Eighty-two billion dollars of deficit that Americans are going to have to pay for, my children are going to have to pay for, my grandchildren are going to have to pay for; and we do not even have the courage to put the bill on the floor, but this rule ruse is what we are confronted with.

Vote no on the previous question. Vote no on the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there are any rubber stamps in that package.

Mr. Speaker, in this short time, it is 4:34, daylight, we will have an opportunity to have our colleagues come in, and they are going to vote yes and they will do a tax cut that varies on the All-American Tax Relief Act of 2003, or they will vote no and say all those press releases I put out last week wanting to move expeditiously on this, they do not really matter because now it is before us.

Well, it is here. And I must say both the chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), and others from the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Rules found a solution to meet what seemed to be Republican and Democrats wanting to expedite this bill. And so we took the House resolution with a Senate amendment. The Senate amendment we have disposed with, the House coming back quickly with the amendments to go to the other body. And it is going to be done today. It is not going to be done tomorrow. It is not going to be done next week. We have an opportunity to do it right now.

And while we are listening to all of this, some of them on procedure, I just want to remind the esteemed whip that I think we have been debating the merits of this bill for an hour; and some agree, some do not. Pretty soon we will put it up, 4:35, and take a look at how it ends. But I want to remind my colleagues that this bill, as amended, and sent back to the Senate will increase the child credit for $1,000 for an eligible child through 2010; not for some slick promise of 2003 and 2004, and then it slides back after the next election. It is straightforward, straight up, right until 2010. It eliminates the marriage penalty on child credit. It accelerates the increase in the refundable child credit. It provides tax relief and enhances tax fairness for members of the Armed Forces. It suspends the tax-exempt status of designated terrorist organizations and provides tax relief for astronauts who die on space missions.

Those pieces of legislation, as they were before us or the other body, have been dealt with in the last several months and years by this body or the other body. So when we get done here with this debate, we are going to have an opportunity, yes or no. If you vote yes, you are going to give America that tax cut. If not, you are going to find some way to wrangle out of it with a press release. But what I heard was everybody wanted to get underway and make this happen. The Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Rules is giving this honorable body that action today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWEENEY). The Chair will inform Members that the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) has 3½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL).

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would remind the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) here that I am a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and we did not have any markup. We did not have any opportunity to debate this bill in committee.

We call it the All-American Tax Relief Act. It is red, white and blue. And you say to yourself, who could possibly object? I object. And I object on behalf of those 200,000 military families who are ineligible for this enhanced child tax credit, even though they served honorably in Iraq and Afghanistan and other combat zones. They apparently are not all-American enough to qualify for this bill. That provision is missing from the House All-American Tax Relief Act.

You might have noticed that the refundable tax credit has no revenue impact this year under the House bill but does so under the Senate bill. How could it be that the stars-and-stripes House bill provides no relief this year? That is because the all-American bill rejects the notion that low-income families deserve immediate relief as every other American family will get in the next 6 weeks.

Low-income families must wait for their checks until next year, and, of course, those serving in a combat zone, they can wait forever. Reject this bill. It is unpatriotic.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, one of our esteemed colleagues on the other side of the aisle is very fond of beginning his speeches by saying that nothing underscores more the difference between our two parties than whatever we are debating that day. And I happen to agree with him on this issue, Mr. Speaker.

I have only been here for 4 months, and I have heard a lot of debate in this Chamber, but I say this very candidly: My party would not have reached into the pockets of hardworking Americans to get to a $350 billion cutoff number. My party would not leave veterans out of a package that purports to help people. And my party would not have to depend on a procedural maneuver to get votes to pass a tax credit for working families.

There are very fundamental differences between our parties and they are very much on display today. I urge all of my colleagues in this Chamber to understand that the very people who are steamrolling this particular bill through this Chamber today in the form of a rule vowed to kill it just several days ago. That would be very powerful proof if we had a jury and we had a trial here.

The very people that are pushing this measure today vowed several days ago that it would not be.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, if the ranking member would consider, I have one speaker to close. And if he would like to close, then I will do that and yield to the majority leader. If he has more speakers, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I have one speaker and then I will close.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) for yielding me time and for the magnificent way that he has managed this rule today.

Little did we know when we were discussing this issue of an expansion of a tax credit for working families in our country and for the children of our military men and women, that it would be a bill that would be managed by the Committee on Rules. Little did we know that a bill of the magnitude of $82 billion would be something that would be unveiled on Tuesday night, not go to committee for review; when it went to the Committee on Rules yesterday, to not have the leadership, the author of the bill, present to defend it. And now we know why. Because they never intended to have a rule to bring the bill to the floor.

So frightened of debate on this issue are the Republicans, so frightened of the outcome that their own Members could not support this outrage that they are putting forth today, that they had to hide their ill will towards America's children behind a procedural vote to command the loyalty of the Republicans on a procedural vote while they knew they could not hold them on the substance of their bill. But that is the reality of it. And so we have to use the opportunities under this rule, as limited as it is, to point out what is so very, very wrong about what is going on on the floor of the House today.

Let us talk about the children. President Kennedy said that children are our greatest resources and our best hope for the future. A beautiful statement. One I am sure that we would all agree with. He did not say children of those making over a certain level of income in our country are our greatest resources, and if their parents do not serve in the military, they are our best hope for the future. But that is what this rule says today.

We had an opportunity in this body to expand the tax credit for children of working families and of military families by simply calling from the desk the Senate bill. It is right there at the desk. We could take it up by unanimous consent. The distinguished majority leader is here. We could agree to take it up by unanimous consent. It would be passed unanimously. It would be on the President's desk within the hour, signed into law, and all of the children that we are talking about, children of our men and women in uniform, children of families making between $10,000 and $26,000 would get the tax credit expansion this year.

No matter what the Republicans want to say about their proposal, it sabotages that good intention. There is no way with the proposal that they are putting forth, costing $82 billion unpaid for, indebting the same children they purport to care about, indebting those same children to the tune of $82 billion, granting with one hand but not granting to all children, and not granting this year but taking away with the other for a long time to come, burying our children in a mountain of debt heaped onto the debt incurred by their previous tax legislation, and depriving the children of the Federal initiatives to invest in their education, in their health, in their well-being, in their future, and in the future of our country.

The Republicans insist on doing this even though the opportunity that I said earlier exists. And why? One would have to suspect that they do not want to have a tax credit for the children of America's military and the children of working families between the income of $10,000 and $26,000, certainly not this year.

Even though we cannot take up a full consideration of the bill or, heaven forbid, a substitute to it, indeed even the Senate bill which passed 94 to 2, a bipartisan piece of legislation, approved by the President, even though we cannot do it and we cannot have that discussion, it is important to note several facts.

One is the families that we are talking about here, working full time, working full time, many of those families make in a year less than Members of Congress do in 1 month; and yet Members of Congress, their children will receive the expansion of the tax credit this year; but no, no, no, if you make $10,000 to $26,000, I am sorry, children, you are out of luck. The Republicans give new meaning to the biblical phrase, ''Suffer little children.''

The other point to make is about the military. In the military, it is important to note that combat pay does not count toward consideration of the children's tax credit. Under current law, and this is important to note, under current law an E–5 or an E–6 sergeant with 6 years of service and two children would not be entitled to the full tax credit if he is in combat. So the minute that sergeant went to Iraq, if he stayed there for 6 months, his combat pay would not count toward his income for tax purposes, and so his children would not receive the tax credit expansion. This is not corrected in the Republican bill. The Senate bill helps these military families. The House bill does not.

It is important also to know that this legislation really is suspected as one that would kill the expansion of the tax credit. The Senators have said that they will not support the package if it is not paid for. They certainly have made it clear that they are not going to add $82 billion, $82 billion to the deficit, to the debt.

The issue before the House is clear. We can pass a fiscally responsible tax credit bill that helps 12 million children, including 250,000 children from military families, or we can indebt them for future generations. We can invest in our children, or we can indebt them. That is the choice that the Republicans have put before us.

Mr. Speaker, when I referenced the comments of President Kennedy, it was with the hope that we would agree in a bipartisan way in this body that when we say children are our greatest resource and our best hope for the future, that we are talking about all of the children in our country. We all want the best for our children. Many of us are privileged. I have five children, five grandchildren. I want the best for them, but they cannot have the best opportunity unless every child in America has opportunity. The Senate bill would enable that. The House bill does not.

I urge my colleagues to vote ''no'' on the rule and, in doing so, to support the value that we place on our children as our messengers to a future we will never see but that we want them to take forward a message of respect for all children in our country.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, just to clarify, does the gentleman——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, am I to be recognized?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWEENEY). The gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) has 3½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if I can be recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) is recognized.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

As I listened here, I kind of got the same confusion of when I listened to some of my colleagues on the debate when we just did some tax relief not long ago. Class warfare, this is all for the rich. I reminded my colleagues that I come from kind of a small town in upstate New York, and the debate occurred with my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) from Harlem, and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST), the ranking member of the Committee on Rules from Grand Prairie. None of them are really rich communities, and I cited that the tax bill the House Republicans moved forward on the floor after the adoption of the rule and then later passed took a family of four to make 40,000 bucks in my district and took their tax relief from $1,785 they had to pay down to about $40. I think that is real tax relief. I do not think $40,000 is rich.

When I look at the legislation, I watch the press releases all over America say let us get on with it. We are on with it. Today we are either going to vote ''yes,'' and I think it is going to be bipartisan, we are going to vote ''yes'' and send it to the Senate, or we are going to vote ''no.''

But I want to remind some of my colleagues when we get the light of day on this tax bill that was sent to us by the Senate there a couple of things we might have made an improvement on as House Republicans because my colleagues on the other side of the aisle might argue that the Republican tax relief plans rob Peter to pay Paul, in other words, tax cuts for the rich. However, the Senate proposed offsets, Customs user fee extensions. I would argue this is robbing Peter to pay Paul because if you are raising taxes on those who actually pay them in order to subsidize tax refunds for those who share in no income tax liability whatsoever, it is fiscally and fundamentally unsound.

The only proven way to restrict government spending is to reduce revenues. Tightening the purse strings by providing much needed tax relief is the only way to get money back to hardworking Americans, no matter how wealthy or poor they are. Get it out of Washington and back in the pockets of American taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time.

Mr. Speaker, Republicans face a choice. They can do the right thing by passing the Senate bill, giving 12 million children and their working families immediate tax relief, or they can do the wrong thing by continuing to explode the deficit with a bill that the other body will never accept.

I urge Members to do the right thing and vote ''no'' on the previous question. Do the right thing for working families. Do the right thing for military families. It is not hard. Just do the right thing. If the Republicans tried it, Mr. Speaker, they might find they actually liked it. Come on in, Democrats say, the water is just fine; the water is warm.

If the previous question is defeated, we will immediately take from the Speaker's table H.R. 1307 and H.R. 1308, the Senate-passed version of the Armed Forces Tax Fairness bill and the child tax credit. This House will pass them unanimously and send them to the President for his signature. This is it. No games, no delay. Just immediate tax relief for working and military families that is completely paid for.

Mr. Speaker, these bills are at the Speaker's table. What is the choice? Do Republicans want to pass the bills, or do they want to kill the bills? Will they ever choose the right thing? Democrats await their answers. Vote ''no'' on the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment be printed in the RECORD immediately before the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This vote is actually quite simple. A ''yes'' vote means greater fairness in the Tax Code and a mere tax relief for American workers families and children. A ''no'' vote stops that relief from moving forward and hurts the very people I know many of my colleagues eagerly want to assist.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting ''yes'' on this resolution at the end of the debate.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, this is a big one. This bill really crystallizes the differences between the two parties, and the American people should know exactly what is going on here today.

We are here to answer one question, do you support a $1,000 child tax credit, or do you not support it? This bill that we are debating here today provides $80 billion in tax relief and $77 billion of it extends the life of the child tax credit instead of cutting it off in 2004.

At the end of this vote, the American people will see that the Republican Party believes in helping families through the child tax credit and the Democrat Party does not. The record up to now is very clear. In 2001, a Republican Congress and a Republican President doubled the child tax credit to $1,000, and the Democrats voted ''no.'' Just a few weeks ago, the President's jobs and growth package expanded the child tax credit and took 3 million low-income Americans off the tax roles altogether, and once again, the Democrats voted ''no.''

Now our critics said it was too big. Then they turned right around and demanded that we make it bigger. You said working Americans needed additional tax relief, and you know what, the Republicans could not agree more with you.

Consider a single mother of two earning $20,000 a year. Under the Clinton tax hike of 1993, her total tax bill, including income tax, payroll tax, local taxes, State taxes and the sales tax was more than $800. Now, after the Bush tax relief of 2001, that same single mother's total tax bill shrunk to less than $100, and under the President's jobs and growth package we just passed, that same single mother's total tax bill is now zero, and in fact, she now gets additional money from the American people because of tax relief that the Republicans passed, and all along the Democrats voted ''no.''

Under the bill we pass today, not only will that same single mother pay no taxes, but she will get more than $400 in additional help from the American people; and yet if this debate is any indication at all, you will still vote ''no.''

Our critics talk a very good game, but this is their chance to put their money where their mouth is. I will ask again, are you for a $1,000 child tax credit, or are you against it?

This bill is real simple, Mr. Speaker. It extends the life of the child tax credit. It provides additional help for lower-income families, and it eliminates the marriage penalty. It includes, by the way, tax relief for military families, which you all have been calling for, and revokes the tax-exempt status of terrorist organizations.

Finally, it will provide tax relief for the families of astronauts who lose their lives in the service of their Nation in space like the Columbia 7. This is a pretty important point, especially for me. Members from Florida and Texas, whose constituents include astronauts and members of the NASA family, have a clear choice to make. Will they cast their votes with their courageous constituents or with the empty promises of the obstructionists? How can Members from Texas and Florida, how can any Member, oppose this piece of legislation?

In this bill, we have given our critics everything that they have said they wanted to help lower-income Americans, and now with the whole world watching and the credibility of the Democratic Party on the line, are you for a $1,000 child tax credit, or are you against it?

In just a few moments we will once again see which party stands up for the cameras and which party stands up for working families.

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the issue today is fixing a mistake of the last round of tax cuts: the inherent bias of the Child Tax Credit. Although the Child Tax Credit was a great victory for the families of America, it was not perfect. It created an inequality between the poor and rich by excluding 6 million members of the working class from the tax breaks.

Recognizing this error, the Senate, with support of the President, passed a bill correcting this inequality. This bill extends the tax breaks to those 6 million previously left out, while also providing an effective way of paying for the breaks. It solves the problem facing us while also being fiscally responsible.

By accepting the Senate's bill, the House could get the legislation quickly on the President's desk, expediting financial aid to those who most need it. If only it was that easy. Instead of moving to accept this legislation, the House Leadership has seized this opportunity to further their cause of additional tax relief for the wealthy. They have taken this bill and manipulated it into a tax cut with an $82 billion price tag, which will further contribute to the exponential rise of our nation's debt. Additionally, in a rarely used political maneuver, they have attached this bill to a vote upon the rule governing consideration, not the measure itself.

I urge this House to stop these political games, defeat the rule and address equity in the Child Tax Credit by passing the measure agreed to by the Senate and President Bush.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, it is appalling that a substantive vote on H.R. 1308 has been denied. The use of a self-executing rule has transformed the House action into a procedural vote guaranteeing its passage while denying any kind of fair fight on the spending of nearly $80 billion additional dollars.

The bill before us today says more about our long-term priorities than about helping the lower income families and children left out of the recently enacted tax cut. Apparently, based on the actions of the Republican leadership, there is not enough money for hard-working, low-income people, but there is money to help people who are much better off. The gist of the tax credit debate these last two weeks has been about the lesser tax credit offered to families that make between $10,500 and $26,625 per year. Providing these families with the same child tax credit as families making up to $110,000 per year would cost $3.5 billion.

Today, we are debating a bill with a price tag of $82 billion. This comes on the heels of new projections that our budget deficit this year will surpass $400 billion, far exceeding any other one year budget shortfall in history. Many economists are projecting a 2004 budget deficit on one half of a trillion dollars. The exploding deficit will, in this year alone, add about $16 billion in extra interest payments, which simply reduces funding available to other needed programs.

All the groups that care deeply about children and poor people are appalled by this bill, and will be left to hope that the Senate has the good sense to resist it. If this bill succeeds it will accelerate the pace of reauthorizing these proposals, eliminating the sunsets and making them permanent leading to even more dramatic budget shortages. These deficits will squeeze out funding for necessary programs and establish the principle that we are not going to help those that are struggling in this depressed economy.

The Republican leadership is spending 6 times as much to give the tax credit to the top 10 percent of the population as they are to extend the benefit to the modest income families they left out. For about the same cost as giving it to the most well off, they could extend coverage to those making as little as $7,500 per year. It's all about priorities.

I do not share these priorities. I only wish there would have been a chance to vote against their proposal.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to H.R. 1308, the ''Only If you Make Enough Money'' All American Tax Relief Act of 2003.

In the Federalist Papers, Alexander Hamilton writes, ''I know that powerful individuals, in this and in other States, are enemies to a general government in every possible shape.'' Perhaps Hamilton had the current Republican Caucus in mind when he issued this warning more than 225 years ago. Clearly, the bill that this body is considering today is an example of power, ignorance, and plain and simple greed.

When the President signed into law the most recent tax cut, he signed a flawed bill. It was flawed when it first passed the House and it was flawed when the Conference Report was approved. Honestly, Mr. Speaker, I'm not surprised. As in so many other instances, during the still of the night—when the majority of Americans had already gone to bed—House Republicans cut a deal with Senate Republicans and rushed to complete a tax cut requested by an over zealous President.

As America has had a chance to sift through the most recent tax cut, it has become clear that the Republican Majority passed a bill which neglects more than 12 million children who are growing up in low-income families and the ability for their parents to benefit from the expansion of the child tax credit. Even worse, when provided with an opportunity to fix what is wrong with the initial bill—in a non-controversial manner and at a relatively inexpensive cost—the Republican Majority has proven that it is more interested in scoring political points with the rich at the expense of America's children.

Now, I'd like to give the Majority the benefit of the doubt and believe that the exclusion of families making between $10,500 and $26,625 was a simple oversight. However, after examining the bill that the House is considering today, as well as the reluctance at which the Majority is bringing it to the floor, it is increasingly clear that the ''oversight'' Republicans made in the most recent tax bill was anything but an oversight. Instead, it was a concerted effort to avoid extending the credit to all families, rich and poor, to save offset room for an international business tax bill that the Majority Leader and Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee have each indicated is a priority.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I can think of no greater priority than helping America's children and neediest families. This bill does little of the sort.

The Majority may try and sell this bill to the American public as one that helps those who need it most, but the truth remains that the bill is filled with tax cuts that benefit the wealthy more than six times as much as they do the needy. This is a tax cut that further drives our country into debt and deficit spending, and it lacks even the slightest bit of fiscal responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I've often been referred to as a ''tax and spend liberal.'' Well, I'm liberal and I'm proud of it. Frankly, I don't mind spending our tax dollars on government programs that, one, help people, and two, can be paid for through honest fiscal policy and, to the extent possible, balanced budgets. On the contrary, perhaps it might be best to describe the Majority as a bunch of ''cut and charge conservatives.'' The key difference between them and us is that Democrats pay up front for the government programs we support, whereas Republicans pay for their priorities on credit cards and leave the debt for future Democratic Majorities to pay off. This bill further runs up America's charge account for generations to come.

I urge my colleagues to reject this bill and join America's children and call on the Republican Majority to bring the Senate passed child tax credit bill to the floor for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate, but H.R. 1308 is a new $82 billion tax cut package that simply is too large. The House-passed version of H.R. 1308 will add to the already unprecedented national debt that future generations will face. Apparently, the Senate last week initially considered a proposal similar to the House-passed version of H.R. 1380 during its negotiations on child tax credit legislation, but the Senate rejected this proposal out of hand because of the effect it would have in worsening the deficit.

Furthermore, while the focus of debate has been on the extension of the child tax credit, only a tiny fraction, about 4 percent, of the $82 billion tax cut amount—$3.5 billion—goes toward extending the child tax credit for the estimated 12 million children who were left out of the previously enacted tax cut legislation. It is also unfortunate that over two-thirds of the House-passed version for child tax credit benefits will go to many higher-income families through an increase in the income level from $110,000 to $150,000 at which the child tax credit begins to phase down for married families. This would make married families in the $110,000–150,000 income range, who now receive a partial child tax credit, eligible for a full credit. It also extends a partial tax credit to many families in the $150,000–$200,000 range or, in the case of families with more than two children, to some families with incomes exceeding $200,000. The extension of the credit to these higher-income families would cost $20.4 billion through 2010 under the House-passed bill. While the Senate-passed child tax credit bill has a similar provision, it costs only $4.8 billion because the Senate provision would not begin to phase in until 2008 and would not take full effect until 2010.

Mr. Speaker, therefore, what is at stake is more than a simple extension of the child tax credit, instead what is at stake is whether or not many of the major tax cuts already passed will be extended beyond their sunsets and whether new additional tax cuts will be passed to further add to our deficit without the costs being offset. This Member believes that if this happens then our nation's long-term fiscal status is destined to markedly decline. Furthermore, this Member has been an outspoken critic that the original tax cut proposal from the Administration was too large, and this Member continues to believe that unless we take a more fiscally responsible course of tax cuts, then we will simply be passing a greater mountain of debt of our nation's children and their children. This Member also believes that such fiscally irresponsible tax cuts will increase the pressure to make even more draconian cuts in our Federal programs—beyond what is considered to be the necessary cuts to eliminate waste, fraud and abuse in such programs.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Republican Tax Cut bill, H.R. 1308, and in strong support of the Democrat's Child Credit package passed in the Senate.

I stand today in solidarity with my Democratic colleagues to stop the attack on America's children and families. The Democrats have proposed a clean child tax credit bill that will provide relief to millions of America's children and families. The Republicans are trying to bog our bill down with unnecessary provisions. America's children are our number one priority. I don't understand why the Republicans continue to put our children at risk.

The America we believe in is one of fairness. The Republican tax cuts have failed to live up to that test. At the expense of America's children they chose to give tax breaks to the wealthiest Americans. In fact, an advocacy group study found that under the Republicans' plan, a million children of active-duty military families and military veterans would not get tax relief. That is wrong and we must do better.

The Democrats have given the Republicans a means of reversing their damaging tax cut and helping America's children. If they chose to take up the Senate legislation, House Republicans could get 6.5 million hard working families child tax credit checks this year. This would provide America's working class families with the same breaks as families with higher incomes. Some of these families work full-time at the minimum wage and still make less than $11,000 per year.

The Republican's bill contains is damaging to the families and children of our brave men and women in uniform. Under current law, an E–5 or E–6 sergeant with 6 years of service and 2 children is paid $29,000 a year. If he did not serve in combat, both of his children would be entitled to the full $1,000 tax credit; but if he goes to combat for 6 months his credit would drop to approximately $450 under the House bill. The Senate bill helps these military families, the House bill does not.

Republicans are exploiting the child tax credit provision in order to pass even more tax cuts that will burden America's children with insurmountable debt for years to come. This was all done in order to make room for a dividend tax cut target to the wealthy few. It is time for House Republicans to right this wrong, stop playing politics, and pass the Senate bill.

Strengthening our nation means investing in all of our children. Further, the Republican decision to delay the increase of the child tax credit disproportionately harms military families and black and Hispanic families. Experts estimate that 260,000 children—or one in five—from families of active military will lose some of the child credit because of the Republican's decision to drop the Lincoln provision. It also disproportionately penalizes black and Hispanic children. Minority children, including 2.4 million black children, and 4.1 million Hispanic children will be left in the cold by the Republican plan.

The Senate Bill is the Way to Strengthen the Economy. The Democrat's plan is preferable because it puts money in the hands of working Americans by keeping our fiscal house in order can we create jobs and build a strong economy.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I support the bill passed by the Senate and say shame on the supporters of H.R. 1308, who insist on doing harm to America's children.

Mr. MEEKS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I stand here today to discuss real intentions. The real intentions of the majority party to continue its careless actions that further devastate a suffering economy, that further diminish the opportunities of working and military families to care for their loved ones, and that further helps the rich become richer and the poor become poorer.

My colleagues, last month's $350 billion tax-cut package that passed was not really about stimulating the economy, but instead it was about borrowing nearly a trillion dollars to engineer a permanent shift in the tax burden away from the very wealthy, and a permanent reduction in federal revenues. If the tax bill's real intention was to stimulate the economy, those 12 million checks of up to $400 would have been first in, not first out, of the legislation. Again, the real intentions of the majority came to light—to provide relief for upper-income taxpayers. These real intentions are best seen in H. Res. 270, which provides low-income families with a child tax credit, but only if higher-income families are also eligible.

The intentions of the majority have caused many upper-income taxpayers to pay attention to what is currently happening and they send a thank you to those who support this shady legislation. They want to say:

Thank you for borrowing another $82 billion at a time when the federal deficit has exceeded $400 billion for 2003 and approaches $500 billion for 2004, adding billions of dollars in ''debt tax'' onto the backs of the very families that need this assistance the most.

Thank you for making a compromise between the two parties so hard to reach, for you are only further preventing discussion of a real prescription drug benefit and the rising percentage of unemployed people across this great nation.

Thank you for ignoring the agreement reached in the Senate, you are only further keeping Congress from focusing on other important issues such as the 41 million uninsured people in this nation.

Thank you for the corporate welfare to criminal enterprises like MCI Worldcom who stole the retirement savings of more than 1 million pension holders in New York State. These pension holders were victimized by MCI Worldcom's fraud and now see MCI abusing Sec. 108 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 in order to avoid paying about $4 billion in future taxes because of its past criminal behavior.

Finally, thank you for the deceptive games being played, we truly see how as a majority party how careless and clueless you are about what it takes to restart this economy and support needy families throughout this nation.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the All-American Tax Relief Act of 2003. This is a balanced approach to extending tax relief to America's families.

This tax package not only gives relief to American families that need a helping hand, but it also provides fair tax relief to military families and young married couples.

Tax relief to military families, Mr. Speaker, who sacrifice so much to protect and contribute to our American way of life.

Tax relief to young married couples, Mr. Speaker, who are just starting out and building a family of their own.

We have heard the Democrats all day say that Republicans are giving more tax breaks to the rich . . . Well I don't know about you, Mr. Speaker, but I don't know too many military families or young married couples that I would call rich.

Two weeks ago, the Democrats said we were providing too much tax relief to American families, then last week the Democrats said we were not giving enough tax relief to American families, and, as we have heard here time and time again today, the Democrats now say we are once again giving too much tax relief to American families.

I say to my friends across the aisle, which is it?

I also say to my friends across the aisle, stop playing politics with the American people's money.

The All-American Tax Relief Act of 2003 is a balanced approach to providing tax relief to families with children. Every parent knows there is always another pair of sneakers to buy, or another text book or calculator to buy and this bill gives parents more of the money they earn to spend it on the needs they have.

This bill brings long overdue tax fairness to America's military families.

No longer will the surviving family members of soldiers that lost their lives protecting this country have to be taxed for the money they receive for their loved ones' sacrifice.

No longer will military families be taxed on assistance they receive when their home values drop because Congress closes bases.

No longer, Mr. Speaker, will our military Reservists be prevented from deducting travel expenses incurred by serving this country.

The All-American Tax Relief Act of 2003 does just what it says; it provides balanced tax relief to all of America's families.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill and I urge the Democrats to stop listening to their pollsters and start listening to the many Americans that not only want, but need tax relief. This is not an issue to play politics with; this is an issue to provide leadership on.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 1308, a measure brought to the floor by House Republican leadership with little intention of truly helping America's working families.

On June 9, I sponsored important bipartisan legislation that would help each and every parent pay their bills during this time of financial uncertainty. My bill, H.R. 2392, would restore the child tax credit to working families; it is the House version of a bill passed by the Senate last week, on a vote of 94–2, supported by our Senators ROBERTS and BROWNBACK.

If the House passes my bill without amendment, it would immediately go to the President for his signature. President Bush has asked Congress to act on this bill now.

My bill would fully restore those provisions of the President's tax cut that were stripped out by the House leadership in order to make room for a larger dividend and capital gains tax cut.

This bill would restore the child tax credit to the families of over 12 million children nationwide, 1 million of whom have parents serving in the military. In Kansas, this bill would assist over 162,000 children and their families who have received this credit since 1997—a credit which was taken from them by the leadership in the House.

These families earn between $10,500 and $26,625 per year. They work hard to raise their children—and helping hard-working families make ends meet and raise their kids is the goal of the child tax credit.

This bill is not about welfare. This bill is about helping working families who pay taxes to receive tax relief. This bill is about fairness for all families and children.

My bill is about our priorities; and our priorities reflect our values.

Taking the child tax credit away from hard-working Kansans doesn't represent Kansas values. It wasn't compassionate. It wasn't fair. And it still isn't right.

My bill will help parents struggling to make ends meet. They will use the additional $400-per-child tax cut to buy clothes or shoes or books for their kids—helping their families and providing an immediate boost to our economy at the same time.

The House leadership hopes to appear to be assisting our most needy families when, in fact, their real goal is to kill this bill. Indeed, the Senate has already moved to bring relief and President Bush has called for quick House action on a measure to restore this portion of the child credit. In vote after vote this week, my colleagues and I who support helping working families have given House leaders the opportunity to follow the Senate; heed the President's call; and bring up my bill. They have repeatedly said—and voted—no.

Instead, they have decided to slow and muddy this process by considering a budget-busting bill that will cause a tedious conference committee; thus, serving only a defeat any attempt to bring relief to working families across America.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Thomas proposal costs $82 million and is irresponsibly laden with goodies and extras, in an attempt to slow this process. My alternative offers clean language mirroring the Senate legislation, in accordance with the President's request, and a $10 million paid-for price tag.

This is Washington politics-as-usual at its worst.

I applaud the effort underway to defeat the rule on this bill so that either the Senate bill or Castle-Tanner-Moore can be taken from the desk, considered, passed and immediately sent to the President for enactment.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to consider their values and priorities when voting on this legislation. Passage will slow the process to help alleviate fiscal pressures endured by families across the nation; rejection of the Thomas bill will be a step forward in the flight for hard-working families who need and deserve this support.

The material previously referred to by Mr. FROST is as follows:

PREVIOUS QUESTION TEXT FOR H. RES. 270

Strike all after the resolving clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

''Immediately upon adoption of this resolution the House shall be considered to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1308) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to end certain abusive tax practices, to provide tax relief and simplification, and for other purpose, with Senate amendments thereto, and a single motion that the House concur in each of the Senate amendments shall be considered as pending without intervention of any point of order. The Senate amendments and the motion shall be considered as read. The motion shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to final adoption without intervening motion or demand for division of the question.

''SEC. 2. Immediately after disposition of the bill H.R. 1308 the House shall be considered to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1307) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a special rule for members of the unformed services in determining the exclusion of gain from the sale of a principal residence and to restore the tax exempt status of death gratuity payments to members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes, with Senate amendment thereto, and a motion that the House concur in the Senate amendment shall be considered as pending without intervention of any point of order. The Senate amendment and the motion shall be considered as read. The motion shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to final adoption without intervening motion.''

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for electronic voting, if ordered, on the question of adoption of the resolution.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 225, nays 201, not voting 8, as follows:

□ 1730

MOTION TO GO TO CONFERENCE

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 270, I move to take from the Speaker's table the House amendment to the Senate amendment to the bill (H.R. 1308) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to end certain abusive tax practices, to provide tax relief and simplification, and for other purposes, insist on the House amendment, and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWEENEY). Without objection, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has the opportunity to be recognized for 1 hour debate, and I want to know whether that was included in his request, which I understand from the Parliamentarian the gentleman is entitled to, to discuss this issue.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANGEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I have requested the hour.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I remove my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in the 1 hour time I have, I would indicate to my colleagues that based upon the very lively debate that occurred on the rule, I believe the positions have been completely illuminated, and that when I ask for the previous question, the minority has the right to move the motion to instruct.

Having been given the motion to instruct, I would tell my friends that I can live up to almost all of these provisions and intend to do so, and, therefore, any time that this House takes in debating the motion to instruct will be the time that the minority has on the motion to instruct, because the majority intends to move the previous question and indicates that it does not intend to use any of the time on the motion to instruct, and, therefore, the time at which the House adjourns today will be entirely in the hands of the minority.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, could the Parliamentarian or the Speaker tell me, does the eloquent statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means mean that he did not intend to use the hour of debate that he has?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has moved the previous question.

Is there objection to ordering the previous question?

Mr. RANGEL. No, I made a parliamentary inquiry. I was not objecting to the previous question. I asked whether or not what the gentleman said meant that he did not intend to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House orders the previous question by unanimous consent, that will end debate.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to go to conference.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

The motion was agreed to.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. RANGEL

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANGEL moves that the managers on the part of the House in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 1308 be instructed as follows:

1. The House conferees shall be instructed to include in the conference report the provision of the Senate amendment (not included in the House amendment) that provides immediate payments to taxpayers receiving an additional credit by reason of the bill in the same manner as other taxpayers were entitled to immediate payments under the Jobs and Growth Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2003.

2. The House conferees shall be instructed to include in the conference report the provision of the Senate amendment (not included in the House amendment) that provides families of military personnel serving in Iraq, Afghanistan, and other combat zones a child credit based on the earnings of the individuals serving in the combat zone.

3. The House conferees shall be instructed to include in the conference report all of the other provisions of the Senate amendment and shall not report back a conference report that includes additional tax benefits not offset by other provisions.

4. To the maximum extent possible within the scope of conference, the House conferences shall be instructed to include in the conference report other tax benefits for military personnel and the families of the astronauts who died in the Columbia disaster.

Mr. RANGEL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to instruct be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to rule XXII, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the managers on the part of the House in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the House amendment to the Senate amendment to H.R. 1308 be instructed as follows:

One, the House conferees shall be instructed to include in the conference report the provision of the Senate amendment that is not included in the House amendment that provides immediate payment to taxpayers receiving an additional credit by reason of the bill in the same manner as other taxpayers were entitled to immediate payment under the Jobs and Growth Tax Reconciliation Act of 2003.

Two, the House conferees be instructed to include in the conference report the provision of the Senate amendment, that is not included in the House amendment, that provides families of the military personnel serving in Iraq, Afghanistan, and other combat zones a child credit based on the earnings of the individuals serving in the combat zone.

Three, the House conferees be instructed to include in the conference report all of the other provisions of the Senate amendment and shall report back a conference report that includes additional tax benefits not offset by other provisions.

Four, to the maximum extent possible within the scope of the conference, the House conferees shall be instructed to include in the conference report other tax benefits for military personnel and the families of the astronauts who died in the Columbia disaster.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, working families that make between $10,000 and $26,000 a year were left out of the tax bill that was recently signed by the President. These are people who pay taxes, Mr. Speaker. They pay sales taxes, they pay property taxes, they pay excise taxes, they pay FICA taxes. In fact, many of them pay a greater percentage of their income in taxes than the wealthy people who got the benefits of the recently enacted tax bill.

To correct this oversight, it will cost a modest amount of money, about 1 percent of what it cost in the recent tax bill. We have a Senate bill that corrects this. It is fully paid for. It passed the other body by a vote of 94-to-2. It is supported by the President of the United States. Why are we not taking this bill up? But for the leadership in this House, the Republican leadership, we could have passed this bill tonight.

What this motion says, Mr. Speaker, is that we support the effort of the other body so that we could correct this bill now. This is a vote to help those working families. This is a vote to help the military families. This is a vote to say that we do not want to follow what the Republican leader has said, which is ''This ain't going to happen.'' We want it to happen, and our motion allows it to happen.

I urge my fellow Members to support the effort in the other body, support the President in saying that he would sign this legislation. This is our opportunity to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I just urge my colleagues not to hold low-wage worker families hostage to the notion that we have to do a lot more that is not going to happen in order for them to get the same type of tax relief that was provided to high-income families in the bill that was signed by the President.

This is the right thing for us to do. I urge my colleagues to support the motion to instruct.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, not withstanding the language of the motion to instruct, which says ''I move that,'' and three of the four provisions that say ''The House conferees shall be instructed to,'' is the gentleman from California correct in understanding that the motion to instruct does not in any way bind or dictate to the conferees?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Motions to instruct are not necessarily binding on the conferees.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, if in fact the motion to instruct is not binding, I would tell my friends we are ready to accept this motion. I will reserve my time, and whenever you are ready to move the question for a vote, since it is not binding, we are ready to go.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, point of order. This is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I am on my time. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts now wish to deny me the time that is mine?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend.

Does the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) yield himself time?

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS. As I was saying, since this motion to instruct is not in any way binding on the conferees, the gentleman from California awaits the awarding of the motion to instruct, and it can either be now and we can vote on it, or you can exhaust your time and we can vote on it. The effect is the same.

Therefore, I reserve the balance of my time until they exhaust theirs or move for a vote.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the gentleman from California. I know he is very thick-skinned, so he did not mind. But he had been speaking under the guise of a parliamentary inquiry, and he was not making a parliamentary inquiry, although the parliamentary inquiry made was about a rule which has been in effect ever since he got here, and I was surprised he had forgotten it. But he did not say he was going to use his time. I did want to clarify. Apparently he decided to use his time, but he decided to use his time to tell us he did not plan to use his time.

I think it is somewhat unfortunate that, having shut off debate, having refused to an allow an amendment, he is suggesting that it is somehow improper for Members on our side to talk about the substance. He has said that he will accept the instruction, having made it clear with his usual consideration for other opinions that having accepted it in the vote, he plans to disregard it in the conference.

So we continue to think it is important to point out the difference between what we want to do, provide real help to poor children, and what he plans to do.

□ 1745

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, in the interests of saving time, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 1308 and H.R. 1307, both passed by the Senate, be considered and accepted by the House, and that way we can send the bill immediately to the President and we can get out of here early, without amendment, of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWEENEY). The Chair is unable to entertain that request under the Speaker's guidelines recorded on page 712 of the House Rules and Manual.

Mr. RANGEL. I am sorry. I cannot hear what the Speaker is saying.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker's guidelines for recognition do not allow the Chair to recognize for that request.

Mr. RANGEL. Not for unanimous consent, without objection from the chairman of the distinguished Committee on Ways and Means? He does not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RANGEL. I am correct? I can do it? What is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct that the Chair is unable to entertain that request.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, if I ask for unanimous consent and no one objects, would the Parliamentarian tell me why I cannot be recognized?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker has announced and enforced a policy of conferring recognition for unanimous consent requests for consideration of bills and resolutions only when assured that the majority and minority floor and committee leaderships have no objection.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) does not say anything, Mr. Speaker, then there is no objection. So, I have unanimous consent until such time as he objects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not been apprised of the requisite clearances to entertain such a request.

Mr. RANGEL. Well, could I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means be given an opportunity to instruct the Speaker that he has no objection to accepting the Senate bill as passed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inform the gentleman that that is not a proper unanimous consent request.

Mr. RANGEL. Well, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means knows that we will not allow parliamentary obstacles to move this bill that the Senate has passed in a bipartisan way and that the President has supported it. Now, I know a lot of time and money has gone into building up this $82 billion, but since the distinguished chairman has said that he wants to move this bill swiftly and the initial bill only cost $3.5 billion, if we knock off the $72 billion put on the Senate bill, it would seem to me, even with a little help from the Parliamentarian, that we could expedite this bill by not instructing the conferees to do anything which the chairman already has indicated he does not intend to do but, rather, to just have it pass as is. I do not know why we cannot do this. But I will get the Parliamentarian and get together with the chairman and see what we can do to expedite this.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from the sovereign State of California (Mr. MATSUI), the distinguished senior member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York, the ranking Democrat on the Committee on Ways and Means, for yielding me this time.

I can understand why the majority does not want to debate this issue. Perhaps he wants to catch a plane to California, I do not know. But I can understand why he would not want to debate this issue, given the fact that the President of the United States and the U.S. Senate, on a 94 to 2 vote, basically came up with a bill that was totally different. It basically paid for its tax cuts and, at the same time, it tried to restrict itself basically to the main issue, that is, taking care of families that make between $10,000 and $26,000 a year.

I might just for a moment go back to May 23 when the conference report was passed. As my colleagues know, the big issue on that bill was the dividend reduction and the capital gains tax reduction. At the same time, as we know, that bill also took out from the other body the provision that would have taken care of people that made, families that made between $10,000 and $26,000 a year, a measly tax credit of $150 to $400.

At the same time, what this bill did, Mr. Speaker, it might be kind of interesting to really discuss why there is a lot of concern about this. We looked at the FCC filings of the annual report of Microsoft Corporation. Bill Gates, and this is not anything about Bill Gates, but Bill Gates will get, under the bill that passed, that became law on May 23, $14,538,000; $14 million. Sandy Weill, again, somebody who is a good person, Citicorp, will get $2.7 million.

What is very interesting, what is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, if we would have just taken that $14 million from Bill Gates and given it to families that earn between $10,000 and $26,000 a year, we could have taken care of 52,000 families.

So I can understand why the majority does not want to discuss this; I can understand why they do not want to see this have the light of day, because they are really taking care of people that do not need the money. This will not help the economy of the United States. It is basically just game-playing, and it is really unfortunate that this is happening. This bill will not become law because the other body will ensure it does not become law because it is not paid for. I would have hoped that we would have adopted the other body's legislation.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California, nobody wants to dispute anything we say?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California continues to reserve his time. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. RANGEL. Then Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to the motion. It says in paragraph 3, if the chairman, the distinguished chairman would listen, ''The House conferees shall be instructed to include in the conference report all of the other provisions of the Senate amendment and shall not report back a conference report that would result in increased deficits by reason of additional tax benefits not offset by other provisions.''

We all know that motions to instruct are not technically binding, but I would like to yield to the chairman of the committee to ask him if he will commit verbally on the floor that he will not bring back a conference report that will result in increased deficits by reasons of additional tax benefits not offset by other provisions.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I told the gentleman from the initial introduction, and I am pleased to respond on his time, that three of the four seem to be somewhat reasonable; and my assumption is that as we go to conference, since it is the Senate that has been significantly concerned about the question of offsets, under the budget which was agreed upon by the House and the Senate, there is ample provision for us to move tax bills that are not required to be offset.

Mr. LEVIN. So is the answer, if I could then ask the gentleman, since it is my time, is the gentleman willing to say here on the floor that he will not bring back a conference report that would result in increased deficits by reason of additional tax benefits not offset by other provisions?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, under the budget agreement, the House is entitled to move tax bills that are not offset or are required to modify the deficit. If the Senate brings, if the Senate brings offsets to the conference to cover the House bill, I am more than willing to look at them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LEVIN. He is unwilling to answer, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Well, just a minute. If the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) needs 30 seconds in order to get a response to his question, notwithstanding the fact that the majority is not using their time, I will be glad to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I will wait for the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) to say yes or no.

Mr. THOMAS. The answer is, if the Senate brings offsets, I will be happy to look at them.

Mr. LEVIN. No, but does the gentleman agree that he will not report back a conference report that will result in increased deficits by reason of additional tax benefits not offset by other provisions? Yes or no.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I asked of the Speaker a parliamentary inquiry which said this is not binding, yet the gentleman continues to pursue a yes or no as to whether or not an unbinding statement will bind me. The answer is, and it will be, if the Senate brings offsets, we will look at them.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is making a mockery out of this procedure.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, for my colleagues and the American public that perhaps have not quite figured out what is going on here when we are trying to help working families through a child tax credit, H.R. 1308, I believe, boils down to two things, and probably the best way to describe it is to remind folks about the very common joke we hear about how many people does it take to screw in a light bulb, except in this case, we have to ask how many people and how much money does it take to correct the $3.5 billion omission for working families through a child tax credit. The punch line, as funny as it may sound, is $80 billion, is what we are being told by our colleagues and friends on the other side of the aisle that it takes to correct the $3.5 billion omission: $80 billion.

And if it is not a joke, then it is either a very smart, some might say sneaky, others might say sinister, ploy, to try to sneak in all of these other tax cuts for very wealthy American families into what is a good package for working families, and a lot of our men and women who work in uniform who were left out by this House in the tax cuts under the child tax credit.

It has got to be one of the two. Either it is a real joke on the American people, or it is a very cleverly planned, intentional way of sneaking through $76.5 billion of additional tax cuts that have nothing to do with the working families that we are trying to help.

Now, it would not be so sinister or such a joke if it were not for the fact that our Federal Government is running a $400 billion deficit this year; and next year, we are being told by the White House and by our own congressional budget estimators that we will probably have about a $500 billion deficit next year. And yet, somehow our colleagues on the other side of the aisle believe we can spend an additional $6.5 billion to correct the problem that costs $3.5 billion.

I think it is clear what is going on, and I would urge my colleagues to support this motion to instruct.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps President Bush is wrong about this bill. Perhaps the 94 Members of the Senate who voted on this child tax credit measure are wrong, and perhaps all of the Democrats who have supported relief now, not some day, with reference to the child tax credit are also wrong, that all of us who together have supported meaningful relief that is paid for, that does not add a death tax to future generations of Americans, perhaps all of us are out of line and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), standing there along with his minions who insist on having an approach that is different than that and killing this child tax credit, perhaps they are right.

But I rather expect they are not just right, but far right, extremists and outside of the mainstream of American thinking; that those who work very hard, be they police officers, be they teachers' aids, be they home health care workers, be they the people that empty the bedpans in the nursing homes and do the hard work in our society, that they deserve a chance too. I believe that it is today, with the obedience to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) and his thinking out of the mainstream, that our Republican colleagues have sentenced this child tax credit to death, death by conference committee.

Many Members will remember that death by conference committee was the appropriate execution method used to kill the Patients' Bill of Rights, so people in this country still do not have the rights they need to protect themselves from the giant insurance HMOs that often deny them the health care they need.

Today, by sending this bill to conference, this is an attempt to kill a proposal that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) never wanted this House to consider, and today again rejects.

It means for people in Texas almost 1 in 4 families will not get the child tax credit relief that they deserve. It means 1.3 million, 1,312,000 children, will not have tax relief that they deserve; they will instead be saddled with a giant debt tax as a result of the approach that is being proposed.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some confusion here in the rubber-stamp Congress today.

I will quote from an article in Roll Call this morning which explains to me what happened.

It says that the President invited them all down to the White House, and this is from a senior Republican aide: ''Most people in the GOP leadership think it is inappropriate for the White House to bring our bosses down there to discuss congressional business and then not invite any staff to go with them.'' The aide said, ''Members who attend meetings are frustrated by the exclusion of the staff because it leaves them without aides to jog their memories of the sessions later.''

Now it is clear what has happened. The President said pass the Senate bill. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) had on his mind that he had to find all these legislators in Texas, so he had to call up the home security board and he had to call up the FBI, and he got confused and got down in there and told the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Do anything you want.

Now, here we are coming out here with no debate, and nobody wants to have anybody talk about what the issues here are. They just want to slam another $80 million on this bill, and wind up with what? A dead bill. They know the Senate is going to kill it. They are not as wild and radical as they are. With 74 to 2, this is a conservative Senate; or 94 to 2. I get carried away.

This rubber-stamp Congress is really out of control. They are the gang that cannot shoot straight. They should at least have one meeting on this.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Perhaps if the White House has a shortage of space, it might help if they invite the Members without staff and next week they invite the staff without the Members, and we might function better.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I think that is a good idea.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the article from Roll Call this morning to which I referred earlier.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From Roll Call, June 12. 2003]

HILL AIDES SPURNED

(By Ethan Wallison)

Republican aides on Capitol Hill are incensed over a new White House policy to exclude virtually all Congressional staff from the semi-regular ''bi-cam'' meetings between President Bush and the GOP leadership.

The aides contend that they are being kept out of the meetings even as White House staffers and other senior officials, such as top Congressional lobbyist David Hobbs, continue to sit in.

''It does strike one as a little bit arrogant,'' one senior Senate GOP aide said. But, the aide added, ''I think that's the way some people at the White House think about Congressional staff.''

Noting that the meetings focus on the Congressional agenda, one senior House Republican aide added, ''Most people [in the GOP leadership] think it's inappropriate for [the White House] to bring our bosses down there to discuss Congressional business and then not invite any staff to go with them.''

The aide said Members who attend the meetings are as frustrated by the exclusions as the staff, because it leaves them without aides to help jog their account of the sessions later.

A White House official denied that there are any ''hard and fast rules'' about whether Congressional staff can attend the meetings.

''It comes down to the space that's available in the room and the topics that are being covered,'' the official said, adding that the same factors apply to White House staff.

But Congressional sources said they have been told that the staff directive comes straight from the top and President Bush, who simply wanted less staff in the meetings.

Under the new guidelines, according to these sources, Speaker Dennis Hastert's (R-Ill.) top aide, Scott Palmer, and Lee Rawls, Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist's chief of staff, will be permitted to attend the bi-cam sessions.

The new policy appears to be the upshot of a months-long give-and-take between the White House and the Congressional GOP leadership on the staff issue. Senior Congressional aides said the White House has been seeking ways to pare down the number of aides at the bi-cam meetings, but were finding it difficult to exclude some Capital Hill staff while allowing others to continue to attend.

''The figured they couldn't get away with the half-way approach, so they went all-or-nothing,'' one senior House GOP aide said.

The same aide said the White House has pledged to pare down the number of administration officials and staff at the meetings as well in the weeks ahead. Congressional aides remain skeptical.

One source noted that even Rawls was among the Capitol Hill aides who were kept out of the room Tuesday evening, when the GOP leadership went to the White House to discuss appropriations. (The spending meeting immediately preceded the bi-cam session.)

Rawls made the trip to the White House along with Senate Appropriations Committee Staff Director Jim Morhard and Kevin Fromer, Hastert's policy director.

All three were forced to wait outside the door to the meeting, even though Hobbs and Candida Wolff, Vice President Cheney's legislative affairs director, were allowed to participate.

Neither Rawls nor Palmer responded to phone calls on Wednesday.

To be sure, frustrated Congressional aides acknowledge that the personnel who are allowed into meetings at the White House reflects Bush's sense of what's appropriate.

Some of the meetings in the past have taken place in the White House residence, a more intimate setting that provides less space for visitors, according to a White House official.

But the exclusions have nevertheless fed resentments on Capitol Hill about what some Congressional Republicans believe to be the White House's disregard for Congress' role in shaping the overall agenda.

''It's particularly unhelpful in the same week that [the White House] cut our legs out from under us on the child tax credit,'' one senior House GOP aide said.

And some senior GOP aides contend that the shortage of first-hand accounts has at times had significant practical consequences, such as misunderstandings about deals and other arrangements that were sealed behind closed doors.

''When it comes down to implementing an agreement, it's the staff that has to do that,'' a senior Senate aide said, citing the appropriations process as one area where such miscommunication has been a problem.

''It's just frustrating.''

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I know I sound like Johnny one-note when I get up here talking about the debt and the deficit on everything that seems to come along. But I want to tell the Members this is serious business, what is happening. If Members want to talk about spending, we and this Congress are spending more money now than any Congress in the history of this country. We are spending it every year, beginning next year and into perpetuity, on interest.

The difference between the bill the chairman has and what we tried to do to fix the problem like the Senate did in spending is $3.39 billion additional in spending, because that is what the interest over 10 years is on $80-something billion that is not paid for.

Now, anybody who wants to get into an argument about spending, we are spending ourselves into oblivion. CBO just came out and said that the deficit this year will be $400 billion. They raised it $100 billion in a month. So $400 billion at 4 percent is an additional $16 billion next year just to pay the interest on the operation of this government that has lasted over 200 years.

They sit here and they talk about spending. We are spending this country silly, and they are doing it by borrowing money that we have to pay interest on every year from now on.

Last year we paid or accrued $336 billion in interest, for which nobody gets a job, nobody gets an aircraft carrier, nobody gets health care, nobody gets an education. It is gone. It is payment on past consumption that we either did not have the courage to ask people to pay for, or we did not have the guts to cut the programs that need cutting.

Members want to talk about spending; let us talk about it. Here is $30 billion right now that we can save if Members want to accept what we have done with the motion to recommit.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT), the ranking member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, let me explain to the House how under this Republican bill that we have just passed, compared to the Senate bill, taxes can be raised or child tax credits can be denied to many of our service men and women serving in places like Iraq and Iran and Afghanistan.

Let us take for example an E–6, a staff sergeant with two children who makes $29,000. His family will qualify for the full child tax credit, get this, so long as he stays stateside, in the United States. His pay is $29,000. He has to make more than $10,500 to qualify.

Subtract the 105 from the 29, you get 18.5; multiply it by 15, he is fully qualified for two child tax credits at $1,000 apiece.

Now let us assume that he is assigned to Iraq, Afghanistan, or a combat zone. His pay while he is in a combat zone is tax-exempt. Let us assume he stays there 8 months. That is two-thirds of the year. Two-thirds of his income is therefore tax-exempt. It is not considered to be taxable income. His taxable income, therefore, is about $9,700, less than the $10,500 threshold. As a consequence, for serving in Iraq, serving in Afghanistan, he loses the two child tax credits.

Is this necessary? Absolutely not. The Senate bill avoided this problem. The language was there in the Senate bill. For some reason that has yet to be explained to these service members, much less the whole House. We do not know why it was dropped; we just know it was dropped.

As a consequence, an E–6, an average serviceman or woman serving in a combat zone, will be denied the benefit of these child tax credits that we are giving other people. Perversely, the longer he stays in the combat zone, the less his entitlement to these two child tax credits. That is absolutely outrageous. We should never have passed this bill; but having passed it, we certainly should pass the motion to instruct.

Maybe Members can say the reason we did that is we had to trim back this child tax credit so we could fit it into the overall bill. But this chart right here shows down in the little blue corner how much of the total cost of this bill is committed or required for the refundability of the child tax credit to apply to families making less than $26,000. There it is right there, $3 billion 48 million.

This represents the additional cost of the bill, all the other provisions that were extraneous, and this is the additional interest. It did not have to be done. There was plenty of room. Will somebody please tell us why we are treating our service members in this manner?

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATSON), the distinguished former Ambassador.

Ms. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, just a few minutes ago we had the pleasure and the honor of hosting Specialist POW Shoshana Johnson. Shoshana Johnson was the young woman who we saw worldwide taken captive by the Iraqi military. She served well. She endured, shot through both of her ankles. Once she was freed, they took care of her and flew her home. She has been in the States a few weeks, and agreed to come here so we could pay the most deserving tribute to her.

I want Members to know she has a 2-year-old child. She is a specialist. She will make less than $18,000 this year. She will be denied the child tax credit under the bill that just passed.

These young people who were willing not only to serve their country, but to give their lives and their limbs. I want Members to know she was up there in Rayburn with a cast on her left leg. She was brought in with a wheelchair. She is proud, and did not even realize what she did for her country.

But, Mr. Speaker, if we do not take care of the Shoshana Johnsons and take care of the very wealthy, we are abdicating our values under a democracy. I ask Members to please let us accept the Senate proposal for the child tax credit.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to close the debate on this issue, hoping that perhaps the conferees would have an opportunity to review what has been done by the Senate and what has been done by the House, and to recognize this all started with us trying to help 6.5 million families and 12 million kids.

Why this was dropped by the majority, this provision that was in the Senate bill, I do not know. Why it was so vigorously resisted by the Republican leadership I do not know. Why they continuously referred to giving assistance to hardworking people throughout the United States and our military people as being welfare, I do not know.

Why they do not understand that a stronger America, a productive America, an increase in the purchasing power not just for those who clip coupons but for those who work every day, that have to buy clothes for their kids and pay for prescription drugs and pay rent, these are the things that really spur the economy.

It would just seem to me that somewhere we could find some type of compassion, to say we made a mistake, we left it out. And even for political reasons to be able to say, since the Senate has reached some type of bipartisan agreement, we looked it over, the President wants us to get relief out there as fast as we can; it is $6.5 billion more than we expected, but we will accept it.

What went into the thinking when people said, this is not going to happen? There are a lot of other things that are more important than that. The President can suggest, but he cannot vote. Then all of a sudden someone said, oh, no, we have to find some way politically that we can vote for it but make certain that it never sees the light of day. What can we possibly do to get a positive vote on this but to make certain that the Senate cannot accept it?

I was not privy to what happened, but one thing is clear: That other body knocked down the President's request from a tax cut for $726 billion. When they got finished with that, they knocked down the House tax cut from $550 billion to $350 billion. So it appears as though the Senate is very, very concerned about the size of the deficit.

Now, I know that that does not concern us in the House. I am glad to see the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget that is here, because God knows he picked the wrong time to head the Committee on the Budget. They just threw that away. But things change, and maybe we will see better days.

But if they really wanted to find out what is it that they could do to politically irritate the Senate and to have them reverse themselves on the child credit, some demon could have whispered in their ear, Why don't you increase the deficit more? And they would say, yes, why not double it?

So we would come out in the House with a $20 billion, go to conference and adjust it, and it will be $15 billion. But then they said, but if you do that, you still would have a child credit bill. We want to make certain that when the majority leader says that it is not going to happen, it is not going to happen.

So then they said, Why not increase it to $30 billion, $40 billion, $50 billion, $80 billion? Bingo. The House will accede to the President's request and consider the legislation for giving child tax credits to working people by increasing the deficit by $82 billion. See how they like that.

See how the bleeding hearts like that? You really want to help the working families?

Well, this is what the deal is: We will give the working families a break today, but when it comes time to pay down the deficit, those kids are going to pay and they are going to pay big time. That is the decision that you are leaving to the Senate. It is shameful because I do not doubt the dedication of members of the other party. You just have a different way of looking at government. You really believe that government should be so small that we will reduce the revenue so low that we will starve each and every program that we believe in.

Some of those programs will not go away by legislation. You cannot kill Social Security by privatization. You cannot kill Medicare by vouchers. You cannot kill Medicaid by block grant. But there is one thing, whether you are a bleeding heart, a liberal, a Democrat or a moderate Republican, if the money is not there, then the leader is right, it is not going to happen. And let me tell you, every bit of taxes that we reduce here, that tax comes up somewhere. It comes up when Governors try to say, well, maybe we can fill up the gap, but politically they cannot. They have a limit on how much taxes they can raise, how much money they can borrow. And then it gets down to the cities, and, God knows, I know it. We got a good mayor, trying to do all of the things that the Congress has said in terms of homeland security, but we are closing fire departments, we are closing clinics, we are closing libraries. And while you are cutting taxes here, guess what we are doing in the great city of New York with the working people?

They are not getting welfare. They are working every day. They have got kids, but they are paying more for buses, for subways, for buying food and clothing, for day care, everything. They are paying more, including paying for Social Security and Medicare expenses.

So I know a lot of you think that these working people that we are trying to protect are welfare recipients. You do not pay taxes, you do not get tax relief. Well, they deserve some relief. They are entitled when we are giving the people back, those who pay taxes, God knows who makes America great, except those people who work every day, hoping that life will get better for them and a lot better for their kids.

And so if you want to say that that is not the Congress' responsibility, leave it to the United Jewish Appeal, leave it to Catholic Charities, leave it to the Protestants Council, but leave us out as the Federal Government. Let local and State government do it.

If you believe that, then what you do is starve the great reserves of this country. And if you cannot kill the programs legislatively, you kill them by not having the money there. So what you are saying is that one day when you accomplish your purpose, we will be paying more in interest on the trillions of dollars that we have borrowed than we will be able to pay for the programs that America has been so proud of.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The gentleman from California said, ''This really has nothing to do with working families.''

I will tell the gentleman, it has everything to do with working families. The provision that was offered and accepted on the Senate side, which was included in the Senate bill, was not supported by the authors of that amendment. This measure was never presented to, asked for, or included in the Senate provisions. We are now at a position of examining the Senate's behavior.

The movement for the refundable tax credit from 10 percent to 15 percent is in underlying law. It will occur January 1, 2005. The entire debate is over whether or not it ought to be accelerated. But what also ends on January 1, 2005 is the $1,000 child credit, because the Senate decided it was more important to create the opportunity so that between now and the elections of 2004, someone can show their compassion for working families. The $57 billion of this proposal says, after the election, will you show your compassion for working families in the year 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009 and 2010, which just happens to correspond to the 6-year term of the Senate.

We thought it might be appropriate if there is compassion between now and November that the people are going to vote. No compassion will be there for the next 6 years as well. I believe one move was politics, the other is policy.

Let us talk about working families. In New York City, a fireman who responded on 9/11 and his wife, a teacher, make about $150,000 together. The Senate in its wisdom said we ought to raise the child credit from $110,000 to $150,000. And if you read the fine print of the Senate proposal, they are going to do that for 1 year, in 2010. Is that politics or policy? The $21 billion of this measure says if it is good enough for the $150,000-a-year joint working family in 2010, it is good enough for the working family today, next year, and every year until 2010.

Do you want politics or do you want policy? Politics is cheap. Policy costs money. We are asking you to put your dollars where your mouth is.

July 9, 2002, as a matter of urgency we sent to the Senate a military tax fairness bill that would provide appropriate changes in the laws for our men and women in uniform. Underscore that: July 9, 2002.

It still languishes over in the Senate. If they really cared about the men and women in uniform, we would have seen that bill-signing ceremony already. We are including that provision in this bill and asking the Senate once again to put policy where their mouth is. If the Senate has provisions in their measure that they want to bring to conference that we did not include, we invite them. But we invited them to a conference that does policy and not politics.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 1308, the House Republicans' phony attempt to fix the problem they created when they dumped low-income families from eligibility for the increased child tax credit passed as part of the President's latest tax cut package.

The Senate has already passed a bill to fix the problem with nearly unanimous support. But, House Republicans refuse to bring forth that bill. Instead, they've written an $82 billion bill with numerous tax breaks unrelated to the child tax credit for low income working families—and none of those $82 billion are paid for. It will increase our ballooning deficit even more.

This bill is nothing more than a way for the House Republicans' to look like they're trying to address the needs of working families. In fact, their goal is to sabotage this issue so they can hide the fact that they excluded low-income families from the child tax credit in the first place. They don't care at all if these families ever qualify for tax credit.

The House Republicans have brought this Trojan horse to the floor in order to pass further tax relief to upper-income families while betting that the Senate won't touch such an expensive bill with a ten-foot pole.

The House Republicans believe that they will then be able to blame defeat of the bill on the Senate, when in fact they are the ones to blame! The Senate bill has already overwhelmingly passed the Senate on a bipartisan basis. The bill is paid for, unlike the House version. And most important, the President has already signed-off on the Senate-passed bill.

These families work hard and contribute their fair share through payroll taxes and sales taxes. There is no question that they also deserve their fair share of tax relief, especially when the child tax credit has been increased by $400 for parents just one rung higher on the income ladder. They can use this tax credit to help pay for their children's needs—like food, clothing, medical care, and childcare.

I applaud Senate Republicans for heeding the call of Democrats and reversing course to pass a bill reinstating the child tax credit for these low-income working families. While it doesn't go far enough, it is a step in the right direction. Now it is time for House Republicans to do the same. It is the right and fair thing to do for America's families.

I urge my colleagues to support the Democratic motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 1308 so that the conference will agree to the Senate child tax credit bill. That's the only way these low-income families are going to get the tax credit. These are the families that need those few extra dollars the most. Vote for the motion to instruct.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, last week the Senate passed legislation to restore to children of low-income working families the tax relief that was—at the last minute—removed from the tax cut signed into law last month. This new Senate bill's cost of 9.7 billion dollars is fully offset and is waiting at the desk right here, right now for our action. We could pass the bill today and send it to the President for his signature tomorrow.

However, my House Republican colleagues couldn't resist taking this important non-controversial bill—which passed the other body by a vote of 94–2—and weighing it down with more deficit growing tax cuts. The package before us today is almost 9 times larger than the Senate bill and every nickel of its 82 billion dollar price tag will be put onto our National Debt and repaid by our children and grandchildren.

The Congressional Budget Office reported earlier this week that the tax cut signed into law last month, coupled with increasing defense spending, will send the federal budget deficit above $400 billion this year. If House Republicans were serious about giving child tax credit relief they would have paid for their bill. And, knowing that the Senate is fiscally responsible—they know this product won't pass.

This is a cute way to appear to be for ''something'' while knowingly killing it. Let's be honest—most poor working folks don't vote for your guys so you're punishing their children today. Shame on you.

I urge my colleagues to reject this bill and to send a message to the 94 members of the other body that we are with them.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWEENEY). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 205, nays 201, not voting 29, as follows:

ORBIT TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS ACT OF 2003

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Energy and Commerce be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 2312) to amend the Communications Satellite of 1962 to provide for the orderly dilution of the ownership interest in Inmarsat by former signatories to the Inmarsat Operating Agreement, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 2312

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''ORBIT Technical Corrections Act of 2003''.

SEC. 2. INITIAL PUBLIC OFFERING DEADLINES.

Clause (ii) of section 621(5)(A) of the Communications Satellite Act of 1962 (47 U.S.C. 763(5)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''December 31, 2002'' and inserting ''June 30, 2004''; and

(2) by striking ''June 30, 2003'' and inserting ''December 31, 2004''.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2312, a bill to extend the deadline for Inmarsat to conduct the initial public offering required of it by the ORBIT Act.

The ORBIT Act was adopted in March of 2000 to promote a competitive market for satellite communications through privatization of inter-governmental organizations, one of which is Inmarsat. To further the twin goals of the privatization and independence of satellite carriers, the ORBIT Act called on Inmarsat to conduct an initial public offering (IPO) by December 31, 2001. As that December 2001 deadline approached, however, it became clear, given market conditions at the time, that it would be punitive to effectively force Inmarsat to conduct its IPO by the specified date. As a result, Congress passed legislation to provide an additional year to conduct the IPO, and also provided the FCC the ability to grant a six-month extension if warranted by market conditions.

Unfortunately, the market conditions have not improved to a point where it would be reasonable to require the IPO, and the current deadline—June 30, 2003—is now less than a month away. H.R. 2312, the ORBIT Technical Corrections Act, would not require Inmarsat to conduct its IPO until June 30, 2004, and it permits the FCC to grant an additional six months delay should market conditions continue to warrant such regulatory action. This legislation is clearly necessary at this time, lest the government would unfairly require one company and its investors to risk capital by offering shares to the public at a time when such shares are likely to be undervalued—perhaps grossly undervalued.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce continues to take an interest in the state of competition in the industry and the financial health of those who invest capital to build networks and offer satellite communications services. But as we proceed to grant one carrier additional time with which to conduct its IPO, I would observe that another provider—New Skies Satellites—long ago fulfilled the ORBIT Act's IPO and substantial dilution requirements. Since that time, it has diluted its original shareholder base yet again with a 10 percent share buyback. And New Skies is competing for satellite business independently, with strong independent management, precisely as congress envisioned in ORBIT. As the Committee considers holding hearings to examine the state of competition in the satellite industry, I believe that Congress, having introduced a new market competitor to the satellite industry, ought to examine whether the many restrictions the ORBIT Act placed on ''separated entities''—in effect New Skies—are still necessary to preserve that company's independence and promote competition.

I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Committee on these issues. Today, I am satisfied simply to enact H.R. 2312. I urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2312.

This bill is very straightforward. H.R. 2312 amends the ORBIT Act and gives the satellite company, Inmarsat, a little more time to complete their Initial Public Offering (IPO). Specifically, this legislation gives Inmarsat a 12-month extension from their pending June 30, 2003, deadline. It also gives the FCC the discretion to grant Inmarsat an additional 6-month extension on top of that if the company can demonstrate a legitimate need.

This legislation is necessary because the ORBIT Act—which was enacted in March 2000—did not anticipate the collapse of the IPO markets, especially in the telecommunications sector. In today's economic climate, Inmarsat cannot complete an IPO.

Without swift action by Congress on this bill, American farmers will face disrupted service of their precision farming technologies that rely on Inmarsat-distributed signals at the end of this month. Currently, many farmers, including many in my home state of Illinois, are utilizing GPS-based guidance systems to improve their productivity and efficiency. These systems enable farmers to more accurately apply seed, fertilizer and other inputs, reduce fuel use, and increase yields while reducing costs.

I want to emphasize that H.R. 2312 does not reopen the battles over the ORBIT law or challenge its underlying public policy. Rather, it simply makes this law workable as we suffer through this continuing down market.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this important and time-sensitive legislation.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 2312, which will extend the deadline for Inmarsat to conduct the initial public offering required of it by the ORBIT satellite privatization law. H.R. 2312, introduced by Representatives SHIMKUS and MARKEY, is unopposed.

The ORBIT Act was enacted in March of 2000 to promote a competitive market for satellite communications through privatization of inter-governmental organizations, one of which is Inmarsat. The Federal Commications Commission has since found that Inmarsat has indeed satisfied the privatization criteria of the ORBIT Act.

In addition, ORBIT called on Inmarsat to conduct an initial public offering (IPO) by a date certain—December 31, 2001. However, as that December 2001 deadline approached, it became quite apparent that the volatility in the financial markets in general, and the telecommunications sector specifically, necessitated a grant of additional time within which Inmarsat could conduct its statutorily mandated IPO. As a result, Congress took the prudent step of including language in the Commerce-Justice-State FY 2002 Appropriations bill to provide an additional year to conduct the IPO, and also provide the FCC the ability to grant a six-month extension if warranted by market conditions. This action was non-controversial.

Unfortunately, the market conditions have not improved to a point where it would be reasonable to require the IPO and the current deadline (June 30, 2003) is now less than a month away. H.R. 2312, the ORBIT Technical Corrections Act, allows Inmarsat until June 30, 2004, to conduct its IPO.

The purpose of this IPO requirement was to substantilly dilute the ownership of the privatized Inmarsat by its former owners, many of which are foreign governmental entities, so as to further ensure its independence. I fully supported this goal when we enacted ORBIT, and still do today. Indeed, the action we take today, in my view, is consistent with this policy objective.

If forced to move ahead with an IPO at this time, Inmarsat will probably receive a reduced price for its shares offered. Foreign entities that still own significant portions of Inmarsat would likely be discouraged from offering their ownership interests for sale. Instead of resulting in substantial dilution of prior owners as envisioned by the ORBIT Act, a current year IPO might not achieve much dilution whatsoever. In that instance, Inmarsat would have complied with the procedural requirement of ORBIT without the substantive result that we in Congress sought: dilution of previous government owners. Given the state of the markets, the only way to ensure the dilution sought by ORBIT is to allow Inmarsat to further delay its IPO. That result is good public policy that is also good for the long-term health of the satellite communications industry.

The health of the satellite communications industry and ORBIT's implementation are important to the Committee on Energy and Commerce. We are currently exploring the possibility of holdings hearings on the state of the industry in the future. At the appropriate time, we need to examine ORBIT's implementation, and the efficiency of the existing regulatory regime. For instance, New Skies Satellites has fulfilled the requirements of ORBIT and now is a fully independent competitor in the international satellite marketplace. Some have questioned whether it makes sense to hold New Skies to a continuing list of regulatory restrictions and requirements. I look forward to working with my colleagues on the Committee to ensure that current law reflects the current realities of the satellite industry. However, today we need to enact H.R. 2312. I thank my collleagues for their support and I urge the prompt passage of this legislation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2312, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

LEADERSHIP NEEDS TO MAKE SURE THE ELEVATORS ARE WORKING SO MEMBERS CAN VOTE

(Mr. ABERCROMBIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, I and other Members are as anxious as everyone else in here and leadership on both sides to vote in an expeditious manner; but if that is going to take place, then the leadership has to see to it that we are able to get into these elevators and get downstairs and get over here.

If it says ''Members Only'' during the time that the bells are ringing, then you have got to either put some signage up or get some people into the elevators that see to it that happens. I cannot see trying to kick people off the elevators who are citizens, trying to come see us, who operate in good faith, and we cannot get here to vote.

Now if you are so anxious to get this thing done in 15 minutes or 17 or whatever it is, that is fine. I will do my best, as I am sure everybody else will; but, Mr. Speaker, you have got to see to it then that we are able to get to do this in the manner in which we are supposedly designated to do it.

If you have elevators that are supposed to be for us during this time, then you are going to have to do things to see we can use them. I am not the only one who was disenabled from voting because I simply could not get down here. I could not get here fast enough because these elevators are stuck, and there are all kinds of people on them asking directions and you cannot get down here. If they are on the seventh floor in Longworth or end of the Cannon building, it is just not easy to do that in the 15 minutes, particularly when you are trying to kick people out of your office or get finished with what you have to get done in order to get over here to vote.

I am just asking on behalf of not just myself but any Member that finds himself or herself in these circumstances. Had I been over here, I am sure I would have voted aye, depending on what the wisdom of my colleagues would have directed me to do in the interest of the national purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's request is respectfully noted.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of inquiring of the distinguished majority whip the schedule for tomorrow, and I will be pleased to yield to my friend, the distinguished majority whip.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Maryland, my good friend, the Democratic whip for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, the House will convene on Monday at 12:30 p.m. for morning hour and 2 p.m. for legislative business and will consider several measures under suspension of the rules, and a final list of those bills will be sent to Members' offices by the end of this week.

Mr. Speaker, any votes called on those measures will be rolled until 6:30 p.m.

On Tuesday, we may consider additional legislation under suspension of the rules as well as the conference report on S. 342, the Keeping the Children and Families Safe Act. Next week we expect to consider several bills under a rule, including H.R. 8, the Death Tax Permanency Act; H.R. 1528, the Taxpayers Protection and IRS Accountability Act; and H.R. 660, the Small Business Health Fairness Act.

I would like to note for all Members that we are making a change to schedules that were sent to offices at the beginning of the year, and we do not plan to have votes next Friday, June 20.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the information he provided us. I would like to ask a number of questions about bills that we see on the horizon, to see whether or not they may be scheduled in the near future.

The Associated Health Plans, can you tell us what day we might consider that bill, and how the bill will be considered, and whether or not we will be allowed a substitute and/or amendment?

Mr. BLUNT. If the gentleman will continue to yield, we intend to bring that bill to the floor this coming week, I think on Wednesday or Thursday.

Mr. HOYER. Does the gentleman have any information as to whether or not the minority would be allowed a substitute to that bill?

Mr. BLUNT. We look forward to a fair and full debate on that bill. Our rules generally leave that to the Committee on Rules, but if the proposed substitute is within the rules of the House, that is normally the procedure.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's remarks and I hope that we will be able to get a substitute and such amendments as we might deem to be appropriate to be considered by the full House.

On the State tax bill, can you tell us when we might consider that bill and also the status of any rule?

Mr. BLUNT. Again, I have announced that we intend to bring that bill to the floor next week. Again I would expect that would be on Wednesday or Thursday.

Mr. HOYER. Do you know which would come first, the associated health plans or the State tax?

Mr. BLUNT. I do not know which will come first.

Mr. HOYER. The IRS Accountability Act, can you tell us what day we might consider that bill and under what type of rule?

Mr. BLUNT. We are working with the Committee on Ways and Means on that bill and intend to have that bill up the two heavy working days, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

Mr. HOYER. Medicare prescription drugs, there has been a lot of activity on that, and I know that a lot of work is going on in the Senate and here in the House. Can you tell us about when we can expect to see the Medicare prescription drug legislation considered in the committee of jurisdiction and then on the floor?

Mr. BLUNT. If the gentleman will continue to yield, this is one of the most important topics we will deal with, one of the most important debates we will have this year. Both the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Energy and Commerce have been working hard for months now on a bill. That bill appears to be very near completion. We hope to have that bill on the floor before we take a district work break later this month.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Appropriations bills, I know we have started to mark up appropriations bills in the committee. When do you expect the first appropriations bills may come to the floor, now that some of the subcommittees are beginning to mark up their bills, and how many bills do you expect to consider before the July 4 district work period?

Mr. BLUNT. As the gentleman knows, the Committee on Appropriations has begun to move forward on these bills. Two bills, Military Construction and Homeland Security, were able to mark up their bills this week. We believe the Committee on Appropriations will have several additional markups in the next week. I would anticipate that we would have some of these appropriations bills on the floor this month.

Mr. HOYER. Lastly, Mr. Whip, the child tax credit, we have just instructed the conference committee to pass the Senate bill out of conference on a bipartisan vote. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, but is there any feel when that bill might come out of conference?

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Whip, I do not have any specific feel for that, but I have heard that the other body has indicated a willingness to go to conference fairly quickly on that. I would expect that conference to move in the relatively near future.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, would it be fair to expect that we would consider that conference committee prior to the July 4 district work period?

Mr. BLUNT. It is always difficult to expect anything out of a conference committee, but it is certainly possible it could happen that quickly; but it is possible that is a little quicker than the conference could move. That would be some time within the next 2 weeks. I do not think that is impossible, but I think it might be a little optimistic.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for his comments, and I would simply say from our side of the aisle, and I know I speak for the leader and myself, in light of the fact that the House has urged the conference committee to report out the Senate bill, and in light of the fact that the Senate passed it 94–2, it would seem to be a relatively easy matter if the conferees followed the instructions of the House to pass the Senate bill. I believe the Senate would probably concur in that judgment, and we could have a bill out of here perhaps as early as next week.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLUNT. I would only say that the motion to instruct was a much narrower decision than the vote on the bill itself. There were many Members not making that vote. Certainly the motion to instruct did carry, but perhaps it was because of those elevators that Members were stuck in.

Mr. HOYER. Reclaiming my time, I do not know about everybody else, but of course had the gentleman who complained made the vote, we would have had one more vote on our side, as the gentleman indicated.

Mr. BLUNT. I would not want to overclaim where our votes were, but I was told we had more people in the elevator getting here. I think the gentleman's comments about time and ability to get to the floor were well taken, and I am sure the Speaker and the leaders on both sides of the aisle will take that under serious consideration.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I missed the vote as well. There was a thunderstorm. I was caught in traffic, and I had no idea that such a quick gavel would be called on such an important vote. Had I been present, I would have voted ''aye.''

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, it is almost an avalanche of support for the position of this side, and some enlightened souls on your side of the aisle, and so perhaps we ought to conclude before we have such an overwhelming majority that there will be no alternative but to follow those instructions.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLUNT. By the speed of some of the things we do, my friend, a couple of Members stepping up in 10 minutes of time is almost an avalanche. The gentleman may be right about that.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JUNE 16, 2003

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Monday next for morning hour debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWEENEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

ROADLESS RULE REVISION AND ALASKA

(Ms. DELAURO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my strong opposition to the decision earlier this week by the Bush administration to roll back protection for over 14 million acres of pristine forestland in the Tongass and Chugach National Forests in Alaska, the crown jewels of our national forest system.

In its most blatant example of catering to corporate special interests to date, the administration has once again put its wealthy contributors before the health and safety of our environments. Whether it comes to the stewardship of our precious forestlands, it appears the administration's priority is the timber industry, first and foremost, not the taxpayers or the environment. This decision, which was the result of a settlement with the State of Alaska, was made despite over 2.2 million comments and 600 public meetings and hearings on the roadless policy, the vast majority in support of protecting the Tongass and the Chugach, which is home to America's last great rainforest.

Just as damaging, the decision will allow individual States to seek additional exemptions, eroding national protections for 58.5 million acres of pristine national forests in 39 States.

I urge my colleagues to support the legislation that I have introduced, the Alaska Rainforest Protection Act, and the Inslee-Boehlert National Forest Roadless Area Conservation Act.

HONORING PASTOR CHARLES MCGOWAN

(Mrs. BLACKBURN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor a man who has been a role model for me and my 2,500 fellow church members in how to honor the Lord and serve our brothers and sisters. He has shown us the path to both living a life of service and leaving a legacy of service.

Charles McGowan, the senior pastor of Christ Presbyterian Church in Nashville, Tennessee, is retiring. His decades of service to congregations and his mission outreach are a testament to the good a single man can do when firmly planted in a place by God. Under Pastor McGowan's leadership, we have developed a strong extension training site for the Covenant Theological Seminary. And in a time when we seek international understanding, our congregation, guided by Pastor McGowan, has forged a Ukraine partnership that has led to the Ukraine Biblical Seminary in Kiev.

Not only has Charles served his country as a man of God, he has served his country as a captain in the U.S. Army Reserve, Military Intelligence. Pastor McGowan and his wife Alice found time to raise a family of four children. Charles and Alice McGowan have shared generously with us. Theirs is truly the story of a life of grace, a life dedicated to others, and to their Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

RECOGNIZING SERGEANT ATANASIO HARO MARIN

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and remember Sergeant Atanasio Haro Marin, who lost his life in service to our Nation during Operation Iraqi Freedom. Today was his funeral. He came from a city I represent in Baldwin Park.

He was a member of Battery C, 3rd Battalion, 16th Field Artillery, 4th Infantry Division of Fort Hood, Texas. Today I pay tribute to him, to his loved ones, to his family for the safety and freedom and protections that he gave us. Let us not forget the other soldiers that are there that are also protecting our freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that Members of Congress please join me in extending my sincerest sympathy and condolences to the family and friends of Sergeant Atanasio Haro Marin, and would ask that all Americans join me in remembering our soldiers at this time.

REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION OF COASTAL ZONE MANAGEMENT ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Resources:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to transmit the Biennial Report to Congress on the Administration of the Coastal Zone Management Act by the Office of Ocean and Coastal Resource Management, National Ocean Service, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration for fiscal years 2000 and 2001. REVIEW OF ALL FEDERAL DRUG AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE PROGRAMS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Education and the Workforce, the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the Committee on Government Reform, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Small Business, and the Committee on Veterans' Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Consistent with section 2202 of the Public Law 107–273, I hereby transmit a report prepared by my Administration detailing the findings of a comprehensive review of all Federal drug and substance abuse treatment, prevention, education, and research programs. The report also presents an inventory of all such programs, indicating the legal authority for each program and the amount of funding in the last 2 fiscal years.

GEORGE W. BUSH.
THE WHITE HOUSE, June 12, 2003.

FATHER'S DAY 2003

(Ms. CARSON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. CARSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, Sunday, June 15 is Father's Day in America. Children and families will give tribute to men who are wonderful, caring parents. According to the 2000 census, there were 27 million fathers who had children under the age of 18 in their households in the year 2000. According to the National Fatherhood Initiative, an estimated 25 million children live absent from their biological fathers, up from under 10 million in 1960. Of the children under 18 in the United States, 66 percent lived with both parents and 5 percent lived with only their father in 2000.

All fathers can be important contributors to the well-being of their children. Kristin Clark Taylor, author of ''Black Fathers, A Call for Healing,'' in her introduction writes:

''We are in need of our fathers. Our stomachs are growling, hungry for their presence. Our throats are parched, thirsty for the moment, the minute, the second that they walk back into our lives and bring smiles.''

I encourage, Mr. Speaker, the fathers across this land to do all that they can do to be with their children, not just for a Sunday holiday but to be a permanent part of their life. To quote Marian Wright Edelman, director of the Children's Defense Fund, ''We do not need an $82 billion bill to correct a $3.5 billion injustice.'' Fathers are struggling to be the best dad for the most part.

I salute Father's Day 2003 and fatherhood. I call upon the Congress to do what they can do to help the fathers, fatherhood and the wannabe fathers through responsible child tax credit legislation.

Happy Father's Day.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

EXCHANGE OF SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to give my Special Order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

CHILD TAX CREDIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, today's vote on the Republican child tax credit bill was a squandered opportunity, a squandered opportunity to invest in our children and their families. We missed the chance to pass legislation that would immediately grant our Nation's hardworking families an increased child tax credit. The families I am talking about are those with dedicated workers that put in full-time hours at a low wage, pay taxes, and earn less than $26,000 a year. It is unfortunate that Republicans believe these forgotten children and families do not contribute enough to deserve a break. Their actions today left me no doubt that their priorities are dead wrong.

Why could the House Republican leadership not follow the other body and bring a clean child tax credit bill before us today? According to a colleague on the other side of the aisle, ''If we're going to do it, we should get something in exchange. If we give people a tax break that don't pay taxes, it's really welfare.''

Mr. Speaker, these families are not on welfare. They do pay taxes. They are not seeking welfare. They are seeking the same acknowledgment for their hard work as the rich received in the Republican tax package earlier, and they deserve tax relief now. This supposed party of compassionate conservatism has exploited the child tax credit issue to pass even more tax cuts for their wealthy friends. Rather than bringing up a child tax credit bill costing $3.5 billion with full offsets, which means fully paid for, they passed a bill that costs over $80 billion with no offsets, totally unpaid for, at a time when America's Federal deficit will exceed $400 billion.

Our priority should be to put money in the hands of working Americans while keeping our fiscal house in order. That way we can create jobs and build a strong economy. If we do not help our children now, I ask you, when will we? How can we ever expect to strengthen our Nation in the future when we ignore our children, 25 percent of our population, 100 percent of our future?

Mr. Speaker, the House Republican leadership failed our children today. They failed working families. The other body handed us a bill that would have increased tax credits for 6.5 million tax-paying families. The President, after hearing from the public and getting the pressure from the majority of the people in this Nation, actually came out in strong support of this cleaner legislation. He supported what the other body passed 94 to 2. But the bill passed today will not address the real needs of this Nation's hard-working, low-wage-earning families in the same way at all.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to restore true compassion for our Nation's working families rather than our Nation's millionaires. Our families need to know that we have not forgotten them. They are the core, they are the engine, they are what makes this Nation work, and we cannot forget them.

EXCHANGE OF SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

ADDRESSING THE HIGH COST OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I rise again tonight to talk about the high cost that Americans pay for prescription drugs. I am so lucky. Today I got to spend a good part of my day with a true American hero. Her name is Kate Stahl. For Members who have not seen it, I recommend, and I will submit for the RECORD, a copy of last week's U.S. News and World Report; and they did a story, the title of which is ''Health on the Border, Elderly Americans head north and south to find drugs they can afford.''

Featured in the story is this American hero. Her name is Kate Stahl. She is an 84-year-old grandmother. She was here in Washington today. She wore a little sign. It just said, ''Kate Stahl, Old Woman.'' In my opinion, Kate Stahl is an American hero, and she is a patriot. She stands on the shoulders of great patriots like the Sons of Liberty who threw tea in Boston Harbor, because she has said in this article, and I will quote, ''I'd like nothing better than to be thrown in jail.''

Kate Stahl has thrown herself into this fight for lower prescription drug prices. She calls herself a drug runner. She goes to Canada regularly to bring back prescription drugs for her friends and neighbors who cannot afford them. She is a patriot. Recently, the Kaiser Foundation did a study. They found that 29 percent of seniors say that they have had prescriptions that have gone unfilled because they could not afford them. I do not say shame on the pharmaceutical industry. Shame on us. Because we have the power to change it. The reason that we pay so much, and no one disputes this, and they have charts in here and comparisons of what people pay in Canada, Mexico and in Europe. No one disputes the charts. The numbers are always the same. America, the world's best market for prescription drugs, pays the world's highest prices. No one disputes that.

But the question is why. The answer I think is pretty simple. Because we are a captive market. Because the FDA has literally said that Americans, unlike most other people in the world, cannot take drugs across the border.

I am a Republican, and I happen to believe that there is nothing wrong with the word ''profit.'' But, ladies and gentlemen, there is something wrong with the word ''profiteer.'' They have every right to expect a reasonable rate of return on their investment and their research, but they should not get it all from American consumers like Kate Stahl. Kate Stahl, is she a common criminal? I do not think so. But our own government treats her like a common criminal. In the end, we are going to have a debate in the next several weeks about prescription drugs; and in the end every one of us is going to have to decide, will we stand with those brave patriots like Kate Stahl or will we stand with the huge pharmaceutical industry? I hope we make the right choice.

HEALTH ON THE BORDER

ELDERLY AMERICANS HEAD NORTH AND SOUTH TO FIND DRUGS THEY CAN AFFORD

(By Susan Brink)

It's become something of a joke along the Maine-Canada border. So many busloads of retired people crisscross the line looking for affordable drugs that the roadside stands should advertise, ''Lobsters. Blueberries. Lipitor. Coumadin.'' Except, of course, that such a market in prescription drugs would be illegal.

These senior long-distance shopping sprees fall in a legal gray zone. But as long as people cross the border with prescriptions from a physician and have them filled for no more than a three-month supply for personal use, customs and other federal officials leave them alone. The trip might be tiring, but people can save an average of 60 percent on the cost of their prescription drugs. For some, that's the difference between taking the drugs or doing without. ''The last bus trip I was on six months ago had 25 seniors,'' says Chellie Pingree, former Maine state senator and now president of Common Cause. ''Those 25 people saved $19,000 on their supplies of drugs.'' Pingree sponsored a bill known as Maine Rx, which authorizes a discounted price on drugs for Maine residents who lack insurance coverage. The law was challenged by drug companies but recently upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court. It hasn't yet taken effect.

For years, field trips of senior citizens who live near the borders have been organized to roll north to Canada and south to Mexico. People in the middle of the country sometimes found, if their prescription drug costs were especially high, that they could save money on medications even if they flew to Europe. The Internet has made it even easier for people to fill their prescriptions from mail-order pharmacies.

Figuring out ways to spend less on prescription drugs has become a multi-faceted national movement of consumers, largely senior citizens. The prescription drug bill in America is $160 billion annually, and people over 65 fill five times as many prescriptions as working Americans on average. ''But they do it on health benefits that are half as good and on incomes that are half as large,'' says Richard Evans, senior analyst at Sanford C. Bernstein, an investment research firm. What's more, seniors account for 20 percent of the voting public.

Face-off. It's little wonder that the May 19 Supreme Court ruling got the attention of drug manufacturers and politicians across the country. The often-over-looked state of 1.3 million tucked in the northeast corner of the country became David to the pharmaceutical industry's Goliath. The face-off began three years ago when state legislators like Pingree began questioning why Maine's elderly population had to take all those bus trips.

Americans who are elderly and uninsured pay the world's highest prices for prescription drugs. That's because they buy their drugs individually, without the bulk bargaining power of an insurance company or the federal government. Other industrialized countries, like Canada, France, Germany, and Japan, have national healthcare systems and can use the bargaining power of their entire populations to negotiate drug prices and set limits on how much drug manufacturers can charge.

Though Congress has been debating a prescription drug plan for years, seniors today still have no drug coverage under Medicare. The Maine plan does not provide a drug benefit. Seniors and the uninsured would still purchase their own medicines, but the plan helps them get a discounted price on drugs similar to that available to Medicaid recipients, in effect bringing hundreds of thousands of individual (and powerless) consumers into a powerful negotiating block.

Teaming the elderly and uninsured with Medicaid recipients gives them bargaining power they've never had before. Drug manufacturers are required to give Medicaid a discount of about 15 percent below the list price or match the lowest price on the market. That creates an incentive to keep the market price as high as possible, says Katharine Greider, author of The Big Fix: How the Pharmaceutical Industry Rips Off American Consumers. But most consumers don't notice the high drug prices, because with health insurance they only pay a small copayment. Only those lacking prescription drug coverage—including many elderly—end up paying full retail price for drugs.

The law's leverage disturbs the drug industry. It would create formulary, or list of preferred drugs, for this block of patients, similar to those used by many managed-care organizations. If a manufacturer did not lower its prices, it would not be on the state's formulary. Drug companies oppose the law as a quality-of-care issue. ''Under Maine's program, government officials, rather than doctors and patients, would effectively decide which medicines will be available for Medicaid and non-Medicaid patients,'' says a statement from Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, the industry's trade organization.

The Maine drug plan was crafted three years ago, and health officials are now refining a draft of the law to send to the Legislature. But the pharmaceutical industry is far from ready to give up the fight. ''I don't go to any meetings that don't have five lawyers sitting around the table,'' says Peter Walsh, acting commissioner or the Maine Department of Human Services. Even when it goes forward, one small New England state's law won't solve the nation's prescription drug crisis.

The greater hope for consumers—and the greater threat to the industry—is the clout of about 18 other states that have filed bills similar to Maine's. ''The point at which you get half or more states to do this, it becomes a more and more significant intrusion into the market. And it becomes harder for the pharmaceutical industry to fight back. That's why they had to fight so hard against Maine's law,'' says Sara Rosenbaum, professor of health-policy law at George Washington University.

Going south. Meanwhile, individual consumers are figuring out their own ways to bypass steep American drug prices. For example, Bill Goff goes to Tijuana, Mexico, four times a year. He flies from his home in Reno, Nev., to San Diego, stays in the Travelodge, rents a car for a day, and crosses the border to visit Carlos Cortez of Farmacia Internacional with a fist-full of prescriptions. He has a host of medical disorders, including rheumatoid arthritis, diabetes, asthma, glaucoma, and osteoporosis. He would spend $32,000 a year on prescription drugs in the United States, but he has cut his annual cost to $9,500, even including travel costs. ''It's not a matter of saving money. It's a matter of living,'' says Goff. ''If I didn't go to Mexico, I couldn't afford the drugs. I'd be dead.''

Others are skipping the travel altogether, some with the help of 84-year-old Kate Stahl. She is not above using the ''grandmother'' image to further a cause. ''I'd like nothing better than to be thrown in jail. People would say, 'Oh, the poor, frail old granny,''' she says with a laugh. ''I can be very frail if I have to.'' Stahl volunteers with the Minnesota Senior Federation, helping people get the forms and information they need to get mail-order prescription from Canada. The plan, called the Canadian Prescription Drug Importation Program (www.mnseniorfed.org), is open to anyone in the United States. But while no one seems ready to throw the likes of Stahl in the slammer, the program's legality is murky.

Though the Food and Drug Administration says it cannot guarantee the safety of imported drugs (even if they're exported from the United States, then reimported, as many are), individuals filling their personal prescriptions are generally left alone. But the agency has sent warning letters to profit-making drugstores in the United States that help consumers get mail-order prescriptions from Canada, saying that reimporting cheap drugs is a violation of the law and a risk to public health.

Since Stahl and her organization do not profit from their efforts, so far no one has hassled them. Rep. Gil Gutknecht, a Minnesota Republican, is trying to pass legislation that would make it easier for people to get their drugs from Canada or overseas. Laws to that effect have passed twice before, but both times the FDA protested that it could not guarantee the safety of drugs reimported from Canada, and so the law has not taken effect. Still, Gutknecht is not alone in interpreting present laws in a way that allows people to buy personal three-month supplies of drugs overseas without problems.

Cortez has a conference table display of brand-name prescription drugs in his Tijuana office. One by one he holds them up. Pfizer's Lipitor, Eli Lilly's Prozac. Merck's Fosamax. They're not loose pills; they are individually bubble-wrapped within sealed boxes. ''We have no doubt that what we're buying is what it is. It comes from world-class labs,'' he says. And the 30 percent of his customers who are American seem to agree.

He's aware of the irony: a businessman from the developing world profiting on sales to desperate citizens of the wealthiest country on Earth. ''It doesn't get more stark than right here. You can see so clearly: Third World,'' he says, pointing to the roadside squalor in Tijuana, the concrete barriers at dusk crowded with men waiting for nightfall and a risky dash across the border. ''First World,'' he finishes, pointing toward the city of San Diego across the border. ''My business thrives on people coming here from the States. But I shouldn't have people thanking me for making it possible for them to survive when they are from a country like the United States.''

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HENSARLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to give my Special Order now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LITIGATION REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HENSARLING) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HENSARLING. Mr. Speaker, today the House passed landmark legislation in the passage of the Class Action Fairness Act of 2003. Lawsuit abuse is everywhere. It is harming American businesses, consumers, and families.

Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong with our legal system when it is easier to sue a doctor than it is to see a doctor. There is something wrong with our legal system when a plaintiff can be awarded millions of dollars because McDonald's serves hot coffee and not lukewarm coffee. There is something wrong with our legal system when people can sue Kentucky Fried Chicken for their weight gain because they ate too much fried chicken. And, Mr. Speaker, there is definitely something wrong with our legal system when the awards and settlements from class action lawsuits more often than not benefit the trial attorneys and not the purported victims.

That is right, studies show that over half of all tort liability costs go to trial lawyers and administrative expenses, not the victims, real or imagined. In one egregious example, a Bank of Boston settlement ordered $8.64 to each class member, but then turned right around and assessed each of those members $90 in trial lawyer fees.

In a case against Blockbuster, the attorneys took home $9.25 million in fees, while customers got a $1-off coupon for future video rentals.

In a suit against Cheerios, the trial lawyers were paid nearly $2 million in fees, while the customers from the suit received coupons for a free box of cereal.

Mr. Speaker, the examples go on and on and on; millions for trial lawyers, pennies for purported and real victims.

In recent years, State courts have been flooded with interstate class action lawsuits, many without merit. In fact, more than 15 million civil lawsuits were filed in 1999 alone. That is one lawsuit for every 18 people in our country.

Over the last 10 years alone, class action filings in State courts have increased 1,000 percent. That is right, 1,000 percent. Why is this happening? Well, with so many class action suits and so much at stake, most companies are deciding to settle these suits, even if they do not have merit, enriching trial lawyers and giving little or nothing to victims and costing the rest of us dearly.

How does it cost us, Mr. Speaker? The cost of litigation accounts for one-third of the price of an 8-foot aluminum ladder, it doubles the price of a football helmet, it adds $500 to the sticker price of a new car, and it increases the cost of a pacemaker by $3,000.

Mr. Speaker, the American people may not realize it, but they are paying $1,200 a year more for goods and services because of lawsuit abuse. That is enough to pay a couple of months of day care, purchase a home computer for a child, or buy 9 months of prescription drugs for a senior citizen. That is what each of us is losing.

It costs us in other ways as well. Another survey has found that for fear of product liability, almost half of small businesses have had to withdraw products from the marketplace, and 39 percent decided not to introduce new products. Litigation concerns have led several companies to postpone or cancel promising AIDS vaccines.

Class action lawsuit abuse especially hurts small businesses, because small businesses are often named as defendants in these suits so that the suits can be kept in trial-lawyer-friendly local courts.

These suits cause huge increases in insurance premiums, causing many small businesses to either pay up or go belly up. What a loss, Mr. Speaker, because two out of three jobs in America are created by small business.

Mr. Speaker, we must make the class action process more fair. The Class Action Fairness Act of 2003 will implement several important changes to dramatically improve our judicial system. By expanding Federal jurisdiction for truly multistate lawsuits, the Class Action Fairness Act will reduce the number of frivolous lawsuits and help prevent venue shopping by trial attorneys for favorable rulings. The judicial review and approval process will prohibit courts from awarding larger settlements to plaintiffs based solely on their proximity to the courthouse, and, very, very important, it will provide a much-needed safeguard for plaintiffs from being shortchanged by trial attorneys.

Mr. Speaker, many class action lawsuits are valid, meritorious, and address legitimate grievances by groups of people with similar claims. But the abuse of this legal tool is overwhelming. It is costing us jobs, bankrupting businesses, depleting businesses, and gouging consumers. We must have reform.

REPUBLICANS AND SPENDING

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANKS of Arizona). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, just yesterday, the Congressional Budget Office projected the Federal Government will end fiscal year 2003 with the largest deficit in the history of our country, more than $400 billion. The Republican leadership responded to that news by scheduling a vote today on legislation that would add another $100 billion in debt over the next decade. The Republican leadership claims that we can afford their tax cuts and balance the budget by controlling spending. Unfortunately, the Republican rhetoric about controlling spending does not match the reality of their own record.

In the 8 years since Republicans took control of Congress, discretionary spending has increased by an average of 6.5 percent per year, compared to an average of 1.6 percent in the previous 8 years. President Bush signed spending bills increasing spending by nearly 22 percent in the first 2 years he was in office.

Now, some of that was uncontrollable, due to the war and 9/11, but not all of it. When Republicans took control of Congress in 1994, total spending was $1.4 trillion. Under their budget they propose to spend $2.2 trillion next year, an increase of over $800 billion over 10 years.

If we are going to come to the floor day after day, tax cut after tax cut, a tax cut a week, if that is your strategy, and you say we are going to control spending, you have got to do something about your record.

This is the way spending is going to increase under the budget that the majority has put forward this year. By the end of this decade, total spending under the Republican budget will be more than double what it was when Republicans gained control of Congress. You would not gather that by the rhetoric we heard again today. We just keep talking over each other.

But these are the facts of what is happening. If we are going to cut taxes and if we are going to do the things that you propose to do every week, then you have got to cut spending. Otherwise we are going to run this country into the ground. And you are not proposing to do it.

Earlier this week, the administration and Republican leadership have already agreed to increase discretionary spending for the next year by $5.2 billion, an increase above the budget resolution they passed just 2 months ago.

Just today, the administration has informed the Committee on Appropriations that they will request another $1.6 billion in supplemental spending for the current fiscal year, an increase. The Blue Dog budget called for tough spending limits by adopting the President's overall spending levels.

I have no quarrel with what the majority proposed on discretionary spending. This is the green line. I have no quarrel with that.

The budget conference report the Republicans passed earlier this year is essentially adopting the spending levels we had in the Blue Dog budget, and that was supported by a majority of Democrats. The Blue Dogs are willing to work with Republicans to hold the line on spending at levels in their budget resolution. Unfortunately, the actions of the last few days show that the Republicans are not willing to stick with the spending levels in their own budget, but yet we keep talking about we are going to control spending.

The Republican budget policies are increasing the most wasteful spending in the Federal budget, the $332 billion collected from taxpayers simply to cover our national interest payments. This debt tax consumed a whopping 18 percent of all Federal tax dollars this year, and will increase to 20.1 percent by 2013. This is an increase in the debt tax that working men and women are going to have to pay in order to fulfill the economic policy that we keep hearing about every day.

