352 into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BISHOP of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 3352, a bill to temporarily extend programs under the Higher Education Act of 1965.

We are at the final stages of completing the Higher Education Act, which we anticipate bringing to the floor for consideration of the conference report this week.

The bill under consideration today, S. 3352, will extend the programs under the Higher Education Act until August 15, 2008 to allow sufficient time for the Clerk to enroll the bill and send it to the President for his signature.

It has been nearly 10 years since the Higher Education Act was last authorized. I look forward to joining my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in both Chambers in completing the work on the HEA on behalf of our Nation's hardworking families and students.

Let me take a moment to commend the leadership of the Education Committee on both sides of the Capitol and on both sides of the aisle and their staffs for working so hard and so diligently to bring this very important piece of legislation to the floor in a bipartisan fashion.

The conference report has virtually unanimous agreement, and it includes in it several very important areas that will move us forward on issues of access and affordability on behalf of our students. It simplifies the student financial aid application process. It strengthens the campus-based financial aid programs principally through strengthening the Perkins loan program. It improves access to higher education for veterans. It deals with the abuses that we all now know so much about in the student loan program by incorporating the provisions of the Student Loan Sunshine Act. It strengthens the role of creditors, cracks down on diploma mills, and it strengthens college prep programs such as the TRIO programs.

These are just some of the important and beneficial features of the Higher Education Act that are now working their way through the conference process. Once it reaches the floor, I urge my colleagues to support it and to participate in the speedy passage of this important legislation.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of S. 3352, to temporarily extend the programs under the Higher Education Act of 1965. I am pleased to announce that this is the very last extension of the Higher Education Act that Congress will have to pass during this reauthorization. It has been a long journey, but I fully expect that Chairman MILLER, that senior Republicans MCKEON and KELLER and that the rest of my colleagues will be here on the floor later this week to pass a conference report.

Since 2003, we've passed over one dozen extensions of this law since it first expired. S. 3352 will ensure that vital Federal college access and student aid programs will continue to serve those students for the next 2 weeks who depend upon them while the final conference report makes its way to the President's desk.

I am excited that Congress is ready to pass the Senate proposals that will ensure that students and their families will have the ability to get higher education Pell Grants, to obtain Perkins loans and to gain additional transparency into the costs of college, especially as students are getting ready to head back to school in a few short weeks.

Mr. PETRI. I urge my colleagues to support this extension, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BISHOP of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. BISHOP) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 3352.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds being in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4137, COLLEGE OPPORTUNITY AND AFFORDABILITY ACT OF 2008

Data collected by such electronic version of the forms shall be used only for the application, award, and administration of aid awarded under this title, State aid, or aid awarded by eligible institutions or such entities as the Secretary may designate. No data collected by such electronic version of the forms shall be used for making final aid awards under this title until such data have been processed by the Secretary or a contractor or designee of the Secretary, except as may be permitted under this title.

''(F) SIGNATURE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Secretary may continue to permit an electronic version of the form under this paragraph to be submitted without a signature, if a signature is subsequently submitted by the applicant or if the applicant uses a personal identification number provided by the Secretary under subparagraph (G).

''(G) PERSONAL IDENTIFICATION NUMBERS AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary may continue to assign to an applicant a personal identification number—

''(i) to enable the applicant to use such number as a signature for purposes of completing an electronic version of a form developed under this paragraph; and

''(ii) for any purpose determined by the Secretary to enable the Secretary to carry out this title.

''(H) PERSONAL IDENTIFICATION NUMBER IMPROVEMENT.—The Secretary shall continue to work with the Commissioner of Social Security to minimize the time required for an applicant to obtain a personal identification number when applying for aid under this title through an electronic version of a form developed under this paragraph.

''(4) STREAMLINING.—

''(A) STREAMLINED REAPPLICATION PROCESS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall continue to streamline reapplication forms and processes for an applicant who applies for financial assistance under this title in the next succeeding academic year subsequent to an academic year for which such applicant applied for financial assistance under this title.

''(ii) UPDATING OF DATA ELEMENTS.—The Secretary shall determine, in cooperation with States, institutions of higher education, agencies, and organizations involved in student financial assistance, the data elements that may be transferred from the previous academic year's application and those data elements that shall be updated.

''(iii) REDUCED DATA AUTHORIZED.—Nothing in this title shall be construed as limiting the authority of the Secretary to reduce the number of data elements required of reapplicants.

''(iv) ZERO FAMILY CONTRIBUTION.—Applicants determined to have a zero family contribution pursuant to section 479(c) shall not be required to provide any financial data in a reapplication form, except data that are necessary to determine eligibility under such section.

''(B) REDUCTION OF DATA ELEMENTS.—

''(i) REDUCTION ENCOURAGED.—Of the number of data elements on the FAFSA used for the 2009–2010 award year, the Secretary, in cooperation with representatives of agencies and organizations involved in student financial assistance and consistent with efforts under subsection (c), shall continue to reduce the number of such data elements required to be entered by all applicants, with the goal of reducing such number by 50 percent.

''(ii) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report on the process of this reduction to each of the authorizing committees by June 30, 2011.

''(5) STATE REQUIREMENTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2)(B)(iii), (3)(B), and (4)(A)(ii), the Secretary shall include on the forms developed under this subsection, such State-specific data items as the Secretary determines are necessary to meet State requirements for need-based State aid. Such items shall be selected in consultation with State agencies in order to assist in the awarding of State financial assistance in accordance with the terms of this subsection. The number of such data items shall not be less than the number included on the form for the 2008–2009 award year unless a State notifies the Secretary that the State no longer requires those data items for the distribution of State need-based aid.

''(B) ANNUAL REVIEW.—The Secretary shall conduct an annual review to determine—

''(i) which data items each State requires to award need-based State aid; and

''(ii) if the State will permit an applicant to file a form described in paragraph (2)(B) or (3)(B).

''(C) FEDERAL REGISTER NOTICE.—Beginning with the forms developed under paragraphs (2)(B) and (3)(B) for the award year 2010–2011, the Secretary shall publish on an annual basis a notice in the Federal Register requiring State agencies to inform the Secretary—

''(D) USE OF SIMPLIFIED FORMS ENCOURAGED.—The Secretary shall encourage States to take such steps as are necessary to encourage the use of simplified forms under this subsection, including those forms described in paragraphs (2)(B) and (3)(B), for applicants who meet the requirements of subsection (b) or (c) of section 479.

''(E) CONSEQUENCES IF STATE DOES NOT ACCEPT SIMPLIFIED FORMS.—If a State does not permit an applicant to file a form described in paragraph (2)(B) or (3)(B) for purposes of determining eligibility for State need-based financial aid, the Secretary may determine that State-specific questions for such State will not be included on a form described in paragraph (2)(B) or (3)(B). If the Secretary makes such determination, the Secretary shall advise the State of the Secretary's determination.

''(F) LACK OF STATE RESPONSE TO REQUEST FOR INFORMATION.—If a State does not respond to the Secretary's request for information under subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall—

''(i) permit residents of that State to complete simplified forms under paragraphs (2)(B) and (3)(B); and

''(ii) not require any resident of such State to complete any data items previously required by that State under this section.

''(i) by the applicant's State; or

''(ii) by the Secretary.

''(6) CHARGES TO STUDENTS AND PARENTS FOR USE OF FORMS PROHIBITED.—The need and eligibility of a student for financial assistance under parts A through E (other than under subpart 4 of part A) may be determined only by using a form developed by the Secretary under this subsection. Such forms shall be produced, distributed, and processed by the Secretary, and no parent or student shall be charged a fee by the Secretary, a contractor, a third-party servicer or private software provider, or any other public or private entity for the collection, processing, or delivery of financial aid through the use of such forms. No data collected on a form for which a fee is charged shall be used to complete the form prescribed under this section, except that a Federal or State income tax form prepared by a paid income tax preparer or preparer service for the primary purpose of filing a Federal or State income tax return may be used to complete the form prescribed under this section.

''(7) RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF PIN.—No person, commercial entity, or other entity may request, obtain, or utilize an applicant's personal identification number assigned under paragraph (3)(G) for purposes of submitting a form developed under this subsection on an applicant's behalf.

''(9) EARLY ESTIMATES.—The Secretary shall continue to—

''(B) permit applicants to update information submitted on forms described in this subsection, without needing to re-enter previously submitted information;

''(C) develop a means to inform applicants, in the years prior to enrollment, of student aid options for individuals in similar financial situations;

''(D) develop a means to provide a clear and conspicuous notice that the applicant's expected family contribution is subject to change and may not reflect the final expected family contribution used to determine Federal student financial aid award amounts under this title; and

''(E) consult with representatives of States, institutions of higher education, and other individuals with experience or expertise in student financial assistance application processes in making updates to forms used to provide early estimates under this paragraph.

''(10) DISTRIBUTION OF DATA.—Institutions of higher education, guaranty agencies, and States shall receive, without charge, the data collected by the Secretary using a form developed under this subsection for the purposes of processing loan applications and determining need and eligibility for institutional and State financial aid awards. Entities designated by institutions of higher education, guaranty agencies, or States to receive such data shall be subject to all the requirements of this section, unless such requirements are waived by the Secretary.

''(11) THIRD PARTY SERVICERS AND PRIVATE SOFTWARE PROVIDERS.—To the extent practicable and in a timely manner, the Secretary shall provide, to private organizations and consortia that develop software used by institutions of higher education for the administration of funds under this title, all the necessary specifications that the organizations and consortia must meet for the software the organizations and consortia develop, produce, and distribute (including any diskette, modem, or network communications) to be so used. The specifications shall contain record layouts for required data. The Secretary shall develop in advance of each processing cycle an annual schedule for providing such specifications. The Secretary, to the extent practicable, shall use multiple means of providing such specifications, including conferences and other meetings, outreach, and technical support mechanisms (such as training and printed reference materials). The Secretary shall, from time to time, solicit from such organizations and consortia means of improving the support provided by the Secretary.

''(12) PARENT'S SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER AND BIRTH DATE.—The Secretary is authorized to include space on the forms developed under this subsection for the social security number and birth date of parents of dependent students seeking financial assistance under this title.'';

The Secretary shall continue to implement, to the extent practicable, a toll-free telephone based system to permit applicants who meet the requirements of subsection (b) or (c) of section 479 to submit an application over such system.''; and

(5) by adding at the end the following:

''(d) ASSISTANCE IN PREPARATION OF FINANCIAL AID APPLICATION.—

''(A) include, at the time the form is submitted to the Department, the name, address or employer's address, social security number or employer identification number, and organizational affiliation of the preparer on the applicant's form; and

''(B) be subject to the same penalties as an applicant for purposely giving false or misleading information in the application.

''(3) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS.—A preparer that provides consultative or preparation services pursuant to this subsection shall—

''(A) clearly inform each individual upon initial contact, including contact through the Internet or by telephone, that the FAFSA and EZ FAFSA are free forms that may be completed without professional assistance via paper or electronic version of the forms that are provided by the Secretary;

''(B) include in any advertising clear and conspicuous information that the FAFSA and EZ FAFSA are free forms that may be completed without professional assistance via paper or electronic version of the forms that are provided by the Secretary;

''(C) if advertising or providing any information on a website, or if providing services through a website, include on the website a link to the website that provides the electronic version of the forms developed under subsection (a); and

''(D) not produce, use, or disseminate any other form for the purpose of applying for Federal student financial aid other than the form developed by the Secretary under subsection (a).

''(4) SPECIAL RULE.—Nothing in this Act shall be construed to limit preparers of the forms required under this title that meet the requirements of this subsection from collecting source information from a student or parent, including Internal Revenue Service tax forms, in providing consultative and preparation services in completing the forms.

''(e) EARLY APPLICATION AND ESTIMATED AWARD DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—

''(1) PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES.—The purpose of the demonstration program under this subsection is to measure the benefits, in terms of student aspirations and plans to attend an institution of higher education, and any adverse effects, in terms of program costs, integrity, distribution, and delivery of aid under this title, of implementing an early application system for all dependent students that allows dependent students to apply for financial aid using information from two years prior to the year of enrollment. Additional objectives associated with implementation of the demonstration program are the following:

''(A) To measure the feasibility of enabling dependent students to apply for Federal, State, and institutional financial aid in their junior year of secondary school, using information from two years prior to the year of enrollment, by completing any of the forms under this subsection.

''(B) To identify whether receiving final financial aid award estimates not later than the fall of the senior year of secondary school provides students with additional time to compete for the limited resources available for State and institutional financial aid and positively impacts the college aspirations and plans of these students.

''(C) To measure the impact of using income information from the years prior to enrollment on—

''(i) eligibility for financial aid under this title and for other State and institutional aid; and

''(ii) the cost of financial aid programs under this title.

''(D) To effectively evaluate the benefits and adverse effects of the demonstration program on program costs, integrity, distribution, and delivery of financial aid.

''(2) PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.—Not later than two years after the date of enactment of the Higher Education Opportunity Act, the Secretary shall implement an early application demonstration program enabling dependent students who wish to participate in the program—

''(A) to complete an application under this subsection during the academic year that is two years prior to the year such students plan to enroll in an institution of higher education; and

''(B) based on the application described in subparagraph (A), to obtain, not later than one year prior to the year of the students' planned enrollment, information on eligibility for Federal Pell Grants, Federal student loans under this title, and State and institutional financial aid for the student's first year of enrollment in the institution of higher education.

''(3) EARLY APPLICATION AND ESTIMATED AWARD.—For all dependent students selected for participation in the demonstration program who submit a completed FAFSA, or, as appropriate, an EZ FAFSA, two years prior to the year such students plan to enroll in an institution of higher education, the Secretary shall, not later than one year prior to the year of such planned enrollment—

''(A) provide each student who completes an early application with an estimated determination of such student's—

''(i) expected family contribution for the first year of the student's enrollment in an institution of higher education; and

''(ii) Federal Pell Grant award for the first such year, based on the maximum Federal Pell Grant award at the time of application; and

''(B) remind the students of the need to update the students' information during the calendar year of enrollment using the expedited reapplication process provided for in subsection (a)(4)(A).

''(4) PARTICIPANTS.—The Secretary shall include as participants in the demonstration program—

''(A) States selected through the application process described in paragraph (5);

''(B) institutions of higher education within the selected States that are interested in participating in the demonstration program, and that can make estimates or commitments of institutional student financial aid, as appropriate, to students the year before the students' planned enrollment date; and

''(C) secondary schools within the selected States that are interested in participating in the demonstration program, and that can commit resources to—

''(i) advertising the availability of the program;

''(ii) identifying students who might be interested in participating in the program;

''(iii) encouraging such students to apply; and

''(iv) participating in the evaluation of the program.

''(5) APPLICATIONS.—Each State that is interested in participating in the demonstration program shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary shall require. The application shall include—

''(A) information on the amount of the State's need-based student financial assistance available, and the eligibility criteria for receiving such assistance;

''(B) a commitment to make, not later than the year before the dependent students participating in the demonstration program plan to enroll in an institution of higher education, an estimate of the award of State financial aid to such dependent students;

''(C) a plan for recruiting institutions of higher education and secondary schools with different demographic characteristics to participate in the program;

''(D) a plan for selecting institutions of higher education and secondary schools to participate in the program that—

''(i) demonstrate a commitment to encouraging students to submit a FAFSA, or, as appropriate, an EZ FAFSA, two years before the students' planned date of enrollment in an institution of higher education;

''(ii) serve different populations of students;

''(iii) in the case of institutions of higher education—

''(I) to the extent possible, are of varying types and sectors; and

''(II) commit to making, not later than the year prior to the year that dependent students participating in the demonstration program plan to enroll in the institution—

''(aa) estimated institutional awards to participating dependent students; and

''(bb) estimated grants or other financial aid available under this title (including supplemental grants under subpart 3 of part A), for all participating dependent students, along with information on State awards, as provided to the institution by the State;

''(E) a commitment to participate in the evaluation conducted by the Secretary; and

''(F) such other information as the Secretary may require.

''(6) SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—

''(A) DISCRETION OF STUDENT FINANCIAL AID ADMINISTRATORS.—A financial aid administrator at an institution of higher education participating in a demonstration program under this subsection may use the discretion provided under section 479A as necessary for students participating in the demonstration program.

''(B) WAIVERS.—The Secretary is authorized to waive, for an institution of higher education participating in the demonstration program, any requirements under this title, or regulations prescribed under this title, that will make the demonstration program unworkable, except that the Secretary shall not waive any provisions with respect to the maximum award amounts for grants and loans under this title.

''(7) OUTREACH.—The Secretary shall make appropriate efforts to notify States of the demonstration program under this subsection. Upon determination of participating States, the Secretary shall continue to make efforts to notify institutions of higher education and dependent students within participating States of the opportunity to participate in the demonstration program and of the participation requirements.

''(8) EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall conduct a rigorous evaluation of the demonstration program to measure the program's benefits and adverse effects, as the benefits and effects relate to the purpose and objectives of the program described in paragraph (1). In conducting the evaluation, the Secretary shall—

''(A) identify whether receiving financial aid estimates one year prior to the year in which the student plans to enroll in an institution of higher education, has a positive impact on the higher education aspirations and plans of such student;

''(B) measure the extent to which using a student's income information from the year that is two years prior to the student's planned enrollment date had an impact on the ability of States and institutions of higher education to make financial aid awards and commitments;

''(C) determine what operational changes are required to implement the program on a larger scale;

''(D) identify any changes to Federal law that are necessary to implement the program on a permanent basis;

''(E) identify the benefits and adverse effects of providing early estimates on program costs, program operations, program integrity, award amounts, distribution, and delivery of aid; and

''(F) examine the extent to which estimated awards differ from actual awards made to students participating in the program.

''(9) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary shall consult, as appropriate, with the Advisory Committee on Student Financial Assistance established under section 491 on the design, implementation, and evaluation of the demonstration program.

''(f) REDUCTION OF INCOME AND ASSET INFORMATION TO DETERMINE ELIGIBILITY FOR STUDENT FINANCIAL AID.—

''(1) CONTINUATION OF CURRENT FAFSA SIMPLIFICATION EFFORTS.—The Secretary shall continue to examine—

''(A) how the Internal Revenue Service can provide to the Secretary income and other data needed to compute an expected family contribution for taxpayers and dependents of taxpayers, and when in the application cycle the data can be made available;

''(B) whether data provided by the Internal Revenue Service can be used to—

''(i) prepopulate the electronic version of the FAFSA with student and parent taxpayer data; or

''(ii) generate an expected family contribution without additional action on the part of the student and taxpayer; and

''(C) whether the data elements collected on the FAFSA that are needed to determine eligibility for student aid, or to administer the Federal student financial aid programs under this title, but are not needed to compute an expected family contribution, such as information regarding the student's citizenship or permanent residency status, registration for selective service, or driver's license number, can be reduced without adverse effects.

''(2) REPORT ON FAFSA SIMPLIFICATION EFFORTS TO DATE.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of the Higher Education Opportunity Act, the Secretary shall provide a written report to the authorizing committees on the work the Department has done with the Secretary of the Treasury regarding—

''(A) how the expected family contribution of a student can be calculated using substantially less income and asset information than was used on March 31, 2008;

''(B) the extent to which the reduced income and asset information will result in a redistribution of Federal grants and subsidized loans under this title, State aid, or institutional aid, or in a change in the composition of the group of recipients of such aid, and the amount of such redistribution;

''(C) how the alternative approaches for calculating the expected family contribution will—

''(i) rely mainly, in the case of students and parents who file income tax returns, on information available on the 1040, 1040EZ, and 1040A; and

''(ii) include formulas for adjusting income or asset information to produce similar results to the existing approach with less data;

''(D) how the Internal Revenue Service can provide to the Secretary of Education income and other data needed to compute an expected family contribution for taxpayers and dependents of taxpayers, and when in the application cycle the data can be made available;

''(E) whether data provided by the Internal Revenue Service can be used to—

''(i) prepopulate the electronic version of the FAFSA with student and parent taxpayer data; or

''(ii) generate an expected family contribution without additional action on the part of the student and taxpayer;

''(F) the extent to which the use of income data from two years prior to a student's planned enrollment date will change the expected family contribution computed in accordance with part F, and potential adjustments to the need analysis formula that will minimize the change; and

''(G) the extent to which the data elements collected on the FAFSA on March 31, 2008, that are needed to determine eligibility for student aid or to administer the Federal student financial aid programs, but are not needed to compute an expected family contribution, such as information regarding the student's citizenship or permanent residency status, registration for selective service, or driver's license number, can be reduced without adverse effects.

''(3) STUDY.—

''(A) FORMATION OF STUDY GROUP.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of the Higher Education Opportunity Act, the Comptroller General shall convene a study group the membership of which shall include the Secretary of Education, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, representatives of institutions of higher education with expertise in Federal and State financial aid assistance, State chief executive officers of higher education with a demonstrated commitment to simplifying the FAFSA, and such other individuals as the Comptroller General and the Secretary of Education may designate.

''(B) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Comptroller General, in consultation with the study group convened under subparagraph (A) shall—

''(i) review and build on the work of the Secretary of Education and the Secretary of the Treasury, and individuals with expertise in analysis of financial need, to assess alternative approaches for calculating the expected family contribution under the statutory need analysis formula in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Higher Education Opportunity Act and under a new calculation that will use substantially less income and asset information than was used for the 2008–2009 FAFSA;

''(ii) conduct an additional analysis if necessary; and

''(iii) make recommendations to the authorizing committees.

''(C) OBJECTIVES OF STUDY.—The objectives of the study required under subparagraph (B) are—

''(i) to determine methods to shorten the FAFSA and make the FAFSA easier and less time-consuming to complete, thereby increasing higher education access for low-income students;

''(ii) to identify changes to the statutory need analysis formula that will be necessary to reduce the amount of financial information students and families need to provide to receive a determination of eligibility for student financial aid without causing significant redistribution of Federal grants and subsidized loans under this title; and

''(iii) to review State and institutional needs and uses for data collected on the FAFSA, and to determine the best means of addressing such needs in the case of modification of the FAFSA as described in clause (i), or modification of the need analysis formula as described in clause (ii).

''(D) REQUIRED SUBJECTS OF STUDY.—The study required under subparagraph (B) shall examine—

''(i) with respect to simplification of the financial aid application process using the statutory requirements for need analysis—

''(I) additional steps that can be taken to simplify the financial aid application process for students who (or, in the case of dependent students, whose parents) are not required to file a Federal income tax return for the prior taxable year;

''(II) information on State use of information provided on the FAFSA, including—

''(aa) whether a State uses, as of the time of the study, or can use, a student's expected family contribution based on data from two years prior to the student's planned enrollment date;

''(bb) the extent to which States and institutions will accept the data provided by the Internal Revenue Service to prepopulate the electronic version of the FAFSA to determine the distribution of State and institutional student financial aid funds;

''(cc) what data are used by States, as of the time of the study, to determine eligibility for State student financial aid, and whether the data are used for merit- or need-based aid;

''(dd) whether State data are required by State law, State regulations, or policy directives; and

''(ee) the extent to which any State-specific information requirements can be met by completion of a State application linked to the electronic version of the FAFSA; and

''(III) information on institutional needs, including the extent to which institutions of higher education are already using supplemental forms to collect additional data from students and their families to determine eligibility for institutional funds; and

''(ii) ways to reduce the amount of financial information students and families need to provide to receive a determination of eligibility for student financial aid, taking into account—

''(I) the amount of redistribution of Federal grants and subsidized loans under this title caused by such a reduction, and the benefits to be gained by having an application process that will be easier for students and their families;

''(II) students and families who do not file income tax returns;

''(III) the extent to which the full array of income and asset information collected on the FAFSA, as of the time of the study, plays an important role in the awarding of need-based State financial aid, and whether the State can use an expected family contribution generated by the FAFSA, instead of income and asset information or a calculation with reduced data elements, to support determinations of eligibility for such State aid programs and, if not, what additional information will be needed or what changes to the FAFSA will be required; and

''(IV) information on institutional needs, including the extent to which institutions of higher education are already using supplemental forms to collect additional data from students and their families to determine eligibility for institutional funds; and

''(V) changes to this Act or other laws that will be required to implement a modified need analysis system.

''(4) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary shall consult with the Advisory Committee on Student Financial Assistance established under section 491 as appropriate in carrying out this subsection.

''(5) REPORTS.—

''(A) REPORTS ON STUDY.—The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the authorizing committees—

''(ii) not later than two years after the date of enactment of the Higher Education Opportunity Act, a final report on the results of the study required under paragraph (3) that includes recommendations by the study group established under such paragraph.

''(B) REPORTS ON FAFSA SIMPLIFICATION EFFORTS.—The Secretary shall report to the authorizing committees, from time to time, on the progress of the simplification efforts under this subsection.

''(g) ADDRESSING THE DIGITAL DIVIDE.—The Secretary shall utilize savings accrued by moving more applicants to the electronic version of the forms described in subsection (a)(3) to improve access to the electronic version of the forms described in such subsection for applicants meeting the requirements of subsection (b) or (c) of section 479.

''(h) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary shall disclose, on the form notifying a student of the student's expected family contribution, that the student may, on a case-by-case basis, qualify for an adjustment under section 479A to the cost of attendance or the values of the data items required to calculate the expected contribution for the student or parent. Such disclosure shall specify—

''(1) the special circumstances under which a student or family member may qualify for such adjustment; and

''(2) additional information regarding the steps a student or family member may take in order to seek an adjustment under section 479A.''.

(c) RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than one year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Education and the Secretary of the Treasury shall provide a report on the study conducted under subsection (a) to Congress. SEC. 1121. NURSING SCHOOL CAPACITY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Researchers in the field of public health have identified the need for a national study to identify constraints encountered by schools of nursing in graduating the number of nurses sufficient to meet the health care needs of the United States.

(2) The shortage of qualified registered nurses has adversely affected the health care system of the United States.

(3) Individual States have had varying degrees of success with programs designed to increase the recruitment and retention of nurses.

(4) Schools of nursing have been unable to provide a sufficient number of qualified graduates to meet the workforce needs.

(5) Many nurses are approaching the age of retirement, and the problem worsens each year.

(6) In 2004, an estimated 125,000 applications from qualified applicants were rejected by schools of nursing, due to a shortage of faculty and a lack of capacity for additional students.

(b) STUDY WITH RESPECT TO CONSTRAINTS WITH RESPECT TO SCHOOLS OF NURSING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall enter into an agreement with the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a study for the purpose of—

(A) identifying constraints encountered by schools of nursing in admitting and graduating the number of registered nurses necessary to ensure patient safety and meet the need for quality assurance in the provision of health care; and

(B) developing recommendations to alleviate the constraints on a short-term and long-term basis.

(2) CERTAIN COMPONENTS.—The Secretary shall ensure that the agreement under paragraph (1) provides that the study under such paragraph will include information on the following:

(A) The trends in applications for attendance at schools of nursing that are relevant to the purpose of the study, including trends regarding applicants who are accepted for enrollment and applicants who are not accepted, particularly qualified applicants who are not accepted.

(B) The number and demographic characteristics of entry-level and graduate students currently enrolled in schools of nursing, the retention rates at the schools, and the number of recent graduates from the schools, as compared to previous years and to the projected need for registered nurses based on two-year, five-year, and ten-year projections.

(C) The number and demographic characteristics of nurses who pursue graduate education in nursing and non-nursing programs but do not pursue faculty positions in schools of nursing, the reasons for not pursuing faculty positions, including any regulatory barriers to choosing to pursue such positions, and the effect of such decisions on the ability of the schools to obtain adequate numbers of faculty members.

(D) The extent to which—

(i) entry-level graduates of the schools of nursing are satisfied with their educational preparation, including their participation in nurse externships, internships, and residency programs; and

(ii) such entry-level graduates are able to effectively transition into the nursing workforce.

(E) The satisfaction of nurse managers and administrators with respect to the preparation and performance levels of entry-level graduates from the schools after one year, three years, and five years of practice, respectively.

(G) The extent to which the use of innovative technologies for didactic and clinical nursing education might provide for an increase in the ability of schools of nursing to train qualified nurses.

(3) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Institute of Medicine may include in the recommendations developed under paragraph (1)(B) recommendations for legislative or administrative changes at the Federal or State level, and measures that can be taken in the private sector—

(A) to facilitate the recruitment of students into the nursing profession;

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4137), submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 1. Short title; table of contents

The Senate amendment and the House bill have different short Titles for the Act. The Senate amendment titles the Act the ''Higher Education Amendments of 2007.'' The House bill titles the Act the ''College Opportunity and Affordability Act of 2007.'' The Senate amendment lists ''references'' and ''general effective date'' as separate Sections in the table of contents. The House bill combines ''references'' and ''general effective date'' in one Section.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to title the conference report the ''Higher Education Opportunity Act.''

Section 2. References

The Senate amendment and the House bill provide that references are to the Higher Education Act of 1965 (HEA) unless otherwise expressly provided.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

Section 3. General Effective Date

The Senate amendment and the House bill provide that the amendments in this Act are effective on the date of enactment, unless otherwise specified.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

TITLE I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Section 101. General definition of institution of higher education

The House bill amends the definition of an institution of higher education to explicitly include homeschooled students meeting the requirements of Section 484(d)(3).

The Senate amendment and the House bill modify the definition of an institution of higher education to include an additional type of educational degree. The Senate amendment and the House bill allow public or nonprofit private institutions of higher education to enroll students who are dually or concurrently enrolled in the institution and a secondary school as regular students.

The Senate recedes.

