While African Americans represent 12 percent of minorities will be affected by civil rights issue. A disproportionate in poverty themselves. and they are far more likely to end up higher risk of poor health, high rates of growing up in a family where someone worked in 1998 were poor despite living in middle-class family in 1998 spend 6.8 percent more time at work then it did in 1989. These extra hours at work mean that parents have less time to spend with their children. Raising the minimum wage issue is also a children’s issue. Thirty-three percent of minimum wage earners are parents with children under 18. Over 8 million children living in poverty live in working poor families. The Children’s Defense Fund recently released a report called “The State of America’s Children 2000.” A chapter on Family Income explains that if “recent patterns persist, one out of every three children born in 2000 will have spent at least a year in poverty by his or her 18th birthday.” The inadequate pay of these workers is the reason why 33 percent of all poor children, or 4.3 million children, in 1998 were poor despite living in a family where someone worked full-time, year-round. Children who grow up in poor families face a much higher risk of poor health, high rates of learning disabilities and developmental delays, and poor school achievement and they are far more likely to end up in poverty themselves. Raising the minimum wage is also a civil rights issue. A disproportionate share of minorities will be affected by an increase in the minimum wage. While African Americans represent 12 percent of the total workforce, they represent 16 percent of those who would benefit from a minimum wage increase. Only 11 percent of the workforce is Hispanic, but 19 percent of those who would directly affected by an increase in the minimum wage are Hispanic.

Raising the minimum wage is also a women’s issue. Sixty percent of minimum wage earners are women. The workers affected by an increase in the minimum wage are concentrated in female-dominated occupations.

Above all, raising the minimum wage is a fairness issue. Minimum wage earners, such as waitresses and teacher’s aides, childcare workers, and elder care workers, deserve to be paid fairly for the work that they do. They should not be forced into poverty for doing the work that is important to the citizens of the Nation.

In this period of unprecedented economic prosperity, the 10 million workers at the bottom of the economic ladder who will benefit from raising the minimum wage should not be forced to wait any longer for the fair increase they deserve.

Each day we fail to raise the minimum wage, families across the country continue to fall farther behind. Two facts tell the story. The minimum wage would have to be $7.66 an hour today—instead of its current level of $5.15—to have the same purchasing power it had in 1968. If wages had kept pace with worker productivity gains over the last twenty-five years, the minimum wage would have to be $8.79 today.

We heard a great deal about opposition to the increase in minimum wage because we are not getting increases in productivity. No economy has ever had the dramatic increases in productivity as we have had, Mr. President. If we tied those increases in productivity to where the minimum wage should be, it would be at $8.79 instead of $5.15.

These disgraceful disparities show how far we have fallen short in guaranteeing that low-income workers receive their fair share of the nation’s prosperity. No one—one who works for a living should have to live in poverty.

We are not going to go away or back down. We have bipartisan support for this increase. It is long past time for this Congress to pass a fair minimum wage bill.

PROTECTING AGAINST HMO ABUSES AND PRESCRIPTION DRUGS BENEFIT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as we enter the final weeks of the 106th Congress and the home stretch of the Presidential campaign, two health issues demand immediate action—protecting patients against the abuses of HMOs and other health insurance plans and providing coverage of prescription drugs under Medicare for senior citizens. The American people deserve action on these pressing issues from this Congress. The position of the two Presidential candidates on these issues has become a key factor in determining whether they are truly committed to serving the needs of the American people and the position of this Congress on these issues is important for the same reason.

With regard to the Patients’ Bill of Rights, last week, ABC began to air a documentary series—Hopkins 24/7— that vividly illustrates once again the need for prompt action to end HMO abuses. Hopkins 24/7 is a documentary on life at one of the nation’s finest hospitals—Johns Hopkins. The documentary is the result of three months of intensive filming. The first segment, shown on August 30, showed American medicine at its best, and the abuses by managed care at their worst.

A 14-year-old girl, Tiffanie Salvadia, sought care from Johns Hopkins for her cancer of the uterus. The diagnosis had been delayed for six critical weeks because crucial tests were not ordered by her HMO physicians. When Tiffanie finally reached Johns Hopkins, the cancer had spread from her uterus, raising the risk of this serious illness even further. When Tiffanie finally reached an institution capable of giving her the quality care she needed, the problems with her HMO were not over. Authorization for a vital test was needed, but the hospital was unable to contact the HMO for the authorization. Fortunately, Hopkins simply went ahead and performed the test, and hoped that the hospital might be able to still payment.

Tiffanie ultimately received fine care from Hopkins, and her chances of recovery from the cancer now seem good. But her favorable prognosis is no thanks to her HMO, Hopkins Dr. Paul Colombani, the oncologist at Hopkins, had to say about Tiffanie’s case and about his experience with managed care generally.