The bill that passed the House today would add another $31 billion in spending, spending, spending. We had a $3.48 billion problem, and what does the leadership on this side of the aisle propose to do? Spend $30.39 billion more to solve a $3.48 billion problem.

I do not know how much longer we can do that. It does not seem to bother anybody on the other side of the aisle. I used to join with you day after day after day in saying we need to balance our Federal budget. I used to vote with you. I have not changed my voting pattern.

Under the Republican budget plan, the national debt will increase to over $12 trillion by 2013. Now, that may not bother anyone, and we can have another tax cut next week, which I understand we are going to have.

But let me say at this point, in closing, Mr. Speaker, the Blue Dogs have issued a letter of challenge to the Republican Message Group. I have spoken with the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON). We would like to have a little debate on this. We have got responsible people on both sides of the aisle that are just as worried about this as we are.

Instead of talking over each other and reading our 2-minute speeches and acting like we are not even in the same world, the Blue Dogs are challenging at least once every week, every night, for the rest of this year, if that is what we agree to do, to talk about these issues, and not just have me standing up pointing to the charts, but having my friends on the other side stand up and say, ''You are all wet, Charlie. That is not the way it is,'' even though these come right out of your budget and the OMB.

I think we need to have a real debate on this issue. So we are making this challenge, I am making it publicly right now, and I look forward to Special Orders next Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday, in which we can sit down and talk about this.

If we are going to talk about controlling spending, then let us propose a budget that does it. Let us not vote down the Blue Dog budget that would have been balanced. Let us not talk about a constitutional amendment, which, by the way, I am for and we will be starting the charge on that also next week to require a balanced budget.

If you are going to talk about it, you have to be prepared to do those things necessary to do it. And you do not cut taxes and increase the debt cost, the interest debt cost by $30 billion to solve a $3 billion problem. It will not work.

As we say back home in Texas, ''that dog won't hunt.''

CHILD TAX CREDIT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to discuss the refundable child tax credit that we voted on earlier this evening.

I appreciate the remarks of my good friend and next-door neighbor from Texas, but, Mr. Speaker, I have to ask, how did we get here?

Our friends on the other side of the aisle have characterized the recently passed Jobs and Growth Tax Act as ''misdirected'' and targeted to the wrong people. They say that in order to stimulate the economy we do not need to return the tax dollars to people who pay taxes.

Well, in 2001, and, of course, I was not here then, but this House did pass a tax bill that did return tax dollars to people who do not pay taxes, but the stimulatory effect to the economy from that activity was minimal. So 2 weeks ago we did something different, and we passed the President's economic stimulus plan, which put tax dollars back in the hands of the people who make our economy go. The other side complained about the deficit again, and yet this week they advocated extending the refundable child credit another $3.5 billion.

Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that small businesses are becoming more and more important to the Nation's overall business activity. They create the majority of new jobs and account for half of the economy's private output.

The jobs and growth plan gives small businesses the ability to immediately expense up to $100,000, instead of the current write-off of $25,000 in capital purchases. This encourages small businesses to buy technology, machinery and other equipment that they need to expand their business and meet the needs of their consumers.

The jobs and growth plan increased the child tax credit and eliminated the marriage penalty and exempted another 3.8 million workers from Federal tax liability. And low-income families in particular benefited from this economic growth and tax relief package through a number of provisions.

We accelerated the expansion of the 10 percent bracket. This means workers can earn more before they get moved into the 15 or 25 percent tax brackets.

Our jobs and growth program eliminated the marriage penalty.

We also accelerated the President's 2001 tax cut provision to increase the child tax credit to $1,000. Accelerating the expansion of the child tax credit will provide 26 million families with an average tax cut of $623. Obviously it means a great deal for a family of four, working to make ends meet each year.

While I recently was surprised to learn that the Democratic Caucus was interested in passing additional tax relief, I am pleased to work with them to accomplish several things. I would like to see us eliminate the marriage penalty in the child tax credit.

I would like to see us repeal the sunset included in the jobs and growth economic package to ensure that the child tax credit stays at $1,000 through 2010, not just through the next election year.

I would like to reiterate with my good friend from Texas our commitment to the military tax relief provisions that passed this House in March. These provisions include the capital gains tax relief on home sales, tax-free death gratuity payments, and tax-free dependent care assistance for members of the military.

In the future, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to working with my friend from Texas and our friends on the other side of the aisle on fundamental tax reform, including permanent elimination of the death tax. I also look forward to holding the line on the Federal deficit by controlling discretionary spending as we start this year's appropriations process.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I think it is time that we have to focus on the fact that we cannot any longer punish those who work hard, take risks and are successful, the small business entrepreneurs in our society. America's economic recovery depends on the jobs created by the success of that segment of the population.

Mr. Speaker, our majority leader said it so well tonight: It is time for some of us not just to stand up for the cameras, but to stand up for America.

PUBLICATION OF THE RULES FOR THE PERMANENT SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE, 108TH CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to transmit herewith the Rules of Procedure for the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence for the 108th Congress. The enclosed rules were adopted by the Committee, in February 2003.

ENCOURAGING PEACE TALKS IN SRI LANKA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to encourage a new round of peace talks between the Sri Lankan Government and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, LTTE, also known as the Tamil Tigers. Recent conciliatory actions by the Sri Lankan Government, as well as strong international support for peace, offers progress in finding a resolution to this conflict. However, the Tamil Tigers need to be encouraged to return to the negotiating table in order to continue this momentum towards peace.

Sri Lanka, Mr. Speaker, is a nation that has suffered a tremendous loss of nearly 65,000 lives due to a long-standing conflict between Sri Lankans and the Tamil Tigers. Finally, on February 22nd of last year, the Norwegian Government brokered a cease-fire signed by both groups, but the peace process remains far from complete.

Excluded from a preliminary conference held in Washington this April, the Tamil Tigers then withdrew from participating in the Tokyo Donor Conference that is currently taking place. However, recent developments on the part of the Sri Lankan Government and the international community offer some progress. On Monday, the Prime Minister of Sri Lanka offered a provisional administrative structure for the Tamil majority region of the island, a step toward meeting a central demand of the Tamil Tigers for resuming peace talks.

The Tigers have said they would return to the negotiating table only if an interim administration in the Tamil-majority north and east was established, and the Prime Minister's proposal does just that. Having taken this important step, the Prime Minister must further lay out a more specific outline for addressing the Tamil Tigers' concerns.

The movement towards peace in Sri Lanka is further solidified by the vast influx of international support for peace on the island. At the Donor meeting in Tokyo, host Japan has already pledged $1 billion in assistance. Another $1 billion has been offered by the Asian Development Bank, and a spokesman for the European Union said it will contribute $290 million over the next 3 years. The U.S. has committed to $54 million in aid, and the World Bank recently announced before the conference that it would provide Sri Lanka with $200 million a year for 4 years.

Mr. Speaker, these donations show an enormous interest by the international community in rebuilding postconflict Sri Lanka and finding a peaceful resolution. Any aid will come with strict conditions in an effort to provide the international community with the ability to compel the Sri Lankan Government and the Tamil Tigers to move quickly toward resolving their conflict.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say the atmosphere for peace in Sri Lanka, I think, is right. Strong international financial and moral support for peace, and recent Sri Lankan compromises to the Tamil Tigers will hopefully lead to the Tamil Tigers' return to the negotiating table and, hopefully, eventually lead to a peaceful resolution in Sri Lanka.

REVISIONS TO THE FISCAL YEAR 2004 BUDGET RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with section 507 of H. Con. Res. 95 and consistent with section 310 of the Congressional Budget Act, I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD revisions to the fiscal year 2004 budget resolution to reflect the enactment of H.R. 2, the Jobs and Growth Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2003 (P.L. 108–27).

Section 201 of the budget resolution (H. Con. Res. 95) directed the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill that would increase outlays and reduce revenue by specified amounts. The conference report accompanying H.R. 2 exceeded the target for outlays, but reduced revenue by less than the amount allowed under the revenue target.

Since the overage in outlays was within 20 percent of the total cost of the bill and was offset on the revenue side, as permitted under section 310 of the Budget Act, the conference report was deemed to be in compliance with its reconciliation instructions.

I am, therefore, adjusting the 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Ways and Means to reflect the enacted levels of budget authority, outlays and revenue in the tax bill. This will hold other measures assumed in the budget resolution harmless for the permissible variance in budget authority and revenue between the budget resolution and enacted tax bill.

Accordingly, the adjusted 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Ways and Means is as follows:

Fiscal year 2003: $14,576,000,000 in new budget authority and $14,512,000,000 in outlays.

Fiscal year 2004: $20,626,000,000 in new budget authority and $20,054,000,000 in outlays.

The period of fiscal years 2004–2008: $24,079,000,000 in new budget authority and $23,876,000,000 in outlays.

The period of fiscal years 2004–2013: $39,261,000,000 in new budget authority and $39,128,000,000 in outlays.

The changes in the Ways and Means allocation cause changes in the budgetary aggregates. Accordingly, I also modify the budgetary aggregates to the following levels:

Fiscal year 2003: $1,877,204,000 in new budget authority and $1,829,299,000 in outlays; $1,310,347,000 in revenues.

Fiscal year 2004: $1,880,555,000 in new budget authority and $1,903,502,000 in outlays.

The period of fiscal years 2004–2013: $19,632,020,000,000 in revenues.

Questions may be directed to Dan Kowalski at 67270.

BUSH ADMINISTRATION STRIPS VETERANS' BENEFITS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STRICKLAND) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker, these are difficult days for our country. The war is not over. We continue to have young Americans killed, almost on a daily basis in Iraq, and that country is very unsettled. But that is not why I rise to speak tonight. I rise to speak about soldiers of wars passed.

Just this past weekend in Marietta, Ohio, I attended a meeting of the Purple Heart Association; and later on that evening I spoke to a group of veterans who had served on the LST ships, those large ships that transported cargo and goods and soldiers, landing them on the beaches of Normandy and elsewhere; and I was struck by the fact that these veterans are full of goodwill and wonderful stories about their lives as members of the United States Armed Forces. They went through some hellish experiences, things that we can only imagine, I guess, in our darkest moments.

But I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, that this country, as rich as we are and as willing as we are to take care of the well-off among us, that this country is failing to live up to its obligations to our Nation's veterans. I would just like to share some of the actions that have been recently taken by the President and this administration that I think are so harmful to veterans.

Approximately a year and a half or so ago, the VA made a decision that they were going to increase the cost of a prescription drug that a veteran would have to pay from $2 a prescription to $7 a prescription, and I thought that was outrageous at the time, and I introduced legislation to roll back that decision. But the matter has gotten worse. In the President's budget which he sent to us a few months ago, in fact, the budget that he sent to us in January at the very time when we were preparing to send our young men and women into harm's way in Iraq, the President sent us a budget that asked that the cost of a prescription drug be increased, the copayment, not at $7, but that that be increased up to $15 a prescription. I felt like that was a shameful act. But the President also asked in his budget that the cost of a clinic visit be increased from $15 to $20. The President asked in his budget that there be an annual enrollment fee of $250 imposed upon Priority 7 and 8 veterans. It just seems as if it does not stop.

Then, Secretary Principi created a new priority group of veterans, which is now known as Priority Group 8, and these are veterans who do not have service-connected disabilities and are considered higher-income veterans. So the decision was made that these Priority 8 veterans simply could no longer enroll in the VA health care system. Now, how much money does one have to make in order to be considered a higher-income Priority 8 veteran? Well, in my district and in other parts of the country, one can make as little as $22,000 a year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those of us who serve in this Chamber make over $150,000 a year, and maybe we just cannot understand what it is like to make $22,000 a year. Maybe we just think if one makes $22,000 a year, one is going to have all one needs to pay their bills and support their families and so on. But, quite frankly, I think it is shameful that at a time when we are giving huge tax breaks to the richest among us, that we would impose a $250 annual enrollment fee on veterans who have honorably served this Nation, whose incomes are as little as $22,000 a year.

Well, I do not know what the solution is. I know some of my colleagues in this Chamber say, well, we are never going to have these requests that the President has made passed into law; but just this week, I am on the Committee on Veterans Affairs, and just this week we had representatives from the Veterans Affairs Department before our committee. And I asked them if it was current administration policy to pursue these efforts to increase the cost of prescription drugs to impose an annual enrollment fee on veterans, and to exclude Priority 8 veterans from even participation in the VA system. I was told that it continues to be the intention of this administration of the President to pursue these efforts.

There is something else I would like to mention tonight. About a year or so ago, the VA put out a memo to all of its health care providers around the country, a memo which consists of, in my judgment, little more than a gag order. The memo basically said, and I am certainly paraphrasing, but what I am saying is true to the spirit of the memo, the memo said: too many veterans are coming in for service. We do not have enough money to provide those services, and so you are no longer able to actively pursue the dissemination of information to our veterans.

So, Mr. Speaker, these are troublesome things, and I would just ask that my colleagues in this Chamber rethink the direction in which we are going.

THE NEW APOLLO ENERGY PROJECT: A BOLD NEW ENERGY POLICY FOR AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I have come to the House Chamber tonight to talk about a tremendous opportunity for our great country, and it is an opportunity that follows in the historical path that John Kennedy set forth back on May 9, 1961. The path that I would like to talk about tonight is a path towards a new energy future for our country, a future that is befitting of this century and our technological progress and achievements we have made and can make in the next decade or two.

What we are going to be introducing for the House consideration in the next week or two is what we call the New Apollo Energy Project, because many of my colleagues and myself believe that our country deserves a bold, vigorous, aggressive new energy policy that is befitting of the technological wherewithal and talents of our country. So we are calling it the New Apollo Energy Project.

The reason we are calling it the New Apollo Energy Project is because we think that we need to follow in the footsteps of what John F. Kennedy did in challenging America right behind us. He came to this Chamber on May 9, 1961 as a young President, way back before computers, biotechnologies, solar cells, fuel cells; and he stood behind me and looked out to America and challenged America to put a man on the Moon within the decade, which was an extraordinary challenge to America in 1961. Computers were in their infancy, our rocketry was failing repeatedly at that time. At that moment, people really scratched their heads to ask how a President could be so bold to challenge the country to reach such an ambitious goal. But Kennedy did make that challenge; and the Nation responded and, indeed, America put a man on the Moon within that decade.

I think Kennedy recognized some things about America that were perhaps unique in the world that others did not who were skeptical about that effort. He recognized the basic can-do spirit of the culture and the American economy; and he recognized that when challenged, Americans can deliver technologically much more than people would otherwise think so, and so he set forth a challenge and a promise to Americans that we could do this.

Many of us now believe that we need to do a similar thing in the field of energy, in our energy policy in this country. And we are very optimistic that if we set high bars and high goals for America, we can meet them just as we did in the original Apollo project.

So in the coming weeks, my colleagues and I will be introducing the New Apollo Energy Project, which will basically set three goals for a new energy policy of our Nation. Not one that is sort of captured by the artifacts of old industries, not one that is captured by a feeling that we just have to continue down the same old road, but one that can really lift our eyes and see a higher plane that will solve three challenges that America has now that we need a new policy to address. I will briefly mention what those three are.

Number one, we need to get our economy growing again. And to do that, America needs to seize the moment by the reins and create these new, clean energy technologies that can create high-paying jobs in America. So job creation is job number one for a new energy policy, and we are optimistic that that can be done; and I will talk about that in a moment.

Second, we set a goal in our national energy policy of reducing our contributions to global warming gases that are now polluting our atmosphere and causing a warming and climate change in our planet, and this is something we can do using new technology; and it is required if we want to avoid climactic changes to change the world as we know it.

Three, and perhaps as important, we set a goal to break addiction to Middle Eastern oil, which has enslaved us to certain policies over the last several decades that are now clearly not in our security interests.

It is time for America to become more self-reliant for fuel so that we do not have to make foreign policy decisions in one shape or another that are affected by our now current addiction for over half our fuel from those sources.

So those are the three goals we have set for the New Apollo Energy Project: Job creation, reduction of global climate gas emissions, and reduction of our dependence on foreign oil, particularly Mideast oil sources. And we believe all of them are very achievable.

Let me talk about the first goal which is job creation and getting a new sort of horizon, a new scope of our economy. And that is to adopt measures that will spur the development of these new high-paying jobs in high-tech industries. Let me talk about what some of them are.

Right now we have the capacity in this country which we are not using as much as we should, for instance, to create hundreds of thousands of jobs in the wind turbine industry, a growing industry, very rapidly growing industry, but one that needs to continue to increase that rate of acceleration. And what we are now proposing as one measure out of many is to continue the tax incentive, the investment tax credit for wind turbine construction in the United States. And we believe and the economics show very clearly that when we do this, when we foster the creation of this industry, we actually create ten times as many jobs as fostering megawatt creation instead of our old industries. For every megawatt of energy, a new renewable energy program develops, we create 10 times more jobs than if we do so in the old 19th century fossil fuel-based economic systems.

So now we believe we should be building wind turbines in the United States. We should have the high-paid jobs to do that and high-sector, high-skilled manufacturing jobs. We should be having construction jobs putting them on line. We should be building transmission facilities, all of which creates jobs in our country.

Now, we have the capability to do this. We are doing this in the State of Washington. Using an existing wind tax credit, we are building the largest wind turbine facility, farm essentially, in North America in the southeast corner of the State of Washington. It will create enough energy for 70,000 homes. And with the tax credit, it will do so on a market-based rate. But without the Apollo energy project or some other way, that tax credit will expire and we will lose the ability to create these jobs. And these jobs come at a very beneficial moment where the cost of wind turbine energy and a variety of other sources, I am just picking wind turbine to start this discussion, is becoming market based.

And, in fact, there is an interesting phenomenon that has occurred with many of our new technologies and that is what gives us such optimism about our new technologies. The fact of the matter is that over the last decade or so, the cost of energy produced by new technologies has come down dramatically. With every increase in the units of production of wind turbine, solar power, fuel cells, you name it, these new technologies, the cost of energy has come down dramatically.

I have a chart here that indicates how significant that reduction cost has been. For wind-powered energy, if you start in 1980, wind power was costing about 35 cents a kilowatt hour. Now, because of efficiencies caused by new production efficiencies, in 2000 that has come down to 2½, 3 cents; a reduction of a factor of 10 in the last 20 years. And it is projected that that will continue to decline in cost as we get efficiencies in production. And, of course, anyone who thinks about this knows why that happens. The more of these units you produce, we get economies of scale and the price comes down.

The same is the situation in photovoltaics and solar cells. In 1980, just 23 years ago, the price was over $1 a kilowatt hour. That has now come down to about 21, 22 cents, still above markets rates. But the interesting thing about this curve is you see this very significant reduction in cost as the rate of production has gone on up and it is predicted to continue on the downward slope. That is true for geothermal as well. It has had a reduction of more than half the cost in the last 20 years. And biomass, not quite as steep a curve, but still a reduction of cost.

What this shows us is we ought to be optimistic about, if we do engage in the production and incentivize the production of these new technologies, we will reduce cost, we will create jobs, and we will bring those jobs home.

This is a very important issue of bringing these jobs home. It is very clear for anyone who has thought about the future of the world's energy sources, is that the world is going to adopt new technologies. There is no question about that. The question is which countries are going to draw the jobs that are associated with that. And right now, unfortunately, it is not us as much as it should be.

In wind, many of these wind turbines are manufactured in Denmark. In hybrid automobile manufacturing, the cars are being manufactured in Japan. In photovoltaic manufacturing, a German company is leading the way, although much of the production is in the United States. And we are thinking about opening a Denmark-based turbine manufacturer as well. Those jobs need to be in America. Those jobs need to be American jobs. Just as we dominated the aeronautics industry for the last 50 years, as we created the first auto industry at the turn of the century, we need to create an industry that is homegrown and growing those jobs right here in America. And the New Apollo Energy Project is signed to do exactly that. And we do it by using the whole scope of tools that is available to the Federal Government to help to do that.

Number one is to use our tax policy in a way that will actually create jobs in a meaningful way. We have passed a lot of tax cuts in this Chamber recently, but virtually none of them have actually been directed to try to create new technologically driven jobs. And we need to use the Tax Code to create incentives for business people to create these new industries, to give them a little leg up to a little start, and that is why we have created investment tax credits for a whole slew of these new industries, both to the manufacturers, photovoltaics, wind turbine, fuel-efficient hybrid vehicles, retooling costs to the auto industry. It is clear that our local auto industry is going to have some retooling costs to go to either hybrid vehicles or, in the long term, fuel-cell vehicles.

We believe we ought to give our local domestic auto industry tax breaks to help those retooling costs to build this new generation of vehicles to get this job done. But it should not be just for manufacturers; we need to take care of consumers and, ultimately, buyers as well. And that is why in the New Apollo Energy Project we have created incentives to give tax breaks for people to buy fuel-efficient vehicles. Significant incentives. And not only fueled vehicles, but also other energy producing materials including air-conditioning units, including tax credits in a new mortgage incentivized program to help people who build energy-efficient homes. We have a lot to do to get that done.

Now, let me just also indicate there is optimism in getting this job done in real life today. I would like to show a picture of a home in Virginia, and this is a home that was built about a year and a half ago in Virginia, which is not a tropical climate. We have a picture actually in the snow. And this is a home built for $365,000 which is relatively close, maybe a little bit more than actual building costs of a typical home of Virginia in this area, but this home is special. This home, which is a very comfortable home, I have actually been in it or actually the prototype, it was built on the Mall at one time to show us what it was like, or a very similar home. This home, using existing technologies today, has zero net energy consumption, zero net energy consumption.

It does so by using photovoltaic cells incorporated in the roof in the actual shingles to produce electricity. It has a very high degree of insulation value. It uses an in-ground heat pump, and it has a net energy consumption of zero because it can produce, and we one get a net metering bill which allows homeowners who generate electricity to feed their excess electricity back into the grid and to get a credit for doing that. This is a model for the future that is here today. And we need to utilize our Tax Code in a way that helps homeowners who want to recreate homes like this across America, which can happen today in a variety of climates, in almost every climate, to help reduce energy costs. To do that we need to pass a bill that is similar like that.

So what we are saying is this is not pie-in-the-sky, Buck Rogers, over the horizon, next decade. Some of these technologies may take a decade to, in fact, become cost effective; but some are on the market today with a very modest boost, and America ought to be doing it.

Now, I would like to turn to the second goal of the New Apollo Energy Project and that is the goal to reduce America's contribution to global warming gases. We unfortunately, with every other industrialized country, are contributing an enormous load of pollutants to the atmosphere; and what we are creating, all of us, we are putting out of the tailpipes of our cars and out of our smokestacks of our industry and a whole host of any fossil fuel-based system, we are putting millions of tons of carbon dioxide and methane into the air. And these are invisible gases. They really do not bother our eyesight but they will bother our climate in the long term.

To the extent that now science is irrefutable that the concentration of these gases are going to significantly increase during our lifetime, and I have a chart to indicate that, to indicate how significant this problem is, I have a chart of the levels of concentrations of carbon dioxide. And carbon dioxide is a global warming gas basically. The levels of carbon dioxide you will see are relatively consistent for 1,000 years, starting at 800,000. Then we get to the Industrial Age of 1800. We started burning coal and other fossil fuels. And when we do that, we create carbon dioxide and it goes out to the atmosphere. We dump it for free. We treat the atmosphere sort of as a big garbage dump. When that happens, those rates of concentration of carbon dioxide started to go up dramatically, and now in the early 2000s start to rise in almost a vertical fashion.

So for thousands of years we had levels in the 240 parts per million range, which are now going to be skyrocketing in the next century, are anticipated to double at least in the next century. This is doubling of an unprecedented occurrence in the history of the world. And the reason that is significant is that carbon dioxide acts, in a manner of speaking, like a pane of glass or a blanket, depending on how you look at it.

The way carbon dioxide works is that carbon dioxide allows the rays of the sun to come in. Because the rays of the sun come in, there is ultraviolet light. But when the energy bounces back, it bounces back at the infrared spectrum. It is a different spectrum of light. And carbon dioxide traps infrared light. So as a pane of glass works, it traps, if you will, the infrared radiation from going back into space and it warms the planet. And it is a really good thing we have some carbon dioxide in our atmosphere because we would have a very cold planet if we did not have it.

But the problem is if we are going to double the rate of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, it is going to, as you can imagine, trap enormous amounts of energy. And we are already seeing the ramifications of that. The 5 hottest years in recorded history have been in the last 10 years; 1999, I believe, probably was the hottest year in record in the last 10,000 years. And we saw extraordinary damage associated with the change in our climate already.

We have seen significant changes right here in America. We have seen the glaciers in Glacier National Park disappear. It is predicted in the next 75 years, if we keep going at the rate we are going, there will not be any glaciers in Glacier National Park.

In the Arctic, dead Intuit Indians are popping out of the ground because the tundra is melting and the caskets are popping out of the ground.

In the Arctic ice sheet, it could be reduced by 40 percent in the next couple of decades and in depth reduced 40 percent, almost in half; and it is reduced at least 10 percent already.

We are seeing huge increases in very severe hurricane thunderstorm activity so that the insurance losses in the domestic industry have gone up something like 40 or 50 percent in the last several years.

So we are seeing now just a little taste of very significant changes in our climate that are going to continue to go up if we do not do something about it.

What we have proposed, we have introduced in the new Apollo Energy project, we can do this better than this. We have achieved really dramatic results, improving our environment in the last 2 decades because the Federal Government's got busy and it has done some things to clean our air. We have got a lot cleaner air than we did 25 years ago. In sulfur dioxide and various particulate matter, we have made some real strides because the Federal Government has acted, but in this situation Congress has sort of adopted the pose of an ostrich. We have put our heads in the sand, our tails in the air, rather than the American eagle; and it is time for us to pull our heads out of the sand and do something about the climate, and there are some things happening here in Congress.

We have this proposal we have suggested in the House. In the other Chamber there will be an energy debate in the next week or two. There will be a very important vote on trying to create a cap to try to limit the amount of CO_2 that goes into the global atmosphere, and that is something that is in America's long-term interest. We hope that the other Chamber will show some action in that regard.

What we have done is we have used the tools in the Federal tool box to try to reduce the rate of global gas emissions in a way that will preserve the way we live because Americans still want to continue to enjoy easy, accessible transportation, safe transportation. We want to have enjoyable homes. We do not want to change dramatically our lifestyle, and we can do that if we will make some smart investments in new technology.

So what we have done is to try to create incentives to use new technology to reduce global emissions in a variety of ways. One, we suggested that we, in fact, improve the efficiency, for instance, of our air conditioners which have enormous improvements we can make of the efficiency of air conditioners to reduce the demand of electricity and reduce the fossil fuel we burn to create electricity.

We think people who buy autos that are efficient ought to get a tax break to try to reduce the amount of CO_2 emissions we put into the air. We think that we ought to use the regulatory basis to improve the efficiency of our automobiles through the government acting as well as we have to improve the CAFE standards which we stopped in the early 1980s.

It is interesting, we improved the mileage of our cars dramatically in the 1970s, but we stopped in 1983; and we actually have gone backwards in the mileage of our cars. I mean, think about that. At the very time we have created the world's best computers, the world's most vibrant biotech industry, we have gone backwards in what our auto industry has given us for mileage of our cars. That is an abysmal record, and we ought to improve this and get back on this track of improving the fuel efficiency of our vehicles; and that is very possible. That is part of our new Apollo Energy Project.

Now I want to say, too, it is very important to realize there are no silver bullets to any of the challenges we have here tonight, and we recognize that. There is no one technology that is going to solve all of our energy challenges. We believe we have to have a very broad-based approach to do the research and development work that it is going to take to meet our challenges, and that means that we just do not look at wind or solar or geothermal. We think about things outside of the box, if you will, one of those being, for instance, clean coal technology.

There may be a way for us to burn coal and trap, or as the scientists use it, a $24 word, sequester the carbon dioxide as it comes out of the smokestack. If we can sequester the carbon dioxide from coal, we can continue to use coal without, in fact, increasing our CO_2 emission, and we have an enormous supply of coal in this country.

There are other environmental challenges we have to address with this mining; but this is something we need to explore, and we need to have sort of an all-comers approach when we are doing research and development to look at all the potential energy efficiencies and new technologies that we can use in this regard. So we have taken an all-comers approach.

The third goal that we have is to break our addiction from Middle Eastern oil, and I do not think anyone has to be a foreign policy genius to understand that we have to act. Not just Republicans or Democrats, multiple administrations have skewed our foreign policy by necessity because of our addiction to oil. We certainly have not been as aggressive in insisting on Saudi Arabia's ending the terrorist threat to this country as we should have been, and one of the reasons is because of our addiction to Saudi oil. It has made us lethargic in multiple administrations in dealing with this terrorist threat which now we are starting to actually make some improvements on. I heard today that Saudi Arabia is going to start to take some steps finally, way too late, to cut off financing for terrorism; but we need to get rid of this anchor on our foreign policy.

We need to make foreign policy decisions based on the security of Americans, rather than the security of the oil industry. To do that we have got to reduce our dependence on Middle Eastern oil; and what we have suggested is to set a goal, set a goal of saving or eliminating 600,000 barrels of oil a day, oil we otherwise would buy from the Mideast, by the year 2010; and that is an achievable goal using these new technologies. We set the goal of eliminating 2.4 million barrels of oil a day by the year 2015; and assessments by the Department of Energy have indicated that if we use our smarts and use these new technologies, we can, in fact, break that addiction to Middle Eastern oil if, in fact, we will use our heads.

Certainly, jobs are a good reason to do this. Our environment is a good reason to do this, but our personal security is an excellent reason to do this; and we ought to do that for all three reasons. Therefore, we set those effective goals that we would like to achieve.

Now we realize that we do not have all the answers starting out in this effort. So we have also essentially given future administrations flexibility to act; and in our bill, we have basically said that if these goals are not being met in a timely fashion, if we are not reducing our CO_2 emissions down to 1990 levels, as is our goal, if we are not reducing our oil by 600,000 barrels a day, as is our goal, if we are not on a path to create those millions of jobs that we want to create, we would give the administration further flexibility to, in fact, act in ways that it sees fit and certain efficiency measures to improve our productive capability to continue on the path of jobs and improve our efficiency because it is going to be a flexible standard in that regard.

In conclusion this evening, Mr. Speaker, we are very optimistic about our country's energy future. We are only optimistic if the U.S. Congress starts to act in a progressive way that really is in keeping with the can-do spirit of America. There are some naysayers who would say that we are just not smart enough, bright enough, creative enough, we are just going to have to sort of stick with the technologies that were invented in 1899, which much of our industrial energy policy we are still using; but we are the folks who believe that America is brilliant because we keep changing. America is successful because we are not sort of shackled by the ideas of the past or the technologies of the past. So we believe that we ought to adopt this new approach.

I will be working with my colleagues to pass the new Apollo Energy Project. I do not know if it will be this year; but we believe it is going to happen, and it must happen because this is the destiny of the United States of America, the greatest country on Earth.

FEDERAL PRISON INDUSTRIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FRANKS of Arizona). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 7, 2003, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I want to spend a few minutes talking about an issue that I have got a passion for because it impacts workers around the country, and then I am going to be joined by my colleague from Minnesota to talk about another issue that we feel passionate about because it affects those folks who want to buy prescription drugs.

The first thing I want to do is I want to introduce my colleagues to a Federal program. Actually, I want to introduce my colleagues to a company in the United States of America, a company that is growing rapidly; and its automotive component sector last year grew by about 216 percent, and its office furniture segment grew by over 30 percent last year and grew in textiles, grew in a wide variety of different product categories that it produces. An outstanding company, creating jobs.

You kind of say who is this company, who is this great company? We are having some economic tough times around the country. Who is this company that is growing, growing in a number of different market segments and what is its secret to being competitive and growing in a tough economy? What is it doing that maybe other U.S. companies ought to be taking a look at?

The company that we are talking about tonight is called Federal Prison Industries. You say, excuse me, Federal Prison Industries, they are growing jobs? And the answer is, absolutely yes. Federal Prison Industries is one of these government monopolies. They enjoy an advantage which is called ''mandatory sourcing''; and it means that if the Federal Government is looking at buying a product, whether it is shirts for the military, whether it is office furniture for the Federal Aviation Administration, or whether it is automotive components for its fleet of cars, the Federal Government is required to buy these products from Federal Prison Industries regardless of the price, regardless of the quality, regardless of the delivery schedule; and this has enabled Federal Prison Industries, or UNICORP as it is called, to become one of the fastest-growing companies in America today.

So as in certain parts of the country in my district or right outside of my district, unemployment has now reached 8 percent, the highest in 11 years, home to the largest office furniture manufacturing company in America. You wonder how the Federal Government can grow office furniture by double digits in the last 12 months while the industry itself over the last 30 months has probably declined by 30 to 40 percent. Let's see, if the Federal Prison Industries is growing by double digits, the private sector is declining by double digits on an annual basis, what is happening?

What is happening is that Federal Prison Industries is going in and taking some significant business and using their preferred or mandatory source capability, is putting people in the private sector, we call them taxpayers, we call them workers, putting them out of jobs.

Just recently, Federal Prison Industries took this form of competition that they have to a new height. What happened was there was a project, and this was the Federal Aviation Administration requiring $6 million, roughly $6 million of new office furniture for their facilities. It is kind of like, yes, that is a good sized project that any one of a number of private sector companies would be thrilled to get. It is like, yes, we are going to go out and bid for that project.

So Federal Aviation Administration put this project out to bid and a number of companies went through the design process, the specification process, the pricing process and they put in a bid. The Federal Aviation Administration opened the bids and company A won the bid. The company was excited, like yes, we need this business, we have laid off workers with up to 25 years of seniority, up to 28 years of seniority, $6 million may provide the opportunity, it is not going to solve their problem, but it may provide the opportunity to put some of these people back to work.

Are these people back to work? No, because as Federal Prison Industries came into the process, this is very unique. This company had won the bid, ready to go to work and at the last minute Federal Prison Industries walks in and says no, no, no, excuse me, you do not understand the bidding process when you are doing business with the Federal Government.

They said first round of bidding is you guys out in the private sector; the second round of bidding is we get to come in as Federal Prison Industries and take a look at the winning bid, and then we have a second round of bidding. Of course the second round of bidding is one company, Federal Prison Industries. And in this case Federal Prison Industries came in and literally copied the winning bid to the penny.

So they said we matched the bid price of the private sector, we are taking this business. And so now some folks in west Michigan who were hoping to go back to work are not going to have the opportunity to go back to work, but we are going to be creating jobs for folks in Federal prisons.

It is not only the office furniture industry. Federal Prison Industries are huge in textiles. They put a number of textile companies out of business. Just last fall, Hathaway Shirts in New England closed. One of the reasons was one of the dress shirt contracts put out by the Air Force went not to Hathaway Shirts, went to Federal Prison Industries. This time, though, it was not that a few workers would be laid off, the company shut its doors and Hathaway Shirts, at least being made in that plant, are no longer made in the United States. Hathaway Shirts tried to compete. Federal Prison Industries was the organization that put the last nail in the coffin that resulted in the factory closing and these people being put out of work.

It is absolutely outrageous what is going on and what is going on with this Department of Justice, that this Department of Justice believes that the best way to rehabilitate Federal prisoners is by putting taxpayers out of work, and that the best way to compete and create high-quality and high-paying jobs in America today is to create new jobs for prisoners. And they are talking about building 11 new plants, new jobs for prisoners that are high-quality, high-paying jobs that pay in the neighborhood of 23 cents to $1.15 an hour. Of course they pay no benefits.

They pay no taxes. Think about it. They pay absolutely no local taxes, so that is an advantage. They pay no State taxes, no sales taxes or Federal taxes. They do not pay any taxes. They put taxpayers out of work. It is a huge, huge problem. They are doing this in a whole series of different industries.

Look at the kinds of things that they make. Clothing and textiles is a business group. Electronics is a business group. Graphics business group; fleet management; vehicular components business group; industrial products business group; office furniture business group; and recycling activities business group.

They have declared war on American manufacturing, American manufacturing that is already under attack by low-cost producers in China and other parts of Asia, and it is very interesting. My colleagues come to the floor and they rail against Chinese prison labor, saying these people work in unsafe conditions. It is interesting. American prisoners, do they have the protection of OSHA? Absolutely not. So they are low paid, and work in unsafe conditions. They are government sponsored, just like our prisoners are government sponsored. So our manufacturers not only have to compete against low-cost manufacturing from overseas, they are also now in the process of having to fight their own government, their own Department of Justice.

Like I said, this is an industry that this Department of Justice has said is going to be a growth industry for the Federal Government. They anticipate growing. And in office furniture alone, and this is an industry that has declined 30–40 percent, one would think that Federal Prison Industries would realize this is an industry that is facing some hard economic times, and that they might slack off in terms of the amount of business that they would take out of the Federal Government and let the private sector compete for more of this business. But when we look from 2002 to 2003, what has Federal Prison Industries' strategy been in office furniture? They are authorized to grow their business in office furniture by an additional 50 percent.

Office furniture workers in America who are competing against Canada, China, Korea, Indonesia, now are also competing against their own Federal Government, and their own Federal Government is not even giving them the slightest of a break and saying we have got the opportunity, we are going to increase our volume by up to 50 percent. They are looking for the growth numbers.

Federal Prison Industries, taxes; and this is from their annual report. As a wholly-owned corporation of the Federal Government, Federal Prison Industries is exempt from Federal and State income taxes, gross receipts taxes, and property taxes. That is not a bad way to run a business.

We have a reform proposal in place. The interesting thing for the reform proposal, we are not asking for Federal Prison Industries to be eliminated, although some of my colleagues would say that they should not be competing for these jobs, and that is exactly what Congress said back in the 1930s when they created Federal Prison Industries. They said they should have minimal to no impact on free labor, they should not be competing with the private sector. But they do.

All I am asking is let the workers in west Michigan, Minnesota, New England, and other States in the South, let them just compete for the opportunity to sell their products. Right now they cannot compete. What are the businesses that they are in? Clothing and textiles, $157 million; electronics, $116 million. They grew from $116 million to $132 million in electronics. Fleet management, automotive, which is an industry facing tough competition from overseas, and now they are facing it from their own government. Fleet management; in 2001 Federal Prison Industries grew their automotive component sales from $31 million in 2001 to $99 million in 2002.

Thank you very much, Federal Prison Industries. I wonder how many private sector workers they put out of work when they grew their business by $68 million?

Office furniture, they went from $174 million to $217 million. They are authorized for another expansion of up to 50 percent in 2004.

Services, they grew from only $8 million, but they are on the right track as far as they are concerned. They are up to $12 million.

Mr. Speaker, this is an area that needs congressional oversight. When American workers are under attack, I think it is time for this Congress to stand up and say we are going to stand up for American workers, we are going to stand up for American taxpayers. It is the right thing to do. And we are going to allow these folks to compete, to keep their jobs and compete against Chinese workers, to compete against Korean workers, and we are going to allow them to compete against American prison labor, labor that is paid 23 cents an hour to $1.15 an hour in tax-free facilities which have no OSHA safeguards. It is the right thing to do.

We need a manufacturing base in the United States. And our reform bill does not say we are not going to have prisoners do nothing. We increase technical training. We increase the amount of work opportunities that we give to prisoners, but we say they should make things that will be used in the not-for-profit sectors. That is what Michigan does in its prisons. It does not compete against the private sector. We should take that kind of model and apply it to the Federal Government and Federal Prison Industries.

It is time for this Congress to act. We are looking forward to the Committee on the Judiciary moving a reform bill that does exactly that, allows American workers to again compete for their jobs, compete for the jobs that enable them to provide health care and a living to their families.

I walk around my district and I cringe every time when I run into a worker who says, I just got laid off; recognizing that as that person has gotten laid off, we have put people in our prisons to work for maybe the first time. But it is totally inappropriate for this government, for this Department of Justice to believe that its best strategy for dealing with inmates is to put them to work at the expense of American workers.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome one of my colleagues who is here tonight and change the subject. This is an issue that my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT), and I have a passion on because it addresses a real concern that we have, and again it is about competitiveness. I know my colleague is a firm believer in competitiveness, whether it is supplying products to the Federal Government or whether it is providing prescription drugs to our senior citizens or to other Americans. It is not just senior citizens.

One of the things that we face in America today is the gentleman and I both live in border States. One of the things that is happening in border States on the north and the southern borders of the U.S. is that consumers are rather smart. What are they doing?

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT).

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and it is not just Minnesotans and Michiganers who are smart. One of our favorite Presidents, Ronald Reagan, said it best: Markets are more powerful than armies. Starting several years ago, consumers figured out that they could buy their prescription drugs cheaper in Canada and Mexico, and now they know in Europe and almost every other industrialized country in the world they can buy the same drugs for dramatically less.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will explain to me, many of these drugs are manufactured in the U.S. We are the largest market in the world for most of these prescription drugs. One would think in the largest market in the world, and when the drugs, many of them are made in the United States, we would not be paying a premium, we would be paying the lowest price. That is not the case?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, as they used to say on The Tonight Show, you would be wrong, oh, great one. That is the irony. We are the world's best customers by any measure, and some people have challenged some of the sources, but nobody challenges the numbers. The numbers speak for themselves. Even now the pharmaceutical industry acknowledges that the world's best customers, the Americans, pay the world's highest prices for their drugs.

We are not just talking about a little bit more.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. We pay the highest prices. We do the development, the testing, we do all the market research and all of that here in the United States. We are the largest market. These drugs are made here, and we pay the highest prices.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. The gentleman is correct. It is one of the mysteries that we as public policymakers have been wrestling with for several years trying to figure out why is it the world's best customers pay the world's highest prices. It seems to me that we have an obligation as policymakers not only to try and get answers to those questions but, more importantly, to try and do something about it. I think the reason is, if I can just say this, if you go to Tokyo, Japan, and this is starting to change in Japan because Japan is starting to open up its markets, but for many years, if you went to Tokyo and you wanted to have a good steak——

Mr. HOEKSTRA. You would never want a good steak in Tokyo. It is too expensive.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. It would be over $100. The same steak that you could get in Grand Rapids, Michigan, for $15 or the same steak that I could get in Rochester, Minnesota, for $15, you would pay over $100 in Tokyo. Another example is blue jeans in the former Soviet Union. The Soviets decided that people did not need blue jeans, did not want blue jeans, and therefore they were not going to produce blue jeans in the former Soviet Union. So a black market started to develop for blue jeans. The price reached over $100 a pair for blue jeans. The example is analogous because any time you have a captive market, as they have in Japan with beef or they had in the Soviet Union with blue jeans, you will find that market forces will just go amuck because you are a captive market. Americans are being held captive not so much by the big pharmaceutical companies, but by our own FDA.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I am assuming that the differences in price between the U.S. and Canada or the U.S. and Europe are not that significant. You would think that with the trade agreements and those types of things that we have that there would be some leveling out of prices. You might be able to explain some of the differences because of currency fluctuations and maybe some government regulations from one country to another, but I would not expect that you would find major differences in prices for products that many times were made in the same factory and just distributed from one point and distributed around the world. I am wrong again?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Wrong again. Let me give you an example. This is a drug that my 85-year-old father takes. It is called Coumadin. Coumadin is a wonderful drug. It actually was developed at the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. It was probably funded with some government research dollars.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. It was paid for by the taxpayers. Originally, as it was developed, the drug was called Warfarin. They are basically identical drugs, but Warfarin is used as a rat poison. It is a blood thinner. What they do is they give it to rats, rats will eat it, they go back to their little dens, they bleed to death internally, no mess, no fuss. It kills rats. They found that this made a great blood thinner for human beings as well.

Let me give you the differences in what Americans pay. The average price for this package of Coumadin in the United States is about $84.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I think you have just given me more information on Coumadin than I would like to have. I really did not want to know all of that. Let us just talk about the price.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Warfarin, Coumadin, developed at the University of Wisconsin. The price here in the United States, about $84 for this package. The price in Canada, only $25. But here is the real kicker. Over in Europe they buy this same drug, as a matter of fact we bought this drug in Munich, Germany, for about $16. About $85 in the United States; $16 in Germany. Here is the other interesting thing. People say, well, they have price controls in Canada. To a certain degree that is true. I am not one that supports price controls and neither, I think, do you.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Not at all.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Here is the interesting thing. They do not have price controls in Germany. What they do in Germany is what we ought to do here, and that is they allow the pharmacists to shop for the best price.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Whether it is from the Swiss or Spain or Canada or the U.S. Again, I am assuming many times that that product is going to be built in a factory perhaps even in the United States; or a single or a couple of factories are going to supply the world market for this product.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. There are only 600 FDA-approved facilities that make prescription drugs in the world. They have to be made in an FDA-approved facility. So, yes, these drugs essentially, this probably came out of a plant in the United States. Or it may have come out of a plant in Puerto Rico, which is part of the United States. Or it may have been made over in Europe somewhere, but they supply essentially the entire world from that plant. It is much more efficient.

I also have in my hand something, and it bothers me, some of these prices because we bought 10 and if anybody doubts my research, we have the receipt for the 10 largest-selling drugs. We bought these at the airport pharmacy in Munich, Germany. The total for this worked out to about $373 American. Those same drugs, we checked the prices here in the United States of America, and again cash prices, walking in off the street, we are not talking about going to an HMO or any of these other things, the cash price was almost $1,100 in the United States, more than double, almost triple the price for the same 10 most popular drugs.

Let me give you this example. This is the one that really chaps my hide. This is a drug called Tamoxifen. It is a very effective breast cancer drug. But it was developed essentially with Federal taxpayer dollars at the National Institutes of Health. They paid for almost all the research. This drug in the United States, this package of drugs sells for $360. We bought it at the Munich airport pharmacy about a month ago for $59.05 American. $360 here, $60 there. Worse than that, the American taxpayers paid for almost all the research costs on this drug.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. And you do not have to go to Germany. I met, I think, one of your constituents today or at least a woman from Minnesota today who I thought was dynamic. What was her name, Kate?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Kate. Kate Stahl.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Kate Stahl. She wants to get arrested. Why would she get arrested?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Kate Stahl is a true American patriot. Once in a while you meet some people like this; and you just say again, as Ronald Reagan said, people who say there are no more American heroes, they do not know where to look. We met an American hero today. Her name is Kate Stahl. I want every Member of Congress to get a copy of last week's edition of the U.S. News and World Report, and there is a special report by Susan Brink, the title of which is ''Health on the Border, Elderly Americans head north and south to find drugs they can afford.'' It features Kate Stahl who works with the Senior Federation in the State of Minnesota. The caption above her little picture here says, ''I'd like nothing better than to be thrown in jail.'' She stands on the shoulders of the Sons of Liberty who threw tea in Boston Harbor and said, enough is enough. She calls herself a drug runner. She goes to Canada to buy drugs for her friends.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. What does she do that would get her thrown into jail? Going to Canada or going to Mexico or going to Europe is not illegal to buy these drugs, is it?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. The FDA says it is.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. All right. Wrong again?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Wrong again. They treat Kate Stahl and literally almost a million, or more than a million, Americans just like her, they treat her like a common criminal. This is an 84-year-old grandmother who is only doing this to try and save her friends and neighbors some dollars on the cost of prescription drugs. If one of them is suffering from breast cancer, $360 is a lot of money. They can afford $60, but $360 is a lot of money. And it repeats itself, with all the drugs. Zoloft, Zocor, we have got all the drugs. Glucophage. This is outrageous what they charge for Glucophage here in the United States. This drug has been around a long time. It is a miracle, marvelous drug. It really helps people with diabetes. But the bottom line is Americans are required to pay way too much because they are a captive market.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. The interesting thing, reclaiming my time, why is it so critical that we are talking about this tonight? The reason that my colleague from Minnesota and I are talking about this, and how many years has the gentleman been working on this?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Longer than I want to remember. Actually I got started with this about 5 years ago. I always tell people that I have moved from fan to fanatic. Winston Churchill said a fanatic is one that cannot change his mind and will not change the subject.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Which is kind of where I am with Federal Prison Industries. I have never been a fan of them, but I have been fanatical about it just because of the sheer injustice. But this is absolutely critical right now, just like the Federal Prison Industries because we are in a manufacturing slump right now and we need every manufacturing job we can get. But this is critical because we are looking at creating a Federal benefit, expanding the Medicare program to include prescription drugs. Actually, we could probably take care of much of the problem with prescription drugs if we would just deal with the pricing.

That is the scary thing. You cannot create a Federal entitlement for prescription drugs and just promise folks that you are going to, and help folks that probably genuinely need it. We are going to do that and we are going to feel good about doing that; but at the same time as we provide them with that benefit, you cannot ignore the price side. Because if you ignore the price side, we are just going to explode the cost. And if we get at the price side, we can offer more benefits to more individuals, or we can offer the same benefits at a much lower cost to the American taxpayer. That is why we need to work on the benefit side at the same time that we are working on the price side, or we are going to find ourselves with a program that we just cannot afford.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Absolutely. Let me just talk about this Glucophage. This package of Glucophage in the United States sells for over $100. We bought it in Munich, Germany for $5. $5.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Let us run this by again. $100 in the U.S. and $5 in Germany. This may be one of the bigger differentials of the drugs that you bought.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. I must admit I am using it as an example because it is probably the most egregious example, with the possible exception of Tamoxifen, which the taxpayers paid for.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. But just the sheer difference between these, for $5 in Germany to $100. The thing is, for anybody who has traveled, you typically do not go to an airport and expect best prices. It would be interesting what would happen if you went to a pharmacy in Germany and see whether you would be paying more or less. But the bottom line is an American could be in Munich and could buy that, the same package that when they left the U.S. it would cost them $100; if they needed a refill, they would be paying $5 in Germany.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. That is the point. If we are going to have a prescription drug benefit for seniors, which I think virtually everyone agrees we should, we ought to first of all deal with the issue of affordability. Because just shifting the responsibility of buying $100 Glucophage onto the shoulders of the taxpayers really makes no sense, because ultimately we are going to bankrupt our children if we make a stupid mistake and do not deal with this issue of affordability in price. Listen, we are Republicans. I am a Republican. I do not think the word ''profit'' is a dirty word, but I do think the word ''profiteer'' is. I think it is time if we are going to get in this business, we ought to demand some accountability from the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. The other thing that happens on this, there is a ripple effect, because when you go to Canada, and we are competing against Canada for automotive manufacturing, furniture manufacturing, when a Canadian worker needs to pay for health care and if prescription drugs are a part of their benefit, all of a sudden providing that benefit to a Canadian worker is a whole lot cheaper than it is providing that same benefit to a UAW employee or retiree in Detroit, Michigan, or to an active worker. That just says we are making it more expensive.

If you talk to your manufacturing people today, what are they complaining about? They are complaining about the escalating cost of health care which many and most people say is being driven primarily by the escalating cost of prescription drugs. The cost of prescription drugs is one thing. The cost of health care is another. But that has a ripple effect into other parts of our economy, which makes it more difficult for our workers to be competitive against other workers around the world. Again, Germany, they are buying that stuff for $5. So for a German company or the German Government to provide that benefit to a factory worker is $5. Here it is $100. Where do you think it is going to be more expensive to manufacture a car or anything else? It is going to be more expensive here in the United States. So it has a ripple effect. It is not just prescription drugs. It is a ripple effect throughout. It is kind of like a cancer that starts eating at all these unintended consequences. That is why we have got to deal with it, and we have got to deal with it as we go through this prescription drug plan and this prescription drug debate.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Absolutely. The time is now. You mentioned in coming from Michigan, General Motors has been a fabulous employer. Not only in the State of Michigan but for suppliers all over the world. The interesting thing is General Motors, I met with a General Motors lobbyist last week. Do you know how much they are going to spend this year on prescription drugs, the company? This is just for their employees and their retirees. $1.3 billion. GM will spend $1.3 billion. What is worse, that number is going up 16, 17, 18 percent per year. That is a cost before they sell the first automobile, before they sell any cars. Those are costs they have to pay for.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Just think, the numbers and the examples you are using, a conservative estimate says rather than the U.S. price being 20 times what they might be able to get it somewhere else, let us say U.S. companies could save, 25, 30 percent. For a company like General Motors, for any employer, that gets to be real money. Think about it. For General Motors if they are spending $1.3 billion, that would be $300 million, either in lower prices, increased competitiveness, or better services and more benefits to their employees.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Right.

We are absorbing that cost, and I think when we talked about this at a conference today, what somebody said is we are subsidizing the rest of the world in health care and prescription drugs, and we are subsidizing, I think your term is, the ''starving French,'' or the ''starving Swedes,'' or the ''starving Swiss.''

Mr. GUTKNECHT. You can use whichever. I would say Americans are willing to pay their fair share. We understand there is a cost for research. We understand we have to pay that $3.9 billion that one of the big pharmaceutical companies will spend this year on advertising and marketing. We understand that has to be paid. We are willing to pay our fair share. We are willing to subsidize the people in Sub-Saharan Africa. But we should not be willing to subsidize the starving Swiss.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. This affects the ability of GM to sell cars in Europe. This affects the ability of GM to sell cars in the United States against cars that are made in Europe by companies who are providing benefits to their workers. And we are subsidizing their health care. We are subsidizing health care in Canada, we are subsidizing it in Mexico, we are subsidizing it in Japan and in Europe, because we are paying prices that the rest of the world is unwilling to pay which means these companies can go to other places in the world and sell the prescription drugs for prices significantly lower than ours.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Well, the real bottom line is virtually every other company has to compete in a world marketplace. What we are saying is let markets work. Open up the markets.

Finally, we are all concerned about safety. But this is a counterfeit-proof package. It is a blister pack, one of the first versions. It is getting better.

There is a great little company out in California that is helping to develop the technology for the new $20 bills to make them counterfeit-proof. It is good enough for the U.S. Treasury, but, so far, not good enough for the FDA.

We are going to demonstrate in the coming weeks how we can have safety-sealed counterfeit-proof packaging which will guarantee the safety of drugs wherever they happen to come from. If the drug companies have to compete in a world marketplace, the way General Motors does, the way Eastman Kodak does, the way IBM does, the way Microsoft does, or the way every other company in America has to compete, you will see prices in the United States drop dramatically; and that amounts to billions and billions of dollars of savings, not just for retirees, but for all Americans.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. There is no reason drugs cannot cross borders safely. We have food that crosses borders safely, and there is no reason we cannot develop a system to maintain the integrity of prescription drugs as they go from Canada into the U.S. and those types of things. We can put the measure in place to ensure the safety and security of our prescription drug supply.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. We just have a few more minutes, and I will close by saying this. The gentleman is exactly right. We import in the United States thousands and thousands of tons of fruits and vegetables and meats. As a matter of fact, this year we will import 318,000 tons of plantains. If we can safely import 318,000 tons of plantains, we can surely figure out a way to import Prilosec and Glucophage.

There is no way people will argue we cannot do this safely. We have the technology today. The time has come to open up markets, let our people go and stop this captive market. We will see prices drop in the United States by at least 30 percent.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I thank my colleague for joining me talking about prescription drugs and talking about Prison Industries.

SENATE—Thursday, June 12, 2003

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JOHN E. SUNUNU, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Today's prayer will be offered by our guest Chaplain, Dr. Virgil A. Wood of the Pond Street Baptist Church in Providence, RI.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Dear God, we thank You for the remnants of love that remain within beloved America.

We confess that far too often, we have embraced the anti-love, in thought, word, and deed; please forgive us and mend our every flaw.

In the conflicts of life itself may we find the courage to meditate, to ponder, and to wrestle with the principalities and the powers.

When the conscious light of Your love breaks through our common journey, may we take off our shoes and worship, for that indeed will have become holy ground.

Grant us grace, dear God, to go forward and match deeds of love to our sacred words, that the love which is in the community of all humanity may perfect itself in us.

Having come now to understand how we of all faiths, races, and nationalities, as one people under God, could go forward, may we forever trust and abide in love.

And in the name of the one God of love, we offer this prayer. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JOHN E. SUNUNU led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 12, 2003.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN E. SUNUNU, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, to perform the duties of the Chair.

TED STEVENS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. SUNUNU thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, for the information of all Senators, this morning the Senate will resume consideration of S. 14, the Energy bill. The Graham amendment relating to the Outer Continental Shelf is currently pending. Under a previous agreement, there will be up to 90 minutes of debate prior to the vote on or in relation to the amendment. Therefore, the first vote will occur at approximately 11 a.m.

In addition to the Graham amendment, the Senate will consider other amendments to the Energy bill, and Members should expect rollcall votes throughout the day.

It is also possible that the Senate will be able to consider the FAA reauthorization later today. We will notify Members if that becomes available. Also, the Senate may consider additional nominations on the Executive Calendar. We will be working to schedule votes on the nominations that can be cleared.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we recognize there are efforts being made to go to the FAA bill. We are attempting to clear that on this side. We have a couple of hurdles. I think we have completed one, and we still have one other problem to eliminate. We will certainly know that in the next hour or so.

If that is the case, it is my understanding, having spoken to the two leaders, after we dispose of the amendments pending, the leader would want to go off of the Energy bill and go to the FAA bill. We are trying to allow that to happen if we can clear that.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

ENERGY POLICY ACT OF 2003

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 14, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 14) to enhance the energy security of the United States, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Graham (FL) Amendment No. 884, to strike the provision requiring the Secretary of the Interior to conduct an inventory and analysis of oil and natural gas resources beneath all of the waters of the Outer Continental Shelf.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before we do that, I ask unanimous consent that the time on this matter, which is divided an hour on that side and 30 minutes on this side, be divided equally.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask that the time be charged equally to both sides.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, we have two Senators who wish to speak on the pending amendment. The junior Senator from Texas wishes to speak for 5 minutes. I understand the Senator from California wishes to speak for 15 minutes immediately following the Senator from Texas.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I will not object at all. I want to understand, I thought I already had 15 minutes from yesterday. I am just clarifying that point.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, some of the time has been used on quorum calls. That time was charged equally against both sides this morning. The Senator still has 15 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

Mr. REID. We may not have 15 minutes for somebody else, but there are 15 minutes for the Senator from California, Mrs. BOXER.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Quorum calls have been charged proportionately to both sides. At this time, the Senator from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 884

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I rise to say a few words in opposition to the Graham-Feinstein amendment. I am opposed to this amendment for several significant reasons.

This amendment would restrict our ability to conduct an inventory and analysis of our own energy resources. Section 105 of this bill will commission a comprehensive scientific study by the Department of the Interior concerning the energy resources of the U.S. Outer Continental Shelf. It will provide the groundwork for an informed debate on the offshore drilling issue.

This amendment will only decrease our knowledge of these issues. That is why I call it a know-nothing amendment. The American public has a right and a need to know the status of its national resources. We survey, catalog, and inventory our forests, our fisheries, our coal reserves, and other valuable living and non-living natural resources. We should also allow for the study of our domestic offshore energy resources.

The information that we currently have concerning our oil and natural gas resources is limited, dated, and lacks the specificity required for this important debate. This legislation will allow the Department of the Interior to use the latest technology, except drilling, to update its resource estimates using all the available scientific data.

As we reexamine our growing energy needs for the future, the geopolitical reality of our Nation's dependence on foreign oil becomes all the more disturbing. The demand for natural gas in this country continues to increase, while domestic production continues to decrease. Decreased production will result in American increased prices for natural gas, fertilizers, agricultural chemicals and electricity.

The OCS survey is vital to our energy future, and to our ability in the Senate to make energy decisions based on the best available information.

The energy industry in my home State of Texas and all throughout the Nation has established a strong record on safety and environmental issues, and they are the most critical part of our continuing work to find alternative sources for energy.

While we are debating this matter on the floor, Cuba has already launched well projects north of the island in the Gulf of Mexico. Just last month, the Castro regime invited oil companies from other nations to drill, just miles away from our own international borders. We should not restrict our Nation's knowledge and ability to make responsible decisions regarding energy policy, while other nations plow ahead, with no U.S. oversight, no U.S. safety regulations, and no U.S. environmental standards.

With the prospect of energy challenges looming on the horizon, now is not the time to ransom our sovereignty over our energy resources for the sake of short term political gain.

These natural resources belong to the American people, and they deserve an accounting of them. The debate over offshore drilling is a critical one, and it deserves our full attention.

I oppose this amendment as imprudent and inappropriate. That is why it was defeated by a strong bipartisan vote in the Senate Energy Committee. That is why it deserves to be defeated again.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Texas for being brief and to the point. I am also glad he went first because I could not disagree more with what he said. It gives me a really good jumping-off place for my comments this morning.

I am pleased to cosponsor Senator GRAHAM's amendment to strike section 105 from the Senate Energy Bill, and I thank him and Senators FEINSTEIN, WYDEN, and CANTWELL for their heroic efforts in the committee itself to remove this section so we would not have to have this fight on the Senate floor.

The Senator from Texas called this amendment a know-nothing amendment. I call it an amendment that stands up for American values. What could be more of an American value than protecting and honoring the environmental legacy given to us by God, a legacy we must protect. It is our duty to protect. Section 105, which I wish to strike, would require the Secretary of the Interior to conduct an inventory and analysis of oil and gas reserves beneath the waters of the Outer Continental Shelf, including the moratorium areas. Let me repeat that. This is such a radical proposal that it would allow harmful analysis to go on, and I will explain why, beneath the waters of an area or areas in our country where they are so precious, they are so beautiful, they are so respected by the people we represent, that they have been subjected to moratoria by this Congress for 20 years now.

By the way, that tracks how long I have been in Congress actually, just about. I have supported that all the time, and this provision undermines the premise behind these moratoria, which is to protect these magnificent areas from activities such as the ones authorized in this bill.

It may sound very simple to say, oh, we are going to analyze what resources lie off our coasts and in our ocean, but when we realize the kind of work that will go on—seismic surveys, sediment samplings, other destructive exploration technologies that harm ocean habitat and marine life—it is worth getting upset about.

To this point, this bill is really an abomination. I do not know how else to put it. I am known to be very direct. It brings back nuclear energy, and I compliment the Presiding Officer today for his work to try and strip the subsidies to the nuclear power industry from this bill. We do not even know what to do with the nuclear waste we have. It is dangerous. It lasts for thousands of years. We do not even know what to do with it, and now this Senate has decided to turn away from the Wyden-Sununu amendment and say to nuclear power companies, before we know what to do with this waste, we are going to back you up, we are going to give you a loan guarantee so if you want to build a nuclear powerplant, you can go get a $3 billion loan guarantee from the Federal Government. So if there is a crisis, if there is a problem, if the plant does not work, you are going to be bailed out by the taxpayers.

Well, on behalf of the taxpayers of California, we are a State that has turned away from a couple of our nuclear powerplants because we have had problems—and now we are encouraging it. That is what this bill does. This bill has a safe harbor provision for ethanol. Maybe ethanol will be fine, but we are not sure. A blue ribbon panel in EPA said they are not sure. If there are problems, if people get sick, if children are harmed, there is a safe harbor for the companies making ethanol. What a corporate give-away is this bill. And now we are turning our back on 20 years of bipartisanship and 20 years of leadership from Republican and Democratic Presidents and saying, go into those precious areas in the ocean, drill your heart away and we are going to tell you, as the Senator from Texas said, oh, that is a good thing for the country.

Wrong. It is a bad thing for our country. It is a bad thing for our children. It is a bad thing for their children because we would be undermining the protections for these valued, sensitive coastal areas and ignoring again this bipartisan moratoria we have had for years on the Outer Continental Shelf.

By the way, we beat this back 2 years ago. I cannot wait to tell the people of California what is happening. I am saddened by it, but I cannot wait to tell them because they need to hear it. This is another environmental rollback that is deadly serious. It was tried 2 years ago and it did not succeed, but I am not sanguine this time because we have had changes in this particular body.

Two years ago, Senator JOHN KERRY and I offered an amendment, which was included in the manager's amendment, to strip this deadly language out and to preserve the moratorium, and it passed.

Now, I will tell my colleagues why my people in California are so adamantly opposed to drilling off our coast. A very long time ago, 34 years ago, there was an incident that was so horrific that Californians who were around then will never forget it, and their children are told stories. In 1969, disaster struck when a major oil spill occurred from a platform 6 miles offshore from Santa Barbara, CA. Over 4 million gallons of oil poured into the ocean, contaminating the waters, killing thousands of animals and ruining over 200 square miles of Santa Barbara's coastline. Prior to that event, Santa Barbara's beaches were considered a recreational paradise with some of the most beautiful coastline in our country. After the spill, these same beaches smothered with a slick coating of oil, resulting in a loss of millions of dollars in tourism and recreation and broken hearts all over my State. Local governmental officials, community leaders, grassroots organizations, conservation groups, and citizens rallied for justice after the destruction of their coast. They decided then that absolutely no more drilling should be permitted off the coast.

Due to the Santa Barbara spill in California, there is strong and enduring support for the protection of our oceans and our coastlines, and any candidate for any office coming into my State saying we ought to go back to the days of drilling off that coast is not going to get the support of Democrats, is not going to get the support of Republicans, is not going to get the support of independents, and everybody else in between. They can sugar-coat it any way they want. We know the truth. We saw it in Santa Barbara. We made a decision that any potential benefits that might be derived from future oil and gas development were not worth the risk of destroying our priceless coastal treasures. I will show a picture of my coastline because it is worth looking at.

My friends on both sides of the aisle who support this underlying amendment, if they think they are helping the economy, they are not. The economy of mine and other coastal States relies on a beautiful and clean environment. The economic benefits of our California beaches are very clear. Two-thirds of California residents visit one of the State beaches at least once a year. In 2001, there were at least 132 million visits to California beaches by people from outside the State. These are your constituents. Maybe it is even you. Maybe you even came with your family to our beaches. These visits generated $61 billion in total spending in my State. That is an economic boom.

There are some in this Senate who think the only economic boom to their States is drilling on precious areas. That is a good debate. But the people of California have made this decision. They have decided they do not want it. They understand the commercial fishing industry relies on a beautiful unspoiled coast and ocean. It is a $554 million industry with 17,000 jobs, and they say no to this bill; the shipping industry, 8.6 billion and 179,000 jobs. We are talking tourism, we are talking fishing, we are talking shipping, and we are saying no to this bill.

This Graham amendment will help us preserve that economy. These are hard economic times in our State. The last thing we need is to go back. Tourism, beautiful beaches, a clean ocean, that is what my State is about. We saw what happened in Santa Barbara. We made that decision. We have permanently banned new oil and gas development in State waters. How can we go out adjacent to State waters to the Outer Continental Shelf and run the risk of destroying this value of our State? It is about California's economy. It is also about a beautiful environment.

I will show a couple of other pictures of this breathtaking environment. This is our southern California coast. The picture we show now is Malibu Beach.

We are talking about $61 billion in total spending each year because of our magnificent coast and our ocean. When it is added up, the underlying bill is destructive to our environment, which Republicans, Democrats, and Independents in my State agree must be preserved. It undermines our economy.

By allowing predrilling activities to occur, our coast is threatened, commercial fishing jobs are at risk, fishing jobs are at risk, tourism is at risk, California's economy is at risk, and the beauty of California's coastline is at risk. That goes for every State along my coast, be it Washington, Oregon, or California.

As I look back to the bipartisanship we have had with the President in the past, Republicans and Democrats, this is the first time we have seen this move.

What is the history of Federal moratoria? For two decades Federal waters off the coast of California have been protected from additional offshore oil and gas development through a series of temporary bans. President George H.W. Bush signed an executive memorandum in 1990 which placed the 10-year moratorium on new oil and gas leasing. He did not try to go in there with seismic testing and destructive methods. He did not get up and say, we better drill there and find out what is there. He understood it. President Clinton understood it. He extended this moratorium to 2012.

Section 105 of this Energy bill completely ignores this moratoria by promoting destructive exploratory drilling in the Outer Continental Shelf. In a letter to me, the California Coastal Commission states the provision ''would seriously undermine the long-standing bipartisan legislative moratoria . . . that has been included in every appropriations bill for more than 20 years.'' We must defeat efforts to undermine the protection of our coast and the rights of coastal States and local governments to make decisions to protect their coasts. Section 105 of the Energy bill is intended for one purpose, I say to my colleagues, and one purpose only. You can dress up a pig and you can put lipstick on a pig, but it is still a pig. In this case, it is to promote oil and gas development on our precious coast.

Republicans in my State don't want that. Democrats in my State don't want that. Independents in my State don't want that. By allowing the Secretary of the Interior to use invasive, exploratory technologies, including the seismic surveys—sections 105 permits activities that have detrimental impacts on the marine environment, including air pollution from machinery and disturbance to the sea flora. While these seismic surveys sound innocent, let me explain what we are talking about.

Huge boats with large acoustic equipment go out into the ocean, a high-pressure air gun sends out constant high-decibel explosive pulses through the water and deep into the sea floor. We know these sounds have been reported to cause significant damage to fish and their ability to locate prey and avoid predators. As a result, the survival of fish populations is threatened by this technology. That is why the commercial fishing business in my State opposes this bill. These explosive pulses are also within the auditory range of many other marine species, including whales. In fact, when this technology was used in the Bahamas and off the coast of Mexico, it caused whales to become disoriented and as a result to be fatally stranded on beaches.

Seismic surveys are accompanied by extraction of numerous samples from the sea floor. These samples are collected by dropping large hollow metal tubes from ships to vertically puncture the sea floor. Reports from Environmental Defense show the collection of these samples damages the ocean floor and harms the habitat of numerous species.

The Graham amendment is supported by the California Coastal Commission, in addition to the Natural Resources Defense Council, Environmental Defense, U.S. Public Interest Research Group, Sierra Club, Coast Alliance, Ocean Conservancy, Oceana, and the League of Conservation Voters.

This is a serious issue for the most populous State in the Union and for the entire west coast. I urge my colleagues who say they care about what people believe, care about the values of the American people, to seriously look at the danger and the damage this is going to cause. We stripped it out of the appropriations bill a couple years ago, and it is back now. I hope my colleagues will strip it out again. If you do not, there are going to be a lot of outraged citizens in this country when they find out what could happen from the underlying bill. I again urge colleagues to support this Graham amendment.

Since my colleague from Washington is in the Chamber, Senator CANTWELL, let me say to her—I mentioned this in her absence—how much I appreciated the heroic effort she made in the committee to strip this out of the bill. I hope we will be successful today.

I thank my colleague. I yield the remainder of my time to the managers of the bill, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MURKOWSKI). The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I wish to comment on what I hope is the progress of our Energy Policy Act of 2003 that is before us. It is a policy that is essential to our Nation's energy security, to our economic security. I think it will play a vital role in where we go with energy.

This is comprehensive legislation that has to do with production, particularly in the West; let's say domestic production. It has to do with research, which is what this amendment is about. It has to do with understanding where we go in the future with alternative fuels. We take a total look at where we are.

One important provision calls for an inventory of the Outer Continental Shelf and the resources there for the United States. This requires the Secretary of the Interior to survey all the Outer Continental Shelf resources currently under production and under moratoria, and to develop an inventory of those reserves in the areas that are not in production. An analysis will utilize the latest available remote sensing technologies, but the legislation specifically states that drilling will not be permitted in conducting this inventory. The measure directs the Secretary of the Interior to submit a report to Congress on the inventory 6 months after enactment of the bill.

Offshore production, of course, has played an important part in our domestic picture. The western and central Gulf of Mexico have proven world class areas for natural gas and petroleum production, accounting for over 25 percent of domestic production.

It is believed substantial natural gas resources exist in the eastern gulf, Atlantic Ocean, and off the coast of California. However, exploration of these areas has been prohibited by previous Presidential moratoria. Senator GRAHAM's amendment now on the floor will strike that inventory from the Energy Policy Act of 2003.

Opponents contend the passage will violate the Presidential moratoria and open the door for development of coastal areas. This is completely untrue. The sole purpose of the offshore inventory in S. 14 is to collect data on domestic offshore oil and gas resources to fully understand the potential of these regions instead of making future policy judgments on information that is outdated and incomplete.

A number of people are very interested in this. I understand that. But I think we are being misled a little as to what it means. It is a comprehensive scientific inventory. I think the public has a right to know what the status of our national natural resources are for the future. We need to reexamine them because many of the assessments that were done some time ago are not up to par in terms of current technology.

We need to do this. A number of organizations are opposed to the amendment—the National Association of Manufacturers, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the American Farm Bureau Federation—simply because they are so dependent on energy in the future. This is something that really affects lots of people.

I have to say once again, it is an inventory of the resources that are available, not a license to produce.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Absolutely.

Mr. DOMENICI. You mentioned various organizations that support this. I wonder if it might be fair to say that, regarding future jobs for America, we might have some interest in knowing what our resources are. Those concerned about jobs for the future, might they also be interested?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator raises, of course, a basic question. As we talk about energy, what we are talking about is the future of our economy, in terms of jobs, in terms of doing the things we will want to do economically and environmentally.

I have the same kind of feelings about my place in Wyoming. We have mountains and we have areas we are going to protect. But that does not mean we ought to avoid the idea of having a notion of where those resources are, and to be able to use some of them where they work together, preserving the environment.

Certainly the U.S. Chamber, certainly the National Association of Manufacturers, are concerned about the future and the availability of energy so we can create jobs and continue to build the future economy.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator for his remarks this morning.

The Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. INHOFE, is here. He asked if he might have time. How much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 17 and a half minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, I think it appropriate I make a few comments. My committee does have jurisdiction over any environmental aspects of the OCS. I consider this to be significant. I think it is very important for us. We hear all the stuff about the environment and we hear some extremist groups who are saying they don't want this to take place. There are some out there, maybe even some Senators, who might believe this somehow is going to authorize exploration or authorize drilling.

Section 105 of the bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to conduct an inventory and analysis of oil and natural gas resources in the Outer Continental Shelf. It does not in any way authorize any type of exploration; it doesn't authorize any kind of drilling. It will provide the American people, for the first time, using new technology—and we have new technology—a comprehensive overview of the country's offshore oil and natural gas resources.

This 3–D seismic technology—I have heard the chairman of the Energy Committee talk about this modern technology. It was developed in the 1990s and has allowed us to identify 100 trillion cubic feet more natural gas in the Gulf of Mexico than was previously found.

We have surveys for the rest of the country's natural resources. We have surveys of how many forests we have, how many trees we have, how many fish we have, how much coal we have. Why is there so much resistance to knowing how many oil and gas resources or reserves are out there? How can we have a comprehensive national energy policy without knowing how much oil and gas the country has? That is really the key to this.

I have criticized Republican and Democrat administrations alike for not having a comprehensive energy policy. I remember, during the Reagan administration, trying to get a comprehensive energy policy. We were not able to do it. During the first Bush administration, we were not able to do it.

Consequently, back when I was so concerned about our dependence upon foreign oil for our ability to fight a war, during the Reagan administration, our dependence was only 36 percent. Now it is 57 percent. So it has just gotten worse and worse.

Finally, I applaud the President for saying we are going to have a comprehensive energy policy, and I applaud the Senator, the chairman of the Energy Committee, for coming up with a well-thought-out plan. But, again, how can we have a comprehensive policy if we don't even know what resources the Nation has?

Many colleagues are concerned that section 105 undermines the State's right to determine what happens in Federal waters off its shores.

How can that happen? It is just a study. In fact, not knowing what oil and gas is off States' shores infringes upon a State's right to make an informed decision. Indeed. The liberal mantra here is the right to know. Given that, how can they oppose knowledge? No State has the right to infringe upon interstate commerce. That would be unconstitutional. If legislators are successful in prohibiting the access to the people's resources, then no amount of information about America's oil and natural gas reserves is going to change that protection.

Secretary of the Interior Norton, in a recent letter to my colleagues, Senators GRAHAM and NELSON, states:

The language does not affect the moratoria.

You have to understand that. I just hope the people of America are watching this because we are really just saying we don't want the knowledge. We are facing a natural gas crisis. I don't think anyone is going to stand up here and say that we are not. This crisis is universally acknowledged through widespread awareness. This crisis has really just begun in the past year or so.

In a wonderfully bipartisan way, Congress has come together to try to reduce America's reliance on foreign sources of energy, including oil and natural gas.

Limiting the American people's access to knowledge about the American people's resources, let alone the resources themselves, is a guaranteed way to increase dependence on foreign sources of energy. It is sort of an ''ignorance-is-bliss'' strategy.

Also, many States are facing budget shortfalls. They turn to us for options for addressing these shortfalls. The ones I have talked with are appreciative of the fact that we need to know what resources are off our shores.

Again, this amendment authorizes only a study and will allow us to make good and informed decisions about resources. I can't imagine anyone being against something which is merely shedding light on what we have and informing the people of America what the resources are so we can intelligently address those resources in the future.

I certainly encourage my colleagues to oppose this amendment which would strike the people's right to know what kinds of resources are out there.

Again, I repeat that it has nothing to do with exploration. It has nothing to do with drilling oil. All it deals with is finding out what our resources are.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I rise to support the Graham amendment. I thank my colleague from California for speaking so eloquently about how important it is for the entire west coast of the United States. I know Senator GRAHAM is articulating those same concerns in Florida. I am sure we will hear from Members of other parts of the country. I find this debate almost amazing—amazing in the sense that Congress has enacted moratoria on drilling since 1982. In every instance since 1982, Congress has responded and said we don't want to explore for natural gas or oil off of our pristine coasts. So we go over this time and time again. Yes. We are going to go over it again today. People have raised these economic arguments. I can tell you what the people in Washington State think.

We have a 7.4-percent unemployment rate. We want jobs. But I guarantee this is not where we think we are going to get jobs. In fact, we want protection from our high energy costs. My ratepayers have had a 50-percent rate increase. Why? Because we were gouged by Enron contracts.

To say to the people of the Northwest that somehow your economy and your future are going be taken care of because we are going to let you drill off the coast of Washington is ludicrous. We want economic relief. We want statutory relief from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to do their job. We want them to basically say that the fat boys and these Enron schemes have been illegal and we are going to help you get out of your high energy prices.

The fact that we are out here talking about this isn't really going to lead to drilling. Then why spend the taxpayers' dollars trying to study something we don't want to do. I don't want to drill off the coast of Washington. I don't want to spend the taxpayers' money assessing that situation. I don't think we ought to spend the taxpayers' money looking in the Great Lakes for oil. I don't know that we want to go and say let us valuate putting a nuclear powerplant in North Dakota because it might be close to the Missouri River and a water source.

There are a lot of issues we can explore. The question is, do we want to follow through on those policies? I believe the answer is absolutely no, as to our pristine coastline. That coastline has already been a key part of our economy on the west coast. We have many fishing industries, shellfishing industries, and tourism dollars that all rely on that pristine coastline.

The Federal Government has entered into treaties with the tribes on shellfish and harvesting rights. Are we going to abrogate those Federal obligations that we have signed onto?

We also, as the Federal Government, implemented the Olympic Coast National Marine Sanctuary which encompasses most of the waters off the Northwest coast. It is a sanctuary for hundreds of species, including marine mammals. These mammals include the majestic orca whale, whose 20 percent population decline over the past decade recently triggered a ''depleted'' listing under the Marine Mammal Protection Act. Now are going to say to the country that we think we should look at putting oil rigs and transportation of oil in an area that we, as a country, have already designated as a pristine national monument?

If you want to know whether the people of my State are watching, they are watching. Guess what. They have a memory. They do remember. They remember thick carpets of oil, hundreds of dead birds and great shards of oil-blackened timber that followed the 1989 oil spill off of Grays Harbor. That disaster stained over 300 miles of coastline. An oil well blowout could be many times worse.

While some argue that simply studying this just gives us information, my response is that we should not spend millions of taxpayer dollars that could be put towards something else. My constituents won't accept drilling rigs off the vibrant coastline of Willapa Bay, Neah Bay, or the mouth of the Columbia River. Rigs are unsightly and the risk of an ecologically disastrous oil spill is just too high.

Instead of looking for oil and gas on the Outer Continental Shelf, my State is willing to do a variety of things.

We are still the home to the Hanford Nuclear Reservation, and we are spending billions of taxpayer dollars to clean up the nuclear waste. We are progressing on that in an aggressive fashion.

We have one of the largest wind farms in the West. We are trying to be a leader in new energy technology. We are even willing to look at wave energy technology off the coast of Washington and in other areas where it might be more appropriate.

I am a big advocate of moving forward on natural gas in Alaska to make sure we get a natural gas pipeline to give more natural gas resources to the lower 48 States. That is something which I think is critically important. The Pew Ocean Commission has recently highlighted the fragile nature of our oceans and coastal resources and recommended we look at our oceans in a holistic manner.

I think that report, which came out less than 10 days ago, basically says that we don't have our act together as it relates to our oceans and the health of our oceans.

I find it very frustrating being from a State that has high unemployment and a State that has high energy costs. Those energy costs have been costing us and no one is trying to help give us relief from those contracts.

Public documents say there has been market manipulation. Now somebody thinks they are proposing to us some panacea of studying drilling off the coast of Washington and you are going to have a great economy. It is a bunch of bunk.

What we need to do is what Congress has done since 1982, enact a moratorium on drilling. Stand up and say it is not appropriate. Follow the Bush administration, follow the Clinton administration, and follow the previous Bush administration. I am not sure where this Bush administration is, but basically say we don't want drilling off of our pristine coastline.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Ms. LANDRIEU addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields to the Senator?

Ms. LANDRIEU. Madam President, I understand the Senator from New Mexico has 11 minutes remaining. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Thank you, Madam President. I would like 5 of those minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Madam President, today I rise in opposition to Senate Amendment No. 884, offered by the Senator from Florida. Everywhere you turn these days you hear talk of a natural gas crisis facing this country. On May 21, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve testified before Congress that he was ''quite surprised at how little attention the natural gas problem has been getting,'' he said, ''because it is a very serious problem.'' Yesterday, while testifying before the House Energy and Commerce Committee, he went on to add that the increase in gas prices—more than double what they were last year—have put significant segments of the North America gas-using industry—chemical, fertilizer, steel and aluminum—in a weakened competitive position against industries overseas.

What Mr. Greenspan is referring to is the looming gap between natural gas demand and supply in this country. Currently, we produce about 84 percent of the natural gas we consume. By 2025, the Energy Information Administration, EIA, projects that imports of natural gas will provide 22 percent of demand. Quite simply, we are facing the prospect of our natural gas market following in the footsteps of our oil market where imports continue to account for a growing percentage of supply.

For years we have pursued a policy that is in conflict with itself. On the one hand, we encourage the use of natural gas in this country to meet our energy needs and environmental goals. It is viewed as a clean fuel to improve air quality and a low carbon-dioxide fuel to meet climate change targets.

However, we have ignored the supply side of the equation. National output has remained stagnant since 1995 but one of out of every two homes in the United States is now heated by natural gas. The amount of natural gas used to generate electricity has increased 33 percent in the past 5 years and will likely grow an additional 60 percent by 2015.

So, we now find ourselves living in a state of denial when demand outstrips supply and volatile prices occur.

In my State of Louisiana, chemical plants, which use natural gas as both a fuel and a feedstock, face record-high prices. Because of tight supplies, the average natural gas price—NYMEX—for the first quarter of 2003 was $5.91 per million Btus. This represents a staggering 129 percent increase over the average natural gas price for the first quarters of the previous 10 years, which was $2.58.

For ammonia plants in particular, the cost of natural gas can represent 70 to 90 percent of the total cost of manufacturing its products. Since 1998, the number of Louisiana Ammonia Producers, who account for approximately 40 percent of the U.S. production of ammonia, has gone from 9 companies employing more than 3,500 employees to 3 companies employing less than 1,000.

Thanks to the good work of the Energy Committee, led by Chairman DOMENICI, I believe there are some provisions in this Bill, that if enacted, would stimulate natural gas production in the short term. For example, I offered an amendment at committee that was accepted and would encourage deep gas production from wells in shallow waters on existing leases. Provisions such as this one can bring gas to market quickly.

While there are some conservation and efficiency measures we can take to try and slow high prices in the short term, we cannot continue to pretend that the supply imbalance does not exist. Believe it or not, the fight today is not over whether to produce more natural gas but instead focuses on a mere study, albeit a critical one.

The proponents of the amendment before us would have you believe that enacting the inventory called for under section 105 of the bill would open Pandora's Box and lead to oil and gas production everywhere on the Outer Continental Shelf, regardless of whether an area is currently under moratoria.

The fact is the inventory will do nothing of the sort. Section 105 will in no way affect existing moratoria on oil and gas activity in the OCS, nor will it diminish the rights of those States that oppose drilling off their coasts. Section 105 does not provide for the use of exploratory wells. The real truth behind section 105 is simply to inform the American public about how much potential oil and natural gas there is within these areas of the United States.

I believe that the American people should have the most up-to-date and accurate projections of these public assets. An amendment such as the one pending before the Senate sends a signal to America's consumers, homeowners and manufacturing industries that Congress is out of touch and not committed to addressing a problem that only continues to get worse.

The question might arise, why do we need to re-examine our offshore resources when many assessments of oil and natural gas resources off our coasts have been done? The answer is most, if not all, of these assessments relied solely on the geophysical and geological data yielded by company exploration and production efforts. In some areas, where moratoria have been in place for some time, the data is very old—10 years or more—and the estimates may no longer be accurate.

Since this frontier was officially opened to significant oil and gas exploration in 1953, no single region has contributed as much to the Nation's energy production as the OCS. The OCS accounts for more than 25 percent of our Nation's natural gas and oil production.

With annual returns to the Federal Government averaging between $4 to $5 billion annually, no single area has contributed as much to the federal treasury as the OCS. In fact, since 1953 the OCS has contributed $140 billion to the U.S. Treasury.

In light of these tremendous contributions, it is particularly interesting to realize that almost all of our OCS production comes from a very concentrated area of the OCS, the western half, which really means offshore Louisiana and Texas. Ninety-eight percent of the Nation's offshore production comes from this half of the Gulf of Mexico. In fiscal year 2001, offshore Louisiana accounted for almost 80 percent of total OCS gas production.

By taking this inventory, maybe we discover there are more resources on the OCS than we originally thought or maybe we actually learn less is out there. Regardless, we owe it to ourselves to find out.

Madam President, I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I want to reserve the remainder of our time. However, I thank the distinguished Senator from Louisiana for her excellent remarks. The real issue is knowledge: What should the American people know about their future in terms of our own resources?

I reserve the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise to express my concern over provisions included in the Senate Energy bill that threaten the existing moratoria on leasing and preleasing activities related to oil drilling on Georges Bank, off the coast of Maine, and other areas of the outer continental shelf.

Section 105 of the Energy bill requires the Department of the Interior to inventory all potential oil and natural gas resources in the entire outer continental shelf. This provision would allow potentially damaging seismic technology in the vital fishing grounds of Georges Bank.

Georges Bank is a magnificent American resource. The unusual underwater topography and tidal activity of Georges Bank create an almost self-contained ecosystem, unique within the ocean that surrounds it. It is one of the most productive fisheries in the world, where Mainers and many others harvest cod, haddock, yellowtail flounder, scallops, lobsters, swordfish, and herring.

Mainers have fished Georges Bank for hundreds of years. Hundreds of small communities in New England depend on fish from Georges Bank for economic support and their maritime-based way of life. In recent years, Maine's fishermen have made significant economic sacrifices to work toward sustainable and healthy fish stocks. I am extremely worried that any drilling activities, even preleasing activities, could destroy their work.

An oil spill on Georges Bank would have catastrophic effects on the Georges Bank ecosystem and the economies of the coastal communities of New England. Georges Bank experiences some of the most severe weather in the world, and the frequent storms, strong currents, and high winds would cripple any post-spill cleanup effort. For this reason, and because of its great biological value, many scientists, fishermen, and other persons concerned with and knowledgeable about the unique ecosystem of Georges Bank have urged that no drilling activities occur in this region.

I have long worked to protect Georges Bank from the potentially devastating impacts of offshore oil and gas drilling. In 1999, when the Government of Canada was considering whether or not to drill on Georges Bank, I introduced a resolution in the Senate that asked the Government of Canada to impose a moratorium on drilling on the Canadian side of Georges Bank until 2012. I was very relieved when, several months later, Canada did indeed impose such a moratorium. The United States also has a moratorium on drilling Georges Bank until 2012.

This issue again arose in May of 2001, when the Outer Continental Shelf Policy Committee recommended to the Secretary of the Interior that she encourage congressional funding to assess the oil and gas potential of offshore areas covered by the moratorium. The recommendations also included a suggestion to explore lifting parts of the existing moratorium.

In response, I worked to include language in the fiscal year 2002 Interior Appropriations bill that would prohibit the use of funds for offshore preleasing, leasing, or related activity on Georges Bank. Along with Senators KERRY, KENNEDY, and SNOWE, I cosponsored an amendment that prohibits the Department of the Interior from spending any funds on leasing, preleasing, or related activities in Georges Bank and the entire North Atlantic, as well as the West Coast off California, Oregon, and Washington, and the eastern Gulf of Mexico. Our amendment was signed into law, and similar language has been included in subsequent Interior Appropriations bills.

I believe that Section 105 of the Energy bill is contradictory to the Interior Appropriations bill language and the expressed will of the Senate against the expenditure of funds for the use of preleasing activities in Georges Bank. I am pleased to join Senators GRAHAM, FEINSTEIN, DOLE, and many others in cosponsoring an amendment that will remove these provisions from the bill. I urge my colleagues to support our amendment.

Mr. REID. Madam President, would the Chair indicate how much time remains on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 4 minutes 20 seconds; the Senator from Washington has 5 minutes, and the Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, has 13 minutes.

Mr. REID. So a total of 18 minutes on this side, 4 on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Who yields time?

Mr. REID. Madam President, it is my understanding that the leader wants to vote at 11:15.

Mr. DOMENICI. My understanding is we would like to change the time to 11:15, assure the time at 11:15.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the time, after whatever time expires that has already been allocated, be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. DOMENICI. Between now and 11:15?

Mr. REID. Not the time between now and 11:15. Whenever the time expires—we have 18 minutes and you have 4 minutes; so 22 minutes—so it would be about 13 minutes would be allocated evenly.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I trust, with the time being so much more on their side, a Senator from that side will soon come to the floor and talk.

Mr. REID. Yes. I say to my friend, Senator FEINSTEIN is due here momentarily. Senator GRAHAM is expected. But I think, in fairness to Senator DOMENICI, that their time—they should be here, so I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think that is fair, and I thank the Senator for suggesting it.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TALENT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, how much time does the Senator from California have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from California, if she needs more time, there is time available. Does the Senator know how much time she will need?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I may need another 5 minutes.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the time remaining to the Senator from California be a total of 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I thank Senator REID.

I wish to speak as cosponsor of the Graham-Feinstein amendment to remove the inventory of Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas resources from the Energy bill. I deeply believe that this proposed inventory threatens our coasts and should not be part of this Energy bill. The House already stripped the studies out of the Energy bill. The Senate should do the same.

The Energy bill's current language requires a new inventory of all the Outer Continental Shelf resources and a study of impediments to production. We oppose these studies because the purpose of the studies is really meant to undermine the moratoria which is in place. Many of these moratoria have been in place with bipartisan support on both coasts for 20 years.

Proponents of the inventory argue that it is meant to provide information and nothing more. However, the real intent is clear: The Minerals Management Service is specifically directed to inventory moratorium areas that are not available for development. Inventorying these areas does not make sense unless you want to overturn the moratoria.

The provision's second study on impediments to production makes the intent of the studies even clearer. In section 105, the popular moratorium that now protects our States' coastal resources is disparaged as ''an impediment to production.'' An impediment is something to be removed. So this is a hint as to the intention of these studies.

Perspective is important in this debate. The moratorium is there to protect our coast, not just to impede production of oil and gas. Facts are that we do not need the information these studies would provide to make an informed decision. We have inventoried the Outer Continental Shelf's resources before. In fact, the Minerals Management Service already publishes an update of this inventory every 5 years. We have a good idea what resources are out there, and we do not need additional studies.

Californians are also too familiar with the consequences of offshore drilling. An oilspill in 1969 off the coast of Santa Barbara killed thousands of birds, as well as dolphins, seals, and other animals. We know this could happen again, and how well I remember that cleanup effort on those beaches.

A healthy coast is also vital to California's economy and our quality of life. One of our major economic areas is the visitor industry—conventions, tourists. People do not want to see oil rigs off the coast of California, and they do not come there for that purpose. The ocean-dependent industry is estimated to contribute $17 billion to our State each year. So the economics of what the ocean produces in its pristine state are critical to our State.

In 1991, the California Department of Parks and Recreation found that almost 70 percent of Californians participated in beach activities and 25 percent of our population did some saltwater fishing. So Californians know what is at stake, and we made an informed decision: We do not want drilling off our coast.

As Mike Reilly, chairman of the California Coastal Commission, said to me in a letter:

The energy bill's provision is directly contrary to California's strong interest in safeguarding its precious coastal resources from offshore oil and gas-drilling related activities, and for that reason we oppose this study.

The California Coastal Commission is the State governmental agency in charge of the coastline. I myself served on one of the regional boards of the Coastal Commission, so I know it well.

Even without the threat of future drilling, we would oppose conducting these studies in moratorium areas. We have moratoria to protect our coasts. The studies would harm resources we want to protect.

I wish to focus for a moment on the destructive studies required by this provision. The provision's original language would have allowed for exploratory drilling. I appreciate that the current version no longer allows for exploratory drilling. However, the bill still requires invasive study methods that will harm our coastal resources.

The provision specifically calls for 3–D seismic testing. One might ask, What is that? This technology requires a sparker or air gun and loud repeated pulses of underwater sound. These sounds can be heard for miles under water.

Seismic surveys harm marine mammals and have been linked to strandings of whales on beaches on multiple occasions. Seismic testing also hurts fish. Recent studies show these surveys damage the ears of at least some fish species, and that the damage may well be permanent. Fish rely on their hearing for survival. Additional seismic testing would threaten our fishery resources and our commercial fishing industries. This is a $17 billion industry in California, so we cannot afford threats to our fisheries and our fishing industry.

The inventory would also likely include something called dart core sampling. Dart cores are collected by dropping large metal tubes from ships. The tubes sink fast enough to penetrate the sea floor to a substantial depth, remove a column of rock, and then are retrieved to the ship. This is suspiciously similar to drilling. So that is what is going to go on. This is not just a benign study of people sitting at their desks on land studying something. They are sinking these tubes down to some depth, obviously to examine core samples to determine the presence of natural gas or oil.

Dart core sampling also damages organisms and habitat on the ocean floor. The dart cores also create silt plumes that smother nearby organisms.

Protecting our coastlines is not a partisan issue. The Governors of both Florida and California oppose these studies. Furthermore, the successful effort to defeat the studies in the House was a bipartisan effort. A broad coalition of Senators, including the distinguished Senators from Florida and North Carolina, opposes the studies in this provision. We should not override the wishes of the most affected States and people to protect their own coastlines.

So I ask my colleagues to vote for our amendment to strike the Outer Continental Shelf study from the Energy bill. Directly following my remarks, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the League of Conservation Voters dated June 10 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEAGUE OF CONSERVATION VOTERS,
Washington, DC, June 10, 2003.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC.

RE: SUPPORT AN AMENDMENT TO S. 14 TO PROTECT SENSITIVE COASTAL AREAS FROM OIL AND GAS DRILLING

DEAR SENATOR: The League of Conservation Voters (LCV) is the political voice of the national environmental community. Each year, LCV publishes the National Environmental Scorecard, which details the voting records of members of Congress on environmental legislation. The Scorecard is distributed to LCV members, concerned voters nationwide, and the press.

LCV urges you to support an amendment that will be offered by Senators Graham (FL), Feinstein, Cantwell, Wyden, Nelson (FL), Lautenberg, Boxer, Edwards, Kerry, Murray, Lieberman, Leahy, Snowe, Dodd and Chafee to strike section 105 of S. 14. This provision would undermine the existing bipartisan Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) moratorium that currently protects some of the nation's most sensitive coastal and marine areas.

Section 105 requires the Interior Department to inventory potential oil and gas resources of the entire Outer Continental Shelf (OCS), including the moratorium areas, using seismic surveys, sediment sampling, and other exploration technologies that can damage sea life and ocean habitat. Section 105 also requires the Secretary to report to Congress on ''impediments'' to the development of OCS oil and gas, including the moratoria, and the role coastal states and localities have played in stopping environmentally harmful offshore oil-related activities. This lays the groundwork for an attack on the moratoria, as well as on the rights of coastal states and local governments to raise legitimate objections to offshore development and related onshore industrial development that affects their coasts.

Since 1982, Congress has included language in the Interior Appropriations bill that prevents the Department of the Interior from conducting leasing, pre-leasing and related activities in areas under moratoria. President George W. Bush included the traditional legislative moratorium language in his FY 04 budget request.

Section 105 is clearly inconsistent with more than 20 years of bipartisan legislative and administrative actions that protect sensitive coastal areas around the country from offshore oil and gas activity. Please support the Graham amendment to strike this damaging provision when the energy bill comes to the Senate floor, and please oppose this dirty, dangerous energy bill.

LCV's Political Advisory Committee will strongly consider including votes on this issue in compiling LCV's 2003 Scorecard. If you need more information, please call Betsy Loyless or Mary Minette in my office at (202) 785–8683.

Sincerely,

DEB CALLAHAN,
President.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. That letter, of course, on behalf of the League, which has stood fast in defending and advocating important environmental issues solidly is in support of the Graham-Feinstein amendment.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: How much time remains now for debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fourteen minutes evenly divided.

Mr. DOMENICI. If there are any Senators who wish to speak who favor this amendment, we will give them some of our time if they want to get down here and take a few minutes. It is a very interesting and exciting issue.

I will take a few minutes now. I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Chair inform me when I have used 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will so inform the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a lot has been said about this. A lot is not true. In a very few minutes, I will go through exactly what is true by reading specifically what the bill says and the interpretations that we have.

I do not believe there is any right-thinking American, knowing the dangerous nature of our reliance upon both oil and natural gas, who would not want to know tomorrow morning, if they could, how much in resources we have if we ever needed them. We only want to know about certain ones. We do not want to know about those who might want to drill out in the ocean. We just want to know about some of them. I think every American would say: Tell us how much we own, and then later on we will discuss whether it is worthwhile trying to use them.

The provisions in this bill do not lift the moratorium. It simply authorizes the Secretary to conduct a study. This language prohibits the use of drilling to obtain data, and it also directs the Secretary to use existing data. It is a prudent move to take an inventory of our domestic resources and where they are located. Technology has changed significantly over the years, and resource data that were developed in the 1970s are totally outdated. We did not have the advantage of 3–D seismic analysis, and MMS has never included 3–D data in its assessment of the Atlantic OCS resources.

Nearly 60 percent of our oil is imported today. Supply disruptions left the world oil markets in short supply. Not too many years ago, it also left lines in America where in New York they started waiting in lines at 4 in the morning. They got so mad at each other, they even shot each other because one was jumping ahead of the other in line. Just think of what would happen if that were the case and if then somebody stood up on the floor of the Senate and said, well, if 10 years ago that amendment would have passed and they would have taken an inventory, we could at least be taking a look to see whether we could use our own oil that is in the ocean that we already know how to get out without destroying anything.

Experts agree that the country faces a crisis. Over time, technological advances have allowed us to identify additional oil and gas in areas where they once were thought to be in limited supply. In 1995, the Federal Government estimated that the Gulf of Mexico contained 95 trillion cubic feet of undiscovered natural gas. Five years later, in 2000, which is not too long ago, that number was increased to 193 trillion of undiscovered gas, an increase of 100 percent.

Restrictions on preleasing activities do not preclude environmental, geological, physiological, economic engineering, or other scientific analysis studies and evaluations. Congress passed its own drilling moratoria. It included language in the conference report that specifically provided for new studies. The statute says what I just stated, that restrictions on preleasing activities do not preclude environmental, geological, physiological, economic, and engineering activities.

I am convinced that with the energy supply, a short supply in our country, the shortages in the 2000 and 2001 and the higher prices again this year, we are going to need to take prudent steps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield myself 1 additional minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. It is no surprise that informed people know what America's concern is, such as the American Chemistry Council, American Iron and Steel Institute, Council of Industrial Boiler Owners, National Association of Manufacturers, the Fertilizer Institute, the American Gas Association, the Farm Bureau, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has also spoken out, not on this issue but on natural gas prices and the shortage. He said: I am quite surprised how little attention the natural gas problem has been getting because it is a very serious problem.

That is a true statement, and because of a committee that was asked to do work to plan a policy, we are doing something that Alan Greenspan said. He said he was surprised we are not doing more. We want to do more. This more is a simplistic more. It is a let-us-know-what-we-have more. That is all there is to it. Knowledge is better than no knowledge when it comes to problems. Knowledge of what you own is better than not knowing what you own, and that is the issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Florida.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the vote is scheduled for 11:15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time will expire at 11:15; that is correct.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, I would like to close on the amendment that is sponsored by Senator GRAHAM, and a number of other Senators, including this junior Senator from the State of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, there are a lot of States that are quite concerned about this so-called inventory, or so-called survey, to be done with regard to oil and gas drilling in the Outer Continental Shelf off our respective States. Why are we concerned? In a bipartisan way, we have heard Senators from each of these coastal States stand up in this debate that started last night and has continued through today tell the reasons, and they usually will boil down to two reasons. I will give a third today.