Section 102. Definition of institution of higher education for purposes of Title IV programs

The Senate amendment and the House bill retain the provision requiring proprietary institutions of higher education to receive at least ten percent of their revenues from non-Title IV sources. The requirement is moved from the section in Title I that defines institutions of higher education to the section in Title IV that contains program participation agreement requirements. The Senate amendment and the House bill allow proprietary institutions and postsecondary vocational institutions to admit students who are dually or concurrently enrolled in the institution and a secondary school as regular students.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an additional provision to allow for proprietary institutions to offer bachelor's degrees in liberal arts. In adding this provision, the Conferees do not intend to affect the eligibility of current programs or alter the method used by the Secretary in determining ''recognized occupations'' as required by 102(b)(1)(A)(i). The Conferees intend for the Secretary to continue to refer to the latest edition of the Dictionary of Occupational Titles published by the Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics in making this determination. Additionally, the Conferees understand that some programs offered by an institution may fit both the definitions in (A)(i) and (ii). The Conferees do not intend the terms ''gainful employment in a recognized occupation'' and ''liberal arts'' to be mutually exclusive.

The House bill adds nursing schools to the types of institutions of higher education located outside the United States that may be for-profit (proprietary) institutions of higher education and authorized to certify unsubsidized Stafford Loans and PLUS Loans to eligible students.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment clarifies that graduate medical schools located outside of the United States which, under current law, are eligible to participate in Title IV, Part B loan programs because they have a clinical training program that was approved by a state as of January 1, 1992, must have continuously operated a state approved clinical training program in not less than one state that has approved the program.

The House bill clarifies that graduate medical schools located outside of the United States which, under current law, are eligible to participate in Title IV, Part B because they have a clinical training program that was approved by a state as of January 1, 1992, must continue to operate a state approved clinical training program in not less than one state that has approved the program.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill adds a specific set of criteria that nursing schools located outside of the United States are required to meet in order to qualify to certify unsubsidized Stafford Loans and PLUS Loans for their students. Such nursing schools must have agreements with hospitals or nursing schools located in the United States that include provisions for students to complete their clinical training at those hospitals or schools. They must also agree to reimburse the Secretary for the costs of any loan defaults to the extent that the institution's cohort default rate exceeds five percent.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that to be eligible, nursing schools located outside of the United States must have agreements with hospitals or accredited schools of nursing located in the United States that require the nursing students to complete training and receive a degree from the partner accredited institution of higher education and to permit the eligible nursing schools to certify subsidized Stafford loans in addition to unsubsidized Stafford and PLUS loans. Also, such international nursing schools must agree to reimburse the Secretary for the cost of any loan defaults for students included in the school's cohort default rate the previous year. In addition, at least seventy-five percent of the students or graduates from such nursing schools must receive a passing score on the National Council Licensure Exam for Registered Nurses in the year prior to the year the school is eligible to certify Part B loans.

The House bill adds a third set of criteria that graduate medical schools located outside of the United States can meet in order to be eligible to offer unsubsidized Stafford Loans and PLUS Loans to their students. The House bill permits such eligibility for graduate medical schools outside the United States that have a clinical training program that was approved by the U.S. state prior to January 1, 2008, and agree to reimburse the Secretary for the costs of any loan defaults included in the institution's cohort default rate during the previous fiscal year.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the advisory panel of medical experts to submit a report to the Secretary and the authorizing committees within one year after date of enactment of this Act that will provide recommendations for alternate eligibility criteria for participation in the loan programs by foreign medical schools that do not meet the current statutory criteria. 180 days after the submission of the report, the Secretary may issue proposed regulations that would establish alternate criteria for the eligibility of graduate medical schools located outside of the United States. The Secretary may issue final regulations no earlier than one year after the issuance of the proposed regulations.

The Senate amendment increases the pass rate percentage required for foreign medical schools to be eligible to certify student loan eligibility from sixty percent to seventy-five percent effective July 1, 2010.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Section 103. Additional definitions

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a definition of ''authorizing committees.''

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill contain definitions of ''critical foreign language'' that reference an August 2, 1985 Federal Register notice. The House definition includes ''Except as otherwise provided'' at the beginning of the definition. The House bill authorizes the Secretary of Education to update the list of critical languages.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill adds a definition for a ''high-need school.''

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to move the definition to Title II and modify the definition.

The House bill includes a definition for ''universal design.''

The Senate amendment contains no similar definition.

The Senate recedes with an amendment adopting the definition of the term as found in Section 3 of the Assistive Technology Act of 1998.

The House bill includes a definition for ''universal design for learning.''

The Senate amendment contains no similar definition.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to define ''universal design for learning'' as follows: a scientifically valid framework for guiding educational practice that provides flexibility in the ways information is presented, in the ways students respond or demonstrate knowledge and skills, and in the ways students are engaged; and, reduces barriers in instruction, provides appropriate accommodations, supports, and challenges, and maintains high achievement expectations for all students, including students with disabilities and students who are limited English proficient.

Section 104. Protection of student speech and association rights

The Senate amendment expands on the current sense of Congress on the protection of student speech and association rights in several ways, including by specifying that the diversity of institutions of higher education and educational missions is a strength of higher education in the United States; institutions of higher education have different missions and should design their academic programs in accordance with their educational goals; colleges should facilitate the free and open exchange of ideas; students should not be intimidated, harassed, discouraged from speaking out, or discriminated against; and students should be treated equally and fairly. The Senate amendment modifies current law to require that any sanctions on students be imposed ''objectively and fairly.''

The House bill contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

Section 105. Treatment of territories and territorial student assistance

The House bill changes the Title of Section 113. The House bill deletes Subsection (b), which expired September 30, 2004. That provision addressed the eligibility of institutions of higher education in the Freely Associated States for TRIO programs.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

Section 106. National Advisory Committee on Institutional Quality and Integrity

The Senate amendment replaces the existing National Advisory Committee on Institutional Quality and Integrity (NACIQI) and establishes a new Committee with a new name—the Accreditation and Institutional Quality and Integrity Committee. The Senate amendment provides that the Committee is established ''to assess the process of accreditation and the institutional eligibility and certification'' of institutions of higher education.

The House bill contains the same provision except it does not rename the Committee.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment specifies that NACIQI will have fifteen Committee members with five members appointed by the Secretary, five members appointed by the Speaker of the House (based on recommendations from the Majority and Minority leaders in the House), and five members appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate (based on recommendations from the Majority and Minority Leaders in the Senate).

The House bill specifies that the NACIQI will have eighteen members with six members appointed by the Secretary, six members appointed by the Speaker of the House (three members based on recommendations from the House Majority Leader and three members based on recommendations from the House Minority Leader) and six members appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate (three members based on recommendations from the Majority Leader in the Senate and three members based on recommendations from the Minority Leader in the Senate).

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish qualifications for NACIQI members.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish six year terms and a process for filling vacancies for NACIQI members. The Senate amendment and the House bill require vacancies to be filled in the same manner as the original appointment and not later than ninety days after the vacancy occurs. If the vacancy occurs in a position to be filled by the Secretary, the Secretary must post a notice in the Federal Register not later than thirty days after the vacancy.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment creates initial terms for members, staggering the expiration of the terms of appointment. Members appointed by the Secretary will serve two-year terms.

The House bill creates initial terms for members, staggering the expiration of the terms of appointment. Members appointed by the Secretary will serve three year terms.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish the process for selecting a chairperson. The Senate amendment and the House bill retain all of the current functions of NACIQI, except for developing standards and criteria for specific categories of institutions of higher education for which no accrediting agency exists.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill adds the requirement that the NACIQI take into consideration complaints, and the resolution of such complaints by the Accreditation Ombudsman, when advising the Secretary about accrediting agencies of associations.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill retain the requirement that the NACIQI meet at least twice a year and that the Secretary publish the date of each meeting in the Federal Register. The Chairperson is required to establish the agenda, which must include an opportunity for public comment, and provide it to NACIQI members upon notification of the meeting. The Senate amendment and the House bill drop the requirement that the meeting date and agenda be approved by the Secretary.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment requires that the Secretary's designee be invited to all meetings. The designee may facilitate the flow of information between the NACIQI and the Secretary, but has no authority over the agenda.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to strike the language clarifying that the designee may facilitate the flow of information between NACIQI and the Secretary, but has no authority over the agenda.

The Conferees recognize that the Federal Advisory Committee Act requires that the Secretary appoint a designated federal official to be present at meetings of NACIQI.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act, except Section 14, apply to the NACIQI. Section 14 addresses the termination, renewal, and continuation of federal advisory Committees.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill prohibits the NACIQI from basing a recommendation for the denial of an application for recognition by an accrediting agency on any reason other than those included in Section 496.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to publish a notice in the Federal Register that contains information about NACIQI members, and to solicit nominations for NACIQI positions to be filled by the Secretary. The Senate amendment and the House bill require the NACIQI to provide an annual report to the Secretary that includes a detailed summary of the activities of the NACIQI, general information about the meetings, a list of NACIQI members and their contact information, and a list of NACIQI functions. Both the Senate amendment and the House bill sunset the NACIQI on September 30, 2012.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an amendment to remove the contact information for NACIQI members from the information to be provided in the annual report and to change the termination date of NACIQI to September 30, 2014.

The Senate amendment terminates the current NACIQI thirty days after enactment.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to end the terms of current NACIQI members on the date of enactment of this Act.

The House bill establishes the new committee on January 1, 2009.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Section 107. Drug and alcohol abuse prevention

The Senate amendment and the House bill require an institution of higher education, in its biennial review, to determine the number of drug and alcohol-related incidents and fatalities that have occurred on the institution's property or as part of the institution's activities and that are reported to that institution of higher education.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to replace ''incidents'' with ''violations,'' amend the language to require that violations be reported to ''campus officials'' (as opposed to institutions), and replace ''property'' with ''campus.''

By requiring institutions to report drug and alcohol-related violations and fatalities, the Conferees intend to ensure that the information reported by institutions of higher education cover incidents that are located on the campus of the institution of higher education (as that term is defined by the Clery Act) and that are reported to officials at the institution of higher education. Officials shall include campus security and school administrators, and may include other employees at the institution of higher education if they are required to report or enforce institutional policies.

The House bill extends the authorization of appropriations for such sums as necessary for the Alcohol and Drug Abuse prevention grants to fiscal year 2009 and the five succeeding fiscal years.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill eliminates the National Recognition Awards.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Section 108. Prior rights and obligations

The Senate amendment changes the authorization period to fiscal year 2008 and each succeeding fiscal year. The House bill changes the authorization period to fiscal year 2009 and each succeeding fiscal year.

The Senate recedes.

Section 109. Diploma mills

The House bill included, in title VIII, provisions that defined diploma mills, required the Secretary to create a database of accrediting agencies and associations, eligible institutions, and credible foreign-degree granting institutions, required the Secretary of Education to develop a diploma mill task force and required the task force to submit a report to Congress on a plan to prevent diploma mills from being created.

The Senate amendment had no such provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to move the definition of a diploma mill to Title I, require the Secretary to maintain information and resources on the Department's website to assist students and families in understanding what a diploma mill is and how to avoid a diploma mill and strike the other provisions.

Section 110. Improved information concerning the federal student financial aid website

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to ensure that the homepage of the U.S. Department of Education's website includes a link to student financial aid information. The House bill further specifies that the link is to the federal student financial aid website at the Department of Education.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill authorizes the Secretary to use administrative funds for operations and expenses to promote the availability of the federal student financial aid website.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary no later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act to contract with an independent organization with expertise in the development of consumer-friendly websites to develop improvements to the usefulness and accessibility of information provided by the Department of Education on college financial planning and student financial aid on its website.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary, not later than one year after the date of enactment of the Act, to implement the improvements to the college financial planning and student financial aid website developed by the contractor. The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to publicize the availability of information on the college financial planning and student financial aid website.

The House bill contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment to remove the deadline and the references to the outside contractor, to specify that the Secretary shall continue to improve the usefulness and accessibility of information provided by the Department and to require that the access to additional sources of information be coordinated through the Department's database.

The House bill requires the Secretary to publish information on the federal student financial aid website about student financial assistance available from other federal departments and agencies. The House bill requires each federal department and agency to respond promptly to requests from the Secretary for information about student financial aid programs available through the department or agency. The House bill defines ''non-departmental student financial assistance program.''

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary to request information from other departments and agencies and to make such information easily accessible and searchable through the federal student financial aid website and to include links or other appropriate access to a national database on student financial assistance for the study of science, technology, engineering and math, and to information about all federal and state student financial assistance available to eligible members and veterans of the Armed Forces and their families. To identify the information useful for military members and veterans, the Secretary is required to coordinate with the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Veterans Affairs.

The House bill establishes ''maintenance of effort'' (MOE) requirements that, after July 1, 2008, states must meet to receive funding under the House-proposed ''Grants for Access and Persistence'' (GAP) program, which replaces the existing Special Leveraging Educational Assistance Partnership program. If a state does not meet the MOE requirements, the Secretary shall withhold funds that would be available to the state for the GAP program until the state has made significant efforts to meet those requirements. The House bill requires the Secretary to conduct a study of cost containment methods used by institutions of higher education, to disseminate information from the study, to publicly recognize institutions of higher education doing an effective job of cost containment, and to work with institutions of higher education to implement cost containment methods.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

Section 111. Transparency in college tuition for consumers

The Senate amendment and the House bill set forth how ''net price'' is to be calculated under the transparency in college tuition section. The Senate definition focuses on tuition and fees ''paid by'' a full-time undergraduate student, while the House definition focuses on tuition and fees ''actually charged'' to a full-time undergraduate student.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to define ''net price'' as the average yearly price actually charged to a full-time, first-time undergraduate student receiving student aid, calculated by subtracting average grant aid from federal, state and institutional sources from the cost of attendance and to add a definition of cost of attendance for this section that means the average annual cost of tuition and fees, room and board, books and supplies, and transportation for first time, full-time degree or certificate seeking undergraduate students enrolled at an institution, as such data are currently reported by institutions to the Secretary and made available on the College Navigator website.

The Conferees recognize that a number of colleges and universities offer programs that reduce or eliminate student debt or otherwise significantly reduce the cost of college for students and that such programs shall be considered grant aid from institutional sources for the purposes of calculating net price under this Section. The Conferees also recognize that some public two-year institutions calculate tuition and fees for residents of the community college district using an in-district tuition and fee schedule. The Conferees intend for in-district tuition and fee rates to be used in calculating the net price, tuition and fees and cost of attendance for those community colleges in the same manner as in-state tuition and fees and in-state students are used in calculating the net price, tuition and fees and cost of attendance for four-year public institutions.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the development of education price indices that reflect the annual change in tuition and fees for undergraduate students by institutional category and for all institutions of higher education overall.

The Senate and the House recede.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to report annually information on institutional tuition and fees. The House bill specifically requires that this information be made available on the College Navigator website.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to develop and make publicly available a national list and a list for each state, referred to as ''Higher Education Price Increase Watch Lists.'' The lists rank each institution of higher education that has an increase in tuition and fees in excess of the percentage increase in its applicable higher education price index based on the change in the tuition and fees over the preceding two years. The House bill requires the Secretary to publish three annual lists to be created at the national level by institutional category: the five percent of institutions of higher education with the highest tuition and fees; the five percent of institutions of higher education with the lowest tuition and fees; and the five percent of institutions of higher education with the highest percentage increase in tuition and fees over the most recent three-year period.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to require the Secretary to publish six lists, by institutional category: the five percent of institutions of higher education that have the highest tuition and fees for the most recent year; the five percent of institutions of higher education that have the highest net price for the most recent year; the five percent of institutions of higher education that have the largest percentage increase in tuition and fees over the most recent three years; the five percent of institutions of higher education that have the largest percentage increase in net price over the most recent three years; the ten percent of institutions of higher education that have the lowest tuition and fees for the most recent year; and the ten percent of institutions of higher education that have the lowest net price for the most recent year.

The Conferees recognize that many institutions of higher education have developed innovative tuition practices to restrain costs and increase the predictability of college expenses for students and parents. The Conferees commend the use of these innovative approaches, including the use of guaranteed tuition plans, and do not intend to subject institutions that use them to a reporting standard that portrays the cost of attendance in an inaccurate or misleading way. Therefore, in calculating the affordability and transparency lists in subsections (b)(3) and (b)(4) of Section 132, the Conferees direct the Secretary to develop a method for accurately representing the percentage change in tuition and fees and net price for students at institutions offering guaranteed tuition plans. However, the Conferees do not intend to otherwise change the applicability of these subsections to such institutions, or exempt such institutions from the requirements of subsection (d), where applicable.

For reporting purposes, the Senate amendment requires reporting by nine institutional categories. The House bill requires use of the nine institutional categories in the Senate amendment and an additional category that includes institutions of higher education overall.

The House recedes.

The House bill requires any institution of higher education that is in the five percent of institutions of higher education by sector, based on the percentage increase in tuition and fees over a three year period, to provide the Secretary with a description of the factors contributing to the increase in tuition and fees. These institutions of higher education are also required to establish a quality efficiency task force to review their operations, analyze their operating costs in comparison with costs at other institutions of higher education in the same category, identify and evaluate areas for cost reduction, develop annual benchmarks for costs reduction in the identified areas, and submit a report to the Secretary. If an institution of higher education fails to meet the benchmarks, it must also provide the Secretary a detailed explanation for why the benchmarks were not met. The House bill requires the Secretary to compile the information submitted by institutions of higher education, submit an annual report to the authorizing Committees, and publish the annual report on the College Navigator website.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require institutions of higher education that appear on either or both lists of institutions of higher education with the greatest percentage increases in net price or in tuition and fees to submit to the Secretary a description of the major areas in the institution's budget with the greatest cost increases, an explanation of cost increases, and a description of the steps the institution of higher education will take to reduce costs in those major areas. If the cost increases were not in the exclusive control of the institution of higher education, the institution must include a description of the other entities that participate in the determination. Institutions of higher education that are required to submit such report and that appear on the same list for two consecutive years are required to submit a follow-up report describing the progress on the steps identified in the report submitted in the previous year.

The House bill exempts from the cost increase list and the reporting requirements those institutions of higher education whose tuition and fees are in the lowest quartile for institutions of higher education in their sector, and institutions of higher education whose total dollar increase in tuition and fees was less than $500 over the three year period.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to provide one exemption for institutions of higher education whose total dollar increase in tuition and fees or in net price was less than $600 over the three year period and, beginning in 2014 and every three years thereafter, to increase such dollar amount based on increases in the consumer price index.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to report annually on state higher education appropriations. The House bill specifically requires the Secretary to publish this information on the College Navigator website. The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to report on the percentage change in the state appropriations per enrolled student in a public institution of higher education compared with the percentage change in tuition and fees for each public institution of higher education for each of the previous five years, and the total amount of grant aid provided by the state to students attending an institution of higher education in the state. The House bill requires a similar comparison but bases it on full-time equivalent (FTE) students.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to base the five year percentage change in state spending and in tuition and fees on FTE students at public institutions of higher education in the state and to require one comparison chart for all public institutions of higher education in the state, rather than for each school separately. The Secretary is also required to report the percentage change in need-based and merit-based aid provided by each state to full-time students.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary, in consultation with institutions of higher education, to develop a net price calculator. The Senate amendment permits institutions of higher education to use a net price calculator developed by the Secretary or to develop their own. The House bill requires institutions of higher education to use the single net price calculator developed by the Secretary. Both the Senate and the House require institutions of higher education to adopt and use a net price calculator not later than three years after the date of enactment of the Act.

The House recedes with an amendment to permit institutions of higher education to use their own calculator as long as it includes at least the same data elements as the one developed by the Secretary. A net price estimate must be accompanied by a disclaimer explaining that such estimate does not represent a final determination or actual award of financial assistance; shall not be binding on the Secretary, the institution of higher education, or the state; and that the estimate may change. Students must complete the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) in order to be eligible for, and receive, an actual financial aid award, which may include Federal grants, loans, or work-study assistance under Title IV.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include new requirements related to data collected from institutions of higher education. The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to develop a model document, known as the University and College Accountability Network (U–CAN), that institutions of higher education can use voluntarily to report basic information about the institution of higher education that would then be posted on the appropriate Department of Education website. The House bill would require the Secretary to post the data elements on the College Navigator website.

The Senate recedes.

The data elements required to be reported by institutions of higher education in the Senate amendment and the House bill are similar. The House bill requires institutions to report information on: the number of undergraduate students who have registered with the relevant institutional office as students with disabilities; graduation rates by income category; the number of full-time, part-time, and adjunct faculty, and the number of graduate teaching and research assistants with instructional responsibilities; average annual grant data by income category; and the institution's cohort default rate.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require institutions of higher education to report: the percentage of undergraduate students who have formally registered as students with disabilities, unless the percentage is below three percent, in which case the institution may report ''three percent or less''; percentage of first-time, full-time students who receive degrees or certificates within the normal time for completion, and within 150 percent and 200 percent of the normal time; the number of full-time and part-time faculty and graduate teaching assistants with primarily instructional responsibilities; the average annual grant amount for a first-time, full-time undergraduate student who receives financial aid and is enrolled at the institution of higher education; and the institution's cohort default rate. The Secretary is required to provide, on each institution's College Navigator webpage, a link to the appropriate section of the Bureau of Labor Statistics website that provides regional data on starting salaries in all major occupations.

The Senate amendment requires data to be published for the preceding five academic years, while the House bill requires data to be published for the preceding three academic years. The Senate amendment requires net price data for one year, while the House bill requires data for the three preceding academic years.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to consult with current and prospective college students and their families and institutions of higher education in making improvements to the College Navigator website.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment includes an authorization of appropriations for carrying out this subsection.

The Senate recedes.

The Conferees encourage the Secretary to continue to improve the College Navigator to maximize its usefulness for searching through data in a manner that is beneficial to the public. The Conferees also recognize that the Secretary currently collects information for the College Navigator for institutions of higher education that do not participate in Title IV programs and encourage the Secretary to continue to collect information from such institutions that choose to provide it.

The House bill requires the Secretary to include a higher education pricing summary page on the College Navigator website that can be sorted and searched by users and contains various data elements related to price.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include the net price on the summary page for the three most recent available academic years and, beginning July 1, 2010, the average net price by income category for students receiving federal student financial aid.

The Conferees note that the Secretary currently collects information on instructional spending and the Conferees do not intend to limit the Secretary in publishing this information on the pricing summary page.

The House bill establishes income categories for reporting purposes and requires the Secretary to update the income categories annually based on inflation. The House bill includes an exemption from reporting institutional aid data by income category at institutions of higher education where income data is not collected from recipients of institutional aid.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to change the income categories to: $0–30,000; $30,001–48,000; $48,001–75,000; $75,001–110,000; and $110,001 and up, and to require reporting only for students receiving federal student financial aid under Title IV.

The House bill includes a provision in title IV that would require all institutions that receive title IV aid to provide every incoming student with a multi-year tuition schedule or a single-year tuition schedule with non-binding estimates of tuition levels, after financial aid is awarded, for the following several years. The Secretary has the authority to waive this requirement if the institution can demonstrate that it has suffered economic distress, dramatic reduction of state or federal aid or other circumstances that the Secretary would deem valid.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to move the multi-year tuition concept to Title I and to require the Secretary to develop a multi-year tuition calculator to provide estimates of annual tuition and fees and the total amount of tuition prospective students may pay for the duration of their program of study, based on the average annual percentage change in the institution's tuition and fees for the three most recent academic years. The calculator shall be developed in such a manner to allow for the comparison of estimates across multiple institutions of higher education. Such calculation must include a separate disclaimer that the calculation is an estimate only and shall not be binding on the Secretary of Education, the institution of higher education, or the state and may change due to state appropriations or other factors and that the student must complete the FAFSA in order to be eligible for aid. In the case of an institution that offers a multi-year tuition guarantee program, the calculator must allow a prospective student to enter estimates of tuition and fees based on the provisions of the guarantee program.

The House bill requires a survey of student aid recipients to be conducted at least once every four years. The House bill also requires the survey to be conduced on a state-by-state basis. The House bill expands on the current goals of the survey by requiring the survey to: consider the impact of education loan debt on students' career choices; describe the role of the price of postsecondary education in students' decisions about which institution of higher education to attend; and describe how the cost of textbooks and other instructional materials affect the cost of postsecondary education for students. The House bill retains current law with respect to the survey design, except that it clarifies that the survey shall (rather than ''should'') be designed and administered in consultation with Congress and the postsecondary education community. The House bill requires the survey results to be made available in printed and electronic form.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill authorizes the Secretary to issue regulations to carry out the provisions in this Section.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill presents six findings related to higher education and the availability of consumer information about institutions of higher education. The House bill includes a sense of Congress stating that institutions of higher education should participate in efforts to provide concise and accessible online information to prospective students and their families.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

Section 112. Textbook information

The House bill includes provisions that provide more information on the cost of textbooks designed to ensure that students have better and timelier access to course materials.

The House bill requires publishers to provide faculty members with price information, copyright dates of all previous editions in the preceding ten years, substantial content revisions made between the current and previous editions, and to disclose whether the textbook or supplemental materials are available in any other format.

The House bill requires publishers that sell a college textbook and supplemental material as a single product to offer the college textbook and each supplement as a separate item.

The House bill requires institutions of higher education to publish in course schedules for pre-registration and registration purposes, to the ''maximum extent practicable,'' the International Standard Book Number (ISBN) and the retail price of course materials.

The House bill requires an institution of higher education to provide upon request to any college bookstore its course schedule and materials required or recommended for each course.

The House bill provides that nothing about these programs supersedes an institution's autonomy with respect to the selection of course materials.

The House bill's textbook information program is effective as of July 1, 2008.

The Senate recedes with amendments to the provisions to clarify the definitions of an integrated textbook and supplemental materials, and clarify that the provisions apply only to institutions receiving federal financial assistance. The amendments require a publisher to provide to faculty or others selecting textbooks, the wholesale price, and if available, the retail price at which books are made available to the public, respectively, and specify the copyright dates of the three previous editions need to be provided. The amendments also specify that an institution shall, to the maximum extent practicable, make the required textbook information, including ISBN information, available on its Internet course schedule in a manner of the institution's choosing. Further, an institution shall publish a link to this information in its written course schedule. The amendments also encourage institutions to disseminate information to students about institutional programs that would help students save money on textbooks, such as rental programs or buy-back programs, prohibit the Secretary of Education from promulgating regulations on the section, and require the Government Accountability Office to conduct a review of the implementation of these provisions.

The Conferees intend that the provisions in this section decrease the cost of textbooks for students in higher education by ensuring that faculty, students, and bookstores all have sufficient, relevant, and timely information to make informed purchasing decisions. The information provided as a result of these provisions should be provided in a consumer-friendly manner and should be easily accessible. The Conferees further recognize the shared goals of identifying ways to decrease the burden of textbook costs on students by all parties, and the innovation of institutions, publishers, and bookstores in working toward this goal.

The Conferees recognize the cost savings to students of used textbooks. Further the Conferees do not intend the definition of ''integrated textbooks'' to discourage faculty and students from using such textbooks in their courses. Textbooks without explicit third-party contract limitations should not be considered as integrated if an identical used textbook or used supplemental material is commonly available to a student, thus making the materials fully usable for its intended purpose and meeting the requirements of a course of instruction at an institution of higher education.

It is the intention of the Conferees that institutions of higher education that do not offer Internet course schedules are not required to create such schedules for the purposes of satisfying the requirements of this section; and that institutions my satisfy the requirements by providing a link to another appropriate website that satisfies the requirements of the paragraph, provided that such link is clearly and prominently located on the institution's Internet course schedule.

Further, the Conferees recognize the changing use of technology in the textbook marketplace. The provisions require institutions, to the maximum extent practicable, to disclose the ISBN information for each required textbook. As ISBN information changes, or is replaced by another standard identification system, the Conferees urge institutions to provide students with the most up-to-date and accurate information.

The Conferees understand that while regulations are prohibited in the context of implementation, enforcement and oversight, the Secretary of Education may need to develop non-regulatory guidance. The Conferees recognize that the Secretary has a variety of means by which to publicize these provisions, including publication in government materials, and should provide for the broad dissemination of such information through communication with institutions of higher education and other relevant stakeholders.

Section 113. Database of student information prohibited

The Senate amendment and the House bill prohibit the development, implementation, or maintenance of a federal database of personally identifiable information.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment exempts from the prohibition systems needed for the operation of programs authorized by Titles II, IV, or VII.

The House bill exempts from the prohibition systems needed for the operation of programs authorized by Titles II, IV, or VII and any data required to be collected by the Secretary under this Act.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill provide that nothing in this Act prohibits a state or consortium of states from developing, implementing, or maintaining state developed databases to track students over time.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Conferees support the prohibition on the creation of a national database for the purpose of student tracking. This prohibition should not be construed to prohibit the Secretary from performing surveys that are necessary to monitor the operation of the student aid programs, in particular the National Postsecondary Student Aid Survey which is a valuable source of information on how students and families finance their postsecondary education.

Section 114. In-state tuition rates for armed forces members, spouses, and dependent children

The House bill prohibits public institutions of higher education from charging the dependents of members of the Armed Forces on active duty for more than thirty days, whose domicile or permanent duty station is in the same state, more than in-state tuition rates. The House bill requires public institutions of higher education to allow members of the Armed Forces or their dependents who are receiving an in-state tuition rate to continue to pay that rate while continuously enrolled at the institution of higher education even if there is a subsequent change in the permanent duty station of the member to a location outside the state.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that the prohibitions apply to states that receive funds under the HEA and to strike the definition of state.

Section 115. State Higher Education Information System Pilot program

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish a State Higher Education Information System Pilot program to assist up to five states in developing state-level postsecondary data systems.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment authorizes such sums as may be necessary beginning in fiscal year 2008 and each of the five succeeding fiscal years.

The House bill authorizes such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2009 and each of the four succeeding fiscal years.