On the difficulty in getting the test authorized, he said, “I have to do the diagnosis codes and the procedure codes. And we have to submit them to the insurance company ahead of time. And they have to say yes or no. We’re not going to do this. You have to do that. I think it is ridiculous that a high school clerk should be telling me that I can or cannot do an operation on a patient.”

On the delay in getting Tiffanie an accurate diagnosis and treatment, the doctor said, “We see delays in diagnosis because of the inadequacies of the managed care system all the time. And for . . . the 1 percent of patients where it turns out to be a life and death situation, they just look at that as the price of doing business. It’s patetic. In October or September, or whatever, that was the time to do that surgery. Now we’re playing catch up.”
Perhaps the most heart-rending comment came from Tiffanie’s mother. It is a comment that any parent who has ever had a child with a serious illness can understand. She said, “My daughter has cancer. I want to concentrate on her, and getting her better and not have to worry about if I have a referral for this or a referral for that.”

“I want to concentrate on her.” That should be the right of any parent whose child is seriously ill. But today, because of the abuses of the insurance industry, it is not a right—it is a privilege of the fortunate few.

Whether the issue is diagnostic tests, specialty care, emergency room care, access to clinical trials, availability of needed drugs, protection of doctors who give patients their best possible advice, or women’s ability to obtain gynecological services—too often, in all these cases, HMOs and managed care plans make the company’s bottom line more important than the patient’s vital signs. These abuses should have no place in American medicine. Every doctor and every patient knows it. And in their hearts, every Member of Congress knows it.

Almost 11 months ago, the House of Representatives passed the bipartisan Norwood-Dingell bill to end these abuses. It is endorsed by 300 groups of doctors, nurses, patients, and advocates for women, children, and families. It is supported by virtually every medical group in this country. It passed by an overwhelming bipartisan majority. It should have sailed through the Senate of the United States. But it continues to languish because the Republican leadership continues to put a higher priority on protecting industry profits than on protecting patients.

We are not yet to successful passage. On June 8th, the Norwood-Dingell bill fell just one vote short of passage in the full Senate. It was supported by every Democratic Senator—and only four Republican Senators.

The Administration has put a solid program on the table for the consideration of Congress—and their program is not adequate and is not Medicare. It is not supported by virtually every Member of Congress knows it.

The American people deserve action before this Congress ends. Every day we delay, more patients suffer. The Patients’ Bill of Rights is one of the most important issues facing this Congress—facing every family, too. There is no question where Vice-President Al Gore stands. If Governor Bush today, as all these cases, HMOs and managed care plans make the company’s bottom line more important than the patient’s vital signs. These abuses should have no place in American medicine. Every doctor and every patient knows it. And in their hearts, every Member of Congress knows it.

The Administration has put a solid program on the table for the consideration of Congress—and their program is not adequate and is not Medicare. It is not supported by virtually every Member of Congress knows it.

The older they are, the more likely they are to be in poor health, and the more likely they are to have very limited income to meet their health needs. Fewer than half of this group are more and more senior citizens are being left out and left behind. The vast majority of the elderly are of moderate means. They cannot possibly afford to purchase the prescription drugs they need if serious illness strikes.

The older they are, the more likely they are to be in poor health, and the more likely they are to have very limited income to meet their health needs. Fewer than half of this group are more and more senior citizens are being left out and left behind. The vast majority of the elderly are of moderate means. They cannot possibly afford to purchase the prescription drugs they need if serious illness strikes.

The Administration has put a solid program on the table for the consideration of Congress—and their program is not adequate and is not Medicare. It is not supported by virtually every Member of Congress knows it.

The older they are, the more likely they are to be in poor health, and the more likely they are to have very limited income to meet their health needs. Fewer than half of this group are more and more senior citizens are being left out and left behind. The vast majority of the elderly are of moderate means. They cannot possibly afford to purchase the prescription drugs they need if serious illness strikes.

The older they are, the more likely they are to be in poor health, and the more likely they are to have very limited income to meet their health needs. Fewer than half of this group are more and more senior citizens are being left out and left behind. The vast majority of the elderly are of moderate means. They cannot possibly afford to purchase the prescription drugs they need if serious illness strikes.
low income senior citizens. Senior citizens want Medicare, not welfare, and they deserve Medicare, not welfare.

When the Bush plan finally becomes available to all seniors, it does not provide a real Medicare benefit—or any other adequate benefit. Instead, it gives senior citizens what is, in effect, a voucher—and it tells them to go out and buy their own coverage from a private insurance company. If the price is too high in the area in which they live, they are out of luck. If the drug company's list of approved drugs does not include the medicine they need, their only recourse is a time-consuming appeal. There is no defined benefit—senior citizens are not even guaranteed the same coverage in Missouri that they would get in Mississippi. It is all up to the insurance company.

The nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office has estimated that under the similar Republican plan passed by the House of Representatives, benefits would be so inadequate and costs so high that less than half of the senior citizens who need help the most—those who have no prescription drug coverage today—will even participate.

A prescription drug benefit that leaves out half of the senior citizens who need protection the most is not a serious plan to help senior citizens.

It is ironic that in offering this inadequate plan, Mr. Bush has criticized Vice President Gore for a "big-government, one-size-fits-all" solution. The Gore plan covers prescription drugs under Medicare in exactly the same way that Medicare covers doctor and hospital costs. Mr. Bush obviously feels this is a one-size-fits-all solution. That is why he has endorsed an extreme restructuring of the Medicare program. He may favor forcing the elderly into HMOs, but that is not what Democrats in Congress support. That’s not what Vice President Gore supports. Most important, that’s not what the American people support.

There is still time for Congress to enact a genuine prescription drug benefit under Medicare. The Administration has presented a strong proposal. Let’s work together to enact it this year. It is not too late. The American people are waiting for an answer.

I am hopeful we will pass that legislation. Again, I am strongly committed, as I believe my colleagues, Senator DASCHLE and others are, to ensure we will have an opportunity to vote on that measure before we adjourn.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

TO AUTHORIZE EXTENSION OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT TO THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—MOTION TO PROCEED—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we started earlier today the initial discussion of what I call the China trade bill. The Senate by law ratifying the agreement that has been worked out by this administration and the Government of China to level the playing field for trade between the United States and China.

In a simple form, the bill before us will give access for U.S. exporters—meaning manufacturing, services and agriculture—to China on the same basis that China has had access to our markets for the last 30 years.

When you have an opportunity for our people to export to China, to sell to China, on the same basis that China has been able to do with the United States, it is a win-win situation. My Midwestern common sense tells me this is a good situation for America. So that debate has started today.

We are on the question of the motion to proceed. I support this motion. I hope we get to a final vote on the bill, because I think it will pass by an overwhelming margin, not the very narrow margin that it passed in the House of Representatives. This will give us an enhanced opportunity to do business with 20 percent of the world's population.

There are many reasons I support this bill, which is probably one of the most important matters to come before the Senate this session. But today, I would like to address just two reasons. The first is that it provides a very positive aspect to this legislation. The second is human rights, which some people view as a reason for being against this legislation. I suggest to you that even though the human rights situation in China is not good, trade gives us an opportunity to improve that human rights situation.

In each case, I want to address concerns of real people in a commonsense way. Too often, we talk about major policy changes, we do so in lofty terms, not connected to the people’s concerns and their interests, and what is important to everyday working Americans.

Today, I would like to talk about how real people will be affected by making it possible for the United States to take advantage of China’s pending accession to the World Trade Organization.

Lowering protectionist tariffs and tearing down trade barriers that discriminate against American products will create many thousands of new American jobs. A new era of free trade with China, under the WTO World Trade Organization disciplines, will help us continue to build the tremendous prosperity that we enjoy as a dividend—a very direct result of the success of our postwar trading system; going back to 1947, as we have used the gradual freeing up of trade around the world to expand the world economic pie. Because of free trade, with a population that is now about double what it was back then, we now have more prosperity for more people. If we had not expanded the world economic pie, we would, in fact, have less for our increased world population. So think in terms of the economic enhancement of individuals and the political stability that comes from it.

In my State of Iowa, we know our economic interdependence with the rest of the world is not a policy choice; it is a fact. Trade means jobs anywhere, but particularly in my State. In just 5 years, Iowa’s merchandise export to China has soared 35 percent.

In the Waterloo-Cedar Falls area—that is close to where I was born, and where I have lived my entire life—recent merchandise sales to China have surged 806 percent. Iowa’s trade-related jobs mean that a young couple can afford their first home. They can afford tuition for school. They can afford to buy a car. They can afford to care for their families. As the way working people want to care for their families.

But unless we seize this moment, this opportunity will pass us by. When China enters the World Trade Organization, which it will do regardless of the outcome of this vote on the Senate floor—and if we do not remove all of our current conditions on trade with China, which this bill does—other countries will reap the rewards of a trade deal that we helped negotiate. America that is now over $200 billion would be forced to sit on the sidelines as companies from the European Union or Asia or Africa or elsewhere take our business and ultimately take our jobs because we have not assumed this opportunity of greener trade with China.

If we pass up this opportunity, America will be at the end of the line of the 137 other WTO countries, that will be standing in front of us, trading with China.

I want to give my colleagues two real-life examples from my State of Iowa.

Tucker Manufacturing Company is a family-owned business in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, that has developed a unique win-win solution to the challenge of doing business in China. They would like to see China open its markets to American companies.

Tucker Tucker Manufacturing Company is a family-owned business in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, that has developed a unique win-win solution to the challenge of doing business in China. They would like to see China open its markets to American companies.