The two reasons are usually: No. 1, the harm to our environment if oil is spilled as a result of offshore drilling. In the experiences this country has had, we clearly understand what that does to the coastal environment.

There is a second reason that has been articulated in this debate, and it is that it will so devastatingly affect our State economies. In most of our coastal States, the travel and tourism industry is inextricably entwined with the viability and the beauty of our beaches. In the case of Florida, a coastline only exceeded by the coastline of a place such as Alaska in number of miles, we have a $50 billion annual tourism industry. A lot of that is reflective upon the desirability of people to enjoy our beautiful beaches.

So, too, in Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia. And so, too, with the extraordinary environment in New England, especially in places such as Maine.

On the gulf coast of the United States, the Gulf of Mexico is generally divided into the eastern gulf, the central gulf, and the western gulf. There are 2,000 oil rigs in the Gulf of Mexico. All are in the central gulf off of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana and in the western gulf off of Texas. Those particular States' populations support offshore oil drilling; on the eastern gulf, Floridians do not.

The Senate should listen to the coastal States. That is the first part of the argument. The second part of the argument is, where is the oil and gas? The geology shows it is not in the eastern Gulf of Mexico off the State of Florida; it is where the oil wells are now in the central and western gulf.

We did a survey in the year 2000 and we are scheduled to do another survey in the year 2005, 2½ years from now. What is the rush? That is why we are suspicious. We think it is the inevitable push by the oil interests playing out here, wanting to start drilling for oil and gas.

The debate articulated thus far is the environment and our economies. I mentioned a third reason. The third reason is the defense of this country, in the preparation of the defense of this country and the training that takes place off the coast of the United States. The military cannot train with a carrier if there are oil rigs out there. Since the naval training facility at Vieques, Puerto Rico, is being shut down, a lot of that training is now off the east coast of the United States and the gulf coast. Specifically, a lot of that training will occur off the coast of Eglin Air Force Base at Fort Walton Beach, the Pensacola Naval Air Station at Pensacola, and Tyndall Air Force Base at Panama City. We are able to do this because of the advance of technology. You can virtually create the target area desired, although it is in unrestricted airspace over the waters—in this case, the Gulf of Mexico. Can we have that kind of training if there are oil and gas wells out there? The answer is no.

The environment, the economy, and the preparation of our military to engage in the defense of this country are three obvious reasons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I yield the floor and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 884.

The clerk will call the roll.

NOT VOTING—2

Edwards Lieberman

The amendment (No. 884) was rejected.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 824

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 12:15 p.m. today the Senate proceed to the consideration of calendar item No. 83, S. 824, FAA reauthorization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list of amendments that I will send to the desk be the only remaining first-degree amendments in order to S. 14 other than any amendments which may be pending at the time this agreement is entered; that any listed first-degree amendment be subject to second-degree amendments which must be relevant to the first degree to which offered; and that if any first-degree amendment on the list is described as ''relevant,'' that the definition of ''relevant'' be ''related to the subject matter of the bill'' and/or ''energy related''; provided, further, that following the disposition of the amendments which may be offered from the list, the bill be read a third time; further, that the Senate then proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 85, H.R. 6, the House Energy bill, and that all after the enacting clause be stricken and the text of S. 14, as amended, be inserted in lieu thereof; I further ask that H.R. 6 then be read a third time and the Senate proceed to a vote on passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. BOXER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has the floor.

Mr. FRIST. I will suggest the absence of the quorum shortly, and we will have a discussion in a few minutes among ourselves.

Mr. President, in terms of the course of the day, we would like to work out the unanimous consent request just objected to, which had to do with getting the amendments on both sides of the aisle, which we have finally done after about a week and a half of discussion. That is real progress. It allows us to focus and give some order to the range of issues that must be discussed on the Energy bill. They are all very important amendments.

It is absolutely critical that we come to an agreement on what those amendments are so we can further that discussion.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. FRIST. Yes.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I wanted to ask a question about the issue of relevancy. That piqued my interest because we have had experience here with respect to the definition of relevancy on amendments.

Could the majority leader explain it to me so that I understand the unanimous consent request that he had propounded dealing with relevancy? I think there is some merit in the discussions going on to try to get a list. I am not wanting to be destructive to that effort, but I would like to understand the discussion about relevancy. That has become an increasingly important issue for many of us.

Mr. FRIST. Indeed, Mr. President. In response to my distinguished colleague, the issue of relevance has become an issue. Therefore, in the unanimous consent request I said, '' 'relevant be related to the subject matter of the bill' and/or energy related.'' That is really to add what I think the Senator's concern is—is this relevancy going to be so tight that something having to do with energy will be excluded? By adding this clause, ''energy related,'' it is the understanding that we will consider other amendments on the list.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, if the majority leader will yield further, that would satisfy my concerns, if I understand exactly what is intended by the leader. As I indicated, we have some concerns about the relevancy issues and the determination of what is relevant. If the wording is as the majority leader suggested, that would satisfy my concerns.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, do I understand correctly that there are 350 amendments pending?

Mr. FRIST. Yes.

Mr. DURBIN. Has anybody looked at those and decided which ones are relevant?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, normally, we look at them when we get them—both sides—and we make decisions and talk with the proponents and we winnow down the list. The answer is, not yet.

Mr. DURBIN. That is my concern then, Mr. President. In all fairness to the Parliamentarian, the definition of relevancy, even as we define it may turn out to be a lot different when individual amendments are actually offered. I would object to the UC if it includes reference to relevancy until we have had a chance to look and determine whether my amendments or any others are irrelevant. Amendments have been written and a decision can be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was already heard on the proffered unanimous consent.

Mr. DORGAN. If the Senator will yield, my understanding from the majority leader is that it is not the relevancy determined by the Parliamentarian, but they must be related to the subject of energy, which is infinitely a broader definition. That is my understanding.

Mr. DASCHLE. If the majority leader will yield, there is one other clarification I think is important, and that is we have had a lot to do with putting the list together. There is no relevancy requirement for first-degree amendments. If it is stated as an amendment to the Energy bill, it can be on any subject matter. If it says relevant, then we will use, as the distinguished majority leader has noted, the criteria he has laid out, subject generally to the energy issue.

So the relevancy requirement is only a requirement in those areas where relevancy is listed as a factor in the amendment itself. There is no relevancy with regard to first-degree amendments.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has the yield.

Mr. FRIST. I am happy to yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask the leader, in reference to second-degree amendments, is there a relevancy requirement?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, there always has been on the first degree to which they are offered.

Mr. FRIST. Once again, I renew the unanimous consent request that I propounded and the proposal as spelled out before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, first of all, I'll comment on this relevancy issue. I believe there is an understanding among the managers and the leadership. So I am confident we will be able to take care of the concerns just expressed.

With regard to the schedule, we will be turning to one more amendment on energy, which Senator CAMPBELL will be putting forward in a few minutes.

After that, at 12:15 today, we will be turning to consideration of the FAA reauthorization. My intent is to complete this FAA reauthorization before we leave for the weekend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I briefly want to thank the leaders, particularly the majority leader, for helping to get the last Senators to sign up. This means we will get an Energy bill that contains plenty of what people want. It has ethanol and, before we are finished, it will have all of the what people want with reference to the continuation of wind and related energies.

This just means people will have every opportunity to look at amendments, and they have listed everything under the sun. There will be a chance to work on them. We thank everyone for cooperating. It looks to me that, with the majority leader and minority leader helping us, after we return from the recess, we can complete this bill in a week, based upon us finally having this list. I thank everybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 886

(Purpose: To replace ''tribal consortia'' with ''tribal energy resource development organizations,'' and for other purposes)

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. CAMPBELL] proposes an amendment numbered 886.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under ''Text of Amendments.'')

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I will try to explain the amendment. Indian lands comprise approximately 5 percent of the land area in the United States but contain an estimated 10 percent of all energy reserves in the United States, including 30 percent of the known coal deposits located in the western portion of the U.S.; 5 percent of the known onshore oil deposits of the U.S.; and 10 percent of the known onshore natural gas deposits in the United States.

Coal, oil, natural gas, and other energy minerals produced from Indian land represent more than 10 percent of the total nationwide onshore production of energy minerals.

Even though in 1 year alone over 9.3 million barrels of oil, 299 billion cubic feet of natural gas, and 21 million tons of coal were produced from Indian land, representing $700 million in Indian energy revenue, the Department of the Interior estimates that only 25 percent of the oil and less than 20 percent of all natural gas reserves on Indian land have been fully developed.

I have put up a pie chart to show the relationship of realized revenue and potential or unrealized revenue.

Despite what we may read once in a while in the Washington Post or New York Times about the so-called ''rich Indians'' and Indian gambling, it is also indisputable that Indians are the most economically deprived group in the United States, with unemployment levels far above the national average—in some cases well over 70 percent—and per capita incomes well below the national average.

The Labor Department just released the latest unemployment figures for the United States, which were about 6.1 percent, and they say that is the highest in 10 years. If you think 6.1 percent is bad, try 70 percent. For every tribe that is doing pretty well, there are 10 that are just barely making it through their daily lives.

Indian country suffers from the highest substandard housing, poor health, alcohol and drug abuse, diabetes and amputations, and a general malaise and hopelessness, even a high suicide rate among teenagers. Given the vast potential wealth residing in energy resources which could change this deprivation, it has long been a puzzle why these resources have not been more fully developed.

The answer lies partly in the fact that the energy research development is, by its very nature, capital intensive. Most tribes simply do not have the financial wherewithal to fund extensive energy projects on their own and so they must lease out their energy resources in return for royalty payments.

History also plays a big part in the evolution of this problem. Toward the end of the 19th century, Indian tribes were forcibly relocated to isolated areas and reservations where it was believed they would not hinder the westward expansion of the U.S. Government.

The natural resources on those lands were taken into trust by the Federal Government, to be administered for the benefit of Indian tribes. The ostensible reason for the trust was the belief that Indians were incapable of administering their own resources and would be susceptible to land and resource predators.

A legal and bureaucratic apparatus was formed to administer this trust, and over a century later this apparatus remains in place.

In her capacity as trustee of Indian resources, the Secretary of the Interior must review each and every lease of Indian trust resources to ensure the terms of the lease benefit the tribe and that the trust asset is not wasted.

However, this review and approval process is often so lengthy that potential lessees or investors that otherwise would like to partner with Indian tribes to develop their energy resources are reluctant to become entangled in the bureaucratic redtape that inevitably accompanies the leasing of tribal resources.

Hence, the framework that was originally designed to protect tribes has also become a disincentive to the development of tribal resources.

This is a case now, of course, of what fit the 19th century does not fit the modern day, and the Indians have the ability and right to make their own decision.

To help remedy these problems, earlier this year I, along with Senator DOMENICI, introduced the Indian Tribal Energy Development and Self-Determination Act of 2003 to provide assistance and encouragement to Indian tribes to develop their energy resources. This not only would help the tribal economy but it would help make us less dependent on foreign energy.

The assistance included the establishment of an Indian Energy Office; grants, loans, and technical assistance; capacity building; and regulatory changes to the rules governing the leasing of Indian lands for energy purposes.

At the same time, the other Senator from New Mexico, Mr. BINGAMAN, introduced his own Indian Energy bill, S. 424, that mirrored my bill. After several hearings and much debate, I merged the best of these two bills into a composite bill that came to be title III of the bill before us.

There are two major differences between the Bingaman bill, which was offered as a second-degree amendment yesterday, and our bill. That second-degree amendment was defeated, by the way, as my colleagues know. If I had not withdrawn my amendment we would not need to proceed any further than we did yesterday.

One of the most important features of title III of S. 14 is section 2604 which deals with leases, business arrangements, and rights-of-way involving energy development and transmission.

Section 2604 establishes a voluntary process for those tribes that choose it to help develop their energy resources. No tribe is required to participate. They do not have to if they do not wish to, but if they do participate, under the process, an Indian tribe must first demonstrate to the Secretary of the Interior that it has the technical and financial capacity to develop and manage its own resources. Once it meets this burden, the tribe can negotiate energy resource development leases, agreements, and rights-of-way with third parties without first obtaining the Secretary's approval. That will not, however, circumvent the NEPA process. It will simply transfer the responsibility of NEPA compliance to the Secretary of the Interior.

By the way, this second chart points out very clearly under existing law that Indian tribes do not have to come under the jurisdiction of NEPA. If they use their own money on their own land, they are treated as State land, private land, or non-Federal land. They do not have to comply with NEPA. Only if they go to outside investors to get investment money do they have to comply with NEPA.

This bill will provide streamlining to the leasing process that is now burdened with this disparity in Federal regulation. Under current law, in order to be valid, all leases, business agreements, and the rights-of-way involving tribal trust or restricted lands must be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 2604 provides tribes with the option of submitting to the Secretary a proposed government-to-government agreement, a ''tribal energy resource agreement,'' called TERA, that will set forth mandatory provisions for future leases, business agreements, and rights-of-way involving energy development on tribal lands.

If approved by the Secretary, the TERA will govern the future development of that tribe's energy resources. The TERA, by virtue of this section, will require tribal leases and agreements to have certain business terms, require compliance with all applicable environmental laws, notice to the public, and consultation with the States as to the potential off-reservation impact.

That was one of Senator BINGAMAN's concerns yesterday, consultation with off-reservation groups. That is covered in this amendment.

Remember, current law does not require tribes to comply with NEPA if they use their own land. However, neither the TERA nor any provision of title III would operate to subject the tribe's decision to enter into a particular energy lease or agreement to the provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969. The Secretary, in deciding whether to approve the TERA, would be required to examine the potential direct impacts of her decision under NEPA. The tribe would have to develop an environmental review process. It would have to follow it thereafter. The tribe itself would not be subject to NEPA but, as I said, that responsibility would be transferred to the Secretary.

There have been disincentives for poor tribes because they simply cannot afford to develop energy on their own land and thereby not comply with NEPA. It does not diminish the NEPA process at all. Under current law, if an Indian tribe chooses to develop its own energy resources using its own funds and, as I mentioned, there is no lease or Secretary approval, NEPA is not necessary.

It is not mineral development per se that triggers NEPA; it is the Federal action, the approval of the Secretary is what triggers NEPA.

I wish to mention there was also a concern that section 2604 would somehow diminish tribal sovereignty. I know that was Senator INOUYE's concern. It dealt really with trust responsibility. But the amendment I am offering today does not weaken the Government's obligations to Indian tribes to absolve it of its duties.

I point out on page 14, line 18 to page 15, line 3. If my colleagues cannot clearly read this, I will read it for them:

(6)(A) Nothing in this section shall absolve the United States of any responsibility to Indians or Indian tribes, including those which derive from the trust relationship or from any treaties, Executive Orders, or agreements between the United States and any Indian tribe.

(B) The Secretary shall continue to have a trust obligation to ensure that the rights of an Indian tribe are protected in the event of a violation of federal law or the terms of any lease, business agreement, or right-of-way under this section by any other party to any such lease, business agreement, or right-of-way.

(C) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the United States shall not be liable to any party (including any Indian tribe) for any of the terms of, or any losses resulting from the terms of, a lease, business agreement, or a right-of-way executed pursuant to and in accordance with a tribal energy resources agreement approved by the subsection (e)(2).

Subparagraph (C) is basically new. If the Secretary has no input at all in developing the agreement, then we are concerned that the Federal Government should have a liability component if they did not have anything to do with helping decide the issue.

In any event, I remind my colleagues that Native Americans are the only group in the United States who believe that the Earth is their mother, and they certainly do not need to be told how to take care of the Earth because it is in their religion. It is in their nature and has been for thousands of years. It is in their culture. It is a cultural thing with which youngsters grow up. For that matter, they do not need the Senate to tell them how to take care of the Earth either. An Indian mandate to take care of the Earth comes from a higher order than the Senate, and it is sometimes found insulting to be told that they need the Government to oversee what their own religion and culture teach them from childhood.

That is why so many tribes do support the Campbell-Domenici amendment, and I will list them, as I did the other day. A few more have come in: The National Congress of American Indians, which represents over 300 tribes; the Council of Energy Resource Tribes, which represents 50 energy-producing tribes. We have a number of individual letters from the Cherokee Nation, which is the largest Indian tribe in the United States; from the Chickasaw Nation, another very progressive and highly respected tribe in Oklahoma; from the Mohegan Tribe; from the Five Sandoval Indian Pueblos, which is in

New Mexico; the Jicarilla Apache Tribe; the Oneida Indian Nation; the Eastern Shoshone Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, which receives a very large share of its governmental revenues from oil and gas production on its tribal lands; also from the National Tribal Environmental Council, an organization in Albuquerque, whose membership includes over 180 tribal governments; the Southern Ute Indian Tribal Council; the Native American Energy Group; the United South and Eastern Tribes, an organization consisting of 22 tribes located on the eastern seaboard from Maine to Florida. Also, support continues to come in. One non-Indian group that has submitted support is the U.S. National Chamber of Commerce.

I ask unanimous consent that those letters of support be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF AMERICAN INDIANS,
June 2, 2003.

Senator BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL,
Chairman, U.S. Senate, Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR CAMPBELL: This letter is to offer general support for the Indian Tribal Energy Development and Self-Determination Act of 2003 (Title III). Since the release of your mark in April, NCAI has been working feverishly to offer a solution to the concerns expressed by tribal representatives. NCAI engaged in this effort so that we could provide general support for this significant piece of legislation once these concerns were addressed. Through this collaborative process, we believe this legislation has the potential to enhance economic development initiatives and will be of great benefit to economic development in Indian country.

As you may be aware, concerns were raised by a number of tribes and tribal advocates regarding some provisions of the Chairman's mark for this measure. We shared in their concern regarding provisions that significantly limit the United State's liability and release the Secretary of Interior from any accountability to Indian tribes for actions that she is required to undertake pursuant to the legislation. Additionally, we were concerned about the definition of ''tribal consortium'' which differed greatly from the definition that is traditionally employed in legislation affecting Indian tribes and offers federal money to non-tribal entities that should be going to Indian tribes. In addition to these two central concerns, we were not satisfied with provisions pertaining to environmental review and we had some general drafting-related issues.

Given these concerns, NCAI has convened several conference calls with tribal representatives including the Navajo Nation, Council of Energy Resources Tribes, and the Intertribal Council on Utility Policy, and developed a series of tribal recommendations for modifying Title III. We also convened with your staff and Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee staff to discuss the tribal recommendations. Thereafter your staff held a conference call for those same representatives and staffers from the Senate Energy and Natural Resource Committee. Although we are pleased that we were able to craft better language for the trust responsibility provisions, we are still concerned with some of the limitations.

Nonetheless, we realize that in this political climate, the language as currently revised is likely the best compromise that can be reached. We appreciate the effort of your staff and other committee staffers to negotiate language that attempts to address the tribal concerns in light of the current political environment. Again, I want to underscore that the tribal support comes from working with a group of tribal representatives and organizations from diverse perspectives, but not all perspectives. Because of this, our revised version of your mark may not reflect the needs and desires of all tribes who wish to utilize this legislation to develop their energy resources.

We would like to thank you and your staff for all of their hard work on this very important issue. I cannot stress enough how grateful we are to your commitment to developing legislative solutions to age-old problems in Indian country. Title III is just one more example of how Indian tribes benefit from your championship.

Sincerely,

JACQUELINE JOHNSON
Executive Director.

COUNCIL OF ENERGY RESOURCE TRIBES,
Denver, CO, June 3, 2003.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOMENICI: On behalf of the 53 CERT member Tribes, I am writing to express CERT's support for the Title III Indian Energy provisions of S. 14.

As you know, there are some provisions in section 2604 of the Title III of the bill as reported that has caused concern among CERT member Tribes. Fortunately, we believe those concerns have largely been addressed by language agreed to between Committee staff and representatives of CERT and several member Tribes. At this time, we believe we have reached agreement that addresses the concerns of CERT and the Southern Ute Indian Tribe, the Navajo Nation and the Jicarilla Apache Nation. We expect you will hear from each of those Tribes as well.

CERT has agreed to language that insures that the Tribal Energy Resource Agreements (TERA) process is a voluntary, opt-in program for development of Tribal energy resources. We have also agreed to language to be certain that the public comment opportunities go to the environmental and other impacts of the development and not to the terms of the business agreements themselves. CERT accepts the revised language that better describes the Secretary's trust duties under this section. Finally, the scope of the Secretary's NEPA review of the TERA is settled.

While drafting final language for this section has been somewhat difficult, we compliment the staff of both the Senate Energy Committee and the Senate Indian Affairs Committee for their dedication to resolving the remaining differences between us on language relating to trust protections and environmental issues.

Again, we are pleased to support Title III with these changes to section 2604 and appreciate your steadfast support of the right of Indian Tribes to gain a better measure of control over the development of energy resources on their own lands.

Sincerely,

A. DAVID LESTER,
Executive Director.

CHEROKEE NATION,
Tahlequah, OK, June 2, 2003.

Hon. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. DANIEL K. INOUYE,
Vice Chairman, Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN AND MR. VICE CHAIRMAN: It has come to my attention that several changes have been made to Title III of the Senate Energy bill. I understand that these changes will reduce any risk to Tribes, and wish to offer the Cherokee Nation's continued support of S. 14, the Energy Policy Act of 2003.

I thank the Committee for its hard work on this issue and for incorporating tribal recommendations into the bill. Your leadership is greatly appreciated.

Please feel free to contact my office if you have any questions or comments, I may be reached at (918) 456–0671.

Sincerely,

CHAD SMITH,
Principal Chief.

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
THE CHICKASAW NATION,
Ada, OK, June 5, 2003.

Hon. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL,
Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We support the inclusion of Title III, as it is, in Senate Bill 14. Thoughtful development of our tribal natural resources serves all Americans.

We are grateful for the opportunities and support Title III provides to the Chickasaw Nation, and for all of Indian Country, as we explore and develop our natural resources. The language allows us to exercise our own progressive style in development and regulation; yet, it provides for those tribes which prefer the more traditional approach.

Having a voice in the U.S. Department of Energy will highlight and expedite tribal energy issues. This is an opportunity for every tribe to enter into the nation's economic mainstream with the support of the federal government.

Your help, and that of Senators Bingaman and Domenici, is appreciated.

Sincerely,

BILL ANOATUBBY,
Governor.

THE MOHEGAN TRIBE,
Uncasville, CT, June 5, 2003.

Hon. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL,
U.S. Senate, Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Mohegan Tribe supports the inclusion of Title III in S. 14, the Energy Policy Act of 2003. Offering flexibility and support in developing natural resources throughout Indian Country, Title III creates opportunities in which all Indian nations can benefit. We also appreciate the hard work of Senators Domenici and Bingaman in this matter.

Sincerely,

MARK F. BROWN,
Chairman.

FIVE SANDOVAL INDIAN PUEBLOS, INC.,
Bernalillo, NM, June 5, 2003.

Hon. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL,
U.S. Senate, Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Five Sandoval Indian Pueblos, Inc. supports the inclusion of Title III in S. 14, the Energy Policy Act of 2003. We appreciate all aspects of the language and the flexibility it creates with obvious regard for the individual strengths and needs of each tribe.

We are grateful to Senator Domenici and to Senator Bingaman for their thoughtful hard work and leadership on our behalf.

Having Title III in the Energy bill provides every tribal nation in this country an opportunity to enter into the nation's economic mainstream through development of their natural resources.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

JAMES ROGER MADALENA,
Executive Director,
Five Sandoval Indian Pueblos, Inc.

THE JICARILLA APACHE NATION,
Dulce, NM, June 9, 2003.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
U.S. Senate,
Senate Hart Building, Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR DOMENICI: I am writing on behalf of the Jicarilla Apache Nation (''Nation'') to express our general support for the Indian Energy Title in S. 14. This legislation will provide a strong policy directive for the Department of Energy to formalize and institutionalize its support of tribal energy development needs, and the legislation will provide critical resources and tools for Tribes to access for these purposes. We applaud your focus on Indian energy and commitment to addressing the energy needs of Indian Tribes in New Mexico and across the country.

Oil and gas development on the Jicarilla Apache Reservation is critical to our tribal governmental operations. Our Reservation is located on the eastern edge of the Sam Juan Basin, the second largest gas field in the lower 48 states. The Nation relies on revenue generated from the development and production of our oil and gas to provide essential government services to our members and other residents; revenue from royalties and taxes accounts for over 90% of the Nation's operating budget. Clearly, the legislation at hand is extremely important to the Nation.

During the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee markup of the Indian Energy Title in late April, the Nation expressed concerns with some of those provisions. In the past month, the Nation joined a tribal workgroup which included the National Congress of American Indian (NCAI), the Council of Energy Resource Tribes (CERT), the Navajo Nation, the Southern Ute Tribe and other tribal representatives in developing language to address some of our mutual concerns. The tribal workgroup presented and discussed our proposed language in several key discussions with staff from both the Senate Indian Affairs and Energy & Natural Resources Committee. We appreciate your efforts and that of your committee staff to work with the Tribes and be responsive to our concerns.

We arrived at a compromise that was deemed to be the most political viable approach given that the energy bill is currently being debated on the Senate floor and the fact that the House has already passed its energy bill which does not include a comprehensive Indian energy title. The Nation believes that this collaborative effort addressed most of the central concerns that we raised.

Specifically, the Nation's primary concern relate to section 2406, the provisions on leases, business agreements, and rights-of-way involving energy development or transmissions. The policy goals of this measure, as stated in Section 2602(a), would be ''to assist Indian tribes in the development of energy resources and further the goal of Indian self-determination.'' Section 2604 would establish a voluntary program, through a Tribal Energy Resource Agreement (TERA) submitted by a Tribe for approval by the Secretary of the Interior. The TERA approach provides a mechanism for participating Tribes to streamline the approval process for energy development on Indian Reservations. While the Nation does not take issue with these important objectives, we have concerns about Section 2604's impact on the United States' Indian trust responsibility.

For instance, Section 2604(7)(A) would absolve the Secretary of any liability ''for any loss or injury sustained by any party (including an Indian tribe or any member of an Indian tribe) to a lease, business agreement, or right-of-way executed in accordance with tribal energy resource agreements approved under this subsection.'' Section 2604(7)(B) would further bar an Indian Tribe ''from asserting a claim against the United States on the grounds that the Secretary should not have approved the Tribal energy resource agreement.'' The Nation, along with NCAI, CERT, the Navajo Nation and others strongly objected to these provisions because they would significantly limit the United States' liability and release the Secretary from any accountability to Indian tribes for actions that she is required to undertake pursuant to the legislation.

To address these concerns, the tribal workgroup first proposed to delete the language that would bar an Indian Tribe from asserting a claim against the Secretary for her failure to abide by the statutory directive in the legislation itself. Second, we proposed a more concrete recognition of the general Indian trust responsibility and language reaffirming the Secretary's specific trust obligation ''to ensure that the rights of an Indian tribe are protected in the event of a violation of federal law or the terms of any lease, business agreement or right-of-way under this section by any other party to any such lease, business agreement or right-of-way.'' With regard to the release of the Secretary's lability, we limited such release of liability to ''any of the terms of, or any losses resulting from the terms of, a lease, business agreement, or right-of-way executed pursuant to and in accordance with tribal energy resource agreements'' approved under section 2604(e)(2). Our proposed language would limit the liability question to the specific terms agreed to by a Tribe in the TERA itself, and would not affect existing statutory and regulatory duties and obligations of the Secretary in the management of trust minerals and other assets. We understand that these changes were deemed to be acceptable by Committee staff.

These changes are vitally important to the Nation's on-going activities in auditing and overseeing royalty collections of our oil and gas leases. The Nation has a cooperative agreement with the Secretary pursuant to Section 202 of the Federal Oil and Gas Royalty Management Act of 1982 (FOGRMA), to carry out inspection, auditing, investigation, enforcement and other oil and gas royalty management functions. Under this statutory scheme, the Nation has taken a lead role in performing these functions, and even has an office set up in the Mineral Management Service (MMS) in Dallas, Texas. The MMS provides operational costs to the Nation under the 202 Agreement, and works closely with us to ensure compliance with leases and the various statutory royalty payment requirements. FOGRMA does not release the Secretary from liability for the functions taken over by the Nation, but rather embraces an approach that provides an avenue for tribal self-determination while keeping the federal Indian trust responsibility fully intact. If the Nation were to consider entering into a TERA at some point in the future, we would likely do so without releasing the Secretary of her responsibility under the 202 Agreement. Therefore, the language crafted by the tribal workgroup is extremely important to ensure the vitality of these specific FOGRMA provisions as well as relevant judicial decisions that delineate the Secretary's obligations in the leasing of oil and gas on our Reservation.

The Nation also endorses other revisions negotiated by the tribal workgroup regarding the definition of ''tribal consortium'' and the provisions pertaining to the environmental review process. We believe our central concerns have been satisfied to ensure that federal money authorized by the legislation be directed to Indian Tribes and not to non-tribal entities that may use Tribes as a front for these purposes. We also worked to ensure that Tribes not be overly burdened in the environmental review process and that public notification and commenting requirements be limited to the environmental document while ensuring that a Tribe's proprietary and business dealings be protected from public disclosure. With regard to our concerns about the legislation's lack of capacity building assurance, the Nation will continue to raise such concerns in the context of the appropriations process to implement the legislation.

While not a part of the Indian Energy Title, the Nation continues to pursue and support the enactment of a federal tax credit for Indian oil and gas production to stimulate additional domestic production. We supported your bill (S. 1106) in the 107th Congress to establish a federal tax credit based on the volume of production of oil and gas from Indian lands. This type of a credit would make our reserves more competitive and increase the return on our nonrenewable trust resources. Generating significant new revenue to tribal mineral owners, in the form of tax credits, royalties, and tribal taxes, tax incentives would stimulate tribal economies and increase the overall domestic oil and gas supplies, thereby reducing the United States dependency on foreign sources of energy. We urge your continued support for this measure during the floor consideration of the energy tax provisions.

Thank you for your consideration of our views. As always, we appreciate your strong leadership and understanding of our needs. Please contact me in Dulce at (505) 759–3242 if you have any questions or need additional information.

Sincerely,

CLAUDIA VIGIL-MUNIZ,
President.

ONEIDA INDIAN NATION,
ONEIDA NATION HOMELANDS,
Veruna, NY, June 10, 2003.

Hon. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL,
Chairman, U.S. Senate, Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN CAMPBELL: On behalf of the Oneida Indian Nation of New York, I am writing in support of S. 14, specifically Title III, the Indian Tribal Energy Development and Self-Determination Act of 2003. This bill will significantly strengthen the ability of Indian tribes to develop the energy resources that are currently going underutilized on their land.

Your legislation will create a mechanism to allow Indian nations access to grants and low-interest loans from a newly established Office of Indian Energy Policy and Programs. The legislation would allow certain tribes to cut through the red tape that has discouraged third parties from investing in Native American energy in the past.

In addition, under the legislation, federal agencies may provide preference in Indian firms when purchasing energy; this will help the new industry get started while also promoting national energy self-sufficiency. Energy production is a capital-intensive industry, and without the assistance of your bill, too many tribes will remain mired in dismal economic limbo.

The bill will help to bring electricity to the 14.2 percent of Indian homes that now have none. And by encouraging the vertical integration of tribal energy resources, the bill will help to bring jobs to reservation communities, where unemployment levels have reached as high as 70 percent.

The Oneida Indian Nation of New York appreciates your leadership in tackling the myriad challenges facing Indian Country. The Indian Tribal Energy Development and Self-Determination Act of 2003 is a positive step that not only makes sound national energy policy but would provide Indian nations with additional tools in their efforts to become self-sufficient and self-determining.

Naki'wa,

RAY HALBRITTER,
Nation Representative.

Re supporting Campbell-Domenici amendment to Title III—Indian Energy Title to S. 14, The Energy Policy Act of 2003.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, U.S. Senate, Senate Dirksen Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DOMENICI: On behalf of the Eastern Shoshone Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, I am writing in support of the Campbell-Domenici amendment to the Indian Energy Title in S. 14. Our Tribe participated in the tribal workgroup effort which resulted in the amended language embodies in this amendment. We appreciate your efforts and that of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources and Indian Affairs Committee staff to work with our tribal workgroup to resolve some of the earlier controversial provisions.

The Eastern Shoshone Tribe and the Northern Arapaho Tribe share the Wind River Reservation, which encompasses over 2.2 million acres with significant quantities of oil and gas reserves. The production of oil and gas reserves on the Wind River Reservation is the primary source of revenue for the Tribes accounting for over 90% of the Tribes' governmental revenue. Accordingly, the Wind River Reservation Tribes have a keen interest in supporting the enactment of comprehensive energy legislation for Indian reservation development.

In summary, we believe that the Campbell-Domenici amendment addresses our primary concerns regarding the United States trust relationship owed to Indian Tribes in the context of mineral production, protection of sensitive tribal business dealing, and a sound environmental review process. Specifically, the amendment eliminates language that would have barred an Indian Tribe from asserting a claim against the Secretary for her failure to abide by the statutory directive in the legislation itself. The amendment also provides a specific affirmation of the United States' trust responsibility and duty to ensure that the rights of an Indian tribe are protected against statutory or lease violations of leases executed pursuant to secretarial approved Tribal Energy Resource Agreements (TERA). Moreover, the Campbell-Domenici amendment appropriately limits the release of the Secretary's liability to the specific terms agreed to by a Tribe in the TERA itself. Accordingly, this language would not affect existing statutory and regulatory duties and obligations of the Secretary in the management of trust minerals and other assets. Finally, the Campbell-Domenici amendment addresses our concerns that a Tribe's sensitive commercial business dealing are protected from public disclosure and that Tribes not be subject to overly burdensome environmental review requirements.

The Eastern Shoshone Tribe remains concerned with capacity building for Tribes interested in pursuing a TERA. Given the immediate movement of the legislation, however, we do not believe these concerns should prevent Congress from acting favorably on the entire Indian Energy Title. We will urge full support for tribal capacity during the appropriations process.

I would also like to take this opportunity to apprise you of our efforts with Senator Thomas to secure an amendment in the energy tax title for a federal tax credit for oil and gas produced on Indian lands. This provision is similar to the bill, S. 1106, you introduced in the 107th Congress which would structure the credit based on the volume of production of oil and gas from Indian lands. This type of a credit would make our reserves more competitive and increase the return on our nonrenewable trust resources. The proposal would not only generate new revenue to tribal mineral owners, it would also stimulate tribal economies and contribute to the Nation's domestic oil and gas supply. We are awaiting the revenue estimate from the Joint Taxation Committee, and we urge your continued support for this proposal during the floor debate on energy tax provisions.

In closing, I want to again express our appreciate to you, and recognize the efforts of Senator Thomas, in moving forward with the historic piece of legislation.

Sincerely,

VERNON HILL,
Chairman, Eastern Shoshone Tribe.

NATIONAL TRIBAL ENVIRONMENTAL COUNCIL,
Albuquerque, NM, June 5, 2003.

Hon. Senator BEN NIGHTHORSE-CAMPBELL,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR NIGHTHORSE-CAMPBELL: On behalf of the National Tribal Environmental Council, we are writing in support of the Title III Indian Energy Provisions in S. 14.

The National Tribal Environmental Council is a not-for-profit organization with a membership comprised of over 180 tribal governments. As such, we strongly support the principle embodied in the authorizing language of the amendment that Tribes can develop their energy resources in a manner that respects the ecological integrity of their reservation environments as well as their sacred sites, cultural resources, historical, archeological resources and other cultural patrimony.

We condition our support of Title III to acknowledge that we are aware of the serious concerns of the Navajo Nation that this legislation has the potential to legislate the recent Supreme Court decision against their interests. We respectfully request you consider clarifying the legislative history to reflect the fact that the Secretary must continue to act in the best interests of the Indian tribe, as was similarly included in the Indian Minerals Development Act of 1982.

Another concern we have with the provisions of Sec 2604 of the Title III is not the delegation of federal authority based on the voluntary opt-in program but the potential for the federal responsibility to transfer to the tribes without the commensurate resources to ensure an adequate the tribal regulatory infrastructure.

As you know, tribal governments have been struggling but succeeding in their efforts to develop complex and tribal-specific environmental programs with very limited resources. Maintaining the trend of increasingly sophisticated and consistent implementation of tribal environmental processes and standards on a national scale is dependent on increased funding. Adding additional needs to the tribal governments at this time—without adequate funding—is cause for concern. This is a concern, however, that we will voice as part of the appropriations process and it should not be viewed as undermining our support for the Senate amendments to S. 14.

Thank you for this opportunity to support this important initiative for Indian Country and for your on-going efforts to recognize and include Indian Country in these important national policy debates.

Sincerely,

DAVID F. CONRAD,
Executive Director.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIAN TRIBAL COUNCIL,
Ignacio, CO, May 27, 2003.

Re Indian Tribal Energy Development and Self-Determination Act of 2003; S. 14, Title III.

Chairman PETE V. DOMENICI,
Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DOMENICI: Approximately one month ago, the Southern Ute Indian Tribe submitted a statement of conceptual, but qualified, support for the Indian Tribal Energy Development and Self-Determination Act of 2003. Our Tribe's activities have shown that tribal energy development can provide tremendous economic development opportunities for tribes while simultaneously assisting the Nation in meeting its energy demands. For tribes that have demonstrated the capacity to represent themselves effectively in energy development activities, we have long-advocated legislation that would provide the option of bypassing the stifling effects of the Bureau of Indian Affairs approval requirements applicable to tribal leases, business agreements and rights-of-way. The reference legislation addressed this very matter, however, as Section 2604 of Title III emerged from the Senate Committee of Indian Affairs and the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, it contained a number of provisions that were objectionable to the Indian community.

Over the last month, committee staff members and representatives of tribes and Indian organizations have engaged in an intense dialogue about the problems in the draft legislation, and, as a result of their tireless efforts, proposed amendments have been developed that would eliminate the problems previously identified. A list of those proposed amendments is attached for reference purposes. Among the different matters resolved to our satisfaction have been the following: (i) confirmation that Section 2604 is a voluntary program available to Tribes on an opt-in/opt-out basis; (ii) inclusion of pre-approval public notice and comment opportunities regarding the environmental impacts of a proposed tribal mineral lease, business agreement or right-of-way, but preservation of the confidentiality of the business terms of such documents; (iii) acceptable balancing of the limitations on and ongoing responsibility of the Secretary to perform trust duties associated with a participating tribe's activities undertaken pursuant to this legislation; and (iv) confirmation of the appropriate scope of NEPA review that would be associated with the Secretary's decision to approve a Tribal Energy Resource Agreement (''TERA''), which is the enabling document permitting a tribe to proceed with independent development of mineral leases, business agreements, or rights-of-way. Again, we helped develop and wholly support these amendments.

During the course of debate on this legislation, some have suggested that Section 2604 will eliminate effective environmental protection on affected tribal lands. We want to assure the members of the Senate that this is not the case. Energy resource development by a tribe generally carries with it a deep commitment to preserving one's backyard. Tribal leaders are directly accountable to their members for preserving environmental resources. In the Four Corners Region, it is not unusual for private landowners or BLM lessees to comment enviously on the environmental diligence employed by our Tribe in the development of our energy resources. We renew our invitation to members of the Senate to visit our Reservation and see firsthand our energy resource projects.

In conclusion, with the referenced amendments, we strongly support S. 14, Title III. We urge other members of the Senate to also support this legislation, and we commend those who have worked toward its development and passage.

Sincerely,

HOWARD D. RICHARDS, SR.,
Chairman, Southern Ute Indian Tribal Council.

NATIVE AMERICAN ENERGY GROUP, LLC,
Ft. Washakie, WY, May 7, 2003.

Senator PETE V. DOMENICI,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOMENICI: Native American Energy Group (NAEG) is an Indian owned company working with tribes and allottees throughout the country to determine how best to develop oil and gas reserves and help provide for the energy security of this country while also protecting the interests of mineral owners. The recent Indian provisions of the Energy Bill are a big step in the right direction to accomplish positive results for the Indian people of this country.

One of the areas of contention is the environmental area with many people stating that these provisions will gut the NEPA process. While this is a legitimate concern, nowhere have I read or heard that this is the intent of these provisions. In fact recent language in the Bill clearly denotes compliance with all applicable tribal and federal environmental laws. Even without this new language though my understanding was always that the intent was not to gut environmental laws. Tribal governments with energy resources are pro-development but by the same token they are also pro-environment. This may seem a dichotomy of sorts but my read on this bill is that the language will strengthen tribal sovereignty, develop tribal capacities and make tribal and allotted oil and gas operations more accountable with less impacts. In addition, the federal trust oversight will not be diminished which is always a concern of tribal governments.

NAEG appreciates the work and coordination that goes into an effort of this magnitude and you and your staff are to be commended for the recent provisions as presented in the bill. The history and discussions surrounding this bill recognize the importance of bringing tribes into the mainstream of the energy picture of this country and providing the mechanisms for the technical, administrative and legislative efforts to occur.

The research your staff has undertaken in support of this bill very well explains the amounts of energy resources situated on tribal and allotted lands. This largely untapped resource can be a boost for this country as we seek to provide jobs and diversify our economy, while helping America meet its energy needs. Please share with the rest of the Senate Indian Committee our support for these endeavors and if there is any information we can provide to assist you in your work please do not hesitate to call me.

Sincerely,

WES MARTEL,
President.

UNITED SOUTH AND EASTERN TRIBES, INC.,
Nashville, TN, June 9, 2003.

Hon. BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. DANIEL K. INOUYE,
Vice Chairman, Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN AND MR. VICE CHAIRMAN: I am writing on behalf of the United South and Eastern Tribes, Inc. (USET), an intertribal organization comprised of twenty-four federally recognized tribes from twelve states. I am writing in support of the Indian Tribal Energy Development and Self-Determination Act of 2003, Title III and its inclusion in S. 14, the Energy Policy Act of 2003.

We understand that tribal energy development can provide tremendous economic development opportunities for our member tribes while simultaneously assisting tribes in meeting energy demands. Our tribes are aware that other tribes have concerns regarding the provision of Title III to which tribal input has been solicited and received to address the issues.

Our tribes support the compromises reached by the parties and we call upon the leadership of the committee to further engage and respond to tribal concerns. We hope that compromises on the remaining outstanding points may be reached whereby all of Indian Country can support inclusion of Title III in S. 14.

Sincerely,

JAMES T. MARTIN,
Executive Director.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, June 6, 2003.

To the Members of the United States Senate:

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the world's largest business federation, representing more than three million businesses of every size, sector, and region, supports an amendment to S. 14, the Energy Policy Act of 2003, offered by Senators Domenici and Campbell. This amendment would add an Indian Energy title to the bill that facilitates energy exploration on Indian lands while ensuring the same level of environmental protection as is provided in the state in which the lands are located.

The Domenici-Campbell amendment is a sensible component of a comprehensive national energy policy. While Indian land accounts for five percent of the land area of the U.S., it contains 30 percent of the nation's identified coal deposits, five percent of its oil deposits, and 10 percent of its natural gas reserves. However, the Department of the Interior estimates that less than one quarter of these assets have been developed. This amendment will spur domestic energy development by removing bureaucratic obstacles on Indian lands and by providing grants and loan guarantees for building the necessary energy infrastructure.

An amendment to the Domenici-Campbell amendment is anticipated that would require a tribe to comply with the National Environmental Policy Act each time it enters into an energy project with a private sector company. Such an amendment is simply an attempt to force a tribe into undertaking an environmental impact statement as if it was a federal government agency. If such an amendment passes, it will subject tribes to years of bureaucratic study followed by years of litigation, notwithstanding the fact that the project has complied with all federal and state environmental permitting laws.

Our nation will need 43 percent more energy in the next twenty years and will need it from all sources, including coal, oil, gas, nuclear, and alternative fuels. These tribal territories are sovereign and the federal government must allow them the means for adequate economic development so they can participate in the many benefits of our nation, including the right to economic self-determination.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce urges you to support the Domenici-Campbell amendment that would increase domestic energy supplies in an environmentally compatible manner and reject all weakening amendments.

Sincerely,

R. BRUCE JOSTEN,
Executive Vice President.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM of South Carolina). The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I know we will be back on this bill. I note that the Indian tribes and organizations listed are not in full. We have additional ones since this was prepared, and they will be added in due course.

I compliment the distinguished Senator, Mr. CAMPBELL. I am pleased to be his cosponsor, and I say for those who are going to now look at this bill, I hope our Indian leaders also are aware that there will be those who look at it from the standpoint of how can they make it more difficult for the Indian people to be able to develop their resources. That is what some of the time and effort will be spent on during the intervention between this bill and its final vote. How can organizations that do not want the Indian people to produce their raw materials into energy and resources, thus jobs and opportunity for the Indian people, get their hands on this bill and try to offer amendments to try to harm this bill? I am certain some will do that.

We will be vigilant, we will be aware, and we are asking the Indian leaders who support this to inform their Senators that this is the bill they want as part of America's policy on energy. We are asking every Indian leader to advise those Senators who have been with them in the past to support this bill. This bill is their bill. It is for their future. It is for jobs and money and resources for them. We need them telling their Senators that this is the bill they want. If they do that, come July we will have a real Fourth of July celebration for the Indian people, for in a sense they will be free, free to develop their resources, where heretofore their hands have been tied.

There will be those during the intervening time who will look for ways to put more ties and strings back into the Campbell bill. We want to tell our Indian leaders to tell their friends in the Senate they do not want that; they do not want changes to this bill that will make it harder for them to develop their resources in partnership, singularly or otherwise, with other Americans.

This amendment is the product of many hours of negotiation and cooperation among the interested tribes, the Indian Affairs Committee and the Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

I am also pleased that this amendment enjoys the support of numerous tribes including the Jicarilla Apache Nation, the Cherokee Nation, the Southern Utes, the Chickasaw Nation, the Native American Energy Group, the National Congress of American Indians, Dine Power—a Navajo Corporation, the Council of Energy Resource Tribes, which represents nearly 50 energy producing tribes and The National Tribal Environmental Council, which represent 180 tribe,

I am pleased that Indian tribes across the country will play an important role in our national energy plan. By passing this legislation, we will streamline the tribal leasing process that outside parties have more incentive to partner with tribes in developing energy resources and provide investment in critical energy infrastructure on Indian land.

Indian lands contain some of the richest energy reserves in the Nation. Although Indian land accounts for only 5 percent of the land area of the U.S. it contains: 30 percent of identified coal deposits; 5 percent of our nation's oil; and 10 percent of our natural gas, which is in very tight supply.

Despite the fact that reserves are present, the Department of the Interior estimates that only 20 to 25 percent of these assets have been developed.

Energy projects are capital intensive and most tribes do not have the financial capability to develop the resources.

Tribes face an additional burden in attracting partners and that is a result of the paternalistic lease approval system that requires the Secretary of the Interior to approve all tribal leases. This delays action and creates investment uncertainty.

In an attempt to resolve this out-of-date process, the Indian Affairs Committee and the Senate Energy Committee have taken key elements of both Senator CAMPBELL's legislation S. 522 and Senator BINGAMAN proposal, S. 424.

The title adopts Senator BINGAMAN's proposal to create the Office of Indian Energy Policy and Programs within the Department of Energy. This office will provide grants and loan guarantees to tribes to facilitate the development of their energy resources and infrastructure.

Section 303, of this title will change the existing lease agreements between the Secretary of the Interior and tribes to allow tribes to enter into a lease or agreement without the approval of the Secretary so long as those leases or business agreements conform to regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

The section establishes a process by which a tribe may submit a plan governing leases and rights-of-way to the Secretary for approval. It also requires the tribe to demonstrate to the Secretary that the plan includes provisions regarding lease and contract terms, environmental regulation, and public notification and comment.

I think that is very important to note that this entire proposal is voluntary. Let me repeat that. This proposal is completely voluntary. Tribes will not be forced to adopt this proposal if they feel it would not benefit the tribe as a whole.

We have numerous letters from tribes who support the proposal and I am confident they will benefit. However, any tribe that opposes this proposal probably will not participate and can continue to operate under the status quo.

This amendment also protects the environment. I think the statement of President Joe Shirley of the Navajo Nation before the Senate Indian Affairs Committee accurately captures the environmental responsibilities all tribes must comply with. President Shirley stated, Tribes may already promulgate regulations that are more, but not less, stringent than Federal regulations governing the same subject matters (environment). The following is a list of some of the federal statutes that already control regulations for land use, both State and tribal: National Environmental Policy Act, Clean Air Act, Clean Water Act, Endangered Species Act, Federal Land Management and Policy Act, National Historic Preservation Act, Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act, Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act and the Indian Mineral Leasing Act.

Clearly, the tribes must fully comply with our environmental statutes.

Following markup of S. 14, the Indian Affairs and Energy Committees have worked to address concerns regarding the trust responsibilities between tribes and the Secretary of the Interior. These agreed-upon changes make up the amendment Senator CAMPBELL has offered.

This amendment deserves the strong support of the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute for Senator CAMPBELL to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico, who is a stalwart supporter of this movement.

There is no question, if we do not take this back up between now and July, if there is a second degree offered at that time, we will be giving the opponents of this bill—instead of giving Indians an opportunity to get up off their knees and get some jobs—an opportunity to gin up some opposition. I think that is what the delay is for. I appreciate the support of the Senator from New Mexico.

''(b) TASK FORCE; CAPACITY ENHANCEMENT STUDY.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall direct any airport identified by the Secretary under subsection (a) that is not engaged in a runway expansion process and has not initiated a capacity enhancement study (or similar capacity assessment) since 1996—

''(A) to establish a delay reduction task force to study means of increasing capacity at the airport, including air traffic, airline scheduling, and airfield expansion alternatives; or

''(B) to conduct a capacity enhancement study.

''(2) SCOPE.—The scope of the study shall be determined by the airport and the Federal Aviation Administration, and where appropriate shall consider regional capacity solutions.

''(3) RECOMMENDATIONS SUBMITTED TO SECRETARY.—

''(A) TASK FORCE.—A task force established under this subsection shall submit a report containing its findings and conclusions, together with any recommendations for capacity enhancement at the airport, to the Secretary within 9 months after the task force is established.

''(B) CES.—A capacity enhancement study conducted under this subsection shall be submitted, together with its findings and conclusions, to the Secretary as soon as the study is completed.

''(c) RUNWAY EXPANSION AND RECONFIGURATION.—If the report or study submitted under subsection (b)(3) includes a recommendation for the construction or reconfiguration of runways at the airport, then the Secretary and the airport shall complete the planning and environmental review process within 5 years after report or study is submitted to the Secretary. The Secretary may extend the 5-year deadline under this subsection for up to 1 year if the Secretary determines that such an extension is necessary and in the public interest. The Secretary shall notify the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, and to the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of any such extension.

''(d) AIRPORTS THAT DECLINE TO UNDERTAKE EXPANSION PROJECTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—If an airport at which the construction or reconfiguration of runways is recommended does not take action to initiate a planning and environmental assessment process for the construction or reconfiguration of those runways within 30 days after the date on which the report or study is submitted to the Secretary, then—

''(A) the airport shall be ineligible for planning and other expansion funds under subchapter I of chapter 471, notwithstanding any provision of that subchapter to the contrary; and

''(B) no passenger facility fee may be approved at that airport during the 5-year period beginning 30 days after the date on which the report or study is submitted to the Secretary, for—

''(i) projects that, but for subparagraph (A), could have been funded under chapter 471; or

''(b) DESIGNATION TO REMAIN IN EFFECT FOR 5 YEARS.—The designation of a project as a national capacity project under paragraph (1) shall remain in effect for 5 years. The Secretary may extend the 5-year period for up to 2 additional years upon request if the Secretary finds that substantial progress is being made toward completion of the project.

''§ 47703. Expedited coordinated environmental review process; project coordinators and environment impact teams

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation shall implement an expedited coordinated environmental review process for national capacity projects that—

''(1) provides for better coordination among the Federal, regional, State, and local agencies concerned with the preparation of environmental impact statements or environmental assessments under the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.);

''(2) provides for an expedited and coordinated process in the conduct of environmental reviews that ensures that, where appropriate, the reviews are done concurrently and not consecutively; and

''(3) provides for a date certain for completing all environmental reviews.

''(b) HIGH PRIORITY FOR AIRPORT ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEWS.—Each department and agency of the United States Government with jurisdiction over environmental reviews shall accord any such review involving a national capacity project the highest possible priority and conduct the review expeditiously. ''§ 47704. Compatible land use initiative for national capacity projects

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation may make grants under chapter 471 to States and units of local government for land use compatibility plans directly related to national capacity projects for the purposes of making the use of land areas around the airport compatible with aircraft operations if the land use plan or project meets the requirements of this section.

''(b) CONDITIONS.—A land use plan or project meets the requirements of this section if it—

''(1) is sponsored by the public agency that has the authority to plan and adopt land use control measures, including zoning, in the planning area in and around the airport and that agency provides written assurances to the Secretary that it will work with the affected airport to identify and adopt such measures;

''(5) has been approved jointly by the airport owner or operator and the public agency sponsor.

''(c) ASSURANCES FROM SPONSORS.—The Secretary may require the airport sponsor, public agency, or other entity to which a grant may be awarded under this section to provide such additional assurances, progress reports, and other information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this section.

''§ 47705. Air traffic procedures at national capacity projects

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation may consider prescribing flight procedures to avoid or minimize potentially significant adverse noise impacts of the project during the environmental planning process for a national capacity project that involves the construction of new runways or the reconfiguration of existing runways. If the Secretary determines that noise mitigation flight procedures are consistent with safe and efficient use of the navigable airspace, then, at the request of the airport sponsor, the Administrator may, in a manner consistent with applicable Federal law, commit to prescribing such procedures in any record of decision approving the project.

''(b) MODIFICATION.—Notwithstanding any commitment by the Secretary under subsection (a), the Secretary may initiate changes to such procedures if necessary to maintain safety and efficiency in light of new information or changed circumstances.

''§ 47706. Pilot program for environmental review at national capacity projects

''(b) ELIGIBLE PARTICIPANTS.—Participation in the pilot program shall be available, on a voluntary basis, to airports with an annual passenger enplanement of not less than 3 million passengers. The Secretary shall specify the minimum contribution necessary to qualify for participation in the pilot program, which shall be not less than the amount necessary to compensate the Department of Transportation for the expense of a fulltime equivalent environmental specialist and attorney qualified at the GS-14 equivalent level.

''(c) RETENTION OF REVENUES.—The salaries and expenses account of the Federal Aviation Administration shall retain as an offsetting collection such sums as may be necessary from such proceeds for the costs of developing and implementing the program required by subsection (a). Such offsetting collections shall be available for obligation subject to the terms and conditions of the receiving appropriations account, and shall be deposited in such accounts on a quarterly basis. Such offsetting collections are authorized to remain available until expended for such purpose.

''(b) PROGRAMS AUTHORIZED.—

''(1) COMMUNITY FLEXIBILITY.—The Secretary shall establish a pilot program for not more than 10 communities or consortia of communities under which the airport sponsor of an airport serving the community or consortium may elect to forego any essential air service assistance under preceding sections of this subchapter for a 10-year period in exchange for a grant from the Secretary equal in value to twice the annual essential air service assistance received for the most recently ended calendar year. Under the program, and notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the Secretary shall make a grant to each participating sponsor for use by the recipient for any project that—

''(A) is eligible for assistance under chapter 471;

''(B) is located on the airport property; or

''(C) will improve airport facilities in a way that would make such facilities more usable for general aviation.

''(2) EQUIPMENT CHANGES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a pilot program for not more than 10 communities or consortia of communities under which, upon receiving a petition from the sponsor of the airport serving the community or consortium, the Secretary shall authorize and request the essential air service provider for that community or consortium to use smaller equipment to provide the service and to consider increasing the frequency of service using such smaller equipment. Before granting any such petition, the Secretary shall determine that passenger safety would not be compromised by the use of such smaller equipment.

''(B) ALTERNATIVE SERVICES.—For any 3 aiport sponsors participating in the program established under subparagraph (A), the Secretary may establish a pilot program under which—

''(i) the Secretary provides 100 percent Federal funding for reasonable levels of alternative transportation services from the eligible place to the nearest hub airport or small hub airport;

''(ii) the Secretary will authorize the sponsor to use its essential air service subsidy funds provided under preceding sections of this subchapter for any airport-related project that would improve airport facilities; and

''(iii) the sponsor may make an irrevocable election to terminate its participation in the pilot program established under this paragraph after 1 year.

''(3) COST-SHARING.—The Secretary shall establish a pilot program under which the sponsors of airports serving a community or consortium of communities share the cost of providing air transportation service greater than the basic essential air service provided under this subchapter.

''(4) EAS LOCAL PARTICIPATION PROGRAM.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation shall establish a pilot program under which designated essential air service communities located in proximity to hub airports are required to assume 10 percent of their essential air service subsidy costs for a 3-year period.

''(B) DESIGNATION OF COMMUNITIES.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not designate any community under this paragraph unless it is located within 100 miles by road of a hub airport and is not located in a noncontiguous State. In making the designation, the Secretary may take into consideration the total traveltime between a community and the nearest hub airport, taking into account terrain, traffic, weather, road conditions, and other relevant factors.

''(ii) ONE COMMUNITY PER STATE.—The Secretary may not designate—

''(I) more than 1 community per State under this paragraph; or

''(II) a community in a State in which another community that is eligible to participate in the essential air service program has elected not to participate in the essential air service program.

''(D) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—

''(i) NON-FEDERAL AMOUNTS.—For purposes of this section, the non-Federal portion of the essential air service subsidy may be derived from contributions in kind, or through reduction in the amount of the essential air service subsidy through reduction of air carrier costs, increased ridership, pre-purchase of tickets, or other means. The Secretary shall provide assistance to designated communities in identifying potential means of reducing the amount of the subsidy without adversely affecting air transportation service to the community.

''(ii) APPLICATION WITH OTHER MATCHING REQUIREMENTS.—This section shall apply to the Federal share of essential air service provided this subchapter, after the application of any other non-Federal share matching requirements imposed by law.

''(E) ELIGIBILITY FOR OTHER PROGRAMS NOT AFFECTED.—Nothing in this paragraph affects the eligibility of a community or consortium of communities, an airport sponsor, or any other person to participate in any program authorized by this subchapter. A community designated under this paragraph may participate in any program (including pilot programs) authorized by this subchapter for which it is otherwise eligible—

''(i) without regard to any limitation on the number of communities that may participate in that program; and

''(ii) without reducing the number of other communities that may participate in that program.

''(F) SECRETARY TO REPORT TO CONGRESS ON IMPACT.—The Secretary shall transmit a report to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on—

''(i) the economic condition of communities designated under this paragraph before their designation;

''(ii) the impact of designation under this paragraph on such communities at the end of each of the 3 years following their designation; and

''(iii) the impact of designation on air traffic patterns affecting air transportation to and from communities designated under this paragraph.

''(c) CODE-SHARING.—Under the pilot program established under subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized to require air carriers providing service to participating communities and major air carriers (as defined in section 41716(a)(2)) serving large hub airports (as defined in section 41731(a)(3)) to participate in multiple code-share arrangements consistent with normal industry practice whenever and wherever the Secretary determines that such multiple code-sharing arrangements would improve air transportation services. The Secretary may not require air carriers to participate in such arrangements under this subsection for more than 10 such communities.

''(d) TRACK SERVICE.—The Secretary shall require essential air service providers to track changes in service, including on-time arrivals and departures.

''(e) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—In order to participate in a pilot program established under this section, the airport sponsor for a community or consortium of communities shall submit an application to the Secretary in such form, at such time, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.''.

SEC. 508. LOW-EMISSION AIRPORT VEHICLES AND INFRASTRUCTURE.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to permit the use of funds made available under subchapter 471 to encourage commercial service airports in air quality nonattainment and maintenance areas to undertake projects for gate electrification, acquisition or conversion of airport vehicles and airport-owned ground support equipment to acquire low-emission technology, low-emission technology fuel systems, and other related air quality projects on a voluntary basis to improve air quality and more aggressively address the constraints that emissions can impose on future aviation growth. Use of those funds is conditioned on airports receiving credits for emissions reductions that can be used to mitigate the air quality effects of future airport development. Making these projects eligible for funding in addition to those projects that are already eligible under section 47102(3)(F) is intended to support those projects that, at the time of execution, may not be required by the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501 et seq.), but may be needed in the future.

(b) ACTIVITIES ADDED TO DEFINITION OF ''AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT''.—Section 47102(3) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(K) work necessary to construct or modify airport facilities to provide low-emission fuel systems, gate electrification, and other related air quality improvements at a commercial service airport, if the airport is located in an air quality nonattainment or maintenance area (as defined in sections 171(2) and 175(A) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501(2), 7505a) and if such project will result in an airport receiving appropriate emission credits, as described in section 47139 of this title. The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall issue guidance describing eligible low-emission modifications and improvements and stating how airport sponsors will demonstrate benefits.

''(L) a project for the acquisition or conversion of vehicles and ground support equipment, owned by a commercial service airport, to low-emission technology, if the airport is located in an air quality nonattainment or maintenance area (as defined in sections 171(2) and 175(A) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501(2), 7505a) and if such project will result in an airport receiving appropriate emission credits as described in section 47139 of this title. The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall issue guidance describing eligible low-emission vehicle technology and stating how airport sponsors will demonstrate benefits. For airport-owned vehicles and equipment, the acquisition of which are not otherwise eligible for assistance under this subchapter, the incremental cost of equipping such vehicles or equipment with low-emission technology shall be treated as eligible for assistance.''.

(c) LOW-EMISSION TECHNOLOGY DEFINED.—Section 47102 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (10) through (20), as paragraphs (11) through (21) respectively, and inserting after paragraph (9) the following:

''(10) 'low-emission technology' means technology for new vehicles and equipment whose emission performance is the best achievable under emission standards established by the Environmental Protection Agency and that relies exclusively on alternative fuels that are substantially non-petroleum based, as defined by the Department of Energy, but not excluding hybrid systems.''.

(d) EMISSIONS CREDITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 471, as amended by section 206 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

The agreement must, at a minimum, include provisions to ensure that—

''(1) the credits will be consistent with the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7402 et seq.);

''(2) credits generated by the emissions reductions in criteria pollutants are kept by the airport sponsor and may be used for purposes of any current or future general conformity determination or as offsets under the New Source Review program;

''(3) there is national consistency in the way credits are calculated and are provided to airports;

''(4) credits are provided to airport sponsors in a timely manner; and

''(5) there is a method by which the Secretary can be assured that, for any specific project for which funding is being requested, the appropriate credits will be granted.

''(b) ASSURANCE OF RECEIPT OF CREDITS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—As a condition for making a grant for a project described in section 47102(3)(K), 47102(3)(L), or 47140 of this title, or as a condition for granting approval to collect or use a passenger facility fee for a project described in sections 40117(a)(3)(G), 47102(3)(K), 47102(3)(L), or 47140 of this title, the Secretary must receive assurance from the State in which the project is located, or from the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency where there is a Federal Implementation Plan, that the airport sponsor will receive appropriate emission credits in accordance with the conditions of this subsection.

''(2) CREDITS FOR CERTAIN EXISTING PROJECTS.—The Secretary and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall jointly agree on how to provide emission credits to projects previously approved under section 47136 of this title during fiscal years 2001 through 2003, under terms consistent with this section.''.

''(b) LOCATION IN AIR QUALITY NONATTAINMENT OR MAINTENANCE AREAS.—A commercial service airport shall be eligible for participation in the pilot program only if the airport is located in an air quality nonattainment or maintenance area (as defined in sections 171(2) and 175(A) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501(2), 7505a)).

''(c) SELECTION CRITERIA.—In selecting applicants for participation in the pilot program, the Secretary shall give priority consideration to applicants that will achieve the greatest air quality benefits measured by the amount of emissions reduced per dollar of funds expended under the pilot program.

''(d) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—Not more than $500,000 may be expended under the pilot program at any single commercial service airport.

''(e) GUIDELINES.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall establish guidelines regarding the types of retrofit projects eligible under this pilot program by considering remaining equipment useful life, amounts of emission reduction in relation to the cost of projects, and other factors necessary to carry out this section. The Secretary may give priority to ground support equipment owned by the airport and used for airport purposes.

''(f) ELIGIBLE EQUIPMENT DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'eligible equipment' means ground service or maintenance equipment that—

''(1) is located at the airport;

''(2) used to support aeronautical and related activities on the airport; and

The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall issue guidance for eligible projects and for how benefits must be demonstrated. The eligible cost is limited to the incremental amount that exceeds the cost of acquiring other vehicles or equipment that are not low-emission and would be used for the same purpose, or to the cost of low-emission retrofitting. TITLE VI—SECOND CENTURY OF FLIGHT

SEC. 601. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Since 1990, the United States has lost more than 600,000 aerospace jobs.

(2) Over the last year, approximately 100,000 airline workers and aerospace workers have lost their jobs as a result of the terrorist attacks in the United States on September 11, 2001, and the slowdown in the world economy.

(3) The United States has revolutionized the way people travel, developing new technologies and aircraft to move people more efficiently and more safely.

(4) Past Federal investment in aeronautics research and development have benefited the economy and national security of the United States and the quality of life of its citizens.

(5) The total impact of civil aviation on the United States economy exceeds $900 billion annually—9 percent of the gross national product—and 11 million jobs in the national workforce. Civil aviation products and services generate a significant surplus for United States trade accounts, and amount to significant numbers of America's highly skilled, technologically qualified work force.

(6) Aerospace technologies, products and services underpin the advanced capabilities of our men and women in uniform and those charged with homeland security.

(7) Future growth in civil aviation increasingly will be constrained by concerns related to aviation system safety and security, aviation system capabilities, aircraft noise, emissions, and fuel consumption.

(8) The United States is in danger of losing its aerospace leadership to international competitors aided by persistent government intervention. Many governments take their funding beyond basic technology development, choosing to fund product development and often bring the product to market, even if the products are not fully commercially viable. Moreover, international competitors have recognized the importance of noise, emission, fuel consumption, and constraints of the aviation system and have established aggressive agendas for addressing each of these concerns.

(9) Efforts by the European Union, through a variety of means, will challenge the United States' leadership position in aerospace. A recent report outlined the European Union's goal of becoming the world's leader in aviation and aeronautics by the end of 2020, utilizing better coordination among research programs, planning, and funding to accomplish this goal.

(10) Revitalization and coordination of the United States' efforts to maintain its leadership in aviation and aeronautics are critical and must begin now.

(11) A recent report by the Commission on the Future of the United States Aerospace Industry outlined the scope of the problems confronting the aerospace and aviation industries in the United States and found that—

(A) Aerospace will be at the core of America's leadership and strength throughout the 21st century;

(B) Aerospace will play an integral role in our economy, our security, and our mobility; and

(C) global leadership in aerospace is a national imperative.

(12) Despite the downturn in the global economy, Federal Aviation Administration projections indicate that upwards of 1 billion people will fly annually by 2013. Efforts must begin now to prepare for future growth in the number of airline passengers.

(13) The United States must increase its investment in research and development to revitalize the aviation and aerospace industries, to create jobs, and to provide educational assistance and training to prepare workers in those industries for the future.

(14) Current and projected levels of Federal investment in aeronautics research and development are not sufficient to address concerns related to the growth of aviation.

(b) REPORT.—The Administrator shall transmit a report on the study to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration $500,000 for fiscal year 2004 to carry out this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I believe Senator MCCAIN will arrive momentarily to manage this legislation.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. May I ask what the pending Senate business is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. S. 824.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues, Senator HOLLINGS, Senator LOTT, and Senator ROCKEFELLER, for their hard work on this very important legislation. Senator LOTT and Senator ROCKEFELLER held extensive hearings in the Aviation Subcommittee. They have come up with a product that has addressed many of the concerns and very important issues associated with aviation. I believe what they have done is a very agreeable product.

I note that our friends on the other side of the Capitol have completed their work on this bill, so if we could complete this legislation and go quickly to conference, I think we could have this done pretty quickly.

I am pleased the Senate is now considering S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act, AIR–V. This legislation was introduced by Senators LOTT, HOLLINGS, ROCKEFELLER, and myself on April 8, 2003, and approved by the Senate Commerce Committee on May 1, 2003.

I don't think that anyone could have predicted 100 years ago, when the Wright Brothers first flew their Wright Flyer over Kitty Hawk, NC, that air travel would become such a significant part of our Nation's economy. Aviation has evolved from the first controlled flight that traveled about 120 feet, to a system that has reached more than 550 million enplanements annually. Air travel has revolutionized the world. We are becoming a global culture for which air travel has contributed significantly. The United States has played a critical role in the explosion in air travel, with nearly two-thirds of world aviation travelers taking off or landing on U.S. soil.

Mr. President, 4 years ago, the Congress approved the Aviation Investment Reform Act for the 21st Century, known as AIR–21. That reauthorization measure provided for far reaching changes to our Federal aviation policies, coupled with significant investment in aviation. We increased airport spending by significant amounts and greatly improved our aviation system. At the same time, a great deal has happened in aviation during the past few years. The airlines have gone through several cycles of good and bad times.

The tragic events of September 11, 2001, forced a major restructuring of aviation transportation security. As a result of September 11 and other economic factors, Congress has twice voted to provide the airline industry aid totaling $8 billion in cash and the potential for $11 billion in other benefits. We have taken unprecedented actions to help ensure the continued viability of the airlines. I recognize that intervening events have been the cause of many of the industry's problems, which is why I was a strong supporter of these initiatives. However, I do believe that the industry must begin to solve its own problems and not come back to Congress when confronted with new challenges.

It is time for Congress to now focus its efforts on the Federal Aviation Administration. We must continue to ensure the safety and efficiency of our aviation system. We must address the continued modernization of our air traffic control system. We must continue our oversight of the FAA so that it continues to move towards more efficient operation. We must continue the expansion of our infrastructure. And, we must continue to strive to promote the security of our traveling public.

I believe the legislation before us, S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act, AIR-Vision, meets these objectives. This bill would reauthorize FAA programs for 3 years and continue the investments in the aviation system that began under AIR 21. Specifically, it would authorize funding for FAA Operations at $7.6 billion for fiscal year 2004; $7.7 billion for fiscal year 2005; and $7.9 billion for fiscal year 2006, and it would authorize funding for the Airport Improvement Program at $3.4 billion in fiscal year 2004; $3.5 billion in fiscal year 2005; and $3.6 billion in fiscal year 2006. The bill also authorizes $2.9 billion in fiscal year 2004; $2.97 billion in fiscal year 2005; and $3 billion in fiscal year 2006 for the Airway Facilities Improvement Program and requires a report on major FAA modernization programs.

The funding levels in this bill do not require any new or increased taxes or user fees. The taxes currently paid by air travelers and others into the Aviation Trust Fund are in place through fiscal year 2007 and are sufficient to pay for this bill.

We also must ensure that the FAA manages its resources wisely. The bill includes provisions, first proposed by former FAA Administrator Garvey and endorsed by the current Administrator, to improve FAA management. The FAA's management of its programs, especially its modernization efforts, continue to be of particular interest to Congress. I note that the FAA has finally hired its first Chief Operating Officer, Russ Chew, three and one-half years after the office was authorized. This bill would provide additional clarification of the FAA's Chief Operating Officers' responsibilities for managing the FAA's air traffic control system.

The bill would create a process to enhance airport capacity at certain large hub airports that significantly add to delays in the national aviation system by ensuring that these airports' needs are continually reviewed. It also attempts to streamline the environmental review process by coordinating the reviews by different agencies. This is important as this process is sometimes used to unnecessarily delay airport expansion.

The bill makes several improvements and reforms to services to small communities and the essential air service program by continuing programs created in AIR–21 to incentivize communities to take a greater ownership role in their service. It also allows the communities flexibility to opt out of the program in return for payment or to look at alternate services for the community.

The bill extends the small community air service development pilot program, established in AIR–21, until 2006, and provides funding of $27.5 million per year during the 3-year extension. It also clarifies that 40 communities per year may participate in the program and that no community may participate twice. This program has been well-received for the innovative ideas that have sprung from it regarding the provision of and payment for air service to small communities, and we believe it is important for the program to continue in the near term.

Regarding competition, the bill instructs the Secretary of Transportation to study competition and airline access problems at hub airports. Specifically, the Department of Transportation is to look at gate usage and availability, and the effects of pricing of gates and other facilities on competition and access. Within 6 months, the Secretary's findings, conclusions, and recommendations are to be submitted to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

In addition, the bill requires that airports which deny applications by an air carrier for access to gates or other facilities submit to the Secretary notification of the denial and a report explaining the reasons for the denial and a time line, if any, for when the request will be accommodated.

For security, the bill establishes the Aviation Security Capital Fund which is financed with $500 million annually in security service fees which are already collected by the Transportation Security Administration. The fund will be administered by the TSA and the TSA will make grants to airports to assist with capital security costs. The fund will allocate 40 percent to hub airports; 20 percent to medium hub airports; 15 percent to small hub airports; and 25 percent is to be distributed at the Secretary's discretion to address security risks. At the same time, the bill protects the AIP funding from continued raids on what was created for capital improvement funding, but which in recent years has been used for security funding.

The bill also directs the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security to study the effectiveness of the aviation security system. Within 6 months, the Secretary's findings, conclusions, and recommendations are to be submitted to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. The Secretary is directed to redeploy the department's resources based on the results of the study.

For aviation modernization, the bill establishes a new Office of Aerospace and Aviation Liaison within the DOT. This office will be charged with coordinating aviation and aeronautics research programs, activities, goals, and priorities within the Federal Government. Areas of responsibility include air traffic control, technology transfer from government programs to private sector, noise, emissions, fuel consumption, and safety. This office will work with the FAA and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to ensure that aviation and aerospace research is coordinated and funds are well spent.

This bill also establishes a National Air Traffic Management System Development Office within the FAA with the mission of developing a next generation air traffic management system plan for the United States. This plan is required to focus on transforming the national airspace system to meet air transportation mobility, efficiency, and capacity needs beyond those currently included in the FAA's Operational Evolution Plan in an effort to build on existing capabilities while improving the security, safety, quality, and affordability of the system.

Finally, we have developed a manager's amendment which has been agreed to by myself and Senator LOTT, HOLLINGS, and ROCKEFELLER. It includes a number of technical changes and improvements recommended by the executive agencies affected by this bill. It also includes some substantive changes to the bill, including: extending whistle blower protections to the employees of contractors doing business with the FAA; requiring that the GAO periodically report to Congress on the economic state of the airline industry and on airline executives' compensation; clarifying that the war risk insurance provision only applies to U.S. air carriers; moving the new security capital fund from the FAA to the TSA; and removing the provision adding additional ''outside the perimeter'' slots at Reagan National Airport.

I yield to my colleague from South Carolina and perhaps the Senator from Mississippi.

I say to my colleagues, if they are prepared to bring forward an amendment, we would like to consider that quickly and move forward with the amending process as it would be our intention to try to finish this legislation this evening.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of legislation that will reauthorize the programs of the Federal Aviation Administration for the next 3 years, S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act, AIR–V. I would like to thank Chairman MCCAIN, Senator LOTT and Senator ROCKEFELLER for their hard work in helping to craft this bipartisan bill that seeks to address the needs of the Nation's air transportation system.

The troubled state of the aviation industry has made FAA reauthorization a high priority of the 108th Congress. From the start, the Senate Commerce Committee pursued an ambitious schedule, and held several hearings on this matter in the first few months of the year. Our focus on this matter permitted all involved parties to express their concerns about the aviation system in the United States, and helped us develop a constructive approach to improve the work of the FAA as we move into an unclear future. We have crafted a strong bill that focuses properly on safety, security, efficiency and environmental friendliness in the realm of aviation.

AIR–V is a good starting point, but we have a long way to go to make certain that the FAA's budget adequately supports the agency's ability to oversee an increasingly complex system to ensure safe flying. Recent reports have pointed to the FAA's laxity on plane maintenance as airlines have increasingly farmed out repair work to trim more expensive in-house operations over the past decade. The Department of Transportation Inspector General found that major air carriers paid contractors $2.9 billion for maintenance in 2001, which was 80 percent more than in 1996. While maintenance responsibility has shifted, the FAA's policies have not, and the DOT IG is currently conducting an audit of repair stations and the FAA's oversight of them. We must take steps to provide FAA needed funding to improve outdated oversight, monitor gaps in overseas repair service, and update training methods which have not changed significantly in almost 50 years. It is vital that we adequately fund to FAA's budget to ensure the safest aviation system possible.

The impact of the aviation industry on our Nation is clear. Prior to September 11, 2001, the total impact of civil aviation on the national economy exceeded $900 billion and 11 million jobs, representing 9 percent of the U.S. gross domestic product. Since that time, the airline industry has faced consecutive years of record multibillion dollar losses while our national economy continues to struggle. This has made reauthorization of the FAA that much more critical, and I believe AIR–V strikes the proper balance among key FAA programs to advance our Nation's air transportation system.

After September 11, 2001, Congress created the Transportation Security Administration, which has taken charge of a massive restructuring of transportation security, which has led to a greater confidence in the traveling public. Even with the vast downturn in aviation traffic over the past couple of years, the FAA's Aerospace Forecast anticipates that enplanements in the U.S. are expected to increase over the next 10 years by roughly 50 percent, with as many as 1 billion passenger boardings expected annually by 2013.

Knowing of the expected growth in airline traffic, we must press our efforts to make system-wide improvements that will allow the U.S. aviation industry to flourish in the coming years and beyond. Air–V promotes airport development with increased funding for the Airport Improvement Program, and additional support for vital components of the National Airspace System through the designation of certain essential undertakings as ''national capacity'' projects. When the Bush Administration's FAA reauthorization proposal was unveiled it was criticized by Aviation Week for not providing enough long-term support for AIP at a time when the FAA is in a tight budget situation and the Nation's airports are looking for increased funding to pursue needed projects to improve their facilities. AIR–V also takes steps to resolve the bleeding of hundred of millions of dollars from AIP for security purposes and seeks to expedite the installation of EDS machines at airports across the country while diverting none of the AIP funds away from important infrastructure projects through the creation of an Aviation Security Capital Fund to be financed with $500 million annually in security service fees to allow TSA to make grants to airports to assist with capital security costs.

I have had increasing concerns that the European Community will continue its bold efforts to surpass the American aerospace industry in the coming years. We must recognize the importance of the FAA's Research, Engineering and Development program in maintaining our position as the worldwide leader in the aviation and aerospace industries. AIR-V will significantly increase funding for the R,E&D program with the understanding that long term planning will be needed to keep up with the rapidly changing dynamic of this industry. The EC has already introduced a ''2020 plan'' aimed at surpassing America—FAA, NASA and our aerospace industry—as the world's aerospace leaders within the next two decades. We must respond to this challenge with an emphasis on technology, and public-private cooperation that will ensure our advantage over the EC by strengthening our R,E&D programs and U.S. education and interest in aerospace.

I am pleased that key components of S. 788, the Second Century of Flight Act, legislation I introduced along with Senators BROWNBACK, ROCKEFELLER, INOUYE, CANTWELL, and KERRY have been included in this reauthorization effort. Among the most important steps that the bill takes to promote FAA, R,E&D is the creation of a national office to coordinate aviation and aerospace research activities within the U.S. Government tasked with coordinating programs and developing goals to facilitate the nation's R,E&D technologies, and a national office to focus on a next generation air traffic management system. Of equal importance is the establishment of a new educational program to train the next generation of aeronautics engineers and mechanics. According to the Commission Report on Aerospace, more than a quarter of the U.S. science, engineering and manufacturing workforce will be eligible to retire in the next 5 years. This workforce initiative is aimed at increasing participation of U.S. students in fields related to aerospace and aviation safety through the use of grants and scholarships for service to ensure the growth of interest in the United States and increase the talent pool of American students.

To ensure that the U.S. continues to have the safest aviation system possible we must also make improvements to the FAA's Facilities and Equipment program which contains financing for the purchase, installation and construction of equipment and facilities required to maintain the NAS. Through this bill we should boost the F&E program so that it will be a better complement to the improved AIP program in preparation for increased passenger levels. However, we must consider ways to make further advances to this program to ensure our ability to provide crucial enhancements to the safety of our aviation system.

AIR-V will have an enormous impact on the future of our entire air transportation system, and makes a strong statement about the direction that we want our air transportation system to go. Please support this effort and work with us to help the FAA take real steps forward and maintain our strength in aviation for the future.

I yield to our distinguished leader who really held the hearings and led for this particular measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina for those comments. He and Senator MCCAIN certainly have been very interested in this important issue. A couple of hearings we had on this legislation were in the full committee because of the importance of the issues involved.

I also particularly thank Senator ROCKEFELLER, who is the ranking member on the Aviation Subcommittee, for his work and his cooperation on this legislation. This is truly bipartisan legislation: Senator MCCAIN, Senator HOLLINGS, Senator ROCKEFELLER and I all have worked on it. Where we have had problems we have been able to work out most of them. I think we have a really good product.

I want to say at the beginning we are hoping to move this legislation through rapidly. Hopefully we could even complete it today. We have a few issues that have not been resolved yet. Two or three of them may require votes. We ask our colleagues to come to the floor, let's have a debate and, if we have to, we will have a vote. There are not that many amendments that I think would actually require a vote.

I also want to emphasize the importance of this legislation. Because we have moved it fast, and because we have been able to get an agreement worked out to bring it to the floor, and because we may be able to handle it in a brief period of time, it should not diminish at all the importance of passing this legislation. Transportation in America is unique. If we are going to have a strong economy, we have to have good transportation systems—not just roads and bridges, which are very important, and not just a good railroad system, freight and passenger, and not just good ports and harbors, but we also need a strong aviation system in America.

We all know the industry has been having difficult times for a variety of reasons. In some cases it was bad management decisions. Obviously all of them have been affected by high fuel costs. There have been some difficult management-labor decisions. But also probably no other industry was as dramatically and directly affected by 9/11 as the aviation industry. Aircraft were involved on that infamous day, used as weapons of destruction, as missiles—both in New York and, of course, one plane that hit the Pentagon and the one that went down in Pennsylvania. We saw the industry basically shut down that day—for days. We are still having fallout, the ramifications of that day and those decisions in terms of access to airports, including Washington Reagan National. General aviation is still dealing with the problems as a result.

There is no question the industry has had difficulties and some of those difficulties have been related to 9/11. Government decisions were made that needed to be made. We had to deal with security considerations on our airplanes and at our airports. So a lot of costs have been put on the industry that have caused them additional problems.

We have taken action immediately after 9/11, of course, to provide some assistance to the aviation industry. We did it again in the supplemental appropriations this year. But this is the third step and in some respects maybe the most important step in helping the airline industry, helping aviation get back to where they can see blue skies and begin to make profits and provide the kind of service the American people are entitled to.

I do think it is important we get this bill done, that we get into conference and see if we can come to a reasonable and relatively quick agreement with the House. That will allow this bill to be completed before we get into the time-consuming and very important TEA–21 extension, and the appropriations process.

This bill's title is Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act—AIR–V. Our intent is to go all the way from stabilizing the industry, giving them dependability and reliability of what they can expect from FAA, from the Airport Improvement Program, to all the different programs that are involved in aviation including service to small communities. I think we do have the fundamental provisions we need to make sure that happens. We will ensure the Airport Improvement Program will continue uninterrupted for the next 3 years. We also are going to make sure the funds that go into Airport Improvement Programs are actually used for their original purpose, and that is to improve our airports, the runways, the terminals, and the services our constituents need and deserve.

On that note, this legislation also no longer allows AIP funds to be used for security mandates. Up to this point approximately $500 million has been skimmed off the top of the AIP fund to pay for security mandates that the Federal government placed on our local airports. The Transportation Security Administration—TSA—predicts that an additional $500 million will be needed to complete these capital improvements that have been deemed necessary for security purposes. This bill proposes that these unfunded mandates be paid for by directing the passenger security fee into a separate fund to cover these costs. The first $500 million of these fees that is collected will be directed to this fund.

This legislation also looks at excessiveness at TSA. It will require TSA to do a study to look at the efficiency of their employees and then redeploy them as necessary based on the results of the study. I am pleased that TSA is already reassessing their workforce. While it is not the goal of this Congress to have less than adequate security at any airport, it is important for TSA to recognize the areas in which they have gold-plated security.

In another effort to help the industry, this legislation also makes permanent a provision already in the annual appropriations bill that requires TSA to pay fair market value for the space they occupy at airports. The bill also keep AIP funding at the fiscal year 2003 level for FY04, but changes the match requirement from 10 percent to 5 percent for that 1 year. AIP funding will then be increased by $100 million for the out years. This is very important to local communities that are hard pressed to make that local match, because their funds have been depleted due to these unfunded mandates. AIR-V also maintains the budget firewalls that were put in place during the debate over Air-21. These firewalls require that the trust fund continues to be spent down.

Of particular importance to my home state of Mississippi is language in this legislation that continues the authorization of the Small Community Pilot Program. This provision will allow 40 new communities to be eligible to receive one-time money each year. This is a good program that requires innovative thinking on the part of airports and their local communities.

Another important issue to rural States such as mine and Senator ROCKEFELLER's is the Essential Air Service Program. The two of us introduced legislation that works to improve this program, while not implementing the drastic change the administration has pushed. In short, it provides incentive to the local communities to get involved in determining the quality and type of air service their community receives. We have included that legislation in this bill.

Transportation infrastructure spending is important, and it is one of my top priorities. I want to continue the Republican congressional majority's commitment to transportation infrastructure. Our Nation's growing economy demands attention to this issue. Passage of this bill will be a step in that direction.

I say again, in Senator MCCAIN's presence, I appreciate his attention to this and his interest and his desire to move forward. Without his tenacity we would not be here now. I believe we have a good bill that we can complete in short order.

I am glad to yield the floor at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator from Mississippi for his kind comments.

Mr. President, we are awaiting the appearance of Senator LAUTENBERG, who has an amendment we will be considering shortly. Until then, I remind my colleagues we would like to move forward with amendments.

I understand that Senator COCHRAN may have an amendment, and several others. But I don't think there are many. We could go ahead and move forward as quickly as possible with the legislation.

Pending their arrival, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 889

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] proposes an amendment numbered 889.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under ''Text of Amendments.'')

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this is a managers' amendment which we have developed working with Senators LOTT, HOLLINGS, and ROCKEFELLER. It includes a number of technical changes and improvements recommended by the executive agencies affected by the bill. It also includes some substantive changes, including whistleblower protections for the employees of contractors doing business with the FAA; requiring the GAO to periodically report to Congress on the economic state of the airline industry; airline executives' compensation; clarifying that the war risk insurance provision only applies to U.S. air carriers; moving the new security capital fund from FAA to TSA; and removing a provision—I emphasize ''removing''—a provision that was added in the markup concerning outside-the-perimeter slots at Reagan National Airport.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, these particular modifications have been checked through by both the chairman and ranking member of our Aviation Subcommittee. Let the RECORD show that the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER, our ranking member, is at an important Finance Committee markup at the moment with respect to prescription drugs and Medicare. I have checked it through with him, and it has been checked through on this side. We ask for support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 889) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I wanted to alert my colleagues that I intend to offer an amendment to this bill this afternoon. I have talked to several people about it. I will not take a lot of time. I don't intend to delay the bill at all. But there is an important piece of policy in this legislation.

Before I explain it, I should congratulate my colleagues, Senator MCCAIN, chairman of the full committee, and Senator HOLLINGS, ranking member, for their work on this bill. It is really important for us to complete this legislation. Hopefully, perhaps we can complete it today, in fact.

On page 145, there is an aviation security capital fund of $500 million. I think that is an important fund which it establishes in the Department of Transportation. I think that is perhaps transferred in the managers' amendment in fact to homeland security.

This capital fund provides funds for the security needs at airports around the country, and for investment in the construction and infrastructure for security purposes.

All of us know in the shadow of 9/11 and the terrorist attacks that occurred in our country that security, especially aviation security, is critically important.

This provision, as important as it is, however, has a local match requirement. My great concern is that this money will not be invested in aviation security because many communities and States around the country simply won't have the capability of coming up with the local match. That is why we put money in legislation previously. In the tax bill that passed the Congress, we included a substantial amount of money to try to help State and local governments, many of which are flat on their backs financially. They are having trouble funding their own needs.

I think having a security capital fund is very important. But having that fund available only if there is matching money available for it locally will mean that much of it will not be spent, much of it will not be invested, and much of it will not contribute anything to this country's security.

What I propose to do on this occasion, because it deals with security, which is a national issue, and because the State and local governments are in a pretty precarious fiscal position, is eliminate the local match so we could expect that this money would be invested. The construction and the infrastructure that will be completed with this money will contribute, in fact, to aviation security in this country.

I have visited with my colleague, the Senator from Mississippi. I think he has some persuasive reasons for not eliminating the local match. But, on the other hand, I think there is a persuasive argument that the only way we will see this money truly invested in airports around the country is if we eliminate the local match.

Perhaps I should offer this amendment now and have it pending. I have to chair a luncheon in a few minutes and will have to leave the floor.

If it is all right with the chairman and ranking member, I will offer the amendment. We will have it pending.

AMENDMENT NO. 890

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] proposes an amendment numbered 890.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To delete the matching requirement for airport security related capital investment grants)

On page 146, beginning with line 20, strike through line 8 on page 147.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from North Dakota has to leave at this time. We will be glad to discuss this amendment at his convenience, hopefully later this afternoon, and perhaps we can get something worked out on it.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have explained my amendment already. What I would like to do is work with my colleagues, Senator MCCAIN, Senator LOTT, Senator HOLLINGS, and others. I think this is an important amendment. I am not suggesting this be a precedent forever, for all time. At this moment, in this place, for this reason, I believe if we want to invest $500 million in aviation security in this country, it is likely the only way that will be invested is to eliminate the State and local match. I think there are good reasons to do that. So if I can work with my colleagues in the next several hours, I hope we can make some progress on this amendment.

I do want to make one final point. It is not my intention in any way to hold up this bill. I do not expect this would be a lengthy debate, in any event. I would agree to a short time agreement. But my hope is perhaps we could support this by a voice vote at some point.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, Senator LAUTENBERG is in the Chamber to offer an extremely important amendment. He will be ready to do that in a matter of a few minutes.

In the meantime, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 891

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID] PROPOSES AN AMENDMENT NUMBERED 891.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To clarify the apportionment of funds from the Aviation Security Capital Fund)

On page 146, line 17, insert ''origination and destination'' before ''emplanements''.

On page 146, line 19, insert ''origination and destination'' before ''emplanements''.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the events of September 11, 2001, have been catastrophic on the aviation and travel industry. And that is an understatement. I strongly supported the formation of the Transportation Security Administration because I believed then and believe now it is critical that the public has confidence in the safety and security of our airports and airlines.

This enhanced security will save jobs, protect Americans' ability to travel freely and safely, and boost business for the travel and tourism industries.

The need for capital security costs, such as explosives detection and screeners, should be based on real need. Unfortunately, the formula in this bill that allocates grants in the aviation security fund to assist with capital security costs is not based on real needs. It does not accurately account for the number of passengers who must be carefully screened as they enter airport terminals at their point of origin. That is where delays occur and additional security equipment is always badly needed.

My amendment corrects the language in section 402 of this bill that allocates funding for capital security costs based on ''emplanements.'' This is wrong.

My amendment would change the formula for allocating funding in the aviation security fund from ''emplanements'' to ''origination and destination emplanements.''

My amendment allocates resources to airports that are screening the largest number of passengers and not at airports where passengers simply connect to another flight. As an example: Someone flies from New York to Chicago and they have a connection to go to Des Moines, IA. They don't leave the airport. The problem in Las Vegas is people come to Las Vegas. They go downtown or to the strip and then they come back and have to get back through all the screening. That is where the need should be, for people who enter and leave the airport not simply the fact that people land at the airport.

My amendment would allocate resources, as I said, to airports that are screening the largest number of passengers, and not at airports where passengers simply connect to another flight.

At large hub airports many passengers simply change flights. They don't enter and leave the terminal where security is most needed. These passengers have already been screened.

This is especially important in Las Vegas but it is a bigger issue. It is important that we prevent another terrorist attack on our airlines. Terrorists will search for the weakest link in our security and try to exploit it.

Capital security resources must be allocated fairly and equitably and correctly. Las Vegas McCarran Airport has the second largest number of origination and destination passengers in the entire Nation, second only to LAX. This means that McCarran processes more people through TSA security checkpoints than every other airport, except Los Angeles.

Under the present formula, other airports would get far more security resources even though they screen fewer passengers. McCarran clearly needs more resources than many hub airports where a great number of passengers emplane but do not need to be screened.

Nothing could be worse for the Nation than allocating its precious security resources in the wrong manner. We need additional security at origination and destination airports—and we need it now—where passengers are actually screened. We do not want resources allocated where they are unnecessary, especially at a time when Congress is asking TSA to get its costs under control.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator ENSIGN be added as a cosponsor of this amendment with the Senator now speaking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment for the safety of the flying public and the health of our economy. We need to put our security resources in the right place. Let's keep the skies safe.

Now, Mr. President, I have spoken——

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. REID. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MCCAIN. It is my understanding, from talking with you and your colleague, that at McCarran Airport—for example, on a Sunday—a 3-hour delay is a routine kind of experience. That is a normal experience rather than an exception, which is remarkably different from almost every other airport in America. Is that true?

Mr. REID. That is absolutely right. It is based upon the formula I have just given.

I say to the managers of this bill—the chairman of the Commerce Committee and the ranking member of the Commerce Committee—I have spoken to their staffs, I have spoken to them, as has Senator ENSIGN. We have been given an assurance by these two fine men and their staffs that this is something the conference will look at as soon as the bill leaves this body. The staff will start reviewing this.

They have a concern now that they may not have adequate figures to justify what Senator ENSIGN and I are saying. We want them to have adequate numbers so that what we are saying is valid.

We want, as I have indicated in my statement, there to be a fair allocation of resources. We believe, as the Senator from Arizona has indicated, that Las Vegas is a very unique place. It is not like Chicago O'Hare. It is not like the airports in New York. It is similar to what we have in Phoenix. Phoenix has a problem similar to us. I believe Phoenix would benefit from the formula I am suggesting.

But I have been given an assurance, as I have indicated, by the two managers of this very important committee, that they will do what they can in conference to allocate the resources fairly.

The language I have in this amendment may not be perfect. There may be some need to look at other issues to have a fair apportionment of these resources.

So based upon the assurances I have been given by the two managers of this bill, I will withdraw this amendment, on behalf of Senators REID and ENSIGN, and look to the good offices of these two gentlemen to make sure that, for our country, there is a fair allocation of resources.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Before the Senator from Nevada leaves the Chamber, I would like to ask him another question.

So that my colleagues will understand this problem—and it is a serious one—if I fly from here to the Atlanta Airport, or the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport, which I will do tomorrow, and then change airplanes but stay within the terminal, not having to go through security again, and then I go on to the Phoenix, AZ, airport, that, for the purposes of the present formula, would be counted as the same as someone who enters an airport, flies and lands at another airport, leaves that airport, and then later on has to reenter the airport to leave that area.

In other words, what we are saying is, we have a formula now where someone who remains within the airport and does not have to go through security is basically counted the same as a person who does have to go through security.

Mr. REID. That is right.

Mr. MCCAIN. So that, obviously, is an incredible burden if you have to put every passenger through security where a large majority of them, particularly at hub airports, do not have to send passengers through security. Is that basically the problem we are trying to confront here?

Mr. REID. The Senator is absolutely right. We have places, such as at McCarran Airport, where, if we had additional help, we could move people into the airport more quickly but we simply don't have the TSA people to do that. We have some of our hub airports where, as the Senator has indicated, they have people standing around looking at each other because they are not having people coming in and out of the airport like we have at McCarran.

Mr. MCCAIN. I say to the Senator, I think your concern is legitimate. I think the formula needs to be changed. We will work on it.

First, we will get a letter over to communications with TSA and tell them we need to look at this formula again. I have been told they are already doing that, but I want to assure the Senator from Nevada, we will try to do everything in our power to address this clear inequity that exists in the formula as we go to conference.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. REID. If I could say one additional thing before I sit down. I do not have the opportunity very often to talk about the good work of the committee but, as far as this Senator is concerned, some of the best work of this committee is to allow flights from National Airport to Las Vegas, to Phoenix, to Salt Lake. I would suggest that the Senator from Arizona—and I am sure he will check with his staff—I think he might find a better flight than going from Dallas to Phoenix.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the Senator from Nevada. But I have done many foolish things in my life—many. One of those that ranks up in the top 10 is when I was being accused by the local newspaper for attempting to seek some relief from the perimeter rule in hopes that I might then have the convenience of flying direct from Reagan National Airport to Phoenix. I swore I would never fly direct from Reagan National Airport. Many years have gone by, and I had hoped that people's memories had grown dim on that, but now I will probably have to go another 5 years since the Senator has raised that.

Mr. REID. Well, the statute of limitations has run.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank my colleague.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada is correct. The money is for security, and a security check is what we are trying to fund, finance. It just hasn't been vetted at FAA. It is very logical to this particular Senator that the Senator from Nevada is correct, and I will make every effort in the conference to change the particular formula or rather embellish the word emplanement, so as to get destinations and takeoffs considered as going just through the security and the money be allocated thereof.

So I assure the Senator from Nevada that I will support it in every way I can.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

AMENDMENT NO. 890

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, while discussions are taking place on other issues or amendments, I wanted to go back and comment briefly on the statement by Senator DORGAN and his amendment.

First of all, I appreciate his membership on the committee and his interest in this aviation hearing. Most of the time we agree on how we can be helpful to the aviation industry. I appreciated the fact that he said he thought it was important we have this revolving fund for TSA security. There are those who are going to speak against that fund later today.

The appropriators feel as if the fund is not a positive thing, that it is taking funds from their bottom line. My concern is, if we have these fees collected for airport security and there is no specification that it go into that area, then it may be spread all over the place. If you go into port security, Coast Guard, or any number of programs—which may be very important and may be needed—if fees are collected for a purpose, they should not be spread out into other areas. It is like the highway trust fund. You collect gasoline taxes for highways, and to let it be spent for airports or ports—that is not the intended purpose and what people think they are paying for.

This fund is not intended in any way to get into the appropriators' job. They have a tough job. I know my colleague from Mississippi and Senator STEVENS will work hard to help our homeland security. We will continue to work to see if we can come up with some compromise agreement that will accommodate all concerned. Our goal is to just make sure we have these fees that are collected for airport security and security for the TSA used for that purpose.

With regard to the local share, I have a State that, obviously, is not a wealthy State. We have a limited number of airports. Several of them are relatively small. So any kind of cost share is not easy for them, plus the airline industry will tell you very quickly that in a lot of airports—particularly the bigger ones—any kind of a local cost share, the airlines will wind up having to pick up the cost because airports cannot get money from the local government. So they will say, all right, we have to get it from the airlines and they will pass it on to the airlines. That is a legitimate concern. It is really not fair.

I know it is not easy for the local airports sometimes to get a match. But we are talking about a small match here. Even if we can have the match 10 percent, it would still have the principle that the local governments are doing their share. Airports and airline service is a very important part of the economy in these smaller towns. It creates jobs, helps attract industry, and it is a big plus. Yet the cities or counties, even the big cities—Detroit, Chicago, New York—get tremendous benefits from their international airports, but they don't want to participate or pay any of the costs. Of course not. The trend in America is just let the Federal Government do it. Let the Federal Government do it all. Let the Federal Government pay for all of the airport costs, pay for all the housing costs, pay for all of the farming costs—just let the Federal Government do it. That is why we are going to have a $500 billion deficit this year, and probably the same next year, and it may come down some in 2005, but it is still going to be really ugly. Let Uncle Sam do it.

All I am saying is, let the local communities do a little bit, participate some, help a little in the cost of this huge benefit. I promote local airports in my State, such as Tupelo, Meridian, Golden Triangle, Biloxi, Pine Belt, and others. We have small airports that mean a lot. For them to help a little bit looks to me like a good idea. So I realize maybe that is not the way to do things around here. I am arguing on principle and some degree of responsibility for everybody to pay a little bit. Why should the Federal Government always have to pay the first and the last dollar?

We will work with Senator DORGAN, a very valuable member of the committee. I understand his concerns in these smaller communities. But the problem is not really the smaller communities; it is actually the bigger airports that will be inclined to pass them along to the airlines. I realize they have plenty of burdens of their own.

I wanted to respond and make it clear why I feel that some small amount of local participation is a responsible thing to do. It makes good, common sense. We may have a way to work it out. I wanted to get that on the record before we got too far away from Senator DORGAN's remarks.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 892

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendments are set aside and the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] proposes an amendment numbered 892.

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate with respect to air fares provided to members of the Armed Forces)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . AIR FARES FOR MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES.

It is the sense of the Senate that each United States air carrier should—

(1) make every effort to allow active duty members of the armed forces to purchase tickets, on a space-available basis, for the lowest fares offered for the flights desired, without regard to advance purchase requirements and other restrictions; and

(2) offer flexible terms that allow members of the armed forces on active duty to purchase, modify, or cancel tickets without time restrictions, fees, or penalties.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this is a sense-of-the-Senate amendment. Frankly, I would like to see it in law, but I am not sure whether it would be constitutional and in keeping with existing law.