The House recedes with an amendment to replace fiscal year 2008 with fiscal year 2009.

Section 116. State commitment to affordable college education

The House amendment establishes ''maintenance of effort'' (MOE) requirements that, after July 1, 2008, states must meet to receive funding under the House-proposed ''Grants for Access and Persistence'' (GAP) program, which replaces the existing Special Leveraging Educational Assistance Partnership program. State funding provided for public institutions (for non-capital and non-research and development expenses or costs) must not be less than the average amount provided during the five most recent preceding academic years. States must also provide funding for student financial aid for students attending private institutions in the state in an amount not less than the average amount provided during the 5 most recent preceding academic years. If a state does not meet the MOE requirements, the Secretary shall withhold funds that would be available to the state for the GAP program until the state has made significant efforts to meet those requirements. States may receive a waiver of the requirements for exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances.

The Senate bill contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require states to meet the MOE in order to receive an initial grant under the new College Access Challenge Grant program instead of the existing GAP program and to accommodate states with biennial appropriation cycles.

The Conferees understand states currently face increased deficits and challenging state budgets. It is not the intent of the conferees to compound state economic challenges, but rather to secure a strong federal-state partnership to increase access to higher education for middle- and low-income families. The conferees acknowledge that the Secretary has authority to provide a waiver for states meeting the threshold of ''exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances'' which include sudden and unforseen declines in a state's budget.

Section 117. Performance-Based Organization for the delivery of federal student financial assistance

The Senate amendment changes the description of the functions of the Performance-Based Organization (PBO) at the Department of Education from ''operational'' to ''administrative and oversight.'' The Senate amendment makes the PBO responsible for the administration of federal student financial assistance programs. The Senate amendment also directs the PBO to utilize procurement systems that streamline operations, improve internal controls, and enhance management.

The House bill contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment to delete the requirement that the Chief Operating Officer of the PBO provide an annual briefing to the authorizing Committees on the steps the PBO has taken and is taking to ensure that lenders are providing the information required under Title IV; but instead, requires a representative of the Secretary to provide a briefing at any time upon request of the authorizing Committees on the steps the Department has taken to ensure the integrity of the student loan programs, including lender and guaranty agency compliance with the requirements of Title IV.

Section 118. Procurement flexibility

The Senate amendment amends Section 142 by modifying the Chief Operating Officer duties, including the fee for service arrangements, and replacing the term ''sole source'' with the term ''single-source basis.''

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Section 119. Certification regarding the use of certain federal funds

The Senate amendment specifies that federal funds received by an institution of higher education or other postsecondary educational institution may not be used to pay any person for influencing or attempting to influence an officer or employee of any agency, a Member of Congress, or an employee of a Member of Congress in awarding a federal contract, making a federal grant or loan, entering into any federal cooperative agreement, or in extending, continuing, renewing, amending, or modifying any federal contract, grant, loan, or cooperative agreement. No federal student aid funding may be used to hire a lobbyist or to secure an earmark. Each institution of higher education or other postsecondary educational institution receiving federal funding must annually certify that these requirements have been met.

The House bill contains no such provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to clarify that the prohibition relates to funds received by an institution under the Higher Education Act.

The Conferees wish to clarify that this Section is not intended to prohibit an employee of an institution of higher education from receiving federal funds for participating in a peer review process for a Federal program.

Section 120. Institution and lender reporting and disclosure requirements

Both the Senate amendment and the House bill add a new Part E to Title I, instituting lender and institutional requirements relating to education loans.

The Senate and House recede with amendments to Part E as follows:

PART E—LENDER & INSTITUTION REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO EDUCATION LOANS

Section 151. Definitions

The Senate amendment defines ''cost of attendance'' as it is defined under Title IV, Section 472.

The House bill defines ''postsecondary educational expenses'' as defined under Title IV, Section 472.

Both the Senate and the House recede.

The Senate amendment defines ''covered institution'' as any educational institution that offers a postsecondary educational degree, certificate, or program of study (including an institution defined in Section 102) and receives any federal funding or assistance. The definition includes any employee or agent of the institution of higher education, or an organization or entity affiliated with, or directly or indirectly controlled by the institution of higher education.

The House bill defines ''covered institution'' as any educational institution that offers a postsecondary educational degree, certificate, or program of study (including an institution defined in Section 102) and receives any federal funding or assistance. The definition includes any employee or authorized agent of the institution of higher education, including an alumni association, booster club, or other organization directly or indirectly authorized by the institution of higher education.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to define ''covered institution'' as any institution of higher education as such term is defined in Section 102, that receives any federal funding or assistance. Definitions of ''agent'' and ''institution-affiliated organization'' are also added. An ''agent'' means an officer or employee of a covered institution or an institution—affiliated organization. An ''institution-affiliated organization'' means any organization that is directly or indirectly related to a covered institution and is engaged in the practice of recommending, promoting, or endorsing education loans for students attending such covered institution or the families of such students, except that the term does not include any lender with respect to any education loans secured, made or extended by such lender.

The Senate amendment defines ''educational loan'' as any loan made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV.

The House bill defines ''educational loan'' as including any loan made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV; or any educational loan that is not made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV, but that is issued by a lender expressly for postsecondary educational expenses to a student, or the parent of the student, regardless of whether the loan involves enrollment certification by the educational institution that the student attends..

The Senate recedes with an amendment to replace ''educational loan'' with ''education loan'' and to specify that loans made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV refer to loans made under Parts B and D of Title IV.

The Senate amendment defines ''educational loan arrangement'' as an arrangement or an agreement between a lender (of loans made under Title IV, and as defined under Section 151(5)) and a covered institution, under which a lender provides or issues (Title IV) educational loans to students attending a covered institution, or their parents; and which is related to the covered institution recommending, promoting, endorsing, or using the (Title IV) educational loans of the lender, and which involves the lender paying a fee or providing other material benefit to the institution of higher education or groups of students attending the institution of higher education.

The House bill defines ''preferred lender arrangement'' as an arrangement or agreement between a lender and a covered institution, under which a lender provides or issues educational loans to students attending a covered institution, or their parents; and which is related to the covered institution recommending, promoting, or endorsing, educational loan products of the lender; and which does not include arrangements with respect to the Direct Loan program loans, Perkins Loans, or Federal Family Education Loan (FFEL) parent PLUS Loans made in accordance with Section 499(b).

The Senate recedes with an amendment to change ''parents'' to ''families'' of students, strike the reference to Perkins Loans, and to include in the definition arrangements or agreements between a lender and an institution-affiliated organization.

The Senate amendment defines ''lender'' as a financial institution participating in the FFEL, and the Secretary for the Direct Loan program loans; and in each case, the term includes any individual, group, or entity acting on behalf of the lender with respect to a Title IV education loan.

The House bill defines ''lender'' as meaning a ''creditor;'' except that it does not include an issuer of credit secured by a dwelling or under an open end credit plan, and includes an agent of a lender.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment to define the terms ''eligible lender'' and ''lender.'' The term ''eligible lender'' has the meaning given such term in section 435(d). The term ''lender'' means an eligible lender, in the case of a loan made, insured, or guaranteed under Part B of Title IV; the Secretary, in the case of any loan issued or provided to a student under Part D of Title IV; and, a private educational lender as defined in Section 140(a) of the Truth in Lending Act, in the case of a private education loan.

The Senate amendment defines ''officer'' as including a director or trustee of an institution of higher education.

The House bill defines ''officer'' as including a director or trustee of a covered institution if the individual is treated as an employee of the covered institution (see Section151(1)).

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include in the definition of ''officer'' a director or trustee of an institution-affiliated organization if such individual is treated as an employee.

The House bill defines ''private educational loan.''

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to use the term ''private education loan'' in place of ''private educational loan'' and to refer to the definition used in Section 140(a) of the Truth in Lending Act.

Section 152. Responsibilities of covered institutions, institution-affiliated organizations and lenders

The Senate amendment institutes requirements for lenders and institutions of higher education participating in ''educational loan arrangements.'' The Senate provision is applicable to arrangements between lenders of Title IV educational loans and covered institutions of higher education.

The House bill institutes requirements for lenders and institutions of higher education participating in ''preferred lender arrangements.'' The House provision is applicable to arrangements between lenders (i.e., creditors) and covered institutions of higher education. The House provision applies to lenders of loans made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV, and private educational loans, except that it does not apply to arrangements with respect to Direct loans, Perkins Loans, or parent PLUS loans made in accordance with Section 499(b).

The Senate recedes with an amendment to make no reference to Perkins Loans.

The House amendment prohibits a covered institution that enters into a preferred lender arrangement regarding private educational loans from agreeing to allow the lender to use the institution's name or likeness in the marketing of private educational loans to students attending the institution in any way that implies the institution's endorsement of the private educational loans.

The Senate bill contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to extend the prohibition to institution-affiliated organizations of covered institutions.

The Senate amendment requires a covered institution that enters into an educational lender arrangement to disclose the name of the lender in documentation related to the loan.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to require covered institutions, and institution-affiliated organizations of such institutions, that enter into a preferred lender arrangement with a lender regarding private education loans to ensure that the name of the lender is displayed in all information and documentation related to the loan.

The House bill requires FFEL lenders that participate in one or more ''preferred lender arrangements'' to annually certify compliance with requirements of the Act and to report on and attest to such compliance in its annual compliance audit.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that provides: ''If an audit is required pursuant to Section 428(b)(1)(U)(iii), the lender's compliance with requirements of this section shall be reported on and attested to annually by the auditor of such the lender.''

The Senate amendment requires lenders participating in educational loan arrangements, prior to providing a Title IV education loan to a student, to disclose to the student certain information about the terms and conditions of such loans. These disclosures must include: interest rates of educational loans and sample educational loan costs, by type of loan. For each type of educational loan offered, the disclosure must include information on: types of repayment plans available; availability of and conditions for no-penalty, early repayment; capitalization of interest; terms and conditions of deferment and forbearance; all available repayment benefits and the percentage of all borrowers who qualify for such benefits; the percent of borrowers who received such benefits in the preceding academic year; collection practices in cases of default; all fees, including late payment penalties, a borrower may be charged; and, such other information as the Secretary may require.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to incorporate the disclosure requirements in the Senate amendment into the disclosures required under Subsections (a),(c) and (d) of Section 433. The revised disclosure requirements are applicable to loans made, insured or guaranteed under Parts B or D of Title IV, other than consolidation loans. Lenders of private education loans must comply with the disclosures required under Title X of this Act.

The Senate amendment requires lenders participating in education loan arrangements to annually report to the Secretary any reasonable expenses paid or given to an individual employed in the financial aid office of a covered institution, or who has responsibilities with respect to educational loans or other types of financial aid. The lenders must report the following: the amount of each specific instance of reimbursement; the name of each individual to whom a reimbursement was made; the date of the activity being reimbursed; and, a brief description of the activity being reimbursed. The Secretary shall annually compile such information into a report and transmit the report to the House Education and Labor Committee and the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to require each FFEL lender, on an annual basis, to report to the Secretary any reasonable expenses paid or given under the exception clauses in 435(d)(5)(D), 487(e)(7) and 487(e)(3)(B) to any agent of a covered institution who is employed in the financial aid office of a covered institution, or who otherwise has responsibilities with respect to education loans or other financial aid activities of the institution of higher education, and any similar expenses paid or provided to any agent of an institution-affiliated organization of a covered institution who is involved in the practice of recommending, promoting, or endorsing education loans. The report shall include: the amount for each specific instance in which the lender provided such reimbursement; the name of the agent for whom expenses were paid or to whom the reimbursement was made; the dates of the activity for which the expenses were paid or the reimbursement was made; and, a brief description of the activity for which the expenses were paid of the reimbursement was made. The Secretary shall summarize the information contained in the lender reports and provide a report annually to the authorizing Committees.

The House bill requires the Secretary to display on the Department of Education website, and to provide to colleges and universities, specified information to be used for counseling and consumer information for prospective borrowers. The Secretary shall make such information widely known and shall promote its availability and use by prospective and current students and borrowers, and those entering repayment.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify the types of information that must be reported and to change the placement of the provision.

Section 153. Loan information to be disclosed and model disclosure form for covered institutions, institution-affiliated organizations, and lenders participating in preferred lender arrangements

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary, not later than 180 days after enactment, to prepare a report on the adequacy of the information provided to students and their parents about education loans, after consulting with students, representatives of covered institutions of higher education (including financial aid administrators, registrars, and business officers), lenders, loan servicers, and guaranty agencies.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment to strike the report requirement and instead to require the Secretary, not later than eighteen months after enactment, to coordinate with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve, and consult with students, their families, representatives of covered institutions (including financial aid administrators, admission officers, and business officers), representatives of institution-affiliated organizations, high school guidance counselors, lenders, loan servicers, and guaranty agencies, and to determine the minimum information that lenders, covered institutions, and institution-affiliated organizations participating in preferred lender arrangements must make available regarding education loans that are offered to students and their families. Both the Senate and House recede also with an amendment to change references from ''parents'' to ''families'' throughout the Section.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to develop a model format (Senate) or model disclosure form (House) to be used by lenders participating in ''preferred lender arrangements'' (House) or ''educational loan arrangements'' (Senate) for providing information to institutions of higher education and the Secretary, for each type of education loan provided by lenders to students attending a covered institution, and about why the covered institution believes the terms and conditions of each type of loan provided pursuant to the educational loan arrangement are beneficial to borrowers. The House bill requires the Secretary to prescribe this model format by regulation.

The Senate amendment requires the model format to provide certain information on the terms and conditions of loans, disaggregated by loan type, including interest rates and terms and conditions of loans for the forthcoming academic year; any benefits that are contingent on borrower repayment behavior; the average amount borrowed from the lender by students enrolled in the institution, by loan type, for the preceding academic year; the average interest rate on loans borrowed by such students for the preceding academic year; and the amount of interest that may be required to be paid according to a standard repayment period on the average amount borrowed from the lender by such students, on such type of loan, for the preceding academic year.

The House bill also requires the model disclosure form to provide information on the terms and conditions of loans, disaggregated by loan type, including the interest rate or range of rates, and whether rates are fixed or variable; the frequency and amount of interest rate adjustments; co-borrower requirements; any fees associated with the loan; available repayment terms; the opportunity for deferment or forbearance, including whether in-school deferment is available; any additional terms and conditions of the loan, including any benefits contingent on repayment behavior of the borrower; the annual percentage rate for such loans, determined in the manner required under Section 107 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1606); an example of the total cost of the educational loan over the life of the loan; consequences of default, including any limitations on loan discharge in bankruptcy; contact information for the lender; and, philanthropic contributions by the lender to the covered institution. The House bill requires this information to be provided for opportunity pool loans and requires private lenders, as well as FFEL lenders, to use the model format. The House bill additionally requires the model format to be easy for students and parents to understand; to be easily usable by lenders, institution of higher education, guaranty agencies, and servicers; to provide relevant information on federal and private educational loans; to be based on the report's findings, and to be developed in consultation with specified entities.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment to require the Secretary to consider the merits of requiring covered institutions and institution-affiliated organizations that have preferred lender arrangements to provide prospective borrowers and families the following information for each type of loan made, insured or guaranteed under Title IV: the interest rate and terms and conditions of the loan for the next award year, including loan forgiveness and deferment; information on any charges such as origination and federal default fees that are payable on the loans, and whether those charges will be paid by the lender or the borrower; the yearly and cumulative maximum amounts that may be borrowed; the average amount borrowed from the lender by undergraduate and graduate students who were enrolled and who graduated the preceding year; the amount the borrower may pay in interest, based on a standard repayment plan and the average amount borrowed by students who graduated from the institution of higher education the preceding year with subsidized and unsubsidized Stafford loans and PLUS loans; the consequences for the borrower of defaulting on a loan, including limitations on the discharge of an education loan in bankruptcy; the contact information for the lender; and other information suggested by those with whom the Secretary has consulted. In addition, the amendment requires the Secretary, in determining the minimum information that lenders, covered institutions, and institution-affiliated organizations participating in preferred lender arrangements shall make available regarding education loans that are offered to students and the families of students, to incorporate identical or similar disclosures developed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve pursuant to Section 128(e)(1) of the Truth in Lending Act.

The House bill also requires the model format to provide, with respect to private educational loans recommended by the covered institution, the method of determining the interest rate of the loan; potential finance charges, late fees, penalties, and adjustments to the principal, based on defaults or late payments of the borrower; and, such other information as the Secretary may require.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to submit the report and model format (Senate) or disclosure form (House) to the authorizing Committees and make the report and model format available to covered institutions of higher education, lenders, and the public. The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to encourage lenders that have educational loan (Senate) or preferred lender (House) arrangements with covered institutions of higher education, and covered institutions of higher education to use the model forms.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment that the Secretary shall, after consulting with the public and in coordination with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve specify the information covered institutions and institution-affiliated organizations with preferred lender arrangements must provide to prospective borrowers and the families of such borrowers regarding loans made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV and require covered institutions and institution-affiliated organizations to provide such information on a model disclosure form developed by the Secretary or on a form developed by the institution of higher education. The Secretary shall update the model disclosure form periodically.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require lenders that participate in educational loan (Senate) or preferred lender (House) arrangements to report the information contained on the model disclosure form to the institutions of higher education even if they do not use the form. The House bill specifies that such information shall be reported to institutions of higher education by March 1 of each year.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require lenders that participate in preferred lender arrangements to report information for Part B loans annually to a covered institution or an institution-affiliated organization and to the Secretary, by a date to be determined by the Secretary.

The House bill specifies that the development and prescription by regulation of the initial model disclosure form shall not be subject to the requirement that it be published in final form by November 1 prior to the start of the award year, nor shall it be subject to negotiated rulemaking. However, such requirements shall apply to the updating of the model disclosure form.

The Senate contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require covered institutions of higher education to submit an annual report to the Secretary that includes the information on the model form, a detailed explanation of why the institution of higher education believes the terms and conditions of each loan provided through an agreement are beneficial to the students attending the institution or to the students' parents. Institutions of higher education must make the report available to the public and provide it to students who are attending or who plan to attend the covered institution.

The House bill requires covered institutions of higher education, on their website and in publications, mailings, electronic messages or media describing financial aid opportunities to prospective or current students or their parents, to include the following: a statement indicating that students are not limited to or required to use the lenders recommended by the institution of higher education; that the institution of higher education is required to process the documents required to obtain a federal educational loan from any eligible lender the student selects. The website and other publications must also disclose, at a minimum, all of the information provided by the model disclosure form (or updated form) with respect to any lender of federal or private educational loans (including opportunity pools) recommended by the institution of higher education; the maximum amount of federal grant and loan aid available to students in an easy-to-understand format; and, the institution's cost of attendance.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment to require covered institutions and institution-affiliated organizations to make the information that the Secretary requires for the model disclosure format and the information that a private educational lender provides to a covered institution and institution-affiliated organizations pursuant to Sections 128(e)(12) and 128(e)(1) of the Truth in Lending Act, available in time for students and families to consider before selecting a lender or applying for an education loan. The Senate and House further require covered institutions and institution-affiliated organizations to prepare and submit to the Secretary an annual report, by a date to be determined by the Secretary, that includes for each lender that has a preferred lender arrangement with the covered institution and institution-affiliated organization the information the Secretary requires for the model disclosure form and the information private educational lenders participating in a preferred lender arrangements provide to covered institutions and institution-affiliated organizations, for each type of education loan provided pursuant to the preferred lender arrangement. The reports must also include an explanation of why the covered institution or institution-affiliated organization entered into a preferred lender arrangement, including why the terms, conditions, and provisions of each type of loan for students are beneficial for students or the families of students. The covered institution or institution-affiliated organizations shall ensure that the report is made available to the public and provided to students attending or planning to attend the covered institution. Each covered institution that has a preferred lender arrangement must disclose on its website, in addition to this information and the disclosures required under the program participation agreement, the maximum amount of federal financial assistance available to students and a statement that the institution of higher education is required to process the documents required to obtain a federal education loan from any eligible lender the student selects.

The House bill requires the Secretary, not later than one year after submitting the model disclosure form and report, to assess the adequacy of the model disclosure form and, after consultation with specified entities, prepare a list of improvements identified as beneficial to borrowers and to take such improvements into consideration in updating the model disclosure form.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House bill requires covered institutions of higher education that make information on private educational loans available to students or their parents to also make certain information about private loans and federal student aid under Title IV available. Covered institutions of higher education must inform students, or their parents, of their eligibility for federal student aid, including loans under Title IV; the terms and conditions of private educational loans that may be less favorable than the terms and conditions of Title IV student loans for which they are eligible; and must clearly distinguish between private educational loans and loans made, insured, or guaranteed under Title IV.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to change references to ''student or parent'' to ''prospective borrower''; to clarify that the prospective borrower must be informed that the borrower may qualify for federal financial assistance through a Title IV program of this Act; and, to modify language to require covered institutions and institution-affiliated organizations to inform prospective borrowers that the terms or conditions of Title IV loans may be more favorable than the provisions of private loans. The other disclosure requirements in the House bill and the Senate amendment are moved to Sections 428(c), 433(a) and (b), and 485(b), (d), and (l) as amended by this Act.

Section 154. Loan information to be disclosed and model disclosure form for institutions participating in the William D. Ford Federal Direct Loan Program

The Conferees establish a new Section that requires the Secretary to provide each institution of higher education participating in the William D. Ford Direct Loan program with a completed model disclosure form including the same information for Federal Direct Stafford loans, Federal Direct Unsubsidized Stafford loans and Federal Direct PLUS loans made to, or on behalf of, students attending the institution as is required on such forms for loans described in section 151(3)(A). The Conferees require institutions participating in the Direct Loan program to make the information the Secretary provides available to students attending or planning to attend the institution and their families.

TITLE II—TEACHER QUALITY ENHANCEMENTS

The Senate amendment and the House bill strike and replace Title II of the Higher Education Act.

The Senate and the House recede with amendments as follows.

Section 201. Teacher quality enhancement

Section 200. Definitions

The Senate amendment and the House bill adopt the current definition for ''Arts and Sciences'' and eliminate the current definition of ''Poverty Line.'' The Senate amendment and House bill add the same definitions of ''Children from Low-Income Families,'' ''Core Academic Subjects,'' ''Early Childhood Educator,'' ''Educational Service Agency,'' ''Essential Components of Reading Instruction,'' ''Exemplary Teacher;'' ''High-Need Early Childhood Education Program,'' ''Highly Competent,'' ''Highly Qualified,'' ''Limited English Proficient,'' ''Professional Development,'' and ''Teaching Residency Program.''

The Conferees adopt that provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an amendment to adopt the definition for ''parent'' as found in the Elementary Secondary Education Act (ESEA).

The Senate amendment and the House bill contain definitions for ''Early Childhood Education Programs,'' but the House bill definition of ''Early Childhood Education Program'' differs in two respects by specifying that Head Start programs include Migrant and Seasonal Head Start, as well as American Indian/Alaska Native Head Start programs, and by including prekindergarten programs authorized under Section 619 or Part C of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to add ''or a program authorized under Section 619 of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act'' after ''State prekindergarten program'' in the definition of ''Early Childhood Education Programs,'' to clarify that a state licensed or regulated child care program does not include a school and an eligible state prekindergarten program is one that serves children from birth to age six.

The Senate amendment and the House bill contain definitions of ''eligible partnerships.'' The House bill definition includes alternative certification programs and teacher professional development programs within partner institutions of higher education.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to allow teacher professional development programs to be included in the partnership only if they are existing programs with proven outcomes within a four year institution of higher education that provides intensive and sustained collaboration between faculty and local educational agencies in order to meet the requirements of this Title.

The Senate amendment and the House bill amend the definition of a ''High-Need Local Educational Agency'' in the same manner and include references to rural locale codes. The Senate amendment lists specific rural locale codes and the House bill references rural locale codes currently being used by the Department of Education. The Senate amendment includes locale codes correspond to the designations of small town (6); rural, outside major statistical area (7); and rural, inside major statistical area (8). The House bill provides the labels for locale codes that correspond to the following numerical designations: rural, fringe (41); rural, distant (42); and rural, remote (43).

The House and Senate recede with an amendment to align the definition of local educational agencies with the definition in the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

The Senate amendment and the House bill amend the definition of ''High-Need School'' in the same manner; except, the Senate amendment defines a rural school as one designated with a locale code of 6, 7, or 8. The House bill defines a rural school as one designated with a locale code of Rural: Fringe, Rural: Distant, or Rural: Remote.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to define a high-need school as one that is either in the highest quartile of low-income schools in a ranking of all schools served by a local educational agency, as determined by various poverty indicators, or, in the case of an elementary school, one that serves not less than sixty percent of students who are eligible for free or reduced price school lunch under the Richard B. Russell National School Lunch Act, and for all other schools, that serves not less than 45 percent of such students.

The Senate amendment and the House bill define ''Induction Program'' to include periodic, structured time for collaboration with other teachers, as well as time for information-sharing among teachers, principals, administrators, and participating faculty. However, the Senate amendment allows such collaboration to be with any other teachers in the same department or field, and the House bill specifies that such collaboration shall be with mentor teachers.

The House recedes with an amendment to include mentor teachers in addition to other teachers who shall be provided collaboration time and to include other appropriate instructional staff in information sharing time.

The Senate amendment and the House bill define an ''Induction Program'' as having a teacher preparation program that includes interdisciplinary collaboration. However, the House bill specifies that the collaboration occurs with those who prepare new teachers with respect to the learning process and the assessment of learning.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill define an ''Induction Program'' as having a teacher preparation program that provides assistance with the understanding of data, particularly student achievement data, and the applicability of that data in classroom instruction.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment that the program shall provide assistance with ''the applicability of such data in classroom instruction.''

The Senate amendment defines an ''Induction Program'' as having a regular evaluation of the new teacher.

The House bill specifies that the evaluation include formal observation and feedback, at least four times a year by multiple evaluators, including master teachers and the principal, who must use valid and reliable benchmarks of teaching skills and standards developed with input from teachers in the evaluation.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to indicate that the evaluation shall consist of ''regular and structured observation and evaluation of the new teachers by multiple evaluators, using valid and reliable measures of teaching skills.''

The Conferees intend that measures of teaching skills employed during observation and evaluation of new teachers include the teaching skills described later in this Section. Using such a definition of skills in developing metrics for the observation and evaluation of new teachers will require prioritizing these teaching skills while developing a rubric or procedures for evaluation. The Conferees intend that such rubrics or procedures be developed through consultation and cooperation among teachers, mentors, principals and others involved in the process of observation and evaluation.

The House bill defines the term ''Literacy Coach.''

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill define a ''Partner Institution'' as an institution of higher education, which may include a two-year institution of higher education offering a dual program with a four-year institution of higher education that also meets additional criteria.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Conferees recognize the essential role that community colleges play in teacher preparation, providing the first two years of postsecondary education for many teacher candidates. The Conferees further recognize that two-year institutions of higher education, by definition, provide the initial portion of pre-baccalaureate teacher preparation that each candidate must complete at a four-year institution of higher education. Some two-year institutions of higher education, however, have begun to partner with four-year institutions of higher education and offer students a path to a baccalaureate degree and full state teacher certification. The Conferees intend that to be considered a ''partner institution'' and therefore, part of a partnership eligible to receive funds under this Title, the two-year institution of higher education must partner with a four-year institution of higher education and work together to carry out the activities required under this Title. It is, therefore, essential that two- and four-year institutions of higher education cooperate to ensure that the initial years of pre-baccalaureate preparation offered at each two-year institution of higher education provide courses of study that are aligned with curriculum at the four-year institution of higher education in order to meet the state requirements for teacher certification. Cooperation between institutions of higher education should include a formal agreement to ensure that the institutions have developed an articulated transfer policy so that teacher candidates beginning at a two-year institution will be adequately supported during completion of their pre-baccalaureate preparation at the four-year institution of higher education.

The Senate amendment and the House bill further define a ''Partner Institution'' as one that includes a teacher preparation program that requires each student meet high academic standards and participate in intensive clinical experience. The House bill also requires each student to demonstrate such high academic standards.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to strike ''and demonstrate'' and insert after ''high academic standards'', '', or demonstrate a record of success, as determined by the institution''.

The House bill defines a ''Partner Institution'' as including a teacher preparation program whose participants include current teachers who seek ongoing professional development and that requires the faculty of arts and sciences of the partner institution of higher education to lead collaborative seminars for the purpose of improving student learning and developing curriculum units.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment defines ''Principles of Scientific Research.''

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to the definition that provides that the term includes, appropriate to the research being conducted, ''strong claims of causal relationships, only with respect to research designs that eliminate plausible competing explanations for observed results, which may include random-assignment experiments.''

The Senate amendment and the House bill contain the same definition of ''Scientifically Valid Research.''

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to strike the word ''accepted'' with regard to principles of scientific research.

Both the Senate amendment and the House bill define ''Teacher Mentoring.'' However, the House bill defines the term to include programs that provide training in classroom management.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include approaches that improve the schoolwide climate for learning, such as positive behavioral interventions and supports.

The Senate amendment and the House bill further define ''Teacher Mentoring'' to include providing regular and ongoing opportunities for mentors and mentees to observe each other's teaching methods.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill defines ''Teacher Mentoring'' to include paid release time for mentors.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify that mentors are provided paid release time ''as applicable.''

The Senate amendment and the House bill include similar definitions of ''Teaching Skills.'' However, the House bill defines the term to include skills that enable the teacher to effectively manage a classroom, including the ability to implement positive behavioral intervention support strategies.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include in the definition skills that enable a teacher to effectively teach higher-order analytical, evaluation, problem-solving, and communication skills, and to clarify that skills include the ability to implement positive behavioral ''interventions and support strategies.''

PART A—TEACHER QUALITY PARTNERSHIP GRANTS

Section 201. Purposes

The Senate amendment and the House bill both modify Section 201(a)(3) of the HEA. The Senate amendment provides that a purpose of this Section is to hold institutions of higher education accountable for preparing highly qualified teachers.

The House bill specifies that teacher preparation programs be held accountable for preparing highly qualified teachers.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify that the focus of the program be on prospective and new teachers.

Section 202. Partnership Grants

The Senate amendment and the House bill retain the current standards for authorizing a Partnership Grant program.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include different application requirements. The Senate amendment requires that applications describe the extent to which new teachers will be prepared to understand research and data and its applicability. The House bill requires that applications describe how new teachers will be prepared to use research and data to improve instruction. The House bill requires that applications also provide a description of how partnerships will prepare teachers to teach students with disabilities and students with limited English proficiency.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require that applications also provide a description of how partnerships will strengthen the content knowledge and teaching skills of elementary and secondary school teachers and train other classroom teachers to implement literacy programs that incorporate the essential components of reading instruction.

The Senate amendment requires partnerships to use funds for either a pre-baccalaureate preparation program, a teaching residency program, or both. The House bill adds a leadership development program, and requires that funds be used for at least two of the three types of programs.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to allow partnerships to use funds for a leadership development program only in addition to either a pre-baccalaureate preparation program or a teaching residency program or both.

The Senate amendment and the House bill describe a ''Pre-Baccalaureate Preparation Program'' and require teacher preparation reforms.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require certain reforms to be directed to specified types of current or prospective teachers. The House bill also includes additional provisions regarding ''Advanced Placement and International Baccalaureate teachers.''

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require reforms that prepare teachers to understand, practice, research, and use technology and instructional techniques. The House bill adds ''strategies, consistent with the principles of universal design for learning, and positive behavioral support strategies.''

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require reforms to promote strong teaching skills for early childhood educators including, as applicable, techniques for early childhood educators to improve children's cognitive, social, emotional, and physical development. The House bill includes the ability to effectively teach higher-order analytical, evaluative, problem-solving, and communication skills.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a provision for required reforms.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill requires that reforms implemented by Pre-Baccalaureate Preparation Programs include general and special education teachers.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill requires that reforms implemented by Pre-Baccalaureate Preparation Programs effectively teach high-order analytical, evaluative, problem solving, and communications skills appropriate for the teacher's content or specialty area.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House bill requires that reforms implemented by Pre-Baccalaureate Preparation Programs ensure that prospective teachers and early childhood educators can effectively participate in the individualized education program ''process,'' as defined in section 614(d)(1)(B) of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify that reforms include implementing teacher preparation program curriculum changes to ensure teachers can effectively participate as a member of the individualized education program team.

program for HBCU's, including those identified by the GAO in its October 2006 report on the program. The Conferees also intend for the Secretary to continue the Department of Education's reported efforts to explore other options to improve the program. In particular, the Conferees intend for the Secretary to explore alternative methods of compensating the designated bonding authority that would reduce the cost of bond issuance incurred by participating HBCU's, while simultaneously ensuring that the compensation is sufficient to ensure interest on the part of companies to compete to become the program's designated bonding authority. Currently, HBCU's that participate in the program pay up to two percent of the proceeds of bonds issued to the designated bonding authority. The Conferees intend for the Secretary to consider, among other options, a fee structure that would charge up to two percent of the proceeds from bond issuance but not above a reasonable amount (to be determined after an assessment of the actual costs of bond issuance). To ensure continued improvements are made to the program and that it is meeting the needs of HBCU's, the Conferees intend to engage in robust oversight of the Department of Education's administration of the program.

The House bill increases from nine to eleven the number of members of the HBCU Capital Financing Advisory Board, increases from two to three the number of members required to be presidents of public HBCU's, and designates the President of the Thurgood Marshall Scholarship Fund as a member of the Advisory Board.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill makes technical amendments to provisions pertaining to the disbursement of the mandatory Pell Grant funds, emphasizing that the mandatory Pell grant funds and the discretionary Pell grant funds may be disbursed in the same manner during the same timeframe. The House bill specifies that the mandatory funds shall remain available for two full fiscal years to be consistent with discretionary Pell Grant funds.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill limit Pell Grant receipt to eighteen semesters or an equivalent determined by the Secretary. The House bill also specifies that twenty-seven quarters is equivalent to this limit.

The Senate amendment states that the eighteen-semester limit is determined without regard to attendance status (full-time or part-time) and includes time prior to the date of enactment. The House bill specifies that only the amount (or percent) of time that the student enrolls shall be counted against the time limit. The House bill also applies the limit only to students who receive their first Pell Grant after July 1, 2008.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill sets the expected family contribution (EFC) to $0 for any Pell eligible student whose parent or guardian was a member of the Armed Forces and died in Iraq or Afghanistan after September 11, 2001. The Conferees intend for the Secretaries of Defense and Veterans Affairs to work with the Secretary of Education to design mechanisms by which potential beneficiaries of this provision may be made known to the Secretary of Education. The Conferees intend for the Secretaries of Defense and Veterans Affairs to notify individuals of the conditions under which they may be eligible for an expected family contribution of zero, and provide direction for obtaining this benefit. The Conferees do not intend for this provision to require the addition of any new questions to the Free Application for Federal Student Aid.

Section 402. Academic competitiveness grants

The Conferees agreed to adopt the following provisions in the Senate amendment and House bill, as indicated, but the provisions were struck from the conference agreement because they were enacted in the ''Ensuring Continued Access to Student Loans Act of 2008'' (PL 110–227).

The Senate amendment and the House bill remove the term ''academic'' from all references to year of study in the Academic Competitiveness (AC) and National Science and Mathematics Access to Retain Talent (SMART) grant program provisions. However, the House bill replaces ''academic'' with ''award.''

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill eliminate the requirement that eligible students must be full-time. Both the Senate amendment and the House bill extend AC and SMART grant eligibility to eligible noncitizens. The Senate amendment states that a student must be Pell-eligible and the House bill states that the student must be eligible for federal student aid.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require that a student be enrolled at least half time to receive AC or SMART grants and that for students enrolled less-than-full time, the amount of the grant is reduced in the same manner as Pell Grants.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill eliminates the requirement that a rigorous program must be established by the State or local education agency and replaces it with courses that prepare students for college and work that are beyond the basic graduation requirements and that are recognized by the designated State official, or with respect to any private school or home school, the designated school official for such school, consistent with State law.

The Senate amendment has no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill extends AC grant eligibility to students who were previously enrolled in a program of undergraduate education as a part of their secondary education.

The Senate amendment has no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill extends eligibility to students enrolled in certificate programs. The Senate amendment specifies that the extension of eligibility is for a student's first year for students enrolled in certificate programs lasting at least one year, and for a second year in the case of students enrolled in certificate programs lasting at least two years.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill redefine which foreign language majors are eligible for SMART grants by removing the requirement that the foreign language must be approved by the Secretary and the Director of National Intelligence, and referencing the list of critical foreign languages published in the Federal Register on August 2, 1985. The Secretary may set priorities according to national security, economic competitiveness and educational needs.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill extend eligibility for SMART grants to students studying qualified subjects who are enrolled in institutions of higher education that do not permit declaration of a major. The Senate amendment also extends eligibility to students who are required as part of their degree program to undertake a rigorous course of study in mathematics, biology, chemistry and physics.

The House recedes with an amendment to require that students enrolled in institutions that do not allow for a declaration of a major, that such students must have a cumulative grade point average of at least 3.0, unless they are enrolled in a degree program that requires a rigorous course of study in mathematics, biology, chemistry, and physics, in which there is no specific grade point average.

The Senate amendment extends a fifth year of eligibility for SMART grants to students in programs that require five full years of course work.

The House bill has no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House bill clarifies that the $750 grant amount is for one academic year, during the student's first year of enrollment, that the $1,300 grant amount is for one academic year, during the student's second year of enrollment, and that the $4,000 grant amount is for one academic year, during each of the student's third and fourth years of enrollment.

Senate amendment has no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment specifies that the Secretary may not award a grant to any student for credit received prior to the enactment of HERA. The Senate amendment clarifies that the Secretary may not award more than one grant to a student for each year of study through the fifth year. The Senate amendment requires that institutions of higher education make payments for AC and SMART grants in the same manner as Pell. The Senate amendment specifies that the funds shall remain available for a succeeding fiscal year.

The House bill has no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

In addition, Conferees agree to adopt the following changes to the ''Ensuring Continued Access to Student Loans Act of 2008'' (PL 100–227): to waive master calendar and negotiated rulemaking for the changes to the Academic Competitiveness and SMART grant program included in that statute; to make the changes to the program take effect starting on July 1, 2009; to require the appropriate official, consistent with State law, to submit eligible rigorous curricula to the Secretary at such time as the Secretary may require; and to clarify that a rigorous curricula also includes one that is recognized as such by the Secretary in regulations promulgated to carry out this section, as such regulations were in effect on May 6, 2008.

Section 403. Federal TRIO programs

The Senate amendment and the House bill extend the duration of TRIO grants from four to five years, increase minimum grant amounts for each of the TRIO programs to $200,000 except the evaluation grants which are raised to $170,000, prioritize high quality service delivery, and prohibit the Secretary from providing assistance to fraudulent programs. The Senate amendment and the House bill clarify that the Secretary may award grants to different campuses of an institution. Both the Senate and the House make the same amendment concerning prior experience and data. The Senate amendment and the House bill make the same amendment concerning the objectives of the Postbaccalaureate Achievement Program, and Educational Opportunity Centers. The Senate amendment and the House bill make conforming amendments to the subparagraph on the Secretary's waiver authority and subsection (e) (Documentation of status as a low-income individual). The Senate amendment and the House bill change the definitions subsection and add new definitions for the terms ''different campus'' and ''different population.'' The Senate amendment and the House bill extend eligibility for the Postbaccalaureate Achievement program to Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill clarifies that community-based organizations are eligible for the TRIO programs and removes a requirement in current law that secondary schools be eligible only in exceptional circumstances. The House bill extends the duration for certain grants in order to synchronize current award cycles and requires the Secretary to consider the number, percentages and needs of eligible participants in awarding grants.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that ''organizations'' includes community-based organizations, and to clarify that secondary schools are eligible grantees as appropriate to the purposes of each program.

The additional language clarifies that secondary schools can serve as eligible grantees for TRIO programs that take place in secondary schools (e.g., Upward Bound, Upward Bound Math Science, and Talent Search).

It is the understanding of the Conferees that, when assessing the level of need of an eligible entity for a grant or contract under this chapter, the Department of Education should consider the numbers, percentages, and needs of the eligible students rather than the characteristics of the entity both for pre-college and college-level programs. Focusing on the level of need of a school could unintentionally mask the level of need of students for such services. This provision clarifies that the application process should focus on the needs of the eligible students rather than solely on the characteristics of the institutions attended.

The House bill requires that all TRIO grantees identify services for foster care youth and to ensure such youth receive services. The House bill further clarifies that homeless youth are eligible to participate in programs under this chapter.

The Senate amendment makes the same amendments, but does so in each TRIO program.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require grantees to identify and make services available for foster care and homeless youth, and to clarify that foster care youth are eligible to participate in programs under this chapter.

The Senate amendment and the House bill set specific requirements that outcome criteria must measure the quality and effectiveness of an entity's program. Both the Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to compare the results with the target established in the application.

The Senate amendment requires the entity to compare the results with the target.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill amend the outcome criteria of Talent Search. The House bill also adds language on completing a rigorous secondary school program. The Senate amendment adds language on the postsecondary education completion of students in Talent Search.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to include both completion of a rigorous secondary school program and postsecondary education completion as outcome criteria for students in Talent Search.

It is the understanding of the Conferees that grantees under this subchapter receive a low dollar amount per student, which may make measuring postsecondary completion of their students difficult. The Department of Education, should work with grantees to design and implement outcome measures that will not result in reduction of services to current students.

The Senate amendment and the House bill make the same amendment concerning the outcome criteria of Upward Bound. The House bill also adds language on completing a rigorous secondary school program.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include postsecondary education completion and to specify that students graduate from secondary school with a regular diploma in the standard number of years as outcome criteria for students in Upward Bound.

The Senate amendment and the House bill make the same amendment concerning the outcome criteria of Student Support Services.

The House recedes with an amendment to clarify the outcome criteria relating to the completion of degree programs.

The House bill adds a new appeals process in the event that the Secretary does not accept an application or does not fund an application.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to create an appeal process for TRIO program applicants, in cases where the applicant has evidence of a specific technical, administrative, or scoring error made by the Department, an agent of the Department, or a peer reviewer on an application, which includes review by a secondary review panel, to formally appeal their grant scores.

The need for such a process is evidenced by past errors including the miscalculation of prior experience points by the Department, applications lost or wrongly determined to be incomplete by the Department or its agent (such as Grants.gov), and misunderstandings by peer reviewers of the program purpose of a grant applicant and the population that that program serves. By including this language, Conferees intend to prevent future errors from wrongly denying programs funding and ensure that all TRIO applicants are subject to a fair and transparent application process.

The Senate amendment authorizes TRIO at such sums as necessary for fiscal year 2008 and the five succeeding fiscal years.

The House bill established the TRIO authorization level at $950,000,000 for fiscal year 2009 and such sums as necessary for the four succeeding fiscal years.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to authorize $900,000,000 for fiscal year 2009 and such sums as necessary for each of the five succeeding fiscal years.

The Senate amendment amends veterans eligibility for Upward Bound to include anyone who served on active duty more than 180 days after January 31, 1955; served on active duty after January 31, 1955 and was discharged because of a service connected disability; or was a member of the reserves and called to active duty for more than 180 days.

The House bill amends veterans eligibility for Upward Bound to include anyone who served on active duty more than 180 days; served on active duty and was discharged because of a service connected disability; was a member of the reserves and called to active duty for more than 180 days; or was a member of the reserves who served on active duty in support of a contingency operation on or after September 11, 2001.

The Senate amendment provides language authorizing Talent Search to give support to students who are limited English proficient, homeless, and who are in or aging out of foster care.

The House recedes with an amendment to add students from groups that are traditionally underrepresented in postsecondary education, students with disabilities, and other disconnected students.

The Conferees recognize that students who are limited English proficient, students from groups that are traditionally underrepresented in higher education, students with disabilities, homeless students, youth aging out of foster care, or other disconnected students, such as pregnant or parenting teens or youth who have been involved in the juvenile justice system, have additional challenges in accessing postsecondary educational opportunities and persisting until program completion. Therefore, the Conferees encourage TRIO grantees, as appropriate, to offer programs and activities that are specially designed to address the unique challenges these students face as they work to achieve a college degree.

Further, this provision seeks to increase the number of minority men in higher education as well as other populations who are unrepresented in higher education. The under representation of minority males, especially African American and Latino males, is a matter of public record that is reinforced by high drop-out rates in urban and rural school districts and by lower participation/enrollment rates of these groups in colleges and universities. By encouraging programs to recruit students from these underrepresented populations, this provision helps provide needed supports to these youth so that the higher education student body better reflects national demographics.

The Senate amendment replaces the current Upward Bound subsection (b) Permissible Services with a new subsection (b) Required Services that includes many of the current permissible services. The Senate amendment renames the current subsection (c) Required Services calling it (c) ''Additional Required Services for Multiple-Year Grant Recipients.'' The Senate amendment and the House bill require the same new report from the Secretary to the authorizing committees and include practices regarding evaluations and the dissemination of evaluation findings.

The Senate and House recede with an amendment to require the new report, as well as an evaluation of the Upward Bound program to be implemented by June 30, 2010.

The Conferees intend for the evaluation of the Upward Bound Program to produce reliable data on the extent to which the program is effective in accomplishing its core purpose of generating the skills and motivation necessary for students to succeed in postsecondary education. To that end, the evaluation should be thorough, well-designed, and, to the degree feasible, free of factors that could affect the reliability of the evaluation. As such, the Conferees expect that the evaluation will not include data from the cohort of students selected for Upward Bound while the absolute priority for the program published by the Department of Education in the Federal Register on September 22, 2006, was in effect. The Conferees also expect the evaluation to be designed, consistent with the other requirements regarding evaluations in section 402H, in a manner that controls for other variables that affect students' likelihood of successfully transitioning into postsecondary education, so that the specific impact of Upward Bound, as distinct from other factors, may be evaluated.

In addition, the evaluation should also include an assessment of whether students with specific characteristics are more successful in transitioning to postsecondary education as a result of Upward Bound. For example, consideration could be given to variables such as racial/ethnic group, parents' education level, and level of the students' educational expectation and whether they interact in a way to promote greater success in the program. Finally, the evaluation should build upon past research findings, such as research on programs with similar objectives as Upward Bound, to determine which programs have produced better results than others, and to identify the common program characteristics that are associated with successful transition to postsecondary education. The Conferees expect the authorizing committees to be able to use the results of the evaluation authorized in this section, as well as past research findings, to inform potential changes to Upward Bound in future reauthorizations.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill prohibit the Secretary from requiring a grantee to recruit students to serve as a control group for purposes of evaluating any program or project assisted under this chapter.

The Conferees agree to adopt the provision with technical changes.

The House bill requires the Secretary, when designing an evaluation, to consider the burden that may be placed upon participants and institutional review board.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that the Secretary shall continue to consider whether an evaluation meets generally accepted standards of institutional review boards.

Section 404. Gaining early awareness and readiness for undergraduate programs

The Senate amendment removes the requirement that eligible entities ''provide or maintain a guarantee to eligible low-income students who obtain a secondary school diploma (or its recognized equivalent), of the financial assistance necessary to permit the students to attend an institution of higher education.''

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to clarify that eligible entities shall provide support and maintain a commitment to assisting participants in obtaining a secondary school degree and succeeding in postsecondary education.

The House bill includes students with disabilities to the description of those to receive services.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House bill contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary, in distributing grant funds, to make available no less than thirty-three percent of grant funds to States and no less than thirty-three percent of grant funds to partnerships and to distribute the remaining grant funds between states and partnerships. In awarding grants the Secretary shall take into consideration the number, quality, and promise of the applications; and to the extent practicable, the geographic distribution of such awards; and the distribution of such awards between urban and rural applicants.

The Senate amendment changes ''plans'' to ''applications'' and removes the requirement that an application for a partnership grant ''provide for the conduct of a scholarship component.'' The Senate amendment expands the contents of the application to include descriptions of how the entity will meet the requirements of program activities, define cohorts of students to be served, and coordinate with existing programs.

The House bill contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

In providing assurances that adequate administrative and support staff will be responsible for coordinating the activities of the GEAR UP grant, the Conferees acknowledge the importance of grantees identifying an individual whose primary responsibility is to serve as the coordinator for the GEAR UP grant as well as the other administrative and support staff who will be involved in carrying out the activities described in the grant application.

The House bill permits grantees to provide matching funds over the duration of the grant award period.

The Senate amendment has no similar provision.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that an entity may request a reduced match at the time of application due to significant economic hardship and a grantee may request a reduced match if matching funding no longer is available and it has exhausted its reserves.

The House bill encourages eligible entities to provide student aid to participants by treating every non-federal dollar as two dollars for the purpose of satisfying the matching requirement.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to permit partnerships that provide scholarships to request a reduced match at the time of their application. Such application must include a description of how a reduced match will assist the entity to provide scholarships.

The Senate amendment and the House bill amend the matching requirement to include funds ''obligated,'' instead of ''paid,'' to students from State, local, institutional, or private funds as well as ''equipment and supplies, cash contributions from non-Federal sources, transportation expenses, in-kind or discounted program services, indirect costs, and facility usage.''

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment amends the early intervention activities provided under current law to distinguish between Required Activities and Optional Activities. Both States and partnerships are required to provide financial aid information, encourage enrollment in rigorous coursework, and support activities designed to improve the number of participating students who complete secondary school, and enroll in a program of postsecondary education. State grantees are further required to provide scholarships. The Senate amendment requires both State and Partnership grantees to engage in at least one of several optional activities including mentorship, outreach, support services, curricular development, support for dual enrollment, and, in the case of a partnership, support for scholarships.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to clarify that, as part of an entity's required activities, in order to receive a GEAR UP grant, the entity shall demonstrate to the Secretary that the entity will provide comprehensive mentoring, outreach and supportive services to participating students.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an amendment to change optional activities to permissible activities.

The Senate amendment and the House bill amend the current priority for services to students for entities that do not use a cohort approach. The Senate amendment and the House bill retain students eligible to be counted under Section 1124(c) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and eligible for free or reduced price lunch under the Richard B. Russell National School Lunch Act. The Senate amendment adds to the list, students eligible under Part E, in addition to Part A of Title IV of the Social Security Act, and students eligible for assistance under subtitle B of Title VII of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act. The House bill adds disconnected students, students in foster care, or homeless or unaccompanied youth as defined in Section 725 of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an amendment to delete the reference to free or reduced price lunch and to give priority to students who are otherwise considered disconnected students.

The Conferees recognize that students who are limited English proficient, students from groups that are traditionally underrepresented in higher education, students with disabilities, homeless students, youth aging out of foster care, or other disconnected students, such as pregnant or parenting teens or youth who have been involved in the juvenile justice system, have additional challenges to access postsecondary educational opportunities and to persist until program completion. Therefore, the Conferees encourage GEAR UP grantees, as appropriate, to offer programs and activities that are specially designed to address the unique challenges these students face as they work to achieve a college degree.

The House bill allows entities in partnerships to collaborate in providing matching resources and participate in other activities.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment strikes the provision at section 413D(a)(4), authorizing the Secretary to allocate up to ten percent of the amount appropriated for programs authorized under Title IV, Part A (when the appropriation exceeds $700,000,000), among institutions of higher education from which fifty percent or more Pell Grant recipients either graduate or transfer to four-year institutions of higher education. Recognizing the serious consequences of student loan default for the borrowers, it is the Conferees' intent that institutions that exceed the cohort default rate threshold develop a comprehensive strategy to prevent current and former students from defaulting on their federal student loans. The Conferees intend for institutions to establish a default prevention task force that would bring together experts who can address the key components of successful default prevention strategies. For example, default prevention task forces may include representatives from the admissions office, the student aid office, student affairs, and the career and academic advising office. The House bill extends the authorization of appropriations for federal capital contributions, in the amount of such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2014 through fiscal year 2019, to enable students receiving Perkins Loans for academic years ending prior to October 1, 2014, to continue or complete their courses of study.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to authorize appropriations of $300,000,000 for fiscal year 2009 and for each of the five succeeding fiscal years and extends the authorization of appropriations for federal capital contributions, in the amount of such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2014 through fiscal year 2019, to enable students receiving Perkins Loans for academic years ending prior to October 1, 2014, to continue or complete their courses of study. .

Section 462. Allowance for books and supplies

The Senate amendment and the House bill increase the allowance for books and supplies used in calculating each institution of higher education's average cost of attendance for purposes of allocating federal capital contributions to institutions of higher education according to ''fair share'' allocation procedures from $450 to $600.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

Section 463. Agreements with institutions

The House bill amends Federal Perkins Loan program agreements between the Secretary and institutions of higher education to provide that if an institution of higher education has not knowingly failed to maintain an acceptable collection record with respect to a defaulted Perkins Loan, the Secretary may allow the institution of higher education to refer the loan to the Secretary, without recompense, except that the amount collected shall be repaid to the referring institution of higher education within 180 days of collection and shall be treated as an additional federal capital contribution. The House bill adds language to limit the authority of the Secretary to require the mandatory assignment of Perkins Loans.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

The Conferees note that the Secretary of Education lacks the authority under this section to require assignment of defaulted Perkins loans. Furthermore, it is the intent of the Conferees that any funds collected from defaulted Perkins loans, including loans that have been assigned to the Department of Education for additional collection activities, be returned to the institution's revolving fund and available for new loans to future students.

The Conferees intend to prohibit administrative measures that would weaken the program by reducing the Perkins Loan funds available to lend to students. For this reason, the Conferees agreed to provisions clarifying that the Secretary is only permitted to require the assignment of defaulted Perkins Loans to the Secretary when an institution of higher education has knowingly failed to maintain collection records. The fact that a loan has been in default for any period of time does not mean that the institution has failed to perform due diligence in its collection and is not grounds for the Secretary to require the assignment of the loan.

Section 464. Perkins loan terms and conditions

The House bill increases annual Perkins Loan limits from $4,000 to $5,500 for undergraduate students; and from $6,000 to $8,000 for graduate and professional students. The House bill increases aggregate Perkins Loan limits from $40,000 to $60,000 for graduate and professional students; from $20,000 to $27,500 for undergraduate students who have completed two years of study; and from $8,000 to $11,000 for all other students.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes.

The Conferees adopt a provision to make the death or disability discharge of Perkins loans consistent with how a loan is discharged in the loan programs in Parts B and D.

The Senate amendment and the House bill remove the requirement that borrowers of Perkins Loans request forbearance in writing and require that the terms of forbearance agreed to by the borrower and the lending institution of higher education must be documented and recorded in the borrower's file and amend a cross-reference regarding forbearance and the Armed Forces Student Loan Interest Payment Program.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an amendment to add an effective date of July 1, 2010.

Section 483. Improvements to paper and electronic forms and processes

The Senate amendment includes provisions pertaining to common financial aid forms. The House bill includes provisions pertaining to common financial aid forms that are primarily the same as the Senate amendment's provisions, however, the House bill also specifies that: the application is for applying and reapplying to determine need, and the Secretary shall work to make the FAFSA consumer-friendly, and make the application available in formats that are accessible to individuals with disabilities.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to maintain a paper version of the FAFSA. The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to encourage applicants to file the electronic version of the application.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to develop an EZ FAFSA for individuals eligible for automatic-zero expected family contribution (auto-zero EFC). The House bill also includes individuals who are eligible for simplified needs test (SNT).

The Senate recedes with an amendment that the Secretary shall use the simplified paper application form after appropriate field testing.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require that the form contain only elements necessary to determine student eligibility for federal student aid if such applicant is eligible for auto-zero EFC. The House bill also extends this provision to applicants eligible for SNT.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a provision that requires the Secretary to include State data items necessary to award State financial assistance, unless that State does not permit use of the EZ FAFSA.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a provision regarding free availability and processing of the EZ FAFSA. The House bill further states that the data collected from the EZ FAFSA shall be available to institutions of higher education, guaranty agencies and states.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment states that the Secretary shall phase out printing the full paper FAFSA at such time as it is determined to not be cost effective. Additionally, the Secretary is required to maintain an easily accessible, downloadable paper version and provide a printed version of the full FAFSA upon request.

The House bill requires that an easily accessible version be made available, but specifies that it must be made available on the same website used to provide students with the electronic form.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to require the Secretary to maintain the FAFSA in a printable form and provide a printed copy of the full paper version of FAFSA upon request.

The House bill requires the Secretary to report annually to Congress the impact of the digital divide on students applying for Title IV aid. The Secretary's report must specifically address the impact on independent and dependent students as well as those students who are traditionally underrepresented.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary to maintain the data and report the information periodically, rather than annually.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to produce and make available an electronic version of the FAFSA and to develop a simplified electronic application for auto-zero EFC eligible students. The House bill extends this eligibility to those eligible for simplified needs test.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to include space on the electronic form for State data, except that a student shall be required to enter data only for his/her State.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a provision regarding data availability. The House bill also requires that the data shall be made available to institutions of higher education, guaranty agencies and States.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a provision regarding privacy and data confidentiality.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to strike the reference to State aid awarded under the LEAP program.

The Senate amendment and the House bill contain similar provisions regarding the use of electronic signatures.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to add language that the Secretary may ''continue to'' permit an electronic form to be completed without a signature if a signature is subsequently submitted or if a Personal Identification Number (PIN) is used.

The Senate amendment permits the Secretary to assign PINs to applicants to allow applicants to sign the electronic version of the FAFSA. The House has the same provision, except that it specifies that the PIN can be used in lieu of a signature for forms required by the LEAP program.

The House recedes with an amendment clarifying that the Secretary ''may continue to'' assign PINs.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include similar provisions regarding PIN improvement, but the Senate amendment specifies that a real time data match must be implemented within 180 days following enactment.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary to ''continue to work with'' the Social Security Administration to minimize the time it takes for a student to obtain a PIN.

The House bill states that the Secretary shall work to reduce the number of data elements entered by all applicants by fifty percent. The House bill further specifies that the Secretary must submit a report on the reduction process to each of the authorizing committees two years after enactment.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to: use the number of data elements on the FAFSA from the 2009–2010 academic year as the baseline to be reduced by fifty percent; insert language that the Secretary's efforts, in cooperation with representatives from other agencies and organizations, be consistent with other provisions in this section; strike the language exempting form development required under this Act from the reduction goal; and to include a date by which the report shall be submitted.

The Senate amendment specifies that the number of state items on the form shall not be less than the number of items in award year 2005–2006. The House bill specifies that the number of state items shall not be less than the number of items in award year 2008–2009.

The House recedes with an amendment to change the award year to 2008–2009.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to review the data annually to determine which items a State needs to award need-based aid and whether the State permits an applicant to file a simplified form.

The House bill requires the Secretary to conduct an annual review of the forms and non-financial data States require to award need-based aid.

The House recedes.

The House bill requires the Secretary to publish an annual notice in the Federal Register requiring States to inform the Secretary what State-specific data are required to deliver State need-based aid and if the State does not permit applicants to use a simplified form.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill requires States to notify the Secretary if the State permits applicants to file a form for the purposes of determining eligibility and of the State-specific non-financial data the State requires for delivery of need-based aid.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment requires that if a State does not permit applicants to use a simplified form the Secretary may decide not to include the State's questions on the FAFSA.