Basically, it says that the airlines should do whatever they can to make sure that members of the Armed Forces can get the lowest fare even if they are late; that they will offer them the lowest fare available; and that when there are cancellations or other reasons they have to change their travel plans, the airlines will show the flexibility that will afford them the lowest possible cost for their airfare.

We have a lot of transience amongst the men and women in the military and their families, not just being transferred from one place to another but, generally speaking, they are not based where they grew up and where their families or friends are located.

There are a lot of men and women in the military who make use of the airlines and many times on short notice. We are simply urging the airlines to show the kind of patriotism that is necessary to provide these very low income Americans the ability to move from one place to another.

I might add, this amendment was offered by Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON on the DOD authorization bill as well. I hope the airlines will react positively to this sense-of-the-Senate resolution. I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman and Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON for this initiative. It is well deserved. Whether or not it can be worked out—as the Senator indicates, we hope it can be. It has been cleared on our side, and I urge its adoption.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 892.

The amendment (No. 892) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 893

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I commend the chairman and the ranking member of the Commerce Committee for moving this reauthorization forward. It is critical. The FAA is an essential part of our travel and aviation system. I encourage its consideration promptly.

A principal issue these days in aviation is security. How do we best protect those who are flying and those who are working in the airplanes, the cockpit crew, the cabin crew? How do we best protect all of those people? Well, we review the passenger lists. We review the baggage. We look at what anybody brings aboard. One of the things that does not always get the attention it deserves is what happens with the FAA. What kind of people are they? Are they up to snuff in their training? Have we a reservoir, a reserve, of people who are trained and ready to take over when we are looking forward to a fairly large retirement possibility for those people who came in after some of the labor problems were resolved?

I send an amendment to the desk to make certain that FAA is going to be able to maintain its integrity, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the pending amendments are set aside.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] proposes an amendment numbered 893.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prohibit the Secretary of Transportation from transferring certain air traffic control functions to non-governmental entities)

On page 193, after line 23, insert the following:

SEC. 624. TRANSFER OF CERTAIN AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL FUNCTIONS PROHIBITED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation may not authorize the transfer to a private entity or to a public entity other than the United States Government of—

(1) the air traffic separation and control functions operated by the Federal Aviation Administration on the date of enactment of this Act; or

(2) the maintenance of certifiable systems and other functions related to certification of national airspace systems and services operated by the Federal Aviation Administration on the date of enactment of this Act or flight service station personnel.

(b) CONTRACT TOWER PROGRAM.—Subsection (a)(1) shall not apply to a Federal Aviation Administration air traffic control tower operated under the control tower program as of the date of enactment of this Act.

On page 69, after the item relating to section 623, insert the following:

Sec. 624. Transfer of certain air traffic control functions prohibited.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I rise to offer a critical safety and security amendment to this FAA bill. My amendment would ensure that the air traffic control system and its personnel remain a government function.

There is an attempt underway right now in the executive branch to open up air traffic control to private contractors. I believe we in the Congress must put a stop to this. There are some areas where it makes sense to contract work out to private entities, but air traffic control is not one of them. The safety of our skies should not be put in the hands of the lowest bidder. We should not be looking to buy security on the cheap.

I believe those who operate and maintain our air traffic control system are almost like a wing of the military. They keep us safe. They police our skies.

On September 11, 2001, we had a tragic day for all Americans. In my State of New Jersey, nearly 700 people lost their lives. As my colleagues know, Transportation Secretary Norman Mineta ordered all aircraft in the U.S. airspace grounded that day. They wanted those airplanes safely out of the sky. It was a massive undertaking.

I have a visual of 9/11 at 12:30 p.m. The assault took place around the 9 hour. This is a picture of the traffic, each one of these denoting an airplane, that was in the sky at 12:30. Many planes had already landed, but there were still thousands in the air, as we can see. The bulk of this traffic was in the East, as it was still early morning on the west coast. My home State of New Jersey is all but covered in air traffic in this picture.

In the next visual, we will see what the skies looked like roughly an hour later, at 1:45. We see some reduction in the cluster, but there are still hundreds, if not thousands, of airplanes in the sky. Planes are being rapidly grounded in the Northeast, and they are headed to the points in the Midwest to try to land safely, to take care of their passengers.

We have the next picture, which is only half an hour later, and look at this. Look at how empty the space, on a relative basis, is compared to where it was. The first one, this is now 3 to 3½ hours after the terrible assault on our buildings and our people took place. There is a cluster. We cannot even see the ground. But the air traffic controllers went to work, the system went to work, and now at 2:15, an hour and three-quarters later, they have cleared the skies, which is not an insignificant job.

We did not have one accident that day. We had the attacks with the aircraft on the towers, but all other aircraft that were in the sky that day got to the ground safely. People were able to call their families and say: Do not worry about me. I was flying. I am here. I am safe. I am well. I will be home tonight. I will be home this weekend. To the children: Daddy is alive and well, and we will be there.

We can see a massive number of planes were landing in that last half hour. Meanwhile, we can see the clusters of airplanes circling major airports, waiting for clearance to land, making sure the separations were maintained. The airports were at Dallas, Fort Worth, Atlanta, Kansas City, Denver, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Minneapolis-St. Paul. That was the extent of the impact of this attack and the need to disperse the airplanes in the sky. And out west, Phoenix, Salt Lake City, Las Vegas, NV, Los Angeles, San Francisco, all of these planes landed safely in an amazingly short amount of time.

Let's look at the picture at 3:45. The sky almost looks clear, and thank goodness. Those were tense moments for everybody, for those who saw the smoke coming out of the Trade Center buildings and noted the absence of these two giant towers that were built, this testimonial to man, gone.

We did what we had to in the rest of the country to make sure those planes got on the ground safely. There were still some government planes in the air. We can see the military aircraft in the blue—they are a little hard to discern—as they patrolled the near empty skies.

On September 11, those who operated our Federal air traffic system demonstrated great heroism and dedication. Air traffic controllers across the Nation performed heroically as they guided thousands of aircraft out of the sky.

I wish to point out a bit of a technicality. They think of the air traffic control group sometimes as just the people in the tower who have the microphones at that moment, but we have specialists who keep this equipment going, and it is a complicated network. We have those flight service people who are on the ground giving advice, watching the separation, making sure that the system is in an orderly condition. It is a package. It is one part of it. It is very obvious that we in this body need lots of people around to make the system work, such as our staff people who are very good. We could not take part of them and have them working for one entity while we worked for another. It would not make sense, especially if there is a moment of need when the owner of the company says we are cutting back on some of the company benefits. It does not work. This is a unified system.

In my home State, from the tower of Newark International Airport, the air traffic controllers looking out the window could see the World Trade Center on fire as they worked to return tens of thousands of Americans to the ground safely. Like many public servants on that day, they were heroes, along with the police and firefighters and other emergency personnel. These public employees gave 110 percent of their ability to secure the safety of the American people.

In the aftermath of these tragic events, our people demanded one thing in particular of their government. They wanted government personnel, not private contracting firms, to perform security screening of baggage at our Nation's airports. If the American people demanded that baggage screeners become Federal employees at substantially increased salaries, this was an enormous cost burden we picked up. We took it out of the hands of the private sector, away from the airlines, to say: You were not buying security appropriately; you were not spending the money needed to keep the people interested, trained, and functioning.

Why in the world, if we wanted the baggage screeners to become Federal employees, would we contract out air traffic control to the lowest bidder? It does not make sense. One bag getting through at the wrong time could be a terrible tragedy. But one airplane in the wrong place at the wrong time would dwarf many of the opportunities others have to attack an airplane with a piece of baggage.

The safety and security of the American people should not be the responsibility of the lowest bidder. It is a core responsibility of our Government. To be able to muster the forces we need for our military endeavors, we have to know the people in the towers and their support system are always on the job, that they are reliable, that there is no dispute between a company or corporate headquarters and the need of the people.

That is why it is so shocking the FAA is being asked to take steps to privatize air traffic control in this country. It makes no sense, especially after September 11. It is the opposite of what the public wants.

Mr. LOTT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LOTT. My questions and my comments are related to your subject.

First of all, I appreciate Senator LAUTENBURG and what he is doing here. I understand his point. I indicated to him on the committee we would work with him and see if we could come up with compromise language that we could agree to. Unfortunately, we could not get that done. However, the Senator knows I have tried to act in good faith. I know he has, too. I appreciate that.

My concern is, I, like you, have concern about privatizing the air traffic controllers themselves. I also have sympathy for the flight weather service people because, in effect, in some areas I am familiar with, they are the air traffic controllers. But the amendment, as I understand it, and I think the Senator admitted, goes beyond demanding the tower or demanding the actual person looking at the screen and the flight weather service, it does expand to the other employees who are employed in the area—the service people, the repairmen, and perhaps even further than that.

My question is, is that a fact? Would your amendment expand beyond the professional air traffic controller or even the FWS employee and other employees? Could you perhaps specify some of the areas that might be covered, just for the edification of myself and the other Senators.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The Senator from Mississippi is a sincere advocate of safety in our skies and has been very supportive of introductions of technology. The Senator has had a long period of service as chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation. There is mutual respect.

We are including all parts of the FAA, of the controller system, systems specialists, and the safety inspectors. As I tried to demonstrate, it is a whole unit. One thing and is quite apparent. Very often when you have an organization the size of FAA, when functions are parceled out, very often the segment you have taken out—look at railroads where you have different unions that control different parts. If one of those unions has a disagreement with the management or with the operations of the company, they go out and can tie the whole thing up.

Keeping this team together—the nurses in the operating room, the orderlies, all those people, beside the doctor and the guy now who is the person developing the equipment that in many cases now is doing the surgery—is all one thing. Would you think of splitting off parts of that and saying one part ought to be here, one part ought to be there? I think not. We include them all. We say this is one integrated system.

I come out of the technology business—of course, it was 20 years ago—but there are certain buttons you have to push to connect everything. You have to make sure the equipment is working properly. If one asks the distinguished Senator from Alaska, Senator STEVENS—and I take this from recall so I am not giving his statement—he talked about the value of the flight service people in the State of Alaska and remote places. The Senator from Mississippi said it himself; very often they turn into controllers.

It is our intention to keep this package together. If we want to talk about it at another time in the future, certainly I would like to do so.

Mr. LOTT. If the Senator will continue to yield, we will continue to work on this. I know Senator MCCAIN will have something to say about it later. Regardless of how it works here, we will continue to work together.

I want to make note of the fact for the record that Secretary Mineta has determined that air traffic control is a core function of the FAA and as such the administration would not consider outsourcing beyond the current contract tower program. I note that is a program that is in place, the contract towers, and it has broad general support. Twenty-five percent of all takeoffs and landings, mainly general aviation in the United States, occur at these traffic towers. There is an example of how contracting out has been done and is working.

We will continue to work with the Senator. While I have some sympathy with what the Senator is trying to do as the amendment presently exists, it is too broad and I would have to oppose it.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. We are leaving out the contract tower program. We do not touch that at all. Those are special situations, smaller airports where more is demanded from the operation than can be given as part of the FAA. We have no problem with those.

The amendment we offer now is smaller in scope than my original bill. It covers only air traffic control, separation functions, system specialists, and flight service station controllers.

There is a world far larger than that, that could be included which we have not included.

The administration has already changed the designation of air traffic control from ''inherently governmental'' to ''commercial.'' It is more than a technical change. It opens the door to privatizing the air traffic control system.

We currently have the best air traffic control system in the world, with 15,000 dedicated Federal air traffic controllers who guide home safely more than 2 million passengers a day. They are expert professionals who perform under pressure every day to keep our skies safe.

Air traffic controllers play a major role in homeland security. When President Bush gave his State of the Union speech this year, it was the flight service station air traffic controllers who sent alerts to pilots around here to avoid the expanded no-fly zone around Washington. We wanted to keep the President safe. We wanted the security to be maintained. It takes a certain skill and dedication and experience to make sure it gets done, that it gets done in a timely fashion.

When the Space Shuttle Columbia tragically exploded in the skies over Texas, it was the air traffic controllers who directed the aircraft away from the falling debris field.

These men and women perform a critical function. Our security ought not be up for bid. Some claim privatization will save money, but we have to take a look at other countries' experiments with air traffic control privatization. When you do, you see financial messes and safety hazards. Australia, Canada, and Great Britain have all privatized systems that are now in crisis. Costs have gone up and safety has gone down. Since Great Britain adopted privatization, near misses have increased. That means near misses in the sky. When I told someone this, he said, You mean people missed more flights? I said, No, no, airplanes missing one another. Near misses have increased by 50 percent, and delays have increased by 20 percent. The British government has already had to bail out the privatized air traffic control company twice.

Look at this quote from a Member of the British Parliament.

> The privatization of the UK's air traffic control system was a grave mistake, and one that the United States can still avoid making. British Air Traffic Controllers are among the best in the world, and they fought tooth and nail to keep ATC in the public sector. They insisted that the sale of the National Air Traffic Services—NATS—would lead to a collapse in morale, the unwise introduction of inadequate and unreliable equipment, and an increasing danger of catastrophic accidents. The Government did not listen and went ahead. They were wrong and the air traffic controllers were right.

This is from Gwyneth Dunwoody, a British MP in the House of Commons.

Why should we jeopardize the public's safety in the skies? We have the best system in the world now. Why should we risk making it more dangerous and costly. We should not repeat the mistake other countries have already made.

I want to make clear to my colleagues my amendment does not affect the expansion of the contract tower program. That is one that is contracted out away from the FAA, typically in smaller communities, and that service seems to function very well. It has been in place a long time. That program, which affects the small visual-flight-rules airports, can be expanded to any of the 4,000 airports that are eligible. My amendment only affects FAA towers.

Our luggage is important, important enough to be screened by trained Federal workers. But once you are up in the sky, it seems the administration believes your safety should be in the hands of the lowest bidder. It makes no sense.

My amendment declares air traffic control functions to be ''inherently governmental'' and therefore it means they ought to stay with the Government and they are therefore not eligible for outsourcing.

I want to point out the Member of the British Parliament, Gwyneth

Dunwoody, the MP, is the equivalent of our distinguished Senator MCCAIN in this body. So we have a considered opinion from someone who has the responsibility and has been through it.

I urge my colleagues to support safety and security in our skies by voting for the amendment, keeping the FAA as a body in the hands of the Government.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I oppose this amendment and I think we ought to understand this amendment does more than tie FAA's hands with respect to air traffic control management. It would prevent a host of broader measures as well. Certain FAA responsibilities are best fulfilled by contract, using a combination of Government and private services, as is the case today.

Congress gave the FAA unique procurement authority for exactly this reason and the amendment would compromise that authority. For example, the FAA's air traffic control systems are increasingly composed of commercial components and software that build upon privately developed computer programs. If this amendment passes, the FAA's costs to maintain and install its systems would most likely increase significantly as the FAA tries to acquire needed data rights to maintain the equipment or forgoes the advantages of using commercial products.

Furthermore, the FAA would pay ever-escalating training costs to provide its workforce with the changing skills needed to maintain multiple systems.

The amendment prevents the FAA's ability to reduce its operating costs by contracting out certain operations—such as providing weather information to pilots. Congress has been very critical of the FAA's continually increasing operating costs. This amendment would take a very important tool for controlling costs away from the FAA.

The FAA is currently conducting a competition to evaluate the performance of its 61 flight service stations, which provide needed services, such as weather briefings, to general aviation pilots. The FAA expects that the competition will identify innovations and lead to greater value for America's pilots at a lower cost to the taxpayer. The bottom line is that the legislation would stop this study—a study that encourages the FAA.

Finally, this amendment prevents the FAA from expanding the existing contract tower program. This program allows smaller airports to continue to have air traffic control where an FAA tower might not be fully justified.

The Transportation Department's Inspector General has examined this program. He found that contract towers are just as safe and effective as FAA towers and on average cost $800 thousand a year less. This amendment would prohibit any other existing towers from becoming contract towers.

FAA continues to operate about 71 towers that are similar in traffic and complexity to towers currently in the contract program. For example, in Virginia, the tower at Manassas Regional Airport, which has general aviation only, is FAA-operated but the tower at Charlottesville-Albemarle Airport, which has frequent commercial service, is a contract tower. Converting these towers could save the FAA about $57 million dollars per year in operating costs and free up 900 controllers that could be used in more complex facilities and help meeting the pending wave of controller retirements.

The Administration is adamantly opposed to this amendment or any other provisions that would reduce the FAA's flexibility and ability to control costs. In a letter to the House, Secretary Mineta indicated that he will recommend a veto of any bill that contained provisions similar to this amendment.

We will hear today a lot of discussion about how admirably the air traffic controllers performed on September 11, and it is true. It is absolutely true. They did a magnificent job. It is also true that the air traffic controllers in Canada worked extremely well with their partners, the counterparts in the U.S., and they are not government employees. They are privatized air control providers.

All of us appreciate the enormous contributions and terrific jobs that our air traffic controllers did, and do. The question is, Will the administration be able to have the flexibility necessary to do such things as contract towers that operate without the complexities and difficulties that are associated with major air traffic control centers?

I ask unanimous consent that a letter dated June 12 from the Office of Management and Budget, Statement of Administration Policy, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,

Washington, DC, June 12, 2003.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

S. 824—AVIATION INVESTMENT AND REVITALIZATION VISION ACT

The Administration strongly supports Senate passage of S. 824. Like the Administration's proposal, S. 824 would authorize federal aviation programs without increasing taxes or fees on an industry that has been severely impacted since the attacks on September 11th. The bill contains important environmental provisions including voluntary air quality initiatives; environmental streamlining elements for safety and airport capacity projects, and a more flexible use of the Airport Improvement Program (AIP) noise setaside. The bill also adopts structural changes to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) that were included in the Administration's bill, as well as important clarifications in the area of judicial review of both airport environmental and agency acquisition decisions.

The Administration will work with Congress to ensure, in the version of the bill presented to the President, that: (1) spending during the authorization period conforms to the amounts requested by the Administration; (2) environmental streamlining provisions include safety projects and are optimized to promote their intended goals; (3) the Aviation War Risk Insurance program remains focused on aircraft used to support U.S. military and foreign policy objectives; (4) responsibility for transportation security expenditures is consolidated in the Department of Homeland Security and fees collected for security activities are not diverted to purposes other than the provision of direct security services; (5) the appointment of members and the operation of any committees or commissions created by the bill are consistent with the appointments clause of the Constitution and the President's constitutional authority to supervise the unitary executive branch and make recommendations to Congress; (6) any provision for airline collaboration or coordinated capacity reduction preserves competition to the maximum extent possible; (7) maximum flexibility is provided in the use of AIP funds for security costs, noise set-aside and emissions research and mitigation; (8) provisions regarding the use of space by the FAA at airports do not impose costs which preclude the continued provision of essential services by FAA; and (9) mandates which might interfere with the FAA's ability to optimize its organization or research programs are minimized.

The Administration is aware that an amendment may be offered to S. 824 that would inappropriately prohibit the conversion of any FAA facilities or function from the Federal Government to the private sector. Such restrictions are unnecessary and would hinder the FAA's ability to manage the air traffic control system. If such an amendment were included in the final legislation presented to the President, his senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO-SCORING

The Budget Enforcement Act's Pay-As-You-Go requirements and discretionary spending caps expired on September 30, 2002. The Administration supports the extension of these budget enforcement mechanisms in a manner that ensures fiscal discipline and is consistent with the President's Budget. OMB scoring of the bill is under development.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I will not bother with the entire letter except to say that the administration strongly supports passage of the bill. It talks about all the good things which will happen as a result of the bill, most of which we have already covered. I am sure we will cover it again. But it also says the administration is aware that an amendment may be offered to S. 824 that would inappropriately prohibit conversion of any FAA facilities or functions from the Federal Government to the private sector. They say that such restrictions are unnecessary and would hinder the FAA's ability to manage the air traffic control system; and, if such an amendment were included in the final legislation presented to the President, his senior advisers would recommend that he veto the bill.

I very much dislike having all the work that has been done on this legislation for literally months be negated by one amendment. Although it may be emotionally an important issue, I would hate to see that provision destroy all the hard work and important programs that are included in this bill.

I don't know what the plans are for the other side. We would obviously like to have a vote on the Lautenberg amendment. I think there are negotiations going on and conversations concerning that. In the meantime, I note the presence of the Senator from Texas.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arizona. I also thank the Senator from South Carolina for making sure that we have an FAA reauthorization bill on the floor in a timely manner.

There has been so much impact on the aviation industry over the last 2 years that I think we have had to refocus our efforts from capacity issues which we were trying to address before 9/11 to now security issues. Certainly, the parts of the bill that deal with capacity are still here. I think it is warranted that we look ahead. The aviation industry is going to come back, and we need to make sure we have the expedited environmental procedures for building new runways and help communities be able to meet the needs of increased demand when that occurs. If we can do that before a crisis, it will help us allow airports to grow in an environmentally positive way. In a way, that can be handled by the community effectively.

I think this bill is a good bill. I have worked on it as the former chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee and now as a member of the Aviation Subcommittee. I think it is very important that we look at the major issues of security.

I commend the committee for keeping the Security Trust Fund, which I think is so important. People pay a ticket tax for security. I want to make sure this ticket tax goes for security purposes. That is what this bill does. If we start having a shoestring for the Transportation Security Agency, they are going to start cutting corners, and we are not going to have an airtight system that a number of us want to ensure. We have a safer aviation system today than we had on 9/10 in 2001. We want to make sure it stays that way. We should not let our guard down. The kind of enemies there are today are looking for vulnerabilities, and we are not going to allow them to have that.

I think that is why this reauthorization discusses and handles the security issues, the capacity issues, and the issues of air traffic control and safety all in a way that I think is quite positive.

I appreciate the chairman of the committee and the ranking member working to get this bill out. It came out of our Commerce Committee, and I look forward to supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I listened carefully to comments made by our leader, the distinguished colleague from Arizona. I want to say that there are places where the contract tower process can be used. There are some 4,000 airports across the country where the contract tower program might apply. I have no objection to those smaller airports converting to that system. But we are grandfathering those that are presently FAA controlled to continue in that vein to make sure that the system is intact, and that the integrity of the functioning is as planned. If there is a point in time at some future date when we want to look at this, I am more than willing to discuss it. But I want to know exactly what the implications are to the total system, and not simply look at this as a financial gain because in the long run, the financial gains are ephemeral. We saw it in the British experience. We saw it in the Canadian experience.

The Senator from Arizona talked about how nobly the controllers from Canada performed on 9/11. Yes, we give them credit for that. But still in all, their system falls into higher costs all the time, and it is in financial despair, if I can use the terminology. We believe we take care of the issues concerned.

I think we would like to see what our colleagues have to say about that. In due time, I hope we will bring it to a vote.

I yield the floor.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from New Jersey for offering this amendment, which I am proud to cosponsor. This amendment will bar the use of funds to privatize the functions of the air traffic control system in the United States, which will ensure that air traffic control will remain a Government function under the control of the Federal Aviation Administration.

I believe that there are few functions of Government more inherent to our responsibility than guaranteeing the safety and security of consumers of transportation in our country. Since September 11, 2001, we have worked to increase the Federal role in improving air security. Air traffic control is essential to our Nation's security and it is vital that we keep air traffic control within the Government's function in order to ensure a safe aviation system on a day-to-day basis. It is also vital in the case of a terrorist attack. This was demonstrated vividly on September 11, when central Government control of air traffic proved essential in quickly clearing our skies and possibly preventing further casualties.

Furthermore, it is clear that the intention of those who oppose this amendment is to open the door for privatization of air traffic control. This would be a disaster. An extensive Columbia University study that looked at air traffic control privatization in other countries found that there are no operational or economic advantages to privatizing air traffic control. In fact, there is some evidence that suggests privatization can lead to an increase in incidents, as fewer controllers are used in an attempt to cut costs. For example, privatization in Canada has led to an operational irregularity rate twice ours despite the fact that their air system is 7 percent the size of ours. Privatization may also increase costs. The British Government has twice had to bail out its privatized system for $131 million, about two-thirds of what they originally sold it for.

I urge all of my colleagues to support this amendment in order to ensure the continued safety of our aviation system. Let us focus on how to improve our air traffic control system without compromising safety.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the pending amendment be set aside so I may offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, if my friend from Mississippi would not mind, the Senator from Wyoming has a brief statement counter to the Lautenberg amendment.

So that we can be agreeable, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the Senator from Wyoming, we set aside the Lautenberg amendment for the purpose of the Senator from Mississippi proposing an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the President, and I thank the Senator from Mississippi. I will not take long. In fact, I just came from a markup in health care. I was very much interested in the discussion that was going on here. We are all involved, of course, in one way or another in air traffic control. I am a former private pilot and have experienced a great deal over the years. I don't fly anymore because I don't get enough opportunity to be safe. Nevertheless, I have listened.

First of all, I am very much interested in doing all we can in government to modernize and make it as efficient as can be. That is what the administration seeks to do in various kinds of activities, taking a look at those to see if there is something that can be done governmentally. If they can do it just as well or better in the private sector, there ought to be some competition for that. I believe that. I believe that very strongly.

I am always sort of surprised at the efforts made to keep the government from doing that. If they study it and come up with the right answer, I think that is a good idea, instead of saying we ought not to be doing any of those things.

I am an advocate of trying to have competition to see how we can do the best thing.

Currently, the FAA is reviewing the jobs done by the flight services staff to determine if these jobs could indeed be done better by the private sector.

I think most everyone knows that President Bush and his Secretary have no intention of having private competition for the air traffic controllers.

What we are talking about here is the flight service function, which is quite different. Currently provided for in general aviation, of course, is that pilots currently review it to see if flight service functions could be modernized by allowing the private sector to provide some of these services.

So it seems to me that is reasonable. And to come in with an amendment that says you cannot take a look at doing something better is a surprise to me.

The commercial airlines rely on the private sector for weather and all kinds of things. There is really no reason to think that is something that is done better by Government people than it is by private sector people. Who is flying the airplane, for example? That is where the real test comes.

So it seems to me we ought not to adopt this kind of an amendment. Remember, this is a current A–76 study that is underway. It is a study, and we ought to give that an opportunity to happen.

The FAA has categorized air traffic controllers as noninherently governmental. They have shielded the air traffic controllers from the A–76 study.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield for a question?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I asked if the Senator from Wyoming would yield for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. Sure. Yes.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I ask if the Senator from Wyoming is aware of the fact that some $20 million has already been spent on a survey or a study of this process?

Mr. THOMAS. I am not aware of that. Are you aware of the outcome?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. No.

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The outcome is one we see that says perhaps we ought to put the security of the FAA out to the cheapest bidder. I am aware that is where it comes out. And can the distinguished Senator from Wyoming explain why it is we took this very comfortable, privately managed sector of our aviation system, the baggage screeners, and brought them into Government at three times the wage they were working? There are 33,000 or 28,000 of those people.

Mr. THOMAS. May I answer the question, please?

I do know why that is, and I would think you do, too.

We decided it right here. I voted against it. I voted for having the private sector continue. That is why it was done, because it is a political thing, and you know it and I know it.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I am delighted—I always enjoy the comments of my friend from Wyoming. We talk the same language in New Jersey.

But to say it was a political decision, then it sounds relatively meritoriousless. But I hear people say things are better with the folks working for Government. Of course, we have started to lay off a lot of baggage screeners already. And so, to me, the chances of baggage screening being of the same danger as changing the system that now——

Mr. THOMAS. Is there a question?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am sorry. Forgive me. I did not mean to use the time of the Senator from Wyoming. I was just trying to respond to his answer.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand, and you will probably have an opportunity to do that. Let me respond to what you are saying.

You talk about how much better it is. I think if you had spent that many billions of dollars doing it on the other side, it perhaps would have been better as well.

So I urge Senators to not accept this amendment and to let us continue to have a study of what might better be done rather than saying, flatly, we cannot even take a look at a possible modernization.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALEXANDER). The Senator from Mississippi.

AMENDMENT NO. 898

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, under the unanimous consent agreement propounded by the distinguished Senator from Arizona, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendments be set aside, and I send an amendment to the desk and ask it be reported. The amendment is at the desk.

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I missed the unanimous consent request. What is it? What is the request?

Mr. COCHRAN. The request is that the pending amendments be set aside and that I may be permitted to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. REID. I would agree to that if we have a time set for a vote on the Lautenberg amendment. Other than that, because I don't want his amendment to——

Mr. MCCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. When would the Senator like to have that vote?

Mr. REID. We would like to have it as soon as possible.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that pending the discussion of the Cochran amendment, we move then to a vote.

Mr. REID. Well, I know we have two of our most senior Members here involved in this debate, Senator COCHRAN and Senator BYRD, and they usually do not talk for 5 minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I do not intend to talk long. I do hope we can permit Senator BYRD to make a statement on this amendment. I do not know how much time he would need for that purpose.

Mr. BYRD. Five minutes.

Mr. MCCAIN. The Senator says 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I say, we are prepared to accept the amendment by Senator COCHRAN.

Mr. REID. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] for himself and Mr. BYRD, proposes an amendment numbered 898.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide authorization for an Aviation Security Capital Fund)

On page 145, beginning with line 8, strike all down through and including line 24 on page 147, and insert the following:

"SEC. 402. AVIATION SECURITY CAPITAL FUND.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—There may be established within the Department of Homeland Security a fund to be known as the Aviation Security Capital Fund. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Fund up to $500,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2007, such amounts to be derived from fees received under section 44940 of title 49, United States Code. Amounts in the fund shall be allocated in such a manner that—

''(1) 40 percent shall be made available for hub airports;

''(2) 20 percent shall be made available for medium hub airports;

''(3) 15 percent shall be made available for small hub airports and non-hub airports; and

''(4) 25 percent may be distributed at the Secretary's discretion.

''(b) PURPOSE.—Amounts in the Fund shall be available to the Secretary of Homeland Security to provide financial assistance to airport sponsors to defray capital investment in transportation security at airport facilities in accordance with the provisions of this section. The program shall be administered in concert with the airport improvement program under chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code.

''(c) APPORTIONMENT.—Amounts made available under subsection (a)(1), (a)(2), or (a)(3) shall be apportioned among the airports in each category in accordance with a formula based on the ratio that passenger enplanements at each airport in the category bears to the total passenger enplanements at all airports in that category.

''(d) MATCHING REQUIREMENTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Not less than the following percentage of the costs of any project funded under this section shall be derived from non-Federal sources:

''(A) For hub airports and medium hub airports, 25 percent.

''(B) For airports other than hub airports and medium hub airports, 10 percent.

''(2) USE OF BOND PROCEEDS.—In determining the amount of non-Federal sources of funds, the proceeds of State and local bond issues shall not be considered to be derived, directly or indirectly, from Federal sources without regard to the Federal income tax treatment of interest and principal of such bonds.

''(e) LETTERS OF INTENT.—The Secretary of Homeland Security, or his delegate, may execute letters of intent to commit funding to airport sponsors from the Fund.

''(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 44940(a)(1) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

'(H) The costs of security-related capital improvements at airports.'.

''(g) DEFINITIONS.—Any term used in this section that is defined or used in chapter 417 of title 49 United States Code has the meaning given that term in that chapter.''.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I also note that Senator BYRD is a cosponsor of the amendment. I appreciate very much hearing the assurance of the Senator from Arizona that this amendment will be accepted, so I am not going to talk long. I do not want to talk our way out of getting this amendment accepted, but I do briefly want to say what it does, and then I will be happy to yield to Senator BYRD for whatever comments he would like to make.

This amendment seeks to amend section 402 of the bill. Section 402 creates a new entitlement program, in effect, and it is a capital fund program that would permit the Transportation Security Administration to use up to $500 million—the first $500 million collected each year from the emplanement fee; $2.50 per passenger that is now collected under current law—and transfer those funds to the Department of Transportation for administration of this capital fund.

The Department of Transportation could then allocate those funds to airports for security improvements. There are provisions in the amendment about how much hub airports would be entitled to—40 percent; 20 percent to medium hub airports, and the like. But the problem with it is the CBO says that, unlike the arrangement under current law, where the Transportation Security Administration spends these funds for airport screeners and other activities under the jurisdiction of the Transportation Security Administration, it would no longer be able to have those activities offset by the funds that are collected from the passengers, which means we would have to appropriate additional money each year to pay for those purposes that are now being paid for out of the emplanement fund that is designated and earmarked for that purpose now.

So what we are doing is saying, it is OK to set up this new capital fund, and it is OK to authorize the Transportation Security Agency to collect the money and make it available, but we need to make that subject to appropriations. That is the point because we are going to divert money from the Department of Homeland Security for this new purpose, and we have a letter from Secretary Ridge explaining that. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of his letter dated June 11 to me be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,

June 11, 2003.

Hon. THAD COCHRAN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Homeland Security, Committee on Appropriations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Administration appreciates the continued support of Congress for improvements in the security of the Nation's civil aviation system and supports Senate passage of S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act (Air-V). However, the Administration opposes a provision in S. 824 that would divert fees collected for security activities for purposes other than the provision of direct security services.

With the Homeland Security Act of 2002, Congress identified the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) as the focal point of the federal government's homeland security efforts, with the mission of preventing terrorist attacks and reducing the nation's vulnerability to terrorism. While the Department welcomes and appreciates the assistance of other agencies in improving security, any diversion of security fees, such as that proposed in S. 824, would directly undermine the Department's ability to fulfill its mission. Air-V would establish an Aviation Security Capital Fund that is both outside the control of the Department and funded by diverting $500 million per year of passenger and air carrier security fees collected by the Transportation Security Administration (TSA). This would diminish the Department's funding capacity. As you know, the direct annual costs of operating the aviation security system are not fully offset by these fees, and diverting fee revenue for other purposes clearly weakens the intended financing structure of TSA set forth in the Aviation and Transportation Security Act. Diversion of the fees into a fund outside of DHS undermines the ability of the Administration to apply these resources to the most pressing security needs.

The Administration looks forward to working with Congress to ensure that the version of the bill presented to the President eliminates this objectionable provision.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection, from the standpoint of the Administration's program, to the submission of these views for the consideration of the Congress.

Sincerely,

TOM RIDGE.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am hopeful we can go forward. I appreciate very much the assurance of the Senator from Arizona that the amendment will be included in the bill.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my friend and the Chairman of the Homeland Security Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator COCHRAN, in offering this amendment today. At the same time, I deeply regret the fact that we are being forced to have to come to this floor and offer this amendment.

S. 824 contains a brand new $500 million entitlement program. This legislation would earmark $500 million of existing aviation security fees for grants to airports for construction.

The Transportation Security Administration was created by the Congress in response to the attacks of September 11. It was a failure of our airport screening procedures that allowed 19 men to board domestic airliners with weapons and turn four planes into instruments of death and destruction. With the creation of the Department of Homeland Security, the TSA was transferred from the Department of Transportation to the new Homeland Security Department. The Appropriations Subcommittee on Homeland Security, which is so ably chaired by the senior Senator from Mississippi, is charged with funding the TSA—one of many agencies now in the Department of Homeland Security.

The President's Fiscal Year 2004 budget request for the TSA assumes that $2 billion and $70 million in aviation security fees will go to the TSA to meet its security requirements. These fees are used to fund the thousands of screeners at our airports, for purchasing security equipment such as explosives detection equipment, and for the Federal Air Marshals program, all of which help secure our airports and the millions of travelers who use them. The provision in this bill that Senator COCHRAN and I are seeking to modify would take $500 million of those fees that the President has requested for the TSA and instead earmark the $500 million for a new entitlement program for airport construction grants.

This new mandatory program purports to ''solve'' an airport security construction problem. However, the provision actually creates a homeland security problem. The provision will create a $500 million hole in the TSA budget—a hole that the Homeland Security Subcommittee will be unable to fill without creating other holes in our homeland security budget.

How should we fill that $500 million hole? Should we take Border Patrol agents off our Southwest border? Should we cut port security programs? Should we further slow down the Coast Guard's modernization program? Should we reduce the numbers of inspectors at our ports of entry on our borders and increase the waiting time for agricultural produce to enter the U.S. from Mexico and Canada? Should we cut grants to our States and cities to equip and train first responders? These are the very real choices we on the Homeland Security Appropriations Subcommittee will have to face if the provision in this bill is permitted to pass.

I sympathize with the dilemma facing the members of the Commerce Committee. They are attempting to relieve the security construction burden facing our Nation's airports. I support these airport security programs and have provided funds in the past to begin to meet these airport security needs. However, the President did not request one dime for airport security construction in his budget, not one dime. So if this provision became law, we would need to cut $500 million from homeland security priorities requested by the President.

Our amendment is a simple one. Instead of creating a new entitlement program, instead of creating a colossal new $500 million earmark, instead of putting airport construction grants at the front of the line, ahead of border security, port security or first responder grants, this amendment would simply turn this new $500 million program into an authorization. It would allow the Senate to use the appropriations process to make careful choices among the competing homeland security priorities.

I urge my colleagues to join us on this amendment and strike this ill-advised provision.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, we are ready to accept the amendment on this side.

Mr. HOLLINGS. It has been cleared on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 898) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will yield briefly, I thank the Senator from Arizona and the comanager on this side of the aisle for their accepting the amendment. I think it is a real service.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I understand it is the agreement of the Senator from Nevada that we will have a vote at 2:30 on the pending amendment.

Mr. REID. Yes.

Mr. MCCAIN. Could I have a small modification, a technical amendment?

Mr. REID. Yes.

AMENDMENT NO. 889, AS MODIFIED

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I have a modification of amendment No. 889 at the desk. It is a technical correction concerning the sale of airline tickets that was inadvertently included in the managers' package.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The modification is as follows:

On page 10, strike lines 11 through 18

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote in relation to the Lautenberg amendment No. 893 occur at 2:30 today, with no amendments in order to the amendment prior to the vote; further, that the remaining time until 2:30 be equally divided in the usual form.

Mr. REID. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I wish to mention to my colleagues that we are moving along on the amendments on this side. I know there is an amendment by the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. INHOFE, which I hope we can consider rather quickly. It is a very interesting amendment on raising the age from 60 to 65. There are several amendments by Senator BURNS.

I say to my friend on this side that I think we can probably agree to at least a majority of them. I know of no other amendments that would be pending on this side. If there are, we hope that during the vote that takes place at 2:30 we can get pending amendments at least brought to our attention so we can schedule them. I still believe there is a very good opportunity to finish this legislation tonight.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 891, WITHDRAWN

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask that my amendment No. 891 which I offered earlier today be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I ask for the yeas and nays on the Lautenberg amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

NOT VOTING—3

Edwards	Jeffords	Lieberman

The amendment (No. 893) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. If I may have the attention of the managers of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. REID. One of the important amendments on this bill is the Inhofe amendment that has been discussed at some length, on both sides, off the floor. But both have agreed that the Inhofe amendment will be handled in 40 minutes, equally divided.

I ask unanimous consent that the Inhofe amendment be the next in order and that the time for the amendment be 40 minutes.

Mr. MCCAIN. Equally divided.

Mr. REID. And no second-degree amendments be in order prior to the vote, on or in relation to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCAIN. Forty minutes equally divided.

Mr. REID. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, before we move to the Inhofe amendment, I wish to state for the benefit of my colleagues, we have a Dorgan amendment which is being worked on. We have a Bunning amendment which is being worked on.

I believe a Burns amendment is being worked on as well. I think we are close to completion of work on the amendments. If our colleagues have additional amendments, we would certainly like to see them during this 40 minutes of debate on the Inhofe amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

AMENDMENT NO. 986

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE], for himself, Mr. KYL, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. GRASSLEY, and Mr. ENZI, proposes an amendment numbered 986.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To establish age limitations for airmen)

At the end of title V, add the following new section:

SECTION 521. AGE LIMITATIONS.

(a) GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, beginning on the date that is 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act—

(1) section 121.383(c) of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, shall not apply;

(2) no certificate holder may use the services of any person as a pilot on an airplane engaged in operations under part 121 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, if that person is 65 years of age or older; and

(3) no person may serve as a pilot on an airplane engaged in operations under part 121 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, if that person is 65 years of age or older.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the provisions of this section shall take effect on the date that is 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) INTERIM LIMITATION.—During the period that begins on the date that is 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act and ending on the date that is one year after such date—

(A) subsection (a)(2) shall be applied by substituting ''64'' for ''65''; and

(B) subsection (a)(3) shall be applied by substituting ''64'' for ''65''.

(c) CERTIFICATE HOLDER.—For purposes of this section, the term ''certificate holder'' means a holder of a certificate to operate as an air carrier or commercial operator issued by the Federal Aviation Administration.

(d) RESERVATION OF SAFETY AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section is intended to change the authority of the Federal Aviation Administration to take steps to ensure the safety of air transportation operations involving a pilot who is 60 years of age or older.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, first of all, I would like to say this is a noncontroversial amendment which everyone is for.

That is not true. But it is a very old subject. I say that in two ways.

It is a subject that has been around for a long time and one that needs to be addressed one way or another.

Second, I am offering an amendment that passed out of the Commerce Committee last year. It does one very simple thing. Currently, the age limit for a commercial pilot is age 60. That was established some 40 years ago. The life expectancy since that time has increased by about 12 years. There is no medical reason that anyone has ever put forward why a pilot should have to stop flying at age 60. Quite frankly, I know pilots who are too old to fly at age 50. I am an exception. I am age 68, and I am a better pilot than I was 40 years ago. But age is arbitrary. There are no two people alike.

For that reason, age 60 being an arbitrary number and having been around for some 40 years, my preference would be not to have any age limit at all. Frankly, I think we should have very strong, stringent medical requirements. That is in the law today. And we should have very strong proficiency requirements. That is in the law today. So long as a person is able to do that, that person should be able to continue. But, realistically, I believe people are going to say, well, that could lead up to very old ages—even my age. They do not want that to happen.

So we are putting an arbitrary age limit of 65 so we can at least look at it for a period of time. There have been a lot of studies. Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene did a study as to what age someone would not have the proficiency in flying an airplane. They came back and said age has absolutely nothing to do with it. There are other predictors that are much more important. In fact, some studies have shown that airline pilots exceed population norms for physical health and mental ability. I believe that is true because they are required to take physicals on a regular basis.

I am a commercially rated pilot. I have been for some 40 years. I can tell you from personal experience in my particular case. Some of you in this Chamber will remember this. I had an experience just a couple of years ago with a single-engine airplane where the front end of the airplane came off in flight. Normally, with that situation you are through. However, drawing upon experience, I was able to determine where the new stalling speed was, which was three times what the stalling speed normally would be for that aircraft, and come back and made somewhat of a crash landing, I guess, only because I didn't have any gears down there. But, nonetheless, quite frankly, I wonder if I would have been able to do that before.

At this time, I would like to yield the floor so I can see what type of opposition is here today.

I would like to tell you that everyone is for it. Quite frankly, ALPA, the Airline Pilots Association, is not for it. There is a very good reason. It is not a safety reason. It is not an age reason. It is a monetary reason. I have a great deal of respect for younger pilots who are commercial pilots working for the airlines. By getting rid of older pilots, that leaves more upward mobility. That is true. I think that is one of the reasons they are opposed to it. In fact, I think that is the only reason they are opposed to it. Many of the airlines are for it, and some are against it. Some of them are in opposition to my amendment as an economic issue. As a pilot becomes older, he is paid more money. Consequently, the payrolls in an ailing industry would go up. I am sensitive to that. I have weighed that carefully and have determined this is the best thing.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me take such time as I may consume on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. I intend to oppose the amendment. In many ways, I regret opposing my friend from Oklahoma. He is quite a remarkable pilot. I have had the opportunity to ride with him. I believe he flew around the world in a single-engine airplane at one point.

Mr. INHOFE. It was actually a twin-engine plane.

Mr. DORGAN. Nonetheless, he is a pilot who has flown around the world. He knows a bit about flying.

I learned to fly at one point in my life. I know something about the wonders of it. I know something about the time the instructor steps out of the plane and says: It is your turn. Take it up alone. That is one of the moments in your life you will always remember.

The issue here is about an age limit for commercial pilots. I don't stand here as an expert on this subject. I don't expect there is an expert in the Senate on this subject. The question of the age rule is a question that the FAA has dealt with, and they have dealt with it repeatedly.

The history of this rule goes back many years. It is a rule that has been around for a long while. It was established by the FAA as a matter of safety. I know this rule has actually been considered by the Senate previously as well.

At one point during its consideration in the Senate, it was considered and proposed that we had a shortage of pilots, and, therefore, we should remove this age restriction and increase it some. Of course, now we have exactly the opposite. We have many pilots who are furloughed and laid off and would like to come to work. That is not the issue. The issue is one of safety.

I think the FAA has always erred on the side of safety. I expect that all of us want them to err on the side of safety.

My judgment about this is that the decision about age requirements for commercial pilots ought to be left to the regulatory agency, the FAA. They are the experts in this area. We are not. They know more about this subject than we do.

I just feel uncomfortable substituting our judgment, with an arbitrary number, for the judgment of the FAA.

Let me say I am sure the Senator from Oklahoma would agree, the FAA has the opportunity and the discretion and the ability right now this afternoon to make that age change, if they wish to do that. The FAA has the authority under law, as I understand it, to change the rule as they see fit. They have continuously, however, kept the 60-year age rule because they want to maintain the highest degree of safety in air transportation.

There have been a number of studies dealing with this issue. In 1979, Congress mandated a study conducted under the auspices of the NIH. In 1990, the House Committee on Public Works asked the Office of Technology Assessment to examine the medical aspects of the Federal requirement that airline pilots retire at age 60 and to assess the state of the art medical risk assessment. There have been a number of these studies.

I chose not to go into the conclusions of all the studies except to say that the FAA, in reviewing the body of information in those studies, decided that they believed the 60-year age retirement rule was appropriate.

Again, in April 2000, the FAA reaffirmed its position and decision to maintain the 60-year retirement age. That decision was appealed to the courts actually in 2001, and the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the FAA's decision.

Once again, I say I am not an expert. I would expect, perhaps, the Senator from Oklahoma would make the same statement. The question of safety and the question of the proper retirement age given medical circumstances with respect to commercial flight and the commercial license that one needs to fly is a decision that is enormously complicated. It is a decision that has been studied and restudied by the FAA folks whose job it is to provide the assurance of safety. I frankly am comfortable with whatever decision they make.

If they were to decide this afternoon, look, we have studied this from six more angles and here is what we have concluded, and it came up with a different number, that would be fine with me. But I must say, I am not comfortable with the Senate arbitrarily deciding there is a number that we know better than the FAA which represents the risk assessment with respect to this mandatory retirement age. For that reason, I regret I have to oppose the amendment.

Again, let me finish by saying this is not a new subject and not a new debate. We may not know much more about it than we did the last time we debated it, but I believed then and believe now it is appropriate to allow the Federal Aviation Administration—the regulatory agency that has the experts and has the charge to make these decisions—to make this judgment.

Again, it is my contention, if they decided this afternoon to increase that mandatory retirement age, that would be fine with me. And they have that capability under current law to do so, but they have not because they believe it not advisable. I think the Senate would be well advised to listen to the FAA on this subject.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPO). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, first of all, I have a great deal of respect for the Senator from North Dakota, and some of the things he says certainly do make sense. I would have to say this, though. There is not a bureaucracy out there that, now and then, does not have to be prodded a little bit because it is the very nature of a bureaucracy not to change. They do not want to change.

Not long ago, I had a bill, on which I believe the Senator from North Dakota supported me, called the emergency revocation bill. It took 3 years before we got the votes to pass it. It was something that should have been done, I believe, by the FAA; and I think most of them would agree. Many of them in the field have told me since then that it was something they should have done. They are very busy, they have their hands full, and probably the furthest thing from their minds is making a change.

When it gets down to age, when you talk about 60, age 60, when this rule was put in, is the same as age 72 today. Everything that is tied to an index—whether it is retirement, Social Security—they all have increased in age, except this one issue.

As far as safety is concerned, I do not think the FAA would tell you the arbitrary age of 60 or 65 is going to relate to safety. But what they relate to safety is the medical and proficiency requirements, which are very stringent. And the older you get, I suggested to my friend from North Dakota, the more stringent they become, because I have had to live through this myself.

On the argument that there is not a shortage of pilots, now we are going through a temporary phase. I think, as everyone in this Chamber knows, we are going through a rebuilding process of our military, and the supply and demand of pilots is something that is going to change. I just hope that does not influence a person into making that decision on a vote.

I say to the Senator, he is right, safety is the big issue. But we can show—and have testimony, a lot of which I have already talked about—that safety is not related to age; it is related to medical conditions and proficiency.

With that, I yield the floor to see if there are those who want to be heard. If not, I will yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I have been on the Commerce Committee for quite a few years, not nearly as long as my friend from South Carolina, but long enough to know that this issue has been around for a long time.

When it was first presented to me, it was presented to my office by a group of pilots who were nearing the age of 60. And they said: Gee, we are in great shape. We fly planes that have two pilots in the cockpit. We would be willing to take three or four physicals every year if necessary. We all know people are living longer. We know that fewer and fewer people smoke. We have rigorous physicals.

I said: Gee, it makes good sense to me. And as I grow older, it makes even more sense to me, I might add to my friend from Oklahoma.

But here is the problem. The airlines do not want it because they do not want to pay senior pilots the amount of money they have to pay them, and so they want to get rid of them at age 60 and bring in lower salaried pilots. And, of course, then, incredibly, the younger members of ALPA, the Airline Pilots Association, want the old geezers gone so they can move up more rapidly. It is really kind of an incredible scenario, when you think about it.

We all know that people live longer and are healthier longer. And the Senator from Oklahoma probably knows when this rule went into effect. I am not sure.

Mr. INHOFE. Forty years ago.

Mr. MCCAIN. Forty years ago. The demographics have changed, and everything else has changed. It argues for at least allowing pilots to fly longer.

By the way, I might say, also—again, maybe I have a little senior's bias here—more experienced pilots are better pilots. And if they are in good health, and there are two of them in almost every commercial airliner, why in the world are we opposed to allowing them to fly longer? Southwest Airlines supports the efforts. SWAPA and other organizations and individuals allow pilots to fly commercial jet aircraft beyond age 60. JetBlue supports it. The low-cost airlines all support it. The most expensive airlines, the more established ones—most of them are rotating in and out of bankruptcy because of their outstanding management practices—are opposed to it.

So this is really a no-brainer, Mr. President. We should allow these pilots to serve longer and fly longer and be able to realize an income that comes from serving these airlines and the American public for a long time.

Having said that, we will probably lose because right now, ALPA, the Airline Pilots Association, and the executives and lobbyists for the major airlines are on the phone saying: Don't do this. This could be really dangerous.

It is hard for me to believe that someone 61 years old, who passed a physical, who is flying with another qualified pilot, plus, in many cases, a flight engineer, is in any way a danger. Not only that, in case there is some kind of emergency, that pilot is probably better qualified to handle that emergency by virtue of that pilot's experience than a much younger individual would be.

So I will clearly be supporting the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. I appreciate his courage in bringing up this issue. Maybe someday we will be able to allow these young men and women to serve past age 60 if they are physically and mentally qualified to do so.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, first of all, I thank the Senator from Arizona. I would suggest that this is exactly like the bill that came out of the Commerce Committee last year or the year before, the 107th Congress. I really believe it is time for us to do this. I know where the pressures are against it.

If there is no one else on the other side who wants to be heard, I will yield back.

Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me make one final point.

It is not quite so simple to say it is ALPA, the airlines. The fact is, the Federal Aviation Administration, the FAA, has the authority today to make a decision about increasing this retirement age. It has chosen not to, I assume because the experts there have taken a look at the OTA study, the accident rates, and whole series of things.

I agree, people are living longer, better lives. I have an 81-year-old uncle who runs in the Senior Olympics. He runs the 400 and the 800 at age 81. People are living longer. I understand all that.

The issue is, what the proper age is for retirement of commercial airline pilots is not a function of the Senate, making a judgment on the floor of the Senate. In my judgment, it is a function of people who know, the medical experts at the FAA, looking through the data and making a considered judgment on behalf of the American people of what constitutes their best safety.

So that is the basis of this position. It is not, in my judgment, about ALPA or the airlines; it is just saying, look, whatever the judgment is, let it be, but let's have the experts make it. That is my whole point.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I think we have responded to everything the Senator from North Dakota has said. I would only say that there are a lot of forces out there against it. But every argument that is against it that is a legitimate argument, is an economic argument.

I believe everyone in this Chamber has to understand that what was being age 60, 40 years ago, is not the same as being age 60 today. And everything else, every other schedule we have written into law, has changed more than this amount during that 40-year period.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I yield as much time as the Senator from Mississippi wants from the time remaining.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 12 minutes 55 seconds remaining.

Mr. LOTT. I don't believe I will need the entire time. I will take a few minutes to say that, in this case, I do feel the need to oppose this amendment by Senator INHOFE. Our Commerce Committee has discussed this issue several times in the past and at various times we have gone different ways on it. In this case, I think you need to look at how we got where we are.

The Federal Aviation Administration has the responsibility that is mandated to ensure aviation safety. In 1959, they concluded, after concerns developed of potential detrimental effects of aging and the risk of acute and incapacitating medical conditions, that commercial pilots need to be required to retire at age 60. Today I believe there is sufficient evidence to keep that rule. There is not enough evidence to reverse that. There is a case here where I believe most of the airlines, although not all, support keeping it at 60. There is no question that the representatives of the pilots prefer to keep it at 60. So you have an agreement.

Also, I do feel as if, particularly in the aviation area, there is a need right now to have some opportunity for retirement at 60, to bring in newer, young pilots or, as a matter of fact, to decide they don't need all those pilots. This is a unique time in the aftermath of 9/11, where at this time I am inclined not to think we should raise the age to 65, whereas some time down the road I might be so inclined.

I do worry about age discrimination. As I get older, I worry about it more than I used to. I think in this case, with medical science and the acknowledgement of the current situation in the industry, we should keep it at 60.

I don't like to be on the other side of my good friend, the Senator from Oklahoma, but I think, all things considered, we should stick with what the rule has been.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, the three arguments used by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi are, first, economic. The pilots' union is opposed to it. I said that in my opening statement. There is a justified reason for that. If I were a young pilot and a member of the union, I might feel the same way because they want more upward mobility. As far as the airlines are concerned, yes, they are going to have to pay a little more. The average older pilots have greater salaries and benefits. These are economic reasons.

I think we should consider these reasons but I don't want anybody voting on this and believing in their heart that they are doing it for safety or because of the supply and demand of pilots. We all know that will change; we know that with the restructuring of our military.

As I said, if it is a good age—first, it should not be an age at all. It ought to be based on medical tests and proficiency tests. If 40 years ago 60 was a good age, 65 would be better now.

We will have a chance to look at this. I think there are a lot of people who would like to see a realistic approach to this. I think we used the same thing for 40 years and certainly it is justified to raise that at this time.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. INHOFE. Yes.

Mr. DORGAN. The Senator talked about a proficiency test. We would not have difficulty if the FAA could find a device that is appropriate to deal with that. I think they have evaluated that for a long period of time and have not been able to come to that conclusion. I don't think even those of us who would agree with your amendment believe there is a magic number here. I am not qualified to set the number.

I am not suggesting that it is ever appropriate to increase the age limit. I would prefer someone with the capabilities of the FAA to evaluate the medical histories to be able to do that.

Mr. INHOFE. In terms of proficiency tests, I am a flight instructor. I test people, and I think everybody doing that takes into consideration age, and they are more stringent with them as they get older.

Again, a person could be more proficient at age 70 than at age 40. This happens to some people. That is why age should not be the determining factor; proficiency and health should be. Certainly, economic factors should not.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Are they prepared to yield back their time?

Mr. INHOFE. I yield back my time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. We yield back our time on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If all time is yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. EDWARDS), the Senator from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. LIEBERMAN) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from MA (Mr. KERRY) would vote ''nay''.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 52, as follows:

The amendment (No. 896) was rejected.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, we have four Members here who have pending amendments which are going to be accepted. All four Members want to have their amendment proposed and discussed. I ask unanimous consent Senator BINGAMAN be recognized for his amendment, and Senator BUNNING, Senator DORGAN, and Senator INHOFE, in that order. I know all will speak briefly.

Mr. LOTT. Reserving the right to object, I want to clarify there were no time agreements included, just the order that they would discuss the amendments briefly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 906

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN], for himself, and Mr. INHOFE, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. JEFFORDS, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. HARKIN, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. NELSON of Nebraska, Mrs. LINCOLN, and Mr. GRASSLEY, proposes amendment No. 906.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To preserve the essential air service program)

Beginning on page 138, line 15, strike all through page 142, line 11.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to speak briefly about the Bingaman-Inhofe amendment to preserve the Essential Air Service Program. Our amendment is cosponsored by Senators SNOWE, JEFFORDS, COLLINS, SPECTER, HARKIN, CLINTON, SCHUMER, PRYOR, BEN NELSON, LINCOLN, and GRASSLEY. I thank them for their support.

I first want to compliment Commerce Committee Chariman MCCAIN, Aviation Subcomittee Chairman LOTT, and Ranking Members HOLLINGS and ROCKEFELLER for their good work on this bill to reauthorize FAA. The bill the Senate is now considering, S. 824, will do much to assure the safety and security of the traveling public.

I am also pleased S. 824 includes a number of provisions that will help improve commercial air service in rural areas, including a reauthorization of the Small Community Air Service Development Pilot Program.

However, we do take issue with one provision in this bill that would for the first time impose new costs on some communities that participate in the EAS program.

As the bill now stands, some communities would be required to pay to continue to receive scheduled air service. I believe this arbitrary proposal could eliminate scheduled air service from many rural communities. Yesterday, the House of Representatives voted to eliminate all mandatory cost sharing language from the FAA reauthorization bill. I hope the Senate will do the same.

Congress established the Essential Air Service Program in 1978 to ensure that communities that had commercial air service before airline deregulation could continue to receive scheduled service. Without EAS, many rural communities would have no commercial air service at all.

All across America, small communities face ever-increasing hurdles to promoting their economic growth and development. Today, many rural areas lack access to interstate or even four-lane highways, railroads or broadband telecommunications. Business development in rural areas frequently hinges on the availability of scheduled air service. For small communities, commercial air service provides a critical link to the national and international transportation system.

A recent study from the Department of Agriculture, titled ''How Important Is Airport Access for Rural Businesses'' underscores the importance of commercial air service to rural communities. In a survey of rural businesses, access to airport facilities and air service was frequently cited as one of the top problems for businesses in most rural counties. Air facilities, services, and fares were also found to be important to tourist-related and service businesses in rural areas. Not surprisingly, airport access was one of the least cited concerns of manufacturers in large- and medium-sized cities.

The Essential Air Service Program currently ensures commercial air service to over 100 communities in thirty-four states. EAS supports an additional 33 communities in Alaska. Because of increasing costs and the current financial turndown in the aviation industry, particularly among commuter airlines, about 28 additional communities have been forced into the EAS program since the terrorist attacks in 2001.

Congress already limits the eligibility of the EAS program to communities more than 70 miles from a major airport. In addition, the amount of the subsidy must be less than $200 per passenger for communities less than 210 miles from a major airport. These requirements serve to limit the cost to the government of the EAS program. In fact, in the past two years, about a dozen airports, including one in New Mexico, have been eliminated from EAS because the cost per passenger has exceeded the limit. We feel the additional requirements imposed in this bill are not appropriate and could force a number of communities to lose their commercial air service.

In my State of New Mexico, five cities currently rely on EAS for their commercial air service. The communities are Clovis, Hobbs, Carlsbad, Alamogordo and my hometown of Silver City. In each case commercial service is provided to Albuquerque, the State's largest city and business center.

I hope that all Senators recognize the vast distances between communities in my State. If you drive, Hobbs is 320 miles from Albuquerque, Carlsbad is 283 miles, Silver City 233, Clovis 216, and Alamogordo 210 miles. None of these cities are on interstate highways, so the driving times to Albuquerque can be 4, 5, and even 6 hours. Commercial air service is the only practical way to make the trip for business people or community leaders going to Albuquerque or to the nearby state capital in Santa Fe. Though so called ''hub'' airports may be located a hundred miles away in another state, it is just not practical to drive the long distance to another airport in order to fly to Albuquerque. However, that's exactly what is likely to happen if the Congress imposes new costs on our communities to maintain their commercial air service.

As I understand it, under the proposal in this bill communities in 16 states could be affected by the mandatory cost-sharing requirements in the Senate bill. These States are, Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, and Vermont.

The House-reported bill—H.R. 2115—also requires some rural communities to pay or lose their commercial air service. We believe this ill-conceived proposal could not come at a worse time for small communities already facing depressed economies and declining tax revenues.

The Governor of my state of New Mexico, Bill Richardson, said in a letter to me supporting this amendment: The cost sharing provision has the potential to affect the economic welfare of small communities in over 35 states—-particularly those in New Mexico.

I also have a letter of support from the New Mexico State Aviation Director, Mike Rice, who said this: This significant additional financial burden would have profound negative impacts on both current sir service and economic development efforts in several of our cities. Changes to current EAS funding could very well jeopardize existing air service in our state.

Mayor Donald Carroll of Alamogordo, writes that it is improbable that funding will be available to locally subsidize air service. He also notes that the city is actively working with the commercial carrier, Rio Grande Air, to increase enplanements.

The National Association of Development Organizations says:

> During these challenging economic times, Congress should be working to improve and enhance air service to rural and underserved communities, instead of adding new requirements that would further isolate hundreds of our nation's smaller communities.

I'm not entirely sure that the proposal to charge the communities to continue their air service has been thoroughly thought out. The chairman's report on this bill from the Commerce Committee indicates that the Secretary will select 10 EAS communities to pay for their air service. However, the way I read the reported bill, only a one city in each of 8 states would be required to pay. Now, the chairman has offered an amendment that ups that total to 16 states with about 27 communities that could be impacted.

At the same time, the bill isn't clear on what exactly is a ''hub'' airport. As I understand it, the FAA compiles one set of data on annual enplanements, but the Department of Transportation currently uses a different set of data from the department's Bureau of Transportation Statistics to determine eligibility for EAS. These data produce a different list of ''hub'' airports, which could change which airports would be required to pay, simply because of the source of the data the government chooses to use. Finally, new cities are coming into the EAS program, so that additional states could have cities that would be required to pay for their air service.

Just one last point on the impacts of this proposal. I think we should make clear this isn't about saving the Government a lot of money. We estimate the payments from the communities would amount to less than $2 million a year out of a $113 million annual program.

Advocates of this proposal may claim they've made it as easy as possible for the communities to provide the mandatory 10 percent match. I just don't believe these alternatives will be all that effective. I understand, none of the five EAS cities in New Mexico currently charge the commercial carrier any fees to land at the airport. In this way, our cities are already contributing to the cost of their commercial air service.

I think we all appreciate the current concerns about the aviation industry and the EAS program. Ridership levels to rural cities are down. Meanwhile operating costs continue to increase, resulting in ticket prices that fewer people can afford. There are too many commuter aircraft flying at less than half capacity. Clearly, some improvements are needed.

But what are some better options? Well, I think senators need only look in this same bill for the answer. In my view the bill already includes a number of excellent improvements in the EAS program that I believe will significantly enhance commercial air service in rural communities.

For example, section 352 of the bill authorizes a new Marketing Incentive Program to increase ridership, reduce the Federal subsidies, and improve service. Section 353 provides for a number of pilot programs to help communities improve their commercial air service. One option is to allow communities to receive service with a smaller airplane. In my State, Alamogordo has decided to try service with a nine-passenger plane. In addition, communities may opt to convert their EAS service to alternative transportation, which might include bus or vans. I think these ideas represent a better approach to improving commercial air service in rural areas. I support these proposals and want to thank the chairman and ranking member for including them.

The choice here is clear: If we do not preserve the Essential Air Service Program today, we could well see the end of all commercial air service in rural areas. The EAS program provides vital resources that help link rural communities to the national and global aviation system. Our amendment will help ensure affordable, reliable, and safe air service remains available in rural America.

The House of Representatives has already voted to eliminate the mandatory cost sharing language from the FAA reauthorization bill. I hope all Senators will vote for this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that a listing of the communities that could be affected and a letter of support for the amendment by the Governor of New Mexico, a letter of support for the amendment from the Director of the New Mexico Aviation Division of the New Mexico Department of Transportation, a letter from the Mayor of Alamogordo, NM, and a letter from the National Association of Development Organizations, all in support of this amendment, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW MEXICO,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Santa Fe, NM, May 22, 2003.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
U.S. Senator, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: I am writing regarding S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act that reauthorizes the Federal Aviation Administration. Although several aspects of this reauthorization bill are to be commended, I am opposed to one specific provision, which calls for a 10 percent cost-sharing requirement for selected Essential Air Service (EAS) communities. This provision has the potential to affect the economic welfare of small communities in over 35 states—particularly those in New Mexico.

During my tenure in Congress I understood the importance, which the EAS program played within our small communities by preserving the scheduled air service and ensuring that these communities would retain a link to the national air transportation system. As Governor, I recognize the economic benefits associated with this program, which is integral to the economic development of our small rural communities.

The language calling for the Secretary to arbitrarily select 10 EAS communities that are within 100 miles of a hub airport and requiring them to pay a 10 percent cost share for a three year period is not only unfair but unpractical given the current economic conditions in states and within the airline industry. It is my hope that you will work with your colleagues in the Senate to amend this language, which only serves to impose new costs on EAS communities.

Last March, I announced the formation of a task force to improve and increase intrastate air service, and air cargo activity in New Mexico. Air service to and within New Mexico is vital to strengthening our economy and those of our communities. Your leadership and support for the EAS program as well as the Small Community Air Service Development Program will go along way to improving and increasing air service in New Mexico.

Sincerely,

BILL RICHARDSON,
Governor.

NEW MEXICO AVIATION DIVISION,
Santa Fe, NM, May 8, 2003.

Re essential air service rule changes.

Senator JEFF BINGAMAN,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: I am writing to express my opposition to proposed Essential Air Service (EAS) rule changes (Section 353) of Senate Bill 824, the FAA Reauthorization legislation. While this bill does have many favorable aspects, Section 353 contains major program funding changes. As written, affected EAS pilot program communities would be required to assume ten percent (10%) of their subsidy costs for a three year period. This could very easily cost a community $80,000—$90,000 per year! If approved, this significant additional financial burden would have profound negative impacts on both current air service and economic development efforts in several of our cities (Alamogordo and Hobbs) that would be affected. Any changes to current EAS funding could very well jeopardize existing air service in our state.

The timing of this change could not have come at a worst time for us. Just recently, Governor Bill Richardson established a high level task force (three Cabinet Secretaries) to determine ways to improve intra-state air service for New Mexicans. I am concerned that the basic foundation of the EAS program, as we know it, could be further weakened by these types of rule changes, and in turn defeat our Governor's initiative.

I am well aware of the need to adjust the current EAS program but firmly believe that both the states and communities participating in the program should have an input to the reconstruction process.

I am respectfully requesting your assistance in removing the EAS Local Program cost sharing provisions from Senate Bill 824.

Sincerely,

JOHN D. "MIKE" RICE,
Director,
New Mexico Aviation Division.

CITY OF ALAMOGORDO,
Alamogordo, NM, May 15, 2003.

Re essential air service rule changes.

Senator JEFF BINGAMAN,
Hart Senate Office,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: On behalf of the City of Alamogordo, I am writing to express my concerns and opposition to the proposed Essential Air Service (EAS) rule changes (Section 353) of Senate Bill 824, the FAA Reauthorization Legislation. Although this bill has many favorable aspects, the program funding changes are not an alternative for the City of Alamogordo and the surrounding communities the airport serves. In pertinent part, Section 353(4)(A) would require the City of Alamogordo to assume ten percent (10%) of the subsidy cost or approximately Eight-Five Thousand Dollars ($85,000) annually for the next three (3) years.

This change could not have come at a more inappropriate time for the City. With City revenues declining from a depressed economy, and capital desperately needed to repair Alamogordo's water problems, it is improbable funding will be available to locally subsidize air service. The airport relies solely on City revenue to operate since eighty-eight percent (88%) of Otero County land is Federally and Tribally owned and generates no revenue for the City. However, we have taken measures which we believe will ultimately permit air service in Alamogordo to be a stand alone enterprise. As you know, Alamogordo was the first EAS community nationwide to request smaller commercial aircraft in an effort to stabilize federal subsidy and ticket costs. Additionally, our air carrier, Rio Grande Air, reduced fares by sixty percent (60%) last month in an effort to increase enplanements at the airport. We have noted a marked increase in ridership since implementation of this low fare. If the EAS rule changes are passed as proposed, the City of Alamogordo may be forced to discontinue commercial air service and thus, sacrifice all Airport Improvement Program (AIP) entitlement/grant funds.

Otero County is below the State average for median income. The County has no passenger train service and is not located near a freeway making the airport and air service a vital link to the national transportation system.

I am respectfully requesting your assistance in removing the EAS local program cost sharing provisions from Senate Bill 824.

Sincerely,

DONALD CARROLL,
Mayor of Alamogordo.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF DEVELOPMENT ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, DC, June 12, 2003.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
U.S. Senate, Senate Hart Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: On behalf of the National Association of Development Organizations (NADO), I am writing to express our strong support for your amendment to preserve rural air service as part of the FAA reauthorization bill (S. 824).

The national transportation network functions properly when it helps form vital social and economic connections. This is especially true in small metropolitan and rural America where distance and a scattered population make these connections even more important. The national aviation system is essential not only for linking people to jobs, health care and family in a way that enhances their quality of life, but also for contributing to regional economic growth and development by linking business to customers, goods to markets and tourists to destinations.

Within the transportation system, the aviation network plays an enormous role in transporting goods and people. In 2001, 542 million people flew domestically and another 52 million flew internationally on US carriers, according to the US Department of Transportation. Unfortunately, since the deregulation of the aviation industry in the late 1970s the availability of affordable and reliable air service in most rural and small metropolitan areas has dramatically declined.

During these challenging economic times, Congress should be working to improve and enhance air service to rural and underserved communities, instead of adding new requirements that would further isolate hundreds of our nation's smaller communities. While the Essential Air Service (EAS) program is small by Washington standards, we believe it offers vital resources for linking rural communities to the national and global aviation systems. By adopting your amendment, the US Senate would be reinforcing its support of maintaining affordable, reliable and safe air service to rural America.

Thank you for your leadership on this important issue.

Sincerely,

ALICEANN WOHLBRUCK,
Executive Director.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Bingaman-Inhofe amendment to strike language requiring certain communities enrolled in the Essential Air Service to provide a local cost-share.

We are asking our towns and communities, our local governments, hardest hit by difficult economic times to suddenly find thousands of dollars in their already overstretched budgets to replace a significant source of Federal funding, for a critical economic function.

In this time of economic uncertainty, rural communities are struggling to maintain their daily ways of life. With an added burden placed upon them, survival and the opportunity for further rural development will be nearly impossible.

Local airports and the commercial air service they provide are extremely important to small towns, and a strong component of a State's economy. By enacting a cost-share provision, we run the risk of losing these airports, and cutting off a vital economic lifeline to rural America.

In my State, airports in Jonesboro, Hot Springs, and Harrison provide affordable and reliable service to over 10,000 customers a year. The EAS funding they receive is a sound investment in our State's transportation network. Cost share provisions, however, could put those airports out of business.

We are already putting enough strain on our small towns and local governments. We do not need to add to that by eliminating a vital source of funding for a vital function. This amendment would prevent that from happening, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 906) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 903

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I rise today, along with Senator BOXER, to offer the Arming Cargo Pilots Against Terrorism Act as an amendment to this bill. This amendment closes a loophole to better protect our homeland against terrorists. As a result of the airplane hijackings on September 11, 2001, Congress took the appropriate action to prevent the use of airliners being used as missiles. Last year, large majorities of the Senate and House of Representatives voted to arm both cargo and passenger pilots who voluntarily went for stringent training as part of a program of homeland security which was in the Homeland Security bill. Arming these pilots served to protect the pilots and crew, passengers, and those on the ground from ever being victims of another airline hijacking. It was the right thing to do.

However, during conference of the Homeland Security bill, the cargo pilots were yanked out of the bill. This amendment will return them and close the loophole created when they were left out last year.

This provision enjoys broad support and has already passed the Senate as part of the Air Cargo Security Act earlier this year.

Obviously, I would not be offering it had not the bill gotten tied up in conference and we need another vehicle to get it back to the House, so that is the reason we are offering it on this bill.

Not too many people realize that cargo space is usually not secured as well as passenger space. There are no air marshals, there are no passengers to help protect against terrorists, and there are sometimes invasions of privacy on these planes. In fact, someone from North Dakota actually broke the security and entered an aircraft. Thank God she was found out before the aircraft took off.

We would like this to be added to this bill so we can get it back to the House and a new conference. The whole area of cargo aircraft is not secured by the TSA and many other people who secure passenger terminals or commercial flights. I hope we can agree and get this bill over to the House.

I hope the rest of my colleagues here in the Senate will support this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask for a voice vote.

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield for a question? Isn't it the case the Senator has added language that indicates that nonlethal weapons——

Mr. BUNNING. Nonlethal weapons, and totally voluntary.

Mr. MCCAIN. I support the amendment.

Mr. BUNNING. They are called Tasers.

Mr. BOXER. Mr. President, this amendment is to close a loophole in the Federal Flight Deck Officer program.

Last year, in response to the September 11 attacks, I worked along with our former colleague Senator Bob Smith to pass the Arming Pilots Against Terrorism and Cabin Defense Act, which allowed passenger and cargo pilots who volunteer and receive special training to have guns in the cockpit as a last line of defense.

The bill passed the Senate 87–6 as an amendment to the Homeland Security bill.

Unfortunately, during the Homeland Security conference, cargo pilots were left out of the program.

This amendment will close this dangerous loophole in the law and add an important new layer to our homeland security by allowing cargo pilots to participate in the Federal Flight Deck Officer program.

With less security than passenger aircraft, cargo planes are tempting targets for terrorists. These planes do not have strengthened cockpit doors, Federal Air Marshals, trained cabin crew, or alert passengers on board.

Cargo planes are usually more vulnerable on the tarmac than passenger aircraft. Most cargo planes are parked in remote areas with relatively easy access; many operate at airfields that do not have the same level of security as passenger airports.

Late last year in Fargo, ND, a mentally unbalanced woman walked across a runway, boarded a cargo aircraft, entered the cockpit, and asked the crew to fly her to California.

Just think what a terrorist could do. A terrorist could hijack a cargo plane and fly it into a building, nuclear power plant, or other target on the ground.

Cargo pilots must be given a last line of defense to keep terrorists from gaining control of their aircraft.

We need to close this gap in our homeland security.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BUNNING] for himself and Mrs. BOXER, proposes an amendment numbered 903.

The amendment is as follows.

(Purpose: To amend title 49, United States Code, to allow the arming of pilots of cargo aircraft)

At the appropriate place insert the following new section:

SEC. ___. ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the ''Arming Cargo Pilots Against Terrorism Act''.

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) During the 107th Congress, both the Senate and the House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed measures that would have armed pilots of cargo aircraft.

(2) Cargo aircraft do not have Federal air marshals, trained cabin crew, or determined passengers to subdue terrorists.

(3) Cockpit doors on cargo aircraft, if present at all, largely do not meet the security standards required for commercial passenger aircraft.

(4) Cargo aircraft vary in size and many are larger and carry larger amounts of fuel than the aircraft hijacked on September 11, 2001.

(5) Aircraft cargo frequently contains hazardous material and can contain deadly biological and chemical agents and quantities of agents that cause communicable diseases.

(6) Approximately 12,000 of the nation's 90,000 commercial pilots serve as pilots and flight engineers on cargo aircraft.

(7) There are approximately 2,000 cargo flights per day in the United States, many of which are loaded with fuel for outbound international travel or are inbound from foreign airports not secured by the Transportation Security Administration.

(8) Aircraft transporting cargo pose a serious risk as potential terrorist targets that could be used as weapons of mass destruction.

(9) Pilots of cargo aircraft deserve the same ability to protect themselves and the aircraft they pilot as other commercial airline pilots.

(10) Permitting pilots of cargo aircraft to carry firearms creates an important last line of defense against a terrorist effort to commandeer a cargo aircraft.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that members of a flight deck crew of a cargo aircraft should be armed with a firearm and taser to defend the cargo aircraft against an attack by terrorists that could result in the use of the aircraft as a weapon of mass destruction or for other terrorist purposes.

(d) ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM.—Section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking ''passenger'' each place that it appears; and

(2) in subsection (k)—

(A) in paragraph (2)—

(i) by striking ''or,'' and all that follows; and

(ii) by inserting ''or any other flight deck crew member.''; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(3) ALL-CARGO AIR TRANSPORTATION.—For the purposes of this section, the term air transportation includes all-cargo air transportation.''.

(e) TIME FOR IMPLEMENTATION.—The training of pilots as Federal flight deck officers required in the amendments made by subsection (d) shall begin as soon as practicable and no later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.—The requirements of subsection (e) shall have no effect on the deadlines for implementation contained in section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 903) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LOTT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Is my amendment the amendment pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not pending but it is in order.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask it be considered at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct, the amendment is now pending.

AMENDMENT NO. 890

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I visited with my colleagues Senator LOTT and Senator MCCAIN on this amendment. I believe they are prepared to accept it. This deals with the creation of an aviation security capital fund. Many of us know both revenues and passenger boardings are down in airports. We have gone through a pretty difficult time. The creation of this aviation security capital fund is very important in order for these funds to be invested in what that will make aviation safer and deal with the security issues we intend to have dealt with with this fund.

I think it appropriate at this point to waive the local match, State and local match, which I believe in most cases cannot be raised because of the circumstances I mentioned earlier.

I believe accepting this amendment will give us the assurance that this investment in security will be made across this country. It will be a wise investment. I think it ought not be borne by the carriers at this point, nor the local airports that can least afford it.

I appreciate very much the fact this will now be accepted by the Senate. I want to especially say thanks to the Senator from Mississippi. We have talked about this, I suppose, 10 times in recent days. He is a tireless advocate for what makes sense for our aviation system in this country. Of course, he is chairing the subcommittee here in the Senate on those issues.

I thank him for his cooperation in allowing us to move forward with this amendment at this stage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Has Senator DORGAN completed his remarks?

Mr. DORGAN. I have.

Mr. LOTT. I think the order was for Senator INHOFE to be next, but since he is not here, I ask unanimous consent I be permitted to speak at this time, despite the previous agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, certainly I always enjoy working with Senator DORGAN on these issues. I think he has a legitimate point.

He does note that we need a fund to make sure these security fees go for the purpose they were intended. But he does think, at least in this instance because of the security aspect, we should waive the local requirement.

It should also be noted that, in fact, local communities, particularly with bigger airports, are probably not going to get or could not get a cost share, and, even if they did in some ways, it would be passed on to the airlines, therefore undermining a lot of what we are trying to do now.

We are trying to get the priorities set where the people who are getting certain parts of the security should be the ones who pay for it, and we shouldn't always try to find a way to pass it off to the airlines. Sometimes it is a Federal responsibility. In other instances, other people—I think also local governments—should have some part of this pie. But we agreed for a variety of reasons to accept Senator DORGAN's amendment.

But I want colleagues to know and the American people to know the Bingaman amendment does the same thing but in a different category. I think, in fact, it is even worse. In the essential air service area, where special help goes to small airports and a lot of rural airports—that affects airports in West Virginia, North Dakota, and probably in my State of Mississippi—with this additional Federal assistance to keep airports functioning, there would be some small local match. The administration recommended, by the way, that we eliminate the EAS problem; or, if we had EAS, you have the local match required for all of the airports.

The language in the bill specifies that there would be 10 airports where we would have this local match to see how it would work, and if it would work.

We now are agreeing to accept the Bingaman amendment because right now, I think out of concern for local communities and trying to have this essential air service, the amendment would probably pass.

But I want to say, again, I think for us to set the precedent and require not even a dollar from local communities when they are getting additional security, particularly where they are getting essential air service which is vital to their communities and which is important from an economic standpoint for the local cities and counties to put up no money—and in the case of the Dorgan amendment—at least in the bigger airports, it could create definite problems in terms of costs being passed on to the airlines. In this case, it is just a question of these local communities not wanting to have to share at all.

I think we should continue to look at some small amount—10 percent or 5 percent, some amount of local share.

But for now, we will accept it. We will continue to work on these issues. It is important for us to get this important legislation completed so that the airlines, the airports, general aviation, and the American people will know what they can count on in terms of the Federal Aviation Administration and their programs over the next 3 years. I thank my colleagues for allowing me to interject my remarks at this point.

I believe Senator INHOFE is next in order to speak.

I yield the floor, unless Senator DORGAN would like me to yield to him. Does he want to get action on his amendment?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator to yield for a moment.

I think there is great merit in local matching, by and large, because you need local support. We ought not just create pools of money here in the Congress to send out around the country unless there is evidence of local support.

The Senator from Mississippi made the point, and I think it is an important point.

First, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the American Association of Airport Executives, and a letter from the Air Transport Association be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. BYRON L. DORGAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DORGAN: We are writing to express our support for an amendment that you may offer to S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act, that will help airports in North Dakota and throughout the country pay for their increased capital security costs.

As you know, S. 824 would establish an aviation security capital fund to pay for installation of Explosive Detection Systems (EDS) and other capital security costs at airports. Specifically, the bill calls for $500 million every year between 2004 and 2007 to pay for the security capital costs. The funds would be derived from revenue generated by the $2.50 passenger security fee.

Airports Council International-North America and The American Association of Airport Executives strongly support the creation of an aviation security capital fund. Without a separate source of funds to pay for capacity security projects, airports will be forced to continue to divert their Airport Improvement Program funds, which they traditionally use for much-needed safety and capacity projects.

The Senate proposal calls for large- and medium-hub airports to pay a 25 percent match, and smaller airports to pay a 10 percent match. While we are grateful that S. 824 would create the aviation security capital fund, we strongly support your proposal to eliminate the matching requirement. Installing explosive detection machines is a federal national security mandate, and we think the federal government should reimburse airports for those and other new security costs.

Airports like others in the aviation industry have been struggling since September 11. It would be difficult for airports to cover the proposed match at a time when their revenues and passenger boarding are down, and their costs have skyrocketed due to a host of unfunded federal security mandates. Again, we strongly believe that airports should not be forced to divert critical safety and capacity funds to pay for security.

Moreover, airports are reluctant to pass additional costs on to airport users including airlines that are facing their own financial challenges. Since September 11, airports around the country have been taking numerous steps to reduce costs in an effort to pass those savings on to the airlines. Eliminating the matching requirement is just one more way that airports can help their partners in the aviation industry.

Thank for your leadership on this and other aviation issues.

Sincerely,

DAVID Z. PLAVIN,
President, ACI–NA.
CHARLES BARCLAY,
President, AAAE.

Hon. BYRON DORGAN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DORGAN: On behalf of ATA member airlines, I am writing in support of your efforts to remove the ''local match'' requirement in the Security Capital Fund found in the Senate FAA reauthorization bill. Your amendment will ensure that airport security projects will not be subject to an unworkable funding scheme.

As you are aware, the Aviation and Transportation Security Act of 2001 imposed sweeping security mandates on the airlines and airports, many of which were unfunded. Today, in this constrained, unsettled financial environment, our members continue to incur substantial costs to meet these mandates. While the airlines have been and will continue to fully support efforts by the U.S. Government, particularly the Transportation Security Administration, to assume primary responsibility for aviation security, the airlines simply cannot continue to absorb additional costs. Sufficient federal funding for mandated airport security projects, such as installation of Explosive Detection Systems and additional law enforcement personnel makes common sense and is absolutely critical.

If, as is provided in the current bill, local airports must provide 25% matching funds at large and medium hub airports and 10% matching at smaller airports, the airports (also experiencing declining reserves) will have no option other than to pass through these costs to the airlines. On top of existing security costs, airlines will see significant increases in airport rates and charges, as well as other airport costs, to fund these mandatory contributions. Although the airlines, of course, support security enhancements, the industry can ill afford hundreds of millions of dollars in additional unfunded mandates as the aviation system struggles to survive economically.

Thank you for your efforts on this critical issue. I look forward to working with you as we work to maintain a viable, safe, and efficient air transportation system.

Sincerely,

JAMES C. MAY.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the American Association of Airport Executives and the Air Transport Association, and others, have told us it is unlikely we would see the security investment—after all, this is national security—we would not see the security investment in airport improvement and safety with this money if we did not waive the local match.

I continue to believe we ought to make this habit forming. The value expressed by the Senator from Mississippi is on the mark in many cases. I appreciate very much the ability to work this out and be able to move this amendment. If appropriate, I think it has been agreed to by both sides. I ask if we can have the amendment considered at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? Without objection, the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment (No. 890) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

AMENDMENT NOS. 894 AND 895 EN BLOC

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I have two technical amendments. They have been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE] proposes amendments numbered 894 and 895 en bloc.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments en bloc are as follows:

(Purpose: To amend the provisions dealing with security measures for general aviation and air charters)

At the end of title IV, add the following:

SEC. 405. GENERAL AVIATION AND AIR CHARTERS.

Section 132(a) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (49 U.S.C. 44944 note) is amended by striking ''12,500 pounds or more'' and inserting ''more than 12,500 pounds''.

(Purpose: To establish reporting requirements with respect to the Air Defense Identification Zone)

At the end of title IV, add the following:

SEC. 405. AIR DEFENSE IDENTIFICATION ZONE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration establishes an Air Defense Identification Zone (in this section referred as an ''ADIZ''), the Administrator shall, not later than 60 days after the date of establishing the ADIZ, transmit to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, a report containing an explanation of the need for the ADIZ. The Administrator shall provide the Committees an updated report every 60 days until the establishment of the ADIZ is rescinded. The reports and updates shall be transmitted in classified form.

(b) EXISTING ADIZ.—If an ADIZ is in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall transmit an initial report under subsection (a) to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—If a report required under subsection (a) or (b) indicates that the ADIZ is to be continued, the Administrator shall outline changes in procedures and requirements to improve operational efficiency and minimize the operational impacts of the ADIZ on pilots and air traffic controllers.

(d) DEFINITION.—In this section, the terms ''Air Defense Identification Zone'' and ''ADIZ'' mean a zone established by the Administrator with respect to airspace under 18,000 feet in approximately a 15 to 38 mile radius around Washington, District of Columbia, for which security measures are extended beyond the existing 15-mile-no-fly zone around Washington and in which general aviation aircraft are required to adhere to certain procedures issued by the Administrator.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, we have considered these amendments and we find no problem with them at this point. They have been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on amendments? If not, without objection, the amendments are agreed to en bloc.

The amendments (Nos. 894 and 895) were agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 908

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the distinguished chairman, Senator MCCAIN, and myself have four amendments that we will send to the desk in due time. One is a Wyden amendment which is a privacy study of the CAPP Program, Computer Assisted Passenger Prescreening.

I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. WYDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 908.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require the Secretary of Homeland Security to report to the Congress in writing on the impact of the Computer Assisted Passenger Prescreening System, proposed to be implemented by the Transportation Security Administration, on the privacy and civil liberties of United States citizens)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . REPORT ON PASSENGER PRESCREENING PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Homeland Security, after consultation with the Attorney General, shall submit a report in writing to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the potential impact of the Transportation Security Administration's proposed Computer Assisted Passenger Prescreening system, commonly known as CAPPS II, on the privacy and civil liberties of United States Citizens.

(b) SPECIFIC ISSUES TO BE ADDRESSED.—The report shall address the following:

(1) Whether and for what period of time data gathered on individual travelers will be retained, who will have access to such data, and who will make decisions concerning access to such data.

(2) How the Transportation Security Administration will treat the scores assigned to individual travelers to measure the likelihood they may pose a security threat, including how long such scores will be retained and whether and under what circumstances they may be shared with other governmental, non-governmental, or commercial entities.

(3) The role airlines and outside vendors or contractors will have in implementing and operating the system, and to what extent will they have access, or the means to obtain access, to data, scores, or other information generated by the system.

(4) The safeguards that will be implemented to ensure that data, scores, or other information generated by the system will be used only as officially intended.

(5) The procedures that will be implemented to mitigate the effect of any errors, and what procedural recourse will be available to passengers who believe the system has wrongly barred them from taking flights.

(6) The oversight procedures that will be implemented to ensure that, on an ongoing basis, privacy and civil liberties issues will continue to be considered and addressed with high priority as the system is installed, operated and updated.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, are we going to dispose of that amendment now?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, we are going to go ahead and vote on it.

Mr. LOTT. It has been cleared. It may save some time if we could go ahead and agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 908) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 909

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I also have another amendment by the distinguished Senator from Florida, Mr. NELSON, which deals with the background checks of new pilots on the smaller planes.

Mr. LOTT. Has this been approved on both sides?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, it has been approved.

I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. NELSON of Florida, proposes an amendment numbered 909.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To modify requirements regarding training to operate aircraft)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . MODIFICATION OF REQUIREMENTS REGARDING TRAINING TO OPERATE AIRCRAFT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 44939 of title 49, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''§ 44939. Training to operate certain aircraft

''(a) IN GENERAL.—

''(1) WAITING PERIOD.—A person subject to regulation under this part may provide training in the United States in the operation of an aircraft to an individual who is an alien (as defined in section 101(a)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(3))) or to any other individual specified by the Under Secretary of Homeland Security for Border and Transportation Security only if—that permits the person to fly an aircraft with a maximum certificated takeoff weight of more than 12,500 pounds as defined by the International Civil Aviation organization in Annex 1 to the Convention on International Civil Aviation, if the person providing the training has notified the Under Secretary that the individual has requested such training and furnished the Under Secretary with that individual's visa information.

''(B) EXCEPTION.—Subparagraph (A) does not apply to an alien individual whose airman's certificate has been suspended or revoked under procedures established by the Under Secretary.

The Attorney General and the Secretary of State shall cooperate with the Under Secretary in carrying out this paragraph.

(3) USE OF UNITED STATES FACILITIES.—If the Under Secretary requires fingerprinting in the administration of section 44939 of title 49, United States Code, the Under Secretary may designate locations within the United States that will provide fingerprinting services to individuals covered by that section.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) takes effect on the effective date of the interim final rule required by subsection (b)(1).

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Homeland Security shall submit to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure a report on the effectiveness of the activities carried out under section 44939 of title 49, United States Code, in reducing risks to aviation security and national security.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment that will close a serious loophole regarding foreign flight student training that was created in the Aviation Security Act of 2001. This amendment has passed the Senate twice on other bills since I first introduced it in the 107th Congress.

This amendment is another important step toward fully protecting the United States and all Americans from terrorists who intend to use our aviation system to commit future attacks.

We must continue to be vigilant in protecting our Nation. This amendment addresses a deep concern regarding foreign citizens coming to the United States to receive pilot training on all sizes of aircraft. This concern clearly is shared by the administration. In fact, the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, released an advisory on May 1, 2003 titled ''The Continuing Threat to Aviation'' citing that al-Qaida operatives may ''attempt to use charter or general aviation aircraft to conduct future attacks because of their availability, less stringent protective measures, and destructive potential.'' The advisory continued on to say that ''[c]harter aircraft also may be attractive because terrorists may only need an established line of credit to gain access to an aircraft and because some agencies allow the use of customer pilots.'' Finally, and of greatest concern, the DHS warns that ''[r]eliable information . . . indicated al-Qaida might use experienced non-Arab pilots to rent three to four light aircraft under the guise of flying lessons.'' This threat to our national security is real and cannot be understated. I ask unanimous consent that the Department of Homeland Security advisory be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY ADVISORY 03–019—SECURITY INFORMATION FOR GENERAL AVIATION PILOTS/AIRPORTS

This advisory was produced by the Department of Homeland Security based on information and analysis from the Terrorist Threat Integration Center received during the last 24 hours.

THE CONTINUING THREAT TO AVIATION

Al-Qaida has long considered attacking U.S. Homeland targets using light aircraft. Recent reliable reporting indicates that al-Qaida was in the late stages of planning an aerial suicide attack against the U.S. Consulate in Karachi. Operatives were planning to pack a small fixed-wing aircraft or helicopter with explosives and crash it into the consulate. This plot and a similar plot last year to fly a small explosive-laden aircraft into a U.S. warship in the Persian Gulf demonstrate al-Qaida's continued fixation with using explosive-laden small aircraft in attacks. General aviation aircraft that were loaded with explosives to enhance their destructive potential would make them the equivalent of a medium-sized truck bomb.

Al-Qaida may attempt to use charter or general aviation aircraft to conduct future attacks because of their availability, less stringent protective measures, and destructive potential. The group has a fair sized pilot cadre and the use of small aircraft requires far less skill and training than some larger aircraft.

Charter aircraft also may be attractive because terrorists may only need an established line of credit to gain access to an aircraft and because some agencies allow the use of customer pilots. Security procedures typically are not as rigorous as those for commercial airlines and terrorists would not have to control a large number of passengers.

Reliable information obtained last year indicated al-Qaida might use experienced non-Arab pilots to rent three or four light aircraft under the guise of flying lessons.

In consideration of the above information, the Department of Homeland Security asks members of the General Aviation community to report all unusual and suspicious activities. If your observe persons, aircraft, and operations that do not fit the customary pattern at your airport, you should immediately advise law enforcement authorities.

Your immediate action is requested for these items:

Secure unattended aircraft to prevent unauthorized use.

Verify the identification of crew and passengers prior to departure.

Verify that baggage and cargo are known to the persons on board.

Where identification systems are in place, ensure employees wear proper identification and challenge persons not doing so.

Increased vigilance should be directed toward the following:

Unknown pilots and/or clients for aircraft or helicopter rentals or charters.

Unknown service/delivery personnel.

Aircraft with unusual or unauthorized modifications.

Persons loitering in the vicinity of aircraft or air operations areas.

Persons who appear to be under stress or the control of other persons.

Persons whose identification appears altered or inconsistent.

Persons loading unusual or unauthorized payload onto aircraft.

NOTE: All charter operators subjected to the 12–5 rule, Standard Security Program and the Private Charter Security Program, are reminded to ensure compliance with these security requirements.

Persons should immediately report such activity to local law enforcement and the TSA General Aviation Hotline at 866–GASECUR (866–427–3287).

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Unfortunately, we all have seen what can happen when people come to our country with the specific intent to do us great harm. It has become painfully clear that many of the September 11 hijackers learned to fly the planes they used as deadly weapons at flight schools here in the United States, some in my home State of Florida.

Section 113 of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act, which was enacted in the 107th Congress, requires background checks of all foreign flight school applicants seeking training to operate aircraft weighing 12,500 pounds or more. While this provision should help prevent September 11 style attacks by U.S. trained pilots using hijacked jets in the future, it does nothing to prevent different types of potential attacks against our domestic security. To rectify this problem, I introduced S. 236 together with Senators CORZINE, ENZI, FEINSTEIN, and THOMAS earlier this year.

Small aircraft can be used by terrorists to attack nuclear facilities, carry explosives, or deliver biological or chemical agents. For example, if a crop duster filled with a combination of fertilizers and explosives were crashed into a filled sporting event stadium thousands of people could be seriously injured or killed. We cannot allow this to happen. We need to ensure that we are not training terrorists to perform these activities. We cannot allow critical warnings to go unheeded.

This bill will close an important loophole and answer these critical warnings by extending the background check requirement to all foreign applicants to U.S. flight schools, regardless of the size aircraft they seek to learn to fly. It also transfers the entire security background check program from the Department of Justice to the Department of Homeland Security, specifically to the Transportation Security Administration. It is my expectation that the Transportation Security Administration, which provided excellent advice in the fine tuning of this legislation, will apply a stringent level of background screening to all foreign nationals who seek flight training here in the United States. We cannot allow anyone to slip through the cracks. We cannot aid anyone who intends to do harm to Americans and to our Nation.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 909) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 910

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, Mr. JEFFORDS, this amendment takes care of the EAS eligibility up in Vermont.

This has been checked through.

I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. JEFFORDS, proposes an amendment numbered 910.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide a 1 year extension of essential air service to an airport whose eligibility was terminated due to the impact of decreased air travel)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . 1-YEAR EXTENSION OF EAS ELIGIBILITY FOR COMMUNITIES TERMINATED IN 2003 DUE TO DECREASED AIR TRAVEL.

Notwithstanding the rate of subsidy limitation in section 332 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2000, the Secretary of Transportation may not terminate an essential air service subsidy provided under chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, before the end of calendar year 2004 for air service to a community—

(1) whose calendar year ridership for 2000 was sufficient to keep the per passenger subsidy below that limitation; and

(2) that has received notice that its subsidy will be terminated during calendar year 2003 because decreased ridership has caused the subsidy to exceed that limitation.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, let me check with my distinguished colleague from Mississippi. This is a Jeffords amendment.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I wanted to make sure I understood what this amendment is. I had not had a chance to look at it. It is not specific to a particular airport or a particular State.

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is correct.

Mr. LOTT. It does change the formula on how these funds will be spent. Is that correct?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Eligibility; that is right.

Mr. LOTT. We have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 910) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 911

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Indiana, Mr. BAYH, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. BAYH and Mr. LUGAR, proposes an amendment numbered 911.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To expand aviation capacity and alleviate congestion in the greater Chicago metropolitan area)

At the end of title II, add the following:

SEC. 217. GARY/CHICAGO AIRPORT FUNDING.

The Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall, for purposes of chapter 471 of title 49, United States Code, give priority consideration to a letter of intent application for funding submitted by the City of Gary, Indiana, or the State of Indiana, for the extension of the main runway at the Gary/Chicago Airport. The letter of intent application shall be considered upon completion of the environmental impact statement and benefit cost analysis in accordance with Federal Aviation Administration requirements. The Administrator shall consider the letter of intent application not later than 90 days after receiving it from the applicant.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Arizona approve of the amendment?

Mr. MCCAIN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 911) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 912

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. DODD, I send an amendment to the desk on the study of the shuttle services at Reagan National Airport. It merely requires a study with respect to housing of gates used by the shuttle services, and as to whether or not that is feasible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. DODD, proposes an amendment numbered 912.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require a study on the housing of the gates used by shuttle services within the same terminal at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport)

At the appropriate place insert the following:

SEC—. LOCATION OF SHUTTLE SERVICE AT RONALD REAGAN WASHINGTON NATIONAL AIRPORT.

The Airports Authority (as defined in section 49103(1)) of title 49, United States Code) shall in conjunction with the Department of Transportation conduct a study on the feasibility of housing the gates used by all air carriers providing shuttle service from Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport in the same terminal.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, if there is no further debate——

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, it is my understanding the Dodd amendment studies the situation at National Airport where there is some distance between both airlines that conduct shuttles along the east coast.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Right.

Mr. MCCAIN. I can see why Senator DODD might want that looked at as he grows older, shuttling himself back and forth from one end of Reagan National Airport to the other, which is a bit of a trial. And I certainly am in support, having undergone that unique experience.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Particularly becoming a recent father, he is wearing down.

Mr. MCCAIN. That is right. Having to carry a small child with him has become a bit of a burden. So on behalf of Senator DODD, and all of us who are aging, I ask that this amendment, which asks the airlines to take a look at the possibility of making these shuttles closer together, be adopted. I think it is appropriate and I support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If there is no further debate, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 912) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, it is my understanding we have a number of additional amendments which have been agreed to but have not been presented at this time. If the staffs of the Members who have these amendments we have discussed and have agreed to—one is a Nelson amendment. That has already been accepted. One is a Feinstein amendment. We are in agreement with it, but it has not been formally offered. One is a Specter amendment that we are considering now, a Burns amendment concerning general aviation, a Murkowski amendment concerning decision on a tower. We would like to consider those amendments as soon as possible, if the sponsors of those amendments would come here, while we are preparing to debate a Specter amendment at this time.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 913

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have an amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. THOMAS] proposes an amendment numbered 913.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To permit Jackson Hole Airport to adopt certain noise reduction measures)

At the end of title V, add the following new section:

SEC. 521. EXEMPTION FOR JACKSON HOLE AIRPORT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding chapter 475 of title 49, United States Code, or any other provision of law, if the Board of the Jackson Hole Airport in Wyoming and the Secretary of the Interior agree that Stage 3 aircraft technology represents a prudent and feasible technological advance which, if implemented at the Jackson Hole Airport, will result in a reduction in noise at Grand Teton National Park—

(1) the Jackson Hole Airport may impose restrictions on, or prohibit, the operation of Stage 2 aircraft weighing less than 75,000 pounds, with reasonable exemptions for public health and safety;

(2) the notice, study, and comment provisions of subchapter II of chapter 475 of title 49, United States Code, and part 161 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, shall not apply to the imposition of the restrictions;

(3) the imposition of the restrictions shall not affect the Airport's eligibility to receive a grant under title 49, United States Code; and

(4) the restrictions shall not be deemed to be unreasonable, discriminatory, a violation of the assurances required by section 47107(a) of title 49, United States Code, or an undue burden on interstate commerce.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms ''Stage 2 aircraft'' and ''Stage 3 aircraft'' have the same meaning as those terms have in chapter 475 of title 49, United States Code.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this is a very short, simple amendment. What it deals with is Teton National Park. I think it is probably the only park in the country that has in it a commercial airport.

Some years ago, the airport and the park agreed they could limit noise in the park. They had done so with commercial airlines, but they have not been able to do so with private jets. This would give them that authority.