The House bill requires the States that do not permit applicants to use a simplified form due to State law or agency policy to notify the Secretary. The State must also include an estimate of the costs associated with the use a simplified form. The House bill requires that State applicants for LEAP notify the Secretary if the use of a simplified form is permitted.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill prohibit charges to students and parents for use of the form.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment to specify that no data collected on a form for which a fee is charged shall be used to complete the form prescribed under this section, other than a Federal or State income tax form prepared by a paid income tax preparation service for the primary purpose of filing a Federal or State income tax return.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to permit students to complete the FAFSA as early as practicable prior to January 1 of the student's planned year of enrollment.

The House bill states that students should be able to complete the FAFSA as early as practicable prior to October 15 in the year prior to the student's planned year of enrollment.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill state that the Secretary shall develop the means to provide students with an early estimate of their financial aid eligibility. The House bill further states that the Secretary must notify applicants that the EFC is subject to change.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary to consult with representatives of States, institutions of higher education and other individuals with experience in student financial aid processes in making updates to forms used to provide early estimates.

The Senate amendment provides that FAFSA data shall be provided to institutions of higher education, guaranty agencies and states without charge. The Senate amendment provides private organizations and consortia that develop software used by Title IV participating institutions of higher education the necessary specifications to produce and distribute software. The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to include space for parent's social security number and date of birth on the FAFSA.

The House bill contains no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to test and implement a toll free telephone number for the FAFSA application system.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to: strike the requirement that the Secretary test the system not later than two years after the date of enactment of this act; add in language that the Secretary shall ''continue to implement'' the toll-free telephone based system; and make the submission of applications over this system a separate activity by adding ''and (b)'' before it.

The Senate amendment authorizes applicants to use a preparer for consultative or preparer services. Any entity that provides any value-added service such as completion or submission of the FAFSA shall provide a clear and conspicuous notice that the FAFSA is free, can be completed without professional assistance, and provide a link to the Department of Education's website. Also, the Senate amendment specifies that the provider cannot charge recipients who qualify for SNT or auto-zero EFC.

The House bill states that any entity that provides any value-added service such as completion or submission of the FAFSA shall provide notice that the FAFSA is free; can be completed without professional assistance; and provide a link to the Department of Education's website.

The House recedes with the amendment that: states that the preparer's identification information is required if a fee is charged for the services; the preparer providing services must clearly inform each individual that the forms are free and may be completed without professional assistance; modifies the language that the FAFSA and EZ FAFSA are free forms that may be completed via paper or electronically; strikes subpart (E) which refers to not charging any fee to any individual who meets specified requirements; and specifies that a preparer is subject to the same penalties as an applicant for purposely giving false or misleading information in the application.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include an early application and demonstration program to determine the benefits and costs of early notification. The House bill's purpose is more detailed.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to title this provision ''Early Application and Estimated Award Demonstration Program.''

The Senate amendment implements the early application demonstration program within two years of the enactment of this Act. The Senate amendment also states that for all of the dependent students who participate in the demonstration program, those who are also auto-zero EFC eligible shall be provided with an EFC and Pell Grant award amount for the first year.

The House bill contains a similar provision that provides an estimated EFC and aid award for all students.

The House recedes with amendments that: modify the requirement that the Secretary provide each student with ''an estimated award''; and strike the requirement that the Secretary provide estimates to students who do not meet the requirements.

The Senate amendment and House bill include provisions identifying participants. The Senate amendment specifies that the secondary school must commit select resources and participate in an evaluation.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment specifies that the application must contain certain assurances, such as the amount of state need-based aid available, a commitment to provide actual awards and estimates, and a plan to recruit institutions of higher education.

The House bill contains a comparable provision regarding the application process for the demonstration program, but does not include the Senate's specific assurances.

The House recedes with amendments to the application requirements: clarify that the information provided is an estimate rather than an award determination; all participating dependent students must receive estimated awards; State applications must include a plan to select institutions of higher education and postsecondary schools that to the extent possible serve different populations are of varying types ''and sectors'' (rather than ''control'').

The Senate amendment grants the Secretary the authority to waive requirements for an institution of higher education to participate in the demonstration program.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to conduct an evaluation of the demonstration program.

The House bill includes a similar, but less detailed provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to include a description of the extent to which estimated awards differ from actual awards made to students participating in the program.

The Senate amendment and the House bill have a provision requiring the Secretary to consult with the Advisory Committee on Student Financial Assistance in implementing the pilot program.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment requires the Comptroller General and the Secretary, in consultation with a study group, to design and conduct a study to identify and evaluate the means of simplifying the process of applying for Federal student financial aid. The Secretary, with the Secretary of the Treasury, may use Internal Revenue Service data to pre-populate the FAFSA if such use would not negatively impact students, institutions, states or the federal government.

The House bill includes a provision that expresses the Sense of the Congress that the Department of Education and the Secretary of Treasury should work together to develop a process by which the Department of Education would be able to obtain student's financial information from the IRS, with the student's permission, to assist with completing the FAFSA.

The House recedes with an amendment that directs the Secretary to continue current FAFSA simplification efforts, in cooperation with the Internal Revenue Service, and to report on efforts to date. In addition, the Comptroller General is to convene a group to study additional simplification of the financial aid application process, using the current statutory requirements, and to identify changes to the need analysis formula that will be necessary to reduce the amount of financial information students and families need to provide to receive a determination of an eligibility for student financial aid.

The Conferees intend that, in evaluating the impact of using income from the year that is two years prior to a student's enrollment on the ability of States and institutions to make financial aid awards and commitments, the Secretary should assess the overall application burden on students and families applying for all types of aid, and any additional costs to States and institutions. The Conferees recognize one of the advantages of the current FAFSA application and process is that it is used by many States and institutions to award State and institutional aid in addition to Federal aid. Students and families would not be well served if the application and award process for Federal student aid were simpler, but the application and award process for State and institutional aid became more cumbersome.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include similar provisions to require the Secretary to use the savings produced by not printing the full paper FAFSA to improve access to the electronic forms for low-income students.

The Senate recedes.

Section 484. Model institutions financial aid offer form

The House bill directs the Secretary to report on the adequacy of the financial aid offer forms provided by institutions of higher education to students and their families. The report should include a model financial aid offer form which includes: cost of attendance the amount of aid that does not have to repaid, and types and amounts of loans, for which the student is eligible.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments to: direct the Secretary to convene a group for the purpose of offering recommendations to improve financial aid offer forms; include additional individuals on the list of members of the group; and modify the contents of the form.

Section 485. Student eligibility

The House bill eliminates the exemption for students from the Republic of the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia from providing their social security number when applying for federal student aid.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment allows institutions to determine that a student has the ability to benefit from postsecondary education if the student satisfactorily completes six credit hours or the equivalent coursework applicable toward a degree or certificate offered by the institution of higher education.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House bill specifies that the provision of assistance to students from the Republic of Palau only applies for federal student aid under Title IV subpart 1 of Part A and would expire September 30, 2009.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill make several updates to change ''telecommunications'' to ''distance education'' to be consistent with the newly added definition of distance education; update the reference to postsecondary vocational institutions to reflect the reauthorization of the Perkins Career and Technical Education Act in 2006

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill allows a student who has lost student aid eligibility due to a drug conviction that complies with requirements established by the Secretary to regain eligibility for Title IV aid if the student successfully passes two unannounced drug tests conducted by a drug rehabilitation program.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Currently, students lose their eligibility for federal student financial aid if they were convicted for the sale or possession of drugs while receiving such aid. This provision does not affect the eligibility of students who may have been arrested prior to the start of their first year of college, or who were arrested during any period where they were not receiving federal student aid. Current law provides mechanisms by which students may regain their eligibility for federal student financial aid.

The Conferees believe that the Department of Education and institutions of higher education should take steps to ensure that students understand the implications and provisions of section 484(r). As currently worded, the 'drug penalty' question on the FAFSA may serve as a barrier to completing the form, as students may not understand the scope of the prohibition. Data from the Department of Education show that in the 2007–2008 award year, at least 15,700 students initially filled the form out in such a way that they would have been ineligible for financial aid for at least part of the academic year. Upon further review and revision of these applications, approximately 5,400 students were deemed ineligible for aid-thirty-four percent of those originally deemed ineligible for aid.

The Conferees believe that the Department of Education should immediately re-word the question on the FAFSA form in order to more accurately reflect the provision.

Furthermore, the Conferees encourage the Department of Education to take steps to ensure the integrity and privacy of the drug tests used by students to regain eligibility. Such drug testing should utilize only highly-reliable methods conducted by qualified drug rehabilitation programs.

The Senate amendment permits students with intellectual disabilities to receive Pell grants, FSEOG, and Federal Work Study under certain circumstances.

The House bill includes similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to limit the waivers the Secretary can provide to implement this section.

The Conferees intend to provide eligibility to students with intellectual disabilities attending any inclusive comprehensive transition and postsecondary program for students with intellectual disabilities as defined by this Act, including but not limited to students attending programs participating in grants authorized under subpart 2 of Title VII of this Act, provided that such students meet the eligibility criteria described in this section.

The House bill requires the Secretary, in consultation with the Central Processing

System, to analyze data from the FAFSA containing information regarding the number, characteristics, and circumstances of students denied Federal student aid based on a drug conviction while receiving Federal aid.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to strike ''in consultation with the Central Processing System.''

The Conferees expect the Secretary to work with the Central Processing System in developing the report or access to federal student aid for certain populations as required in this section. The Conferees understand that, as Congress continues to examine the issue of drug-related student eligibility, it is critical to have full information about the impact of the provision. The Conferees intend that the information collected, analyzed, and made available to the public under this section will provide an understanding of the demographic background of the students excluded from federal aid by the drug prohibition, the nature of the offenses underlying the exclusion, and other characteristics of such students that may better inform the work of Congress as it continues to examine the issue of drug-related student eligibility.

Section 486. Statute of limitations and state court judgments

The Senate amendment and the House bill specify that for the Perkins Loan program, institutions shall not be subject to a defense raised by a borrower on the basis of a claim of infancy under state law.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment provides that obligations to repay loans and grant overpayments, costs and other charges on defaulted loans, and state court judgments shall not apply in the case of deceased student or a deceased student's estate. Neither a deceased student's estate nor the estate of a deceased student's family shall be required to repay any Title IV financial assistance, nor interest, collection costs, or other charges.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Section 487. Readmission requirements for service members

The House bill requires any institution of higher education that requires a student, who is a member of the Armed Forces or a member of the Armed Forces in retired status, whose attendance is interrupted by a call or order to active duty to subsequently reapply for readmission at the time of the conclusion of active duty to justify this requirement in writing to the Secretary.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to establish a standard process for students who are required to leave an institution because they have been called to active duty to reenroll at the institution in the same academic standing the student had before leaving the institution. Such process is modeled after the process established for servicemembers to return to employment after serving on active duty in the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act.

Section 488. Institutional and financial assistance information for students

The Senate amendment requires each institution of higher education to make available to current and prospective students information about its plans for improving the academic program of the institution of higher education.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to make a technical change.

The Senate amendment alters the requirement that institutions make available to current and prospective students the terms and conditions under which students receive Federal Family Education Loan and Direct Loan to also include Perkins Loans.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require institutions to make available to current and prospective students the institution of higher education's policies and sanctions related to copyright infringement, including a description of actions taken by the institution of higher education to detect and prevent the unauthorized distribution of copyrighted materials on the institution of higher education's technology system.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment to replace language in (iv) with language requiring institutions to make available the development of plans to detect and prevent unauthorized distribution of copyrighted material on the institution of higher education's information technology system which shall, to the extent practicable, include offering alternatives to illegal-downloading or peer-to-peer distribution of intellectual property, as determined by the institution of higher education in consultation with the Chief Technology Officer or other designated officer of the institution.

The Conferees have combined elements from both bills to require institutions to advise students about this issue and to certify that all institutions have plans to combat and reduce illegal peer to peer file sharing.

Experience shows that a technology-based deterrent can be an effective element of an overall solution to combat copyright infringement, when used in combination with other internal and external solutions to educate users and enforce institutional policies.

Effective technology-based deterrents are currently available to institutions of higher education through a number of vendors. These approaches may provide an institution with the ability to choose which one best meets its needs, depending on that institution's own unique characteristics, such as cost and scale. These include bandwidth shaping, traffic monitoring to identify the largest bandwidth users, a vigorous program of accepting and responding to Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA) notices, and a variety of commercial products designed to reduce or block illegal file sharing.

Rapid advances in information technology mean that new products and techniques are continually emerging. Technologies that are promising today may be obsolete a year from now and new products that are not even on the drawing board may, at some point in the not too distant future, prove highly effective. The Conferees intend that this Section be interpreted to be technology neutral and not imply that any particular technology measures are favored or required for inclusion in an institution's plans. The Conferees intend for each institution to retain the authority to determine what its particular plans for compliance with this Section will be, including those that prohibit content monitoring. The Conferees recognize that there is a broad range of possibilities that exist for institutions to consider in developing plans for purposes of complying with this Section.

Numerous institutions are utilizing various technology based deterrents in their efforts to combat copyright infringement on their campuses. According to a report of the Joint Committee of the Higher Education and Entertainment Communities, many institutions of higher education have taken significant steps to deal with the problem. Indiana University, for example, hosts an extensive ''Are you legal?'' educational campaign for students on the issues, and enforces campus policies on proper use of the network. It acts on DCMA notices by disconnecting students from the network and requires tutorials and quizzes to restore service. Second offenders are blocked immediately and are sent to the Student Ethics Committee for disciplinary action.

Audible Magic's CopySense Network Appliance provides comprehensive control over Peer-to-Peer (P2P) usage on a university's network. The CopySense Appliance identifies and blocks illegal sharing of copyrighted files while allowing other legitimate P2P uses to continue. It filters copyrighted P2P content by sensing an electronic fingerprint unique to the content itself, which is very similar to the way virus filters operate.

Red Lambda's ''Integrity'' is a network security solution dedicated to the management of file-sharing activities via protocols like P2P, IM, IRC, and FTP. This technology is able to detect all P2P, OS file-sharing, FTP, IM, proxy use, Skype and application tunneling over HTTP, HTTPS, DNS and ICMP protocols.

The University of Maryland, College Park, severely restricts bandwidth for residential networks and block certain protocols. It designed ''Project Nethics'' to promote the responsible use of information technology through user education and policy enforcement. A third violation can result in eviction from the university housing system. Montgomery College in Maryland enforces an Acceptable Use Policy on its wired and wireless networks.

Additional existing technological approaches can deter illegal file sharing by automatically processing notices sent by scanning vendors then taking actions such as messaging the user via browser redirection, applying the appropriate sanction and automatically re-enable browsing after a timeout or reconnect fee is paid. Other institutions use technology to appropriately manage their campus networks by limiting and/or shaping bandwidth, such as Packeteer's packet shaping technology.

The Senate amendment requires institutions to make available to current and prospective student's information on student body, diversity, the placement in employment and types of employment obtained by graduates, the institutions report on fire safety, and the retention rate of certificate or degree-seeking, full-time undergraduate students.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House bill requires institutions to make available to current and prospective students their policies regarding meningococcal vaccinations.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify that institutions shall disclose policies on all vaccinations, not only meningococcal vaccinations. The Conferees note that institutions of higher education should have a policy on vaccinations of students. Of particular concern are the recent outbreaks of meningitis on college campuses. The Center for Disease Control's Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices has reported that college freshmen, especially those who live in dormitories, are at a modestly increased risk for meningococcal disease compared with other persons of the same age. There are nearly 3,000 cases of meningococcal disease every year in the U.S. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention between ten and twelve percent of the cases are fatal (about 300 to 360).

Among those who survive meningococcal disease, approximately twenty percent suffer long-term consequences, such as brain damage, kidney disease, hearing loss or limb amputations.

The Senate amendment and the House bill allow an institution of higher education to adjust the calculation of completion and graduation rates for certain students. Under the Senate amendment and the House bill, if the number of students who leave school to serve in the Armed Forces, on official church missions, or with a recognized foreign aid service of the Federal government represent twenty percent or more of certificate- or degree-seeking, full-time undergraduate students, the institution of higher education may exclude the time such students were not enrolled from the calculation.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment requires institutions to disaggregate data on completion and graduation rates based on student gender, race/ethnicity, and receipt of a Pell Grant, receipt of specific federal loans but not a Pell Grant, and non-receipt of a Pell Grant or specific federal loans. The Senate amendment does not require the disclosure of data if reporting would not yield statistically reliable information or would reveal personally identifiable information.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Conferees believe that the disaggregation of completion and graduation rates of students attending institutions of higher education, as specified under section 485 (a)(7), will yield important information regarding the degree to which different types of students are completing postsecondary education programs. The Conferees acknowledge that two-year degree-granting institutions of higher education face unique considerations in reporting such data, because these institutions often enroll students for purposes beyond certificate and degree programs. Two-year institutions should not be exempt from reporting completion and graduation rates. However, the Conferees believe it is appropriate for the Secretary to assist these institutions in reporting such data accurately and, if necessary, to develop supplemental measures of success that take into consideration the multiple missions and the varied needs and goals of the individuals who attend two-year institutions and the communities such institutions serve. The group required to be convened under section 485(a)(7)(B) is meant to achieve that goal.

The Senate amendment requires institutions of higher education to offer specific disclosures during a required exit counseling session to borrowers of loans made, insured, or guaranteed under Parts B, D, or E but excludes PLUS Loans and Consolidation Loans.

The House bill contains no similar provisions

The House recedes with an amendment to reorder the provisions in the section to reduce redundancy, clarify that information on repayment plans shall include the average anticipated monthly repayments under each plan, specify that a general description of loan forgiveness provisions be included, along with a copy of information provided by the Department and add that borrowers must be informed of the consequences of default on loans including adverse credit reports, federal offset, and litigation.

The Senate amendment requires institutions to provide borrowers with a clear and conspicuous notice describing the general effects of using a consolidation loan to discharge a borrower's student loans. The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment amends a requirement for the Secretary to compile and disseminate information on State and other prepaid tuition and savings programs to require the Secretary to also compile and disseminate information on State grant assistance programs. The Senate amendment also requires the Secretary to disseminate such information through means including the Internet.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill add new provisions related to the calculation of completion and graduation rates of student athletes. Under the Senate amendment and the House bill, if students who leave school to serve in the Armed Forces, on official church missions, or with a recognized foreign aid service of the Federal government represent more twenty percent or more of certificate- or degree-seeking, full-time undergraduate students, the institution of higher education may exclude the time such students were not enrolled from the calculation.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill exclude foreign institutions from having to disclose their campus security policies and campus crime statistics.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill amends the Clery Act to require greater coordination between campus security and local law enforcement.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify the requirement for greater transparency in the relationship between campus security personnel and State and local law enforcement agencies, including whether institutions have agreements with such agencies, such as written memoranda of understanding, for the investigation of alleged criminal offenses.

It is the intent of the Conferees that the amendments made to this section will help protect students and personnel on campuses.

The House bill adds four crimes to the list of crimes an institutions must report as ''hate crimes'' in cases where the victim is intentionally selected because of their actual or perceived race, gender, religion, sexual orientation, ethnicity or disability.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Conferees believe that this change will facilitate uniformity in campus crime reporting to both the Department of Education and the FBI's Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) Program, the voluntary national crime data collection program based on the submissions of more than 17,000 city, county, state, tribal, and federal law enforcement agencies. Each of the offense types required under this section is already an integral part of the FBI UCR crime data reporting program.

To increase awareness of hate crimes on college campuses, the 1998 amendments to the Higher Education Act required all colleges and universities to collect and report hate crime statistics to the Office of Postsecondary Education (OPE) of the Department of Education. The Department of Education utilized the definition of hate crime developed by the FBI, but the criminal offenses required to be reported did not match the existing FBI crime categories. The current HEA crime category omissions have resulted in critical gaps in OPE data, as well as discrepancies and substantial inconsistencies between FBI and OPE hate crime statistics. The Conferees intend for this provision to provide parents and students a more accurate sense of campus safety by making the crime categories required to be reported to the Department of Education parallel those collected by the FBI's UCR Program and published in its annual publications.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require institutions to make available to current and prospective students a statement of current campus policies regarding immediate emergency response and evacuation procedures to notify the campus community of a significant emergency or dangerous situation that poses a threat to students or staff.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

Both the Senate amendment and House bill change current disclosure requirements for campus safety policies and procedures. The Senate amendment and House bill have similar requirements for institutions notifying the campus community in the event of a significant emergency.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as modified, with an amendment to require institutions to publish their procedures to immediately notify the campus community upon the confirmation of a significant emergency or dangerous situation, unless issuing such notification would compromise efforts to contain the emergency. The amendment also provides that notifications should be made for emergencies on campus as defined by the Clery Act.

The Conferees intend that each institution's statement of emergency policy should clearly articulate a method to promptly determine whether incidents pose an immediate threat to the health or safety of students or staff. This policy statement should include a method, or methods, to initiate dissemination of the required emergency notifications immediately and without any delay following a professional determination by law enforcement or other authorities that an emergency exists. The Conferees believe it is important that the Department be informed by past demonstrated ability of institutions to take immediate action in the face of campus emergencies in developing any regulations related to this provision. Recent examples include:

Florida Atlantic University on April 30, 2008—A shooting incident was reported at 1:16 AM, 26 minutes later alerts were sent out to the campus community, sirens, public address systems and Reverse 911 systems were activated. A follow-up e-mail was sent to the campus community at 2 AM.

Ferrum College (VA) on February 26, 2008—A sighting of a man with a gun was reported at 7:29 AM, 11 minutes later sirens were activated, and by 7:54 a text alert went out to the campus community with additional details concerning the emergency.

Northern Illinois University on February 14, 2008—A multiple shooting incident was reported at 3 PM, and 20 minutes later an alert was posted to the institution's web site.

Because of the importance of informing students and staff of immediate threats to their safety, notification should only be withheld if it is in the professional determination of law enforcement that issuing the notice would put the community at greater risk, and in such a case notice should be withheld for as short a period as possible.

The Conferees recognize that emergencies are volatile, fast-moving and unpredictable events that can encompass a range of natural and man-made situations, from campus fires to the presence of shooting suspects on campus. As such, the Conferees intend that institutions may rely upon the initial known facts of a situation in crafting and disseminating notifications that are timely, accurate and useful to appropriate segments of the campus community. The Conferees also do not intend to hold institutions responsible for the failure of local law enforcement or other emergency response personnel to provide them with information, or other circumstances beyond their control that may delay the delivery of emergency notifications.

The Conferees intend that institutions should publicize to all students and staff their emergency response and evacuation procedures, both in their annual security report and separately at least once each calendar year as a part of the required test of such procedures. When an emergency happens time is of the essence so it is critical that students and staff know where to turn for information and what to expect.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the Secretary to report annually to authorizing committees regarding institutions' compliance with this subsection and on the Secretary's monitoring of this compliance. The Senate amendment and the House bill permit the Secretary to seek guidance from the Attorney General regarding the development and dissemination of information to institutions about best practices related to campus crime and safety.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill prohibits an institution of higher education or its employees, offices, or agents from intimidating, threatening, coercing, or otherwise discriminating against an individual for the purpose of interfering with the implementation of this subsection, or any rights or privileges accorded under the is subsection, or because the individual has participated in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to include a rule of construction indicating that nothing in this subsection shall be construed to permit a participating institution or their agent to retaliate, intimidate, threaten, coerce, or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to the implementation of any provision of this subsection.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require each institution of higher education participating in Title IV to publicly disclose its current transfer of credit policies, which must include the disclosure of any criteria used by the institution of higher education to evaluate the transfer of credit earned at another institution of higher education and a list of the institutions with which the institution of higher education has established an articulation agreement.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment and the House bill specifically state that nothing in this subsection authorizes the Secretary or the Accreditation and institutional Quality and Integrity Advisory Committee (Senate amendment) or NACIQI (House bill) to require particular policies, procedures, or practices by institutions with respect to transfer of credit. The Senate amendment and the House bill specifically state that nothing in this section authorizes an officer or employee of the U.S. Department of Education (ED) to exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the curriculum, instruction, administration, or personnel at any institution of higher education or over any accrediting agency, limits the application of the General Education Provisions Act, or creates a legally enforceable right on the part of a student to require an institution of higher education to accept a transfer of credit.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require institutions to report and make public an annual fire safety report.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary to make policies public, including the installation of fire detection and prevention technologies in student housing, dormitories, and other buildings.

The House bill prohibits an institution of higher education or its employees, offices, or agents from intimidating, threatening, coercing, or otherwise discriminating against an individual for the purpose of interfering with the implementation of this subsection, or any rights or privileges accorded under the is subsection, or because the individual has participated in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House bill requires institutions of higher education to implement procedures for managing reports of missing persons.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that institutions of higher education must establish a policy for students who reside in on-campus housing that includes a notification to the student that the institution of higher education is required to notify a parent or guardian twenty-four hours after the time that the student is deemed to be missing in accordance with official notification procedures established by the institution of higher education.

The House bill requires institutions of higher education to provide each student, upon enrollment, with a ''separate, clear, and conspicuous written notice'' that provides information on the penalties associated with drug-related offenses.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill requires institutions of higher education to provide each student, within two weeks of being notified by the Secretary that the student has been convicted of a drug-related offense that resulted in the loss of eligibility for Title IV aid, with a ''separate, clear, and conspicuous written notice'' that notifies the student of the loss of Title IV eligibility and discusses ways to regain Title IV eligibility.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require each student who has lost eligibility for any grant, loan, or work-study assistance under this Title as a result of the penalties under 484(r)(1) to be provided such notification by the institution in a reasonable and timely manner.

The Senate amendment adds a new subsection (b) to Section 485 specifying requirements for institutions of higher education to provide entrance counseling prior to disbursement for first-time borrowers loans made, guaranteed, or insured under Part B or Part D. Entrance counseling must meet specified disclosure requirements.

The House bill contains similar provisions on entrance counseling in Title I.

Both the Senate and the House recede with an amendment to merge the entrance counseling provisions from both bills to require institutions of higher education, at or prior to the time of a disbursement to a first-time borrower to provide comprehensive information on the terms and conditions of the loan and of the responsibilities the borrower has with respect to such loan. Such information shall be provided in simple and understandable terms and may be provided: during an entrance counseling session conducted in person; on a separate written form provided to the borrower that the borrower signs and returns to the institution of higher education; or, online, with the borrower acknowledging receipt of the information. Institutions of higher education are encouraged to carry out the entrance counseling through interactive programs that test the borrower's understanding of the terms and conditions of their loans.

Section 489. National Student Loan Data System

The Senate amendment makes technical amendment and requires the Secretary to take actions to maintain the system. The Senate amendment also requires the Secretary to prepare and submit a report to the appropriate committees of Congress, not later than September 30th of each fiscal year, describing certain specified aspects of NSLDS; requires the Secretary to conduct a study regarding the available mechanisms for providing students and parents the ability to opt in or opt out of allowing eligible lenders to access their records in NSLDS; and the appropriate protocols for limiting access to NSLDS, based on the risk assessment required under subchapter III of Chapter 35 of Title 44, U.S.C.; and requires the Secretary to submit the report to the appropriate Congressional committees no later than three years after enactment.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Conferees intend that NSLDS data may be released to outside contractors and analysts if all individuals identifiers are excluded from the data and the outside analyst or contractor is certified according to data confidentiality standards and procedures used by the National Center for Education Statistics.

Section 490. Early awareness of financial aid eligibility

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to implement, in cooperation with other relevant entities a comprehensive system of early financial aid information in order to provide students and families with early information about financial aid and early estimates of such students' eligibility for financial aid from multiple sources.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to strike the provision that required the Secretary to provide early estimates of financial aid awards.

Section 491. Distance Education Demonstration Programs

The Senate amendment and the House bill make a conforming amendment to the existing Distance Education Demonstration Program, to replace Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Education and the Workforce of the House of Representatives with authorizing committees.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an amendment to clarify that the reports shall be provided by the Secretary on an annual basis.

Section 492. Articulation agreements

The House bill requires the Secretary to work with States to develop more comprehensive articulation agreements and requires the Secretary to conduct a study.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to move the study to Title XI.

Section 493. Program participation agreements

The Senate amendment and the House bill move the 90/10 rule from an institutional eligibility requirement for proprietary institutions of higher education to a Program Participation Agreement (PPA) requirement for proprietary institutions. Under both the Senate amendment and the House bill, a proprietary institution must have not less than 10 percent of its revenue from sources other than Title IV funds.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The Senate amendment adds to the PPA a requirement that institutions of higher education develop a ''code of conduct.''

The House requires institutions of higher education participating in Title IV or whose students get a private education loan to develop a ''code of conduct'' in accordance with new requirements in Title I.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill requires that officers, employees, and agents of institutions of higher education that have responsibilities with respect to education loans obtain annual training on the code of conduct.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that removes the training requirement, but requires that officers, employees, and agents with responsibilities with respect to education loans be informed annually of the provisions of the code of conduct.

The House bill requires an institution of higher education to, upon request, disclose to the alleged victim of any violent crime or nonforcible sex offense the final results of any institutional disciplinary proceeding conducted against a student who is the alleged perpetrator of such crime or offense. The House bill also requires that this information be provided to the alleged victim's next of kin, if the alleged victim is deceased.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require disclosure upon written request and that the disclosure be made available to the next of kin only if the victim dies as a result of the crime or offense.

Both the Senate amendment and the House bill amend section 487(a) by adding a new paragraph which specifies requirements applicable to institutions of higher education that maintain a preferred lender list for loans. The Senate amendment provision applies to preferred lender lists for loans under Part B; while the House bill provision applies to preferred lender lists under Part B, and also for private educational loans if recommended by the institution of higher education.

The Senate recedes.

The House bill requires that upon the request of a private educational lender, acting in connection with an application initiated by a consumer for a private educational loan, an institution of higher education shall certify: that the student is enrolled or is scheduled to enroll at the institution; the student's cost of attendance; and the difference between the cost of attendance of the institution and the student's estimated financial assistance received under this title and other assistance known to the institution. The House bill requires the institution of higher education to disclose the student's ability to select a private educational lender of the borrower's choice and inform students of the impact of a proposed private educational loan on the students' potential eligibility for other financial assistance, including Federal financial assistance under this title.

The Senate amendment has no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the institution to provide an applicant for a private educational loan with the form required under Section Truth in Lending Act and the information required to complete the form.

The Senate amendment permits the Secretary to modify regulations regarding financial and compliance audits of institutions of higher education located outside of the United States. The House bill contains a similar provision that allows the Secretary to waive these requirements for foreign institutions of higher education whose students received less than $500,000 in loans under Title IV during the award year proceeding the audit period. This provision appears at a later point in this document.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment specifies what funds proprietary institutions of higher education may count toward their ten percent of non-Title IV revenue. The House bill specifies what proprietary institutions may count as revenue.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment requires proprietary institutions of higher education to demonstrate that institutional revenue includes funds from non-title IV sources. The House bill includes as revenue from tuition and fees, only those tuition, fees and other institutional charges for students enrolled in programs eligible of assistance under Title IV.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that specifies that funds paid by a student, or on behalf of a student by a party other than the institution, for an education or training program that is not eligible for funds under title IV, may be counted as institutional revenue, provided that the program is both approved or licensed by the appropriate State agency and is accredited by an accrediting agency recognized by the Secretary or provides an industry-recognized credential or certification.

The Senate amendment specifies certain institutional aid provided to a student as institutional revenue under certain conditions. In the case of loans made by an institution to a student, the amount of loan repayments received by the institution during the fiscal year for which compliance with the 90/10 rule is determined is deemed to be institutional revenue.

The House bill also specifies certain institutional aid provided to students as institutional revenue. For each of an institution's fiscal years 2009 through 2012, the principal amount of loans made by an institution to a student, based on the expected interest earned less the estimated amount to account for future defaults and loan forgiveness, accounted for on an accrual basis, in accordance with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles and related standards and guidance, and that meet other specified conditions, are deemed to be institutional revenue. For an institution's fiscal year 2013 and each of an institution's subsequent fiscal years, only the amount of repayments on loans made by an institution to students received during the fiscal year for which compliance with the 90/10 rule is determined is deemed to be institutional revenue.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that for loans made by an institution, for loans disbursed to students between July 1, 2008 and July 1, 2012, the net present value of loans made by the institution, accounted for on an accrual basis and, estimated in accordance with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles and related standards and guidance, and that meet other specified conditions, are deemed institutional revenue.

The Conferees intend that for the fiscal years 2009 through 2012 when the net present value of institutional loans can be calculated as institutional revenue that institutions will only count as institutional revenue the net present value of the loan in the fiscal year the loan is actually made.

In the case of scholarships provided by the institution, the Senate amendment specifies as institutional revenue scholarship funds that are in the form of monetary aid based upon the academic achievements or financial need of students; disbursed from an established restricted account; and funded by outside sources or income earned on such funds. In addition, the Senate amendment specifies that tuition discounts based upon the academic achievement or financial need of students are considered institutional revenue.

In the case of scholarships provided by the institution, the House bill specifies as institutional revenue scholarship funds that are in the form of monetary aid or tuition discounts based upon the academic achievements or financial need of students; disbursed from an established restricted account; and funded by outside sources or income earned on such funds are considered institutional revenues.

The Senate recedes.

In determining compliance with the 90/10 rule the House bill requires that an institution presume that any title IV program funds disbursed or delivered to or on behalf of a student is used to pay the student's tuition, fees, or other institutional charges, regardless of whether the institution credits those funds to the student's account or pays those funds directly to the student, except to the extent that the student's tuition, fees, or other institutional charges are satisfied by grant funds provided by non-Federal public agencies or private sources independent of the institution;) funds provided under a contractual arrangement with Federal, State, or local government agencies for the purpose of providing job training to low-income individuals who are in need of that training; or funds used by a student from savings plans for educational expenses established by or on behalf of the student and which qualify for special tax treatment under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, provided that the institution can reasonably demonstrate such funds were used to pay the student's tuition, fees, or other institutional charges.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision. The Senate recedes with an amendment to provide an additional exception to the presumption for scholarships provided by the institution in the form of monetary aid or tuition discounts and that meet other specified conditions and remove the condition that institutions must demonstrate that funds from savings plans that qualify for special tax treatment were used to pay a student's tuition, fees, or other institutional charges. Additionally, the Conferees clarify that, for loans received by students between July 1, 2008 and July 1, 2011, the amount of loan funds for 428H or Federal Direct Unsubsidized Stafford Loans that exceed that loan limits that were in effect prior to May 7, 2008 shall be counted as revenue received by the institution.

The House bill specifies that certain revenues are to be excluded by an institution in determining compliance with the 90/10 rule. Revenues to be excluded are the amount of funds received by an institution under the Federal Work-Study program, unless the institution uses those funds to pay a student's institutional charges; the amount of funds received by an institution under the Leveraging Education Assistance Partnership program; the amount of institutional funds used by an institution to match title IV program funds; the amount of title IV program funds that must be refunded or returned; and the amount charged by an institution for books, supplies, and equipment unless the institution includes that amount as tuition, fees, or other institutional charges.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Under both the Senate and the House bills, a proprietary institution that fails to comply with the 90/10 rule for two consecutive years becomes ineligible to participate in Title IV programs. Under the Senate amendment, an institution remains ineligible until it demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that it is in compliance with the 90/10 rule. Under the House bill, an institution is required to demonstrate compliance with all eligibility requirements for at least three fiscal years following the fiscal year in which the institution became ineligible before the institution can regain eligibility to participate in Title IV programs.

The House and Senate recede with an amendment to modify the sanction such that an institution may be placed on provisional certification and may become ineligible to participate in Title IV programs for a minimum of two institutional fiscal years after the institutional fiscal year the institution failed to comply with the 90/10 rule for two consecutive fiscal years. To regain eligibility to participate in Title IV programs, the institution must demonstrate compliance with all eligibility requirements for at least two institutional fiscal years after the institutional fiscal year in which the institution failed to comply with the 90/10 rule.

The House bill requires the Secretary to submit an annual report to the authorizing committees that contains the result of the calculation of the percentage of revenue derived from Title IV sources of funds for each proprietary institution.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to have the Secretary submit such report no later than July 1, 2009 and on July 1 of each subsequent year, a report to the authorizing committees.

The House bill and the Senate amendment require codes of conduct to include prohibitions on revenue-sharing arrangements. The House bill's prohibition of revenue-sharing arrangements encompasses both Federal and private education loans. The Senate amendment's prohibition of revenue-sharing arrangements applies only to Federal student loans.

The House recedes.

The House bill and the Senate amendment require codes of conduct to include prohibitions on officers, employees or agents of institutions of higher education, and under certain conditions, by the families of officers, employees or agents of institutions of higher education, soliciting or accepting gifts from lenders, guarantors, and servicers of education loans. The House bill includes several exceptions in the definition of gift.

The Senate amendment includes no similar exceptions to the definition of gift as included in the House bill.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify that philanthropic contributions that are not made for any advantage with respect to education loans are not considered gifts for purposes of the section.

The House bill and the Senate amendment require codes of conduct to include prohibitions on contracting arrangements between an officer or employee of the institution and a lender of an affiliate of a lender. The House bill includes exceptions, in certain limited circumstances, to allow institution officers, employees and agents to serve on the boards of directors of lenders, guarantors, and servicers of education loans. Similarly, the House bill includes exceptions that allow, under certain conditions, officers, employees and agents of a lender, guarantor, and servicer of education loans to serve as a trustee of an institution.

The Senate amendment includes no similar exceptions to the prohibition.

The Senate recedes with a modification to the exception with respect to officers, employees and agents of a lender, guarantor, and servicer of education loans and an amendment to clarify that the prohibition applies to consulting arrangements or the provision of other services with respect to educational loans.

The Senate amendment contains provision on institutional interaction with borrowers.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contains a provision on institutional interaction with borrowers.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Conferees recognize that some institutions list specific lenders in financial aid award offer letters to students. For example, in many states, public institutions of higher education will inform students in financial aid offer letters that they are eligible for a loan offered though their state-based student loan agency, and the amount of such loan. The code of conduct provision prohibiting the assignment of loans to a specific lender, through packaging or other means, is not intended to apply to this case, because a financial aid award letter is an offer of aid, and a student may select the named lender, or another lender, at the student's discretion. Other practices, such as the distribution of loan promissory notes to students containing a specific lender's name, are prohibited by this provision.

The House bill prohibits an institution of higher education from requesting or accepting any offer of funds for private educational loans in exchange for the institution of higher education providing the lender with a specified number of loans or loan volume, or a preferred lender arrangement for Title IV loans.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to strike language in order to clarify that the definition of an opportunity pool loan does not include any private loan that is guaranteed by a covered institution of higher education (i.e., a recourse loan).

The Conferees intend that an institution may request and accept an offer of recourse loans but only if such request and acceptance is not conditioned on the institution providing a lender with a specified number of loans or loan volume, or a preferred lender arrangement for Title IV loans.

The House bill contains a provision which bans covered institutions of higher education from receiving staffing assistance with financial aid.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House recedes with an amendment to permit lenders to provide staffing services on a short-term, nonrecurring basis to assist institutions with financial aid-related functions during emergency situations.

The House bill includes a ban on employees of a financial aid office or those with educational loan responsibilities from participating on advisory councils of lenders or affiliates of lenders.

The Senate amendment prohibits any employee who is employed in the financial aid office of the institution, or who otherwise has responsibilities with respect to education loans or other student financial aid of the institution, and who serves on an advisory board, commission, or group established by a lender or group of lenders from receiving anything of value from the lender or group of lenders, except that the employee may be reimbursed for reasonable expenses incurred in serving on such advisory board, commission or group.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment requires institutions to designate an individual responsible for fulfillment of code of conduct requirements and to make the code of conduct widely available.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to require an institution of higher education to develop a teach-out plan for submission to its accrediting agency if the Secretary initiates a limitation, suspension, or termination of the institution of higher education in any program under Title IV or initiates an emergency action against the institution.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require accrediting agencies to require that institutions of higher education offering distance education programs have a process by which the institution of higher education establishes that a student registered for a distance education course is the same student that participates in, completes, and receives credit for the course.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House. The Conferees expect institutions that offer distance education to have security mechanisms in place, such as identification numbers or other pass code information required to be used each time the student participates in class time or coursework on-line. As new identification technologies are developed and become more sophisticated, less expensive and more mainstream, the Conferees anticipate that accrediting agencies or associations and institutions will consider their use in the future. The Conferees do not intend that institutions use or rely on any technology that interferes with the privacy of the student and expect that students' privacy will be protected with whichever method the institutions choose to utilize.

The Senate amendment modifies the requirement that accrediting agencies assess an institution of higher education's success with respect to student achievement in relation to the institution of higher education's mission, including, as appropriate, consideration of state licensing examinations, and job placement rates to specify that consideration of student achievement in relation to the institution of higher education's mission may include different standards for different institutions of higher education or programs as established by the institution of higher education.

The Senate amendment and the House bill prohibit the Secretary from issuing regulations related to the standards used by accrediting agencies to evaluate the institution of higher education with respect to the institution of higher education's success with respect to student achievement, curricula, faculty, and so forth.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House.

The House bill establishes a rule of construction that states that none of the requirements that are established related to an accrediting agency's required review of an institution of higher education's success with respect to student achievement, curricula, faculty, and so forth shall restrict an accrediting agency's authority to set, with the involvement of its members, and to apply accreditation standards to institutions of higher education or programs that request review by the agency. In addition, the aforementioned requirements do not restrict the authority of an institution of higher education to develop and use institutional standards to show success with respect to student achievement, and these standards must be considered as part of any accreditation review.

The House recedes.

The Conferees recognize the Graduate Assistance in Areas of National Need (GAANN) program has been amended to include a subsection which directs the Secretary to consider an ''assessment of the current and future professional workforce needs of the United States'' when selecting GAANN designated fields. In 2007, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics projected that more than one million new and replacement nurses will be needed by 2016. A significant contributing factor to the nursing shortage is the need for nurse faculty. According to the American Association of Colleges of Nursing, the national nurse faculty vacancy rate in baccalaureate and graduate schools of nursing is 8.8%. Given the revisions to this program and the national shortage of nurses and nurse educators, we respectfully request that the Secretary continue to select nursing as a discipline covered under the GAANN program.

The Senate amendment and the House bill clarify that the stipend levels for the GAANN program are equal to the National Science Foundation Graduate Research Fellowship Program.

Section 706. Masters degree programs at Historically Black Colleges and Universities and Other Minority Serving Institutions

The House bill establishes a new program to provide competitive grants to qualifying master's degree programs at a specified list of Historically Black Colleges and Universities and Minority Serving Institutions to provide fellowships to students in specified STEM and health fields.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to create a program for Historically Black Colleges and Universities under section 723, a program for Predominantly Black Institutions under section 724, and to authorize appropriations for both programs under section 725 and to allow grantees to expand the uses of funds.

The Conferees acknowledge that this new authorization dramatically expands the focus on graduate education at the Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) by expanding the number of institutional participants in the Title III, B, Section 326 Historically Black Graduate Institution program, and by creating two new masters degree programs in Title VII that serve the Black student community. The Conferees believe that this expansion is warranted in light of the need to dramatically increase the number of minorities, especially African Americans, earning degrees in the physical and natural sciences, computer science, information technology, engineering, mathematics, nursing and allied health, as well as in medicine, veterinary medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, and law. Currently, Title III, B provides grants for undergraduate programs at HBCUs and doctoral and first professional degree programs at HBCUs. Conferees acknowledge that there has been confusion in recent years regarding the Section 326 program and wish to make clear that the focus and intent of the section 326 program is to support doctoral and first professional degree programs at eligible HBCUs.

Recognizing the importance of increasing the number of African Americans holding master's degrees, with this reauthorization, Conferees are creating two master's degree programs to further advance educational opportunities for African Americans. Moreover, the Conferees are committed to increasing funds for the existing Strengthening Historically Black College and University (Section 323) program in order to assure that a strong ''pipeline'' of qualified baccalaureate degree holders is available to compete for acceptance into HBCU graduate and professional schools, as well as other graduate and professional schools throughout the United States. This should begin by assuring that the infusion of $85 million in additional funds provided to HBCUs through the College Cost and Reduction Act is retained and used to supplement, and not supplant the $238.1 million in discretionary Title III, B funds.

Conferees recognize the vital role HBCUs play in our nation's system of higher education. Following passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Congress in 1965 created distinct federal support for HBCUs which, in the face of legally sanctioned discrimination, had worked to raise the educational outcomes of African Americans. Although HBCUs represent just three percent of all colleges and universities in the nation, HBCUs account for 21.6% of all baccalaureate degrees awarded to Black Americans, 11.4% of all master's degrees, and 10.8% of all doctoral degrees. Additionally, HBCUs year in and year out dominate the top 10 lists of colleges and universities in the awarding of baccalaureate and graduate degrees awarded to Black Americans in the sciences and engineering.

Conferees also recognize the significant role that Predominantly Black Institutions (PBIs) have in providing postsecondary education. These institutions are ineligible for funding under Title III, B because they do not meet the definition of an HBCU which Congress established when HBCUs were first recognized by Congress in 1965. Nevertheless, Conferees recognize that PBIs represent an important cadre of four-year and two-year institutions that serve as the access point for a growing number of urban and rural Black students whose family and financial situations limit their ability to gain access to college in many states. Many of these students come from low-income families and are also ''first generation'' college students, whose educational preparation for college and family finances to pay for college present special challenges to educational success. PBIs are meeting vital higher education needs for traditionally underrepresented students, a disproportionate number of whom are African American. The master's program for PBIs aims to serve the needs of a growing number of students seeking to expand their educational opportunities. This program will work hand in hand with the undergraduate PBI program and serve as a pipeline for underrepresented and underserved populations to go on to and pursue a master's degree.

Conferees recognize that both HBCUs and PBIs contribute to the development of Black master's professionals. Conferees respect the historical and distinct differences between these types of institutions; at the same time, Conferees recognize that both serve similar communities.

For this reason, Conferees intend that future appropriations authorized under section 725 for each program represent the proportionate number of eligible institutions in sections 723 and 724 relative to the total number of institutions in subpart 4 and in accordance with the minimum grant provisions (sections 723(a) and 724(a)), funding rule provisions (sections 723(f) and 724(f)), and hold harmless provisions (sections 723(g) and 724(g)) in each program. This will ensure equitable levels of funding for each program and will encourage stakeholders to work together to secure resources. An institution shall not receive more than one grant under section 723 or 724 for the same fiscal year. Grants may periodically be renewed for a period of time to be determined by the Secretary.

Section 707. Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education

The Senate amendment adds to the FIPSE authority to include remedial postsecondary English language instruction. The House bill adds to the authority to support and assist partnerships between institutions of higher education and secondary schools that have not less than ten percent of the schools' enrollment assessed as late-entering limited English proficient students.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to: create a priority under FIPSE for institutions of higher education that meet certain energy efficiency standards for new construction; and clarify that only funds made available under FIPSE for the purpose of providing direct financial assistance to an individual student are to be limited to eligible citizens, in order to align student eligibility for grants under the FIPSE program with Title IV eligibility.

The Conferees do not intend to limit funds that are made available under FIPSE for programs that are provided to citizens and non-citizen students together, such as an institution wide program or, to exclude noncitizens from such program.

The Senate amendment and the House bill add a new scholarship program under FIPSE for dependent children and spouses of post-9/11 veterans killed or disabled in duty and current active duty military personnel. The Senate amendment describes spousal eligibility; caps scholarships at $5,000; and accounts for cost of attendance—disallowing the scholarship and other non-loan based aid to exceed cost of attendance. The House bill describes spousal eligibility in a substantively similar way to the Senate and caps scholarships at $5,000. The Senate amendment and the House bill include a provision that nonprofit organizations receiving a contract under this subsection may not use more than one percent of funds for administrative costs.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to ensure the grant does not exceed the cost of attendance.

The House bill substitutes references to the Director of FIPSE with references to the Secretary, and eliminates requirements to establish FIPSE grant and contracting procedures.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment amends the areas for national need for which grants for special FIPSE projects may be awarded to include instructional improvement and assessment and specifies model programs to include model core curricula.

The program is authorized for $50,000,000 per year for fiscal year 2009–fiscal year 2013.

The House recedes.

Section 709. Programs to provide students with disabilities with a quality higher education

The Conferees adopt the provisions with the following amendments.

SUBPART 1—DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO SUPPORT POSTSECONDARY FACULTY, STAFF AND ADMINISTRATORS IN EDUCATING STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES

The Conferees also add options to the list of authorized activities, including effective transition practices for students with disabilities, accessible distance learning strategies, ''disability career pathways,'' and curriculum development that makes postsecondary education more accessible to students with disabilities.

The Conferees amend the application requirements to include a description of the extent to which the applicant will work to replicate best practices in serving students with disabilities.

The Conferees require the Secretary to prepare and disseminate reports, reviewing both prior and new demonstration projects authorized under this subpart and providing recommendations on how effective projects can be replicated.

SUBPART 2—TRANSITION PROGRAMS FOR STUDENTS WITH INTELLECTUAL DISABILITIES INTO HIGHER EDUCATION

The Conferees establish a new subpart 2 of Part D to support model demonstration programs that promote the successful transition of students with intellectual disabilities into higher education. Comprehensive transition and postsecondary programs for students with intellectual disabilities are defined as degree, certificate, or non-degree programs that are offered by an institution of higher education, designed to support students with intellectual disabilities who are seeking to continue academic, career and technical, and independent living instruction at an institution of higher education, include an advising and curriculum structure, and require students with intellectual disabilities to participate on not less than a half-time basis in coursework and other activities with nondisabled students. The Conferees intend to encourage such programs to integrate students with intellectual disabilities into inclusive activities, coursework and campus settings with nondisabled postsecondary students, and that such programs include measurable outcomes, such as attainment of a degree or certificate.

A student with an intellectual disability is defined as a student with mental retardation or a cognitive impairment characterized by significant limitations in intellectual and cognitive functioning and adaptive behavior, and who is currently, or was formerly, eligible for a free, appropriate public education under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). The Conferees recognize that some students with disabilities who are eligible for a free and appropriate public education may not enroll in public schools, nor choose to receive special education services under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. The Conferees intend to include such students in the definition of students with intellectual disabilities under this Act, if such students can otherwise demonstrate they meet the eligibility criteria.

The Conferees authorize the Secretary to competitively award grants to institutions of higher education, or consortia of such institutions, to create or expand the model demonstration programs, and specify that the program shall be administered by the office at the Department of Education that administers other postsecondary programs. Grants are authorized to be awarded for a period of five years. The Conferees direct the Secretary, in awarding such grants, to provide for an equitable geographic distribution of grants, provide grants to institutions or consortia that are located in areas that are underserved by such programs and to give preference to institutions or consortia that agree to form partnerships with other relevant agencies that serve students with intellectual disabilities, integrate students with intellectual disabilities into institutionally owned or operated housing offered to students without disabilities, or involve students attending the institution who are studying special education, general education, vocational rehabilitation, assistive technology, or related fields in the model program.

The Conferees authorize various uses of funds for institutions or consortia receiving grants under this subpart, including the provision of individual supports and services for the academic and social inclusion of students with disabilities in academic courses, extracurricular activities, and other aspects of the institution's postsecondary program; a focus on academic enrichment, socialization, independent living skills, and integrated work experiences and career skills; integration of person-centered planning for the participating students; participation of the institution or consortium in the coordinating center established in subpart 4; partnerships with one or more local educational agencies to support students with intellectual disabilities who are still eligible for education and related services under IDEA to participate in the model programs; and the creation and offer of a meaningful credential for students with intellectual disabilities upon completion of the model program. The Conferees also require an institution or consortium receiving a grant under this subpart to provide matching funds of not less than twenty-five percent of the cost of the model program supported under the grant, which may be provided in cash or in kind.

The Conferees require the Secretary to prepare and disseminate a report, within five years of the date of the first grant awarded under this subpart, which reviews the programs supported under this subpart and provides recommendations on how model programs can be replicated. The Conferees include a rule of construction to specify that nothing in the subpart shall be construed to reduce or expand the obligation of a State or local educational agency to provide a free, appropriate public education under IDEA, or eligibility requirements under any Federal, State, or local disability law.

The Conferees recognize that under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, nothing prohibits the use of Part B funds to support students with disabilities in transition programs at institutions of higher education, if the Individualized Education Program Team determines that such a program is the appropriate placement for the student.

The Conferees authorize such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2009 and each of the five succeeding fiscal years to carry out the purposes of this subpart, and include a reservation of funds for the coordinating center authorized in subpart 4.

SUBPART 3—COMMISSION ON ACCESSIBLE MATERIALS; PROGRAMS TO SUPPORT IMPROVED ACCESS TO MATERIALS

The Conferees establish a new subpart 3 of Part D that creates an Advisory Commission on Accessible Instructional Materials in Postsecondary Education for Students with Disabilities, and model demonstration programs to support improved access to postsecondary instructional materials for students with print disabilities. The term 'student with a print disability' is defined as a student with a disability who experiences barriers to accessing instructional materials in nonspecialized formats, including students eligible under 17 U.S.C. 121(d)(2). The Conferees acknowledge that students with a range of impairments, including but not limited to visual impairments, physical limitations, dyslexia, and intellectual disabilities, may meet this definition. Among other activities, the Conferees intend that the Commission will analyze the different definitions of eligible students in applicable Federal law and make recommendations as to the scope of the definition of student with a print disability.

The Conferees direct the Secretary to appoint nineteen members to the Commission from various categories, including representatives from the Department, the Library of Congress, associations representing individuals with disabilities, associations representing publishers, institutions of higher education with experience in teaching or supporting students with print disabilities, producers of accessible materials, and individuals with print disabilities, including postsecondary students. The Commission is directed to meet for the first time no later than ninety days after the establishment of the Commission.

The Conferees direct the Commission to conduct a comprehensive study to assess the barriers that affect, and the technical solutions that can improve, the timely delivery and quality of accessible instructional materials for students with print disabilities, as well as the effective use of such materials by postsecondary faculty and staff. The Commission is directed to make recommendations related to a comprehensive approach to improve the opportunities for postsecondary students with print disabilities to access instructional materials in specialized formats in a timeframe comparable to the availability of standard instructional materials for postsecondary students without disabilities.

The Commission is also directed to develop recommendations to inform Federal regulations and legislation and support the model demonstration programs to improve access to postsecondary instructional materials for students with print disabilities authorized in the subpart. Such recommendations are to identify best practices related to systems for collecting, maintaining, processing, and disseminating materials in specialized formats; improve the effective use of such materials by faculty and staff while complying with applicable copyright law; and analyze and consider modifications to the terms 'instructional materials,' 'authorized entities,' and 'eligible students' in applicable Federal law for the purpose of improving services to students with disabilities. The Conferees recognize the importance of accessible instructional materials for all students with disabilities, while also recognizing the importance of maintaining appropriate copyright protections, and the opportunity to market universally-designed materials that meet the needs of all students, for publishers of instructional materials.

In conducting its study and developing its recommendations, the Conferees intend for the Commission to identify, and draw upon the expertise of, national non-profit organizations and other entities with extensive experience providing accessible instructional materials to postsecondary students with print disabilities. Such organizations and entities should have proven track records in conducting research into the creation of file standards for accessible instructional materials, implementing models for the provision of accessible instructional materials for postsecondary students with print disabilities, and collaborating with publishers and other stakeholders in these efforts. The Conferees note that the following organizations and entities have done useful work in these areas: the Recording for the Blind & Dyslexic Technology Advisory Committee, Benetech Bookshare, the Critical Issues Task Force of the Association of American Publishers Higher Education Division, the Center for Applied Special Technology, the Association of Higher Education and Disabilities E-Text Solutions Working Group, the Library of Congress National Digital Information and Infrastructure Preservation Program Copyright Working Group, and the Advisory Council and the Technical Assistance and Development Centers of the National Instructional Materials Access Center. The Conferees recommend that the Commission consider the work of these groups in its efforts, and identify other entities with technical expertise in the Commission's areas of study, including entities that may have used federal dollars to identify solutions.

In developing these recommendations, the Commission is directed to consider how students with print disabilities may obtain materials in accessible formats in a timeframe, comparable to the availability of materials to students without disabilities; and to the maximum extent practicable, at comparable costs; the feasibility of establishing standardized electronic file formats for accessible materials; the feasibility of establishing a national clearinghouse, repository, or file-sharing network for such materials; the feasibility of market-based solutions involving collaborations among publishers and institutions of higher education to increase the availability of accessible materials; solutions utilizing universal design; and solutions for low-incidence, high-cost requests for materials in specialized formats. The Conferees direct the Commission to submit a report detailing its findings and recommendations to the Secretary and the authorizing committees not later than one year after the Commission's first meeting.

With respect to the model demonstration programs to support improved access to postsecondary instructional materials for students with print disabilities, the Conferees authorize the Secretary to award grants or contracts, on a competitive basis, to not less than one partnership consisting of an institution of higher education with demonstrated expertise in meeting the needs of students with print disabilities, and a public or private entity with demonstrated expertise in developing accessible instructional materials, and the technical development expertise necessary for the efficient dissemination of such materials. The partnership may include representatives of the publishing industry.

The Conferees direct partnerships receiving grants or contracts under this subpart to conduct a variety of required activities, including the development and implementation of processes to identify and verify eligibility of postsecondary students with print disabilities; procedures to facilitate methods to request such materials; procedures to coordinate among institutions of higher education, publishers, and entities that produce materials in specialized formats; systems to deliver specialized materials in a timely fashion, and to reduce duplicative conversions of such materials; procedures to protect against copyright infringement with respect to materials in specialized formats; and outreach and awareness activities for postsecondary students, faculty and staff regarding the acquisition and dissemination of materials in specialized formats and materials utilizing universal design.

The Conferees direct the Secretary, in awarding such grants or contracts, to give preference to partnerships that support a unified search for accessible instructional materials across multiple databases or market-based approaches to make accessible instructional materials available to eligible students at prices comparable to the prices of standard instructional materials.

The Conferees direct the Secretary to submit a report to the authorizing committees, not later than three years after the date of the first contract or grant awarded under this subpart, which details the grants and contracts supported under this subpart, as well as the number of students with print disabilities served by such grants or contracts. The Conferees authorize the Secretary to expand the model programs supported under this subpart on the basis of this report and other related reports.

The Conferees include a rule of construction to specify that nothing in the subpart shall be construed to limit or preempt a State law regarding the production or distribution of postsecondary instructional materials in accessible formats to students with disabilities.

The Conferees authorize such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2009 and each of the five succeeding fiscal years to carry out the purposes of this subpart, and include a reservation of funds for the Advisory Commission authorized in the subpart.

SUBPART 4—NATIONAL TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE CENTER; COORDINATING CENTER

The Conferees establish a new subpart 4 of Part D that creates a National Center for Information and Technical Support for Postsecondary Students with Disabilities to provide information on best and promising practices to students with disabilities, the families of such students, and entities awarded grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements under subparts 1, 2, and 3 of Part D to improve the postsecondary recruitment, transition, retention, and completion rates of students with disabilities. Subpart 4 also authorizes a coordinating center to support inclusive comprehensive transition and postsecondary programs for students with intellectual disabilities, including those authorized under subpart 2.