It has been approved by the Park Service, by the Interior Department, and we would like very much to have the authority for them to be able to deal with the noncommercial jets and the noise they create in Teton National Park.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank Senator THOMAS for his sponsorship of this amendment. One of the greatest problems we have today in America is aircraft noise over national parks. We have been fighting it in the Grand Canyon, trying to balance the needs of commercial aircraft—not only those taking off and arriving but air tours—and that of preserving the incredible park experience.

I thank Senator THOMAS for his effort to try to bring about the restoration of that marvelous experience in one of our Nation's crown jewels.

I support the amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the Department of the Interior and the Park Service approved the amendment. We also support its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 913) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LOTT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 915

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] proposes an amendment numbered 915.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of Title V, add the following new section:

(g) MEASUREMENT OF HIGHWAY MILEAGE FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING ELIGIBILTY FOR ESSENTIAL AIR SERVICE SUBSIDIES.—

(1) DETERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY.—Subchapter II of Chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, (as amended by subsection (f) of this bill) is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 41746. Distance requirement applicable to eligibility for essential air service subsidies

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall not provide assistance under this subchapter with respect to a place in the 48 continguous States that—

''(1) is less than 70 highway miles from the nearest hub-airport; or

''(2) requires a rate of subsidy per passenger in excess of $200, unless such place is greater than 210 highway miles from the nearest hub airport.

''(b) DETERMINATION OF MILEAGE.—For purposes of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, the highway mileage between a place and the nearest hub airport is the highway mileage of the most commonly used route between the place and the hub airport. In identifying such route, the Secretary shall—

''(1) promulgate by regulation a standard for calculating the mileage between Lancaster, Pennsylvania and a hub airport, and

''(2) identify the most commonly used route for a community by—

''(A) consulting with the Governor of a State or the Governor's designee; and

''(B) considering the certification of the Governor of a State or the Governor's designee as to the most commonly used route.''.

''(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, (as amended by subsection (f) of this bill) is further amended by inserting after the item relating to section 41745 the following new item:

''41746. Distance requirement applicable to eligibility for essential air service subsidies.''.

(h) REPEAL.—The following provisions of law are repealed:

''(1) Section 332 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2000 (49 U.S.C. 41731 note).

(2) Section 205 of the Wendell H. Ford Aviation Investment and Reform Act for the 21st Century (49 U.S.C. 41731 note).

(3) Section 334 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999 (section 101(g) of division A of the Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1999) (Public Law 105–277; 112 Stat. 2681—471).

(i) SECRETARIAL REVIEW.—

(1) REQUEST FOR REVIEW.—Any community with respect to which the Secretary has, between September 30, 1993, and the date of the enactment of this Act, eliminated subsidies or terminated subsidy eligibility under section 332 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2000 (49 U.S.C. 41731 note), Section 205 of the Wendell H. Ford Aviation Investment and Reform Act for the 21st Century (49 U.S.C. 41731 note), or any prior law of similar effect, may request the Secretary to review such action.

(2) ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATION.—Not later than 60 days after receiving a request under subsection (i), the Secretary shall—

(A) determine whether the community would have been subject to such elimination of subsidies or termination of eligibility under the distance requirement enacted by the amendment made by subsection (g) of this bill to subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code; and

(B) issue a final order with respect to the eligibility of such community for essential air service subsidies under subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, as amended by this Act.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment is an accommodation and compromise worked out after discussion with the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee. I have already filed amendment No. 904, which is part of the record. This amendment goes to the issue of providing essential air services to Lancaster, Pennsylvania. The existing law provides that essential air services shall be provided if there is a distance of 70 miles or more to the hub of a major airport.

Lancaster is 66 miles from the Philadelphia International Airport, if you travel along Route 30, which is the old Lincoln Highway, where there is a traffic light every other block with the most extraordinary congestion. Nobody who travels from Lancaster to the Philadelphia Airport takes congested Route 30. The commonly used route is to take 222 to the turnpike and then to the Schuylkill Expressway, and that is a distance of some 80 miles. So the route that any rational person would use would be the 80-mile route, not the 66-mile route.

We have worked with the Department of Transportation for several years in trying to work out this arrangement, but they have refused to listen to reason. The City of Lancaster took an expensive appeal to the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, and the Court felt bound to honor the discretion of the Secretary of Transportation, even though the discretion was very unwisely used. The Court found itself constrained to let the Secretary determine it.

The amendment I had intended to offer, which has been denominated as 904, provides that the determination of the appropriate mileage would be determined by the Governor or by the Metropolitan Planning Organization. A concern was expressed as to that—to have the State make a determination as to what would be done with the Federal expenditure of funds. Well, that is not all the time, but I am not going to belabor that argument because we have an accommodation.

Mr. LOTT. Will the Senator yield to me at this point?

Mr. SPECTER. Yes.

Mr. LOTT. I note that I have looked at this situation and I am going to support what this amendment is trying to do. I think, in this case, this area he is referring to has been disadvantaged. We do not want to and do not intend to start down the line of making an exception here and there. This is a case where, clearly, you have been disadvantaged by the way it has been interpreted.

I appreciate the Senator being willing to work out a fair solution.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania. I did have the opportunity to meet with a group of his fellow citizens from Lancaster. They made a very compelling case on the burden they bear. I think this is a fair and equitable solution. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, to complete the discussion here regarding giving these essential air services to Lancaster, they had one small airline that serviced Lancaster. They withdrew because, in the absence of a modest subsidy, they could not serve Lancaster anymore. In an era when we are helping airlines with loan guarantees and bailouts and so many other provisions, this is really minimal.

This amendment, as provided, will take care of Lancaster. If I may say for the record—if I may have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the subcommittee, who will be principal conferee—this provision will be fought for in conference. In the House, the matter has been handled by Congressman JOE PITTS, a very able Congressman who represents the area including Lancaster. I am sure Congressman PITTS will be amenable to this amendment, which gives further assurance and protection to Lancaster, Pennsylvania. So it is in the context of this assurance of our tough position in conference, which ought to prevail, that I have agreed to this accommodation.

I thank the Senator from Mississippi and I thank the Senator from Arizona for working out this issue. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for supporting the amendment.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I associate myself with the last remarks of Senator HOLLINGS. Like the Senator from South Carolina, I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 915) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, our cloakroom has indicated that Senators have had an all-day-long notice that we are trying to complete this bill today. Statements have been made on the floor by the managers many times to that effect.

On the Democratic side, the only amendments we know of that people wish to offer are by Senators FEINSTEIN, INOUYE, HOLLINGS, and Senator ROCKEFELLER has an amendment. Other than those, we don't know of any other amendments on our side.

On the other side, I have been told there is a Burns amendment, a Murkowski amendment, and a Stevens amendment. Other than that, I don't know of any other amendments.

My point is, within a relatively short period of time, we will ask unanimous consent that these be the only amendments in order. If people are out there with amendments, they should come forward in the next couple of minutes.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, in about 10 minutes, if that is OK—that will give plenty of time for people who have additional amendments—I will propose that we have a unanimous consent that no further amendments be in order.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I supplement what the Senator from Nevada said. I have already given notice that I have another amendment. If I may inquire of the manager, the Senator from Arizona. I am prepared to proceed at this time with the amendment.

If I may have the attention of the Senator from Arizona, is it agreeable that I may call up my amendment?

Mr. MCCAIN. Yes.

AMENDMENT NO. 905

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 905, which has been filed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER], for himself, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. DAYTON, proposes an amendment numbered 905.

Mr. SPECTER. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide safety and security with respect to aviation repair stations)

At the end of title IV, add the following:

SEC. 405. FOREIGN REPAIR STATION SAFETY AND SECURITY.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term ''Administrator'' means the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration.

(2) DOMESTIC REPAIR STATION.—The term ''domestic repair station'' means a repair station or shop that—

(A) is described in section 44707(2) of title 49, United States Code; and

(B) is located in the United States.

(3) FOREIGN REPAIR STATION.—The term ''foreign repair station'' means a repair station or shop that—

(A) is described in section 44707(2) of title 49, United States Code; and

(B) is located outside of the United States.

(4) UNDER SECRETARY.—The term ''Under Secretary'' means the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security of the Department of Homeland Security.

(b) APPLICABILITY OF STANDARDS.—Within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall issue regulations to ensure that foreign repair stations meet the same level of safety required of domestic repair stations.

(c) SPECIFIC STANDARDS.—In carrying out subsection (b), the Administrator shall, at a minimum, specifically ensure that foreign repair stations, as a condition of being certified to work on United States registered aircraft—

(1) institute a program of drug and alcohol testing of its employees working on United States registered aircraft and that such a program provides an equivalent level of safety achieved by the drug and alcohol testing requirements that workers are subject to at domestic repair stations;

(2) agree to be subject to the same type and level of inspection by the Federal Aviation Administration as domestic repair stations and that such inspections occur without prior notice to the country in which the station is located; and

(3) follow the security procedures established under subsection (d).

(d) SECURITY AUDITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To ensure the security of maintenance and repair work conducted on United States aircraft and components at foreign repair stations, the Under Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator, shall complete a security review and audit of foreign repair stations certified by the Administrator under part 145 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations. The review shall be completed not later than 180 days after the date on which the Under Secretary issues regulations under paragraph (6).

(2) ADDRESSING SECURITY CONCERNS.—The Under Secretary shall require a foreign repair station to address the security issues and vulnerabilities identified in a security audit conducted under paragraph (1) within 90 days of providing notice to the repair station of the security issues and vulnerabilities identified.

(3) SUSPENSIONS AND REVOCATIONS OF CERTIFICATES.—

(A) FAILURE TO CARRY OUT EFFECTIVE SECURITY MEASURES.—If the Under Secretary determines as a result of a security audit that a foreign repair station does not maintain and carry out effective security measures or if a foreign repair station does not address the security issues and vulnerabilities as required under subsection (d)(2), the Under Secretary shall notify the Administrator of the determination. Upon receipt of the determination, the Administrator shall suspend the certification of the repair station until such time as the Under Secretary determines that the repair station maintains and carries out effective security measures and has addressed the security issues identified in the audit, and transmits the determination to the Administrator.

(B) IMMEDIATE SECURITY RISK.—If the Under Secretary determines that a foreign repair station poses an immediate security risk, the Under Secretary shall notify the Administrator of the determination. Upon receipt of the determination, the Administrator shall revoke the certification of the repair station.

(4) FAILURE TO MEET AUDIT DEADLINE.—If the security audits required by paragraph (1) are not completed on or before the date that is 180 days after the date on which the Under Secretary issues regulations under paragraph (6), the Administrator may not certify, or renew the certification of, any foreign repair station until such audits are completed.

(5) PRIORITY FOR AUDITS.—In conducting the audits described in paragraph (1), the Under Secretary and the Administrator shall give priority to foreign repair stations located in countries identified by the United States Government as posing the most significant security risks.

(6) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Under Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator, shall issue final regulations to ensure the security of foreign and domestic repair stations. If final regulations are not issued within 180 days of the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator may not certify, or renew the certification of, any foreign repair station until such regulations have been issued.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment on behalf of myself and Senators BOXER, DURBIN, and DAYTON. Senator INHOFE had indicated some support, but I think he has a little different approach, so I am going to proceed with it on this basis.

The amendment provides for foreign aircraft repair stations to be subject to the same provisions as domestic air stations.

What we have at the present time is a very different set of standards for foreign repair stations than are in effect for domestic stations. In foreign stations, for example, there need not be drug and alcohol testing. In foreign stations, there are not the kinds of requirements and regulations as to the maintenance for safety, and there are no requirements as to security.

I realize this kind of an amendment may result in some higher costs; however, I believe these costs are warranted in the interest of the traveling public so there is an adequate assurance of safety. If you do not have the kinds of requirements that are in effect by the FAA in the United States, then we do not have the maintenance of the same kind of safety standards.

With respect to foreign competition, I think it is a fair requirement to say that you are not requiring ''Buy American,'' but you are saying that the people in the United States who provide these services ought to have the same sort of security standards, the same sort of maintenance standards, and the same sort of drug testing or alcohol testing as in foreign standards. So this goes beyond the idea of protectionism. These requirements that are in effect in the United States are to provide for the safety of the traveling public. If it costs X dollars to provide for the safety of the traveling public, then I think that is what we ought to do, and that is the gravamen and the thrust behind this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

AMENDMENT NO. 914 TO AMENDMENT NO. 905

(Purpose: To require the Administrator of the FAA to conduct a study of safety standards at foreign repair stations)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I send a second-degree amendment to the desk and ask it be read in its entirety.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] proposes an amendment numbered 914 to amendment No. 905:

At the end of the amendment add the following:

( ) STUDY.—Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this section—

(1) the Administrator shall conduct a study of the need to establish a program to ensure that foreign repair stations meet the conditions and standards described in subsection (c);

(2) report the results of that study, together with the Administrator's recommendations and conclusions, to the Congress within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(3) the Administrator shall not issue regulations under subsection (h).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, let me explain why I offered this amendment. Senator SPECTER raises some very legitimate concerns, and we need to know what the situation is with regard to safety standards and the conditions of the workers in these foreign repair stations.

First, I was not aware of this amendment or the committee was not aware of this amendment until about an hour ago. We have not had a chance to find out more about what the ramifications are, the need for it, or what we need to do. We have had no hearings on this matter.

There is no question we need to make sure these foreign repair stations for airlines are good ones and the workers at these stations meet certain qualifications. They are doing good work basically.

I am offering this amendment on behalf of Senator INHOFE who has some experience in this area, has been to some of these foreign repair stations and has some concerns. Being a pilot himself, having served on the committee of jurisdiction in the House, this is something we would like to know his feelings about and make sure of what the situation is today.

He thought, though, we needed to look into it and understand what is happening. For instance, we may, by doing this, be imposing more requirements on these foreign repair stations that do not need certain laws or regulations in the various countries. We may be taking actions that would drive up costs. We may be taking actions that would have a dramatic impact on our own domestic airlines, which, by the way, some of the most profitable routes are overseas routes. This is a reason Northwest was Northwest Orient. There is no question American, Delta—the big airlines—do have very important overseas routes.

I would like to know if they think they are getting good service. What problems and what costs are going to be the result of this action?

That is what I say to Senator SPECTER. It is a legitimate concern. We may need to do something more in this area, but I would like to know what the ramifications are before we actually put this requirement in place.

This amendment, as I understand it and as it has been read, says the Administrator has to have a study of the need to establish this program to ensure that foreign repair stations meet the conditions of standards described in other sections of the law, that they report the results of that study, together with the Administrator's recommendations and conclusions, to the Congress within a specified period of time. This is not just an open-ended generic thing. That would also give us time on the committee to ask questions of all those impacted by the requirement.

I think this is a good solution to a problem we should not ignore, but before we act we need to know what the impact is going to be.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I strongly support the Specter amendment to S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act, that would address safety and security issues at foreign aircraft repair stations working on U.S. aircraft.

For a number of years, I have been working with the AFL–CIO's Transportation Trades Department and its mechanic unions—the International Association of Machinists, the Transport Workers Union, and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters—to close the safety loopholes that many foreign stations present.

I would like to submit for the RECORD a letter I received from these unions expressing their continued opposition to unsafe foreign stations.

I would also like to submit for the RECORD a letter recently sent from the AFL–CIO and its Transportation Trades Department to the Administration highlighting their concerns about the security at foreign stations.

As these letters clearly demonstrate, we have legitimate concerns with regard to the current rules governing certification and oversight of foreign stations. For these reasons, I am cosponsoring the Specter amendment and urge my colleagues to support it as well.

I ask unanimous consent that the aforementioned letters, dated April 10, 2003, and May 22, 2003, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS,
Washington, DC, April 10, 2003.

Hon. NORMAN Y. MINETA,
Secretary of Transportation, Washington, DC.

Hon. MARION BLAKEY,
Administrator, Federal Aviation Administration, Washington, DC.

Hon. JAMES M. LOY,
Under Secretary for Security, Transportation Security Administration, Arlington, VA.

DEAR SECRETARY MINETA, ADMINISTRATOR BLAKEY AND ADMIRAL LOY: On behalf of the 13 million members of the AFL–CIO and the Transportation Trades Department, AFL–CIO (TTD) we urge you to take immediate action to temporarily revoke the certification of certain foreign-based aircraft repair stations until such time as thorough security audits are conducted by responsible agencies and rules are put in place to ensure that these stations do not pose an imminent national and aviation security risk. As you know, there are currently over 600 foreign aircraft repair stations, certified under 14 CFR Part 145 (Subpart C), that are permitted to work on U.S. registered aircraft. Because of the unique combination of national security and economic conditions that currently exist in the aviation industry, as outlined below, we believe that the Department of Transportation (DOT), the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), and the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) are required to act upon this petition in the interest of aviation safety.

It is well known that this nation continues to be the target of terrorist intentions both domestically and abroad. In fact, the U.S. State Department and other government agencies have frequently warned about threats occurring outside the U.S. but directed at U.S. citizens and interests. We are concerned that certified foreign aircraft repair stations that are eligible to work on U.S. aircraft could provide terrorists with an opportunity to jeopardize U.S. aviation safety without having to physically enter this country. At a time of heightened alert around the globe, our government must do everything possible to protect against terrorist agents infiltrating foreign repair stations and sabotaging air operations headed back to the United States.

While there is no publicly known evidence that terrorists have pursued this agenda, it makes little sense for the Bush Administration to leave it to chance. In fact, the DOT's Inspector General recently announced that as part of a larger audit of air carriers' use of aircraft repair stations, it found security vulnerabilities at stations located at commercial and general-aviation airports and off airport property. While the IG recommended that the TSA conduct risk-based security assessments as a first-step in determining the actions needed to address repair station security, we would maintain that until the security ''fitness'' of foreign stations can be assured, their FAR 145 rights to work on U.S. aircraft should be suspended.

The security risks posed by foreign stations is compounded by the unprecedented financial distress faced by the commercial aviation industry. Two major carriers have declared bankruptcy, others have announced severe workforce and service cuts, and virtually every airline has been forced to institute dramatic cost cuts to satisfy lenders and to keep flying. In this environment, U.S. carriers will undoubtedly pursue, over the strong objections of the International Association Machinists and Aerospace Workers, the Transport Workers Union and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the outsourcing of major overhaul and other repair work to lower cost, potentially substandard third party contractors including those based overseas. A real life illustration of these concerns are the management rights secured by Northwest Airlines in its 2001 collective bargaining agreement with its mechanics union under which the airline can contract out almost 40 percent of repair and overhaul work to outside contractors around the globe. In fact, Northwest Airlines already relies on a Singapore-based repair operation for significant overhaul work on its DC–10 aircraft and the carrier could use the freedoms it secured in its 2001 collective bargaining agreement for mechanics to ship significantly more of that work abroad. And with the lax FAA oversight and surveillance of unknown security procedures at many foreign stations, the potential for terrorist security breaches grows as these stations see more work from the U.S.

It is interesting that in the pursuit of aviation security the FAA and the TSA recently issued rules that require the FAA to revoke the airman certificate, which includes a Part 65 mechanic certification, of any individual who the TSA determines poses a threat to aviation security. But from a practical standpoint these rules will only affect mechanics at domestic stations since only domestic stations, and not foreign stations, are required to have FAA-certified employees on premise. Furthermore, there are a number of oversight activities that occur at domestic facilities, both formally and informally, that simply do not occur at foreign facilities.

Indeed, the AFL-CIO, TTD and its mechanics union affiliates have long been concerned that foreign aircraft repair stations can receive FAA certification and then work on U.S.-registered aircraft without meeting the same safety and security standards imposed on domestic facilities and their employees. In addition to regulatory differences, we know that the oversight of foreign stations pales in comparison to the surveillance performed on domestic stations, especially those managed within major air carrier operations. For example, FAA inspectors, represented by the Professional Airways Systems Specialists (PASS), do not have the same type of access to foreign stations as they do with domestic facilities. This reality is complicated by the fact that insufficient FAA inspector staffing levels do not allow for proper oversight of stations located outside the U.S. Given this situation, it is troubling that the effective date for modifications to Part 145 was recently and inexplicably postponed at the request of industry trade groups and that such postponement was granted without giving the public any notice or opportunity to comment.

For these reasons we urge the DOT, the FAA, and the TSA to issue an emergency order to temporarily prevent certain foreign stations certified under 14 CFR Part 145 from working on U.S. aircraft or components. The FAA should use these temporary revocations to conduct thorough security audits of foreign stations and to promulgate rules that impose security procedures at these facilities. In particular, the FAA should focus on ensuring that mechanics and other workers who come into contact with U.S. aircraft or components do not pose a security risk and that other precautions are taken to ensure the integrity of the aircraft maintenance work performed. We would suggest that Joint Aviation Authority members and certain countries that have current Bilateral Aviation Safety Agreements with the U.S. may already meet many of the security standards needed and would not need to have their FAR 145 rights suspended while rules are being drafted.

As you know, the Secretary of Transportation is charged with the responsibility of ''assigning and maintaining safety as the highest priority in air commerce.'' 49 U.S.C. §40101(a)(1). Furthermore, when the Administrator is of the ''opinion that an emergency related to safety in air commerce requires immediate action, the Administrator, on the initiative of the Administrator or on complaint, may prescribe regulations and issue orders immediately to meet the emergency . . .'' 49 U.S.C. §46105(c). We would maintain that a unique confluence of factors described above create a situation that necessitates federal government action in the public interest and to maintain aviation safety.

Thank you for your immediate attention to this matter and we look forward to your response.

Sincerely,

RICHARD L. TRUMKA,
Secretary-Treasurer, AFL–CIO.
SONNY HALL,
President, Transportation Trades Department, AFL–CIO.

TRANSPORTATION TRADES DEPARTMENT, AFL–CIO,
Washington, DC, May 22, 2003.

Hon. RICHARD J. DURBIN,
U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DURBIN: On behalf of the Transportation Trades Department, AFL–CIO (TTD) and its aircraft mechanics unions, we write to ask for your assistance in protecting the safety and security of our aviation system and the jobs of thousands of aircraft mechanics due to deficient federal government policy and efforts by the major airlines to cut costs through outsourcing of maintenance and heavy overhaul work to foreign-based repair stations.

As an original cosponsor of the Aircraft Repair Station Safety Act (S. 1089) in the 105th Congress, legislation strongly supported by AFL–CIO unions, we know that you are well aware of this problem and we appreciate your leadership in protecting aviation safety and U.S. jobs. As we have discussed with you over many years, the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), pursuant to 14 CFR Part 145 (Subpart C), allows foreign stations to receive certification to work on U.S. aircraft even though these stations do not have to meet the same standards as those located in this country. While AFL–CIO mechanics unions have long argued that this situation threatens mechanics' jobs and the safety of the flying public, the current drive by air carriers to ship work overseas, combined with unique security concerns at these stations, has exacerbated this problem and your help is urgently needed to address this issue.

We know that U.S. carriers will pursue, over the strong objections of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, the Transport Workers Union and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, outsourcing of major overhaul and other repair work to lower cost and potentially substandard third party contractors based overseas. In fact, Northwest Airlines, secured the right in its 2001 collective bargaining agreement with its non-mechanics union (AMFA) to contract out almost 40 percent of repair and overhaul work to outside contractors in Singapore and around the globe. While the mechanics at Northwest are not members of our unions, we are deeply concerned that the carrier will continue to exploit these harmful contract concessions to the detriment of all the nation's professional aircraft mechanics, the vast majority of which are our members. Mechanics at other airlines will face increasing pressure to adopt the dangerous practices of Northwest-AMFA that permit almost four out of 10 jobs to be shipped to foreign contractors. Unless Congress steps in aggressively, aviation safety and security will suffer and the jobs of thousands of workers will be at risk.

For these reasons, we urge you to work with us to address this issue as part of the FAA Reauthorization bill that will be considered by the full Senate in the coming weeks. Together, we can protect the flying public and in the process ensure the future of America's highly skilled and professional aircraft mechanics. Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

ROBERT ROACH,
General Vice President, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers.
SONNY HALL,
International President, Transport Workers Union.
DON TREICHLER,
Director, Airline Division, International Brotherhood of Teamsters.
EDWARD WYTKIND,
Executive Director, Transportation Trades Dept., AFL–CIO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the second-degree amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi is an improvement over where the record stands at the present time, however, I think it does not go far enough. When he states that he does not know the consequences of my amendment, I would disagree with him.

The amendment provides that there will be standards on the level of inspection, which are of the same type as now promulgated by the Federal Aviation Administration. So if you have that level of inspection, which they have now, there is no question as to its not being onerous, or at least if it is onerous, it is onerous now, however, it is the same.

We should have drug and alcohol testing as a very minimal requirement so we know specifically what is involved there. We know people who are drug addicts or who are unduly influenced by alcohol to be carrying on these inspections.

When it comes to the third factor, security, the amendment I have proposed calls for ensuring the security of maintenance and repair work conducted on U.S. aircraft and components at foreign repair stations by the Under Secretary in consultation with the Administrator.

Those security arrangements are going to be determined by the Department of Transportation. We certainly can rely on them. I think the issue has been joined. I think we understand what is involved.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask that the vote be delayed until such time—

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield without losing his right to the floor? The two leaders want these votes to be stacked. They are in a very important Finance Committee meeting which is going on now. I ask this be set aside for a later time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I also note that Senator BOXER wishes to speak on this amendment for up to 10 minutes.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we withhold the vote until such time as the two leaders decide on a time, which I do not think will be very long. We have a couple of other amendments which are pending that we could dispose of, I would imagine, within the next 10 or 15 minutes.

Also, I ask unanimous consent that no further amendments be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. The pending amendments on our side are a Stevens amendment, a Burns amendment, and a Santorum amendment.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we want to have a list just as quickly as my friend from Arizona. We do need to have floor staff look at the subject matter of these amendments because we do not know what they could be. We can take the 10 minutes the Senator from Arizona suggested—the only addition I know we have is an amendment by Senator KOHL—and have our staffs look at these amendments while Senator BOXER is speaking for up to 10 minutes.

Following that, I think we would be in a position to look at the amendments and order the closure of the amendment process.

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent that Senator HAGEL be added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 906.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, as part of the agreement, it is my understanding that the Senator from California will be recognized for up to 10 minutes. Is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No agreement has been propounded.

Mr. REID. Did not the Senator from Arizona ask unanimous consent that the vote be put over until later and that request was propounded at that time? I thought the agreement was that the Senator from California would speak on the amendment that was just set aside for a vote for 10 minutes. I ask the Senator from California, would that be appropriate?

Mrs. BOXER. I am sorry. I was concentrating on my remarks.

Mr. REID. Is 10 minutes sufficient time for the Senator?

Mrs. BOXER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. I ask unanimous consent that Senator SANTORUM be added as an original cosponsor on the Lancaster amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I understand Senator LOTT has second-degreed Senator SPECTER's amendment, of which I am a proud cosponsor, with a study. Something can be studied and studied but, frankly, this would gut what we are trying to do in our amendment. I do not mind a study, but I think the time for studying this has passed.

I want to show my colleagues an important op-ed that appeared in the USA Today on June 9: ''Evidence Points to FAA's Laxity on Plane Maintenance.''

It specifically cites the overseas gaps that are happening. There are 629 foreign repair stations certified by the FAA to service U.S. aircraft. They point out that they may not be strictly monitored because of their distance from U.S.-based airline operations, increasing the potential risk for error.

That is an opinion of an expert on safety, Michael Barr, director of the University of Southern California's aviation safety program.

I think all of us want to see safety. One obvious place is making sure that we cut down on the number of aircraft that are overhauled abroad. That is why I think Senator SPECTER's amendment is so important, for the safety and security of the flying public. We all have worked very hard in the Commerce Committee to improve our aviation security, and I do believe our system is more secure than it was.

We have much more to do. My colleagues have heard me speak about the importance of the missile defense system, against shoulder-fired missiles, and there will be a lot more on that subject. But while we are improving our security at our airports in this country and rooting out potential threats among employees in the United States, meaning employees who work for the airlines, there are no security regulations or standards for foreign repair stations that work on U.S. aircraft.

I know the Senate is rushing to get through with this very important bill, but there is a huge gap in our aviation security. There is a huge safety concern that I have that Senator SPECTER's amendment will remedy. It is important to remember that foreign repair stations work on planes that not only fly internationally but planes that serve domestic routes as well.

There is a huge gap in our aviation security, and foreign repair stations do not have the same standards. Senator LOTT wishes to study this matter, and I am glad he wishes to study it, but we all know that the underlying amendment is the one that would bring about the changes. The underlying amendment would require foreign repair stations to meet the same safety standards required at domestic repair stations.

Specifically, under the Specter amendment, foreign repair stations would have to institute a drug and alcohol testing program of its employees if they want to work on American aircraft.

I say to my friends in the Senate, the people at these foreign stations are not even tested for drugs and alcohol, but American workers are required to have drug and alcohol tests.

There is no drug and alcohol testing program of employees on these foreign repair stations. We demand it in our own country. Our employees go through it and we do not have it at these foreign repair stations. We want these foreign repair stations to agree to FAA inspections.

In addition, the Under Secretary of Homeland Security must complete a security review and audit of all foreign repair stations. The foreign repair stations must address security issues identified by the Homeland Security Department within 90 days, and if they do not prove to the FAA and to the Homeland Security Department that they are not meeting our heightened security needs, FAA must revoke the certification of that repair station.

After all of the work that has been undertaken to improve our aviation security, and I must say on both sides of the aisle we have seen this work, we must not allow this loophole to continue. We do not know who is working on our planes at foreign repair stations, and I would hate to be a Senator who voted to study the issue but not to move quickly to solve the problem if, God forbid, there is an accident because some employee in a foreign repair station was either inebriated or high on drugs or perhaps even was terrorist connected.

We owe the American people safe and secure skies, and I think the Specter amendment is critical to preventing terrorism and unnecessary accidents. My colleagues want a study? Then they are saying they do not think this is a problem.

Evidence points to FAA's laxity on plane maintenance, and if we do not adopt Senator SPECTER's amendment, I think we are making a big mistake. These planes not only fly internationally but nationally.

I have a parliamentary inquiry. Are we going to vote on Senator LOTT's second degree at a time certain?

Mr. REID. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORNYN). The yeas and nays have been ordered on that amendment but no time has yet been set for that vote.

Mrs. BOXER. Another question. If that fails, will we then be voting on the Specter amendment? And have the yeas and nays been ordered on that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be the normal course of business, but the yeas and nays have not yet been ordered on the Specter amendment.

Mrs. BOXER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LOTT. Parliamentary inquiry. This is a request to have the yeas and nays on the second-degree amendment?

Mr. HOLLINGS. You already got that. This is on the Specter amendment, the yeas and nays on the Specter amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REID. We are waiting for the unanimous consent request to be typed. I hope during that period of time we will have six or seven more people calling for amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment so Senator BURNS can be recognized for his two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 900, AS MODIFIED

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking member. I submitted two amendments. One has to do with general aviation and reimbursement to organizations that suffered losses due to September 11. We took care of the airlines and a lot of service industries in and around airports, but we forgot and left out one very important part of the American aviation scene, very important to my State of Montana, those people involved in general aviation, in other words, the charter business, as they were impacted, too, and received no reimbursement in any way to recover the damages or the losses they may have incurred.

We have talked about this. I ask the amendment which is at the desk to be considered. It has been amended and worked on by both sides of the aisle. There is agreement on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS] proposes an amendment numbered 900, as modified.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide grants to reimburse general aviation entities for the security costs incurred and revenue foregone as a result of terrorism and the military action against Iraq)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. _____. REIMBURSEMENT FOR LOSSES INCURRED BY GENERAL AVIATION ENTITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation may make grants to reimburse the following general aviation entities for economic losses as a result of the restrictions imposed by the Federal Government following the terrorist attacks on the United States that occurred on September 11, 2001:

(1) General aviation entities that operate at Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport.

(2) Airports that are located within 15 miles of Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport and were operating under security restrictions on the date of enactment of this Act and general aviation entities operating at those airports.

(5) Any other general aviation entity that is prevented from doing business or operating by an action of the Federal Government prohibiting access to airspace by that entity.

(b) DOCUMENTATION.—Reimbursement under this section shall be made in accordance with sworn financial statements or other appropriate data submitted by each general aviation entity demonstrating the costs incurred and revenue foregone to the satisfaction of the Secretary.

(c) GENERAL AVIATION ENTITY DEFINED.—In this section, the term ''general aviation entity'' means any person (other than a scheduled air carrier or foreign air carrier, as such terms are defined in section 40102 of title 49, United States Code) that—

(1) operates nonmilitary aircraft under part 91 of title 14, Code of Federal Regulations, for the purpose of conducting its primary business;

(3) provides services necessary for nonmilitary operations under such part 91; or

(4) operates an airport, other than a primary airport (as such terms are defined in such section 40102), that—

(A) is listed in the national plan of integrated airport systems developed by the Federal Aviation Administration under section 47103 of such title; or

(B) is normally open to the public, is located within the confines of enhanced class B airspace (as defined by the Federal Aviation Administration in Notice to Airmen FDC 1/0618), and was closed as a result of an order issued by the Federal Aviation Administration in the period beginning September 11, 2001, and ending January 1, 2002, and remained closed as a result of that order on January 1, 2002.

Such term includes fixed based operators, persons engaged in nonscheduled air taxi service or aircraft rental.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $100,000,000. Such sums shall remain available until expended.

Mr. BURNS. It has been worked on by both sides and I ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment numbered 900, as modified.

The amendment (No. 900), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BURNS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 899

Mr. BURNS. The second amendment I have has to do with recommendations concerning air travel agents who have been part of a report requested of the Transportation Department. This is only language that requires the Department of Transportation to recommend the changes they see as a result of this report. I ask it be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS] proposes an amendment numbered 899.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require the Secretary of Transportation to transmit to Congress a report on any actions that should be taken with respect to recommendations made by the National Commission to Ensure Consumer Information and Choice in the Airline Industry on travel agents)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING TRAVEL AGENTS.

(a) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation shall transmit to Congress a report on any actions that should be taken with respect to recommendations made by the National Commission to Ensure Consumer Information and Choice in the Airline Industry on—

(1) the travel agent arbiter program; and

(2) the special box on tickets for agents to include their service fee charges.

(b) CONSULTATION.—In preparing this report, the Secretary shall consult with representatives from the airline and travel agent industry.

Mr. BURNS. I ask the amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there no further debate on the amendment?

Mr. BURNS. By the way, it has been cleared by both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment numbered 899.

The amendment (No. 899) was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS. I appreciate the leadership on both sides of the aisle for consideration of the amendments.

I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, sorry to interrupt. I call attention to the Senate that Special Operations is hosting a reception for Members of the Senate and staff tonight from 5:30 to 7:30 in room 106 of the Dirksen Building. General Holland would be honored if Members could stop by. My Defense Subcommittee visited General Holland and saw many of the things that are going to be on display in 106 Dirksen. There will be members of the armed services who worked with the unified commands, Marines, Army, Navy, Air Force. Individual members of the service who actually participated in Afghanistan and Iraq are there to explain to Members of the Senate and staff some of the engagements they were involved in.

I think every Member and members of the staff would find it very interesting. I hope they will stop by.

AMENDMENT NO. 916

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk that has been cleared which I ask the clerk to report.

It is a cap on the staffing level of the Transportation Security Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] proposes an amendment numbered 916.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To remove the staffing level limitation imposed on the Transportation Security Administration)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . REMOVAL OF CAP ON TSA STAFFING LEVEL.

The matter appearing under the heading ''AVIATION SECURITY'' in the appropriations for the Transportation Security Administration in the Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriate Act, 2003 (Public Law 108–7; 117 Stat. 386) is amended by striking the fifth proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment numbered 916.

The amendment (No. 916) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 917

Mr. HOLLINGS. On behalf of the distinguished Senator, Senator FEINSTEIN, I send an amendment to the desk and ask it be reported. This has to do with air quality on new aircraft.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] for Mrs. FEINSTEIN, proposes an amendment numbered 917.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide for air quality in aircraft cabins)

Strike section 664 and insert the following:

SEC. 664. AIR QUALITY IN AIRCRAFT CABINS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall undertake the studies and analysis called for in the report of the National Research Council entitled ''The Airliner Cabin Environment and the Health of Passengers and Crew''.

(b) REQUIRED ACTIVITIES.—In carrying out this section, the Administrator, at a minimum, shall—

(1) conduct surveillance to monitor ozone in the cabin on a representative number of flights and aircraft to determine compliance with existing Federal Aviation Regulations for ozone;

(2) collect pesticide exposure data to determine exposures of passengers and crew;

(3) analyze samples of residue from aircraft ventilation ducts and filters after air quality incidents to identify the contaminants to which passengers and crew were exposed;

(4) analyze and study cabin air pressure and altitude; and

(5) establish an air quality incident reporting system.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 30 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall transmit to Congress a report on the findings of the Administrator under this section.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce an amendment to improve the air quality on commercial aircraft.

In 1986, in response to a National Research Council Report, the FAA took several actions to improve aircraft cabin air quality on flights, including banning smoking on nearly all domestic flights. However, over 15 years later, many cabin air quality issues remain and new health questions have been raised by passengers and crew.

More recently, the National Research Council released a study of the air quality on commercial airline flights that was funded by the Federal Aviation Administration. The National Research Council found that:

There is no operational standard for the ventilation of an aircraft cabin, but that such an operation standard should be established to ensure that passenger aircraft are properly ventilated;

Passengers have been exposed to airborne contaminants while onboard aircraft, and that such contaminants can originate outside and inside the aircraft, and within the aircraft's environmental control system itself;

The environmental control system on a passenger aircraft can become contaminated with engine oils, hydraulic fluids, or deicing fluids and those fluid contaminants can enter the passenger cabin through the air supply system;

Contaminants in the air of a passenger aircraft may be responsible for acute and chronic health effects in crew and passengers;

Reduced partial oxygen levels in aircraft air may adversely affect health-compromised passengers, particularly those with cardiopulmonary disease;

Aircraft passengers may be exposed to ozone during flight, and studies suggest that ozone concentrations on some flights can exceed the Federal Aviation Administration and Environmental Protection Agency ozone levels;

Air that contains elevated ozone concentrations is associated with airway irritation, decreased lung function, exacerbation of asthma, and impairments of the immune system;

Since carbon monoxide is an indicator of mechanical fluids contaminating the air supply, the FAA should require aircraft to install monitors and establish procedures for responding to elevated levels of carbon monoxide; and

The FAA should establish a passenger aircraft air quality and health surveillance program to determine compliance with existing FAA regulations and document health effects and complaints so that data is collected in a way that allows analysis of the relationship between health effects and aircraft air quality.

The amendment I rise to introduce today addresses several findings on cabin air quality. It incorporates the original House language plus two additional provisions.

The House language is as follows:

(a) In General.—The Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall undertake the studies and analysis called for in the report of the National Research Council entitled ''The Airliner Cabin Environment and the Health of Passengers and Crew.''

(b) Required Activities.—In carrying out this section, the Administrator, at a minimum, shall—

(1) conduct surveillance to monitor ozone in the cabin on a representative number of flights and aircraft to determine compliance with existing Federal Aviation Regulations for ozone;

(2) collect pesticide exposure data to determine exposures of passengers and crew; and

(3) analyze samples of residue from aircraft ventilation ducts and filters after air quality incidents to identify the contaminants to which passengers and crew were exposed.

(c) Report.—Not later than 30 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall transmit to Congress a report on the findings of the Administrator under this section.

My amendment builds on the above language by adding the following two provisions:

Authorizes an FAA study to analyze cabin air pressure and altitude; and Requires the FAA to establish an air quality incident reporting system.

Poor air quality in flight cabins poses a health risk for the flying public and crew members who spend most of their working hours onboard commercial aircraft. Passengers should feel confident that they are not endangering their health when they fly, and airline industry workers should not feel their health is threatened as they earn a living. I hope you will join me in supporting this legislation. And finally I want to thank Senator MCCAIN and Senator HOLLINGS for allowing me to introduce this amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. This has to do with air quality of new equipment that has been cleared.

I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment (No. 917) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 918

Mr. HOLLINGS. On behalf of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER, I send an amendment to the desk and ask the clerk to report. It has to do with the small carrier sharing and the war supplemental.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. ROCKEFELLER, proposes an amendment numbered 918.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require air carriers that received a refund of passenger security fees under title IV of the Emergency Wartime Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2003, to pass-through to their code-share partners that portion of the refund attributable to such fees collected and paid by those partners)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . PASS-THROUGH OF REFUNDED PASSENGER SECURITY FEES TO CODE-SHARE PARTNERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, each United States flag air carrier that received a payment made under the second proviso of first appropriation in title IV of the Emergency Wartime Supplemental Appropriations Act, 2003 (Pub. L. 108–011; 117 Stat. 604) shall transfer to each air carrier with which it had a code-share arrangement during the period covered by the passenger security fees remitted under that proviso an amount equal to that portion of the remittance under the proviso that was attributable to passenger security fees paid or collected by that code-share air carrier and taken into account in determining the amount of the payment to the United States flag air carrier.

(b) DOT INSPECTOR GENERAL OVERSIGHT.—The Inspector General of the Department of Transportation shall review the compliance of United States flag air carriers with subsection (a), including determinations of amounts, determinations of eligibility of code-share air carriers, and transfers of funds to such air carriers under subsection (a).

(c) CERTIFICATION.—The chief executive officer of each United States flag air carrier to which subsection (a) applies shall certify to the Under Secretary of Homeland Security for Border and Transportation Security, under penalty of perjury, the air carrier's compliance with sub-section (a).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 918) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 919

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Hawaii, Senator INOUYE, and the Senator from Ohio, Senator VOINOVICH, I send an amendment to the desk and ask it be reported. It has to do with credit cards, when one of the carriers is in default and the other carrier has to pick up or honor the tickets. Since there is a peculiar situation, this is taking care of that situation. It has been cleared on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] for Mr. INOUYE and Mr. VOINOVICH, proposes an amendment numbered 919.

(Purpose: To clarify the criteria for air carriers to honor tickets for suspended service)

At the end of subtitle A of title III, insert the following:

SEC. 305. AIR CARRIERS REQUIRED TO HONOR TICKETS FOR SUSPENDED SERVICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 145(a) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act of 2001 (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by adding at the end the following: ''The Secretary of Transportation shall give favorable consideration to waiving the terms and conditions established by this section, including those set forth in the guidance provided by the Department in notices, dated August 8, 2002, November 14, 2002, and January 23, 2003, in cases where remaining carriers operate additional flights to accommodate passengers whose service was suspended, interrupted, or discontinued under circumstances described in the preceding sentence over routes located in isolated areas that are unusually dependent on air transportation.''.

(b) EXTENSION.—Section 145(c) of such Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note) is amended by striking ''more than'' and all that follows through ''after'' and inserting ''more than 36 months after''.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate on the amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 919) was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, Senator STEVENS is here to offer an amendment.

First, before that, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the previously mentioned amendments, which we will mention in a minute, the bill be read for the third time, and further, the Senate then proceed to the consideration of H.R. 2115, the House companion bill; provided further that all after the enacting clause be stricken and the text of S. 824, as amended, be inserted in lieu thereof; further, that the bill then be read the third time and the Senate proceed to a vote on passage of the bill, with no intervening action or debate. Finally, I ask unanimous consent that following that vote the Senate then insist on its amendment, request a conference with the House, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate with a ratio of 5 to 4. I ask unanimous consent that following the vote, S. 824 be placed back on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. It is my understanding the only amendments also remaining are an amendment by Senator STEVENS, an amendment by Senator SANTORUM, a Finance Committee amendment, and an amendment by Senator MURKOWSKI.

Mr. REID. And Senator HARKIN?

Mr. MCCAIN. An amendment by Senator HARKIN.

I ask unanimous consent that no amendments be considered other than those I just described.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, the subject matter of the amendments has been discussed on both sides so there are no surprises as to the subject matter of the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alaska.

AMENDMENT NO. 920

(Purpose: To codify the requirement that United States air carriers be effectively controlled by United States citizens)

Mr. STEVENS. I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 920:

At the end of title V, insert the following:

SEC. 521. AIR CARRIER CITIZENSHIP.

Section 40102(a)(15)(C) of title 49, United States Code is amended by inserting ''which is under the actual control of citizens of the United States,'' before ''and in which''.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, my amendment codifies the existing requirement that U.S. air carriers be effectively controlled by U.S. citizens. It will ensure reciprocity with countries in the European Union which codified a comparable requirement.

The United States has enforced an effective control standard for decades.

DOT's Inspector General recently identified seven factors that DOT has relied on to determine whether an airline is effectively controlled by foreign entities.

The I.G. identified ''significant contracts'' as one of the key factors in this process.

A DOT administrative law judge is currently considering whether this should be applied to a situation where 7 year guaranteed cost-plus contracts that provide virtually all of a carrier's business are significant contracts leading to foreign control.

Ironically, in this same proceeding one carrier has argued that the effective control test should not apply at all because it has not been codified.

My amendment will codify the existing standard. It leaves the interpretation of effective control up to DOT, but the department can draw from its decades of precedents to reach these conclusions. It is critical that DOT closely examine the effective control of this transaction.

If the present arrangement is allowed to stand, DOT will set a precedent which allows foreign governments to compete with U.S. companies for business which, by statute, is reserved to U.S. carriers.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would like to highlight some changes that Senator STEVENS made to this amendment in response to concerns expressed by the Department of Transportation.

Senator STEVENS changed the term ''effective control'' in his amendment to ''actual control'' to more accurately represent the test that DOT uses in these types of reviews.

In addition, Senator STEVENS removed the limitation of ''at all times'' regarding the actual control test it conform with current DOT practices.

DOT has represented to me that these changes accurately reflect the current state of law regarding citizenship and assures me that this amendment will not in any way affect their determination of what constitutes a citizen of the United States.

I would not have agreed to this amendment without these changes and an understanding that this is simply a reflection of current law. The terms that I have agreed to will not be altered in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 920) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LOTT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 907

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Ms. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Ms. MURKOWSKI] proposes an amendment numbered 907.

Ms. MURKOWSKI. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require the FAA to complete a study and report regarding the feasibility of consolidating the Anchorage Terminal Radar Approach Control and the Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Center)

At the end of title II, add the following:

SEC. 217. ANCHORAGE AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than September 30, 2004, the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration shall complete a study and transmit a report to the appropriate committees regarding the feasibility of consolidating the Anchorage Terminal Radar Approach Control and the Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Center at the existing Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Center facility.

(b) APPROPRIATE COMMITTEES.—In this section, the term ''appropriate committees'' means the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives.

Ms. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, the amendment I have sent to the desk gives the Federal Aviation Administration a year to complete the study of the consolidation of the Anchorage Terminal Approach Control, TRACON, with the Anchorage Air Route Traffic Control Center at the center's existing facility.

The current physical location will be facing significant demands this decade. In order to expand TRACON's current control room, it needs to be housed in a larger facility. What we are asking is a year to give the FAA ample time to complete this study while the Ted Stevens International Airport is undergoing expansion.

I urge the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 907) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, as far as I can see, we are waiting for Senator SANTORUM, who has a pending amendment, according to the unanimous consent agreement. Then there will be a Finance Committee amendment after the disposition of that amendment.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Santorum amendment be withheld at this time. That will leave us with the Harkin amendment, to my understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 921

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. HARKIN, I send the amendment to the desk and ask it be reported.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], for Mr. HARKIN, for himself, Mr. INHOFE, and Mr. GRASSLEY, proposes an amendment numbered 921.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To impose a civil penalty for the closure of an airport without sufficient notice)

At the end of title II, insert the following:

SEC. 217. CIVIL PENALTY FOR CLOSURE OF AN AIRPORT WITHOUT PROVIDING SUFFICIENT NOTICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 463 is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 46319. CLOSURE OF AN AIRPORT WITHOUT PROVIDING SUFFICIENT NOTICE.

''(a) PROHIBITION.—A public agency (as defined in section 47102) may not close an airport listed in the national plan of integrated airport systems under section 47103 without providing written notice to the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration at least 30 days before the date of the closure.

''(b) PUBLICATION OF NOTICE.—The Administrator shall publish each notice received under subsection (a) in the Federal Register.

''(c) CIVIL PENALTY.—A public agency violating subsection (a) shall be liable for a civil penalty of $10,000 for each day that the airport remains closed without having given the notice required by this section.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 463 is amended by adding at the end the following:

''46319. Closure of an airport without providing sufficient note.''.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, this has to do with the notice, the 60-day notice of the closing of an airport. It has been cleared on both sides. I think.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment with Senators INHOFE and GRASSLEY that simply requires that an airport on the National Plan of Integrated Airport Systems, (NPIAS), cannot be closed down without giving the FAA 30 days' notice.

That list includes over 3,000 airports including all commercial airports and many of the airports only used by general aviation, that is nonscheduled private aircraft so important to the efficient operation of businesses across our nation.

Chicago's Meigs Field was included in this integrated system of airports until it was dug up in the middle of the night with no notice on March 30, leaving a number of airplanes trapped at the unusable facility. The city government made a unilateral decision to shut down the airport by bulldozing the landing strips, runaway, and taxiways. That action by the city was dangerous and at least one aircraft carrying State employees had to be turned away from the airport since notification that the airport was now closed had not been provided in advance.

I do not dispute that it is within the purview of a local government or other operator evaluate the infrastructure needs of an area and move to close an airport. But, I do believe that they need to give reasonable notice of that intention. I would also note that almost every airport on the NPIAS system has received FAA funding for facilities and equipment.

This provision is not retroactive and would not affect the city of Chicago for the closure of Meigs Field.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 921) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 922

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I propose an amendment on behalf of Mr. GRASSLEY and Mr. BAUCUS and others. I ask for its immediate consideration. I send the amendment to the desk.

The senior assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for Mr. GRASSLEY, for himself and Mr. BAUCUS, proposes an amendment numbered 922.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To extend the Airport and Airway Trust Fund expenditure authority)

On page 209, after line 13, add the following:

TITLE VII—EXTENSION OF AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND EXPENDITURE AUTHORITY

SEC. 701. EXTENSION OF EXPENDITURE AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 9502(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to expenditures from Airport and Airway Trust Fund) is amended—

(1) by striking ''October 1, 2003'' and inserting ''October 1, 2006'', and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (A) the following: ''or the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (2) of section 9502(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking ''October 1, 2003'' and inserting ''October 1, 2006''.

Mr. MCCAIN. This is an amendment on behalf of the Finance Committee to make sure all authorizations here are in line with the jurisdiction and proper authorization responsibilities of the Finance Committee. I urge its adoption.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 922) was agreed to.

REAGAN NATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise today to speak to an issue of great importance to the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia, the operations at two airports important to all Senators, and to the issue of local control.

I support the managers' amendment and the legislation before the Senate today. This is an important bill. I was very concerned when this bill passed the Senate Commerce Committee with an amendment that increased the number of flights at Reagan National Airport by 12. Those flights were designated to fly beyond the so-called ''perimeter''—a rule that restricts the length of flights at Reagan National to a maximum 1,250 miles.

Through the managers' amendment today, the language increasing flights at Reagan National has been dropped. I appreciate the chairman of the Commerce Committee's willingness to work with me to see that this provision was not included in the final bill on the Senate floor.

I have several very serious concerns about Congress increasing the number of flights beyond the perimeter at National Airport, all of which were detailed in a letter I submitted to the majority leader on May 9, 2003.

There is a critical principle at stake here that cannot be overlooked by the Senate. The right of the people of Virginia to decide what is best for their communities without unwarranted Federal intrusion is at stake here. The responsibility for operating the airports at Reagan National and Dulles is up to the local and regional airport authority, not Congress. Yet each time this body considers FAA reauthorization, we must revisit attempts at Federal intrusion on an issue of local control. There is an extremely delicate balance between how Reagan National is designed to operate in conjunction with the international hub at Dulles Airport. Congressional intervention, even in the form of a few more flights, disrupts that balance and creates a slippery slope that undermines this region's ability to determine for itself what is in our own best interests.

I believe that a permanent solution to this continual Federal intrusion into local affairs needs to be found. The Senate and House of Representatives should strengthen the mandate we have already given to the local airport authority to make decisions on whether to increase flights at Reagan National or not, especially with respect to flying beyond the perimeter.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I would be glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator. As you know, I voted against this amendment when it came before the Senate Commerce Committee. I agree with the Senator from Virginia that we should not change the slot rules at National whatsoever. It is foolhardy and is bad aviation policy. We should not change the rules just because of politics. They have served the local community well, enabling the expansion of Dulles while protecting those that live near the airport. Short hauls leave from National, and long hauls from Dulles. We may not like to drive all the way out to Dulles, but we built, with Federal airport grant moneys, that highway dedicated to access to Dulles. We used the law to plan for growth. We should not change it now at the behest of some. I yield back to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield time?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield time to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, I also rise in support of the managers' amendment, and particularly for dropping the provision on adding long-haul flights at National Airport. The current aviation system, as it has evolved, is an intricately connected web of hubs, spokes, and direct flights. Some airlines thrive on the hub and spoke network, and some derive the ability to operate by flying directly between communities. However, I want to make clear a point on why it is so important that we maintain this balance between National Airport and Dulles Airport that was maintained by Congress in 1987, when we leased the facilities to the Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority. The slot rules have been in place since 1968 and should not be changed now.

When the Interstate Highway System was developed in the 1950s, many communities located in the path of the new interstates suddenly prospered by being directly connected to the rest of the Nation. Communities that were once sound economic entities, but were left miles from any access to the interstate system suffered, shuttered their doors and many times just barely survived. The same is true in the aviation system. Not every community in this country can maintain an airport. Not every community can enjoy the economic benefits of a hub. But hub economics dictate that feed from small- and medium-sized communities is necessary for them to survive.

National Airport is an important asset for those, like my constituents in West Virginia, who are trying to reach the capital region. Obviously, however, it can never become an international hub. The airport has only one runway and no ability to expand. National Airport serves a good and valuable purpose. My greatest concern is that by changing National Airport, Congress will hurt this area's ability to serve small- and medium-sized communities on the east coast, including my home State, West Virginia. The slot rule and perimeter rule were put in place at National Airport to maintain its important function while at the same time allowing the DC area to create a major international hub serving both Europe and South America. I would look forward to working with the chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, the ranking member Senator HOLLINGS and Senators ALLEN and WARNER to find a permanent solution to this issue. I yield back to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank the Senator from West Virginia and appreciate his support.

Mr. WARNER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the senior Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Senator. Let me just say that I associate myself with the remarks of Senator ALLEN. Three years ago, during debate over this same bill, I stood on the floor of the Senate and fought this battle. I hope that we are not doing this again a few years down the road. I understand that despite the best efforts of counterparts in the House, Congressmen WOLF, DAVIS, MORAN and Delegate NORTON, the House of Representatives has unfortunately approved an FAA reauthorization bill that would increase flights at Reagan National by 12 slots beyond the perimeter and 8 slots within the perimeter. I thank my colleague from Virginia and join him in agreeing to work with the Commerce Committee chairman and ranking member to see that this issue is resolved once and for all at Reagan National Airport. I yield back to my friend from Virginia.

Mr. ALLEN. I appreciate the Senator's comments. In sum, let me just say that this issue is very important to the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia. We have a long and proud tradition of protecting our interests and our ability to govern our own actions. I fought those battles every step of the way in my public life—from my service in the Virginia House of Delegates until now. It is my responsibility as an elected official of the Commonwealth of Virginia to adhere to principles, fight for the will of Virginia, and protect the sovereignty of our people and their rights. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to strongly support the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act.

I want to first applaud the tremendous leadership on this bill from my chairman on the Commerce Committee, Senator MCCAIN, and Senator HOLLINGS, the ranking member.

This legislation reaffirms our Government's critical commitment to a safe, efficient, and state-of-the-art airline system for the 21st century—a commitment that is crucially important to my home State.

The Seattle-Tacoma International Airport is the principal airport for the Northwest region, making it the Nation's 16th largest passenger airport, with over 26.5 million passengers annually on almost 40 different airlines going in and out of the Seattle-Tacoma airport.

Washington State is also the home to the ninth largest airline in the country, Alaska Airlines, which employs over 10,000 people and is one of the few airlines in the country actually posting growth rates over the last few years. In addition, Alaska is nationally recognized for its leadership to incorporate technology into its business model.

As the proud home of Boeing's commercial aviation division, Washington State leads the Nation in large civil aircraft manufacturing.

With Boeing and hundreds of smaller businesses in aerospace and aviation, we have over 75,000 workers designing and manufacturing the present and future of U.S. aircraft industry.

Obviously, a solid, well functioning, state-of-the-art national air traffic system and a strong domestic aircraft manufacturing capability are critical to my State and our Nation.

I am proud to say that this bipartisan legislation takes tremendous steps towards this goal in several ways.

First, this bill increases funding for airport infrastructure investments that will help our Nation's airports make the improvements, upgrades and expansions necessary to meet our Nation's airline demands in the 21st century.

The bill also increases the funding that will be used to upgrade the FAA air traffic control system, to ensure that our traffic controllers are given the resources they need to continue getting planes where they need to go—in the safest and most efficient manner.

In addition, this bill addresses a critical resource need facing our Nation's airports since 9/11 increased security updates. The legislation not only provides $500 million in funding for security enhancements, but it ensures that this funding is not taken from the airport trust fund money that is already committed to make important structural upgrades and airport improvements.

Last, in what I think is one of the most important contributions of this bill, the legislation includes a dramatic expansion in our Nation's commitment to aviation research and safety.

Mr. President, a renewed commitment to research and development in the aerospace industry is absolutely necessary—and we need it now.

The Final Report of the Commission on the Future of the United States Aerospace Industry argued that current Federal aerospace R&D is ''insufficient and unfocused'' and recommended in the Federal Government significantly increase its investment in aerospace research to foster an efficient, secure, and safe aerospace transportation system.

We must clearly recognize that if we are not willing to make the commitments to retain leadership in this realm, our allies on the other side of the Atlantic certainly are willing to take our place—in fact, this effort has become European policy.

Indeed, the European Commission has declared in its ''STAR–21'' report that it is willing to explore ''all available means'' to ensure the competitiveness of the European aerospace sector—including Airbus.

This support to the European aerospace sector comes in the form of substantial research and development, but also in direct product development grants, concessionary financing, and other direct subsidies.

While we have chosen, as a matter of Government policy, not to pursue such direct subsidies or provide assistance for product development, we have been able to help the research and development effort through a variety of research programs that both of your agencies have pursued.

It is time for the United States to reinforce our Nation's place as a leader in the aerospace sector—an industry is an absolutely crucial component of our domestic industrial base.

For this reason, I am very proud that this bill includes provisions originally introduced by Senator HOLLINGS, that would establish an Office of Aerospace and Aviation Liaison in the Department of Transportation that will draw upon staff from FAA, NASA, DHS,

DOD, DOC, and other appropriate agencies to coordinate Federal research programs, as well as establish goals and priorities for research.

Such an office will be well equipped to meet the challenge of the Aerospace Commission and bring direction and coordination to our Federal support for long-term research and innovation.

In addition, this bill authorizes almost $3 billion over the next 3 years for FAA and NASA research priorities. This is a dramatic expansion of the research agenda, almost five times more than previously authorized funding—previous authorization was approximately $600 million over 3 years.

As part of these research provisions, I am particularly proud to have worked with the committee to include funding and authority for future work on the durability and maintainability of advanced materials, such as composites.

These next generation materials have been called the aluminum of the future. Indeed, given their strength, durability, lightweight and unique properties, composites are currently used in most major defense aircraft.

Composites not only make for stronger, safer materials but also lighter and more efficient aircraft.

Already, the Boeing Company has increased its use of composites in the production of the 777 and Airbus is also using composites in its planes. Additionally, Boeing has plans for even greater use in the production of the next generation of commercial airplanes.

In addition to authorizing funds for general research in advanced materials, this legislation would direct the FAA Administrator to establish a ''Center for Excellence'' that would harness the great engineering research in materials science at path-breaking institutions like the University of Washington, which has taken great strides in pursuing work on how to advance the maintainability and durability of advanced materials and composites in large civilian aircraft.

While we know that these materials hold tremendous potential, we need to be absolutely sure that they are safe and that we have the technologies and processes necessary to maintain the materials and ensure their durability.

Such a center, which I have drafted in partnership with the University of Washington's Department of Engineering, would address these issues by facilitating close, working collaboration among industry, the FAA's Transportation Division, and academic institutions, to ensure that research matches the practical manufacturing needs.

This center will advance efforts to capitalize on the potential of this field.

In closing, Mr. President, as a government, we need to step up to the plate to ensure that our aerospace industry remains competitive and capable of leading the world toward the future for aerospace.

This bill takes an important step in affirming our Nation's leadership in the areas of safety, research, infrastructure, and security, and I am proud to support it.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the FAA Authorization Act. However, I must express my serious concerns that two sections in the bill on streamlining, sections 47701 and 47703, may be interpreted in a manner that the committee never intended. The purpose of these sections is to cure delays that have occurred because of interagency wrangling and bureaucratic disputes. These sections call for the relevant agencies to undertake concurrent planning and environmental reviews for critical airport projects in order to ensure that the projects move forward expeditiously. They are not designed to circumvent NEPA and should be so used.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Senate's Federal Aviation Administration, FAA, reauthorization bill, S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act. Further, I share Senate Commerce Committee Chairman MCCAIN's and Ranking Member HOLLINGS' goal of enacting this legislation before the end of this fiscal year. If airports are going to plan for the future, Congress must avoid being forced into passing a series of stopgap measures that make such planning difficult.

This legislation addresses the most critical component of FAA reauthorization—how to finance the operation and development of the nearly 3,500 airports eligible for Federal assistance. S. 824 authorizes a total of $10.5 billion over 3 years for the Airport Improvement Program, AIP, a critical program that funds airport safety and capacity projects, among other programs. Additionally, this bill authorizes $23.2 billion for FAA operations through fiscal year 2006.

At the same time we address the overall aviation funding challenges, I am pleased that this bill takes on the individual issues that go to the heart of securing commercial aviation against another terrorist attack. Installing Explosives Detection System, EDS, machines into airports is a necessity that we must grapple with and is part of a broader debate on the appropriate level of AIP funding that should go towards security-related projects. During fiscal year 2002, airports used over $561 million, or 17 percent of all of AIP funds, for security projects—this compared with an annual average of less than 2 percent through fiscal year 2001. As such, it is encouraging that S. 824 creates an annual $500 million Aviation Security Capital Fund to help airports cope with post-9/11 security requirements like EDS installation. Funding for this capital fund would come out of the security fees currently levied by the Transportation Security Administration, TSA, and not AIP grant funding.

S. 824 would also extend the Government's authority to issue war-risk insurance through fiscal year 2006, which would save the airlines more than $800 million annually. The recently enacted fiscal year 2003 Iraq supplemental bill authorized a 1-year extension of the program—through the end of fiscal year 2004—but by extending it through 2006, we can provide a small measure of financial stability to the airlines and not have to keep coming back every 6 months to revisit the issue.

To try to improve FAA management, S. 824 establishes a committee of outside experts to oversee the operation and modernization of the air traffic control system—which has tripled in cost to an estimated $7.6 billion since 1996. This bill also contains provisions designed to expedite the process for construction of airport capacity and safety projects, by allowing DOT to designate certain airport expansion proposals as National Capacity Projects, which would receive dedicated resources and expedited procedures for environmental reviews. This provision is intended to address the fact that, as the General Accounting Office, GAO, has reported, it takes anywhere between 10 and 14 years for new runways to be built—and this has an adverse effect on efforts to increase the aviation system's capacity.

As we consider this bill, I want to turn to the issue of small community air service. As we work to address the larger aviation issues, we cannot forget the challenges that small communities in Maine, and throughout the Nation, face in attracting and retaining air service. I have always believed that adequate, reliable air service in our Nation's rural areas is not simply a luxury or a convenience. It is an imperative. And quite frankly, I have serious concerns about the impact deregulation of the airline industry has had on small- and medium-sized cities in rural areas, like Maine. The fact is, since deregulation, many of these communities, in Maine and elsewhere, have experienced a decrease in flights and size of aircraft while seeing an increase in fares. More than 300 have lost air service altogether.

Many air carriers are experiencing an unprecedented financial crisis, and the first routes on the chopping block will be those to small- and medium-sized communities. This will only increase demand for the two existing Federal forms of assistance, Essential Air Service and the Small Community Air Service Grant Program.

Given the challenge faced by small communities in retaining their existing air service, I was pleased that, during our May 1 markup, the Commerce Committee unanimously accepted two amendments I authored to address this issue. The first amendment would create a new Small Community Air Service Ombudsman within DOT. The ombudsman's mission would be to work with carriers and communities to develop air service. This provision is intended to give small communities a seat at the table as DOT crafts national air transportation policy.

The second amendment approved by the committee creates a National Commission on Small Community Air Service. The 9-member commission would report back to Congress after 2 years to describe the problems faced by small communities with regard to access to commercial air service and suggest legislative solutions. I believe that, given the complexity of the issue, having all of the stakeholders sit down and consider what can and can't be done will be extremely helpful as Congress exercises its aviation oversight authority.

I also wanted to address the Essential Air Service, EAS, provisions in the bill. EAS provides subsidized air service to 125 small communities in the country—including 4 in Maine—that would otherwise be cut off from the Nation's air transportation network. As approved by the committee, S. 824 reauthorized and flat-funds the program for 3 years, and includes certain changes to the program, which are drastically scaled back from what the administration proposed earlier this year for EAS ''reform.'' The administration had called for EAS towns to provide up to 25 percent matching contributions to keep their air service. The committee bill creates a number of new programs to help EAS communities grow their ridership, including a marketing incentive program that would financially reward EAS towns for achieving ridership goals. With regard to local cost-sharing—the centerpiece of the administration's EAS proposal—the Commerce bill would create a pilot program to allow for a 10 percent annual community match at no more than 10 airports within 100 miles of a large airport.

While the cost-sharing provisions in the committee bill are much less strict than the administration proposal, and could only be applied to an EAS community under certain specific conditions, I remain concerned about the concept of requiring EAS towns—some of which are cash strapped and economically depressed—from kicking in hundreds of thousands of dollars annually to keep their air service. For example, if Augusta or Rockland, ME, were to be chosen for the cost-sharing pilot program, they would have to come up with over $120,000 annually to retain their air service.

As such, I strongly supported Senator BINGAMAN's amendments to strike the cost-sharing section from the bill and am pleased that it has been approved. The EAS program is not perfect, and Congress certainly needs to do all we can to keep subsidy levels as low as possible. I look forward to working with members of the Commerce Committee and the Senate on the issue, but I believe that requiring cost sharing in today's aviation environment is clearly a wrong headed approach.

In short, when considering this legislation, I believe that we need do all we can to help small communities maintain their access to the national transportation system during these difficult times.

Mr. President, in conclusion, I am hopeful that my colleagues will join me in taking this step toward strengthening and improving Federal aviation policy today. S. 824 enhances the Federal investment in our Nation's aviation system, and the funding in the bill is critical to the development of America's airports, big and small. Furthermore, quick passage of this 3-year legislation is key to allow airports to plan for the future. As such, I am pleased to support it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my friend and colleague, the Senator from Arizona, to bring before you S. 824, the Aviation Investment and Revitalization Vision Act, which reauthorizes the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) and its programs for the next 3 years.

The reauthorization of the FAA is a vitally important piece of legislation that the Senate must pass this year. It is the first real economic stimulus bill that the Senate has considered this year.

I cannot emphasize the importance of a vibrant and strong aviation industry. It is critical to our Nation's long-term economic growth. It is also vitally important to the economic future of countless small and local communities that are linked to the rest of the nation and world through aviation.

The significance of aviation to our economy cannot be overstated. Over 10 million people are employed directly in the aviation industry. For every job in the aviation industry, 15 related jobs are produced. The aviation industry accounts for over $800 billion of our gross domestic product.

The growth of the modern aviation system has created vast economic efficiencies such as just in time delivery, allowed the air cargo industry to grow exponentially, and has opened up the world to millions of Americans.

Just as the aviation industry is a catalyst of growth for the national economy, airports are a catalyst of growth for their local communities. Airports create over $500 billion in economic activity and directly employ 1.9 million people. Almost 2 million people and 38,000 tons of cargo pass through our Nation's airports each day. In my State of West Virginia, aviation represents $3.4 billion of the State's gross domestic product and directly and indirectly employs over 51,000 people.

Aviation also links our Nation's small and rural citizens and communities to the national and world marketplace. My home State of West Virginia has been able to attract firms from Asia and Europe because of reliable access to their West Virginia investments.

Without access to an integrated air transportation network, small communities can not attract the investment necessary to grow or allow home grown businesses to expand. A modern and adequately funded network is fundamental to making sure that all Americans can participate in the economy.

No question exists that since the tragedy of September 11, aviation in this country has been permanently changed.

When the Senate debated the last FAA reauthorization bill, capacity and competition issues were at the forefront of that debate. We have seen a decrease in the demand for air travel, hundreds of thousand of aerospace and aviation employees have lost their jobs and the economic pain has rippled through the economy. We will not have an economic recovery in this country until we have a recovery in the aviation industry.

Even though these issues seem less important today, they will again become serious challenges for the industry. In the drive to expand our aviation infrastructure to meet future needs, the resources for aviation security will also have to increase. More passenger and cargo will add strains to aviation security.

Now is the time to make the investments in air traffic modernization and airport development and research. Aviation security must be ready to handle the future growth that will occur. We must also continue to develop new aviation security processes and technologies to meet future challenges.

The legislation before us builds upon our commitment to improving the aviation infrastructure of the nation that started with the landmark Aviation Investment and Reform Act for the 21st Century. I believe that this legislation meets the challenges facing the FAA and the aviation industry in the years ahead.

This bill focuses on improving our Nation's aviation safety and security, airport and air service development, and aeronautical research. While my distinguished colleague has provided an excellent overview of the bill, I would like to highlight some areas of the bill that I believe are particularly important.

In this bill, we have created a stable stream of funding for security upgrades at our Nation's airports. Not only will these funds allow airports to improve security they will allow airports to improve the efficiency of these security measures.

In addition, the legislation provides for increases in funding for airport safety and capacity projects, which are a true economic stimulus.

I am very proud that the bill expands upon our commitment to making sure small and rural communities have access to air transportation services.

Finally, we have authorized a significant increase in aeronautical and aviation research in order to preserve America's leadership in these industries.

No higher goal exists than the safety and security of the Nation's airports and airspace. Over the past 18 months, we have worked every day to improve security in our airports and on our airplanes. However, until this bill, we have fallen short on providing funding to make sure our Nation's airports have the resources available to make the required improvements.

Airports estimate that they have $3 billion in unmet security infrastructure needs. The administration's Homeland Security proposal did not include any provisions to address this huge need. Airports have been forced to tap their expansion and development funds to pay for security. It makes no sense to raid funds for safety improvements for security improvements. The security of our Nation is a Federal responsibility and the Federal Government must pay for it.

One of the most important provisions in this bill is the creation of a $500 million fund, financed by security fees established by the Aviation and Transportation Security Act to assist airports with capital security costs. This new fund will also stop the diversion of airport development funds meant for safety and capacity enhancements. We will be able to pay for new security requirements while simultaneously improving safety and expanding capacity.

Even in these difficult budgetary times, we were able to modestly increase the Airport Improvement Program funding, which will provide the economy a real stimulus through direct and indirect job creation. Airport development is economic development as airports are economic development for their local communities. It is estimated that U.S. Airports are responsible for nearly $507 billion each year in total economic activity nationwide. Investment in airport infrastructure is a real economic stimulus that creates both immediate jobs and long-term economic development.

In order to facilitate airport development, I am pleased that this bill includes much of the text of the legislation that Senator HUTCHISON and I worked on last Congress to streamline and expedite the airport development process. This country needs to expand its airport infrastructure. Without a substantial increase in this area, aviation delays would increase resulting in billions of dollars of costs to the economy.

Today, we also meet the challenge of making sure our small and rural communities have access to the nation's air transportation network. I am very concerned that air carriers have abandoned small and rural markets disproportionately when reducing their service levels. We cannot let these communities go without adequate and affordable air service—their future depends upon it.

I am enormously pleased that the bill extends and expands the Small Community Air Service Development Program, which I fought for in AIR 21. One hundred forty communities applied for 40 available grants under this initiative. This program has assisted these 40 communities, including Charleston, WV, in attracting new air service. This program has proven an innovative and flexible tool for communities to address air service needs. Under our legislation, another 120 communities will be able to participate.

Many of our most isolated and vulnerable communities whose only service is through the Essential Air Service Program have indicated that they would like to develop innovative and flexible programs similar to those communities who received Small Community Air Service Development grants to improve the quality of their air service.

It is for this reason that I, along with Senator LOTT, developed the Small Community and Rural Air Service Revitalization Act of 2003, which has been included in this legislation. The legislation reauthorizes the Essential Air Service (EAS) program and creates a series of new innovative pilot programs for EAS communities to participate in to stimulate passenger demand for air service in their communities.

Under the bill, communities are given the option on continuing their EAS as is or they may apply to participate in new incentive programs to help them develop new and innovative solutions to increasing local demand for air service. The EAS Marketing and Community Flexibility Programs would provide communities new resources and tools to implement locally developed plans to improve their air service. By providing communities the ability to design their own service proposals, a community has the ability to develop a plan that meets its locally determined needs, improves air service choices, and gives the community a greater stake in the EAS program.

Small and rural communities are the first to bear the brunt of bad economic times and the last to see the benefits of good times. The general economic downturn and the dire straits of the aviation industry have placed exceptional burdens on air service to our most isolated communities. The Federal Government must provide additional resources and tools for small communities to help themselves attract adequate air service. The Federal Government must make sure that our most vulnerable towns and cities are linked to the rest of the nation. This legislation authorizes the tools and resources necessary to attract air service, related economic development, and most importantly expand their connections to the national and global economy.

This bill meets the challenges facing our aviation system—increasing security, expanding airport safety and capacity, and making sure our smallest communities have access to the network. We can all be proud of this bill.

Finally, I would like to again thank Senator MCCAIN, Senator LOTT, and Senator HOLLINGS for all their hard work and commitment to developing and securing passage of this legislation.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I understand we are waiting for the possibility of one other amendment. Other than that, we will be prepared, at the discretion of the leaders, to vote on the second-degree amendment to the Specter amendment, and then we would be prepared to go to final passage.

In anticipation of that, I would like to thank all who have been involved with this legislation, and specifically my dear friend from South Carolina. He and I have worked side by side for many years on many issues that have come before the Commerce Committee. I thank him for his usual extreme courtesy, consideration, and efficiency.

I thank the staff on both sides for their excellent work.

Also, I thank Senators LOTT and ROCKEFELLER who really did the hard labor in bringing this legislation to the floor of the Senate. Senator ROCKEFELLER and Senator LOTT worked assiduously during numerous hearings with a full appreciation and understanding of the impact this legislation has on the United States of America. I thank all of them.

Again, I thank our loyal staff for all the great work they have done.

I look forward to swift passage of this legislation.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, let me also thank the distinguished chairman of our committee who has led the fight on the floor today. He did a most efficient job.

With respect to, of course, Senator LOTT and Senator ROCKEFELLER of the Subcommittee on Aviation of the Commerce Committee, they are the ones who did the lion's share of the work with the hearings and preparing us so that we could handle this with expedition today.

I thank staff on both sides.

Let me add this for my good friend, the Senator from Mississippi. I happen to favor the Specter amendment for the simple reason that I cannot understand the Federal Aviation Administration requiring rules of safety for repair facilities in the United States but not requiring those same rules of safety for repair facilities by the U.S. contractors for U.S. aircraft. I just can't get that separation in my mind. I have listened closely. I hate to not come down on the side of the Senator from Mississippi because he has been our chairman and has led the way all day here.

I say that publicly because, on the Democratic side of the aisle, there could be those who would favor language and the admonition of the Senator from Mississippi in the perfecting amendment.

Senator BOXER has spoken in behalf of Senator SPECTER's amendment. I happen to favor it. Usually we note at the desk the disposition on this side. I don't want to mislead.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, with the agreement of both sides, that Senator STEVENS be recognized to offer one final amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alaska.

AMENDMENT NO. 923

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] proposes an amendment numbered 923.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To amend section 41703 of title 49, United States Code, to support the United States presence in the global air cargo industry)

At the end of title V, add the following new section:

SEC. 521. UNITED STATES PRESENCE IN GLOBAL AIR CARGO INDUSTRY.

Section 41703 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(e) CARGO IN ALASKA.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purposes of subsection (c), eligible cargo taken on or off any aircraft at a place in Alaska in the course of transportation of that cargo by any combination of 2 or more air carriers or foreign air carriers in either direction between a place in the United States and a place outside the United States shall not be deemed to have broken its international journey in, be taken on in, or be destined for Alaska.

''(2) ELIGIBLE CARGO.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'eligible cargo' means cargo transported between Alaska and any other place in the United States on a foreign air carrier (having been transported from, or thereafter being transported to, a place outside the United States on a different air carrier or foreign air carrier) that is carried—

''(A) under the code of a U.S. air carrier providing air transportation to Alaska;

''(B) on an air carrier way bill of U.S. air carrier providing air transportation to Alaska; or

''(C) under a term arrangement or block space agreement with an air carrier.''.

(D) under the code of a U.S. air carrier for purposes of transportation within the U.S.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this amendment deals with protecting existing jobs and creating new jobs on the ground in Alaska in connection with the airport I am honored to have named after me.

Mr. President, as I say, this amendment is about jobs—protecting existing jobs and creating new jobs on the ground in Alaska.

Anchorage is the top-ranked cargo airport in North America: 600 wide body cargo carriers per week; 19 airlines providing all-cargo main deck freighter service through Anchorage; 9 hours by air from 95 percent of the industrialized world; 3000 miles from Tokyo; 3000 miles from New York city; 4000 miles from London; 4000 miles from Frankfurt; 4400 miles from Hong Kong.

Foreign airlines provide much of this international cargo lift to and from the U.S. through Anchorage. Federal law allows these planes to land in Alaska, creating an enormous number of jobs on the ground.

But Federal law, as currently interpreted, does not allow U.S. carriers to use excess capacity on their foreign partners to move international cargo from Anchorage to the lower 48. The foreign carrier must make the full trip by itself. It is prohibited from transferring cargo to or from a U.S. carrier flying the international leg of the journey.

Anchorage is under attack from foreign cargo hubs seeking to exploit this weakness. Cities such as Tashkent, Kharbarovsk, and Anadyr in Asia and Calgary and Vancouver in Canada are aggressively pursuing the cargo carriers that Anchorage now serves.

We are losing U.S. jobs to foreign countries because of it.

This amendment will reverse that decline.

American carriers, both cargo carriers and passenger carriers, which accept cargo will make use of this amendment in various ways: relocation of sort and transfer operations from Asia back to the United States; enhanced service to U.S., Asian, and European cities; increased opportunities for integrated logistics products sold by U.S. companies; more opportunities to strengthen U.S. carriers through international partnering.

This requires a narrow modification of title 49.

My amendment does not create more flights by foreign carriers. It does not reduce the number of flights flown by U.S. carriers. All cargo moving under this authority must be shipped on a U.S. codeshare or similar arrangement, such as a U.S. waybill.

It preserves and creates American jobs in the increasingly important global air cargo sector.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 923.

The amendment (No. 923) was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that with regard to the amendment that was proposed on behalf of Senators INOUYE and VOINOVICH, that Senator VOINOVICH's name be deleted from that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the Lott second-degree amendment take place at 5:45, immediately followed by either a voice vote or recorded vote on the underlying Specter amendment, followed by final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate immediately proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations on today's Executive Calendar:

No. 223 and on the Secretary's Desk, PN443 and PN182.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF JOHN W. WOODCOCK TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF MAINE

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, Executive Item No. 223 is the nomination of John Woodcock to be a District Judge for the District of Maine. I am very pleased to rise tonight to speak on his behalf. Maine's senior Senator, Olympia Snowe, and I are very proud to have recommended John for this prestigious position on the Federal bench.

I have known John Woodcock for many years. John, in fact, recruited me several years ago to serve as a trustee on the board of the Eastern Maine Medical Center, which he has chaired for 23 years. This is typical of John's service to his community. He has devoted countless hours volunteering his time and energy to his alma mater, Bowdoin College; Eastern Maine Charities; the Maine State Commission on Arts and Humanities; the Good Samaritan Agency; and the Bangor Children's Home, to name just a few.

The Woodcock family has a proud tradition of public service that spans generations. In fact, two of John's sons have served as members of my staff. Jack currently serves on my Governmental Affairs Committee staff, while Patrick works as a college intern in my Bangor office. I once remarked to John—and repeated it at the Judiciary Committee hearing, which the Presiding Officer chaired that day—that his sons' hard work and professional demeanor were proof that the apple does not fall far from the tree. After the hearing, John wrote to me, in his typically gracious and unassuming and self-effacing way, and said in his mind the tree has always been his wife, Beverly.

Lest John's modesty hide his extensive accomplishments, let me take just a moment to share with my colleagues his qualifications to be a Federal judge.

John began practicing law nearly 30 years ago and has built a distinguished career as a litigator. He has served as an assistant district attorney for the State of Maine and has worked in private practice as an associate and as a partner of several law firms in the great State of Maine.

In 1991, he joined several colleagues to form the Bangor law firm of Weatherbee, Woodcock, Burlock & Woodcock.

During his career, John has served as lead counsel in 47 separate appeals to the Maine Supreme Judicial Court on issues ranging from trust law to criminal law.

John has also taken an active role in improving the standards of the legal profession, serving, for example, on the Maine Supreme Judicial Court's Advisory Committee on Professional Responsibility. As a member of this committee, John worked to draft a series of aspirational goals to help guide lawyers who elect to advertise with their professional obligations in this area.

Those of us who are familiar with John Woodcock's sterling character and stellar legal career were not surprised when the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary unanimously rated him as ''well qualified''—the highest possible rating. Indeed, it would be difficult for Senator SNOWE and I to come up with another candidate better suited to serve as a Federal judge in the State of Maine.

The Senate Judiciary Committee also voted unanimously to approve his nomination on June 5.

Mr. President, John has the legal excellence, the temperament, and the integrity to serve on the Federal bench. I have every confidence he will faithfully follow the law as interpreted by higher courts and that he will bring justice to the parties before him.

I wholeheartedly and enthusiastically support John Woodcock's nomination for a Federal district court judgeship, and I urge my colleagues, in voting this evening, to confirm this terrific individual.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of Senate confirmation of Mr. John A. Woodcock, Jr. of Hamden, ME, as Federal judge for the United States District Court for the District of Maine in Bangor.

John's roots run deep in the Bangor community. His family has been there for generations, and John attended John Bapst High School in the heart of downtown. He began his law career in Bangor 26 years ago, and today he is with the Bangor law firm of Woodcock, Weatherbee, Burlock, and Woodcock, having argued 46 cases before the Maine Supreme Judicial Court. He has served on the Maine Supreme Court Advisory Committee on Professional Responsibility, while also giving of himself personally to the community.

Indeed, for about 25 years he has served on the board of Eastern Maine Healthcare Systems and is now president of Eastern Maine Medical Center's Board of Directors. Among other involvements, over the last 7 years John has also served as the attorney-coach for the Hampden Academy Mock Trial Team.

Mr. Woodcock is well-qualified for this position, as evidenced by the unanimous decision of the Senate Judiciary Committee to favorably report his nomination to the full Senate on June 5, 2003. Moreover, the American Bar Association unanimously named John as ''well qualified''—meaning, ''The nominee is at the top of the legal profession in his or her legal community, has outstanding legal ability, breadth of experience, the highest reputation for integrity, and either has demonstrated, or exhibited the capacity for, judicial temperament.''

In Maine, the Federal Judicial Nomination Advisory Committee that Senator COLLINS and I assembled—with over 270 combined years practicing law—selected John Woodcock as their top recommendation. And former Senator and Secretary of Defense Bill Cohen has said of John that, ''In his years of practice, John has developed a statewide reputation as a skilled litigator and an effective counselor. He has deep experience in litigation at trial and appellate levels and is well regarded throughout the Maine Bar.''

As I told the Judiciary Committee when I had the privilege of introducing John to the committee at his hearing on May 22, Maine's U.S. District Court has a long history, as one of the first such courts established in 1789. Should Mr. Woodcock be confirmed, he would become only the 16th judge appointed to the court by the President of the United States over its 213-year history. Moreover, the position for which Mr. Woodcock has been nominated is the lone Federal judge position in northern Maine. With John's record and qualifications, he has the depth of experience, the temperament, and the integrity demanded by the gravity of the office for which he has been chosen. He will uphold and enhance not only Maine's tradition of exceptional trial judges, but he will also reflect the finest ideals and expectations of our Federal judiciary.

As I also told the Judiciary Committee, from a layman's point of view—the best trial judges are distinguished by their ability to balance several, sometimes competitive personal dynamics. They balance broad lie exposure with specific courtroom experience, raw legal aptitude with common sense, patience with firmness, and intellectual curiosity with focused decision-making. John Woodcock embodies all of those traits and characteristics, and with his substantial and broad legal and courtroom experience, as well as his keen intellect and perspective, solid character, and outstanding reputation, I am most proud to recommend to my colleagues that he be confirmed as Federal judge for the United States District Court for the District of Maine.

I ask unanimous consent a copy of Secretary Cohen's letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COHEN GROUP,
Washington, DC, May 19, 2003.

Hon. ORRIN HATCH,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ORRIN: I have recently learned that John A. Woodcock, Jr., who has been nominated for a U.S. District judgeship for the District of Maine, is scheduled to appear before the Committee on the Judiciary on May 22, 2003. Senator Olympia Snowe recommended Mr. Woodcock for this position in conjunction with the support of Senator Susan Collins.

I have known John Woodcock for many years. He is a native of my hometown, Bangor, and attended my alma mater, Bowdoin College, graduating in 1972. He attended the University of Maine School of Law, graduating in 1976, and has been continuously engaged in the practice of law ever since. In his years of practice, John has developed a statewide reputation as a skilled litigator and an effective counselor. He has deep experience in litigation at trial and appellate levels and is well regarded throughout the Maine Bar.

John has also given his time and energies unstintingly to local civic groups. He has recently completed more than 20 years of service on the board of the Eastern Maine Medical Center, an institution vital to providing quality health care in northern and eastern Maine. John is married to Beverly Woodcock and they have a fine family of three boys, Jack, Patrick, and Chris. Jack now works on the Governmental Affairs Committee for Senator Collins.

The U.S. District Court for the District of Maine has a long practice of excellence in its judicial appointments and the nomination of John Woodcock is in every way consistent with that tradition. I recommend him to you with enthusiasm and without reservation.

With best personal regards, I am

Sincerely,

WILLIAM S. COHEN,
Chairman and CEO.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to express my enthusiastic support for the nomination of John A. Woodcock to be a United States District Judge for the District of Maine.

Mr. Woodcock possesses over 25 years of litigation experience and will serve his country well as a Federal judge.

After graduating from the University of Maine Law School in 1976, Mr. Woodcock joined the law firm of Stearns, Finnegan & Needham where he practiced general civil litigation until 1980. From 1977–1978, Mr. Woodcock was a part-time assistant district attorney. While in the district attorney's office, he handled all criminal appeals from two different counties to the Maine Supreme Judicial Court and was the lead prosecutor in approximately 20 criminal jury trials. In 1980, Mr. Woodcock joined Mitchell & Stearns until forming the smaller law firm of Weatherbee, Woodcock, Burlock & Woodcock in 1991, where he currently practices general civil litigation.

During his career, Mr. Woodcock has been involved in 47 separate appeals to the Maine Supreme Judicial Court on issues ranging from criminal law to trust law. Mr. Woodcock has volunteered his time as a member of several community boards and he is also the attorney-coach for the local high school mock trial team.

After reviewing his record, the ABA gave Mr. Woodcock their highest rating of unanimously well qualified. The committee also received a letter from former Clinton administration Secretary of Defense William Cohen praising Mr. Woodcock's skills as a litigator. He writes, ''I have known John Woodcock for many years. . . . The U.S. District Court for the District of Maine has a long practice of excellence in its judicial appointments and the nomination of John Woodcock is in every way consistent with that tradition.''

I will submit a copy of this letter for the RECORD. These are words of high praise and I applaud Mr. Woodcock on his many accomplishments. I am certain he will bring great credit to the Federal bench and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this highly qualified nominee.

I ask unanimous consent that the above-mentioned letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

With best personal regards, I am,

Sincerely,

WILLIAM S. COHEN.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today, we vote to confirm John A. Woodcock, Jr. to a lifetime appointment on the United States District Court for the District of Maine. With this confirmation we will have helped fill the sole vacancy on that court. That vacancy, which arose early this year when Judge Carter took senior status, is important to the people of Maine and New England. I have been glad to work with the Senators from Maine to expedite the confirmation of this nominee and provide bipartisan support. I congratulate the nominee and his family.

The Senate has now confirmed 132 judges nominated by President Bush, including 26 circuit court judges. One hundred judicial nominees were confirmed when Democrats acted as the Senate majority for 17 months from the summer of 2001 to adjournment last year. After today, 32 will have been confirmed in the other 12 months in which Republicans have controlled the confirmation process under President Bush. This total of 132 judges confirmed for President Bush is more confirmations than the Republicans allowed President Clinton in all of 1995, 1996 and 1997—the first 3 years they controlled the Senate process for President Clinton. In those 3 full years, the Republican leadership in the Senate allowed only 111 judicial nominees to be confirmed, which included only 18 circuit judges. We have already exceeded that total by 19 percent and the circuit court total by 40 percent with 6 months remaining to us this year. In truth, we have achieved all this in less than 2 years because of the delays in organizing and reorganizing the Senate in 2001. The Judiciary Committee was not even reassigned until July 10, 2001, so we have now confirmed 132 judges in less than 2 years.

In the first half of this year, the 32 confirmations is more than Republicans allowed to be confirmed in the entire 1996 session, when only 17 district court judges were added to the Federal courts across the nation. In the first half of this year, with 9 circuit court confirmations, we have already exceeded the average of 7 per year achieved by Republican leadership from 1995 through the early part of 2001. That is more circuit court confirmations in 6 months than Republicans allowed confirmed in the entire 1996 session, in which there were none confirmed; in all of 1997, when there were 7 confirmed; in all of 1999, when there were 7 confirmed; or in all of 2000, when there were 8 confirmed. The Senate has now achieved more in fewer than 6 full months for President Bush than Republicans used to allow the Senate to achieve in 4 of the 6 full years they were in control of the Senate when President Clinton was making judicial nominations. We are moving two to three times faster for this President's nominees, despite the fact that the current appellate court nominees are more controversial, divisive and less widely-supported than President Clinton's appellate court nominees were.

If the Senate did not confirm another judicial nominee all year and simply adjourned today, we would have treated President Bush more fairly and would have acted on more of his judicial nominees than Republicans did for President Clinton in 1995–97 or the period 1996–99. In addition, the vacancies on the Federal courts around the country are significantly lower than the 80 vacancies Republicans left at the end of 1997 or the 110 vacancies that Democrats inherited in the summer of 2001. We continue well below the 67 vacancy level that Senator HATCH used to call ''full employment'' for the Federal judiciary. Indeed we have reduced vacancies to their lowest level in the last 13 years. So while unemployment has continued to climb for Americans to 6.1 percent last month, the Senate has helped lower the vacancy rate in Federal courts to an historically low level that we have not witnessed in over a decade. Of course, the Senate is not adjourning for the year and the Judiciary Committee continues to hold hearings for Bush judicial nominees at between two and four times as many as it did for President Clinton's.

For those who are claiming that Democrats are blockading this President's judicial nominees, this is another example of how quickly and easily the Senate can act when we proceed cooperatively with consensus nominees. The Senate's record fairly considered has been outstanding—especially when contrasted with the obstruction of President Clinton's moderate judicial nominees by Republicans between 1996 and 2001.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

THE JUDICIARY

John A. Woodcock, Jr., of Maine, to be United States District Judge for the District of Maine.

NOMINATIONS PLACED ON THE SECRETARY'S DESK

AIR FORCE

C–PN443 Air Force nominations (23) beginning EUGENE L. CAPONE, and ending ALLEN L. WOMACK, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the Congressional Record of March 24, 2003.

C–PN182 Air Force nominations (104) beginning ELISE A. *AHLSWEDE, and ending PAUL K. *YENTER, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the Congressional Record of January 13, 2003.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that at 10 a.m. on Friday, June 13, the Senate proceed to executive session for the consideration of Calendar No. 218, the nomination of R. Hewitt Pate to be an Assistant Attorney General; provided further that the Senate immediately proceed to a vote on the confirmation of the nomination, and that following the vote, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that the Senate then resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BURMA

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, last night at about this time we passed a Burma sanctions bill 97 to 1, which I hope sent a strong message to the thugs who are running the country at the moment that someday—and hopefully someday soon—they will have to honor the results of the 1990 election, won overwhelmingly by Aung San Suu Kyi and her party.

As I suspect the military junta may be trying to decipher what took place in Washington yesterday, I thought I would take a moment or two to help them out.

The U.S. Senate overwhelmingly condemned and sanctioned the State Peace and Development Council, SPDC, for its May 30 attack against Suu Kyi and her supporters and for its continued repressive actions that violate the human rights and dignity of the people of Burma.

I also had an opportunity to talk today to Secretary Colin Powell, who is going out to Phnom Penh to the ASEAN Regional Forum next week, and I think they can anticipate a strong message from him when he is out in the region at that time.

Fifty-seven Senators cosponsored the legislation that passed last night to impose an import ban, expand visa restrictions, and freeze SPDC assets in the United States. Ninety-seven Senators voted to repudiate the actions of the Burmese junta.

This was a vote for freedom in Burma that demonstrated unequivocal support for Suu Kyi and all democrats in that country.

The generals in Rangoon should take note that a provision was included in the bill that guarantees that every year Burma will come up for discussion and debate in Congress. Every single year, we will have an opportunity to take a look at the fate of freedom in that country.

It is my hope we will not need that opportunity. It is my hope that Suu Kyi and other democrats will be governing Burma and that the only debate on the floor will be about the level of foreign assistance America should provide to a newly free Burma.

If this hope is not realized, within a year we will again discuss the persistent rapes of minority girls and women, the use of child and forced labor, and the manufacturing and trafficking of narcotics.

If the junta continues its repressive rule, we will again examine the number of political prisoners languishing in Burmese jails, efforts taken to counter an exploding HIV/AIDS infection rate, and opportunities to further democracy and the rule of law throughout the country.

If, however, American leadership translates into a full court press on junta, we might be able to celebrate a new dawn for democracy for the people of Burma.

The comments of Secretary of State Colin Powell in the Wall Street Journal today are both welcomed and promising.

As I indicated earlier, he is going to the ASEAN regional meeting next week, and I think the regime in Burma is going to hear a good deal more about the U.S. position on their behavior and activities.

He said this:

By attacking Aung San Suu Kyi and her supporters, the Burmese junta has finally and definitively rejected the efforts of the outside world to bring Burma back into the international community. Indeed, their refusal of the work of Ambassador Razali and of the rights of Aung San Suu Kyi and her supporters could not be clearer. Our response must be equally clear if the thugs who now rule Burma are to understand that their failure to restore democracy will only bring more and more pressure against them and their supporters.

Secretary Powell must work tirelessly to secure the release of Suu Kyi and all other democrats who continue to be detained by the SPDC. U.N. Special Envoy Razali's brief meeting with her does not assuage my fears that she is under intense pressure or that her supporters continue to be tortured or killed. She and her supporters should be released immediately and unconditionally.

In the future, it might behoove Razali to temper his enthusiastic comments to more accurately reflect the climate of fear in Burma. He failed to secure Suu Kyi's release, and I am surprised that he did not say more to condemn the outrageous actions of the thugs in Rangoon.

Let me close by thanking my colleagues—and their staffs—for their support of this legislation. I could ask for no better allies than Senators FEINSTEIN and MCCAIN on this issue, and I look forward to continue to work with them to free Suu Kyi and bring democracy to Burma. Senators FRIST, LUGAR, BIDEN, BAUCUS, GRASSLEY, HAGEL, and BROWNBACK also deserve recognition for their support of freedom in Burma. The people of Burma will count on our support in the future—and we should not, and must not, fail them.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of Secretary Powell's op-ed and an editorial from today's Baltimore Sun on Burma be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STANDING FOR FREEDOM

GET TOUGH ON RANGOON

(By Colin L. Powell)

United Nations Special Envoy Razali Ismail has just visited Burma and was able to bring us news that Aung San Suu Kyi, a Nobel Peace Prize winner and the leader of a peaceful democratic party known as the National League for Democracy, is well and unharmed. The thoughts and prayers of free people everywhere have been with her these past two weeks. Our fears for her current state of health are now somewhat lessened.

On May 30, her motorcade was attacked by thugs, and then the thugs who run the Burmese government placed her under ''protective custody.'' We can take comfort in the fact that she is well. Unfortunately, the larger process that Ambassador Razali and Aung San Suu Kyi have been pursuing—to restore democracy in Burma—is failing despite their good will and sincere efforts. It is time to reassess our policy towards a military dictatorship that has repeatedly attacked democracy and jailed its heroes.

There is little doubt on the facts. Aung San Suu Kyi's party won an election in 1990 and since then has been denied its place in Burmese politics. Her party has continued to pursue a peaceful path, despite personal hardships and lengthy periods of house arrest or imprisonment for her and her followers. Hundreds of her supporters remain in prison, despite some initial releases and promises by the junta to release more. The party's offices have been closed and their supporters persecuted. Ambassador Razali has pursued every possible opening and worked earnestly to help Burma make a peaceful transition to democracy. Despite initial statements last year, the junta—which shamelessly calls itself the State Peace and Development Council (SPDC)—has now refused his efforts and betrayed its own promises.

At the end of last month, this rejection manifested itself in violence. After the May 30 attack on Aung San Suu Kyi's convoy, we sent U.S. Embassy officers to the scene to gather information. They reported back that the attack was planned in advance. A series of trucks followed her convoy to a remote location, blocked it and then unloaded thugs to swarm with fury over the cars of democracy supporters. The attackers were brutal and organized; the victims were peaceful and defenseless. The explanation by the Burmese military junta of what happened doesn't hold water. The SPDC has not made a credible report of how many people were killed and injured. It was clear to our embassy officers that the members of the junta were responsible for directing and producing this staged riot.

We have called for a full accounting of what happened that day. We have called for Aung San Suu Kyi to be released from confinement of any kind. We have called for the release of the other leaders of the National League for Democracy who were jailed by the SPDC before and after the attack. We have called for the offices of the National League for Democracy to be allowed to reopen. We are in touch with other governments who are concerned about the fate of democracy's leader and the fate of democracy in Burma to encourage them, too, to pressure the SPDC.

The Bush administration agrees with members of Congress, including Sen. Mitch McConnell, who has been a leading advocate of democracy in Burma, that the time has come to turn up the pressure on the SPDC.

Here's what we've done so far. The State Department has already extended our visa restrictions to include all officials of an organization related to the junta—the Union Solidarity and Development Association—and the managers of state-run enterprises so that they and their families can be banned as well.

The United States already uses our voice and our vote against loans to Burma from the World Bank and other international financial institutions. The State Department reports honestly and frankly on the crimes of the SPDC in our reports on Human Rights, Trafficking in Persons, Drugs, and International Religious Freedom. In all these areas, the junta gets a failing grade. We also speak out frequently and strongly in favor of the National League of Democracy, and against the SPDC. I will press the case in Cambodia next week when I meet with the leaders of Southeast Asia, despite their traditional reticence to confront a member and neighbor of their association, known as Asean.

Mr. McConnell has introduced the Burmese Freedom and Democracy Act in the Senate; Reps. Henry Hyde and Tom Lantos have introduced a similar bill in the House. We support the goals and intent of the bills and are working with the sponsors on an appropriate set of new steps. Those who follow this issue will know that our support for legislation is in fact a change in the position of this administration and previous ones as well. Simply put, the attack on Ms. Suu Kyi's convoy and the utter failure of the junta to accept efforts at peaceful change cannot be the last word on the matter. The junta that oppresses democracy inside Burma must find that its actions will not be allowed to stand.

There are a number of measures that should now be taken, many of them in the proposed legislations. It's time to freeze the financial assets of the SPDC. It's time to ban remittances to Burma so that the SPDC cannot benefit from the foreign exchange. With legislation, we can, and should, place restrictions on travel-related transactions that benefit the SPDC and its supporters. We also should further limit commerce with Burma which enriches the junta's generals. Of course, we would need to ensure consistency with our World Trade Organization and other international obligations. Any legislation will need to be carefully crafted to take into account our WTO obligations and the president's need for waiver authority, but we should act now.

By attacking Aung San Suu Kyi and her supporters, the Burmese junta has finally and definitely rejected the efforts of the outside world to bring Burma back into the international community. Indeed, their refusal of the work of Ambassador Razali and of the rights of Aung San Suu Kyi and her supporters could not be clearer. Our response must be equally clear if the thugs who now rule Burma are to understand that their failure to restore democracy will only bring more and more pressure against them and their supporters.