The Conferees establish and support a National Center for Information and Technical Support for Postsecondary Students with Disabilities. The Conferees specify that an institution or higher education or nonprofit organization, with demonstrated expertise in supporting students with disabilities in higher education, technical knowledge related to the dissemination of information in accessible formats, and working with diverse types of institutions of higher education, or partnership of two or more such institutions or organizations, may qualify as the eligible entity authorized to operate the National Center. The Conferees specify that the National Center shall provide information and technical assistance to students with disabilities and the families of such students, to support students across the broad spectrum of disabilities, including information to assist students with disabilities in planning for postsecondary education while they are in secondary school; information to improve the participation of students with disabilities in early outreach programs supported under Title IV; information on research-based supports available in postsecondary settings; information on student mentoring and networking opportunities; and effective recruitment and transition practices for students with disabilities at institutions of higher education.

The Conferees further specify that the National Center shall provide information and technical assistance to postsecondary faculty, staff, and administrators to improve the services provided to, the accommodations for, the retention rates of, and the completion rates of students with disabilities in higher education settings. These activities may include collection and dissemination of best practices and materials for accommodating and supporting students with disabilities; the development of training modules for higher education faculty for such purpose; and development of technology-based tutorials. The Conferees authorize the National Center to build, maintain, and update a database of disability support information related to postsecondary education that shall be made available to the public through a website built to high technical standards of accessibility.

The Conferees direct the National Center to prepare periodic reports to the Secretary and the authorizing committees analyzing the condition of postsecondary success for students with disabilities, including a review of the programs authorized under Part D; annual enrollment and graduation rates of students with disabilities at institutions of higher education; recommendations for effective supports and services for students with disabilities in higher education; recommendations on reducing barriers to full participation of such students in higher education; and a description of successful strategies in improving the success of such students in postsecondary education. The first of such reports shall be submitted not later than three years after the establishment of the Center, and every two years thereafter.

The Conferees specify that in hiring employees of the National Center, the center shall consider prospective employees' experience in providing training and technical assistance to practitioners.

The Conferees establish a Coordinating Center for Model Programs for Students with Intellectual Disabilities, which will serve as a coordinating center for technical assistance, evaluation, and recommendations related to the development of standards for institutions of higher education that offer inclusive comprehensive transition and postsecondary programs for students with intellectual disabilities. The Conferees recognize that there may currently exist inclusive comprehensive transition and postsecondary programs for students with intellectual disabilities as defined by this Act, and intend the Coordinating Center to work with such programs as well as those participating in grants authorized under subpart 2. The Conferees specify that an entity or partnership of entities with demonstrated expertise in the fields of higher education, the education of students with intellectual disabilities, the development of comprehensive transition and postsecondary programs for students with intellectual disabilities, and evaluation and technical assistance may qualify as the eligible entity to operate the coordinating center. The Conferees authorize the Secretary to enter into an agreement with an eligible entity to operate the coordinating center for a period of five years.

The Conferees direct that the coordinating center shall serve as the technical assistance entity for all comprehensive transition and postsecondary programs for students with intellectual disabilities, and that the center shall provide technical assistance regarding the development, evaluation, and improvement of such programs; develop an evaluation protocol for such programs; and assist recipients of grants under subpart 2 of Part D in providing a meaningful credential to students with intellectual disabilities who complete such programs. The Conferees also direct the coordinating center to develop recommendations on various components of the programs supported under subpart 2, analyze potential funding streams for such programs, develop model memoranda of agreement among institutions of higher education, States, and local educational agencies with respect to such programs; develop mechanisms for the regular communication, outreach and dissemination of information about such programs among relevant groups; and convene a workgroup to develop model criteria, standards, and components of such programs that are appropriate for the development of accreditation standards for these programs.

The Conferees direct the coordinating center to prepare a report to the Secretary, the authorizing committees, and the National Advisory Committee on Institutional Quality and Integrity, no later than five years after the date of establishment of the coordinating center, on the recommendations of the workgroup charged with developing model criteria and standards appropriate for the development of accreditation standards for comprehensive transition and postsecondary programs for students with intellectual disabilities.

The Conferees authorize such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2009 and each of the five succeeding fiscal years to carry out the purposes of this subpart.

Section 710. Subgrants to nonprofit organizations

The House bill clarifies that guaranty agencies are eligible for subgrants under the College Access Challenge Grant Program created by CCRAA.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE VIII—ADDITIONAL PROGRAMS

Section 801. Additional programs

The Senate amendment and the House bill create a new Title VIII to add new programs to the Act.

The Senate and House recede with amendments to Title VIII as follows.

Section 801. Project GRAD

The Senate amendment and the House bill authorize a new program to provide funding through a grant for a non-profit organization called Project GRAD USA to support integrated secondary-postsecondary graduation reform efforts. The Senate amendment establishes the program as a subsection of FIPSE. The House bill establishes the program under Title VIII.

The Senate recedes on placement and with an amendment to strike the term disadvantaged students and replace with low-income students, to reduce the administrative funding from eight percent to five percent, and to include additional outcome criteria for determining the funding level for grantees. The House and Senate recede to require the Secretary enter into a contract, rather than a grant, with Project Grad

Section 802. Mathematics and science scholars program

The Senate amendment establishes a new competitive grant program that authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to states. States would award $1,000 scholarships to first and second year undergraduate students who complete a rigorous high school program in math and science. States must match fifty percent of federal funds and may set priorities (e.g., underrepresented groups) for the scholarships. The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations of such sums as may be necessary fiscal year 2008 through fiscal year 2009.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to increase the scholarship award from $1,000 to $5,000, to limit eligibility to first year undergraduate students, and to incorporate provisions from the Math and Science incentives program from Title IV of the House bill.

The Conferees intend that States awarding scholarships from the Mathematics and Science Scholars Program should take into account the regional and geographic needs of the State in determining which eligible students receive the scholarships.

Section 803. Business workforce partnerships for job skill training in high-growth occupations or industries

The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to partnerships between institutions of higher education and local workforce investment boards for development of job training programs in high-growth industries. Grants would fund training for ''non-traditional'' students meeting specified criteria. The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations of such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2008 through fiscal year 2009.

The House bill includes a related Business Workforce Partnership grant program that authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to institutions of higher education in partnership with businesses, local workforce investment boards, and labor organizations to develop pathways from education and training to high-demand occupations.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to merge the two programs and authorize such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2009 and each of the five succeeding fiscal years.

It is the intent of the Conferees that the Workforce Partnerships for Job Skill Training in High-Growth Occupations or Industries created in this bill are awarded as part of a competitive grants process. The Conferees further intend that the Secretary shall consult with experts in the workforce and occupational education and training fields during all parts of the grants process, including the reviewing of applications, awarding grants, and evaluating the success of grantees.

Finally, the Conferees intend for the Secretary to encourage grant recipients pursuing partnerships for the purposes outlined in subsection (e)(1) or (e)(2) to where possible design course offerings and programs that offer credit towards a degree or certificate.

Section 804. Capacity for nursing students or faculty

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish a new program that authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to nursing programs to expand faculty and facilities.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House with the following amendments.

The Senate amendment authorizes grants beginning in academic year 2006–2007. The House bill authorizes grants beginning in academic year 2008–2009.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment authorizes funding indefinitely. The House bill does not provide a separate authorization of appropriations for this section.

The House recedes with an amendment to authorize such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2009 and each of the five succeeding fiscal years.

The House bill establishes a Nurse Faculty Pilot Project which authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to fund scholarships and release time for nurses studying for advanced degrees with the intention of becoming faculty.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify that grants awarded under this section may be used to support partnerships with hospitals or health facilities to improve alignment between nursing education and healthcare delivery methods, fund release time for qualified nurses enrolled in the graduate nursing program and to provide scholarships to qualified nurses in pursuit of an advanced degree with the goal of becoming faculty members in an accredited nursing program.

The conferees recognize that Part D, Section 804, Capacity for Nursing Students and Faculty, combines two distinct programs included in the House bill; a capitation grant program and a nurse faculty pilot project. In considering the designation of the awards and distribution of excess funds, the committee urges the Secretary to ensure an adequate number of awards and funding is provided for the nurse faculty pilot project described in (c)(2)(B). Additionally, the Secretary shall determine the duration in which the nurse faculty pilot project grants are awarded; such time period should not exceed five years but should not be less than three years. After the expiration of the pilot program, the project's success will be evaluated.

Section 805. American history for freedom

The Senate amendment establishes a new program that authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to institutions of higher education to establish or strengthen programs that promote ''(1) traditional American history; (2) the history and nature of, and threats to, free institutions; or (3) the history and achievements of Western Civilization.'' The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations for fiscal year 2008 through fiscal year 2013.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to authorize such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2009 and each of the five succeeding fiscal years.

Section 806. Teach for America

The Senate amendment and the House bill authorize the Secretary to award a grant to Teach For America, Inc. to implement and expand its program of recruiting, selecting, training, and supporting new teachers; and to study the program's effectiveness.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House with the following amendments.

The Senate amendment uses the term achievement gains, while the House bill uses the term student learning gains.

The House recedes with an amendment to use the term student achievement gains.

The House bill requires those participating in the peer review process required by the Senate amendment and House bill to meet specific qualifications.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment authorizes appropriations of such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2008 through fiscal year 2013.

The House bill authorizes $20,000,000.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment limits the Teach For America organization from using federal funds for more than twenty-five percent of its administrative costs.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Section 807. The Patsy T. Mink fellowship program

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish a new program to award competitive grants to institutions of higher education for fellowships to minorities and women seeking doctoral degrees with the intent of entering the professoriate.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House with an amendment to clarify that the fellowship awards should be given to individuals from groups who are underrepresented in doctoral degree programs, including minorities and women.

The Senate amendment requires that at least thirty percent of funds would be reserved for institutions of higher education eligible for a grant under Titles III or V.

The House bill requires that at least fifty percent of funds would be reserved for institutions of higher education eligible for a grant under Titles III or V.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish similar eligibility requirements for students to receive Mink fellowships from grantee institutions of higher education. The Senate amendment requires intent to pursue a career in instruction at certain delineated institutions of higher education; the House bill simply refers to those institutions of higher education eligible to participate in Title IV programs.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill requires each grantee to award a minimum of fifteen fellowships with the grant funds.

The Conferees agree to this provision with an amendment to reduce the minimum number of awards to ten and clarify that the Secretary can use unused appropriated funds to make a grant award to a grantee that would result in less than ten fellowships being awarded.

The Conferees intend that the Patsy Mink Fellowship Program grants will support a minimum of ten fellowships per grant. The goal of this minimum number of fellowships is to enable cohorts of underrepresented individuals to move through graduate education together and increase the likelihood that individuals will complete their education and enter the professoriate. The Conferees recognize that appropriated funds may not always be adequate to ensure that each grant could support this minimum number. In such situations, the Conferees intend that the Secretary award the maximum number of grants that would support the minimum fellowship requirement but would have the flexibility to award a single grant using remaining funds which would not be required to meet the minimum fellowship requirement. The Secretary may not award multiple grants, in any single grant cycle, that do not meet the minimum fellowship requirement.

The Senate amendment includes provisions prohibiting any requirement for preferential treatment in hiring for Mink fellows.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Section 808. Improving college enrollment by secondary schools

The Senate amendment and the House bill establish a new program in which the Secretary must contract with a non-profit organization to conduct a needs assessment and provide comprehensive services to urban school districts and rural states in order to improve college-going rates of participating schools.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House with the following amendment.

The Senate amendment directs the Secretary to contract with one non-profit organization to carry out the program.

The House bill requires the Secretary to award a grant to a nonprofit organization to carry out the program.

The Senate recedes.

Section 811–818. Early childhood education professional development and career task force

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a program for early childhood development professional development.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House with the following amendments.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include a definition of an ''early childhood education program.'' The House bill's definition includes a program authorized under Section 619 or Part C of IDEA.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment provides for a five year grant award period. The House bill provides for a three year grant award period.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the development of a State Task Force. The House bill specifies that a representative from the state educational agency and the State Head Start collaboration director participate in the State Task Force. The House bill includes language stating that nothing precludes the State from designating a pre-existing entity to serve as the State Task Force required under this program. The Senate amendment requires a state representative serve on the Task Force, but does not require that person to be from the state educational agency.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment and the House bill include similar provisions for ''State Taskforce Activities'', except, the House bill specifies that the survey, administered by the Task Force, should collect information disaggregated by specialized knowledge in the education of children with limited English proficiency, in addition to the areas included in the Senate amendment.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to also require the collection of information regarding children with disabilities.

The Senate amendment and the House bill require the State Task Force to develop a plan for a comprehensive professional development and career system for individuals working in early childhood education programs and specify what must be included in the plan.

The Conferees adopt this provision with an amendment to clarify that the plans may, rather than shall, include certain contents.

Section 819. Improving science, technology, engineering and mathematics education with a focus on Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian students

The Senate amendment and the House bill authorize the Secretary to award competitive grants to partnerships to develop or expand STEM programs and academic support services and internships for STEM students, with a focus on Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian students.

The Conferees adopt the provisions as proposed by both the Senate and the House with the following amendment.

The Senate amendment includes a definition of institution of higher education.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment includes authorizing language for such sums as necessary to carry out this Part for fiscal year 2008 and five succeeding years.

The House bill contains no similar provision.

The House recedes with amendment to strike 2008 and replace with 2009.

Section 820. Pilot programs to increase college persistence and success

The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to institutions of higher education for scholarships ($2,000 per year for two years) and counseling services for low-income students with dependents. Scholarship funds are paid upon completion of specified academic milestones. The program is to be evaluated with a random assignment study design. The Senate amendment authorizes such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2008 through fiscal year 2013.

The House bill contains the Student Success Grants, which authorizes the Secretary to award competitive grants to eligible institutions of higher education to help low-income students persist and complete postsecondary education and training programs through coaching programs. In addition to supportive services, institutions of higher education would provide grants to eligible students for $1,500 per student, per year, for five years, with a twenty-five percent non-federal matching requirement.

The Senate and the House recede with an amendment to merge the two programs.

Section 821. Student safety and campus emergency management

The Senate amendment and the House bill create a new student safety and campus emergency grant program.

The Conferees adopt the provision as proposed by both the Senate and the House with the following amendments.

The House bill adds one additional authorized activity that allows funds to be used for the acquisition and installation of access control, video surveillance, intrusion detection, and perimeter security technologies.

The Senate recedes.

The Conferees intend that the authorized emergency communications systems to include multiple technologies, including those currently provided over personal computers, personal digital assistants, message boards, and speaker-sirens, such as mass notification systems using ''intelligible voice'' messaging. The Conferees are aware that the Department of Defense and other entities use three forms of mass notification systems for interior and exterior emergency communications. These combinations of technologies are important for emergency communications to reassure that there are multiple paths for message delivery. This will allow for messages with intelligible voice messaging over remote speaker-sirens and personal computing devices to notify personnel inside and outside in large open area with real-time information in an endangered areas prior, during, and after the emergency.

Section 822. Model emergency response policies, procedures, and practices

The Senate amendment provides joint authority to the Secretary, Attorney General, and Secretary of Homeland Security to provide technical assistance to institutions of higher education on model emergency response issues and to disseminate relevant information.

The House bill requires the Secretary of Education, in consultation with the Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security, to provide these technical assistance and dissemination services.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to clarify that the Secretary shall continue the efforts that are already underway in working with the Attorney General and Secretary of Homeland Security.

Section 823. Preparation for future disasters plan by the Secretary

The House bill requires the Secretary to develop and maintain a disaster relief plan that addresses the needs of institutions of higher education in the event of a natural or man-made disaster that is declared a major disaster or emergency by the President. The House bill requires the Secretary to submit the disaster plan and any revisions to the plan to the authorizing Committees.

The Senate amendment contains no such provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to ensure that the Secretary works in coordination with the Secretary of Homeland Security and other appropriate agencies and to strike the requirement that the Secretary submit the plans to the authorizing Committees.

The Conferees remain interested in the progress made by the Secretary of Education, along with other agencies, in developing plans to ensure that the federal government is ready to assist institutions of higher education, their employees and their students in the event of another natural or man-made disaster. The Conferees would appreciate a briefing on the plans as they are developed.

Section 824. Education disaster and emergency relief loan program

The House bill establishes a new education disaster and emergency relief loan program for institutions of higher education for direct or indirect losses incurred as a result of a federally declared major disaster or emergency.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to limit the uses of funds.

The Conferees remain interested in the progress made by the Secretary of Education, along with other agencies, in developing plans to ensure that the federal government is ready to assist institutions of higher education, their employees and their students in the event of another natural or man-made disaster. The Conferees intend for Congress, upon its request, to be kept apprised of such plans as they are developed.

The Conferees note the devastating effect that hurricanes Katrina and Rita had on the universities and colleges located in the Gulf region, displacing 83,821 students and resulting in the closure, for the first time, of eleven colleges and universities in New Orleans for a full semester and ten more in Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, and Florida for an extended period of time. The Conferees are concerned that nearly three years after Katrina and Rita these colleges and universities are still struggling to recover. In particular, colleges and universities are suffering with student enrollments, faculty hiring and retention, as well as recovering financially overall from the damages to the schools. In terms of faculty and staff, it is important to note that salaries and benefits are paid during a disaster even as enrollments drop. The latest statistics reveal the challenges faced by these institutions:

Enrollment:

Pre-hurricanes: More than 70,000 students

Spring 2008: Less than 50,000

Faculty:

Pre-hurricanes: Nearly 11,000

Spring 2008: Approximately 8,000

Damages & Recovery

Damages (Revenue Losses, Physical Damages): Approximately $1.254 billion

Recovery (Insurance & FEMA): Approximately $400 million

In developing the disaster loan program, the Conferees intend for the Secretary to consider, as appropriate, the development of applicable rates of interest, credit reviews, escrow accounts, and provision that loans shall be fairly allocated among as many eligible institutions as possible, consistent with making loans of amounts that will allow for needed construction, replacement, renovation and operations resulting from a major disaster or emergency.

Section 825–826. Guidance on mental health disclosures for student safety

The House bill requires the Secretary, not later than ninety days after the enactment of this Act, to provide guidance to clarify the role of institutions of higher education with respect to the disclosure of education records in situations where a student poses a significant risk of harm to himself/herself or others. This guidance must also state that institutions of higher education acting in ''good faith'' with respect to the disclosure of education records in accordance with the requirements of this Act and Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 shall not be liable for that disclosure.

The Senate amendment contains no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to strike ninety and replace with 180.

Section 830. Incentives and rewards for low tuition

The House bill authorizes the Secretary to award grants for low tuition to institutions of higher education for academic year 2008–2009 and any succeeding academic year whose percentage increase in annual net tuition is equal to or less than the percentage change in the relevant Postsecondary Education Price Index (PEPI) for such academic year. The Secretary may also award grants to public institutions of higher education that have a net tuition that is in the lowest quartile of comparable institutions of higher education or have a tuition increase of less than $500 for a full-time undergraduate student.

SEC. 15. EXPEDITED PROCESS.

The Commodity Futures Trading Commission may use emergency and expedited procedures (including any administrative or other procedure as appropriate) to carry out this Act if, in its discretion, it deems it necessary to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PETERSON) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6604, the Commodity Markets Transparency and Accountability Act of 2008, will strengthen oversight of the commodity and futures markets for energy and agriculture commodities. It toughens position limits on oil and other futures markets as a way to prevent potential price distortions caused by excessive speculative trading. It extends CFTC oversight to previously exempt over-the-counter markets and calls for new full-time CFTC staff to improve enforcement, prevent manipulation, and prosecute fraud.

I want to thank my friend and ranking member, Mr. GOODLATTE of Virginia, for the work that he has done on this legislation, not only in committee, but in the many meetings that we have had. We have worked I think and done our work in the best bipartisan fashions, and I thank him for that.

I also want to thank the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the General Farm Commodities and Risk Management Subcommittee, Mr. BOB ETHERIDGE of North Carolina, for taking the lead on CFTC oversight on our committee and for his work on this legislation.

If it is all right with the gentleman from Virginia, in light of the work Mr. ETHERIDGE has done, I will yield to him to do his presentation now and then I will finish mine later. I want to recognize Mr. ETHERIDGE for 3 minutes. He has been a real leader on our side on this issue.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Chairman PETERSON and Ranking Member GOODLATTE in bringing the Commodity Markets Transparency and Accountability Act to the House floor for consideration.

During 3 days of hearings this month, expert after expert told the Ag Committee that at least part of the spike in energy prices could be caused by excessive speculation in energy futures trading. We owe it to the American consumer to ensure that gas prices are reflective of true market value and are not being artificially inflated by investors trying to make an easy quick buck. We cannot allow excessive speculation on Wall Street to cause folks to suffer on Main Street. That is why, as the chairman of the subcommittee that oversees the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, I worked with Chairman PETERSON and Ranking Member GOODLATTE to write today's bill.

This legislation will give the CFTC additional tools and authority to keep our markets free of manipulation and excessive speculation. We wrote the bill very carefully to ensure that it would not affect proper market activity. We are simply giving the CFTC the tools to do the job the American consumers entrusted it to do, to weed out improper or illegal market activity.

Since 2000, volume on commodity markets has increased six-fold; but staffing levels at the CFTC have fallen to the lowest level in the agency's 33-year history. Right now we need more cops on the beat. The bill will require CFTC to hire the 100 additional staff people it needs to effectively monitor the futures industry, including our energy markets.

Currently the CFTC is investigating whether market manipulation has occurred in energy markets. One firm has already been charged, but the commission needs additional staff to carry out this investigation, and the rest of its duties.

Additionally, the bill will require greater transparency and disclosure from investors. A little sunshine goes a long way to scaring off bad actors. We also close the London loophole, and toughen position limits and the hedge exemption.

Today's bill is not a cure-all for our energy crisis but is one important step that could provide some relief to families who are struggling. I urge all of my colleagues to support this piece of legislation.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from North Carolina, for their hard work, particularly the gentleman from Minnesota. He thought that, following the passage of the farm bill earlier this year, that he would have a lighter burden. And instead, we have devoted a substantial amount of time to this legislation. Six hearings were held, more than 30 witnesses were invited before the committee, and literally, dozens of meetings took place as well to reach the point we are at. And I want to commend him for that work.

And I think that he has done a very good job in fending off some very bad ideas that the committee heard about from other Members and from others who wanted the committee to do a whole lot more than we are doing in this legislation.

But I will tell you that I think, quite frankly, the whole process is one that is not complete. We really shouldn't be bringing this up the day before the Congress recesses for August. We should take it up in September, after this particular bill has been examined more closely by more people and has, perhaps even held a hearing on the legislation itself.

Nonetheless, I understand the constraints he is under. He has been advised that we have to take this legislation up now. And that is what is really troubling to me the most about the legislation. I am going to support it. I think it is a modest improvement in the oversight of our commodity markets. And certainly, if there is excessive speculation in the energy markets, we all favor curbing that abuse.

But quite frankly, what we really are not getting to do is what took place in the last vote we just cast, the decision to adjourn this Congress this week without anything on the calendar this week to deal with the problem that is most concerning the American people, and that is the fact that we do not have a program to increase the domestic supply of American energy.

And we, on the Republican side, just last week, introduced legislation that already has 120 cosponsors or more, the American Energy Act, that would do all of the above. It would increase production of oil and natural gas, which we badly need, given the price that we are facing at the pump. It would have incentives for the development and expansion of nuclear power, clean burning coal technology. It would have incentives for the development of exciting new prospects for new types of energy, it would promote solar and wind power and renewable fuels and hydrogen technology. It would promote conservation, which the American people are already being forced to do because of the high price of energy they are facing at the gas pump today.

And I talked to a woman just last week who informed me that to fill the tank at her home with kerosene that will heat her home next winter she has been told will cost her $2,400.

We need to be producing increased production, American production of energy. That is what we should be debating here today. That is what should be on the floor today. And I do not understand why the leadership on the other side of the aisle will not allow us to have a vote on this.

It is very clear that the overwhelming majority of the American people want to see us take action on this. It is very clear that the significant number of Members on the other side of the aisle would join with virtually all of the Republicans on this side of the aisle in supporting legislation to make America energy independent. But we are not getting that vote, and the reason we are not getting that vote is because the leadership on the other side will not allow it.

What do they have to be afraid of in an American democracy that we can't vote on the American Energy Act?

That is what this is really all about. They want to go home and say they have done something about energy, when, in point of fact, they have done nothing about the supply of energy in this country because they will not allow us to vote on increasing the supply. That is what this legislation should be addressing, but instead, we are going to address legislation that simply reforms what is being done in the commodity futures trading markets. Certainly, that is a good thing and an important thing for us to look at, but it does not get at the crux of the problem we are facing.

Mr. Speaker, I support this legislation, but I would urge my colleagues to point out that this is not what we need to be debating here today at the end of July just before we go home for the August recess.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to now recognize the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) for 2 minutes. He has been a leader, had, I think, numerous hearings, and his subcommittee has done a lot of work on this issue, along with his staff, so I recognize the gentleman for 2 minutes.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank Chairman PETERSON for the time.

I rise in support of H.R. 6604, the Commodities Market Transparency and Accountability Act.

As the chairman said, for 3 years I have held hearings on speculators in the market, and here is what we have found. Since the Enron loophole became law in 2000, there has been a dramatic shift and physical hedgers continually represent a small portion of the market. The excessive speculation is a significant factor in the price Americans are paying for gasoline, diesel and home heating oil.

Since the Enron loophole, what we found as money was shifted in this market, it went from $13 billion to $260 billion in this market, a 1,900 percent increase of money flowing into this market. After the Enron loophole we saw that contracts on oil futures markets went from 700,000 to over 3 million contracts, 425 percent increase.

What we also found, the physical hedgers in 2000, had about 70 percent of the market. By 2008, April of 2008, they were down to about 29 to 30 percent of the market. In other words, those who have a bona fide reason to hedge, like airlines, truckers and others, against the increased costs in fuel have been squeezed out of the market by big money and lucrative contracts.

While the Peterson bill may not have had all the things I would like to see, and in my legislation to prevent the unfair manipulation of prices, the PUMP Act, it does take significant steps to rein in excessive speculation.

The legislation would improve the information available to the Commodity Future Trading Commission, significantly improving the CFTC's ability to monitor energy markets. Should the CFTC find excessive speculation on unregulated markets as a result, they can take the necessary steps to correct it.

Well, speculators are not the only factor. We have seen that this Congress is serious about acting to curb excessive speculation in the energy market, and the markets are responding accordingly. Curbing excessive speculation is part of the solution to high energy prices.

I thank Chairman PETERSON and his staff for working with me and my colleagues to produce this legislation. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 6604.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, at this time it is my pleasure to recognize the Republican leader, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) for 1 minute.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, the Democrat majority here in Congress just voted a few minutes ago to adjourn for the August district work period without bringing a real bill to the floor that will open up American energy for development. Instead, they have brought this sham bill up here, trying to blame speculators for the problems that we have with the lack of energy in America.

We have had a number of these bills over the last 4 or 5 weeks, use it or lose it. We have already had a speculators bill on the floor once that passed, and a number of other ideas that are nothing more than a way to try to divert attention from the fact that they refuse to have a bill on the floor that is supported by a bipartisan majority of this Congress that would allow energy development in America.

The American Energy Act that we introduced last week is our plan to do all of the above. It would ask us to do more in terms of conservation, more in terms of bio fuels, more in terms of incentives for the development of alternative sources of energy. It would streamline the application process and permitting process for nuclear energy. And yes, it would allow us to drill in America for more oil and gas in an environmentally sensitive way. But that bill is not on the floor, nor will it be on the floor because the Speaker has refused to allow a bill to come.

And so what do we have? We have another excuse. Kind of reminds me of the old political adage. ''Don't blame me; don't blame thee; let's blame the man behind the tree.''

This is no substitute for a real bill on drilling, and I would urge my colleagues to oppose it.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to yield the majority leader 1 minute, and appreciate his work with us on this legislation.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

This is not a sham. And I would say to the leader, as he knows, he had an opportunity to vote on a DRILL Bill, Drill Responsibly in Currently Leased Land. He voted against that bill. A number of people in this Chamber voted against that bill. What that said is let's produce more product here in America.

What this bill says is, let's make sure that prices aren't being driven up artificially. No more, no less.

This summer the Democratic majority in this body has produced bill after bill after bill to address record oil prices that have exploded on this administration's watch. $1.46 to over $4 during the 7½ years of this administration.

Every one of us here, Democrats and Republicans, acknowledge that curbing our Nation's addiction to foreign oil, which is how President Bush himself characterized the situation, requires short-term solutions, and long-term strategy. And thus, this body has considered a bill that would increase production of more bio fuels here at home, and a second to incentivize the use of nonfood commodities to meet that goal. The chairman has been a leader in that effort, Chairman PETERSON, along with Mr. GOODLATTE. Appreciate both of their leadership.

We have considered a bill to hold OPEC accountable for price fixing, bills to address retail and wholesale price gouging, a bill to crack down on energy market manipulation, a bill to increase supply by suspending shipments to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, and then another one to release oil from the Reserve; a bill to expedite the production of 10.6 billion barrels of Alaskan oil, to keep all oil produced in Alaska as well in the United States, and encourage diligent development of existing leases on Federal lands.

I tell my friends on the Republican side, when I use that phrase, ''diligent development'' that is lifted from their 2005 bill. We said ''use it or lose it,'' which was essentially the same thing, and they voted against it.