TIME FOR TYRANTS TO FEAR

A year ago, when the military junta illegally controlling Myanmar last released its democratically elected leader, Aung San Suu Kyi, from house arrest, the generals promised a dialogue aimed at national reconciliation.

True dialogue in the nation once known as Burma would lead to a decided weakening, if not the total loss, of the generals' power, so that hasn't happened.

And as of yesterday, Ms. Suu Kyi, a Nobel Peace Prize laureate, remained back in detention after a violent government attack late last month on her and her supporters—and even after a Untied Nations envoy spent days trying to gain her release.

Given that Myanmar's military also has a long record of slave labor and drug trafficking, what more do responsible nations need to now get tougher with this regime?

With that in mind, these days are critical—starting with passage late yesterday of a U.S. senate bill to ban imports from Myanmar, seize the regime leaders' U.S. assets and bar U.S. visas for them.

This ban should give greater weight to heightened U.S. diplomatic effort to isolate these despots.

Virtually all Senate leaders from both parties, led by Kentucky Republican Mitch McConnell and California Democrat Dianne Feinstein, supported the ban. Maryland Sens. Barbara A. Mikulski and Paul S. Sarbanes were among its many co-signers, Mr. Sarbanes having signed on just yesterday after activists complained he hadn't.

A House subcommittee has approved a similar bill. Everything possible should be done to see that this ban—affecting a quarter of Myanmar's exports, worth about $350 million a year—becomes law soon.

But even just Senate passage of the ban gives Secretary of State Colin L. Powell a bigger stick when he attends a meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) in Cambodia next week—a gathering at which the United States needs to lean even harder on Thailand and Japan to back off aiding this terrible regime.

Time is well past for allowing Myanmar's generals to enslave their own people. As Senator McConnell said yesterday in calling for the import ban vote: ''It's time for tyrants to fear in Burma.''

The import ban likely won't bring down these generals in itself. But it provides a key tool in building an effective worldwide movement—with roles for ASEAN, the European Union and the United Nations—to end their illegal reign.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, also the Travel Goods Association of America today came out for the legislation and for an import ban as well. This is an important organization related to this whole issue of import restrictions—an organization that potentially would benefit from continuing imports from Burma. But they said they don't want to make money off of this regime. They, too, have announced their support for a ban today.

I ask unanimous consent that a press release indicating their support be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TGA ANNOUNCES SUPPORT FOR A TOTAL BAN ON U.S. TRAVEL GOODS IMPORTS FROM BURMA—APPLAUDS PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION BY U.S. SENATE

PRINCETON, NJ, June 12, 2003.—Travel Goods Association (TGA) President Anne L. DeCicco announced today that, due to the on-going cruel and repressive nature of the ruling regime in Burma, TGA—the national trade association of the travel goods industry (luggage, handbags, briefcases, backpacks, flatgoods, etc.)—has called for an immediate and total ban on U.S. travel goods imports from that nation (SEE POLICY STATEMENT BELOW). Furthermore, TGA appauds Rep. Tom Lantos (D–CA) and Rep. Peter King (R–NY), and Diane Feinstein (D–CA) and their colleagues in both the House and Senate, for introducing The Burmese Freedom and Democracy Act of 2003 into both houses of the United States Congress. The bills call for a ban on all imports from Burma until it can be determined that the ruling Burmese government has made substantial and measurable progress to end its human rights abuses. The legislation passed the Senate on June 11, 2003 in a 97–1 vote.

''The government of Burma continues to abuse its citizens through force and intimidation, and refuses to respect the basic human rights of its people. TGA believes this unacceptable behavior should be met with condemnation from not only the international public community, but from private industry as well,'' said DeCicco.

According to the U.S. government's ''2002 Country Report on Human Rights Practices'' on Burma, the Burmese government has

''. . . continued to restrict workers rights, ban unions, and use forced labor for public works and for the support of military garrisons. Other forced labor, including child labor, remain a serious problem despite recent ordinances outlawing the practice.''

Additionally, in 2000, the International Labor Organization (ILO)—for the first time in its history—called on all ILO members to impose sanctions on Burma.

''TGA is pleased to learn that Congress, led by the U.S. Senate's historic vote on Wednesday, is taking an important step towards ending the human rights crisis that is happening in Burma today. We hope that Congress' efforts are only the first step towards international condemnation and sanctions on Burma through the United Nations,'' commented TGA Chairman Tom Sandler of Samsonite Corporation. He continued, ''TGA, through its trade policy, promotes best practices to ensure that travel goods are produced in a socially responsible manner by encouraging its members to operate under programs that are compliant with applicable labor laws. Thus, the association and its membership fully support the legislation introduced by Reps. Lantos and King, as well as Senators McConnell and Feinstein and calls upon the U.S. House of Representatives to follow the Senate's lead in the swift and immediate passage of such important legislation.''

The necessity for Congressional action is highlighted by the recent attacks of the country's ruling military junta on Nobel Laureate Aung San Suu Kyi, the leader of Burma's pro-democracy opposition, and her supporters. These attacks illustrate that Burma's regime has grown more oppressive than ever, despite worldwide condemnation.

TGA International Committee Chairman Michael Korchmar of the Leather Specialty Company, noted that, ''TGA also wants to recognize and applaud the efforts of its own members that have already imposed bans on U.S. imports of Burmese travel goods from their own firms. Thanks in large part to the efforts of TGA members, U.S. imports of travel goods from Burma fell an incredible 74 percent between 2001 and 2002.'' Furthermore, TGA applauds the efforts of numerous U.S. and international governmental and non-governmental organizations to force Burma to respect the basic human rights of its citizens.

TRAVEL GOODS ASSOCIATION,
Princeton, NJ, June 12, 2003.

POLICY STATEMENT ON BURMA, JUNE 12, 2003

The Travel Goods Association (TGA)—the national trade association of the travel goods (luggage, briefcases, handbags, backpacks, flatgoods) industry—hereby expresses its strong support for a full and immediate ban on U.S. travel goods imports from Burma and strongly encourages the U.S. government to:

Impose an immediate and total ban on U.S. imports of travel goods from Burma;

Maintain this ban until Burma's rulers demonstrate that they respect and enforce basic human and labor rights for its own citizens;

Continue both unilaterally and through multilateral organizations to exert diplomatic, economic, and political pressure on Burma to respect and enforce basic human rights for its own citizens; and Sign into law current legislation in Congress to impose such sanctions.

The TGA supports a U.S. ban on Burmese travel goods because Burma's military regime has:

Consistently rejected international demands to stop government-sanctioned forced and child labor practices against its own people;

According to the U.S. government's ''2002 Country Report on Human Rights Practices'' on Burma, ''. . . continued to restrict worker rights, ban unions, and used forced labor for public works and for the support of military garrisons. Other forced labor, including forced child labor remained a serious problem, despite recent ordinances outlawing the practice;'' and Repeatedly failed to comply with internationally recognized conventions on labor, including forced and child labor. Due to its ''widespread and systematic'' use of forced labor, the International Labor Organization (ILO) in 2000, for the first time in its history, called on all ILO members to impose sanctions on Burma.

Through its trade policy, TGA:

''Promotes best practices to ensure that goods are produced in a socially responsible manner,'' by ''Encouraging TGA members to operate under programs that foster socially responsible production practices compliant with applicable labor and environmental laws and regulations; Encouraging the United States, other governments and foreign trade associations to recognize and support programs designed to achieve these goals; and Pursuing policies that encourage development of human rights and democratic values in countries in which TGA members conduct business and discourage trade with countries that promote or support terrorism.''

Strongly supports the travel goods industry's use of effective social responsibility programs;

Applauds and supports the efforts of TGA member companies that have already imposed bans on U.S. imports of Burmese travel goods for their own firms;

Recognizes and applauds the efforts of numerous U.S. and international governmental and nongovernmental organizations to force Burma to respect the basic human rights of its citizens.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period for morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONTINUING CHALLENGES IN AFGHANISTAN

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, although our attention today is focused on the persistent attacks against U.S. Armed Forces in Iraq and the escalation of the bloodshed between Israelis and Palestinians, it is imperative that we not ignore the challenges we continue to face in Afghanistan.

In southeast Afghanistan, U.S. soldiers continue to battle with the remnants of al-Qaida and the Taliban, whose fighters have managed to regroup across the border inside Pakistan. Despite hundreds of millions of dollars in U.S. aid, the national impact has been difficult for many Afghans to see. Afghanistan is such a large, inaccessible, impoverished country that it will take many billions of dollars over many years to recover from decades of war, and that will be possible only if adequate security exists to implement these programs. Security will remain elusive as long as political and economic power outside of Kabul continues to be wielded by regional warlords.

An article by Carlotta Gall in yesterday's New York Times provides a sobering description of the continuing challenges in Afghanistan. I hope officials at USAID, the State Department, the Defense Department, and OMB took the time to read it. As with so many aid programs, we often focus on the trees and lose sight of the forest. We can point to lots of small success stories—new well dug here, a bridge repaired there, more girls enrolled in school. But when you step back the picture looks very different, as Ms. Gall's article shows.

We and our Allies have major stakes in Afghanistan's future, and I am confident that we will remain engaged. But let's do the job that needs to be done, not half measures. Without a more effective strategy to enhance security, strengthen the central government and support civil society, we will fall far short of our goals.

I ask unanimous consent that Ms. Gall's June 11, 2003, article in the New York Times entitled ''In Warlord Land, Democracy Tries Baby Steps'' be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN WARLORD LAND, DEMOCRACY TRIES BABY STEPS

KABUL, Afghanistan, June 10.—In the hushed, rose-filled gardens of the royal palace in Kabul, life seems calm and good. Under the chandeliers of the meeting hall upstairs, President Hamid Karzai, just back from a trip to Britain and a meeting with the queen, manages to combine an expression of condolence for German peacekeepers killed in a suicide bomb attack in the capital Saturday with an upbeat assessment of the situation in his country.

The heavily armed American bodyguards who stand in the gardens and by the windows of the palace have become like the wallpaper, so much are they part of the scene now. The Taliban threat in the south and southeast, the car bomber who drove this week right into the city, the persistent factional fighting in the north of the country, all seem far away.

But in the last few months there has been a crisis of confidence in Afghanistan, a sense that the security situation may be spiraling downward and that the rise of regional warlords may be more than a temporary phenomenon. Attacks on peacekeepers and aid workers are increasing. After more than a year of waiting patiently for results, people here are increasingly asking: are the Americans getting it right?

Today, as American forces in Iraq struggle to establish order, as one or two American soldiers seem to fall every day, it seems likely to be a question the United States will soon face in Iraq as well.

Even the most pessimistic Afghanistan watchers acknowledge that this time is different from the sliding chaos of the early 1990's. The Americans are not going to turn their back on Afghanistan the way they did then, and the way they did in Iraq after the Persian Gulf war in 1991. The Americans are here and, by all accounts and appearances, here to stay.

But there is only a year left for Mr. Karzai and his American backers to get things right before his term is up. The Bonn process, which set up the interim administration led by Mr. Karzai, lays out a rapid program for a new constitution to be drawn up and approved by a grand assembly this October, and for national elections to be held next June.

For Afghanistan, one key to establishing order is the disarmament of the factional armies around the country. The United Nations and Afghanistan's new Human Rights Commission have already stressed that if the much delayed disarmament and demobilization program does not go ahead, the drafting of the constitution and national elections could be thrown into jeopardy.

''There is a real, but still avoidable, risk that the Bonn process will stall if security is not extended to the regions, and that Afghans will lose confidence in the central government if it cannot protect them,'' the United Nations special representative to Afghanistan, Lakhdar Brahimi, told the Security Council in New York last month.

Another difficulty is that the allies are tackling the problems in piecemeal fashion, a strategy that will only advance the country by tiny steps, critics say.

United States diplomats and aid officials like to draw attention to a large wall map in their embassy that is covered in a ''blizzard'' of yellow Post-it stickers marking every single project under way in the country. They trumpet the provincial reconstruction teams, United States military-civil affairs teams that are trying to win hearts and minds in the provinces by building schools, or latrines for schools. And they talk of the program to train the Afghan National Army, which should produce a 9,000-member force by next year.

But the national impact of all of this is virtually nil. As one director of a donor agency, which completed 160 construction projects last year, said, ''The dimension of the destruction is such that people don't see it.''

Compared with the enormous military-political Gordian knot that needs to be cut, the attention to human needs can only be described as paltry, even irrelevant.

Little has been done to disarm and dismantle the power bases of the factions, and as time goes on the armed men who rule the districts, regions and whole provinces are becoming more and more entrenched and increasingly powerful economically. They are likely to dominate politics during the next year, which could fatally erode all public trust in the process and the results. The country could end up being ruled by a mixture of drug lords and fundamentalist mujahedeen—in other words, people not much different from the Taliban.

Everyone has a different idea of what the United States should be doing, but most Afghans and Westerners working here agree that there are two basic requirements for nation-building that the United States cannot afford to ignore—providing security and establishing a functioning political system. They are interconnected, most here agree; in fact, it is impossible to have one without the other.

Only a legitimate, national political system will have the authority to establish a police and justice system with the necessary powers to establish real security. Without real security, there can be no widespread development; American soldiers cannot stand on every street corner, or monitor every business transaction and tax collection.

The problem here, as in Iraq, is that the American military is still running the show and views Afghanistan through the prism of the campaign against terrorism and not according to the country's political and economic demands. But if Afghanistan is to seize the chance this year to start becoming a stable and prosperous society, there is much, much more to be done.

Many are saying that Washington needs to exert more political pressure—on Mr. Karzai to act more decisively on this government to work more proactively, on the police nationwide to ensure law and order, on commanders to disarm, on ministers to reform their ministries and even out the balance of power, on warlords to give up their fiefs and join the government, on Pakistan to stop supporting the Taliban and other opponents of the Bonn process. The list goes on.

All those steps would be a help. But fundamentally, the Americans need to create an atmosphere in which democratic politics can take hold. That means doing more than attending to human needs and offering military training. It means, in the view of many Western officials here and prominent Afghans, putting pressure on the warlords, disarming them and cutting their power bases, leveling the political playing field so that the coming elections are free and fair.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2003

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the need for hate crimes legislation. On May 1, 2003, Senator KENNEDY and I introduced the Local Law Enforcement Act, a bill that would add new categories to current hate crimes law, sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred in Champaign, IL. On December 16, 2001, a Muslim Tunisian-American university student was beaten by a mob of several men. Participants in the attack restrained the victim's brother and his friends to prevent them from coming to his aid. The student was beaten by more than six of the men, one of whom broke his nose with a blunt object.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

THE INDICTMENT OF CHARLES TAYLOR

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I see that the senior Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. GREGG, is on the floor. Knowing of his longstanding interest in Sierra Leone, I wonder if he wants to speak briefly about the indictment last week of Charles Taylor by the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

Mr. GREGG. I thank the Senator from Vermont. He is correct about my longstanding interest in Sierra Leone. With respect to the Special Court, I am well aware of the events of the past week, where the Prosecutor of the Court, David Crane, unsealed an indictment for Charles Taylor, while Mr. Taylor was in Ghana.

Unfortunately, the international community did not act in time and Mr. Taylor was able to escape to Liberia. In doing so, the world missed a great opportunity to bring to justice one of the world's most notorious war criminals and advance the cause of international justice.

Mr. LEAHY. I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire. I spoke about this subject last week. Since then, it has come to my attention that some officials in the State Department and other governments are upset at Mr. Crane for the timing of this indictment, as they saw it as disruptive to the peace talks in West Africa.

While I can appreciate those concerns, I agree with one of Mr. Crane's statements on this issue, which I will read:

[T]he timing of this announcement was carefully considered in light of the important peace process begun this week. To ensure the legitimacy of these negotiations, it is imperative that the attendees know they are dealing with an indicted war criminal. These negotiations can still move forward, but they must do so without the involvement of this indictee. The evidence upon which this indictment was approved raises serious questions about Taylor's suitability to be a guarantor of any deal, let alone a peace agreement.

I was wondering if Senator GREGG had any thoughts on this issue.

Mr. GREGG. I agree with Mr. Crane's statement about the indictment of Charles Taylor. As much as anyone, I want to bring peace and prosperity to West Africa. But, Mr. Crane has a mandate to bring to justice those most responsible for the atrocities committed in Sierra Leone, and the trail led to Charles Taylor. Not indicting Mr. Taylor would have been outrageous. Justice would not have been served.

I also want to read from a Washington Post editorial, dated June 5, 2003, that summarizes the issue. It said, and I am quoting:

After years of afflicting his own country with the worst kind of brutality and aiding and abetting a cruel civil war in neighboring Sierra Leone, Mr. Taylor is now being pressed on his own soil by rebel movements bent on driving him from power. That he was out of the country this week was no accident. The purpose of his trip to Ghana, organized by the Economic Community of West Africa and a United Nations contact group that includes the United States, was to join peace talks with Liberian opposition groups.

Military and political weaknesses, not strength, drove him from his haven in Liberia to the Ghana peace parley. Fear of international justice is what has sent him scurrying back home. . . . The idea of Mr. Taylor working out an eleventh-hour agreement that restores peace and stability to Liberia strikes many human rights observers as ludicrous given both his record of broken pledges and his overwhelming contribution to that country's misery. Faced with tightening international opposition, he now says he will consider stepping aside if that will bring peace. He's now even making noises about supporting a transitional government of national unity while remaining on the sidelines. Mr. Taylor, as usual, has it all wrong. He is in no position to guarantee any deal, let alone a peace agreement, as Mr. Crane said yesterday. Indicted as a war criminal, Charles Taylor today is nothing more than a wanted man.

In short, I agree with the Post's editorial and commend Mr. Crane for taking decisive action to indict Charles Taylor.

Mr. LEAHY. I share Senator GREGG's sentiments. I would also point out that Mr. Crane's office unsealed the indictment in a responsible way. According to information I received, the Special Court's chief of security was instructed to inform all organizations with personnel in Liberia, including the U.S. Embassy, Freetown, that ''within 24 hours the Special Court was going to take an action that could possibly destabilize Monrovia.'' These actions were undertaken to ensure that all government and humanitarian personnel had notice to withdraw or stay home.

This effectively ''unsealed'' the indictment to governments and humanitarian organizations without tipping Mr. Taylor off. In addition, 3 hours before the press conference and public announcement, and minutes after the Court had confirmation that Ghanaian authorities were served with the arrest warrant for Mr. Taylor, private letters were hand-delivered to all representatives of a number of key governments in Freetown.

Mr. GREGG. Does the Senator share my view that the United States and other members of the international community should continue to strongly support the Special Court and vigorously pursue Mr. Taylor and other indicted war criminals?

Mr. LEAHY. Yes. In fact, I am going to work with Senator MCCONNELL, with the goal of providing $2 million in the fiscal year 2004 foreign operations bill for additional support to the Court.

Mr. GREGG. I support the efforts of the Senator from Vermont and thank him for discussing this issue with me.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire. In closing, I would just add that there have been recent reports of a possible ''deal'' with Mr. Taylor under which he would go into exile in exchange for immunity from the Court. While I want to see an end to the fighting in West Africa, which has claimed many innocent lives, an immunity deal with Mr. Taylor would be a grave mistake. It will undermine peace and reconciliation efforts in the region. It will let a major war criminal escape justice. It would be unacceptable.

HONORING SERGEANT DUANE RIOS

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I rise today with great sadness and tremendous gratitude to honor the life of yet another brave Hoosier killed in action in Iraq. Sgt. Duane Rios of Griffith, IN was 25 years old. On Saturday, April 5, 2003, while serving as an engineer with the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force, Duane was mortally wounded. Duane had reached Eastern Baghdad, where he was killed in a firefight. Sgt. Rios was a brave American who left behind family, friends and the comforts of home to defend the principles of democracy and freedom that we all enjoy.

Duane Rios is the fourth Hoosier to be killed while bravely serving our Nation in Operation Iraqi Freedom. Today, I mourn along with Duane's family, friends, fellow Marines and community. While all are very proud of Duane, there is also a tremendous sense of loss. Duane's life was too short, yet he will always be remembered for his heroism and dedication to his country. Such a life shall serve as an inspiration to all as we continue to fight for the liberation of Iraq.

Duane Rios was a charismatic and friendly person who never passed someone without smiling and saying hello. Duane attended Griffith High School, graduating in 1996. After graduation he married his high school sweetheart, Erica. He will be greatly missed by all who knew him. It was with great pride that he left for Iraq, prepared to do his duty and was willing to make the ultimate sacrifice, if fate dictated, for a country he loved dearly.

President Chester Arthur once said: ''Men may die, but the fabrics of free institutions remain unshaken.'' These words force us to see the larger picture and give some solace as we mourn the loss of Duane Rios and honor the sacrifice he made for America and for all humanity.

It is my sad duty to enter the name of Duane Rios in the official record of the U.S. Senate for his service to this country and for his profound commitment to freedom, democracy, and peace. When I think about this just cause in which we are engaged, and the unfortunate pain that comes with the loss of our heroes, I hope that families like Duane's can find comfort in the words of the prophet Isaiah, who said: ''He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces.''

May God grant strength and peace to those who mourn the loss of such young lives, and may God bless the United States of America.

THE AMERICAN SPA: HISTORIC BATHHOUSES OF HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, on May 29, 2003, the National Trust for Historic Preservation named Bathhouse Row in Hot Springs National Park, AR, one of America's 11 Most Endangered Historic Places.

I come to the floor today to applaud the National Trust's efforts to preserve these bathhouses. I also want to bring the dire condition of these historic sites to the Senate's attention and urge my colleagues to support my and Senator LINCOLN's work to provide critical funding this year to save the eight bathhouses in Hot Springs.

During the early 1900s, a variety of bathhouses were built in Hot Springs, AR, to accommodate the thousands of travelers who sought the curative waters from 47 natural thermal springs. These bathhouses were elaborately constructed with remarkable architectural design, including stained-glass skylights and patterned mosaic floors and walls. The bathhouse provided restful baths and services—some peculiar and bizarre—that inspired the resort nickname ''The American Spa.'' In short, Bathhouse Row shaped America's ''Golden Age of Bathing'' and was internationally renowned, with the likes of Babe Ruth and the infamous Al Capone visiting the resort.

Arkansans have long known what the National Trust for Historic Preservation has announced to the Nation: that these one-of-a-kind historic treasures are on the verge of disappearing due to neglect. These amazing buildings are literally falling apart. But the story for the bathhouses doesn't have to end there. We have a plan that works for both preservationists and budget hawks. Reasonable Federal investment into reconditioning these buildings will be leveraged by private leasing agreements. Once restored, private ventures will breathe new life and usher a new generation of use into Bathhouse Row for all Americans to enjoy.

Lastly, I think that it is important to note that Congress has recognized the national importance of Hot Springs for 171 years. On April 20, 1832, the Congress had the foresight to establish Hot Springs Reservation—making it the oldest park currently in the National Park System. On March 4, 1921, Congress changed the name to Hot Springs National Park.

Today, Congress has the opportunity to act again in support of Hot Springs. I believe that our predecessors in Congress intended for the park to protect Bathhouse Row and the unique glimpse that it provides into our Nation's social and historic past.

I urge my colleagues to support funding in the fiscal year 2004 Interior appropriations bill for Bathhouse Row in Hot Springs National Park.●

SALUTING LOUISIANA FAITH IN ACTION GRANTEES

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I am proud to serve as ranking member of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, a position which allows me to focus on issues important to older Americans. One of the most critical concerns of our Nation's seniors is the need for long-term care services. And though the lack of available long-term care service is a substantial problem today, the demand for long-term care services will overwhelm an already-strained system as our Nation's 77 million baby boomers age.

Family caregivers are the cornerstone of our long-term care system, providing 80 percent of all long-term care in this country. Most older and disabled Americans prefer to remain in their own homes or in the community and many do so, thanks to the support and love of family caregivers. But we all know that family caregivers cannot provide around-the-clock care—many have jobs and children to raise. Caregiving is stressful and it places heavy emotional, physical and financial burdens on caregivers. Research shows that caregivers need a variety of services to support them in their caregiving roles. One innovative and valuable service to family caregivers is the ''Faith in Action'' program sponsored by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation.

The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, one of our Nation's leading philanthropic health care organizations, has been supporting creative programs for the delivery of health care for many years. Their Faith in Action program is a faith-based initiative which enables elderly and disabled individuals to continue to live in their homes with the support of coordinated efforts between interfaith coalitions and social service agencies including senior centers, parish councils on aging, area agencies on aging, and hospitals.

The Faith in Action program provides grant money to help these groups provide services, including organizing outreach to the homebound; training group leaders who oversee outreach ministries; locating homebound people who have lost touch with their communities; recruiting volunteers from church congregations and communities; connecting with local medical and social services; and providing emotional support services to community members. All of these organizations share a common goal—to provide long-term care to their neighbors in need.

Next week, the 14 Faith in Action grantees in Louisiana and interested faith and community leaders will join me in New Orleans for an event where we will honor the current grantees and volunteers and encourage other interested groups and individuals to become Faith in Action grantees. Together they can use their expertise and energy to make a real difference in the lives of Louisiana seniors and disabled persons.

Mr. President, today I want to recognize these 14 existing grantees in Louisiana: Rapides Station Community Ministries, Inc., The Shepherd Center, Inter-Faith Caregivers of the Greater Baton Rouge Federation of Churches & Synagogues, The Mental Health Association of Louisiana, Faith in Action of Acadiana, Love Inc., of Acadiana, Volunteers of America Inc., Boys & Girls Club of Minden, Inc., Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association Northeast/Central Louisiana Chapter, G.T. Consultants Services, Inc., St. Francis Medical Center, Uptown Area Senior Adult Ministry, Inc., H.O.P.E. Ministry, Inc., and Shreveport-Bossier Community Renewal Inc.

Thanks to their contribution to their communities, these grantees have enabled over 1100 elderly and disabled persons in Louisiana to remain at home. Keeping families together and allowing our seniors and disabled persons to live independently saves money, improves quality of life and strengthens our communities. Again, I applaud the Louisiana Faith in Action grantees, community partners and volunteers for their contribution to Louisiana families and to broadening long-term care options for the people of Louisiana.●

ON THE RETIREMENT OF MR. ADRIAN DELL ROBERTS

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President. I rise to recognize the life work of Mr. Adrian Dell Roberts as he retires from Riverside Unified School District after more than 38 years of dedicated service, leaving a legacy of community-building and a belief in the potential of young people.

Dell Roberts' ability to promote student safety, teamwork, and self-confidence has been apparent at every stage of his career with Riverside Unified School District; starting with his initial part-time position coaching track and football at Riverside Polytechnic High School in 1965, and culminating with his role as Administrative Assistant for Campus and Community Services. He also served as an administrative aid and assistant principal in charge of discipline at Riverside Polytechnic High School.

As Administrative Assistant for Campus and Community Services, Mr. Roberts has worked to identify and meet the needs of Riverside's youth. He has done much to help students and staff understand the diverse cultural values of the students in the district. Under his leadership, multi-cultural councils were established at high schools and middle schools, facilitating peaceful group problem solving. He also played a leading role in the successful formation of the Black Student Union at Riverside Polytechnic High School and is the founder and coordinator of the statewide Black Student Union.

In addition to his contributions on campus, Mr. Roberts has lent his involvement and leadership to organizations that work to improve the lives of young people and provide enriching educational and recreational resources to the Riverside community. Many, many students have had opportunities that would not have been available to them without Mr. Roberts' hard work to expand their horizons and perceptions of their own potentials.

Mr. Roberts' impressive accomplishments and affiliations are too numerous to mention in their entirety, but we can reflect on the important underlying beliefs that have guided his work. A portion of Mr. Roberts' biography includes his statement that he '' . . . has faith in our youth because they are our present as well as our future.'' Indeed, Mr. Roberts' ability to reach out in friendship and support and to inspire respect between individuals and groups has enriched the lives of countless young people. I invite all of my colleagues to join me in commending Dell Roberts for his years of loving work for the academic and personal advancement of our children.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Ms. COLLINS (for herself, Mr. CARPER, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. SUNUNU, Mr. COLEMAN, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. ALLARD, and Mr. AKAKA):

S. 1245. A bill to provide for homeland security grant coordination and simplification, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation, the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act, to streamline and strengthen the way we help our States, communities, and first responders protect our homeland. I am pleased to be joined by a number of my colleagues including Senators CARPER, ROCKEFELLER, VOINOVICH, FEINGOLD, SUNUNU, COLEMAN, PRYOR, ALLARD, and AKAKA.

Last year, the Senate spent nearly three months on the Homeland Security Act, yet the law contains virtually no guidance on how the Department is to assist State and local governments with their homeland security needs. In fact, the 187-page Homeland Security Act mentions the issue of grants to first responders in but a single paragraph. As a result, the Department of Homeland Security currently allocates billions of dollars of grant funds according to formulas borrowed from the USA Patriot Act. The Homeland Security Act left the decisions on how Federal dollars should be spent or how much money should be allocated for another day. Today is that day.

Much of the burden for homeland security has fallen on the shoulders of State and local officials across America, especially our first responders—the firefighters, police officers and ambulance crews on the front lines. Over the past months, the Committee on Governmental Affairs has listened to them describe the challenges associated with constructing effective homeland security strategies. We have also listened to State and local officials as well as Department of Homeland Security Secretary Tom Ridge. This series of three hearings looked at the issues from a variety of perspectives and helped shape the legislation we introduce today.

At our first hearing, we heard from first responders: our firefighters, law enforcement officials, and emergency medical technicians, who discussed the challenges they face protecting our communities.

Arlington Fire Chief Ed Plaugher, the incident commander at the Pentagon on September 11, told the Committee that he had received little homeland security funding since 9–11. Chief Paugher also underscored the gaps in the homeland security planning process. Many law enforcement officials shared Chief Plaughter's concerns. Portland, ME, Police Chief Mike Chitwood, for example, expressed his frustrations about the roadblocks to accessing Federal funding and the lack of coordination by Federal agencies with local jurisdictions.

Secretary Ridge testified at our second hearing. He discussed the ongoing challenges involved in providing Federal resources to States, communities and first responders. He also outlined ways we can improve the efficiency and effectiveness of homeland security grant programs to help first responders get the resources they need.

Secretary Ridge's comments underscored the need to improve the way the Department of Homeland Security's first responder grant programs are organized within the Department, and the way the Department distributes these grants.

The Committee's third hearing featured State and local officials who expressed their support for more flexibility, coordination, and simplification of Federal homeland security grant programs.

Maine's emergency manager, Art Cleaves, said the current maze of homeland security programs has caused so much paperwork that States may be forced to hire additional staff just to deal with a multiplicity of forms and planning documents.

Other witnesses, including Governor Mitt Romney of Massachusetts, outlined the need for coordinating homeland security funding across the Federal Government. Their comments underscored how communities can access funding for interoperable communications equipment through six different Federal programs, including the FIRE Act, COPS, two Department of Health and Human Services' bio-terrorism grant programs, FEMA's Emergency Management Performance Account, and ODP's State homeland security grant program. Despite the unified goals of these grants—to purchase interoperable equipment—Federal agencies are under no requirement to coordinate their efforts.

While State and local officials agreed on the need to coordinate programs and make it easier to apply for grants, Mayor Kwame Kilpatrick and Governor Romney commented on the differences between States and localities regarding how best to allocate funds, through States or directly to the local level.

I am pleased that these hearings have helped to build a consensus on this issue. Yesterday, I received a letter from State and local organizations including the National League of Cities, the National Association of Counties, and the National Governors Association, which have come together in support of our approach, to provide funds through States, but to require that eighty percent be passed through to the local level.

Our legislation will provide a map that will better connect our front-line protectors with the funding they need. It will eliminate duplicative homeland security planning requirements; make it easier to apply for grants; coordinate the many grant programs that provide homeland security funds; and promote a community-based approach to homeland security funding. I would like to briefly describe the approach we have taken.

The first provision of our legislation would promote the same kind of coordination among Federal agencies that we require of our States and localities. It would require Federal agencies to build a clear, well-marked path that would lead our first responders to the funding that enables them to do what they do best: prepare for and respond to emergencies.

Second, the legislation would coordinate government-wide homeland security funding by promoting one-stop-shopping for homeland security funding opportunities. It would establish an information clearinghouse to assist first responders and State and local governments in accessing homeland security grant information and other resources within the new department. The clearinghouse would improve access to homeland security grant information, coordinate technical assistance for vulnerability and threat assessments, provide information regarding homeland security best practices, and compile information regarding homeland security equipment purchased with Federal funds.

The legislation also recognizes the importance of building on existing successful programs, such as the FIRE Act, which provides funding directly to fire departments for equipment and training on a competitive, peer reviewed basis. It would allow the FIRE Act to continue to be administered in its current form, but would coordinate its activities with other Federal programs. For example, it would make sure that two neighboring jurisdictions receiving funding from the FIRE Act are aware of industry standards regarding the interoperability of communications equipment.

The third provision of our legislation would strengthen the Office for Domestic Preparedness's State Homeland Security Grant Program by simplifying the grant process, promoting more local input in homeland security funding, and promoting more flexibility in the use of funds.

The lack of guidance in the Homeland Security Act has forced State and local governments and first responders to engage in a 12-step odyssey to obtain funding from ODP's State homeland security grant program. And this program is just one of several homeland security grant programs to which a State, locality, police, or fire department can apply.

The legislation distills the homeland security grant process from twelve steps to two. First, State and local governments and emergency responders will develop a three-year homeland security plan that outlines vulnerabilities and capabilities, and a process for allocating resources to meet State and local needs. This plan will also require the development of measurable goals and objectives, such as increasing the number of local jurisdictions participating in local and statewide exercises. Second, States and communities will apply for funds based on this plan, which they can revise each year pending approval from the Secretary.

This legislation would ensure that local government officials and first responders have a louder voice in the homeland security planning process and can access homeland security dollars and equipment in an efficient manner. It would also require that eighty percent of these resources reach the local level within sixty days of the grant allocation.

When I met with the Maine fire chiefs, they expressed concerns about the lack of flexibility in homeland security funding, especially in the area of overtime costs for training. They told me that since homeland security funds cannot be used for most overtime costs, some of Maine's firefighters have been forced to turn down training opportunities at the National Fire Academy. Because there was no funding to pay the overtime costs for someone to fill in while the firefighter trained at the Academy, they had to forego this valuable training opportunity.

Our legislation would address their concerns by allowing funds to be used not only for planning, equipment, exercises, and training, but also for certain overtime costs associated with training activities.

Our legislation also recognizes that certain high threat areas have critical vulnerabilities that must be addressed immediately. This legislation will direct the Secretary to use ten percent of total funding for this program to address these critical vulnerabilities. While this provision provides flexibility, it requires that any direct funding be consistent with the State plan. Furthermore, this legislation formally authorizes the Emergency Management Preparedness Grant, which provides resources to the backbone of our emergency management structure, and ensures an adequate level of funding under this program.

While some States and communities face a more imminent threat, our Nation must provide for the safety of all of our citizens. This grant program maintains the current baseline level of homeland security assistance to each State. It then allocates the bulk of the funds not based solely on population, as is the case now, but on risk assessments undertaken for each State.

Right now, States and localities must complete numerous homeland security plans, each with its own set of questions and benchmarks. Terrorists will not be deterred by paperwork or by communities answering the same question six different ways.

That's why our legislation would streamline the planning process by requiring a single set of cooperatively developed performance standards to help States and localities evaluate homeland security plans.

When I met with officials of Maine's Emergency Management Agency, they told me that the rigid structure of many homeland security grant programs frustrates their efforts to help first responders secure communities across our State.

In past years, for example, the Office for Domestic Preparedness's homeland security grant program allocated the same percentage of each State's funds for training, equipment, exercises, and planning, thus leaving no room to accommodate different States' priorities. In allocating funds this way, the Federal Government effectively said that Maine must spend exactly the same portion of its homeland security dollars on training as Hawaii. Moreover, States cannot transfer surplus funds from one category to another to meet their needs.

As a result, Maine may be forced to return some of the Homeland Security funds allocated for exercises. This one size fits all formula used in past homeland security funding makes no sense. I believe all States and communities should have the flexibility to spend homeland security dollars where they are most needed. That is why this legislation would allow flexibility in homeland security funds that have already been appropriated but remain unspent.

The current homeland security grant structure is unacceptable. Secretary Ridge has done an admirable job distributing billions of dollars of homeland security funds based on borrowed authorities and with no real guidance. It is time to deal the Secretary a full hand of cards and give our States, localities, and first responders a straight path to homeland security programs, not a maze. We must topple the mountain of paperwork. We must help, not hinder, our front-line defenders.

I urge my colleagues to join me in sponsoring this legislation to build a stronger and better homeland security partnership in the months and years ahead.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I rise today to join my friend from Maine, Ms. COLLINS, in introducing the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act of 2003, legislation that greatly improves the method currently used to distribute much-needed first responder aid.

When my colleagues and I on the Governmental Affairs Committee worked last year under Senator LIEBERMAN's leadership to create the Department of Homeland Security, we all hoped that what we were setting up would help the Federal Government be better able to prevent and respond to terrorist attacks. As of March 1st of this year, we have in place the skeleton of an organization that aims to pull together under one roof information on threats and vulnerabilities and use that information to improve security and prepare first responders.

As I've pointed out a number of times, however, no matter how well Secretary Ridge does his work on the Federal level, we will not be much safer than we were on September 10, 2001 unless our first responders are better prepared to do their work on the local level. While homeland security should certainly be a shared responsibility, it is vitally important that the Federal Government does its part to provide each State and its first responders with the assistance necessary to ensure that the citizens they serve are adequately protected. The Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act is an important step toward making this happen.

Today, States, localities and first responders can receive Federal assistance from a number of different aid programs administered by several different agencies. All of the programs serve different purposes and require different applications. The Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act sets up a process to streamline these programs to allow them to work well together and avoid imposing redundant or duplicative requirements on applicants. The aim is not to eliminate programs, but to ensure that existing homeland security and homeland security-related grant programs are well coordinated and impose as small an administrative burden on applicants as possible.

The Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act also creates a ''one-stop shop'' for grant information within the Department of Homeland Security by moving the Office of Domestic Preparedness, ODP, the agency within the Department of Homeland Security charged with administering the current state homeland security grant program, from the Directorate for Border and Transportation Security to the Office for State and Local Government Coordination. In its new location, ODP will operate a ''clearinghouse'' for grant information that would offer services such as a toll-free hotline and a list of recommended first responder equipment. ODP will also maintain a compilation of ''best practices'' made up of successful homeland security programs from across the country and offer states technical assistance in developing the terrorism risk assessments that will be a part of the new State grant program.

Most importantly, the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act also makes key improvements to the formula for distributing first responder aid among the States. The new formula maintains the requirement that all money go to State governments and that 80 percent of that money be passed through to cities and localities. It also maintains the current small state minimum in which each State receives an equal share of 40 percent of funds made available for state grants. It makes a major improvement, however, by dividing the remaining 60 percent of the money among the states according to an analysis of potential threats in each State.

The current formula for distributing first responder aid ignores the fact that Delaware, though small in population, is located in the Northeast midway between New York and Washington. It ignores the fact that Delaware is home to a major port, oil refineries and chemical plants. It ignores the fact that Delaware every day hosts scores of ships, trains and trucks on their way to destinations up and down the East Coast. It also ignores the fact that Delaware is home to the Dover Air Force Base, a facility that played a crucial role in the recent conflicts in Afghanistan and Iraq.

I understand the need to give larger States, especially those with densely populated urban areas, enough resources to protect their larger populations. No State, however, should be less safe than its neighbors simply because it has a smaller population. The Federal Government should be working to bring every state and locality to the point where they are capable of responding effectively to any potential threat. I am concerned that the current formula, based mostly on population does not prepare all States adequately.

The Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act still requires that population be taken into account when distributing first responder aid. However, it adds the requirement that the Secretary of Homeland Security also account for threats and risk to critical infrastructure identified in State risk assessments that would be submitted to the department as part of the grant application process. The bill also ensures that all localities within States get their fair share of money by requiring that local leaders be included in the planning and application process in each state and that the distribution method a given state will use once it receives its money is approved by the department before a check is cut.

Finally, the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act gives states new flexibility in spending their first responder aid by incorporating provisions from S. 838, legislation Ms. COLLINS and I introduced in April. That bill allows States to apply for a waiver from the Department of Homeland Security so that they can move their first responder aid around between the four categories—equipment, training, exercises and planning—in which it is sent to them. This change will allow States to better meet needs identified in their State terrorism response plans.

I applaud the Senator from Maine for her leadership on these important issues. I look forward to working with her and all of my colleagues in getting this important legislation passed and signed into law as soon as possible.

S. 1248. A bill to reauthorize the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, today, I join my esteemed colleague, the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, in introducing the Individuals with Disabilities Education Improvement Act of 2003.

In the past, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, IDEA, bills received bipartisan votes at the end of a long, divisive and arduous process. What makes today's introduction of a bipartisan IDEA bill so unique is that it is bipartisan in its inception.

The reason this is a bipartisan bill is because it strikes the appropriate balance between protecting the educational rights of children with disabilities while simultaneously making IDEA less litigious and compliance based. Above all, the bill is designed to ensure that IDEA resources are directed to help children with disabilities obtain the same opportunity to succeed as all other students.

The bill streamlines State and local requirements to ensure that paperwork focuses on improved results for children with disabilities. By eliminating the need for an 800+ procedural checklist, these amendments favor the improvement of educational and functional results for children with disabilities over burdensome bureaucratic rules.

The bill responds to concerns that we've heard from both parents and school administrators alike on how the law has evolved into a full employment government program for lawyers. Over and over again, we hear of fights about past procedural issues and technical errors instead of making sure that the children are being well served in the here and now.

The bill includes many common sense provisions to alleviate the stress in disagreements between schools and parents and encourages them to seek out mediation to address their concerns before they move to formal hearings. The bill restores trust by; providing parents with better access to information and resources to understand their rights and work through conflicts; making clear that parents can request an initial evaluation of a child for IDEA services and making it easier for parents to make changes to their child's individual education plan; requiring complaints of either the school or parents to be clear and specific before going to due process; and requiring hearing officers to make decisions based upon substantive grounds not technical issues that have no bearing on a child's education.

This bill currently does not specifically address the issue of full funding, because Senator KENNEDY and I decided at the very outset to postpone that issue to the floor, since that is an issue that merits the attention and active participation of the entire Senate. However, in addition to simplifying funding formulas so that both States and local school districts have a better indication of the funding available, the bill includes 2 key provisions that will provide additional fiscal relief for school districts than what is provided to them under current law.

First, we allow school districts to treat 8 percent of their IDEA funds as local funds. This will allow school districts to better align funding among programs based on local priorities. Second, we require States to reserve 2 percent of their overall IDEA Part B grant to establish risk pool accounts to provide new resources to assist local school districts and charter schools in addressing the costs of providing services to high-need children and unanticipated enrollment of students with disabilities.

Finally, the bill addresses the discipline provisions in current law that schools and parents have found to be confusing, hard to administer, and have resulted in outcomes that were not always fair to every child. The bill simplifies the framework for schools to administer the law, while ensuring the rights and the safety of all children.

Importantly, the bill will require schools to consider whether a child's behavior was the result of their disability when considering disciplinary action, and ensure that individualized education plans contain positive behavioral interventions and supports when a child's behavior impedes his or her own learning, or that of others.

Senator KENNEDY and I were determined to make this a bipartisan process from the beginning. We have crafted a bill that we're confident will be overwhelmingly supported by both Republicans and Democrats—and most importantly by parents, the disabled community and the school community.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is a privilege to join with Senator GREGG to introduce the reauthorization of the Individuals with Disabilities Act. Our goal is a quality education for every disabled child.

We know that education opens the golden door of opportunity for every child, and it is especially important for children with disabilities. Since it was first enacted, IDEA has opened that door and helped millions of children with disabilities to lead independent and productive lives. For them, IDEA has been the difference between dependence and independence, between lost potential and productive careers.

The need for IDEA is greater now than ever. Over 6 million children with disabilities rely on the Act to obtain the same learning opportunities as their non-disabled fellow students.

We know that schools need Federal help to make IDEA work. Over the last two years we have listened to students, parents, teachers, and school administrators. We have weighed thousands of comments on the most effective ways to live up to the great promise of this law.

They told us they needed stronger enforcement of IDEA. This bill provides it, by giving the Secretary of Education and State education agencies greater power and new ways to measure compliance and impose sanctions when schools fail to live up to the standards we've set.

They told us they needed stronger accountability. This bill provides it, by requiring schools to meet strict benchmarks for student achievement, by providing better delivery of transition services, and by dealing with the overrepresentation of minorities in IDEA.

They told us they wanted a stronger and more flexible Individualized Education Program. This bill provides it, by requiring that every student's plan contain positive ways to support the child and to increase parental involvement.

They told us they wanted to protect students from being expelled from school because of their disability. This bill provides it, by requiring schools to determine whether a child's behavior is the result of the disability, or the lack of other supports that should have been provided.

They told us they wanted better teachers in the classroom—as well-trained as other teachers. This bill provides it, by requiring all special education teachers to be highly qualified by 2007, and by designating 100 percent of State improvement grants to support professional development of teachers.

They told us they wanted more help for their children in the transition from school to college or to work. This bill provides it, by giving greater access to the vocational rehabilitation system and taking other steps to assist the child in meeting post-secondary goals.

The debate over how best to fund these reforms goes on. Schools urgently need the resources to make the IDEA a reality. It is not enough to provide only some of the promised federal aid. We must find a way to fully fund IDEA, because every dollar lost is another child that slips through the cracks.

We will have an opportunity to debate this issue and others in our committee and in the Senate in the weeks ahead. I look forward to these debates and to working with Senator GREGG and all our colleagues to make this bill even stronger.

By Ms. MURKOWSKI:

S. 1253. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a minimum credit of $200 per month for stay-at-home parents, to allow the dependent care credit to be taken against the minimum tax, and to allow a carryforward of any unused dependent care credit; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I have come to the floor today to introduce legislation that will help many young families in America meet the financial challenges associated with raising children. The legislation I am introducing attempts to alleviate some of the financial costs incurred by the more than one out of three families when one of the parents decides to leave the work force to raise children at home.

Current tax law recognizes that when both parents remain in the work force, they incur additional child care costs because, in order to keep their jobs, they have to pay for day care services. Current tax law provides a sliding scale tax credit that allows parents to claim a tax credit of up to 35 percent to offset as much as $3,000 of day care costs for one child, $6,000 for two or more children. The maximum $1,050 tax credit, $2,100 for two or more children, phases down as income rises. The minimum, 20 percent credit, applies to families with incomes above $43,000.

I strongly support this dependent care tax credit because it makes it easier for husbands and wives to maintain their careers and provide for their families. However, there are many families that have made the decision that one of the parents will give up a job in order to raise their children. In fact, this is a growing trend. In 2001, 37.7 percent of families had one parent at home raising the child; that's up from 35.3 percent in 1995. And the stay-at-home parent is, overwhelmingly, the mother. Barely 3.6 percent of stay-at-home parents are husbands.

When a working woman makes the decision to interrupt her career to raise her child, the family incurs an immediate financial penalty. And more often than not, the career interruption may damage the woman's future earnings potential, what some have referred to as the ''Mommy Track.''

The immediate loss of income when a parent leaves the workforce significantly changes the family's lifestyle. For example, consider a childless couple where the husband earns $35,000 and the wife earns $27,000. After paying Federal income and payroll taxes, the family retains slightly more than $50,000 in disposable income. If the family has a child, and both parents continue their careers, after taxes they still will keep more than $49,000 of their earnings, even if they incur child care expenses of $3,000. However, in this example, if the father gives up his job, the family's disposable income drops by nearly 40 percent to less than $32,000. Put another way, the family's monthly income drops from $4,100 to $2,700. That's a difficult adjustment for any family, especially one that has to incur the additional costs of a newborn.

I respect the parents who choose to maintain their careers while raising a family and the parents who make the financial sacrifice to give up their careers to raise a family. But I believe the tax code should treat both equally.

My legislation attempts to alleviate the current inequity in the code by giving stay-at-home moms or dads a $200 a month tax credit. This credit would be indexed for inflation. The credit would apply until the child reaches the age of 6. While this credit could never make up the financial loss that families face when one of the parents stops working, it will provide some important financial relief to these families. In the example I cited earlier, if the father did not work for a full year, the $2,400 tax credit would completely eliminate the family's $1,500 Federal tax bill, giving the family that much more to spend on their living expenses.

In addition, under this proposal, any unused tax credits could be carried forward indefinitely. Many parents who leave the work force to raise their children return to work when their kids enter school. By allowing the carry forward of unused credits, the parent who re-enters the work force will be able to keep more of his or her earnings to make up for the financial sacrifice made when choosing to stay home with the family. I think it is only fair that society recognize the financial sacrifice these parents have made.

Congress recently acted to eliminate the marriage penalty. We should now act to eliminate the penalty imposed on families when a parent leaves the workforce to raise a child at home. It makes sense for our families and it is good tax policy.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. KERRY:

S. 1254. A bill to amend the Small Business Act to direct the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to establish a vocational and technical entrepreneurship development program; to the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today as Ranking Member of the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship to introduce the Vocational and Technical Entrepreneurship Development Act of 2003, which is the companion bill to H.R. 1387, which bears the same name and was reintroduced in the House by Congressman ROBERT BRADY of Pennsylvania earlier this year.

I want to commend Representative BRADY for his hard work on behalf of small businesses not just from his home State of Pennsylvania but for every trades industry entrepreneur that has ever attempted to open his or her own business.

Often Americans who work in the trade sector—construction, plumbing, electrical work etc.—enter these professions with the goal of one day starting a business; however many of these aspiring business owners who partake in career training or vocational training in certain trades, unfortunately, fail to obtain the necessary education in the successful growth and development of their newly formed business. This initiative would develop a program that allows workers within the trades industry to move toward starting a new business.

The purpose of the Vocational and Technical Entrepreneurship Development Act is to assist in the development of curricula that will encourage the successful growth of small businesses. This legislation passed the House last Congress on October 2, 2001 and was subsequently taken up and passed by this Committee last Congress, but was not taken up by the full Senate.

The bill, in a business-education partnership, establishes a ''vocational entrepreneurship development demonstration program,'' under which the SBA would provide grants, through the Small Business Development Centers program, to provide technical assistance to high school and technical career institutes, Vo-Tech schools, to promote small business ownership in their curriculum.

The SBDC program is designed to deliver such up-to-date counseling, training and technical assistance in all aspects of small business management and is the ideal candidate to provide such a program. Each grant awarded under this program will be worth over $200,000—which, in today's environment where Vo-Tech programs get shortchanged in government education budgets, can do a great deal to help rebuild a worker-strapped trades industry.

I urge all of my colleagues to support Vocational and Technical Entrepreneurship Development Act.

By Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. ENSIGN, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. BINGAMAN, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. MILLER, Mr. CRAIG, and Ms. STABENOW):

S. 1255. A bill to amend the Small Business Act to direct the Administrator of the Small Business Administration to establish a pilot program to provide regulatory compliance assistance to small business concerns, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from Nevada, Senator JOHN ENSIGN, and the cosponsors of our legislation in reintroducing the National Small Business Regulatory Assistance Act.

The bill we are reintroducing today is the same Cleland-Kerry legislation that was introduced last Congress, and it is the companion to Congressman SWEENEY's bill, H.R. 205, which bears the same name as our legislation. The Sweeney bill recently passed the House overwhelmingly, 417–4, with the strong support of the House Committee on Small Business, as it did in the 107th. Our Senate version, which is nearly identical to the Sweeney bill, passed the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship last year but was not taken up by the full Senate. Because Senator ENSIGN and I are fully committed to helping small business owners understand and navigate complicated government regulations, we are reintroducing this legislation, the National Small Business Regulatory Assistance Act.

Small businesses, particularly small businesses with very few employees, often face an overwhelming task when seeking advice on how to comply with Federal regulations, especially when implementation varies for different regions of the country, or from state to state. Many small businesses fail to comply with important and needed labor and environmental regulations not because they want to break the law, but because they are unaware of the actions they need to take to comply. Often, small businesses are afraid to seek guidance from Federal agencies for fear of exposing problems at their businesses.

One important way to help small businesses comply with Federal regulations is to provide them with free, confidential advice outside of the normal relationship between a small business and a regulatory agency. The Small Business Administration's, SBA, Small Business Development Centers, SBDCs, are in a unique position to provide this type of assistance.

Our bill establishes a pilot program to award competitive grants to 20 selected SBDCs, two from each SBA region, which would allow these SBDCs to provide regulatory compliance assistance to small businesses. The SBA would be authorized to award grants between $150,000 and $300,000, depending on the population of the SBDC's state.

Under our legislation, the SBDCs would need to form partnerships with Federal compliance programs, conduct educational and training activities and offer free-of-charge compliance counseling to small business owners. Further, the measure would guarantee privacy to those who receive compliance assistance, which is integral to the reaching out to as many small businesses as possible. This privacy provision has also been extended to all small businesses that seek any assistance from their local SBDC.

The legislation we are reintroducing today uses only SBA funds and will serve to complement current small business development assistance as well as existing compliance assistance programs. Versions of this legislation introduced in previous Congresses used Environmental Protection Agency, EPA, enforcement funds to pay for these grants.

Small businesses can succeed when it comes to complying with Federal regulations, if provided with the necessary tools and information. The National Small Business Regulatory Assistance Act will go a long way toward assisting our Nation's small businesses that want to comply with Federal regulations.

I am pleased to say that we have the full support of the Association of Small Business Development Centers, which has been working closely with us since January of last year to draft the Senate version of this legislation, as well as support from National Small Business United, the American Industrial Hygiene Association, and Congressman SWEENEY.

I want to express my sincere thanks to Senator ENSIGN for his hard work and continued support on this issue. I urge all of my colleagues to support this legislation.

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself and Mr. LUGAR);

S. 1256. A bill to protect the critical aquifers and watersheds that serve as a principal water supply for Puerto Rico, to protect the tropical forests of the Karst Region, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I am proud to introduce, along with Senator LUGAR, the Puerto Rico Karst Conservation Act of 2003.

This very important bill will provide protection for Puerto Rico's karst region by helping to maintain biodiversity within the tropical forest ecosystem and to protect its valuable aquifers and watersheds. The area is threatened by development which, if unabated, could cause permanent damage to its outstanding natural and environmental assets.

Karst is permeable and soluble limestone that originated millions of years ago. The land identified in the bill contains the last remnants of tropical forests that once covered the island. This area, including the habitats of many endangered and threatened species and tropical birds, is home to over 1,300 species of plants and animals.

The area also provides drinking water through subterranean aquifers to many of the island's citizens. Sixty-four percent of Puerto Rico's aquifer area is contained within the northern karst belt. This aquifer area discharges approximately 120 million gallons of water per day, of which the citizens of Puerto Rico consume 52 million gallons per day. The pharmaceutical industry is one of the mainstays of Puerto Rico's economy and it is dependent on the area's fresh water supplies as well.

An August 2001 U.S. Forest Service report, Puerto Rican Karst: A Vital Resource, documents the ecologically unique and scientifically valuable karst region, stating ''the northern limestone contains Puerto Rico's most extensive freshwater aquifer, largest continuous expanse of mature forest, and largest coastal wetlands, estuary,and underground cave system. The karst belt is extremely diverse, and its multiple land forms, concentrated in such a small area, make it unique in the world.'' It should come as no surprise, then, that Forest Service Chief dale Bosworth has expressed his strong support for the protection of the karst.

The Puerto Rico Karst Conservation Act of 2003 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out land acquisition by using funds from a Conservation Fund created by the Act, and from the Forest Legacy Program, the Land and Water Conservation Fund and other sources. The legislation also authorizes the Secretary to make grants to and enter into agreements with the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, other federal agencies, organizations, and corporations for the acquisition, protection, and management of land in the region. In addition, the bill makes this region eligible for inclusion under the Forest Legacy Program.

I want to thank Senator LUGAR for co-sponsoring the Puerto Rico Karst Conservation Act of 2003. His strong support for this legislation and his steadfast commitment to tropical forest conservation is invaluable. It is also important to note that Representative ACEVEDO-VILÁ and Representative DUNCAN have just introduced this measure in the House of Representatives where, I'm told, it has strong bipartisan support.

I am proud to introduce this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support this important bill. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 167—RECOGNIZING THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF THE HARLEY-DAVIDSON MOTOR COMPANY, WHICH HAS BEEN A SIGNIFICANT PART OF THE SOCIAL, ECONOMIC, AND CULTURAL HERITAGE OF THE UNITED STATES AND MANY OTHER NATIONS AND A LEADING FORCE FOR PRODUCT AND MANUFACTURING INNOVATION THROUGHOUT THE 20TH CENTURY

Mr. CAMPBELL (for himself, Mr. KOHL, Mr. ALLARD, and Mr. SANTORUM) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 167

Whereas in 1903, boyhood friends, hobby designers, and tinkerers William S. Harley, then 21 years old, and Arthur Davidson, then 20 years old, completed the design and manufacture of their first motorcycle, with help from Arthur Davidson's brothers, Walter Davidson and William A. Davidson;

Whereas, also in 1903, Harley and the Davidson brothers completed 2 additional motorcycles in a makeshift ''factory'' shed in the Davidson family's backyard at the corner of 38th Street and Highland Boulevard in Milwaukee, Wisconsin;

Whereas the design features and construction quality of the early Harley-Davidson motorcycles proved significantly more innovative and durable than most other motorcycles of the era, giving Harley-Davidson a distinct competitive advantage;

Whereas in 1905, Walter Davidson won the first of many motorcycle competition events, giving rise to a strong tradition of victory in motorcycle racing that continues today;

Whereas in 1906, Harley-Davidson Motor Company constructed its first building, financed by the Davidsons' uncle James McClay, on the site of the Company's current world headquarters one block north of the Davidson home site, and manufactured 50 motorcycles that year;

Whereas in 1907, Harley-Davidson Motor Company was incorporated and its 18 employees purchased shares;

Whereas in 1908, the first motorcycle for police duty was delivered to the Detroit Police Department, beginning Harley-Davidson's long and close relationship with law enforcement agencies;

Whereas in 1909, to enhance power and performance, Harley-Davidson added a second cylinder to its motorcycle, giving birth to its hallmark 45-degree V-Twin configuration and the legendary Harley-Davidson sound;

Whereas during the years 1907 through 1913, manufacturing space at least doubled every year, reaching nearly 300,000 square feet by 1914;

Whereas Arthur Davidson, during Harley-Davidson's formative years, set up a worldwide dealer network that would serve as the focal point of the company's ''close to the customer'' philosophy;

Whereas Harley-Davidson, early in its history began marketing motorcycles as a sport and leisure pursuit, thus laying the groundwork for long-term prosperity;

Whereas in 1916, Harley-Davidson launched ''The Enthusiast'' magazine, which today is the longest running continuously published motorcycle magazine in the world;

Whereas also in 1916, Harley-Davidson motorcycles saw their first military duty in skirmishes in border disputes along the United States border with Mexico;

Whereas in World War I, Harley-Davidson supplied 17,000 motorcycles for dispatch and scouting use by the Allied armed forces, and whereas the first Allied soldier to enter Germany after the signing of the Armistice was riding a Harley-Davidson motorcycle;

Whereas by 1920, Harley-Davidson was the world's largest motorcycle manufacturer, both in terms of floor space and production, with continual engineering and design innovation;

Whereas during the Great Depression of the 1930s, the company survived when all but 1 other domestic motorcycle manufacturer failed, on the strength of its product quality, the loyalty of its employees, dealers, and customers, steady police and commercial business, and a growing international presence;

Whereas in 1936, Harley-Davidson demonstrated foresight, resolve, and faith in the future by introducing the company's first overhead valve engine, the ''Knucklehead'' as it would come to be known, on its Model EL motorcycle, thus establishing the widely recognized classic Harley-Davidson look and the company's reputation for styling;

Whereas Harley-Davidson workers in 1937 elected to be represented by the United Auto Workers of America, thus launching a proud tradition of working with Harley-Davidson to further build the company through advocacy and the development of effective programs and policies;

Whereas William H. Davidson, son of the late founder William A. Davidson, became president of Harley-Davidson in 1942 and would lead the company until 1971;

Whereas Harley-Davidson built more than 90,000 motorcycles for United States and Allied armed forces use during World War II, earning 4 Army-Navy ''E'' Awards for excellence in wartime production;

Whereas Harley-Davidson, during the 1950s and 1960s, recharged its sales and popularity with new models, including the Sportster and the Electra Glide, new engines, and other technological advances;

Whereas the Company developed the concept of the ''factory custom'' motorcycle with the 1971 introduction of the Super Glide and the 1977 Low Rider, under the design leadership of William ''Willie G'' Davidson, vice president of Styling and grandson of company founder William A. Davidson;

Whereas since 1980, as a national corporate sponsor of the Muscular Dystrophy Association, Harley-Davidson has raised more than $40,000,000 through company, dealer, customer, and supplier contributions, to fund research and health services;

Whereas in 1981, a group of 13 Harley-Davidson executives, led by chairman and CEO Vaughn Beals purchased Harley-Davidson from its then corporate parent AMF Incorporated;

Whereas by 1986, Harley-Davidson, against incredible odds, restored the company's reputation for quality and innovation and returned the company to vitality, thus ensuring a highly successful initial public stock offering;

Whereas throughout the 1980s and 1990s, Harley-Davidson became a national role model for positive labor-management relations, product innovation, manufacturing quality and efficiency and phenomenal growth;

Whereas President Ronald Reagan, President William J. Clinton, and President George W. Bush all have visited Harley-Davidson manufacturing facilities and extolled the example set by Harley-Davidson through its practices;

Whereas the Harley Owners Group, with more than 800,000 members and 1,200 chapters worldwide, is celebrating its 20th anniversary year in 2003 as a driving force in the company's heralded ''close to the customer'' operating philosophy; and

Whereas Harley-Davidson Motor Company is today the world's leading seller of large displacement (651 cc plus) motorcycles, with annual revenues in excess of $4,000,000,000, annual motorcycle shipments in excess of 290,000 units, strong international sales, and 17 consecutive years of annual revenue and earnings growth since becoming a publicly held company: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) recognizes the achievements of Harley-Davidson Motor Company, widely regarded as a tremendous American business success story and one of the top performing companies in America, as its employees, retirees, suppliers, dealers, customers, motorcycle enthusiasts, and friends worldwide commemorate and celebrate its 100th anniversary milestone;

(2) recognizes the great impact that Harley-Davidson has had on the business, social, and cultural landscape and lives of Americans and citizens of all nations, as a quintessential icon of Americana; and

(3) congratulates the Harley-Davidson Motor Company for this achievement and trusts that Harley-Davidson will have an even greater impact in the 21st century and beyond as a leading force for innovative business practices and products that will continue to provide enjoyment, transportation, and delight for generations to come.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, today I am submitting a resolution to pay tribute to the Harley-Davidson Motor Company in honor of this great American company's 100th anniversary. I am pleased to be joined by my colleagues, Senators KOHL, ALLARD and SANTORUM.

As a long-time Harley-Davidson rider, I have enjoyed many years of satisfaction with the company and its legendary machines.

I can tell you that there is no better way to enjoy Colorado's great scenic beauty than from the saddle of a Harley-Davidson, the freedom of the open road and the often imitated, but never duplicated, throaty roar of an American-made machine is something that I have thoroughly enjoyed for countless thousands of miles.

Harley-Davidson not only makes great motorcycles, it also exemplifies the kind of company that I am proud to support. From its humble beginnings in a small 10 foot by 15 foot shed in a Milwaukee backyard in 1903, this company had its share of good times and bad. The Great Depression was a major blow to the American motorcycle industry, and when the dust finally cleared Harley-Davidson was one of only two U.S. motorcycle manufacturers left standing.

And it is a good thing that Harley-Davidson survived because when World War II erupted, our country needed to call on Harley-Davidson to build bikes for U.S. and Allied troops. Many of the military orders and other intelligence messages that were vital to achieving victory would not have been delivered to the front lines if it had not been for brave G.I. messengers riding Harley-Davidson motorcycles.

Following the Allied Victory in War World II, the Harley-Davidson Company refocused on developing new styles of motorcycles for the individual American consumer to enjoy. The company's second generation of management brought fresh ideas that helped usher in the celebrated ''motorcycle culture'' of the 1950's and 60's.

When Harley-Davidson hit a rough patch of road in the 1980's it was a daring combination of re-found independence, innovation and serious re-engineering that brought this legendary company back from the brink. Harley-Davidson successfully carried out a classic textbook comeback that exemplifies many of our nation's best traits: independence, daring, grit, tenacity, smarts, and a penchant for continuous innovation and progress while remaining firmly rooted in our heritage.

On that note, I conclude my tribute to the people of Harley-Davidson with my congratulations on 100 amazing years. I, and many others, look forward to many more.

I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting passage of this important resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 168—DESIGNATING MAY 2004 AS ''NATIONAL MOTORCYCLE SAFETY AND AWARENESS MONTH''

Mr. CAMPBELL (for himself and Mr. ALLARD) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 168

Whereas the United States of America is the world leader in motorcycle safety, promoting education, training, and motorcycle awareness;

Whereas motorcycles occupy a very important position in the history of this Nation and of the world;

Whereas over two-thirds of car-motorcycle crashes and nearly one-half of all motorcycle crashes are caused by car drivers, not by motorcyclists;

Whereas of the 1,400 fatal car-motorcycle crashes in 2001, 36 percent involved another vehicle violating the motorcyclist's right-of-way by turning left while the motorcycle was going straight, passing, or overtaking the vehicle;

Whereas although the motorcycling community has made efforts to mitigate these right-of-way crashes through enhancing motorcycle awareness via billboards, posters, media, and other campaigns, the message to ''watch for motorcycles'' continues to go unheeded by the general motoring public;

Whereas the motorcycling community has invested considerable time and effort to improve its safety record through safety initiatives such as increased rider training and licensing campaigns, but many times demand for rider training exceeds enrollment capacity and the programs often lack support from the larger traffic safety community;

Whereas the larger traffic safety community, highway designers, law enforcement, the medical community, designers of other vehicles, government, researchers working in related areas, insurers, and all road users can accomplish much more toward improving motorcycle safety;

Whereas the motorcycle is an efficient vehicle which conserves fuel, has little impact on our overworked roads and highway system, is an important mode of transportation involving such activities as commuting, touring, and recreation, and promotes friendship by attracting riders from all over the world through various clubs and organizations;

Whereas the month of May marks the traditional start of the motorcycle riding season; and

Whereas, due to the increased number of motorcycles on the road, it is appropriate to set aside the month of May 2004 to promote motorcycle awareness and safety and to encourage all citizens to safely share the roads and highways of this great Nation by paying extra attention to those citizens who ride motorcycles: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates May 2004 as ''National Motorcycle Safety and Awareness Month''; and

(2) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the month with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, today I submit a resolution to designate May 2004 as National Motorcycle Safety and Awareness Month. As many of you know, the month of May marks the traditional start of the motorcycle riding season.

Motorcycles have become a big part of the American landscape and occupy a very important position in the history of this Nation. The use of motorcycles has served this country well through numerous military campaigns as well as playing a pivotal role in law enforcement. For many Americans, motorcycles have become their sole source of transportation and for others, a form of weekend recreation. According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, there are well over four million motorcycles registered in this country. It is no secret that the United States is viewed as the world's leader in motorcycle safety and motorcycle awareness.

As a motorcycle enthusiast for more than 50 years, I am concerned that more needs to be done to educate the general motoring public about motorcycle safety and awareness. According to the American Motorcycle Association, over two-thirds of car-motorcycle crashes, and nearly half of all motorcycle crashes are caused by auto drivers, not by motorcyclists. Think of it: Most drivers, when leaving an intersection, look right and left for cars and trucks, not always for motorcycles. Of the 1,400 fatal car-motorcycle crashes in 2001, 36 percent involved another vehicle violating the motorcyclist's right-of-way by turning left while the motorcycle was going straight, passing, or overtaking the vehicle. These statistics can and must be addressed.

The motorcycling community has made efforts to mitigate these right-of-way crashes through enhancing motorcycle awareness via bill boards, posters, media and other campaigns, the message to ''watch for motorcycles'' continues to go unheeded by the general motoring public—not intentionally I am sure.

In addition, the motorcycling community has invested considerable time and effort to improve its safety record through safety initiatives such as increased rider training and licensing campaigns, but the programs are overutilized and underfunded and often lack support from the larger traffic safety community.

Clearly enough is not being done by motorists to take extra care in looking for motorcyclists and conversely, motorcyclists need to take an active role in protecting themselves as well.

As we continue to move through the riding season, I will continue to work with my colleagues here in the Senate and motorcycle rights groups such as the National Coalition of Motorcyclists and the American Motorcycle Riders Foundation to find solutions to educate the general motoring public about motorcycle safety and awareness. This resolution is a strong, positive step in the right direction to help achieve this goal.

For all the motorcyclists who have been injured through no fault of their own, and for the many thousands of others who will be injured this year and for every year to come for quite some time, I encourage my colleagues to join this effort to help raise the awareness Nationwide of all motorized vehicle operators of motorcycles and those who operate them. To do nothing invites more needless and preventable injury and death to far too many innocent Americans.

I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting passage of this important resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 169—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE SHOULD ISSUE A POSTAGE STAMP COMMEMORATING ANNE FRANK

Mrs. CLINTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

S. RES. 169

Whereas Anne Frank and her family fled Nazi persecution of Jews in Germany and sought safety by moving to Amsterdam, the Netherlands;

Whereas subsequent Nazi occupation of the Netherlands forced the Frank family to go into hiding in an annex located above the office of Anne's father;

Whereas Anne Frank and her family spent 25 months in hiding, during which time Anne Frank kept a diary of her life and experiences;

Whereas Anne Frank and her family were eventually betrayed to the Nazis;

Whereas Anne Frank died in March 1945 in the Bergen-Belsen Nazi concentration camp;

Whereas Anne Frank was 1 of approximately 1,500,000 Jewish children who died at the hands of the Nazis during World War II;

Whereas Anne Frank's diary, published by her father after the end of the war, has become one of the most widely read memoirs of the Holocaust;

Whereas ''The Diary of Anne Frank'' has been translated into more than 67 languages and has sold more than 31,000,000 copies worldwide;

Whereas ''The Diary of Anne Frank'' is the first educational encounter with the Holocaust for many American students;

Whereas the story of Anne Frank has been repeatedly portrayed in motion pictures and theatrical productions;

Whereas millions of Americans have come to identify with Anne Frank and she has become an inspiration to children of all faiths;

Whereas Anne Frank is thought of as a representative of children throughout the world who find themselves in situations of war, subjugation, and oppression;

Whereas Anne Frank represents the victims of the Holocaust and serves as an enduring symbol of bravery, hope, and tolerance in the face of harsh and brutal conditions;

Whereas ''The Diary of Anne Frank'' has proven beneficial in assisting young people in dealing with issues of discrimination, bigotry, and hate crimes; and

Whereas Anne Frank would have been 75 years old in 2004: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the United States Postal Service should issue a postage stamp commemorating Anne Frank; and

(2) the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee should recommend to the Postmaster General that such a stamp be issued.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, today is Anne Frank's birthday. If she had survived the horror of the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp, then she would have been 74 years old. But she did not survive and because of her moving and thoughtful diary, the world got to know her and understand what it was like living in that apartment during the Nazis' reign of terror. Anne Frank's diary has educated generations around the world about tolerance and dignity. It has left a mark in a way that few books can, and the world is a better place because of Anne Frank's story.

That is why I am proud to submit a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the United States Postal Service should issue a postage stamp commemorating Anne Frank and the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee should recommend to the Postmaster General that such a stamp be issued.

Anne Frank was born on June 12, 1929, in Frankfurt, Germany to a German-Jewish family. She and her family fled the Nazi persecution of Jews in Germany and sought safety by moving to Amsterdam, the Netherlands. Following the Nazi occupation of the Netherlands, Anne Frank and her family were forced into hiding in an annex located above her father's office. The family spent 25 months in hiding which Anne Frank described in her diary.

The family was betrayed and turned over to the Nazis. Anne Frank was imprisoned in the Bergen-Belsen Nazi concentration camp, where she died in March 1945. She was one of approximately 1,500,000 Jewish children who died at the hands of the Nazis during World War II. In the midst of this unthinkable horror, her diary survived, and was published by her father after the end of the war. It has become one of the most widely read memoirs of the Holocaust experience. It has been translated into more than 67 languages and has touched people around the world.

The Diary of Anne Frank holds a special place of honor in the United States. It is the first educational encounter with the Holocaust for many American students. It has been repeatedly dramatized in motion pictures and in the theater. Millions of Americans have come to identify with Anne Frank. She has become an inspiration to children of all faiths and assists young people to deal with important issues such as discrimination, bigotry and hate crimes.

Anne Frank serves as an enduring symbol of bravery, hope, and tolerance in the face of harsh and brutal conditions. A commemorative postage stamp would be a meaningful way for Americans to honor Anne Frank's inextinguishable courage and dignity. I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor this resolution and assist our efforts to convince the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee to recommend the issuance of a postage stamp commemorating Anne Frank.

SENATE RESOLUTION 170—DESIGNATING THE YEARS 2004 AND 2005 AS ''YEARS OF FOREIGN LANGUAGE STUDY''

Mr. DODD (for himself and Mr. COCHRAN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. Res. 170

Whereas according to the European Commission Directorate General for Education and Culture, 52.7 percent of Europeans speak both their native language and another language fluently;

Whereas the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 names foreign language study as part of a core curriculum that includes English, mathematics, science, civics, economics, arts, history, and geography;

Whereas according to the Joint Center for International Language, foreign language study increases a student's cognitive and critical thinking abilities;

Whereas according to the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages, foreign language study increases a student's ability to compare and contrast cultural concepts;

Whereas according to a 1992 report by the College Entrance Examination Board, students with 4 or more years in foreign language study scored higher on the verbal section of the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) than students who did not;

Whereas the Higher Education Act of 1965 labels foreign language study as vital to secure the future economic welfare of the United States in a growing international economy;

Whereas the Higher Education Act of 1965 recommends encouraging businesses and foreign language study programs to work in a mutually productive relationship which benefits the Nation's future economic interest;

Whereas according to the Centers for International Business Education and Research program, foreign language study provides the ability to both gain a comprehensive understanding of and interact with the cultures of United States trading partners, and thus establishes a solid foundation for successful economic relationships;

Whereas Report 107–592 of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives concludes that American multinational corporations and nongovernmental organizations do not have the people with the foreign language abilities and cultural exposure that are needed.

Whereas the 2001 Hart-Rudman Report on National Security in the 21st Century names foreign language study and requisite knowledge in languages as vital for the Federal Government to meet 21st century security challenges properly and effectively;

Whereas the American intelligence community stresses that individuals with proper foreign language expertise are greatly needed to work on important national security and foreign policy issues, especially in light of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001;

Whereas a 1998 study conducted by the National Foreign Language Center concludes that inadequate resources existed for the development, publication, distribution, and teaching of critical foreign languages (such as Arabic, Vietnamese, and Thai) because of low student enrollment in the United States; and

Whereas a shortfall of experts in foreign languages has seriously hampered information gathering and analysis within the American intelligence community as demonstrated by the 2000 Cox Commission noting shortfalls in Chinese proficiency, and the National Intelligence Council citing deficiencies in Central Eurasian, East Asian, and Middle Eastern languages: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF YEARS OF LANGUAGE.

(a) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that foreign language study makes important contributions to a student's cognitive development, our national economy, and our national security.

(b) DESIGNATION AND PROCLAMATION.—The Senate—

(1) designates the years 2004 and 2005 as ''Years of Foreign Language Study'', during which foreign language study is promoted and expanded in elementary schools, secondary schools, institutions of higher learning, businesses, and government programs; and

(2) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to—

(A) encourage and support initiatives to promote and expand the study of foreign languages; and

(B) observe the ''Years of Foreign Language Study'' with appropriate ceremonies, programs, and other activities.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 55—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING THE POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES AT THE 55TH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE INTERNATIONAL WHALING COMMISSION

Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mr. KERRY, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. REED, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. DODD, Mr. SMITH, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. AKAKA, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. CORZINE, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. LAUTENBERG, and Mr. COCHRAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 55

Whereas whales have very low reproductive rates, making whale populations extremely vulnerable to pressure from commercial whaling;

Whereas whales migrate throughout the world's oceans and international cooperation is required to successfully conserve and protect whale stocks;

Whereas in 1946 a significant number of the nations of the world adopted the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling, which established the International Whaling Commission to provide for the proper conservation of whale stocks;

Whereas the Commission adopted a moratorium on commercial whaling in 1982 in order to conserve and promote the recovery of whale stocks, many of which had been hunted to near extinction by the commercial whaling industry;

Whereas the Commission has designated the Indian Ocean and the ocean waters around Antarctica as whale sanctuaries to further enhance the recovery of whale stocks;

Whereas many nations of the world have designated waters under their jurisdiction as whale sanctuaries where commercial whaling is prohibited, and additional regional whale sanctuaries have been proposed by nations that are members of the Commission;

Whereas one nation has joined the Commission under questionable authority and claims it has a reservation to the moratorium that is not recognized by all other Commission members;

Whereas two member nations currently have reservations to the Commission's moratorium on commercial whaling, and one member nation is currently conducting commercial whaling operations in spite of the moratorium and the protests of other nations;

Whereas the Commission has adopted several resolutions at recent meetings asking member nations to halt commercial whaling activities conducted under reservation to the moratorium and to refrain from issuing special permits for research involving the killing of whales;

Whereas one member nation of the Commission has taken a reservation to the Commission's Southern Ocean Sanctuary and also continues to conduct unnecessary lethal scientific whaling in the Southern Ocean and in the North Pacific Ocean;

Whereas whale meat and blubber are being sold commercially from whales killed pursuant to such unnecessary lethal scientific whaling, further undermining the moratorium on commercial whaling;

Whereas the Commission's Scientific Committee has repeatedly expressed serious concerns about the scientific need for such lethal research and recognizes the importance of demonstrating and expanding the use of non-lethal scientific research methods;

Whereas one member nation in the past unsuccessfully sought an exemption allowing commercial whaling of up to 50 minke whales, now uses a scientific permit for these same vessels to take 50 minke whales, and continues to seek avenues to allow lethal takes of whales by vessels from specific communities in a manner that would undermine the moratorium on commercial whaling;

Whereas more than 7,500 whales have been killed in lethal scientific whaling programs since the adoption of the commercial whaling moratorium and the lethal take of whales under scientific permits has increased both in quantity and species, with species now including minke, Bryde's, sei, and sperm whales, and a new proposal has been offered to include fin whales for the first time;

Whereas the first international trade of whale meat in 15 years occurred last year between two member countries, and other member countries have stated their intentions to engage in international trade of whale products, despite a ban on such trade under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species; and

Whereas engaging in commercial whaling under reservation and lethal scientific whaling undermines the conservation program of the Commission: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) at the 55th Annual Meeting of the International Whaling Commission the United States should—

(A) remain firmly opposed to commercial whaling;

(B) initiate and support efforts to ensure that all activities conducted under reservations to the Commission's moratorium or sanctuaries are ceased;

(C) not recognize the reservation to the moratorium against commercial whaling claimed by one nation that has joined the Commission under questionable authority;

(D) oppose the lethal taking of whales for scientific purposes unless such lethal taking is specifically authorized by the Scientific Committee of the Commission to be necessary for scientific purposes, seek support for expanding the use of non-lethal research methods, and seek to end the sale of whale meat and blubber from whales killed for unnecessary lethal scientific research;

(E) seek the Commission's support for specific efforts by member nations to end trade in whale meat;

(F) support the permanent protection of whale populations through the establishment of whale sanctuaries in which commercial whaling is prohibited; and

(G) support efforts to expand data collection on whale populations, monitor and reduce whale bycatch and other incidental impacts, create a Conservation Committee, and otherwise expand whale conservation efforts;

(2) at the 13th Conference of the Parties to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, the United States should oppose all efforts to reopen international trade in whale meat or downlist any whale population;

(3) the United States should make full use of all appropriate diplomatic mechanisms, relevant international laws and agreements, and other appropriate mechanisms to implement the goals set forth in paragraphs (1) and (2); and

(4) if the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the President, under section 8(a)(2) of the Fishermen's Protective Act of 1967 (22 U.S.C. 1978(a)(2)), that nationals of a foreign country are engaging in trade or a taking which diminishes the effectiveness of the Convention, then the United States should take appropriate steps at its disposal pursuant to Federal law to convince such foreign country to cease such trade or taking.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, As Ranking Member of the Oceans, Fisheries and Coast Guard Subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, I am pleased to join the Chair of the Subcommittee, Senator SNOWE, in submitting a resolution regarding the policy of the United States at the upcoming 55th Annual Meeting of the International Whaling Commission, IWC. I wish to also thank my colleagues Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. REED, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. DODD, Mr. SMITH, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. CORZINE, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. COCHRAN, and Mr. LIEBERMAN for cosponsoring as well.

The IWC will meet in Berlin from June 16–19, 2003. The IWC was formed in 1946 under the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling, in recognition of the fact that whales are highly migratory and that international cooperation is necessary for their preservation. In 1982, due to the severe impacts of whaling on the populations of large whale species, the IWC agreed on an indefinite moratorium on all commercial whaling beginning in 1985.

Whales are already under enormous pressure world wide from collisions with ships, entanglement in fishing gear, coastal pollution, noise emanating from surface vessels and other sources. The need to conserve and protest these magnificent mammals is clear.

Despite the IWC moratorium on commercial whaling, significant whaling has continued. First, pursuant to its reservation to the moratorium. Norway has continued to commercially harvest whales. Second, Japan has been using a provision in the Convention—which allows countries to issue themselves permits for whaling under scientific purposes—to kill whales in the name of science, and later sell the meat commercially. More than 7500 whales have been killed in lethal scientific whaling programs since the adoption of the commercial whaling moratorium, and the lethal take of whales under scientific permits has increased both in quantity and species, with species now including minke, Bryde's sei, and sperm whales.

The IWC Scientific Committee has not requested any of the information obtained by killing these whales and has stated that the scientific whaling data obtained through this so-called research is not required for management. Iceland, which joined the IWC last year under questionable legal authority—subject to the condition that it can unilaterally begin commercial whaling after 2006—has recently indicated its intent to lethally hunt hundreds of whales, including endangered species such as fin whales, pursuant to this same scientific whaling exception.

Despite a ban under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, the first international trade of whale meat in 15 years occurred last year between Norway and Iceland, both member countries of the IWC. Reports indicate that Norway is seeking to broaden such trade.

One positive development expected to be addressed at the meeting is a proposal from Mexico to establish a conservation committee under the IWC. Such a committee would strengthen the focus of the IWC on conservation measures that are critically important for the survival of cetaceans.

This resolution calls for the U.S. delegation to the IWC to remain firmly opposed to commercial whaling. In addition, this resolution calls for the U.S. oppose the lethal taking of whales for scientific purposes unless such lethal taking is specifically authorized by the Scientific Committee of the Commission. It also calls on the U.S. to seek to end the sale of whale meat and blubber from whales killed for unnecessary lethal scientific research to remove this perverse incentive. The resolution calls for the U.S. delegation to support an end to the illegal trade of whale meat and to support the permanent protection of whale populations through the establishment of whale sanctuaries in which commercial whaling is prohibited. It further calls on the U.S. to support the establishment of a Conservation Committee, and to otherwise expand whale conservation efforts. Finally, the resolution directs the U.S. to make full use of all appropriate mechanisms to encourage a change in the behavior of other nations which are undermining the protection of these great creatures.

(b) SPECIFIC ISSUES TO BE ADDRESSED.—The report shall address the following:

(1) Whether and for what period of time data gathered on individual travelers will be retained, who will have access to such data, and who will make decisions concerning access to such data.

(2) How the Transportation Security Administration will treat the scores assigned to individual travelers to measure the likelihood they may pose a security threat, including how long such scores will be retained and whether and under what circumstances they may be shared with other governmental, non-governmental, or commercial entities.

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. ___. ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the ''Arming Cargo Pilots Against Terrorism Act''.

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) During the 107th Congress, both the Senate and the House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed measures that would have armed pilots of cargo aircraft.

(2) Cargo aircraft do not have Federal air marshals, trained cabin crew, or determined passengers to subdue terrorists.

(3) Cockpit doors on cargo aircraft, if present at all, largely do not meet the security standards required for commercial passenger aircraft.

(4) Cargo aircraft vary in size and many are larger and carry larger amounts of fuel than the aircraft hijacked on September 11, 2001.

(5) Aircraft cargo frequently contains hazardous material and can contain deadly biological and chemical agents and quantities of agents that cause communicable diseases.

(6) Approximately 12,000 of the nation's 90,000 commercial pilots serve as pilots and flight engineers on cargo aircraft.

(7) There are approximately 2,000 cargo flights per day in the United States, many of which are loaded with fuel for outbound international travel or are inbound from foreign airports not secured by the Transportation Security Administration.

(8) Aircraft transporting cargo pose a serious risk as potential terrorist targets that could be used as weapons of mass destruction.

(9) Pilots of cargo aircraft deserve the same ability to protect themselves and the aircraft they pilot as other commercial airline pilots.

(10) Permitting pilots of cargo aircraft to carry firearms creates an important last line of defense against a terrorist effort to commandeer a cargo aircraft.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that members of a flight deck crew of a cargo aircraft should be armed with a firearm and taser to defend the cargo aircraft against an attack by terrorists that could result in the use of the aircraft as a weapon of mass destruction or for other terrorist purposes.

(d) ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM.—Section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking ''passenger'' each place that it appears; and

(2) in subsection (k)—

(A) in paragraph (2)—

(i) by striking ''or,'' and all that follows; and

(ii) by inserting ''or any other flight deck crew member.''; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(3) ALL-CARGO AIR TRANSPORTATION.—For the purposes of this section, the term air transportation includes all-cargo air transportation.''.

(e) TIME FOR IMPLEMENTATION.—The training of pilots as Federal flight deck officers required in the amendments made by subsection (d) shall begin as soon as practicable and no later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.—The requirements of subsection (e) shall have no effect on the deadlines for implementation contained in section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

''(2) requires a rate of subsidy per passenger in excess of $200, unless such place is greater than 210 highway miles from the nearest hub airport.

''(b) DETERMINATION OF MILEAGE.—For purposes of this section, the highway mileage between a place and the nearest hub airport is the highway mileage of the most commonly used route between the place and the hub airport. In identifying such route, the Secretary shall—

''(1) consult with—

''(A) the metropolitan planning organization designated under section 134 of title 23, United States Code, for the metropolitan planning area within which such place is located; or

''(B) if no such organization exists, the Governor of the State in which such place is located, or the Governor's designee; and

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 1247.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1247) to increase the amount to be reserved during FY2003 for sustainability grants under section 29(l) of the Small Business Act.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the ''Women's Business Centers Preservation Act of 2003'' in recognition of the critical need to preserve the operations of existing Women's Business Centers currently serving women entrepreneurs in almost every state and territory. I am pleased to be joined in offering this bill by Senator KERRY, Ranking Member, Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, and Senators BOND, CANTWELL, BURNS, LEVIN, ENZI, GRASSLEY, BAUCUS, DOMENICI, and BINGAMAN.

While I am totally supportive of the Administration's efforts to add new centers to serve a broader constituency, I am very concerned that we may lose valuable resources established in rural and urban areas. The value of the Women's Business Center Program is stated best by the text taken from the Small Business Administration's (SBA) promotional materials on the Women's Business Center Program:

Each women's business center is uniquely designed to serve the needs of its individual community and to place special emphasis on helping those who are economically disadvantaged.

The Women's Business Center Program has become a strong and effective part of the SBA's entrepreneurial-development efforts.

And—

In tough economic times, when both employment and funding resources are harder to come by, support for the WBC Program is more important than ever.

As Chair of the Small Business Committee, I totally agree with the SBA's assessment. In fact, Congress has agreed six times since the program was introduced through the Small Business Ownership Act of 1988, and made permanent in 1997, that this program is critical for women-business owners. The program's appropriations has grown from $2 million in 1989 to $12 million in 2003, and the results have been impressive. In Fiscal Year 2002, for every dollar invested in the program, centers reported a return of $161 in gross receipts of clients.

Even more remarkable is the fact that since 1997, the Women's Business Centers have served more than 240,000 women entrepreneurs. In Fiscal Year 2002, almost 86,000 customers were served through the centers. As reported in the SBA Performance and Accountability Report of 2002, ''the WBC Program has more than doubled its goal of a 3 percent annual increase in the number of clients served in the past two years. This is due in large part to the success of the sustainability grants, which enable established centers to continue SBA funding. SBA expects this trend to continue as more centers become firmly established and as their reputations for excellence spread.''

If we look at the centers that are achieving the greatest impact, it is the established centers. The results of their outreach and one-on-one assistance has made it possible for the Small Business Administration to achieve its goals as it measures the success of the products and programs offered by these centers.

It is true that this month only five Women's Business Centers face the possibility of closing their doors without the dollar-to-dollar matching funds that are provided through sustainability funding. The sustainability grant provisions reserve 30.2 percent of the $12 million program funding for sustainability grants for existing centers with the balance of available funds designated for the creation and operation of new centers. Based on information provided by the SBA, there are not sufficient sustainability reserve funds to offer continuation contracts to five centers in Iowa, Illinois, North Carolina, Texas and Washington. Therefore, SBA has proposed a reduction in grants for all centers currently funded by sustainability grants. By increasing the reserve amount to 36 percent, only during Fiscal Year 2003, adequate funds will be available for eligible existing centers operating with sustainability grants.

Next year, there will be more than 20 States and the U.S. Virgin Islands affected by the lack of funding to continue operations. Last month, I introduced the ''Women's Small Business Programs Improvement Act of 2003'', S. 1154, to correct deficiencies in the program and provide a fair, competitive process to operate and grow the Women's Business Center Program. I expect that bill will be taken up as part of the SBA reauthorization legislation my Committee will consider in July.

While we can fix the funding problem in the long-run, we still face a crisis today. That is the reason for the bill I am introducing. By increasing the formula for sustainability grants from 30.2 percent to 36 percent, existing centers would be able to operate without disruption in funding and the programs and services currently offered in our communities. This provision will not require an additional appropriation, just a reallocation of current funds.

I believe this approach offers the best path available to sustain the centers approaching the end of their grant cycles without creating undue hardship for all existing centers. At the same time, it should not hinder the Administration's efforts to create new centers.

These centers have been extraordinarily successful in providing assistance to women in all walks of life—from those who once received public assistance but now operate businesses and create jobs, to women transitioning from employee to small business employer, to established women-business owners who create and manufacture products for sale at home and abroad. The Centers nurture women entrepreneurs through business and financial planning and help with critical issues like securing funding for startup and expansion. Yet—despite these successes—funding questions have long plagued the program.

I am committed to resolving the temporary funding crisis through the bill I introduce today and will work with my colleagues to ensure the long-term viability of the Women's Business Center program for today's women entrepreneurs and those of tomorrow.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today as Ranking Member of the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship with my esteemed colleague and Chair of the Committee, Senator SNOWE, to offer legislation to fix a funding gap that exists for meritorious Women's Business Centers that are graduating from the first stage of the program and entering the sustainability portion.

I would first like to thank Senator SNOWE for working very closely with me on this issue. Her leadership and support has been invaluable. I would also like to thank our House counterparts on the Small Business Committee, Chairman MANZULLO and Ranking Member VELÁZQUEZ, who have also been working diligently on the issue of sustainability grants as we take on the process of reauthorizing the majority of the SBA's programs. In addition, I want to thank all of the cosponsors of this legislation, all of which have shown resounding support for women entrepreneurs and recognize the positive impact all small businesses have on our national economy.

As I have said on more than one occasion, women business owners do not get the recognition they deserve for their contribution to our economy: Eighteen million Americans would be without jobs today if it weren't for these entrepreneurs who had the courage and the vision to strike out on their own. For 18 years, as a member of the Senate Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, I have worked to increase the opportunities for these enterprising women in a variety of ways, leading to greater earning power, financial independence and asset accumulation. These are more than words. For these women, it means having a bank account, buying a home, sending their children to college, calling the shots.

And helping them at every step are the Women's Business Centers. In 2002 alone, these centers helped 85,000 women with the business counseling and assistance they likely could not find anywhere else. Cutting funding for any centers would be harmful to the centers, to the women they serve, to the States, and to the national economy.

The funding gap for Women's Business Centers in the sustainability portion of the program exists because the Small Business Administration has chosen to adopt a funding policy that shortchanges existing, proven centers in order to open new, unproven ones. By incorrectly interpreting the funding formula set up in statute for the Women's Business Center program, the SBA intends to make way for new centers at the expense of those that are already established, operational and successful. This is both bad policy and contrary to congressional intent.

As the author of the Women's Business Centers Sustainability Act of 1999, I can tell that when the Women's Business Centers Sustainability Act of 1999 was signed into law, it was Congress's intent to protect the established and successful infrastructure of worthy, performing centers. The law was designed to allow all graduating Women's Business Centers that meet certain SBA standards to receive continued funding under sustainability grants, while still allowing for new centers—but not by penalizing those that have already demonstrated their effectiveness.

Currently there are 81 Women's Business Centers in 48 states. Forty-six of these are in the initial program, 29 are already in sustainability, and six more are graduating or have graduated from the initial program and are now applying for sustainability grants. Because the SBA is incorrectly interpreting the funding formula for sustainability grants in order to open new centers, and in order to accommodate funding for potentially six new sustainability centers, those from Georgia, Iowa, Illinois, North Carolina, Texas, and Washington State, the amount of funds reserved for Women's Business Centers in sustainability must be increased from 30.2 percent to 36 percent.

This legislation does just that. It directs the SBA to reserve 36 percent of the appropriated funds for the sustainability portion of Women's Business Centers program—even though the SBA already has the authority on its own to increase the reserve—thereby protecting the established Women's Business Centers from almost certain grant funding cuts and still providing enough funds to open six or more new centers across the country.

I want to again express my sincere and steadfast support for the growing community of women entrepreneurs across the Nation and for the invaluable programs through which the SBA provides women business owners with the tools they need to succeed. As a long-time advocate for women entrepreneurs and SBA's programs, my record in support of the SBA's women's programs and for women business owners speaks for itself. I have continually fought for increased funding for the women's programs at the SBA, for sustaining and expanding the women's business centers, and for giving women entrepreneurs their deserved representation within the Federal procurement process, to name a few. With respect to laws assisting women-owned businesses, I have been proud to either introduce the underlying legislation or strongly advocate to ensure their passage and adequate funding.

This bill is necessary to continue the good work of SBA's Women's Business Center network, and I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read the third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements regarding this matter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1247) was read the third time and passed, as follows:

Whereas a survey conducted by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention demonstrated that the hardships imposed by epilepsy are comparable to those imposed by cancer, diabetes, and arthritis;

Whereas epilepsy in older children and adults remains a formidable barrier to leading a normal life by affecting education, employment, marriage, childbearing, and personal fulfillment;

Whereas uncontrollable seizures in a child can create multiple problems affecting the child's development, education, socialization, and daily life activities;

Whereas the social stigma surrounding epilepsy continues to fuel discrimination, and isolates people who suffer from seizure disorders from mainstream life;

Whereas a significant number of people with epilepsy may lack access to medical care for the treatment of the disease;

Whereas in spite of these formidable obstacles, people with epilepsy can live healthy and productive lives and make significant contributions to society;

Whereas November is an appropriate month to designate as ''National Epilepsy Awareness Month''; and

Whereas the designation of a ''National Epilepsy Awareness Month'' would help to focus attention on, and increase understanding of, epilepsy and those people who suffer from it: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—

(1) supports the goals and ideals of a ''National Epilepsy Awareness Month'';

(2) requests the President to issue a proclamation declaring a ''National Epilepsy Awareness Month'';

(3) calls upon the American people to observe ''National Epilepsy Awareness Month'' with appropriate programs and activities; and

(4) urges support for epilepsy research programs at the National Institutes of Health and at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The amendment (No. 926) was agreed to, as follows:

Amend the title as to read: A concurrent resolution supporting the goals and ideals of ''National Epilepsy Awareness Month'' and urging support for epilepsy research and service programs.

The title, as amended, was agreed to.

CENTENNIAL OF WILBUR AND ORVILLE WRIGHT'S FIRST FLIGHT

The resolution (S. Res. 141) recognizing ''Inventing Flight: The Centennial Celebration,'' a celebration in Dayton, Ohio, of the centennial of Wilbur and Orville Wright's first flight, was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 141

Whereas 2003 marks the centennial of Wilbur and Orville Wright's achievement of the first controlled, powered flight in history;

Whereas Wilbur and Orville Wright grew up and worked at a bicycle shop in Dayton, Ohio, where they developed, built, and refined the first successful, heavier-than-air, manned, powered aircraft;

Whereas the Wright brothers developed the world's first flying field, the world's first flying school, and the world's first airplane manufacturing company in the Dayton area;

Whereas many legacies of the Wrights' inventiveness and creativity still exist in the region, including Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, the Dayton Aviation Heritage National Historical Park, the United States Air Force Museum, the National Aviation Hall of Fame, the Wright ''B'' Flyers, and the Engineers Club of Dayton;

Whereas the city of Dayton, area communities, a number of civic groups, private businesses, government agencies, and military partners, are joining together to honor the Nation's aerospace achievements;

Whereas Dayton is considered the ''Birthplace of Aviation'' and from July 3 through July 20, 2003, the Dayton region will host ''Inventing Flight: The Centennial Celebration'', the largest public centennial event in Ohio celebrating the first flight and one of only 4 events nationwide endorsed as a full partner by the United States Centennial of Flight Commission; and

Whereas the celebration will feature pavilions with aviation displays, blimp and hot-air balloon races, dance and cultural performances, river shows, historical reenactments, an international air and space symposium, National Aviation Hall of Fame ceremonies, and a military and general aviation show at the Dayton International Airport: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate recognizes ''Inventing Flight: The Centennial Celebration'', a celebration in Dayton, Ohio of the centennial of Wilbur and Orville Wright's first flight.

S. RES. 163

Whereas on Friday, May 27, 2003, the Francis Marion University Patriots men's golf team won the 2003 NCAA Division II Men's Golf Championship, the first National Championship for Francis Marion University since it left the Peach Belt Conference in 1992 and moved to Division II;

Whereas the Patriots finished the Championship with a four-round total of 1,149 strokes, for 3 shots under par, beating the second place Rollins College Tars by 14 strokes;

Whereas the Patriots won the National Championship on the course of Crosswater Golf Club in Sunriver, Oregon;

Whereas the Patriots have brought pride and honor to the State of South Carolina: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(2) recognizes the achievements of all the team's players, coaches, and staff and invites them to the United States Capitol Building to be honored in an appropriate manner; and

(3) directs the Secretary of the Senate to make available enrolled copies of this resolution to Francis Marion University for appropriate display and to transmit an enrolled copy of this resolution to each coach and member of the 2003 NCAA Division II Men's Golf Championship team from Francis Marion University.

SENATE—Friday, June 13, 2003

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. STEVENS).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today's prayer will be offered by retired U.S. Navy Chaplain Arnold Resnicoff.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain offered the following prayer:

O God who made the rainbows in the sky, You made our land a rainbow, too: from purple mountain majesties to amber waves of grain, we marvel at the colors of our Nation, and the beauty of our land.

Today, this week, and tomorrow in a special way—Flag Week, and June 14, Flag Day—we set aside some time to honor special colors: the colors of our flag. We celebrate the values our flag in all its colors and its glory represents, and the memories and dreams our Stars and Stripes—our Star-Spangled Banner—still invokes. ''The grand old flag,'' as the old song goes, is still ''the emblem of the land I love''—we love—''the home of the free and the brave.''

In a moment we will pledge our allegiance to the flag—and to the Republic for which it stands. As we take that pledge today, let us make that pledge a prayer. Let us pray that the colors of our flag, and the true colors of our Nation and our people—our dedication to the cause of liberty and justice for all; our courage and determination even in the face of adversity; and our faith—are forever represented by our flag. May it bring hope of better times to all the citizens of our land, and all the nations of our world. May it forever wave, o'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave.

And may we say, Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The President pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, for the information of all Senators, the Senate will be in a period for morning business until 10 a.m. Under the previous order, at 10 a.m. the Senate will proceed to executive session and immediately vote on the nomination of Hewitt Pate to be Assistant Attorney General. That will be the first and only vote today.

On Monday, we will begin consideration of S. 1, the prescription drug/Medicare bill. As a reminder, there will be no votes during Monday's session. However, Senators will be able to make their opening remarks on the prescription drug bill.

Late last night, the Finance Committee completed the markup of that bill, and it will be available for debate on Monday. It is our intention to stay on that bill until completion, working through the debate and amendment process to everyone's satisfaction. I will have more to say on the schedule later today.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. While the majority leader is in the Chamber—it was not appropriate yesterday when we finished the FAA bill—I wish to say in his presence that it seems the press always focuses on the flare-ups that take place in the Senate in committee or on the floor and they do not often recognize the good work done by the Senate. I think the work done yesterday on the FAA bill was exemplary. The managers of the bill, the chairman and ranking member, Senator MCCAIN and Senator HOLLINGS, showed their maturity. They worked through these amendments. When there was a debate that was necessary, they had one. When votes were necessary, they had votes. There were no unnecessary votes yesterday. They were aided by the two subcommittee chairs, Senator ROCKEFELLER and Senator LOTT.