We have also considered a bill to bring down commuter rail and bus fares, and a bill to provide tax credits for renewable and alternative energy.

None of these bills, none of these bills, alone is a panacea. We all recognize that. And we all recognize that there will be no immediate solution.

But all of them, together, constitute a vital step towards confronting our oil dependency and our energy independence.

Many of these Democratic energy initiatives have passed the House. Some have become law. However, unfortunately, some have been blocked by our colleagues on the other side of the aisle who seem to have one answer and one answer only to America's energy crisis, drill in places that are not now authorized.

I want to remind my colleagues there are currently some 88 million acres available for drilling. Experts tell us there are 107 billion barrels of oil available under those acres. We use, that would be a 14½ year supply. And what we have said is, pursue that. Drill. Produce that energy here in America for our use here in America.

Unfortunately, that bill was rejected by the overwhelming majority of the Republican Party. It is ironic, but Democrats generally agree with our Republican friends that increasing domestic production of our energy sources is critical. Both sides agree that we ought to get more energy from America. We agree that we ought to get more oil from America.

And unfortunately, when some of my Republican colleagues speak, they say, Democrats don't want to drill. That is absolutely not true, false, a misrepresentation said, in my opinion, for political purposes to accomplish an objective for politics, not for policy or for energy independence.

We must drill more, but we believe the oil companies which today have 68 million acres of land to drill on that is leased and open for drilling, must drill there first. Let's see if it is available there. If it is not, well perhaps let's look at alternatives.

In total, there are 311 million acres available for drilling, including 20 million in the National Petroleum Reserve in Alaska. If they are serious about domestic production, they should be bringing these resources to market that we have leased in the public trust to produce oil and gas for the American people.

Today, I'm hopeful that Members on both sides of the aisle will again come together and support this legislation.

I want to congratulate Chairman PETERSON. Chairman PETERSON has had some of the biggest challenges in this year in the Congress of the United States, last year as well. The farm bill went a long period of time. The farm bill—which had significant energy components in it—and this bill, the Commodity Markets Transparency and Accountability Act. This bill is designed to control the market speculation that is artificially inflating the price of gas.

Among other things, this bill builds upon what we did in the farm bill, and closes overseas loopholes that allow speculation to go on unregulated; increases market transparency with strict reporting standards for traders; sets position limits to prevent individual speculators from dominating the market; and strengthens the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, which is operating at its lowest ever staffing levels.

I tell my friends on both sides of the aisle if you take the referee off the field, the players are going to take an unfair advantage. You take the referees off the field, I guarantee the split ends are going to start down the field before the ball is hiked because he wants to get that advantage.

We've taken the referees off the field. This bill tries to put the referees back on the field. Even as trading volumes have increased 8,000 times since the Commodity Futures Trading Commission was first established—8,000 times—we have decreased their number of employees, their number of referees, if you will. Expert economists agree that unchecked, unregulated speculation is inflating the oil bubble and costing American consumers billions at the pump.

I urge my colleagues not for political reasons but for reasons of giving relief to our constituents, men and women trying to support their families who drive up to the pump and say to themselves, ''I can't afford this. I have got to spend it but I can't afford it,'' let's put a stop to out-of-control speculation in the oil markets that is fueling this run-up in the cost of petroleum and harming consumers and the economy. Let's come together, as we have before, and pass this important energy legislation.

I have said something about Mr. PETERSON. I want to say something about Mr. GOODLATTE. I want to congratulate him for working together with Mr. PETERSON to come up with a bill that can have bipartisan support, a bill which tries to effect reasonable, measured policy. I congratulate them both on this bill, and I urge my colleagues to pass this bill. It is not the only answer, but it is one of the pieces of the puzzle that we need to solve for all of our people.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, at this time I am pleased to yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN) who is the ranking Republican on the subcommittee of jurisdiction.

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express a serious concern with H.R. 6604. With the demand of rising energy costs, we're bringing to the floor a bill that will, in my opinion, do little to bring down the price of energy. In fact, certain provisions of this bill may lead to an increase in prices and may reduce market transparency and increase market volatility.

I want to be clear. I favor changes at the CFTC and believe we can change the act to improve market transparency, oversight, and enforcement activities. I have been working with CFTC and market participants to create a bill that will enhance those functions while giving regulators the necessary tools to prevent market manipulation and fraud. This bill, however, was put together, in my opinion, too quickly and goes too far.

When changing the Commodity Exchange Act, Congress must proceed in a deliberate manner and take into account the advice of industry users, the CFTC, the President's Working Group, and other experts. This bill should be referred back to the Committee on Agriculture so that we can refine provisions to actually enhance transparency and not exclude legitimate market participants.

One of the problems of this legislation is that it will likely reduce market transparency. This is because of certain provisions like the one dealing with the Foreign Board of Trade that seek direct access to U.S. and provisions that require reporting for certain over-the-counter and exempt commercial markets. That will push traders to foreign markets. Rather than giving the CFTC a better picture of the market, it will reduce the picture that the CFTC has and potentially increase fraud and manipulation. It restricts the CFTC's ability to see the market.

Second, this bill attempts to define a ''bona fide hedging transaction.'' In its current form, section 8 will exclude legitimate commercial market participants from properly hedging risk. This will cause an immediate disruption in the markets as the legitimate market participants are forced out. It will reduce market liquidity and increase price volatility.

I am also concerned with provisions in this bill that require routine reporting and potential use of position limits in over-the-counter transactions that are fungible. ''Fungible'' is not defined and suggests that a significant amount of OTC transactions could be implicated by this section. I am especially concerned about the authority given in section 14 to CFTC to impose position limits on OTC trades.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, not only should this bill be returned to committee because of these provisions so that we can take more time and develop a better product, I also recognize that this bill needs to address the root problem of high energy prices, and this will not do so.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to recognize the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. VAN HOLLEN), who has been a leader and introduced bills and worked with us on this legislation, for 1 minute.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, let me start by commending Chairman PETERSON, Ranking Member GOODLATTE and others on the committee for putting together the good compromise that we have today on the floor. I'm pleased to have worked with my colleagues ROSA DELAURO, BART STUPAK, JOHN LARSON, and others to try and establish greater transparency and accountability in our energy futures market so that we can wring out that component of the price that is due to excessive speculation.

Like any compromise, this bill doesn't contain everything that everybody wants, but it's a very important first step to getting at this issue that is affecting consumers every day.

Specifically, I am pleased that this legislation for the first time provides new authority for the CFTC to police the over-the-counter markets and take corrective action where necessary. It also goes a long way to cleaning up the current mess regarding bona fide hedging exemptions so that they are distributed based on true physical, rather than purely financial, risk. It also establishes position limits where necessary and at the same time safeguarding the importance of liquidity in the market.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the chairman, the ranking member, and all the people who came together to take what I think is an important first step toward addressing this issue and thank the chairman for saying as new evidence becomes available and collected, we will go farther as we determine necessary.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CONAWAY) who wishes to engage in a colloquy with the chairman on an issue in which I share the concerns raised by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONAWAY. I thank the gentleman from Virginia and would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if, in fact, he would engage in a colloquy with me.

Mr. Chairman, many questions have arisen about section 8 and how it addresses bona fide hedging for agriculture and energy commodities. I have asked you to engage in this colloquy to clarify that it is not your intent or the intent of the committee to unnecessarily restrict eligibility for bona fide hedge exemptions.

Under your leadership, Mr. Chairman, we have received hours of testimony from dozens of expert witnesses about excessive speculation and the narrowing of hedge exemptions. The testimony about removing eligibility for a hedge exemption for economic risk is at best inconclusive. This is a very technical area. The Commodity Futures Trading Commission has a lot of expertise in this area. We don't want to leave transactions that were traditionally considered a bona fide hedge left with no way to manage risk domestically.

The CFTC needs discretion in defining what an appropriate hedge is. Though section 8 codifies a portion of the current regulation defining a bona fide hedger, it ignores modern portfolio risk management theories. In doing so, it threatens more than market liquidity. It threatens market function and structure. If granted discretion, the CFTC can more nimbly grant hedge exemptions to those that truly are managing risk.

From our conversations, Mr. Chairman, I know that you're very protective of our domestic futures markets and believe, as I do, that the primary function of these markets is accurate price discovery.

Is it your intent to arbitrarily exclude traditional market participants?

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman from Texas and assure him that it is not my intent or the intent of this bill to bar conventional hedgers from receiving a hedge exemption.

Section 8 requires the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to define a bona fide hedge exemption, and I trust the Commission will use all of its expertise to strike the appropriate balance allowing for price discovery and risk management.

Mr. CONAWAY. I thank the gentleman. I would ask for your commitment to work with me as this bill moves forward to come to a common understanding of risk management needs and which market participants should be eligible for bona fide hedge exemption.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. The gentleman has my commitment.

Mr. CONAWAY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to recognize the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) for 1 minute.

Mr. BOUCHER. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding.

I want to commend Chairman PETERSON for his leadership on this measure which will broaden the reach of the Commodity Exchange Act in order to restrict excessive speculation in the energy and agricultural markets.

The concern that I am raising in this colloquy is of particular interest to the electricity sector. I would ask the gentleman if he would be pleased to engage in a colloquy with regard to this matter.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I would be pleased to do so.

Mr. BOUCHER. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has responsibility for regulating natural gas and electricity markets within its jurisdiction. That jurisdiction includes Financial Transmission Rights which are financial instruments which entitle the holders to receive compensation for transmission congestion charges that arise when the transmission grid is congested in the day-ahead market. These rights are traded through an auction and secondarily, through bilateral trading.

The FERC currently regulates these electricity transmission rights through the independent system operators and through the regional transmission organizations across the Nation. The FERC's governance of the sale and use of these rights is important to the FERC's governance of the ISOs and the RTOs.

Is it the intention of the chairman that anything in H.R. 6604 would limit or conflict with the legal authority of the FERC to carry out its regulatory responsibility with regard to financial transmission rights?

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. H.R. 6604 is not intended to affect FERC's current jurisdiction over regional transmission organizations or independent system operators. I appreciate the gentleman from Virginia's concern about this legislation's impact on FERC. As with the CFTC reauthorization in the farm bill, we do not see any impact in that area.

I look forward to continuing to work with my friend and the Committee on Energy and Commerce regarding matters of mutual interest.

Mr. BOUCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. CAMPBELL).

Mr. CAMPBELL of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I stand in strong opposition to this bill. Just last week, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission charged Optiver Holding BV with manipulation of the oil futures markets. They charged them for using a system called ''banging the close'' and charged that they made $1 million dollars with illegal manipulation of the oil futures markets.

You see, Mr. Speaker, it is already illegal to manipulate the oil futures markets, and the CFTC is already enforcing that. What this bill unfortunately does is move beyond manipulation into what is legitimate trading. When Southwest Airlines, which is a well-known organization that recently bought contracts forward and hedged oil prices going forward, when they buy that, someone else owns the other end of that contract. And when oil prices start to go up, the person who owns the other end of that contract tries to reduce their losses so they go into the market to do that. That is not manipulation. That is legitimate trading.

If you stop that, which this bill will, then a Southwest Airlines may not be able to get this kind of hedge in the future, or if they do, it will be much more expensive.

There's a difference between manipulation and legitimate trading. This bill does not recognize that.

So I oppose this bill and urge my colleagues to oppose it. Manipulation is already illegal. The bill will impact legitimate trading. It will move a lot of these trades from the United States to London or Dubai. It will hurt American companies.

And in the end, Mr. Speaker, as the CFTC admitted last week, the major cause of oil prices is not speculation or even manipulation but is, in fact, supply-and-demand factors. If we want to bring oil prices down, we will do it when we increase supply dramatically in this country and lower demand.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I'm now pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentlelady from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO), the Chair of the House Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee, and also a leader on this issue, that's worked with us over this period of time.

Ms. DELAURO. I rise in support of this bill. It's an important first step to address the concerns of millions of Americans, families and farmers, who feel powerless at the gas station and in the grocery store, sensing that something more than supply and demand is going on, producing breathtakingly high prices.

It's a complex issue. Excessive speculation occurs when the market price for a given commodity no longer accurately reflects the forces of supply and demand. We can point to loopholes and exemptions today that have allowed interested parties and special interests access and information to improperly speculate on the price of energy without oversight.

This bill confronts that speculation. It says to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission this is new authority to gather the information from currently unregulated, over-the-counter energy transactions. If it's improper speculation which is driving up the prices, the agency has the authority to act to reduce that speculation. It's new, long overdue authority that will shed light on once hidden markets.

It makes sure we know who is participating in the markets, to what extent, by requiring detailed trading information from index traders and swap dealers. It works to make sure that only those who are legitimate hedgers can use them.

It brings relief and can bring relief to American families and says to the CFTC: Do your regulatory job.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, at this time, it is my pleasure to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. I rise to support H.R. 6604 because I believe the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the CFTC, must investigate speculation in the energy futures market and respond to any manipulation and price distortions.

While my view is not unanimous, I believe the increased positions of institutional investors, such as pension funds, endowments and sovereign funds, are contributing to the escalating price of oil at an alarming rate. The CFTC should help level the playing field and apply position limits to the institutional investors, just as the New York Mercantile Exchange, NYMEX, has required of its members for many years.

I also believe the CFTC must work with the British Financial Services Authority, FSA, to establish position limits on oil futures traded on the London Intercontinental Exchange, ICE, similar to those established by the CFTC for traders on the NYMEX.

In overseas markets, such as ICE, U.S. investors can buy as much oil as they want, helping to drive up demand with little to no oversight.

It is essential the CFTC work with the FSA in London to limit positions and gather accurate information on the impact that speculation has on oil prices.

Rising gas prices are indicative of the United States' need to affirm its commitment to renewable energy research and development, and reduce our demand for energy by focusing on conservation. We also need to increase our domestic supply of nuclear power, oil and gas. In addition, transparency in the futures market is needed and very appropriate.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, could I inquire how much time is left on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has 6 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Minnesota has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I'm now pleased to recognize the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON), who is the Vice Chair of our caucus and has introduced bills in this area and been one of the leaders in working with us to come up with this compromise legislation, for 1 minute.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by commending this legislation and, more specifically, commending the work of COLLIN PETERSON and BOB GOODLATTE. You are a stellar example of what bipartisan cooperation should be like in this Chamber. Anyone who's witnessed how you have handled the agricultural bill and now this issue begins to deepen your appreciation for the way that you conduct yourself. It's a model for the Congress.

I'd also like to commend my colleagues ROSA DELAURO and CHRIS VAN HOLLEN for the legislation that they contributed to this piece of legislation, and probably the most comprehensive piece of legislation put forward by BART STUPAK who has been an advocate for this for several years. I want to also add FRANK LOBIONDO who assisted in a bipartisan way with this legislation.

But essentially, this came from Main Street and from independent oil dealers who recognize that the laws of supply and demand have been suspended and that what we needed to do was address this issue very forthrightly, but with the cautious manner which Mr. PETERSON has laid out.

I'm delighted that included in the bill is an effort to make sure that there's an Inspector General——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROSS). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. I thank the chairman.

I'm specifically delighted that there will be an independent Inspector General within the CFTC. This is vitally important to make sure that the kind of oversight that we all desire is going to take place.

I want to further commend John Mitchell, former Republican mayor in South Windsor; his brother, Billy; and Gene Guilford; and the Independent Petroleum Council who came to us with this issue primarily because citizens were coming to them and having to exchange their entire Social Security check in order to get oil for themselves.

Again, I commend the chairman and thank him for the time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, at this time, I'm pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT).

Mr. GOHMERT. Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the work of Chairman PETERSON, and I've had numerous conversations with my friend BART STUPAK, and I know that a lot of work has been done on this bill, a lot of efforts have been made because of our concern over unfair and inappropriate speculation. And it is a problem, and it has I think been a contributor to some of the rising prices.

One of the concerns some of us had is what about airlines, like Southwest Airlines, who have been able to hedge against inflation by getting these commodities contracts. And we were advised the Air Transport Association, which Southwest is a member—I don't know for sure that they support—but the Air Transport Association has come out in support of the bill and thinks it will help but it doesn't feel like it goes far enough.

This is something I'm going to vote for, and I appreciate all the hard work by Chairman PETERSON and my friend BART STUPAK, but we still come back to the biggest problem on prices being that there has been a tremendous increase in demand, especially through India and China, and we have not had a commensurate increase in the supply.

Supply-and-demand forces are at work. No matter what we do here in Congress, we're not going to decrease the forces of supply and demand on the market. That's what we need to be doing. We need to drill here, drill OCS, drill ANWR, and you know, some people keep saying 10 or 15 years before they'd come on line. The information that I heard was that since there's a pipeline 74 miles from the area of 1002 in ANWR, we could have that coming into the country, to this part of the country, the continental, within 3 years, that we could be bringing in OCS gas and oil in a similar amount of time. That's where we need to go.

I appreciate the work here, and I'm glad you're doing it and I will vote for it. But we need to increase the supply if we're going to help America. That's where the help is required.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 6604, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I'm now pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. POMEROY).

Mr. POMEROY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The latest example of a White House that runs energy policy by the oil companies, of the oil companies, and for the oil companies is found in the Statement of Administrative Policy threatening a veto on this bill.

The White House asks to give basically a blank check to the oil companies to drill wherever they want, notwithstanding the fact they already have authorized drilling for 34 billion barrels offshore. And then the White House opposes our efforts to address speculation.

The bill before us is a substantive and measured approach at trying to make certain that the price our consumers are paying at the pump is based on consideration of the supply and demand and not market manipulation.

Greater transparency, more reporting of transactions, greater oversight, 100 new personnel at the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, greater enforcement, a stronger direction from Congress to drive out excessive speculation: you would think this would be one area where the White House and the Congress could agree.

I urge passage of this bill.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, at this time, it's my pleasure to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. WESTMORELAND).

Mr. WESTMORELAND. I want to thank the ranking member for yielding.

And a while ago, I heard the majority leader say that this was not a sham. Well, we've seen this snake oil shop set up before when we've voted on things under the suspension rules, and that's what makes this a hoax. That's what makes this a joke.

Half of this House is being shut out, if not all of this House is being shut out, from offering amendments on the floor. The 700,000 people I represent in Georgia's Third Congressional District, Mr. Speaker, had no input into this.

And so we can call it what we want to, but it's a red herring. We are trying to put the attention on something that will not increase our U.S. oil production.

Seventy-three percent, Mr. Speaker, of American people say let's drill here, let's drill now, let's increase our oil production, let's bring up the supply; that will drive down the cost of our oil.

I want to read you a quote, and this is from Speaker PELOSI: ''This call for drilling in areas that are protected is a hoax. It's an absolute hoax on the part of the Republicans and the administration.''

Here's a number for the switchboard in the U.S. House of Representatives, Mr. Speaker. I encourage the 73 percent of the American people that say that drilling is the right thing for us to do, that we should use our own natural resources, not be dependent on foreign oil, that we should let her know because I'm telling you, the Republican minority in this House cannot do anything to make the Democratic majority bring a bill forward through regular order that would give us or have an ability to either amend the bill or have a motion to recommit where the American people could really tell how their representatives feel about increasing U.S. oil production.

This is just smoke and mirrors. This is smoke and mirrors so they can go home during the August recess and say they voted on something. This is not an increase in our U.S. oil supply.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

(Mr. INSLEE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INSLEE. Was this part of the secret Dick Cheney task force to come up with an opposition to have a little transparency in the speculation markets? Secrecy does its worst work in the dark, and that's what happened in the Cheney secret energy task force. And why should we allow these speculative markets to continue in the dark?

The people who support this are not a bunch of hemp smoking Communists. The Air Transport Association, the people whose industry is on the verge of disaster, realize we have to rein in this rampant speculation. These are capitalists, CEOs, accountants who know that we've got to get to the root of this speculation.

And I don't understand, when it comes to energy, my Republican colleagues are against virtually every solution. Speculation, they're against it. Opening the SPR, they're against it. Solar energy in our REC standard, they're against it. Wind in our tax bill, they're against it. Electrified cars in our CAFE, they're against it. They're the none-of-the-above caucus.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the chairman how many speakers he has remaining. I'm the only one right now on the floor on our side.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I've got one additional speaker here right now and potentially maybe one more.

Mr. GOODLATTE. I reserve my time.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. WELCH).

□ 1415

Mr. WELCH of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the chairman, Mr. PETERSON, and the ranking member, Mr. GOODLATTE, for doing the usual bipartisan work to address a problem in a practical way.

The question that they faced is this: Will the futures market be one that is dedicated to price efficiency or will it be hijacked for speculative market manipulation? Will the futures markets serve the needs of those who need it—airliners, fuel dealers, truckers—or will it be in service of financial speculators who, moment to moment, are trying to take advantage of the volatility at the expense of the American consumer?

This legislation strikes a balance. It sends a clear message that the markets should be about price efficiency, not short-term momentary advantage when the consequence is inflicting damage on the American family, the American small business, the American economy.

There are practical steps in here—overseeing offshore trading, position limits, over-the-counter trading regulations. These are things that should be done and are being done.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, a member of our committee who has worked long and hard on this issue, and we appreciate his involvement.

Mr. MARSHALL. I thank the chairman. And to the chairman and the ranking member, I've just got nothing but applause. This has been a very, very difficult issue to grapple with because it is so complicated.

There is no question that America needs to do more as far as energy is concerned, and there are lots of different ways to go about doing that. And there are a lot of market fundamentals that are involved in explaining what our current price challenges are for commodities, agriculture, oil, and others.

But there is also no question that part of the price impact is due to investment money that has flowed onto these markets through index funds, investment money that was really never intended to be on the futures market. The futures markets were set up to help airlines and ag producers and others in hedging commercial risk. And liquidity was added in the form of speculation in order to enhance the hedging of commercial risk. These markets were never intended as a place to simply come and park a commodity investment. One expert has described this as being an uncoordinated, unintended squeeze of the market. And we've got to do something about it.

We have a bipartisan bill. There have been very few voices that have spoken in opposition to this bill. Some of those voices are saying we should drill more. I agree. Some of those voices are saying—the gentleman from California, for example, suggested that airlines are not in favor of this bill when, in fact, they are in favor of this bill. Those who use these markets know there's a problem. Consumers have no other explanation for why prices have risen so much.

We have a bipartisan bill. It's a good bill. I commend the chairman. I commend the ranking member. There's more work to be done on the bill; we'll be able to do that work on the bill in conference with the Senate to improve the bill. So we're still listening to folks, but this bill is an excellent start at addressing a real problem. There is no reason in the world why it ought not be passed. And if passed, it will lower prices.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comment of the gentleman from Georgia about the fact that he favors drilling. I favor drilling. Most of the people over here who have had the opportunity to speak favor drilling.

We favor doing a whole lot more than drilling, too. We would like to see increased incentives for nuclear production. We would like to see incentives for coal liquefaction and clean burning coal technology, coal sequestration technology. We would like to see legislation to encourage hydrogen fuel cell technology, solar technology, wind technology to be expanded to make America energy independent.

But instead, today we're voting on legislation—which I support, which does a good job of enhancing the ability of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to oversee futures trading, brings more transparency to that, and I support it. But it is not going to solve the problem that the American people face, with the high cost of gasoline going into their tanks, of fuel oil that they're going to have to purchase to heat their home this winter, the higher cost of electricity that they're facing because this Congress refuses to allow us to vote on the American Energy Act and other good pieces of legislation that have been offered here in this Congress to increase the domestic supply of energy.

That's what we should be spending our time doing, not voting to go home for the August recess and leaving that very, very serious problem—which is having a very significant impact on our economy—unaddressed. We should have a vote on the American Energy Act.

I think it is a very serious mistake for the Democratic leadership to deny this Congress and bipartisan Members on both sides of the aisle the opportunity to vote on what the American people want us to vote on. That's the problem that they see here in Washington. They don't understand it. And I don't understand why the Democratic leadership is afraid of allowing democracy to work and have the vote that we need to have here in the Congress.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, but I urge them to continue to fight for the legislation we need to have on this floor.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Again, I want to thank Mr. GOODLATTE and assure him that there is one more person over here that agrees with him, that we should do everything we can to exploit all of our domestic energy sources, whatever they might be. And I would agree with him on that. I would add one other thing. In addition to that, we ought to promote conservation because we can probably save more energy with that than anything else that we do. So I'm for all of that. But we have this issue and we are addressing this, and I hope we can keep the focus on that. But again, I want to thank him for his help, and all the members of my committee.

Our interest on the Agriculture Committee has been to make sure that we maintain these markets for our agriculture producers. This is where the commodity futures business started is in agriculture. We are much smaller markets now than energy and than financials. And we're concerned about what's going on with this additional money that's coming into the markets, in terms of the agriculture markets.

We are lacking convergence in some of our ag markets. We have a situation where the basis is $2 difference between the future price of what somebody can get at the elevator. So we have issues here that we are very concerned about, and we have taken the steps that we think we have the information to be able to address. We're closing the London loophole. We're taking the look-alike contracts that are just a substitute for something that's on the regulated market and we're giving the CFTC some authority to put position limits on that part of the OTC market.

But in the areas where we don't have enough information—which is considerable in the OTC market—in terms of how much of this is pension funds, how much is index funds, how much is hedge funds? Are they long or are they short? What's going on within that market? We don't have that information.

So in this bill we are requiring the CFTC to come up with this information, bringing it back to us so that we can sort this out and figure out exactly what is going on with all this additional money that's coming into the marketplace.

We've also asked the regulated market, the CME, to look into why we don't have convergence of the wheat market, why we had a problem with cotton here a few months ago.

We are, we think, doing a responsible effort here to address a concern that's been raised by a lot of people, and we are looking forward to getting the rest of this information. We have a good bill, a responsible bill. I encourage my colleagues to support it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEUGEBAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Department of the Treasury and the President's Working Group be entered into the RECORD in connection with this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

JULY 29, 2008.

Hon. RANDY NEUGEBAUER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN NEUGEBAUER: In response to your July 25 letter, we are providing the views of the President's Working Group on Financial Markets (PWG) concerning H.R. 6604—legislation addressing regulation of the U.S. energy futures markets.

The PWG is concerned that high commodity prices are putting a considerable strain on American families and businesses. Proper regulation of the energy futures markets is necessary to ensure that prices reflect economic factors, rather than manipulative forces. To this end, the PWG worked with Congress to develop additional regulatory authorities for the CFTC, enacted earlier this year, to regulate certain over-the-counter (OTC) energy transactions on electronic exchanges. The PWG also supports the recent steps taken by the CFTC to improve the oversight and transparency of the energy futures markets.

The PWG agencies also are participating in an Interagency Task Force on Commodity Markets that is studying the role of economic fundamentals and speculation in the commodity markets. The Task Force recently published an Interim Report on Crude Oil, which found that fundamental supply and demand factors provide the best explanation for the recent crude oil price increases. If the future work of this Task Force or the analysis of data the CFTC has recently collected from commodity market participants suggests that changes to futures market regulation are necessary, the PWG stands ready to assist lawmakers in crafting such modifications.

However, the PWG believes that bill H.R. 6604, as reported, could harm U.S. energy markets without evidence that it would lower crude oil prices. Among its several provisions, it would curtail certain types of trading in the futures markets. Such restrictions on market participation could reduce market liquidity, hinder the price discovery process, and limit the ability of market participants to manage and transfer risk. Provisions in the bill also may harm U.S. competitiveness by driving some trading to overseas markets or to more opaque trading systems at a time when policymakers are trying to encourage greater transparency. Should this legislation become law, the chances of significant unintended consequences in the markets would be high.

This legislation would give the CFTC regulatory authorities over certain OTC transactions for the first time. It has been the long-held view of the PWG that bilateral, OTC derivatives transactions do not require the same degree of regulatory oversight as exchange-traded instruments because they do not raise the investor protection and manipulation concerns associated with exchange-traded instruments. Regulating these OTC instruments could prove costly and difficult to administer by both regulators and the industry given the size and nature of the market might not provide meaningful regulatory data, and could negatively affect the ability of U.S. firms and markets to compete globally in these types of transactions.

To date, the PWG has not found valid evidence to suggest that high crude oil prices over the long term are a direct result of speculation or systematic market manipulation by traders. Rather, prices appear to be reflecting tight global supplies and the growing world demand for oil, particularly in emerging economies. As a result, Congress should proceed cautiously before drastically changing the regulation of the energy markets.

We look forward to working with Congress on these important energy market issues and appreciate your seeking our views.

Sincerely,

HENERY M. PAULSON, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

BEN S. BERNANKE,
Chairman, Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

CHRISOPHER COX,
Chairman, Securities and Exchange Commission.

WALTER L. LUKKEN,
Acting Chairman, Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support H.R. 6604, the "Commodity Markets Transparency and Accountability Act of 2008."

This legislation will ratchet back the excessive speculation which has undermined the ability of the commodity markets to enable price discovery, while ensuring a means for legitimate hedgers, such as airlines, to lock in future prices as a way to protect their business from price volatility.

Experts testified before the Committee on Energy and Commerce that commodity index speculators, such as pension funds, endowments, and sovereign wealth funds, have poured more than a quarter trillion dollars into purchases of a basket of essential commodities such as oil, natural gas, corn, and wheat. Investments tied to the two most popular commodity indexes have skyrocketed 1,900 percent in the past 5 years.

This is the one factor that has turbocharged oil prices far above their underlying supply and demand. This bill works to plug three loopholes that have allowed speculation to get out of hand, in markets immune largely from public disclosure, regulation, and transparency.

First, the "London loophole," allows foreign boards of trade such as the London-based ICE-Futures, to offer futures contracts in this country for U.S.-delivered energy commodities, such as the West Texas Intermediate Crude Oil Contract, but operate free from equivalent U.S. regulatory oversight.