I thought yesterday was really a good day for the Senate. The FAA reauthorization was one of the most important bills we could do. There are things in that bill that will help every part of our country. The conferees have already been appointed. They can go to conference as early as next week and come back with a bill very soon.

Again, I say that it is more press worthy to focus on things that go wrong and not very press worthy to focus on things that go right, but it is a testament to what the Senate can do with the work we did yesterday on this bill.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There will now be a period of morning business until the hour of 10 a.m.

FOSTER CARE REFORM

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I will take a few minutes to comment on some events that occurred over the last couple of days that were not necessarily apparent to a lot of people, either in Washington, DC, or around the country. It has to do with a visit from somebody everybody recognizes, and that is Bruce Willis.

Mr. Willis came to our Nation's Capitol a couple of days ago to spotlight the issue of foster care reform. This is the first time I had the opportunity to speak with him on this particular issue. He is clearly a long-time advocate for children in foster care and has dedicated a huge amount of time to bring attention to the problem of children who are aging out of the system.

I take this opportunity to thank Mr. Willis for his efforts and to take a moment to underscore the importance of the issue he came to share with us, and that is foster care reform.

Thousands of children are cared for by loving families in our foster care system, and we owe these families a debt of gratitude for opening their lives, their homes, and indeed their hearts to these children. Because of their generosity, many foster children do become adopted and experience that gift of a warm and a loving family.

But too many children—and Mr. Willis made crystal clear based on his experiences and the information he has gathered—end up being bounced from place to place, never having that opportunity to have four walls and what can be called a home, or even really one person they can turn to and call family.

Imagine spending your entire childhood as a virtual orphan: No one to come to your high school graduation, no one to keep your picture in their wallet. Most of us do take for granted having a family, but for many children in America childhood is the time they spend waiting in vain for someone to call mom or dad.

Even worse, some foster children end up in situations where they experience severe mental and physical abuse. Many develop health problems and suffer emotional and even physical neglect.

It is my hope that through our efforts in this legislative body, through the efforts of the National Adoption

Center and other groups such as Children in Foster Care, by public awareness campaigns such as National Adoption Day, through PSAs featuring well-known figures and the participation of people whom everybody recognizes, such as Mr. Willis, America's foster children will get what they need most, and that is a family. I applaud my colleagues for their efforts on behalf of America's foster children.

A few minutes ago, I was listening to LARRY CRAIG. He has been one of the Senate's leading voices on this whole issue of adoption and foster care. In 2001, he cosponsored the Hope For Children Act as part of the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act which we just passed and which has become the law of the land.

Others, such as Senator JIM BUNNING, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, worked to pass a bill to exclude foster care payments from taxation. Other Senators, including Senators HUTCHISON, LANDRIEU, ROCKEFELLER, and CLINTON, have all worked to improve foster care and adoption issues. America's foster children are helped immeasurably by their efforts.

As we debate the big issues, the bold issues, the issues that make the headlines—the Medicare modernization, the addition of prescription drugs to give seniors health care security, to give them greater choice, to have plans that better meet their needs—as we debate the important issues, such as energy this week and FAA reauthorization and tax credits, we should not forget to protect our most vulnerable citizens. Truly, America's foster children are depending on us to look out for them.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY PRESIDENT GEORGE HERBERT WALKER BUSH

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I wish our 41st President, George Herbert Walker Bush, a happy birthday. Yesterday he turned a robust 79 years of age.

DAVID BRINKLEY

Mr. FRIST. On behalf of my colleagues and myself, I express our condolences to the family and friends on the passing of news giant and television pioneer David Brinkley. Over the course of his 60 outstanding years in journalism, David Brinkley covered every President from Franklin Delano Roosevelt to President Clinton. He earned nearly every award in journalism, including 10 Emmy Awards and 3 Peabody Awards. In 1992, David Brinkley was bestowed by President George Bush the highest civilian honor, the Medal of Freedom award.

He died in his home Wednesday night in Houston. We all say Godspeed to a great American.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF R. HEWITT PATE, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE AN ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the hour of 10 a.m. having arrived, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the nomination of R. Hewitt Pate, of Virginia, to be an Assistant Attorney General.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of R. Hewitt Pate, of Virginia, to be an Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I ask my fellow Senators to vote for R. Hewitt Pate to be Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice. I rise today to share with my colleagues my views, familiarity and admiration for R. Hewitt Pate.

We all know, and the Presiding Officer recognizes, how important our antitrust laws are and their beneficial influence in making sure we have competition in our free market society. Competition is absolutely essential because it forces us to always be innovative to ensure a good market share for whatever the product or service. Our antitrust laws are vital for free competition in our society and in our economy.

Mr. Pate, as Assistant Attorney General in the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department, will be one of the key leaders, if not the key leader, in making sure that monopolistic or anticompetitive practices do not occur in this country. I can confidently say Mr. Pate is very well qualified to decide antitrust matters effectively. He will lead with impartiality, dignity and fairness in this important position.

When I was Governor of Virginia, I appointed Mr. Pate to the Virginia Commission of Higher Education and the Governor's Commission on Self-Determination and Federalism.

I have known Hew Pate since he was at the University of Virginia. I was a relatively young delegate at the time, representing Mr. Jefferson's seat in Albemarle and Nelson Counties, which surround the University of Virginia. Ever since those years, Hew Pate has constantly amazed me. Even then, as a very young man at the University of Virginia School of Law, he was always very conscientious and knowledgeable, and he has been a very good friend and ally ever since.

Hew Pate graduated first in his class from the University of Virginia Law School in 1987 and went on to clerk for Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson on the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. In addition, Mr. Pate clerked for both Justice Louis Powell and Justice Anthony Kennedy on the United States Supreme Court.

After these impressive clerkships, Mr. Pate went on to practice antitrust law for 10 years at Hunton & Williams, which is one of Virginia's largest and most highly respected law firms. Hew Pate also taught competition law at the University of Virginia.

Since 2001, Mr. Pate has performed with distinction, handling several significant matters in a scholarly, reasoned, and admirable manner for the Department of Justice's Antitrust Division. Since November 2002, Hew Pate has been the Acting Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust. In fact, on a case affecting a major company in the Commonwealth of Virginia, my good colleague Senator WARNER and I were on one side advocating a certain result, and Mr. Pate was on the other side. Mr. Pate briefed us on how our views were not necessarily in accordance with the views of the Department of Justice, but he did it in a very careful, considerate, and well-reasoned way. Afterward, we did not have any reason to appeal because the conclusion was so well briefed and researched.

It is my sincere pleasure to highly recommend this exceptional nominee and outstanding Virginian this morning.

I respectfully urge all my colleagues to support the confirmation of R. Hewitt Pate to this important position in the Department of Justice. I think he will be an outstanding Assistant Attorney General, leading the Antitrust Division.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today, we confirm R. Hewitt Pate to be Assistant Attorney General of the Antitrust Division at the Department of Justice. The Antitrust Division is charged with a critically important role in protecting our nation's consumers and their markets, and I look forward to Mr. Pate fulfilling that role with diligence and distinction.

As the boundaries of our marketplaces are expanding ever outward, many of the competitive issues that were once only local have become regional, national, or even global in their impact. That global economy is also increasingly dominated by high tech and information industries. In those arenas, technological change and innovation are taking place at dizzying speed, and we are seeing new and creative products and services developed every day. Fair and efficient policing of corporate behavior in those swiftly evolving markets is particularly important to ensure that the early entrants do not preclude competition from later rivals, and that a rapid accumulation of market power cannot be used to harm consumers.

Another hallmark of antitrust problems arising in recent years has been the increasing number of situations in which suppliers and distributors join forces, possibly to the detriment of consumers. Many of us are accustomed to thinking of antitrust enforcement as focused on mergers of competitors, but as more and more vertical arrangements are entered into, we must be aware—and be wary—of such deals. While in some cases they may permit consumers a greater range of choice than they would otherwise enjoy, they can also facilitate grievously anticompetitive behavior. As we all move more and more of our acquisition of information, of goods, and of services, to the Internet, the online businesses and markets will need the scrutiny of the Antitrust Division to help guarantee that those marketplaces provide digital-age consumers with the quality and quantity of offerings that have long been the promise of the Internet.

As Mr. Pate confronts these issues, with the help of the many seasoned career lawyers and economists in the Antitrust Division, I am confident that he will be able to protect and promote the competitive health of the American economy. We all stand to benefit if he does his job well. I stand by ready to help him ensure that consumers and producers alike enjoy the benefits of a properly functioning marketplace.

Mr. KOHL. I rise today in support of the confirmation of Hew Pate to the important post of Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust. I am confident that Mr. Pate's talents and dedication will serve the Justice Department and the American people very well in this vital position.

The responsibilities of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division have never been more important. In our challenging economic times, we all depend on the dynamism of competition to provide economic growth and jobs necessary to propel our economy forward. And I am convinced that only the aggressive enforcement of our Nation's antitrust laws—our fundamental charter of economic liberty proven for over 110 years—will ensure that competition will flourish and ensure that consumers will obtain the highest quality products and services at the lowest possible prices. The Antitrust Division must be a vigilant watchdog to ensure that the antitrust laws are properly enforced to prevent companies from stifling competition and harming consumers.

Moreover, Mr. Pate will assume his post at a time when the Antitrust Division will have to serve as our last line of defense against excessive media consolidation. Now that the FCC has substantially relaxed media ownership restrictions, many expect a new wave of media mergers and acquisitions. These acquisitions will come before the Justice Department for review. We will expect that Mr. Pate will be careful to review these transactions to ensure that they do not unduly diminish competition in the marketplace of ideas nor unduly harm the diversity of news and information so essential to our democracy.

It is essential, then, that the next head of the Antitrust Division be committed to the Justice Department's tradition of vigorous antitrust enforcement. The performance of the Antitrust Division over the last 2 years under Mr. Pate's predecessor's leadership gave me considerable cause for concern. From the defects in the Microsoft settlement—which many believe was unnecessarily weak and riddled with loopholes—to the general decline in the division's enforcement activities, we were left to wonder if the division was truly committed to its crucial mission of protecting competition. We will expect the next Antitrust Division Chief to return to the tradition of strong and energetic antitrust enforcement.

I believe that Mr. Pate is well qualified to restore our confidence and lead the Antitrust Division in the years ahead. He has compiled an impressive record of achievement at a relatively young age as an attorney in private practice, and we have heard a great deal of praise for his talents and legal acumen. Since joining the Justice Department as a Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the Antitrust Division more than 2 years ago, Mr. Pate has proven to be an effective enforcer of our Nation's antitrust laws. As a Deputy, he was responsible for many of the division's most important matters, including its successful challenge last year to the Echostar/DirectTV merger in the satellite television industry. And I have been particularly impressed with his dedication and hard work since he assumed the leadership of the Antitrust Division on an acting basis last fall.

My favorable impression of Mr. Pate has been enhanced by my own dealings with the nominee. He demonstrated his knowledge and expertise in antitrust law at our confirmation hearing several weeks ago. And I was particularly pleased with his forthrightness and candor in our private meeting in advance of the hearing, where he impressed me with the sincerity and seriousness with which he would take his new responsibilities.

I will therefore vote in favor of confirming Mr. Pate. I will look forward to working with Mr. Pate in the months and years ahead.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise in support of R. Hewitt Pate's nomination for Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Division.

I would note that Mr. Pate's nomination was unanimously approved by the Judiciary Committee. I fully expect that the Senate will follow suit and quickly approve his nomination to this important position.

Over the last decade, the position of the Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust has grown in importance. The rapid transformation of our country's economy, particularly in new technologies and international markets, has raised public attention and policy focus on a variety of important antitrust issues. The Assistant Attorney General plays a crucial role in formulating competition policy and enforcing existing antitrust laws to make sure that our free-market economy operates efficiently and serves the public.

Mr. Pate comes before the United States Senate with an impressive track record of public service in the Antitrust Division. In June 2001, he was appointed as the Deputy Assistant Attorney General responsible for Regulatory Matters, and served ably under then Assistant Attorney General Charles James. In November 2002, after Mr. James' departure, Mr. Pate was appointed as Acting Assistant Attorney general for the Antitrust Division. During that time, he has demonstrated his talent and ability to lead the Antitrust Division.

Prior to joining the Justice Department in 2001, Mr. Pate practiced at the distinguished law firm of Hunton & Williams in Richmond, Virginia, where he had a distinguished record in representing both plaintiffs and defendants in a variety of antitrust and business law cases. After graduating first in his class at the University of Virginia Law School in 1987, Mr. Pate went on to clerk for the honorable J. Harvie Wilkinson, at the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, Supreme Court Justice Lewis Powell, and Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy. During his tenure at the firm of Hunton & Williams, Mr. Pate found time to teach at the University of Richmond and University of Virginia Law Schools.

With such an impressive background, both in private practice and in antitrust enforcement, particularly given his proven track record, I am confident that Mr. Pate will be an excellent Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Division. I am hopeful that this Senate will act quickly to confirm Mr. Pate's nomination.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

ZIMBABWE

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, I rise today to bring to the attention of the Senate the oppression of democracy and freedom underway in Zimbabwe. A number of my colleagues, including the Senators from Arizona and Kentucky, have led this body in discussions about oppression in Burma. I share their concerns.

But as Chairman of the Foreign Relations Subcommittee on African Affairs, I would be remiss not to note a struggle in Zimbabwe that bears at least some similarity to events in Burma. As in Burma, the leader of the democratic opposition in Zimbabwe has been imprisoned by an illegitimate government in a cruel attempt to maintain power.

The so-called ''President'' of Zimbabwe, Robert Mugabe, has engaged in a systematic campaign of intimidation, torture, and terror to oppress opposition to his rule over Zimbabwe. Since the elections of 2000, when Mugabe's ruling party rigged the elections in its favor and terrorized voters for the opposition, Zimbabwe has been thrown into a downward spiral. Youth brigades not unlike the Hitler Youth or Chinese Red Guard roam the streets and invoke terror on those who resist Mugabe's rule. The country's infrastructure, which was fairly good prior to this time, has deteriorated rapidly.

In the last week the situation has grown worse. A little over 1 week ago, for the second time this year, the people of Zimbabwe stood up and said enough is enough. Strikes and work stoppages occurred throughout the country as many citizens engaged in a massive protest of Mugabe's illegitimate regime. Many rightly blame Mugabe not only for political turmoil, but also economic decay, led by fuel and food shortages.

The government's response was swift and brutal. Armed troops descended upon neighborhoods where opposition members lived and violently beat those suspected of opposing Mugabe. More than 800 individuals were arrested, many of them tortured. According to the most recent reports I have seen, about 150 individuals have now been released, but only after paying an ''admission of guilt'' penalty of $3,000 to $5,000. In order to get out of jail, you have to admit your guilt and pay a huge fine.

Here is Mugabe's justification. He is quoted as saying, ''The actions are blatantly illegal in that they are aimed at an unconstitutional removal of the country's head of state.'' He is essentially saying that by protesting his rule, protestors are committing a crime. And he is arresting and torturing them as a result. The only crime being committed is the continued rule of Robert Mugabe.

Just prior to the first crackdown in March, which followed a similar protest and work stoppage, Mugabe said, and I am quoting, ''I am still the Hitler of the time.'' Let me say that again. He said, ''I am still the Hitler of the time.'' He purposely chose to compare himself to Adolph Hitler, perhaps the most evil leader in the entire 20th century. After that announcement in March, military forces loyal to Mugabe burst into people's homes in pre-dawn raids, raping and beating those suspected of supporting the Movement for Democratic Change, Zimbabwe's opposition party. Torture tactics included rape, electrocution, forced consumption of chemicals and urine, cigarette burning, whipping with steel cable, barbed wire and sustained beatings.

What makes these events truly tragic is that prior to Mugabe's actions,

Zimbabwe was not a dilapidated country ready to collapse. On the contrary, it was a leading African nation with a strong economy and infrastructure. Zimbabwe's roads were among the best in Africa, and its agricultural sector was a major exporter. As an example of the rapid decline Zimbabwe faces, their GDP has shrunk from $9.3 billion in 2001 to only $5.4 billion today. It has been cut nearly in half in only 2 years.

The latest news reports from Zimbabwe show that Mugabe is now actively imprisoning and torturing leaders of the opposition party, the Movement for Democratic Change or MDC. Morgan Tsvangirai, the leader of the MDC, is in prison and charged with treason as are hundreds of party activists. Tsvangirai lost last year's rigged Presidential elections, and has begun legal proceedings against Mugabe because the elections were not conducted properly. I can only hope that Tsvangirai and the MDC survive Mugabe's violent rampage against them.

The White House and the State Department have responded to this crisis, and I hope will continue to work to achieve a change of leadership in Zimbabwe. President Bush recently imposed sanctions on the Mugabe government. The sanctions, which began on March 7, prohibit any U.S. corporation from making business deals with Zimbabwe and also freeze any assets top Zimbabwean officials in the Mugabe government may have in U.S. banking institutions. The State Department has condemned Mugabe's actions, and taken other appropriate diplomatic action.

The people of Zimbabwe deserve better. They deserve better than a regime that commits violence on its own people. They deserve better than to see their economic infrastructure destroyed by a dictator-on-the-rampage. And they are standing up for themselves by actively demonstrating against this terrible regime. I hope other countries in the region will join with the United States and others in opposing this brutal regime in the hope of bringing new, democratic leadership to power in Zimbabwe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I want to take a few moments to say some words in tribute to the senior Senator from Texas, one who this week marks her tenth anniversary as a Member of this august body, Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison.

Senator HUTCHISON is a wonderful spouse to her husband, Ray; a wonderful mother to her children, Bailey and Houston; an excellent Senator; and a great Texan. I am enormously grateful to be able to work alongside of a woman of her vision, a woman of her energy, and someone who represents the very best of the State of Texas.

After 10 years in the Senate, Senator HUTCHISON has shown herself to be a great leader in so many different ways. She has devoted herself to our national security. She has dedicated herself to preserving our homeland security. She has energetically sought legislation that will create jobs and greater opportunities for all Americans. She has worked hard to improve health care, not just for people in our State, the State of Texas, but for all Americans.

All of us came here from our various States to serve those States, but we also came here to serve this great Nation. Senator HUTCHISON came here, in addition, to make a difference, to work to find solutions to the complex problems of modern society, to attain real and lasting change for the good. She has succeeded in brilliant fashion.

President Ronald Reagan once said:

> We have been blessed with the opportunity to stand for something, for liberty and freedom and fairness, and these are things worth fighting for, worth devoting our lives to.

Senator HUTCHISON has devoted her life to these very values. Her life serves as an example to us all, a life of patriotism, responsibility, dedication, and abundant friendship. She has been a leader in Texas and here in the Senate. It is lives like Senator HUTCHISON's that make me proud to say I am from the great State of Texas, and prouder still to call her my friend.

Senator HUTCHISON, over these last 10 years in the Senate, has made Texas proud as she works hard for all Americans as a woman of great valor. I thank Senator HUTCHISON for her leadership, for her counsel, and for her steadfast service to the great State of Texas and to the United States of America.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, I commend my colleague, Senator CORNYN, for his remarks. Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON has distinguished herself over these 10 years. It is very appropriate that her junior colleague bring that to the attention of the Senate. She is a Senator from our second largest State. She has been a pioneer in women's rights and advancement by women. When she began her career, as was true for our colleague from North Carolina, Senator DOLE, not many legal jobs were available to women, much less positions in the Senate.

She has achieved a lot. She is part of our leadership, and I am glad I was here to hear Senator CORNYN's remarks.

I hope both Senators will permit me to comment on the fact that some of the best things in Texas come from Tennessee. A lot of Tennesseans went to Texas in the 1830s. One of Senator HUTCHISON's ancestors was Governor Hall, of Tennessee, just as Sam Houston was Governor of Tennessee before he was Governor and Senator from Texas. So Tennesseans take special pride in 10 years of service by someone we consider, if not our daughter, at least our cousin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, I thank my desk mate and member of the freshman class of 2002 in the Senate, LAMAR ALEXANDER, for his comments and his friendship and his great service, not only on behalf of Tennessee but on behalf of the Nation. He did make a very appropriate observation about the connection between the people of the State of Tennessee and Texas. Some have said many of the people who populated Texas were evading their creditors in Tennessee, which is one reason for their going to Texas in the first place, where they believed there would be great opportunity. With a land the size of Texas, with the opportunity to till the soil and take risks and perhaps reap the rewards of that risk, many people came from all over the United States—indeed, the world—to Texas.

One great Tennessean—and I want to just make this comment while Senator ALEXANDER is here—with whom I am proud to connect myself is Sam Houston, who was a distinguished figure in Tennessee before he came to Texas, then served as Governor, President of the Republic, and whose seat in the U.S. Senate I now hold. When Texas was annexed to the United States of America in 1845, Thomas Jefferson Rusk, a former member of the Texas Supreme Court at that time, and Sam Houston, came to Washington to represent the State of Texas.

So I am proud to have that connection, another connection with the good people of Tennessee and with my friend LAMAR ALEXANDER, and to be connected through that lineage to that seat originally held by a great Tennessean, and we claim him as a great Texan, a great American still, Sam Houston.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALEXANDER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, is the Senate in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in morning business.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for such time as I may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

SALLY GOFFINET

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Sally Goffinet is an unsung hero. Like many thousands of Senate staffers, her name is not widely known. There are no news accounts of her 31 years of service to her country. Her quiet professionalism will never be the subject of wide acclaim. But she is a star of the Senate family. Sally is one of the thousands of people stretching back over the history of our Republic to whom the Senate owes a very great debt.

Sally Goffinet was hired in 1972 by one of the greatest Parliamentarians ever to serve the Senate, the late Dr. Floyd Riddick. Sally was the first woman ever to be assigned to that office. She continued to serve the Parliamentarian's office until the spring of this year, at which time she retired. Sally has worked for every Parliamentarian since the office was established, except for the very first Senate Parliamentarian, Mr. Charles Watkins. Charles Watkins was the Parliamentarian when I came to the Senate 45 years ago.

Sally graduated from college with a BA in history. So her interest in the Senate came naturally.

Can you imagine the institutional knowledge and the institutional memory she possesses? She possesses something there.

When I say that, I mean an institutional memory. And not every Senator has that, an institutional memory. It is acquired after one is here a great while, normally. But it is not normally that every Senator acquires an institutional memory.

Why is that? One has to be interested. A Senator must be interested in the Senate as an institution, its history, its customs, its folklore, its rules, and its precedents. Then one will have an institutional memory.

The institution means something. The institution is always at the center of a Senator's public life, if he or she has an institutional memory.

Can you imagine the institutional memory that Sally possesses? When one works alongside so many Parliamentarians, one acquires a deep, deep exposure to Senate rules and precedents. Senate rules and precedents—how important are they?

Thomas Jefferson in his manual, ''Jefferson's Manual,'' spoke of Speaker Onslow.

I watched television when it was good. There is a good show on most Saturday nights. I get it on Channel 22 in McLean, or I get it on 26 over in McLean. On some evenings, this particular picture, or show, will be on both—possibly on 22 at a given time and a half hour later on Channel 26. This picture is British. Ah, what actors they are. We have few Americans, in my judgment, who are real, honest-to-goodness actors. They are conscious of the fact that they are acting in that show. It comes out at you when you watch it, but not with the British. They just act in a very natural way, and speak—what great English, what grammar. The British have it all over us, for the most part.

On Saturday nights, my wife Erma and I watch ''Keeping Up Appearances.'' It is good, clean comedy. So tune in on ''Keeping Up Appearances.''

As I talk about Sally, she has seen Members come and go. She has acquired an institutional memory. And such long service in such a position imparts almost a sixth sense about the Senate and about its unique role in our constitutional system.

And as I was about to say, Thomas Jefferson spoke of the Speaker of the British Parliament when he spoke of Mr. Onslow. The reason I got off on this other part about the Saturday evening TV is because there is a person in this comedy show whose name is Onslow. When Jefferson spoke of Onslow, he was speaking of a different Onslow. He was talking of the Speaker of the House of Commons, who said—and Jefferson said it also—that it is more important that there be a rule than what the actual rule says. And he makes a very good point in saying that it is more important that there be a rule than what the rule actually says. Because if there is a rule, there will be order, and a minority will be heard. If there is a rule, there will be order.

And so we are talking now about the Parliamentarians. The Senate has not always had a Parliamentarians. But Charlie Watkins was the Parliamentarian when I came. That is a long time ago as we measure service in the Senate.

So Sally acquired that deep exposure, that I referred to, to the Senate rules and precedents. And one who is in such a position naturally witnesses the Senate's dynamic change as events occur. History progresses and Members come and go. Such long service in such a position imparts, as I say, almost a sixth sense about the Senate and about its unique role in our constitutional system. Such an individual really can never be replaced.

Today, when so many Members and staffers in our Senate family do not stay very long, I often wonder how we will fare in keeping that sense of the institution alive in future years, that institutional pride, pride in being a Member, an individual who has been selected by the constituents of that particular State, who have gone to the voting booths and cast their votes for a particular individual to serve in this great institution. We must find a way because, year by year, an understanding of the Senate's ultimate role and purpose is slipping away.

We have these pages on the Republican side and the Democratic side, and they are wholesome, fine young people. I talk with every new class that comes in. I get acquainted with them. I talk with them. I tell them stories. I tell them, for example, the story written by that great author, Tolstoy, ''How Much Land Does a Man Need?''

I have not talked to this new group yet, but probably the first story I will tell them will be ''How Much Land Does a Man Need'' by Tolstoy. Then I may tell them that story that great Chataquan speaker told 5,000 times. Russel Conwell, that great Chataquan speaker, told the story ''Acres of Diamonds.'' He said he had told that story 5,000 times. Well, I am going to tell that story to the pages also.

These are great stories, and I look forward to talking with them. In this way, I help to preserve an understanding of what the Senate is all about. We talk about that. We talk about politics and about the Senate so that these young people, when they leave here, will go out and they will spread the word also.

Individuals like Sally Goffinet have helped to keep us true to our course. And, today, I thank Sally for her long years of service, her pleasant and professional demeanor, which I will miss, and her wisdom, born of long experience and deep appreciation for the special place which is the United States Senate.

I send my best to her husband of 31 years, Joe Goffinet, and to her daughter, Sarah. Joe is a special education teacher. Sarah is a graduate of Bowdoin College in Maine, and she is presently working at the Corcoran Gallery of Art. So the Senate's loss is their gain.

FLAG DAY

Mr. BYRD. Well, the next subject I want to talk about today—and may I say to any other Senator who wishes to have the floor, I will be glad to give it up at any time. So I do not want to hog the floor, if I may use that word, ''hog.''

Tomorrow is Flag Day.

Now, from time to time, I speak on events such as Flag Day, these national holidays—Independence Day, Father's Day, Mother's Day, Columbus Day, and so on. When I first came to the Congress, now over a half century ago, there were Senators and there were Members of the House who spoke on these subjects. I do not see much of that anymore. So I try to preserve that way of Senate tradition, talking about these days every year as they come along. It enables us to be still and know and to remember the things that are our heritage, the things that made America great. We hear a lot about family values, and so I speak on Mother's Day about our mothers, I speak in advance of Father's Day—as I will a little later this morning—about Father's Day, to preserve this heritage.

Mr. President, since 1885, Americans have observed Flag Day on June 14. In 1949, President Truman signed an Act of Congress designating June 14 of each year as National Flag Day. That day, June 14, which this year falls on Saturday, was chosen because it was on June 14, 1777, that the Continental Congress adopted the Flag Act establishing an official flag for the new Nation.

The first Flag Act was a model of brevity. Here is what it said in its entirety:

Resolved, That the Flag of the United States be made of thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the Union be thirteen stars, white in a blue field, representing a new Constellation.

As many Senators may remember from their schooldays, in the early years of the Nation there were a number of different variations of the flag including, of course, the one consisting of a circle of 13 stars that was attributed in our schoolbooks to Betsy Ross.

As the Nation grew, however, changes were made to the flag. Each change was authorized by an Act of Congress or, in later years, by an Executive order of the President.

In 1818, Congress provided for a flag of 13 stripes, 1 for each of the original 13 Colonies, and 1 star for each State to be added to the flag on the Fourth of July following the admission of each new State to the Union.

The most recent change was made by Executive order of President Eisenhower on August 21, 1959. His order provided for the arrangement of the stars in 9 rows of stars staggered horizontally and 11 rows of stars staggered vertically. That is the flag that flies over this Capitol Building today, and that is the flag that stands majestically as it does beside the desk of the President of the Senate, to the right of the Presiding Officer.

Today that Presiding Officer is from the State of Tennessee, and he presides over the Senate with great dignity and aplomb.

While we are on that subject, people all over the country watch the United States Senate, which is the premier upper legislative body in the world today. Aren't you proud that you serve in this body? Always keep in mind that the world is watching. It is watching that Presiding Officer, how he or she presides, and that is why I try to suggest to new Members that they preside in a way that lets the world know that here is truly the greatest body of all.

I suggest they not read mail, they not read newspapers while they are presiding; that they give their full attention to the Senate, to the Chamber, to the individual Senator who is speaking. Members of State legislatures watch this Presiding Officer, believing that here is the best, and we have to be conscious of that when we preside. We should be. Professors, students, coal miners, housewives—people in every walk of life—watch that desk.

There used to be a telephone at that desk. When I became majority leader, I took it out. I believe I was majority leader at that time, or perhaps majority whip. But I took that telephone out so the Senators would not sit at that desk and be talking on the telephone while they were presiding. A few of them did that, so I just moved out the telephone.

So there is the flag right there by the Presiding Officer. We see it every day when we address the Chair. That is the flag, as I say, that flies over the Capitol Building today.

This very abridged, short history now of the flag does not, of course, do justice to the emotions that we all feel as we look at that flag. Imagine the excitement in each new State as a new flag is unfurled for the first time with its new constellation of stars. Imagine the excitement in the State of Alaska when that new flag was unfurled. Imagine the excitement in the State of Hawaii in 1959, when I first came to the Senate—there was a new star in that constellation. Imagine the excitement in Hawaii as the people saw that flag with the new star. West Virginia was the 35th star on the flag.

We have but to think of the explorers who have carried the American flag to the ends of the Earth and into space. We have but to look at the classic photograph of the American flag being erected at Iwo Jima to share in the determination and triumph of that moment. And in the wake of September 11, 2001, who was not touched to the core by the sight of all the American flags that sprang up defiantly, as it were, across the Nation immediately after that attack, showing our sympathy, our resolve.

There is no doubting the love and the sorrow when you catch a tear creeping down the face of a man in uniform as taps is played and another flag is carefully and ceremoniously folded from atop the coffin and preserved for a grieving widow.

Mr. President, our flag is our Nation's greatest symbol, the icon by which we are recognized around the world. Old Glory—there is nothing, nothing, that can match it is our flag. That is the way we feel about it. It has withstood war. It has withstood assaults upon its fabric. But no assault has yet bested the fabric of this Nation or the ideals upon which the Nation was founded.

I firmly believe that if we hold true to our Constitution—here it is; I hold it in my hand, the Constitution of the United States—our flag will never fail, and this great constellation of stars and States will shine on through ages to come.

So I close with one of my favorite poems by Henry Holcomb Bennett, entitled ''The Flag Goes By.''

Hats off.
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums,
A flash of color beneath the sky;
Hats off.
The flag is passing by.
Blue and crimson and white it shines,
Over the steel-tipped, ordered lines.
Hats off.
The colors before us fly;
But more than the flag is passing by.
Sea-fights and land-fights, grim and great,
Fought to make and to save the State:
Weary marchers and sinking ships;
Cheers of victory on dying lips;
Days of plenty and years of peace;
March of a strong land's swift increase;
Equal justice, right in law,
Stately honor and reverend awe.
Sign of a nation, great and strong
To ward her people from foreign wrong;
Pride and glory and honor—all
Live in the colors to stand or fall.
Hats off.
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums;
And loyal hearts are beating high;
Hats off.
The flag is passing by.

FATHER'S DAY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this Sunday, June 15, is Father's Day. It is a day of lovely chosen, if sometimes unstylish, ties; a day of lumpy clay bowls and golf tee puzzles; of handmade cards and big brunches. It is a day for family members to struggle over what to get dad, in a reflection of both the many hours that fathers spend away from home working and of his proclivity for just buying himself what he wants.

What does dad need? Nothing, really. What he wants is more time with his family and more time for fun, but that cannot be purchased. That is something that cannot be purchased at the mall.

This Father's Day will be even more special for the men returning from service in Iraq in time to meet newborn sons and daughters for the first time. They will be coming home to a precious new life that they see for the first time in many instances. It is difficult to imagine the poignant first meeting as the same large hands that wrestled weapons on aircraft or into tanks now cradle small bundles squirming with life and happy, toothless smiles. What moments of simple, unalloyed joy.

If we are fortunate this Father's Day, it will be a day of beautiful June skies, warm weather and lush lawns trimmed close and smelling of fresh cut grass. If we are lucky in this very rainy spring, it will be a day to enjoy family activities outside, to preside over savory picnics or barbecues, to play ball games, to take long walks with the dog.

I look forward to that. I take a walk with my dog every day before I come to work. When she sees me getting ready she knows I am going to leave and go to work. When she sees me put on a tie, she stays at my feet and does not leave me until I take her for that walk.

I used to have a little dog named Billy. I spoke of Billy many times on this floor during his 15 years with us, but Billy is gone. Now we have a little shitzu, and she was named ''Trouble'' by my wife. These dogs were to be the palace dogs in Tibet, exceedingly friendly. She just loves everybody so I have to be very careful that she does not get out the door and go. She will leave with anybody. I call her ''baby.''

But that walk with the dog, or to have fun at the pool or lake, it is in these venues that we see the best sides of fathers, relaxed and happy, even a bit goofy as they play with their kids and banter with their wives.

In a suit or a uniform at work, we do not commonly see fathers but rather bosses, or officials, men with titles, men with responsibilities, mindful of production goals or other targets and deadlines. In this work-a-day mode, men set fine role models for their children of strong work ethics and integrity and responsibility for their families. But it is the kid tossing dad in the pool or the dad as softball coach who children are thinking of as they scrawl their ''I love yous'' on Father's Day cards.

One may well appreciate the hours and effort that fathers put into their jobs in order to provide the best for their children, but that sacrifice does not fill the heart with memories in the same way that quiet moments do. Late nights at work or at home paying bills and preparing taxes are important but not remembered or as appreciated by children as when dad reads bedtime stories and passes out good night kisses.

It has been a long time since I had young children, but I remember how it was then. My children, who have grown into adulthood, have children of their own, who have grandchildren of their own, meaning that Erma and I have great-grandchildren. Erma and I remember the time when we put our children to bed and when they said their prayers and we gave them our goodnight kisses.

Fathers play an important role in families far beyond their title as breadwinner. Their comforting presence adds to family life and their loss is felt profoundly.

It was in recognition of both roles that one of the first Father's Day services was held, in my own State of West Virginia. It makes me proud that my State figures in the history of both Mother's Day and Father's Day.

That first Father's Day service was conducted by Dr. Robert Webb at the Central United Methodist Church in Fairmont, WV, in 1908. The service was to honor the 210 fathers killed in the terrible mine explosion at Monongah, WV, on December 6, 1907, that took the lives of more than 360 men in all. Think about it. There was no joy at Christmas in Monongah in 1907. The idea for the service was the inspiration of Mrs. Charles Clayton, who sympathized with the grieving families of these men, as she still mourned the loss of her own father. Reverend Webb, was Mrs. Clayton's pastor, and he agreed with her thoughts and prepared a special mass held in honor and remembrance of fathers on July 5, the very next year, 1908. This service was but a one-time event.

It was the selfless efforts of one father that inspired his daughter to advocate a national Father's Day. After listening to a Mother's Day sermon in 1909, Mrs. Sonora Smart Dodd proposed the idea of a ''father's day'' to honor her father, Willam Smart. Mr. Smart was a Civil War veteran who was widowed when his wife died in childbirth delivering their sixth child. Mr. Smart raised the newborn and his other five children on a rural farm in eastern Washington State. That would be quite a feat even today, but imagine doing so in the late 19th century! There were no disposable diapers then, no prepared formula or baby food, no day care, no automatic washing machines and dryers, no frozen orange juice. Frozen orange juice came along in 1947. No sliced bread here. That did not come along until 1930. You hear people say: This is the greatest thing since sliced bread. That doesn't go very far back. Mechanically sliced bread sold commercially by 1930.

So there were none of the conveniences that we take for granted today. Mrs. Dodd gives her father great credit, and credit he deserves, but without the help of his five older children, it is difficult to imagine how Mr. Smart could have met the challenge.

In my own life, as my mother approached death during the influenza pandemic of 1918, when I was just under a year old, she chose to ask relatives to raise me. She asked my father to give me, the baby, she said, to the Byrds, Titus Dalton Byrd and his wife Vlurma. His wife Vlurma was my natural father's sister. My father, my natural father, had several sisters.

So when my mother died of influenza in that great epidemic that swept the world, 20 million people died—nobody really knows how many—throughout the world, 12 million in India, perhaps 750,000, give or take, in the United States. They would become ill one morning and die that afternoon or the next day—the great influenza epidemic.

So my mother felt that if she did not recover, she wanted this family, Tyson Dalton Byrd and his wife, to raise me. That was her wish. Of my three older brothers and a sister, the three older brothers were given to the other sister. My father had several sisters. My father kept the daughter, my sister. So that is the way it was.

The people who reared me were kind. They were not well educated. I was the first person ever, I suppose, in my family to go to the second or third grade, if that far. Nobody else in my family ever went beyond that. They could barely read and write, but they were good people. They were honest, they were hard working, and they loved me.

So that is what I remember. My dad was my uncle, you see. I never knew any other father because my uncle and his wife, my aunt, brought me to West Virginia from North Carolina when I was 2 or 3 years old. So I remember this man, Titus Dalton Byrd as my father. He loved me.

I can remember his coming from work. He was a coal miner. I can remember seeing him come down the railroad track from a half mile, three-quarters of a mile away. I could see him coming, this tall man with black hair and red mustache and watch chain. I could see the watch chain; I could see him coming down the railroad tracks. I would run to meet him.

When I came near to him, he would put down his dinner bucket. He would lift up the lid. He would reach down into that dinner bucket and pull out a cake. My mom—my aunt; I called her my mom—always put a cake, a 5-cent cake, in the dinner bucket. He took the cake—he never ate it—but always brought it back. He saved the cake for me. So he put that dinner bucket down on the wooden cross tie, the railroad cross tie, reached in to get that cake, and I ran up to meet him, and he would give me the cake.

This fine old couple had had a son, but that child had died of scarlet fever before I was born. So they took me into their home and they raised me. That must have been a difficult choice for my father and my mother. She was concerned that she might not recover, and they decided to give me, the baby, to the Byrds.

So without the conveniences that we take for granted today, you might imagine how it was to raise an infant or a toddler in 1918, bringing a child in 1918 to manhood. Under the circumstances, with three older brothers and a sister, I know it must have been a very difficult thing for my father to try to raise this family with the mother gone. So I was raised by my uncle, Titus Dalton Byrd, and my aunt, Vlurma Byrd. As I already said, I called my uncle my dad, and he was my dad. He was the only dad I ever knew until I was ready to graduate from high school, when he told me the story about how my mother died and how my mother's wish was what it came to be, that I be made a part of the Byrd family.

So my uncle—he was a patient, quiet man—toiled in the dark pits of the West Virginia coal mines without any complaint. I never saw him sit at the table and complain about the food—never. He always thought to save me that cake. And, like good fathers everywhere, he encouraged me always to do my best. He encouraged me in my school work. He and she always wanted to see my report card and there was a line on that report card designated ''deportment.'' He always looked at that as well. He wanted to see how I behaved in school. And he always told me that if I got a whipping in school, I could be sure of getting another one at home.

So he encouraged me in my school work. He did not want me to follow him into the mines which were, in those days, just as dangerous as they had been in 1907, in Monongah.

In all my years, I say to these wonderful young people and to those who are watching out there watching this Senate Chamber today, in all those years I never heard him use God's name in vain. I never heard him complain about his lot in life. He simply toiled on, doing the best he could, a man of few words and few affectionate gestures, but loving nonetheless.

In any event, the first Father's Day was observed on June 19, 1910, in Spokane, WA. In 1924, President Calvin Coolidge supported the idea of a national observance of Father's Day, but it was not until 1966 that President Lyndon Johnson signed a Presidential proclamation declaring the third Sunday in June as the national Father's Day. In 1972, President Nixon established the permanent national observance of Father's Day.

The Bible admonishes us: ''Honor thy father and thy mother.'' And on this day in June we honor our fathers with gifts, cards, and time spent together as a family. The rest of the year we can only hope to honor our fathers by our own hard work, as we try to live up to the dreams—yes, the dreams—that they have for us.

I think of Kipling's lines at this moment. I think they are quite appropriate:

Our Fathers in a wondrous age,
Ere yet the Earth was small,
Ensured to us an heritage,
And doubted not at all
That we, the children of their heart,
Which then did beat so high,
In later time should play like part
For our posterity.

Then, fretful, murmur not they gave
So great a charge to keep,
Nor dream that awestruck Time shall save
Their labour while we sleep.
Dear-bought and clear, a thousand year,
Our fathers' title runs.
Make we likewise their sacrifice,
Defrauding not our sons.

Mr. President, I close with a short poem by Grace V. Watkins entitled ''I Heard My Father Pray.'' I offer it in honor of Titus Dalton Byrd, my Dad, who is looking down from Heaven.

Once in the night I heard my father pray.
The house was sleeping, and the dark above
The hill was wide. I listened to him say
Such phrases of devotion and of love,
So far beyond his customary fashion,
I held my breath in wonder. Then he spoke
My name with such tenderness and such compassion,
Forgotten fountains in my heart awoke.
That night I learned that love is not a thing
Measured by eloquence of hand or tongue,
That sometimes those who voice no whispering
Of their affection harbor love as strong,
As powerful and deathless as the sod,
But mentioned only when they talk with God.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORNYN). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUNUNU). Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE FAA REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2003

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I rise today with my colleague Senator SPECTER to engage the distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee in a colloquy regarding a proposal to allow airports increased flexibility with the use of the Passenger Facility Charge, PFC, revenues.

Mr. President, as you know, many airports are impacted by the downturn in the aviation industry. In my State, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is working with US Airways to maintain its presence at both Pittsburgh and Philadelphia International Airports. Our activities in Pennsylvania include efforts to reduce costs in order to make our airports even more competitive.

The amendment that I filed today would change current law to allow airports increased flexibility in the use of the Passenger Facility Charge revenues so that an airport may choose to use such funds to help retire outstanding debt. I believe that this change would be an important tool for airports, which could benefit from the option of using the funds they receive more effectively.

According to information provided to me, this change, if implemented at Pittsburgh International Airport, would result in millions of dollars in immediate cost savings for both the airport and tenant airplanes operating there.

It is my understanding that Chairman MCCAIN is aware of this issue but has concerns about the approach taken by this amendment. I am also informed, however, that the Chairman indicated that he plans to examine issues related to airport financing and competitiveness in the current aviation industry environment.

I would like to inquire of Chairman MCCAIN if he would agree to examine this issue and continue discussions to identify solutions that can allow airports to be more competitive in this challenging aviation industry environment.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor of the amendment offered by my colleague Senator SANTORUM that would provide airports with increased flexibility in the use of their Passenger Facility Charge funds. As Senator SANTORUM mentioned, we are working hard to assist US Airways and to keep the company's large presence in Pennsylvania with its hubs in both Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. Earlier this week I hosted a meeting with US Airways CEO David Siegel in my office that included Governor Rendell, Senator SANTORUM, most of our delegation from the House of Representatives, as well as local elected officials. The purpose of this meeting was to work with US Airways to make our Pennsylvania hubs in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia more cost competitive so that those airports can remain critical assets to US Airways. If enacted, proposals such as our amendment will be of great help to Pennsylvania and will be available for use by other airports throughout the Nation.

Mr. MCCAIN. I thank the distinguished Senators from Pennsylvania for filing this amendment. I am aware of interest in proposals to allow increased flexibility in the use of Passenger Facility Charges as well as other Federal revenues. The Commerce Committee does plan to continue its examination of appropriate Federal policy measures that might address the concerns raised by my colleagues. I look forward to working with my colleagues on this issue.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank Chairman MCCAIN for agreeing to work with us on this important issue.

Mr. SPECTER. I also thank the chairman.

THE HOMELAND SECURITY GRANT ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2003

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am very proud today to join my colleague, the Senator from Maine, Ms. COLLINS, in introducing the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act of 2003. This legislation will bring much-needed coordination to the fund application process for our first responders and State and local officials.

The coordination of grant programs called for by this bill will go a long way to make certain that those who will be first called upon to deal with a threat to the security of the United States will be better prepared to face it. By enacting the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act, we can free municipal governments and first responders of bureaucratic guesswork, allowing them to focus instead on training and execution of response plans.

Currently, Federal programs within the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Justice, the Department of Health and Human Services, and other Federal agencies provide our first responders with a basic level of support with respect to training and equipment procurement. However, in order to receive this support, State and local officials often must complete separate emergency plans and redundant grant application forms. The information demanded by the various homeland security plans is frequently similar; nonetheless, different Federal agencies require grant applicants to start from square one in each case.

The Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act of 2003 will put an end to this inefficient practice. Our bill creases an interagency committee, composed of representatives from the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Transportation, the Department of Justice, and the Environmental Protection Agency, as well as any other department or agency deemed necessary by the President, to eliminate duplication in planning requirements and to simplify the application process. The committee will engage in a three-step process to accomplish this goal. First, within 2 months, it will compile a list of the homeland security assistance programs, identifying planning and administrative requirements for each program. Second, it will conduct a 4-month review of these requirements. Finally, within 8 months, it will report to Congress and to the President with recommendations as to how to streamline and standardize requirements.

In order to provide first responders with the support they need, our bill also creates a Homeland Security Information Clearinghouse. The clearinghouse will work with the interagency committee to make grant information available to first responders and local officials, easing the application process. Many State and local agencies, as well as firefighters, police, and emergency service officials, have found the Homeland Security Act provides insufficient guidance from Federal agencies as to the use of government funding and technical expertise in order to meet security needs. Through the clearinghouse, our bill will provide the coordination needed to locate grant information and other resources within the Federal Government. Easy access to this kind of information will improve immeasurably our State and local agencies' ability to deal with potential threats.

First responders have also cited the Homeland Security Act's lack of guidance regarding how Federal dollars can be spent and to whom these funds can be allocated. Neither the Homeland Security Act nor the Department of Homeland Security's efforts to implement the law has done much to relieve this problem. Our bill seeks to remedy this by streamlining the Office for Domestic Preparedness homeland security grant process from as many as 12 deliberate steps to just 2 commonsense requirements.

When enacted, the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act will put in place grant application processes that are much more efficient and user-friendly. State and local authorities will be called upon to develop a single, 3-year homeland security plan that outlines vulnerabilities and capabilities. Federal grant programs will be reconciled to establish a process for a more logical allocation of resources to meet State and local needs. Local agencies or government officials will then apply for funds based on this plan, which can be revised each year pending approval by the Secretary of Homeland Security. These steps will lead to greater ease in securing funding for local police, fire, and emergency service departments. This means greater security for West Virginians and all Americans.

Perhaps more importantly, this will make certain that State and local officials and first responders are all included in the homeland security planning process, allowing them to access funds and equipment in a timely and efficient manner. Our legislation requires that 80 percent of homeland security funding and resources will reach the local level within 60 days of allocation. The bill encourages flexibility in the use of these funds by authorizing local officials to determine their allocation to planning, equipment, exercises, training, or other homeland security functions.

In order to ensure that rural States are included in Federal grant programs whose eligibility criteria sometime favor urban areas, the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act follows a procedure that benefited my State of West Virginia earlier this year when we partially funded first responder programs in the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations bill. As with that legislation, our bill provides that any State whose application for funding through this grant program is approved will receive a minimum of .75 percent of the total amount appropriated for homeland security in a given fiscal year, thereby providing an adequate preparedness funding baseline for all States. The Secretary, acting in cooperation with congressional appropriators, would naturally exercise the authority to make upward adjustments with the remaining funds. However, the .75 percent baseline will make certain that rural first responders are not left out. At the same time, this mechanism will see to it that areas facing higher risk and greater vulnerabilities might receive more funds. Rural areas will not be left out, but areas that are home to elements of the Nation's critical infrastructure, as well as areas with higher population density—both of which are the most likely targets for international terrorists—will be safeguarded.

Finally, this bill also provides a logical flexibility for Federal officials who oversee unspent funds previously appropriated to the Office for Domestic Preparedness. Rather than allowing this money to sit idle while our first responders clamor for adequate funding, this legislation will enable DHS to dispense funds to those States that obtain a waiver from the Secretary. Funds earmarked for one purpose, such as training, may then be used to pay costs associated with another first responder need, such as equipment.

I commend the Senator from Maine for her close personal attention to the matter at hand, and for her hard work in putting this legislation together. She has worked closely with many of the groups who will benefit directly from this legislation. While many of these organizations do not endorse legislation, the approach we offer today has been supported by the National Governors Association, the National Conference State Legislatures, the Council of State Governments, the National Association of Counties, the National League of Cities, the International City/County Management Association, and the International Association of Fire Fighters.

I believe the Homeland Security Grant Enhancement Act will greatly improve coordination between the various agencies that distribute homeland security funds to our States, communities, and first responders. Relevant information will flow more freely and the grant application and funding process will become more clear and more flexible. While we have made great strides in our efforts against international terrorists, stifling their ability to conduct operations, the danger of an attack remains. This legislation improves efficiency within a multi-agency bureaucracy, easing the burdens on those who are charged with defending the homeland. These changes will also better prepare our first responders to meet the threats they face.

PROSECUTING GUN-RELATED CRIMES

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, last month I spoke about a report released by Americans for Gun Safety Foundation entitled, ''The Enforcement Gap: Federal Gun Laws Ignored,'' analyzing the Justice Department's commitment to enforcing and prosecuting gun laws. The report examines prosecution data acquired from the Justice Department under the Freedom of Information Act for fiscal years 2000 through 2002. The AGS study reveals a significant gap between the number of federal gun crimes committed and the number of Federal prosecutions initiated.

In response to this report, Representative JOHN DINGELL, the Dean of the Michigan delegation in the House, sent a letter to Attorney General Ashcroft asking ''how the Justice Department plans to improve its abysmal record of enforcement of all of the major federal firearms statutes.'' He goes on to say, ''by not enforcing existing federal firearm laws, we are not only allowing criminals to arm themselves, we are eliminating any deterrent effect these laws may have.''

Justice Department officials regularly point to a 38 percent increase in prosecutions of gun crimes since 2001 as evidence of their success. However, according to the AGS report, at the end of fiscal year 2002, federal prosecutors filed 197 cases for gun trafficking, despite 100,000 guns showing signs of trafficking. Only 27 cases were filed against corrupt gun dealers, even though AGS reports that gun dealers are the leading source of firearms recovered in gun trafficking operations. Across the country, only seven cases for illegally selling a gun to a minor were filed, even though more than 30,000 gun crimes were committed by youths age 17 or under. Only 202 cases were filed for possessing or selling a stolen firearm, despite nearly 140,000 reported gun thefts that year in which the make, model and serial number of a stolen gun was reported to police. And, a mere 98 cases for possessing or selling a firearm with an obliterated serial number were prosecuted, despite thousands of these guns being recovered in cities across the country each year.

I believe vigorous and fair enforcement of our gun safety laws is a critical step toward reducing gun violence. I commend Congressman DINGELL questioning the Justice Department about the enforcement gap, and I hope the Justice Department will step up its efforts to prosecute not only people who commit gun crimes but those corrupt or negligent dealers who put guns in criminal hands.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2003

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the need for hate crimes legislation. On May 1, 2003, Senator KENNEDY and I introduced the Local Law Enforcement Act, a bill that would add new categories to current hate crimes law, sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred in Palos Heights, IL. On September 11, 2001, a man attacked a Moroccan-American gas station attendant with the blunt end of a 2-foot machete. The attacker was arrested and charged with a hate crime.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act is a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.•

(At the request of Mr. DASCHLE, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

RETIREMENT OF MR. WILLIAM M. COFFEY

• Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise today to extend my congratulations and best wishes to Mr. William M. (Bill) Coffey on his retirement as president and chief executive officer of Volunteers of America Greater Baton Rouge.

It is my privilege to recognize Bill's dedicated service to the people of our State. During his nearly 40 years as a public servant and a nonprofit leader, Bill has helped countless individuals and families in need.

Born in 1940 on a small farm in north Louisiana, Bill began working for the State Department of Health and Human Services in 1964 after earning a master's in social work from Louisiana State University. His distinguished career as a State employee spanned 25 years and a day, before his retirement in 1987 as deputy director of the Department of Mental Retardation.

He then joined Volunteers of America—one of our Nation's leading human services charities B and in 1989 was appointed president /CEO of the organization's Baton Rouge affiliate. Under his leadership, Volunteers of America expanded its vital mission of service, opening new programs in Lafayette, Lake Charles and many smaller communities across south Louisiana.

Today, Volunteers of America serves more than 14,000 south Louisiana residents every year—abused and neglected children, at-risk youth, the elderly, homeless families, people with mental illness or mental retardation, people living with HIV/AIDS, victims of hurricanes and other disasters, and many more.

Above all, Bill has been a community-builder, bringing together those in need with those who have a need to serve.

My wife Lois and I have experienced the joy of service through Volunteers of America many times, especially on our visits with the children at Parker House in Baton Rouge, a therapeutic setting for young victims of the most severe abuse and neglect. We were honored to be part of a recent $1.2-million fundraising campaign to acquire a new residence for these children, and a center to prevent child abuse. The outpouring of support for this new facility helped fulfill one of Bill's long-term dreams. It will surely be the crowning touch of his life of service, and his legacy for generations to come.

For all Louisianans, I wish to express our thanks and best wishes to Bill and his family—his wife, Cooky, and their children, Pam and Blake—for many happy years ahead.•

(At the request of Mr. REID, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

EXPLANATION OF ABSENCE

• Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am necessarily absent today to attend funeral services for the former Rhode Island Superior Court's Presiding Justice, Anthony A. Giannini, in Providence.

Were I present today, I would vote ''yea'' on Executive Calendar No. 218, the nomination of R. Hewitt Pate to be an Assistant Attorney General.•

CONGRATULATIONS TO BRYAN JONES

• Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I commend Mr. Bryan Jones of Yazoo City, MS, for his distinguished service as President of Delta Council.

Delta Council is an area development organization representing the 18 Delta and part-Delta counties of Northwest Mississippi. Delta Council was organized in 1935 to bring together the agricultural, business, and professional leadership of the region to confront the major problems facing the region at that time. Since then, and over the past 68 years, the organization has expanded its role under leaders like Bryan Jones, for the purpose of working in the fields of educational policy, water resource conservation, highway developments, agricultural research, and flood control.

As President of Delta Council, Bryan has served unselfishly and in an effective role to lead the people of the Delta during very stressful economic times. He has performed admirably and gained the respect of his peers through the use of sound judgment and meaningful action.

Bryan has distinguished himself in many areas on behalf of the Mississippi Delta region that he loves so much. Bryan has led the organization of Delta Council into new fields of endeavor such as health care and adult literacy. He has supported innovative approaches toward expanding the conservation provisions of our farm laws. He has been a strong advocate for water resource developments that include significant features for improved environmental restoration. And, he has become well known throughout the region and among members of the Mississippi Congressional Delegation as an effective spokesperson on behalf of the Delta's largest industry, which is agriculture.

After graduating from the University of Mississippi, Bryan Jones could have been placed in a senior executive position in almost any company located anywhere in the United States. However, because of his love for the Mississippi Delta, Bryan returned to the Delta region and joined his local peers in building a $1 billion banking system which has rapidly grown throughout our State. In addition to serving as the Chief Executive Officer of the Delta Division of BankPlus, Bryan operates a cotton, soybean, corn, and wheat farm which is located in Holmes and Humphreys Counties.

Bryan is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church in Yazoo City and he and his wife, Sara, have three children. He is an enthusiastic outdoorsman and a director of Delta Wildlife, which and a leading advocate for the enhancement of the Mississippi Delta's rich wildlife resources.

It is a great privilege for me to congratulate Bryan Jones for his many contributions to the Delta region of Mississippi and the Nation, and I look forward to working with Bryan and other Delta Council leaders in the future who share our common goal of improving the quality of life for the people of this great part of this Nation.●

COMMEMORATING THE 228TH BIRTHDAY OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY

● Mr. HAGEL. Madam President, I rise today to wish the United States Army ''happy birthday.'' It was 228 years ago tomorrow, June 14, 1775, that the Continental Army of the United States was formed. The United States Army has had a monumental impact on our country.

Millions of men and women over the past 228 years have served in the senior most branch of our military forces. The Army is woven in the culture of America.

For 228 years, the Army has protected the American values of liberty, freedom and democracy. Many people around the globe enjoy these freedoms because of the U.S. Army.

The principles of ''Duty, Honor, Country'' are the foundation of the U.S. Army. It is America. Every generation of Americans who have served in the U.S. Army—from the Continental army to today's fighting men and women—have been shaped by these principles. It has molded lives in ways that are hard to explain, just as the Army has touched our national life and history and made the world more secure, prosperous, and a better place for all mankind.

On this 228th birthday of the U.S. Army, as a proud U.S. Army veteran, I say happy birthday to the Army veterans of our country. We recognize and thank those who have sacrificed and served and those whose examples inspired those of us who have had the opportunity to serve in the U.S. Army.

On this, the 228th birthday of the Army, I say ''Happy Birthday'' and, in the great rich tradition of the U.S. Army, I proclaim my annual Senate floor . . . ''HOOAH''●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself and Mr. FITZGERALD):

S. 1261. A bill to reauthorize the Consumer Product Safety Commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am joined by the Chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee's Consumer Affairs and Product Safety Subcommittee, Senator FITZGERALD, in introducing the Consumer Product Safety Commission Reauthorization Act of 2003. This legislation is designed to reauthorize the Consumer Product Safety Commission, CPSC or Commission, in furtherance of its mission to protect consumers by reducing the risk of injuries and deaths associated with consumer products. This vital consumer protection agency has not been reauthorized since 1990.

This bill would authorize funding for the Commission for fiscal years 2004 through 2007. The bill also would clarify CPSC employee position titles that have evolved informally over time.

The CPSC is essential to ensuring the safety of the approximately 15,000 consumer and household products marketed and sold to American consumers. However, because the agency has not been reauthorized for more than a decade, the Commission has fallen behind in its ability to upgrade its technology, meet its overhead expenses, and retain needed staff. Funding for the Commission has not kept pace with the cost of regulating the ever-increasing number of products covered by its jurisdiction.

I look forward to working on this important consumer protection legislation and I hope that my colleagues will join us in expeditiously moving this reauthorization through the legislative process. Reauthorizing the CPSC is crucial to the Commission's successful efforts to protect American consumers.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1261

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Section 32(a) of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2081(a)) is amended by striking paragraphs (1) and (2) and inserting the following:

''(1) $60,000,000 for fiscal Year 2004;
''(2) $66,800,000 for fiscal year 2005;
''(3) $70,100,000 for fiscal year 2006; and
''(4) $73,600,000 for fiscal year 2007.''.

SEC. 3. FTE STAFFING LEVELS.

Section 4(g) of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2053(g)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(5) The Commission is authorized to hire and maintain a full time equivalent staff of 471 persons in each of fiscal years 2004 through 2007.''.

SEC. 4. EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR AND OFFICERS.

So much of section 4(g) of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2053(g) as precedes paragraph (2) is amended to read as follows:

''(g) EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR; OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.—(1)(A)The Chairman, subject to the approval of the Commission, shall appoint as officers of the Commission an Executive Director, a General Counsel, an Associate Executive Director for Engineering Sciences, an Associate Executive Director for Laboratory Sciences, an Associate Executive Director for Epidemiology, an Associate Executive Director for Health Sciences, an Assistant Executive Director for Compliance, an Associate Executive Director for Economic Analysis, an Associate Executive Director for Administration, an Associate Executive Director for Field Operations, an Assistant Executive Director for Office of Hazard Identification and Reduction, an Assistant Executive Director for Information Services, and a Director for Office of Information and Public Affairs. Any other individual appointed to a position designated as an Assistant or Associate Executive Director shall be appointed by the Chairman, subject to the approval of the Commission. The Chairman may only appoint an attorney to the position of Assistant Executive Director for Compliance, but this restriction does not apply to the position of Acting Assistant Executive Director for Compliance.''.

By Mr. MCCAIN:

S. 1262. A bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2004, 2005, and 2006 for certain maritime programs of the Department of Transportation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to reauthorize the Maritime Administration, MARAD, for fiscal years 2004, 2005, and 2006. The bill was developed in consultation with Administration officials and would provide for needed reforms in a number of maritime programs.

The bill would authorize appropriations for MARAD operations and training, administrative costs associated with the shipbuilding loan guarantee program authorized by Title XI of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, and the disposal of vessels in the National Defense Reserve Fleet that have been identified by the Secretary of Transportation as obsolete.

The bill is designed to reform how MARAD manages the Title XI maritime loan guarantee program. Both the Department of Transportation Inspector General and the General Accounting Office have found that MARAD has failed to provide effective oversight in receiving and approving loan guarantees; has failed to closely monitor the financial condition of borrowers during the term of the loan; and has failed to adequately monitor the condition of projects subject to guarantees. They also found that MARAD was flagrant in its use of authority in granting waivers to its own regulations governing the program without taking steps to better secure the taxpayer against defaults. The bill includes reform provisions to address these findings.

Furthermore, the bill would amend the Merchant Marine Act to give the Secretary of Transportation the authority to convey obsolete National Defense Reserve Fleet vessels to nonprofit organizations, a State, Commonwealth, or possession of the United States or any municipal corporation or political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia for their use and to U.S. territories and foreign governments for use as artificial reefs. The bill also would amend the Merchant Marine Act to allow, under certain circumstances, otherwise unqualified U.S.-flag vessels to carry reference cargo reserved for qualified U.S. vessels.

Finally, the bill would amend requirements for enforcement of the commitment agreements for students at the United States Merchant Marine Academy, USMMA, and students at the state maritime academies who receive student incentive payments, SIP; allow MARAD to use funds received from a settlement for legally authorized purposes, including completion of repairs to the Merchant Marine Academy, Fitch Building; provide the Secretary with the authority to also exclude vessels from the carriage of Government impelled cargoes that have been detained for violations of security standards contained within international agreements to which the United States is a party; allow MARAD to retain funds received as a result of final judgments and settlements in the Vessel Operations Revolving Fund; and clarify the decades-old authority of the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, SLSDC, to carry out the provisions of the Ports and Waterways Safety Act, PWSA, in the case of the Saint Lawrence Seaway.

I look forward to working on this important legislation and hope my colleagues will join me in expeditiously moving this authorization through the legislative process.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The preceding sentence shall apply to such a privately owned United States-flag commercial vessel for a 3-year period commencing on the date the contract is executed for construction of the vessels and shall continue to apply to the vessel throughout the 3-year period so long as the vessel remains documented under the laws of the United States.''.

The Secretary shall establish a system of controls, including automated controls, to ensure that no loan funds are disbursed to a shipowner or shipyard owner before the shipowner or shipyard owner meets the requirement of the preceding sentence.

''(2) DOCUMENTED PROOF OF PROGRESS REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall, by regulation, establish a transparent, independent, and risk-based process for verifying and documenting the progress of projects under construction before disbursing guaranteed loan funds. At a minimum, the process shall require documented proof of progress in connection with the construction, reconstruction, or reconditioning of a vessel or vessels before disbursements are made from the escrow fund. If the Secretary determines that the financial condition of the obligor warrants additional protections to the Secretary, then the Secretary shall take appropriate action under subsection (m) of this section. If the Secretary determines that the financial condition of the obligor jeopardizes its continued ability to perform its responsibilities in connection with the guarantee of obligations by the Secretary, the Secretary shall make an immediate determination whether default should take place and whether further measures should be taken to protect the interests of the Secretary while insuring that program objectives are met.''.

''(m) AGREEMENT WITH OBLIGOR.—The Secretary shall include provisions in loan agreements with obligors that provide additional authority to the Secretary to take action to limit potential losses in connection with defaulted loans or loans that are in jeopardy due to the deteriorating financial condition of obligors. Provisions that the Secretary shall include in loan agreements include requirements for additional collateral or greater equity contributions that are effective upon the occurrence of verifiable conditions relating to the obligors financial condition or the status of the vessel or shipyard project.''.

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself and Mr. HOLLINGS):

S. 1264. A bill to reauthorize the Federal Communications Commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Federal Communications Commission Reauthorization Act of 2003. This legislation is designed to reauthorize the Federal Communications Commission, FCC or Commission, so that it may continue to carry forth its charge to ensure interference-free communication on interstate and international radio, television, wire, satellite, and cable communications. This independent agency has not been reauthorized since 1991.

The FCC is responsible for a wide range of duties, including establishing regulatory policies that promote competition, innovation, and investment in broadband services; ensuring that a comprehensive and sound national competitive framework for communications services exists; encouraging the best use of spectrum domestically and internationally; and providing leadership for the rapid restoration of the Nation's communications infrastructure in the event of disruption.

This bill would reauthorize the Commission through fiscal year 2007. It would require that all application and regulatory fees paid to the Commission be deposited with the Commission subject to Appropriations.

The legislation also would authorize the Commission to allocate sufficient funds to be used for an audit of the e-rate program to determine the specific fraud or abuse that has occurred during the operation of the program. Serious allegations of fraud in the operation of the e-rate fund have been raised in recent months, and we should provide the Commission adequate resources to ensure that e-rate funds are being used for the purposes intended. The Commission would be required to transmit a report of its findings and conclusions to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Energy and Commerce on the anniversary of the Act's enactment for each year between 2004 and 2007.

Further, this bill would clarify the Commission's review of its media ownership rules. Specifically, the bill sets forth the timing and the standard the FCC will use for reviewing its broadcast ownership rules. Currently, the FCC is required to review its broadcast ownership rules every 2 years. The bill lengthens the duration between reviews from 2 years to 5 years. At a recent hearing, all five FCC Commissioners recommended this change.

The legislation also would clarify the actions the FCC may take during its media ownership reviews. Courts have found the current review standard to carry ''with it a presumption in favor of repealing or modifying ownership rules'' as part of ''a process of deregulation.'' This bill modifies the review standard to specifically allow the FCC to repeal, strengthen, limit, or retain media ownership rules if it determines such changes are in the public interest. At a recent hearing, several of the FCC Commissioners endorsed this change.

The bill would increase the Commission's ability to enforce the Communications Act of 1934, the 1934 Act, by raising the statutory cap on Commission fines and forfeitures by a factor of ten. The Commission has sought this increased enforcement ability to ensure communications providers do not accept Commission fines as a ''cost of doing business.'' The bill also increases the statute of limitations for violations of FCC rules or regulations from one year to two years. The legislation also allows the Commission to assess fines against direct broadcast satellite (DBS) operators for violations of the Communications Act in the same manner that the Commission may assess fines against broadcasters and cable operators.

The bill would further clarify that a party injured by a common carrier's violation of FCC rules or orders may recover damages for such injury in an action before the FCC or before a United States District Court. The need for this clarification is underscored by the recent decision by the United States Court of Appeals or the Second Circuit in Conboy v. AT&T Corp. Moreover, the new section would allow for the recovery of attorneys' fees in complaints filed either in district court or at the FCC.

The bill also would allow the Commission to seize broadcasting equipment where one engages in malicious interference to radio communications. This type of behavior is particularly egregious when parties attempt to maliciously interfere with public safety frequencies.

Furthermore, the bill would ensure that valuable spectrum does not lie fallow unnecessarily. It precludes a successful bidder in a spectrum auction from using bankruptcy to avoid its obligation to pay for its spectrum license. The bill also establishes an office within the Commission for the recording and perfecting of security interests related to licenses.

It also would ban any payment or reimbursement to the FCC of travel costs for FCC officials or staff from a nongovernmental sponsor of a convention, conference, or meeting. Recent reports indicate that during the last eight years, FCC officials and staff have taken more than 2,500 trips paid for by the industries they regulate. Although this is perfectly legal and it is often appropriate for FCC officials and staff to attend such conventions, conferences, or meetings, it should be without the appearance of impropriety. Therefore, the bill authorizes the Commission sufficient funds to pay for their own travel costs in the future.

The bill would impose a one year lobbying ban on high-level FCC staffers who leave the FCC's employment.

Finally, the bill contains language in response to a recent court case before the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, which held that the Commission lacked jurisdiction to promulgate regulations necessary to require video descriptions of television programming to assist those who are visually impaired. This section would provide the FCC such authority.

Reauthorizing the FCC is important so the agency may continue to successfully carry out its many responsibilities. I look forward to working on this important legislation and I hope that my colleagues will agree to join me in expeditiously moving this reauthorization through the legislative process.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§ 41745. Other pilot programs

''(a) IN GENERAL.—If the entire amount authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation by section 41785 is appropriated for fiscal years 2004 through 2007, the Secretary of Transportation shall establish pilot programs that meet the requirements of this section for improving service to communities receiving essential air service assistance under this subchapter or consortia of such communities.

''(b) PROGRAMS AUTHORIZED.—

''(1) COMMUNITY FLEXIBILITY.—The Secretary shall establish a pilot program for not more than 10 communities or consortia of communities under which the airport sponsor of an airport serving the community or consortium may elect to forego any essential air service assistance under preceding sections of this subchapter for a 10-year period in exchange for a grant from the Secretary equal in value to twice the annual essential air service assistance received for the most recently ended calendar year. Under the program, and notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the Secretary shall make a grant to each participating sponsor for use by the recipient for any project that—

''(A) is eligible for assistance under chapter 471;

''(B) is located on the airport property; or

''(C) will improve airport facilities in a way that would make such facilities more usable for general aviation.

''(2) EQUIPMENT CHANGES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a pilot program for not more than 10 communities or consortia of communities under which, upon receiving a petition from the sponsor of the airport serving the community or consortium, the Secretary shall authorize and request the essential air service provider for that community or consortium to use smaller equipment to provide the service and to consider increasing the frequency of service using such smaller equipment. Before granting any such petition, the Secretary shall determine that passenger safety would not be compromised by the use of such smaller equipment. Any community that participates in a pilot program under this subparagraph is deemed to have waived the minimum service requirements under section 41732(b) for purposes of its participation in that pilot program.

''(B) ALTERNATIVE SERVICES.—For any 3 aiport sponsors participating in the program established under subparagraph (A), the Secretary may establish a pilot program under which—

''(i) the Secretary provides 100 percent Federal funding for reasonable levels of alternative transportation services from the eligible place to the nearest hub airport or small hub airport;

''(ii) the Secretary will authorize the sponsor to use its essential air service subsidy funds provided under preceding sections of this subchapter for any airport-related project that would improve airport facilities; and

''(iii) the sponsor may make an irrevocable election to terminate its participation in the pilot program established under this paragraph after 1 year.

''(3) COST-SHARING.—The Secretary shall establish a pilot program under which the sponsors of airports serving a community or consortium of communities share the cost of providing air transportation service greater than the basic essential air service provided under this subchapter.

''(c) CODE-SHARING.—Under the pilot program established under subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized to require air carriers providing service to participating communities and major air carriers (as defined in section 41716(a)(2)) serving large hub airports (as defined in section 41731(a)(3)) to participate in multiple code-share arrangements consistent with normal industry practice whenever and wherever the Secretary determines that such multiple code-sharing arrangements would improve air transportation services. The Secretary may not require air carriers to participate in such arrangements under this subsection for more than 10 such communities.

''(d) TRACKING SERVICE.—The Secretary shall require carriers providing subsidy for service under section 41733 to track changes in services, including on-time arrivals and departures, on such subsidized routes, and to report such information to the Secretary on a semi-annual basis in such form as the Secretary may require.

''(e) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—In order to participate in a pilot program established under this section, the airport sponsor for a community or consortium of communities shall submit an application to the Secretary in such form, at such time, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The chapter analysis for chapter 417 of such title is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 41744 the following:

''41745. Other pilot programs.''.

SEC. 354. EAS PROGRAM AUTHORITY CHANGES.

(a) RATE RENEGOTIATION.—If the Secretary of Transportation determines that essential air service providers are experiencing significantly increased costs of providing service under subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, the Secretary of Transportation may increase the rates of compensation payable under that subchapter within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act without regard to any agreements or requirements relating to the renegotiation of contracts. For purposes of this subsection, the term ''significantly increased costs'' means an average annual total unit cost increase (but not increases in individual unit costs) of 10 percent or more in relation to the unit rates used to construct the subsidy rate, based on the carrier's internal audit of its financial statements.

(b) RETURNED FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, any funds made available under subchapter II of chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, that are returned to the Secretary by an airport sponsor because of decreased subsidy needs for essential air service under that subchapter shall remain available to the Secretary and may be used by the Secretary under that subchapter to increase the frequency of flights at that airport.

(c) SMALL COMMUNITY AIR SERVICE DEVELOPMENT PILOT PROGRAM.—Section 41743(h) of such title is amended by striking ''an airport'' and inserting ''each airport''.

SEC. 355. ONE-YEAR EXTENSION OF EAS ELIGIBILITY FOR COMMUNITIES TERMINATED IN 2003 DUE TO DECREASED AIR TRAVEL.

Notwithstanding the rate of subsidy limitation in section 332 of the Department of Transportation and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2000, the Secretary of Transportation may not terminate an essential air service subsidy provided under chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code, before the end of calendar year 2004 for air service to a community—

(1) whose calendar year ridership for 2000 was sufficient to keep the per passenger subsidy below that limitation; and

(2) that has received notice that its subsidy will be terminated during calendar year 2003 because decreased ridership has caused the subsidy to exceed that limitation.

Subtitle C—Financial Improvement Effort and Executive Compensation Report

SEC. 371. GAO REPORT ON AIRLINES' ACTIONS TO IMPROVE FINANCES AND ON EXECUTIVE COMPENSATION.

(a) FINDING.—The Congress finds that the United States government has by law provided substantial financial assistance to United States commercial airlines in the form of war risk insurance and reinsurance and other economic benefits and has imposed substantial economic and regulatory burdens on those airlines. (2) stating—

(A) the total compensation (as defined in section 104(b) of the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act (49 U.S.C. 40101 note)) paid by the air carrier to each officer or employee of that air carrier to whom that section applies for the period to which the report relates; and

(B) the terms and value (determined on the basis of the closing price of the stock on the last business day of the period to which the report relates) of any stock options awarded to such officer during that period.

(c) GAO AUTHORITY.—In order to compile the reports required by subsection (b), the Comptroller General, or any of the Comptroller General's duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, accounts, documents, papers, and records of such air carriers that relate to the information required to compile the reports. The Comptroller General shall submit with each such report a certification as to whether the Comptroller General has had access to sufficient information to make informed judgments on the matters covered by the report.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—The Comptroller General shall transmit the compilation of reports required by subsection (c) to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

Amounts in the fund shall be allocated in such a manner that—

(1) 40 percent shall be made available for hub airports;–

(2) 20 percent shall be made available for medium hub airports;–

The program shall be administered in concert with the airport improvement program under chapter 417 of title 49, United States Code.

(c) APPORTIONMENT.—Amounts made available under subsection (a)(1), (a)(2), or (a)(3) shall be apportioned among the airports in each category in accordance with a formula based on the ratio that passenger enplanements at each airport in the category bears to the total passenger enplanements at all airports in that category.

(d) LETTERS OF INTENT.—The Secretary of Homeland Security, or his delegate, may execute letters of intent to commit funding to airport sponsors from the Fund.

SEC. 405. ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the ''Arming Cargo Pilots Against Terrorism Act''.

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) During the 107th Congress, both the Senate and the House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed measures that would have armed pilots of cargo aircraft.

(2) Cargo aircraft do not have Federal air marshals, trained cabin crew, or determined passengers to subdue terrorists.

(3) Cockpit doors on cargo aircraft, if present at all, largely do not meet the security standards required for commercial passenger aircraft.

(4) Cargo aircraft vary in size and many are larger and carry larger amounts of fuel than the aircraft hijacked on September 11, 2001.

(5) Aircraft cargo frequently contains hazardous material and can contain deadly biological and chemical agents and quantities of agents that cause communicable diseases.

(6) Approximately 12,000 of the nation's 90,000 commercial pilots serve as pilots and flight engineers on cargo aircraft.

(7) There are approximately 2,000 cargo flights per day in the United States, many of which are loaded with fuel for outbound international travel or are inbound from foreign airports not secured by the Transportation Security Administration.

(8) Aircraft transporting cargo pose a serious risk as potential terrorist targets that could be used as weapons of mass destruction.

(9) Pilots of cargo aircraft deserve the same ability to protect themselves and the aircraft they pilot as other commercial airline pilots.

(10) Permitting pilots of cargo aircraft to carry firearms creates an important last line of defense against a terrorist effort to commandeer a cargo aircraft.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that members of a flight deck crew of a cargo aircraft should be armed with a firearm and taser to defend the cargo aircraft against an attack by terrorists that could result in the use of the aircraft as a weapon of mass destruction or for other terrorist purposes.

(d) ARMING CARGO PILOTS AGAINST TERRORISM.—Section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking ''passenger'' each place that it appears; and

(2) in subsection (k)—

(i) by striking ''or,'' and all that follows; and

(ii) by inserting ''or any other flight deck crew member.''; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(3) ALL-CARGO AIR TRANSPORTATION.—For the purposes of this section, the term air transportation includes all-cargo air transportation.''.

(e) TIME FOR IMPLEMENTATION.—The training of pilots as Federal flight deck officers required in the amendments made by subsection (d) shall begin as soon as practicable and no later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS.—The requirements of subsection (e) shall have no effect on the deadlines for implementation contained in section 44921 of title 49, United States Code, as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 407. AIR DEFENSE IDENTIFICATION ZONE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration establishes an Air Defense Identification Zone (in this section referred to as an ''ADIZ''), the Administrator shall, not later than 60 days after the date of establishing the ADIZ, transmit to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, a report containing an explanation of the need for the ADIZ. The Administrator shall provide the Committees an updated report every 60 days until the establishment of the ADIZ is rescinded. The reports and updates shall be transmitted in classified form.

(b) EXISTING ADIZ.—If an ADIZ is in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall transmit an initial report under subsection (a) to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate not later than 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—If a report required under subsection (a) or (b) indicates that the ADIZ is to be continued, the Administrator shall outline changes in procedures and requirements to improve operational efficiency and minimize the operational impacts of the ADIZ on pilots and air traffic controllers.

(d) DEFINITION.—In this section, the terms ''Air Defense Identification Zone'' and ''ADIZ'' mean a zone established by the Administrator with respect to airspace under 18,000 feet in approximately a 15 to 38 mile radius around Washington, District of Columbia, for which security measures are extended beyond the existing 15-mile-no-fly zone around Washington and in which general aviation aircraft are required to adhere to certain procedures issued by the Administrator.

SEC. 408. REPORT ON PASSENGER PRESCREENING PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Homeland Security, after consultation with the Attorney General, shall submit a report in writing to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure on the potential impact of the Transportation Security Administration's proposed Computer Assisted Passenger Prescreening System, commonly known as CAPPS II, on the privacy and civil liberties of United States citizens.

(b) SPECIFIC ISSUES TO BE ADDRESSED.—The report shall address the following:

(1) Whether and for what period of time data gathered on individual travelers will be retained, who will have access to such data, and who will make decisions concerning access to such data.

(2) How the Transportation Security Administration will treat the scores assigned to individual travelers to measure the likelihood they may pose a security threat, including how long such scores will be retained and whether and under what circumstances they may be shared with other governmental, nongovernmental, or commercial entities.

(3) The role airlines and outside vendors or contractors will have in implementing and operating the system, and to what extent will they have access, or the means to obtain access, to data, scores, or other information generated by the system.

(4) The safeguards that will be implemented to ensure that data, scores, or other information generated by the system will be used only as officially intended.

SEC. 508. LOW-EMISSION AIRPORT VEHICLES AND INFRASTRUCTURE.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to permit the use of funds made available under subchapter 471 to encourage commercial service airports in air quality nonattainment and maintenance areas to undertake projects for gate electrification, acquisition or conversion of airport vehicles and airport-owned ground support equipment to acquire low-emission technology, low-emission technology fuel systems, and other related air quality projects on a voluntary basis to improve air quality and more aggressively address the constraints that emissions can impose on future aviation growth. Use of those funds is conditioned on airports receiving credits for emissions reductions that can be used to mitigate the air quality effects of future airport development. Making these projects eligible for funding in addition to those projects that are already eligible under section 47102(3)(F) is intended to support those projects that, at the time of execution, may not be required by the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501 et seq.), but may be needed in the future.

(b) ACTIVITIES ADDED TO DEFINITION OF ''AIRPORT DEVELOPMENT''.—Section 47102(3) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(K) work necessary to construct or modify airport facilities to provide low-emission fuel systems, gate electrification, and other related air quality improvements at a commercial service airport, if the airport is located in an air quality nonattainment or maintenance area (as defined in sections 171(2) and 175(A) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501(2), 7505a) and if such project will result in an airport receiving appropriate emission credits, as described in section 47139 of this title. The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall issue guidance describing eligible low-emission modifications and improvements and stating how airport sponsors will demonstrate benefits.

''(L) a project for the acquisition or conversion of vehicles and ground support equipment, owned by a commercial service airport, to low-emission technology, if the airport is located in an air quality nonattainment or maintenance area (as defined in sections 171(2) and 175(A) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501(2), 7505a) and if such project will result in an airport receiving appropriate emission credits as described in section 47139 of this title. The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall issue guidance describing eligible low-emission vehicle technology and stating how airport sponsors will demonstrate benefits. For airport-owned vehicles and equipment, the acquisition of which are not otherwise eligible for assistance under this subchapter, the incremental cost of equipping such vehicles or equipment with low-emission technology shall be treated as eligible for assistance.''.

(c) LOW-EMISSION TECHNOLOGY DEFINED.—Section 47102 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (10) through (20), as paragraphs (11) through (21) respectively, and inserting after paragraph (9) the following:

''(11) 'low-emission technology' means technology for new vehicles and equipment whose emission performance is the best achievable under emission standards established by the Environmental Protection Agency and that relies exclusively on alternative fuels that are substantially non-petroleum based, as defined by the Department of Energy, but not excluding hybrid systems.''.

(d) EMISSIONS CREDITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 471, as amended by section 206 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''§ 47139. Emission credits for air quality projects

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall jointly agree on how to assure that airport sponsors receive appropriate emission credits for projects described in sections 40117(a)(3)(G), 47102(3)(K), or 47102(3)(L) of this title. The agreement must, at a minimum, include provisions to ensure that—

''(1) the credits will be consistent with the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7402 et seq.);

''(2) credits generated by the emissions reductions in criteria pollutants are kept by the airport sponsor and may be used for purposes of any current or future general conformity determination or as offsets under the New Source Review program;

''(3) there is national consistency in the way credits are calculated and are provided to airports;

''(4) credits are provided to airport sponsors in a timely manner; and

''(5) there is a method by which the Secretary can be assured that, for any specific project for which funding is being requested, the appropriate credits will be granted.

''(b) ASSURANCE OF RECEIPT OF CREDITS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—As a condition for making a grant for a project described in section 47102(3)(K), 47102(3)(L), or 47140 of this title, or as a condition for granting approval to collect or use a passenger facility fee for a project described in sections 40117(a)(3)(G), 47102(3)(K), 47102(3)(L), or 47140 of this title, the Secretary must receive assurance from the State in which the project is located, or from the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency where there is a Federal Implementation Plan, that the airport sponsor will receive appropriate emission credits in accordance with the conditions of this subsection.

''(2) CREDITS FOR CERTAIN EXISTING PROJECTS.—The Secretary and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall jointly agree on how to provide emission credits to projects previously approved under section 47136 of this title during fiscal years 2001 through 2003, under terms consistent with this section.''.

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 471 is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''§ 47140. Airport ground support equipment emissions retrofit pilot program

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Transportation shall carry out a pilot program at not more than 10 commercial service airports under which the sponsors of such airports may use an amount subject to apportionment to retrofit existing eligible airport ground support equipment which burns conventional fuels to achieve lower emissions utilizing emission control technologies certified or verified by the Environmental Protection Agency.

''(b) LOCATION IN AIR QUALITY NONATTAINMENT OR MAINTENANCE AREAS.—A commercial service airport shall be eligible for participation in the pilot program only if the airport is located in an air quality nonattainment or maintenance area (as defined in sections 171(2) and 175(A) of the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7501(2), 7505a)).

''(c) SELECTION CRITERIA.—In selecting applicants for participation in the pilot program, the Secretary shall give priority consideration to applicants that will achieve the greatest air quality benefits measured by the amount of emissions reduced per dollar of funds expended under the pilot program.

''(d) MAXIMUM AMOUNT.—Not more than $500,000 may be expended under the pilot program at any single commercial service airport.

''(e) GUIDELINES.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall establish guidelines regarding the types of retrofit projects eligible under this pilot program by considering remaining equipment useful life, amounts of emission reduction in relation to the cost of projects, and other factors necessary to carry out this section. The Secretary may give priority to ground support equipment owned by the airport and used for airport purposes.

''(f) ELIGIBLE EQUIPMENT DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'eligible equipment' means ground service or maintenance equipment that—

''(1) is located at the airport;

''(2) used to support aeronautical and related activities on the airport; and

''(3) will remain in operation at the airport.''.

The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall issue guidance for eligible projects and for how benefits must be demonstrated. The eligible cost is limited to the incremental amount that exceeds the cost of acquiring other vehicles or equipment that are not low-emission and would be used for the same purpose, or to the cost of low-emission retrofitting. For purposes of this paragraph, the term ''ground support equipment'' means service and maintenance equipment used at an airport to support aeronautical operations and related activities.''.

TITLE VI—SECOND CENTURY OF FLIGHT

SEC. 601. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Since 1990, the United States has lost more than 600,000 aerospace jobs.

(2) Over the last year, approximately 100,000 airline workers and aerospace workers have lost their jobs as a result of the terrorist attacks in the United States on September 11, 2001, and the slowdown in the world economy.

(3) The United States has revolutionized the way people travel, developing new technologies and aircraft to move people more efficiently and more safely.

(4) Past Federal investment in aeronautics research and development have benefited the economy and national security of the United States and the quality of life of its citizens.

(5) The total impact of civil aviation on the United States economy exceeds $900,000,000,000 annually—9 percent of the gross national product—and 11 million jobs in the national workforce. Civil aviation products and services generate a significant surplus for United States trade accounts, and amount to significant numbers of America's highly skilled, technologically qualified work force.

(6) Aerospace technologies, products and services underpin the advanced capabilities of our men and women in uniform and those charged with homeland security.

(7) Future growth in civil aviation increasingly will be constrained by concerns related to aviation system safety and security, aviation system capabilities, aircraft noise, emissions, and fuel consumption.

(8) The United States is in danger of losing its aerospace leadership to international competitors aided by persistent government intervention. Many governments take their funding beyond basic technology development, choosing to fund product development and often bring the product to market, even if the products are not fully commercially viable. Moreover, international competitors have recognized the importance of noise, emission, fuel consumption, and constraints of the aviation system and have established aggressive agendas for addressing each of these concerns.

(9) Efforts by the European Union, through a variety of means, will challenge the United States' leadership position in aerospace. A recent report outlined the European Union's goal of becoming the world's leader in aviation and aeronautics by the end of 2020, utilizing better coordination among research programs, planning, and funding to accomplish this goal.

(10) Revitalization and coordination of the United States' efforts to maintain its leadership in aviation and aeronautics are critical and must begin now.

(11) A recent report by the Commission on the Future of the United States Aerospace Industry outlined the scope of the problems confronting the aerospace and aviation industries in the United States and found that—

(A) Aerospace will be at the core of America's leadership and strength throughout the 21st century;

(B) Aerospace will play an integral role in our economy, our security, and our mobility; and

(C) global leadership in aerospace is a national imperative.

(12) Despite the downturn in the global economy, Federal Aviation Administration projections indicate that upwards of 1 billion people will fly annually by 2013. Efforts must begin now to prepare for future growth in the number of airline passengers.

(13) The United States must increase its investment in research and development to revitalize the aviation and aerospace industries, to create jobs, and to provide educational assistance and training to prepare workers in those industries for the future.

(14) Current and projected levels of Federal investment in aeronautics research and development are not sufficient to address concerns related to the growth of aviation.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, in a few moments we will be adjourning until Monday afternoon. But in looking back over the last 5 days, I do want to share with my colleagues my satisfaction with the progress we have made.

I have had the pleasure of opening the Senate most every day, and then closing it most every day or evening and at the end of the week, so it gives me an opportunity to look back. For just a few minutes I would like to comment on some of the things we accomplished this week.

We had very good debate—strong debate, effective debate—on the Energy bill over the past week and, in fact, over the past 2 weeks.

I do want to take this opportunity to thank, praise and commend the chairman of the Energy Committee, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, Chairman DOMENICI, for his tremendous work in moving us forward on this critically important bill. We have made solid progress. We have had a number of votes this week.

As all of my colleagues know—because I have said it on this floor and in many other places almost daily—we will be turning to the Medicare prescription drug bill next week. We will stay on the bill until we complete that legislation. I think we can finish it actually in less than 2 weeks, although I have targeted a 2-week period, which gives more than adequate time for debate and amendment. I am even more confident that we will be able to pass that bill after spending about 12 hours yesterday in the Finance Committee meeting, where we looked at the bill, debated it, amended it, and passed it with a strong bipartisan majority in preparation for coming to the floor.

But I do want to make it very, very clear that we will be coming back to the Energy bill, and we will finish it.

Also, this week, we accomplished a lot, locking in an agreement which limits the number of amendments that can be considered on the Energy bill. That is real progress because now we have a finite number of amendments, and we can talk to the various Members and see what they have proposed and get those amendments organized in such a way that we can spend time on each of the amendments in a way that makes sense, that is systematic, and whereby we will be able to, I believe, lay out a glidepath to bring that bill to conclusion.

It is imperative for the United States of America that we have a comprehensive energy policy. It is America's future that is at stake, our economic future, so much so that, in fact, the Federal Reserve Chairman, Alan Greenspan, came to the Hill this past week to speak specifically on the need for action on energy policy.

The price of natural gas for July delivery is 150 percent higher than it was 3 years ago. Meanwhile, natural gas storage levels are at their lowest in almost 3 decades. Chairman Greenspan warns that the volatility in the price of natural gas could eventually contribute to ''erosion'' in the economy. We simply cannot afford that.

American industry, at the same time, is caught between regulations limiting the supply of natural gas and regulations encouraging its use. The result of that is we have rising gas prices, with some industries cutting jobs or being priced out altogether, and consumers getting hit with rising electric bills.

As we talked about a lot this week, and looked at the various amendments, we absolutely must diversify our sources of energy. We must do so in a way that lessens our overall dependence on foreign sources.

America's energy policy should be consistent with our foreign policy in the sense that both should be independent and secure—independent and secure.

By increasing America's domestic production of sources of energy—whether it is clean coal, oil and gas, nuclear, solar, or other renewable energy sources—we increase not only our energy supply but our national security.

In closing, I want to say one other thing about the comprehensive nature of a national energy policy. We will, by doing so, create needed jobs. The Energy bill, it is estimated, will create at least 500,000 jobs, and we know it will save even more. The Alaskan pipeline, for example, will create at least 400,000 jobs alone. The hundreds of millions of dollars that will be invested in research and development of new technologies will not only benefit the environment but will also create new jobs. These are the types of jobs that are increasingly important, I would argue, in this century—jobs of engineering, mathematics, chemistry, physics, and science.

Thus, I am committed, as majority leader, to get a comprehensive national energy bill passed as soon as we possibly can. We hear the Democrats warning, darkly, of a weak economy and increasing unemployment, while we, as Republicans, are talking about taking action and making our economy strong with such action.

So again, Mr. President, we will return to this bill. We will dispose of the remaining amendments, and we will deliver to the American people energy that is cleaner, more abundant, and more secure.

In addition to the Energy legislation which we spent most of the week on, we actually touched on a number of other very important legislative matters. The Senate last night passed the Federal Aviation Administration reauthorization bill. We were able to consider a number of amendments, and as the Democratic assistant leader said earlier today at the opening of the Senate this morning, it was remarkable to see how that bill was handled on the floor. It came together in a bipartisan way, in a way that really is a good model for us in handling this type of legislation when it comes to the floor.

I thank the chairman and ranking member and Members on both sides of the aisle for their cooperation in moving us forward and passing that very important bill.

We also passed this week the Burmese Freedom and Democracy Act. I am pleased the Senate was able to consider that bill to address the tragedy that is occurring, as we speak, in Burma and the issues of freedom and democracy for which we have fought so hard in other parts of the world. It shows we understand, that we are caring, we are compassionate, and we will take action when freedom and democracy are challenged.

I thank the majority whip, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Mr. MCCONNELL, for bringing that bill to our attention and bringing it to the floor.

We also passed the Women Business Centers Preservation Act which was sponsored by our colleague, Senator OLYMPIA SNOWE. In addition, we were able to clear a number of executive nominations. Just a few minutes ago I was looking at the nominations that are pending, and I will continue to work toward clearing these nominations on the Executive Calendar and scheduling rollcall votes as necessary.

(Mr. BENNETT assumed the Chair.)

A WEEKEND OF CELEBRATIONS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, there are two other issues I wish to quickly mention. It has to do with important holidays that occur this weekend. Sandwiched between Memorial weekend and the Fourth of July, Flag Day often gets overlooked. Believed to have been started in 1885 by a Wisconsin schoolteacher, the purpose of Flag Day, June 14, is to celebrate the birthday of the American flag. It gives us all the opportunity to reflect on the great Nation that the American flag symbolizes.

The American flag is recognized worldwide as a symbol of democracy and freedom. It is the flag which leads us in every American battle and many struggles of freedom in foreign lands. It flies over our Capitol Building. It is unfurled at public events, large and small. It even flies on the face of the Moon.

I encourage my fellow citizens to pause tomorrow evening at 7 p.m. and join in the annual recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance. The first pledge we make, after all, is to that Flag of the United States of America.

Also this weekend we celebrate Father's Day. All across the country families will be honoring their dads with special dinners, handmade gifts, and probably goofy ties for one or two dads across the country, and rightly so. Every day we learn more and more about how vital fathers are to the well-being of their families, and especially their children.

Children with involved loving fathers, as compared to children without fathers, are more likely to do well in school, to have a healthy self-esteem, to show empathy, to avoid drug use, to avoid truancy, and to avoid criminal activity.

The National Fatherhood Initiative, a nonprofit organization devoted to promoting responsible fatherhood, reports that today's fathers are present in their children's lives more than ever.

The phenomenon of father absence has stopped growing. Dads in two-parent families are spending more time with their children than fathers did a generation ago. What is more, these fathers seem to be more active and more nurturing. Indeed, that is progress.

Perhaps even more heartening is the large number of national surveys which find that young men identify fatherhood and family time as a major priority. Indeed, that is great news.

On Saturday, let us salute our flag and, on Sunday, America's dads. From a grateful Nation, happy Flag Day and happy Father's Day.

SEQUENTIAL REFERRAL OF NOMINATION

Mr. FRIST. Madam President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that when the Governmental Affairs Committee reports the nomination of Michael Garcia, PN 451, to be Assistant Secretary of Homeland Security, the nomination then be sequentially referred to the Judiciary Committee for a period not to exceed 15 days of session; provided further, that if the nomination is not reported by that time, the nomination be automatically discharged and placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. DOLE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, JUNE 16, 2003

Mr. FRIST. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 2 p.m., Monday, June 16. I further ask unanimous consent that following the prayer and pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then begin consideration of S. 1, the prescription drug benefits bill, as provided under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. FRIST. Madam President, for the information of all Senators, on Monday, the Senate will begin consideration of S. 1, the prescription drug benefits bill. Under a previous agreement, during Monday's session, the consideration of S. 1 will be limited to debate only. Therefore, there will be no votes during Monday's session. Members are welcome to come to the floor—in fact, I encourage them to do so—to make their opening statements on the prescription drug legislation during Monday's session. The next vote will occur during Tuesday's session of the Senate. Members will be notified when that vote is scheduled.

I reiterate to all Members that the next 2 weeks will be very busy as we consider this important legislation on Medicare and prescription drugs. Senators should expect rollcall votes and late nights, if necessary, in order to pass this measure prior to the Fourth of July recess.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 2 P.M., MONDAY, JUNE 16, 2003

Mr. FRIST. Madam President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:26 p.m., adjourned until Monday, June 16, 2003, at 2 p.m.

CONFIRMATION

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TRIBUTE TO BETTE LUNN

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to honor a lifelong educator from my district. Bette Lunn, of Pueblo, Colorado, has given the gift of music to students for 46 years. As Bette embarks on her retirement, I would like to recognize her career before this body of Congress and this nation.

Bette began teaching in Ohio in 1957 and moved with her husband to Pueblo in 1972. After spending 12 years as the vocal music teacher at Heaton Middle School, Bette transferred to East High School where she has taught for the last 19 years. Her ability to connect with children has inspired a number of students to become teachers and has also earned her a number of awards. Bette has been named an outstanding teacher in her district and is also a member of the Colorado Music Educators Hall of Fame.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to stand before this body today to recognize Bette Lunn, a woman who has clearly demonstrated her commitment to our nation's youth. Even though she is retiring, Bette still plans to volunteer to work with young people in her community. She possesses the spirit of giving that helped make our country great. Thank you, Bette, for many years of service to the youth of Pueblo.

HONORING T. KEITH KING FOR A LIFETIME OF LEADERSHIP AND SERVICE

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise to honor a truly exemplary Alabamian, a man who grew up in the tiny town of Frisco City, Alabama, and today has become one of our most outstanding business and community leaders.

For more than 43 years, T. Keith King, P.E., of Mobile, Alabama, has dedicated his life to his community, his family and his profession. A graduate of Auburn University, he has continued to remain active and involved with his Alma Mater. Recently, Mr. King completed two years as chairman of the Auburn Alumni Engineering Council. He is a life member of the Auburn Alumni Association, having served on the Board of Directors and as chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. King has made many contributions to the field of engineering due in part to his position as President, CEO and Chairman of the Board of Volkert & Associates in Mobile, Alabama. Climbing from a design engineer position with the firm in 1960, today Keith King leads one of the finest engineering firms in the country. Under Mr. King's leadership, Volkert currently employs 650 engineers, architects, planners, surveyors, environmental scientists, technicians and administrative support personnel in 12 offices located throughout eight Southeastern states.

His commitment to excellence has earned him numerous awards by the engineering industry. He was recently inducted into the Alabama Engineering Hall of Fame. Some of his other professional honors include: The American Council of Engineering Companies (ACEC) College of Fellows 2003 Community Service Award, recognition as one of the Top Ten Engineers in Alabama by the Alabama Section of the American Society of Civil Engineers, induction into the Alabama Engineering Hall of Fame and receipt of the National Society of Professional Engineers Distinguished Service Award.

As a recent chairman of the Business Council of Alabama, Keith King has also done much to improve the quality of life for all Alabamians by working to bring growth, jobs and business opportunities to the state of Alabama. His commitment to Alabama and the First Congressional District in particular is nothing short of inspirational. Keith King is a member of the Leadership Alabama Class of XII and is a longtime member of the Mobile Area Chamber of Commerce. He has been actively involved with the Mobile Area Council of the Boy Scouts of America for many years and has held many high ranking positions within that organization. Mr. King also gives generously of his time to the Boys and Girls Clubs of South Alabama, the National Multiple Sclerosis Society and the Mobile Lions Club and is a member of the USS Battleship Alabama Memorial Park Restoration Committee, to name just a few of the many other areas where he gives freely of his time and talents.

By example, Keith King has shown that unselfish dedication and service to your community, your state and your nation can truly make a difference. Mr. Speaker, I salute Keith King as a model citizen and as a leader to many in the First Congressional District. I know his lovely wife Julia and their daughter, two sons and seven grandchildren along with all of his friends and neighbors are extremely proud of the many contributions being made by this outstanding man.

TRIBUTE TO DIONISIA AMAYA-BONILLA

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Dionisia Amaya-Bonilla in recognition of her service to her local community and her native home of Honduras. Dionisia is proud of her heritage as a member of the Garinagu community, people who are descendants of West African slaves and Arawak Indians from St. Vincent who were deported to Honduras by the British in 1797.

Dionisia was born in La Ceiba, Honduras Central America on February 8, 1933. She came to the U.S. in May 1964, and became an American citizen in 1977. In 1979, Dionisia decided to go to college, earning a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Education with high honors from Medgar Evers College. Later, she earned a Masters/Advanced Certificate in Guidance and Counseling from Brooklyn College.

Dionisia's first connection with her community was through her church, St. Mathews Catholic Church where she has served for more than 22 years. When Hurricane Fifi struck Honduras in September 1974, many Garinagu, like Dionisia, got together to help their people back in Honduras. In 1990, after another tragedy occurred in the Garifuna community, Dionisia was there to help in anyway possible. This time it was the Happy Land Fire. Her organization, Mugama, which was started a year earlier, named a scholarship fund in honor of a promising young Garifuna who died in the fire.

Dionisia worked for the Board of Education for 16 years. She began as a paraprofessional, and would later go on to teach following the completion of her education. Ultimately, she became a school guidance counselor, a position she continued until her retirement in 1996.

Dionisia's biggest role in the community is being the coordinator of Mugama's education program. Her importance to the community is reflected by how the residents refer to her, with comments like: Mamma, Madre, and Abuelita. Recently, people have taken to call her the "glue" of the community.

Dionisia has received many honors in her life as a student, woman and community activist. During her college years, she was consistently on the Dean's List, and as a result, she was listed in the national Book of Excellent students. One of her greatest honors was meeting Isabel Arriola. Ms. Arriola is a Garifuna who survived Hurricane Mitch.

The ultimate honor for her is being able to serve her community by working with Mugama. She says that the Mugama Advocacy Center is a dream come true. Being there daily and helping to empower people provides Dionisia with all of the satisfaction she needs. Dionisia has been married to her husband Alejandro Bonilla for 14 years.

Mr. Speaker, Dionisia Amaya-Bonilla is committed to improving the lives of her community. As such, she is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable woman.

WATCHMAN, WHAT OF NIGHT?

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last month leaders and citizens from throughout America gathered in the Capitol Rotunda to commemorate the Days of Remembrance. The ceremony had many powerful moments, but none more moving than the remarks of my good friend Dr. Elie Wiesel, the Founding Chair of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council and one of the world's foremost champions for human rights and civil liberties.

A native of Romania, Elie Wiesel was fifteen when he and his family were deported to Auschwitz. His mother and younger sister perished, but he survived with the conviction that the international community must never forget the lessons of the Holocaust. During the past fifty years, as both an author and a teacher, Dr. Wiesel has devoted his life to this end.

However, to classify Elie Wiesel's legacy as one of remembrance takes into account only a small portion of his impact on society. He has spoken out not only against anti-Jewish atrocities, but also on behalf of victims from every corner of the globe, from Argentina's Desaparecidos to refugees of Cambodia's Khmer Rouge regime. When Dr. Wiesel was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1986, his speech clearly elucidated the link between the Holocaust and all other human rights abuses:

Human suffering anywhere concerns men and women everywhere. . . . As long as one dissident is in prison, our freedom will not be true. As long as one child is hungry, our life will be filled with anguish and shame. What all these victims need above all is to know that they are not alone; that we are not forgetting them, that when their voices are stifled we shall lend them ours, that while their freedom depends on ours, the quality of our freedom depends on theirs.

Mr. Speaker, on April 30 we were once again privileged to learn from this extraordinary man. Dr. Wiesel used his remarks to remind us that horrific memories of the Holocaust do not constitute a social end in and of themselves; rather, they must be used to ameliorate suffering in today's world and in that of tomorrow. ''If we want to remember,'' he said, ''if we want you to remember all those emaciated faces, all those burning eyes, all those muted prayers, it is not only for our sake but also for your children's and theirs. . . . Is memory the only answer to the tragedy itself? But whatever the answer, memory is its most indispensable element.''

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to enter the full text of Elie Wiesel's remarks into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE REMARKS

ELIE WIESEL, FOUNDING CHAIR UNITED STATES HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL, APRIL 30, 2003—THE CAPITOL ROTUNDA

From Isaiah, chapter 21: Shomer, ma milail? Watchman, what of the night? This ancient call of the prophet of chastisement and consolation reverberates in our memory today as we remember the men and women, young and old, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, secular and pious, dreamers of sacred blessings and seekers of hidden redemption, who were sentenced to suffer unparalleled agony and solitude in ghettos and death-camps not for what they have done or possessed or believed in but for what they were, sons and daughters of a people whose memory of persecution was the oldest in recorded history.

All the rivers run to the sea, days come and go, generations vanish, others are born, remembrance ceremonies follow one another—and hatred is still alive, and some of us, the remnant of the remnant, wonder with the poet Paul Celan: who will bear witness for the witness, who will remember what some of us tried to relate about a time of fear and darkness when so many, too many victims felt abandoned, forgotten, unworthy of compassion and solidarity? Who will answer questions whose answers the dead took with them? Who will feel qualified enough and strong enough, faithful enough to confront their fiery legacy?

What was and remains clear to some of us, here and elsewhere, is the knowledge that if we forget them, we too shall be forgotten.

But is remembrance enough? What does one do with the memory of agony and suffering? Memory has its own language, its own texture, its own secret melody, its own archeology and its own limitations: it too can be wounded, stolen and shamed; but it is up to us to rescue it and save it from becoming cheap, banal, and sterile.

Like suffering, like love, memory does not confer special privileges. It all depends on what one does with what we receive, for what purpose, in the name of what ideal. If we invoke our right, our obligation to remember a frightened child who, in a ghetto, was assassinated before the eyes of his mother, an old teacher beaten to death in the presence of his disciples, a nocturnal procession walking towards open pits already filled with corpses, a beautiful woman driven insane with grief before being knifed by the killer—if we want to remember, if we want you to remember all those emaciated faces, all those burning eyes, all those muted prayers, it is not only for our sake but also for your children's and theirs.

If it weren't for their memory, much of what has been undertaken and even accomplished would be without relevance—and worse: without meaning.

To remember means to lend an ethical dimension to all endeavors and aspirations. When you, my good friend Secretary Powell, search deep into your heart, you find that most of your diplomatic initiatives and military responses have been rooted in your faith in the mysterious power of History of which memory is made. Isn't that principle the one that keeps on governing all our lives? Wasn't 1938 the main factor in your recent decision-making regarding Iraq? In those years there were two great powers in Europe: France and Great Britain. Had they intervened instead of preaching appeasement, there would have been no world war, no Auschwitz.

Watchman, what of the night?

Is memory the only answer to the Tragedy itself? But whatever the answer, memory is its most indispensable element.

An ancient Talmudic legend tells us that when the soul leaves the body to return to heaven, it cries out in great pain; and the outcry is so powerful that it reverberates throughout creation. What about the outcry of six million souls?

Well, among the victims who were killed there was a 12-year-old girl, Yunite Vishniatzky, from a small village named Byten near Slutsk. This is her last letter, dated July 31, 1942: . . . ''Dear Father, I say good-bye to you before dying . . . We want very much to live . . . But they won't let us—that's how it goes . . . I am so afraid of dying: small children are thrown into the grave alive . . . I say good-bye to you forever . . . And give you a big kiss . . . Your Yunite . . .''

Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? And the watchman says: the morning comes, and also the night . . .

So—we remember all the children whose lives bothered the enemy so much he felt the irresistible urge to wipe them out. We remember Yunite Vishniatzky . . .

When her soul left her frail body, was her cry heard by anyone, anywhere?

ON THE RECOGNITION OF THE CITY OF DEERFIELD BEACH BEING NAMED A 2003 ALL-AMERICA CITY AWARD FINALIST

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the city of Deerfield Beach, Florida for their selection as 2003 All-America City Award Finalist. It is my pleasure to congratulate the mayor, the city commission, and the citizens of Deerfield Beach as they are recognized by our nation with consideration for the oldest and most respected community recognition award in the nation. I applaud the residents of Deerfield Beach for their strong civic pride and their dedication to their community.

Mr. Speaker, located in Florida's 22nd Congressional District, the city of Deerfield Beach has previously been recognized as America's First Project Impact Community and as a four-time National Blue Wave award-winner, as well as an All-America City finalist in 2001. Deerfield Beach is not only home to many quality corporations and non-profit organizations, but the city also thrives on the strong partnerships between non-profit organizations, the government and the private sector for the betterment of the community. The philosophy of these relationships is seen through the three projects that helped Deerfield Beach receive the title of an All-America City finalist. The NE Focal Point/CASA (Children, Alzheimer's Senior and Adult Services), Inc., is a not-for-profit organization that provides members of the Deerfield community with many philanthropic services for the community. Second, the Gateway Community Outreach (GCO), Inc., operates as a food distribution facility for those in need. Gateway provides homeless prevention guidance and financial assistance to its clients. Lastly, the Youth Automotive Training Center (YATC) is a non-profit organization that educates disadvantaged youth in not only automotive repair but in academic and future life management skills through an intensive, nine-month classroom and an automotive hands-on training program.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to again congratulate those citizens of Deerfield, Florida and the delegation of 70 friends, residents and officials of Deerfield Beach who have worked incredibly hard over the past year to receive the title of All-America City finalist. I go on to wish the city of Deerfield Beach good luck as they challenge the other 30 finalists for this award, in hopes to receive the ultimate recognition as the All-America City.

FALCON NEST 725 CELEBRATES 87TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, June 28, 2003, the Polish Falcons of America Nest 725 of Milwaukee will celebrate its 87th anniversary as well as its role in hosting the 2003 PFA District II Meet and Convention.

The Polish Falcons of America came together in 1887 as an outgrowth of a similar organization in Poland. A fraternal benefit society and physical fitness organization, the group has pursued the goal of a ''sound mind in a sound body'' for all of its members. This saying in Polish, ''Wzdrowym ciele zdrowy duch,'' is the organization's maxim.

After the founding of the first Nest in Chicago, Illinois, the PFA quickly expanded, and by 1894 the organization included twelve Nests. Because of the growing popularity of these local Nests, leaders established the Alliance of Polish Turners of the United States of America.

In 1916 a group of Polish-Americans in Milwaukee organized Nest 725. Young men and women in the organization participated in district rallies, forming drilling teams and a group choir and band.

More recently, Nest 725 has participated in District and National Gymnastic Meets and Dance competitions, winning national awards in 1984, 1986, 1988, 1992, and 1994. It continues to hold physical fitness and Polish dance classes. Leaders showcase members' abilities in meets and performances at nursing homes and schools.

As an exemplary community association, Nest 725 has given generously over the years to many charitable and patriotic causes including the American Red Cross, Diabetes Foundation, March of Dimes, and Polish Army Veterans. The group has also sent donations overseas to those in need in Poland.

Through their contributions to the Polish community, Polish Falcons of America Nest 725 has positively impacted youth throughout the Milwaukee area. It is with great pleasure that I congratulate Nest 725 on its long and prosperous 87-year history and wish the group the best of luck in the years to come.

SUPPORTING GOALS AND IDEALS OF NATIONAL SEXUAL ASSAULT AWARENESS AND PREVENTION MONTH

SPEECH OF

HON. RAHM EMANUEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 10, 2003

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of S.J. Res. 8 to raise awareness and encourage prevention of sexual assault in the United States. I commend the leadership for calling up this resolution.

When I worked at the White House to help pass the Violence Against Women Act, I became aware that sexual assault is a national trauma that affects hundreds of thousands of people each year. According to the National Criminal Victimization Study, 248,000 people over the age of 12 reported being raped in 2001. While no one is immune from sexual assault, some are more vulnerable than others. Sadly, children are at the greatest risk. According to the U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics, 67 percent of all reporting victims of sexual assault were younger than 18; 34 percent of all victims were under age 12, and one of every seven victims of sexual assault were under age 6.

Most sexual assaults fit a similar profile where a child is assaulted by a family member, another trusted adult, or by a juvenile. The American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry reports that although sexual abuse of children is reported up to 80,000 times a year, that number may be a low estimate of the actual number of such cases. Regrettably, too many cases go unreported because of children's fear of their abusers and a law enforcement and legal system that does not accommodate their special needs.

Sexual assault can cripple a child's psyche and deprive him or her of hope. According to the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, ''A child who is the victim of prolonged sexual abuse usually develops low self-esteem, a feeling of worthlessness and an abnormal or distorted view of sex. The child may become withdrawn and mistrustful of adults, and can become suicidal.'' While no single solution will eliminate sexual assault, education and awareness can go a long way toward its prevention. Young adults must be given the assistance necessary to stop unwanted sexual advances and to minimize such risk.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in heightening awareness and encouraging prevention of this urgent problem by voting for this important resolution.

HONORING TONY SANTY

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a beloved football coach and Grand Junction, Colorado native. Tony Santy has touched many lives in the past 25 years as a teacher, football coach, and mentor. Today, I would like to recognize his accomplishments before this body of Congress and this nation.

Tony grew up in Grand Junction where his family has lived since the 1890s. Tony played football in his younger years and went on to play at Mesa State College. He later attended the University of Colorado and proceeded to earn his teaching certificate from Western State College. Although Tony's father had originally encouraged him to become a lawyer, his high school coach, George Ryan, inspired Tony to pursue his interest in coaching.

As recognition for his efforts, Tony was selected as one of the 2002 AFLAC National Assistant Coaches of the Year. However, he deflects the attention from this award by explaining that the most gratifying part of his job is the interaction with his student-athletes. He has been particularly pleased to see some of his former athletes follow his example and dedicate their lives to coaching.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to stand before this body of Congress today to recognize the positive influence that Tony has had upon the students and student-athletes of Grand Junction. I commend Tony for the fundamental role that he has played in imparting strong values to our future generations. Congratulations, Tony, and good luck with all your future endeavors.

Her cheerful spirit and love for children make her a joy to be around, both in and out of the classroom. Mrs. Turberville works hard to keep her classroom an exciting and creative workplace for her students. Her students do not just learn science, they learn to love science.

Amanda Turberville graduated from Mississippi State University in 1997 and has been teaching middle school science at Phillips Preparatory Magnet School for 7 years. She has been energizing to her students since day one and she still brings the enthusiastic spark with which she began teaching to the classroom. Once again, I congratulate Amanda Turberville for her service, leadership and dedication to her students and the future of our great country.

TRIBUTE TO ALFRED STEIGER

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Alfred Steiger in recognition of his dedication to improving the lives of foster care children.

Al was born on Marion Street in the Bushwick section of Brooklyn, New York. He and his wife Victoria have been married for 29 years and are the proud parents of five children, Victoria, Mary Beth, Al Jr., Virginia and Jeffery, and the grandparents of three children, Justine, Joseph, and John. Al and his wife reside in Oceanside and are members of the First Presbyterian Church in Oceanside.

Al joined the New York City Sanitation Department in 1981 and was promoted to Supervisor in 1989 and was assigned to Brooklyn Community Board 8 (BK8) as a field officer on the midnight shift. He conducted field operations in the Crown Heights and Bedford Stuyvesant Community Board (BK3) areas of Brooklyn. He was promoted to District Superintendent of Brooklyn North 5, which is East New York's Community Board 5. As District Superintendent, his responsibilities include keeping East New York cleaned by garbage collection and the removal of snow during winter. In September 2001, Al became President of the Steuben Association of the New York City Sanitation Department. He also serves as union delegate for Local 444 Sanitation Officers.

In early 1990, Al and his wife felt the need to give back something to the community for all of the blessings they have received. So after filing the necessary documents, they were accepted as foster parents in Nassau County for the Department of Social Services. Since becoming foster parents, they have fostered over 35 children in their care. They were blessed again when they had the opportunity to adopt their son Jeffrey who came to them when he was only 4 days old.

In 1995, Al and Mary saw a need for foster parents to come together to better serve the children for which they were caring. After several meetings, the Nassau County Foster Parent Association was formed and Al was voted in as President. The NCFPA is a not-for-profit organization that has raised thousands of dollars for various functions for foster children. The funds are used to take children on picnics, swimming trips and various other outings. Scholarship and burial funds are also available. As President of the organization, Al goes to Albany once a year to lobby for children's rights and also to attend a conference held by the New York State Citizens Coalition for Children. He feels it is an honor to volunteer in the community where he resides and for the Department for which he works.

Mr. Speaker, Alfred Steiger is committed to improving the lives of children, especially those in need. As such, he is more than worthy of receiving our recognition today and I urge my colleagues to join me in honoring this truly remarkable person.

IN HONOR AND REMEMBRANCE OF MAYOR WALTER F. EHRNFELT, JR.

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor and remembrance of Mayor Walter F. Ehrnfelt, Jr.—devoted family man, accomplished community leader, and admired friend and mentor. Mayor Ehrnfelt's vision, integrity and love for his community led the City of Strongsville through an amazing journey that lasted more than 2 decades—from a quiet farming village to a thriving, family-oriented suburb—all without compromising the City's rustic charm.

Mayor Ehrnfelt was born and raised in Strongsville and reflected a life-long commitment to his community his entire life. From his childhood on, Mayor Ehrnfelt was instilled with a clear focus on family, faith and community. His deep work ethic and high level of integrity was reinforced daily while he worked as a butcher at the family-owned meat stand at Cleveland's West Side Market. Mayor Ehrnfelt was content to work in the family business and did not seek elected office—it sought him.

In 1973, Mayor Ehrnfelt's neighbors and friends urged him to run for the office of City Council. He ran reluctantly, and won. Just 5 years later, Mayor Ehrnfelt was appointed Mayor. In 1979 he won his first mayoral race by a landslide, and served as Mayor ever since. He quickly became the most popular and beloved Mayor in the history of Strongsville, and successfully served as Mayor for 25 years.

Mayor Ehrnfelt's unwavering integrity, kindness and humble nature reflected his character and defined his tenure as Mayor. Yet his gentle and humble nature belied his deep intellect, vision and keen business savvy. His work is clearly evidenced within the significant growth and carefully planned development of his beloved City. From the smallest to the most significant civic endeavor, Mayor Ehrnfelt offered the same respect and consideration to everyone involved—regardless of their status or political affiliation.

Titles and accolades did not hold significance for him—care for his family and service to community did. Mayor Ehrnfelt was a true leader in every sense—a genuine individual whose modesty and strong sense of self cast a rare and steady beacon of light across the dark game of politics. He consistently disregarded political pressures and kept focused on his community—working tirelessly on behalf of Strongsville. Mayor Ehrnfelt expected others to do their best—and he brought out the best in everyone.

Mr. Speaker and Colleagues, please join me in honor, gratitude and remembrance of Mayor Walter F. Ehrnfelt—an exceptional man and caring leader whose life profoundly impacted the lives of thousands. His passing marks a deep loss for countless who called him friend—including me. Mayor Ehrnfelt's brilliant and flawless legacy of community progress tempered with preservation will be remembered always by the people of Strongsville—and far beyond. Moreover, it was the power of his kindness, grace, tenacity and heart that uplifted every level of the Strongsville community.

I extend my deepest condolences to Mayor Ehrnfelt's beloved wife, Anne; his beloved children, Walter F. III, Susan, Robert and Judy; his beloved grandchildren and his beloved great-grandchild. Mayor Ehrnfelt's life will serve as an ageless example of leadership, service to others and heart—and his legacy will forever resound throughout the City of Strongsville and throughout our entire community.

FOR YOUR FREEDOM AND OURS: FRED S. ZEIDMAN'S ELOQUENT REMARKS COMMEMORATING THE DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last month leaders and citizens from throughout America gathered in the Capitol Rotunda to commemorate the Days of Remembrance. This annual ceremony assumed special significance this year, as it took place during the 60th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, an event that epitomizes the true meaning of bravery and honor.

Why must we remember this tragedy? Fred S. Zeidman, the Chairman of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council, reminded us in his remarks. The Holocaust Museum, he explained, must serve ''as a warning to all people, whatever their backgrounds, about the consequences of hatred and indifference, and the failure to act.''

Mr. Speaker, given the challenges our country faces today, Mr. Zeidman's words echo with uncommon strength. America faces a war against international terrorism, a fight against forces that allow bigotry to drive rivers of violence. The Holocaust taught us that such evils do not go away if they are ignored. They must be battled by a global community conscious of its responsibilities and mindful of its past.

''For your freedom and ours.'' Mr. Zeidman used this refrain to characterize the Holocaust's legacy. It was the theme of Jewish fighters in the Warsaw Ghetto. It remains true today.

Fred Zeidman is the Chairman of Seitel, Inc., a member of the New York Stock Exchange that is a leading provider of seismic data and related geophysical expertise to the petroleum industry. He is also a prominent activist in the Jewish community; in addition to his service as Chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, he holds leadership positions in the Anti-Defamation League (Southwest Region), the Jewish Institute for National Security Affairs (JINSA), Jewish Federation of Greater Houston, and the American Jewish Committee

Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter the remarks of Fred S. Zeidman into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE REMARKS

FRED S. ZEIDMAN, CHAIRMAN UNITED STATES HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL, APRIL 30, 2003—THE CAPITOL ROTUNDA

Survivors of the Holocaust; The Museum's founding chairman Elie Wiesel, our moral compass and humanity's moral compass; Secretary Powell; Senate Majority Leader Frist, House Majority Leader DeLay, House Democratic Leader Pelosi, Senator Voinovich, Senator Corzine, and other members of Congress; Ambassador Ayalon; –My distinguished predecessor Miles Lerman and my co-chair Ruth Mandel; Friends of the Museum.

Secretary Powell, you have devoted your entire life to liberating oppressed people and fighting for freedom. We are particularly gratified, Mr. Secretary, that you are able to join us today.

For your freedom and ours—there could hardly be a more appropriate time, or a more appropriate place in which to consider these words.

Consider the figures in these murals that surround us, the statues on their pedestals. I think the leaders they represent would be hard-pressed to find a phrase that better captures what drove them to create a ''new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.''

For your freedom and ours—the theme of the manifesto smuggled out of the Warsaw ghetto and posted across the city, written by its Jewish freedom fighters in what they surely knew would become, in effect, their last testament. For your freedom and ours—it is a call to service that resonates all the more in light of recent events. What better words to characterize our national sense of urgency as we confront international terrorism today. It is an urgency echoed in our vigorous international leadership, represented here by Secretary Powell, and the courage of our armed forces, represented by the flags of the liberating units and the young men and women who carry them.

So, mindful of the dedication others have demonstrated on our behalf—whether 60 years ago or today—we are here to remember all the victims of the Holocaust as individuals with full and vibrant lives.

For your freedom and ours—I truly believe the resonance of this battle cry lies behind the American public's commitment to the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum.

The last ten years have demonstrated that Americans understand our living memorial as a warning to all people, whatever their backgrounds, about the consequences of hatred and indifference, and the failure to act. That understanding is based on our Holocaust survivors' most precious legacy—their memories. We cannot see all that passed before their eyes. We cannot endure the terror they suffered. We cannot grasp the human capacity for evil in the way that they can. But through them, it is possible that future generations may be spared a similar fate. But only, that is, if we learn from, and take up, their stories, the lessons of their history. That is the purpose and the hope of the Museum.

We may not all be called to the heroism of Vladka Meed, but in one way or another we are called to demonstrate moral courage. And each of us, as individuals, does have the power and responsibility to make a difference, to act.

As we confront the terrorism, hatred, and virulent antisemitism that pollute today's world, we must draw strength from the survivors' strength, courage from their courage.

For your freedom and ours—their history calls out to us. It is our obligation to ensure that the world listens, both now and for generations to come.

MEDICARE SHOULD OFFER COMMUNITY HEALTH CARE CHOICES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS JUNE 12, 2003

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the Medicare Substitute Adult Day Care Services Act. This important bill would provide new rehabilitative care choices for Medicare beneficiaries while simultaneously assisting family caregivers with the difficulties in caring for a homebound family member.

Specifically, this bill would update the Medicare home health benefit by allowing beneficiaries the option of substituting some, or all, of their Medicare home health services for care in an adult day care center (ADC).

The ADC would be paid the same rate that would have been paid for the service had it been delivered in the patient's home. In addition, the ADC would be required, with that one payment, to provide a full day of care to the patient at no additional cost to the Medicare program. That care would include the home health benefit as well as transportation, meals, medication management, and a program of supervised activities.

The ADC is able to provide these extra services at the same payment rate as home health care because there are inherent cost savings in the adult day care setting. In the home care arena, a skilled nurse, a physical therapist, or other home health provider must travel from home to home providing services to one patient per site. There are significant transportation and time costs associated with this method of care. In an adult day facility, the patients are brought to the providers, who see a larger number of patients in a shorter period of time.

I would like to point out that the bill would not expand the Medicare home health benefit. It does not make any new people eligible for the home health benefit nor would it expand the definition of what qualifies for reimbursement by Medicare for home health services. To be eligible for this new option, a patient would still need to qualify for Medicare home health benefits just like they do today. They would need to be homebound and have certification from a doctor for skilled therapy in the home.

The Medicare Substitute Adult Day Care Services Act simply recognizes that adult day care facilities can provide the same health services with the added benefits of social interaction, activities and meals. They also offer a therapeutic environment, in which a group of trained professionals can treat, monitor and support Medicare beneficiaries who would otherwise be monitored at home by a single caregiver.

Not only does ADC aid in the rehabilitation of the patient, it provides a tremendous benefit to the family caregiver. Many frail beneficiaries cannot be left alone; therefore, caregivers are unable to have a respite or maintain employment. If senior citizens could utilize ADC services, they would receive supervised care for an entire day and the caregiver would have the opportunity to work outside the home and/or leave the house for longer periods of time.

Adult day care centers offer high-quality, safe, and often preferable alternatives to senior citizens who face complete confinement in the home. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor and support this important legislation.

CESAR CHAVEZ POST OFFICE

SPEECH OF

HON. RAHM EMANUEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 10, 2003

Mr. EMANUEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 925 to designate Chicago's 1859 South Ashland Avenue postal facility as the Cesar Chavez Post Office.

Born on the cusp of the Depression, he knew that hard work in hard times brought only hard luck for farm workers. As a 15-year-old, Chavez left school when his father was disabled in a car accident, and he took up work that would inform his legacy. He worked twelve hours a day hoeing beets and lettuce to help sustain his family. As a child he learned that farm workers' pay depended on the farm owner's good will or whim. As fields of fruit ripened before him, he saw that the agricultural economy depended on growers' abilities to hire enough short-term workers to harvest the crop. He also saw how immigration policies like the bracero program ensured a steady supply of labor willing to accept depressed wages.

But the work that nearly broke his back only strengthened his spirit, and Cesar Chavez went on to be one of this nation's greatest advocates for farm workers.

With first-hand knowledge of the field's wretched conditions, of farm workers' vulnerabilities and of the workers' essential role in maintaining agricultural production, he gave voice to hundreds of thousands of migrant workers who were too afraid to speak out alone. He mobilized the isolated and vulnerable into a unified power, and in the process strengthened the burgeoning civil rights movement. The union he founded, United Farm Workers, adhered to Gandhi's principles of nonviolence, and slowly improved the lives of farm workers and their families by insisting that work conditions are safe and humane.

Cesar Chavez is an American hero. He believed in the dignity of work, and fought for the humane treatment of each worker. His life's work and guiding values make our society a better place. I am privileged to stand in support commemorating his life and work with the designation of the U.S. Postal Service facility at 1859 South Ashland Avenue in Chicago as the Cesar Chavez Post Office.

HONORING ESCO BILLINGS JR.

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to stand before this body of Congress today to pay tribute to a hardworking American. Esco Billings Jr., of Pueblo, Colorado, selflessly served this great nation throughout his long and dedicated life. It is with great pride that I take this opportunity to highlight the many contributions Esco made to his community throughout his life.

Esco answered the honorable call to military service twice in his lifetime, serving with the U.S. Navy during both World War II and the Korean War. Esco continued his life of public service when he returned home in 1951, embarking on a career with the Pueblo Fire Department. He ascended to the position of Assistant Chief in 1964, where he continued to serve until his retirement in 1979.

Esco's strong commitment to public service was only superseded by his devotion to family. Within his extended family of fellow policemen and firemen, he will be remembered as a devoted husband, father, and grandfather.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to stand before this Congress today to recognize Esco's devotion to his family and service to his country. Citizens like Esco provide the strength of spirit and character that make this nation great. While he will be dearly missed, we can all take solace in the fact that Esco's spirit will live on through the lives of those whom he has touched.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MARY SMITH, MOBILE AREA OUTSTANDING EDUCATOR OF THE YEAR

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I rise to honor and congratulate Mrs. Mary Smith for having recently received the Mobile Area Education Foundation's 2003 Outstanding Educator Award. She deserves our sincere and respectful congratulations. Her dedication and service have rightly earned her this prestigious award.

Mary Smith has taught middle school science at the Clark School of Mathematics and Science for eleven years. She has been very interactive with her science students, and she always gives her time and energy to her students and to her school. She frequently takes her classes on field trips and exposes them to hands-on experiments in and out of the classroom. She also gives up many nights and Saturdays to coach the Clark Science Olympiad. Her dedication and involvement have made a difference in many young lives.

One of Mrs. Smith's newest projects has been to capture the interest of her students with the NASA space program. ''Signatures in Space'' is a new government sponsored program that allows 500 different schools throughout the country to send their students' signatures into outer space with the next shuttle launch. Mary Smith was instrumental in procuring a spot on the signature list for the Clark School of Mathematics and Science. She also successfully helped a student to apply and get initiated into an extremely competitive national program allowing the student to communicate directly with the astronauts via a live telecast. Her devoted spirit and good-natured heart have made her more than deserving of this honorary award.

Mary Smith has been a real treasure to the students and faculty of Clark School of Mathematics and Science. The extra effort she always puts forth has allowed her to touch so many young lives. She is always going above and beyond and it shows in the hearts of all that she has touched. Heroes are not just the powerful and popular figures seen on television. True heroes are the people that touch lives, giving their heart and dedication to everything they do. True heroes are the Mary Smiths in the world. I can think of no one better deserving of this award and distinction. Once again, I congratulate Mary Smith for her hard work, dedication, and service to her students, to her community, and to our great country.

IN HONOR OF THE 85TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE UKRAINIAN BANDURIST CHORUS

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and recognition of the Ukrainian Bandurist Chorus as they celebrate 85 years of promoting Ukrainian arts and culture through their historic and significant musical achievement focused on the bandura—the ageless instrument and melodic voice of the Ukraine.

The bandura, an instrument that connects acoustic principles of the lute and harp, produces a sound that is both strong and fragile; it is a sound that has echoed the culture, spirit and people of Eastern Europe for thousands of years—a sound kept alive by the artistic talent of the bandurists—a sound that signifies a nation's struggle for freedom—a sound that is taught to every new generation—a sound that reaches across oceans and spans centuries.

The heart and soul of the Ukrainian Bandurist Chorus encompasses ideals of faith, freedom and the human spirit—reflecting the soul of the Ukraine. The Chorus also represents survival and renewel of a persecuted people. Like countless individuals and groups seeking freedom from the dark days of European oppression and war during the 1930's and 1940's—the artists and musicians of the Ukraine were persecuted for their art, faith, and love of country. But their music and heritage would survive and grow—in the Ukraine, and in communities across North America, as Ukrainian artists and musicians sought refuge in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Speaker and Colleagues, please join me in honoring the internationally reknowned Ukrainian Bandurist Chorus, as they celebrate eighty-five years of Ukrainian culture and history by blending the ageless sound of the bandura with voices of song—resounding Ukrainian history, faith, and struggle for liberty. The Ukrainian Bandurist Chorus symbolizes triumph over oppression and the bandura serves as a stark historical metaphor—lest we forget—the strength in our struggle for freedom, and the fragility in our struggle to preserve it—as fragile and strong as the melody of the bandura.

MEMORY AND ACTION: RUTH MANDEL'S REMARKS COMMEMORATING THE DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last month leaders and citizens from throughout America gathered in the Capitol Rotunda to commemorate the Days of Remembrance. This annual ceremony assumed special significance this year, as it took place during the 60th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, an event that epitomizes the true meaning of bravery and honor.

In April 1943, the Gestapo set out to liquidate the surviving Jews of Warsaw. Most ghetto residents—over 300,000—had been deported to Treblinka the previous year, where they faced immediate death in the gas chambers of the notorious extermination camp. Those left in Warsaw vowed not to meet a similar fate.

The Gestapo expected the clearing out of the ghetto to be a simple operation. How could a small number of Jews, poorly fed and with few arms, even think about fighting back against thousands of machine gun-toting storm troopers? When the Nazis entered the ghetto on the early morning of April 19th, this question met with an emphatic answer. Young Jewish fighters greeted the Gestapo with a hail of bullets and homemade Molotov cocktails, forcing the Nazis into a panicked retreat. ''Juden haben waffen,'' they yelled at the top of their lungs. ''Juden haben waffen.'' Translated literally: ''The Jews have arms.'' The men and women of the ghetto would not die quietly.

For the next month, the Jews of Warsaw fought with a fierce determination that stunned the Nazi leaders and inspired the world. Few expected to survive, and few did. Nevertheless, the courageous men and women of the Warsaw Ghetto live on through the power of their heroism and the strength of their sacrifice.

Mr. Speaker, the Days of Remembrance ceremony included moving remarks on the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising by Ruth B. Mandel, the Vice Chair of the United States Holocaust Memorial Council (USHMC) since 1993. Professor Mandel is the Director of the Eagleton Institute of Politics and Board of Governors Professor of Politics at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey. Her contributions to the USHMC have been extraordinary, and I'm honored to enter her remarks into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

DAYS OF REMEMBRANCE REMARKS

RUTH B. MANDEL, VICE CHAIR UNITED STATES HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL APRIL 30, 2003—THE CAPITOL ROTUNDA

Memory and Action

Honored guests, one and all: It is April 30, 2003. We gather to Remember and to pay our respects. To light a candle in memory.

The memory of a past we wish not to repeat is tantamount to a hope. Hope can be uplifting or comforting, an expectation that something positive might happen—I hope for good luck; I hope for a cure; I hope for happiness. Yet in itself, hope is a passive stance, a rather weak force.

For memory to be a strong force, it must be the fuel for action. An active stance can be inspired by memory, but it cannot linger in memory. It must move beyond memory.

Thus, as we observe this Day of Remembrance, as we recall our personal nightmares and once again revisit our losses, even as we honor those we memorialize—the millions in the human family, our families, annihilated by guns and gas in the unspeakably grotesque collapse of civilized society, let us each consider how to link memory to action.

In these frightening, worrisome times, the understandable question of despair—''But what can I do?''—s a perfectly rational individual response to the magnitude of pain and threat humanity visits on itself regularly. But it is not an adequate response.

Honoring memory as an active stance requires some effort to use it. Even in the smallest ways, use memory.

Honored guests, one and all: It is April 30, 2003, and we are here to memorialize children . . . and men . . . and women—millions annihilated by guns and gas in the grotesque collapse of civilized society.

Today we pay special tribute to some of those who defied evil with heroic action. Their actions offer lessons, warnings, and even inspiration for the issues we face in our own times. The Warsaw Ghetto Uprising of 60 years ago is just such an event. At the beginning of a new and, so far, troubled century, the uprising's power to inform, enlighten, and challenge our own choices remains strong.

On April 23, 1943, determined to uphold the honor of the Jewish people in the face of odds they knew they could not overcome, the Warsaw Ghetto fighters wrote:

Let it be known that every threshold in the ghetto has been and will continue to be a fortress, that we may all persist in this struggle, but we will not surrender; that, like you, we breathe with desire for revenge for the crimes of our common foe. A battle is being waged for your freedom as well as ours. For your and our human, civic, and national honor and dignity.

That battle was waged not only in Warsaw. Although Warsaw is most well known, throughout occupied Europe there were many brave individuals who took up arms against their oppressors in order to affirm their humanity, and ours.

These brave fighters bequeathed the memory of heroic action to a people. Reflecting on the future of the Jewish people, they realized that the memory of their efforts would be as important as the struggle itself.

The Warsaw revolt began in desperation; ultimately, it was an act of inspiration. They spoke about fighting for their freedom and ours; they taught us a lesson for their time and for ours. In lighting a candle to remember those who stood against the Nazis, we honor those who perished and are in turn reminded that the moral conscience of the individual can be a great weapon against evil. This was a lesson of the last century; this is a warning for the present one.

TRIBUTE TO VIRGINIA ROCKWELL

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to pay tribute to a remarkable woman, Virginia Rockwell of Swink, Colorado. Virginia has devoted more than twenty years of her life to mentoring and guiding many of Colorado's children. From kindergarten to their senior year of high school—and often times beyond—Virginia has performed her duties as a school counselor in the Swink schools admirably. Virginia's devotion to our youth is remarkable and it is fitting that she be recognized here before this body of Congress and this nation upon her retirement.

In the early nineties, Virginia was State Multi-Level Counselor of the Year, as well as a runner-up nationally. She has worked not only with children but also with their parents and their teachers in order to provide them the support and guidance they need to flourish in school and in life. Even after college, former students have not hesitated to come back and seek help from Virginia, whose door is always open.

Mr. Speaker, Virginia has touched the lives of generations of Swink's children and I know that she will continue to influence lives in the future. She has inspired Colorado with the spirit of dedication and hard work that have contributed so much to this great nation and I thank her for her efforts. Good luck to you, Virginia.

IN HONOR OF THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE WESTERLY APARTMENTS AND THE BARTON SENIOR CENTER

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor and recognition of the administrators, staff and residents of the Westerly Apartments and Barton Senior Center, as they celebrate 40 years of uplifting the lives of senior citizens in Lakewood, OH. I also rise in honor of the founding members, DeArv G. Barton, Frank Celeste, Gertrude Nelson and Wallace Teare.

The concept of the Barton Senior Center of the Westerly Apartments—combining affordable senior apartments with a social center that offers a variety of social, educational, recreational and health related activities and programs for seniors—was the first of its kind in the country, and has served as the inspiration and model for similar projects in Lakewood and across the Nation ever since.

The Barton Center came to fruition in 1963 when the first residents of the newly-built Westerly Apartments realized their need for a common social area. With help from government loans, foundation gifts and individual donations, a full service senior center was built, complete with a spacious lounge and dining room, a fully equipped kitchen, arts and crafts room, library, pool and game room, workshop and hobby room, and office space. A full-time director and activities coordinator was also hired. Today, the Center also offers daily meal service, banking services, classrooms, computer lab, auditorium and a greenhouse. The Westerly Apartments and the Barton Center both publish regular newsletters that highlight current programs and services such as the Driver Evaluation Program, Home Town Band Concerts, the Holiday Fair and community transportation services.

Mr. Speaker and Colleagues, please join me in honor and recognition of the Fortieth Anniversary of the Westerly Apartments and Barton Senior Center. The founding members, past and present administrators, staff, and residents have transformed a structure of brick and steel into a welcoming and lively social center, and a place that truly is ''home.''

TRIBUTE TO BARTON PORTER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a solemn heart that I honor the life of a well-respected rancher from my district. Barton Porter of New Castle, Colorado recently passed away, and as his loved ones mourn his passing, I would like to pay tribute to this outstanding individual before this body of Congress and this nation today.

Barton was born in Glenwood Springs, Colorado and spent almost his entire life on the state's Western Slope. He was a part of what many call the ''Greatest Generation'' learning the meaning of hard work and sacrifice on the battlefield. Like so many young men of his day, Barton served his country by joining the U.S. Army during World War II. After the war, he came home to his family ranch and also worked in real estate.

Barton understood what really matters in this world, and he made his family the top priority in his life. Barton was also active in the community through his involvement with the local school board, the 4–H Club, and Stewards on the Range, which promotes sensible management of natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to pay tribute to the life and memory of Barton Porter. Barton believed a man could achieve anything he wanted through hard work and perseverance, setting a great example for younger generations. To his family, friends, and the many people in the community whose lives he touched, Barton Porter will be deeply missed.

IN RECOGNITION OF AMERICHOICE OF NEW YORK: A UNITEDHEALTH GROUP COMPANY FOR BEING A 2003 AAHP/WYETH HERA AWARD WINNER

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize AmeriChoice of New York, which is a UnitedHealth Group Company, for winning this year's Bronze AAHP/Wyeth HERA award in the health plan category.

Wyeth Pharmaceuticals, together with the American Association of Health Plans (AAHP), offers this prestigious award to honor those who have made a significant difference in the area of women and children's health outcomes. AmeriChoice received this recognition for significant progress in working to ensure that New York City's youngest, most vulnerable children receive appropriate well care in the first 15 months of life.

AmeriChoice of New York serves more than 90,000 members in New York City, the majority residing in Brooklyn. In 2000, the health plan launched a targeted Well Child Outreach Initiative, designed to increase the number of children receiving five or more comprehensive well child visits with a primary care physician in the first 15 months of life. The goal of this initiative was to meet or exceed New York State's goal for Medicaid plans in this area.

The plan's multi-tiered approach entails four essential elements. The first part is member education and support, which includes telephone calls from multilingual Member Services staff, postcard reminders and transportation assistance to support this initiative. Next, is provider education and incentives, which includes regular patient profile mailings, listing members due for care and quality award payments for physicians whose patients met the well child visit requirements. The approach also provides for significant community outreach that includes partnerships with community-based organizations and other opinion makers to educate members as to the importance of well child visits. Finally, AmeriChoice employs database development systems that monitor physicians and members regarding well child visits and provides real-time information on member compliance.

In two years, the plan has more than doubled the number of children completing the series of well child visits and exceeded New York State's goal of 55 percent in 2000 and 65 percent in 2001. In fact, the plan scored highest of all Medicaid plans in New York City in 2001.

Mr. Speaker, the leaders of AmeriChoice of New York have taken extraordinary steps to improve the delivery of health care services for children. As such, the company and its leaders are worthy of receiving our recognition today.

TRIBUTE TO QUIGG NEWTON

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a solemn heart that I stand before this body of Congress today to mourn the passing of Quigg Newton, who served the state of Colorado with distinction as Mayor of Denver and as President of the University of Colorado. For ninety-one years, the energy and spirit Quigg Newton brought to life made many of us believe that he would never pass away. I honor his many accomplishments here today.

Returning from his service in the Navy after the Second World War, Quigg Newton moved to Denver where he ran for mayor and served two terms, retiring in 1955. He was the grandson of a Colorado territory pioneer and his tenure as mayor is fittingly known for the hard work and pioneering spirit he brought to the office. For his dedication and commitment, the city has named a senior center and an auditorium after him.

Mr. Speaker, Quigg Newton will be remembered fondly. His service to this country serves as an example to us all. Quigg Newton lived his life with integrity, honor, and bravery. It is an honor to stand before this body of Congress and this nation to pay tribute to a fine man. My prayers go out to all of Quigg's friends and family in their time of mourning.

HONORING NOBLE FIELDS

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a great community leader, educator, and real estate practitioner, Ms. Noble Fields, for her years of service and commitment to the community. Noble Fields is the founder and director of the Noble Fields Realty & Investment Company and School of Real Estate. She is also a woman of many talents.

Noble Fields was born in Fresno and enlisted in the Army after high school. She was originally trained as a teletype operator, but after a career counseling course, she became an Army recruiter and then an instructor for recruiters.

While still in the service, Noble Fields entered and won an Army talent contest which resulted in her performing as a singer and dancer in many NCO clubs around the world and with the All Army Entertainment show. She became an accomplished actress, and has since appeared on the San Francisco stage and has had small parts in major movie productions. She also holds an FCC broadcasting license that she earned while in the Army and was a radio broadcaster and cable television show host in the Bay Area and Indianapolis.

After 20 years, this Army veteran retired as a Staff Sergeant with a full brass band ceremony. She has a service-connected disability and is the Commander of Disabled American Veterans Chapter No. 144, the first woman ever to serve in that position.

After leaving the military, Noble worked for the National Alliance of Businessmen, a partnership of private businesses, labor, and government. As the Jobs for Veterans Manager, she was instrumental in securing jobs and job training for Vietnam veterans.

In 1985, Ms. Fields started the Noble Fields School of Real Estate and Appraisal. The school offers approved home study license qualification classes and continuing education courses for real estate and appraiser licensees. As we honor Ms. Fields today, I want to thank her for her work in promoting the participation of minorities in the real estate industry. I take great pride in joining Ms. Fields' family, friends and colleagues to recognize and salute the accomplishments and contributions of Noble Fields.

ISRAEL

HON. JOSEPH CROWLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about the continued terrorist attacks against Israel.

As we all know the President has recently returned from his first official visit to the Middle East where he attempted to move the peace process forward.

During the summit Israel and the Palestinians agreed to the road map—now comes the hard part.

Progress will be difficult and we must focus now on action, not words. In short, performance matters.

The United States must do more to put pressure on Israel's neighbors and make sure they cease all support of terrorist groups like Hamas and Islamic Jihad.

With 16 Israelis dead from Wednesday's bus bombing, four soldiers killed last weekend, and hundreds of other Israelis dead from Hamas attacks, Israel has the right to protect herself and her people from terrorists.

Hamas and other terrorist groups oppose the road map, they oppose any lasting peace with Israel. They oppose the existence of the Jewish State.

These groups have been tolerated for years by the Palestinian Authority and the PA chairman, Yassir Arafat.

The administration must also increase dialog with our European allies who continue to have relations with Yassir Arafat, as if he were the head of state. Support for Yassir Arafat and his terrorist ways must stop.

More support must be given to Abu Mazen so he can disarm the terrorist groups so Israel can live in safety and security.

There will be no peace and there should be no peace plan until all sides agree that Israel has the right to exist and her people the right to live in safety on the streets, in cafés and on their buses—anything else is a failure that the U.S. should take no part in.

MINNESOTA CITIZENS CONCERNED FOR LIFE

HON. MARK R. KENNEDY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. KENNEDY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Minnesota Citizens Concerned for Life on their 35th anniversary.

MCCL is Minnesota's largest and oldest organization dedicated to preserving the sanctity of human life. It was founded in 1968 with the goal of protecting the lives of the unborn and elderly from conception until natural death. Since then, MCCL has grown from a handful of individuals meeting in their kitchens to 77,000 members in 241 local chapters today.

MCCL works tirelessly to educate the public on the precious nature of life. MCCL is a major force behind efforts to create a culture of life that refuses to accept as common practice euthanasia, human cloning, assisted suicide, and abortion on demand.

Through their efforts, MCCL has allowed thousands to enjoy the banquet of life who otherwise would not have.

I also applaud the vision and leadership of Scott Fischbach, MCCL's new Executive Director.

Mr. Speaker, I salute MCCL for its 35 years of work on behalf of our most vulnerable citizens.

SURVIVOR BENEFIT PLAN

HON. KEN CALVERT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, the Survivor Benefit Plan was, at one time, a good plan intended to provide for surviving spouses of veterans. Unfortunately, that intention has been lost.

Now surviving spouses are experiencing the reality of a one-third drop in benefits when they turn 62 and Congress has yet to take any action on rectifying this wrong.

Well, the time has come for Congress to step up to the plate and provide for our veterans what we already provide to our federal civilian retirees.

I believe the message of this tragic inequality is best conveyed by those who must live with it. I would like to read a statement from a constituent of mine from Riverside, California, Mrs. Marilyn T. Owsley about her experience with the Survivor Benefit Plan:

> My husband would turn over in his grave had he known what was happening to me with his annuity. He chose SBP for me to have a decent income along with his Social Security. Also, he liked the idea of this annuity because you get a cost of living increase each year where other types of annuities did not. Together with his Social Security and the SBP annuity, I manage. I rent my apartment and pray they don't increase the rent too much each year. I gave up driving my 1983 Chevy as it was too costly to keep up with repairs and insurance. I have to depend on someone else to go to the store or the doctor. If not for my children, I don't know what I would do. I will be 78 years old on October 9, 2003. They say the Golden Years are good. I say my gold turned to rust. I pray every night the government will do something about this problem of the annuity reduction.

Let's return the benefits to the Survivor Benefit Plan and keep our word to the millions of veterans who, in good faith, signed up for this plan with the expectation of taking care of their loved ones after they passed.

PROVIDING FURTHER CLARITY AS TO THE INTENT OF CONGRESS WITH REGARD TO H.R. 1904, THE HEALTHY FORESTS RESTORATION ACT

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, last month, the House passed the Healthy Forests Restoration Act on an overwhelming bipartisan basis. The bill creates a number of new procedures and programs to deal with the nation's exploding forest health crisis. Importantly, Title VI of the bill would authorize and direct federal land managers to establish early detection programs for insect and disease infestations, with an emphasis on hardwood forests, so that agencies can isolate and treat adverse conditions before they reach epidemic levels.

Even though the bill was first considered and marked up in the Resources Committee, the House Agriculture Committee, under the outstanding leadership of Chairman BOB GOODLATTE, received primary referral. While associating myself with the able and accurate work in the Agriculture Committee's Report on H.R. 1904, as the bill's primary author I want to insert some additional language into H.R. 1904's legislative history so as to provide further clarity as to the intention of Congress in Title VI.

Title VI of H.R. 1904 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a program that uses geospatial and information management technologies (remote sensing imaging and decision support systems) to inventory, monitor, characterize, assess, and identify forest stands (and potential forest stands) in the southern and eastern portions of the United States, with special emphasis on hardwood forest types. The approach for this effort includes utilizing NASA remote sensing technology, emerging geospatial capabilities in research activities, validating techniques using application demonstrations, and integrating results into pilot operational systems. Important issues to be addressed in this region of the U.S. include, but are not limited to, early detection, identification and assessment of environmental threats (insect, disease, invasive species, fire and weather-related risks, other episodic events), loss or degradation of forests, degradation of stand quality due to inadequate forest regeneration practices, quantification of carbon uptake rates, and other counter management practices. Developing a comprehensive early warning system for potential catastrophic environmental threats to Eastern forests would significantly increase the likelihood that managers could isolate and treat any such outbreak before it gets out of control. Such a system could prevent the kind of epidemic, like that of the American chestnut blight in the first half of the twentieth century, which could be environmentally and economically devastating to Eastern forests.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1904 is as important as any environmental legislation that this House has passed in a very long time. Title VI in the bill is a critical piece of that landmark forest health program.

STATEMENT FROM REPRESENTATIVE TOM DAVIS HONORING THE 80TH BIRTHDAY OF SID YUDAIN, THE ROLL CALL NEWSPAPER FOUNDER

HON. TOM DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, ''At every dramatic turning point of our long national nightmare known as Watergate, Roll Call was there. Sid Yudain reported the Watergate break-in a full three days before Nixon's resignation,'' quipped Washington's favorite political satirist, Mark Russell some twenty years ago.

Russell's dig was aimed at the man credited with discovering him, Sid Yudain, founder, publisher, editor, and even occasional delivery boy of Capitol Hill's own newspaper, Roll Call. Now, this weekend Mark and his wife Ali are hosting—and perhaps roasting—Sid at a party celebrating his 80th birthday.

Sid, who had spent several years in Hollywood following World War II where he became a columnist and raconteur for movie stars, had come to Washington in the early 1950s to work as press secretary for Congressman Al Morano of his home State of Connecticut. He soon noticed an ongoing void of information about what was going on around the Capitol Hill community. Sure, there were plenty of newspapers in town that wrote about Congressional legislation and political debates. But an incident involving two Ohio Congressmen, who were exchanging greetings when one expressed total surprise at learning from the other that a member of their State delegation had died, provided the spark that finally led Sid to create his own newspaper, Roll Call, in 1955.

Interestingly, Roll Call was not to be a newspaper about Capitol Hill, but as its masthead boldly proclaimed, ''The newspaper of Capitol Hill.'' Judging by the names of those who wrote its early columns and stories, it lived up to its assertion, because Members of Congress and their staffs eagerly contributed to its pages. Vice President Richard Nixon insisted on writing a piece about a doorman who had passed away, and Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson related through the pages of Roll Call his experiences and thanks following his recovery from a recent heart attack.

For the 32 years that Sid owned Roll Call, the paper chronicled life on the Hill and promoted a community spirit where Members and staffers of all political persuasions could come together to celebrate their common service to the American people. Roll Call nurtured clubs and organizations, issued the ''Outstanding Staffer'' award each year, sponsored Congress' annual baseball game, and gave gifted and often famous writers of all backgrounds the opportunity to inform and entertain arguably the most influential readership on the planet.

And, all this time Sid was having the time of his life. His Capitol Hill townhouse parties featuring steaming cauldrons of his homemade soups fed to noteworthy musical and journalistic friends were legendary, and his zany humor brought raucous laughter to any occasion.

Sid sold Roll Call in 1988 to spend more time with his family, friends, and saxophone, and to get more use out of the stage he built in his back yard for his music parties, a facility dubbed by associates as ''Sid Trap.'' Mr. Speaker, his get-togethers fall somewhere between a Pavarotti concert and a Don Rickles roast.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me with Sid's wife, Lael; their children, Rachel (and husband, Amar Kuchinad) and Raymond; Sid's other family members; and his cadre of friends in wishing him a most happy 80th birthday. And, with all that talent he still holds in reserve, perhaps it's time to get started on the book he's promised to write.

CONCERN OVER ILLEGAL USE OF PAINKILLER OXYCONTIN

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, today I want to bring attention to the illegal use and abuse of the powerful painkiller OxyContin that is destroying families and crippling communities, particularly in rural parts of the country. Southwest Virginia, western Kentucky, and Maine have been hit particularly hard.

OxyContin does serve a very real and useful purpose for people with chronic, debilitating pain or who are terminally ill. It is hailed as a miracle drug for terminally ill cancer patients. I know what it is like to see people suffer from cancer. Both my mother and father died of cancer.

My concern is that this powerful painkiller has increasingly become a drug of choice for people who choose to abuse it; for people who have no legitimate need for this pain-killing drug. When taken properly, OxyContin is a wonder drug. But when it is ground up or chewed, the time release mechanism in the tablet is disabled, providing abusers with a heroin-like high.

I am also concerned about how this drug has been allowed to be marketed. Clearly, OxyContin should be available for the terminally ill. It should also be available to those people who suffer with severe chronic pain. I do not believe it should be prescribed to treat moderate pain.

Earlier this year I wrote to the Honorable Tommy Thompson, Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, asking him to review the marketing of OxyContin and its classification for treatment of moderate to severe pain. Here is the text of the letter:

DEAR SECRETARY THOMPSON: In December 2001, the Commerce-Justice-State and the Judiciary appropriations subcommittee held a hearing on the illegal diversion of the prescription drug OxyContin, a pain-killing Schedule II narcotic manufactured by Purdue Pharma L.P. One of the witnesses, the father of a recovering OxyContin addict, told a gripping story of the devastating impact the drug has had on his family and his son, who was in his early 20s. He proudly told the committee how his son had just finished rehab and had kicked his addiction. Sadly, a few months after appearing before the subcommittee, the son died as a result of abusing the drug.

When used properly, OxyContin is considered a wonder drug, especially for terminally ill cancer patients. I know what it is like to see people suffer from cancer. Both my mother and father died of cancer. I can remember my mother constantly asking the nurses for more morphine but being told she couldn't have any more. My mother was in a great deal of pain. OxyContin, if it had been available when she was dying, probably would have made her a lot more comfortable at the end.

When used illegally, however, OxyContin destroys families and communities. It also can lead to death. This powerful painkiller has increasingly become a drug of choice for people who choose to abuse it by chewing it or grinding it up. By disabling the time release mechanism in OxyContin, abusers get a heroin-like high.

Initially, cases of abuse and illegal diversion occurred primarily in poor, rural communities in Virginia, Kentucky, West Virginia, and Ohio. Abuse is no longer limited to Appalachia. The drug has found its way to urban areas and there are now reports of widespread abuse as far away as Arizona. Florida, I am told, has been hit extremely hard.

Several pharmacies in my congressional district have been robbed at gun point in recent months for OxyContin. No money was taken; the robbers only demanded the drug. Earlier this month, a prominent defense lawyer in northern Virginia who twice served as a local prosecutor in Prince William County pleaded guilty to Federal drug charges linked to a large-scale investigation into the illegal distribution of OxyContin and other painkillers.

Communities where the illegal drug has taken hold are being completely destroyed. I am told there is one county in southwest Virginia where no one isn't either using the drug, knows someone using the drug or been the victim of a crime by someone needing the drug.

When a professional baseball player recently died after taking the dietary supplement ephedra, your agency immediately issued fact sheets regarding potential serious risks of dietary supplements containing ephedra. You were even quoted as cautioning all Americans about using dietary supplements that contain ephedra.

According to fact sheets produced by the FDA, two deaths, four heart attacks, nine strokes and five psychiatric cases involving ephedra have been reported. More than 240 people have died from the abuse of OxyContin and countless numbers of families and communities have been torn apart by this drug.

Your agency has done a good job educating the public about the dangers of ephedra and other dietary supplements. I urge you to initiate a similar public information campaign about the dangers of abusing OxyContin.

I have previously written to your department asking for a review of the marketing of OxyContin and its classification for treatment of moderate to severe pain. The Food and Drug Administration did change the warning label on OxyContin but more needs to be done. The drug should not be marketed to treat moderate pain. I urge you to no longer allow OxyContin to be prescribed for moderate pain.

Too many people have died, too many families have suffered, and too many communities have been devastated by the improper use of this drug.

Sincerely,

FRANK R. WOLF,
Chairman,
Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State and the Judiciary

I also have written Mark McClellan, the commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, six times since April 1 about this issue, imploring the FDA to take another look at for whom and for what this drug can be prescribed. I have yet to receive a response.

The following is an excerpt from a news article that appeared in the Orlando Sentinel in February that cuts right to the heart of the issue. The article was written by staff writer Doris Bloodsworth. It ran on February 21, 2003.

Fort Lauderdale—The maker of the highly profitable narcotic painkiller OxyContin has been aggressively marketing the drug far beyond its original purpose to ease the suffering of cancer patients, according to company documents released Thursday.

Purdue Pharma for several years has promoted the powerful drug to treat less-threatening ailments, such as arthritis and back pain, according to company marketing plans. Those materials also discuss future marketing of the drug to obstetricians and specialists in sports medicine.

The company fought to keep the sensitive documents secret, but a circuit judge in Broward County ordered them released as a result of a suit by the Orlando Sentinel and the South Florida Sun-Sentinel.

Purdue officials say OxyContin is a highly effective product and, when used properly, has a relatively low addiction rate.

Federal officials have admonished the company several times for marketing the narcotic inappropriately. And a number of class-action suits have been filed against Purdue in other States.

OxyContin, which has come under fire because of the number of deaths linked to its abuse, was introduced in 1996 to help cancer patients and others cope with chronic pain.

But Purdue, based in Stamford, Conn., recognized early on that non-cancer patients represented a larger and more lucrative market and sought to expand the use of its time-release painkiller, according to the marketing plans. In a marketing overview for 2002, the company noted that $2.1 billion in opiate sales were for non-cancer pain compared with $396 million for cancer patients. The 1999 plans state more than 70 percent of OxyContin prescriptions were written for non-cancer pain.

Purdue's most recent marketing plan states: ''In 2002 OxyContin Tablets will continue to be promoted for use in the non-malignant pain market.'' The plan cited as examples back pain, osteoarthritis, injury and trauma.

Another goal was an attempt to ''broaden OxyContin Tablets'' usage in the management of pain due to various causes (e.g., back pain, osteoarthritis, neuropathic pain, post-operative pain).

This is only one of several news stories about OxyContin that have been appearing in papers across the country. My congressional district has not been immune from the damage inflicted by the illegal use and abuse of OxyContin. Several pharmacies in my district have been robbed at gunpoint for OxyContin. A former county prosecutor in my district has pled guilty to Federal drug charges as part of a large-scale investigation into the illegal distribution of OxyContin. Last month there was a murder in my district that is potentially linked to OxyContin. Sadly, the daughter of the man who was murdered died last week of a drug overdose. Press reports allude that OxyContin may have been involved in the overdose. Just last week The Post reported that two slayings in another part of my district are possibly linked to the trade of OxyContin.

Families, communities, and careers—particularly rural communities—in Virginia, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maine, Ohio, and Pennsylvania are being devastated by the illegal use and abuse of OxyContin. Clearly, there is a problem. Some law enforcement officials I have talked to say the illegal use of this drug could be the next crack cocaine. A recent story in The New York Times said that ''no other drug in the last 20 years has been abused more widely so soon after its introduction'' than OxyContin.

My subcommittee on the Commerce-Justice-State and the Judiciary appropriations held a hearing last December on OxyContin and is pushing the DEA to develop an aggressive plan to combat the illegal use of the drug. The hearing was comprehensive. We heard from the DEA, the pharmaceutical company that manufactures OxyContin, representatives from the American Cancer Society and the parents of recovering addicts.

My subcommittee also set aside a significant amount of money for the Justice Department for a grant program to help States develop a prescription drug monitoring system. Ideally, the program would be aimed at monitoring Schedule II drugs, not all prescription drugs.

In the meantime, I urge the Department of Health and Human Services and the FDA to reexamine to whom this drug can be prescribed before it does any more harm. Failure to take action will result in more deaths.

CREATING A COMMISSION FOR THE SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMEMORATION OF THE CIVIL WAR

HON. RICHARD H. BAKER

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, in 1996, Congress designated the United States Civil War

Center (USCWC) at Louisiana State University (LSU) and the Civil War Institute at Gettysburg College as the co-facilitators of the Sesquicentennial, or 150th, Commemoration of the Civil War in 2011–2015. Legislation establishing the Sesquicentennial Commission was to be introduced in Congress in 2003. Today I rise to offer this aforementioned legislation.

The American Civil War (1861–1865) was one of the most violent times in the history of the United States, touching not only every State and territory, but claiming more than 600,000 lives, bringing freedom to over 4 million black slaves and destroying property valued at $5 billion. The ripple effects of the Civil War and Reconstruction remain today as our nation continues to wrestle with its legacy of race relations and Federal, State and civil rights.

In 1993, the USCWC was created as a department of the LSU College of Arts and Sciences under founding director David Madden. In 2000, the USCWC became a department of LSU Libraries' Special Collections. The mission of the USCWC is to promote the study of the American Civil War from the perspectives of all professions, occupations, and academic disciplines in order to facilitate a deeper, more thorough understanding of one of the most important events in our nation's history. This mission is fulfilled through a variety of projects, including an official website featuring over 9,000 links to Civil War-related sites, the Michael Shaara Award for Civil War Fiction, Civil War Book Review, the Michael Lehman Williamson Collection of Civil War Books for Young People, the David Madden Collection of Civil War Fiction, and the Sesquicentennial Commemoration of the Civil War.

Mr. Speaker, I fully support the objectives and services the USCWC provides. What is more, I am pleased to introduce legislation today that will include the USCWC in the creation of the commission to provide grants and other assistance to institutions nationwide to conduct interdisciplinary Civil War commemorative activities between the years 2011 to 2015. The commission will include members of the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, directors of the Library of Congress and National Archives, and academics in history, anthropology, sociology, political science, art history, and law. I believe this commission will provide the direction and resources needed for proper Sesquicentennial Commemorations of the Civil War throughout this nation.

INTRODUCTION OF THE SECURE ANNUITY INCOME FOR LIFE ACT OF 2003

HON. EARL POMEROY

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce the bi-partisan Secure Annuity Income for Life Act (S.A.I.L.), legislation co-sponsored with Rep. JOHNNY ISAKSON (R–GA). This legislation will encourage workers to annuitize their savings to provide them with retirement income for life.

Traditionally, guaranteed monthly income sources have provided the best means of retirement income security. However, these sources are playing an ever smaller role in ensuring retirement income stability. Social Security is facing a funding challenge. The personal savings rate is at an all-time low while consumer debt is at an all-time high. The number of defined benefit plans, or pensions, has decreased by half since 1977—putting pressure on defined contribution plans, like the 401(k), to be the primary retirement plan.

As a result of the growth in 401(k) plans, greater amounts of retirement savings will not be annuitized. According to the Department of Labor, only 38 percent of workers in a 401(k) plan have an annuity option available to them. However, about $2.5 trillion in retirement assets are invested in individual retirement accounts (IRAs), mostly as a result of rollovers from defined contribution plans. That compares with $1.8 trillion in defined benefit plans and $2.4 trillion in defined contribution plans. The amount of IRA rollovers is expected to increase by 50% in the next ten years, mostly as a result of retirements. Workers will face a number of risks when managing these savings in retirement.

When workers take a lump-sum distribution, or rolls his 401(k) savings into an IRA, they face a number of risks when managing these savings in retirement:

Unpredictable Time Horizon—Life expectancy at 65 is at least 18 years—but that is only an average and not very useful in planning. In fact, 28 percent of females that are 65 years old will live to age 90 and 17 percent of males that are 65 will live to age 90. The probability that at least one person from a married couple that is 65 years old will live to age 90 is 40 percent.

Market Risk—Retirees have a shorter time horizon in which to recover from market downturns. Market downturns at the beginning of retirement can significantly reduce how long a retiree's nest egg will last.

Inflation—Income must double over a twenty-year period just to stay even with average rates of inflation. Since most pension plans do not have cost of living income adjustments each year (unlike Social Security), personal savings experience even greater strain.

By annuitizing retirement assets—either through an employer or private commercial entity—retirees reduce the risk of retirement income instability. Public policy should encourage individuals to manage their savings during retirement in a manner that accommodates their daily needs but also ensures that their savings will not be exhausted prematurely. Only annuities can make this guarantee. Annuities transfer the risk of outliving assets from the individual to an insurance company -just as individuals transfer risks to insurance companies for their properties, accidents, and health costs.

The S.A.I.L. Act is designed to encourage individuals to annuitize their retirement savings as an efficient solution to what otherwise could be an overwhelming asset management task. Specifically, it would allow workers who participate in employer sponsored retirement savings plans, and who save through IRAs, to receive $3,000 of annual taxfree income from annuities. Some may consider this a small incentive, but it is a progressive way to entice low to moderate income individuals to annuitize some of their retirement savings.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure that retirement income security encourages workers' to annuitize their savings so that they will receive guaranteed monthly income for life. I believe this is an important policy objective and encourage my colleagues to co-sponsor the bill.

HONORING AUDREY WARRICK ON HER RETIREMENT FROM MONROE COUNTY COMMUNITY COLLEGE

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise to recognize and pay tribute to the President of Monroe County Community College (MCCC), Ms. Audrey M. Warrick. She began her career at MCCC as a counselor in 1967 and, as the college has grown, Ms. Warrick has grown with it. In 1977 Ms. Warrick was promoted to Assistant Director of Continuing Education and Community Services. After several promotions, she was eventually appointed, in 1988, Dean of Student Services, a cabinet level position. Ms. Warrick was again promoted in 1991 to Dean of Instruction and, finally, in May 2000 Ms. Warrick was appointed President.

In her 36 years at MCCC, Ms. Warrick has served on various committees, including Chair of the Management Negotiating Team, and member of the Faculty and Management Negotiating Team. However, it was during her presidential leadership that Ms. Warrick was able to make significant changes and improvements. She was instrumental in expanding the college curriculum and services to meet the changing needs of students, business and industry, and community partners. A comprehensive computer lab was added to help facilitate additional open access for students and to provide instructional support for nine new computer science programs. In 2002, she helped secure $6 million dollars in matching funds from the State of Michigan to build the Instructional Center for Business Training and the Performing Arts, for which ground will be broken within the week.

Ms. Warrick has also been actively involved in community leadership. She is a member on the Monroe County Industrial Development Corporation Board of Directors, the Monroe County Superintendents Association, the Monroe County Education Personnel Committee, the Education Advisory Group of the Southeast Michigan Community Alliance, and the Monroe County Chamber of Commerce. Moreover, she is a member of Soroptimist International of Monroe, where she has served as the scholarship chair for the past nine years.

Ms. Warrick's leadership contributions to various professional associations during the course of her tenure have also been appreciated. Currently, she is serving on the Executive Board of Michigan American Council in Education (ACE), Network for Women Leaders in Higher Education, the M–TEC Advisory Board for Henry Ford Community College, Michigan Community College Association

(MCCA) Executive Committee and Presidents Committee. In addition, she has served as a Consultant Evaluator for the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools since 1986.

Throughout her tenure at MCCC, Ms. Warrick has helped the College grow and prosper. Her commitment to the college and the students has contributed to the success of MCCC. Ms. Warrick is to be commended for her tremendous dedication to Monroe County Community College, and the Monroe Community.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me in congratulating Ms. Warrick on her retirement from Monroe County Community College.

TRIBUTE TO LIEUTENANT COLONEL LISA LEONARD

HON. JOE KNOLLENBERG

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an outstanding Army Officer, Lieutenant Colonel Lisa Leonard, who has served with distinction and dedication for almost 2 years for the Secretary of the Army, as the Congressional Liaison Officer for Military Construction Appropriations, Congressional Budget Liaison Office under the Assistant Secretary of the Army, Financial Management and Comptroller. It is a privilege for me to recognize her many outstanding achievements and commend her for the superb service she has provided to the Department of the Army, the Congress, and our great Nation as a whole.

During her tenure in the Congressional Budget Liaison Office, which began in July of 2001, Lieutenant Colonel Leonard has provided members of the House Appropriations Committee, Subcommittee on Military Construction as well as our professional and personal staffs with timely and accurate support regarding Department of Army plans, programs and budget decisions. Her valuable contributions have enabled the Subcommittee on Military Construction and the Department of the Army to strengthen its close working relationship and to ensure the most modern, well trained and well equipped soldiers attainable for the defense of our great Nation.

Mr. Speaker, Lisa Leonard and her husband, Lieutenant Colonel Mark Leonard, have made many sacrifices during their careers in the Army. Her distinguished service has exemplified honor, courage and commitment. As she departs the Congressional Budget Liaison Office to embark on yet another great Army tour in the service of a grateful Nation, I call upon my colleagues to wish them both every success.

APPRECIATION FOR EXCEPTIONAL STUDENTS AT ST. MARY'S SCHOOL

HON. SHERWOOD BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for some exceptional students in my district in Waterloo, NY. Since Waterloo has been officially recognized as the birthplace of Memorial Day, which Americans had been celebrating for generations, the community takes pride in this historical recognition.

The students of St. Mary's school, under the guidance of Principal Fred Smith, recently spent a great deal of their free time painting a large American flag on Russ and Teresa Tuthill's barn at their request. Their patriotism and pride in America shine through as a bright beacon of hope for the future of our Nation. At a time when our very security is at risk, it's a simple reminder of what liberty means for us.

I am proud to have such patriotic students in my district and I am comforted to know that they will be the leaders of tomorrow. I thank the students of St. Mary's school for their creative expression of the principals upon which this great Nation was founded.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, during the vote on the Welfare Reform Extension Act of 2003 (H.R. 2350), I was present on the floor of the House of Representatives and did register my vote. However, due to a faulty voting card my vote was not counted. Had this malfunction not occurred, I would have voted "aye" on this vote (No. 261).

H.R. 2418, ENDING TAX BREAKS FOR DISCRIMINATION ACT OF 2003

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, welcome. Today, we're introducing a bill to end government subsidies for private clubs that discriminate against women. Ending Tax Breaks for Discrimination Act of 2003 makes it illegal to take income tax deductions for expenses at clubs with "No Women Allowed" membership policies. We think it's wrong for corporations to write-off big expenditures for entertainment, meetings and advertising at clubs that keep women out while they target women's pocketbooks. Men play and women pay.

I am joined by my distinguished colleagues, Representative BRAD SHERMAN from California, Representative LOUISE SLAUGHTER from New York, and my friend, Martha Burk—all tireless workers in the fight for equality. As a matter of fact, in the early '90s Mr. SHERMAN, as a member of the California tax board, implemented this same type of legislation. Since then, other States, like Colorado and Kentucky, have followed.

Right now, conventions and meetings come right off corporate income tax as legitimate business deductions, including those held at private clubs that discriminate. Half the price of a business lunch is deductible. But if you're a woman, you subsidize one-half a guy's lunch with your taxes, even though you can't join the club.

The whole point is that members of these clubs get financial gains—either indirectly through career opportunities and board appointments, or directly through tax deductions. Women can't get these same financial gains—just because they're women. Golf is so ingrained as a part of business success that business schools teach students how to make the most of club memberships—the PGA even sponsors a program called "Golf: For Business and Life" to do just that. But, if you're a woman and you can't get a membership, you can't play golf or get the same elite club bonus package from your employer that your male counterparts can, you're clearly missing out. Men get the membership, the deal, the deduction, and women get the bill.

This bill ends deductions for advertising, travel, accommodation, and meals associated with these clubs. And it requires discriminatory clubs to print right on their receipts, "not tax deductible".

When I went with Martha in April to protest male-only membership at Augusta National Golf Club, it was obvious that this legislation was the next logical step. Money talks. At Augusta, at least 10 major corporations, including IBM, Lucent and American Express either withdrew or cut back spending on advertising and corporate hospitality. But all the while these same companies are reaching out to sell their products to women.

Mr. SHERMAN and I have asked the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to support this legislation. We're looking forward to their response. Frankly, who in this day and age can object to ending government subsidized sex discrimination?

I like big business, but women must have a seat at the table—the board table. Legitimate tax deductions should continue, but when these deductions support clubs that bar women from becoming equal partners, equal players, equal earners—they are not legitimate. This bill is past due and the time for discrimination is over.

MEMORIALIZING MR. KEITH GARVEY

HON. MICHAEL M. HONDA

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. ZOE LOFGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, today I join with my colleagues, Representatives LOFGREN and ESHOO, in honoring the life of a dedicated public servant, Keith Garvey. Mr. Garvey's recent death ended a life committed to work, people, humor, compassion, and most importantly, his family. We also lost a great union leader, who fought for the rights of working families, and a dedicated Democratic Party activist. His work and legacy will be endure through the many lives he touched.

Born in 1946 to Joseph and Virginia Garvey in Pensacola, FL, Keith and his family later moved to Chicago where his parents raised him to develop a love for public service. Both of Keith's parents served in World War II in the Navy. His father, Joseph Garvey, was a wartime pilot and his mother, Virginia Brewster Garvey, taught instrument flying to British and United States personnel. Keith followed in their footsteps in many ways.

After graduating from Northwestern University in 1968 with a Bachelors Degree in History, Keith answered the Nation's call to duty by enlisting in the Army. During his time in the Army, he became an excellent soldier and leader. In fact, his leadership inspired confidence in his troops who followed him into battle in Vietnam. His bravery earned him two bronze stars and the rank of First Lieutenant.

After his honorable discharge in 1971, Keith explored the world and ventured to Australia for a 6 month learning experience, selling encyclopedias door to door. Following his trip in Australia, Keith returned to the United States moving to the Bay Area, a region he would call home for the remainder of his life.

In the Bay Area, Keith started his career in public service when he was hired by the city of San Jose as an emergency dispatcher. When the county took over these services in 1974, Keith began what would be 28 years of service to the county as a supervising dispatcher and union leader.

In 1978, Keith met his wife Carol at work, where both served as emergency dispatchers. After 2 years of dating and working with one another, they married in Alaska, and, together as a team, worked to help the public.

With his partner by his side, Keith became more involved in his union. Through his dedication and tireless efforts, he became a respected union leader. His involvement within the Service Employee International Union (SEIU) Local 715 offered a clear and effective voice to the people he served. As a representative of his union, Keith earned the respect and confidence of his fellow colleagues. Eventually his volunteer work in the SEIU earned him the position of president of the County Employees Management Association (CEMA).

During his term as president, Keith ventured out into the region to help others. He fought for livable wages and worker rights for all people. He also joined the United Farm Workers' Movement and became a close friend of the Cesar Chavez family.

After leaving CEMA, he became president and overseer for the County Employees Labor Association. Similar to his work at CEMA, Keith continued his mission helping county workers up to his death.

In addition to decades of service fighting for the rights of workers and the underrepresented, Keith dedicated countless hours to the Democratic Party through his service on the Santa Clara County Democratic Central Committee, on hundreds of democratic campaigns, on issue campaigns important to working people, and in his work with his wife for Democratic Activists for Women Now.

Mr. Speaker, we rise to mourn the loss of a friend and mentor. We have had many opportunities to work with Mr. Garvey, and what was most amazing about him was the hard work and determination he had in helping others. Along with an unmatched sense of humor, the passion and love he had for public service will be missed by many. The Bay Area was fortunate to have Mr. Garvey as a resident and activist, and we are personally fortunate to represent a region that Mr. Garvey touched with his courageous works.

LEHIGH VALLEY HERO—TONY IASIELLO

HON. PATRICK J. TOOMEY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to share my Report from Pennsylvania for my colleagues and the American people.

All across Pennsylvania's 15th Congressional District there are some amazing people who do good things to make our communities a better place. These are individuals of all ages who truly make a difference and help others.

I like to call these individuals Lehigh Valley Heroes for their good deeds and efforts.

Today, I would like to recognize Bethlehem Catholic High School Head Wrestling Coach Tony lasiello as a Lehigh Valley Hero. He is working hard to make a difference in his community.

Tony has built a remarkable record during his 38 years at Bethlehem Catholic High School. From 1966 to 2003, Tony has amassed an overall record of 408–228–3. He has coached 11 state champions, which ranks seventh in the state. The state champions he coached in 1979 achieved that feat through an undefeated, 18–0, record. He coached five straight PCIAA Catholic State Team Championships from 1968 through 1972. He has coached 29 Catholic PCIAA State Championships and 11 PIAA State Champions. Two of his wrestlers won NCAA championships.

Tony also has been president of the District XI Wrestling Coaches Association for the past 22 years, and served 4 years on the board of the National Wrestling Coaches Association. He served as a PIAA referee for 20 years and an EIWA College official.

Given his very active participation in our community, and his work in helping shape young men into responsible adults, Tony lasiello is a Lehigh Valley Hero in my book.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my Report from Pennsylvania.

HONORING THE SERVICE OF MICHAEL A. WEISS

HON. MELISSA A. HART

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, today I have the honor of saluting a dedicated leader from Pittsburgh, PA who has spent the past year doing some remarkable work to help people living with diabetes.

Michael A. Weiss has had a long, successful and diverse career benefiting numerous community and charitable organizations, and it all started following his graduation from our alma mater, Washington and Jefferson College in Washington, PA. He graduated with honors from W&J in 1970, and went on to earn his law degree from Vanderbilt University in 1973. He currently serves as a leader of my former law firm, the DKW Law Group's Corporate Practice in downtown Pittsburgh. Mike was a mentor to me, and the perfect professional. He is the kind of attorney who takes good cases, returns calls and gives good advice to avoid litigation. Today, however, I want to pay tribute to his service outside his profession, and on an issue very special to Mike, my family and countless others.

For the past year, Mike Weiss has served as Chairman of the National Board of Directors at the American Diabetes Association. The ADA is the nation's leading nonprofit health organization providing diabetes research, information and advocacy. The mission of the organization is to prevent and cure diabetes and to improve the lives of all people affected by diabetes. It has had many successes, making living with diabetes less constraining and providing info on healthier lifestyles, possibly preventing the onset of Type II.

Within his role as Chairman, Mike Weiss has spearheaded the expansion of the ADA's advocacy programs. He is responsible for broadening the reach of ADA and increasing its partnerships with other groups and associations working towards the same goals.

For his work with the ADA, Mike Weiss will be awarded the 2003 Charles Best Award for Outstanding Contributions and Service to the Cause of Diabetes.

I wish Mike continued success with the organization and his other generous work, and I commend him on his superior service to his neighbors, community and all those who work toward an end of diabetes.

RECOGNIZING A TRADITION THAT HONORS ALL DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS

HON. HEATHER WILSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mrs. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, June 13th, 2003 marks the continuation of a long, established tradition by the Disabled American Veterans organization, with their 62nd annual State Convention at the Santa Ana Hotel and Casino on Santa Ana Pueblo, New Mexico. Its purpose is to bring together and recognize those who have fought courageously in our Armed Forces from our state and from our region; who have sacrificed much in the name of our great country to insure the security and freedom of all its citizens. When a citizen thinks of Old Glory, of stars and stripes, of red, white and blue, they ultimately remember our men and women in uniform, and the price they have paid to defend this nation against all threats, both foreign and domestic. Some have paid the ultimate price with their lives, while others have endured great physical and mental hardships, from the wounds they have suffered, and the memories they have lived with from knowing the consequences of war. Every veteran present at this convention is an example of this enduring and proud spirit. These veterans' sacrifices and the courage they have shown must never be forgotten.

I am also honored to recognize the spouses and other family members of those veterans who have gone to war for the sake of the United States of America. It is never easy knowing that your family member is going to war; of not knowing of the conditions that he or she is fighting in, or the actions he or she must take to accomplish the mission, or to protect a fellow soldier. Separation from a loved one is always difficult, and trying. Life continues even during war, as children are born, as they continue to grow and mature, and holidays and other personal milestones pass during this time of separation. Separation also requires a great deal of endurance as well, with the hope that their family members will come home safely. It is this lasting sense of endurance, patriotism, and dedication to our nation that characterizes what it means to be an American.

Mr. Speaker, please join with me to recognize these remarkable individuals who are in attendance at this convention, both physically and in spirit, and to remember all that they have fought for, and all the victories they have achieved during their careers in the Armed Forces.

CREDIT UNIONS

HON. CHRIS CHOCOLA

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. CHOCOLA. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that some in my state have questioned the patriotism of credit unions, saying that because they don't pay federal income tax they are ''unpatriotic.'' Nothing could be further from the truth. While credit unions are, indeed, tax-exempt nonprofit financial cooperatives owned by their members, their record of patriotic service to the people of this nation should not be questioned.

Since first established in the United States during the early 20th century, credit unions have helped to serve those in our military; they are a role model for other financial institutions to follow. Many credit unions have worked with our soldiers, sailors and airmen while they have been stationed overseas during the recent conflict in the' Persian Gulf. For example, the Navy Federal Credit Union set up branches and ATM's in the Persian Gulf and onboard ships in order to serve their members during this conflict.

Credit unions have honored those in service to our country, not just in this most recent war, but in other wars as well. For example, the members of the National Association of Federal Credit Unions (NAFCU) have raised over $140,000 for the World War II Memorial Fund.

Credit unions serve teachers, firefighters, police, federal employees, students and more on a daily basis—including many in this Congress. I thank them for supporting the leaders of our government. As non-profit financial cooperatives with volunteer boards, credit unions serve their members' needs and have been ranked number one in an independent consumer satisfaction survey for eighteen straight years—since the inception of the survey.

I applaud the credit unions of this nation for supporting America's freedom and urge my colleagues to do so as well.

SUPPORTING HEAD START

HON. JOE BACA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, Head Start is a time-tested program that has improved the lives of children and their families for 38 years. I am proud to say that Head Start has improved the lives of those in my home district of San Bernardino County, California.

I recently received a letter from Ms. Brenda Clayton, a Head Start staff member in San Bernardino County. In her letter, Ms. Clayton says that she sees first-hand, every day, what a difference Head Start makes to children and their parents.

Ms. Clayton writes, ''I generally see the parents at initial application or enrollment process, then I'll see these same parents 2 to 3 months later and they are excited to share with me all the good and wonderful things their child is now able to say and do, how their child has a zest for learning.''

As we face the Head Start reauthorization process, Ms. Clayton has asked me that I do everything in my authority to see that her program does not become block-granted. Unfortunately, I must face the reality that this Republican-led Congress will impose these block grants, leaving less money, less oversight and leaving even more children behind.

Under a block grant system, Head Start is not guaranteed to receive funding. We must make sure that Head Start receives funding and receives it directly so that what little funds that are given to this highly important program are not diluted even further.

It simply doesn't make sense to put the fate of Head Start into the hands of the States. Our States are bankrupt! My State of California faces a budget shortfall of $35 billion. But once again, we are forcing our cash-strapped States to pick up the tab at our children's expense.

We have already forced States to pick up the tab for the unfunded mandates of No Child Left Behind. And we're now forcing States to take over what the Federal Government has proven is a success! Republicans are taking an essential program and completely dismantling it. It just doesn't make sense!

My Republican colleagues are at it once again—trying to limit the role of the Federal Government in public education under the excuse of ''accountability'' and better State and Federal coordination. If accountability was such a huge concern, then why does the Head Start reauthorization bill remove standards and requirements? And if States are facing such drastic budget shortfalls, then why are we tempting them with the opportunity to reduce services and transfer funds from Head Start to other services? It just doesn't make sense.

The only thing that makes sense is to bring Head Start back to its original, bipartisan state with the same strong, Federal accountability standards and increased funding so all eligible children can benefit from Head Start services. That is a program that makes sense.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I am not recorded on rollcall Nos. 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263 and 264. I was unavoidably detained and was not present to vote. Had I been present, I would have voted ''yes,'' on rollcall Nos. 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263 and 264.

RECOGNITION OF ART BROWN OF HECLA MINING CO.

HON. C.L. ''BUTCH'' OTTER

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the distinguished accomplishments of Art Brown, chief executive officer of Hecla Mining Company, on the occasion of his retirement.

Art Brown retired last month from Hecla Mining after 36 years of service. Mr. Brown was manager of the Lucky Friday Mine in 1979, when silver prices rose from $5 to $50 per ounce, and Hecla became the No. 1 performer on the New York Stock Exchange. Last year, Hecla's stock rose 400 percent, again making it a top NYSE performer. However, it was not an easy task to keep the company afloat during the years between in which it was plagued by low market prices, environmental litigation and cash-flow problems. Under Mr. Brown's leadership, however, the company has moved from close to bankruptcy to a viable, growing enterprise producing record amounts of gold and silver in 2002. Under the visionary leadership of Art Brown, Hecla Mining Co. has survived and flourished. The company is now positioned to move forward into a future of growth and continued profitability.

I congratulate Art Brown on his success, and wish him an enjoyable retirement.

INTRODUCTION OF MEDICARE REFORM ACT

HON. LEE TERRY

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am proud today to introduce the Medicare Reform Act. Along with the original cosponsors of the bill, Representative TOM TANCREDO, Representative

MARILYN MUSGRAVE, Representative PETE SESSIONS, Representative WILLIAM JENKINS, and Representative DON MANZULLO, I believe that this proposal can improve Medicare and preserve it for the future.

Our current system is a patchwork program governed by tens of thousands of pages of rigid rules, regulations, guidelines and administrative decisions and the current system is filled with inefficiencies and waste. While Medicare will cover medicine for a patient who receives an injection at a doctor's office, it will not provide the same coverage to a patient who chooses to save Medicare doctors' fees by administering the same injection at home.

Medicare will pay for a kidney transplant—but not for anti-rejection drugs for the new kidney. If you stop taking medication because of the cost, Medicare will pay for a second kidney transplant.

Medicare covers the costs of home visits by occupational therapists and physical therapists but not respiratory therapists. The patient must come to the hospital or doctor's office—more expensive options.

In 2002, improper payments in the Medicare program were estimated at $13.3 billion. Of that amount, $7 billion was for services the government later deemed medically unnecessary.

I have authored the Medicare Reform Act of 2003, legislation that would reshape Medicare to closely resemble the health care system for federal employees. The Federal Employees Health Benefits Program provides high-quality health benefits to 8.6 million federal employees and retirees, including Members of Congress, in all 50 states. It is a typical employee health plan, except employees have a choice—they receive a guidebook describing their coverage options and choose the option that best meets their needs.

I want to give Medicare beneficiaries the same options.

By providing senior citizens and disabled individuals with the same health care benefits Members of Congress enjoy, my bill would improve preventive care and treatment of disease. It would provide modern insurance benefits, such as preventive and maintenance care for chronic conditions. And as in all private plans, a modern prescription drug benefit is an inherent part of this policy.

The health care plan for federal employees has demonstrated success in rural areas. 98 percent of rural counties offer at least three plans, and 87 percent offer six or more choices. My bill would create insurance parity through Medicare, by offering identical insurance options to beneficiaries in urban and rural areas on a state-by-state basis.

Finally, my bill would recognize the difference between poor and middle class seniors, and those in the highest income brackets, since premiums would be based on level of income. My proposal would pay the entire premium for senior citizens earning up to $17,952 for singles and $24,288 for couples (200 percent of the poverty level). Above that level, the premium paid would decrease by ten percent for each additional 100 percent over the poverty level. For senior citizens earning over $71,809 for singles and over $101,153 for couples (800 percent of the poverty level), the program would pay 30 percent of their premiums.

Income sensitive premiums, competitive plans, better cost control and preventative care will ensure that Medicare's price tag is kept low. In this way, we can assure Medicare will evolve with the times and be solvent for the future.

Government cannot prevent Americans from growing older. But we can help senior citizens enjoy higher quality of life, while providing the retirees of tomorrow with a sound Medicare program that will still exist for them, too.

CENTRAL NEW JERSEY HONORS JULIE T. WU OF THE U.S. PHYSICS OLYMPIAD TEAM

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Julie T. Wu of Manalapan High School in Englishtown, New Jersey. Ms. Wu was in Washington, recently as one of 24 members of the U.S. Physics Olympiad Team vying for a chance to represent the United States at the International Physics Olympiad on July 12th in Taipei, Taiwan.

The U.S. Physics Olympiad program has a long history of success. It is designed to encourage excellence in physics education and to reward outstanding physics students. It provides an opportunity for top students to take part in an outstanding scientific and cultural experience that would not normally be available through the tradition high school curriculum.

The U.S. Physics Team members were selected from a pool of more than 1400 students who where nominated by their high school physics teachers to take the Olympiad physics exams. These students represent the ''best and the brightest'' physics talent in our Nation. Julie is a perfect example of the type of talented and motivated students that take part in the program.

Julie's accomplishments as a young scholar are impressive. She has received the Siemens' Award for her performance on the Advanced Placement exams in math and science. Julie is also a National Merit Scholar, and has placed 1st in the New Jersey Science League for biology and physics, 2nd in Chemistry Nomenclature in the New Jersey Chemistry Olympics, 3rd for the US National Chemistry Olympiad qualifying exam, and 1st for biology and 3rd in chemistry in the National Science Olympiad.

In addition to her impressive list of academic achievements, Julie has excelled outside the classroom as well. She is co-captain of the varsity tennis team, treasurer of her school's chapter of Junior Statesmen of America, and a section editor of her school's yearbook.

We are honored to have Julie representing the 12th district of New Jersey at this prestigious competition.

SADDAM'S BEHAVIOR JUSTIFIES LIBERATION

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member wishes to commend to his colleagues the June 11, 2003, editorial from the Omaha World Herald, entitled ''The Right Thing.'' This editorial correctly notes that the atrocities committed by the horrific, repressive regime of Saddam Hussein were reason enough for liberating the people of Iraq.

[From the Omaha (NE) World-Herald, June 11, 2003]

THE RIGHT THING

Amid all the talk about whether, or even if, substantial numbers of weapons of mass destruction are going to be found in Iraq, it is also important to ask how much it matters.

Our assessment is that, yes, it does matter—in the sense that strongly couched reports of such weaponry were at the heart of the Bush administration's argument for toppling Saddam Hussein. Yet we also believe that the answer to the question, while instructive, is not pivotal. Ousting Saddam will turn out to be an overarching good deed. It stands on its own merits.

At present, the purported weapons are not turning up. Does this mean they just weren't there, or does it mean that Saddam's regime and the Baath zealots that undergirded it were exceptionally good at hiding them or destroying them or spiriting them across international borders? Let's hope the Pentagon's new weapons-hunting team, slated to take over the search soon, will provide definitive answers.

Four months ago, Secretary of State Colin Powell made an impassioned case before the U.N. Security Council that the weapons existed, along with equipment for making more. We said then that if one-half or even one-fourth of what Powell was asserting were true, there would be a strong case that the Iraqis weren't complying with U.N. mandates. At this point, there has been no hard evidence that the existence of even those fractions will be borne out. In addition (as we said then), the evidence of a Saddam-al Qaida link was iffy.

Fair enough. But we also went on to say that Saddam nonetheless should be ousted.

We stand by that. Saddam's behavior was that of some sort of devil incarnate. He murdered tens of thousands of his own citizens, starved others, tortured and maimed unknown numbers more, snubbed agreed-upon arms inspections and other mandates after the Gulf War of 1991 and attacked aircraft attempting to enforce ''no-fly'' zones.

We also said earlier that there were three scenarios for Saddam's departure. In descending order of desirability, they were abdication, liberation of Iraq by a U.N. force or liberation via a U.S. attack, aided only by allies.

The last of these three was what played out. That's unfortunate, but this is an imperfect world. Now that world wants to know: Did the U.S. administration, in company with Britain's Tony Blair, (1) get the weapons allegations right at the time when they were articulated; (2) err in assessing the evidence; or (3) just plain confabulate in order to drum up popular support?

If it turns out to be the last of those three, then the U.S. and British administrations will take their lumps in the marketplace of public opinion and perhaps at the polls as well. We're not saying that's what happened; time will sort such matters out. But it ought to go without saying that Americans and Britons don't need to be ''spun'' (''conned,'' in older terminology) in order to do the right thing.

The right thing: Ousting Saddam was that. Exactly that. He was a murderer and a brutal oppressor who helped destabilize a whole region and robbed his people of a generation of progress. On that basis, Americans and Britons—along with others in the international community who will now seek to help Iraqis back to their rightful place in the world—have nothing to apologize for.

IN RECOGNITION OF KAREN McCANN

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the long career of Karen McCann as she retires from teaching in the Troy Public Schools District in June, after 35 years in the classroom. Beginning in 1968, Karen McCann brought dedication and innovation to teaching which continue unabated. Throughout her career, she has been a model for teachers, new and old alike, as well as a role model for her students.

After graduating from Michigan State University in 1967 with a degree in Elementary Education, Karen McCann began teaching English and Social Studies for seventh through ninth grade in the Farmington Public Schools District. She eventually taught all subjects for students in grades ranging from fifth to ninth before moving to Bemis Elementary in the Troy Public Schools District in 1985.

During the course of her career, she has been nominated for numerous awards, including the Disney American Teacher Award in 2000 and the WDIV Outstanding Teacher Award in 2001, and was selected as a Mentor Teacher/Trainer by EDS for the MI JASON Project from 1997 through the present.

That she is a good teacher is evident from what her students have said about her; that she is a great teacher is evident from the remarks of parents and colleagues. Parents frequently expressed admiration for her positive attitude, her willingness to communicate with them, and her ability to challenge each child regardless of their initial interest in learning. Her colleagues have praised her for her enthusiasm and creativity.

She brought programs to the classroom that gave her students the opportunity to learn in creative ways and offered them unique educational experiences. She integrated Hyperstudio, multimedia, Internet, and videoconferencing into her lesson plans, allowing her students to teleconference other students so that they could learn from each other. She also succeeded in making learning about science and technology fun for all of her students, through her work with the JASON Project and the First Lego League.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the important contributions Karen McCann has made to so many children and their families during her long and celebrated teaching career.

IN HONOR OF JENNIFER BERNARDES

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the inspiring dedication of Jennifer Bernardes, a 13-year-old student whose compassion has had a wonderful effect on the life of her fellow New Jerseyan, Harry Ettlinger.

Ms. Bernardes was one of the first students in New Jersey to take part in the ''Adopt-a-Survivor'' program, which matches young students with Holocaust survivors. Sponsored by the Holocaust Council of the United Jewish Communities of Metro West in Whippany, NJ, this program provides an amazing opportunity for young students to develop lasting relationships with and learn from those who have survived or escaped the Holocaust.

Mr. Ettlinger, a World War II veteran who escaped the Holocaust, was the adoptee of Jennifer Bernardes, an eighth-grade student at Oliver Street School in Newark, NJ. As a participant in this program, Jennifer agreed to learn about Mr. Ettlinger's experiences, and to tell his story in 2045, the 100th anniversary of the liberation of the Nazi death camps.

Jennifer Bernardes has demonstrated a strong commitment to learn about Mr. Ettlinger's experiences and met with him several times over the course of a year to hear his first-hand accounts. Recently, Jennifer spoke at Newark's Municipal Holocaust Commemoration sponsored by Mayor Sharpe James. She has also taken part in talks at the Jewish Community Campus in Whippany, NJ, and Oliver Street School, and has spoken with other school groups about participating in the program. Jennifer's dedication has taught her about humanity's darkest hour, and, in learning Mr. Ettlinger's story, she has inspired others to participate in this invaluable program.

Jennifer's commitment has gone beyond what the ''Adopt-a-Survivor'' program hopes to accomplish. Earlier this year, Jennifer helped reunite Mr. Ettlinger with Hanne Hirsch, a childhood neighbor and schoolmate from his hometown of Karlsruhe, Germany, who he had not been able to locate after the Holocaust. On a visit to the Holocaust Museum in Washington, DC, Jennifer and a fellow student noticed Mrs. Hirsch's story at an exhibit, and after successfully tracking her down, Mr. Ettlinger was reunited with Mrs. Hirsch after 64 years.

Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Jennifer Bernardes for her devotion and enthusiasm, and for her commitment to keeping alive the personal histories of Holocaust survivors. It is through the dedication of America's youth that we can ensure that these important stories are never forgotten.

CONDEMNING IRAN FOR CONSTRUCTING A FACILITY TO ENRICH URANIUM, AND FOR SUPPORTING TERRORISM

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce a resolution, which calls on the government of Iran to comply with its NPT obligations, sign the AIEA Model Additional Protocol, and halt support for terrorism. Also, it asks President Bush and the international community to renew their commitment to the war against terrorism, and impede the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

The proliferation of nuclear weapons anywhere in the world poses a serious threat to international peace and security. The knowledge, non-nuclear materials, and components needed for the production of nuclear weapons are already accessible worldwide. The main technical barrier is obtaining the nuclear material. Therefore, to prevent any further proliferation of nuclear weapons, we must work to prevent the propagation of nuclear materials.

The director of the International Atomic Energy Agency (AIEA) has recently announced that Iran has built a plant to enrich uranium—a key component of advanced nuclear weapons. This deeply worries me, because U.S. intelligence sources indicate that Iran could develop as many as 50 nuclear weapons from this facility.

Mr. Speaker, members of this chamber have not yet given adequate attention to the dangers of a nuclear Iran.

Iran's nuclear intentions are a cause of fear. It is unclear whether Iran, by pursuing a sophisticated and advanced nuclear program, has chosen to break from the NPT treaty now; but it is obvious that it has positioned itself to do so within a very short time if it ever decides to.

Iran is the most active state sponsor of terrorism, and continues to provide material support to Hizballah, Hamas, and Islamic Jihad—all recognized terrorist groups. The country's construction of nuclear facilities coupled with its known ties to terrorist groups constitutes a threat to global peace and security.

Nuclear materials that could be used to develop nuclear weapons must not fall into the hands of terrorists or state sponsors of terrorism—like Iran. Preventing Iran from developing nuclear weapons capabilities must remain a foreign policy and homeland security priority.

There are many difficulties, but also opportunities, on the road towards nuclear non-proliferation. For the last few decades a number of diplomatic and political strategies have been pursued. Let me empathetically opine that we need to redouble these efforts. If we are to achieve a non-nuclear Iran, we must commit to a thoughtful strategy of dialogue.

COMMENDING PASCHAL HIGH SCHOOL IN FORT WORTH, TEXAS

HON. MARTIN FROST

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the faculty and students of my alma mater, Paschal High School in Fort Worth, Texas for being ranked among the nation's finest schools by Newsweek magazine. Officially, Paschal placed No. 12 in Texas and No. 200 nationally based on advanced placement test scores. This year alone, the senior class included 11 National Merit Scholarship semifinalists.

Founded in 1885, Fort Worth's oldest high school has always been regarded as an academic leader. Today, Paschal exists primarily as a large, urban school with a diverse population and student body. The curriculum emphasizes balance, preparing students for college or university life through a variety of academic disciplines, clubs, advanced placement classes, and a host of athletic teams. This preparation enables students to understand and appreciate other cultures, become active participants of their community, and take ownership of their education.

Paschal High School is a terrific example of a successful collaboration between students, community representatives, faculty members, parents, alumni, and the Fort Worth Independent School district. This collaboration is truly remarkable, when considering the awards and accolades that this school has amassed since its inception.

Again, congratulations to the students and faculty of Paschal High School in Fort Worth, Texas for this latest achievement.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. SHEILA O'LEARY FOR HER 14 YEARS OF SERVICE TO THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION REGIONAL SCHOOL

HON. SCOTT GARRETT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 12, 2003

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the efforts of Mrs. Sheila O'Leary. After nearly 40 years as an educator, 14 years of which as the principal of the Immaculate Conception Regional School (ICRS) in Franklin, New Jersey, Mrs. O'Leary is now moving on to work at the Catholic Diocese of Paterson.

Political theorist Henry Adams once wrote, ''A teacher affects eternity.'' He believed that the influence of educators over children is never ending. He understood that educators like Mrs. O'Leary play a vital role in the moral and intellectual education of our children.

During her years of dedicated service Mrs. O'Leary has inspired students, fueled their imaginations, advanced their natural abilities and encouraged them to explore the possibilities that life has to offer.

As an educator, Mrs. O'Leary could have chosen any school to work at—yet she chose Immaculate Conception. She took road less traveled and chose to take on the challenge of building ICRS into the great school it is today. With her guidance and a strong commitment to helping her students, Immaculate is now a better place. By increasing attendance and expanding the number of classrooms, constructing new science labs and starting a pre-K program, to name just a few, Mrs. O'Leary has fulfilled her deep conviction in giving every child a chance to learn and succeed in life. Truly she has brought new life to the school and its community.

Over the last 40 years, not only has she taught children the important concepts of reading and writing, but she has also educated them about the difference between right and wrong. She taught them to welcome knowledge and to reject ignorance. For this, Mrs. O'Leary is a model for America's educators and young people to follow.

On behalf of the people of New Jersey's Fifth Congressional District, it is with great honor, that I recognize and thank Mrs. Sheila O'Leary for her years of service to the Immaculate Conception community. Our nation is very fortunate to have her in our schools working with the future of our great Nation.
